THIRD EDITION.

IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work. Cloth, pp. 324. Price $1.25.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHIC NARRATIVE OF PSYCHIC PHENOMENA IN FAMILY DAILY LIFE EXTENDING OVER A PERIOD OF TWENTY YEARS.

BY MORELL THEOBALD, F. C. A.

Some of the most astonishing phenomena in the history of Modern Spiritualism are recorded in this volume, the descriptions of which are given with a marked degree of fidelity to detail and effort to corroborate their truth by unimpeachable testimony. They include independent writing in various languages, on walls and ceilings, in closed apartments and on note books in locked desks; lighting of lamps and fires; filling of kettles with water, and making preparations for breakfast, even to cooking food, making tea and "laying the table"; organ playing with no one visibly present; materialization and dematerialization of forms and fabrics, bringing of flowers, ringing of bells and movements of physical objects. Fac-Similes are given of various writings, one of them in Greek, with a translation. The book covers a period of twenty years, and of each of the phenomena above specified, together with others, numerous instances are narrated.

The author says that the book has been written in the intervals of a busy professional life, which fact has proved of advantage; for, while as careful as possible not to be carried away by enthusiasm, or by imagination, in a region wherein there is much scope for their action, the disjointed method of working he was compelled to adopt operated as a protection against a surrender to mere fantasy.

NEW EDITION.

LOVE AND ITS HIDDEN HISTORY,
AND
The Master Passion.

BY P. B. RANDOLPH.

A book for men, women, husbands, wives—the loving and the unloved. In this curious and rarely original book the author offers to the public a powerful argument in favor of love, the great passion that rules the world; and he sets forth its manifold charms and necessities in a perfectly irresistible manner, though with keen wisdom and wonderful tact.

Two volumes in one. Price $2,50; postage 12 cents.

Poems from the Inner Life,

BY MISS LIZZIE DOTEN.

The exhaustion of thirteen editions of these fine Poems shows how well they are appreciated by the public. The peculiarity and intrinsic merit of these Poems are admired by all intelligent and liberal minds. Every Spiritualist in the land should have a copy.

The edition is printed on thick, heavy paper, is elegantly bound, and sold at the low price of $1,50, postage 10 cents.

Also, a new edition on extra paper, beveled boards, full gilt. Price $2,00, postage 10 cents.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 26th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Infinite Spirit, Divine Essence, Life of all Life, Soul of all Soul, we would recognize the supremacy of thy power and wisdom in the glory of the marching worlds, in the changing of the seasons, in the ebbing and flowing of the tides, in the sunlight, in the shadow, in every experience that comes to man, but we would not seek to render homage unto thy name by any empty form, vain service or ceremonial, rather feeling within ourselves that, by the purity of our aspiration, by our devotion to truth and right, by our seeking to listen to the monitions of the voice that ever speaks within, we shall, in the attainment of higher things, render unto thee, our Father, the best and truest service.

We would at this hour that every earnest worker in the cause of humanity might feel descending upon him a power for the truth that knows no obstacle, that yields to no enemy; that, when opposition shall grow strongest around him, and friends fall, he might still, with his hand in those of the arisen teachers, with his heart beating responsive to their hearts, go forward to battle in the common cause and conquer in the end. May such workers never despair; may they see that trials come to test the strength that is within them; that opposition often seeks them out only to see that they are strong in the faith, and the truth to which they have given their thought and life.

May those earnest hearts who walk through the world, bearing a burden of human sorrow, who look downward instead of upward, who feel that their treasures have forever passed from human sight, see that after the night of sorrow comes the bright morning of fulfillment. May each and every one, whether called to battle in the world or living in the quiet circle of home, feel the influence of the spirit-world descend upon them, and receive from thee, our Father and our Mother, the assurance of thy presence and thy love until all life's work is done.

Unto thee, Infinite Spirit, and unto those who do thy will, do we commend the results of our work, asking that the blessing of peace may descend upon all, wherever they may be.

Light.

Mr. Chairman, it was my intention to have voiced my present thought through another organization, but opportunity has not well favored me, therefore I intrude myself upon your kindness for a few moments.

I have, in connection with other spirits who move along the outward pathways of earth-life, an important work to do, a great purpose to fulfill, and the difficulty is in finding those who are adapted to the work, who are sensitive enough on the one hand and positive enough on the other, so that they shall not be interfered with, either from the spirit or the earth side, in the performance of such duties as we spirits may place upon them.

The period to which I belonged, long since passed, holds slight connection with the present, save that what was then only known to the few, we are endeavoring to give to the world at large, that all mankind may see and understand.

In those earlier days it was much easier to accomplish our purpose than it is now, since those who were called by their desire and organization to work for the unseen world were able to come together in close association, either under the form of religion or of devotion to some law, and thereby excluded all external influences.

I am aware that you smile, at the present time, at the idea of a brotherhood, and that the monastery and the convent call forth severe criticism on your part. I shall agree with the spirit of what you say; and yet could the original purpose of these institutions have been preserved, you, who are students of occult law, could not fail to accept them, for this reason, that any person desirous of pursuing a branch of study needs to devote himself exclusively to that, to be removed from the excitements of society and the whirlpool of ambition, and in the quietness of his own nature, baptized by the influence of the unseen, gradually study the law, embody it within himself, and go forward toward the accomplishment of whatever purpose he may hold. The mind was not distracted then, as now; victory and failure, poverty and wealth, fame and renown were things of little importance, while to-day they stand first.

A teacher once said, in a pathetic way: "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven," which is in reality the kingdom of the spirit, and then, "all things else shall be added unto you"; so, in the time in which I lived, the effort was to gain complete control of the realm of the spirit, and to try and compass the distance that separates the earthly from the spiritual life. To-day, however, in this age of civilization, as I think you call it, when everything is made to bend to the material purposes of men, and when art and science and education are only looked upon as valuable when they make a direct return in material things, the effort is being made to bring the knowledge of the spiritual condition to the same plane. Now that is a mistake. The cry of the present moment is to spirits: "Come to the earth and materialize; make yourselves material beings, that we on this plane may be able to comprehend your existence." The spirits are crying back again to mortals: "Do you spiritualize, and instead of asking us to come all the way from our sphere to yours, by your aspiration climb half the distance, and meet us on a common stamping-ground."

We shall never, sir, make a grand success—and when I use the word success I mean reach the highest result in any spiritual phenomena—until the spiritual idea is paramount, and until your workers shall be removed from any influence that jealousy or prejudice, envy or malice, may devise. The leaders of this great movement must be wise in the application of spiritual law. The phenomena are useful, not as the end, but rather as the beginning of truth; they are the stepping-stones that lead into the great temple. The workers in the cause, whoever they may be, who are possessed of occult and spiritual powers, need to be, to a certain degree at least, removed from the direct influence of the world. By that I am not advocating that they should live exclusive lives, that they should be shut out from the enjoyments and pleasures that the world may bring, but that in their avocation there should be some barrier between them and every shaft that may possibly be flying through the air, and the dignity of the subject, the glory of its truth, the mighty power that it will one day exercise, will only too plainly demonstrate how far away at the present time mortals are from apprehending its true genius.

There are some on earth whom I have visited in private, finding there a help and strength which I cannot find among the more promiscuous influences of the world. To those of that circle who may read my words with more than passing interest, I would say: Guard well the inner circle. The female element that you have introduced is highly essential for the accomplishment of the purpose in mind. Do not, I warn you, allow prejudice or any unkindly feeling to stand in the way of the work or the worker or our suggestions. You may have entertained them and felt that you were right in your judgment; but as there is one Spirit above, whom we are pleased to call our Father and Mother, remember also that all men and all women are his children and that each is related to the other by divine law; that no possible mistake can ever destroy.

Accept my kindest interest in all that you are doing, and if you but keep in mind these words they will accomplish the desired purpose and all will be well. Peace be with you till again we meet.

J. B. Porter.

I come from Orange, N. J. I would like to send this message to my wife Sylvia: My dear wife, I see how disappointed you are because I was not able to appear to you in the way that you thought I ought to; you could not recognize it as being your husband, since I did not look the same as when I went away. Well, I am sorry that you are disturbed, and when you give me another chance to come I will be there and try to look like my old self. I don't care to feel the way I did when I went away, but I will try to look the way I did, just for the sake of convincing you. Give my love to my daughter Ella. Tell her that my love is around her, and I think she has some power which, later on, will make it possible for me to come directly to her.

Tell D. M. that I walk and work with him, and shall, until we get the syndicate together to carry out our plan. It is hard work for him and for me to see what could be done and yet not be able to make people see it so they will take hold and help do it. They say time accomplishes all things, so we will have to trust in time, whether we want to or not, and keep the object right in view until we settle things into working order.

Now, Sylvia, don't think I am away in heaven or a thousand miles distant. I always loved to be with you when I was on earth. I loved my home and my family after my fashion; I love them still, and heaven is to me where they are; therefore I am at home. You never speak of me but what I hear you, and many times, when you go to bed, I am standing by you, trying as hard as ever a man could to make you see me. Good-bye for now, and God bless you all. J. B. Porter.

William Stevens.

William Stevens is my name. My old mother will be glad to hear from me; her name is Eunice Stevens, and she is a good, patient, kind-hearted mother, if ever there was one on the face of the earth. I wish I had known as much about that as I do now; I wish I had cared as much about it, for I am afraid I made my dear mother spend many unhappy hours on my account. I know she always said, "Well, it will be all right sometime." And when they used to say I was my own worst enemy, and talked to her about me—well, I won't say what—but she knows, she had a kind word always.

Now I have overcome that, and it do n't have any more effect upon me than as if I had never known what it was to be the slave to any habit; it is past, and I stand in the spirit, if I do say it, a son that she will be glad to meet and proud to own.

I come, mother, at this hour, because you need me. Louise has had a hard time of it; she suffers more than you know, but I can see, for I am by her side, and I know how much she endures, day after day and night after night, for you both; I send her my love. I am there, but I cannot make her know it. Jacob is here, and says: "I am not as homesick now as I was." My mother lives on James street, Boston.

Sadie Davis.

Oh! I must go. I must leave this world. I can only come back to the earth for a short time and then I must be away in the spirit. But it was hard to leave my mother and father, my sisters and brothers. Life was just before me, and when we look out on life from young eyes the world seems very beautiful indeed. I know that I must say "good-by." A kind friend soothed my last hours with her sweet and gentle presence, and I said to her, "If ever I come back I will give you a pass-word whereby you will recognize me." That was "God is Love," and I come back to repeat the same words now that were agreed upon then.

Dear mother! dear, kind hearted mother! although you have all the others here around you I can hear your heart call to me, and often in the evening, when you sit alone, you feel so sad and you wish so much that you could see my face again! I place my hand on your forehead and see you putting your hand up there, saying in your mind, "Sadie, is that you?" And then I touch you again and again, for I am there, happy to realize that you even think it may be me. Yes, it is I and as the hours pass by they are bringing us, dear friends at home, nearer together.

All the trouble with my lungs and throat has passed away, and I do not feel any earthly pain or care now, but sometimes when I see the tears in your eyes, it seems as if I must throw my arms around you and make you know that I live and love you, although my body is buried from sight. Wear sometimes for me a white flower; it will serve to make me know that you bear me in mind, and draw me nearer to you. Love to all, and bless you, until we meet. Sadie Davis.

Frances Roseer.

I have come here for weeks, trying to send a message, and nothing on earth shall move me till I do. My daughter, Celestia Mann, of Rochester, Mich., has been trying to convince herself that her mother lives, and I take this means as a test to come and answer the letter that she sent. I know how dark the clouds have been; how full of trouble, misgiving and uncertainty life has been, since I came to the spirit. Do not think, my child, that I am unmindful of it all, or that I would, if I could, allow a single shadow to fall upon your path, but it is best as it is, or at any rate, I am powerless to change what is sent. There are many present here that you know—many who love you.

B. often goes to Alfred; they are right about that.

Mother Mann, Mrs. Dexter and Hattie are all present; they join me in sending their love to you. Now, don't get discouraged; before we get through, I shall be able to make you know the reality of the life that I am in, but it is hard to find the way; the doors that are open are few, or if they are open they are so narrow I cannot get through them. It is not possible for me to come when you would have me, or when I would—I only come when I can. Best love to all; sweetest remembrances to you, my child, and when we meet there will be no parting. Frances Roseer.

Gertie Spratt.

My name is Gertie Spratt, and I want to send my love to my father and mother. They think it is strange I have not come before, but when they go anywhere I cannot speak to them, because the old trouble comes on in my throat. I died with diphtheria, and it makes the throat ache so bad.

I knew I was coming away, and I want them to know that I knew it, for my brother stood right there, with his hand reached out to me, and he said, "Gertie, be patient two or three minutes longer." I said, "I will if I can." He said, "Now it is all right," and it seemed as if he was on one side of the brook and I on the other, and I took hold of his hands, and all at once he seemed to draw me over the water to where he stood, and I could look back and see them, and knew just how bad they were all feeling, but I could n't say anything. So, if you please, just say that we are together, and not lost, but found, not on the earth with the winter and snow, the sickness and the pain, but in the bright home of the spirit, where the flowers bloom and the angels live, where all is peace and happiness.

Winona

Spoke for the following spirits:

Laura and Belle Balcomb.

Two very beautiful spirits come hand in hand from the home of the spirit, and give me the names of Laura and Belle Balcomb. They want to send a message to their father and mother, who live in Lynn, and say first to the mother that she must be patient, not to expect them to do impossibilities, because she knows that is unreasonable, but wait awhile, without expressing any opinion, until they shall be able to convince her as they have their father. Besides, the father has more chance to know about it, for he takes more interest in the subject generally, and goes oftener, which allows them to come. They wish to say that Anna has helped them to come to-day; indeed, it is largely through her influence that they were able to show themselves at all. They wish, besides sending their love to their father and mother, to send their love to Essie, and say that they will sometime be able to manifest themselves in the home.

Mrs. Thomas D. Lane.

Mrs. Thomas D. Lane, of Natick, would like to have her name registered. She wants to send her love and a message to her daughter Abbie. She is with her often, and wishes that she could sit alone, placing her mind upon her, in order to receive direct impressions from the spirit life. You may tell Mr. May that he need not laugh so much about Spiritualism, and think it such an absurd, ridiculous thing.

Love, my child, is the attribute of God; a mother's love will live forever, and I live, bearing in my heart always the love for you and yours. Trust your own impressions, take every opportunity you can to learn of the way of life, and you will find it, and your husband will find it, sooner than either of you think.

Ebenezer and Betsey Lord.

Ebenezer and Betsey Lord wish to send a message to Lydia and Cyrus, and to other friends in Corinth and Bangor, Me. They wish them to know that they were present at the celebration; the silver one went off a good while ago, and then was the golden one. Now there is only one more possible. They were present, and they say it is quite possible that may be reached. "We have just come to leave our names, because you will run your eyes over the paper many times hoping to see them."

Fidelity's Closing Remarks.

Kind friends, it would be expected, perhaps, that as I am one of the chief controls of the medium, I should make a few remarks that might take the form of a valedictory, since this is the last time, for the present at least, that we shall be able to speak through our medium in this place, that has already become hallowed by so many sweet and almost tender associations; but as the room, as we believe, is not to be longer occupied on Thursdays, we shall not say good-bye to our friends, because the work that we have begun will be carried forward in another way, taking with us about the same influences, and working largely upon the same line of thought.

There are so many spirits present, there assuredly ought to be other avenues through which they can express themselves, and while it would be our pleasure to be with you, under these present associations the lines do not always fall in the pleasantest places; yet wherever the duty is, it is our mission to take it up and carry it forward; therefore we shall not say good-bye in the sense of parting, or feeling that our work is at an end.

Every Thursday afternoon, at 1031 Washington street, we will give a circle like this, to which all friends will be cordially invited, as here. Without the least idea of carrying forward any work that will be other than for the mutual interest of all, on both sides of the line, whether in the earth or in the spirit, we shall endeavor to try and help those, unseen, who need help.

It remains to us to extend our warmest, kindest thanks for the courtesy we have ever received, for the decorum with which these meetings have been conducted, and the uniform kindness received by the manifesting spirits; and if, perchance, by-and-bye, as in the future is quite possible, we may come into closer relationship in the work, it will be with mutual pleasure to all concerned.

Now we shall leave you: and may you bear with you the benediction of loving spirits; may you feel it is not for persons that you have to work, but for the upbuilding of great, immortal principles; it is no matter who is working, if only the work is done. With the blessing of God upon you, with the communion of his holy spirits abiding with one and all, we shall say: God keep you. Amen.

Wayside Jottings.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Dr. P. P. Quimby.—I recently met, professionally, with a lady from Maine, and was by her informed that the late Dr. P. P. Quimby had practical knowledge of and frequently exercised the gift of magnetic healing. She cited the case of a child afflicted with fits; Dr. Q., in ministering to this child, made passes over it, and finding that he stood in great danger of taking the disease upon himself, informed the parents that he could effect nothing for the sufferer, and gave up the case.

As there seems to be a marked determination at the present time on the part of the faith-curers, metaphysicians, etc., etc., to make out that Dr. Quimby was the first to advance the so-called "Christian science" nonsense as a theory, it will be well for all who hold to this claimed theory to investigate the truth of such assertions through the testimony of his old patients, instead of taking hearsay evidence upon faith and without question. As far as I can learn, Dr. Quimby did not know how he made the cure in certain cases, and trusted entirely to the results of the manipulations, in the same way as most magnetic physicians do: His back is not strong enough to sustain the weight of unreason which Mrs. Eddy's followers seek to place upon it.

Mental Tests of Spirit Identity.—As the physical phenomena in proof of the verity of spirit return are more generally written upon at present than the mental, permit me to take a backward glance at some of the evidence which has been afforded on the latter plane—the medium being the late Mrs. Mary M. Hardy, and my information being taken from a letter written by a reliable lady to her cousin—for the responsibility of both parties I can vouch: "I went," said the lady writer, "to see Mrs. Hardy. Little Frankie came and said a beautiful spirit was with him, who took the care of him; that it was his aunty; he also said another spirit was with him who had but just come to the spirit-world, and that it was his cousin; also that she met a man when she came to the spirit-world whom she did not know, but he told her he was her father. He also said: 'I want you to tell my mother that I come to see her every day.' I asked him how old he was; he replied, 'a little over twelve years'; he also said he had heard his mother say that Spiritualism was a 'humbug.' . . . I had many other good tests."

The lady who thus called upon Mrs. Hardy was an entire stranger to her, and resided out of the city. Every circumstance noted was true to the letter. The mother being a Baptist in belief, had often really made use of the word "humbug" in relation to Spiritualism. One of the other tests received was as follows: The medium said: "I see a large capital C, and it is for the spirit of a young man whom you know about." The lady could not think of any spirit who had "C" for the capital letter of his name, and so stated. The spirit then said: "My aunt resides near you, and you know her quite well." The spirit claimed that he was a son of a prominent man, and his aunt did reside, as he stated, near her residence, and the lady receiving these test messages wrote to her cousin, residing in Salem, Mass., and gave these facts as I have copied them from her letter. She entered life in the spirit spheres a few years since.

The Spiritual Kindergarten.—A friend writing me recently, expressed, as follows, a great truth, and one which the revelations of Modern Spiritualism fully endorse: "How futile are the lives of those who live only for money—if any such there be. Soon their little efforts at heaping up riches on the earth-plane must stop, and then they will of necessity have to go to the Spiritual Kindergarten in Summer-Land and begin the true education for a real valuable work of life. How great a benefit, then, is the life here of each medium for the manifestation of spirit-power and intelligence to this ignorant world—pointing out and revealing, as such instruments do with more or less distinctness, the true life of spiritual permanence in this dim night where matter engrosses and distracts the beings who must sooner or later rise to higher things."

OBSERVATIONS AND EXPERIENCES IN NEW YORK.

BY DR. DEAN CLARKE.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

My coming here was almost that of a stranger, for fifteen years had elapsed since last I had trodden the pavements of this metropolis, when on my way to the winter-green shores of far-off California, and never had I met the major part of the public and private workers, upon whom the mantle of the old pioneers has fallen, since my former brief visit. And now, though I have had a four weeks' sojourn, I have been about so little and met so few, that I shall not presume to add much to the light that has already radiated from here to the readers of THE BANNER. It is a difficult task to gain correct knowledge of the status of our cause in any of its great earthly centres, because its development is far more subjective, so to speak, than objective.

Doubtless its silent friends outnumber its outspoken ones, in all the great commercial hives of industry, ten to one, so that those who gain assurances of strength or comfort in persecutions from numbers in secret sympathy with them, might find solace in believing truly that Spiritualism is gaining ground and constantly making converts (such as they are,) in all circles—not the least among the nominal devotees to exotic religions. But I who value a census of the faithful only, ask myself if Spiritualism has any more loyal and stalwart adherents than a decade of years ago, here or anywhere near its cradle, and after looking carefully about, conclude to let others more sanguine answer.

It is not an easy task for anybody to fill the places of the heroic pioneers, like Drs. Gray, Hallock, Brittan, Judge Edmonds, Charles Partridge and others of their ilk, who gave power and position to the pristine movement, and left a large place vacant when they went to their great reward in the higher life.

Whether there are as many "bright and shining lights" where "Liberty" stands in statue with uplifted torch "enlightening the world," as in the days when those grand spiritual heroes were conspicuous, it might be invidious to attempt to say. Many devoted, sincere, self-sacrificing, active promulgators are associated with the Spiritual Alliance, and head the various small societies into which the workers aggregate according to their heterogeneous mental and spiritual affinities. Though, for one, I somewhat deplore the tendency to sectarian division among those who claim to have "no creed," I much more deplore the disloyalty of the many who join the various Christian sects with whose fundamental tenets no true Spiritualist can affinitize with fidelity to man and womanhood, and the teachings and principles of Spiritualism! The movement publicly is largely weakened, here and elsewhere, by the many "tories" who hunger after "the leeks and onions of the old Egypt," from which no spiritual Moses has yet been able to wean them. The artful coadjutors of the Church, whose emancipation from the flesh has not liberated them from servitude to its selfish interests and schemes for power, are now using their newest "device of Satan" to entrap our unscientific and unwary brethren with the "decoy duck" of "Christian science," which their earthly mediums attempt to disguise under the aliases, "Spiritual Science," "Metaphysical Healing," etc. Many of the weaker brethren who need a "mind-cure" to strengthen their reason are being seduced from loyalty to Spiritualism as a philosophy and a science of life, by the sophistry and claims to "higher methods" and "more progressed" means than spirit-magnetizers use.

No doubt the present Spiritual Dispensation is as badly troubled with "seducing spirits and doctrines of devils" as was the elder one in St. Paul's time, and "Christian Science"—Sciolism—is "chief among ten thousand"! Beware of its bizarre theories and seductive enchantments! I unqualifiedly challenge its champions to prove that God has ever given special spiritual power for healing or otherwise except through ministering spirits, or that they impart it through any other means than human magnetism, whether it be imparted by laying on of hands—Christ's usual method, and the means he taught—or whether it be imparted only through the magnetic sphere which emanates from and surrounds every person!

Returning to my leading topic, I may say that our cause here has the same obstacles, drawbacks and difficulties to overcome as elsewhere. The desire for leadership, the "dog-in-the-manger" disposition, the selfish apathy, and other manias which prevail elsewhere to the detriment of a healthy growth and a rapid progress, here somewhat retard the movement; but it is onward nevertheless, and there are several loyal and faithful advocates and defenders of the faith, and quite a large list of public and private mediums equal in gifts to any elsewhere. I have had the great pleasure of meeting several of the prominent workers whose names often appear in the BANNER OF LIGHT as contributors, and in reports of local meetings. To say the least, I am not ashamed of fellowship with them. Among old acquaintances I have met Dr. Dake, who is as enthusiastic and as successful in healing scientifically as ever; Dr. R. T. Flint, who is still successfully answering sealed letters; Mrs. Pennell, who is busy Sundays in a small hall, and through the week in her room, giving the much-sought-for tests; Prof. Kiddle, whose pen is mightier than the sword; and not the least of those coworkers of whom I am proud I have met in pleasant intercourse, Charles Dawbarn, whose profound and logical discourses are rapidly bringing him into notice and increasing fame. Bro. Dawbarn is doing our cause a great good by using his deep sub-soil plow in uprooting not only ancient superstitions, but their lingering relics sown in our spiritual field, among the good seed of our philosophy. Like myself, he is strenuously trying to inspire a greater love for the great truths and divine principles to which the fundamental facts of spirit intercourse ought to lead. With me he loves the phenomena—the symbol of an inner truth—not the less because he loves the higher truth and the more important moral and spiritual lessons the more. Do n't misunderstand me, I prize phenomena for all they are worth, but intellectual and spiritual development is to me the greater desideratum.

Among the efficient mediums of this city said Bro. Dawbarn introduced me to Mrs. L. F. Fosse, at 263 West 23d street, who, entranced, gave me a very interesting communication, encouraging for the present and prophetic of future good, which I hope may prove true. She gave me assurance of the presence of I. P. Greenleaf and Aunt Mary Stearns, formerly of Massachusetts, and brief words of sympathy and cheer from Eliza Farnum and Judge Edmonds. Mrs. Fosse is a lady of intelligence and refinement, and a most excellent medium. I have twice met Mrs. Parent, a lady of fine appearance and culture, and one of the best test mediums in the city. She does not use her gifts professionally, but for the benefit of the cause, of her friends, and the poor victims of 'vice in the public prisons, which, as an angel of mercy, she regularly visits. She is an honor to her sex and a messenger of light to fallen humanity. I called upon Mrs. Morrell, whose advertisement appears in THE BANNER, and while in general conversation she gave me one of the most accurate psychometric readings I ever had. Mrs. M. has a high spiritual development and is honest and reliable.

One of the best writing mediums I have ever seen is Mrs. M. M. Squier, 52 West 19th street. She is but little known, because of her recent development and modest estimate of herself; but from my experience and from all I hear I can commend her to public patronage as a first-class medium.

In the materialization department I have made no investigation save to attend one séance at Mrs. Williams's. That, I was told, was not as successful as usual, but I was satisfied that I saw forms and heard voices belonging to no mortal present.

Mrs. Wells is sitting exclusively for a private investigating circle, and under positively crucial tests has, I hear, completely demonstrated her genuineness. I have attended one of her dark circles, which was equal to those given by Maud E. Lord. Her public tests in Adelphi Hall are first-class, satisfying many hard-headed skeptics.

I have had my usual great pleasure of having a sitting with Dr. Slade for independent slate-writing, and in the presence of Dr. and Mrs. Dake I received, between closed slates that I had examined and know were clean, which Dr. S. and I held across my left forearm resting on top of the table, a very characteristic communication, signed Ed. Wheeler, in which our arisen co-worker expressed deep interest in my welfare, and assured me that in the higher life I should find ample compensation for services which have been so meagrely rewarded here. Several striking physical phenomena occurred at this séance, such as have been described by other correspondents. Dr. S. occasionally visits Societies, where he narrates his experiences abroad in a most graphic, amusing and highly entertaining manner. No investigator should leave New York without visiting him at 58 East 9th street. Whoever accuses Dr. Slade of fraud demonstrates his own stupidity.

A few words concerning my own labors, and I close. As THE BANNER readers are already aware, I have spoken each Sunday afternoon during January at Adelphi Hall, being engaged and almost exclusively paid by Mr. Sykes, a liberal gentleman from Arizona, who is spending the winter in New York, and is much interested in Mrs. Wells's séances and the meetings of the First Society.

That I have succeeded in interesting and in inspiring quite a degree of warmth in the hearts of people who have had a surfeit of good things, goes without saying as evidence of an exalting inspiration which has carried me through many trying ordeals, and which many mediums here assure me will reach still higher altitudes and increasing power. In connection with my work here, I have spoken the last two Sundays of the month for the principal Society in Brooklyn, where I have, I trust, won a place for greater usefulness in the future.

The weather has not been propitious much of the time, but I have had good audiences, and, as others have assured me, have succeeded in convincing them of the justness of my claims to better public patronage and support than has been accorded me since my return from California.

A prophecy made to me while in Philadelphia, by Mrs. Lawrence, an excellent medium, has been fulfilled in the great pleasure and success of my visit to Brooklyn and New York.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

MAZIO.

I write to inform you of a very remarkable test to me (in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 11th) given through J. W. Fletcher, at your Free Circle-Rooms. It was a communication from my very much beloved control, MAZIO, an ancient spirit. He has been one of my controls for about two years, and all who have talked with him have been more than delighted with what he has had to say to them. I am very grateful to Mr. Fletcher, the instrument in the hands of the spirit-world, for the happiness the communication has given me.

It was correct in every particular, even the reference to my sickness Mazio alluded to. I am improving slowly, and I feel that he is one of the instruments aiding my restoration to perfect health. I am very grateful to the BANNER for being the courier through which the truth was brought to me.

Yours for truth here, and happiness in the life to come, DR. F. H. ROSCOE.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 9th, 1888.

WHITE FEATHER.

In the public séance of Jan. 12th, printed in the BANNER OF LIGHT, Feb. 11th, I recognize the name of one of my healers, WHITE FEATHER, according to promise. I had asked him to go and send me a message, and am very thankful for it. It was at the end of Lizzie Hatch's message. MRS. J. R. JOHNSON.

434 West Washington street, Indianapolis, Ind.

FAITHIE JUDSON.

We read with much pleasure and satisfaction the message in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Oct. 29th, purporting to have come, through Mr. Fletcher's mediumship, from our dear little daughter "FAITHIE," who passed to spirit-life nearly two years ago. Her grandma "Nancy," and her grandpa, to whom she referred, preceded her to the spirit-world. This message is the most recent but by no means the only evidence we have had that our child still lives, and that Spiritualism is a grand truth.

Truly yours,

MR. AND MRS. A. H. JUDSON.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 8th, 1887.

HARRINGTON HINCKLEY.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 4th, 1888, is a message from HARRINGTON HINCKLEY, and it is all true, as he was an inmate of the Home, and passed on Sept. 21st, 1884, aged 80. The "Mother L." he refers to in his message was Miss Lincoln, and the "Doctor" he spoke of was Charles D. Homans, who passed on last year. Yours truly, F. A. KEMP.

(From Earnest Words, (N. Y.) for January.)

That Medical Conspiracy.

There is as much dogma among M. D.'s as ever there was among D. D.'s. There is as much stickling for established systems, as much slavery to authority, as much intolerant narrow-mindedness in the medical world as ever there was in the theological.

The medical profession, like the clerical, is divided into Old Schools and New. The spirit of proscription is as rampant among the former to-day as it was among old-time religious "regulars." But modern ideas respecting the relation between might and right prevent its manifestation by the same means. Old School physicians seek to restrict the practice of medicine to their traditional system, the same as the ecclesastics once did the exercise of religion to their ritual. Not by whip and chain and rack; but by legal penalties.... They forbid that medicine be administered by any other method in New York while the Penal Code shall stand....

The Illinois Legislature, at its last session, passed a medical law that leaves no loophole for "irregular" practitioners. According to Section 10, "Any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine within the meaning of this act who shall treat, operate on, or prescribe for any physical ailment of another." A law like this in Palestine 1800 years ago, with a County Medical Society to look after its strict enforcement, would have subjected to criminal indictment the Great Physician who restored sight to the blind and healed lepers by the laying on of hands.

In twenty-nine States none but "diploma" doctors are now allowed to practice, under severe penalties. It has thus been settled by the Legislatures of these several States that diseases cannot be cured without drugs, and that it is a misdemeanor to minister to the sick with drugs unless duly commissioned so to do.

People are thus obliged to take the pharmaceutical doses prescribed, or be left without relief. These State-licensed doctors can now say to the sick, "Swallow down our stuff or suffer. You shall not call in any other doctor, or be cured by any other medical means." This is decidedly a "wil ye nil ye" style of treatment.

The design of this political deal of a ring of despotic doctors, viz., to compel the community to receive their services, is sure to defeat itself. It is a virtual admission by them that they are no longer able to secure their share of practice by professional competition; so they league together to monopolize the whole by Penal-Code compulsion. It looks as though they were unwilling to longer trust to their medical merits for employment. They have stemmed the swelling tide of innovation till they see they will be swept away unless saved by the life-boats of legislation.

The following from "McMaster's History of the People of the United States," describes the condition of medical affairs at the close of the last century:

"Homeopathy, with its tasteless mixtures and diminutive doses, was unknown, and it is not too much to say that more medicine was taken any year by the well, than is now taken in the same space of time by the sick.

"Each spring the blood must be purified, the bowels must be purged, the kidneys must be excited, the bile must be moved, and large doses of senna and manna, and loathsome concoctions of rhubarb and molasses, were taken daily. In a thousand ways the practice of medicine has changed since that day, and changed for the better. Water was denied to the patient tormented with fever, and in its stead he was given small quantities of clam-juice. Mercurial compounds were taken till the lips turned blue and the gums fell away from the teeth. The damsel who fainted was bled profusely. Cupping and leeching were freely prescribed," etc.

The Father of His Country had just died, done to death by the doctors of that day, as truly as was Lincoln by the bullet of Booth. The night of Friday, 13th of December, 1799, after exposure to the rain during the day, he was attacked with chills, succeeded by laborious respiration. Though considered but a severe cold, he thought best to call in one of his servants, who did the "bleeding" on the plantation. That was the old-time preliminary for a "course of medicine," so-called. The "bleeder" took one pint of blood from his master's arm, thus depleting him that much of healthful life. Physicians came the next morning and repeated the bleeder's operation; and twice within four hours took two other pints of blood. And they kept right on with these copious bleedings, in the interim applying blisters, administering two doses of calomel and repeated doses of tartar emetic, amounting to five or six grains. The certificate of Drs. Craik and Dick, who treated the illustrious patient, states that:

"Blisters were applied to the extremities, together with a cataplasm of bran and vinegar to the throat. Speaking, which was painful from the beginning, now became almost impracticable. Respiration grew more and more contracted and imperfect until 11:30 o'clock on Saturday night, when, retaining the possession of his intellect, he expired without a struggle."

And after thus losing about all the blood in his body, his flesh burnt by enormous blisters, his stomach crammed with calomel and tartar emetic, the great Washington gave up the ghost!

Had these lately enacted doctors' laws been in vogue half a century ago, any advance in medical science would have been impossible. Homeopaths and Eclectics would have been prosecuted out of practice by State-established Allopaths. But, despite the most desperate endeavors of the latter to drive them from the professional field, the former steadily won their way into public confidence and favor. The old brigade of bleeders and blisterers were obliged to alter their aggressive attitude to one of tacit toleration. Forced from their foothold, step by step, before the advance of modern methods, they tardily adopted what they once denounced, and hoped to hold their ground by displaying a flag of truce. They formerly held that there was nothing so infallibly fatal to a fever patient as water. But after dare-devil doctors of the upstart schools had exploded the notion, the old fogies turned round and declared that water was the very best thing in the world for fever.

As times thus go, they need no prophet to foretell them their fate. And, aware that they can never recover the confidence of the community that they have forfeited, and that they have no hope but in heroic measures, they now complacently turn to these same Homeopaths and Eclectics they have so bitterly berated and sought to abolish, and say, "See here, we Regulars must join hands and hunt down these undiplomatized practitioners as criminals. The stupid people must be protected from such dangerous doctors."

February Magazines.

THE BIZARRE. NOTES AND QUERIES.—The February number is one of the most valuable that has been issued. The first eight pages contain a digest of a thesis by Dr. Ivan Slavonski, entitled "Periodicity—A Mathematical and Physical Proof of the Immortality of Man." Many years previous to his decease, Dr. S. was Professor of Pure Mathematics in the Imperial University of St. Petersburg, and recognized as one of the first Mathematicians of his day. He discovered the formula for the reduction of "the irreducible case," considered as difficult a problem as the "squaring of the circle." Other interesting contents are, "Sayings of Jesus not in the Canonical Gospels," quoted by the Early Christian Fathers, and a list of "Chemical Elements in order of their Discovery." Manchester, N. H.: S. C. & L. M. Gould. For sale by Colby & Rich, Boston.

HOMILETIC REVIEW.—Dr. Stuckenberg, of Berlin, gives the third of his papers on "Psychology for Preachers," its special topic being "The Psychic Culture of the Preacher." The usual variety of sermonic literature and discussions on practical issues are given in this month's issue. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED.—This indispensable visitor to the homes of all who would successfully grow the finest flowers, indicates in its present issue the near approach of spring by its contents, which are seasonable and instructive. A finely colored frontispiece exhibits a cluster of Zonal Pelargoniums. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE MISSIONARY REVIEW.—In its various departments are included literary articles, accounts of organized work, correspondence and general intelligence. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to overestimate the value of warm feet at this season of the year. THOUSANDS OF VALUABLE LIVES are sacrificed every year in consequence of DAMP, COLD FEET. Cold feet lay the foundation for PULMONARY DISEASES, so fatal to the people of our land. Could we make the world know how valuable OUR MAGNETIC FOOT BATTERIES are for keeping up a WARM GENIAL GLOW THROUG THE FEET AND LIMBS, none would be without them. These INSOLES WARM THE WHOLE BODY, keep the VITAL FORCES UP, magnetize the iron in the blood, and cause a FEELING OF WARMTH AND COMFORT over the whole body. If no other result was produced than to insulate the body from the wet, cold earth, the INSOLES WOULD BE INVALUABLE. In many cases the INSOLES ALONE will cure RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA and SWELLING OF THE LIMBS. $1 a pair or three pairs for $2 to any address by mail. Send stamps or currency in letter, stating size of boot or shoe, and we will send free by mail TO ANY PART OF THE WORLD. Send for our book, "A PLAIN ROAD TO HEALTH." Free to any address.

THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

ZÖLLNER.

AN OPEN LETTER
TO
PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.

BY C. C. MASSEY,

Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

Cambridgeport.—Meetings held each Sunday evening at 7½ o'clock at St. George's Hall, 603 Main street, by the Spiritualist Society. H. P. Trask, President.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, Feb. 12th, Mrs. R. S. Lillie occupied the platform. In the morning, after congregational singing, Miss Mintie Eakins, piano accompanist, an invocation by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and a song by Mr. Lillie, Mrs. Lillie, under the influence of her guides, said: You ask: Why do Spiritualists not harmonize in action better than the sectarian church denominations? We reply: It is because all mankind do not see, act, or think alike. We look upon Spiritualists the same as upon church people. Character is the application of the principles we believe in, and if all Christendom practiced what is embodied in the "Sermon on the Mount," there would be more harmony in the world. The Apostles were Spiritualists and worked through spirit-power. Differences of opinion will occur, according to people's individuality, and until man has ripened into his true manhood. In answer to the question, "Which is the best for America, Free Trade or Tariff Protection?" the speaker said: As a spirit I adopt the principle embodied in the words of Thomas Paine: "The world is my country." When you say that it makes a free trader of you, I say it gives to every human being a free chance. Every radical change in human affairs requires suffering. Our late war, after it had taken the best blood of our households, liberated four million slaves from bondage, and slavery was abolished in a way man could not foresee. We belong to the nations of the earth by inheritance, and this nation ought to be charitable and extend the hand of fellowship to all. You have a right, as our forefathers had, to worship God according to the dictates of your own conscience. Broad humanitarianism answers: "The world is my country, and to do good my religion"; and our aim should be to adopt those measures that will result in the greatest good to the greatest number.

Evening.—After very acceptable singing by Mr. Lillie, and an invocation by Mrs. Lillie, her guides very ably considered questions from the audience, and held the close attention of all. The service closed with an improvised poem.

Mrs. Lillie will speak at the same place next Sunday, at 10:30 A. M. and 7 P. M.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society connected with the Boston Spiritual Temple at Berkeley Hall, held its regular meeting Tuesday, Feb. 7th. At 6 o'clock supper was served to sixty people, a general feeling of harmony pervading the company. The exercises of the evening, the President, Mrs. C. N. Mellen, presiding, were opened by Mr. J. T. Lillie with a song, Miss Mintie Eakins, piano accompanist. Remarks were made by Dr. J. D. Moore, Dr. N. P. Smith, Mrs. Ida Whitlock, Prof. W. F. Peck, Captain Richard Holmes, Mr. Abbott Walker, Mrs. J. B. Hugho, Mrs. R. S. Lillie and Mrs. H. S. Lake (inspirational). Charles W. Sullivan rendered Prof. Longley's popular song, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us." Miss Mintie Eakins gave a recitation which elicited applause, and Miss Genie Bowen, the child pianist, a musical selection and some recitations, which were highly appreciated. After a piano solo by Master Willie Boyce, Miss E. F. Burnett closed the exercises with "Home, Sweet Home," variations. The attendance was the largest of the season.

The next regular meeting at which supper will be served at 6 o'clock will be held on the afternoon and evening of Feb. 21st. Come one, come all.

31 White street, East Boston.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The guides of Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester gave a very pleasant and spiritual address on Sunday last, at the Temple, taking for their subject, "Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread." How many times this prayer has been uttered, and how few have realized all that the words imply. The body hungers and must have its daily nutriment, but no less the soul has its needs, and in the largest sense the prayer recognizes the spiritual as well as the material demands of human beings. The words preceding our text: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is heaven," recognize the heavenly kingdom and the flowering out of man's highest nature, that could not be without the spiritual sustenance which the soul demands.

Many souls have their spiritual natures starved and dwarfed, scarcely recognizing the fact that they live a dual existence; they hunger and thirst, and in their ignorance they know not that it is the bread of heaven for which they crave. This restless, turbulent throng seeks to satisfy with chaff, with the follies and folbies of the world, the desire of the soul for God and heaven and all beautiful, sweet and spiritual things. Only the Father can give the true bread of life, and in no other way can perfect peace be found, that peace which the world knoweth not of, but which passeth all understanding, and which is the true equipoise of the spirit with all its demands satisfied.

Let us strive to understand aright our own natures, to realize that we are all sons and daughters of the heavenly Parent, and that only in our aspiration and trust toward him can the true bread of life be found.

Next Sunday Mrs. L. S. Manchester will again occupy the platform at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M.

There will also be the weekly sociable at 7:30 P. M., in the lower audience room, on Wednesday evening. All are cordially invited. W. H. R.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—This hall was crowded at the several meetings throughout the day. At the morning session Mr. Eben Cobb gave a very earnest address upon "The Resurrection and the Life." Dr. W. S. Eldridge spoke upon "Water, and its Relation to Spirit-Life." Dr. Paxson discoursed earnestly upon "The aid of spirit power in the affairs of earth-life." Tests and readings were given by Miss A. Peabody, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant and others.

In the afternoon eloquent remarks were made by Mr. Eben Cobb, Mrs. A. Forester [who also gave tests] and Mr. Augustus Hatch of Glenwood; acknowledged tests and readings were given by Mrs. Thomas; Mr. T. J. Gurney of Boston thoughtfully addressed the people; fine tests and readings were given by Mrs. J. D. Bruce and Peter McKenzie—the latter giving the name of "Peter Mason," who desired recognition.

The evening session opened with Longley's "Beautiful Home of the Soul," finely rendered by Mrs. Rudora Case. Mr. Cobb gave a short address upon the scientific line, showing that in the brain are grand poles that develop the character of the man. Tests and readings were given by "Winona" and Mrs. J. D. Bruce, which were well received and recognized. Dr. W. S. Eldridge said that a spirit came here and uttered these words: "It matters not what a man believes if he only believes it." The Doctor gave diagnoses of disease; and Mr. Cobb remarked in this connection that the late Dr. Warren once said that this one power, if possessed by the medical profession generally, would have saved the lives of thousands. Mrs. W. A. Rich spoke very earnestly, and gave some remarkable tests of spirit presence. Miss Annie Curtis gave: "What a little boy thought about things," which was heartily received. HEATH.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The meetings at this place on Sunday last were fully attended and much interest was manifested. In the afternoon Dr. P. C. Drisko [opened] the [meeting] with remarks under control of his guides. He was followed by Mrs. O. A. Robbins and Mrs. M. A. Chandler with remarks and tests. David Brown also gave tests; Mrs. Buck, Mrs. Annie Smith and Mrs. S. E. Rich, tests and spirit-communications.

In the evening Mrs. M. W. Leslie gave an address on "Compensation," which was listened to with marked attention and frequently applauded, closing with tests. Mrs. Dr. Waterhouse of Somerville, Mrs. Mina Olmstead and Dr. Burdett of Haverhill made remarks; Miss Cullen gave character and Dr. E. H. Mathews psychometric readings which were recognized as true.

First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society.—The Old Folks' Supper and Dance on last Friday evening was a grand success—one hundred and ninety persons partaking of a New England supper, and then enjoying the dance in Lyceum Hall under the direction of Mr. Richard Laundry, assisted by F. B. Woodbury, Miss Bertie Kemp, Miss Whittemore and Mrs. Anderson—until the midnight hour.

Among the prettiest costumes worn were those of Mrs. A. E. Blinn, Mrs. H. O. Torrey, Mrs. Ada Simmons, Mrs. Amanda Butterfield, Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Richard Laundry, F. B. Woodbury, Mrs. Turner, Mr. Chas. Sullivan, Mrs. Daisley, Mrs. Albee.

We understand that the entertainment is to be repeated in April in a large hall.

The Anniversary Committee are hard at work upon their great task, and have already announced that the Union Anniversary Exercises of the Lyceum and this Society will be held in Tremont Temple, Saturday, March 31st—morning, afternoon and evening—and on Sunday, April 1st, in Paine Memorial Hall—morning, afternoon and evening. Saturday morning will be devoted largely to the Lyceum children. Edgar W. Emerson, Joseph D. Stiles, J. Frank Baxter, Sarah A. Byrnes, A. A. Wheelock and a host of other talent are to take part in the exercises. REPORTER.

Alice P. Torry, Sec'y. puts us in possession of the following connected with the Ladies' Aid Entertainment, etc.: "The members of the Committee were all attired in costumes of 'ye ancient day,' and made a most attractive contrast to those who were attired in modern dress. No pains had been spared on the part of those who had the entertainment in charge, and it proved a success both socially and financially.—On Thursday evening, Feb. 9th, about twenty-five of the members of the Ladies' Aid visited the pleasant home of Mr. J. Frank Baxter, giving his estimable wife and our loved sister member a genuine surprise party. Mr. Baxter and Mr. Sullivan rendered several songs, a collation was served, and at a late hour the party dispersed, after having spent a very pleasant evening."

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association—Ladies' Aid Parlor, 1031 Washington Street.—The hall was filled at both of our sessions last Sunday with intelligent audiences. Dr. A. H. Richardson opened the exercises with remarks; Miss A. Peabody gave tests of spirit-presence which were acknowledged to be correct. Mrs. J. D. Bruce, of Wakefield, gave a number of psychometric readings; Mrs. Loomis Hall gave readings and tests of spirit-presence; Mrs. Willard was warmly greeted and did acceptable service for the spirit-friends; Dr. Eldridge made a brief address, logical and interesting, and gave diagnoses. Dr. Paxson opened the exercises of the evening with an address; Mrs. J. F. Dillingham followed with tests of spirit-presence; Mrs. L. Boyden, formerly of New Haven, Conn., came among us a stranger, but by her mediumship gained for herself a host of friends. Mrs. Bruce and Mrs. Loomis Hall held the audience until almost ten o'clock interested in their fine psychometric readings. Our Boston Mediums' Day was a grand success. One or two Sundays in each month will be devoted to home talent, the money we usually pay to mediums from a distance to be equally divided among those who appear upon our platform. The seating capacity of our hall is severely tested at our Thursday evening gatherings. Anniversary exercises in Paine Memorial Hall the last Sunday afternoon and evening of the month of March.

Children's Progressive Lyceum—Paine Hall. The notes of the exercises at the last session were misplaced, so that the full report cannot be given. The fact that Mrs. W. S. Butler was to depart this week for a five weeks' trip to California via the Southern States was, much to our regret, forgotten by the Conductor and the writer, who take this occasion to say that she has the warmest thanks of all for her very successful endeavors to benefit the Lyceum, every member of which wishes her a pleasant visit and a happy return. Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualist Meetings were held at this place Sunday last. The afternoon services were unusually interesting, being participated in by the Chairman, J. Edson, Dr. Paxson, C. M. A. Twitchell, Prof. Milleson, Miss Cullen (character readings), Miss Nettie M. Holt (tests and readings).

The evening exercises consisted of a short address by the Chairman, followed by an interesting lecture and tests by Mrs. I. E. Hurd, of Lynn—Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas and Miss Nettie M. Holt giving clear readings and recognized tests; music and song by Mrs. Mandel. W. A. HALE, Chairman.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7½ P.M. Admission free.

Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th Streets.—The People's Spiritual Meeting (removed from Spencer Hall). Services every Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. Mediums and speakers always present. Frank W. Jones, Conductor.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity, Rev. Mrs. T. B. Stryker, pastor, will hold services every Sunday at 2½ P.M., in Macgregor Hall, Madison Avenue, South-East corner of 59th street (entrance 42 East 59th street). All are cordially invited to be present.

Meetings for Spiritual Manifestations will be held at Adelphi Hall, corner 7th Avenue and 52d street, New York, every Sunday at 2½ P.M. Tests given by Mrs. E. A. Wells of New York and Mr. Frank T. Ripley of Boston, Mass.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 3 and 8 P. M. Mediums and speakers welcome. Test Medium and Conductor, Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn.

Soul Communion Meetings every Tuesday at 3 P.M. sharp, at Mrs. Morrell's, 230 West 30th street.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P.M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The American Spiritualist Alliance held its regular meeting on the evening of Feb. 8th at the parlors of Mrs. M. E. Wallace, 219 West 42d street.

One of the pleasant features of the evening was the presentation to Mrs. Wallace of an elegantly illustrated and bound volume of Suder's "Birds of North America," as a testimonial of the appreciation by THE ALLIANCE of her kindness in placing her spacious parlors at its disposal for holding its meetings, and declining to accept any compensation therefor.

The Committee to report upon the best methods for scientifically investigating the spiritual phenomena, presented its report through its Chairman, Prof. Henry Kiddle. The report was, on motion, received and made the order of the evening for discussion. It very soon became evident that the question was one that would require considerable time for its elucidation, and that the result of the consideration by THE ALLIANCE might have the effect to change and modify it in many respects. In effect THE ALLIANCE is now acting as a Committee of the Whole upon the report, with the hope of producing a document that will correctly define the character or nature of the phenomena, give them a suitable designation, and point out the best methods for observing and studying them. When this labor shall have been accomplished, and THE ALLIANCE shall have decided upon the best method to be pursued, it will then enter upon the labor of investigation with the hope of accumulating data that will satisfy all sincere and earnest seekers after knowledge that the phenomena are demonstrated facts, and that they have a supermundane origin.

The next meeting of THE ALLIANCE will be held at 8 P.M. Feb. 22d, at 219 West 42d street, and a full attendance of all its members is earnestly desired. THE ALLIANCE also extends an earnest invitation to all persons who are seeking for more knowledge concerning the conditions of life that pertain above the mundane plane, and who are desirous of using such knowledge for the uplifting of themselves and others, to unite with us and assist in attaining this desirable object. JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

[All papers devoted to the Spiritual Philosophy are respectfully requested to copy the above.]

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke in the morning of last Sunday upon "How Human and Animal Life First Came on this Earth." The lecture was able and logical. In the evening her subject was "The Lessons of Faith." There was a good attendance upon both occasions.

The afternoon meeting was of unusual interest. The Chairman, Mr. H. J. Newton, made some very apt remarks upon the evils of fraud-hunting and the consequences that might follow such a pursuit. Much applause followed his remarks, showing conclusively that the sentiment of the audience was with him. Mrs. H. J. Newton read Whittier's poem, "The Vision of St. Marks." Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke upon the subject of the poem. Mr. Henry J. Newton gave a subject for a poem for the afternoon services, "The Mould and Decay of the Past is the Bloom and Beauty of To-Day." The inspiration of Mrs. Brigham, as shown in this poem, was favorably commented upon. Twenty tests were given by Mrs. Wells, every one recognized; all but four were given to entire strangers. Mr. Frank T. Ripley gave numerous tests.

Next Sunday evening Mrs. Brigham will speak upon "What would be the natural results upon the daily life of one who accepts the doctrine of Spiritualism as a religion?" The annual election for trustees of the Society was held after the morning service. The Society is incorporated and one of the oldest Societies of Spiritualists in the world. There are nine trustees, and three elected annually. Mr. Henry J. Newton's, Mr. Henry Van Gelder's and Mrs. Martha Jeffrey's term expires to-day. Mr. Newton and Mr. Van Gelder were reelected; Mrs. Milton Rathbun in place of Mrs. Martha Jeffrey, and Mr. Milton Rathbun to fill a vacancy in the board. S.

New York, Feb. 12th, 1888.

The People's Spiritual Meeting.—Last Sunday Mrs. H. M. Walton, of Brooklyn, read an inspirationally written essay on "Media, Ancient and Modern," an elaborate production that did great credit to the inspirers as well as the inspired, and gave entire satisfaction. Dr. Dean Clarke made a good impression by his utterances upon the topic dealt with by the first speaker, and gave encouraging ideas in regard to the future of our spiritual movement, contrasting the present with the past. Mrs. Laidlaw, of Brooklyn, followed with a brief trance speech. Mrs. T. J. Lewis and Mrs. Hamilton gave several proofs of spirit presences by descriptions of and messages from the same.

In the evening Mrs. T. J. Lewis made the opening remarks and gave a large number of tests, most of which were recognized. Mr. G. E. Whittlesey followed with items of experience. The meeting closed with remarks by the Conductor.

Hon. Warren Chase is expected to speak March 4th for the People's Meeting in Columbia Hall, 878 Sixth Avenue. F. W. JONES, Conductor.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Conservatory Hall, Bedford Avenue, corner Fulton Street.—Services every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7½ P.M.

Fraternity Rooms, corner Bedford Avenue and South Second Street.—Services every Sunday at 7½ P.M. Children's Lyceum at 3 P.M. The Spiritual Literary Union meets the first and third Saturday of each month at 8 P.M.

310 Livingston Street.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Eureka Hall, 378 Bedford Avenue, near Broadway.—Mrs. A. C. Henderson speaks and gives spirit tests every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

Conference.—It was the pleasure and spiritual profit of the patrons of the Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference on Saturday evening, 4th inst., at their new place of meeting at Intermediate College, 310 Livingston street, to listen to addresses from Mr. George Sterling Wines, a student at Harvard College, and Dr. F. L. H. Willis; Mr. Wines's subject was "Agnosticism and Ethical Culture versus Intuitive Religion." The address was a forcible, clear and logical production, and gave entire satisfaction to an intelligent and good-sized audience. Dr. Willis then spoke for about ten minutes to great acceptance, when he was suddenly controlled and a poem of great merit improvised, delighting and uplifting the spiritual aspirations of his hearers. Mrs. J. S. Walton, M. D., described two spirits standing by Dr. Willis during the improvisation, purporting to be Wm. Cullen Bryant and Wm. Denton. Remarks by Wm. C. Bowen and Mrs. H. M. Walton closed one of the most pleasant and profitable sessions of the B. P. S. C.

Our move seems to be a good one, the new hall a gem, abounding with intellectual and spiritual inspiration. We have reason to expect increased interest in the conference, as the mediums seem to show a willingness to coöperate with the spirit-intelligences. Spiritual papers may always be had of Mr. Green, who takes interest in and leads the singing. We have a volunteer pianist, Miss Greta Patterson, who assists greatly in the musical portion of our sessions.

Saturday evening, 11th inst., Mrs. Ida E. Vittum read an inspirational essay on "What must we do to be Saved?" It was well written, contained much thought and gave satisfaction. Mrs. P. A. Bertine, under control, gave words of wisdom; Mr. G. S. Wines, J. La Fume, Louis Spitz, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. H. M. Walton, Mr. A. P. Dey and William R. Tice filled out the time with remarks. Mrs. Bertine will open the conference session next Saturday evening. F. W. JONES.

J. Frank Baxter's Work in Worcester, Mass.

Last Sunday, the 12th inst., opened bright and mild after the storm of the day and night preceding, so that few who desired were deprived the privilege of attending Mr. J. Frank Baxter's exercises in Continental Hall, Worcester. The man, the day and the occasion all conspired to bring out the largest audiences of the season, that of the evening completely filling the commodious hall, necessitating for a half hour after beginning the placing of extra seats and chairs. The janitor, ushers and aids are to be commended for the quietness and expeditiousness with which the emergency was met.

The afternoon lecture showed in clear and forcible manner the catholicity and value of the spiritual rostrum—its position, accomplishments and prophecies. The lecture was radical, but so irrefutable that opponents and critics were silenced in thought, and indifferents and apathetics aroused to consideration.

The evening lecture was a grand exposition of the Spiritualists' position, and a scathing and effective rebuke to theological inconsistency, ministerial thrusts and church prejudice. It is safe to say not one of that large audience heard the lecture without lasting benefit. That it was thoroughly appreciated was demonstrated by frequent applause.

Mr. Baxter's séance of an hour following the evening lecture was full of interest. He described his sensation during the time, saying that so powerful were the influences that he felt pressed from all sides, as though great eagerness to manifest on the part of spirits was the case, as men in the earnestness of debate often clamor and strive to obtain the chairman's attention. And it would seem so, as name after name, with brief description, was hurried into notice and mention, affording little time for recognition of the many well-known "departed." As it was, several could not withstand and would cry out "Recognized," "That's right," etc., even to the venture of an interruption.

Next Sunday, at 2 and 7 o'clock at the same place, Mr. Baxter will lecture again. AUDITOR.

Lowell, Mass.—In the absence of Dr. N. P. Smith, who was engaged to occupy our platform last Sunday, N. S. Greenleaf kindly offered his services and gave us a most able lecture, which was listened to with marked attention. Also A. B. Plympton made some fine remarks on the science of Spiritualism and progression through Spiritual Science, from which Mr. Greenleaf took his subject, which was handled by the invisibles in a masterly manner. The evening services were attended by a larger audience than usual to listen to Mr. G.'s control.—Next Sunday Mrs. S. Dick, of Boston, is to occupy our platform. B. S. FREEMAN, Cor. Sec'y.

No. 5 Brooks street.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. A. E. Cunningham of Boston lectured and gave tests on Sunday afternoon and evening.—Mrs. H. S. Lake is to speak for us again the first Sunday in March.—The Ladies' Aid Society has presented the First Spiritualist Society with fifty dollars to help sustain the Sunday meetings.—Oscar Edgerly and his sister, Mrs. Grace Patten, are conducting séances at Amesbury every Sunday evening.—The Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism will probably be observed here by literary exercises on Sunday, April 1st, to be followed by a bal masque on Easter Monday night. H.

Attleboro, Mass.—Dr. H. P. Fairfield of Rockland, Me., occupied our platform Saturday evening, Feb. 11th, and gave us two lectures on Sunday last, presenting a fine description of the spirit-world, its location and occupations, through his spirit control, "Sylvester Judd." All who attended his services were highly instructed and entertained. After the evening lecture he gave quite a number of tests, which were recognized by the audience. We are in hopes to hear more of his teachings in the near future.

WILLIAM S. WILBUR,
Lock Box 620. Sec'y First Spiritual Society.

Norwich, Conn.—Mr. Charles Dawbarn of New York City has occupied our platform two Sundays, Feb. 5th and 12th, and delivered four very important lectures on the Spiritual Philosophy, presenting many new ideas in a forcible and practical manner. In place of invocation or poem, he makes prefatory remarks, giving valuable suggestions in relation to the laws of mediumship and other important subjects.—Dr. George A. Fuller, editor of Light on the Way, will be our next speaker.

MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

New Bedford, Mass.—Mr. W. F. Peck delivered two profoundly interesting lectures Sunday afternoon and evening on the subjects: "Evolution vs. Creation," and "Where is the Spirit-World?" The facts presented in these discourses showed an intimate acquaintance with all the latest scientific discoveries and their bearing upon the questions of religion and immortality. Many of his hearers expressed themselves as having gathered a wealth of information from these lectures.—Next Sunday, Mrs. C. M. Nickerson will occupy the platform.

Providence, R. I.—Mr. Joseph D. Stiles was greeted by large audiences on Sunday, Feb. 12th. A great many tests were given with wonderful rapidity—more than one hundred being presented in the two sessions: "Swift Arrow" giving ample proof of his being rightly named. Nearly all of the names given were recognized.—Mr. Charles Dawbarn of New York will lecture before the Association the remaining Sundays of the month.

Troy, N. Y.—W. H. Vosburgh informs us in a letter which will appear next week that Miss Jennie B. Hagan has just closed a very successful engagement with the Star Hall Society, and that matters in Troy have a cheerful look at present.

Washington, D. C.

Just about one year ago I found myself in this, the capital of the nation, and as I always, in my wanderings, keep in view the cause of Spiritualism and never tire of learning new truths in regard to its phenomena, and as in the company of Spiritualists I find my highest enjoyment, it was but natural that I should wend my way to their hall and again renew the many pleasant aquaintances of last year. There I found, as the speaker, Mrs. Adeline M. Glading, whose soul-stirring lectures and inspired answers to questions from the audience last year gave so much soul-food for the tired and weary spirit. I found that her powers, guided and directed by the angel-world, had increased and expanded until to-day I doubt as to whether there is a more forcible or pleasing lecturer in the field than this modest but earnest little woman. Her controls do not hesitate to grapple with the most abstruse and difficult questions that are propounded to them, and the answers, while they are always full of instruction and new ideas, are also of that soul-edifying order that makes one feel kinder and more loving to humanity.

Mrs. Glading seems to have endeared herself to the Washington society in a remarkable way, so much so that very strenuous efforts are being made to have her devote six months of her labors to the society during the next lecture season; but as her time is so much engaged and sought after, I doubt as to whether she will consider it for the highest good of the many to refuse the calls for other cities where her presence is desired.

The Society here is in a flourishing condition, thanks to the untiring efforts of its efficient President, John B. Wolff, its Vice-President, Mr. Edson, and its Treasurer, Henry Steinberg, who never loses an opportunity to work for the good of the cause.

I was informed that two of the members of this Society, viz: Mr. J. C. Young and Mrs. M. A. French, the medium, had within the month of January passed over to the higher life. Mr. Young I had not the pleasure of knowing, but I learn that he was an earnest and consistent man, and passed through the change called death with the perfect trust of a Spiritualist that "it was well with his soul."

Mrs. M. A. French, the medium, was well and favorably known to both residents and sojourners here, and we feel that it will be a long time before her place as a resident medium will be filled. She has left a host of friends who remember her kindly.

The Association had a grand entertainment on the evening of Jan. 25th, thanks to the persistent and untiring efforts of Mrs. Glading, who has a happy faculty of conceiving and carrying to a successful issue these social gatherings. She was assisted by an efficient corps of cheerful workers. The entertainment consisted of a concert and social; the spacious hall was crowded with pleasure-seekers, and none seemed to be disappointed in their search after happiness. We wish we could mention at length the merits and earnest work of each and every one who contributed to the success of the fête, but we can only briefly mention some, asking pardon for any unintentional omission:

Mrs. Crandell, Conductress of Programme; Mrs. Hort, in humorous recitations; Prof. Bub, zither; Miss Thompson, who contributed two grand readings; Julius Burnham, the child violin soloist; Dr. R. R. Robert, comic recitation; the efficient Quartette of the Society in musical selections; Dr. Frank White, comic readings; Bessie Swinson, Bessie Driver and Stella Steinberg—three interesting children—in songs and recitations.

At the termination of the concert refreshments were partaken of, after which the floor was cleared for dancing, which was heartily indulged in. Misses Annie and Daisy Held were the lady floor managers.

All seemed to work with a will to make the event pleasant and profitable, and that they succeeded the results amply testify.

Mrs. Glading has had the pleasure of turning a neat little sum of money over to Treasurer Steinberg as the result of her indefatigable labor.

Mrs. Riddle has presented a beautful silk quilt, her own handiwork, to the association, which when it is disposed of will add at least fifty dollars to the funds, and this with the profits of the entertainment will leave in the hands of the treasurer quite a handsome balance.

Mrs. Glading returns here again in March. May the cause prosper and man's happiness increase, is the wish of your CORRESPONDENT.

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. F. O. Hyzer.—It gives me much pleasure to report the commencement of a course of lectures in this city on Spiritualism by this distinguished inspirational speaker. The initiatory lecture took place Sunday, Feb. 12th, in G. A. R. Hall, under the auspices of the Lyceum; the other dates so far arranged are Feb. 19th, 26th, and March 11th. There is no doubt but these lectures will prove an excellent supplementary treat to those already given this winter at the Columbia Theatre.

Helen Stuart-Richings.—This talented speaker, psychometrist and elocutionist, has kindly and gratuitously offered, while en route from Pittsburgh to Detroit, to give an evening (illustrating her versatile gifts) for the benefit of the Children's Progressive Lyceum. The date selected is Sunday, March 4th, and the place G. A. R. Hall; thus the friends have an opportunity of showing their appreciation to Mrs. Richings and the cause of our children at the same time.

Passed to Spirit-Life.—Mrs. Dehlia Archer, a well-known Spiritualist and constant attendant at our meetings until prevented by the insidious enemy cancer, after a painful siege of five years, physically succumbed, her true (spirit) self passing on to rejoice her son "Bela," who preceded her some seven years since.

Still Another.—Mrs. M. J. Pendleton, who, though little known to the Spiritualists of this city, was a firm believer in our glorious philosophy, has also gone. To the credit of those left in bereavement, nearly all of whom are Orthodox, her wishes for spiritualistic services were strictly complied with, your reporter—at her own request—officiating, as he also did at the obsequies of Mrs. Archer.

Preparations for the Anniversary.—As customary for the past twenty years, the Spiritualists of this city and surrounding towns will celebrate the anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism. As to Cleveland the credit belongs of first suggesting the observance of this annual festivity (through the mediumship of Father James Lawrence), the event has always been faithfully and successfully celebrated since its inception. Details of the programme will be sent later; in all probability it will be a two days' meeting—Saturday, March 31st, and Sunday, April 1st.

Mrs. Josephine Ammon, unpurged from "contempt of court," still remains in jail; but as the new Probate Judge is now installed into office a speedy trial of the Josephine Blann case is expected, and a turn in the affair will probably be taken. THOS. LEES.

Cincinnati, O.—It is reported that at the Anniversary celebration in Cincinnati on the 31st of March, an organization is to be formed under the name of THE OHIO VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF SPIRITUALISTS, from adherents of the cause and others who may be disposed to join, in Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Pennsylvania. In order that a full representation of the Spiritualists of that section may be had, "every Society and every community," says The Better Way, "in the territory mentioned should send delegates to this anniversary occasion, and from such material that a strong organization may be secured."

Edgar W. Emerson has given the utmost degree of satisfaction to his Cincinnati audiences. We are told that so full of detail and so true to fact have been many of his tests that skeptics are astonished, and not a few have adopted the truth thus brought home to their comprehension. Says The Better Way: "No sane man can close his eyes against proofs so conclusive and satisfactory."

The Chicago Young People's Progressive Society.—During the present month Mrs. Belle F. Hamilton and Prof. Barnes of Cincinnati, two excellent test-mediums, will appear before the above society. They have acquired an enviable reputation here and elsewhere, and good audiences are expected. A private class of twenty-five, for the study of the Philosophy, will be conducted by Judge Tiffany, on Sunday afternoons, under the auspices of the Society. A course of ten lessons is to cost but one dollar. In addition to this course private circles for development will soon be formed. Mrs. Ada Foye has been unable to appear in public as yet, the severe weather having been very injurious to her throat and lungs. The Society will give an Anniversary Ball and Entertainment, Friday evening, March 30th, the proceeds of which are to constitute a Library Fund. OELIA.

Avenue Hall, 159 22d street.

Haverhill, Mass.—Music Hall.—The First Spiritualist Society of this city has resumed services in Music Hall—the effects of the fire having been repaired. The Society has also added materially to its attractions so far as the musical exercises are concerned, (which by no means constitute a small feature in religious meetings at the present day,) having secured the services of the Bradford Home Orchestra, consisting of five pieces: four violins with piano accompaniment—Miss Jessie M. Little, Precentor—furnishing fine selections at every evening service. This new departure is meeting with a grand approval by the music-loving audiences that greet them.—The platform for the Sundays of February 5th and 12th was occupied by Mr. Fletcher.—On next Sunday, Feb. 19th, Joseph D. Stiles is expected to occupy the same platform. W. W. CURRIER.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball, of Lawrence, was the speaker in Brittan Hall last Sunday, giving interesting addresses followed by numerous descriptive tests, both afternoon and evening—a large number of which were fully recognized. The influence controlling in the evening for a brief address made the pleasant and sensible suggestions that Spiritualism takes away no altars or shrines; it is a living voice; it is a knowledge and not a belief, a strength and not a weakness.—Next Sunday Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly, of Newburyport, will occupy the platform. E. P. H.

Fitchburg, Mass.—Miss M. T. Shelhamer lectured for the First Spiritualists' Association to very appreciative audiences, last Sunday. Several subjects were placed upon the table, which her guides explained to the gratification of all.—We have two lectures every alternate Sabbath at 2 and 7 P. M.—The 26th of Feb. Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock will again address this Society. MRS. E. S. LORING, Sec'y.

Salem, Mass.—Mr. W. A. Wiggin, of Salem, occupied our platform Sunday, Feb. 12th—the services being appreciated by all present.—Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Boston, is to be with us next Sunday, Feb. 19th. W. H. H. THYNG, Cor. Sec'y.

CHARITY.

A Discourse delivered through the Trance Mediumship of

MRS. R. S. LILLIE,

Before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, in Berkeley Hall, Boston, Mass., Sunday Morning, Jan. 29th, 1888.

[Reported for Banner of Light by Miss Ida L. Spalding.]

INVOCATION.

We ask your presence, oh! spiritual beings, that through your ministrations we may be enabled to apprehend more fully the truth, and receive those thoughts which cannot come to us without your assistance. As we here assemble, looking toward you for instruction, may truth's divine rays touch our souls, illumine our understandings, and lead us into paths of knowledge and wisdom; and may the thoughts given us for consideration bring rest to the weary, strength to the weak, courage to the discouraged, and light to the spirit wandering in the darkness of ignorance and superstition. Lead us and guide us, and our glad songs of thanksgiving and words of praise will ascend to you now and evermore. Amen.

DISCOURSE.

We take for our subject this morning "Charity." We know it is an old theme. We may go to the Bible and read the texts that have been used in its elucidation by the ministry since the dawn of Christianity; we may say as they have said, "Charity suffereth long and is kind," "Charity covereth a multitude of sins"; but in taking up the various thoughts of that book, in watching the carrying out—so far as it is possible for mortals to do—of this principle, which we believe is in itself a sufficient creed for any body of religionists, embracing as it does all that is good in any religious belief, we find that various interpretations of it have been given, and that men's ideas of it differ as their ideas of God and many other subjects necessarily do and must.

As Spiritualists we are in need, first, of systematization or organization, with a view to establishing systematized charities as a means of doing a work that must be carried out upon the love-principle, in order that justice may be done upon the earthly plane among ourselves at least. There are organized charities among the different churches, denominations and religious systems; but we, as a body of thinkers, find ourselves outside of these organizations, the tenor of our thought making a division wall between us and them. Consequently, when one of our number appeals for aid to one of these institutions, the first question asked is: "What is your religious belief? to what religious body do you belong?" Thus as these lines of demarcation, which have always separated and made divisions in the ranks of mankind, are still being drawn, it becomes necessary for us, as believers in a peculiar system of thought, to organize in such a way as to enable us at least to care for our own in a systematic manner.

We know it will require patience and persistent endeavor for a long period to accomplish this result, but we think it is time that more was done in this direction among professed Spiritualists. There has already been a great deal of talk, but much of it has risen like smoke and disappeared, and but little has been carried out practically. Homes, which should be made homes in the real and true sense of the word, should be founded for the aged of both sexes. We would like to see your "Ladies' Aid Societies" and your "Industrial Unions," for instance, take, not only rooms where lectures should be delivered, social gatherings held and suppers given once a week, but a house which should be made a home for those whose necessities make them dependent upon the kindness, love and charity of others.

It is a hard, cold world when we come to depend upon what is called charity on this plane of being. In some way it has come to be considered a disgrace to arrive at a condition where it becomes necessary to ask for assistance; but what, I pray you, is every one of us, in the beginning, but an object of charity? We come upon this stage of life unable to put even a mouthful of food to our lips, and so dependent upon others that, left to ourselves, death would ensue in a few hours. Man is the most helpless of all animals. Nearly every form of life beneath him has an independence of livelihood that makes us almost question, at times, the wisdom of the Infinite. So, I say, as helpless dependents we start out in life, let our surroundings be what they may. Some of us, it is true, have advantages over others, and the best of these, the one for which we should be most thankful, and the possession of which should make us charitably disposed toward those born without it, is a bodily organization that makes us capable of becoming independent. I affirm that in the organization of the individual is the all that settles the question at birth as to whether that being is to be dependent or independent. The pre-natal conditions, influences, etc., at work even among our ancestry, the very incidents and accidents that may befall our mother in the sensitive weeks and months prior to our advent upon the mundane sphere, may wreck or injure our organization to such an extent that we may literally be cast upon the shores of time helpless and dependent. Not only this, but even some little circumstance that may arise, making a mother at that time feel her dependence, as the present condition of society is likely to do, may actually disqualify her unborn babe for a man or woman of business. Some deed, incident, or event, little as you think, may be the turning-point that shall decide whether or not your child shall be born with an inheritance that will give it anything like its rights in this material world.

When the conditions surrounding birth are known to have so much influence upon the expression of our better selves here in this journey of life, we ought to exercise the broadest charity in our dealings with those who are so constituted that all the preaching, teaching and arguing possible cannot aid them in acquiring independence, for it is impossible for them to grasp and make use of these ideas. We see the necessity, then, which the spirit-world has constantly pointed out, of a form or system of society that shall permit a growth into that oneness of interests that will make the entire race one large family. We are aware that many objections have been and will be raised to any mode of life such as that of Communism; yet we hold that man must ultimately grow into a condition where all who are unable to gain a livelihood will be cared for as considerately and tenderly as are our insane and our weak in body. Those who are deficient in the faculties whose development and exercise are necessary for the acquirement of the comforts of life will, in the future of man's development, be surrounded by conditions conducive to the unfoldment of their moral, intellectual and physical nature. These ideas will be regarded as impracticable and visionary by some, but many of the greatest improvements that we now enjoy were called visionary in the past, and all the wonderful inventions were, in the first place, called fanatics' or fools' ideas. I believe society can grow to this condition, and when it does, we shall have taken the most important step toward overcoming crime and sin of every character. Want, and his untrained, undeveloped, undisciplined nature, drive man, in many instances, to the commission of crime of which he would not otherwise be guilty. We most earnestly beseech all Spiritualists to take into consideration these thoughts, and let brotherly love and charity govern all. Again, circumstances over which the individual has no control many times, leave him at last in a condition where, unless kindly assisted by a stronger hand, he would certainly suffer.

We, as a people, have a sensitive class, unknown outside the ranks of Spiritualism, that cannot be cared for as they should by those who are not familiar with their susceptible condition. When it is found that by the use of their mediumistic powers they cannot earn sufficient for their support, or that, in the exercise of their spiritual gifts, they have been wrecked—physically speaking—our public mediums should be given a home such as this of which I have spoken. I could name two or three now, yes, more than that number right here in Boston, who need and deserve such care and attention; and I do not think I shall be doing wrong if I call the name of our gifted and faithful servant, Mrs. Cushman, who, during a cold, bleak, stormy, hard winter like this, gets but a pittance at best. When, in such a case, one comes to the necessity of appealing for aid, we should take her and care for her tenderly and lovingly, and she should be made to feel no more dependent than our grandmother, our father or mother would in our family circle, when he or she is no longer able to sustain the burdens of life.

In the exercise of mediumistic powers, the vital magnetism, which is the spiritual force of the organism, is largely drawn upon, thus devitalizing the body. "But why do the spirits," you ask, "allow their mediums to use this force, or power, until it is exhausted?" Because, as we said once before, having undertaken this work, it is impossible to give it up. All the bodily, as well as mental powers and forces of the individual, have been turned into different channels during the process of development, and it is beyond the power of spirit to turn back the tide from its natural course.

We can only touch lightly upon the subject at this point, the time at our disposal not permitting us to take it up and explain it as we would like. After one is worn out in the service, it is no longer a question of why did n't you stop before you fell down? It is better to work in the harness until the work is done, and then if the old body does not break down and let the spirit go free, we, as Spiritualists, should take it and care for it as tenderly as though it were a treasure committed to our keeping—as it really is, if we look at the matter aright. If the cold, hard winter that is upon us, together with the high price of fuel, makes those of you in moderate circumstances feel that life's battle is hard, what must it be to those who have much less or none at all, and especially to those who are so sensitive that they will nearly perish ere they ask for aid from mortals to help keep soul and body together?

So we say, our first duty is not longer to talk, but to go to work upon a practical basis; then, when wealthy Spiritualists see that there is organization, system and purpose underlying this movement, we believe they will take hold with you and labor for mankind. We would impress upon the minds of all Spiritualists of means the necessity of working while it is day. You may hold on to your wealth while you live, and in your will be very generous; but the world is not generous, your heirs are not generous, and nine chances to one it will be contested and set aside on the ground that you were a Spiritualist, and therefore not of sound mind. Hence, I repeat, care for those who need assistance, build homes for the homeless and aged, and do the work while it is yours to do, while the day of earthly life is upon you.

While we have spoken of lines and divisions in the ranks of mankind that must necessarily be considered by us in our work, still we are looking forward to the time when these barriers will be swept away, and we desire you as Spiritualists to set the example in this direction. I hope there will be that breadth of liberality in the distribution of your charities that when you have succored your own, to learn that human beings are in distress will be all that you require to know of them.

We know that we shall meet with opposition upon this point from those upon our own plane of thought, who call themselves practical men and women. "We must be practical," they say; "therefore it is necessary for us to ask first concerning those who apply for aid, if they are worthy?" In the distribution of charities that question cuts us the worst of all things, for we feel that the fact that a human being is cold, hungry, or in distress, makes him worthy of help. He may have been in the lowest paths of life, the reason for which you might perhaps find in the inherited consequences and results just spoken of; but while you were making your investigations, the man might starve. It is better to help those in need first, and find out their shortcomings afterward, if you have time enough. They may have done wrong, but they never will do much better until they are warmed up, their hunger satisfied, and their surroundings made favorable for the development of their nobler and better selves. If the applicant for assistance be a woman, the examination is especially rigorous in all institutions. It must be found out who she is, what she is, where she came from, and what she has been doing.

The best means to employ in seeking to lead those whose faults and shortcomings are many, out upon the highway by which higher planes of life may be reached, is charity clothed in the garment of love. According to the new definition, charity is love, and if it does not succeed in making them better and nobler, then the best of God's remedies has failed on earth. Apply it long enough, however, and I have the utmost faith in its efficacy as a cure for all the ills that man is heir to, morally speaking. Some one who has made a few applications of it upon a certain individual unsuccessfully, and then in despair has turned the cold shoulder upon the erring one, says: "I have tried that person over and over again, and it is of no use." Try him seventy times seven, as said one of old, and then seven hundred times that, if necessary, we add, for a human soul lifted out of the mire and brought out of darkness into light will pay you for the seven hundred times trying, as well as for the seven or seventy. We have those in our ranks who have but little backbone; but while wishing that they had more stamina let us have charity for them. There are those in the Church, also, it appears, who have no backbone at all; and, while we regret it, let us have charity for them as well.

Ought a man who is convinced of the truthfulness of Spiritualism to come out of the Church? an interrogator asks. It seems to us that he ought, but we cannot stand in his place. We should say that "honesty is the best policy," but we understand that all are not capable of acting up to a high standard of integrity. Such as these need to remain in slavery to others, as they really are, until they grow a little more and can bear the light, whose warm, effulgent rays will strengthen and develop their spiritual nature. We find that one of the greatest needs in this direction is a love of the truth, and we urgently appeal to all to cultivate the very best within them. So we say to all in the Church who believe in Spiritualism: Come out from among them and be ye separate. Do not skulk behind the church pews, the church creed or faith, if you do not longer believe it. If every man and woman were to come out of the churches to-day who does not accept literally the creed as it is, with all of its articles of faith, how many do you think would be left? Very few indeed. You will find very few church-members who can give you an intelligent answer when you ask about the articles of faith of their particular denomination. They have subscribed to them without much thought, and they cannot tell you the doctrinal points at the foundation of them. We pass these by and take up the class of men whose views have grown broader than their creed, but who still remain in the Church. Beecher, during the latter years of his ministry, was one of these. To our way of thinking, the man who does not live up to his convictions is not strictly honest; but until we are able to place ourselves in the position of another it is unwise to say what we would do under like circumstances. It is easier for one to step out of the old rut than for another; it is easier for some to break the shell of their former environments than for others; therefore let us have charity for those who do not see their duty as we do. Though we should say, Come out, be honest, be upright, still it is our belief that just at the point where they have developed enough spiritually to be of any particular use to the cause of truth they will and do come out and we find them in our midst. Spiritualism is truth to you to-day. It was not a few years ago, because your perceptions were not sufficiently developed to enable you to grasp the philosophy or the facts. Later experiences made it impossible for you longer to reject it. The greatest spiritual light that has ever penetrated the darkness of human life with its divine rays touched you, and you became enthusiastic. You could no longer remain in the churchfold, even with the hope of winning others to your way of thinking, but must be outspoken. Nothing wins like truth, or carries such conviction as candor and sincerity.

Coming back to our subject, "Charity," we hope we shall be forgiven when we say that a great many Spiritualists are apathetic and unmindful of duty in this direction. They need awakening. They do not realize the necessity of even contributing to the support of the cause in a general way, to say nothing of associated charities. Perhaps it is the result of circumstances. Former beliefs leave their impress upon the mind and spirit of the individual, and when discarded there is a corresponding reaction. The fear of future punishment or conditions has been the spur that has forced them to a performance of their religious duties, but when Spiritualism teaches them that there is no place of eternal torment, no avenging and angry Deity, they swing, as it were, out on the other side and become careless. We also find truly good men and women in the spiritualistic ranks, with warm, tender hearts, but, owing in a great measure to the lack of organization on the part of Spiritualists as a whole, they forget the responsibilities that rest upon them, the duty they owe society and their fellow-mortals, and settle down into a state of lethargy. Upon the minds of all such we would most earnestly impress the fact that while there is no death, hell or judgment to fear, still there is wrong to dread, and a nobility of character to develop which should be an incentive to right acting and the living of higher and better lives. There is much for us to do upon the earthly plane. There is not a sorrow that comes to the heart of a mortal that is not felt by all. Some, we know, will say that this is all nonsense, but we affirm that just so surely as the sun and moon influence this planet, and vice versa, that which affects the life of one individual also affects, in a degree, the lives of all others. As parts of one great whole we cannot afford to have any portion of the great body universal diseased; we cannot afford to have wrong, sorrow and want abide where any one of us can do aught to prevent it. If we fail in the little that we can do, if we fall short in charity, love and kindness, and in the living out of these principles, then we fail in all that constitutes true religion, and the injury we do ourselves affects all others in a measure.

Leaving the thought of associated charities, let us consider the true attitude of man toward the evil-doer, and as before we will look within our own ranks. We will not pass this point without speaking of that which is of such vast importance to us, namely, our phenomena. Sometimes we feel that we cannot be too severe in our denunciation of those who have been found guilty of deception; who willingly and willfully trifle at the altar of the holiest of holies, where the angels come to let in the light upon mankind. There is, however, much to be considered here. While we find individuals who give fraudulent communications or manifestations, there are also conditions existing which make it necessary for us to be wise and discreet in meting out our justice. There is such a wide difference in the experiences of different individuals with the same medium, that our advice to each one is to use your own judgment and reason in settling the question for yourself in every individual case. If you desire to know whether spirits can clothe themselves again in matter, it is your privilege, while conducting your investigations earnestly and sincerely, to use your own judgment, and when you find an open, flagrant imposition, to denounce it.

Our Spiritualism rests, in a great measure, upon the solid rock of facts, a part of which are physical manifestations, and if not dealt wisely with they will strike a terrible blow at the very foundation of the cause. As a religion, Spiritualism carries weight where no other religious system ever has, for it gives positive proof and assurance. So, while we have good and evil, false and true, genuine and counterfeit, we must exercise our charity at the same time that we mete out justice. It rouses all our righteous indignation to be imposed upon in the investigation of truth; but it is better to bear imposition a few times, at least, than to be guilty of touching rudely one of those whose necessities and requirements are such that if too harshly dealt with the work of preparation that may have been accomplished by the spirits for the individual, whom in time they hope to elevate and make a useful instrument, will be retarded or entirely undone. "Are you advocating charity in a case of obvious deception?" some listener asks. Yes; charity that softens our dealings until we know of a certainty what we are doing.

Before we close we desire to speak a few words for womankind, to awaken within our sister woman charitable feelings toward her sisters in all conditions. We believe most of you present do not need this particular argument, for there is no lesson that has been taught with so much earnestness and so oft-repeated by the angels as this. We would not foster wrong, or sin, or evil doing, but we would that every woman was as true to every other woman as man is to man. "You would not be true to a false woman?" questions one. Why, certainly; true to the woman, not to the deed she has done; true to the woman, that we may uplift her; true to the woman, that we may lead her to nobler womanhood, and make of her what was born within her but what has not been expressed. Many times she has been driven from bad to worse, from worse to desperation, from desperation to death, beyond whose gates is the only place where a woman who has done wrong and been wronged finds as yet anything like the conditions that will help her out of the slough in which she is struggling. We know that efforts have been made for the uplifting and redemption of degraded women, but not in the spirit that they should be. We say to women, It is your work! The fallen of your sex will never be uplifted, saved, redeemed or elevated to a high condition of womanhood until you stand by their side and do your duty without regard to public opinion. When you feel the necessity of expressing a certain opinion, of taking a particular position, of clasping the hand of a sister to help her, do it, no matter what color the face of your neighbor may turn, and by-and-bye such deeds will leave an impress upon your very souls, and stamp even your outward bearing with a power that will defeat the purpose of the evil-disposed, for they will not dare say aught against the women that have been true, upright, honest and steadfast in defense of every other woman, until they have helped to make their sisters what they themselves aspire to be.

Oh! white-winged angel, Charity,
Return to earth to-day,
And make us feel the brotherhood
Of all humanity.

One mortal has his weaknesses,
Another has his sin,
And, while we see our brother's faults,
We fail to look within.

Some one, in future ages,
Will turn the pages o'er,
Showing what we have tried to hide,
Or did not know before.

'T is well for us, at times at least,
To take reflection's glass,
And look upon our words and deeds
Before we let them pass.

And we may find for Charity
Enough to do at home,
Before 't is best for us, perhaps,
In other fields to roam.

The justice which we then will mete
Unto our erring brother,
We 'll temper with that charity
We should give one another.

Oh! white-winged angel, Charity,
Come to the earth again;
Walk ye through all its crowded ways,
And touch the souls of men.

Inspire within them noble thoughts,
And noble deeds as well;
Lift them to manhood's high estate,
Where henceforth they may dwell.

Then touch our sister, woman,
With thy white angel hand—
Bid her by her convictions
Ever to firmly stand;

To aid her sister woman
Who lives in sin below,
Uplift her soul, give her the truth,
That she may wiser grow.

Lead us at last, oh! angel,
One family to be,
United by the twofold bond
Of Love and Charity.

New York Medical Law.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I have been watching your paper ever since the Senate and Assembly met at Albany this season, with the expectation that a petition would be found therein from the people, asking that the medical law enacted last year be repealed, and in its place a new one, similar to that of 1844, be enacted: This commendable statute, be it remembered, allowed equal rights before the law for all citizens to employ any mode of treatment or any practitioner that they preferred and had confidence in when afflicted by disease—doing so on the ground that there is no fixed mode of eradicating disease or which cures all cases and all persons. The citizens of the United States—who are also citizens of New York—should, under its constitution, assert their rights as to whom they will employ in case of sickness, and not be confined to one system of treatment by statutory law.

Your paper has accomplished glorious work for the past two years in educating the people of New York (and elsewhere) up to a condition to see the needs of the hour as to medical freedom and its preservation—also in printing petitions, etc., in the same direction; and your readers have seconded it by circulating these documents for signatures and presenting them to the Senate and Assembly for consideration.

I am glad to note by your latest issue that Earnest Words, of New York City, has also put on the armor for this encounter, and proposes to support you in your defense of the rights of the people.

All citizens of the State who have the cause of medical freedom and progress at heart should be up and doing! and appeal to the men they have sent to Albany to repeal the obnoxious restrictive medical law which now disgraces its statute books.

Where are the men to make the move? and where are the local papers that will aid in the good work and print petitions in support of this just demand? Now is the time to move in live earnest and redeem the State from its "medical monopoly" law by compassing its repeal. ANTI-MONOPOLIST.

An English correspondent gives as a reason for possibility that the English language will become the "world-speech," the mental slowness of the Anglo-Saxon race in learning two languages. They traverse the globe unaffected and undismayed by its eccentricities of speech. The English-speaking countries have an area of more than one-fifth of the whole habitable globe. English is the language of the high seas, and is spoken in every maritime port. What demand can there be for Volupuk?

THEIR ANGELS.

My heart is lonely as heart can be,
And the cry of Rachel goes up from me,
For the tender faces unforgot
Of the little children that are not;
Although, I know,
They are all in the land where I shall go.

I want them close, in the dear old way;
But life goes forward, and will not stay;
And He who made it has made it right;
Yet I miss my darlings out of my sight,
Although, I know,
They are all in the land where I shall go.

Only one has died. There is one small mound,
Violet-heaped, in the sweet grave-ground.
Twenty years they have bloomed and spread
Over the little baby head;
And oh! I know,
She is safe in the land where I shall go.

Not dead; only grown and gone away;
The hair of my darling is turning gray,
That was golden once, in the days so dear,
Over for many and many a year.
Yet I know—I know—
She's a child in the land where I shall go.

My bright, brave boy is a grave-eyed man,
Facing the world as a worker can;
But I think of him now as I had him then,
And I lay his cheek to my heart again;
And so, I know,
I shall have him there where we both shall go.

Given back—with the gain! The secret this
Of the blessed Kingdom of Children is:
My mother's arms are waiting for me;
I shall lay my head on my father's knee;
For so, I know,
I'm a child myself where I shall go.

The world is troublous and hard and cold,
And men and women grow gray and old;
But behind the world is an inner place,
Where yet their angels behold God's face,
And lo! we know
That only the children can see Him so.

Banner Correspondence.

New York.

TROY.—W. H. Vosburgh writes: "Miss Jennie B. Hagan has just closed a successful engagement before the Star Hall Society. Her gift of poesy is certainly most remarkable, and awakens the deepest interest in her auditory. The answers given to questions submitted by the audience were logical and able in every instance, and seemed to please all assembled. A reception was tendered Miss Hagan by Mr. William W. Lee and lady at their residence, 14 George street, Green Island, Wednesday evening, Feb. 8th. The large parlors were filled with an interested company of ladies and gentlemen. The occasion was a very enjoyable one, and was interspersed with music, recitations, etc.

Miss Etta Taylor, presiding at the piano, was assisted by Mr. Charles A. Lee and Mr. Arthur Vanleuvan, very fine vocalists, who rendered some excellent music that was highly appreciated by the company.

Miss Hagan, in her usual easy and happy mood, gave two or three interesting poems and recitations that were very amusing to all.

Mr. William Gardner, President of the Association, addressed the meeting briefly and profitably, after which a vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Lee to all who had taken part in making the occasion one of interest and pleasure."

BROOKLYN.—Samuel D. Greene writes: "The present month the meetings at Conservatory Hall are being addressed by Mrs. A. M. Glading, the well-known lecturer and medium, whose cheering presence, aided by her inspiring and truly eloquent spirit controls, elicits the ever-increasing interest of large and delighted audiences. The morning discourses are chosen by her invisible friends, while she, in her unconscious condition, becomes the instrument for proclaiming their highest spiritual culture. Questions given by the audience in the evening are answered very cogently and aptly, and prove indeed a 'feast of reason and flow of soul.'

The tests and spiritual readings rendered at the close of lectures prove undeniably, by the hearty attestations and affirmations, the presence of the unseen dear ones, who thereby establish the truth of spirit nearness and proclaim the joyful tidings of immortality. During her mission of ministering to many in the West, to which she is called after leaving us, we shall feel her absence, but not without sunny hopes of a thrice welcome return in the near future."

NEW YORK CITY.—A correspondent, over the initials W. A. S., writes: "Years ago, in old Boston, I attended many a meeting and circle as a seeker, and in 1855 gave up and firmly believed that everything pertaining to Spiritualism was a humbug, and that mediums were frauds. But, now, what a change. Last October I came to New York, and three weeks ago, with my wife, I attended an evening circle at 52 Union Square, where I received a most remarkable test from 'Prairie Flower'—something that happened in 1862, when we were battling near Richmond to save this great Union. Not a living soul on earth ever knew of this; and it was brought home to me so vividly—that of the little drummer-boy who died in my arms after I had given him a drink of water—that the tears would come in spite of all efforts to restrain them. Since then, the tests that have been given me, and even with the right names, have been such that I have been astonished as well as the large audience present. I now know that there are spirits of departed loved ones hovering around me night and day, and they have an influence over me that is lasting.

Mrs. A. L. Pennell is a stranger to me; but I can truly say that she is doing a great and good work. She wants and must have a larger hall, so that no one will be obliged to go away, for she is—or the control, 'Prairie Flower'—drawing all that come within her influence up to a better and higher life here and for the future.

How sweet and satisfactory it is to have dear ones return to you even in spirit just for one moment. It causes one to aspire to better thoughts and higher deeds of good to those around him in every-day life, and utter gentle words.

> 'Each gentle word is a thought of love,
> That finds its way through the blue above,
> To light beyond on the pearly strand,
> And give thee joy in the better land.'"

GLENS FALLS.—A correspondent writes: "The Ladies' Helping Hand was the first Spiritualist society ever organized in this place. It was brought into being less than a year ago, and our efforts have been crowned with better success than we anticipated. The society of the Universalist church has had Spiritualist lectures from time to time for years, provided for by a fund belonging to the church. Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham speaks eloquently for that society one evening in a month regularly; but we were not all content with that arrangement, so organized a society of our own, to which each and every earnest soul searching for truth and light is welcome.

The Morning Star, of this place, speaks as follows, in its issue of Jan 26th, concerning our meeting for election of officers, etc.:

'The Ladies' Helping Hand (Spiritualist) held a business meeting last evening at No. 8 May street, when the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. M. G. Rosa; Vice President, Mrs. E. A. Newton; Secretary, P. J. Savage; Treasurer, M. B. Little. The name of the Association was changed to the First Spiritualists' Society of Glens Falls. A committee was appointed to arrange for an entertainment of a spiritualistic and literary character, to be held in the near future.... After the meeting a soap-bubble contest for prizes took place; refreshments were served, and for an hour or more the company was well entertained by Mesdames Rosa, Winters and Allyn.'

The last two Sundays of January C. Fannie Allyn occupied our platform, giving us four highly intellectual and practical discourses that could not fail to interest any thinking person; they were very attentively listened to by good audiences.

Jan. 31st and Feb. 1st we had J. Frank Baxter, who is too well known to need any comments or praise from me. Suffice it to say, we were more than pleased with him and the success he brought us; his lectures, music and tests were all received with marked interest by large audiences—the hall being packed each time. We hope to have Bro. B. with us again in the near future.

Mrs. Allyn will speak for us the 26th of this present month, and cannot fail to reach some who have hitherto been in the dark.

On the whole, we feel that our labors are being fully repaid; and knowing that we have the assistance of the angel world, and the hearty coöperation of the dear BANNER to aid us in spreading the truth, I trust we shall reap an abundant harvest in time."

BROOKLYN.—Charles R. Miller writes: "In six weeks I have attended the materializing séances, two each week, of Dr. A. W. S. Rothermel in this city. I have been acquainted with Dr. R. for ten years, covering the whole period of his remarkable mediumship. As a man, citizen and medium, he is held in high esteem by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mrs. Rothermel, like her husband, is richly endowed with spiritual gifts, and within the last twelve months she has been developed as a materializing medium.

On Wednesday evening, Dec. 20th, I was one of the sitters at the Rothermel séance. There were sixteen sitters. Those with whom I was acquainted were Mr. and Mrs. Reid, Dr. Tryon, Miss Belle Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Cross, Mr. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Covell, Mrs. Reardon, Mr. Drake, Mrs. Rothermel, Mr. Rodgers and Mr. Weise.

Carrie Miller is the controlling spirit of the Wednesday evening séances, and—as she explains to us—she, with a band of selected spirits, has come to the Rothermel séance, supplementing the powers of the regular band; and all for the purpose of educating and developing spirits who have the requisite adaptability for the materializing manifestations. We were told in advance that this Wednesday evening séance was to be a strictly test séance, the first step in the programme being a request from the guides of the medium to Mr. and Mrs. Reed, Mr. Cox, Mr. Cross and Mrs. Reardon, to go into the rear room and sit facing the rear of the cabinet. This request was complied with, and for the first half of the séance the rear room, which was fully lighted, was protected from any possible approach of mortals. Thus guarded from all possible intrusion, except from our spirit visitants, Dr. Rothermel went into the cabinet.

Without going into a full or minutely detailed report of this splendid séance, which lasted two hours and a quarter, I will give only the most striking incidents. During all that time our spirit friends came out singly, came out in pairs, and frequently three at a time. At one time the entranced medium was brought out by a single spirit form. At another time the medium was brought out into the séance-room supported by attendant spirits on either side of him. Again, a form came out of the cabinet, lifted the curtain, or held it one side, so that we could see the medium and two forms standing by his side. A majority of the manifesting spirits were strong and demonstrative, staying out two or three minutes, and in several instances double that length of time. At frequent intervals three and four spirits were out at the same time, standing and talking to their mortal friends. Carrie Miller was present, out and in the séance-room during nearly the whole time the séance lasted. Emma Hurst was out several times, and stayed out in the séance-room, talking fluently with a marked degree of intelligence and wit, for comparatively long periods. I may say the same thing of another bright and beautiful spirit, Carrie Pettis.

I desire it to be understood that I am making this report for THE BANNER at the repeated and urgent request of one of the manifesting spirits. On the Wednesday night preceding I was requested to report the test séance, but neglecting to do so, I was reminded of my promise and urgently requested to make it good without further delay.

We sat in a subdued light, but sufficient to see countenances, while the forms were as distinctly seen by all the sitters as though there had been a flood of light in the séance-room. Besides, the light was toned, brighter or darker, as the strength of the different spirits required.

The female spirits wore a profusion of white drapery, and, with few exceptions, their faces were veiled. Some of the male forms wore white and flowing garments, while others wore dark clothes. All of the male spirits came to us with uncovered faces. An Indian brave came out wearing a profusion of ornaments. He wore an elaborately woven head-dress, made of a long string of feathers, reaching from the crown of the head a long way down his back. There were pendants on his breast, and he was evidently much pleased with the close inspection some of us gave him. He was quite determined that we should all know he wore moccasins, as he took them from his feet and presented them to one and another to handle.

Dr. Rothermel is small of stature, while our friendly and much-admired Indian visitor was a tall and stout form of nearly or quite double the bulk of the medium. At one stage of the manifestations we saw a white spot on the carpet, at first looking like a cloudy substance. This gradually grew into a fleecy substance of greater dimensions, and when it had gained a height of two or three feet, there quickly emerged a female form, vitalized with life and power, and clothed with a profusion of white drapery. When the materialization of the spirit form was fully completed the spirit moved rapidly around the room, shaking hands and saluting several of the sitters. This materializing process, which every sitter saw, took place outside and in front of the cabinet, the distance being full three feet from the curtains. All these and many other manifestations took place while our divided circle sat facing the front (open) and the rear (enclosed) portions of the cabinet.

Illuminated manifestations occurred twice during the evening. 'Bright Star,' a frequent visitor at the Rothermel séances and the spirit-guide of Mr. Cox—one of the sitters in the rear room—came with a large and brilliant star on her forehead. 'Bright Star' was accompanied by another female spirit, who wore an illuminated band or shield on her forehead. Following this manifestation, and after a brief interval, the forms came out and held the curtains wide open, presenting to our view two illuminated shapes standing erect, and the entranced medium sitting in his chair. The illumination of the forms was complete, covering the whole person of each of the manifesting spirits, and casting a radiance and brightness all around the interior of the open cabinet. This was a beautiful sight, and was pronounced the crowning manifestation of the evening. Here were four spirit forms, two of them illuminated, and the true and faithful medium giving off and giving out of his life-forces to the occasion, all testifying to the reality of life beyond the grave, and to the fact of spirit-intercourse and return.

Again came Emma Hurst into the séance-room, and after dancing or floating around the open space formed by the horseshoe circle of sitters, called for the zither, an instrument on which she plays admirably, allowing the sitters to select the tune she is to play. Emma is a great favorite with all who attend the Rothermel séances, and is very ready and obliging in responding to requests for music on her favorite instrument. She took the zither in her hand, and kneeling down on the floor played a tune. Then rising and going over to Mr. Reid, giving out some pleasantry, she returned to my side of the séance-room, and seating herself in a vacant chair, played several tunes, giving off strains of music so delicate and thrilling that all were enthusiastic in commendation. This spirit was out in the séance-room full ten minutes in the performance of her interesting exercises.

Following Emma Hurst and her musical performances, four female spirits, one after another in quick succession, came into and remained in the séance-room. They were clothed with a profusion of white drapery, first standing in a line, and then grouped together. At this stage of this most significant and impressive manifestation, Carrie Miller came out of the cabinet, and standing a short distance from her sister spirits, raised her right arm, and in a voice audible to all of us, said, 'Triumphant, triumphant! victorious, victorious!'"

Additional to the above we have received the following from Chas. P. Cocks, of 60 Liberty street, New York:

"Permit me to say a word by way of adding my testimony to the very high character of the instructive course of séances which has been held this winter through the mediumship of Dr. A. W. S. Rothermel, Brooklyn, an account of which has been furnished you by Chas. R. Miller, who has been a constant attendant.

It would be impossible to give more than an outline sketch of the many beautiful and instructive manifestations of spirit power which it has been our privilege to witness at these sittings in a single article. One rare incident I may mention which has occurred since he wrote his report. This was witnessed by all present, and a similar manifestation was recorded in THE BANNER in December, from the pen of E. A. Brackett, referring to the form of his niece, Bertha, at the Berry séances, descending slowly from near the ceiling as ethereal, and gradually materializing a solid form as she neared the carpet. This likewise was seen first as a faint, white light at the upper part of and outside of the curtains of the cabinet, and then slowly increased and developed into a beautiful piece of white lace, and then, floating down slowly, gradually assumed an ethereal human form, and finally, as she touched the carpet, the solid, materialized form of the spirit Carrie Miller, the lovely daughter of the Mr. Miller present. As she touched the floor about eight feet from the cabinet and quite near to where I was sitting, I could observe the phenomenon minutely, and she exclaimed 'Victorious!' as she extended her arms upward.

On a previous occasion, this interesting spirit, whose wonderful power and intelligence have been witnessed far and wide, emerged from the cabinet, and, after a loving greeting to her father, retired to the cabinet, after which she immediately returned, apparently as solid as any mortal in the room, and approaching a point opposite to where I was sitting, and within a foot of me, she spoke an audible word, and while I was looking steadfastly at her, she instantly flashed out of form; she simply stooped over and became invisible in a second; and the room was sufficiently light to see distinctly every one present.

I desire to add this testimony to the truth which is enlightening the world."

DAYTON.—W. A. Lewis writes that the Report of the Seybert Commission or any other against the truths of Spiritualism can have no influence to lessen the confidence of any one who has honestly studied the phenomena upon which it rests its claims, and experienced the benefits it extends to all who recognize it as a living truth. Proceeding, he relates one of his own experiences as follows:

"About eighteen years ago I went to visit a brother in Shelby County, Ind. On my return I came by wagon road to Rushville, intending to take cars there for Richmond, Ind. Arriving at Rushville about noon, and learning there would be no train until six o'clock, I concluded to walk to a small station about six miles distant, and did so. Upon getting to the station I learned the train had jumped the track and would not be there until next morning. There was no hotel or dwelling-place at this little wood-station, so I was compelled to walk on and seek shelter in some farmhouse within reach of my vision, but I failed to find one, and night overtaking me, I had only two alternatives left—to walk on to Cambridge, which I believe was ten miles, and almost all the way through a very heavy timbered, unsettled country, or lay down by the road-side and wait the coming of morning. It being quite cold, and having no way to make a fire, I concluded to walk. The railroad track was much the best course, but it was so dark I could not see to step from one tie to another, but I concluded to make the attempt and started on my way through almost total darkness; when, to my great joy and surprise, I found my path illuminated by two beautiful lights, one on my left, the other one on my right, each apparently about two feet from my shoulder.

Now I wish to say that, if I had up to this time kept my eyes closed to the beautiful teachings of Modern Spiritualism, at the approach of or the appearance of these divine lights, I should have taken fright; but thank God I knew what it meant, and was well aware that these two grand and beautiful illuminators appearing as they did in a time of great need, were my father and mother, who came to light me through the dense darkness, for they said, 'Come, dear child, we will give you light;' and so they did, for those two lights remained with me until I reached the city of Cambridge, when they disappeared.

It is not what this Commission has investigated and reported that proves the truthfulness or untruthfulness of Modern Spiritualism, but what each individual receives from the spiritual side of man's existence that furnishes the convincing proofs."

Missouri.

ST. LOUIS.—J. W. C. writes that, in his opinion, the number of Spiritualists would be greatly increased if thoroughly educated speakers could be equipped for the work and sent into the field, to convince, by sound argument, their auditors of the truth of the Spiritual Philosophy. He thinks Spiritualists might learn of the churches and advantageously follow their lead in this respect.

KIRKSVILLE.—F. A. Grove writes: "You will perhaps remember I had a communication published some time since from 'Grace.' I have been vainly endeavoring to find who 'Grace' is until now—or rather very recently.

While in the South I was impressed on several occasions to write to a medium advertising 'answers to sealed letters,' Mrs. Dr. Eleanor Martin, 73 Lane Avenue, Columbus, O.

On returning home I finally heeded this impression and put the printed message I clipped from THE BANNER, together with a letter addressed to 'Grace,' in a sealed envelope, first writing my monogram on the inside of the envelope, then sealed and let it thoroughly dry; after which I marked all round the edges of the envelope, also over the sealed part, where it folds, with an analine pencil—one which, at the slightest moisture being applied, produces a stain. I also put other private marks on the envelope; I then enclosed that envelope containing my sealed letter inside of another and sealed it, leaving it without any address, and wrote a short letter to the medium requesting a reply to the sealed package.

The answer came in due time; although not replying in detail, yet it was very satisfactory. In my next I made inquiry: 'Who are you? What was your name in earth-life?' I also asked a question in reference to a party yet in the mortal. To the first the spirit replied: 'I am the sister of this medium,' and that Grace was the name given her on her entrance into spirit-life; to the second: 'An old lady, who calls you her dear son Fullerton, and gives her name as Mary Grove, comes to me and takes me to the person,' etc. This was correct. I asked in my next if my mother's middle name could be given, and the answer was: 'Two persons come; one Mary Ann Grove [my mother] and Mary J.' (a cousin.)

In the course of my correspondence with her (G.) a number of such tests occurred. In one instance I wrote two questions and placed them in my desk in the office, and asked Grace to write what they were; one was written verbatim, the other not attempted. I purposely avoided letter-heads or envelopes that would lead the medium to know anything about my being a physician, but my second letter received addressed me as 'F. A. Grove, M. D.'; in my next I said to the medium: 'I am curious to know why you addressed me as Doctor.' She replied: 'Grace tells me you are a physician.'"

Connecticut.

BRIDGEPORT.—Isaac F. Moore, Secretary of the Spiritualist Society, writes: "I desire, through the medium of your popular paper, to say a word in favor of Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, who has just completed an engagement with our society. As a test-medium she is very successful, as many here in Bridgeport can testify. One test in particular created quite a sensation at her last meeting. Among other articles placed upon her desk was something wrapped in a large piece of newspaper. This package (without opening) she proceeded to describe as containing three Indian arrow-tips and a piece of an Indian's skull, about an inch square, also describing correctly the locality in which each piece was found. I know positively that she had no means of knowing, in the ordinary way, what that package contained."

New Jersey.

NEWARK.—Mrs. E. Cutler writes: "Having just returned from my Eastern trip among the spiritual societies, I wish to return my thanks to them through the BANNER OF LIGHT for their kindness to me. I found many societies that need help. If mediums and speakers would go among them, they would be doing much good.

A word in favor of Mrs. Abbie Story of Pigeon Cove. There is no society there, but she is working for the cause without help. She has a Lyceum in her parlor, and is in need of books for the children. If any kind person would send her old or new books, they would be thankfully received. Her address is Pigeon Cove, Mass., Fears' & Bray's Express."

Texas.

ENNIS.—Mrs. Mary V. Hogan, of Ennis, Texas, hands us an appeal for help to build the "White Cross Home," of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, of Texas. She says the Home is to be built at Garrett, on the H. & T. C. R. R., thirty-one miles south of Dallas. Land is bought and paid for, and some lumber and shingles donated, and some money paid in; but more is needed at once. The Home is for the fallen women anywhere in Texas who desire to lead a better life and be separated from old associates.

She appeals to all for help, and says send along your money by postal note, registered letter, money order or bank check, or send due-bill for lumber, shingles, furniture, etc., to Ennis, Texas. One dollar donations will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mrs. Hogan. Any who desire to know more of the work can correspond with her as above.

Original Essay.

A CHRISTIAN CHAMPIONING MOHAMMEDANISM.

A Canon of the English Church, which, as all know, is supported by the State, read a paper before a recent Church Congress on Mohammedanism. Not only so, but his paper was in open and undisguised praise of the Mohammedan system of morals and religion. Naturally, the reading occasioned a lively time in the meeting. It was received with the English "Oh! oh!" exclamations, as is customary in the House of Commons. This is a distinct sign of enlightenment, remarks London Truth, for it is about time that people tried to value the various religious systems by their results rather than by their teaching. And so far as mere results are concerned, further remarks that journal with genuine courage, there is no doubt at all that the Christians are very far behind the Moslems.

Said Canon Taylor, in the course of his paper on the subject: "Islam has done more for civilization than Christianity." Think of so bold a statement as that in a church congress of the British Church! "When Mohammedism is embraced by a negro tribe, devil-worship, fetichism, cannibalism, human sacrifice, infanticide, witchcraft, at once disappear. Islam has abolished drunkenness, gambling, and prostitution, the three curses of Christian lands." Truth thereupon quotes Gibbon, the historian, who wrote thus of Mohammedanism: "More pure than the system of Zoroaster, more liberal than the law of Moses, the religion of Mahomet might seem less inconsistent with reason than the creed of mystery and superstition which, in the seventh century, disgraced the simplicity of the gospel." That was written over a hundred years ago; but even now, in the nineteenth century, says Truth, when there is certainly much less of mystery and superstition than there was in the seventh century, according to Canon Taylor, "Christian converts are reckoned by thousands, Moslem converts by millions." Which forces Truth to observe that there certainly seems to be something wrong, either with our religion or with our manner of propagating it.

The account states that the disapprobation manifested was so strong that this church champion of Islamism was greeted with a tumultuous variety of cries of dissent, among which was to be heard the highly unclerical exclamation—"rot!" Says the writer who reported the proceedings for the columns of Truth: "Some of the 'rot' strikes me as containing a collection of the most wholesome truths which are ever likely to be addressed to an assembly of churchmen, notably his strictures on the 'Christianity' of a prelate with fifteen thousand pounds ($75,000) a year and two palaces, who talks of the lot of the poor at the East End (of London) being 'alleviated by spiritual consolation'."

There is nothing so fresh and wholesome as plain truth on a subject (as stated in this case) after all. Men may disguise it, compress it, cripple it, distort it in all ways, to suit prejudices preconceived, beliefs limited to small conceptions and narrow personal ambitions, but it refuses to abide in the tenement they have built for it to occupy, and will even jump out of a window for the sake of freedom from false restraints.

PALIMPSEST.

February Magazines.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—The opening article by Theodor Child treats upon "The Ballet of Paris," describing the methods of instruction by which proficiency is attained, and illustrated with many engravings, plain and colored, including a frontispiece, "The Ballet School," from a painting by V. Palmaroli. Frederick Schwatka continues his sketches of arctic life, treating this month upon "Wintering in the White Zone." With its fine illustrations of the people and their snow-houses, or igloos, as the natives call them, it will find thousands of deeply interested readers. Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen contributes a very readable paper on "The Crown Prince of Germany," and Octave Feuillet a brief drama, "Scylla and Charybdis; A Lesson for Husbands." Of the remaining contents are "A Tartar Tea-Party in the Desert," "Mountain Life in Tennessee," and "The Campaign of Potiphar McCray and Others." New York: Schlight & Field Co.

THE VACCINATION INQUIRER quotes the News as saying in reference to the smallpox epidemic in Sheffield: "Many of the inhabitants have lost reliance alike in medical skill and sanitary science. Smallpox is increasing, though the people have rushed, like a flock of sheep, to be vaccinated." Our Massachusetts legislators and those of other States should bear in mind that this condition exists in a city of whose inhabitants ninety-five per cent. were vaccinated, and so few were the number of anti-vaccinators that it might be said vaccination met with no opposition. Notwithstanding this, from March to December of last year there were two thousand seven hundred and twenty-eight cases of smallpox in Sheffield, and it is still on the increase. Vaccination has proved itself a perfect failure, and in the opinion of many has served to increase rather than diminish the number of cases. London: E. W. Allen.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—A portrait of Dinah Mulock Craik and a brief sketch of her finely developed character introduce its instructive contents. In "Notable People" portraits and mention are given of Carnot, Sardou and others. A short, comprehensive article upon "Evidences of a Spiritual Body" is supplied by W. H. Gardner, and a portrait and some account given of a woman in France one hundred and twenty-seven years old. New York: Fowler & Wells Company.

THE SIDEREAL MESSENGER contains an article by Prof. E. S. Holden, presenting the history of the Lick Observatory, with interesting details of its buildings and the instruments gathered in them. The remaining contents include much that is valuable to teachers and students. Northfield, Minn.: W. W. Payne.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER reviews editorially Mr. Edison's views of patent protection and remarks upon Post-office Telegraphy, the discussion of which in Congress seems to have had the effect of greatly reducing the Western Union's rates. New York: Elec. Pub. Co.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

ANNIE PICKERING.

In the BANNER for Feb. 18th, Thomas Middlemist of Yreka, Cal., speaks favorably (in "Correspondence Department") of the message of the spirit above named. We have since received from him the following additional particulars:

"In the BANNER OF LIGHT for Sept. 3d, 1887, I noticed a message from ANNIE PICKERING. I recognized that message as coming from Annie. I am the friend, Thomas M——, she refers to. I also know the couple she speaks of in San Francisco, 'Mr. and Mrs. Mayo.' They were friends of hers, and they fully recognize the message as coming from her; they are both mediumistic as well as progressive people. Their present address is Wowano, Mariposa Co., (Pine City) Cal. Annie Pickering passed over from Oakland, Nov. 26th, 1878. She was a resident of San Francisco; she was a good test-medium, and had many friends there. She formerly resided at No. 28 Winter street, Boston."

GEORGE D. EMMONS.

In the issue of the BANNER OF LIGHT for Jan. 28th is a message, through Mr. Fletcher, purporting to be from GEORGE D. EMMONS, a brother of mine, whose body was cremated at Lancaster, Pa. The message was characteristic of him, and is correct in every particular with the exception of the place where he was cremated, it being Lancaster instead of Harrisburg, as given in the message. Yours very truly, Mendon, Mich., Feb. 12th, 1888. S. B. EMMONS.

Sunday Recreation.

A highly sensible address on the meaning and use of Sunday, commonly called the Christian Sabbath, was recently delivered by Rev. Dr. Pullman, of Lynn, before the Universalist Sunday-school teachers, in Wesleyan Hall in this city. He made light of the growing uneasiness, amounting to alarm, in certain quarters respecting the alleged desecration of Sunday, which he said was not justified by the facts. We all have a Pharisee inside us, said the Doctor, and that Pharisee is pretty sure to think that if Sunday is not being observed in his particular way it is not being observed at all. But the Sabbath was not founded by Pharisees, and will not be preserved by Pharisaism. It was instituted, he reminded his hearers, to secure justice among men, and to prevent the powerful and selfish from oppressing the weak by binding them to hopeless and unintermittent labor.

This is practically the proclamation which the Sabbath makes to rulers and governors everywhere: "I am freedom-day. On this day all your tired workers shall rest. They shall be free to enjoy their families, to meet and worship God in their churches, to taste the pleasures of social intercourse, to delight in nature or in books, to build up their nobler life." And the speaker proceeded to say, out of the fullness of his historic knowledge of his subject, that the Sabbath had been for ages a bulwark against oppression, an educator of men to law, liberty and self-government. Its impregnable foundations are in reason and common-sense. He admitted the great and rapid social and economic changes which have caused unavoidable changes in Sabbath customs, and have unquestionably led to perversions and abuses of the day which are sure to be corrected. He thought there were some new Sunday customs which had not come to stay; such, for example, as seven days' work for six days' pay. The man, said he, who avails himself of the Sunday labor of his fellow-men will have to provide their recompense for those who give up their Sunday rights for his convenience.

Referring to the heated attacks made every now and then upon the Sunday press, he defended this class of newspapers, as being but a mirror held up to the human nature of the nineteenth century; and those who did not enjoy the picture they presented regarding the social, religious or political state, were invited to put forth extra individual exertions for the bettering of the conditions they deprecated. The Pharisaic way, he said, is to stop the nose and avert the gaze, but that never yet cured an evil and never will. Whether we like it or not, we are on the road to the experiment of living in publicity, and of dealing with evil as it lies festering in the sunlight. The newspaper of the future, in his opinion, would contain a record of what is good as well as what is evil, and will then hold a true mirror up to life. The higher grade Sunday newspaper, he thought, may yet fulfill an important educational purpose, whose true method has not yet been reached. The Sabbath, as a safeguard of home, religion, charity and brotherhood, will not be disestablished till the sun of human progress goes down.

Future Probation—Gradual Unfolding.

What Gail Hamilton wrote in the North American Review, apropos to the dispute then raging at Andover Seminary over the question of future probation, is well worth quoting from again, in the stronger light of added experience and observation in the world of theology. It is probable, said she, that in the world as it is we see the world as it has been, even in the geologic ages. We are sure, at least, of the world as it is. The present moment is a cross section of eternity. We find man now very little higher than the beasts. The discussion of evolution is not necessary in order to determine whether man is a developed animal or an undeveloped angel. We know that there are now on earth tribes of men who are savages, uncouth, horrible; in their mode of life more unlike the highest man than they are unlike the highest beasts. Yet we also know that there is something in them which differentiates them even from the highest beasts—a cultivatable spiritual quality which in the beast is largely wanting.

Through every grade we mount upward to the highest peaks of humanity—men and women of pure heart, clear head and unselfish life. Why is it not the simplest, the most reasonable, the natural belief, that this great human host was put on the earth for education, not for probation? that the world was made for man? that all the ages of preparation through which the earth was shaping itself from a void and formless, a seething and roaring mass, into a stable and habitable home, it was shaping itself under fatherly guidance for the dwelling-place of that most finely organized animal which was to receive the breath of divine life and become of all created beings upon this earth the only spiritual beings—sons of God?

It would be quite in the nature of all other things, she continues, that man should begin low down, just above the beasts, and end high up, just below the angels. Wholly why, we do not know. We cannot comprehend the eternal Creator. But we easily do know that creation must be the one or the other—instantaneous or not instantaneous. If it were instantaneous, everything must begin in the middle. The record of the rocks, the record of Genesis, and the record of our own eyes unite to testify that everything begins at a beginning. We are in a system of gradual and orderly unfolding. The tree ripens from seed. The man grows up from the child. History is born of history. We cannot trace the original beginnings, but resultant beginnings are the regular order. The Bible equally narrates a gradual succession, a systematic advance. This is as near a fixed fact as we shall ever find to stand on.

This fact being once fully accepted as a fact of the universe, she says, what the need of this theological fuss over the question of future probation for the so-called heathen, when it is established that life is at every stage and in every condition a probation for all of us? It is a constant development, a never-ending unfolding. This state of existence is no more a state of probation than the next one will be, all states of existence being probationary alike.

For our own part we feel to say: How childish appear these theological problems, thought to be so profound, in the light of what we now possess as actual knowledge!

☞ "Howard" says Brooklyn once fairly claimed its title of "The City of Churches," but to-day it has passed beyond that, and will soon be known, not as a city of material prosperity alone, but as a city of homes, as a city of wealth, as a city of manufacturing interests as well. Brooklyn has had all the desiderata of a great city. It had an ample illustration of necessary thieving and cheating in its early days. It has been visited by the great of the earth, including Washington, Lafayette, Henry Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and, greatest of all in his line, Abraham Lincoln: "I recall the visits of Clay, when everybody turned out to do him honor; of Webster, whose grand speech was the first of its kind Brooklyn ever knew of; of Lincoln, when he sat morning and evening in Horace B. Claflin's pew in Plymouth Church; of Louis Kossuth, when he spoke in Plymouth Church, and subsequently attended a reception in Brother Bowen's house on Willow street; of Wendell Phillips, when every hall and lecture-room in the city was closed against him, and the police even advised Mr. Beecher that it was too dangerous, too great a risk to permit him to speak, and Beecher said that 'if every brick in Plymouth Church were to fall and be scattered to the winds, it should never be said that Wendell Phillips could find no place to speak in in the City of Brooklyn.'"

☞ Rev. Mr. Savage says:

"The church of the future will be a universal church, a unified congregation expressive of the highest truths of life. It will be natural because it will be the embodiment of nature itself. It will be a gathering free to all, whose creed will not be a bar across the entrance, but a guiding word over the pulpit. It will be a place where all men may come together once a week, upon a common level of higher thought, where the absurd conditions of life, the petty troubles and difficulties, may be forgotten for awhile, and where the influence of restful and recreative communion in noblest thoughts may be felt. It will be a divine church because it will contain the highest and best of life."

We cordially endorse every word of the above. Such a time will surely come on earth, and the advent of Modern Spiritualism is the Star in the West (not East) that will bring about the epoch so much and so earnestly desired by the denizens of the spirit-world and those of the mundane sphere of life.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

COMMUNION WITH THE ANGELS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On Thursday afternoon, Jan. 5th, a number of us convened at the residence of Mrs. H. B. Fay, for the purpose of sharing the pleasures of a materializing séance, which proved eminently convincing and satisfactory.

Previous to entering the cabinet, Mrs. Fay drew the curtain aside and invited all who wished to examine it to do so, which was readily responded to; and after the people had satisfied themselves that there were no confederates in or about it, and had returned to their seats, while the medium was yet outside, almost simultaneously a beautiful female form, and another, being that of a child, came out and stood one each side of her before the eyes of us all. During the séance many forms, in male and female attire, came out, giving their names and greeting their friends most cordially, while some materialized and dematerialized in the room, where every one of us could see them—thus proving unmistakably the truth of spirit materialization.

For years I have attended séances held in various parts of the city, and while I would not cast reflections upon any one, I regard Mrs. Fay as one of the best and most reliable of mediums.

Yours for truth and justice,
Boston, Mass. S. W. TUCKER.

AMBOY CENTRE, N. Y.

A. Clarence Armstrong writes: "We began holding séances last August without any medium. We now have five that have given many convincing tests. At one séance a band of yellow light, about eighteen inches wide and ten feet in length, appeared on the wall of the room. In this light there seemed to float representations of trees, fences, houses, etc. At our request it came four times and was seen by all, lasting a little over a minute each time, when it slowly faded from view. At the time a parlor fire was burning brightly.

At another séance a new medium saw clairvoyantly two keys, attached to a string, descend from the ceiling. Cold currents seemed to pass through the room, though windows and doors were all closed. The fire was increased, but as it increased the cold became so unpleasant we had to leave the room.

The guides said the cold was caused by their efforts to charge the room with electricity. Séances held there since have been very successful, but closed unpleasantly cold. At one a young man seeing a medium influenced to write, several times remarked, 'If it is spirits, why do n't they move my hands?' He has since been developed as a medium, and given very convincing tests, at our last giving names and information regarding the earth-life of the communicating spirits, eight of them being fully recognized by those present as departed friends who had passed to spirit-life before the medium was born."

Annual Meeting.

The Spiritualists of the State of Michigan will hold their Annual Meeting in Royal Templars' Hall, on Waterloo street, in Grand Rapids, Feb. 24th, 25th and 26th, 1888.

The services will consist of lectures, recitations, tests, music, election of officers and such other business as comes before the meeting.

Speakers Engaged—L. V. Moulton, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mrs. L. A. Pearsall, Disco, Mich.; Wm. H. Blair, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Sarah Graves, Grand Rapids; Augustus Day, Detroit, Mich.

O. P. Kellogg, of East Trumbull, Ohio, is expected to be here.

There will be present many good mediums of different phases of mediumship.

Those coming from a distance will be cared for as far as possible. By Order of Board of Trustees.

IF A MAN DIE,

Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.

It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.

It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

A New Story by Eben Cobb.

In our next issue we shall publish the first installment of a fine Story, written expressly for the BANNER OF LIGHT by EBEN COBB, ESQ., brother of the late well-known writer, Sylvanus Cobb, Jr. It will occupy two numbers of THE BANNER. We say, without flattery, that it is one of the best productions of its character we have ever read. Mr. Cobb is one of a large family, most of whom have for years been before the public with voice and pen; but he is the only son who has had the boldness to espouse and proclaim to the world the glorious truth of spirit-return, which was a living joy and consolation to his talented and much loved mother, Mrs. E. H. Cobb. By his earnest efforts hundreds have been brought to the light of our soul-exalting philosophy.

Satan, Once More!

The old-time devil of Orthodoxy seems to be rampant on earth in this modern day, if the wailings of the bigoted class among the clergy are to be taken at their full value. Every now and then some minister starts up and vigorously pounds his pulpit-cushion and grows red in the face while he ex-pounds to his awe-stricken hearers, à la the late Elder Knapp, the evidence going to show to his narrow and cramped conception that the "arch-fiend" is the father and prime mover of Modern Spiritualism—a new revelation which really seeks to demonstrate to mankind the surety of immortal life——which the church cannot do. If this class of ministers are stating facts, Satan is certainly doing a good work, and ought to be recognized by them as a powerful ally rather than a foe!

As a repeater of this "satanic origin" theory, etc., we here introduce one Rev. W. H. Clagett; not that the statements which he makes are specially new, or that his discourse now referred to is specially recent as to the time of its delivery—neither being the case—but as an instance in point showing the singular conception which is confidently entertained by some minds regarding the power of bitter denunciation as an agency in the direction of overthrowing the Truth.

We may remark, parenthetically, that if this Rev. Clagett ever was either a Spiritualist or a medium, the fact has, to say the least, escaped our recollection. Be that as it may, the reverend Goliah makes quite a desperate rush forward, as if apprehensive that even his towering presence among the multitude of the creedal defamers of Modern Spiritualism will else be lost sight of altogether.

Mr. Clagett is described as a home missionary of the Presbyterian Church, and as having spoken by request. Also, as "an able clergyman who once believed in its (Spiritualism's) teachings." He entitled his pulpit harangue: "Spiritualism; What the Bible says about it"; and we find it reported in the Cleveland (O.) Leader. Now it would not be possible for us to think as much about the Clagett discourse as he evidently thinks of it. He is of interest only as he is announced as one who once believed in the teachings of Spiritualism. We undertake to say, at the start, that if he ever believed in the teachings of Spiritualism, he could never after forget them so far as to turn and denounce them and the human agencies through which they are manifested. Mr. Clagett did not speak, however, to confirmed Spiritualists, but for a large class which he described as having seen something of Spiritualism, and are not able to understand it, but are perplexed and unsatisfied.

"I once believed in Spiritualism," said he, "and was a medium. Those not inside (sic) have no knowledge of its extent." It was to such that he addressed what he styled timely words of warning. He did not presume to deny the statement that it had at least ten millions of believers in this country. Hence he asserted that "it is one of the greatest powers for evil that exists." It is a pity to hear such a man say so, nor will he be believed half as soon as if he spoke in more measured phrase. People will be very apt to say he is overdoing his home missionary work for the Presbyterian Church.

One would suppose that a person situated as he is, formerly a medium (and why not still a medium?), could very easily tell everybody what Spiritualism is. What does he actually say about it? "There is a great deal of that which is fraudulent in Spiritualism," he says, "but I have seen things that cannot be explained on the hypothesis of trickery. I am not ready to disbelieve that there is any communication between spirits and the inhabitants of this world." Very well; but he resorts to the childish refuge of a personal Satan, who goes up and down the earth, roaring and seeking and devouring. He says "it is ridiculous not to believe in the devil as an individual being." And wiser and holier men than he say it is still more ridiculous to believe in it. He regards ridicule as a religious element.

He said he wished to show his hearers "the footprints of the devil in Spiritualism." To begin with, he is obliged to admit that it appeals to the tenderest feelings of the soul. But he explains that "when a man stands by the grave of his loved one, Satan comes and whispers: 'I will bring her to you; you may hear her voice, see her face, and she will speak to you.' And unless sustained by strong faith in God's goodness and wisdom, he is apt to succumb. Satan comes, then, not as a friend of darkness but as an angel of light, and gives you a new religion." Now this is nothing more than the baldest assertion, the whole of it. Mr. Clagett expects us to believe him when he says Satan whispers to us at the grave; but he utterly refuses to believe us when we tell him we hear the voices of our departed friends! We had far rather trust the evidence of our own senses than take his bare assertion as a home missionary hired to make it. He calls our departed friends by the convenient terms "familiar spirits" and "unclean spirits." And he plunges into a perfect foam of Scriptural quotations to impress his hearers with the fact of his knowing all about it right from the Bible itself.

Emerging from these, he comes out with the following statement, which he seems to think is death to Spiritualism instead of simply meaning death to the church: "I have yet to meet a modern Spiritualist who is not a renegade church-member, or who was not at one time in trouble concerning the welfare of his soul." But how often does he hear of a church-member who is a renegade Spiritualist?—though, in point of fact, he confesses himself to be one. Having once been a medium, he expects his hearers to believe him when he says that many of the messages are "profane and even filthy." He surely must have drawn to himself an unfortunate class of spirits in his mediumistic experience. Speaking of the Bible spirits, he is constrained to admit that "the Bible does say that the angels of God take an interest in earthly affairs." That is enough, then. But he says "angels are not the spirits of departed men." Who and what are they, then? "They are a different class of beings," he says. Still, with the inconsistency of ignorance, he allows that Moses and Elias visited Christ, and all the saints arose with him at his resurrection.

But in all other instances, he says, "angels were the visitants." The word angel simply means messenger, and would messengers be likely to be sent on divine errands to places with which they are not familiar and to people whom they before knew nothing about? In his eagerness to destroy even the probabilities of Spiritualism, Mr. Clagett resorts to far greater improbabilities still. We warn him again that he is asking people to take a good deal more for granted from him than he is himself willing to take from Spiritualists, who testify only of that which they know and have seen. Of course he threshes over again the woman of Endor old straw, and reasons from it that, in order to be genuine, it should have been a very different apparition from what it was. He knows. He says "it was Satan who appeared," and he traces "the slime of the serpent" over the whole transaction. Give us an expert like Clagett to identify Satan and trace serpent slime. He is quite sure he knows both when he sees them.

But the closing Clagett argument against Spiritualism is that those who consult mediums do not receive them into their own society. Possibly this might be thought a matter of taste quite as much as of spiritual reality or unreality. Such a frivolous argument, we submit, is the last resource of a frivolous mind driven to extremity. When he quotes Job as saying that the dead cannot come back, will he please inform us who Job was, when he lived, and all about him? Unless he can do this, let him cease to quote him. In Job he enters for his present purpose a realm of darkness. And then he winds up with a whoop and hurrah against Spiritualism for its darkness, its wickedness, and all the other associated evils his wits can think of. He ends in a windy and frothy tirade, and fancies that is the end of Spiritualism, when it is only the end of Clagett.

The Life of the Sexes.

The Popular Science News asserts that the Hebrew women are the longest lived, and the colored men the shortest lived. Statistics gathered from all parts of the world make it appear that women have a greater tenacity of life than men. Nature worships the female in all its varieties. The male insect perishes at an earlier period than the female. The seminate blossoms in plants die earliest and are produced in the weaker limbs. Female quadrupeds possess more endurance than males. In the human race, the woman endures longest, in spite of the intellectual and physical strength of the man, and will bear pain to which he succumbs. More male children die than female. The proportion of people who die suddenly is about 100 women to 700 men. In 1870 there were 1080 male suicides in the United States to 585 female. Intemperance, apoplexy, gout, hydrocephalus, affections of the heart or liver, scrofular, paralysis, are all far more fatal to males than to females. But pulmonary consumption is more deadly to the latter. Females in cities are more prone to consumption than in the country. In all old countries not disturbed by emigration the females are a majority of the population. The Hebrew woman is exceptionally long lived, and especially so in the married state for all women.

Our Public Circles

Are fully attended Tuesdays, with Miss Shelhamer as the medium for the answering of questions, etc.; while Mrs. Smith, of Lawrence, on Fridays gives very satisfactory tests of returning spirits. Mrs. Smith's séance on Friday, the 17th, was crowded. Many had to go away disappointed, as every seat, and the standing-space, was occupied at an early hour.

The New Church Doctrines.

A series of lectures by Rev. John Worcester, a distinguished member of the Swedenborgian ministry, has been collected in book form and issued by the Massachusetts New Church Union. They are professedly intended to present in the language of modern thought a sketch of Swedenborg's teachings upon the subjects of which they treat. They give the outlines of doctrines which are satisfying to the New Church and which she feels it to be her duty to explain to the world. There are half a dozen lectures included in the collection, and all are clear and simple in style and of weighty import to the reflective mind. On the subject of The Future Life the speaker expounds in a highly interesting manner. The soul of man is pronounced to be in full form human, living in every part of the body, and being the spiritual essence of the whole and every part of the body. "So necessary is this natural basis (the body) to its permanent existence and character that the purest elements of the natural body, which are in a sense common to both worlds, remain as an essential part of the immortal spirit, by which it preserves forever the power of resisting and reacting to the Divine, which is essential to its free coöperation with the Divine."

And this is the reason given why angels are not created in heaven, but are rather of the spirits of men from the earth. It is further given as the reason why the permanent characters of men are formed, as to their basis, in this world. As the lecturer states it: "Here they take on that which is fixed, resisting and permanent; and that which can be added hereafter is only the wine within this cup." But for all this resting of the soul upon the body, and its being built up by means of the body, there exists a certain degree of separateness between them. For while the more unyielding elements in the body are very little changed from whatever cause, the soul can choose whether it will receive good or evil, can cherish, repress, or greatly modify the affections that are natural to it, and can greatly change the inner forms that belong to it while it continues to tenant the body. It is likewise held that the inner and purer organism of soul and body may retain all its freshness and elasticity, while the coarser tissues are becoming clogged and stiff, so that the soul is young while the body is old. This furnishes a felicitous explanation of the doctrine known as immortal youth—a doctrine to which the human spirit instinctively clings.

The doctrine above laid down is illustrated by the formation of a seed, or a nut; the inner substance of the seed, the shell, and even the outer case being so closely interwoven as to seem inseparable: but as the inner parts absorb the nourishment contributed by the outer, the latter grow dried and become easily separable from the inner, which is still living and has all the life. It is likewise illustrated by the formation of jewels and crystals of precious metals in the rocks, whose substance is first dispersed in the pores of the rock, and then gradually collected and deposited in the jewel or crystal, which then becomes easily separable. Also, by the formation of the butterfly in the caterpillar, the tissues of both appearing to be inseparable, until when maturity is reached the life withdraws itself into the finer creature within, and the rougher, coarser skin is cast off. Most persons are conscious of this incongruity, or growing want of correspondence between the soul and the body as they grow old. But those who love truth and their fellowmen are nevertheless strong and young in their spirits, however weak and infirm their outer case may become.

When the sleep of death overtakes us, the breathing and the pulsation having ceased, a look of peace steals over the face, more often than not expressing the patience, the trustfulness, the hope that never appeared together there before. Sometimes—says the lecturer—the look contains a bright joy not to be translated into speech; the brightest look comes upon the faces of those who have patiently lived the life that leads to heaven. Sometimes it appears like a flash, even before the breathing ceases, or at the moment it ceases; sometimes it comes more slowly, increasing gradually for two, three or four days. Usually it vanishes on the third day. This sweet look is by no means merely the first effect of decomposition. Not unfrequently the brightening look is not delayed until the breath has ceased; but the eyes open, and angel friends are seen, with visions of heavenly things, while yet our friend may tell us what he sees. The spirit has been formed in the natural body, has lived in every part of it—in its organs of sense and of motion as well as in the thinking brain; hence it is in full human form, enjoying every sense and activity it enjoyed in the world. The spiritual form is like the natural.

There must be changes in appearance, which are needed to express the real character of the spirit; yet we may expect to see, through whatever changes may take place, familiar expressions of thought and feeling in the face and the actions. And not only must the human form—says the New Church—be similar in the other world, but other creations, which are forms of love and wisdom from God, must also be similar. What would heaven be, it asks, without flowers, and fruits, and gentle animals, and all things necessary to full human delight? If they exist here from God, why not there? Only they must of course be there of spiritual and not of material substance. Creations, in the spiritual world, are in agreement with our own natures, and expressive of them; a selfish, wicked person is not surrounded with gentle, friendly animals and generous fruitfulness, neither would a kind and charitable person be surrounded by fierce and hurtful plants. Each is encompassed with things that express his own nature, being indeed created by means of his own affections and character. And if the occupations of the natural world are not literally continued in the spiritual world, the loves of usefulness acquired here are continued, and there find more exquisite gratification in nobler usefulness.

One cannot but be struck with the close resemblance between the actual spiritual phenomena of the present time, attested as they are by a great multitude of living witnesses, and the doctrines of the New Church as they are set forth in relation to spirit-life and the spirit-world. Materialization, as it is called, is but another convincing proof of what was the vision of Swedenborg. The reality of the spirit-world is proven by evidences innumerable. The nearness of it to our own world could not be made more impressive. Life here and there are in the closest correspondence. Angels are first the people of earth. Soul and body are to appearance inseparably blended, but the body is cast off at its maturity and the spirit alone lives and grows young forever. Life is a mysterious gift, both here and there. The spirit form is similar to the human form, and each one's environments are the creation of his own affections and character. What is there in it all to warrant old theology in anathematizing those who thus believe and live enjoying their belief as they can enjoy no other?

War on Monopoly.

The movement has finally been made in Congress, and not a day too soon, either, that is to open decisive war on the prevailing spirit of monopoly which is forming "trusts" for the control of all branches of industry by tying up their products in a pool and forcing the great body of consumers to pay such prices as may suit the greed of the avaricious managers.

Representative Rayner, of Maryland, appeared before the House committee on manufactures and made an impressive argument in favor of his bill to [illegible] the monopolizing power of the new "trusts" system which is springing up on all sides. He told the committee that there was no danger of wasting time in going through the [illegible] of any investigations, but that immediate action was urgent in order to prevent and break up these wicked and soulless combinations. He has prepared the bill with great care, having given the subject much serious thought. He has drafted the bill in accordance with the principles laid down by all the authorities, and it comes within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States.

The committee were assured of the propriety of the passage of a law of this character, and of the necessity of prompt and decisive action. The author of the bill told them there ought not to be a moment's delay on it, in view of what could but be well known to the committee itself on the subject of these infamous combinations to bankrupt private enterprise, to depredate upon the business interests and to plunder the people of this country. Not a day passes that does not see some iniquitous "trust" springing into existence. There is no necessity for ordering any investigation. Every newspaper in the land, he said, teems with proof that these combinations bribe, corrupt, and conspire to pilfer and oppress.

He charged openly that they have never hesitated to buy legislatures and courts whenever occasion and opportunity presented.

Scores of such organizations, he said, were being pushed to completion with all possible speed in order to anticipate any action of Congress in the premises. It is reported that the committee were deeply impressed with the argument of Mr. Rayner, and it is confidently given out that early and favorable action will be had on the bill. How it will fare in the House when it comes up is another question.

Of the urgent necessity of some sort of legislative action for overcoming at once the growing tendency to "corner" the products of human industry in all its departments, thus forcing the great body of consumers to pay prices for their daily commodities which are utterly disproportioned to their actual cost, there is nothing to say but what will only emphasize it the more. If the whole community is to stand in an attitude of helplessness and be robbed without the least show of resistance, a more effective way of doing it could scarcely be invented than that which goes by the newly invented name of "trusts." It is only another word for monopoly, and the first duty of the people is to crush that spirit before it crushes by enslaving them.

Heredity to the End.

The modern world is seeing more and more distinctly the irrepressible truths that are contained in the scientific doctrine of heredity. We can none of us escape the consequences of what has gone before us, and with which we had nothing to do. Parents consciously or unconsciously transmit their characteristics to their offspring, and their traits in endless and mysterious combinations go down to late generations. Unbelievers are at fault in demanding to see certain fixed results from given combinations; but they do not take into account the governing consideration that such desired results are not to be had if even a single factor is wanting to make the combination perfect.

A recent writer in the Chicago Times has stated the case with remarkable precision when he says that the place to study the laws of heredity is not on the highest plane of intellectual greatness, but on the medium and lowest planes. There is a wider field for observation here, with a vastly larger number of specimens. This writer cites the case of a woman who had been deserted by her husband, and who replied to the question of why he did so, that "It runs in the family; four of his brothers did the same thing." It would be interesting, he remarks, to know if the father of these five deserting husbands did the same thing, and if his father was guilty of it before him. There certainly appears to be room enough for the heredity theory to work in this case.

The same writer instances the cases of three women—grandmother, mother and daughter—who had each been divorced from her husband for the same alleged cause, and at almost the same period of her life. It certainly seems as if heredity had something to do with it. To illustrate the necessity of studying the operation of the law among the more numerous classes of society rather than among a selected few, he rightly states, what will occur to any one, that the ability to acquire money runs in some families, while the ability to write great books and poems does not. And so does the propensity to steal, the love of display, the tendency to boastfulness, and the dislike of work. Some families seem to be born to hold public office, from generation to generation, not from superior qualifications so much as from a natural habit of seeking for it and doing little or nothing else.

Mysterious as this law of heredity seems, and it really is mysterious in the manifold combinations of its working, it is nevertheless a plain one practically, and it abounds with hints for us to note and obey. It is far more satisfactory to live intelligently than blindly. We advance nothing by guessing when we might go about affairs knowing more or less of beginning and end. But the greatest benefit that is to come from a knowledge of the law is from its ability to help us to avoid serious errors and to produce the most desirable results. It can elevate and bless where it now depresses and degrades.

☞ James Vincent, sr., a veteran Spiritualist and impressional writer, sends us from his home in Tabor, Ia., an extract from the advance sheets of a book which he purposes having in press before long—the subject being "Immortality," and the matter, as far as one may decide from the excerpt, of interest to inquirers concerning this vital theme. Those wishing to know more concerning it can address him as above.

The Andover Controversy.

The tables promise to be turned, in the Andover Seminary affair. The trustees of Phillips Academy have filed a bill in equity in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts against the attorney-general of the State, the visitors of the theological institution in Phillips Academy, and the five professors whose cases were investigated by the board of visitors upon accusations preferred by Messrs. Wellman, Dexter, and others. This action is the result of a reference of all the matters involved by the board of trustees to a committee, who made a report recommending that such a bill be filed. The bill relates the history of the Andover cases from the beginning, and tells the story of the trial of the five professors for heresy, in which Prof. Smyth was convicted and the remaining four were acquitted.

The bill charges as follows: That the statutes constituting the board of visitors are unconstitutional; that the jurisdiction of the visitors is not original and concurrent, but appellate, and therefore they could not act on a matter already pending before the trustees; that the visitatorial power of the board of visitors could only be exercised at the annual visitation in June, and their action in the matter of the professors not being taken at that time, is void; that in the case against the professors the trustees were not summoned as parties and were not allowed to appear, whereas they were necessary parties; and that William T. Eustis, one of the visitors, was during the course of the proceedings against the professors subjected to undue influence, and prejudged the case, having formed and repeatedly expressed to many persons an opinion upon the case of the defendant Professor Smyth before hearing the same, which rendered him incapable of sitting in judgment upon Professor Smyth.

The bill concludes with the suggestion of the trustees that, in view of the foregoing allegations, they are in doubt whether the decree of the Visitors against Professor Smyth is valid or void, and whether they ought to pay him his salary or not, and ask for the instructions of the Court. The trustees, without regard to the appeal taken by Professor Smyth, consider that his case offers a good opportunity to obtain the instructions of the Supreme Court on the relations of the trustees to the board of visitors. They ask the Court to draw the line between the functions of the board of visitors as an inquisitorial and a judicial body, which has not hitherto been very clearly drawn in practice.

Thus it will be seen, in case the Supreme Court gives its opinion that the board of visitors is a court of appeal, and not an original and concurrent authority, that they will have shown themselves usurpers and overriders, to whom the trustees stand in relations which even they cannot legally, much less morally, disregard. The question is a vital one in this interesting case.

The Blair Bill.

Since THE BANNER last went to press the Blair Educational Bill has passed the United States Senate by a vote of thirty-nine for to twenty-nine against. It was supported by twenty-three Republicans and sixteen Democrats, while twelve Republicans and seventeen Democrats voted against it. In closing his argument in advocacy of the bill, Mr. Blair took occasion to openly declare his convictions that the Jesuit element of the Catholic Church had organized and was working assiduously against his bill and the progress of education throughout this country.

The Berry Sisters.

Mr. Andrew Story (of Minnesota) informs us that he came fourteen hundred miles to attend a materializing circle, and was fully convinced of the fact of materialization of spirit-forms, as his wife and daughter made their appearance at 55 Rutland street, this city, on Sunday evening last, and were unmistakably identified. The spirit-wife, he says, did not come from the cabinet at all, but rose up, as if from the floor, by his side. After a brief conversation, the spirit took him by the hand, and led him across the room, where stood his daughter, who affectionately embraced him.

☞ A Mrs. Cooper is writing up and having printed in the California papers "How to Solve the Problem of Hoodlumism"—i. e., how to lift the street Arabs from the unfortunate condition which they are in to-day. Industrial education is her plan. Put them to school—not into a theological institution, but into an industrial one, she says, where they can learn trades, and eventually become respectable men: Put the child in possession of his powers; develop his faculties; unfold his moral nature; cultivate mechanical skill in the use of the hands; give him a sense of symmetry and harmony; a quick judgment of number, measure and size; stimulate his inventive faculties; make him familiar with the customs and usages of well-ordered lives; teach him to be kind, courteous, helpful, and unselfish; inspire him to love whatsoever things are true, and pure, and right, and kind, and noble; and thus equipped physically, mentally and morally, send him forth to the wider range of study, which should include within its scope some sort of industrial training; that is, the putting of the boy or girl into the possession of the tools for technical employment, or for the cultivation of the arts of drawing and kindred employments; and still further on the boy and girl should have a completed trade. Thus will they be prepared to solve the rugged problem of existence by earning their own living through honest, faithful work." All which is grand in theory, but hard to put in practice.

☞ The Crown Prince of Germany is likely to die under the ignorant hands of his physicians, the same as Gen. Grant did. It is only a matter of time. Under these circumstances no wonder the New York World observes with much truth: "Medicine and surgery have made great progress of late years, but sometimes the public is shocked to see HOW MUCH REMAINS TO BE DONE in these ANCIENT BRANCHES OF SCIENCE." There are healing mediums in this city who could have cured the Prince long ago, without medicine or knife, and perhaps it is not too late now to employ one of them. If you do n't believe us, ask Mr. Blaine, who is well posted in regard to the massage treatment in this country.

Explanation from A. B. Richmond.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Will you kindly permit me to correct an error of the reviewer of my book, in a recent number of your paper, wherein he says that I intimate that the members of the Seybert Commission have received pay from the Seybert Fund for services not rendered, which I characterize virtually as "embezzlement." While your reviewer has been very kind to me, yet he has mistaken my meaning—and perhaps the public has also; therefore I explain:

On page 37, in speaking of the secrets purchased by the Commissioners which they refuse to divulge, I say:

"So one of your number 'knows how it is all done'; he paid a consideration for the knowledge. Is it not his duty, then, to publish it to the world? Are you paid from Henry Seybert's money to discover the secrets of spiritualistic communications, and then place the seal of silence on your own lips? In the name of common sense what good will the world derive from your investigations? You might possibly die, and then the profound secret would be lost, and spiritualistic mediums would continue to deceive the multitude of believers, who, like Henry Seybert in his lifetime, are ardent and honest in the faith. Gentlemen, in my humble opinion that secret does not belong to you; it is the property of the world, paid for out of the bequest of Mr. Seybert, and you are converting it to your own use—or, to speak in legal phraseology, you are embezzling it. I beg your pardon, gentlemen, but that is what the criminal codes of all the States in our Union call the offence."

No! no! Mr. Editor, I did not intend to accuse the Seybert Commissioners of embezzling money—surely not; for as Marc Antony said of the murderers of Cæsar:

"So are they all, all honorable men."

But the wonderful secrets of jugglery they purchased. I did think that in their public capacity as paid investigators under the bequest of Henry Seybert, when they discovered how the independent slate-writing and other mediumistic feats were performed by magicians, that the secrets belonged to the public, and that the appropriation of them to their own use by the Commissioners was very like embezzlement:

"Only this, and nothing more."

It occurred to me that if those members of the Seybert Commission who own these valuable secrets by purchase and assignment should die—as all good men must in time—that the secrets would be numbered among the "lost arts," or at least would only be known to spirit mediums, who would continue to deceive the unsuspecting with them, as Henry Seybert had been deceived in his lifetime. I thought the primary object of Mr. Seybert's bequest was to inform the world, not the Commissioners alone. Perhaps this is a narrow and selfish view of the case; if so, my remarks may have been unwarranted, and therefore if I have said anything in relation thereto that I shall regret in the future, I am sorry for it, and tender this humble apology to all who may feel aggrieved thereby. Nevertheless I would like to know these secrets, and if the Seybert Commissioners will sell them at a reasonable profit I will gladly purchase them if the price is not above my means. Respectfully yours,

A. B. Richmond.

Doing the Dirty Work.

Now and then somebody will make a foolish remark like this, viz.: What we need in this country is a class of cheap, ignorant laborers to do the "dirty work." When such a person is asked how he would like to feel that he is rearing his own children in ignorance just to do the dirty work for our children in after years, he is pretty sure to see the matter in an entirely new light. He will not hesitate to declare that he has no idea of doing any such thing, and that he does n't know anybody who has. As the Labor Advocate of Lewiston (Me.) well remarks—"We do not believe in rearing one class of human beings to do the dirty work and become the slaves of another. Let each one do his own dirty work, and there won't be so much dirty work done. We would like to see every laborer lifted up to the highest level, and educated so that he could fittingly fill the presidential chair if called to do so. We want to see the time come when our legislative halls shall be filled with intelligent farmers and mechanics; when an ignorant laborer will be as hard to find as an honest politician is now." But it is education alone that can bring it about. Pass the Blair bill.

Woman Suffrage.—The Sixty-Fourth Woman Suffrage League of the State of Massachusetts was organized by Miss Cora Scott Pond at Bedford, on Friday, Feb. 10th. Flint; Executive Committee, Mrs. S. C. Sampson, A. E. Brown, Mrs. Levi Webber, Mrs. S. J. F. Brown, Mrs. Clara D. Smith.

"The Editing Business."

Under the above heading Bro. Horace Seaver, in a recent number of his sturdy paper, The Boston Investigator, sets forth "man-fashion" and to the point, divers of the vexatious and trying annoyances which crowd the path and consume the hours of journalistic life:

"We have known a very learned gentleman bring us a contribution with the remark, that as we were continually occupied, it must doubtless be an accommodation to receive a good article once in a while—and on examining the 'good' article in question, have found three gross grammatical errors, divers sins of awkwardness, and two words misspelled in the first and second sentences.

A lecture which will bear printing as delivered is an exception; and, in a word, there are very few men, who have not served a regular apprenticeship to the types, who can sit down, and, without 'halt or let,' express their thoughts readily and fluently in writing. Yet, with all this, we daily meet with gentlemen who, because they have made an occasional hit in a letter to a friend, or have elaborated a drawling story or poem in some incautious paper, talk daringly and dashingly of journalism, and graciously inform us how they would make things fly round, if they were only editors!

Singular—every man, no matter how stupid he is, always seems to be morally convinced that if everything else fails, he can either manage a small farm, run a hotel, or edit a newspaper—and experience shows that where there are a hundred educated young men capable of successfully practicing a profession, there is really not more than one or two who is really enough of a genius, a scholar, and a man of practical sense, to make a good editor. In fact, though all the world reads papers, there are very few out of the business who have ever taken the pains to acquire much information relative to it—and the natural consequence is, that its difficulties are unappreciated."

One of our exchanges says:

"What the ordinary newspaper editor needs, even more than a good five-cent cigar, is an office cat with an always unsatisfied appetite for original articles cut bias, and for such communications as are illustrated with views in which personal pecuniary interest is conspicuous."

There is a good deal of truth in the above quotation. But the writer would sing quite another tune were he editor of a Spiritualist journal, who is expected to cater not only to the "personal pecuniary interest" of people who never lift a finger to aid him, but who, on the contrary, after being accommodated time and again, repudiate him the moment their self-interest prompts them to do so. We have encountered many such of late years, we are sorry to say; but that is not all: Those whom we have in the years agone aided pecuniarily—without expecting any return for favors rendered—are now the worst enemies we have to contend with. Their slanderous tongues and venomous pens are constantly wagging, while they profess to "deal justly with all men." Yet they can do us no lasting harm, for a discriminating public soon sees through the flimsy veil that hides for a time their selfish motives.

The Self-Sufficiency of Stupidity.—The most frightful exhibitions of stupidity occur when men, not by any means stupid or illiterate, are called to judge of work which lies quite outside their experience and capacity.—The [Hammonton, N. J.] Republican.

Quite right, brother; especially is this the case when stilted College professors, bigoted M. D.s and "truly good" D. D.s undertake to pronounce on Spiritualism and its verity.

Mr. Holcomb, lately Secretary of the American Legation at Pekin, says that out of the 400,000,000 inhabitants of the Chinese Empire, fully 300,000,000 spend less than $1,50 a month for food.

"Of Man's First Disobedience."—(Scene—Sunday School)—Teacher (examining on the "Fall"): "Now, can anyone tell me which of the Commandments our first parents broke in eating the forbidden fruit?" Thoughtful Boy: "Please, sir, they didna break any o' them; the Commandments wisna gi'en oot tae the time o' Moses." (Teacher is non-plussed.)

Our Agent in the South.

Mrs. Clara A. Field will speak for the First Society of Spiritualists at St. Augustine, Fla., every Sunday afternoon and evening during the season, or until further notice. She will lecture week evenings within easy distance of that city, and can be addressed for such engagements at the Magnolia House, St. Augustine, Fla. Mrs. Field is an authorized agent of the Banner of Light for the taking of subscriptions.

☞ Dr. J. C. Street, author of "The Hidden Way Across the Threshold," has returned from Chicago, Ill., and can be found at his old address, 78 Montgomery street, Boston. On his leaving for his homeward journey, The (Chicago) Times gave him a favorable notice, in the course of which occurred the subjoined passages. [The Inter Ocean also referred to him in like commendatory fashion]:

"Dr. J. C. Street, of Boston, Mass., closed his course of class instruction on Thursday last, and a few hours later left on an eastward-bound train for Pittsburgh to deliver a public lecture, en route to the 'Hub.'

His large private class in this city were enthusiastic over the instructions received, and at the concluding lecture tendered him a vote of gratitude which left no doubt of its genuineness, and must have given pleasing assurance to their teacher of a cultivated appreciation.

The class have expressed an earnest desire to listen to further instructions from Dr. Street in the not distant future."

The Social Reform Convention meets in Boston Hall, 176 Tremont street, Boston, Sunday, Feb. 26th, at 10:30 A. M., 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. Rev. J. M. L. Babcock, Josephine R. Stone, A. D. Wheeler, E. H. Heywood, and other speakers are expected.

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

[Notices under this heading must reach our office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.]

C. Fannie Allyn addressed the First Spiritualists' Society of Glens Falls, N. Y., Sunday, Feb. 19th; she will speak there again on Sunday, 26th inst.

J. Frank Baxter still keeps up the aroused interest in Spiritualism in Worcester, Mass.; next Sunday, 26th inst., however, he will close his present engagement there. Friday evening, 24th, he will benefit the Association with a gratuitous entertainment. He expects to lecture two or three evenings in Gardner, previous to his appointments in New York City, where he opens Sunday, March 4th, before the First Association of Spiritualists.

Dr. W. B. Mills gave platform tests to a large audience in Albany, N. Y., on a recent Sunday night. He has invitations to go to Montreal, Amesbury, Boston and other points.

We learn from our esteemed contemporary, The Eagle, that Prof. J. W. Cadwell, the veteran and distinguished mesmerist, was recently in Saratoga, and delivered lectures for the Spiritualists at the Court of Appeals Room. He was also to give instructive and amusing exhibitions and explanations of mesmerism during week evenings at the same place. The Eagle says of him: "Prof. Cadwell's reputation gives [wherever he may be] assurance of an opportunity not often enjoyed of studying the subject and observing the phenomena of mesmerism."

Warren Chase lectures in Lynn, Mass., Feb. 26th; in Albany, N. Y., March 2d; in New York City, Columbia Hall, 873 6th Avenue, March 4th; in Geneva, O., March 11th; in Clyde, O., March 18th; in Evansville, Ind., five Sundays of April.

Abby N. Burnham lectured in Newburyport, Jan. 15th; Peterboro, Jan. 21st and 22d; Brockton, Jan. 29th; in Trenton, N. J., Feb. 5th, 12th and 19th, to crowded houses—many having to leave for want of standing-room, even; she speaks there again on the 26th.

On Sunday morning, Feb. 12th, G. H. Brooks had the pleasure of organizing a Children's Lyceum in Washington, D. C.; it was well attended, though the weather was very stormy. The new school will, no doubt, be a grand success. The meetings of the adult Society, we are informed, are largely attended, and the work is going on remarkably well. Mr. Brooks is open for engagements at any time. His address while in Washington is 423 Third street, N. E.

☞ Mrs. J. F. Dillingham, the well known test, medical and business medium, is now located at 12 Bond street, Boston. She enjoyed a most successful season at Lake Pleasant, after which she gave séances and private sittings in Worcester, Lynn and other places, giving everywhere the best of satisfaction. We know that Mrs. Dillingham is an excellent medium and a woman deserving patronage.—Light on the Way.

☞ Our Mediums, against whom the darts of the enemy are constantly hurled, who frequently endure untold miseries in development, have given their strength, their very life in many instances, to serve the world that rejects them. Mediumship is the corner-stone of phenomenal Spiritualism, and it is phenomenal Spiritualism which has challenged attention, demonstrated continued existence, and rolled back the tide of materialism; hence every stab at mediums and mediumship by Spiritualists is really a desertion to the foe, a traitorous going over to the enemy.—Emma Hardinge Britten in The Two Worlds (Eng.)

THIRD EDITION.

IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "The Biography of Mrs. J. H. Conant."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "Immortality Demonstrated," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Dec. 27th, 1887.

Spirit Invocation.

The heavens declare thy glory, Lord,
Through flashing sun and star;
They mark the progress of thy word,
That streameth from afar!
Through changeless law, in every hour,
They breathe intelligence and power.

The earth repeats the mystic tale
Of rare design and skill,
Through forest vast and snow-crowned vale
The story of thy will.
And deeps and seas again rehearse
The wonders of thy universe.

Oh! our Father God, we, thy human children, would take up the strain which is sent forth by seas and mountains, by earth and heaven, and repeat unto thee our acknowledgments of thy wisdom and skill; we would send unto thy throne all the deep aspirations and grateful thanks of our souls in recognition of thy law and thy eternal love. Accept the praises of our heart for the year that has fled, with its experiences, its crown of joy and its deep dispensation of sorrow to human hearts. Each part of thy discipline has been designed for some grand purpose, and each human heart that has come under thy law, as every one of thy children must have done, has received its own burden and its own crown for its future welfare and peace.

We praise thee for all that has been; we bless thee that we are thy children and that we may acknowledge thee as our parent, the tender father and mother, who giveth only good and merciful blessings to thy children.

At this season of the year, when peace and good will ring forth on every hand, may we not forget to look upward to thee and thy angel hosts for guidance, for strength and for assistance, and may we remember that, as we are thy children, thou hast designed our pathway and opened up the road of progress for us in thy own good and wise way; and that as we follow thee and the teachings of thy angel ones, we shall be uplifted and strengthened in spirit from day to day.

We ask thy benediction to rest upon each one, and we would send forth unto thee and thy ministering spirits such blessings of peace and of thanksgiving as our hearts have to bestow. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By a subscriber.] Please define the terms "scientific truth" and "abstract truth."

ANS.—Man recognizes that the natural world—the physical universe and its objects—is based upon natural law, and this law he defines to himself as a grand, underlying truth and principle, as well as an operating power which governs all things, time and sense, which he beholds around him; and this recognition may be that which is called "abstract truth," or truth in the abstract—not being especially interpreted by any direct sign or symbol.

"Scientific truth" is that line of truth which is clearly explained and revealed to human comprehension; science being the revealer of law, of the source and foundation of things, of those powers and forces which govern and operate upon the various departments of life in the universe. This is science, or this is scientific truth, science being the revealer of truth or of actual law. One mind becomes directed into a certain channel; it desires to seek a solution of the law operating in a certain line; and not only seeks, but experiments and tries to discover the operations of that law, and to make it so clear to himself that he can also explain and discover it to other minds. By-and-bye the scientist discovers the bent or the direction of that law—with the operations of which he desires to become familiar—and he studies this direction closely until he feels that he has come into an understanding of the law, its operations and its results; and he becomes not only a student but a teacher, revealing to the world that knowledge which he has himself received. That which he has to reveal—if it be based upon sure and close calculations, if it be verified by not only his calculations but by his experiments and researches—becomes then a revelation of scientific truth; and the man who receives this revelation comes into an understanding, at least in that especial department, of that truth which is known to the world as scientific truth. We look upon abstract truth as the acceptance or definition of the term truth, as it relates to all things; the law of life in the universe not being formulated or confined to any special department or any special revelation. All scientific truth is a revelation of truth and actuality which belongs to special departments; which gives to the human mind an understanding of truth as it is contained within any definite department, object, thing or channel.

Q.—Can a person live in the spirit-world while not yet free from the physical body? For instance, a spirit communicated through a medium, claiming to be a dweller in the spirit-world, while the facts proved that person to be still on earth, and, although very ill at the time of making the communication, he still remained in the body for two months. Please explain.

A.—It is possible for a spirit, under certain conditions, to so far disconnect itself from its physical body as to be virtually an inhabitant of the spiritual world, even though the magnetic cord between itself and the physical form has not become altogether severed. For instance, take the case of which the question speaks: The individual was very ill at the time when he, as a spirit, manifested at a distant place, claiming to be a dweller in the spirit-world. Probably the vital forces connected with his body were at a very low ebb; the organs did not perform their regular duties, and the physical body was only for a time held partially by the spirit. Undoubtedly the spirit could not clearly communicate through its physical body, and the outer form may have seemed to be in an unconscious or semi-unconscious condition, but the physical powers were held in abeyance, and the spirit had, to an extent, withdrawn itself from that casket of flesh; yet because the physical power, the vital forces had not become fully subdued, the magnetic elements belonging to the spirit-body had not entirely become dissevered from the material form—the spirit had not altogether disconnected itself from the outward habiliments; therefore it was partially confined to the material condition. But such a spirit, having in a great measure overcome the conditions of time and of sense, may have withdrawn so fully from the material side as to really come en rapport with the spiritual life and its surroundings, and may have felt the magnetic cord lengthening, and been able to pass away from the locality where the physical form was confined, out into the atmosphere, even into the spiritual world. Having passed out from that locality, and coming in contact with those who attracted it, the spirit may have made a connection with some mediumistic person for the purpose of announcing himself, and so it was thought he was really an inhabitant of the spirit-world, his friends believing he had passed entirely away from the physical body.

These seeming discrepancies may easily be reconciled, when you remember that you are all spirits, dwelling even now in a spiritual atmosphere, even though environed by the physical limitations of this material universe; and so, if a spirit has overcome the conditions of the material and has so far withdrawn itself from the physical body as to no longer need it as an instrument, it may come in contact with a medium and declare itself to be an excarnated spirit, even though the magnetic cord has not been altogether severed between the physical and the spiritual.

We know that it is possible for a spirit to withdraw itself almost entirely from the physical form, and to operate on that form only as an operator works with a machine in mechanical life. This is not the usual mode of operation through physical forms, because the soul or the life-principle permeates every part and portion of a human being—thus you work with as well as through the physical body. But a spirit may have become free from its physical form, and been afforded all the power possible, yet the machine having not become thoroughly disorganized, may continue to feebly work, until all the magnetic qualities are fully withdrawn. All the time the spirit which has governed it may stand distinctly apart from the body, holding only a slight interest in its workings. When the magnetic cord is entirely severed, and the elements belonging to the spirit have been fully withdrawn, then the physical body passes into a state of dissolution, which you are pleased to call by the name of death.

Q.—Is there a difference between soul and spirit? If so, what? and can one exist without the other?

A.—We have considered the terms "soul and spirit" on other occasions, but we find a confusion existing in the minds of many inquirers in relation to those terms, and we also find that spirits, as well as speakers, are apt to make use of the terms interchangeably, giving the same definition to both. But there is a difference between the two words.

To our mind, the soul is really the man, as it is the life-principle, springing from the great fountain-source of all life, power, intelligence or being. This life-principle, the motor power which sets in operation all that it comes in contact with, we do not consider in the abstract, because in its connection with human life we find it individualized; and yet it is a principle, an active power operating upon and throughout the human structure. To us the soul is a part of infinitude, that which is in the likeness of God, the Great Creator of all Life and Law.

What, then, is spirit? Spirit to us is the structure operated upon by the soul, or life-principle. This spiritual being has its parts and its functions, every one of which is permeated and infilled by the great electrical life-principle which we call the soul.

Can the spirit exist without the soul? To our mind, no; because without that great moving, animating power or principle the spirit would fall into disuse, and would be as senseless and cold as inanimate matter could possibly be; but when infilled and acted upon by this great electrical power and individualized force, it becomes sentient, conscious, active, full of vitality.

Can the soul exist without the spiritual structure? Only in the abstract, because there must be a manifestation of all law, all power, all activity—else this law, power and activity would be diffused throughout the atmosphere or the universe, and be unable to perform its work; but when it can create and devise means for its manifestation in useful ways, then it shows a purpose for its existence; and this is what we find in regard to the soul as connected with the spirit; and this is what we find in regard to the soul and spirit as connected with matter, the one and the other devising ways and means and manifestations for the expression of their great force, power and consciousness. All that shows intelligence, intellectuality, power of being or of development, belongs to the soul, and yet all this is manifested throughout the spirit of man, and made to create as well as to sustain forms of order, even laws and systems.

We believe that man is ever a dual being, but in connection with physical life a triune being, inasmuch as when endowed with the outward form of flesh there is not only the soul-principle, the great moving, electrical force which sets the entire machine, the entire universe in motion, but there is a grand structure filled with magnetic and electric power, which we may properly call the spirit of man. We have also the physical form, acted upon by this dual force of magnetism and electricity which makes up the soul and spirit, the positive and negative principles of life and being, of which we must believe the Great Father of all is composed.

Q.—Is a man of high reputation in the world necessarily one of good character?

A.—No. A man may possess a character which is strong and enduring, and have the power to resist and overcome temptation; he may resist evil in every form, and be pure-minded and aspirational by nature, seeking to bless and benefit others, even at the sacrifice of self. Such a man is of sterling character, but he may be almost unknown to the world and not bear an especially high reputation; may even be misunderstood and frowned upon by some with whom he comes in contact, and may even encounter the sneers and scoffs of the world, and be made to feel that he is of little moment in any department of life. This man is misrepresented and miscomprehended, yet he has a strong, clear and beautiful character, which he will retain through life, and it will be of especial value to him in the world beyond.

Another man may be very influential and possess the esteem of his fellow-men, and move along in society as one who is of great usefulness to mankind. His reputation may stand very high, and he may be looked upon as the incarnation of all that is good and beautiful; and yet, secretly, he may be a great schemer, a designing man, who pretends to possess that which does not belong to him. Perhaps, for purposes of his own, he is benevolent in public works, and gives with a lavish hand to charities where his name and his deeds may be blazoned forth to the world. Perhaps he bears with him those marks of public approval which are freely bestowed upon those in power, or who have influence, or who in some way make it known that they are doing good works; but he may not be of spotless character, even though his reputation is rated so high. In his private life he may be a designing individual and overreach others; take advantage of the weak and lowly; be selfish by nature and grasping in propensity. This man has not builded up a strong and good character, which the angels may gaze upon with joy. On the contrary, his character is dark and unwholesome, and sends forth through his personal atmosphere emanations of an unlovely appearance. When he passes to the spirit-world he will be known for just what he is: a man weak in character, and in need of soul-development, spiritual culture and growth.

Q.—As Spiritualism has, in the world's advance, succeeded other religious forms and beliefs, what do you consider will follow Spiritualism?

A.—Spiritualism, as the question states, seems to have been the outgrowth of all religious forms and beliefs. Spiritualism, as it appears in the nineteenth century, could not possibly have made its appearance in earlier ages, because the world was not ready to receive and understand it. There have been times in the world's history when intelligent manifestations of human life have mysteriously appeared on earth, which have proven to man, in many instances, that there is a power, an intelligence, independent of the material body or the physical universe, which can manifest itself under certain conditions; but Spiritualism, with its vast teachings, its grand revealments, its far-reaching claims and movements, could not possibly have been received by man prior to this nineteenth century. The world had need of education; it had to be instructed by slow degrees and painful steps before this evangel of light could appear to it, and so we think that every system of religious teaching and observance that has been given to mankind, from the remote ages of antiquity to the present, has been necessary in human development, consequently Spiritualism is the outgrowth of all that has gone before it.

If it comes to free you from superstition, it is because it realizes that superstition has now no place in the heart or the life of advancing humanity; but superstition was only the natural outgrowth of man's ignorance and of his groping, struggling condition with physical forces and limitations in the past, and so Spiritualism, while it desires and intends to sweep aside superstition, bigotry and all the concomitants of ignorance and error, still realizes that these things have had their place, and have had to be, as the natural result of a limited state of society or of humanity.

"What is to follow Spiritualism?" If man becomes spiritualized in every part and portion of his nature and being, as he must before he accepts Spiritualism and understands it in its every department, then it will be a long time before any system of religion will follow this or take the place of it.

We affirm first that man is to be spiritualized through every portion of his nature—elevated, and come into an understanding not only of himself on the plane of matter but of his interior being; on the spiritual plane he is to understand that every man, in whatever condition he may be, is his brother and every woman his sister; that all are linked together by one magnetic chain which binds them in one fraternity, and that when a brother or a sister suffers he must do his best to lessen that suffering; he should feel as though he was the sufferer himself, and try every method to alleviate the pain. In time justice will overrule the earth, because man will desire that all shall be dealt justly by, and so he will not try to overreach his neighbor, but will do his best to give his brother and his sister the opportunities and advantages which are for their highest interest; and when justice takes its place on earth love will be the overruling element stirring the hearts of mankind, calling them out in grateful and beautiful expression toward each other; and when love and justice rule the earth, then may we begin to see mankind studying the laws of life and nature, seeking to gain that knowledge which is power, and to so govern and make use of that knowledge as to grow wise in thought, in effort and in achievement.

This is what Spiritualism has to do for the world, to teach and to elevate mankind to such a position; and when this is accomplished humanity will have truly arisen beyond the animal plane to that of spirituality, refined and purified, and the natural outgrowth of this will be a religion of humanity, which is adapted to every human being in existence, which recognizes the law of justice and comes under its sway, which bows down before the element of love, accepting its beautiful teachings and attributes and freely dispensing them unto all the world; therefore we say the natural outgrowth of Spiritualism is a religion divine, beautiful and uplifting, a religion of humanity.

Q.—From whence do ideas come?

A.—Lexicographers would say that ideas are the subject of thought, of the operations of the mind, but after all such a definition seems to be incomplete, and to lack clearness of expression; yet who shall define the sea from which ideas flow, who shall begin to explain that great master-field of all thought from whence intelligence springs? Without intelligence we should have no ideas; without intelligence there would be no thought, and therefore we say trace back the sea of ideas, the flow of thought, to the great fountain-source of all intelligence, all wisdom and design.

But your questioner would say: "Yes, you go back to infinitude, and say that ideas spring from the sea of infinitude; but we cannot grasp that thought, nor make it a part of our own minds; we would like to know if ideas are the natural operation of the human brain, as it is confined in these material structures or organisms of ours, or if ideas are brought to us from some unknown sea or unknown fount of inspiration, and are conveyed through our minds or brains as water is conveyed through a pipe?" And we may say that so far as our observation goes, we gain knowledge from a great sea of inspiration, and this itself, to our minds, is a spiritual universe, permeated and infilled by the great supreme thought of all life and intelligence. This quickening power is brought to our individualized soul, and becomes a part of ourselves; by its aid our spiritual organisms are operated upon, and this abstract thought or abstract inspiration, in its primary condition, becomes, through its workings in our human minds, in our spiritual structures, condensed thought, distinct ideas, and finds expression or manifestation in outward life and outward works; therefore ideas primarily, in the abstract, must flow from the great fountain-head of all thought and intelligence, but as condensed, and made distinct in expression, in the formation of thought and intelligence, as understood by ourselves and by each other, they are set in operation and brought out through the workings of our human, individualized minds or souls.

Lotela, an Indian Maiden.

Wilson brave, Lotela going to talk a little bit. Lotela come to wish you all a Happy New Year; hope you 'll have a real good year all through the twelve moons, and when it closes up you 'll just say to yourselves it was the best year of your whole lives. That 's Lotela's speech; that 's about as long as Lotela ever makes.

Lotela then spoke for the following named spirits:

Reuben Hall.

There 's a brave here, quite a large man, who seems to be disturbed about some affairs of his people. He 's got a boy here in the earth-life he wants to help along. This son of his is concerned about some machinery—he works with machinery, and is with it a good deal. He has been using his brain until his father in the spirit-world is afraid he will injure himself, be sick or pass away, so he feels very anxious, and wants to try if he can get a few words to his family and friends, especially to his son. He says he is all right, and has pleasant companionships, and desires an opportunity of talking privately with the friends he left on earth, especially his family—for he has many things to say to them. He says he do n't know that they will accept this. He thought it would do no harm to send them his greeting and affectionate regards, and to tell them that he still maintains an interest in and is anxious to have a talk with them, if they can find a way for him to do so. His name is Reuben Hall. He has people in Buffalo, N. Y. There is some one very near to him—I should n't wonder if it was his son—in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Charles Page.

I see the spirit of a younger man, who was somewhere between thirty and thirty-eight years of age when he was here. He gives the name of Charles Page. He claims to have people in Cambridge, and sends his love to them. He 's got something now, I see, on his face; it looks like a red mark, as though he sometime had been hurt there. He wants to say that it has disappeared; he has n't it in the spirit-world, because some one very close to him always felt bad because he had that mark, more than he did himself—he had got used to it and did n't care. He comes to say they need n't think of it any more. This one would like to have a talk with his people. He never has talked through a medium, and he says he has been experimenting with them, and thinks he has got enough used to them to give a communication privately, if he can only get his people where there is one. He feels so much better to think he can send his love to them, anyway.

Lizzie Marsh.

Lotela want to tell you about a little pappoose that is real anxious to come back. She says she 's got an aunt, and calls her Aunt Maria Belton, in Springfield. The little one's name is Lizzie Marsh. She comes back with what looks like a basket; it seems to be of bright paper, made on wire and of different colors. The basket is full of flowers. She says she brings it to her auntie, who made her a basket like that one time, and filled it with sweet things; now she comes back with it filled with sweet, bright flowers for her as a Christmas offering. She sends love, and says she has found her own mamma in the spirit-world and lives with her, and a great many others who are very kind to her.

Henry Rogers.

A brave is here who knows somebody in this room. He gives the name of Henry Rogers. He has been gone out for several years. He is tall and has dark hair. He wants to send his greetings to his people, and to tell every one how glad he is that he has passed from the earth and its conditions. He did n't understand much about the other life, and found things strange to him in a good many ways. He says it took him some time to get used to them. Now he has got a good hold of things over there, he understands himself better than he ever did before. Somehow or other, many times on earth he did n't know what to make of himself, and he has been trying to learn since he went over, and has come to an understanding, better than he ever could seem to do while he was here.

Rosa Clark.

A young lady calls herself Rosa Clark. She says: "I have many times thought it would be a great privilege if I could speak once more to my friends on earth. I know they have sorrowed because I passed from the body so early in life, and I have sometimes felt that I could not bear to see them grieve over those whom they mourned as lost. I have come to my home, and placed my hand on my dear sister's head in moments when she has felt depressed, and I have been pleased to think she sensed my influence, although she did not understand its source, for it brought her peace and consolation. Still, this has been only a partial gratification, because I have longed to give the tangible touch, or to speak the conscious word that would be received and understood by all those I have loved. If you will please to take my message, and say it is filled with affection, with soul-sympathy, with good wishes, and all that can pass from one heart to those whom it loves, I will feel indeed that I am blessed. If ever the time comes when I can reach my friends in private, giving to them those tokens of my identity and expressions of esteem which I desire very much to do, I shall feel indeed that my cup is running over with joy; but if it does not come to me, I shall await the time with patience until my dear ones join me in the bright home that I have found."

This spirit was interested in music when she was here, and had what you would call a musical atmosphere around her. I get from her that she is in that atmosphere in the spirit-world, trying to develop her powers and to bring out that which she always felt was within, but which she could not give expression to as she wished when on earth.

Mary Franklin.

One comes now way from Chicago, who gives the name of Mary Franklin. She is very anxious to reach her children, because they seem to be bound up in—well, not exactly in material things, but partly in them and partly in church matters—and she can't get near to them at all. The spirit has been in the other world a good while. She says she did n't understand this return when she passed out, and it took her a long while to realize it was true.

She cannot blame her children for not accepting it, because they do n't see into it any clearer than she did herself; at the same time she is anxious they should learn of it, and realize something of the spirit-world before they are called to pass over to it.

She says her husband is with her, and he also sends greeting to family and friends, and wishes them to know he has outgrown his condition of suffering. It seems as though he had to bear a good deal, when he was here, for quite a long while. It is all passed away now, and he is trying to understand life in the spirit-world; it seems more beautiful to him than it ever did before. He did n't know anything about spirits coming back, either. It looks to Lotela as though he had something to do with the church people, and was expecting to find things very different from what he did when he went over the big waters. He has changed his mind now, and feels that everything is all right in this line; he wants his people to study it up and learn for themselves.

Lotela say, Good moon to you; hope you 'll all have a nice New Year.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 10th, 1888.

William Cushman.

My name is William Cushman, and my home was in Belfast, Me. Hattie and Sarah are here with me. I feel glad that I can control. I have tried to several times before but have failed.

As we have left our beautiful spirit homes and come into the earth-life, as it is commonly called, we feel that we have much we would like to say. Father and mother and all send greeting, but Hannah closes the door so tightly we can hardly look in or be heard. We thank the great God that in his own good time the scales will be dropped from her eyes and she will see more clearly. I have often felt on coming to earth that it is but a step from our homes beyond; only a thin veil separates us from you. When I lived on earth I heard it talked of that the spirit could return, but I gave it little thought. When I felt that the angel usher was coming for me I said to myself, if one returns, another will; if another does, William Cushman will. I found the spirit-life more beautiful than I can express to you mortals. To-day I am happy, hoping that some word will reach my loved ones in Belfast and in Portland, for I have many friends in each place. All have not crossed over, but many have.

I would say to each mortal: You may think many things in regard to spirit return, but be careful what is spoken. We hear, we see and we feel much more than we could while we dwelt in the mortal.

Hannah Brown.

My name is Hannah Brown, and I come from Portland, Me., where I still have some friends. I have tried many times to make myself known but have always made a failure of it. I have one friend in your city whom I stood by a little while ago, and I thought, oh! if I could only just let you know, Clara, that I am here, I should be much happier. The days we were together were very pleasant, and I am looking forward to the time when we shall again clasp hands in the beautiful and bright beyond, where no partings come.

I did not understand, while I was here enjoying life so much, that there was really such a change to come to me. Mother would say: "Hannah, why are you so giddy and light-hearted?" I felt it was my nature to be so; and I feel the same to-day. I would not be anybody else but Hannah Brown if I could.

I feel happy in my soul just to give my name and say a few words to my dear friend Clara: Dark days have come to you, but there will be many light ones; and these will be the brighter in the future because of the clouds that have come. I am often near you, for I can step into your home, see and hear what is going on, and walk around with you; and I feel that you must know we are not far away from you.

Eben Manson.

I have been trying for three or four years to make my voice heard in this meeting. I have felt that if I could only just make the children and mother (as I usually called her) know I have been here, and that my name will be placed in the paper, I shall be happy. I have seen them look for it many times, and then turn away and say: "I do n't understand why it is that this one and that one can communicate to their friends, but father never comes."

Mary has some of the power herself, but is cramped in the use of it. I would say to that dear daughter: Go on and do the angels' work. Having been given this power from birth, she has a great deal to give out to mortals—if not held back by another.

I would like to say a word to the Doctor. He doubts, because of some things wrong that were connected with materialization. It do n't alter the fact that materialization is true, Doctor, let me tell you. Just for one moment use the reason God has given you: sift it, throw out the chaff and hold on to the wheat.

Many times we talked over these matters, and he said to me: "If there is any truth in the spirit's returning to the earth, will you come and give me some test after you pass out?" I looked at him earnestly and said: "Doctor, I'll try to do it." "Well," he said, "what shall that test be?" I answered: "I will not tell you that, because mortals will say I read it out of your mind."

After a while there was an instrument I could speak through, and I gave him good proof, as I thought, and as he acknowledged. I was right beside him. I stretched my arm out and I said: "Doctor, there is n't room for one more puncture!"

He had filled my arm with morphine to deaden the pain. He was good as gold. At any time in the night when he felt I needed him he was ready to come.

I would like to say a few words to Augustus and Annie: Learn all you can, children. You won't learn any too much in earth-life, for as that life is a life of advancement, so ours in the spiritual world is one of progression and improvement.

There are many who will remember Eben Manson, and be glad to hear I have been able to get control of this medium. I was a ship-carpenter. I thank the Great Giver of all good and perfect gifts, that he in his wisdom knew how to make wise provision for the return of his children who can never die. My home was in Newburyport, Mass.

Helen Chapin.

I know my mamma and my papa will be glad to have me send them a letter. They live in Hyde Park, Mass. My name is Helen Chapin. I want them to know that Grandpa Chapin is here too, and Uncle Charlie.

I am all well now, mamma; nothing is the matter with me, and I am so happy with Uncle Kirk and Grandpa and Uncle Charlie! and it is so nice here; we have so many beautiful flowers and such sweet music! A pretty lady came and took me away. Oh! mamma, do n't cry for me. I am growing; I am larger now than I was when I left you. Sometimes you sit and think, and wonder if Auntie Gussie is with me. Yes, we are all together. We wonder how it is that Grandpa lasts so long. The angels will come for him sometime.

I have come often and stood by the side of Aunt Betsey, since she has been having trouble, and dear little sister Florence. I do come a good many times, and you feel I am there sometimes.

Charles Atkinson.

I feel a chill running over me, because I passed out through the water. I would like to send a few words to some loved ones of mine in different surroundings. I know how they felt when I passed away; they hardly knew how it would be with me; but I found as good a home as any millionaire could have. That do n't depend upon whether you place your name on the list in the churches or whether you have money; but it does depend upon the life you live here, for you are building your homes every day.

I would like to send greetings to Annie, also to the children—Mabel, Howard and Bertie. I wish them to remember that father is not dead; he has only passed out of the mortal into the immortal. It seems to me nothing more than changing one's coat. I've got a perfect one now; there are no rents in it. I feel, when I look at myself, to be in a perfect body, and pass around among them often; but how little they understand we are there.

I will say to Mabel, do let the angels come nearer and nearer to you, and then you will not be quite so restless as you have been. Mother says, "Mabel, why do n't you give way and let the spirits come?" and you answer, "Oh! I do n't know but what it is myself; I won't bother with them." Let me say to you, dear one, try, try to forget yourself, and let the spirits do the work. I know, dear child, that you have powers which were given you at birth, by the Great Father above, to be used by the angels for the good of the world. You have tried several different kinds of occupation, but without satisfactory results, and a good deal of the time it is because the spirits are often around you, trying to use your organism. If you will only give way and let them control you, then you will feel more satisfied, more quiet, and more at ease.

I would say to Benjamin that Harriet is with me—not all the time—we are separated and divided just as we used to be here. My name is Charles Atkinson, of Charles City, Ia.

Sarah Childs.

My home was in New Haven, Conn. I have friends in Hartford, and some in New York City, and also in Salem, Mass. I feel that if my letter goes out from this postoffice, perhaps they may see it accidentally. I know what they will say: I do n't believe Sarah can come back here. If so, she must be very unhappy to see how many troubles we have had since she went out. I want them to know that Sarah Childs has not been unhappy in spirit. She feels these troubles; when she comes to earth, she comes into sympathy with them. I am sorry that there are wrongs.

I did n't know, when I passed out, that I could come back and talk. I always felt that the loved ones were not far away from us, that the guardian spirits watched over us; I did n't understand that one could communicate through another. I often said: "If they can come back and report, why do n't they come direct to us, and not through a stranger?" I was trying to dictate to them. They understood their business, and I did n't. I know now they must have an instrument to use.

Irving Card.

I am Irving Card, of Mason City, Iowa. I thought, while dwelling in the mortal form, that this was all moonshine; that they went over into the graveyards and got names. I understand now that was my ignorance; I did n't know half as much as I thought I did.

To-day Jane is in pretty near the same pew that I was in. Martha is a little more liberal. I would like them to know I do come. They are in New York City. I would like them to know, also, that Irving Card is able to give his name without going to the graveyard or anywhere else. If Jane do n't wish to know anything while she 's on this side, let her look her doors and put the key in her pocket, but when she comes to our side she 's going to know, and she 'll be the first one that will want to come back and make herself known. I have tested it for myself, therefore I speak from experience.

Mary Noyes.

My name is Mary Noyes, from Scotland Hill, West Parish, Haverhill, Mass. I would like to say a few words, for the loved are waiting, looking over your paper from week to week to know if there will be something from me. I would like Charles to realize that I am around him, and Miranda and little Charlie and Gracie, too. I come often into the home. I feel sometimes as though they could sense me sitting in the old arm-chair—where I used to sit.

When the summons came to me so hastily I had no time to say good-bye. It was said that I went out of heart-disease. I find they know just as much about that as I did.

I want to say to Charles (father, as I used to call him) that I would like him to know I am so happy in my spirit-home. How many times we drift around him in the old accustomed places. Amy is with me sometimes, and I see Cyrus Porter, but not very often. We do n't come in contact as frequently as some others. Father and mother wish to be remembered to the loved ones. We all feel, in writing a letter, as if we might put in something for the rest of them.

I would like to have him know more about this, although he has tested a good deal. But he may say to me: "Mary, you need n't say anything to me. I firmly believe the spirit returns and has the power to come into communication with us." I thought I knew a great deal about it before I left, but I found I did n't know anything comparatively. I went out suddenly, and it did n't seem but a few moments before I knew I was back on the earth again, and I heard Charles, with the tears streaming down his cheeks, say: "Oh! Mary, I can't let you go." The angels called me to the other shore. I only went back of the veil, and that is all that separates me from him.

I want to tell Gracie to be careful and take care of herself, because she is not strong. And also to tell Miranda that I am satisfied with what she has done since she came into the home. I feel that she tries to make it pleasant for the children and for Charles.

Free Thought.

American Spiritualist Alliance.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

This organization has done a good work in the issue of the review—a very able and scathing review—of the Seybert Commission prepared by the able and critical pen of Henry Kiddle, whose knowledge of the subject far exceeds that of the Commission, and whose judgment and ability are certainly equal to theirs, and who had net salary and personal interest at stake in slighting and misrepresenting the subject as they had. Any disinterested person who reads their Report could not fail to see the unfair and cavalier way in which they treated the subject, plainly showing that they had some motive in misrepresenting its facts and importance to the public. The Report was not as candid nor as well gotten up as the one of the once celebrated (in the same manner) Report of the Buffalo doctors, who proved conclusively, to their own satisfaction, that the rappings were produced by the snapping of toe-joints and knee-joints. That silly nonsense, which fell stillborn into the public hands, relegated its authors to oblivion, and in time this one will do the same for its authors, while the spirit-intercourse will go on as it has since the rappings commenced. Such reports do as much toward stopping it as a bucket of water thrown at the sun would in stopping it from shining—but it might fall back on the silly wiseacre who threw it, and that is all those arrogant and self-sufficient savants get from their effort to delude the public and defy the spirits.

Of another effort of The Alliance I do not feel so sure of success: In the effort to fit up a system to investigate scientifically the work of spirits in communicating and in manifesting themselves among us. To me this seems to be the work of spirits and not of us, as they are the objective force, and the phenomena to them subjective, and we the recipients. We hold the vessels and catch the falling drops of rain, hail or snow, or in as great variety the intelligence; and I think our duty is to catch and utilize all we can, leaving to them the work of presenting it as they can. I have never been able to fix any rules by which they should reach me, scientifically or otherwise, but I have traced hundreds of phenomena—largely mental—to them, that were not originated in this mental sphere where I live, and which bear no evidence of God or Devil but of finite intelligence; and I can fix no rules by which it shall come to be scientific or otherwise. I do not ask for perfection, nor even honesty or morality by any standard society has set up, in the instrument my spirit friends find that they can use to reach me, as I judge of the matter sent or presented by its own merits. I have chopped with a dull axe and sawed with a poor saw, but the wood made as good fire, and I could tell if it was good wood—but not by the axe or saw. Some of the best things that have come to us from spirits have come through persons who were dissipated, and in a normal condition were of themselves utterly unreliable and dishonest; and much silly and worthless trash has come through honest, and by our standard, moral persons. I have long since learned that it is not the moral or intellectual status that makes a medium through which our spirit friends can reach us. I would let them select their own committees and their subjects, and fix the scientific standard as they choose and give us what they can, and for one I am ready to take it and use what I can of it, and let the rest pass by as useless to me—as I do much of what I call theological nonsense or visionary speculation. WARREN CHASE.

Worcester, Mass., Feb. 8th, 1888.

An Illinois editor writes: "Never judge by appearances. A shabby coat may contain an editor, while a man wearing a high-toned plug hat and sporting a dude cane may be a delinquent subscriber."

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Cleveland, O., Saturday, Feb. 4th, 1:30 A.M., of cancer, Mrs. Dehila Archer, aged 68 years and 3 months.

Mrs. A. first became aware of the approach of the fell disease that finally carried her off about five years ago, and suffered more or less during all that time, the pain gradually intensifying as she approached the change called death. The sufferer patiently and calmly awaited her transition, bearing up heroically to the last, retaining her consciousness until a few hours before passing away. She was buoyed up by her consciousness of the truth of the Spiritual Philosophy, she having been an ardent Spiritualist for many years. She was a good friend to mediums and the cause, outspoken at all times, possessing a strong will and a kind heart. She leaves a husband and son, who sadly mourn her departure, and a host of friends, who will miss her from the home circle and the Spiritual Meetings. The funeral services took place Feb. 6th from her late residence, 40 Scoville Avenue, and were conducted by Mr. Thos. Lees. The Lyceum choir, assisted by Mrs. Lizzie Emerson, greatly enhanced the spirituality of the service by their fine singing. The pall-bearers (all old friends) were Messrs. Samuel Curtis, Samuel Russell, Jno. Madden, Wm. Bread, N. J. Benedict and Chas. W. Palmer. The remains were interred in the family lot in Woodland Cemetery. A FRIEND.

From Cleveland, O., Sunday, Feb. 5th, 1888, of pneumonia, Mrs. M. J. Pendleton, aged 60 years.

Sister Pendleton was a stanch Spiritualist, though but little known to the friends in Cleveland, as she stood in her family almost alone in her belief—the exception being her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Libbie Pendleton, of Randall, O. To the credit of the bereaved family she has left, be it said, they faithfully carried out the wishes of the deceased as to having fitting obsequies held. Mr. Thos. Lees being called to officiate, he gave a short but clear exposition of the philosophy of death from the spiritualistic standpoint. The address, novel to most all, was closely followed by those present. Her remains now rest in "the Elwell vault," in Erie-street Cemetery, subject to future disposition. A FRIEND.

From Spencer, Mass., Feb. 4th, Sylvester Luther, at the age of nearly 77 years.

Mr. Luther was honorable in all his dealings with his fellow-man; was respected by his townsmen, and was an indulgent husband and kind father. He was afflicted with shaking palsy for several years, but his exit terminated with a complication of diseases. He has been a Spiritualist for thirty years, and was a constant subscriber to the BANNER OF LIGHT. He leaves a devoted widow (who was his companion in married life for fifty years) and one son. They will not mourn him as lost, for he has gone to a better sphere of existence, where sickness is not known. He saw his twin sister on several occasions before he passed on, and when those with him who embraced the Sectarian faith heard him express himself concerning his spiritual sight, they could not doubt his statements. He and the sister conversed together about his exchange of spheres the same as two persons would in earth-life, and the result proved what he told his wife at the time of the conversation. He was anxious to go home, knowing that he was past cure, and was a great source of care. The funeral services were held in the Universalist Church, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Bartholomew, officiating, a large number of friends and neighbors attending. COM.

From the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Hill, Monroe street, Springfield, Ill., Jan. 12th, Charles Edmands, in his 80th year.

Mr. E. was a native of Charlestown, Mass., but resided in Illinois over forty-five years. He was a good, true, noble and pure man; was not an avowed Spiritualist, yet had received many sweet, cheering messages from one of his daughters, Mrs. Katie F., who preceded him to the Summer-Land, and in whose society he has now been for over a month. COM.

From his home on North Clark street, Chicago, Ill., Feb. 2d, 1888, Dr. W. B. Farnum, aged 73 years.

He was for upward of twenty-three years a dentist, with a lucrative practice in that city. His presence was familiar to the writer at lectures and circles for many years. He was an earnest, devoted Spiritualist, as well as a genial, companionable citizen, devoted husband and honorable, temperate man. VERITAS.

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to overestimate the value of warm feet at this season of the year. THOUSANDS OF VALUABLE LIVES are sacrificed every year in consequence of DAMP, COLD FEET. Cold feet lay the foundation for PULMONARY DISEASES, so fatal to the people of our land. Could we make the world know how valuable OUR MAGNETIC FOOT BATTERIES are for keeping up a WARM GENIAL GLOW THROUGH THE FEET AND LIMBS, none would be without them. These INSOLES WARM THE WHOLE BODY, keep the VITAL FORCES UP, magnetize the iron in the blood, and cause a FEELING OF WARMTH AND COMFORT over the whole body. If no other result was produced than to insulate the body from the wet, cold earth, the INSOLES WOULD BE INVALUABLE. In many cases the INSOLES ALONE will cure RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA and SWELLING OF THE LIMBS. $1 a pair or three pairs for $2 to any address by mail. Send stamps or currency in letter, stating size of boot or shoe, and we will send free by mail TO ANY PART OF THE WORLD, Send for our book, "A PLAIN ROAD TO HEALTH." Free to any address.

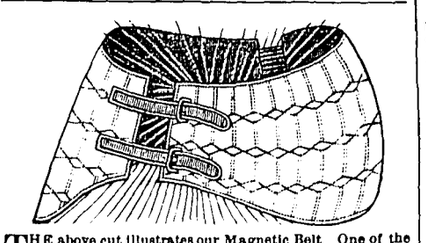
DR. A. H. RICHARDSON, Magnetic Healer, Waverly House, Charlestown. S10



THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.
SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.
DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.
The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.
PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.
NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

ELEVENTH EDITION.
THE VOICES.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.
THE VOICE OF NATURE represents God in the light of Reason and Philosophy—in His unchangeable and glorious attributes.
THE VOICE OF A PEBBLE delineates the individuality of Matter and Mind, fraternal Charity and Love.
THE VOICE OF SUPERSTITION takes the creeds at their word, and proves by numerous passages from the Bible that the God of Moses has been defeated by Satan, from the Garden of Eden to Mount Calvary!
THE VOICE OF PRAYER enforces the idea that our prayers must accord with immutable laws, else we pray for effects, independent of cause.
Eleventh edition, with a new stippled steel-plate engraving of the author from a recent photograph. Printed in large, clear type, on beautiful tinted paper, bound in beveled boards.
Price $1.00; postage 10 cents.
☞ Persons purchasing a copy of "THE VOICES" will receive, free, a copy of Mr. Barlow's new pamphlet entitled "ORTHODOX HASH, WITH CHANGE OF DIET," if they so order.

ZÖLLNER.
AN OPEN LETTER
TO
PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,
Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.
BY C. C. MASSEY,
Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.
Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, Feb. 19th, the morning exercises were opened with a vocal duet, "Over There," by Mr. and Mrs. Lillie. Miss Mintie Eakins, accompanist. After an invocation and another song Mrs. Lillie spoke in reply to the question: "When a person, from old age or disease, has lost his mind, what is the condition of the spirit?" Man, said the controlling intelligence, never loses his mind; it may lose control of his body, for the body is the instrument upon and through which the soul operates. Sometimes the two may not blend harmoniously. When in such cases the spirit loses hold of the body, it rises into lofty heights and gathers in recollections of the past, never losing its identity. The next question considered was in reference to family relations in spirit-life, and whether there, as here, mistaken unions occur, the speaker remarking that one of the greatest causes of criminality on earth to-day is the inharmony of homes; when man has attained to true manhood he will not trifle at the altar of life. When true knowledge comes through growth, then mistakes will not take place. No soul is a unit; dual forces are seen in the animal and vegetable kingdoms; the laws of attraction call together affiliating powers. If judgment was perfect and reason enthroned, mistakes would never occur, and these prevail in spirit-life, where masks are thrown off and we know as we are known.

The next question had reference to the probable result of the present agitation of thought in the Roman Church, and was answered in an able manner and evidently to the satisfaction of a very attentive auditory. After congregational singing Mrs. Lillie improvised a poem.

Evening.—The preliminary exercises consisted of a vocal selection by Dr. C. T. Buffum; recitation by Miss Lucette Webster, and a harmonica solo by Prof. Wallach. Several questions from the audience were ably considered by Mrs. Lillie's guides, to the manifest satisfaction of the large and appreciative audience. Mr. Lillie then closed the service with a song, and it was announced that she would occupy the platform for the last time until the first of April, next Sunday, morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of Feb. 14th the members and friends of this Society held a social meeting at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. After a half hour's pleasant converse a literary and musical entertainment followed, Richard Holmes presiding. Miss E. F. Burnett opened the exercises with a piano solo. Following, the general exercises consisted of remarks by Jacob Edson, Capt. Holmes, Dr. J. L. Paxson, Dr. H. J. Sweney, Dr. J. D. Moore. Musical selection by Miss Maudle G. Banks. Song by Mrs. Hattie C. Mason, who also, under control of "Sunshine," made a pleasing address and gave personal tests, closing with an original poem. Song by Dr. H. J. Sweney. Miss Lucy Barnicoat (inspirational) made an address which was listened to with much interest. After singing by all present the audience dispersed.

The next social meeting will be held Feb. 28th. A cordial invitation is extended to all Spiritualists and friends of the cause to be present.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday the guides of Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester again spoke at the Temple, prefacing their remarks with the beautiful quotation from the Psalms: "Lift up your heads, oh! ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in." She spoke of the duality of all nature, of the eminence of God in all his works, and the duty of man to seek for him and find him; remarking that his laws are writ throughout the vast temple of creation, which is his abiding place, and in him is perfect sweetness, loveliness and peace: That of old one from his prison cell had said the word of God cannot be bound. All books might contain some portion of truth, but nature being his handiwork is its interpreter.

Next Sunday, Dr. D. E. Caswell's guides will speak upon "The Dangers Threatening Modern Spiritualism," at 2:45 P. M. There will also be the usual sociable at 7:30 P. M. on Wednesday evening. These occasions have been of considerable interest of late. Many tests have been given, and the discussions have elicited marked attention. All are cordially invited.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall.—A large number of people—both children and adults—attended the last session of the Lyceum, every seat being occupied. Our orchestra, led by Prof. Milligan, rendered exquisite music for the occasion; readings and recitations were given by Allie Cummings, Amelia Geishavener, Lillian Rich, Jennie Porcelain, Mark Abrams; a fine musical programme was rendered by Jessie Judkins, Annie Price, Grace Scales, Florence Lichenstein, Master Bertie Newton. Every part of the exercises reflected great credit upon those who participated. The session was a progressive, harmonious one throughout. Come and enjoy our gatherings with us.

F. B. W.

A Grand Reception was tendered, Sunday, Feb. 12th, to Benjamin P. Weaver and wife, by the Adonis Club, at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. The platform was occupied by some twenty-five members of the Club, who are also connected with the Children's Lyceum. The Adonis Orchestra, of seven pieces, discoursed exquisite music under the direction of Mr. Louis Poole. The large audience, which completely filled the hall, was very enthusiastic over the music rendered. The literary part of the programme consisted of readings by Miss Emma Ware, Miss Nettie Morris, Miss Rosa Wilbur, Miss Hattie Dodge; vocal music by Mr. Emery Mathews and Miss Annie Setchell; a fine piano solo was rendered by Miss May Waters; Mr. Charles Fearing made a fine speech appropriate to the occasion, as did also Mrs. Ida Whitlock and Dr. A. H. Richardson; F. B. Woodbury was used by his spirit guide for the first time before the public, to the general edification of all present. Mr. Woodbury also, in behalf of the members of the Club, presented to Mr. and Mrs. Weaver a beautiful French clock, value $45. Mr. Weaver was taken completely by surprise, but made an excellent speech of thanks.

The affair was a great success throughout, and the gentlemanly young orator of the Club deserves especial praise for his management of all the arrangements.

REPORTER.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association—Ladies' Aid Parlor, 1031 Washington Street.—Our hall was filled at both sessions last Sunday, Mrs. E. Clark Kimball of Lawrence conducting the services. She gave a brief lecture before the test-séances, afternoon and evening. Nearly one hundred spirits gave their names at the afternoon séance, many being recognized; while a large number reported through her organism in the evening.

Mrs. Kimball has made many warm friends among our people, and she will always receive a cordial welcome whenever she can be secured by our committee. Coming before our society, a stranger only a few weeks ago, she may well feel proud of the large audience of Sunday last.

Prof. W. Milligan and Mrs. Nickerson were appreciated in their musical contributions to the exercises; Mrs. Nellie M. Day, accompanied by Mr. Adolf Lowinsky, violinist (a talented graduate from the Leipsic Conservatory, Germany), made conditions at the evening meeting most harmonious by rendering some choice spiritual melodies.

Dr. Smith, of "Queen City Park" fame, made a brief speech, closing the evening exercises.

A beautiful floral offering ornamented our desk, the gift of Mrs. Ida Whitlock to Mrs. Kimball.

Next Sunday we expect large audiences to listen to Dr. H. B. Storer and Mr. Joseph D. Stiles, who will occupy our platform.

One hundred and ten people attended our Thursday evening circle last week. F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society.—The Friday evening meeting of this Society was largely attended, and one of great interest. Entertaining and instructive remarks were made by Dr. A. H. Richardson, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles and Dr. E. H. Mathews. Miss Bailey and Miss Wakefield sang several duets. Mrs. Whittemore sang under spirit control, the beautiful manifestation giving much pleasure to all who listened.

IN THE WEST.

Topeka, Kan.—The earnestly looked for BANNER OF LIGHT reached our good Methodist sister, Mrs. S. Dunbar, with back number, and is a welcome visitor. The cause of Spiritualism has been given a new impetus of late in our city under the efficient management of Rev. Mr. Woodburn, who, about one year ago, was a Methodist minister at South Cedar, Jackson County, Kan. Mr. W. is highly inspirational, whether he knows it or not, as the tone of his voice carries with it the living inspiration of his soul, and his lectures are replete with spirituality.

Mr. W. found several of his contemporaries connected with the First Spiritualist Society in Topeka. Mr. Markeley, the President, one of Samuel Watson's converts, a Methodist class-leader for nearly thirty-five years, stated publicly last Sabbath that he had learned more truth during the last four years than he had acquired during the whole thirty-five years he was a Methodist. Mr. Norton, a real estate dealer, stated he had been a Methodist nearly fifty years, and had so conducted himself that not a charge was brought against him. A few years ago his son passed from this life, and notwithstanding his (the father's) long and faithful experience in the Methodist Church, blind faith, vain hope and uncertain belief did not satisfy his anxious and almost broken heart. So he and his bereaved wife journeyed to Terre Haute, Ind., and Memphis, Mo., to investigate Spiritualism through materialization, and returned home with their wounds all healed, as they had seen, recognized and talked with their dear son.

Among other old-time Methodists are Mr. Clemonson, Mr. Nones, good old Father Stone, seventy-five years old, all of whom have added to their faith knowledge through Spiritualism.

We have several materializing mediums in process of development in Topeka, prominent among them being W. W. Aber. It was through him that the Rev. Mr. Woodburn became convinced of the truth.

DR. T. J. GILE.

Chicago, Ill.—On Feb. 5th the Children's Lyceum met, with eighty in attendance. After the usual exercises the recitations were given by Mamie Phelps, Grace Garner, Edna Halle, Lettie Bryan, Ethel Garner, Victoria Binnuwise, Edith Worger, Milton Openheimer, Mrs. Doaus, Alfred Worger, Ada Phelps, Willie Pinkham, Joshua Openheimer, Willie Habricter, Joseph Smythe, Sidney Openheimer and Stella Openheimer. The Lyceum Journal, edited by W. B. Sinn, was read by Evan Morton.—Feb. 12th there were sixty-three in attendance, and recitations were given by Lettie Bryan, Lucinda Walker, Luella Crawford and Eldora Parsons, [and the other members above mentioned.]

C. A. PARSONS, Sec'y.

Worcester, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

J. Frank Baxter continued his highly interesting and attractive course of lectures on Sunday last, 19th inst., in Continental Hall, to very large and appreciative audiences—a crowded house being the order of the evening.

A very suggestive lecture was given in the afternoon to Spiritualists and Free Thinkers. Several debaters and marked controversialists were present and several members of the Liberal Union were noted. The attention, applause and favorable comments from all sides well attested to the merits of Mr. Baxter's efforts. His subject was "The Ethics of Virtue."

The evening lecture was, as usual, confined to a consideration of Spiritualism, a subject in which all are interested. By the way, is it not true, as Mr. Baxter said in opening, that "Spiritualism is the only 'ism,' the only religion, if you please, that is not sought for its doctrine"? Do not the comparatively large audiences of the evening attest this, and especially the larger audiences still that eagerly congregate whenever it is announced that any exercise of mediumship will be presented? Every one knows that "facts outweigh all reasoning and argument."

And last Sunday evening, the "facts" were numerous in the line of descriptions given through Mr. Baxter's instrumentality, and many of the spirit-delineations not far short of the wonderful. The evening lecture closed at 8:45 o'clock, and from then till 9:45, Mr. Baxter gave an impressive exercise in mediumistic clairvoyance and clairaudience.

On Friday evening, Feb. 24th, Mr. Baxter, with the Association's fine quartette and pianist, tender a benefit concert, to aid the exchequer of the Society. Tickets and programmes are now out, and judging from present indications a grand attendance seems assured.

AUDITOR.

Revere, Mass.—The spiritual meetings that have opened at this place are mainly carried on through the energy and indefatigable interest of L. L. Bullard, assisted by that earnest advocate of free thought, the ex clergyman L. K. Washburn. Ex-Mayor Stone, of Charlestown, also shows an active interest in these Sunday evening meetings held in the Town Hall of Revere, and is seen in the audience at each service.

On Sunday evening, Feb. 5th, Mrs. N. J. Willis, of Cambridge, opened the series at this place with an able lecture, followed, on the evening of Feb. 12th, by Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, whose instructive discourse held the attention of his audience to the end.

Sunday evening, Feb. 19th, a party of Spiritualists from Boston, including Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hatch, sr., F. A. Rand and wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hatch, jr., Prof. C. P. Longley and Miss M. T. Shelhamer, visited the Revere meeting, the latter mentioned lady having been engaged to conduct the services on that occasion. The discourse delivered by the guides of Miss Shelhamer consisted of a practical talk upon "Spiritualism—its aims and purposes," and was closely followed by the quiet and deeply attentive assembly.

The service on this occasion was enriched by the musical selections rendered in a highly satisfactory manner by Prof. Longley—assisted by Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hatch, jr.—each number of which was the work of that talented composer.

It is to be hoped that these meetings will be continued, and that the Spiritualists and liberalists of Revere and vicinity will afford the gentlemen engaged in conducting them such substantial assistance as is required and deserved.

Trenton, N. J.—Milton Baker writes: "We are having very fine meetings of the Association at present. For two months past our hall in Taylor Opera House has been crowded; at present, under the administration of Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham, of Boston, we cannot seat all who come to hear her lectures and to receive her tests. Mrs. Burnham has been here three times before, and has always left a beautiful influence in favor of Spiritualism when she has gone out from among us. No one who hears her ever finds a word of fault, but all unite in saying: 'If that is Spiritualism I like it.' Mrs. B. is with us all this month, and we shall be sorry to part with her when the time comes to leave. The leaven of liberal thought is doing its work in Trenton, as well as elsewhere."

Bridgeport, Ct.—The Morning News records that the Spiritualist Society had a pleasant time at its hall on the evening of Feb. 13th: "After a good supper, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant devoted an hour or two to psychometric readings.... So far as could be seen they were very correct in all essential details. Two or three tests were unmistakably fine. Three Indian arrow heads wrapped in a paper were described correctly, and the statement made that they were found in different localities. The localities were then accurately described. A piece of bone in another package was also described correctly. This is a sample of several readings that were wonderfully close to the facts."

Haverhill, Mass.—Music Hall.—The First Spiritualist Society of this city met at 2 P. M. in Music Hall, Sunday, the 19th instant, to listen to that wonderful test medium, Mr. Joseph D. Stiles, but from some unexplained cause he did not put in an appearance. Consequently, they were sadly disappointed, many coming from the suburban towns to hear him. A season of social intercourse was held, after which President Sturgis announced that Mrs. Hattie C. Mason of Boston would occupy our platform next Sunday, the 26th, and the audience dispersed.

W. W. CURRIER.

Seabrook.—The Newburyport (Mass.) Herald states that Charles W. Hidden was to give an entertainment in magic at the Town Hall, under the auspices of John A. Logan Post, G. A. R., on the evening of Feb. 22d, and adds: "Mr. Hidden gave an entertainment a short time ago under the auspices of the Women's Relief Corps, and created an excellent impression."

A Rich Indian Agent.

Here is what a Washington correspondent of the New York World telegraphs to that paper under date of Feb. 11th. If true, it is a shocking comment upon the administration of our Indian affairs by the general government:

"In regard to the recent attempts at vindication on the part of Indian Agent McGillicuddy, Dr. T. A. Bland, Secretary of the National Indian Defense Association, says: 'A Black Hills correspondent of the Omaha Republican avers that ex-Indian Agent McGillicuddy owns and occupies one of the most elegant residences in Rapid City, Dak.; that he dispenses hospitality with a lavish hand; that he is a large stockholder in and Vice-President of the Black Hills National Bank, and in every way one of the most prominent magnates of the city. To those who know that nine years ago, when he was appointed agent at Pine Ridge, Dak., McGillicuddy was a very poor man, this statement is full of significance. His salary as agent was $2,200 a year. He served seven years. All he could honestly get out of his office was $15,400. Out of this he had to support himself and family.

'How did he get so rich? Chief Red Cloud and his people charged that he robbed them of at least half of their rations and annuities. McGillicuddy's immediate successor as agent, Capt. Bell, U. S. A., reported to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1886 that McGillicuddy had been drawing rations and annuities for two thousand and six hundred Indians more than there were at that agency. The Indian Office estimated this "steal," or whatever one chooses to call it, at $157,000 a year, and on this and other grounds the Indian Office suspended his accounts to very large sums. Second Comptroller of the Treasury Butler told me last fall that McGillicuddy was before the Treasury as a defaulter in a very large sum. I asked if it would reach a million, and he replied: "I don't think I ought to give you the exact figures, but the total is very large."

'A few weeks later the announcement was sent out to the press that McGillicuddy had been vindicated from the charges made by the Indians, by Inspectors Pollock and Pearsons, Capt. Bell, Dr. Bland and others, as his accounts had been pronounced correct by the Second Comptroller and the books balanced. I was ill at the time, but later I called upon Second Comptroller Butler and asked if he was willing to tell me how McGillicuddy had got his accounts with the Government adjusted. He did not seem disposed to make any statement. I then asked how he explained the charge made by Capt. Bell that he had been drawing rations, etc., for two thousand and six hundred Indians who had no existence except on his rolls.

'Mr. Butler rang a bell and Chief Clerk Terrell appeared. "Mr. Terrell, Dr. Bland asks for an explanation," said Mr. Butler, stating the point. Mr. Terrell seemed quite embarrassed, but recovering his composure, said: "That is a property account, and as such went to the Second Auditor." "Then this office had nothing to do with it, but simply to accept the statement of the Auditor?" said I. "Yes, it was a question for the Auditor to decide." I did not ask further questions, but I think Terrell suspected that he had failed to deceive me; that I know, as he does, that while it is the duty of the Second Auditor of the Treasury to audit all accounts of Indian agents, yet the Second Comptroller has full power to review and to suspend any item he finds not satisfactorily explained.

'I desire to say on behalf of Comptroller Butler that I am convinced that he knows very little about the case. Terrell is the real Comptroller, so far as Indian matters are concerned, and during the ten years I have been interested in Indian affairs I have not known of a case where a dishonest agent has had much trouble in getting his accounts settled, nor an honest agent who failed to find in Terrell an unrelenting foe.'"

Letter from Alexander Wilder.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Glancing over your paper on the afternoon of Feb. 10th, I noticed a "message" from CORNELIA C. CRANDAL, of Deansville, Oneida County, N. Y. I remember her very well. She was married to William L. Crandal, at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, in the winter of 1854. Mr. Crandal (one l) was a character in his way. He lived many years at Syracuse, N. Y., and was somewhat noted for advocacy of free schools, and advanced Anti-Slavery sentiments. On the occasion of the arrest of "Jerry" under the Fugitive Slave Act, Oct. 1st, 1851, Mr. Crandal hastened to the First Presbyterian Church and rang the alarm bell. The County Fair was then holding, and there was a State Convention of the Liberty Party then in session. Both places were deserted, and for the residue of the day the office of the Federal Commissioner, Joseph Sabine, was besieged. The leading Abolitionists, Rev. Samuel J. May, Gerrit Smith and others, countenanced submission; but T. G. White, Crandal and others took advantage of the night to release the man and send him to Canada.

Mr. Crandal removed to Albany in 1853. There he prepared a report to the Legislature on Three Hours' School a Day, etc. His marriage took place the ensuing season. He was then in a low state of health. I prescribed for him several times. The ensuing winter he was prostrated by pneumonia, and I watched with him five weeks, being his principal acquaintance. Mrs. C. was with him the latter part of the time. I had lost sight of her; she returned to Waterville, and lived one or two years in Iowa. I knew no more about her, till I saw the mention in THE BANNER. She was a gentle, painstaking, affectionate woman. Her sister-in-law told me, I remember, in 1856, that she had conversations with her husband, who called many matters to her attention.

There is a smallpox epidemic in New York and Brooklyn now. The vaccinators are abroad, and the usual pains taken to create alarm. In this connection I would mention that the late Dr. L. H. Borden once declared that epidemics of smallpox and Asiatic cholera frequently succeed each other. This may be worth noting now; one is superficial, the other intestinal.

Yours truly,
A. WILDER.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overflowith with boundless mercies, for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

GENESIS; The Miracles and Predictions according to Spiritism. By ALLAN KARDEC, author of "The Spirits' Book," "Book on Mediums," and "Heaven and Hell." Translated by the Spirit-Guides of W. J. Colville.

The object of this book is the study of three subjects—Genesis, Miracles and Prophecies—and the work presents the highest teachings thereon received during a period of several years by its eminent author through the mediumship of a large number of the very best French and other mediums.

The books of Allan Kardec upon Spiritualism attained an immense circulation throughout France, and were received with great favor by all classes. In this work, here for the first time presented in English, it is conceded by every one he has far surpassed all his previous efforts, and effectually cleared up the mystery which has long enshrouded the history of the progress of the human spirit. The ground taken throughout is consistent, logical and sublime; the ideas of Deity, human free agency, instinct, spirit-communion and many other equally profound and perplexing subjects incomparably grand. The iconoclasm of Kardec is reverential; his radicalism constructive, and his idea of the divine plan of nature a perfect reconciliation of scientific with religious truth; while his explanation of miracles and prophecy in harmony with the immutable laws of nature, carries with it the unmistakable impress of an unusually exalted inspiration.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

ON,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton: Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Prescriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

Spiritual Phenomena.

INSTANTANEOUS WRITING, ETC.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mr. C. E. Watkins, who is located at 109 Falmouth street, in this city, is, beyond question, a marvel among slate-writing mediums. His mediumship not only includes the wonderful phenomenon of independent slate-writing, but also comprises instantaneous writing between closed slates, clairaudience, the appearance of initials and names raised upon the arms, and in some cases materialization of spirit hands and faces.

Mr. Watkins has the honor of being the medium who first interested Hon. A. B. Richmond in the spiritual phenomena, and gave him such proof of their genuineness that he was led to write his able and searching Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report.

Prof. Esty—Professor of Mathematics at Amherst—had a séance with Mr. Watkins, and testified to the genuineness of the phenomena, and said that if the spiritual theory would not account for them, nothing would. He told President Beals, of Lake Pleasant, that after sitting with Mr. Watkins he considered the Report of the Seybert Commission, in regard to slate-writing mediums, misleading in every particular; and he gave him a card, unasked, certifying to the genuineness of the phenomena which he had witnessed.

It was my privilege to have a very satisfactory séance with Mr. Watkins not long since. After placing several slips of paper before me he left the room and I wrote a question on each, addressed to spirit-friends, and folded the slips, as previously instructed by him, in a way to completely hide the writing. Without entering into details—as the questions and answers were of a personal nature—I will merely say that every name, with one exception, was both uttered and written by the medium in full: the initials of that name and the given or Christian name only being given; and every question but one (and that one of a general nature) was plainly and fully answered.

Some of the messages were received clairaudiently by Mr. Watkins, and were given to me either orally, or in writing by his own hand; others were written on the inner surfaces of slates held together in my hands and his in the bright light of the gas. Two of these messages were written at the same time. Two slates were held together in his left and my right hand, and two others were held together in his right and my left hand, a bit of slate pencil between each two; and two messages, which are still in my possession, were written on the inner surface of one of the slates in each hand—proving the existence of two unseen, controlling intelligences—and he and I busily talking all the while.

But the most wonderful phenomenon of the evening was that of instantaneous writing on the inner surfaces of closed slates.

Opening two slates which were joined by hinges, Mr. Watkins laid his hands upon their inner surfaces, magnetizing them for a few minutes, then closing them, asked me to hand him a piece of wrapping paper near me, which he put loosely around them. He then requested me to lay my hand beside his on the paper; a momentary shiver on his part, and he threw open the slates, the inner surfaces of which were covered with the following words:

"This is the new phase of psychography. I believe we can write in this way in time in the light. I shall try and see what can be done. We make our pencils. I sometimes think I can write through this medium without pencil, in broad daylight on the side of houses. I am going to try some day. WM. DENTON."

The slates were entirely blank and clean when they were closed; no bit of pencil was placed between them; and in less than six seconds after our hands were laid upon them the slates were filled with writing. Prof. Denton says that the material for the writing is drawn from the slates; and he believes that in time he will be able to produce this instantaneous writing, not only in the darkness of the inner surfaces of slates placed together, but on the walls of the room, even like that which surprised and astounded the revellers at Belshazzar's feast.

I earnestly advise all who are investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism, especially those who believe them to be produced by fraud or legerdemain, to visit Mr. Watkins at his residence in this city, and scrutinize him as closely as they please. They will find him a frank, genial gentleman, who will give them every opportunity for investigation; and they will see upon his table a copy of the Report of the Seybert Commission, which he allows skeptics to read carefully, that they may be enlightened as to the process of producing these phenomena as claimed by that honorable body.

Boston, Mass. GRACE LELAND.

"TEST CONDITIONS."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

There seems to prevail among some of the Spiritualists and undeveloped mediums a feeling that test conditions in mediumship are very detrimental to the growth and spread of Spiritualism; fortunately my experience has been otherwise, and I am confident that at least ninety per cent. of those who thoroughly believe in Spiritualism are of the same opinion as myself in that respect: while the ten per cent. are the knowing ones who are ever ready to accept anything in the way of phenomena—falling back on their long experience and great knowledge of spirit return, and always ready and zealous, while their eyes and senses are so blinded that they are ever ready to accept any message coming from mediums in all stages of development, without for once thinking that there could be any mistake about the genuineness of such manifestations

Now this may be all well enough from their standpoint—and I am not in the least doubting their honesty of purpose, but on the contrary rather admire their zeal and fidelity to the cause—but I am looking further ahead for good results, and it must be borne in mind that this particular class of Spiritualists are but a very small portion of the world's population; and if, for the purpose of calculation on a very liberal basis, we say that one in every thousand might be ready to accept these phenomena coming through any source or condition, what consolation can we expect the other nine hundred and ninety-nine are to receive when their convictions are entirely the reverse? It certainly cannot be expected, particularly in the phase of materialization and other physical phenomena, that if conditions surrounding the medium have a suspicious look, (that confederates might be easily substituted for genuine manifestations,) the witnesses thereof can leave the séance-room without a feeling that they may have been deceived, even while the manifestations may all be genuine. Now, with such a doubt upon the mind of the sitter, it takes a long time to convince, while if there had been test conditions, the result would have been different and always remained so—as first impressions are lasting.

I am a firm believer in the phenomena of Spiritualism, and have had much experience through investigation, and consider myself competent to judge whether manifestations are genuine or not—whether under test conditions or otherwise; and if a medium is honest, and a true medium, test conditions, in my opinion, will prove no detriment to perfect and genuine manifestations. A long and continued experience has taught me this, and I consider it the sheerest nonsense to talk or reason otherwise. I should discourage any medium sitting for the public until he (or she) is sufficiently developed to sit under conditions where there can be no suspicions of doubt as to the genuineness of the manifestations.

If this position be occupied, Spiritualism will take a broad stand that will command respect, and not before; if I were a medium sitting for the public, I should demand conditions that were above suspicion, if I did not get more than a single manifestation at a sitting, or one a week, and in this way command that respect which all genuine mediums are entitled to. Such a course on their part will carry conviction to every soul that comes in contact with them.

When I attend a meeting or séance, as a stranger, where there are several mediums, and those mediums unknown to me, and some one of them describes the spirit of my father, mother, wife, brother, sister, or a dear friend—describing the conditions under which they pass out, giving a loving message that I know is characteristic of them—I at once decide that the medium, whoever he (or she) may be, is well developed and a genuine one; but when a medium says to me that some other (prominent) spirit, ancient or modern, whom I never knew, is taking a manifest interest in my welfare, and condescends to come to me and is giving words of wisdom, comfort and advice, I think the medium is not "fully developed," and had better remain for a short time from before the public, and wait until his (or her) development will reach a degree of perfection that can more fully reach the comprehension of the average investigator; by so doing there would be less cause for ridicule, and Spiritualism would receive more favor and support from an intelligent public. PATTERSON.

New York, February, 1888.

CONCURRENT TESTIMONY.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

If the alleged revelations of Spiritualism be considered objectively—that is to say, if we concentrate our attention exclusively on the primary teachings or doctrines obtained through mediums—we find a very remarkable agreement among the leading mediums regarding the great question of future retribution or rewards and punishments, the consensus being that there is no fixed day of judgment at some future time, but that the natural law of cause and effect is operative now and hereafter; and that every human being will reap what it sows, without confronting a Supreme Judge at all. The other great point, in which all the principal mediums agree, is their rejection of the dogma of exclusive salvation, as depending on the belief in the atonement or vicarious virtue of Christ.

The surprising fact of the agreement of mediums as to these central doctrines of Orthodox Christianity is the more striking when we consider that these very mediums have generally been brought up in the Christian religion. To the writer's knowledge, there is not one prominent medium who clings to the old dogma of the fall of man, to the saving power of the blood of Christ, and to the vexed question of eternal perdition or damnation.

That the views of Spiritualists regarding these problems are more scientific and analogous to the course of nature, is obvious to all candid minds unbiased by theological preconceptions. The present writer is simply an investigator, and as such he, of course, like others, studies the subject of modern materialism as a skeptic, or at least as an impartial student in view of the à priori difficulties involved. But it seems to him that a study of the subject à posteriori will disclose presumptions favorable to the claims of Spiritualism.

In conclusion, I might mention one more powerful à posteriori argument: The unanimous teaching of Spiritualists as to the condition or moral state of the departed is conformable to the great modern theory of evolution or gradual development as diametrically opposed to the Orthodox Christian dogma of salvation or damnation respectively, and which always raises for the Christian the Shaksperian question:

"To be, or not to be?"

SECULAR PRESS VIEW.

CHURCH WITHIN A CHURCH.

BY DUNCAN MCLEAN.

Only those who mingle much with mankind, and have the happy faculty of asking questions without giving offense, can form an idea of the wide-spread belief in Spiritualism. The legends of the Roman Catholic Church about angels are numerous, and the beautiful and consoling doctrine of guardian angels is one of its dogmas. In addition to this, its cathedrals and many of its other places of worship are more or less ornamented with angelic emblems. From these facts it will be readily inferred that those brought up in this church have no prejudices against angelic communications. The various Protestant sects, particularly the Universalists and Unitarians, have many Spiritualists among them. Even infidels and agnostics may be seen at spiritual séances. The effect of this belief is manifest at the meetings of professed Spiritualists, of those who have left the churches and have banded themselves together for the purpose of spreading their doctrines. Although the Swedenborgian system is based upon Spiritualism, pure and simple, yet those who profess this faith are least inclined to have intercourse with Spiritualists, because Swedenborg in his revelations has pointed out the danger of the living seeking intercourse with the souls of the departed. He asserted that all his revelations were received from the Lord alone, with whom he had intimate personal relations for twenty-eight years.

Notwithstanding this, Swedenborgians, as well as others, take an interest in Modern Spiritualism. Owing to the numerous exposures of disreputable mediums, ministers of all denominations have but little to say on this subject, though the Scriptures are full of it. Take for example, the creation of the world as described in the first chapter of Genesis. It must have been a revelation to Moses, for no man was then in existence to see it. The numerous cases of angelic interference in the affairs of this world seem to confirm the assumptions of Modern Spiritualism. Strike out of the Bible Spiritualism, and the rest would be utterly incoherent. This, such scholars as Hume and Renan have attempted, and have been laughed at by the Christian world. But whether Spiritualism be true, or a mixture of truth and error, it is extensively believed by people of all creeds, and no creed.

Those who have lost dear ones are anxious to hear from them, whether they are Roman Catholics or Protestants; others who feel anxious about the future, seek information how they can escape threatened danger, and still others, prompted more by curiosity than by anything else—all may be met at almost every public or private séance.

There are many persons in all stations of life who have had individual experiences, which they communicate to one another, and this also tends to spread the belief in Spiritualism. A lady recently published a little book of spiritual experiences, remarkable for its earnest piety and its accord with the statements of Scripture. Rev. James Freeman Clarke, who knows the author, in a few lines bears testimony to her exemplary life. She wrote this independently of all Modern Spiritualism, and yet it harmonizes with it, and has doubtless been extensively read. Many able men have also written on it, so that it is well known throughout Christendom. In addition to this, it is said that in every family of six persons, two are mediums, and in many families it is recognized and practiced. Most of the scientists and old church-members denounce it as a delusion and a snare, the effect of magnetism or the work of the devil; and although many of the books published on it are mere drivel, this does not retard its spread. Many of the would-be leaders have attempted to organize it into a coherent body, but have utterly failed, because the believers in the churches will not leave them. They regard it more in the light of a new revelation confirming the truth of Christianity than as a substitute for it. Without expressing an opinion on it one way or the other, I do not hesitate to state that it is extensively believed in all the churches, and is already a church within the church. Although it has been denounced and exposed again and again, and held up to ridicule, it keeps spreading far and near throughout the civilized world. —East Boston Argus-Advocate.

DEDICATED TO THE ADMIRERS OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—Speaking of the "horrible and sickening legal murder" recently committed in Oakland, Cal.—with the revolting details of which the people of the country have been already made familiar through the daily press—W. W. Judson, in The Olive Branch (Utica, N. Y.) for February, sums up the matter as follows:

"It was crude ignorance which caused a neighbor to herd his cattle on Sutton's land; and it was educated ignorance which caused Sutton to shoot his neighbor; and it was epidemic ignorance which caused a jury to convict when they knew that death was the penalty; that caused the judge to charge the jury as he did; that caused the Governor to refuse a commutation of sentence; that caused the Sheriff to hold an office which compromised his manhood by compelling him to destroy the life of a fellow-being! This public murder exhibition rather overtopped orthodox expectation, for the preärranged rope, either by God or his proxies, cut the victim's throat, and that congregation witnessed a veritable fountain filled with blood, set to the music of air from his lungs gurgling through his gore. When can we reform Christians so they will abolish at least that part of their barbarism which destroys human life?"

Man can make murder legal, but he cannot make it right. Man is responsible for the criminals that exist. His love of gold is so intense that he has not time to look after his weaker brother.

STRANGE: ISN'T IT?

Written Expressly for the Banner of Light

BY EBEN COBB.

PART I.

In the early part of a hot, sultry July day, I sat in my studio trying to give the last touches to a landscape upon which I had spent more than my usual amount of labor. I say "trying," for on this occasion, as had often happened before, I felt that all my inspiration—as we artists used to call it—had left me. If I essayed to direct my brush to madder-lake upon my pallet, it was sure to come in contact with ivory-black; and whether my last idea was to lighten up a fleecy cloud, or sober down a clump of bushes in the middle distance, I could not tell. I placed my ill-fated brush with its brothers in my left hand, drew out my handkerchief and wiped the big drops of perspiration from my brow; then I gave one Herculean stretch of resolution, which extended from the end of my toes to the crown of my head, saying to myself, with that assuring inner voice which one summons when he will rise superior to the enervating environments, I will do it! I held my pallet, with oil-cups attached, my maul-stick and a group of brushes, in my left hand. My left arm flew out; its hand relaxed, and pallet, oil-cups and brushes went flying across the floor. I write of what took place years ago: now I understand it: then it was to me an unsolved mystery.

"It is of no use to try now, the fit is upon me," I said aloud, as I gathered up the spilled paraphernalia of my craft; but what this fit was—for such I had accustomed myself to call the strange phenomenon—that came upon me as though some will-power outside of my own had ingratiated itself into my organism and usurped control, I could not tell. One thing that surprised me was, that at worst, even though, as in this case, the pallet went paint-side down upon the floor, and the oil was thrown out of the cups with dire effect, I felt no sense of irritation nor umbrage toward the "fit." A happy feeling of reckless relief came over me, as though in an instant I had been transformed into an entirely different ego, and, as a disinterested party, would smile at my own defeats. On this occasion I distinctly heard an articulation somewhere inside my sensorium say: "Don't overwork your brain!"

I had read of Socrates's demon, and I often wondered, in trying to unravel my mystery, if I had watching genii about me. I tried to broach the subject, in an indirect way, to such as I thought the most logical of my brother artists; but here another inexplicable phenomenon presented itself. At such times I seemed gifted with the power to divine their very thoughts; and, let them reply as they might, "softening of the brain," "insanity," "the mad-house," "poor fellow!" flowed out from their mind-force to my apprehension through their queerish glances and insincere expression of lips. I kept my "demon," or whatsoever else it might be, finally all to myself.

I gathered up my scattered utensils, turned my canvas to the wall, and donned my out-of-door suit. As the heated breath of the brick and stone came pouring in at my window I instinctively thought of the country, with its cooler shades, and more heart-refreshing scenes. Where should I go? A happy thought! Paul Hazleton had often importuned me to pay him a visit at his new out-of-town home. My friend Hazleton planned his house, and had it built under his own supervision, and I well knew he was anxious that I should see the result of his architectural genius.

I took my loaded revolver from its case, and placed it in my hip-pocket, having in view a little field-sport during my visit. I then strapped a satchel, containing my sketching kit, over my shoulder, and started for the dépôt.

In two hours I had reached my destination. Paul really had a beautiful place, both without and within. He had made a miniature palace of his building, and the hearty encomiums he received from me appeared to give both himself and wife great satisfaction, for it seemed a matter of contention between them which should contribute most toward my comfort and pleasure.

"Now what would suit your inclinations best?" questioned my kind host, after we had finished a sumptuous dinner.

I glanced out of the open bay-window upon the stretch of field and woodland without, and Paul surmised my desire at once. Mrs. Hazleton thoughtfully prepared a luncheon, which we placed in our satchels, and we started for our tramp.

"Which way do you propose to go?" asked the good wife, as we stepped from the veranda.

"I hardly have made up my mind," responded the husband.

"I have," I answered, taking the question to myself.

"Ah! then you have been out here before?" remarked Paul in a questioning tone.

"No, friend of mine; but do you see that hazy pile looming up over the trees yonder?"

"Yes, that is Hickory Mountain."

"Must be a splendid view from the top. How far is it from here?"

I was informed it was about five miles; and for that point we started. The village was soon behind us, and after a pleasant stroll over field and through thicket, resting occasionally in the shade of a friendly oak, we reached the coveted summit.

There was a slight difference between our two temperaments. My companion was the essence of good-heartedness, and perhaps would say yes too often for his own good; but as he repeated his willing "yes" to my enthusiastic exclamations, I was well aware that his more phlegmatic nature did not trouble itself to go into the details of my inspired utterances. So I could say but little to him about the heaven's blue arch above, and the broad expanse of misty gray stretching off in the far distance, leading the soul away beyond the vale, etc. I had to think that all to myself. He was devouring his lunch with a will that indicated a fast of at least eight-and-forty hours; and while he was feasting upon the solid things of the material world, I enjoyed a glorious banquet of the ideal.

We started on our return. After we had reached the foot of the mountain, in order to enhance the pleasure of the occasion, my friend proposed we should take a different route from that traveled in coming. The idea pleased me, and as I followed my guide, our conversation gradually came to a lull. The view from the mountain had awakened a train of thoughts in my own mind such as I could best enjoy to myself; and I well knew my silence would not offend my companion, as he already showed signs of lingual exhaustion. I walked along absorbed in the oblivion of my own fancy-picturing, when I was startled by a touch as of a hand gently placed upon my shoulder. I turned instantly—but no one was there!

"Another of those freaks of my imagination," I thought to myself; but imagination or not, it directed my attention to something that started my train of reflections in an entirely different channel from the one the phantom touch aroused me from.

"Gracious heavens!" I exclaimed, at the same time waking Paul from what seemed to be a walking sleep; "how far are we from home?"

My friend turned around with an inquiring look and answered: "A full three miles."

"Where is the nearest place we can get shelter?" I asked.

"Shelter from what? a black snake, or a ghost?" returned Paul, at the same time peering amid the bushes about us.

"Neither, my man; don't you see—

> All Nature seems in silent prayer;
> How still the leaf, how hushed the air;
> While yonder in the darkening west,
> Beyond yon mountain's looming crest,
> Onward the ——"

"Hold on," interrupted Paul, grasping me by the arm; "is anything really the matter?"

Here again was a puzzle to me. I had never heard those lines before; to me they were new; and how they came to run out from my tongue, as though they were a forgotten memory revived, was beyond my power of solving. It pained me that my unpoetic friend so abruptly broke them off.

I pointed back in the west to a large mass of dark clouds that were rolling up, showing their sharp silver crests against the clear sky.

"Sure enough! It is coming with a vengeance!" cried Paul; "but if we take a quick pace we shall have plenty of time to reach the old shed before the storm can overtake us. It is not more than half a mile from the knoll at our right."

A short season of hurried travel brought us to the desired refuge. It was a dilapidated structure, and looked as though it might have been contemporary with the abodes of the Pilgrim Fathers. The front was entirely open, and the boards upon its sides were fast yielding up to time all they ever contained of solidity. The old wrought-headed nails had nearly rusted in twain, and the heavy oak timbers, which formed its frame, were eaten into a perfect net-work by the hungry borers. The roof had the appearance of having been re-shingled sometime within the past century, and it was evident that even then it might afford some protection from a pelting rain.

"This is grand!" I said—more to myself than to my friend—as I stood and surveyed the antique wreck.

"Grand! What under heavens do you see grand about this old pile of rot?" he inquired, with a tone of surprise.

I made no answer. The storm seemed nigh upon us, and we both entered the ancient shed. My companion seated himself upon a pile of straw and lolled back restfully against the old boards. I drew up a feed-box to near the open front and seated myself for quiet meditation. Only one sound now broke upon the awful soul-hush that rested upon all of life about me; that sound was the deep, quiet breathing of Paul Hazelton; he was sound asleep.

Out of that—then to me unexplained—abyss of mystery that was continually impinging its occult spells upon my normal state, there now came the working of one that at times completely transformed me from myself into the life-experiences of individuals of an entirely di ferent personality from my own. When under the effect of this psychological entrancement, vague, concatenated events would marshal themselves before my seeming inner vision with such impressive realness that I could not at times but believe that they were the resurrected realities of the past. As I sat there in the solemn atmosphere of happy self-solitude, a feeling came upon me as though I were sinking out of myself and becoming a part of the old ruin around me.

I was yielding to the revelations of my dreamy visitation when I again felt a touch upon my shoulder, as though a hand had been gently placed there. I slowly raised my head, wondering if this would prove to be a phantom salute, or contact of real, tangible substance. To my surprise, instead of the expected unreality I saw a female of marvelous beauty standing before me. She could not have seen more than seventeen summers, or eighteen at the most; and a sweeter face I never looked upon. I had essayed, in times before, in my art-practice, to paint an angel; but since gazing upon that celestial being I have never tried my hand in that line of art again. Rich masses of dark brown hair were gathered with a bewitching carelessness about her faultless head and flowed gracefully upon her shoulders. The style of the quaint-figured dress she wore plainly showed a form of exquisite symmetry; and, as a creature of nature, entirely unadorned by art, she was perfection itself.

She gazed earnestly upon me with a pair of big blue eyes, that seemed to well up light from her very soul. But oh! what an agony there was in that look! an entreating, imploring supplication! What could it mean—this wonderful presentation of nature's handiwork, so full in every line of beauty, and yet so marked with woe? Those plump cheeks should have been rosy red; but they were ashy pale; and what could have stolen away the coral hue that should have tinted her matchless lips? I was bewildered. I at first thought it was the fear of the coming storm, that threatened at any moment to burst upon us, that caused her alarm; but I wondered how even the approaching tumult of nature could so appal one who appeared so much to nature born. I determined to give her assurance of safety, and was about to address her, but I hesitated. I was astray in my decision. Without speaking, she took me by the hand, and as one from heaven might look praying for the lost of earth, so looked the being who stood before me.

"Come," she said, at the same time drawing me from the shed: "I pray you come with me!"

That voice had more of music in it than I had ever heard in human utterance before. I never considered myself a brave man, but at such a bidding I felt that I would have gone to the world's end, and faced even death itself.

"Where? and for what purpose, my pretty one?" I asked in as gentle a tone as I could command.

She dropped my hand, and clasped her own upon her breast; and again those eyes poured out their flood of earnest imploration.

"Lead the way and I will follow," I said, in an assuring tone.

The first thing I did before starting was to feel for my pistol, that I might be sure of its right position in my hip-pocket. The next movement was to remove my satchel from over my shoulder, as it might prove an incumbrance to me in my mysterious expedition. I raised my arm to the strap, and was in the act of lifting it over my head, when my fair visitor extended her hands, and earnestly restrained me. I let it remain, for, as I read her movement, I thought it an indication that the presence of my satchel at my side would in no way interfere with the duty I had assumed.

My guide started on with a light, graceful step, and I accompanied, close by her side. After going a short distance she turned to the left, and crossing a little patch of cleared ground, we entered a path that led into a seemingly thick forest. The heavy branches entirely closed over our heads, forming a lofty arch above us. Here I was obliged to follow, as the path would not permit our walking side by side. We had not proceeded far in the wooded track when my ear caught the sound of running water but a short distance in advance of my fair guide. I saw her step over the small streamlet, and a few seconds brought me to what I judged to be a briskly flowing outlet of sparkling spring-water. It struck me as rather strange that in such an extreme drought as then prevailed this one spring should be so brisk in its play, while all others about were either entirely dry, or at best gave but a meagre dribble. I stopped a moment to ponder upon the problem, but I felt those blue orbs of mysterious magnetism upon me, and I hurried on to their owner.

How long we continued in that path I cannot determinedly say, for my thoughts were so intent upon the marvelous features of the occasion that I took but little note of time. We left the woods and stepped out upon a narrow lane that had the appearance of leading from some traveled main road. It was lined on one side by the forest we had just left, and upon the other by a large and evidently newly-cleared field, well planted with garden product and grain.

Again my guide took me to the left, and a few minutes' walk brought to my view a scene that struck me at the time as being remarkably peculiar in feature for the then present age. Not far before me, coming into full view upon my right, was a rudely built farmhouse, of such a type of architecture that, had it not been for the entire newness of the house, as well as outbuildings and accessories, I should have relegated to the time of Miles Standish and his associates. Just beyond the house my eyes were gladdened by the sight of a well-curb, with its long sweep poised above, from which hung the familiar bucket, plain in view above the top of the curb frame. There was no suggestion of the dear old "moss-covered bucket" about it, for curb, bucket, sweep and upright support, all bore the same impress of freshness of construction as did the other points of handiwork before me.

It was only for a moment that I could pause for my accustomed eye to take in the details of the unique picture. The clouds rolled in fierce, black masses overhead, while the whole heavens were enshrouded in an awe-inspiring pall of angry, surging billows. I have said that I never vaunted myself of bravery; but at this epoch of my adventure what little innate courage I possess was more sorely tried than ever before or since. I can only express it by saying that a palpable, objective horror seemed to force itself against me with such demoniacal power that every fibre of nerve within my frame trembled with abject fear. Paradoxical as may be the expression, it was appalling in its utter incoherence, and hideous in its ghastly realness. As often happens when the mind is paisied with frigid fear—so I reasoned at that time—I heard a harsh, threatening voice by my ear hiss out, "Go back, you fool!" I felt the palpable pressure of two great hands upon me, and I was actually forced back upon the lane. I know I was about to retreat from the scene in utter consternation. A very hell was around me, and she that had gained so much of my confidence as well as admiration, I suspected as a fiend in angel's garb, luring me to a pit of destruction.

I had turned with the fixed determination of hurrying back to my friend at the old shed, when that same magical hand grasped my arm. Language fails me now. There are experiences—I know that I have had them—that require the knowledge of some sphere beyond the mundane for their portrayal. I can only say that as I gazed upon that upturned face the very essence of heaven's assurance thrilled me to my heart's core. Within my soul I swore an oath of resolute determination to go on, let the end be what it might. I made one mighty effort to regain my demoralized will. I returned my steps, and as I started defiantly forward I felt that the assailing horror that had so overwhelmed me was yielding to a feeling of triumphant conquest. As we approached nearer the house, I saw a man, of rather large stature, round-shouldered and tawny-armed, engaged in setting a large flagstone in its place before the front door of the farmhouse. He was plying lustily at it with a heavy iron bar, and it was evident to me that he was forcing it up to its final resting-place. He had crowded it up close to the threshold, and was then in the act of placing a block of wood under the front of the stone with his right hand, while he held his lifting purchase with his left hand and shoulder. It may appear to be trivial detailing for me to mention here, but the sequel requires it—that the reason of his placing the long, stout block endwise under the stone was that he might easily extricate the bar without drawing the flag out from the house. The bar out, he could easily knock away the prop and the stone would drop in the desired position. I could not then tell why it was that out toward that ungainly looking man went from me a tremendous feeling of pent-up hatred, as though he were the ugly magician that had hurled that avalanche of demoniacal assault upon me.

This man, it was evident, my guide meant to avoid; for she drew close up to the side of the wall at our right, so that, as we drew near, the house might shield us from his view. She raised her hand as though to warn me of her desire of avoidance, and then, turning quickly, she entered a small outbuilding which adjoined the back part of the house, at the same time beckoning me to follow.

I was now surprised at my own reckless daring. I felt not even a tinge of fear, although there came upon me a most convincing impression that the fair being who had sought my aid was about to enter a field of most imminent peril. With a precautionary impulse I placed my hand upon my well-loaded pistol, to be sure that its position was right for hasty use should circumstances require it.

We had entered the outbuilding. My directress passed up two steps and cautiously opened a door that evidently led into the main body of the house. There for a moment I paused. "Should I wear my satchel further?" I questioned myself. I remembered the sinister-looking man I had seen before entering, and a natural propensity I have for being on my guard reminded me that my satchel would interfere with the free use of my arms in case I should be called upon to measure strength with a desperate foe. I lifted the incumbrance from my shoulder and hastily looked about for a safe place to lay it. As I turned around, I faced the door where stood that strange, ecstatic woman. She now appeared more like one from the empyreal realms than an inhabitant of earth.

At that moment a vivid flash of lightning darted forth from the clouds that seemed to prolong its terrifying glare the longer to illume the marvelous scene before me. Then followed the deep reverberations of the awful thunder, rolling through the corridors of the sky as though the demons of wrath had been let loose above.

My thought was not now to protect my beauteous charge from harm that might come from human force; but to give to her, as I supposed, affrighted soul all the confidence I could of safety from the contending elements that raged with such fierce tumult about us.

I stood transfixed with wonder! Still more awful and sublimely incomprehensible was the attitude and bearing of the one I had thought to shield from fear with my own stronger, masculine nature. She stood like a Goddess of Trust, and the serene smile which rested upon her face as she looked upon me seemed radiant with a glory such as only celestial beings bear. She raised her small white hand and pointed to a beam above my head.

"Hang your satchel there," she said in a tone of earnest import.

I looked up as directed, and saw that to the beam had been nailed an old horseshoe, so positioned that one-half of it, by being bent forward away from the side of the beam, answered the purpose of a hook. I reached up, passed the strap over the horseshoe hook, and my satchel hung suspended from the oaken beam. No sooner had I done it than she who had directed the act clapped her little hands together, and such a look of unaccountable joy overspread her pale features that for a moment I thought a faint color tinged her cheeks. What that earnest expression of joy meant, bestowed upon seemingly so trifling an incident, I had no time to question, for she had stepped into the doorway, at the same time bidding me to come. I followed her through a small back room, evidently a kitchen, then along a narrow hallway, and, turning to the right, my guide ushered me into an apartment situated in the front part of the house.

"Please stand with me at this window; he will not see you," she said, addressing me in a soft, hushed tone scarcely above a whisper.

I stepped to the window, as she desired, and reached it just in time to see the storm-clouds pour down their heavy torrents upon the scene without. A mighty tornado burst forth with the coming of the rain. The floor upon which we stood trembled beneath our feet, and the timbers above creaked and groaned under the might of the driving blast. A towering oak that stood like a giant sentinel before the house, swayed as though it were a fragile reed, and, like a conquered hero, bent its head submissively to the storm.

"Ah! see! he has come!" and she grasped my arm with a spasmodic effort that actually gave me pain.

I immediately sought my pistol, for the expression upon her angel-face was not alarm, it was absolute terror.

But what was there to fear from him? surely nothing, thought I; for at that moment a young man, who could not have been more than twenty years of age, rode up from the lane horseback, at a quick pace, and reining up with a powerful hand, he alighted under the tree before us. A double-barrelled fowling-piece hung by his side, the lock of which was covered with a cap of painted cloth, to protect it from the rain. At his saddle-back was a bag apparently well filled with game. He leaned his fowling-piece against the trunk of the oak, and fastened his horse's bridle to a large iron staple which had been driven for that purpose into the gnarled side of the giant tree.

"Do you fear him?" I asked, with some show of surprise.

"Fear him! Oh, no! by all that is sacred I love him as I do my very life!" and her hand upon my arm trembled as though there was a wild turmoil going on within her own soul, as much more fierce than were the tempest's throes, as had been her bearing at the outhouse door more tranquil.

Well might she have loved him, for he was just such a man as any woman could have loved. Naught but thoughts of the purest stamp could have moved the actions of him who stood before us. Every feature of his finely chiseled face gave proof of a true and manly spirit. His tall form was clothed in what seemed to me to be garments made from homespun cloth, and it was evident that his greatest wealth had been bestowed by nature. I wondered why my aid or attendance had been sought. If she feared harm, what better protector could she have than the stalwart youth who had just come upon the stage of the strange play in which I was acting so ambiguous a part.

After securing his horse, the new comer turned, as though to approach the house, but the man I had seen at work before the door now came upon the scene, and confronting the younger one, seemingly opposed his further advance in that direction.

A sinister-looking man this last comer truly was. What of his face was not hid by his grizzly beard was wrinkled and ugly in its every feature. Words passed between them; words of anger on the part of the last comer, I knew, for his gesticulations were violent, and the expression of his hideous face was truly devilish. The young man was calm, but there was an earnestness in his manner that showed plainly the subject matter of their conversation greatly moved him.

The howling of the storm, the beating of the rain, and the wild lashing of the heavy branches above their heads, completely drowned the words of the two contestants; so that to me all that passed between them was a mere pantomime.

Suddenly the violence of the older one's gestures ceased, and he stood as if waiting for something to be done on the part of the one he opposed.

He who came upon the horse drew from beneath the breast of his dripping frock a folded parchment, which he handed to the villainous-looking man. He seized it with a nervous grasp, and opening it began to eagerly peruse its contents.

What the purport of the instrument was I could not judge; but I plainly saw three large red seals at the bottom of the parchment, and above them there was much writing. The young man turned, after handing the parchment, and taking up a heavy bucket that stood near the tree, started for the well, which was but a few rods away from where they stood; evidently to draw water for his horse.

So engaged had I been in watching what was passing without, I had not noticed the effect that had been wrought upon the young maiden by my side. I was in a maze of bewilderment. What part was I expected to play in the weird drama that was being enacted before me? I was resolved to break the mysterious spell that like that of a magic flute had rested upon my tongue from my first starting upon the adventure, and force by gentle, but positive speech, a full explanation of the situation from my fair protégé. With a strong summons of nerve to resolutely carry out my determination, I turned toward her.

Vain effort! I did not speak. Wonder grew upon wonder! Her face was whiter than I had seen it before; her lips were parted as in the agony of despair, and her blue eyes looked strangely wild, and seemed as if they would start from their sockets.

"Look! oh, look!" she cried; and she pointed spasmodically toward the tree.

He who had been reading the parchment had taken the fowling-piece from where the young man had placed it; he had removed the painted cloth from the lock, and was taking a deliberate aim toward the well. Quick as thought I turned my eyes in the direction of his aim, and at that instant the sharp crack of the gun's double report sounded in my ears—a terrible accompaniment to the tempestuous din of the maddened storm.

The villain's aim was sure. His unsuspecting victim staggered, and, pitching forward, fell directly into the well from which he was in the act of drawing water.

Up flew the sash before me, and the heart-broken one by my side darted forth so suddenly that, before I could devise her intent, she was beyond my power of restraining. I leaped from the window and sprang after her, but I was too late. An insane frenzy gave to the flying form the speed of the tempest waves that lashed about her. With one wild, piercing shriek, she threw up her hands and plunged down into the watery grave that held her murdered lover.

It is an easy thing to sit in the serene atmosphere of tranquility and discuss the advantage to be gained from acts directed by that mental activity called "presence of mind"; but there are times when it seems as though the mind itself was deluged in the dire wreck of law and order about it. I know it was so with me in this instance. Never shall I forget that terrible ordeal. The howling babel of Nature's discord poured in upon my senses with affrighting force, and I was sure that, mingled with the tempest's roar, came sounds as though a host of unchained furies were hissing their infernal wrath into my ears. I had been nearly conquered in the lane by these same weird demons of dread; should I yield to them again? One mighty struggle to regain control of my deranged senses and I quickly decided my course. My first impulse was to fly to the rescue of the fair one who had led me into that scene of strife; but an instant's reflection assured me that by so doing I should thwart the object in view, for to reach her I must descend the well, thereby putting myself completely in the power of the fiend from whom I would protect her. I drew my pistol, determined to compel the villain to hasten to her aid, at peril of instant death should he show a moment's hesitation.

I turned upon the murderer just in time to see him in the act of concealing the parchment and the weapon with which he had committed the foul deed to gain it. He had placed the gun and parchment under the flagstone that I had seen him adjusting when I approached the house. He held the heavy iron bar in his raised hands, and with one powerful blow he knocked the wooden prop away. The stone fell to its intended place upon the softened earth with a heavy thud, entombing beneath it those evidences of guilt.

I leveled my pistol—but no human power was to avenge that double murder! A vivid flash, and every branch, every fibre of that swaying oak, was lit up by an electric fire, and at the next instant its leaves hung seared and dead, as though a furnace-breath had blasted them!

Down fell the murderer in his guilt, smitten by an avenging stroke from heaven. His blackened face was turned up, but his eyes saw not the messenger that did the work. In less than a second of time I had seen all this, for beyond that I could not see. The bright glare nearly blinded me, and I had not escaped the effects of the electric bolt. Covering my eyes with my hands, I sank down upon the wet turf, prostrated by absolute nervous exhaustion.

[To be concluded in our next.]

THE MOULD AND DECAY OF THE PAST IS THE BEAUTY AND FRAGRANCE OF TO-DAY.

Impromptu Poem by Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, at Adelphi Hall, New York, Feb. 12th, 1888; the Subject Presented by Henry J. Newton, Esq.

REPORTED BY J. F. SNIPES.

Out of the past, with its gloom and decay,
Cometh the beauty and growth of to-day;
Out of the shadows of night and the showers
Cometh the beauty and bloom of the flowers.
Come, go with us, friends, from the city here,
Away where the waves of the sea are clear,
Where murmuring sounds shall fall on the ear;
Down in the darkness of numberless graves,
Down in the depths of the great ocean caves,
There are forms of life, through mould and decay,
That grow into brightness day after day.
And mark how the sea-shell is growing there,
In those ocean caves as dark as despair,
Growing from the gloom, and growing more bright,
Until the sea-waves have brought it to sight.
Take into your hand the rosy-lipped shell,
And list to the story it has to tell.
Out of the darkness and out of the grave,
Out of the slime and the deep ocean wave,
Out of the strength of decay and of time,
Cometh the shell that is fair and sublime,
Developed by change and made to disclose
A story of life that nobody knows.
So go we away from the mighty sea
To the beautiful land so broad and free,
'Neath the sunbeams bright, through the changeful hours,
We watch the growth of the beautiful flowers;
First comes the seed that is lost in the mould,
Away from the light and the sunshine's gold;
It lies in the chill and night of the tomb,
And yet in the seed is the secret of bloom.
Slowly it grows, and it slowly expands,
With prayer for the light and with outstretched hands,
Until it is born out of mud and mould,
And rises aloft in beauty untold.
The little green leaf from shadow of night
Looks up in the light, grows fair to our sight;
It climbs and expands with outreaching hands,
Like a spirit in prayer for blessing rare,
To lift us and bear us from earthly care.
Thus through mould and growth, through shadow and strife,
Through sunbeams and sorrows, we rise to life,
Like the growing leaf and plants more fair,
That uplift their heads in the fragrant air.
If it be the rose that we would disclose,
Or the yellow bloom with breath of perfume,
Or the ruddy red that lifts up its head,
Remember the words we have just now said:
Out from the forms of the past cometh life,
Which grows in brightness through shadows and strife.
'Tis out of the mould, 't is out of decay,
That spirits behold the light of the day;
They arise and shine, with glorious mind,
Beyond present time, are nevermore blind.
So come the buddings, the beauties unnumbered,
The fair prophecy that lately has slumbered.
And so with these flowers; their story is told
To-day in purple and crimson and gold.
The pure and the true shall live like these flowers,
In life and in light, through unnumbered hours.
So, friends, without wings you shall rise and fly
To a fairer life developed on high,
Away from the earth and its changing mould,
Away from the grave with its chill and cold,
From the errors that lie beneath the sky
You shall upward mount and nevermore die.
So there 's joy and life in this blessed right;
In this is true hope and purest delight.
Be not discouraged, though shadows may fall,
Be not discouraged, though grief may appal;
Be not discouraged, though the tomb and mould
May press down to earth the blossoms of gold.
Wait, wait in patience, a little while longer,
Till the light of the sun is higher and stronger;
Wait, wait a little, till this month shall die,
Till the March winds sigh and the shadows fly,
Till the pansies come with violet eyes,
And open in smiles in the light of the skies;
Then soón shall they usher the golden day,
And the youth of spring and blossoms of May.
So here lies a truth in this message bright—
The power that nature has over the night.
So cometh the truth; then have no more terror,
And doubt not in time your growth out of error;
For error shall die, and in deathless youth
The shadows shall fly; hold fast to the truth.

PRACTICAL BENEVOLENCE AND PROGRESS.

Religious and spiritual associations and their orators have a great deal to say about love and benevolence, in proportion to the amount of what is actually done. The champions of Orthodoxy enjoy splendid salaries, while those who might with equal or greater power diffuse the higher Spiritual Philosophy are but poorly sustained—so poorly, indeed, that much of the ability in the spiritual ranks shuns the unprofitable task.

But our shortcomings are not so marked in reference to the spiritual rostrum as in reference to practical work. We claim the most enlightened and beneficent system of healing that has ever been known, but what are we doing to establish it in successful operation? The friends of orthodox medicine sustain it handsomely: colleges are erected and hospitals generously endowed to diffuse the blessings (if such they be) of allopathy and homeopathy. Where is either the college or the hospital to represent Spiritualism in the healing art?

Mesmerism has its healing institution in England. Hydropathy has innumerable representatives, but the practical representatives of Spiritualism struggle along as individuals against a powerful opposition, without the moral or financial coöperation of societies.

If our claims are not visionary, they ought to be illustrated in every large city by a hospital or sanitarium, in which the public might realize the vast superiority of the new ideas over the old. But as yet we look in vain for any such movement as might easily be made by the coöperation of a few of the many wealthy individuals who recognize the Spiritual Philosophy.

In the apparent absence of public spirit, we must rely upon individual action if there are any individuals in the progressive class who have the ability and the will to undertake this noble work. The writer knows of no one conspicuous in the ranks of progress who has the liberality, the energy, and the financial ability that would fit him for such a task but DR. R. C. FLOWER, of Boston, who has so rapidly risen to the highest rank of professional success. His recent purchase of the grand building at the corner of Columbus Avenue and Holyoke street is said to have been made for the establishment of a Sanitarium, to be conducted according to the most advanced ideas of the progressive party in science.

When this grand sanitarium shall be in operation, and a new college, in which the authorities and teachers shall be men who turn their backs upon the past and look to the advancing sciences of the future, there will be something to which we can point with satisfaction and which will command the respect of scientists throughout the world.

The writer trusts he is not too sanguine in anticipating for Boston the establishment of such institutions, which will do more to vindicate her reputation as the modern Athens than anything which has ever yet been done.

OBSERVER.

IN MEMORIAM.

DR. SIMON C. HEWETT passed on to the spirit spheres from Boston, Feb. 15th, at the advanced age of eighty-four years.

Dr. Hewett was one of the oldest physicians in the city, and when in active practice was renowned as the "natural bone-setter." He made a specialty of old, chronic diseases, such as the regular physicians had given up or considered incurable by their mode of treatment. He inherited a strong constitution and a positive, determined will-power, together with personal magnetism, but for the past ten years or more he gradually failed in health, finally losing his vitality, through advanced age and bodily infirmities, to such an extent as to cause him to retire from active practice.

He was greatly interested in preserving medical freedom, and was enthusiastic in remonstrating against the restrictive medical measures suggested to the General Court for enactment from year to year, even after he had retired from practice.

Some ten years ago, knowing the efficacy of adapted magnetism, that he possessed in his own organism, at times with his patients, he personally employed such treatment in his own case, and claimed to have been benefited thereby. Dr. Hewett at one time said to the writer that in religious belief, in regard to a future state and the destiny of the soul, he was a Baptist. I had some pleasant conversation with him in relation to his experiences in his medical practice, and also in regard to the spiritualistic view of life in earth and spirit spheres. He cited many instances which, to my mind, proved conclusive evidence that he was moved upon by an invisible, intelligent force, or power, that was beyond that of his own will, and this may account in a measure for his success in making cures; also various acts in his earth-life that were not understood by the medical profession, seem to the writer to be largely the result of inheritance combined with what are termed mediumistic gifts.

The last time the writer saw him at a place of worship was at the Berkeley Hall Spiritual meetings at the time W. J. Colville was speaking there. He considered Mr. C. a great wonder, and thought it remarkable that he could speak with such ease, without notes or preparation, upon the intricate subjects presented from time to time by his hearers.

His funeral took place on Sunday, the 19th, at his late residence, his son, Dr. J. D. Hewett, superintending the exercises. Dr. Hewett was decidedly opposed to flowers on such occasions, and hence the relatives placed a few about the room, while on the broadcloth covered casket were arranged two small neat bundles of wheat as a symbol of his age, and to take the place of the floral emblems which they would have placed there had they not desired to carry out his wish.

Rev. Phillips Brooks, Episcopalian, officiated at the funeral, which was conducted under the usual custom or ritual of that denomination.

His body was taken to Forest Hills Cemetery, and deposited temporarily in the receiving tomb. COM.

MR. GALEN ALLEN passed from his home to the higher life on Saturday morning, Feb. 11th.

He was eighty-six years of age on the 24th of January. He deceased in the same room where he was born, and the room in which his father was born, and rose into the beyond.

Mr. Allen in his younger days was a member of the Orthodox Congregational church in South Abington, now Whitman. He afterward became impressed that Universalism was nearer right in its claims upon the human mind, and later embraced Spiritualism, to which he adhered with tenacity, feeling that he was right, and that the knowledge of the truth had reached his heart. His wife, who survives him, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, was in full sympathy with him, and their home has for many years been a place where an honest, earnest Spiritualist might find a cordial welcome.

It has been the practice for many years for a few to gather on Sunday evenings in this home to receive communications from the loved who have gone before, and listen to the teachings that came from the other side of life. So earnest was this family in the work that as a term of derision the people outside named the hill on which they lived "Spirit Hill," which has been accepted by them and their sympathizers as an honor.

Firm, true, undaunted, he passed away as he had lived, grounded in the principles which Spiritualism teaches. Though often suffering from the wrong-doing of others, he always allowed the mantle of charity to fall and cover their faults.

The funeral was held on Monday, Feb. 20th, Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, conducting the services, which were of a very interesting character, showing clearly the view held by the Spiritualists of death and the future life.

At the close, by request of the friends, a few appropriate remarks were made by G. E. Pratt in the same direction.

There was singing by a quartette living in the immediate neighborhood.

Five children survive him, nearly all of whom are either strong in the faith, or sympathizers with the tenets of spiritualistic truth.

Loved, but not lost, gone before only a little while, the knowledge that though unseen he is with them still is a precious boon to this widow and the children who survive him, and with loving hearts will they gather for their little meetings, knowing that the place by their side is still occupied by the risen husband and father.

He was for many years a constant reader of THE BANNER, and found great comfort in perusing its pages. G. E. PRATT.

East Bridgewater, Mass., Feb. 18th, 1888.

MRS. SARAH SCHWAB, eighty years of age, passed to spirit-life on Jan. 20th, under somewhat remarkable and consoling circumstances.

The aged lady had a very bright intellect, and was fully instructed about the Spiritual Philosophy by her son-in-law, Mr. Lewis J. Kohn, of this city.

Early in the morning, about eight hours before her departure, she told Mr. Kohn that she should pass on at twelve o'clock; that she preferred and wanted to be buried in the simplest possible manner, without show or display of any kind, as to coffin, flowers, etc. After having also given some directions as to business and family matters, she remarked that she was looking for her near departure with a pleasant and expectant feeling; the only fear she had was of the pain of the last struggle.

Mr. Kohn explained to her that with the many good deeds behind her and with her bright mind and other favorable circumstances, she could rely on an easy "second birth." The old lady replied that she had full confidence in her son's explanation, and as she felt sure that her time of departure had come she wished to see before twelve o'clock her dear friends, Mr. M—— and his wife, E——, with whom she had been acquainted for over thirty-three years. As soon as these friends had arrived Mrs. Schwab had a pleasant conversation with them, and assured all present (children and grandchildren, after having given wise instruction to the latter,) that they might expect to receive a communication from her, in due time, about her new life in another sphere. In the meantime the clock struck half-past eleven, and a visible change was seen to come over her. As soon as the clock struck twelve she passed easily away into spirit-life.

Cleveland, O. J. A. HEINSOHN.

☞ To talk of mediums working for nothing as long as they are able, and when they are not able to dole out to them gifts on which to subsist, is the shallowest nonsense. This is what I call cutting down the bridge and trusting to the depth and current of the stream to ford it. I venture to predict that when all who "profess and call themselves Spiritualists" understand what is comprised in a "medium," they will both pay them and respect them for taking the payment, so long as that is no more than is adequate to the amount of service given.—Peter Lee, Rochdale, in The Two Worlds.

It is well to teach a child to sing "I want to be an angel," but it is something better to teach him to sing "I want to be a man."—The Voice (Funk & Wagnalls).

FALL RIVER.—James M. Rogers writes as follows upon "The Negation Argument"; "I find quite a large class, perhaps not professedly Christians, who still hold the opinion that a belief in Christianity (whether its doctrines be true or false) is of immediate advantage here, and tends to untold advancement hereafter. To illustrate my meaning I give part of a conversation as it actually occurred. A man of advanced age, whose ripened years should have insured clear convictions of truth and unhesitating declaration of its logic, stated that 'If Christianity is true, Christians are the best off of any in the future; if it is false, they have an equal chance with others'! The fallacy of such reasoning ought to be apparent to all. An argument based upon an 'if' is a lost argument to begin with. Because with 'the past unsighed for, and the future sure,' no one would admit of the most remote possibility of being wrong. Such a man knows he is right; the other acknowledges he may be in error, because he stands upon a doubt and cannot prove his convictions, so takes refuge in negatives. But the eternal welfare of immortal man cannot for one moment rest upon so changeful a foundation. He must, by his very nature, be wholly, irrevocably right when he enters that existence which has no conclusion, or every successive step will carry him further and further along the road of error. We may not safely trust to the logic of 'it may be so, or it may not be so,' and still be the gainer in either contingency. St. Paul, evidently, did not so think: 'If Christ be not risen, we are of all men most miserable.' Yet, strangely enough, he opens the momentous subject with an If!

But to return: all beliefs, arguments or religious creeds not true must be false, for the reason that falsehood is ever the reverse of truth, and no moral precept or spiritual conception is at one and the same time both true and false. There is not in all the boundless thought-world of God such a monstrous contradiction. Truth radiates in direct lines from the Giver of all thoughts; man alone, by his imperfect spiritual vision, distorts the rays. Christianity must stand or fall by the inexorable logic of proven facts. The eternal progression or constant retrogression of unnumbered millions is too high a stake to place upon any supposition, however speciously presented. In the broad light of to-day Christianity is compelled to assume the offensive to hold its ground, and a defensive policy yields one line of its works to the enemy.

Look at the glaring inconsistency of such a claim! A page of history, an arithmetical problem, a maxim in law, is declared true or false—none so hardy as to allow them to be possessed of both qualities. Yet thousands otherwise intelligent thinkers are perfectly satisfied to pin their hope of everlasting soul-illumination, or risk spiritual darkness forever, upon so small a point as this!"

WEST HANOVER.—A correspondent writes: "Helen Keith of this place is rapidly becoming a fine medium for the exercise of spirit-power in the mental phase. She improvises poems, and also sings under influence. The writer saw her controlled in the above named directions recently, and considers her a good instrument, and one destined to do a glorious work for the cause of Spiritualism.

She gives private séances, and her guides are anxious to have her enter the field as a lecturer. Though small in stature, when under control she is a power in voice and strength, and no one would doubt that she has spirit assistance of pronounced value. I am confident that any Spiritualist society securing her services will not feel dissatisfied with what her guides have to offer."

CAMBRIDGE.—"C." writes, endorsing the powers of "one of the many magnetic healers of Boston, Miss L. Barnicoat, of 175 Tremont street." A virulent affliction, inherited from birth, and intensified by vaccination, so depleted his system that his days on earth seemed to be numbered, when, through the faithful treatment of Miss Barnicoat and her prescriptions (continued for the past two or three years), he finds the disease nearly gone, and his health generally improved: for which he adds, in conclusion: "I am indebted to her and her spirit guide, Dr. Wallace."

BOSTON.—A correspondent writes. "The permeative influence of Spiritualism is nowhere demonstrated more plainly than in the changed views now instinctively held by many people outside the ranks of its believers, regarding death and the future state. It is not long since I received a letter from a gentleman who is in no way identified with the New Dispensation, in which the following sentences occurred:

'I must tell you that the trouble is all over for one of our friends. Mrs. —— left the earthly life since I wrote you last. She closed the acts of mortality in peace and quiet at last—merely dropping off like ripened fruit. She is much missed, and had a glorious life of usefulness and kindness. To me her brightest life is now begun. You believe so, too. What a blessing to feel such things possible!'

This is an evidence of the work now going on. Who can doubt that if all the human family—'converted and unconverted'—could be cheered while in the body, and leave the earth-life with such bright views of future destiny, a great and grand revolution would be wrought in every department of human existence, and the power of sectarian bigotry be banished forever?"

New York.

ALBANY.—John Chism, Jr., Secretary of the First Spiritual Society, writes, Feb. 20th: "Prof. J. W. Cadwell has just closed a very interesting and profitable engagement with us, and not only added a neat sum to our Treasury, but by calling out large audiences to see and hear his mesmeric entertainments, has been the means of making our Society and hall known to hundreds of people who otherwise would scarcely have learned that such an organization existed in their midst. He is quite radical in his views, and bold in expressing them, yet notwithstanding this we have had a steady increase in attendance and receipts.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan lectured and improvised poems upon subjects proposed by the audience, Feb. 9th and 10th. The attendance was large, and every person listened with close attention to the logical reasoning and beautiful language that fell from her lips. This was Miss Hagan's first appearance before an Albany audience, but it will not be the last, if she will consent to make an engagement.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing is with us during February, and is meeting with grand success in her efforts to place Spiritualism before the people. Her 'talks,' as she calls them, are instructive and pleasing, and the tests 'Ikabod' gives in many cases remarkable. A case in point: To a well-known gentleman she foretold the sickness and death of his nephew, who, at the time, was in full health, and entirely unknown to Mrs. Twing, as was also his entire family, and Mr. M., to whom she gave the communication. She had no possible way of knowing there was such a person as the nephew in existence. However, the prediction proved correct, for the nephew was taken sick and died within the time stated. This test was given in the presence of over two hundred persons, on her first visit to this city last fall. Many other nearly as remarkable tests have been given by her control.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham lectured and gave poems in her delightful manner Feb. 17th. On the platform was Mrs. Newton Reynolds, of Troy, who opened the services with an invocation, and Mrs. Twing, who followed Mrs. Brigham's lecture with communications from 'Ikabod.' Before the services began Artist MacDonald, in a neat speech, presented to the Society a magnificently-framed and finely-executed pastel drawing of Mrs. Brigham, by Artist S. G. Payn, Jr., and an equally fine crayon drawing of our President, D. M. S. Fero, was presented by Mr. MacDonald himself. Mr. Fero responded for the Society, thanking the artists in the name of the Society, and for himself personally. These pictures are life size, beautifully framed, and a fine addition to those with which our walls are already adorned. We endeavor to make our hall as attractive and comfortable as possible, so that those who come out of curiosity may discover that Spiritualists are not ornamented with horns and cloven feet, but human beings like themselves. This is a point I would like to make as emphatic as possible, i. e., treat all strangers, no matter how unkind they may speak, with respect, and do not permit yourself to arouse antagonism by argument, but make them feel at home, and they will soon awaken to the fact that we have something worthy of investigation.

Warren Chase will lecture March 2d, and following the lecture a social and reception will be given by the Ladies' Aid in honor of Mr. Chase's long service in the ranks of Spiritualism.

Bishop A. Beals is booked for March, and will assist us in the celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of Spiritualism, which we will hold on Friday, March 30th.

Mrs. H. S. Lake is booked for the month of June. We have as yet no one engaged for April and May, and desire a lecturer who can also give tests, and is able to build up Spiritualism on its own merits, and not by tearing to pieces the religion of others."

NEW YORK CITY.—A correspondent writes that in the course of recent remarks made by Dr. Henry Slade at the People's Meeting on the gift of healing, he alluded to the successful treatments he received, when paralyzed, from Dr. D. C. Dake, after all other means had failed to relieve him.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—A correspondent writes: "The Young People's Progressive Society (South Side) recently gave one of its semi-monthly balls at its hall, No. 159 Twenty-Second street. It was a masquerade ball. One of our local papers refers to the occasion as follows: 'Aside from the purely social phase of the organization, it directs its energies toward a general advancement of the young people, but is more widely known for its active participancy in the line of so-called Spiritualism.... It was a fanciful scene one watched; the gay cavalier sporting his handsome costume beside the fair Nerissa, the Chinese Mandarin gliding with measured steps with a rustic maid on his arm, and monks, clowns, matadors, jockeys, tramps and lawn-tennis dudes striving for favors from masked gipseys, nuns, Portias, ladies of high and low degree, and of every conceivable style of beauty. A stringed orchestra, supported by a piano accompanist, supplied such music as was needed for the schottische, waltz, quadrille or polka mazurka. Early morning found the majority of the revelers still untired, but anxious to maintain peace relations with their relatives, so homeward was the word. Among those noticed were:

•Joseph Auglan, •Henry Coverdale, •Harvey Henry, •A. M. West, •Stephen Danforth, •Joseph Langel, •Mr. Otis, Mrs. Mary Johnson, Mrs. M. Daly, Mrs. Olive Coverdale, Miss Leo Armstrong, Miss Bertie Booth, Mrs. Bradford, the Misses Bliss, Miss Julia Rothschild, •Fred Fellows, A. L. Coverdale, R. G. Hourtney, Zeph. Davis, George Henry, F. K. Smith, Mr. Otis, jr., Mrs. Francis Johnson, Mrs. Roe, Miss M. Armstrong, Miss Ida Woodberry, Miss Luella Langel, Miss G. Searles, Miss Ollie Langel, Miss Jessie Rothschild. [•Accompanied by their wives.]'"

Kansas.

FAIRMOUNT.—A. H. Nicholas writes: "We have with us, at the Deuel Farm, Cora Carpenter and her mother, E. F. Porter, mediums, who have been through parts of Kansas lecturing. Cora, a girl of fourteen years of age, through her guides, lectures on subjects presented to her at the time, and answers questions, while 'Lotus,' a control of Mrs. Porter, gives tests. The other day Cora's hand was controlled to write the following message in a handwriting not her own, and signed by a name unknown to any of us: 'In my own mind nothing can go beyond spirit: nothing is higher than spirit. It is man—the person. We only inhabit this shell of clay and live on the earth-plane to prepare for our future state of life, and by our life here are building our home in the spirit-world. Our minds teach us there is something beyond this life. The few years we spend here serve to develop our spiritual natures to such a degree, that in the other world our time may be spent in returning to mortals and doing good. If we live true to the impressions for good and let our minds run in the spiritual channel, we will ever overcome the temptations which are placed before us to test our strength and courage to resist evil. Unbelievers in the spiritual work think that only evil can come from the spirit-world; but this is not the case; many times the dear ones who are in the other life return and shield us from the sinful ways of this world when we think them far away. Oh! what a pleasure it should be to each and every one to know for a positive fact that there is no such thing as death. Then let us be brave in the walk of life and be sure our spirits are pure and bright.—SAM. J. WHITING.'"

WICHITA.—A correspondent writes: "The spirit of progress—intellectual, moral, social and civil—is spreading its influence over the whole world. To its cheering presence all instinctively draw nigh; the Christian, the Pagan, the Free Thinker are bending their energies to better purpose than in the past toward the consideration of the grand problems of human life and destiny; and it behooves all whom the knowledge of the truth revealed by Spiritualism has made free, to do what lies in their power to afford assistance to those who for any reason are not yet awakened to a comprehension of the true solution."

Province of Quebec.

BEDFORD.—Writing for a copy of Warren Chase's forthcoming book, "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," Mrs. C. A. Rice says: "I was at Onset last summer, and had the pleasure of listening to the lectures of Hon. Warren Chase, also of attending quite a number of séances. My husband and myself witnessed some very beautiful, convincing things, and many of our spirit-friends came to us. As we had never seen or heard anything of Spiritualism before, and with the rest of the ignorant pronounced it a fraud, you may judge of our pleasure and surprise at the phenomena we beheld. We have seen enough of spirit-phenomena to want to see more, and investigate further, but cannot do so without the help of a medium. If a good materializing medium, whose terms are within our means, would come here, I will insure their expenses, entertainment and price of séances while here. We have a large field ready for the good work."

Rhode Island.

NEWPORT.—John C. Peckham writes: "I have passed the line of eighty years and taken up my eighty-first, and hope to make it the best of my life. I have hitherto been called a very plain preacher, yet my desire is to be in the year to come plainer of speech than ever, and to utter with greater boldness the truth. I predict a mighty revolution of thought—an outgo of belief and an inflow of knowledge. When it is over, people will no longer bow to creeds and dogmas of the past, but have for their religion an every-day and every-hour religion of reason and common sense."

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—E. P. Goodsell gives it as his opinion that behind, as the grand inciters of the Prohibition movement, are the priests and the churches, who adopt it as a means of taking the first step toward the enslavement of "a nation of freedom-loving men and women."

Hard at Work.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

During the month of February Miss Jennie B. Hagan has filled the following engagements with good and appreciative audiences: Sundays of Feb. 5th and 12th lectured for the Spiritualists at Troy, N. Y.; 7th gave an entertainment, and on the 8th was tendered a reception at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lee, 14 George street, Green Island—friends gathering in from Troy, Albany and Saratoga, N. Y.

On the evenings of the 9th and 10th she lectured in Albany, N. Y., to good audiences. On the Sundays of the 19th and 26th she lectured in Portland, Me.; evening of the 20th held a parlor meeting in Portland; 21st a parlor meeting in Bath, Me.; 22d gave an entertainment in Portland; evenings of the 23d and 24th lectured in Bangor, Me.; and on Saturday, the 25th, was tendered a reception at the residence of the venerable Mr. Thomas Beals, of Portland.

On the evening of March 1st she will lecture in Saratoga, N. Y. The Sundays of March she will be in Cincinnati, O.

Miss Hagan's Camp-Meeting engagements for the coming season are: Burlington, Vt.; Etna, Me.; Harwich, Mass.; Sunapee Lake, N. H.; and Parkland, Pa.

A Painful Accident to a Christian Scientist at Another Man's Funeral.

I attended a funeral at the home of a Christian science family the other day, [said a gentleman of a severely materialistic turn of mind.] Of course it was a Christian scientist who preached the funeral sermon. The burden of his remarks was that there is no pain, no death, no grief in this world save that which we imagine. It is all in our minds, do n't you know. It seemed to me that he bore unnecessarily on this point, for he repeated it a dozen times in the course of his half-hour talk—no pain, no death, no suffering, no grief. When the service was over, the pall-bearers carried the coffin down the slippery steps from the door to the walk below, and the minister followed. As he set his foot on the first step his heels flew from under him, his legs went up into the air, and he came on the middle of his back, striking very heavily about five steps down. It must have all but broken his spinal column. He was helped to his feet, and with his hand on his back he limped around a little circle and groaned in a most piteous manner. He was a very badly hurt man, but if he had been my own brother and had been killed I should have had to laugh when one of the young persons who came down the steps with me afterwards gravely but softly said: "No pain, no suffering, no grief."—Chicago Times.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and th faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find, rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies, for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work. Cloth, pp. 324. Price $1.25.

Historical Revelations

OF THE RELATION EXISTING BETWEEN

CHRISTIANITY AND PAGANISM

SINCE THE

Disintegration of the Roman Empire.

BY THE

ROMAN EMPEROR JULIAN

(Called the Apostate),

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF T. C. BUDDINGTON.

Historical Revelations, or a Comparison between the Relations of Paganism and Christianity since the disintegration of the Roman Empire, by the spirit purporting to be the Emperor Julian (the Apostate), is one of those peculiar spiritual works that come like a meteor in a dark night or a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky.

Flashing its light upon the spiritual darkness of the mediæval ages, it gives to this generation a hint of the spiritual forces which have long been trying to lift the pall which has shrouded the religious world for centuries.

No person in Religious History has been more vilified and misunderstood than Julian, and probably there are few so well able to illuminate the spiritual gloom which settled upon the world after the overthrow of the old Empire.

Coming at this period when the foundations of Christian faith and its relations to the spiritual life are being scrutinized as never before, and especially when the phenomena of Christian Spiritualism are perplexing and confounding the beholders the work of Julian should and will be welcome to all classes who desire to know the truth.

New Edition.

HISTORY OF THE COUNCIL OF NICE, A. D. 325. With a Life of Constantine the Great; Containing, also, an account of the Scriptural Canons, as adopted by the Christian Church; the Vote on the Divinity of Christ; the appointment of Sunday as a legal Sabbath in the Roman Empire; and a general exhibition of the Christian Religion in the days of the early Fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY, a Lawyer and Historian.

This is the fourth edition of the original work, and greatly enlarged and improved, with a portrait of Constantine, and many critical notes from all the great writers on these subjects. The first edition was published in 1860, and we found it very interesting and highly approved by various sects; in fact, by all lovers of impartial history of Dogmas, Creeds, Divine Humanity, Bible Canons, and Inspired Superstition.

The style is excellent every way—12mo, well printed and bound. Price, full cloth, $1.00, paper 50 cents.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

ENGRAVINGS.

"AN ARMFUL."

This charming picture represents a little girl in a barn o rustic architecture in the act of trying to carry off more of the old cat's young than she can well manage, while the other kittens frolic in hay and apples at her feet. The mother, in eloquently pleading attitude, is putting in a decided but dignified protest against the abduction. It is a very animated and pleasing gem of art, finely engraved on steel by F. T. Stuart, from a painting by V. L. Knous, an eminent German artist. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE."

Painted by Joseph John, and engraved on steel by J. R. Rice. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 15x21 inches.

"THE ORPHANS' RESCUE."

Engraved on steel by J. A. J. Wilcox, from the original painting by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 15x20 inches.

"HOMEWARD."

Designed and painted by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"FARM-YARD AT SUNSET."

Copied from the well-known and justly celebrated painting designed by Joseph John. Stein, copied in black and two tints. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"THE DAWNING LIGHT."

From the original painting by Joseph John. Engraved on steel by J. W. Watts. Size of sheet, 20x24 inches.

For each additional Engraving 50 cents extra.

Any person sending $3.50 for one year's subscription to the BANNER OF LIGHT will be entitled to Hollyer's Line and Stipple Steel Plate Engraving of the late

Confession Indeed—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

The Sunday afternoon talk of Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D., in a very recent issue of the Christian Union, on "The Transfiguration," is too characteristic of the tendency of the time to be allowed to pass without the special attention of Spiritualists. For it is an up-and-down, out-and-out confession of the radical truth of Spiritualism, with the abatement only of the power of spirits to communicate and make themselves known to mortals. This reservation is obviously made for the single purpose of preventing a full and complete surrender to belief in Spiritualism. Instead of listening to and seeing the spirits themselves, as Christ did, Dr. Abbott merely recommends to his readers to hear him.

The transfiguration scene described in Matthew's gospel was not, says Dr. Abbott, the story of a dream, for it was witnessed by three different persons. Nor can it be interpreted by accepting the common view of the spirit-world as held by the churches. That common view, well says Dr. Abbott, is "nebulous at best." It may be stated thus: "Death is a sleep; at death the soul goes into a semi-conscious condition, and lives in some far-off lotus land of dreams; the body waits in the grave the summons of the last trump; in a thousand years, or a thousand centuries, whenever time shall have finished its cycle and the end shall have come, the body will rise from its resting-place and become that soul's future habitation; the scattered portions of human bodies taken up by grass and grain, and incorporated in infinite forms of vegetable and animal life, will be brought together by the command of God—for nothing is too difficult for the Almighty—and then the long broken current of life will begin again."

If we accept this notion of death and the resurrection, then Dr. Abbott thinks Moses and Elias were wakened from their long sleep in death for this special interview. What afterwards became of them he leaves those to guess who adopt a hypothesis so crowded with difficulties. Yet—let us ask the Doctor—why are not other ecclesiastical dogmas which have ruled the human mind so long equally crowded with them, and equally sure of being set aside as human views become enlarged and illuminated? Dr. Abbott, for himself, refuses to believe that there is any break in the continuity of life. This physical integument he compares to the soldier's tent, the campaign being over at death, the former occupant being at home, and the sooner it is made over into some new and valuable thing the better. "It is the emigrant's wagon," again he illustrates; "he has reached his destination; the wagon has served its purpose, but its journeys have come to an end. Knock it to pieces, and turn its material to good account."

He finds no account in the Bible of the resurrection of the body. He does not know about a spiritual body, as described by Swedenborg; the spiritual body believed in by Spiritualists he does not condescend to allude to; but he confesses his faith in a resurrection at the moment of ending the earth-life, the soul and the breath leaving the body together. The heavenly Jerusalem he believes to be "a holy city let down to earth." Heaven is at hand, not far away. If it has any geographical limits, earth is not beyond them: "The stars may be other continents whither the emancipated wander, as here we travel through foreign countries, carrying our bodies like heavy and cumbersome baggage. But whatever other lands may be opened to the winged spirits, the earth is not closed to them. Whatever other companionship may be theirs, the companionship of earth is not denied them. They are all ministering spirits; we live and walk in the midst of them."

That is enough. No more confession is needed. Dr. Abbott holds that all the teaching of the Bible on the subject is pictorial; that it all speaks of that which is to us incomprehensible; that any clear, definite and accurate conception of the spirit-world is impossible. "But," says he, "the picture of a long rest, a soul living unclad or asleep, or waiting in some reception-room of heaven for its habiliments, presents far more difficulties to the reverent student of Scripture than the view which holds that the judgment day has already dawned; that the dead are passing in a continuous procession from earth to God's judgment bar; that death and resurrection are simultaneous; that the separation between earth and heaven is a narrow partition, and death is but the swinging of the door; and that the dead are living, more truly living than we, and living often close at hand, so close that we are surrounded by them as by a cloud of witnesses.... So close, too, that mothers still keep watch and ward over their children, and the friend still serves by subtle influences as guide and inspiration of his friend." And he asks the mother who has gone into the spirit-world and left her children behind, "who has ever told you that you are to be separated from them?"

He bases this belief "partly on intimations and suggestions of Scripture, and partly on the all but universal belief of the world in spirits and spirit-communications." Granting that much of this may be superstition, and more be fraud, neither superstitions nor frauds grow without root out of nothing; their universality and success themselves illustrate the reality on which the one feeds and the other simulates. Now accepting this conception of the spirit-world, "as a world all about us, as a world in which we live, as a world from which we are separated only by our own dullness of sense and heaviness of vision," he regards the story of the Transfiguration as no longer a strange episode and a breaking in upon the order of nature and the supernatural. And in view of it, he considers it rather strange that more Christian professors have not known a like experience of communion with the sainted and risen dead.

This is all large, liberal, and packed with living truth. The statement that the invisible world is all around us continually—that the earth cannot, if it would, lie beyond the limits of its geography—the assertion that decarnated spirits continue to feel a close interest in the affairs of the world and of those whom they loved and left—the belief in the instantaneous resurrection of the spirit on leaving the useless body it has tenanted—these are all the doctrines, resting on positive knowledge, which Spiritualists hold, and so far constitute the body of their elevating and inspiring belief. But all things are not of course to be expected at once. It is to be accepted as a most favorable symptom when a professed theologian like Dr. Lyman Abbott is ready openly to admit as much as what has been given above.

In order to maintain his position where he is and operate his present influence, he naturally must pause somewhere in order to be sure of carrying his flock along with him. So he refuses to credit the fact that mortals can have communication with the spirits, however close a communion with them may be possible. This just saves him from being called a Spiritualist, and that—we say it in perfect kindness—is all he wants. That we may not convey a wrong impression, we quote his own words:

"If, however, this incident, thus interpreted"—referring to the transfiguration—"affords us a new sense of the reality and the presence of the spirit-world, it also guards us against going out of the activities of an earthly existence to indulge in reveries and dreams concerning the invisible. Their presence may well serve as an inspiration; their ministry may be real and helpful; but we may not turn aside from present duty for converse with them. If ever any of us are inclined to listen to the voices of the voiceless dead, the one voice that speaks to us out of the cloud, and the only voice, is, 'This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.'"

He would have us understand that it was only a glimpse of Moses and Elias that the disciples had, and that when their eyes were opened they saw no one save Jesus only. He warns his readers against abiding on the mount of vision and substituting "spiritual ecstasy for practical duty." And he suggests that the hours of inspiration are meant only to equip us with a larger sympathy, a broader human love, and a profounder curative and healing faith, to help us in "casting the devil out of those who abide in the valley."

We would not venture to ask any one to be consistent with himself if he prefers otherwise; but we confess we are unable to understand, all the same, how any one can feel compelled to make such sweeping and embracing admissions as Dr. Abbott freely makes, and still claims the privilege of contradicting their effect where it comes in conflict with the dogmatic theology he is interested in maintaining. If he concedes one point in this matter he necessarily concedes all. It is not an affair of choice, it is something he cannot resist. If spirits are, as he readily admits, all about us continually, and can guide and direct us and impress us with their thoughts and views, what is the difficulty in believing that we may become conscious of their presence, and of recognizing them and receiving their messages and exchanging messages of our own? Theology is lame indeed when it sets up such a pretext for refusing to acknowledge what is positively known to so many persons living, and what is demonstrated freshly to so many more every day. The fact of the power of spirits to communicate to mortals is just as well established as the fact of their ability to work with us and for us as we advance along our way.

What is the Mohammedan Doctrine?

Nothing is more effectual for clearing away existing prejudices than a flood of pellucid information, and there are thousands of people who profess and call themselves Christians, who regard the Moslem faith with feelings of disfavor, if not worse, yet do not consider it their duty at all to possess any knowledge of what they condemn. For such a recent letter from the chief authority of the Moslem Church, written in the utmost frankness to a German convert, ought to supply the most grateful information. It has been translated from the Turkish by President Washburn of Robert College, near Constantinople. From it we select the salient points.

It seems that the German convert in question had made a written request to be received into the heart of the Mussulman religion, and this letter of Ahmed Esaad, the Sheik-ul-Islam, is the explanatory reply. We do not remember ever to have met with a description of Islamism that is at once so brief and so clear. The Sheik reminds the new convert that nobody's consent or approval has anything to do with his conversion, as that stands entirely by itself and alone. Islamism, he says, does not admit of any intermediary, like the clergy, between God and his servants. The whole duty of the latter consists in teaching the people religious truths. Therefore conversion to Islamism "demands no religious formality and depends upon the authorization of no one. It is sufficient to believe and to proclaim one's belief."

The basis of Islamism is faith in the unity of God and in the mission of his "dearest servant Mohammed." In other words, that "there is only one God, and Mohammed is his prophet." He who makes this brief confession of faith needs not the consent or approbation of any one. Man was created to adore his Creator; and that is done by honoring the commands of God and sympathizing with his creatures.

Of course the Koran is held up as the book of God. Adam was the first of the prophets, and Mohammed was the last. After him came, in the order of their greatness, Jesus, Moses, Abraham, Noah and Adam, besides many more. All good and all evil are attributed to the providence of God, whose will is the source of all good and evil. If a believer, says the Sheik, does not conform to the laws of God, and does not avoid what He forbids, he is considered a wandering believer, and will merit a temporary punishment in the other world.

A sinner who repents and in person (not through another) asks God's forgiveness, obtains pardon. The rights of an oppressed neighbor are the only exception to this rule. If not vindicated here they will surely be hereafter. In no case is there any need of a spiritual director. In the Mussulman religion there is no clergy. When a Christian child is born, to make part of society he must be baptized by a priest. When he has grown up he needs a priest to marry him. If he would pray, he must go to a church and find a priest. To obtain forgiveness of his sins he must confess them to a priest, and he must have a priest to bury him. In the Mussulman religion such things are not necessary. The Mussulman father of an infant gives his child its name. A man and woman make a marriage contract in the presence of two witnesses; the contracting parties are the only ones interested, and others cannot take a part.

A Mussulman prays all alone, in any place that suits his convenience, and he goes directly to God to obtain the remission of his sins. He neither confesses them to others nor ought he to do so. When he dies, the Mussulman inhabitants of the town are obliged to bury him. Any Mussulman can do this. The presence of a religious chief is not necessary. In all religious acts, there is no intermediary between God and his servants. It is necessary to learn the will of God, "revealed by the Prophet," and to act in conformity with it.

As to religious ceremonies among Mohammedans, the prayers on Friday and at Beiram, they are subordinated to the will of the Caliph, of the Prophet, and the Sultan of Mussulmans, the arrangement of ceremonies for Islamism being one of the Sultan's sacred attributes. Obedience to his orders is one of the most important religious duties. The Sheik's mission is to administer, in his name, the religious affairs he confides to him. But, concludes the Sheik, Ahmed Esaad, "one of the things to which every Mussulman ought to be very attentive, is righteousness in character. Vices, such as pride, presumption, egotism, and obstinacy, do not become a Mussulman. To revere the great and to compassionate the insignificant, are precepts of Islamism."

Now, aside from points of faith alone, and perhaps from some of outward service also, what is there in such a statement of Mohammedan religious views that does not commend itself to the reason and promise continual improvement and elevation for the life? What more does the Christian religion inculcate than the Mohammedan in respect to righteousness of character? Nay, does it not even permit, if it does not positively teach, its devotees to regard conduct as practically secondary to faith, or belief? But it is the permanent glory of Islamism that it introduces no such order of men as the sacerdotal order between the individual and his God; does not require the interposition of any human agency to help establish relations between the human spirit and its Creator, to the positive injury of those relations, if not to their destruction. The Moslem goes to God at all times, when he feels the sustaining need. Old theology (of the Christian dispensation) sets up its attorneys and advocates, without whom it will let us know no God at all.

Prof. Smyth's Case.

The same Board of Visitors who constituted themselves judges to try Prof. Smyth, of Andover Seminary, and who dealt out their condemnation upon him for alleged erroneous views on matters of doctrine, now find themselves defendants before a higher tribunal than they were; and the same counsel which presented the case of the prosecution is now in court to defend those arbitrary judges, and are compelled to turn things over and look at them on the other side. Prof. Smyth appeals to the Supreme Court of Massachusetts for a correction of the record taken before the Board of Visitors at the time of his trial by them.

The object of the hearing was to put the case in a correct and legal form for the final decision by the full bench of the Supreme Court. Prof. Smyth claimed that a part of the record and evidence essential to the proper understanding of his case was left out and suppressed, and he simply desired that such omitted portions should appear before the full court. In presenting his case as defendant before the Board of Visitors, he made an extended address, consisting of argument and statement of facts; and so much of it as consisted of argument was excluded from the record, which he insists shall be admitted in evidence before the court. And his counsel further maintain that the Board of Visitors had no judicial authority, such as they presumed to exercise, to pass upon the question of what was legal evidence, or what should be admitted or excluded from the record.

In the course of the arguments of counsel in the case, Gov. Gaston, for Prof. Smyth, said all they wanted was to get a record of all things that took place at the hearing; they only wanted the facts, and they wanted the record to state them. Prof. Dwight, counsel for same, said there had been an element of partiality throughout the whole proceedings. Why, he asked, did the Board of Visitors grasp at this jurisdiction, which was original jurisdiction in itself? Theirs was only appellate jurisdiction. It showed partiality, he said, to attempt to turn a joint complaint into a several one. It showed partiality for one of the Board of Visitors to be absent from the hearing of the other professors, which resulted in the acquittal of four of them, and the conviction of one.

He further stated that the counsel for the Board of Visitors did not seem to comprehend the distinction between belief and teaching. Having admitted, as they did, that a man might teach what he did not believe, why could he not believe without teaching?

The counsel for the Visitors at this stage of the proceedings offered an affidavit from them containing certain amendments of facts to be added to the record, which the counsel for Prof. Smyth had asked for, which the judge peremptorily refused to admit as a proper part of the proceedings to go on file. The judge will make his report to the full bench, and the final trial will not be reached till November.

Bigotry Takes a Back Seat.

Certain religious (?) bigots in this State have been endeavoring for several years to crush out Modern Spiritualism in various ways. Their modus operandi, which we have closely watched, has much resembled the methods ascribed to the Heathen Chinee, viz., "Ways that are dark and tricks that are vain."

In the first place they got hold of a superannuated play-actor named Waite, and secured his services to go into Tremont Temple, Boston, and harangue against our Cause, giving him to understand they would see that he was fully remunerated financially—and he was, as he pocketed about $700 by the operation. The said Waite subsequently brought woe to the hearts of his creedal abettors by going to Lynn, where he won the good opinion of the brethren and sisters of that enterprising village, and secured a large tent for "divine services," and where everything went on swimmingly for a time, until the said pious (?) individual eloped with a deacon's daughter! The true nature of this operator against Spiritualism was thus made fully manifest, and the "exposé" presented was certainly on the wrong side of the house!

But our worthy bigots were not to be deterred from their fixed purpose to "crush out Spiritualism," as they expressed it, and so they prevailed on Rev. "Flavius" Cook to "fill a long-felt want" by descanting upon "Spiritualism with an If." Well, as he had had a sitting with the independent slate-writer Watkins at Mr. Epes Sargent's house previously, and had signed an affidavit endorsing this phenomenon, his speech on the latter occasion fell flat.

Then the mind-reader Bishop was picked up to "expose Spiritualism," whom these bigots patronized lavishly, he promising to give the proceeds of the meeting in the Temple in aid of the Old South Church, after deducting his personal expenses. That enterprise also proved an unremunerative venture to them.

After this, "order reigned in Warsaw" for a time, but for a time only: A new mode of action was resorted to, namely, a number of "highly respectable" individuals banded themselves together to assault, by brute force, the physical mediums, taking the law into their own hands to effect their purpose. They kept up this mode of warfare for several years, and made much trouble for themselves and for the mediums whom they assailed; until finally a case was carried into court—only to be nol pros'd.

As a last resource these same zealous bigots a short time since petitioned the General Court of Massachusetts to pass a law to suppress mediumship—their appeal being so cautiously worded that of necessity any legislation based upon it could be stretched if need be so as to reach all genuine mediums, while intimating that it was aimed only at bogus ones. Well, the petition was duly received, and referred to the Judiciary Committee, while a remonstrance also went in. A hearing was had before said Committee on Wednesday, Feb. 23d, which resulted in a report to the House that "it is inexpedient to legislate to prevent the fraudulent impersonation of spirits or deceased persons at any séance or religious meeting."

At this hearing a strong delegation was present at the State House in support of the raiders and their brute-force doctrines; while the Spiritualists were represented by Alfred E. Giles, Esq., of Hyde Park, Mass. The line of procedure to be logically expected of those who support the anti-medium side of the argument was closely followed—but without avail, it seems, by reason of the intelligence and liberality of the gentlemen composing the Committee, and the cogent reasoning of Mr. Giles. While this gentleman declared himself the enemy of fraud wherever found, and in whatsoever department of life, he was of opinion that the proposed statute trenched on dangerous ground, and would be provocative of more evil than good if it became a law. He thought the general statutes would reach and sufficiently punish fraudulent acts where money was involved; and this being the fact, the petitioners were evidently directing their appeal to the Legislature to protect the feelings of the community regarding "the loved and lost." But since when had the popular systems of religion proved so careful of the feelings of bereaved men and women in this regard? While the false was to a certain extent blended with the true among medial phenomena, he would much rather say (as did one of old) to those who were counseling the course now proposed: "Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them: Let both grow together until the harvest," confident that in the end the true would be vindicated by discriminating patrons, while the pretenders would pass out of sight entirely through want of support. He protested against such a delicate subject as was here involved being taken from the realm of occult forces, and relegated to the decision of brutal policemen and uninformed judges—uninformed because inexperienced in this direction. He had no desire to see the old Salem witchcraft days revived in Massachusetts: And the Judiciary Committee of the Legislature for 1888 proved by their report some days later that they had not, either.

Mediumship of Mrs. Wells.

We have repeatedly placed the BANNER OF LIGHT on record as an unflinching endorser of the genuine character of the development of Mrs. E. A. Wells as a medium for the presentation of the materializing and other phases of the spiritual phenomena.

While we were temporarily sojourning in New York City some months since, we were privileged to receive on several occasions at her séances indubitable and personal evidence of her reliability, and so stated in these columns at the time.

What we then said we take occasion to repeat with emphasis at the present hour.

The 31st of March.

As notices are coming in for publication regarding the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, from various sections of the country, THE BANNER desires the friends to send reports to it for publication, and have them prepared as briefly as is consistent with the matter given.

Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Berkeley Hall, Boston.

The Fortieth Anniversary will be celebrated in Berkeley Hall, corner of Tremont and Berkeley streets, on Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st, 1888, under the auspices of

THE BOSTON SPIRITUAL TEMPLE SOCIETY.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, Dr. J. C. Street and other talented speakers will participate in the exercises. Superior musical and literary talent, also reliable test-mediums, have been engaged, thereby rendering the attractions of the entertainment second to none.

On Saturday, as one feature of the entertainment, Mr. Fletcher will give his popular lecture, illustrated with dissolving views.

Tremont Temple and Paine Memorial Hall.

A grand Union Celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will take place on March 31st and A ril 1st, under the auspices of the

FIRST SPIRITUALIST LADIES' AID SOCIETY AND CHILDREN'S LYCEUM NO. I. OF BOSTON,

The official notice of which appears on our fifth page.

Cincinnati, O.

On our fifth page will be found the statement made by the Committee of Invitation, in the name of the Spiritualists of Cincinnati, regarding the convocations to be held in that city Sunday, April 1st, to Thursday, April 5th, and the important character of the work sought to be inaugurated thereat.

Another Georgia Wonder Woman.

Very little idea of the mystery which surrounds Mrs. Dixie Jarrett Haygood, says a late number of the Savannah News, who will soon start out on a tour over the world, can be obtained until she is seen in her marvelous performances:

In electric feats she does even more than did Miss Lula Hurst: For instance, a person is blindfolded. An article is hidden, and then she places her hand lightly on the shoulder of the blindfolded person, who goes, without knowing why, directly to the hidden article. Very recently this feature of her performance was given a severe test. A pin was driven into the wall as high as the hand could reach. A lady had been blindfolded, and was to find what was hidden, and the locality. The instant Mrs. Haygood's hand was placed upon the lady's shoulder she walked direct to the wall and took the pin from the wall.

The slate-writing of other claimants is feeble when compared with that of Mrs. Haygood. A small pencil is laid upon a slate and the slate is then placed where seemingly writing could not be done—under a wardrobe, for instance. Answers to questions were made, and each time the answer was satisfactory to the asker. She has received hundreds of dollars in money and valuables by being thus able to obtain from somewhere proper answers to questions. But she is averse to this feature, and will not show it on every occasion. She does not know where the power comes from, and offers no explanation. [No doubt she is a spirit medium, and the manifestations witnessed are executed by decarnated individuals who draw their power—nerve aura—from the body of Mrs. Haygood.—ED. B. OF L.]

In her early days, when but a child, and before she had learned to write, she could cause messages to be written on slates. Among the many instances is this: Whenever the slate would be written on she would become frightened, and was of the opinion that it was done by some other person. One day she decided to test it herself. She thought of a verse in the Bible, "God is Love," and placed the slate where she knew it could not be touched. When a sufficient time had elapsed she examined the slate, and the words, "God is Love," were written there in large letters. An Episcopal minister doubted her ability to do such things, and resolved to put her to a test. He wrote a question on a piece of paper, tore off a piece, and rolling up the fragment upon which the question was written, placed and kept it in his mouth. The other portion of the paper was placed upon a table, and Mrs. Haygood was called upon to give a reply. This was done. The answer was correct; the two pieces of paper were compared, and the minister was so confounded with the fact that he left the house at once.

The Massachusetts Savings Banks.

A Brockton correspondent of the Milford Journal says; "Of all the ideas emanating from the brain of our Governor, his plan for the revision annually of the Savings Banks by their trustees is the most inane. As I understand it, the scheme of our government is a system of checks and counter-checks, to protect the liberties as well as the savings of the people. The Governor's idea is to let the whole matter rest with, and be managed by, the trustees of each bank. If Mr. Ames was a statesman, he would suggest something like this: 'No trustee or officer of any Savings Bank in this Commonwealth shall be a trustee, director, or hold any official position in any other banking institution in the State.' Thousands of dollars have been lost to depositors, and nearly $30,000 in this city, because such a law as the above was not in force."

☞ The non-sectarian status of our public schools is an absolute necessity, if the liberties of this country are to be preserved, and the sooner our people take action in this important matter the better it will be for all concerned. These schools are open alike to Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile. We fully agree with the San Francisco Argonaut, wherein it says that the religious training of children should be left to the parents themselves School attendance is compulsory by law, and good order, good morals, good habits and the rudiments of learning are legitimate subjects for public education, while creeds and catechisms, faiths and beliefs, doctrines and dogmas, are questions of personal preference only, and, as such, pertain to the household alone. This is a free country, so free that each man may worship the God of his choice without le or hindrance, and no church organization sha be permitted to proselyte children at the public cost, and under cover of the laws which compe education.

MRS. ADA HOYT FOYE.—A. L. Coverdale writes us that this excellent platform test medium has been obliged, through ill health, to return once more to her home in California, after having made a second attempt to withstand the rigorous climate in Chicago. Her departure, he says, proves a severe disappointment to the Spiritualists of that city.

A Memorial to Wendell Phillips.

A movement has been started in this city to erect a Memorial Hall to the memory of Wendell Phillips, the great champion of right against wrong, whose voice, strength and purse were ever devoted to the service of suffering humanity. The movement was inaugurated by two meetings in Tremont Temple under the auspices of the Wendell Phillips Hall Association, incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, with the following Board of Officers: President, Nathaniel E. Chase; Directors, Benjamin F. Butler, Alonzo A. Miner, Mary A. Livermore, John Boyle O'Reilly, William H. Dupree and Edwin M. Chamberlain. The first meeting was attended by delegates from labor organizations, who formed a society for raising funds. The evening meeting was largely attended, and was addressed by Gen. Butler, Lieut.-Gov. Brackett, Rev. A. A. Miner, Rev. Edward McGlynn, and others. Gen. Butler made the speech of the evening. He eulogized Phillips, and claimed that the war of the Rebellion was principally sustained and governed by Massachusetts, which was inspired by the voice and pen of Phillips.

The meeting was a great success, and will, it is believed, greatly promote the fund for the Memorial Building, which is to be consecrated to the needs of the public, where any labor or reform organization can obtain hall room at a mere nominal rental. Put us down for $25,00.

Woman Suffrage Meeting.

An executive meeting of the National Woman Suffrage Association of Massachusetts was held at No. 5 Park street, Feb. 24th. The chief events of the past month have been the adverse decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court on the school suffrage law, so far as that law relates to other officers than school committees, and the defeat by a tie vote in the Massachusetts Senate of the bill to give women the right to vote on the license question, this same measure having been passed by the House last year and debated in the Senate. The Boston political class continues to hold fortnightly meetings, and is increasing in interest.

☞ Some two years ago there was a call by the Boston Index Association for funds to be expended in keeping Theodore Parker's tomb in Italy in good condition. According to the printed account at the time, a considerable amount was raised for the purpose; and as we contributed $10, we wish to know if the funds so raised have been expended for the purpose designed. The reason we ask is because we have received no information upon the subject since sending the money to the editor of The Index. Still, a report may have been made, and escaped our attention. We only ask for information.

☞ The New York Sorosis holds its annual dinner on March 20th, and the invitations to guests have been sent out already. It is the intention of the Club to have a brilliant array of guests and to make the event a memorable one. Covers will be laid for several hundred persons, and the entertainment promises to surpass all previous efforts in the way of annual feasts. Lita will probably preside.

☞ An esteemed correspondent, writing from New York City under date of Feb. 25th, says: "Spiritualism in this city was never more prosperous. Notwithstanding the dreadful clouds that some of our would-be friends bring over the cause, the minds of our best people are deeply interested in the subject, and they are investigating without fear or favor."

☞ This week's BANNER is a grand one. There are so many good things on every page that it is unnecessary to designate any one article: all are excellent.

☞ The St. Augustine (Fla.) Press of Feb. 18th contains this editorial tribute to a worthy worker for the cause:

SPIRITUALISM.—Mrs. Clara A. Field, who has lectured before the Spiritualistic Society during the past month, will speak on Sunday at the Society's Rooms, Vaill Block, at 2 P. M. and 7 P. M. The subject for the afternoon will be "What Shall I Do to be Saved?" In the evening the subject will be selected by the audience. Mrs. Field's lectures have been largely attended, and have created a favorable impression among those who have been present. Mrs. Field claims that she speaks from inspiration and not from her own individuality or responsibility. However this may be, the fact cannot be questioned that the lectures by Mrs. Field, or some irresistible source, bear evidence of coming from one who is greatly gifted with intellectual ability, power and force of logical reasoning which would do credit to any theologian in the country.

☞ Dr. Geo. A. Dutton and others approached the Massachusetts Legislature the present session with an appeal for the repeal of the compulsory vaccination statute in this State; but the Committee on Public Health decided that the petitioners "have leave to withdraw." The Bay State will therefore continue to enforce the cruel and disgusting, but medico-endorsed and legally entrenched, rite of vaccination upon its citizens for another year.

Illinois Medical Law.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Perhaps many of your readers may have forgotten the text of the Illinois medical law, and to refresh the memories of those who have, I quote from the Chicago Sentinel of Feb. 23d the following provisions of that singular statute:

"Any person shall be regarded as practicing medicine within the meaning of this act, who shall treat, operate on, or prescribe for the sick or afflicted. Itinerant venders of any drug, nostrum, ointment or appliance of any kind intended for the treatment of disease, or who shall by writing or printing, or any other method, profess to cure or treat disease or deformity by any drug, nostrum, manipulation, or other expedient, shall pay a license of $100 a month into the treasury of the Board."

It is wonderful to my mind that a law of such a nature should be allowed to remain upon the statute-books of Illinois for so many years, and no effort be made for its repeal! And equally remarkable is the companion fact that the State law is willing to compound the alleged incapacity of any irregular practitioner, providing he or she will only pay $1,200 per year as a license for the privilege, into the treasury of the Board.

Does a man who is so very dangerous to the general community that a law must be passed to keep him from practicing, become less dangerous because he pays the "Regular" authorities $100 per month for the privilege! Is it not made clear by this very point that the law is really meant to protect the Allopathic pocket, and not (as alleged) the public health?

ANTI-MONOPOLIST.

"The horse," said Napoleon, "is the link between the animal and God. How do we know that the animals have not a language of their own? I think it very rash to deny it simply because we do not understand it."

Now in mem'ry comes my mother,
As she used in years agone,
To regard the darling dreamers

Oh! I feel her fond look on me
As I list to this refrain
Which is played upon the shingles
By the patter of the rain.

The shipment of Florida oranges to Europe, which was attempted for the first time this winter, has resulted most satisfactorily. About one thousand six hundred boxes of the fruit were sent over during November and December, when the markets of England and Scotland were almost entirely without oranges—as the Spanish and Italian fruit was not then ripe—and the net results on the investment were encouraging.

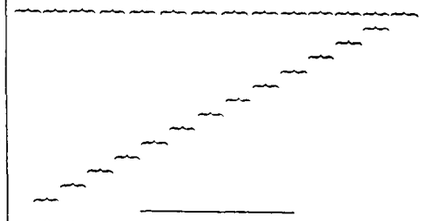
Friends, see Charley Sullivan's card in another column, and keep him at work, as he is a royal good fellow.

AN EARLY SPRING is prophesied by some, but The (Worthington, Minn.) Advance has decided to take no chances in the way of anticipation. "When we see," says its sapient editor, "a flock like the 'undersigned' with the small end pointing north, we can then go out and shout 'Spring!'":



Alluding to the doctrine of the future punishment of the wicked, the Rev. Dr. Parker said while in America, that while the Bible doubtless teaches a posthumous retribution, he does not believe that a single Congregational minister in England to-day preaches the doctrine of a conscious eternal suffering of the wicked.

A bushel of corn distilled will make four gallons of whiskey. The whiskey, made ripe and old by the the new Jay-eye-see rapid process, sells for $4 per gallon, making $16 for four gallons. Of this $16 the farmer gets twenty-five cents, the government gets $3,60; the railroad gets $2; the manufacturer gets $4; the vender gets $6,25; the user gets the devil; while the producer and tax-payer foot the bill.—The Sedgwick (Kan.) Pantagraph.

The Scollay Square nuisances, on Saturday nights especially, should be abated by the authorities. It is a perfect bedlam there all night long—so much so that respectable people in the vicinity cannot sleep. We allude to the Jehus who have an all-night heroic stand on the Square, principally for the accommodation of drunken carousers. Besides, after midnight, frequently, several of the surface railroad employés are at work repairing the track—and are about as loud-mouthed as the Jehus.

EPITAPHS.

He scraped away the mossy spread,
And scratched amid the lichen green,
Until he read: "Kate Kelly, dead,
Age twenty-seven; kerosene."

He sauntered on a rod or two,
And there he found another one:
"Moses Melchizidek McGlue
Here lies below. Blew in his gun."

He turned the corner with a moan,
By thirst for knowledge goaded,
And found upon another stone:
"Did n't know 't was loaded!"

The question whether a marriage in Africa between an Englishman and a woman of an African tribe was valid has just been legally settled. The woman was of the Baralong tribe, which allows more than one wife, and the native ceremonies were used. The court decides that the marriage was not valid, on the ground that it was not formed in accordance with the universal law of Christendom, namely, that marriage should be "the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman, to the exclusion of all others."

Pomologists take on grand airs at the feat of developing a sour crab into a sweet, juicy apple. But what is this in comparison with developing a crab of a woman or of a man into something rich, succulent and appetizing? And yet how many a devoted husband has done it, how many a devoted wife. It is cheap work in comparison, going to a divorce-court for leave to try to find another "ready-made angel."—Boston Herald.

JOSEF HOFMANN.—It is enough to upset a sensitive child's nervous system to find himself overhauled and discussed by a dozen strange doctors. Any imaginative child would be made ill by that, if he was not so in the beginning, says the Boston Record. Yes, indeed! But when it becomes known that the youngster is a spirit-medium, as is the fact, it is doubly damaging that he should be treated as he is at present. His immediate spirit friends can take full care of the health of their instrument if he is dealt with understandingly by mortals. At any rate, his father should keep him away from the doctors(?), that's certain.

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 25th, 1888.—The House to-day adopted a joint resolution as follows: "In the name of the people of Mississippi, we contemplate the contest for home rule for Ireland with that commendation and sympathy which go out from the hearts of a free people to those who are struggling for that liberty which is an everlasting human right coeval with civilized society."

Orders through this office at $1,00 per copy, postage five cents, will be promptly forwarded to the publisher. It is the cap-sheaf of Mr. Morse's labors, and worth many times its cost to all.—The Eastern Star, Bangor, Me.

A Pulpit Wonder.

Pascal Porter is only Eleven Years Old, but a Phenomenal Preacher.

(Williamstown, Ky., Dispatch to Cincinnati Enquirer.)

Great and unflagging interest has been manifested nightly for the past week in the eloquent and wonderful ministrations of the boy preacher, Rev. Pascal Porter, who lives near Madison, Ind., and is only eleven years old. Ministers in the prime of their ministry, ministers grown gray in the service of their Master, hung with rapture upon the words that fell with burning eloquence from his youthful lips.

Never in the history of this place have such crowds assembled to hear the preaching of one person. People of every creed and denomination, and without a creed, and men who had not entered a church for fifteen years attended nightly and were thrilled with interest and filled with wonder. He is a handsome boy, with a bright brown eye and a well-shaped head. Out of the pulpit there is nothing in his manner or speech to indicate his wonderful gift, but in the pulpit he is a veritable giant. He possesses a most wonderful memory and great gift of language, and his sermons were logical, doctrinal and deep, and on each night he spoke on an entirely different subject. While all here proclaim that his preaching is wonderful and interesting, the community are about equally divided as to whether his sermons are original or whether he has committed to memory the sermons of another; but all admit, whether they are original or not, that the boy preacher is a wonder and a prodigy.

He is never at a loss for the right word in the right place, and so thoroughly does he seem to understand and appreciate his subject that if he were not a boy the originality of his discourses would never be questioned. The interest in them is not by any means confined to the fact that they are delivered by a boy. If they were delivered by a minister of mature years and with the same degree of eloquence all would be no less deeply interested.

He was born near Madison, Ind., Nov. 6th, 1876, and is the youngest of a family of seven children—three boys and four girls. As soon as he was old enough to talk he manifested a desire to preach the gospel and make the world better, but was not permitted to enter the ministry until he was nine years of age. His education is limited, only having advanced as far as the fourth grade in the public schools. [He is undoubtedly a spiritual medium—nothing more, nothing less.—ED. B. OF L.]

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

☞ All Spiritualists are cordially invited to become connected with THE ALLIANCE—either as resident or non-resident members—and to take an active part in its work.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead," and all such are invited to become members. NELSON CROSS, President.
J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

The Alliance held its regular meeting at 219 West 46th street, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 22d. The attendance was very full, the large double parlors being taxed to the utmost capacity to accommodate those present.

The report of the Committee upon the best method for scientifically investigating the phenomena was referred to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering and acting upon it in detail. The subject was discussed by a number of the members, each presenting their views upon some point, until the time for adjournment arrived, when the committee arose, reported progress, and asked for further time for consideration.

The next meeting will be held at same place, at eight P. M., Wednesday, March 7th.

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

(Notices under this heading must reach this office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.)

Helen Stuart Richings entertained the inmates of the Dixmont, Pa., Insane Asylum on the evening of the 10th ult. On the 23d ult. she gave a benefit entertainment to the Pittsburgh, Pa., Society of Spiritualists; on the 29th lectured in the Opera House at Irwin Station, Pa.; March 4th she speaks in Cleveland, O., for the benefit of the Children's Lyceum; spends the remainder of March visiting friends in Detroit, Mich., where her address will be 281 Warren Avenue. She speaks at the Cincinnati, O., Anniversary, to be held from April 1st to 5th, and in Norwich, Conn., April 22d and 29th; is not engaged for the month of May; also wishes it understood that Northern societies desiring her services next season must arrange for the Fall and Spring months, as she will pass the mid-winter with her husband in Florida—and respectfully calls the attention of Floridian societies to this fact, as she will accept engagements in that State.

During February Miss M. T. Shelhamer lectured and answered questions at Attleboro', Fitchburg and Revere. During March she will speak in Attleboro', Haverhill, Lowell and other places. Societies wishing to secure the services of Miss S. for platform work the latter part of the season may address her in care of this office.

Warren Chase lectures in Albany, N. Y., March 2d; in New York City, at People's Meeting, March 4th; in Geneva, O., March 11th; in Clyde, O., March 18th; March 25th he will be in Ann Arbor, Mich., with his three grandchildren, who are at school near there. He lectures in Evansville, Ind., the five Sundays of April; and during May and June his address will be Cobden, Ill. Letters will reach him at 402 Adams street, Toledo, O., till March 24th; April, Evansville, Ind.

Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther speaks the Sundays of March for the Spiritual Temple Society holding meetings in Berkeley Hall, Boston. Her address for the time will be 666 Dudley street, care Mrs. George Smith. She speaks in Providence, R. I., the first two Sundays of April—address, 18 East Avenue; in Brockton, Mass., the third Sunday, and will engage the remaining Sundays of the month should an opportunity present itself.

Carrie Van Duzee, who has of late been speaking in Syracuse and Watertown, N. Y., is now at her home in Geneva, O., where she can be addressed for engagements.

Mr. F. A. Wiggin, of Salem, Mass., has spoken during the month of February for the Societies at Salem and Rockport, and last Sunday under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of Brockton. He would like engagements for March and April. Terms moderate.

Frank T. Ripley's time for summer, fall and winter months is, we are informed, filling up, and but a few dates remain. Societies desiring his services can address, for three weeks only, at 323 West 34th street, New York; after that in care of this office.

Geo. A. Fuller, M. D., of Dover, Mass., has just completed a most successful engagement of two Sundays at Norwich, Conn., and will lecture as follows: Brockton, Mass., March 4th; Manchester, N. H., the 11th and 25th; Clinton, Mass., the 18th; Portland, Me., April 1st and 8th. Would like engagements for the remainder of April and all of May in the vicinity of Rutland, Vt. Address for the present, Dover, Mass.

Dr. F. H. Roscoe, of Providence, R. I., can be engaged to conduct Anniversary exercises for the 30th or 31st of March. He is young and talented, and considered one of the most brilliant expounders of the Spiritual Philosophy now before the public.

J. W. Fletcher lectured in Springfield on Sunday, to an audience that crowded Grand Army Hall. He will speak there next Sunday, which closes his present engagement.

Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, of Boston, occupied the platform of the First Spiritualists' Society at Attleboro, Mass., Feb. 19th. She announces that she has closed her Boston office for the season; will be in Rockland, Me., during March; will occupy the platform of the Fitchburg Spiritualist Society, Sunday, April 8th; would like to make engagements for April and May. Address Rockland, Me.

W. F. Peck speaks March 4th at Willimantic, Conn.; at Lynn, Mass., March 11th and 18th; at Brockton, March 25th, 28th and April 1st; at Haverhill, April 8th, 15th and 22d; at Fitchburg, April 29th; at Worcester, May 6th, 20th and 27th. His only open dates are May 13th and the Sundays of June. Societies desiring his services must apply soon. Address 566 Columbus Avenue, Boston.

Mrs. H. S. Lake speaks at Newburyport, Mass., next Sunday, March 4th; at Amesbury, Mass., March 11th; at 1031 Washington street, Boston, March 18th; the Sundays of April at Philadelphia, Pa.; the Sundays of June at Albany, N. Y. Address, 566 Columbus Avenue, Boston, Mass.

Dr. Dean Clarke has returned to Boston and awaits calls for his services from any source where they are needed. He desires at once an engagement for Anniversary, for which he has a special preparation. He has recently won very high appreciation in New York, as may be seen from the reports of the First Society meetings. Keep him employed.

P. C. Mills has been lecturing in several counties in Kansas since last September. He has now gone to Arkansas, to make it his home. He will fill engagements to speak anywhere in that State, Tennessee and Kansas, or at the camp-meetings of the South and West. Address him at Fairmount, Prairie County, Ark.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan (as announced in connection with other matters concerning her work on our third page) will be in Cincinnati, O., during March.

Prof. J. M. Allen has closed his labors further West for the present, and returned to St. Louis, where he will lecture during March. Address 1217 Washington Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., till April. Will make further engagements for months beyond, and for the summer camp-meetings East and West.

J. Frank Baxter has just completed a successful work in Worcester. The evenings anticipated in Gardner this week are necessarily postponed. He will lecture the next two Sundays, March 4th and 11th, in New York City, under the auspices of the First Society of Spiritualists. The last two Sundays he will lecture in Norwich, Conn.

Mrs. Lunt Parker was to speak before the K. of L. Society on Wednesday evening, Feb. 29th; and for the Spiritualists Thursday evening, March 1st, at Grand Ledge, Eaton County, Mich. She would like to make engagements to speak week evenings. Address her, P. O. Box 343, Lansing, Mich.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism

Will be celebrated at Cincinnati, O., beginning on Easter Sunday, April 1st, 1888, and ending Thursday evening, April 5th.

The opening services on Easter day and evening, and the services of the day and evening following, will be held at Grand Army Hall, No. 115 West 6th street, and the services on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will occur at Greenwood Hall, 6th and Vine streets.

Some of the best speakers and mediums now in the public work of Spiritualism have been secured for this occasion, and other engagements will be made, sufficient to insure an array of talent rarely enjoyed by Spiritualists anywhere.

In addition to the Anniversary Exercises, it is decided to make this occasion memorable by the formation of THE OHIO VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF SPIRITUALISTS, the object of which will be the systematization of Spiritualistic work in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and in such other States as have adopted few measures for the advancement of our cause; and it is the intention to make this organization the nucleus for thorough and widely-extended labor in the vineyard of humanity. Societies and neighborhoods are respectfully urged to send good delegates to unite in this prime movement for a better defined advancement, and to actively assist in its successful inauguration.

Now is the time for earnest work!

Ample hotel accommodations will be provided at reduced rates; and good boarding houses will entertain visitors at reasonable charges.

Information upon all points involved in this demonstration may be obtained by addressing any member of the undersigned Committee, in care of The Better Way.

☞ No attention is paid to anonymous communications. Name and address of writer in all cases indispensable as a guaranty of good faith. We cannot undertake to preserve or return communications not used.

W. F. P., WILLIMANTIC, CT.—THE BANNER forms went to press on Monday of last week instead of Tuesday, on account of the holiday (Feb. 22d). We inserted (as usual in all such cases) a DOUBLE-LEADED notice in the paper of the week previous that such would be the case. Your matter came to hand, however, as usual, on Tuesday, after the paper had gone to press. Sorry, brother, but there was no helping the matter.—Friends in some eight or ten other localities in various parts of the country are informed that the same explanation will suffice in their cases as to what became of their notices.

JUST ISSUED.
A REVIEW
OF THE
Seybert Commissioners' Report
OR,
WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.
BY
A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read: it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 3d, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! Holy Spirit, oh! Sacred Presence, whose divine flame of life and being kindleth every heart and every existence throughout creation; oh! most Supreme Intelligence, thou who art the centre and the source of all truth, all light, we approach thee with love in our hearts; we uplift our souls to thee, bearing our aspiration, trusting that it will be acceptable in thy sight. As the odor of the flowers springs forth, making the atmosphere rich and beautiful with the sweet incense, so would the perfume of the human heart ascend to thee, oh! our Father God. May it enrich the atmosphere of each life; may it sweeten the presence of every one; may it indeed be grateful unto thee and thy angel hosts.

We would, oh! our Father, receive from the fountain of divine truth such drops as will indeed refresh our spirits and make our minds more receptive to thy wisdom and words of love. We would, at this time, come into holy and sweet communion with the angels of the higher life. May we receive from them such stimulation as will inspire our lives to new effort and new unfoldment; may they be privileged to bestow upon us such influences as will create peace and harmony in our hearts; and may we all, our Father, be privileged in turn to receive these blessings, and to know within ourselves that there is a better and a brighter condition of being, where the loved ones who have left the earthly form reside, and from whence they may come and minister to our lives.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By A. Anrys.] When a spirit goes through the change called "death," does it suffer much, if any, and does it remain conscious all the while?

ANS.—There is a difference of sensation, and degrees of consciousness, at the moment when the spirit loosens its hold upon the physical body, with different people. One person may be entirely oblivious to external things, so much so as to take no cognizance of what is being done around him in his material environments. In such a condition you are pleased to pronounce the individual unconscious, and yet the spirit may be alive and on the alert to catch whatever is passing around it in the spiritual atmosphere. Such a person suffers little at the moment of dissolution, and through all that period of time in which the stage of unconsciousness remains, because the spirit has gained the ascendency over matter. It does not trouble itself with material things; it is oblivious to any attack of pain throughout the system, and does not even consciously realize when the final struggle takes place; there is a sudden or gradual loosening of the physical hold upon the spirit, as the case may be, and presently the spiritual man emerges from the temple of clay, parts with it quietly and without effort, even though there may seem to be a muscular contortion of the physical form.

Another spirit does not part with his physical form in like manner; he may be partially conscious, realizing within the sensorium of his brain what is taking place around him, and yet not be able to make known to his friends his conscious condition. Perhaps there is still nervous pain and exhaustion throughout the physical form, and the spirit senses this to an extent; therefore he is somewhat discomfited, does not feel so thoroughly at ease as did the first spirit alluded to; yet the pain may not be so intense as it seems to the beholders, although there are muscular contractions and spasmodic movements of the various parts of the body because of the effort made by the spirit to free itself from the physical form, and not the result of any especial pain. It would take a longer time than we have at our command to enumerate all the various conditions and sensations of a multitude of spirits in freeing themselves from the mortal form; each one has that experience peculiar to his own being and surrounding conditions. Many are conscious of the change at the moment when it takes place; they know they are stepping from one condition to another, as a person passes from a room into one more brilliantly lighted; others, again, do not realize the condition at first—do not even know they are parting with the mortal tenement—and for a time remain in a semi-magnetic slumber, from which they gradually awaken, at which time they come to a realization of their conditions and of their change of state.

When the spirit entirely severs itself from the body there is not usually much of pain or uneasiness experienced by the man himself; there is not usually at the last moment even a sensation of fear or trembling. Every spirit, no matter how liberal he may be in his ideas, how sure he may feel concerning the state he is about to enter, or how well satisfied with the change coming to him, must at some moment feel a shrinking from the step which is about to take place. This may not be because of any special fear or dread, but it is a natural condition, innate in the physical body, a shrinking of the vital forces of life, which creates uneasiness throughout the entire being. Those who are uncertain concerning the future, who fear that which is to come to them, have, in addition to the natural or physical shrinking, their own weight of fears and dread; but at the last moment, when the vital forces have run low and the body is about to yield up the spirit within, with all its powers, activities and forces, all the shrinking has ceased, the dread has disappeared, and usually, unless death comes by some accident, suddenly and without warning, creating pain and agony throughout the physical system for a few moments, the last change brings but little pain, little suffering of any kind.

Q.—When a person's body is blown to fragments does the spirit suffer much in consequence of the accident?

A.—In such a calamity the spirit usually feels very much startled, as you would feel were you to receive a very powerful shock from a galvanic battery; the dismemberment of the body, the disruption which comes to the entire physical form, tearing it apart and creating disturbance throughout all its elements, reacts, for a moment or two, upon the spirit, and it takes a few moments for the spirit to collect to itself all those magnetic emanations and elements which it requires for the full completion of its spiritual body; and until these are gathered to itself the spirit may feel disturbed and perhaps unhappy; but it is more as though one had received a powerful electric shock, than any other sensation, which comes to a spirit at such a time as mentioned in the question. It has to do with the spirit whether the disturbance and uneasiness remain long with it or not. If, after receiving those elements and emanations which it requires, the spirit continues to be dissatisfied, is unhappy because of the shock or change, then it will continue uneasy, and will not be in a comfortable condition, and it may be a long time before it adjusts itself to its new surroundings and grows into harmony with the new life it has entered upon. But a spirit who comes to look upon this change as for the best, or at least as one with which it must be satisfied and reconciled, speedily rises above its discomfort, and may feel as happy as any spirit who has passed out from the body under other circumstances.

Q.—Will you give a description of the sensations a spirit experiences in making the change called death?

A.—It would be impossible to give a description of the sensations experienced by spirits in passing from the body, because, as we have said in replying to the previous questions, the sensations of different individuals are as varied as are the different people in human life. One experiences a sensation of quiet passivity in withdrawing from the body in a harmonious, peaceful state of mind, and feels as though it was slowly drifting away upon a calm and quiet sea; there is no pain, no disturbance, no anxiety in its mind; the spirit has overcome the limitations of matter, and is now just floating quietly away to its new life and its new associations.

Another spirit, more positive and active, and perhaps anxious to retain its hold on physical life, feels as though tossed about here and there, because the condition of the man himself is turbulent within, and not quiet and drifting or floating away. The spirit is tossed, bandied about, and feels as though it was pulled on the material side by the physical conditions of life, and again drawn by the spiritual conditions of another existence, and is tossed here and there, feeling disturbed and inharmonious. The reason for this experience lays within: the spirit is unreconciled to the change, and desires to cling to material things, and the physical forces of the body will not supply the needed strength and activity, so it is bandied about between the two conditions, until its hold upon the body is broken, and it feels apart, at least to an extent, from material life. Between these two states of experience souls find many conditions and varied experiences; but at the last moment, when the final hold is broken, the spirit becomes passive and enters into the eternal state—if not reconciled at least—in a quiet, subdued condition.

Q.—[By C. A. Whitaker.] It is very difficult for me to see how a man can retain his consciousness after the disorganization of the material body. As our spirit-friends have passed from the natural to the spiritual, will they please explain the philosophy of this change?

A.—We must always remember that the mortal form serves only as a vehicle for the innate indwelling spirit, and that when this vehicle has served its uses, and supplied the spirit with all the material that it possibly can for its expression, then disorganization sets in, the vehicle has become useless, and can no longer be handled by the thinking, immortal principle of the man, or the soul itself; but if we endow the mortal form with all the attributes of a reasoning, conscious, active man, ignoring any other principle or agency, then we become a materialist, and we cannot possibly understand how consciousness and activity exist independent of the material form. We have first to concede that man is a spirit, and not only a spirit, but also a soul, a life-principle of intelligence and activity, which actuates the spirit, and which, in turn, operates upon the material machine. Conceding this—and we think there is very good evidence of this in the universe, even apart from the claims, the teachings and indubitable demonstrations of Spiritualism, when fully understood—then we shall come to realize that being deprived of the physical body the spirit is not of necessity extinguished, has not lost its consciousness, memory, activity and vital energy; all these may remain with the spirit, and under proper conditions be expressed in even greater ways and with grander power than they were through the limited physical body.

We look abroad in the universe, and behold wonderful manifestations of activity on every hand; above our heads the rolling spheres maintain their march, remaining ever true to their orbits, and forever pursuing their way with ceaseless regularity. Beneath our feet we behold the grains of sand maintaining their position, doing their work, and forever building up around us huge monuments of stone, which speak of the wonderful energy and vitality stamped throughout the universe. The very ocean waves beat in rhythmic regularity from shore to shore, maintaining their place and doing their work with wonderful precision and skill. We gaze upon the physical universe, and realize how the world of nature is performing its work from season to season, and we must, if we reason upon these things closely and analytically, come to believe that there is intelligence displayed throughout all creation, that there are evidences of design, of skill, and universal order, all of which belong to mind; and if mind is extant throughout this physical universe, and if we can see it displayed independent of the organic structure of a human body, then we must believe that intelligence, consciousness, activity and vital energy are in existence, and can express themselves apart from the human form.

Believing this on general grounds, it may not be so difficult for us to take up the supposition which we come to apply to humanity; and so we come back to the first principle of the question, and affirm that mind does exist, with all its attributes and faculties, independent of these organic and material forms. If this be a truth, why is it not possible that the spirit of the individual man may exist, exercising its mind, expressing its thought and activity, even though the physical body has become useless to him and he has been obliged to part with it? But we maintain that while the physical bodies are doing their work, serving as vehicles of expression for the mind, they are, in connection with the mental parts of their natures, building up spiritual bodies that may, under certain circumstances, be as tangible, real and substantial as are their outside forms, and may serve the purposes of consciousness, of mental activity, of the operations of memory as well and perhaps better than do the physical bodies.

There are many subtle forces and gases in the atmosphere, and under the ministrations or revealments of science what wonderful results they may achieve for man when properly applied in external life. These forces and gases may become so resolved in the atmosphere that you cannot handle nor weigh them, yet they exist, because science affirms and demonstrates that they may be gathered and utilized again for practical purposes. You cannot handle, weigh or perceive these elements, yet you are not altogether unfamiliar with them. You may not be able to handle or weigh the spirit of man, yet in demonstration it may be proved that such spiritual existence maintains throughout the universe, and one is as practicable of demonstration as the other.

We believe the time is not far distant when science will take up this question, study it, and investigate the occult laws of being, seeking to know something of the nature of man independent of his material body, and come to analyze more closely the operations of his mind, and seek to discover just how this may work outside the organic brain structure.

We believe when that day arrives much of truth will be revealed, much of the philosophy of the spiritual existence of man; how continuity of memory, of vital energy, of consciousness remains and may be forever revealed to the thinking mind that studies closely the relationship of man to the universe.

He who can find evidences of design, intelligence and order in the outside world need only within himself question, "What of these evidences, and what of these operations within?" He may gaze upon the physical body that is laid low, and remember that there is certainly not the friend who has spoken to him, loved him, in times past; and he may ask, "Where is the consciousness, the memory, the vital activity of that friend?" And he may believe, as he reasons upon the problem, that those forces still remain in existence, for in nature nothing is lost; forms may be resolved back into their natural elements, but the power remains and may be utilized again in other forms and manifestations. If this be so, mental powers and forces, consciousness and memory must also remain intact and insoluble; and if this be so they must be provided with forms for their manifestation and individualized expression.

Q.—[By the same.] Between the sunset of the natural life and the sunrise of the spiritual, is there a period of unconsciousness corresponding to night in the natural world?

A.—With some people, yes; with others, no. Between the sunrise and the sunset there may be, for a spirit, a period of partial or perhaps complete unconsciousness, during which time the spirit is gathering new power, magnetic strength and vital energy for continued existence. Perhaps man has become exhausted through his struggles with material life and physical suffering, and he may have parted with much of his magnetism, and may be in need of restoration; perhaps his nervous forces have been heavily taxed, and he has passed through a period of much suffering, pain and anxiety. If this be so, he will be in need of magnetic recuperation, and pass into a state of slumber or partial unconsciousness, through which he may gather the forces which he most requires; and then the condition will gradually and pleasantly pass away, and the man will arise with new energy, new individual life and vitality, and feel refreshed in every portion of his being.

Another person may pass away from earth and realize that there has been no sunset, and may see only a deepening or gathering of the lights around him, and as he steps from the mortal form, behold a burst of sunlight, and realize that he has only just passed from a darkened road, into a clear and open field that is flooded with sunshine and warmth.

This spirit has not been in need of such recuperation as the first, and he feels his vital energies all alive and active, and an exhilaration takes place throughout his entire being, and he realizes that he is being endowed with new life and power. As he breathes in the atmosphere around him, takes the warmth and sunlight into his life, it is as though an invigorating cordial is coursing through his frame, and he realizes that he has been strengthened immeasurably through the step he has taken. As human life and its experiences are varied, according to habit, constitution, tendency, and surroundings, so the experiences and discipline of the spiritual world as they open upon an ascending soul may be equally varied, and no one individual case represents another in every particular.

Q.—[By Joseph White, Chagrin Falls, O.] What will take the sulphur out of (burning) carbon oil? The oil, you know, has a strong affinity for the sulphur.

A.—So far as we have learned anything upon this question, we should be unwilling to give any definite answer, because we know of nothing that will entirely free the oil from the sulphur; and yet undoubtedly there exists in the universe an agency which will perform this especial work, because we believe that the universe contains within itself all things necessary for the combination and recombination, or disintegration, of all things and substances. Although there is an affinity between the carbon oil and sulphur, it seems to us that there must of necessity also be an element or agent which will dissever these two and separate them. What that is, we confess we do not know, and therefore our answer can be of no service to the friend who submits the question to us.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 10th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Samuel Oliver.

I suppose if others can speak, I can. [Aside he said to a spirit], Wait, wait, dear. [Then he said]: I have a child here with me. I suppose I can speak for the child, because it don't just understand writing letters. I have many friends yet left on earth; and I would say that I come from Rouse's Point, N. Y. When I was in the earth-life, if I do say it, they thought Uncle Sam knew a little something, and as long as I've got in, I'm going to talk for myself. I always thought if I had anything to say it was worth a great deal more if I said it myself.

I'd like what I say to reach my daughter Mary, my son Frank, and the rest of the children. I'd like them to know that it aint all moonshine, as Frank has said. I think when he comes to understand a little further, he will find that as long as he stays in the mortal he can still be learning something more.

[He then turned to a spirit and said]: Ollie, wait a minute, dear; grandpa will talk for you.

I have promised myself I would send a letter as quick as I could to LaForrest. Ollie is a beautiful spirit, an angel spirit. Gran'ma is with him, also Arey.

I am happy and satisfied with the home I have got. I did n't know that it would ever be possible for a spirit to come and say anything after he was laid away; and I did n't believe in "the sleep of the dead," by any means. I thought likely that spirits could come around us from the higher life, but I did n't understand they could control another, and speak through them.

I hope if you send this letter right along that they 'll get it, so as to know it is from Samuel Oliver.

Ollie, the darling child that has just, as you might say, been transplanted into heaven, is beside me; he is my grandchild.

Caroline Hill.

I come from Lynn, Mass. I would like to say to Sarah, and also to Mary and Hannah, who can't get out of the way of thinking "it is all humbug that spirits can return and communicate with mortals," that many times while in the earth-life I felt as if spirits came so near they really touched me, but I had to lock it up in my own bosom, for fear of being scorned and laughed at.

Parsons has said to me, "Well, Caroline, we find now that it would have been better if we had spoken the feelings that came to us, yet we did n't see it in that light. Since we have left the mortal we see more clearly, for then it was looking through a glass, darkly."

Sarah used sometimes to worry for fear I might be lost, because I was a Universalist; but I find I've got just as good a home as she has. It is the life you are living that is building your homes every day. I see I have some friends not far away from here. I have some in Lynn, some in Boston, and also in Lowell. My name is Caroline Hill.

Hannah Markham.

You can set me down as from Easthampton, Conn. I have some friends there yet, but I suppose they won't be thinking of hearing from me. I've seen them look over the paper a good many times, and say, "This one and that one comes, and why don't she? Is she so far away that she don't come to earth, or don't she know how?" In one point it has been because I did n't know how to get control of the instrument; then again I was a little too slow, and before I could get here somebody else got in before me, and I had to stay back awhile longer.

I have thought a good many times of the children. And poor Julia! how much she suffers through the trouble with her eyes. I 'd like to assure her that she will have good eyes when she comes to our side; and she will feel then that she is repaid for all her sufferings on earth. She has suffered a good deal in mind, and in the physical body. She has often wondered if Grandmother ever came near. She thinks that I got into communication with her at one time, and since then she has felt different, although her pathway has been rather hard. Sometimes she has thought: "When I go to the other side will I there have good eyesight?" Yes, I assure her. Hannah Markham.

Frankie Nichols.

Will you let me say a word? Mother says I 'm dead! But I 'm not dead. I aint seen any dead people since I went away. Grandsire knows better. Mother 's afraid she 'll do something wrong—so she won't speak to me. When I come they say: "No, no, no! Frankie is dead." What sense is there in being dead? I can see them feeling unhappy and saying I am dead!

Grandmother says: "Don't trouble, dear boy; your mother will wake up as soon as she feels she can communicate with you, and feel a great deal happier after she does, too." That 's Gran'ma Nichols. Grandsire knows pretty well that I can come back and talk.

I see a good many people when I come back to earth. They think you are far off, because they can't see you. It is only a veil that comes between us, Grandma says; only a shadowy form by your side, saying, "Dear ones, we have not died; we have only crossed the boundary, which you all must do."

I am Frankie Nichols. I went out from Chaddock's Pond. I guess there was going to be a picnic that day, but I don't think they had any.

James Lucas.

I'd like you to say, please, that I am James Lucas, from Thetford, Vt. I can now see that while dwelling in the flesh I had a little power running in this direction, but I did n't fully comprehend it. I used to think I got nervous a good many times; I know it was spiritual forces around me working through me, or trying to. It is the same with other instruments to-day, before the development is what you might really call "brought out." I used to speak of it to Maria, and she 'd say, "Well, I would n't get nervous." She did n't understand any more than I did about it. I used to say that it seemed just as though father was but a little way from me. Then she would say, "Well, perhaps he is near you; but I hope he is in heaven." Where is heaven? Only a step—just beyond the veil that separates the mortal from the immortal.

I have once—yes, twice—come into communication with Annie, and have told her that I could see her as plain as I ever saw her in the mortal. Then she said, "Why can't I see you?" I answered, "You are looking at me with the mortal eye, and I look at you with the spiritual eye; that is all the difference." She thought it was enough, and so it was.

I would like to send greeting to my friends in Thetford, also at South Royalton. One friend, Brother Metcalf, will recognize me when he sees this note from me in the paper, because we were fast friends. I have sometimes felt as if people here forgot us—placing us away as spirits—thinking we don't amount to much; but let me tell you we don't require space as much as you do; but we must have a little space, and we feel as if we were people, fully more so than we did in the mortal.

I 'd like you to add, also, that I am happy. But I find it very different from the early teachings of Orthodoxy, which certainly did n't send everybody to heaven. I find that they knew just as much about it as I did. But what one do n't learn here he must learn on the spirit side.

Cyrus K. Ford.

I suppose soldiers are as welcome as others. I went out, as near as I can reckon your time, in 1863, at Jackson, La., in a skirmish, as they call it. There was a terrific scene at that time, when the bombardment commenced; many, many dear ones mourned that day, and I stayed just long enough to send a message to my wife and five children. I thought then that those dear children would never know a father—the younger ones especially. And, as near as I can reckon up the time, I should say 't was more than twenty-four years ago. I can't just reckon your time, because we are not compelled to in spirit-life; but I know it does seem a long time to them. Some are left, some are scattered, and some have crossed the boundary line of life.

As one comrade and another fell beside me, I said: "Great God! is it possible we are never to look on the old homes again?" And the answer came back: "Yes." And before my breath ceased it seemed as if everything came before me at once. And as at that moment we were doing our duty for the country's sake, so to-day I feel to say that the "boys in blue" and the "boys in grey" have shaken hands together. There is no fighting there now and no ill feeling growing up.

I am much obliged to you for giving me a few moments, and I leave my name—Cyrus K. Ford, of East Boston, Mass.

Nancy Burpee.

My name is Nancy Burpee, and I come from Plainfield, Vt. My friends have often wondered, if such and such a spirit could come and send a little crumb of comfort home, why I could n't. I did n't seem to understand how others could do it, but I see now that I have stood away just a little too far.

I have felt a great many times as though I was entirely forgotten by my earthly friends, but I find, as I come around, that it is not so. People do n't understand how near we come to them. I used to think and question much about the spirit: where was it after it left the body? I could n't believe it went down into the grave; still I felt as if it was so far away it could n't know anything about us here.

I wish to tell all dear friends that I am not so far away but what we can enter the earth-life again and come into communication with mortals, if they provide an instrument for us. I know what will be said by many: "If Nancy was coming back she would come direct to me; it is n't her way to go into a strange place and talk through another."

I do n't bring any secrets that would make trouble. I find I must come where the channel is open. When we look around and see so many anxious for one word of comfort given out from your meetings here, we feel pressed to do it, and we gain some happiness in just making ourselves known.

George is with me and Aleck. I have felt a good many times as I came, that I should perhaps get in somebody's way if I tried to make the attempt. If I have, you must pardon me. I do n't mean to intrude. I never felt, while I was in the mortal, as if I would intrude on any one's rights.

John Frame.

I hardly know just how I got here, but I am here, and Joseph Wood is not far away from me. We have talked the matter over a great deal, and he says: If one can come and give his name, another may do the same. If we never make the attempt, we shan't be able to let mortals know we are living.

I would like to say to my friends that I was cognizant of all the transactions after I passed out. I even attended the funeral. I do n't like the word funeral. They were a pretty good while getting started. I had n't been asleep, as we reckon it, but a few hours—it might have been longer, because we do n't know just how to talk of time—before I knew all about it, and could see every one of them. I know they had n't carried the body off, anyway. I understood all the proceedings, all that was being done, but I had n't the power to make them hear me. I kept speaking, but they did n't take any notice of me. I suppose they did n't know I was there! I saw one and another of Mr. Wood's people coming, and they came from across the street, and I kept talking louder and louder, but they did n't pay any attention. I am John Frame, of Hyde Park, Mass.

William Ashworth.

I'd like to speak a word or two. I lived in Bradford, Eng., but I feel as if I would be as welcome here as if I had lived on this side of the water. When that gentleman stopped talking, I stepped in as quick as ever I could.

I have friends in Lowell. I can see them all the time, and I know they 'd like to hear from me. They do n't know where to place me. I have tried two or three different times before to control, but could n't seem to get hold of the medium. My name is William Ashworth.

Maria Whittaker.

I've often heard it said, "Why don't our friends come? We read your papers, but we never see William's name." And often in the same breath they say: "Nor mother's neither. Why do they not come and make themselves known, as well as others?"

I 'd like you to locate me in what I call the town of Montpelier, Vt. My name is Maria Whittaker. I feel the chills come over me, and I want to get strength enough to speak. I passed away with a good deal of trouble on me; during the last few days I was hardly able to speak to any one; therefore I now partake a little of the old feelings that came to me while I now try to say a few words.

I would like to have them know that John is with me, also Hannah and mother. We are all happy together; but we feel, as we come to earth, that they place us too far away. A silver mist that comes between the spirit and the mortal is all that separates you from us; and when we are so near I often hear them say: "What is it I hear? it sounds many times up in my room. I hear clicking sounds on the chair. I do n't understand what it means." They little know it is the touch of a spirit-hand which brings the vibrations—only little sounds—but every sound means something, as much as the click of the telegraph wire. I do n't think I can talk now, I feel so much of the old sensation which I felt in passing out.

Henry Wilson.

You may place me in South Natick, Mass. I have a kind word for those that are left. I went out rather suddenly. My name is Henry Wilson. I have never controlled a medium before. I did once try to get into communication with Hiram, but I made a poor piece of work of it, therefore it rather discouraged me. I have often been in South Framingham, and felt, as I came into the stores, they must know that Henry was there by the feeling that would creep over some of the old town's-people. But spirits often get disappointed, thinking that mortals understand them, because we hear sounds and think you mortals do. The greatest disappointments that we spirits meet are when we come to earth and find your doors closed and locked against us.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

GRACE AND MYRA MC'F.

You will perhaps remember a communication I received through the Banner Public Circle from a spirit calling herself GRACE; the message was printed Dec. 25th, 1886, and forwarded to me at Altoona, Florida. I wrote you from there that I did not recognize Grace.

Whilst I remained South, and several times since I returned here, I was impressed to write to Grace through the mediumship of Eleanor Martin, 73 Lane Avenue, Columbus, O., who advertises through THE BANNER to answer sealed letters.

I finally wrote her (Grace), placing the sealed letters under absolutely test conditions. During the correspondence she (G.) gave me her full name in earth-life; and, in order to further test her identity, I requested her to again go to the Public Circle and send me a message, specially stipulating she should be known only by the name of Myra McF.

In THE BANNER of Feb. 11th, 1888, I am delighted to find that message, promised me several months since. I fully recognized every name given save one, which I believe will be made known later. The message throughout is interwoven with subjects spoken of in the sealed letters. I have no doubt but that Grace and Myra McF. are identical.

I wish I could express to the readers of the dear BANNER the thorough and complete feeling of restful happiness coming to me through the messages. The hopeful, earnest words of encouragement and consolation, the precious promise of future help and guidance, bring me encouragement that could come from no other source but the angel world, coming as they have to me.

I trust the way through which these messages came to me (and hundreds of others) may always be kept open, to give an opportunity for the loved ones from the other side to bring to all positive evidences of a continued life in the hereafter.

Very truly yours, F. A. GROVE.

Kirksville, Mo., Feb. 17th, 1888.

SADIE DAVIS.

In your paper of Feb. 18th appeared a message from SADIE DAVIS. She speaks of "a kind friend who soothed her last hours with her presence," etc., and says: "I come back to give you the password, which you will recognize; that was, 'God is love'." The friend she refers to was the wife of the one who sends this communication. A few days before her spirit left she promised (if possible) to return and give these words: "God is love." The arrangement was made when they were alone, and no one knew the conversation until it appeared in THE BANNER.

She speaks of her throat and lungs. Last June she came home from Massachusetts to Davis Island, in Maine, with that dreadful disease, consumption, fastened upon her. She passed away Sept. 6th, 1887.

Those of us who believe our spirit friends can make themselves known find comfort and consolation in reading this message. R. I. H.

WORCESTER SMITH.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan. 7th is a communication through J. W. Fletcher, which I recognize as coming from my husband, WORCESTER SMITH.

Yes, I have looked many, many times for his name, and, as he says, wondered why he could not come.

There are many hearts made happy by receiving messages through the BANNER OF LIGHT.

EUROPA.

BY STEPHEN HENRY THAYER.

Great Sovereign of the earth and sea,
Whose sceptre shall forever be
The reign supreme of Liberty,
Draw thou the veil that dims our sight, light thou our eyes,
That we may see!

Beyond the waters, east and west,
Six giant legions ominous rest,
Equipped and armed from sole to crest;
The burdened nations groan and reel, and listen for
The dread behest.

The Ottoman by the Ægean tide
Is bonded; there the navies ride
And train their armaments to bide
The menace from the eagles north, or who will dare
The kings allied.

The cringing Sultan can but wait
The will of other crowns; his fate
Is graven in the hearts that hate
And tremble at his wasting power—the curse of men—
So weak, so great.

. . . . . .

I hear the Empires muttering now—
The northern Cæsar keeps his vow.
And waits and wills both where and how
His sheathless sword shall smite at last; he waits and knits
His iron brow.

I see the Austrians mustering where
The Adriatic's waters glare,
Or by the Danube; and they swear
Eternal vigilance against the Cossack hordes'
So sleepless there.

The crafty Chancellor, outworn,
Who guards the German State, in scorn
Watches the French frontier—his thorn;
Looks north to the Crimean gates, and eastward to
The Golden Horn.

Europa waits the signal, swells
Imperial armies, still compels,
From Britain to the Dardanelles,
Fresh millions to her warrior camps, and millions more,
For ships and shells.

Till on her mighty, martial field
The greatest products she can yield
Are armèd men and sword and shield:
Whole nations bent and strung for what? Oh! Lord, thy thought
Is still concealed!

Great Sovereign of the earth and sea,
Whose sceptre shall forever be
The reign supreme of Liberty,
Draw thou the veil that dims our sight, light thou our eyes
That we may see!

Late February Magazines.

THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE.—To the series of papers under the name "Isms," Dr. J. R. Buchanan contributes one on "The New Anthropology." "Block Island" is the subject of the nineteenth number of descriptive sketches of New England cities and towns, illustrated with portraits and views of prominent points of interest. A portrait of the postmaster of Boston, Gen. J. M. Corse, is the frontispiece, of whom Charles E. Hurd gives some account, mainly of his war record. "The Bride of Newburyport," by Florence E. Weld, and "Grandpa West's Story," by Lizzie M. Whittlesey, are given complete. Several poems and historical records are among the remaining contents. Boston: 36 Bromfield street.

HORTICULTURAL ART JOURNAL.—Two popular fruits and two well-known garden flowers are shown in finely colored lithographs. Valuable hints and suggestions are also given for those engaged in horticultural pursuits. Rochester, N. Y.: Stecher Lithograph Company.

JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN AKADEME.—The leading paper of this month has for its subject, "Philosophy and History," read by Mrs. Lizzie Jones at the meeting of Jan. 17th, with the conversation that followed, treating largely upon the hypothesis of Evolution in History, with allusions to chronicled events. A thoughtful article relates to "The World that Has Been," and in addition are given "Pythagorean Maxims," "Selected Aphorisms," and a Sonnet, "Atheistic Scientists," by Prof. John Stuart Blackie. Alexander Wilder, editor, Newark, N. J.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.—"The Stage and the Pulpit," is the title of the opening article, in which Col. Ingersoll gives his opinion of the comparative merits of the two leading instructors of the public, the conclusion he reaches being that "the stage lightens the cares of life; the pulpit increases the tears and groans of man." Following this are articles upon "Piety Meddling with the Public Schools," "The Sunday Question," "Phantoms of Faith," "The Church and the Word of God," etc. Waco, Texas: J. D. Shaw.

THE INTERSTATE MONTHLIES.—These comprise Grammar School, containing instructive reading for the young; Primary Monthly; Intermediate Monthly and Monthly Primer—all properly illustrated. Chicago and Boston: The Interstate Publishing Company.

THE SEWING MACHINE NEWS (New York City) for this month contains an appreciative notice of William E. Baker, whose recent decease has withdrawn from our community one whose generous liberality will long be held in remembrance by the public.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Philadelphia, Pa., recently, Mrs. John Harvey Humphrey.

Mrs. Humphrey had not been in good health for some years. She formerly resided in Athol, Mass., where, in the early days of Spiritualism, she, together with her late husband, investigated Spiritualism, both becoming convinced of its truthfulness, and remained stanch adherents to the same until their departure to the spirit-world. She also resided in Boston several years, and will be remembered by some Spiritualists. She was one of the oldest subscribers to the BANNER OF LIGHT, taking great pleasure in its perusal. Mrs. Humphrey was beloved and respected by all who knew her, and was a lady in every sense of the word. A son and daughter survive her, who will miss her earthly presence, advice and counsel, but realize that she has simply gone before. She had many other relatives and friends, who will miss her genial society and friendship.

From her home, in Hancock, Vt., Feb. 10th, 1888, Eliza B. Perry, in the 48th year of her earth-life.

Hers was one of those bright and winning natures that drew both old and young to her, whether Spiritualists or church people. She was sick something like a year and a half, and well knew the fatality of her disease. But a braver spirit never awaited the summons to "come up higher" than was hers. She made all the arrangements for her funeral, and requested that the songs be sung that she had selected for the funeral, that she might hear them. Tender and loving hands robed the form of our loved sister for the casket, and laid it away Feb. 14th in its last resting-place. Mrs. Pratt, of East Granville, conducted the funeral services, her remarks being listened to by a large audience.
F. A. E.

From Orchard Park, N. Y., Feb. 13th, 1888, William Hambleton, in his 89th year.

He early accepted the Spiritual Philosophy, and was ever ready to give a reason for his belief. He had taken the BANNER OF LIGHT for many years, and its pleasant columns to him formed the gateway between the two worlds. Offices of responsibility and trust had been confided to him in years past by his townsmen, and he was held in high esteem for his intelligence and manly virtues. Mr. Hambleton leaves a number of sons and daughters to share the neighborhood memories of their worthy sire. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Friends' Meeting-house, and were well attended. The sweet and hopeful music discoursed by the choir was at once a comfort and a solace.
GEO. W. TAYLOR.

From Plymouth, Mass., Feb. 20th, after a very painful illness of two weeks, James Emery Dodge, aged 59 years.

He has been for thirty years an undoubting Spiritualist, and for twenty years a subscriber to the BANNER OF LIGHT, which was to him a herald of "glad tidings of great joy"; his faith was undimmed to the last. He has always been a strong and helpful friend to the poor. He leaves a tender and devoted wife and five children, who, though sustained by a knowledge of truths which were to him an ever-present help, yet mourn his absence in the body, which had become so dear to them as the temple of his loving spirit.

A large circle of relatives and hosts of grateful friends are saddened by his early removal from physical life. L.

From her home in Putnam, Conn., Feb. 9th, Mrs. Rebecca Smith, aged 85 years and 11 months.

She was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and not only believed, but lived it as well. Her life was a natural and practical one, and though a woman of but few words, her deeds of kindness were many.

As the fruit ripens and falls from the tree, so her spirit, through all these long years, had been maturing, and was fully prepared for the change. She fell asleep at the close of a long life's day—fell asleep to awake in the morning of eternity. We all loved her; we shall all miss her; but we know that "our loss is her gain."

The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. S. A. Byrnes, who spoke eloquent and fitting words. Good-bye, sister and friend, we shall meet you again in the land of the immortals.
E. R. D.

From the residence of her son-in-law, Chas. A. Homenway, in Framingham, Mass., Feb. 6th, 1888, Mrs. Jane T. Adams, aged 84 years 11 months and 27 days.

She was one of the first subscribers to the BANNER OF LIGHT, and her faith was strong, sustaining her to the end. She was very mediumistic, and often held communion with those who had gone before. She had seen many loved ones laid away. Funeral services Feb. 9th.

For The Nervous
The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

MAGNETIC INSOLES

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to overestimate the value of warm feet at this season of the year. THOUSANDS OF VALUABLE LIVES are sacrificed every year in consequence of DAMP, COLD FEET. Cold feet lay the foundation for PULMONARY DISEASES, so fatal to the people of our land. Could we make the world know how valuable OUR MAGNETIC FOOT BATTERIES are for keeping up a WARM GENIAL GLOW THROUGH THE FEET AND LIMBS, none would be without them. These INSOLES WARM THE WHOLE BODY, keep the VITAL FORCES UP, magnetize the iron in the blood, and cause a FEELING OF WARMTH AND COMFORT over the whole body. If no other result was produced than to insulate the body from the wet, cold earth, the INSOLES WOULD BE INVALUABLE. In many cases the INSOLES ALONE will cure RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA and SWELLING OF THE LIMBS. $1 a pair or three pairs for $2 to any address by mail. Send stamps or currency in letter, stating size of boot or shoe, and we will send free by mail TO ANY PART OF THE WORLD, Send for our book, "ALL'LAIN ROAD TO HEALTH." Free to any address.

DR. A. H. RICHARDSON, Magnetic Healer, Waverly House, Charlestown. S10

THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

EPPS'S COCOA.
BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." Civil Service Gazette.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

REMINISCENCES OF
A Preacher.

A Radical Romance, by WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall," "

Banner of Light.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1888.

[From the N. Y. Sunday Mercury, Feb. 19th, 1888.]

Angel Visitants.

Materializing for the First Time in a Public Hall; Daring, but Successful Experiment; Spirits Recognized and Interviewed by Friends in the Flesh.

An entertainment, very novel in its character and absorbing in the intensity of its interest, was given last evening in Adelphi Hall, Broadway and 52d street. This was a spiritualistic séance of the materialistic class, and the manner in which the substantial ghosts trooped out of an improvised cabinet, and walked around, talked and shook hands with friends and acquaintances still in the flesh, and among the audience, was surprising to witness. It was the first time that a genuine materializing séance was ever attempted on the stage of a public hall, and nearly all of the leading Spiritualists of the city were present. Before eight o'clock every seat in the hall was occupied with a decidedly intelligent and refined audience. The men all looked professional or business men in good earthly condition and circumstances, and the ladies would compare favorably with those to be found in any audience.

The cabinet was a light frame hung with thick curtains of a deep maroon color. The cabinet was placed up against one of the windows looking out on the street, so that there could have been no closet or cubby-hole behind. Up to the beginning of the séance the curtains were up, showing the inside of the cabinet, and leaving it free for examination by any person who desired to make sure that everything was fair and square, and above-board. A few minutes after eight o'clock Mrs. M. E. Williams, of West 46th street, the medium who was to undertake this bold and advanced step in the substantial production of spiritual phenomena, emerged from a side-room and quietly took a seat beside a stout and pleasant-looking lady between the cabinet and the organ that stood to one side. She was recognized by some of the people in the audience, and was well received. A few minutes later Mr. J. Wilson McDonald, the well-known sculptor, walked into the hall, and, laying his military-looking cloak aside, stepped in front of the cabinet, and proceeded to address the audience. He supposed that it was because he had for thirty-five years been a close and critical student of spiritual phenomena that he had been chosen to introduce the first medium who had ever ventured on a public stage before an indiscriminate audience of the general public. He reminded those present that, being the first attempt of the kind, it was necessarily experimental, and was done to test the question whether the same spiritual manifestations would show in a public hall as in the private homes of the mediums.

This was a great and important step taken by this courageous and wonderful medium. There are, he said, more things in creation that are not seen than what are seen, and there was no reason why there should not be laws governing the unseen matter, as we know there are laws governing what can be seen. These laws were of course beyond the understanding. The phenomenon of materialization has only met with the same opposition as all great truths and discoveries have encountered. He illustrated his remarks on this point by reference to the wonderful powers of the microscope and telescope. Some people would believe only what they saw with the naked eye, but the microscope and telescope showed how very short-sighted such people are.

Mrs. Morrison then took a seat at the organ and played "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the audience joining in singing the words. At the close Mrs. Williams walked up to a little table in front of the cabinet and made a neat little speech in a sweet and sympathetic voice. She told the audience that much of the success of the séance would depend upon them and the conditions they would give out. She then entered the cabinet and the curtains were let down. There was some more singing, and the voice of little Bright Eyes, the spirit-child that always attends Mrs. Williams's cabinet, was heard bidding all good evening.

She mentioned the names of several persons in the audience, who answered to their names. While Bright Eyes was still talking, the manly figure of Frank Cushman put the curtains aside and appeared at the cabinet door, speaking in his strong, deep-volumed voice. He said there were a great many spirits around, many of whom were new to Mrs. Williams's cabinet, and he would not himself take up time, but generously give the strangers a show.

"Papa Holland," the spirit-control and director of the séance, stated that there were very many spirits around. Several spirits now appeared at the door of the cabinet in quick succession and called for relatives in the audience. In every case they were recognized by friends who answered to the names called.

Already a remarkable feature of the séance developed itself in the great variety in appearance, size, age, sex and dress of the spirits who kept trooping out. Then a very handsome young woman came out of the cabinet and said she was Fanny Hazard, the daughter of Thomas R. Hazard, of Vaucluse, R. I. This spirit was very beautiful, very distinct, and won the admiration of all present.

Next a tall, motherly-looking spirit appeared. She said she was Martha, and asked if her son, a Mr. Kidd, was in the audience. Mr. Kidd responded, when she told him she had Annie with her. Mr. Kidd also recognized Annie. He had a talk with them at the cabinet, and the two spirits dematerialized in sight of the audience. It was a remarkable exhibition.

A genteel, slightly proportioned spirit was announced by "Papa" Holland as Mary Cunningham, and called for her mother. The latter, a lady dressed in mourning, recognized the spirit, and had a most affecting interview with her in front of the cabinet. Mother and daughter, between whom a very deep affection seemed to exist, were strongly affected.

A spirit then asked for a Mr. Florentine, and a gentleman about the middle of the audience answered to the name. The spirit said he was his brother, and Mr. Florentine remarked, "That is right." But the spirit said he could not materialize just then—was not strong enough, but hoped to be soon.

"Mary Moss," said Guide Holland, "is the name a spirit gives, and she says she desires to see her mother." A middle-aged lady in the audience recognized the spirit as her daughter, and had a seemingly satisfactory interview with her. She had with her a lady named Beach, whom Mrs. Moss recognized as a friend who had passed over the bourne whence no traveler was said to return, but that is apparently the case no longer. Two distinct forms of young women then appeared at the door of the cabinet, and while the curtains were held aside by spirit-hands, they dematerialized in view of the audience.

The rehabilitated spirit, William Rednock, next appeared to a female friend in the hall, and she recognized him and held quite a conversation with him, which appeared to make the lady happy.

The spirit of Mary Graff walked around with her mother, and then a brace of spirits announced themselves as S. B. Brittan and Dr. Dio Lewis, after which came the spirits of Frank Newton and Gerald Stanley. A tall lady in the audience, with an abundance of gray hair, but a fresh and young-looking face, recognized her son in the next spirit. The mother was greatly overjoyed, and invited the audience up to see her boy. Then came Judge George Barnard, who was recognized by a lady friend in the audience, and also by a gentleman, both of whom assured the Mercury representative afterward that there could be no doubt whatever of its being the veritable Judge Barnard. Alice and Phœbe Cary came next, and a young man named Dyer put on material form and came out to look for his mother.

Some twenty more spirits followed, and the séance, after lasting nearly two hours, came to a close.

A correspondent writing us concerning the above described séance, gives the following additional items of interest:

"The gas-jets were lowered to a dim light, sufficient, however, to discern objects in all parts of the hall, and after some singing, in which the audience joined, such manifestations as generally take place at Mrs. Williams's séances began to occur. Among other occurrences was the appearance of two forms at the same time, claiming to be Fannie and Esther Hazard, both endowed with power of motion and speech. A boy, apparently ten years of age, called his uncle from the audience, and, taking his hand, walked some distance from the cabinet, approaching so near the writer that the grey color of the boy's clothing was easily discernible. The massive form of one calling himself "Amarona," as he slowly dematerialized between the curtains, in full view of all, attracted close attention.

The audience was deeply interested and its deportment perfect. No levity or disorder of any kind was even hinted at. On the whole this first public séance was a great success, and was so pronounced by all who subsequently conversed with the writer.

It is to be hoped this success will encourage Mrs. Williams to give a series of these séances.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, Feb. 26th, the morning exercises were opened with a vocal duet by Mr. J. T. Lillie and Dr. C. T. Buffum. Miss Mintie Eakins accompanist. After an invocation the guides of Mrs. Lillie spoke in reply to the question: "Cannot a new name be given to Modern Spiritualism to make it acceptable to the Christian Church?" I look back for a moment; on what foundation rests all that man has of hope or knowledge of his being? It is Spiritualism. When men ask for a new name it is because they prefer to worship and cleave to their idols rather than be searchers for the truth. Truth needs no new name, no new baptism; it is recognizable wherever found. When we look over the Bible history of the past we find that every extermination of forms and ceremonies has been an expression of truth. The last demonstration of this kind is named Modern Spiritualism. You ask, If it is true why did God not give it long ago? We answer, as God is spirit, it is as old as God; it has been given in past ages, though not accepted, because man did not interpret the Bible history aright. We find it necessary to use intelligence, and doing so we become revisers of past beliefs and are condemned.

The primitive Christians were endowed with spiritual gifts; they were Spiritualists and held circles; tongues of fire rested upon them on the day of Pentecost. That was a glorious séance; that was ancient Spiritualism. The Spiritualism of to-day is another insweeping of that power; it has awakened people to a perception of the spirit side of life. The Pagan and the Christian are turning their attention to it. Wherever you find spirit, there you find God, the universal spirit of life, the infinite expression and embodiment of wisdom, light and love. The time is coming when our earth will evolve men and women who will conquer themselves and stand victors over the physical. They will show no anger; they will rise higher and higher spiritually on this plane of being. What is the reason the world is not ready to receive Spiritualism? It is because men have not outgrown their weaknesses; they are undeveloped spiritually. We enter another chamber in the temple of God when we find the spiritual part of our being reaching outward and beyond. After congregational singing Mrs. Lillie improvised a poem.

Evening.—After singing and an invocation Mrs. Lillie's guides spoke upon "God as a thinking being, and what may be regarded as the brain of God." The brain, she said, is the machinery through which thought is given. If I believed in a personal God I should say his body is as large as the universe, and we parts of that body. All there is of intelligence is God made manifest in the flesh. We have had imperfect conceptions of God. Spiritualism makes plain the way, unravels many of the mysteries of the past, and interprets God as spirit, the moving power of the great whole.

Mrs. Lillie held the close attention of the large and appreciative audience with her eloquence until the close of the service. After congregational singing she improvised a poem. The President, Capt. Richard Holmes, announced that Mrs. A. H. Colby Luther would occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—The Ladies' Industrial Society connected with the Boston Spiritual Temple at Berkeley Hall, held its regular meeting Tuesday, Feb. 21st. In the afternoon a circle was formed, and Mrs. H. W. Cushman, the well-known musical medium, under control, gave many personal tests. At 6 o'clock supper was served to a large company. The exercises of the evening, Mrs. C. N. Mellen presiding, were opened with a trio by Mr. J. T. Lillie, Mr. Charles W. Sullivan and Dr. C. T. Buffum, which was highly applauded. Opening address by Dr. J. L. Paxson. Dr. J. C. Street narrated experiences in his late Western trip, and closed with an original poem. Song by Charles W. Sullivan. Interesting remarks by Mrs. A. E. King, who also gave proof of spirit presence. Piano solos by Willie Boyce and Maudie G. Banks. Mrs. Hattie C. Mason, under control of "Sunshine," made pleasing remarks, as also did Mrs. J. F. Dillingham under control of "Chinnewanna." Both gave tests of spirit presence. Song by Dr. C. T. Buffum, which elicited applause. Remarks by Capt. Richard Holmes and Mrs. Elnora Mason. Mrs. R. S. Lillie made the closing remarks, and was listened to with interest.

Twenty names were added to the list of members, making a total of one hundred and fifteen. The next regular meeting, at which supper will be served at 6 o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of March 6th. All are cordially invited.

MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

81 White street, East Boston.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The control of Dr. D. E. Caswell spoke last Sunday on "The Danger to Modern Spiritualism." He said, substantially: It might be supposed that the danger to be apprehended was from some outside power, some church or class that perhaps antagonized our belief and the integrity of our phenomena; but No, the danger is not from without, but from within. Jealousy is the great and damning sin that threatens to overturn the work of the angels. If the columns of a newspaper are filled with accounts of the supposed exposure of some mediums, who are the ones first to accept and condemn? chiefly the outside world? No! but Spiritualists; those who should know how subtle are the laws governing these phenomena, and who ought to sustain and uphold the assailed, at least until fully proven to be false. Mediums themselves are not exempt from this grave fault, but jealous of some other one who perchance has greater success, are ofttimes loud in denunciation, forgetting that they too may not be invulnerable. The spirit-world has been criticised, and made responsible for all failures; but it is time the tables were turned, and mortals investigated. When those who comprise the circles are pure and honest, then will we get honest results; but if filled with baseness and impurity, it cannot be expected that pure and well-meaning spirits will manifest, and the poor mediums, at the mercy of low, undeveloped spirits, may be led to do that which in their normal state they would not do. The members of a circle bring their own conditions, and if dishonesty occurs, it is usually the reflection of themselves, which the higher spirits are powerless to prevent. He exhorted all to live pure and perfect lives.

The temple was builded, said the speaker, for the promulgation of advanced spiritual and scientific thought, and for all mediums, of every phase of manifestation. Inspirational or physical, all would be welcomed who came with desire for good, no matter what their past had been. The lower library-room was designed for the education of children, and it is expected soon to commence a work with the little ones. If Spiritualism is good for the old, it is equally good for the young, and it is hoped that soon the walls will echo with childish voices.

....

Next Sunday, at 2:45 P. M., there will be another Service of Song, and a fine selection of music has been arranged for the occasion. On Wednesday will be the usual Sociable at 7:30 P. M., in the lower audience room. All are cordially invited.

W. H. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association—Ladies' Aid Parlor, 1031 Washington Street.—A large number of people failed, for want of room, to obtain admission to our meeting last Sunday afternoon, even all standing-room being occupied. Dr. A. H. Richardson opened the exercises with a fine speech. Dr. H. B. Storer, who came from attending the funeral of the mother of our beloved sister, Sarah A. Byrnes, said: "I am glad that on occasions like the one from which I have just come I can stand by a lifeless form and speak the truth. How little comfort there is in a theological religion for those who are called upon to part with loved ones." He with much force briefly replied to the pastor of the Methodist Church at Wakefield, who recently devoted a whole sermon to Spiritualism and Spiritualists. Mr. Joseph D. Stiles gave a test-séance satisfactory to all, about fifty spirits giving their names for recognition.

The hall was again filled at the evening service. Dr. Storer read a poem entitled "Sitting Alone with Conscience," the subject of the evening discourse being "The Judgment of a Soul from the Standpoint of the Evangelical Religion and Spiritualistic." The discourse was listened to with marked attention, and at its close was heartily applauded.

The music of the day was especially fine, consisting of vocal selections by Mrs. Nellie M. Day and exquisite violin solos by Mr. Adolf Lowinsky, a talented graduate of the Conservatory at Leipsic, Germany.

On Friday evening last about fifty of the intimate friends of President Lewis assembled at his home in this city and gave him and his respected wife a surprise party. All enjoyed themselves, and about nine o'clock adjourned to the Ladies' Aid Parlor, where tables were spread with a bountiful collation. After some fine music by Prof. Milligan and Mr. Louis Poole, Mr. A. A. Wheelock, in a witty speech, presented, in behalf of his many friends, Mr. Lewis with an elegant easy-chair. Mrs. Loomis-Hall, in behalf of the spirit-friends, placed upon the chair a very handsome tidy. Mr. Lewis, in a voice trembling with emotion, thanked all present for their gift, and assured them that in the future, as in the past, he should do all in his power for the cause in which he had such a deep interest. Dr. Richardson made one of his characteristic good speeches, and all assembled around the table and passed a pleasant hour. Miss Flossie Waitt entertained all with fancy dances. After a cotillion and one contra dance the company bade host and hostess good-night, and happily wended their way homeward. Next Sunday Dr. Storer, Dr. Richardson, and Mr. Joseph D. Stiles are expected to be present.

F. B. WOODBURY.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall.—Last Sunday the attendance was large, the exercises excellent, Mr. Louis Poole, the talented violinist, recently volunteering his services in connection with our fine orchestra, the whole being under the direction of Prof. Willis Milligan. After the Responsive Readings and Lessons of the Day, readings and recitations were acceptably given by Lottie Giles, Le Roy Thorpe, Addie Hazeltine, Allie Cummings, Rebecca Axe, Millie Geishavener, Jennie Porcelain, and Mrs. Francis. Master Carlton James rendered a fine violin solo and received a deserved encore. Grace Scales always is obliged to come to the platform twice. Jessie Judkins, Rachel Axe and Bertha Eigler were successful as vocalists.

Mr. John Wetherbee made the speech of the morning. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Butler and family arrived safely at New Orleans, and before this time have reached California. All wish them a pleasant sojourn beneath sunny skies and a safe return. The Adonis Club will present "Among the Breakers" at Wells Hall on the evening of March 15th, with an orchestra of twelve pieces under the direction of Prof. Poole.

The following named children will take part in the exercises at Tremont Temple at the Union Anniversary, Saturday morning, March 31st, under the direction of Miss Lucette Webster: Readers, Hattie Dodge, Louise Irvine, Flossie Butler, Addie Hazeltine, Fred Stevens, Isaac Abrams. Vocalists, Jessie Judkins, Grace Scales, Eva Morrison, Annie Barlow. Piano soloist, Master Bertie Newton. Violin soloist, Master Carlton James, making in all one of the finest programmes ever presented to an Anniversary audience. All Lyceum members sympathize with our loved sister, Sarah A. Byrnes, in this hour of her bereavement.

F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Large audiences assemble regularly at this well-known spiritual resort on Sundays. We often hear it asked: "Why does not Mr. Cobb take a larger hall?" but perhaps that gentleman better understands the situation than those who ask the question. A large array of well-known talent is present at each meeting, and an intellectual treat is afforded that amply compensates for any personal discomfort. Sunday, Feb. 19th, Mr. Cobb was the first speaker; he took for his subject: "The Christs of the Ancients," comparing their teachings with the Christians' Christ of to-day. The theme was ably treated by him. Dr. H. B. Storer followed with an address that warmed the souls of his hearers. Mrs. A. E. King, who spoke under control, is fast becoming a bright star in the constellation of speakers. Our blind friend, Bro. Stratton, gave a short address that was highly appreciated. Mr. Hatch of Somerville made one of his rare speeches which the people are always willing to listen to. Mrs. C. W. Odiorne offered some remarks, and gave tests all of which were recognized. Miss Cullen gave some fine facial readings. Dr. Eldredge gave tests and diagnosed several strangers from the audience, who were physically disabled. Miss Peabody, Mrs. Bruce, Mrs. Hattie Young, Mrs. Forester, Mrs. Willard and Miss Coffin are doing grand service from week to week, working in harmony from this rostrum to help along the car of spiritual progress.

COM.

The Echo Spiritualist Meetings were held in Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown, Sunday, Feb. 26th; there was a full attendance, and the services were unusually interesting—the Chairman, W. A. Hale, Prof. Milleson, C. M. A. Twitchell, Mrs. Shackley, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. Thomas, Miss Knox and Dr. C. H. Harding participating.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M. Admission free.

Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th Streets.—The People's Spiritual Meeting (removed from Spencer Hall). Services every Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. Mediums and speakers always present. Frank W. Jones, Conductor.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity, Rev. Mrs. T. B. Stryker, pastor, will hold services every Sunday at 2½ P. M., in Macgregor Hall, Madison Avenue, South-East corner of 59th street (entrance 42 East 59th street). All are cordially invited to be present.

Meetings for Spiritual Manifestations will be held at Adelphi Hall, corner 7th Avenue and 52d street, New York, every Sunday at 2½ P. M. Tests given by Mrs. E. A. Wells of New York.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 3 and 8 P. M. Mediums and speakers welcome. Test Medium and Conductor, Prof. G. W. Van Horn.

Soul Communion Meetings every Tuesday at 3 P. M. sharp, at Mrs. Morrell's, 230 West 36th street.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke very ably upon ten subjects submitted by the audience last Sunday morning, speaking for nearly one hour, and in the evening upon "Why not judge of yourself of that which is right?" a subject selected by the influences speaking through Mrs. Brigham. The first two Sundays in March Mrs. Brigham will speak, first in Berlin, Conn., and second in Saratoga, N. Y. J. Frank Baxter will occupy the platform of the First Society the first and second Sundays in March, promptly at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M.

At the Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon of last Sunday there was a large and appreciative audience. Dr. Dean Clarke opened the meeting by reading an original poem on the advent of Modern Spiritualism, and delivered a lecture that was logical, grand and beautiful from the inspiration that came from singing "The Shining Shore." Dr. Dean Clarke has, in his short stay in New York, won many fast friends, and is regarded as one of our best inspirational speakers. Societies without speakers and wishing to make engagements would do well in giving him a trial. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave twenty-seven recognized tests. She continues to improve in her public platform tests.

New York, Feb. 26th, 1888.

The People's Spiritual Meeting.—Sunday, Feb. 19th, the afternoon session was opened by Mr. James Chartres and Miss Delpha Sawyer with readings, Mr. C. also giving a recitation. Mrs. H. M. Walton, of Brooklyn, read an inspirational address of much merit. Mr. Stone, Dr. Paul H. Collins, and others, followed with remarks. In the evening Mrs. Walton delivered another address, after which Mrs. T. J. Lewis, of Brooklyn, gave tests of spirit presence.

Feb. 26th Mrs. A. S. Cochrane read an inspirational poem on "Spiritual Growth." Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Hamilton and Mr. Goodspeed gave tests, and Dr. Dean Clark made the closing address of the afternoon. The evening session was well provided for in short addresses by Dr. Sarah E. Hervey, Mrs. M. C. Morrell, Mr. Whittlesey, and tests by Mrs. T. J. Lewis.

Hon. Warren Chase will minister to us next Sunday afternoon and evening.

A Conference Meeting will be inaugurated by Mrs. M. C. Morrell at her parlors, 230 West 36th street, Monday evening, March 5th. Short addresses, experiences, and the exercise of "spiritual gifts" the order of exercises. Public cordially welcomed.

F. W. JONES.

230 W. 36th street, New York, Feb. 27th, 1888.

A MUSICAL AND LITERARY ENTERTAINMENT was given by Miss Delpha Sawyer and Miss Hilda Anderson, (assisted by volunteer talent) at No. 323 West 34th street, on Thursday, Feb. 23d, which was attended by many prominent Spiritualists. Miss Anderson is a fine trance medium, and Miss Sawyer is the daughter of Mrs. Carrie M. Sawyer, the noted materializing medium. The parlors were literally crowded, the programme was well rendered, and the patrons highly pleased, so much so that they called for a repetition of the pieces. The "Whistling Solo" was so charmingly rendered that had the young lady, Miss Mamie Horton, who executed it, been concealed from view, all present would have declared at times that it was the singing of a bird. A repetition is in order.

D. ELLSWORTH, Conductor, writes: "The interest in the meetings at 52 Union Square seems to be on the increase, if one can judge by the new faces and the number in attendance. Mrs. Pennell's control, 'Prairie Flower,' gives remarkable tests, both afternoon and evening; Frank T. Ripley has been with us the last two Sunday evenings, and has given some fine tests and interesting talks."

MRS. E. A. WELLS holds a public circle every Tuesday evening—the other evenings being engaged to the private committee. She also gives private sittings daily.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Conservatory Hall, Bedford Avenue, corner Fulton Street.—Services every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M.

Fraternity Rooms, corner Bedford Avenue and South Second Street.—Services every Sunday at 7½ P. M. Children's Lyceum at 3 P. M. The Spiritual Literary Union meets the first and third Saturday of each month at 8 P. M.

310 Livingston Street.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Eureka Hall, 378 Bedford Avenue, near Broadway.—Mrs. A. C. Henderson speaks and gives spirit tests every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

Brooklyn Conference.—Feb. 18th Mrs. P. A. Bertine opened the meeting by reading an original poem written while she was a member of an Orthodox Church. She then spoke under control. Remarks were subsequently made by Mrs. H. M. Walton, Messrs. La Fume, Bowen, Harris, Tice and others. Saturday evening, Feb. 25th, Mrs. Walton read an able paper, written under inspiration, upon "Media, Ancient and Modern." Mr. C. L. Harris, Mrs. Slocum, Mrs. Peaslee, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Ruggles, Mr. J. La Fume, W. C. Bowen and others addressed the meeting. Next Saturday evening, March 2d, Mrs. Walton will read a paper upon "Bible Mediums." Although advanced in years, Mrs. Walton's inspirational powers are strong and of a high order.

FRANK W. JONES, Chairman.

Worcester, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sunday, Feb. 26th, was the last day for the present season of Mr. J. Frank Baxter's engagement with the Spiritualists' Association of Worcester. Large audiences assembled and listened intently to his utterances.

In the afternoon he took for his subject "The Genius and Geniuses of Evolution," in which he showed "the genius" by the uprising and demanding conscience always proving, eventually, a prophecy to fulfillment in justice and need, illustrated in the uprising of labor and the demands of oppressed Ireland. When each of these demands comes, some one from somewhere of power, eloquence and ability comes to the front. Such a one he designated as "the genius" raised for the occasion, as illustrated in a Powderly, and particularly in a Gladstone. The lecture was wholly secular, yet none the less acceptable and needed. Applause was generous and well earned.

In the evening Mr. Baxter gave an interesting and strange lecture on "The Emancipation of the Soul"—strange, because in a realm of discovery and study which was entirely new to most of the hearers. It was entertaining because novel, and it was instructive because by a line of argument, illustrated by facts, he built his platform plausibly up to his conclusions and then showed how corroborated they were by the revealments of clairvoyance and mediumship.

The séance of the evening was very successful, replete in detail of description, readiness of delineation and individual recognition of spirits manifesting, by friends in the audience.

On Friday evening, Feb. 24th, Mr. Baxter benefited the Association with a gratuitous service in recitation and song, surprising all by his great versatility of talents and his aptness to entertain. The Association received from this effort alone some $75, and expressed its thanks therefor on Sunday evening last through its President.

Mr. Baxter's engagement has been a decided success spiritually, financially and socially. The Association engaged Mr. Baxter for the Sundays of the first two months he was at liberty, which, by the way, are not until March and April of 1889. This one fact shows the estimation in which Mr. Baxter is held as a laborer in the cause of Spiritualism.

AUDITOR.

Attleboro, Mass.—On Feb. 19th, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, of Boston, lectured for us afternoon and evening; after each lecture the lady gave a number of psychometric readings which were pronounced correct by the majority of the people.—Feb. 26th, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles lectured for us afternoon and evening to large audiences. After the evening lecture tests and readings were given, most of which were recognized. To say that we were pleased with Mrs. Stiles would not half express our feelings: We were baptized with inspiration from on high. We hope to have her with us again at an early date.

MRS. BENJ. F. BOOMER.

Norwich, Conn.—Mrs. J. A. Chapman, Secretary, writes: "The First Spiritual Union of this city has been favored the last two Sundays with four excellent lectures by Geo. A. Fuller, M. D., of Dover, Mass. The lecture upon 'The Utility of Religion' was especially fine; also the closing lecture upon Spiritualism; 'Within the Gate'—the speaker presenting a view of the future state of existence from a theological standpoint and comparing it with the teachings of Modern Spiritualism.—Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lillie will occupy our platform March 4th and 11th."

Springfield, Mass.—James Lewis writes: "The Spiritualists here have had the pleasure of listening to the popular speaker and medium, J. Wm. Fletcher of Boston, Feb. 19th and 26th. He was greeted by unusually large audiences. Grand Army Hall was too small to hold the people who came miles in sleighs and other conveyances—many out of Connecticut—to hear the speaker, who was frequently interrupted by the applause of his hearers. The tests given after each lecture were highly gratifying, as nearly the whole of them were quickly recognized."

Portsmouth, N. H.—Dr. William Critchley writes: "Sunday, Feb. 26th, we had with us Mrs. E. Clark Kimball of Lawrence, Mass.; this lady and her controls gave us some of the best tests and discourses we ever heard. She is truly a wonderful medium. She gave over a hundred tests at the afternoon and evening séances—nearly all being recognized. She has certainly awakened a profound interest here, and we shall engage her again at the first opportunity. Accept our best wishes for the future success of the dear BANNER."

Fitchburg, Mass.—E. S. Loring, Secretary, writes: "In the absence of Mrs. I. P. A. Whitlock, on account of severe illness, Dr. Mark Smith occupied the platform of the First Spiritualists' Association, on Sunday, Feb. 26th; at 2 P. M. he gave a short lecture, with readings and tests; at 7 P. M., lecture and tests through the audience—also answered sealed letters in presence of the audience very satisfactorily. While there seems to be a marked desire for the phenomenal side of Spiritualism, yet a good, solid lecture is understood and appreciated here."

Salem, Mass.—W. H. H. Thyng, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "Mrs. N. J. Willis occupied our platform Sunday, Feb. 26th. The audiences listened with intense interest to her eloquent and logical remarks on subjects presented by the people. Any society desiring a first-class speaker should give Mrs. Willis a call. She is to be with us again Sunday, March 4th.

Providence, R. I.—Charles Dawbarn gave profound and interesting lectures Feb. 19th and 26th. His subjects were: "Our Responsibility to the Nineteenth Century," "The Future of Modern Spiritualism," "God," and "Universal Progress." Mrs. Juliette Yeaw will be our speaker Sunday, March 4th.

Passed to spirit-life, Feb. 4th, after a few days' illness, William H. Livingston, aged forty-six years.

We wish to thank you, Mr. Editor, for publishing the message from my daughter, MRS. MINNIE LIVINGSTON. It has been recognized by her many friends who knew her in life. She was anxious to gratify her husband, if possible, by a message through THE BANNER. Dear Mr. Holland aided her to do so, but before the message arrived her husband had joined her in spirit-life.

He did not require this last test of the many which she was able to give—through the noble band of workers at Mrs. Williams's cabinet—to enable him to pass away peacefully; he recognized his wife and children in his last hour, and has sent thanks to those loved friends who have so patiently helped him in his investigations.

Again we thank you, dear BANNER, and wish that the angels may shower their choicest blessings on you for the comfort you afford to sorrowing hearts.

Gratefully yours,

MRS. M. C. WILLIAMS.

Amesbury, Mass.—Oscar A. Edgerly and Mrs. Grace D. Patten, of Newburyport, have held public test circles here three successive Sunday evenings, with very satisfactory results. On the afternoon of Sunday, Feb. 19th, we had the pleasure of greeting upon our platform Mrs. Hattie C. Mason, of Boston, whose beautiful singing and good, common sense discourses won the hearts of all when here last season. When she commenced speaking we were doubly gratified to learn that she was under the control of our beloved friend and townsman, the late George W. Morrill, who said he rejoiced to be able, through this instrument, to greet his old friends, and to assure them of his remembrance and kindly feelings toward them. He said the veil that separated us from him was so thin he felt that he could almost grasp them by the hand and say "God bless you all. Go on with the good work in which you are now engaged, and in which I was so much interested before I passed on." He continued by saying, "My work is not yet done, and I shall be with and aid you all in my power." He spoke upward of half an hour, urging his hearers to become not only believers in spirit return, but workers, striving to uplift humanity to a higher and more ennobling condition. "Sunshine" next took possession, giving a number of tests that were readily recognized. The evening service consisted almost entirely of tests. A good audience was in attendance, and apparently highly gratified with the communications received.

Mrs. Mason will be with us again March 18th. Mrs. H. S. Lake will speak here March 11th.

THE NEW THEOLOGY—ITS ESSENTIAL CHRIST OUR SAVIOUR.

BY JACOB EDSON.

The age demands a new theology, a system of religion that shall be simple, comprehensive, explicit and effective; that shall include, comprehend and demonstrate all the truths that have sought expression in the systems of the past in such a manner as to unfold, harmonize and bless the race. Believing that such a system of religion exists in the divine mind and is about to be made known, we feel it to be our privilege as well as duty to do what little we can to prepare the way for its unfoldment. With this object, this aim in view, this paper has been prepared.

Is not the essential Christ, the spiritual manifestation of the divine principle of love, implanted in the human soul? Does it not involve the knowledge of good and evil, its flaming swords, temptation, sorrow and persistent endeavor to unfold, and finally to attain unto and enjoy eternal life? Does not true religion, as distinguished from old theology, consist in goodness, wholeness, real piety, and Christ-like brotherly love in every day business life? Is it not virtue and morality demonstrated as the soul of substance, the unfolding principle of divine life? Is there not now dawning within us the so-called new theology, which so embodies the elements of true religion that it cannot be bound by any church creed, canonical or so-called literal word of God? Does it not bespeak perfection, around which all the exact sciences may revolve as one harmonious body, with it, the new theology, its essential Christ, as their uncreated soul?

Is not this new theology, which we are pleased to call the soul of science, involved in the perfect cause of all causation that is implanted within us, and is seeking through spiritual evolution to evolve and express itself, its infinite love, will and wisdom; and in proportion as it obtains, is it not our Saviour and the Saviour of the race?

From what is it desirable we should be saved? Is it from temptation—being tempted? Is it from sin—the transgression of the law? Or is it from the pain—the penalty that follows transgression? Is it not rather from our external animal, selfish self, we should desire to be saved? Consider the matter for one moment; does it not require three things to constitute a temptation? namely: some knowledge, in conjunction with desire, and opportunity to gratify it? Is it not by and through soul-growth, enlargement of capacity, and progressive improvement in motive, purity of life and deputed spiritual power, to enforce and control, that we are saved from ignorance, the occasion of sin, sorrow and discord, and enabled through persistent repentance and soul-growth to attain eternal life?

Our infinite Father, the perfect Cause, cannot be tempted. He is perfect in knowledge; has no occasion for temptation; there is nothing unpossessed to tempt Him with. We, finite outbirths of the Infinite, with inhering spiritual capacity not yet awakened into consciousness, afford through our animal nature sufficient knowledge to constitute a need, an occasion for temptation. If we had not been tempted, we should not have gone astray, and our spiritual nature might not have obtained a conscious individual entity. Was it not better that we were tempted and fell, if fall it could be called, into a spiritual consciousness of sin and its effects, than to have lived on and on as embryotic substance in the unconscious consciousness of the uncreated Cause, unindividualized particles in the ocean of all good? Is it not better to go to hades (heartrending discord) through the execution of infinite law with its compensating effects, and sometime be somebody that will be of some use to others, than not to go anywhere nor be anything?

The sentiment of the Lord's Prayer is, leave us not in temptation, but deliver us from its evil. Was not the so-called fall the essential feature, the basis of spiritual evolution? Was not the so-called death the change which was made in the Adamic man, when he, in obedience to the lower law, the law of his animal nature, discovered through transgression the higher law, the law of his spiritual nature? Was not the act good, glorious and divine in its effect? Did it not unfold the basic principle through which our Father, the perfect Cause, rests his personality, and proceeds through the execution of law to evolve the same, in his offspring through temptation, sin and sorrow, persistent repentance and soul-growth, that must ultimate through regenerative transformation of the so-called fallen man from the animal through the human into the divine department of spiritual life? Is not temptation required all along the spiral stairway of soul-growth? Are there not discrete degrees of good in use, all along through the unfolding sonship of God in man, in which progressive souls are receptive instrumentalities, in the hands of Providence, to be inspired from the Infinite to do his will, in their especial spheres of spiritual activity? And is it not because of these finite instrumentalities that the Infinite is rendered omnipotent and all-controlling? Is not each individual agent or entity, from the lowest up to the so progressed in soul-growth that naught remains unknown to tempt, or nothing unattained to tempt with, liable to temptation? How is it with the poor unfortunate soul that was damned before he was born, as far as damnation was possible through heredity in the mother who bore him? Is there no compensation for his apparently unmitigated ignorance and depravity? Has he no friend in whom the essential Christ has obtained, to meet and uplift him, if he will be uplifted, either in this world or in the next? Has not the essential Christ that obtained in the humble Nazarene, obtained in other conscious entities, and may not some among all these differentiated Christs be enabled to reach and bring the desponding unfortunate to a knowledge of the truth, that not only the Christ of God, but God himself, is within him, waiting to be awakened, and to come forth? Because the Christ of history, literally preached by professionals whose teachings and practices are as different from the teachings and practice of the Christ, as daylight is different from darkness, has not reached the soul in this life, is it quite right to conclude that there is no Christ among all the differentiated, to enlighten and bring him forth as a brand rescued from the burning?

Possibly some devout Christian may feel that we would degrade and dethrone, if possible, their Lord and Master by supposing there may be other Christs among the differentiated sons of God, possibly better adapted as Saviours, in some special cases and conditions of humanity, than the Jesus Christ, or God-man of Judea. We would not impugn the motive or honest belief of any one, or degrade their ideal Saviour. We would endeavor to render their salvation more effective; we would honor and respect, but not worship or adore, their Jesus. It is the spiritual truth he taught, rather than the individual teacher who taught it, that is our master. It is the higher law, its law giver, that we accept as master and would obey, worship and adore, believing that by so doing the sonship of God, its Christ our Saviour, may obtain in ourselves, and that the kingdom of heaven, with its King enthroned, may be evolved within us.

We believe in the Jesus Christ of Nazareth, in the statement made, that to as many as believed on (in) him, the Christ, to them gave he power to become the sons of God. But if the power given is not utilized, if the law by and through which the gift was obtained is not further unfolded, the sonship of God in the believer is not evolved; consequently the believer remains unprogressed in soul-growth, which soul growth necessarily ultimates through the perfection of the sonship of God in man, in the acquisition and exercise of the spirituality and attributes of God himself. Such a literal belief as may remain unprogressed, partakes of the intellectual rather than of the affectional nature; it may be brutal on the animal plane, rather than spiritual on the divine. The ignorance that is to be deplored is not the ignorance of the head, the intellectual nature that gives the animal man capacity to dominate and control his brother in a cruel or unfriendly manner, but the ignorance of the heart, the affectional nature, in which, through spiritual illumination, is to be opened up the kingdom of heaven.

We believe in the essential Christ as our Saviour, not alone because it obtained in the humble Nazarene, but because it is the embodiment of an eternal principle that inheres in the spiritual fitness of things, and has sought to evolve, express and perfect itself in all the religions that have ever obtained on earth. The Christ of Christianity, considered separate and distinct from the doctrines, creeds, isms, and theological patchworks that have been made and still cling to and enshroud it, is in harmony with itself, its uncreated Cause and all things known. The new theology, with its essential Christ as the soul of substance, challenges investigation. It requires no special pleading, no supercilious priest, no professionals, because it is written in every human soul, so that all may read and apprehend.

Our literal Christians, who are endeavoring to convert the world to their peculiar ideas of God, man and the devil, tell us we must accept salvation as it is in Jesus Christ; that we must believe in him as they teach him, or be damned; no probation hereafter, no matter how moral and upright our lives have been, how much we have sought to benefit and bless others; they tell us Jesus Christ died for the sins of the world; that he made atonement for our sins, paid the debt, paid it all; salvation is free! Come to Jesus and be saved!

Some years since, an eminent divine said in Park-street Church, in our presence, speaking of the Bible: "It is a pictorial, a panoramic expression of truth; if we read it as poetry it is beautifully expressive, adapted to all conceivable conditions of life the human soul can be placed in; but if we read it as prose we materially injure or entirely destroy its meaning." So also in regard to the Christian religion; its Christ, spiritually considered, pure and simple, free from dogma, is the most beautiful, soul-inspiring expression of eternal truth—its uncreated principle of life—that can be conceived; it is adapted to all religions, countries, states and conditions of life in which human souls can be found; all that is needed is to eliminate literalisms and creeds, and evolve in the stead thereof the new theology, its perfect Cause through spiritual evolution.

From a spiritual standpoint the purity of Mary, the so called mother of God, the child's conceptive begetment, its spiritual gestation, travail, birth, growth, life, betrayal and cruel crucifixion between thieves at the behest of the literal church, constitutes the most profound tragedy ever enacted in heaven, earth or hell, and the crowning glory of it all is his, the Christ's, personal resurrection from death and descent into hell to preach to the spirits in prison, that they, through spiritual illumination, might be enabled to break the bonds that bound them and evolve eternal life.

Viewed from the spiritual standpoint, there is no feature in this tragedy which is unreasonable—miraculous in the sense of being opposed to law—not in conformity to a higher law; some incidents may seem to the more literal believers to impinge upon what is called in "Transcendental Physics" the fourth dimension of space—spiritual height and depth—its all in all of law, including the presence and deputed power of the giver. Mary may have been so approached by angelic ministrations—or overshadowed by perfected spirits, holy ghosts—so conditioned by environments that the Infinite obtained preëminently a spiritual beget ment in the finite conception of the harmonious child, in a sense that spiritual evolution could proceed without going through the ordinary process of conviction, conversion and regenerative transformation, that would have otherwise been required to constitute him a differentiated Christ in the sonship of God. The child Jesus may have been so intuitive as well as spiritual in his nature and perception that though the animal department may have had desires and opportunity to gratify them, and consequently have been tempted like as we are, he may not have transgressed the higher law. Be that as it may, we read and believe that he was perfected as the rest of us are, or expect to be, through suffering.

Truth is authority; perceived truth is authoritative, rather than the book or orator that expresses it. If our professional Christian needs a literal instead of a pictorial or symbolic expression of the living word, let him revise his last revision of the so-called word of God, and make it read in accordance with perceived truth which is now known to be true, so that it may express and reflect the truth, its essential Christ, in contradistinction to what was believed to be true in semi-barbarous times. To illustrate: have the text read, "love-shed" instead of "blood-shed"; the former is spiritual, Godlike, divine; the latter is crude, animal, brutal, unchristian and degrading in its effects.

The name in Bible-making times stood for and was meant to express quality, state, substance, and conditions of the party named—what they were, would do, or be. If we would be true to the literal truth perceived, our revised text should read: "There is no other quality of motive, love or affection, but the quality of love, motive and affection possessed by the humble Nazarene, whereby or through which we may be saved." It saved Jesus from the domination of his Adamic nature, his selfish self, and in accordance with inexorable law evolved in him, the essential Christ, the first fruit of the spirit; if not first in time and space, the first in quality of love and affection; and thus demonstrated by precept and example "the way, the truth, and the life." Was he not human as well as divine? Are we not human with some divinity inhering within us? Is not this divinity the Christ in an embryotic state, waiting for awakement to come forth and differentiate itself in the sonship of God?

If, then, there be an essential Christ, an unawakened expectancy, that is uncreated and eternal within us, is it not the pearl of great price, and ought it not to be conceived, gestated and born—projected into objective life—pure and simple, free as far as possible from dogma or creed?

Is not this new theology the soul of substance? Is it not the gospel of all good? Are not pains penal and prophetic? Who is there (if unprejudiced) among the millions on earth that would not believe in and seek to obtain this pearl if it were properly presented to them? Does not belief commence at the point of hearing or conceiving, and end in the condition that knows it to be or not to be, which investigation will decide through the elimination of error, ignorance, superstition and bigotry? Is belief a virtue, or disbelief a crime? Is not an honest doubt in its nature and tendency divine, the basis of infinite evolution? Why, then, teach such creeds, such dogmas or doctrines as "believe or be damned"?

Zoölogists tell us that the chambered nautilus while growing vacates successively the lower apartments of its shell. It has been said that "creeds are but the skins of truth, stuffed and set up," shells to be outgrown. So would we say in the language of the poet:

> "Build thee more stately mansions, oh! my soul,
> As the swift seasons roll;
> Leave thy low vaulted past!
> Let each new temple, nobler than the last
> Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
> Till thou at length art free,
> Leaving thine outgrown shell
> By life's unresting sea."

The history of civilization and philosophy, as well as the history of science and religion, is a gradual and self-disclosing revelation of the absolute, the perfect cause and providence which we believe in, worship, and call God. No religious belief ever obtained among honest men that had not in it some genuine sustaining element. Every belief which has been earnestly held, has been the result of an effort toward truth. It has attained something, but has come short of much. The way to remedy this deficiency is to give higher truth upon the same line. Instead of wrenching from men's grasp the imperfect belief they hold, we should offer them a nobler; we should not violently uproot error, but plant truth so vital so divine, that it will absorb all feebler expressions unto itself, and thus causatively lift receptive inquirers into higher life.

Whoever would bring men into clearer light must not content himself with a protest against old error; he must get hold of the spiritual truth which gave the error its stronghold, and by getting deeper into the same supersede the partial truth by eliminating the ignorance that allowed the error to obtain. The correction of any system of theology or religion lies not so much in the denial of the principle involved, as it does in the further unfoldment and harmonious elucidation of the same, its corollaries, and all states and conditions pertaining thereto.

The new theology, its essential Christ, will of necessity be received when properly presented, because of the principle involved in its practical adaptation to all conditions of the human race. In a word, the essential Christ is the divinity inhering within us "that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will." In the spirit of the new theology, "hew to the line, let the chips fall where they will."

The religion of the future will not ignore or depreciate any principle involved in the religions of the past; it will not ignore modern or ancient spirit-phenomena, but recognizing them as fundamentally essential, worthy of profound consideration, its promoters, standing upon demonstrated facts, will especially emphasize the nobility of our spiritual nature, its divine origin and destiny, the eternality of law, the perfection of its cause, and our relation to each other as children of the common parent. And while we would not dispute in a dogmatic sense with combative defenders of the literal faith, we would, as best we may, voice the living word, its essential Christ, and receptively seek to apprehend and embody its truth, the substance of all religions; recognizing in each an especial mission as means to an end in opening up and unfolding the divine in the human, so that ultimately all may blend as distinctive colors in the bow of promise (attained at-one-ment,) within and through which all shall know through a blessed experience that the perfect Cause, our Father, is, and always has been, at the helm; that his law is being written within us, and that it is our privilege as well as duty to read, be receptive, truthful and diligent, and thus work out our own salvation in harmony with the Infinite that worketh within us, uplifting and saving us as we uplift and bless the race.

The good, the better, and the best, bespeak the perfect. As we may not divide the year into days, or bring a piano into perfect at-tunement without an occasional leap, a residue unused, so in our idea of the perfect Cause it can never be expressed. No matter what our attainments may be, there can never come to the finite soul a state, a condition, in which there will not be a divine energy, a residue, seeking to further unfold and express itself.

[To be concluded in our next.]

The Model Commonwealth (Port Angeles, Wash. Ter.,) announces that the queen of the Cowlitz tribe of Indians died near Freeport recently, and was buried with appropriate aboriginal rites. She was over one hundred years old. The Commonwealth adds: "This is the remnant of what was once a powerful tribe of Indians. There are now only a few left. Some of them are very old."

STRANGE: ISN'T IT?

Written Expressly for the Banner of Light

BY EBEN COBB.

PART II.

A thundering peal, that seemed to shake the earth to its very centre, started me again to my feet. I opened my eyes.

"Good gracious!" cried Paul Hazleton, who at the same instant sprang up with a livid pallor upon his face. "That must have struck somewhere near us! I never heard such a clap; and I am sure I feel the effects of the lightning stroke. But what is the matter?" he inquired, looking anxiously into my face; "you look so wild about the eyes—are you hurt? If you are not, and it is only fear that so moves you, entertain it no further, for we shall have no such shock again at this time. The clouds are now breaking away above us."

I assured my friend that I had sustained no serious injury, although I admitted that I, like himself, felt the effects of the electric fluid upon my nerves.

"Zounds!" exclaimed Paul, as he consulted his watch, "we have been sleeping here for full half an hour; for my part I feel much refreshed. We can now the better enjoy our walk home. Tell me, what is the trouble with you?" he questioned, laying his hand solicitously upon my shoulder. "Something surely is wrong. Speak, for I know you are restraining evidence of pain for fear of alarming me."

"It was nothing but a dream," I answered. "Ask me nothing about it now; I shall be better when we start upon our walk. I will relate it to you then."

I know my answer did not satisfy my friend, but his keen sense of etiquette forbade his questioning further. I stepped out from the shed, and my companion followed me. The clouds over our heads were clearing away, while the dark masses, with their distant intonations of thunder, could be seen spending their force far off to the north. I walked to the left, as I had been led by my strange visitant. There was no forest there, and what I saw of buildings in the middle distance were large, stately houses of opulent farmers. Where I had been conducted through the woods by that angel guide, I saw a broad, level field of waving corn; and on either side the land was clean, and nothing but grass and grain met my view.

My answer to my friend had been, "nothing but a dream," but to me the experience from which I seemed to awake savored of no such nature. There are many realities in life that leave no lasting impression upon the mind, and memory would try in vain in after-time to marshal their details. Dreams, too, those phantom freaks of an unguided mentality, leave behind only a vague but sure impression of their unrealness. But to me every detail of the adventure I had just passed through was more than a reality—if such a thing can be possible: a new sense, an innate, latent power of soul had been roused in conjunction with the working of my ordinary faculties; so that the intensity of mental assurance left behind as a part of memory's store was tenfold, in this case, to the ordinary occurrences of every-day life. I know, as I stood there in a maze of bewilderment, I did not doubt the truthfulness of Nature's laws, nor did I question but what I should sometime know more of the marvelous universe of psychic wonders in which we have our being than I was then informed of.

"Rich farms about here," I remarked carelessly, to my non-metaphysical companion, in order to throw him from the line of my reflection.

"Yes; and rich farmers too; they have held these lands from generation to generation, and they are loth to sell even one acre to our company for building purposes."

This was Paul's utilitarian answer, and I now felt that we were on a sure matter-of-fact footing again. We started upon our return, and I took one longing, farewell look as we left the spot. Not far had we proceeded, when Hazleton, who was a few steps behind me, cried suddenly:

"Halt!"

I obeyed the command, for it was given in true military style, and I was used to its delivery.

"Right-about-face!" came with the same ring of authority.

I did right-about-face, in correct movement, and stood wondering what Paul's jesting freak of mind would concoct for the next order.

"Shoulder satchels!" came with a prompt and forcible utterance, accompanied by a meaning smile.

I placed my hand quickly to my side to feel for the designated equipment. It was not there! I was sure it was there when I sat down in the old shed, for the last thing I remembered of doing before—before what? well, I will say—that lovely being lured me from my seat, was to clasp its fold, which I had opened to take out a bit of lunch. We returned to the shed. I was searching for the missing equipment among the rubbish upon the floor near where I had rested, being more and more convinced that I had simply slept, and that, during my somnolence, some passing straggler had deftly purloined the stray article, when I heard a significant laugh break from Paul's lips.

"Look up!" and he pointed above my head.

I did look up, and there hung my satchel just above where I had been resting. But the manner in which it was held there, for the moment, it so appeared to me, caused my heart to cease its beating. It was suspended to a horseshoe that had been nailed to the beam, and then bent out so as to form a hook!

I seemed to hear again the clap of those earnest hands, and the joyous glow of delight that lit up the face of the beauteous creature of my mysterious service again came before me.

There appeared to be the identical beam: then it was newly hewn; now it was rotten with age, and what had held the old, rust eaten horseshoe in its place was the fact that the nails that held it had been driven into a knotty piece of growth which had better withstood the ravages of time. I glanced scrutinizingly to the side of the shed, and there I saw plainly where an opening, in the form of a doorway, had been boarded up. I measured with my eyes' judgment the height of its bottom from the floor of the shed, and decided it to be just two fair steps. Could that be the doorway in which stood that seraphic form? Did I enter that same passage way in my wild and trying experience? I trembled like an aspen leaf, and big drops of perspiration rolled down my face. I grasped Paul Hazelton by the arm and spoke in a tone of heartfelt solemnity:

"Now, my friend, do not deceive me! Do you know how that satchel came to be hung where we now see it?"

He assured me, upon his honor, he did not. One more piece of information I sought, and that was if my friend knew of the spot, or its locality, where the old structure we were in had originally stood. He informed me that there was the remnant of an old cellar but a short distance away, and he had been told by field-hands whom he had met in that vicinity, that the old shed was formerly attached to a primitive farm-house that once stood upon that cellar.

"Enough!" I cried, clapping my hands with rapture, as had my mystic attendant clapped hers. "Come with me at once and show me the cellar, and question me not until I see fit to unfold to you the theme that is now working in my mind."

I have noticed, in my later study of man, that those who are most ready to curl the lip in derision at mention of the occult and recondite, who scoff with the greatest alacrity at the mere hint that there are some hidden forces yet to be learned of in the so-called immaterial realm of mental nature; that those who are foremost in denouncing as dreamers, fools, idiots and lunatics, all who venture to investigate outside of their "thus saith the Lord," with Quixotic heroism sound their trumpet loudest when there is no real danger near. Let that peculiar deviation in the ordinary current of events, called the supernatural, come directly to their apprehension, and they shrink before its approach in abject fear. In this position my friend Hazelton now found himself. He sensed something in the air not born of cubes and squares, and the meek willingness with which he bent to my will showed that he dreaded the approach of what he would have stoutly declared could not exist.

We left the shed to seek the old cellar, and my companion now pointed, rather than led, the way. He managed to keep in the rear, and, by verbal direction, guide me to the desired spot. As we turned by the corner of a stone wall, along the side of which we had been walking, my friend pointed out a slight elevation of the ground a short distance ahead, and informed me that there was the site of the old cellar. I was about to change my course in the direction indicated, when I observed a man approaching us from toward the location where I had seen the stately farmhouses. The new-comer was walking upon a narrow lane which appeared to end at the spot where we stood. His hair was silver-white, and his bent form and tottering step told that time was fast taking away the life-vigor of his once powerful frame.

"A fine shower we have had," I said, saluting*ly, to the old man, at the same time going to*ward him.

"Very, very," he replied, "and mighty fortunate it was, too. My boy has been thinking as that 'ere field of corn would be a goner, sure. Bless my soul! what a mighty blast of lightning that was, though. I was looking this way when it came down. That's what I came out here for," he continued, "to see where it struck. It made right down for that big old oak stump. I've an idee that it is hit for sure. See! the old chap is smoking now."

As he spoke he pointed with his cane to the remains of the trunk of a tree which had evidently never been felled by the axe, for its topmost part, which was full twelve feet from the ground, had that irregular appearance shown only by the slow operation of decay. That it must have been a monster in its life was evident from the massiveness of its ruins. We drew near to it, and, running down, upon its side was a trail of smouldering fire, making its way through the punky material of the wood.

"Yes, yes," soliloquized the old man, "I thought this 'ere stump was the mark. Well, I guess she's finished now. When I was a boy there was lots of her lower limbs left, but one arter another they've dropped off. We never none of us could make out what on airth blasted that tree. It ought'er lived a thousand years in this soil, with such mighty roots."

I turned and looked toward the old cellar. Just the distance! With my imagination I pictured the house in its place, as I had seen it; its windows in their position; and then I located the one from which I looked. I measured the angle of observation from that window and then turned to the old stump.

"It must have been here that he hitched his horse!" I said to myself, closely examining the wood where I had directed my finger; and there I found what I sought. The bark had long since dropped away, but from the hard, tenacious crust of the old trunk, still holding its own against the ravages of time, protruded the end of what had been a stout piece of iron driven firmly into the tree. It was nearly eaten through by rust, and the outer part, which had in former times made it a thing of utility, had disappeared, but enough remained to bear witness in the awful problem I sought to solve.

"You spoke of the field of corn, my good father, as belonging to your son?" I said questioningly.

"Well, kinder that way. He has the charge on't, though I s'pose I hold the owning on't yet."

"How long have you owned it?" I asked.

"Ever since my good old father died; going on these forty years; and his father gave it to him fifty years back of that. And that was n't the first of our getting on't. I tell you, we Newcombs are one of the oldest families here-a-bouts."

"Then your ancestors have held these lands for many generations back?"

"Yes; ever since the clearing on't. I can't tell you just 'zactly how long 't is; the old Bible has got it all in."

"Is there, or was there ever, a running spring in that cornfield?" I asked; and I paused with eager interest for his reply.

"There was one once upon a time, but that was afore your father or my father was born. I never should thought on't again, but I do remember hearin' tell that it was dry when the woods was cleared around it. The story goes that it spouted out near this big oak, and the spring died when the tree died."

"Most marvelous!" I exclaimed, for the first time giving way to the expression of my inward thoughts—a resolve I had made to myself not to be guilty of during my then present investigation; but the reflection that my ears had heard the limpid flow of that same spring, and my feet had been guided through the quiet depths of that long-ago forest, forced the exclamation from my lips.

"What is marvelous?" asked both my companions at the same time; moved to earnest curiosity by my strange manner of speaking.

"That a spring, overshadowed by a large tree, should always give out when the tree dies," I answered, evasively.

"Do you know anything of the inhabitants of the house that formerly stood there?" I continued, at the same time pointing to the old cellar.

"No; nor nobody else, as I knows on. The old place ha'n't got much hist'ry anyhow. All that I know about it is, that there is a gravestone over in the old burying-ground that tells how the chap who was put under it was killed by lightning. I remember how it reads now: 'Here lies buried ye body of Goshem Scriler, killed by lightning ye thirty-first of July sixteen hundred and sixty-eight.' The story used to go that he was the man that cleared up and started the place. Let 's see," added the old farmer, after reflecting a few moments, "it 's just two hundred years ago this very day that the lightning struck him down; that 's mighty curious."

"More than that," thought I, for I was then standing upon the very spot where I had every reason to believe he fell.

"Did you ever hear any old people about here in your younger days speak of two persons, a young lady and her lover, who had long before this time suddenly disappeared from this same place?"

I tried to be calm, but I know I turned deadly pale when the old man opened wide his deep-sunken hazel eyes, and bent upon me a look full of wonder and astonishment.

"I am now hard on to ninety," he spoke in a slow, thoughtful tone, "and I have a keener memory by far than any around here; and yet it 's like a dream to me; but I have it now."

He worked his wrinkled hands for a short time through his sparse white locks, and then proceeded:

"I heard my good old grandmother tell the story when I was but a little chick: bless me! how we do remember the things of those young days. This very Goshem Scriler lived here with a young gal, and a tarnal handsome young gal she was, too—so the story goes. Whether or no she was any related to him nobody knowed; but he tried desperate hard to have her marry him. But there was a real comely young fellow that the lass loved, and she was determined to have him. The young chap loved the girl terribly, but the man Scriler shut her up in the house and forbid the lover coming near the place. Now a brother of this Goshem Scriler, who lived not far away, had kind o' adopted this same young man when the boy was a little youngster, for he never had any children himself, and his wife had been dead for many years. About this time the brother died, and Goshem laid claim to all his brother's property. But one day the young lover gave out that he had come across a will made in his favor by his foster-father, giving to the adopted son the property claimed by Goshem. Whether he did or no, nobody never knew, for he never showed himself to claim a cent of it. He stole the young girl away from the hard-hearted old chap, and not a soul ever knew where they made off to. Some said they went one way and some another; but nobody ever knew for sartin."

When the old man ended his story I stood with folded arms, and my eyes were searching amid the brush and bramble that was growing wildly along the front brow of the old cellar. I stepped quickly over to where I had been glancing, and pushing away the brush with my feet I closely examined the ground beneath. Although mostly overgrown with an accumulation of turf and brier, still, to my great joy, it was there—the very slab, in its place, that had served in years agone as a stepping-stone to the front door of the house. The forward edge was plainly visible nearly its entire length.

"That 's the old doorstep, I guess," remarked the aged farmer; "but 't aint been crossed this many a day. What you looking for there, my young man? some piece of old crockery or the like? You city chaps are allers trying to find some piece of stuff as belonged to the folks of old."

"You are right," I said, glad to avail myself of the bent of the old man's mind; "and do you know that under that stone is just the place I should expect to find what I seek."

"Be mightily disappointed, my boy, if you expect to find anything there. They puts things under the corner-stones of meeting-houses and the like, but we old farmers never trouble ourselves with burying nick-nacks under our door-steps."

"Whose land does this stone lay on?" I pointedly asked.

"Mine for sure," returned the old man.

"Will you give or sell me the privilege of turning it up out of its resting-place?"

"Why, yes; but, for conscience sake—say, you are sober, aint you, my young friend?" and the aged questioner peered into my eyes as though to assure himself that I was neither intoxicated nor insane.

I went to a cart-opening in the wall near by, and, taking out two of the stout bar-rails, I returned. With the help of Paul and the old man the stone was lifted from its long resting-place. Paul and the owner of the stone stood there like statues and gazed down upon the picture that was opened up to view. How clean-cut and plain it was to read! There upon a background of dark red sandy loam appeared frescoed an ancient fowling-piece. The flint-lock was sprung, as though it was intended by the artist to represent the gun as having been fired just previous to its transferment to the earthy canvas. By the side of the gun was a light-colored, oblong form, as though the artist had meant to represent an old, time-stained document. A visible crease ran through its centre, indicating where the parchment—for such the material seemed to be—had been folded. There were three red seals upon the open document, and so clear was their material that the red wax glistened from the illumination of the declining sun.

The old man was the first to speak. "What is this? what does it mean?" he questioned, as though he asked of the winds.

"I will tell you if you will help me through to the end," I answered in a tone of absolute confidence.

"By mighty! Strange, is n't it? I will help you through if it takes my last breath!" and as he spoke the veteran straightened up his form like a newly-awakened Hercules.

I knew well that the picture before us would lose its harmony the moment we disturbed the pigments with which it was formed. At our touch the distinct wood-work of the gun blended off with the corroding earth about it. The lock and barrel were but little more than so much of the soil in which they were buried. One portion of the deposit was as perfect as when it was hid away for its long secretion, and that was the three wax seals. The light-colored environment—the parchment substance of the document—was kindred to the dust about it, and dissolved at touch into a thing of air. I lifted what was still coherent of the fowling-piece, and for a moment held it before me, a mere flimsy skeleton of a former stability. My hand went involuntarily to my hip-pocket, and I felt my pistol. It seemed a strange continuity of memory's association that I fancied I had grasped my own deadly instrument to avenge the last fatal shot from the thing of rust and decay then held in my hand.

"One search more," I said, throwing down the rusty relic.

"What now?" responded the old man.

"The well!"

"No! No! don't go near there!" was my hoary assistant's rejoinder.

"There is no well about here," ventured my friend Paul.

"Yes, there is a well; but I dread to speak of it," said the farmer correctingly. "I have never known a person to speak of it for the past fifty years. Anything else, my young friend, but do n't go near that well! They used to say that every living thing that drank from it was sure to die soon after. There are lizards and all sorts of venomous snakes about it. Its water is a rank poison; and ivy and dogwood grow thick about the spot."

"I shall go to it," I answered firmly; "and I am going to hold you to your word. You promised that you would help me through if it took your last breath; and I know there is no coward blood flowing in those sturdy veins of yours. Neither ivy nor dogwood ever poison me, nor do I care to drink the water of the well; but I must do my best to reach its bottom. Will you assist me?"

The old man said he would.

I asked no question regarding the location of the dreaded spot, for the eyes of the old man glanced in the direction of mine the moment I spoke of it. There I discovered a wild collection of unpruned growth, as though the ages had been allowed to bestow unmolested their contributions of floral discord and entanglement to entirely hedge away from scrutinizing humanity the least indication of there being anything in their weird embrace worth the seeking. By the now already enthused veteran's directions I proceeded to one of the farm-houses that had drawn my attention as I stepped out from the old shed, and procured such paraphernalia as I deemed would be wanted in the last intensely absorbing exploration. I returned with a long rope, a large basket, such as farmers use in gathering their harvest, and a strong, well-sharpened hatchet.

I soon cleared away an entrance to the well. I got upon my hands and knees, and looked down. At first all was dark, but as my eyes become more adjusted to the change, I could see more distinctly. The well was dry, but there was not light enough at the bottom for me to distinguish any object that might have been there, save I could see that the moss and accumulated dirt that lay there presented an uneven, corrugated surface.

"Can you see the water?" asked the old man.

I answered that the well appeared to be dry, and at the same time I dropped a stone above it. The missive struck the bottom with a dead, sluggish sound, plainly showing that it had found nothing to impede its progress except the waterless sediment below.

"'T is n't once in fifty years, my young friend, that you could have found this well dry," remarked the farmer; "this drought has played the deuce with the whole of us on wells."

I removed my shoes, and, bidding my attendants lower the basket at my call, I slowly began to descend. The orb of the well was not large, and I found no difficulty in finding easy footholds upon its rocky sides. I cannot describe my feelings as I was cautiously making my way down. I prayed that I might not find what I sought, and still I felt in my inmost soul that my prayer was a vain one. My feet soon rested upon the bottom, and they sunk above the ankles in the soft ooze. I stooped down, and pushing aside the damp, dead leaves and moss, I drew forth a human skull! In an instant all the tremor of my nerves had ceased. I seemed to receive from an unseen power a new strength; and instead of abhorrence I felt an unspeakable joy at my discovery. The skull was small and finely shaped. I could not resist drawing my handkerchief and wiping the dirt cleanly away from the teeth. I had never seen but one such cluster of pearly beauty before, and that was when gems like those then before me glistened through that radiant smile of thankfulness that beamed upon me in the out-building, as I suspended my satchel upon the horseshoe hook at this fair owner's bidding.

I called for the basket to be lowered, and when it had descended so that I could easily reach it above my head, I bade my friends hold it poised there until I had finished my task. I worked diligently, and wonderful it was to me then—a fact I could not explain—I was directed more by what I then called intuition than by the direction of my own normal will in the guidance of my muscle force. My hands appeared, as it were, controlled by an intelligence other than my own; and relic after relic found its way in quick succession to the basket without so much as a single thought-direction of mine.

The strange influence left me, and I knew my task was completed. The large basket was full, and I gave my companions word to carefully draw it up. I followed slowly after the charge, and was soon safe above ground. We bore the basket to the old shed, and one after another of the pieces that made up its contents I laid out carefully upon the floor. I was well schooled in anatomy, it being one of the main branches of study I had mastered in my lessons pertaining to the human form. When the last bone was in place, I had two complete human skeletons upon the shed floor. One was slight and delicately molded; its anatomy told that its once indwelling soul must have been a female of tender years. The other was that of a male, and its structure indicated that it had moved in a form of manly strength and beauty. When I had placed them all together, so thorough had been my search, not one bone was missing, and they were all perfect, except that in the back of the male skull there was a round hole; and as I turned it to lay it in its place a leaden bullet dropped out and rolled down through a large crack in the floor.

We sat down, and I told my friends the story of my dream—"dream" I called it to them, but to myself I knew it to be a living reality.

The setting sun was casting its last evening rays into the shed as I finished my recital; and as I was resolved to stay there and keep vigil over those bones through the coming night, I prevailed upon my friend Paul to return without me and excuse my absence to his good wife.

The old farmer left, and in a short time returned, riding up to the shed in a light wagon. Good old soul! he appeared to take as much interest in the matter as I did myself. He had brought a mattress, quilts and pillow, and a good supply of tea and eatables. As he left he promised to be with me in the morning to give all needed assistance.

Morning came; and the good old farmer was there with his horse and wagon. More than that: he had procured two neat coffins, which he had brought with him. We placed the two skeletons in their respective caskets, and by the old man's guidance the sexton of the graveyard was soon one of our party.

Two graves were dug in a retired spot, beneath the shade of a weeping-willow. At the close of the day a goodly group stood within the precincts of that ancient resting place of the dead, listening to the utterances of a benign and warm-hearted minister as he spoke words of true inspiration over two newly-made graves.

The old farmer, the sexton and myself were the last left upon the spot. I lingered for a moment over the shorter grave. I know I dropped a tear upon it; but I quickly brushed the gathering drops from my cheeks.

The sun was again low in the west. A solemn, subdued light relieved the thick, embowering shrubbery about the spot with a mellowness of shade such as Claude might summons from his pallet to delineate the land of holy rest.

I turned away reluctantly, nor had I more than turned when I felt that same soft hand laid gently but restrainingly upon my shoulder. I yielded to the delicate touch, and again my attitude was before the shorter grave. I will not strive with the poor, meagre force of earth's gross language to describe the scene that was unfolded before me. There may be, deep down in the hidden mine of every soul, a germ that has the latent power to grasp the fullness of its comprehension; but, be the germ there, some other breath, else than that known of the Infinite here below, must fan it to its awakening. That same face was there before me! not now pale and terror-stricken, but illuminated with a heavenly light. Those eyes again, zones of ether blue, flooded me with their rays; and the lips, now coral-red, breathed an earnest blessing upon me. Those two rows of pearly beauty beneath them sent forth a language of their own, as though to tell me that every atom in the universe hath a thankfulness of its own. An angelic form, clothed in transparent white, and of a texture so fine that it seemed as though the absolute silence of earth might mar it! The two hands took mine, and those warm lips met mine with a kiss—a kiss such as a sister, all pure of heart, might bestow upon a loving brother. Those hands were not withdrawn from mine; they melted away in my gentle hold, and the whole seraphic presence mingled with the evening sweetness of the dewy air.

I stood alone!

The soft tones of the winged choristers stole over the serene atmosphere of the embosomed spot. Blended in balmy unison with the perfume from bush and vine, rose the incense of the humble herbage at my feet—fit orison to the soul that had seemed to draw its radiant form from their own loveliness.

"What inscription shall I have chiseled upon their headstones?" asked the sexton, as we were about to part company.

I wrote on a slip of paper, and handed to him:

"DIED JULY 31ST, 1668.
THE SPIRIT NOW HATH REST."

"On both?"

"Yes; the same on both."

DEEDS—NOT WORDS.

BY JAMES M. ROGERS.

Not martyr cross nor saintly crown
Can reach divinest heights of bliss,
Or draw celestial glory down
To harmonize a world like this;

But perfumes of each day well spent,
The music of each hour sublime,
Will sweeten all a life thus lent,
And fill with song all after-time.

The angel ones are ever near
To those who listen to their prayer;
And he who seeks his duties here,
Will find immortal guerdon there.

Not empty words, but fitting deeds,
The aid to all its being nears,
Will give the soul the help it needs
To round its angles into spheres.

The hermit's cell, the bigot's fire,
Lead to a land of barren thorns—
The flowery clime our hopes desire
The path of kindly love adorns.

Love wins where hate forever fails,
To those who give still more is given;
And he who lists when sorrow calls,
Begins on earth the life of heaven!

PRACTICAL OCCULTISM: A Course of Lectures through the Trance Mediumship of J. J. Morse. With a Preface by William Emmette Coleman. San Francisco, Cal.: "Carrier Dove" Publishing House. For sale by Colby & Rich.

Mr. Morse, the medium author of this work, is well known throughout this country and England as an able and generally acceptable exponent of Modern Spiritualism. The title, "Practical Occultism," appears to be employed as the equivalent of Spiritualism, probably in accommodation to a somewhat popular fancy which seems to desire some new or different term by which to designate the unfolding Spiritual Philosophy of the present age. And the term "Practical Occultism" appears furthermore to be used in antithesis to the mystical or speculative Occultism, imported mainly from Oriental and ancient sources, which is captivating so many minds at the present time.

Parenthetically, it seems to us that this substitution of the word "Occult" and its derivatives for Spiritual and Spiritualism, is being pushed to the verge of absurdity in some quarters. "Occult" means, to quote the dictionaries, "secret, hidden, concealed, unknown, latent, abstruse;" "undiscovered, undetected." Yet we have "Occult Societies," and "Occult Publishing Houses," which terms properly mean societies and publishing houses that are either secret, or for the promotion of secrecy, concealment, darkness. And we have "Occultists," who should be believers in concealment, or obscurity; and "Occultism," which really is obscurity itself. Is not the only rational purpose of associated investigation to obtain light, and that of publication to diffuse light, and not darkness? If so, are not the above designations palpable misnomers? That which is occult, when explained, ceases to be Occultism.

At all events, Mr. Morse's lectures are in fact, as strongly stated in the preface, expositions of "a common-sense, scientific, non-mystical Spiritualism—free at all times from the extravagances and perversions, the metaphysical idealisms, and the rhapsodical moonshine with which in some quarters the Spiritual Philosophy has been heavily burdened, to its sore detriment and disgrace."

The topic first discussed is "The Trance as the Doorway to the Occult"—meaning that through the condition called trance (from the Latin trans, over) there is or may be an actual passing over of the spirit or the real personality into the domain of the spiritual, which is the occult, or that which is hidden from outward consciousness. This passing over is as real as in the case of death, only the separation from the body is not completed as in that case; and through its means something can be learned of that world or state into which death will sometime introduce us.

It hardly needs be said that by trance the author here means something different from what is popularly understood by that term—namely, a condition of unconsciousness in which one is controlled to speak or write as from a disembodied spirit. This sort of trance is often merely a closing of the external senses without any corresponding opening of the internal perceptions; and consequently there is no conscious passing over into another or higher state, and nothing is apparently learned of such a state by the subject. This distinction is hardly made as clear as desirable by our author; nevertheless it is implied in his delineation.

He proceeds to point out the three ways by which the trance may be induced—first, by self-induction, which is called the "natural" method; second, by magnetic or mesmeric processes; third, by spiritual influence. Whether either of these is available in any particular case depends upon certain constitutional aptitudes in the individual. The physiology of the process is described at some length, and the proper prerequisites for entering upon it, to useful ends, are pointed out—namely, health, harmony and cleanliness of body, accompanied equally by mental, moral and spiritual cleanliness in the individual subject. The counter theory that the mental and moral character of a trance-subject has nothing to do with the phenomena presented through that subject is rightly pronounced "a most dangerous and damaging doctrine, which hinders all psychical progress or spiritual development."

While the trance, induced under proper conditions and for useful ends, is presented as a most valuable means of obtaining knowledge, yet proper cautions are given against its unwise induction or indulgence. The use of narcotics to induce the state is always dangerous. Reliance upon mesmerization leads to dependence on the will of others which is unfavorable to the best growth; while a too frequent or continued exercise of the subjective powers in the trance leads to a debilitation of the external faculties which is not desirable.

In the second lecture the subject of "Mediumship—its Physical, Mental and Spiritual Conditions," is lucidly and sensibly considered. The author does not regard mediumship as an undisguised blessing, to be sought for by all individuals and to be cultivated by hot-house processes; but on the contrary it is of very questionable benefit, if not a positive injury, to many, depending on natural aptitude, physical health, and the uses to which it is applied. The sound opinion is expressed that "When mediumship comes or expresses itself spontaneously, manifesting itself of its own inherent power, then there can be no question that, rightly used and within proper, rational limits, the exercise of mediumship can be made a means of great blessing to the individual; not only to the individual but to the community as well. . . . But the persistent effort to cultivate mediumship, or to force it into activity, should always be discouraged and discountenanced."

The physiological effects of different forms of mediumship are delineated, and the opinion given that, properly exercised, mediumship should always be conducive to physical as well as mental and moral health, and where it is not so it should be discontinued. The mental and spiritual results of a proper cultivation of mediumship are declared to be the development of one's own spiritual powers, so that they may be exercised independently of control. This is real "adeptship." "Where the individual is always the subject of a dominant and controlling power, the day of tutelage is indefinitely prolonged, and no real advantage to the individual accrues."

The third lecture discusses the foundation, development, dangers and advantages of mediumship. It is regarded as the indication of superior powers latent in humanity while living in this world, and has nothing miraculous or special about it, but is a legitimate unfoldment of innate possibilities. But these possibilities should not be cultivated to the neglect of duties due to this world, which has the primary claim on all. Some of the methods in vogue for developing mediumship—such as sitting in circles where all sorts of psychological influences are absorbed, until one becomes so filled with contending forces as to be in a state of psychological fever all the time, or so exhausted as to become limp and useless: these methods are strongly disapproved. Mediumship which comes spontaneously is likely to be most satisfactory, and when it so comes, its unseen directors can generally be depended upon to give needful instruction for its development. "Personal moral responsibility must enter into the development of all forms of mediumship." It should be the development of the body, mind and soul of the individual, with due and proper attention to every law of health, of mental culture, and of spiritual unfoldment.

The dangers of mediumship are strongly set forth, namely, that of "being imposed upon by spiritual vagrants, who may come just for the purpose of amusing themselves and bewildering you;" also, dangers to the health, to the mind, and to the nervous system, arising from the inordinate practice of mediumship, which causes a drain upon the most refined forces of the system, and may result in muscular and nervous paralysis—in "a drying up of the vital juices of the being, causing premature age, and destroying health of body and vigor of mind." What is urged under this head may be profitably studied by all who have any inclination to cultivate mediumship as a source of amusement, or of pecuniary gain, or from love of notoriety. On the other hand, the advantages and blessings of mediumship, when rightly and orderly developed for its nobler uses, are justly portrayed as indeed great.

The fourth lecture deals with Magic, Sorcery and Witchcraft, in which it is claimed that the alleged extraordinary marvels of Oriental magic, sorcery, etc., have been very much exaggerated, and that all that is really valuable or potential in the arts of magicians, adepts, etc., is involved in the psychological and spiritual laws which Modern Spiritualism has brought to our knowledge. This knowledge, instead of being wrapped in mystery, veiled under symbols, and reserved to a privileged few, is to be usefully applied for the benefit of our fellows, and the cultivation of our own natures.

The remaining three lectures treat of the Three Planes of the Second State, the Natural, Spiritual and Celestial; the Soul-World, its Hells, Heavens and Evolutions; and Life, Development and Death in Spirit-Land. We have not space for an analysis of what is presented on these interesting topics, but can say that the views presented, or rather descriptions given (for the spirit-lecturer appears to portray what he has actually witnessed), of the after-life, though somewhat novel at least in their form of statement, are eminently rational and intrinsically probable, as well as highly practical in tendency—albeit they differ widely alike from the popular conceptions of Christendom and the vaticinations of Oriental Theosophy, or Speculative Occultism.

The work, as a whole, despite the occultness of its title, is a very valuable contribution to the literature of Modern Spiritualism, and deserves the careful study of all who would master the underlying principles of this great movement of the age, or understand its true practical bearing on the present life.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—The finely executed photogravure that forms the frontispiece has for its subject the lofty ideal of love and purity embodied in the story of Paul and Virginia, the scene being the lifeless body of Virginia, as it was found upon the beach after the wrecking of the ship upon which she had embarked. In it the artist, James Bertrand, brings to our realization the spirit of the storm, the engrossing interest of the situation, and the purity and beauty of the sentiment the story involves. The pages of "Current Art" are illustrated with engravings of "Your Little Bill, Sir," "A Priestess of Bacchus" (full page), etc. In "Some Plain Words on American Taste in Art," the text does not belie the title, especially not when the writer, after saying that in this country a rabid taste for French paintings is in the ascendant, remarks that until coming to America he "never knew where the sweepings of Parisian studios eventually congregated." He seems not to have had sufficient opportunity to point to a painting and say, "It 's English, you know." Three very pleasing pictures are given in illustration of "Irish Types and Traits"; "Matchmaking"; "A Present for his Reverence" (full page), and "The Young Squireen," all by Helmick. A charming piece of scenery is "Alone by the Broad" (full page), by Parsons. The entire contents of this number are highly meritorious. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY introduces its table of contents for March with a pathetic sketch of New England Life: "Miss Tempy's Watchers," by Sarah Orne Jewett; "The Aspen Papers," by Henry James, are commenced; James B. Thayer treats of "The Dawes Bill and the Indians," in the course of his article giving the reader cause to believe that while he considers it a necessity, he feels that it fails to meet the just and full requirements of the case as far as the Indians themselves are concerned; and Oliver Wendell Holmes begins in "Over the Tea Cups" a series of supper "Autocratics" to match those of the whilom "breakfast table" stamp. The present installment of "Yone Santo" is a prose-poem in itself, replete with the sublime beauty of womanly innocence; Frank Gaylord Cook writes of "The Marriage Celebration in the Colonies"; "Virginia's Wooing," by Olive Thorne Miller, is a charming story of bird life; the continuation of "The Despot," etc., by Charles Egbert Craddock, is full of interest; "The Law of Fashion," by N. S. Shaler, will find many perusers; the "Beginnings of the American Revolution" is a finished and thoughtful paper—as are all which proceed from the scholarly pen of John Fiske. The usual departments will be found this month of marked attractiveness. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, Boston.

ST. NICHOLAS.—"An Ancient Haunt of Pirates" is the title of the very interesting opening article, in which Mr. E. V. Smalley recounts the experiences of a week's cruise on the Louisiana coast, among bays, islands and bayous that nearly a century ago were the haunts of the two pirate brothers, Pierre and Jean Lafitte. Thirteen engravings illustrate it. Very entertaining and instructive is Ernest E. Thompson's "Tracks in the Snow," in which the wonderful feats common to hunting and woodcraft life, of tracking and trailing, and the still more marvelous powers of that kind in the dog and fox, are considered and illustrated with engravings. Frank R. Stockton, with the aid of the artist, describes "The People We Meet" in foreign travel. Roy McTavish commences a story, "Edward Athoy," that promises to give an insight of mining life in the Lehigh regions. Helen Campbell contributes a short story, complete, "The Hobart Treasure," and Marion Douglas a poem, "The Bronzed Kid Shoes." Many other stories, sketches and poems, fine engravings and the ever-welcome "Jack-in-the-Pulpit" serve to make an attractive number. New York: The Century Co. Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

WIDE AWAKE.—Young readers who delight in descriptions of far-away places will find much to interest them in "A Coaching Party in Java," one of Olive R. Seward's "Around the World Stories." Harriet Taylor Upton continues her "Children of the White House," in an interesting narrative of "The Family of Thomas Jefferson," with fifteen illustrations. In "A Boston Experiment" is given some account of the Children's Prize Flower Exhibition, instituted by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. "An Indian Letter" of the Piegans, a roving tribe in Montana, is shown in an engraving, and a description of it given by B. T. Newman. The several serial stories are continued, and much else of interest, instruction and amusement supplied. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—In addition to new installments of the serials "Monica" and "By Misadventure," this number contains a short, complete story, "Mysterious Miss Alister," by the author of "A Willful Young Woman," and new chapters of the story of adventure, "What the Coral Reefs Gave Me." Of "A Family of Boys, and How They Were Started in Life," we are given the first paper. A variety of other matter, including practical advice on daily home life, constitute the remaining contents. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE SEA FOR THE FISHES.

A Ballad from the Briny Deep.

Quoth the shark to the whale, "Let's be lords of the sea—
Methinks 't is a capital notion;
We have only to make up our minds and agree
To place a big tax on the ocean.
We will claim it is ours, from equator to pole
(As the big men on earth claim the land);
Every fish that can swim shall first pay to us toll—
By jingo, our life will be grand!"

So the whale started out to rent out the north zone,
The shark for the Mediterranean,
And he tied up the ocean and leased off alone
The sea, from Gibraltar to Canaan.
"Ho! ho!" laughed the shark in his ravenous glee,
As the whale spouted high in his joy;
"Daddy Neptune 's a fool, sir, to you and to me;
Now we 'll gorge on the masses, my boy!"

Then Old Neptune arose, and he cried in loud wrath,
"How dare they thus treat my domain!"
And he shouted these words from the south to the north,
Till the echo rang loudly again—
"Know once and forever, ye fish of the sea,
From the whale to the minnow so small,
That none can oppress, for the oceans are free;
The sea was created for all!"

Banner Correspondence.

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—A correspondent, "K.", writes: "As a native of dear old Boston, and a constant reader of THE BANNER for many years, I would like to say a few words in praise of a well known medium of your city, who has been in our midst two different terms during the present season. I allude to Mr. Frank T. Ripley. I consider him a most remarkable test medium, possessing the power of clearly delineating not only the characteristics of the spirit, but giving full names, many times the three of the individual spirit present. Meeting him an entire stranger, he brought to me unmistakably many of the dear ones from over the river, one in particular who had never been able to reach me before."

TROY.—W. H. Vosburgh writes: "The Star Hall Society of our city has enjoyed the pleasure of listening to very able and profound spirit-teaching, the last two weeks, through our brother, A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium. The intelligence exhibited through his organism by his guides in the citation of events and dates in ancient and biblical history is wonderful, when taken into consideration that he makes no preparation before being led to the platform. His visit has been productive of great good. The audiences were large, and the deepest interest was manifest. The society has re-engaged him for two weeks in December next. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn will occupy the platform the four Sundays of March. We are about making ready for the Anniversary, and expect to celebrate the day commendably."

NEW YORK CITY.—Thomas J. Marquin of Paris, France, now in New York, writes as follows: "In 1885, having heard much of Modern Spiritualism, I investigated its phenomena, continuing to do so until June, 1887, without success as far as my own spirit-friends' identity. I was on the eve of giving up in despair when I heard, as distinctly as a telephone, these words: 'Scott, medium!' Somewhat astounded by this strange manifestation, I made a memorandum and put it in my pocket. The incident left my mind entirely for a few days. On the same paper I had a memorandum of financial business to transact for a lady on Fifth Avenue, after attending to which I went to the lady. In course of our conversation she related to me a wonderful experience she had had with a trance test-medium, a Mrs. Scott. Upon hearing the word 'Scott' I was affected as by an electric shock, and my telephone message at once came to my mind. At my request the lady gave me Mrs. Scott's address. I closed my visit as soon as practicable, and proceeded to Mrs. Scott's and had a test sitting, giving no pointers to work on. I got the identity, as far as practicable, of five different spirits, with accounts of incidents that had happened to myself and them. At the same sitting a financier came to me with whom I transacted business, and gave me advice which afterward saved me upward of five thousand dollars. I was so greatly overjoyed at this remarkable incident that I sought to convince, free of charge, six of my most intimate friends, Liberalists. I engaged a series of test-circles for the demonstration, to them, of spirit-facts. I made the six pledge themselves to investigate with me in a spirit of truth and for no other purpose. At the first of the series two got positively convinced; at the next two more, and at the last two circles the balance. Among these are bankers, lawyers and brokers—men who move in the highest society, whose names for obvious reasons I here omit; but if their enthusiasm continues, New York City may witness a beautiful spirit-temple as a donation to the cause of truth.

A word for the medium: Mrs. Scott is a woman whose labors for the spirit-world are unceasing. Upon personal investigation I have found she has made deep inroads among some of the most aristocratic circles in New York City. Her son in spirit life being one of the attending spirits, delighted us with convincing proofs of spirit identity and sang for us some songs which he used to sing in earth-life, while his mortal brother, who is a fine musician, accompanied him. I close this worthy tribute to the truth and to a worthy medium, with a tender of thanks and good wishes to Mrs. Scott and her guides."

BROOKLYN.—Samuel D. Greene writes, Feb. 27th: "At Conservatory Hall, Brooklyn, the last two Sunday mornings the audiences have been highly edified by a new control of Mrs. A. M. Glading, whose deeply scientific lore and progressed spiritual attainments have riveted the attention and called forth delighted approbation. The remarks treated of spirit geology, the hidden forces that permeate the universe, etc.—growing out of a question propounded whether spirit vision could see through the icy environments of the North Pole.

In speaking of the many upheavals of land and the submersion of other parts of the globe by water, particularly 'Atlantis, the long lost,' the control said matter everywhere presented no obstacles to spirit vision and thought elimination. When we remember the medium's (Mrs. Glading's) limited advantages of education, she having had, according to her own statement, but eighteen months' schooling for intellectual attainments, we may well be surprised by the wide range of knowledge given through her organism.

The first two Sundays in March we are to have the eloquent ministrations of Mr. J. Clegg Wright. The last two Sundays the inspiring and very interesting discourses of Mrs. J. T. Lillie."

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—Mary E. Sumner Foster writes: "In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 18th I notice in 'Wayside Jottings,' an article from the pen of A. S. Hayward, in defense of the late Dr. P. P. Quimby, and I am glad to see those who know, write in his favor. I have known Dr. Q. as long ago as I can remember; my earliest recollections are of him; he was my parent's family physician, and I have heard my mother tell time and again of the wonderful cures performed by him—one for myself: between the ages of six and seven something began to grow in my left nostril, which nearly obstructed the passage (a polypus); my mother took me to the Doctor at his office, and I remember the room well (with its piles of crutches and sticks). He there treated me with his hands and cold water; in the course of two or three treatments I was cured. Other similar cases I could quote in my own family and others.

I know that Dr. Quimby did not (as Mrs. Eddy does) claim that his power was direct from God, but used to say: 'I have the power to perform these cures, but I cannot say whence it comes. I only know I can cure certain cases'; and he certainly did perform some wonderful cures in his day.

Does this look as if he was 'the first to advance the so-called Christian Science theory,' if the faith curers, metaphysicians, etc., etc., do claim he did? The Doctor may yet come to the front, and express his views on the subject. Dr. Q. is one of my controls, and his opinions do not mix with Mrs. Eddy's any more than oil and water; this I know.

I was born in Belfast, Me., where Dr. Quimby lived, and I know that he must have built a beautiful spirit home by the acts of kindness and deeds of charity he performed on this earth, which will always gratefully be remembered by those whose sufferings he alleviated while here."

CHICAGO.—F. B. F. writes: "The Young People's Progressive Society has been in existence only eight or nine months, but from the first has placed on its platform the best speakers and mediums that could be had. Its members mean to show the people the bright side of Spiritualism, take them by the hand and lead them forward, that they may share the beautiful truths with them. They meet every Sunday evening at 159 22d street, and give semi-monthly socials the first and third Fridays, to which all are welcomed."

CHICAGO.—A correspondent sends us the following preamble and resolutions adopted by the Chicago Association of Progressive Spiritualists, Feb. 12th:

"Whereas, We have learned, to our sorrow, of the death of our sister, Sarah LaGrange; therefore be it

Resolved, That while our faith prevents us from mourning for our sister as of one who has passed forever from us, we at the same time realize that the veil of death does in great measure not only hide from view, but changes the pleasant human relationship that has heretofore existed; and realizing this, we as a body extend our hearty sympathies to the family of our sister in this hour of their bereavement.

Resolved, That our next Sunday evening service in this hall be a memorial service for our sister, and that a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our Minutes, and a copy thereof sent to the family of our Sister LaGrange, signed by our President and Secretary.

Be it also

Resolved, That as this Society has lost from its human fellowship several others of our numbers, who, like Sister LaGrange, have passed beyond the veil, namely, Dr. Samuel Tupper, Mrs. Dr. Fullerton, Dr. William Reynolds, G. W. Clark, Dr. David Balster, Mrs. Dr. Sweatland, Mrs. Dr. Harrison, and Mrs. Emma Sarah Margaret Donnell, youngest daughter of our President, Dr. Norman MacLeod, we also inscribe their names on our roll of honored dead."

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Charles F. Peterson writes: "The Japanese wedding and dance given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid and Lyceum, Feb. 23d, was a grand success. Over one thousand people were present. The hall was finely decorated. The wedding ceremonies were well performed, and a credit to those taking part. Mrs. M. Perry acted as the principal performer. Then followed a dialogue between Miss Jessie Benner and Masters Jennings and Berkhemer. Prof. Charles Wedic of the Philadelphia Zither Club gave us some fine music; he is one of the best zither players in this country. Next we had plantation songs and dances by Sanford, Hughes and Kennedy. Dancing was engaged in until 2 o'clock, Prof. DeBarth's Orchestra of eight pieces kindly furnishing the music. Robert M. Coffman was manager, assisted by Harry Huber and Mrs. Shumway. The Ladies' Aid Committee, Miss Julia Gallaway, Miss Hattie Bailey, Mrs. Shuster, Mrs. McCann, Mrs. Rodgers, Mrs. Annie Benner, Mrs. Sarah Benner, Mrs. Faust, Mrs. Dubois, Mrs. Stuffer, Miss Hirsh, Miss Mary Gallaway, Mrs. Pharo, Mrs. Hewer, Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Yorkstone, were kept busy all the evening furnishing refreshments. The hall was decorated by Messrs. Hirsh and Peterson.

The Children's Lyceum of the First Association is now one of the best. We have with us Miss Fay, recently the Leader of the Vineland Lyceum. We are now making preparations for a Fair to be held the last week in March, the proceeds of which will be used to build a Lyceum Cottage on our Camp-Ground at Parkland, to which donations will be received with thanks."

Massachusetts.

LOWELL.—B. S. Freeman, Corresponding Secretary, (5 Brooks street,) writes: "The First Spiritualist Society is having very good attendance at its meetings, and there seems to be an interest taken to have the services continued; but to successfully carry on the good work which has been started here for any length of time, requires continued and prompt financial aid. Our speakers are very liberal, and we appreciate them for their generosity. Mrs. S. Dick and Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester have occupied our platform of late with good results."

BROCKTON.—Under date of Feb. 27th, Mrs. H. N. Keith writes: "Last evening the hall of the Ladies' Aid Society was well filled with a highly intelligent audience to listen to a lecture by Mr. F. A. Wiggin of Salem. In opening the meeting, Mr. Wiggin, by way of a prelude to his lecture, made a brief review of a lecture of the late Wm. Denton upon the subject, 'Who are Christians?' The lecture was upon 'The Influence of the Love of Power,' and was listened to with great interest. It was one which an audience would be compelled to carefully follow, and showed the result of much careful study. Mr. Wiggin is a young man, having been engaged in this line of work for only a short time. The lecture was enjoyed by all. The Gurney Club contributed excellent music for the occasion, under the leadership of Mr. Gurney. The Society is now in a very prosperous condition."

Florida.

PALATKA.—J. A. Hall, M. D., (Lock Box 350) writes: "The First Spiritual Society of this city is doing what may be accomplished to awaken an interest in the cause of Spiritualism. Since Bro. Colby was here the subject has been one of the principal topics of conversation. We now have Mrs. Clara A. Field located at 'the ancient city' (St. Augustine). While in Palatka she gave some very satisfactory psychometric readings.

We now wish to establish a winter camp meeting. Just west of and adjoining the city is a high elevation of country that gives a beautiful view, with plenty of pure water, and everything necessary to make a good camping ground; and we hope (by the help of friends) to have a large gathering here next winter. This is one of the finest winter resorts in the world. I hope our friends will give the matter their careful thought.

Slate-writing mediums would be specially acceptable to us at this time."

Maine.

NAPLES.—Miss Annie R. Gammon writes: "In THE BANNER I notice the advertisement of Dr. T. W. Shapleigh. Last spring, while in Boston, I was induced to have him treat my knee, which had pained me for a number of years. I had been at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and been told by physicians there it could never be cured—it must always trouble me. I was subsequently induced to try the powers of Dr. Shapleigh, and I am happy to state that three treatments effected a cure. This was nearly one year ago, and I have not been troubled with it since."

Connecticut.

WILLIMANTIC.—J. C. Robinson, Secretary, writes that W. F. Peck has, during his present engagement in this place, proved himself an earnest worker, a good lecturer, and one possessing the gifts of logic and eloquence in a remarkable degree.

New Jersey.

VINELAND.—Bro. A. C. Cotton desires any good medium for independent slate-writing, who may be contemplating a trip southward, to correspond with him for engagements in Vineland.

THE ORIGIN OF "MR." AND "MRS."—The history of Mr. and Mrs., which are now common property, is not without interest. When as yet there were no "Misters" in the land, some "John Smith" accumulated more wealth than the bulk of his fellows—became, perhaps, a landed proprietor, or an employer of hired labor. Then he began to be called in the Norman-French of the day the "Maistre" of this place or of that, of these workmen or of those. In time the "Maistre" or "Maister," as it soon became, got tacked on before his name, and he became Maister Smith, and his wife was Maistress Smith. But gradually the sense of possession was lost sight of, and the title was conferred upon any man who had attained social distinction of any kind, whether by mere possession of wealth, or by holding some position of more or less consideration and importance. It is only within comparatively modern times that the term came to be considered an almost indispensable adjunct to every one's name when mentioned in ordinary conversation or writing. Maistress Smith soon became Mistress Smith. Exactly how and when the term got corrupted cannot be said. Maister Smith, however, remained Maister Smith long after his wife became Mistress Smith.—Oldham Chronicle.

LIFTING THE VEIL:

OR,

Interior Experiences

AND

Manifestations.

BY SUSAN J. AND ANDREW A. FINCK.

An interesting and instructive narrative of the experience of one who from early childhood was subject to the visits and recognizable guidance of spiritual intelligences. The opening chapter gives a graphic pen-picture of Southern plantation life when the "peculiar institution" of that section of our country was in its prime. The periodical visits of the circuit preacher, the preparations in the "big house" and the "quarters" of the negroes for the event, are finely described. As the narrative proceeds the development of mediumship gradually unfolds faculties previously latent, and tokens of the presence of spirits become more and more frequent. Accounts of clairvoyant, clairaudient and other experiences follow—all remarkable—including independent slate-writing, the sudden production of flowers, etc. In the latter part a thrilling account is given of the wonderful mediumship of a slave woman who startled an entire community with the eloquence of her discourses, prophetic visions, and powerful denunciations of wrong.
The book from beginning to end is one of intense interest; there is not a dull page; and treating as it does of the inception and growth of Spiritualism at the South, of which but little has been known to the public, it will command, as it should, a wide sale and do a good work.
The book contains finely executed portraits of the two authors, Mrs. Susan J. and Andrew A. Finck; also Felix M. Finck, and two clairvoyant scenes in spirit-life.

Cloth, large 12mo, beveled boards. Price $2,00, postage free.

BIBLE MYTHS,

And their Parallels in other Religions: Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity; considering also their Origin and Meaning.
With numerous Illustrations.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent Biblical students that the Hebrew Scriptures contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly attempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian Scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are made in the work before us."—New York Sun.

The Clergy and War.

Despite the influence alleged to be exerted in their public work by the clergy of all so-called Christian denominations against the war spirit and its manifestation, the sword has not yet been "beaten into a plowshare," and the spear still stubbornly refuses to become a pruning-hook; while the study of war, on the part of mankind, instead of ceasing, has yearly increased and borne bitter and disastrous fruit in the deadly character of its devices—the multiplication of pitiless explosives, and the wholesale sweep of preärranged slaughter.

Despite all their efforts—we have said, taking the clergy at their word, but not despite, after all, if the counter testimony of the pages of history and the examples afforded in modern every-day life possess any claim to be considered in the premises—we are forced each spring, when the weather will at last allow the hope of successful military movements, to behold the spectacle of all Europe bristling with armed bands, and the whole Old World atmosphere of political, social and commercial life forced into unnatural tremor (as if in the presence of a moral earthquake) through fear of a great struggle between the nations, which all the peoples feel to be coming sometime, and which they are sufficiently encouraged if they can only temporarily postpone: joining with a feeling of relief in Bismarck's sententious phrase uttered last year: "There will be no war this summer." Surely, in the face of this tremendous exhibition of brute force trembling to be let loose in the very heart of the oldest civilizations, the disciples of the Prince of Peace have but a poor showing to offer in this nineteenth century of the Christian dispensation!

In his "History of European Morals," Mr. Lecky, speaking of the wars which have been waged by priestly power in the name of Christianity, goes on to remark that "it had been boldly predicted by some of the early Christians that the conversion of the world would lead to a cessation of all war. In looking back, with our present experience, we are driven to the melancholy conclusion that not only has ecclesiastical influence had no appreciable effect in diminishing the number of wars, but that it has actually and very seriously increased it. We may look in vain for any period since Constantine, in which the clergy as a body exerted themselves to repress the military spirit, or to prevent or abridge a particular war, with an energy or a success the least comparable to what they displayed during several centuries in stimulating the fanaticism of the crusaders, in producing the atrocious massacre of the Albigenses, in embittering the religious wars that followed the Reformation. Private wars were, no doubt, in some degree repressed by their influence; for the institution of the 'Truce of God' was for a time of much value, and when, toward the close of the middle ages, the custom of duels arose, it was strenuously condemned by the clergy; but we shall probably not place any great value on their exertions in this field, when we remember that duels were almost or altogether unknown to the Pagan world; that, having arisen in a period of great superstition, the anathemas of the Church were almost impotent to discourage them; and that in our own country they are rapidly disappearing before the simple censure of an industrial society.

"Religious fanaticism was a main cause of the earlier wars, and an important ingredient in the later ones. The peace principles, that were so common before Constantine, have found scarcely any echo except from Erasmus, the Quakers, and the Anabaptists; and although some very important pacific agencies have arisen out of the industrial progress of modern times, these have been, for the most part, wholly unconnected with, and have in some cases been directly opposed to, theological interests."

The priests have truly (as the above-cited writer intimates) made Christ mean contradictory things to suit their own pleasure. Christ is the Prince of Peace, and he came to bring a sword with which families and nations should be divided! The attitude of the English Bishops, for instance, toward Egypt and the late war in that country is a most singular one for those who profess and preach the doctrine of peace among men and good-will toward all. When the Egyptian war terminated in favor of the English arms, the English Archbishops and Bishops formulated a series of utterances and thanksgivings that expressed all but unbounded admiration of the troops and their commanders. The cause of the war, or its justice, was not alluded to, except, perhaps, to intimate that the true way to Christianize and civilize the world is by British guns and sabres. These "fathers in God" went into holy ecstasies over the achievement of the troops in helpless Egypt; but in their laudations and thanksgivings not a word was said of the sufferings of the vanquished, or of the profligacy which is inseparable from armies and war. Nor did they make the least allusion to the divine image in the heart of man, as if the Egyptian, the Arab, the Zulu and the Afghan were destitute of souls, and were only fit to be cut down with grape, shells and cavalry sabres. Humanity, in the sight of these pious prelates, is not universal, but particular. England has got an immense store of it; therefore she goes forth with deadly weapons and missiles to destroy those who in her opinion have none of it; although "teach us to see Thy hand hath done it," was the solution sought for in his public prayer by the Bishop of York.

We have cited these utterances of the English church militant not because they embody a special enormity peculiar to themselves, but as a specimen of what the main body of the clergy of all the varied schools of theologic thought are doing, on occasion, the wide world over. Few, indeed, if any, are the cases in which these clerical gentlemen everywhere have not been ready to echo the ferocious words of the predaceous David: "Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight."

How to Take Human Life.

We are very far from assenting to the practice of taking the life of another on any ground but the utterly desperate one of self-defense; yet so long as our penal statutes continue to authorize hanging for convicted murderers, and while we are still engaged in efforts to abolish so cruel and revengeful a system altogether, we are desirous of depriving legal executions of all possible objections on the score of cruelty, and of making them as quick and painless to the condemned person as the most recent discoveries of science will warrant.

The whole subject has of late been diverted from its accustomed channel of discussion by the proposal made in many influential quarters to substitute electricity for the rope in carrying out the dread requirements of the law. The New York Legislature has recently led off in the movement, in a practical way, by appointing a commission of three to make a thorough investigation of the matter, and report. The commission accordingly sent out two hundred circulars to judges, district attorneys, sheriffs, and other officers of the law, soliciting an expression of their views on the subject of a more humane method of administering the death penalty. Of this number eighty expressed themselves in favor of hanging, eight favored the substitution of electricity, and the remainder favored a change of some sort. The commission itself advocated the application of electricity.

In the Massachusetts Legislature an order has been placed in the hands of the judiciary committee to investigate the matter, and it is expected to be brought before the entire body at an early day. Desirous of learning the views of a number of well-known citizens on the subject pending its final disposition by the Legislature, the Boston Herald sent a representative to hold interviews with them, with the following result:

Gen. Benjamin F. Butler considers the device of hanging a very clumsy expedient, oftentimes accompanied with great torture. After reference to the different methods of execution practiced by various nations, he speaks of electricity as an instantaneous means of death, and a painless one, and one that can be entirely private. And all public description of death could likewise be prevented without any of the adjuncts of glorification to the criminal. He thinks, on the whole, the execution should be done by electricity. [Gen. Butler considers no crime known to be more heinous than that of wrecking, or attempting to wreck, a railroad train.]

Mayor O'Brien thinks that death by electricity would be in accordance with the advanced ideas of the present time. He regards hanging for crime as a barbarity, and would employ electricity. But he says he is not, and for years has not been in favor of capital punishment at all. He thinks the law should be expunged from the statute book. And public executions ought to be suppressed.

Gen. Francis A. Walker, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, thinks the present mode of executing condemned criminals is clumsy at best, and often gives rise to the most hideous and revolting spectacles. Expert testimony seems to establish it that electricity may be applied with absolute certainty to produce instantaneous and painless death. So far, the arguments for the substitution must appear overwhelming. But he is unwilling to rest the question on the ground solely of the mechanical advantages of one method of extinguishing life over another. Very grave moral, social and even political considerations are often connected with it. The guillotine, though a much more efficient, speedy and merciful instrument of execution than that which preceded it, proved to be much more than a mere agent of atrocities during the French Revolution. It became itself the cause of atrocities, arousing in the people a fiendish thirst for blood, to which was due much that was hideous in the reign of terror. Yet he would not presume to say that the substitution of electricity for hanging would produce moral or social mischief. The case of the guillotine only shows that such a question is not to be decided purely on the ground of mechanical advantages.

Gen. Walker regards the issue presented as much the same as that which is involved in the controversy over methods of disposing of the dead. While he confesses himself to be strongly disposed to be a cremationist, incineration unquestionably possessing enormous advantages over inhumation, sanitary and other, he insists that no man knows much of human history or human nature who deems this merely a question between two methods of disposing of a decaying body. A sudden change of this character might result in a shock to the ideas, sentiments and tastes of the people, sufficient to produce grave, far-reaching and long-enduring evil. He does not say this would be so, but it might be so; and the man is a fanatic, and not a reformer, who would force such a question to an issue without due consideration of these elements of the case.

Ex-Governor Claflin would abolish hanging as barbarous, and favors death by electricity. Rev. Mr. Savage declines to take any position on the necessity for capital punishment, which he thinks is to be determined by circumstances. If an individual has a right to take life in self-defense, he finds it difficult to deny the same right to society. But if capital punishment is to be retained, he believes that hanging is barbaric and ought to be abolished. Rev. Dr. Miner thinks that capital punishment, so long as it continues to be inflicted, should be in methods the least brutal and least observable possible. Therefore he considers electricity preferable, and as much superior to the gallows as the gallows is to the guillotine. Dr. Bartol considers public executions a disgrace to Christianity and our civilization, and common humanity demands that the private execution should, as far as possible, be without pain. Joseph Cook answered, of course, with a firstly, secondly and thirdly, and would not wholly do away with the gallows because of the public ignominy attached to it, which he thinks would diminish the power of such punishment as a public example. A secret, painless and unexpected death by electricity he fears would have less power to induce penitence in the criminal than when death is public and foreseen. But he would not hesitate to put female criminals to death by electricity, when condemned to die by the law.

Warden Russell, of the Charlestown State Prison, says the present method of executing condemned criminals is all right if only conducted with secrecy. He would allow only the hangman and surgeon to be present at executions. If electricity, as claimed, produces a painless death, the punishment, in his opinion, is correspondingly lighter for the crime committed. If murderers knew they were to pass out by that method they would not be so much deterred from murdering. Sheriff O'Brien of Suffolk County would go with the majority of public opinion on this subject. As for the torturing of criminals on the gallows, he says that his own past experience convinced him that death was usually painless.

Dr. Bowditch favors putting criminals to death by electricity in place of the rope. He would have the whole matter as quiet and secret as possible. Rev. Dr. Foote, of King's Chapel, regards the great argument against the present mode of execution to be that punishment does not follow swiftly enough on crime. Mr. Edwin D. Meade would substitute electricity, the guillotine, the axe, the musket, anything for the gallows, which he thinks precisely the worst instrument now extant among half-civilized men. Rev. Dr. Herrick, of Mt. Vernon-street Church, believes capital punishment anyway to be a confession on the part of the community of its inability to deal with criminals. Gen. Corse, post-master of Boston, thinks too much sympathy is shown for the man who takes the life of another, and not enough shown for the victim. Ex-Gov. Rice is not in favor of abolishing capital punishment, but would have it executed in the most humane way. Still, he does not know that electricity is that way. Mr. De Lockwood, a well-known Boston electrician, would not degrade electricity to the place of a public executioner. But he would not like to see capital punishment abolished. He fails to see what claims a convicted murderer has for a painless death. Yet if it be conceded to him, let him, he suggests, inhale to its fullest extent some potent anæsthetic. Mr. Carrigan, of the State Board of Education, would have no death-penalty inflicted for crime at all.

An Industrial Oligarchy.

It has been well said that our industries are being made to rest more and more on old-world, or monarchical, principles rather than on new-world, or democratic principles. It is without doubt for this reason that so general a complaint is raised by the industrial classes against the employing class. The fault is to be found in the system of organization, which of course establishes the relations of labor to capital. It has newly manifested itself in the great strike of the railroad engineers at the West, following close upon the strike of the miners in the Pennsylvania coal regions. There are the mountains, with their bowels of coal seams, awaiting only the harmonious coöperation of labor and capital for the extraction of the wealth which millions of people are ready to consume. A variety of industries and the comfort of unnumbered homes depend on the uninterrupted mining of this coal. Capital, on the one side, has been represented by a single man, while scores of industries, thousands of workingmen, and tens of thousands of homes are set over against him on the other. And the number of persons unfavorably affected by the suspension of mining operations is many times that of the laborers and owners together.

The one man was repeatedly waited upon and asked to arbitrate the question at issue between the miners and himself, reminding one of the French people petitioning a Bourbon king for relief from their sufferings and wrongs, or of the Russian people petitioning the Czar to interpose his edict for the remedy of their abuses. Practically it is the same thing here that it was in France and is in Russia. The people are dependent on the autocratic decision of one man. It is for him to decide what they shall pay for the coal they consume, or whether they shall have any coal at all. If this is not placing our industrial interests on a monarchical basis, what is? If there is not a real monarch in the Schuylkill region, where is there one to be found? True, it may not just yet be a tyranny, but how can any one say that it is not liable to become that, whenever circumstances combine to favor it? As an intelligent contemporary remarks, it is a very serious grievance that, in a free State, thousands of citizens who are suffering from a coal famine should have no recourse but to petition one man, who possesses absolute power over the coal field, for permission to get out the coal which is needed for homes and for industries.

The first step out of the dilemma is a resort to arbitration to settle the difficulty. That would be a step from industrial monarchy to industrial democracy, and of course in the right direction. It should no longer be left to the people to petition for their right to exist to any man or set of men, but their natural privilege to decide it for themselves. Being a question of wages, on the adjustment of which so many depend for the comforts and even the necessities of life, it ought not to lie open, and at the disposal of one man, while the community is not only incommoded but put to suffering in consequence of his indifference to everything but the profits to be wrung from wages.

And what has been said of this standing dispute over the vital question of wages is likewise true in respect to the newly invented system of robbing the people and crushing all healthy competition which is named "trusts." These perfect monopolies are springing up on every side of us. They embrace all forms of industry and every description of industrial product. A more grinding apparatus in respect to the needs and demands of the great mass of consumers it would be difficult to invent. It seems like the culmination of the schemes which an unsatisfied greed is resolved to execute. There are now sugar trusts, rubber trusts, oil trusts, cotton seed oil trusts, express trusts, and any number of other trusts, forming and formed, that are organized for no other purpose than to force products of whatever name and kind into the control and possession of a few men, with a view to fixing the prices for them at such figures as they will, always keeping them as high as the people who consume them can possibly bear, and crushing every symptom of competition, that natural regulator of values, on its first appearance.

The effect of these modern combinations of capital to control both labor and the product of labor is of course only a monopoly in the hands of a few greedy men. In a few words, it is an industrial oligarchy. How soon and by how few steps an oligarchy of such a character would become a political oligarchy, obtaining supreme control of the government and bending all things to its absolute will, is a matter of conjecture only. Of the certainty that it would soon become that, there can be no question. As we are now proceeding with these oligarchical trusts springing up like mushrooms all around us and threatening to consume the substance of industry and impoverish those dependent on its wages, it will not be long before we shall have the old Roman decemvir system upon us in its worst form, greed always constituting, next to ecclesiastical power, the worst and most unendurable tyranny! Besides this, such combinations utterly kill out the spirit of enterprise in the coming generation, by warning it to engage in any industry on its own independent account at its peril. And the great body of consumers are rendered abjectly dependent on them, getting only what they choose to offer at their own prices, and permitted to exist only by the will of a few masters. Are we all of us ready to face the issue?

Another Bagpipe Droning.

The Rev. Dr. Coles, of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Wakefield, has just stepped forward and had his thrust at Spiritualism. He appeared to be short of the required time, and so abbreviated the word into "Spiritism" without the slightest apology or regret. He professed to be making an investigation, to find out whether it was of God, man or the devil. And not to be outdone in originality, instead of ascribing the phenomena to God or the devil, he ascribes them almost wholly to man. In order to carry out such a snap theory, however, he must needs be equipped with proofs such as no one has ever been put in possession of before him.

It may, and again it may not, be of interest for those who were not able to listen to his words, to be told that he wholly and heartily believes in the devil. There are unfortunately a great many others who do. "There is no question in my mind," he exclaims with every symptom of satisfaction, "but that there is a personal devil." His "but" is as superfluous as his devil is. The doctor makes him out of that well-worn "fallen angel." The poor unfortunate appears to have made a worse fall of it than Adam did. Nevertheless, the accident was the making of Old Theology.

Dr. Coles finds that "Spiritism existed under the old dispensation as well as under the new." He asserts that the mediums of to-day "were known as witches, wizards, in those days." He is perfectly confident that "Spiritism to-day is the same in kind as that condemned by God so strongly in that long-ago time." And he piles up texts from everywhere and nowhere to make the assertion good.

But is Spiritism of man? queried this red-hot pulpit investigator. After stopping to pay a cheap wordy tribute to the native character of man, he broke out like a fresh fire in a conflagration, and exclaimed at the top of his wave of feeling: "It seems at times as if men are possessed with the very spirit of hell!" Now to a mind that regards its fellows in an unfavorable light like that charity must needs be like sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. It is unhappy to the verge of madness. But it is Old Theology that does it, and for such works it deserves to be cast out. The Wakefield doctor of divinity says he knows God speaks the truth when he says that the heart of man is desperately wicked and loves darkness rather than light. Reaching the culmination of his fuming discourse, he bounced out the naked assertion: "I am certain beyond the shadow of a doubt that the major part of these so-called spirit-phenomena is of Man!"

To know that now, is to know a vast deal more than all other people do; and it has been said with truth that no one man knows more than all men know. Dr. Coles is lucky, to say no more. But how comes he to know so much about the human origin of the spiritual phenomena? Why, he tells us that he has been reading up the "grabbing" exposures of the materializing mediums. That is evidence enough for him. From such reading he is satisfied that all persons attending séances are dupes, who would believe that "the moon is made of green cheese." But he is willing to give the devil credit for having something to do with the phenomena. After all, he cannot but have a friendly feeling for his satanic majesty, and would not see him defrauded. The sum and substance of his advice, however, is to keep away from the mediums and stick to the priests.

DECEASE OF JONATHAN M. ROBERTS.—New York dispatches state that Mr. Roberts—formerly editor and publisher of Mind and Matter in Philadelphia—passed to spirit-life at a ripe age from Burlington, N. J., on Tuesday, Feb. 28th. Mr. Roberts was in early life a lawyer, and later a manufacturer. He was best known, however, to the public through his journalistic work. The interment occurred in the family ground near Norristown, Pa., March 3d.

☞ As will be seen by his card, Dr. J. R. Cocke is now located at 1581 Washington street, Boston.

The Vaccination Humbug Exposed!

According to last Sunday's New York World, there has been a terrible case of blood-poisoning by vaccination at a public school there, of a little girl, by a Board of Health physician! while one of her school-mates is similarly affected. We have been telling the people many years the fact that the smallpox virus was more dangerous to human health than the smallpox itself. But read The World's account of the sad effects of educated ignorance that has been grafted on the body politic for so many years:

There is a stir of mingled wrath and terror among the parents of pupils attending Public School 59 at No. 228 East Fifty-seventh street, over the report of poisonous results of the recent wholesale vaccinating by the Health Department. About the middle of January, the primary department was visited by doctors of the department, and all children whose scars or absence of scars, in the estimation of the medical examiners, called for a scratch and a touch of virus got it, some of them twice over. Since then there have been various vague rumors of blood-poisoning by impure virus, and parents have watched their little ones with intense solicitude.

One of the brightest little girls in the department was Maggie Lavery, aged seven. Her parents, poor, but worthy people, live in a neat little second story tenement at No. 340 East Sixtieth street. They are members of St. Thomas Chapel, a missionary branch of big St. Thomas Church, at Fifth avenue and Fifty-third street, and the mother, who is a remarkably bright, intelligent woman, does a good deal of work cutting and sewing in the Mission Society. They have three children besides Maggie; fat, strong, clear-eyed, wholesome-looking infants, whose appearance shows good blood, and Mr. and Mrs. Lavery say that Maggie, the eldest, never had any signs of skin disease before the present trouble. Last winter she caught chicken-pox and diphtheria in the same ill-fated school, but came through them without a blemish.

Tuesday, Jan. 17th, according to Maggie's story, Dr. Livermore, of the Board of Health, came into Miss Van Arsdale's class, of which she was a member, and vaccinated a large number of the little girls, herself included, in spite of her statement that she had been successfully vaccinated when a baby, and her mother had a certificate to that effect. According to her description all he had with which to cleanse his lancet was a little cup of water, and there is something more than a bare possibility of carelessness in the matter of cleaning his little instrument. At any rate, Maggie got her arm scratched, and went home. The following Friday Dr. Livermore again put in an appearance, and examined the arms of the children. Not satisfied with the indications of the first wound, the doctor vaccinated Maggie a second time. In a few days both arms grew sore, and then swelled in an alarming manner.

The inflammation attacked the other arm, spread to legs and feet, thence to ears and face; then to the eyes, and yesterday the blisters were beginning to appear on the body. The poor little child suffers intensely from the itching, smarting eruption, which is not unlikely to destroy her eyesight, and perhaps even her life.

Some days ago Mrs. Lavery took Maggie to the Northeastern Dispensary, on East 59th street. Dr. Lyons examined her, listened to the circumstances, and said that the case looked like one of impure virus or else irritation from a lancet which contained the impure blood of another person. He advised sending the child to a hospital, and she was transferred to St. Luke's. The examining physician, Dr. Davis, also laid the trouble to the vaccination, and said a similar case had not come under his observation for fifteen years; that it was very rare. Since then little Maggie has been under the best of care at St. Luke's.

Her case has excited much interest among the consulting physicians, who are not inclined to ascribe her trouble to impure vaccinating, except for one startling fact: Little Emma Finck, the pupil of the Fifty-Seventh-street school, who was vaccinated at the same time, has likewise been brought to the hospital suffering from an eruption which broke out shortly after. Her case, however, was not a serious one, like Maggie Lavery's, and she has only required "outdoor treatment," which has been furnished at the expense of St. Thomas's Chapel.

A World reporter called at St. Luke's yesterday and found the medical authorities loth to connect Maggie's eruption with the vaccination, and yet they did not deny that it might have brought it on.

Little Maggie's parents are heart-broken over her condition. They are very bitter against the Board of Health, and Mr. Lavery says that if one of their officers ever brings a lancet into his house again he will kick him down stairs. The Board of Health has a terrible reputation among the tenements, and the case of little Maggie Lavery is not going to help it, whether the Board is or is not at fault.

Lunatics in Chicago.

An international question has of late arisen in Chicago—which has stirred up vigorously County Judge Prendergast. It seems that from the number of insane paupers, subjects of European powers, who have come before him while holding the court of insane inquiry, the Judge has long been of the opinion that the foreign Governments are simply dumping their undesirable inhabitants into the United States; consequently he decided, as the best means of forcing the subject to legislative attention, to order two Canadian lunatic paupers sent to the British Consul, one German to the German Consul, and a Hungarian to the Austrian Consul. Before they were sent an officer of the court was dispatched to the Consuls with a note from the Judge, explaining that as the paupers had been allowed to come here insane to be a burden on Cook County, the Consuls ought to take charge of and ship them. The Judge was morally right in his action if not legally right. This is a matter that every city in the United States should look into and take action upon, to the end that Congress pass a stringent law instructing the federal courts to send back all foreign lunatics.

W. A. DUNKLEE, ESQ., treasurer (and for years a very prominent member) of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society meeting at Berkeley Hall—who was well and widely known among the friends of the New Dispensation in this and other localities—passed to the reward of his years of well-doing for the cause on Sunday evening, March 4th, after an illness of some three weeks from Bright's disease. Mr. Dunklee was a member of the firm of G. C. Dunklee & Co., 113 Blackstone street, furnace manufacturers. He was nearly seventy-one years old, and had been in business in this city on Blackstone street for thirteen years, having been born in Brattleboro, Vt. His funeral took place at Berkeley Hall at 10:30 A. M. on the morning of March 7th. An earnest worker for the Children's Lyceum movement, and the advancement of the Spiritualist meetings for adults in this city, has thus been promoted to celebrate among the immortals the fortieth anniversary of the advent on earth of the cause he loved.

☞ The power of silence has been acknowledged by the greatest minds that ever existed, yet how few there are who are willing to acknowledge this obvious fact. Even those who loudly proclaim this cardinal truth do not practice it. Those who cannot control their lips cannot control their acts, and consequently stumble by the way. The proverb is as true to-day as ever, "that no man was ever written down except by himself." One of David Hume's rules of conduct, which he inflexibly maintained, and which might be imitated with advantage by some writers and speakers of the present day, was never to reply to anybody. By adhering to this policy they would inevitably escape much annoyance and unhappiness.

☞ The Boston Herald says, and with much truth, that what we want in our public schools is the wholesomeness which readily affiliates with all that is noble and right in one's instincts. There is no ecclesiastical taint about such training. The public ought to be satisfied with a good working principle under which our children can be educated in all that prepares them for the duties of citizenship, without touching our religious differences.

☞ The Berry Sisters' séances in this city are well attended, and very satisfactory to the sitters, we understand.

Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Berkeley Hall, Boston.

The Fortieth Anniversary will be celebrated in Berkeley Hall, corner of Tremont and Berkeley streets, on Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st, 1888, under the auspices of

THE BOSTON SPIRITUAL TEMPLE SOCIETY.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, Dr. J. C. Street and other talented speakers will participate in the exercises. Superior musical and literary talent, also reliable test-mediums, have been engaged, thereby rendering the attractions of the entertainment second to none.

On Saturday, as one feature of the entertainment, Mr. Fletcher will give his popular lecture, illustrated with dissolving views.

Tremont Temple and Paine Memorial Hall.

A grand Union Celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will take place on March 31st and April 1st, under the auspices of the

FIRST SPIRITUALIST LADIES' AID SOCIETY AND CHILDREN'S LYCEUM NO. I. OF BOSTON,

The official notice of which appears on our eighth page.

Paine Hall.

A grand celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will be held March 25th, afternoon and evening, at this place, under the auspices of the Spiritual Phenomena Association. See notice on eighth page.

Cincinnati, O.

On our eighth page will be found the statement made by the Committee of Invitation, in the name of the Spiritualists of Cincinnati, regarding the convocations to be held in that city Sunday, April 1st, to Thursday, April 5th, and the important character of the work sought to be inaugurated thereat.

Hartford, Ct.

By reference to our eighth page it will be seen that the Spiritualists of Connecticut will remember the Fortieth Anniversary by a mass convention at Unity Hall, in the capital of the State.

Moline, Ill.

See eighth page for an announcement of Anniversary services to be held March 30th, 31st and April 1st, at Library Hall, under the auspices of the Mount Pleasant Park and Mississippi Valley Associations.

Spirit Art.

A fine picture was brought to THE BANNER office on Monday last for our inspection by the mother of the celebrated medium artist Dr. Henry Rogers, who is now in San Diego, Cal., with his wife.

This limning in oil is delicate in execution, and beautiful in that which is portrayed, and was executed in their usual manner by the invisible artists in presence of Dr. and Mrs. Rogers in the surprisingly brief period of one hour—the picture having been forwarded to his mother some four weeks since from San Francisco by Dr. R., through the mail.

It represents a young lady with chestnut hair and blue eyes, whose look is bent calmly on a white star which shines in the air before her. She is recognized by the mother as being her only daughter, who passed to spirit-life fifteen years ago at the age of twenty-five—a recognition which is shared by others; while many non-Spiritualists have already expressed wonder at the excellence of the work when the short time devoted to its production is considered.

Informed by Spirits.

A Manchester (Eng.) secular paper of recent date contains the following:

"Catherine Gibbons, a servant girl, who appeared before the county stipendiary at Manchester last Saturday on a charge of having stolen £16, the property of a guest staying in the house in which she lived as servant, will, in future, have a lively horror of Spiritualism. Professional eyes soon discovered that the robbery had been committed by some one inside the house. The girl, however, firmly adhered to her story of denial, till one of her fellow-servants, a believer in Spiritualism, told her that it was useless to deny taking the money, as 'he had been informed by the spirits that she had done so, and had hidden it.' The girl was so completely thunderstruck by this remark that she immediately made a full confession of the theft. It appeared that she had gained possession of the money when she heard a footstep on the stairs, and, knowing that her presence in the room would lead to her being suspected, she hastily disarranged the room, threw open the window, and concocted a burglar story. Spiritualism has to be thanked for having been the principal agent by which an improvised mystery was quickly elucidated."

The 31st of March.

As notices are coming in for publication regarding the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, from various sections of the country, THE BANNER desires the friends to send reports to it for publication, and have them prepared as briefly as is consistent with the matter given.

☞ We regret to learn that our old friend, Mr. Robert Cooper, of Eastbourne, Eng., is in needy circumstances. He has been a consistent Spiritualist for many years, and is unquestionably deserving the pecuniary aid his friends in this country—where he labored in behalf of the Cause—may contribute. An Appeal in his behalf appears in the last number of London Medium and Daybreak, with a request that THE BANNER copy it, which we shall do in our next issue. We met Bro. Cooper in New York, we remember, when he was homeward bound, and handed him twenty dollars, for which he was very thankful. He did not forget the favor rendered, as sometime afterward he wrote to us that he should keep that gold piece as a reminder of our kindness in many ways, until absolute necessity compelled him to part with it.

☞ Wanted, a copy each of Crookes's "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism," "Art Magic" and "Ghost Land," the last named work either in paper or cloth covers. Address, stating price for either one or all of them, F. G. T., care BANNER OF LIGHT.

Chinese Immigration.

O. K. Reed, President of the Laundrymen's National Association, and B. W. Eccleston, its Secretary, both of Philadelphia, were at Washington, Feb. 24th, urging senators and representatives, especially the committees on foreign relations and on foreign affairs, to pass Senator Mitchell's bill absolutely prohibiting Chinese immigration. They did this under instructions from their association, which, in a memorial to Congress, signed by President Reed and Secretary Eccleston, together with C. N. Carr, Philadelphia, J. A. Bowden, Columbus, C. H. Jewett, Salem, Mass., C. A. Royce, Springfield, Mass., the executive committee, urges the passage of Mr. Mitchell's bill. In it they say:

"Our own fellow-craftsmen are the more solicitous that Chinese immigrants should be entirely excluded because so large a proportion of them gravitate naturally into the laundry business. Of the two hundred and fifty thousand among us ninety-eight thousand and five hundred are laundrymen, and their laundries number twelve thousand nine hundred and seventy-three—nearly double the number of those conducted by Americans. They, of course, employ no American help, and three-fourths of them are controlled by the Chinese syndicate, known as the Six Companies, whose agents are in every Chinese hamlet in the land making weekly collections from each laundry, and reminding this Pagan people wherever they go that they are still the slaves of the Chinese government, as they are of the hideous vices with which that country's effete society is reeking. Of the $26,983,840 which they draw annually from this country, giving back no return in taxes or any form of loyalty, many millions are expended in China for the means to indulge their national vices, and to hire what is really slave labor to compete with American laborers. The meagreness of their business expenditures, from which this country could alone realize any benefit in their presence, is indicated by the estimate that their total laundry outfit costs less than $325,000, while many of their laundries are opium dens of the lowest type. The sixty thousand wage-women now employed in American laundries might have their number more than quadrupled if these Chinese seed-beds of leprosy could be closed. But all the arguments against Chinese immigration, drawn from economic or other physical considerations, are really trifling compared with the gross immoralities which everywhere attend them, and the Pagan rites with which they continually insult and tend to debauch every Christian sentiment."

Unanswerable Logic.

The grand book, bearing the above title, by THOMAS GALES FORSTER, late of Washington, D. C., and sold by Colby & Rich, should be in the hands of every true Spiritualist in the land. Here is what the poet, Mr. Warren Sumner Barlow, of New York, says in regard to it:

"I find that the grand lectures of Bro. Forster in the volume before me have the old time ring of those I had the pleasure of hearing delivered by the author. I have often felt the need of such a book, to prove to skeptics that we have a literature worth hearing and reading, and this just meets that important demand, besides giving me the great pleasure of reading them myself. The book ought to be in every library in the land, and especially those of all liberal thinkers. Its logic is unanswerable and convincing, with subjects so varied that it is a fountain of living thought that should flow broadcast throughout the land. I hope it may meet the success it justly deserves."

☞ Mrs. J. M. Carpenter, clairvoyant physician of this city, is one of the oldest and most reliable of our trance mediums. We are in receipt of a private note from our veteran friend, and a sterling Spiritualist, Wm. Foster, jr., of Providence, R. I., in which he informs us that he has had a sitting with Mrs. Carpenter recently, when Spirits Henry C. Wright, Achsa W. Sprague and Epes Sargent manifested, giving palpable evidence of their individual presence. Mr. Sargent said: "I wish you to send a message to Bro. Colby. Tell him I shall stand by him and the BANNER OF LIGHT with all the power I possess." We cordially thank Bro. Sargent, not only for his willingness but his determination to stand by us in the great fight now going on between "Gog and Magog," which seems to have permeated about the whole human race—not excepting Spiritualists, who, of all others, with the grand knowledge they possess of things mundane and supermundane, should be the most harmonious people on the earth. But we suppose the great law of heredity comes in to explain why so many of our people are at times subject to angularity. Therefore we should have great charity for their idiosyncrasies, believing that the time is not far distant when a great influx of spirit-power will cleanse them of their irascibility, and that all will join hands and hearts and purses in promulgating the great truths so recently vouchsafed them from the world of spirits.

MR. CHAS. D. COWAN, whose wife is well-known as a finely developed medium for full-form materialization, has recently, we are informed, given very satisfactory private sittings for independent slate-writing. This phase of mediumship in Mr. C., that has for several years been maturing, has attained a point that warrants him in offering his services to the public in that capacity with every assurance of success.

Richmond's Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report.

The demand for the trenchant Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report, written by A. B. Richmond, of Meadville, Pa., rapidly exhausted the first edition, and a second is now before the public with a prospect of being taken from the publishers' shelves within a very short time. This demand was not wholly unlooked for; it scarcely could fail to arise for a work so entertainingly written, so clear and concise, and as cutting as a Damascus blade in its thrusts at the inconsistencies, incongruities and weakness of the futile attempt of the Commission to prove millions of their fellow-men dupes.

"The Soul."

The recently published volume, bearing the above title, the contents of which were given in a series of lessons by the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, is attracting a considerable degree of attention among advanced thinkers, and unquestionably will that of still larger numbers as the development of thought in the direction of the occult enlarges. No one can read it without increasing his stock of wisdom and attaining to elevated spirituality. For details respecting the book see advertisement on fifth page.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN in its current number reprints from Mr. Gurney's recently published book, "Phantasms of the Living," several narratives of much interest. The truth of Psychometry is corroborated by instances related of experiments with Mrs. Buchanan, who has long held the reputation of being one of the best psychometrists living. Among these is one suggested by a prediction made respecting Ireland that was fulfilled. A slip of paper bearing the words, "Ireland in 1889," was placed in her hands. After stating what she was impressed to say, Dr. Buchanan remarks that from it he is led to anticipate a "consummation of political relief (following agitation) in the latter part of 1889, and beginning of prosperity in 1891." The remaining contents include "The Great American Pyramid and Ruined Cities of Arizona and New Mexico." Boston: 6 James street.

What we want most is rapid train-sit—as we, "the people," have been crowded quite enough and half frozen by the surface horse-railroad monopoly. Push this matter to a final success as rapidly as possible—you who have the funds to do it with—and posterity will rise up and call you blessed!

J. Rollin M. The liberties of the people are in danger. When Spiritualists cannot worship God in their own way, without self-appointed censors making raids upon them contrary to law, the same as the Quakers were assaulted in the olden time, and imprisoned, simply because they were Quakers: and when the ancient town of Beverly is attempted to be divided for the benefit of a few Boston financial aristocrats, who want the seashore of the town for their exclusive use, is it not time for the people to protest with all the energy belonging to a liberty-loving race? We should say so. We fully agree with the Boston Journal to the effect that "it will be a sorry day for the State when such a scheme receives the sanction of a Massachusetts Legislature."

Spiritualism in the East.

We are advised by dispatches from our Eastern correspondents that Spiritualism was never more popular and useful in that section of the country than it is at the present time. Throughout the New England States our Cause not only holds its ground, but is steadily gaining in recognition and power. We hear of private circles in every quarter; and the number of home mediums who are steadily serving as teachers of immortality and of the new dispensation of truth are far beyond what the world deems possible.

In good old Massachusetts, Spiritualism holds its vantage ground, and there its footing is as solid as the eternal rocks of the soil. Boston presents to the world its numerous meetings, its numberless circles, its army of mediumistic workers, its works and journals from the spiritual press, with unceasing regularity; and in that stronghold of spiritual progress any thinking, candid mind that wishes to investigate the claims of Spiritualism, impartially and fairly, finds ample opportunity for so doing.

Occasionally, with the good reports of what our Eastern contemporaries and workers are doing, comes a wave of accusation against some so-called medium, or a report of some one of the advocates of Spiritualism; but the wave soon passes, and the report dies out, while the Cause stands even more erect and firmly, if possible, than before, as if to show the world that it is so securely founded upon the rock of faith that no tidal wave nor sweeping gale can hurl it from its base.

We are satisfied by the accounts that reach our sanctum, and by the unimpeachable evidence of intelligent minds which we receive not only from the East but from elsewhere, that for every seeming exposer of fraud in Spiritualism, and for every uncertain manifestation which occurs in the presence of mediums, there are one hundred cases of direct and unmistakable communication between mortals and their spirit friends, and any quantity of strong and useful manifestations of spirit power through the agency of mediumship.

Taking all these facts in the case into consideration, we are safe in the conclusion that Spiritualism has come to stay as a fixture in the life of humanity. Its work and its purpose cannot be overthrown by priest, demagogue or bigot of any school. Its religion is one of love and tolerance toward mankind; its purpose, to call men out to better effort and nobler living; its object, to relieve the world of its weight of superstition and ignorance; consequently its work must and will result in blessing to the human race.—The Better Way, Cincinnati.

THE THEOSOPHIST for February continues its "Travestied Teachings" and "Nature's Finer Forces." A lengthy paper on "Sanskrit Literature" is entertaining and instructive. An account is given of extraordinary feats performed by Pundit Narauyan Martand Sukhatine, who has been giving exhibitions of remarkable intellectual skill in various parts of India. At the exhibition reported fifteen abstruse questions and intricate problems were read to him. He then engaged in a game of cards with one of the company. While playing he conversed with several persons, and without hesitation answered various questions involving operations in addition, subtraction, etc. The card-playing was over in half an hour, the Pundit winning the game, as he invariably does. He then gave in consecutive order correct answers to fourteen of the fifteen questions read to him before the playing commenced, and selected from a pack of fifty cards one mentally designated by the writer of the account. The questions and answers are given in the Theosophist. Madras, India. Boston: Colby & Rich.

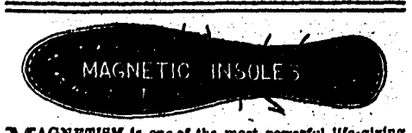
ADVERTISEMENTS.



MAGNETISM is one of the most powerful life-giving substances known to our race. Its action upon all animal kind is to quicken into life and polarity the sluggish molecules of the physical body. This majestic substance comes as near the central action of life itself as human intelligence can analyze.

When we apply a powerful Magnetic Shield to a body to eliminate disease, we work in strict harmony with Nature's highest laws, and utilize the most potential force we can employ next to intelligence to overcome morbid conditions of mind and body. Of all the known curative agents under the control of mortal mind and human will, Magnetism excels all others, and is incomparable in its magical action and quick results.

The finer and more subtle the force we use the quicker and better results we obtain.

To impart magnetic power and potency to a physical body is to give it strength, vitality and renewed youth.

The vivifying energy radiated constantly from Magnetic Shields stimulates alike the mental forces of the mind and increases all the animal power.

Magnetic Shields constantly feed the blood with warm, rich Fibrine, multiply the red corpuscles, polarize the iron, and intensify the vivivic principle of life.

Whoever wears these Shields will take on awakened mental and physical energies, which in very truth is to renew one's youth. Every Shield we manufacture is worth its weight in gold to suffering humanity.

Good, sound, vigorous health, is worth more than worldly wealth, hence these Shields are invaluable, for these powerful Health Batteries have no other place in life, or work to do, but to vitalize the blood and compel sound health in all physical bodies. If you want good health, and the cheerful, happy days of youth, wear the Shields and know what Magnetic Polarity means.

THE SERIES OF LESSONS GIVEN BY THE GUIDES OF MRS. CORA L. V. RICHMOND, ENTITLED

THE SOUL;
Its Embodiment in Human Form.

IN SIX LESSONS, VIZ.:

1st Lesson. The Soul; Its Relation to God.
2d Lesson. The Dual Nature of the Soul.
3d Lesson. The Embodiment of the Soul in Human Form.
4th Lesson. The Embodiment of the Soul in Human Form (Continued).
5th Lesson. The Reunited Soul, including Parental and Kindred Souls.
6th Lesson. Angels, Archangels, and Messiahs.

☞ These Lessons have never before been published.

The primary object in the preservation of these Lessons in book form was to answer the urgent request of members of classes for a text-book or book of reference; but the ever-increasing interest in these and kindred subjects among thoughtful minds in all parts of the world, and the great demand for information concerning the subject matter of these teachings, have led to the publication of this volume.

THE RELIGION OF SPIRITUALISM: Its Phenomena and Philosophy. By SAMUEL WATSON, author of "The Clock Struck One, Two and Three," thirty-six years a Methodist minister.

Mr. Watson's long connection with one of the largest and most influential religious organizations in this country, together with his well-known character for integrity of purpose and faithfulness in the discharge of every known duty, combine to render this a book that will attract the attention and command the studious perusal of thoughtful minds. It contains the principal records of a critical investigation of nearly all phases of spirit-manifestation through a period of twenty-seven years, commenced with a belief that Spiritualism was "the prince of humbugs," and a purpose to expose it, and ending with a conviction that it is a truth far transcending all others in value to mankind. The book here presented will prove one of inestimable worth, not only to Spiritualists but to those who, not having witnessed the phenomena, have no information of the facts which form the immovable foundation on which Spiritualists base not merely a belief but a knowledge of the reality of a future life. It is eminently well adapted to place in the hands of those whose attachment to the faiths and forms of the Church incline them to have nothing to do with the subject upon which it treats.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Hosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 10th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! Holy Spirit! Thou soul of all truth! thy eternal harmonies vibrate throughout the universe, creating light and order and law on every hand; thy supreme presence quickeneth every form with animation and consciousness; thy divine power manifests through all nature, and in every department of being thy children recognize thy parenthood. Oh! our Father God, we would be fed with crumbs of wisdom, and be illuminated by endless light, which streams from thy realms afar. May we, at this time and in every hour of experience, draw near unto thee and come into association with thy angel ones who do thy will. We would be quickened in sympathy, in kindly feeling, in love, and in all things that bless the soul and purify the heart. May we, oh! our Father, learn to know our fellows as brothers and sisters, and extend to each one that golden chain which shall link every heart together and bind them all to thee and thy holy ones forevermore. Amen!

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By A. Aurys.] When the spirit of a degraded person leaves its body does it meet its spirit-friends immediately after death?

ANS.—Not necessarily; although the spirit-friends who occupy a higher plane of purity and peace than the turbulent soul does may exercise a watchfulness over that spirit for its future good. A person may live a degraded life, cultivate viciousness of spirit, exult in such conditions as are debasing, and not encouraging tendencies of an aspirational nature; and if this be so, and he does not struggle against temptation, it will overwhelm him and he will throw out constantly magnetic emanations which are dark and heavy in quality and appearance; and these determine the condition of the spirit immediately after it passes from the mortal form. Emanations that are dark and dense in character throw around the spirit a covering which he cannot penetrate, and which prevent him from beholding the sunlight of heaven; but pure spirits with their calm gaze may penetrate this covering and behold the spirit as it stands with all its moral deformity, and exercise a watchfulness over it from their tender sympathy for its welfare; but at first they cannot draw its thought to higher things than have possessed it. If it does not see those spirits it may not realize their presence. But there are tender spirit-souls who constantly seek out such unfortunate beings, striving to assist and to enlighten them. These benevolent spirits are powerful in magnetic strength, which they exert upon the unfortunate one unceasingly, until it begins to have an effect, not by elevating the man in spite of his desire or tendency of will, but by awakening in his mind a consciousness of his true position and a desire to rise above it, to become cleansed and purified in spirit by throwing out, so to speak, the frost that has encrusted his finer propensities, and melting it away beneath the sunlight of spiritual love. When this work has been done the man feels a new emotion struggling in his soul, with higher impulses in his heart for right living, and begins to shudder at the sight of those unpleasant conditions and events which have mingled with his life, and puts forth the first clinging desire for help, for something better, for a nobler life. Such aspirations stir within him at first only as the tender green leaves stir within the bosom of the seedling; but by-and-bye they gather strength, until they can rise above the depressing conditions and force away that which is heavy and unsightly, and, springing forth feebly, grow up into the light.

Spirits whom you call depraved must of necessity grow strong in the desire to be good, to do better, before they can bear the light of goodness and its associations. They may have had tender friends in former years, for whom they have cared, and who have loved them. Those friends are not lost. Souls who advance in spiritual attainment do not selfishly look forward to their own advancement and their own happiness by ignoring the welfare of those less fortunate; rather as they progress, love, sympathy and tender feeling strengthen in their hearts, so that they have more compassion, more of pity and kindliness for those who have been debased than they might have had when on earth, consequently they will not leave these degraded ones to their unhappy conditions, but will do their best to assist them to a higher state of unfoldment and growth.

Q.—[By the same.] What are the best means of developing the healing gift?

A.—If one is assured that he possesses within his organism those magnetic supplies which may be dispensed to others, in soothing away pain, giving strength to the weary and healing the wounded, it is most assuredly his duty to inform himself how to make use of those supplies for the best interests of his fellowmen. It is wise for him to seek harmonious associations, to live in accordance with natural law, to eschew that which is unhealthy for his organic system, as well as to avoid such associations as are unhealthy, morally speaking, for his spiritual nature.

By living in accord with natural law, paying attention to diet, exercise, inhalation of fresh air, and clear sunlight, a man builds up for himself a reservoir wherein may be stored strong relays of magnetic force that can be utilized by attendant spirits in dispensing to the weak and suffering. He should move only amid such associations as can supply him with sympathy and kindly feeling. It may not be necessary for him to devote any especial hour to private sittings for development; rather should he devote what spare time is his when he feels strong in the physical and happy in the mental, in seeking to allay the pain of some suffering fellow creature. This will not only give his magnetic forces an opportunity for beneficial results, but practice, developing his powers, and bringing to a grand utilization those qualities or forces which may be stored within; at the same time it will open an avenue for the approach of spiritual attendants who are benevolent by nature, and who understand how to apply the forces of his being for the best practical results.

Q.—[By the same.] Is the writing planchette a good medium of communication between spirits and mortals?

A.—The writing planchette will prove to be a fine little instrument of communication between spirits and mortals, provided it comes within the atmosphere or presence, or perhaps the touch of a human medium; not otherwise. It is used by the spirit-world in their manipulations precisely as is the table when moved about or rapped upon by invisible intelligences; it is merely a physical instrumentality for their use. But we know not how it can possibly be utilized unless there come to it the human magnetic emanations from a living medium, which are necessary to the spirit-world in its intelligent communication with the earth.

A planchette will not move about, tracing characters and lines upon a paper beneath it, unless some human being is in contact, however slight the touch may be, with the little machine or in proximity to it—the spirits using the magnetism of that human being in applying their power to the machine. One person may seek to use the planchette as a writing instrument for receiving communications from an unseen world without the slightest success; another may readily receive written communications through its instrumentality, and yet another may sit for a long time, day after day, experimenting with the little machine, and, beginning to feel impatient, think it is useless to continue further, but at last receive intimations of success, because all this time the spirits have not been experimenting with the instrument as much as they have been operating upon the human being present with it—utilizing his forces and bringing them into subjection to their will—and at the last moment the planchette begins to move, its pencil traces lines upon the paper, and a written communication is the result. A planchette sometimes proves accessory to a medium and the spirits in the development of power, and may be used as a table is used by a physical medium, or as a pencil is used in the hands of a mechanical writing medium.

Q.—Will you please state if you have seen God and Christ and the Holy Ghost? If so, what are they like? And is the Virgin Mary held in esteem above other spirits?

A.—Every loving, tender mother who has abnegated herself and her happiness for the welfare of her children, holds in the spiritual world as high a position and as grand an influence as does that spirit who is sometimes called the Virgin Mary. Every woman who has devoted her life to the dissemination of truth, lived a life of self-sacrifice and gone about doing good, will find in the higher life as grand a glorification, as high an honor, as noble an influence as possibly can that spirit spoken of, or any other in God's universe. The questioner wishes to know if we have seen the "Holy Ghost". We do not consider that the term Holy Ghost applies to any one spirit or any one individual. To us it is the universal spirit of all love, animating life, permeating all things, therefore it cannot be seen with the natural eye; it may be sensed and taken up within the heart, reverenced and obeyed, because the inspiration of this Holy Ghost, Holy Spirit or Divine Breath, as it may be called, in its true significance, is that which indeed endows every human being and all life with the power of existence, not only with the breath that is drawn but with the force of mentality, of intelligence itself; therefore we cannot say that we have seen the Holy Ghost, the Divine Breath, but we have taken it up into our lives, so far as we could, and have tried to make it a part of ourselves, and follow its leading into such avenues and works as might call forth our efforts in doing God's will.

We shall perhaps startle some of our hearers and a portion of the world when we decidedly say we have seen Jesus Christ; that he is a spirit, a humble and gentle, loving soul, making no pretensions to worth or to ability, moving about in the higher states of spiritual life, dispensing comfort and cheer and strengthening magnetism to those who require such aid; sending down from his pure state relays of magnetic strength to the weary and sad, visiting the abodes where degradation, pain and sorrow exist, and taking up within his own love and within his own touch the very lowest and humblest, to do them good. A teacher of moral philosophy, a healer with divine magnetism—divine inasmuch as it is elevating and purifying—is this spirit who was once known on earth as Jesus the Christ, not a son of God in any other sense than every man who is trying to do his duty and to help the world is a son of God, but a true brother, who loves humanity and tries to help all over the pitfalls and snares of life.

Have we seen God in a personal image? No; nor do we understand that any eye has gazed upon the Deity in such likeness. Do we see God in the beautiful flowers before us? Yes. Do we feel him in the atmosphere and the sunshine that plays around our heads? At all times. We behold his smile in the very star-beams that fall upon you, and we know that God is manifested everywhere, as supreme intelligence, infinite love, divine power, that which makes a trinity, and which forms the most perfect wisdom of the universe. To our mind such is God. We cannot narrow him down to a human image, however colossal it might be; we are glad to believe that his power and his love expand infinitely, filling not only this earth, but all worlds and all systems of worlds, grander than light itself, ever beautiful, ever holy and uplifting.

Q.—Is it true, as some astronomers predict, that the world is to come to an end within seventeen years?

A.—We make no such calculations from the spiritual side of life. So far as we are informed on this subject, this planet will maintain its position in space, affording conditions for human growth and development, for ages to come. The astronomical knowledge that would reveal to you the suspension of this planet in space and its extinguishment in less than a score of years, must indeed be very faulty, and needs to be revised before it is given to mankind. To our understanding, the world is young; it has not yet reached the height of its unfoldment, much less has it passed into the period of decay; it is now gaining a position whence it may afford better conditions for life and advancement to its creatures than it has been able to do before; consequently, reasoning from these things, we may safely conclude that for many, many centuries the world will perform its accustomed work, and humanity will live and grow and pass away upon its surface.

Q.—What is cramp? and what the remedy?

A.—That which is called cramp is muscular contraction, caused by a sudden chilling of the parts by the withdrawal of the blood from the surface, or by some kindred disturbance. The remedy is to see that the circulation is improved at once, through friction, and if necessary, artificial heat may also be applied, in connection with that which is gained through the process of friction. Cramp signifies coldness; coldness, in many cases, precedes death. Heat means life, activity, circulation, and therefore you may readily trace the remedy, when considering the cause of the disease.

We may add, in this connection, that it is wiser to use an ounce of prevention than to apply a pound of cure; therefore, if one addicted to these muscular contractions will be particular to keep the vital fluid in circulation, day after day—and this may be done by living strictly in accordance with the laws of health, partaking of no unhealthy food, or that which is indigestible, maintaining exercise freely, making good use of water and sunshine in daily life, while, if necessary, rubbing the surface of the limbs daily with a brush, or something of rough texture—then he will find his tendency to cramp or contraction lessening, until it ceases altogether.

Father Henry Fitz James.

Once more I am gratified at taking my place on your platform, Mr. Chairman, and presenting myself to the world. I wish to thank the kind friend who caused these blossoms to be placed upon your table. I recognize them as a gift from himself to the spirit-world, and am almost tempted to appropriate them to my own uses, as a gift from him, for I owe him a debt of obligation which I seek to repay, in sending out my influence to him in hours of perplexity and trial. These blossoms speak to me of the kindness and the assistance which he dispensed when I first came, in my groping, uncertain way, seeking light and understanding of these laws of the spirit, and finding that which I sought from the friend whom I approached. I refer to the editor of the BANNER OF LIGHT, and to him I send greeting, and the assurance that I have not forgotten my promise to assist him when he felt the need. Although my voice is silent, yet my influence is not, and I believe it has been exercised for him and with him, in times when he understood it not.

I am not here, Mr. Chairman, especially to speak concerning the friends in this office, to whom I feel attached, but I come as the guide to a spirit who is seeking light—one who, when on earth, was benevolent, and who desired only to bless his fellow-men. He has not long dwelt in the spiritual realm, and he feels his mind disturbed because of the many conditions which are pressing upon him, so different from what he anticipated ere he passed from earth. It is true that he, like myself, was a member of the Catholic Church; it is also true he was a worker in the field of Catholicism, who, like myself, was ready to spend his time and his influence in its behalf; but it does not follow that a spirit, or a man, if you will, who is earnest for the truth, who desires light and knowledge, and to be guided according to the ways of God, must necessarily cling to the old superstitions or false ideas which burdened his mind when on earth, after he passes from the body. If he cares more for ceremonial; if he pays more attention to outward observance than to the spirit of religious thought; if he craves for homage, and to be lauded above his fellow-men; if he cares not for the ignorance that assails his people, if through that ignorance he be lifted up in their contemplation, and regarded as a deified being, then will he still continue in the ruts that he himself has worn around him; then will he be a long time in freeing himself from the chains and trammels which his own life has forged about his spirit-form. But, as I said, if he be earnest and sincere in his desire to know the truth, he will find ways and means for reaching a grand and open roadway which will be of benefit to his soul.

I speak thus of the man whom I shall present to you, because I feel that he has been a benevolent spirit, doing his work with gentle kindness, like a father rather than an autocrat, leading those who looked up to him for guidance through such ways as he himself desired to travel, and consequently, though he finds spiritual life very different from what he had supposed, he is reaching out for knowledge, and coming into an understanding of the laws that surround and govern him and all other souls. I have invited him to be present here and to say a few words, because I believe it will be a grand experience to his spirit.

When I came back, groping for the light, seeking knowledge, wishing even to disseminate those ideas which had clung to me on earth, which I had not learned were false, I was received and instructed with knowledge and an understanding how to proceed in the higher paths, and so I have felt it my duty to try and assist whoever should seek for knowledge and grasp for truth. Father Henry Fitz James.

John Joseph Riordan.

I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that here you have an open avenue for all who desire to enter and to tread these paths, and I am invited to gain an experience in this line which I trust will indeed prove a benefit to my soul. I have arisen from the bondage of the flesh, and feel that I can see more clearly than when under its dominion; yet I have a kindly feeling of love and sympathy flowing out from my soul to those whom I left, and who mourn me as departed from their midst. It is not so; I am privileged still to work among them, and to give them my blessing, but I trust it will be of greater helpfulness than in the past, because now, as I move and touch those who would have come to me, I feel it with a spiritual influence, and that I must exert this to free the soul from error and from the bondage of superstition.

I am happy to come and send my greetings and love to all friends, and to ask them not to revere my memory by bowing down in worship before the picture or image, or to the sacred memento which I have left, but rather to show their love and reverence in kindly deed and noble effort toward the welfare of their fellowmen.

I would like each one whom I have ever reached to know of this spiritual communion, to partake of it, to feast upon it with their own souls, that they may be strengthened as with the wine of life. I would that its truth illuminate each heart; that they may be uplifted beneath the sun of eternal wisdom; and I shall do my best at all times to use such influence as is mine, to make this blessed truth known to men.

[To the Chairman:] My son, you will pardon me if I intrude, but I feel that I shall indeed profit by the experience. The thought that I can send a word of love and greeting to those hearts that have recognized me in the past, is a grateful one. I may not be received as a returning spirit, but I shall waft my thought and my affection to the places where I have been known, and I believe, in time, its influence will be felt and understood. I am John Joseph Riordan, from New York.

Dick, to C. M.

Mr. Pierpont said I might say a few words this afternoon, and I gratefully avail myself of the privilege. I wish to say to my dear companion: I was fully aware of the writing you received, concerning what purported to be a warning from me, and I sought to impress your mind so that you would not take alarm, nor feel exercised in relation to it. I did not bring such admonition, nor did I approach the person who seems to think that I did. I have not foreseen any especial danger; only those whom we love, we seek to guard and to guide, and I am doing that, as often as is permitted me. I know that when one on earth travels far and near, at all times he is subjected to more or less danger, but I think we shall be able to take care of you, and help you over the pathway of life. I am told by wise spirits who seem to know, that your discipline on earth is not finished, that you have many experiences yet to reach and to understand, before you leave the mortal form, and so I feel that all is in the hands of a wise power; and if I should, at any time see, or know of danger lurking near that can be avoided, I think the opportunity will be given me to make it known.

Our dear child sends his love; he, too, is often by your side, seeking to help you, and at the same time gaining an experience for himself in connection with worldly things. Ever remember that the purer your own life, the higher elevation you seek for your own spirit, the grander cultivation you give your own nature, the purer, sweeter and grander will be the knowledge and the experience of earth which comes to your spirit son, for he is often attracted to your side, and partakes with you of those conditions which surround your life. We know there is much of the earth earthly that you cannot avoid, that may not be taken into his life; but the more beautiful and pure one on earth makes his conditions and his aspirations, the more lovely and sweet will be the knowledge and the discipline coming to his spirit friends in their approach to his life.

We bring our best love to you and to our dear ones. We are sending them our influence, guarding them from certain conditions which otherwise might make a strong impression on their lives. We believe we shall be assisted in this good work, and so free our loved ones from those depressing ideas which should have no part in their education or in their experience.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman. My message will be understood if you simply say it is from Dick, to C. M.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 17th, 1888.

Hannah Bentley.

My home was in Burlington, Vt. While dwelling in the flesh I used often to feel the influence of the dear ones from beyond, around me; yet I could hardly believe they could come near enough for us to converse with them. A lady one day asked, "Do you ever feel that the loved ones who have passed through what you term death, have come to you in your home?" I made reply with a shiver, "Hardly can I believe they come near enough to make us know they are there; but still I have felt, in the night time, as if John was in the room with me."

In a little while, again, the conversation came up, naturally, as it will, with neighbors, and I said to her, "It must be there is a power given those who have gone to spirit-life which enables them to come back to us, or else from whence is this sensation that runs over us when we feel and think they are around us? I often feel the influence so strong that I look around thinking some one is there. Then the little child that was laid away so tenderly years ago! I can't keep that angel child out of my mind." She asked me if I did n't think the child was able to come. I answered, "If John could come the child could." But I could not understand why, if these dear ones were coming to us, some power was not given in a manner we could sense for ourselves.

In time I crossed the boundary, and found that it was true that they came to me in those hours. Now nearly every dear close connection has passed over. My name is Hannah Bentley.

Jeremiah Crowley.

I come from Brooklyn, N. Y. The boys used to say occasionally: "Well, Jerry, what do you think of it? Have the spirits got back here, or are they ghosts?" Well, says I, "Boys, you do n't know but they may be spirits. I guess I would n't speak in that way, because there 's one thing certain, we 've all got to try it on for ourselves finally." I checked the boys a little. I did n't like to hear them speak about the matter so lightly, but still I know they would say that, occasionally, as we 'd take a moonlight stroll.

One evening we were out, and we had to cross near a ferry, when all at once there came up in front of us what the boys called a "spook." I said, "Do n't say that; you do n't know what that is." Well, we thought we 'd give chase, but, as further on we went, the distance was still between us, and we found, as we thought we were nearing it, that it was many miles away from us. I 've learned, since I passed out, that it was the spirit of my own father.

And now I would say to every mortal that do n't just understand what these things are, "Do n't make light of them." We hear, we feel and see more than you in the mortal can realize.

I am feeling tip-top, as we used to say among the boys. I 'd like to let Joe Dame know that I 've found out what that was. I suppose you aint acquainted with him. You can give my name as Jeremiah Crowley.

Ella Collamore.

I have tried a number of times to speak in these assemblies, since the little angel-child has been able to deliver a message. She says: "Aunt Ella, can't you write a letter now as well as me?" I felt a little condemned, thinking this child looked up to me and had been able to send a little message to father and mother and Aunt Betsey. She said: "I am happy in my spirit-home, but I often come to earth; there are attractions that draw me back." Sometimes I am saddened a little, but I look up and say: "Blessed angels, brush away the clouds, that mother may have a little peace and happiness here." I would say to the dearest of friends, whom I ought to term sister Marion: "Never, never can you be repaid on earth, but in heaven the angels will repay you."

Many times I have stood near you, and leaned my arm upon your shoulder, and the dear little angel-child on the other side of me, as your anxiety had gone out for the one yet left in the body, and also for those you have been a ministering angel in the flesh to. No, never, dearest friend, can you be repaid here, but in heaven you will look back, and think you did what you thought was right. Not only anxious feelings for your own, but for mine, and as I see how things are moving at present, I feel that mother may help to lessen the burden a little from your shoulders while auntie stays.

Oh! how many times have you thought, as you have been sitting together, apparently alone: "If I could only converse with her as I would like to, on spirit-return, the hours would not be so lonely and sad." I feel often, as I come to you, that there is my home. Angels bless you, dearest ones. Ella Collamore, of Boston.

Ira Woodman.

I, too, come from what is termed the spirit-world. My home on earth was in Groveland, Mass. I am very anxious to leave a few words, for I have been here a good many times; but whether it was my fault or any fault, I did n't get power enough to control the instrument. For years I have been working to come into communication with those that are left. I would say to Henry, that since Georgie went out, he has felt like what he terms making a little investigation, and he has once or twice stood beside Henry when you said: "Well, yes, it seems like Georgie, but it was n't quite lively enough." Now, let me say to you that we have to learn to get control of an instrument, and we can't be just ourselves at the first start.

Georgie says, "Grandpa says father thought I ought to come in and say 'Hello, father!' but I could n't do it the first time."

Mary Jane is with me at times; we are not confined together constantly, any more than you are in the mortal. I will say to Etta: Be careful, and don't be looking wholly from the old stitching-machine. I have been in the home a good many times, and I know there are some burdens of life that are heavy that do n't belong to you; but coming into sympathy with relatives you take a pretty good share on your own shoulders. Now you know, Etta, that you can't change anything; he 's going to do just about the same way, and all you can do, or William either, is to give the best advice you know how. I know Alvan has many things to contend with, but in God's own good time the burden of life will be lightened. I will say to William that Nellie stands close beside me, and says that sometime she will send a letter through this post-office.

My name is Ira Woodman.

Zebedee Jackson.

I suppose we all come in our own time and take turns here. I used to carry the key, tell Brother Parker, when here, but you can't carry the key to the spirit-door. I 'd like to say to Clara that I have been stepping into her home, but I don't want to rent any rooms; I 've got room enough where I am.

I wish the children could understand that there aint any "dead people." I have n't seen a dead man since I went away; but I did see a good many when I was in the city of Boston before I went away. I just want to make my voice known. Say to them that I am happy. But it is just like a school; and if you do n't learn a little something of the spirit-side here, you 've got to begin down with 'the children and learn it there.

Joseph and the children think that sometime they may send a letter to Sarah. My name is Zebedee Jackson.

Handel Blake.

I would like to add a few words, if I can have the privilege. You may place me in Walpole, Mass. I often felt, when in the flesh, that there must be something back of this story people were telling about spirits coming to earth.

Ada, learn all you can of this life here, because if you do you will be much more advanced when you cross the portal. The children—I know you carry 'em heavy in your own soul, and wonder sometimes if I am able to come to you. Yes: more times than you can think. The boys, I feel, are drifting into the right channel—only they must be boys before they are men. And the darling little angel daughter—God bless her.

I feel, Ada, that you have had a good many clouds to encounter since they said I was dead. Cruel word is "death." But I find it is only a change. I looked on my mortal form as clearly as you could, but the love and affection for it was gone to the new body. Grandsire says it is like looking back into the old woods and seeing the snake's skin, from which the old snake has crawled out and gone on. We look on the body and know it is the tenement we moved from, and have no desire to return into it.

I am happy; but when I come to earth and find you laboring under heavy burdens, I come into sympathy with you just while I am here; but, thank the great God, we can't take away earthly affairs; if we did, there would be no heaven any more than you have here. Handel Blake.

Harvey Merrill.

Is this a post-office? [Not exactly.] Well, if I drop a letter here will it reach my friends? [Yes, some of them.] I come from Wells River, Vt.—not now, but that was my home. I want to say that Harvey Merrill aint dead, and I 'm going to stick to it. Wells River aint Bath, nor it aint Landaff, either. I want Henry to know it. I can't just tell how I went away, because I went so quickly. There was some trouble with my head. I can't remember anything, only seeing a field and that pair of bars—and, as Flavie says, they found me there. I guess I thought I was going to bed. I don't know. I would like this letter to reach Henry and Thornton and George—all of them—if possible.

I don't want to enter into details, for it do n't make me feel very good. I would like to just say that I am gaining a good deal; and they said if I would just come and speak a few words I should feel a good deal better, and progress faster.

Just put down that Harvey Merrill is here, with Flavie and Nancy and Lucy.

Joseph B. Hall.

I come from Dunkirk, N. Y. I understood a great deal of your philosophy, as it is termed, which I hardly think very appropriate. I was one of what they call the old pioneers. God bless the old BANNER; long may it be unfurled to the world. From its birth I cherished it; and while in the flesh I looked for its coming more than for my food, for it was spiritual food to me, and more satisfying than the material could be.

I love the children, and on this side we are surrounded by the angel darlings in their happy glee. We love the children, for we were all children at first.

I am happy in my spirit-home. The loved companion welcomed me, and mother, with outstretched hands, greeted me, saying, "Come up higher, Joseph, all things are ready."

I would send a word to each one of the children—Samuel and Luther especially. Some are yet in Dunkirk, and some in Buffalo, and some are scattered even to California. I can reach them there.

Oh! how many times I have been a silent listener in this room since I left the mortal form. I thank the Great Giver that in his wisdom he made the wise provision that mortals and spirits should commune together.

I would just leave one word for Bro. Cobb and Bro. Taylor, who officiated when they laid me away. Joseph B. Hall.

Carrie Niles.

My home was in Orford, N. H. I have felt a good many times, as I have come into these surroundings, why could I not send one word to the loved ones, as well as others; but I well understand now that if we do not take the moment offered us we lose that moment, and others take it instead.

I wish to say that I am happy in my spirit-home. I suffered much with that dread disease, consumption, and I felt almost to the last that I should rally and stay a little longer.

Oh! Flora, how happy I was just to have a few moments with you before the "death angel" (as it is termed, but I think we should use instead the term "angel-usher") came to welcome me; but George and the children saddened, with tears streaming down their faces, and I heard the words, "Oh! Carrie, we cannot let you go!" while the angels beckoned me up higher. I felt it was hard to loose myself from earth, for they held me with their sorrow. Dear ones, when you find an angel-usher has come for a loved one, try to be as calm as possible, for your grief holds us to earth when the spirit would take its flight and soar onward and upward.

Oh! Flora and George, learn all you can. Lorainie is here to-day, not quite able to send a message just yet, but in time may be able to do as well as I have. I have tried many times before, but have failed; but to-day I stood so close that as one stepped out I came in. Carrie Niles, of Orford, N. H.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

LAURA AND BELLA BALCOM.

I notice in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 18th a message given by "Winona," through the mediumship of Mr. Fletcher, for my daughters, LAURA and BELLA BALCOM, who passed to the higher life—one twenty months ago and the other nine years ago. They have materialized to me at the Berry Sisters' and Mrs. Cowan's a number of times, convincing me beyond a doubt of a continued life beyond the grave.

Yours respectfully, JONAS BALCOM.

Lynn, Mass., Feb. 27th, 1888.

MRS. HATTIE TRUE.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 11th, 1888, is a message from MRS. HATTIE TRUE, whose home formerly was in Ionia. She was loved by all who knew her. Her many friends who have read the message say that it is very much like her style of speaking, and I recognize it clearly. MRS. J. H. DUNHAM.

Ionia, Mich.

FRANCES ROSIER.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 18th we find a communication from my wife's mother, FRANCES ROSIER, which we acknowledge as coming from her. She gives my wife's name correctly and also our boy's name. Mother Mann, whom she speaks of as being with her, is my mother. She has been in spirit-life nearly six years. We feel very grateful to hear from them; and also Mrs. Dexter and Hattie, whom she speaks of, were very intimate friends of ours. There are many of Mother Rosier's old friends that acknowledge her communication, and also the communication from Mrs. Hattie True, in THE BANNER of the 11th, to her husband, Frank A. True, of Evart, Mich.

Yours respectfully, MELVIN E. MANN.
CELESTIA H. MANN.

Rochester, Mich., Feb. 23d, 1888.

J. B. PORTER.

The message in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 18th from J. B. PORTER, Orange, N. J., is correct in every particular, and it is most convincing proof of the continued life and love of our father, who passed to the spirit-world one year ago last September, the 22d. He was a firm believer in the truths of the Spiritual Philosophy for the past thirty years. We feel grateful to Mr. Fletcher for the happiness this communication has brought to us. Yours sincerely,

ELLA F. PORTER,
211 West 38th street, New York.
MRS. J. B. PORTER,
19 Elm street, Orange, N. J.

DR. STICKNEY.

The communication from DR. STICKNEY of this city, through the mediumship of J. Wm. Fletcher, in your paper of Feb. 11th, 1888, is fully recognized as being very characteristic of my father. In fact the statements contained therein are similar to those he often expressed only a few weeks previous to his passing away. All interested return many thanks to him for his message, also to Mrs. Bliss and "Winona" for assisting him. Very truly yours,

E. R. STICKNEY.

Springfield, Mass., Feb. 25th, 1888.

Planchette.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Recently a gathering of people was held in Boston, in which Prof. James, of Harvard College, spoke of the efforts which the "Psychical Research Society" had made toward investigating the varied phenomena connected with Modern Spiritualism, and declared that the planchette excitement of the past was being revived; he advised each hearer to procure a planchette, and discover what results might follow its use, etc., etc.

Recently a lady in Concord, Mass., has become quite proficient as a planchette writer, and good truthful results have followed the investigation.

Lately some of the visitors at a hotel in New Hampshire became interested in planchette, and the lady who could work one sat down, and the company asked personal questions concerning those sitting near, or those walking by them; what the planchette wrote in answer proved true to the letter. One of the parties disliked at first to own up to the truthfulness of the answers, but came next morning and said that what was written was true, but it was a secret except to themselves. They then asked what intelligence it was that gave the information, and it was sportively written, "the divil." This answer was sufficient, and they wanted nothing more to do with planchette! The query naturally arises, why should the truth not be received from Satan himself, if there be such, which, of course, no sensible, thinking person believes—the idea of such an incarnation of evil being only a relic of a barbarous age, a myth of the past.

Boston, March 1st. A. S. HAYWARD.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan in Maine.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Miss Jennie B. Hagan has recently occupied for two Sundays the Spiritualists' platform at Good Templars' Hall. It has been some nine years since she has lectured here, and we notice a marked improvement in her discourses and poems. Excellent audiences greeted her, and were much pleased with the able manner in which she handled the subjects presented to her.

Sunday, Feb. 19th, she treated twenty-seven subjects, giving us two good lectures and several poems.

Monday evening, Feb. 20th, she held a circle at the residence of Mr. Stansfield, 284 Brackett street. Those who were present were well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

Tuesday, the 21st, she went to Bath, and held a circle there in the evening.

Wednesday she was again in Portland, and assisted in the entertainment given by the Spiritualists in their hall. The entertainment consisted of recitations by Miss Hagan and Mr. T. P. Beals; instrumental music by Miss Eva Morrison, Prof. Smart and Mr. Heard; and songs by Mr. Otis Winslow and Miss Nettie Morrison; at the close of the entertainment the floor was cleared and dancing was the order until a late hour.

Thursday and Friday nights Miss Hagan lectured to good audiences in Bangor. On Saturday she came back once more to Portland, and closed her engagement with the Society here Sunday, Feb. 26th.

We wish Miss Hagan all success in her chosen work, and trust that sometime in the near future we shall have the pleasure of listening to her again.

ATHEISTIC SCIENTISTS.

There is a set of men whose faith is all
In their five fingers, and what flagering brings,
With all beyond of wondrous great and small,
Unnamed, uncounted in their tale of things:
A race of blinkards, who peruse the case
And shell of life, but feel no soul behind,
And in the marshalled world can find a place
For all things—only not the marshalling Mind.
'T is strange, 't is sad; and yet why blame the mole
For channelling earth?—such earthy things are they;
E'en let them muster forth in black array,
Frames with no pictures, pictures with no soul.
I, while this dædal dome o'erspans the sod,
Will own the builder's hand, and worship God.
—John Stuart Blackie.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Chicago, Ill., Feb. 10th, 1888, Dr. Sidney C. McAllister, who was a citizen of Chicago for over twenty years.

Dr. McAllister was born at Whiting, Vt., fifty-four years ago. He adopted the profession of a physician, and when still a young man decided to seek his fortune in the new west. He settled in Champaign, Ill., where he practiced his profession for a number of years, but finally dropped it to engage in more congenial pursuits. He came to Chicago in 1867, and soon afterward built up a successful business in contract teaming. It was not until about eight years ago that he resumed the practice of his profession, and then instead of returning to the old school of practice, he advertised himself as a magnetic healer. It is claimed by his friends that he was wonderfully successful in his new line of treatment. He was generally known as a kind-hearted, charitable man, who would divide his last dollar with any one in distress.

From Cummington, Mass., Feb. 9th, 1888, Mr. Noah Gloyd, aged 67 years.

Bro. Gloyd was much esteemed by all the community for his kind and social qualities. He was for many years a devoted and consistent Spiritualist, always ready to advocate and defend its teachings. Though never a public speaker, being of a retiring and diffident disposition, yet he was finely gifted as an inspirational speaker in private circles.

His end came suddenly; falling back in his sleigh, he expired immediately. Bro. Lorenzo Tower spoke comforting words at the funeral; Mrs. S. E. Hawley read a sweet poem written for the occasion, and singing was finely rendered by Prof. Snow and wife, assisted by Miss Susie Tirrell of West Cummington. WILLIAM ALCOTT.

Dr. Hardcastle's TOOTH-LIFE.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

This Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

Put up in a neat box. Sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. For sale by COLBY & RICH.

GARLAND'S VEGETABLE COUGH DROPS.

The greatest known remedy for all Throat and Lung Complaints. For Catarrh, Asthma, etc., etc., it has no equal. It is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Influenza, Bronchitis, and Inflammation of the Lungs. It is free from all opiates and minerals, or any other injurious ingredient; and is therefore harmless in all cases; likewise palatable and beneficial in regulating and strengthening the system; and as a BLOOD PURIFIER IS TRULY UNRIVALLED. A box, taken according to directions, is warranted in all cases to give satisfaction, or the money will be refunded by the proprietor, DR. M. H. GARLAND, 493 Broadway, Chelsea, Mass.

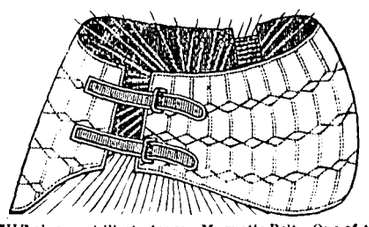
DR. A. H. RICHARDSON, Magnetic Healer, Waverly House, Charlestown. 8l0



THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and all diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

EDUCATION; or, The Coming Man. An Essay Involving the Basic Truths that Underlie the Universal Church.

Whoever takes this pamphlet in hand will read it through and be spiritually benefited by so doing. The theory of education it sets forth is so in harmony with the loftiest conceptions of the spiritually-minded, that no one whose thoughts tend upward, and who sees that out of the present turmoil and seeming retrogression are to come peace and advancement for all earth's people, will hesitate to adopt and do what he can to give this elucidation of it a wide circulation. Terse in language, clear in argument, forcible in expression, apt in illustration, and, withal, founded on immutable truth, the work bears its own recommendation, and will be welcomed and read by thousands.

The proceeds arising from the sale of this work are to be donated by the author to the "God's Poor Fund."

ELEVENTH EDITION.

THE VOICES.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

THE VOICE OF NATURE represents God in the light of Reason and Philosophy—in His unchangeable and glorious attributes.

THE VOICE OF A PEBBLE delineates the individuality of Matter and Mind, fraternal Charity and Love.

THE VOICE OF SUPERSTITION takes the creeds at their word, and proves by numerous passages from the Bible that the God of Moses has been defeated by Satan, from the Garden of Eden to Mount Calvary!

THE VOICE OF PRAYER enforces the idea that our prayers must accord with immutable laws, else we pray for effects, independent of cause.

Eleventh edition, with a new stippled steel-plate engraving of the author from a recent photograph. Printed in large, clear type, on beautiful tinted paper, bound in beveled boards.

Price $1.00; postage 10 cents.

☞ Persons purchasing a copy of "THE VOICES" will receive, free, a copy of Mr. Barlow's new pamphlet entitled "ORTHODOX HASH, WITH CHANGE OF DIET," if they so order.

"BEYOND THE VALLEY,"

A SEQUEL TO THE

MAGIC STAFF,

BY ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS,

(Seer of the Harmonial Philosophy,)

Is his latest remarkable book, written and published within the past year.

It explains some of the steps that led to Important Events in his Private Life. It will be as universally appreciated as any other volume from his pen. The publishers receive orders for it from all parts of the civilized world. It contains six vivid diagram-illustrations, and treats upon subjects autobiographical, and explains questions of universal interest.

The press generally, and the numerous distinguished correspondents of the author in particular, have uniformly given to "Beyond the Valley" a high and influential position among the many works of this author.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, March 4th, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther occupied the platform. Her appearance was greeted with applause. In the morning, after singing by the audience, Mrs. Lovering piano accompanist, and the popular song of Prof. Longley's, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," by Charles W. Sullivan, Mrs. Luther, under the influence of her guides, spoke upon the interrogatories, "What is life, that man clings to it with such tenacity? What is death, that he resists it with such force?" Pertinent and forcible remarks were made in their consideration, leading the minds of her auditors to just and reasonable views of the economies of life, the event termed "death" being held to be simply a change of life, not its termination. In the course of the lecture a feeling allusion was made to the nearness of the Society's Treasurer, Mr. W. A. Dunklee, to the world of spiritual existence. Following the lecture, the President, Capt. Holmes, addressed the meeting, after which a hymn by the audience, "We are Waiting by the River," closed the exercises.

Evening.—After congregational singing Capt. Richard Holmes announced the death of Mr. W. A. Dunklee, at six o'clock P. M., and that funeral services would be held at half past ten o'clock, in Berkeley Hall, Wednesday, March 7th. The guide of Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther continued the subject of the morning lecture, and held the attention of the large and appreciative audience. Her guide paid a glowing tribute to the memory of the departed, and improvised a poem. The audience joined in the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Mrs. Luther closed the service with an invocation.

Mrs. A. H. Colby Luther will occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7:30.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of Feb. 28th the members and friends of this Society held a social meeting at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. Capt. Richard Holmes presided. The exercises were opened with congregational singing. Mr. Jacob Edson and Dr. N. P. Smith made addresses. Dr. E. H. Mathews spoke, and gave delineations of character from articles placed in his hands. After a piano solo by Mrs. Lovering, Mrs. L. W. Litch made an address, and gave tests of spirit presence. Capt. Holmes spoke with deep feeling and earnestness. Dr. Eames made the closing remarks, stating the pleasure it gave him once again to appear among the friends of the Society. A season of social converse and a hymn closed the exercises.

The next social meeting will be held March 13th. All are cordially invited.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Full and attentive audiences were present at the sessions on Sunday last. Eben Cobb delivered two excellent discourses upon the subjects: "What will come after Spiritualism?" and "True Religion a Growth of the Human Soul." He said: "Religion is nothing that can be taught. Man may learn truth after truth, precept after precept; he may grasp with the mind higher and still higher unfoldments of knowledge, until, in the ecstasy of reverential fervor, he imagines his arms to be folded about the holy of holies, and yet possess no store of true religion; it is a sweet distillation exuded from the fruitage of the whole sum of acquired knowledge, and the process can only obtain for the self in the laboratory of the self's own soul." Dr. J. L. Paxson was warmly received and gave instructive lessons in Spirit Philosophy. Mrs. C. F. Odiorne entertained us with fine remarks and spirit-communications. The dramatic controls of Dr. Hatch received marked attention. Dr. W. S. Eldridge spoke, and made several correct examinations of disease from the platform. Excellent tests and readings were given by Miss A. Peabody, Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Mrs. E. Shackley, Mrs. N. S. Thomas, Miss Cullen, Mr. P. McKenzie, Miss Gertie Coffin and Mr. Page. VINDEX.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday afternoon we had a most beautiful "service of song." The sweet and inspiring harmonies seemed to lift up the soul above the petty cares and annoyances of daily life, and make all better who were privileged to listen. Mrs. Fisher-Wellington, with an excellent quartette choir, and Mr. Truette upon the organ, were at their best. Words are but the conveyance of a subtle spiritual magnetism, and if inspiration be lacking, however well chosen, have little vitalizing power. I doubt not that this music, so perfectly expressed, so filled with inspiration, was truly a vehicle for angels to send their loving, harmonious influence into each listener's heart, and that these occasions bless in ways we scarcely comprehend.

Next Sunday Mrs. Kates R. Stiles's guide will speak at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M.

There will be the regular Wednesday evening sociable at 7:30 P. M., in the lower audience room. On Wednesday, the 14th inst., it is expected that Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher will give an address on "Egypt—Its Ancient Ruins," etc., probably with stereopticon views. All are cordially invited. W. H. R.

The First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society's parlors were filled to their utmost capacity on Friday evening, March 2d. The musical part of the programme was one of great interest; it was participated in by Miss Amanda Bailey, Miss Jessie Judkins, the charming child vocalist, and Mrs. Whittemore, who sings so sweetly under spirit-control. Addresses were made by Mr. J. Edson, Mr. Haskell, Mr. L. L. Whitlock and Dr. Paxson.

For next Friday evening a programme of unusual interest has been prepared.

Arrangements are nearly completed for the coming Anniversary services which will be held under the joint auspices of the two oldest chartered societies of Spiritualists in Boston, the First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society and the Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1. The services are to be held on Saturday in Tremont Temple, and on Sunday in Paine Memorial Hall.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association.—A large audience greeted the return of Dr. H. B. Storer and J. D. Stiles to our platform last Sunday. Dr. Storer spoke with his usual eloquence. That he fills a large place in the hearts of all true Spiritualists is very evident. At the close of his remarks Mr. Stiles rapidly described the many spirits that presented themselves before him, nearly all of whom were fully recognized.

Prof. W. Milligan presided at the piano; and Mrs. Nickerson and Miss Snow gave artistic rendition to several pieces of vocal music.

Next Sunday A. A. Wheelock and Jacob Edson will make short speeches, and be followed by many Boston mediums in the exercise of their spiritual gifts. It will be Mediums' Day.

The Thursday evening circles are largely attended. REPORTER.

The First Independent Club.—At our last business meeting it was voted to inaugurate a series of general programmes for the successive Monday evenings of each month. This Monday evening was mainly devoted to dancing, but such an interesting programme was presented as the prelude that the good things got beyond control, and somewhat encroached upon the allotted time for dancing.

In the absence of the Grand Master, Mr. Fletcher, the meeting was happily conducted by Mrs. Rich. After our usual brief period of silent concentration, which was eloquently prefaced by apposite remarks by Mrs. Fletcher, the Club was favored by one of Dr. Street's practical and characteristic speeches, in which the value of silent, oblivious composure was set forth, and which also dealt with the secret of metaphysical healing, which Christian Scientists have dressed in such a mysterious three-hundred dollar garb. Petite Gracie Scales then sang in her inimitable fashion, and scored many admirers. Dr. J. V. Mansfield recounted an experience, from among his innumerable collection, of a case of spirit-materialization in a private home circle, which occurred years ago, and created an unexpected denouement at the end by referring to our Vice Grand Matron as the medium for such a wonderful manifestation. This narrative—as also a description of some spirit-friends present given to a member in the audience—was listened to with the closest attention.

The remainder of the evening was devoted to dancing, in which many joined, and to small social knots, which all seemed to enjoy.

On next Monday evening a literary entertainment may be expected, and all who may read these lines are cordially invited to be present.

F. V. FULLER, Rec. Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall.—The usual large audience was in attendance upon our session last Sunday. A fine literary programme was rendered as follows by our young people: Lottie Giles, LeRoy Thorpe, Howard Hoffman, Allie Cummings, Maude Judkins, Flora Frazier, Flossie Sargent, Jennie Porcelain, Herbert Johnson, Miss Nettie Morris. The audience heartily enjoyed the musical programme, which consisted of fine vocal selections by Dr. Sweeney, Jessie Judkins, Edith Bartlett, Miss Grace Scales.

Friends should not forget the Wednesday evening socials at our hall, 1031 Washington street. A social, good time for everybody.—The sale of tickets to the Adonis Club Entertainment at Wells Hall, March 13th, has already been large. Every one who enjoys a fine dramatic presentation will be there.—Mr. and Mrs. Scales recently entertained a large company of the children, and the little ones were delighted with their reception at the home of these two Lyceum workers at the Highlands.—Miss Lucette Webster is hard at work arranging a fine programme of talent for March 31st, at Tremont Temple.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7¾ P.M. Admission free.

Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th Streets.—The People's Spiritual Meeting (removed from Spencer Hall). Services every Sunday at 2¾ and 7¾ P. M. Mediums and speakers always present. Frank W. Jones, Conductor.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity, Rev. Mrs. T. B. Stryker, pastor, will hold services every Sunday at 2½ P.M., in Macgregor Hall, Madison Avenue-South-East corner of 59th street (entrance 42 East 59th street). All are cordially invited to be present.

Meetings for Spiritual Manifestations will be held at Adelphi Hall, corner 7th Avenue and 52d street, New York, every Sunday at 2¾ P.M. Tests given by Mrs. E. A. Wells of New York.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 3 and 8 P.M. Mediums and speakers welcome. Test Medium and Conductor, Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn.

Soul Communion Meetings every Tuesday at 3 P.M. sharp, at Mrs. Morrell's, 230 West 36th street.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P.M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—J. Frank Baxter spoke in the morning to a large and appreciative audience upon the subject "Thoughts and Hints in View of the Rapid Progress of Modern Spiritualism." The lecture was replete with good logic and delivered in an able and interesting manner. In the evening he spoke upon the subject: "The Church, the Book, and their Relations to Modern Spiritualism." The lecture was well received and frequently interrupted by applause. The afternoon service was opened by J. Frank Baxter reading a poem. Mr. E. H. Benn made a suitable and able address on "Spiritualism, both Ancient and Modern," plainly showing and illustrating the benefit to be derived from its teachings, and its vast superiority over that of the belief preached in the churches. There was a great deal of interest taken in Mr. Benn's address, as it is not frequently the case that so learned and prominent a lawyer has the courage to stand on a spiritualistic platform and express the honest conviction of his soul, for fear that his business might suffer. I feel thankful that we have some men of moral courage. Mr. Henry J. Newton made some pertinent remarks upon the frailty of mankind, and promised that at some future time he would say more upon that subject. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave twenty-three tests, all but three fully recognized. Mr. Baxter will occupy the platform at all three sessions next Sunday. S.

New York, March 4th, 1888.

[Mr. Baxter is tendered a reception, to be given at the residence of Mrs. Leah Fox Underhill—one of the original "Fox Sisters"—on Saturday evening next.]

Arcanum Hall.—The meetings at this hall have been largely attended, and good, healthy spiritual food has been given out in abundance. Last Sunday evening we had a fine inspirational essay entitled "Soul Growth," by Mrs. A. S. Cochrane, a newly developed inspirational writing medium. The audience gave her a vote of thanks for her brilliant effort. We also had good advice from Mrs. Laidlaw, a medium from Brooklyn; also some excellent tests from Prof. Van Horn, the manager of the meeting.

MISS NELLIE BETTS.

A CONFERENCE and experience meeting was held at 230 West 36th street, on Monday evening last—being the first of a series of meetings to be convened at the same place Monday evening of each week, at 8 o'clock sharp.

Albany, N. Y.—Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing has finished her February engagement with our society; it has been very successful, both spiritually and financially. The attendance has largely increased since her first lecture, and every one has been delighted with her ability as a speaker and test-medium.

Mr. Warren Chase was with us March 2d. The Ladies' Aid gave a Social and Reception in honor of his lifelong work in the cause of Spiritualism. The exercises consisted of remarks by Mrs. Twing, and a prayer by her spirit-control "Ikabod," two solos by Bishop A. Beals, remarks by our President, Mr. Fero, in which he presented complimentary resolutions to Warren Chase and Mrs. Twing, and a basket of flowers to each. Mr. Chase then delivered an excellent lecture on Spiritualism; seldom have we heard its equal, and without a doubt it has caused many persons to begin to think for themselves. After the lecture the floor was cleared and dancing began, to the sweet strains of a well-trained orchestra. About three hundred people were present, and our hall was taxed to its utmost to accommodate the numbers who joined in the grand march. Every one present spoke in terms of praise of the whole management, and gave due credit thereof to the "Ladies' Aid."

Our Anniversary will be celebrated on the 30th by a Musical and Literary Entertainment, to be followed by dancing, and we anticipate a grand success. We find that these entertainments are beneficial to our cause, in bringing large numbers to our hall who would not otherwise come, and attracting their interest by making them familiar with Spiritualists and their ways and views.

Bishop A. Beals, who will be with us during this month, delivered two fine lectures recently, and gave psychometric readings. We have every Sunday now filled until July 1st. J. N. CHISM, JR., Sec'y.

Chicago, Ill.—The Young People's Progressive Society, which has long held its meetings and socials in Avenue Hall, will, on the coming Sunday, make another step upon its road of progress by moving into the elegant hall of Mr. Martine, on the corner of Indiana Avenue and 22d street. This is one of the best situated and most elegant halls on the South Side. On Thursday evening, 15th inst., the members will give an opening reception, to which they cordially invite all their friends. The 29th will be the Anniversary, and the following Sunday will be devoted to lectures, etc., appropriate to the occasion. The friends are all cordially requested to come forward and give their assistance to the advancement of the object of the Society, and aid in its progress and development. CELIA.

Saratoga, N. Y.—The Eagle for March 3d states that "Jennie B. Hagan, inspirational and poetical speaker, lectured for the Spiritualists Thursday evening. She gave excellent satisfaction, and thoroughly demonstrated her wonderful gift of impromptu versification. Later Dr. Mills gave a few clairvoyant descriptions." On Sunday evening, 4th inst., A. S. Pease, the recent editor of the Union, was to deliver the address.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham will hereafter speak regularly for the Spiritualists the second Sunday of each month.—The recent work of Prof. J. W. Cadwell (as a mesmerist) at the Court of Appeals Room, is also spoken of approvingly by the above-named able and independent paper.

Providence, R. I.—E. H. Whitney, President, informs us that Mrs. Colby-Luther, who addressed the Spiritualists of that city the last three Sundays of December to the greatest satisfaction of her hearers—her discourses being of a high order, and very fine as literary efforts—is to speak there again on the first and second Sundays of April.

Michigan State Convention.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Sixth Annual Convention of the State Spiritualist Association of Michigan was held in the city of Grand Rapids on the 24th, 25th and 26th of February.

We have, to the surprise of almost every one who attended the Convention, found among our own mediums all of the elements necessary to make a success of such a meeting. Among the prominent mediums who led in the speaking were Mrs. L. A. Pearsall of Disco, Mrs. Sarah Graves, Mrs. Joslyn, Mrs. Bible, Mrs. J. P. Hinkley, Mr. L. V. Moulton, Dr. Charles Andrews, Dr. F. Schermerhorn, all of Grand Rapids, and Mr. Smith of Spring Lake, all inspirational speakers, and some of them surprised those who knew them best by the depth and beauty of the thoughts they presented. Mrs. Hinkley and Dr. Andrews were especially noticeable for the poems given by them.

Besides those whom I have mentioned are Mr. and Mrs. John Lindsey, Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Winch, and others are very efficient workers in our regular meetings that are held every Thursday and Sunday evening, and are making Spiritualism boom in the Valley City.

On Friday afternoon L. V. Moulton spoke for half-an-hour, subject, "Tricks," showing that all religious beliefs in the past had been founded upon faith instead of reason and knowledge; the teachers of these beliefs, whether knowingly or not, had been deceiving the people and had been performing tricks. He was followed by Mrs. Sarah Graves of this city, who is well known and always interesting. Dr. J. B. Sullivan of Stanton and Giles B. Stebbins of Detroit related some experiences. Dr. Charles Andrews's subject was: "What We Believe and What We Know."

Friday evening Mrs. L. A. Pearsall spoke for an hour upon "The General Laws of Our Being," followed by Giles B. Stebbins. Saturday morning Mrs. Graves gave a poem on "The Memories of a Past Life." In her remarks that followed she compared Spiritualism to a fraternal love that binds this world to the unseen. Mrs. Joselyn's subject was "The Beauties of Spiritualism." She advised showing the truths of Spiritualism in our lives as well as talking it. Mr. Augustus Day of Detroit answered questions presented by the audience.

Saturday afternoon the election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Dr. W. O. Knowls, Grand Rapids; Vice President, Augustus Day, of Detroit; Secretary, C. M. Potter, Grand Rapids; Treasurer, Mrs. E. J. Winch, Grand Rapids; Trustees, Dr. J. B. Sullivan of Stanton, Mrs. Sarah Graves and L. H. Austin, Grand Rapids. Mr. Giles B. Stebbins then spoke upon "The Spiritual Idea of a Future Life."

Saturday evening, L. V. Moulton's subject was "Despise Not the Age of Small Things"; Mrs. J. P. Hinkley gave an inspirational poem so suitable to the occasion that, in connection with what followed, it seemed a higher power was controlling all that was done. Dr. Schermerhorn's subject, "What Shall the Harvest Be?" was pronounced by veterans in the service "wonderful," while Mrs. Lena Bible's controls followed the same line of thought and seemed to blend so harmoniously with what preceded as to be the crowning sheaf.

Sunday morning the Convention, as a body, attended service at the Universalist Church. Sunday afternoon L. V. Moulton answered questions proposed by the audience.

By request the Rev. Charles Fluhrer, "Universalist," addressed the Convention: "Am I to live forever? then the bad that is in me is ever confronting me until it is eliminated from me, or the good that is in me is substantial investment, and I shall reap the benefit of it here and hereafter."

Sunday evening Mrs. L. A. Pearsall spoke for an hour. She said, "The Golden Rule of Confucius is just as good as the Golden Rule of Jesus Christ."

"Tax the church, and not the poor widow's cottage."

"Uncle Sam has run in single blessedness long enough, and needs a helpmeet."

Mrs. J. P. Hinkley's inspirational poem had for its theme, "Spiritualism as Seen from Two Opposite Standpoints."

The following resolution, drafted by Giles B. Stebbins, of Detroit, was read and adopted:

Resolved, That while we need not repeat at length our past testimonies, we would say that our faith, to which is added knowledge of the life beyond, and of spirit presence, is clear and steadfast, and that this confidence in our continued and immortal existence, and in the law of progress and the Eternal Goodness, gives hope and dignity to daily life, and inspiration to the right doing of daily duty; that temperance, and the law of self-control, purity of bodily health, the supremacy of soul over the senses, and the equal rights of women, are indispensable for the best good of the home and family, and of State and Church, and for that true freedom which we all desire; and that to those great reforms, and to all kindred movements which tend to justice and progress, we give our cordial sympathy and fearless support.

ORE

A Children's Progressive Lyceum

Was organized at Portland, Ore., Dec. 18th. The following officers were elected: Conductor, J. F. M. Brown; Guardian, Mrs. Louisa Minen; Musical Director, Mrs. Emma Anderson; Guards, A. Thayer and J. H. Anderson; Leaders, Miss May Harris, Miss May Anderson, Mr. D. N. Hendee, Mrs. Minen, Mr. Smith; Treasurer, Mr. Smith; Secretary, A. Thayer; Leader of Adult Class, Col. Reed.

At the meeting of Jan. 8th it was voted that a series of Sociables be held at the houses of different members, and a small fee be charged to the gentlemen, for the purpose of raising a fund for the benefit of the Lyceum. We have had two thus far, which proved to be very enjoyable affairs, and all long for the next one. Our Lyceum is progressing finely, with an increased interest at every meeting. A. THAYER, Sec'y.

Haverhill, Mass.—Music Hall.—Sunday, Feb. 26th, Mrs. Hattie C. Mason occupied the platform of the First Spiritualist Society of this city at 2 and 7 P. M., entertaining the audiences in her very pleasing manner so far as singing is concerned—many persons coming to listen to her rendering of the spiritual songs.

Sunday, March 4th, Mrs. Celia M. Nickerson of Wellfleet, Mass., was the speaker; she chose for the subject of her 2 P. M. lecture: "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." The words were suggested by the choir chanting the Lord's prayer.

The speaker dwelt at length upon individual effort and self-culture in all things, believing that only through personal experience could real soul-growth and spiritual development be attained.

The Home Orchestra, under the leadership of Miss Jessie M. Little, is proving itself to be one of our strongest attractions at our evening services.

On next Sunday, March 11th, we are anticipating a harvest of spiritual thought from the world-renowned medium, Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

We are also to have the pleasure of listening to Mrs. R. S. Lillie of Boston the four Wednesday evenings of April next, in Music Hall, this city.

W. W. CURRIER.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. H. S. Lake occupied our platform again on Sunday afternoon and evening, delivering two of the finest addresses ever given here. Mrs. Lake has been engaged for the last Sunday in March, and the numerous friends she has made here will once more crowd the hall upon her return.—The dance of the First Spiritualist Society last Friday evening was well attended, and proved one of the most enjoyable of the winter season.—Dean Clarke will doubtless be our speaker on Anniversary Day. He made many warm friends when here two years ago.—Mrs. Etta M. Porter has been presented with a well filled purse by her spiritualistic friends, as a token of appreciation for her works in behalf of both societies.—Mrs. S. Dick will speak and give tests next Sunday, and the week following Joseph D. Stiles will be here.—An Independent Spiritualist club is about to be organized here. It will be a chartered club, and its objects the dissemination of spiritualistic principles by the development of mediums, holding of public meetings, etc. H.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday the Britan Hall Spiritualists were addressed by Mrs. M. J. Wentworth of East Knox, Me., who highly entertained her audiences. Her inspiration is given fluent and forcible utterance, and abounds in an intelligent presentation of the underlying principles of the Spiritualistic Philosophy. The theme of the afternoon was that of religious evolution and development; and in connection illustrated how phrenology and mesmerism were, in some sense, the forerunners of the advent of Spiritualism. In the evening the subject had its natural continuation in speaking upon and explaining the religion of Spiritualism. Mrs. Wentworth has been in the lecture field for many years, yet has not often spoken in Massachusetts, but will be likely to be heard here more frequently in the future. She will speak here again next Sunday. E. P. H.

Willimantic, Conn.—W. F. Peck closed his present engagement last Sunday with large audiences. His subjects were: "Evolution vs. Creation," and "Where is the Spirit-World?" We have had in the past many of the ablest speakers on our platform, but the universal verdict is that no lectures have done more to place Spiritualism on a sound and permanent basis than those of Mr. Peck. As he does not give platform tests, the large audiences were drawn solely by the able and interesting character of his lectures. Our Lyceum has also felt the impetus of his efforts, and has increased largely in numbers and enthusiasm. We have engaged his services for June, and look forward with pleasure to his return among us.—Mrs. H. S. Lake speaks for us the last Sunday in March.

J. C. B.

Lowell, Mass.—We started our meetings last November, and the result has been an awakened interest and a desire to continue on in the good work. Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester spoke for our society Sunday, March 4th, and a good audience listened to her eloquent addresses, both afternoon and evening. Next Sunday, March 11th, Mrs. E. C. Kimball will occupy our platform, and Mrs. Manchester will be with us again on the 25th. B. S. FREEMAN,

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism!

Semi-Annual Meeting of The Mount Pleasant Park and Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Associations.

By authority in me vested, I hereby call the regular semi-annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association, to meet in Library Hall, Moline, Ill., March 30th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and to continue until Sunday evening, April 1st, 1888, to transact such business as may properly come before it: Also for such business sessions as may be deemed necessary of the Mount Pleasant Park Stock Company, the auxiliary organization in charge of the camp at Clinton, Ia., to hear such reports from committees, and attend to such other matters as pertain to the Camp Meeting season of 1888.

The friends of the cause in Moline will entertain all they can. Good hotel accommodations can be had at $1.50 per day, and at good private boarding houses for less. Friends intending to attend can engage accommodations in advance by addressing L. P. Wheelock, Moline, Ill., Box 2273.

All officers, members and others who desire to attend the meeting can do so by the payment of one and one-third fares from all points on the following lines: Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; Chicago and Northwestern; Illinois Central, and the Chicago, Santa Fé and California. To secure the benefit of the reduced rate friends attending the Moline meeting will pay full fare from the station at which they start, and take a receipt from the station agent. If any one passes over two or more roads and cannot get a through ticket, let such party take a receipt from each road for the distance traveled and amount paid; on presentation of these to the Secretary of the Association he (or she) will be returned for one-third fare.

We expect other railroads will give us the same rate, but the main lines are all we can announce at this time.

Now, friends of the glorious gospel of Spiritualism all over the Western States, get ready and come to Moline and have a good time.

Let us have a grand jubilee, as we will, of song, of speech and tests, in proof of the divine nature of all life. PROF. J. S. LOVELAND, President.

DR. J. H. RANDALL, Secretary M. V. S. Asso'n.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism

Will be celebrated at Cincinnati, O., beginning on Easter Sunday, April 1st, 1888, and ending Thursday evening, April 5th.

The opening services on Easter day and evening, and the services of the day and evening following, will be held at Grand Army Hall, No. 115 West 6th street, and the services on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will occur at Greenwood Hall, 6th and Vine streets.

Some of the best speakers and mediums now in the public work of Spiritualism have been secured for this occasion, and other engagements will be made, sufficient to insure an array of talent rarely enjoyed by Spiritualists anywhere.

In addition to the Anniversary Exercises, it is decided to make this occasion memorable by the formation of THE OHIO VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF SPIRITUALISTS, the object of which will be the systematization of Spiritualistic work in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and in such other States as have adopted few measures for the advancement of our cause; and it is the intention to make this organization the nucleus for thorough and widely-extended labor in the vineyard of humanity. Societies and neighborhoods are respectfully urged to send good delegates to unite in this prime movement for a better defined advancement, and to actively assist in its successful inauguration.

Now is the time for earnest work!

Ample hotel accommodations will be provided at reduced rates; and good boarding-houses will entertain visitors at reasonable charges.

Information upon all points involved in this demonstration may be obtained by addressing any member of the undersigned Committee, in care of The Better Way.

Fraternally,

E. O. HARE, President,
C. C. STOWELL, Secretary,
MRS. I. S. MCCRACKEN,
M. G. YOUMANS,
L. BARNEY,
Committee on Invitation.

Anniversary in Connecticut.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated at Unity Hall, in Hartford, Friday and Saturday, March 30th and 31st. The friends of our cause are cordially invited, and no doubt will feel it a duty and pleasure to be present on this occasion.

Let us show by our presence that we are in earnest in the work we have begun, viz., to supply the great demand of humanity for an answer to the world's query, "If a man die, shall he live again?" A part of the great mission of Spiritualism is to solve this problem. While it has been done to the satisfaction of millions, let us still pursue the theme, until all mankind shall know its truth, which alone can give relief and restore confidence to the bereaved, that those who have passed from our sight "still live." Let us rejoice in this work, and not tire in any of its duties, and step to the front with the Banner of Liberty in one hand and with the other give that financial aid which an honest conscience cannot refuse.

J. Frank Baxter and Charles Dawbarn have been engaged for the occasion. Other speakers are expected. Turn out and fill Unity Hall, which is commodious, and one of the best.

The N. Y. and N. E. Railroad will furnish a limited number of return tickets for one cent a mile for those who have paid full fare one way in going to attend the convention.

[Signed.] President, G. W. Burnham, Willimantic, Ct.; Vice-Presidents and Acting Committee, A. H. Bill, Hartford; E. B. Whiting, New Haven; F. A. H. Loomis, Meriden; M. A. Dwight, Stafford; Harriet Johnson, Waterbury; Mr. Winslow, Bristol; Carrie Holey, do.; W. W. Woodruff, New Britain; Flavia Thrall, Poquonock; Mrs. E. R. Davis, Putnam; Mrs. S. A. Chapman, Norwich; James Wilson, Bridgeport; Claudius Harvey, Rockville.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From her late residence in Dorchester, Mass., Feb. 23d, Mrs. Ann B. Gibson, in her 75th year.

Mrs. Gibson, formerly Mrs. Magoun, will always be associated in the minds of the Spiritualists of this vicinity with her daughter, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, the well-known medium and lecturer. The unbroken companionship of mother and daughter in the home-life for so many years, has rather been that of sisters, whose sympathies held the friendship of a very large circle of acquaintances. In the beneficent work of angel-ministry to which the daughter was called many years ago, and to which her life has been consecrated, the mother's faith and unvarying confidence has supplied conditions of strength and sympathy, such as mediumistic sensitiveness can only fully appreciate. Mrs. Gibson's Spiritualism was eminently practical, her mind clearly apprehending its philosophy, and her affections resting in the revealed truth of eternal union with loved ones in the immortal life.

Although the funeral was private, a very large number of personal friends and relatives were present at the house to take a last view of the familiar features, now touched and beautified by the holy sleep of death. The floral tributes upon the casket were beautifully appropriate, and the entire order of the service symbolized the tenderest human affection, with triumphant confidence in the reunion of the family and social circle in the spiritual world.

Dr. H. B. Storer, the well-known lecturer, and a personal friend of the family for many years, uttered inspired words of consolation and sympathy, which seemed to voice the thoughts and emotions of all present. Appropriate songs were rendered by the Schubert Quartette of ladies. ***

Hester Morris, of Wyoming Territory, was the first woman in the United States appointed Justice of the Peace. She was a tall woman, with a profile closely resembling the portraits of Queen Elizabeth. While she was in office she was a terror to evil-doers.

A New Book!

Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum. A Sequel to "The Life-Line of the Lone One."

This book, of three hundred and twenty-four pages, is now in press, and will be out and on the counters at the Banner of Light Bookstore about the 20th of March (of which due notice will be given), and the copies mailed to my friends who have so kindly sent me their subscriptions—for which I return my thanks, and trust the book will be satisfactory to them.

My address and home will, after this date, be in the West, but duly advertised in the BANNER OF LIGHT. Copies of "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," and my other books, will be mailed as ordered at the BANNER OF LIGHT office in Boston, and also by me at any time on receipt of price, as before stated, $1.10 for the above, or $3.00 for my four books—two in paper and two in cloth—sent by mail, postage paid. Persons in the West may also pay me their subscriptions to the BANNER OF LIGHT, and the price of any book published by Colby & Rich, and receive the same by mail. WARREN CHASE.

Dr. Swarts says he was an investigator of Spiritualism till he was instructed by Mrs. Eddy, some two years ago, in the new system, and then he turned from it. It is perhaps as well for Spiritualism that he did, for it is heavily weighted with theorists and cranks who impede its progress far more than downright oppositionists. Men with well balanced brains, capable of grasping and harmonizing the spiritual and physical sides of things, are the sort to help forward Spiritualism by attracting both the religious and scientific to their standard.—Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Independent Slate-Writing.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It is unquestionably true, as claimed by many, that of all the various phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, that known by the above name is the most convincing, and with full-form materialization occupies the front rank of the demonstrative proof this new revelation gives of a future life. My own experience in independent slate-writing with Mr. Charles D. Cowan of 219A Tremont street, this city, has been of so interesting and satisfactory a nature, I have thought it not only due to him as an excellent and reliable medium, but to all who seek for the best evidence of the existence of their departed friends, so-called, and of their ability to communicate with them, that brief mention be made of it in the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT.

Mr. Cowan, who has for several years been undergoing a course of development for this phase, was gratified about the middle of last month by the announcement of his spirit-guide that he was qualified to give sittings. I was one of the first to avail myself of his services. I seated myself in a brilliantly lighted room, at a table upon which were two slates, paper and a few bits of pencil. After instructing me how to proceed, Mr. Cowan left the room. During his absence I wrote on each of six slips of paper the name of one of my friends who had left this life, together with a question, and folded the slip in as small and compact a form as possible. These I placed on the table, and shuffled them so thoroughly that it was impossible for any one to know there was writing upon them, or for me to say which pellet contained any specified one of the names I had written. I then called Mr. Cowan. At his request I pointed with a pencil to each pellet in consecutive order, or indiscriminately, as I chose, until he told me to take in my hand the one to which at the moment the pencil was directed. Shortly after he requested me to put it in my pocket, which I did.

The slates, which were as clean as it was possible to make them, were then washed on both sides, and, with a grain of pencil enclosed between them, placed one upon the other. Mr. Cowan grasped one end of these slates, both of my hands were at the other, and, thus held, they were placed upon my shoulder, which they had scarcely touched before I heard the sound of writing within them and felt the slight pressure of the bearing of the pencil in motion. In a few moments the writing ceased. Opening the slates, I found upon one a message in answer to a question I had addressed to a cousin of mine, commencing "Dear Will," signed by his name in full—the writing being in the same hand as his when in this life. Mr. Cowan requested me to take the pellet from my pocket and examine it. I did so, and found it was the one on which I had written the name of the cousin who had given his name on the slate, and the question he had satisfactorily answered.

The process of pointing at the pellets was then resumed, and to one after another of the remaining five answers were given automatically by Mr. Cowan, under control of his guide, the name signed in full to each corresponding to the one on the pellet in my hand, with an appropriate reply to the question.

Mr. Cowan's success thus far has been complete—the result probably of his strictly following the advice of his guides and not giving séances until assured by them that he could do so satisfactorily to his patrons.

"Telegraphic" Communication.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The fact that you have recently given space to accounts of spiritual phenomena known as "telegraphic," leads me to present a portion of my own experience, with the hope that it will prove somewhat interesting to your many readers.

Some years before the telephone was introduced, I connected my house and office by wire, and by means of the ordinary instruments used by telegraph companies, could communicate with my wife when I was at my office, and with persons at my office when I was at my home.

My wife and myself learned the "Morse alphabet," used by the Western Union Telegraph Company, consisting of dots and dashes if impressed on paper, or short and long sounds where no paper is used. To give notice to each other that one wished to send a message, each had a certain letter as a signal, or "call," as it is commonly named.

The wire also ran through the houses of several of our relatives, and each also had his private "call."

My wife passed to spirit-life early in 1885. In the autumn of that year I met Mr. Will A. Mansfield, then of Grand Rapids, Mich., who was said to be a fine medium for "independent slate-writing" and for physical phenomena in dark séances.

After holding a few circles, in which we had manifestations of lights, touches by hands, raps, movements of objects, etc., it somehow occurred to me that if I should have a telegraphic "sounder"—an instrument by means of which the short and long sounds are given—in the circle, I might test the identity of the force purporting to be that of the spirit of my wife.

An evening was appointed for a circle at my home. The medium came alone, and at no time were any persons present but members of my own family. I had managed to keep my intentions concerning the instrument unknown by the medium, and after the circle was formed and light turned out, I held the instrument in my right hand, my right-hand neighbor holding my right wrist.

The medium formed part of the circle, his left hand being held by my mother, his right hand by my left hand, so that my right hand was beyond his reach. I took care that his feet, and all parts of his body, could by no possibility pass in front of me, and get near the instrument. While I had confidence in the medium, I took all these precautions that the test might be as nearly perfect as possible, and thus exclude all presumption of "sleight-of hand."

After certain manifestations I called my wife by name, and asked that, if possible, she would give on the instrument my old "call," or the signal by which she called me on our "earth-line." I felt fingers like those of a woman touching my right hand, and attempting to work the instrument by pressing the lever. After some effort, this was done, and the signal desired was clearly given. I then asked her to give her own "call," which was done. We were shortly given to understand that this was all that could be done that evening, for want of strength.

I ought to say here that no person beside myself in the circle could telegraph or read telegraphy, and even if this were otherwise no one but myself could have known these "calls."

After this, circles were held weekly for some time, and they showed gradual increase of force, until at length I was able to hold long conversations with my wife over this new line. So far was this method improved that she was able, in proof of the fact that she was often with me, to tell me in the circle what I had been about at certain hours of the day when I was alone. She also gave the private signals of friends through whose houses our office line ran.

At times persons who understood telegraphy were admitted to the circle, and they were "called" on the sounder by a force purporting to be that of the spirit of some deceased friend, which would give a name and a private signal, and would satisfactorily identify itself as the spirit of some former telegraph-operator who had passed from earth-life.

These demonstrations show that telegraphic communications are possible when the medium knows nothing of telegraphy, so long as some person in the circle can read the sounds.

Mr. Mansfield avers that he is totally ignorant of telegraphy; but, even if this were not so, the arrangements of the circle were such that by no artifice could he have touched the sounder held in my hand; besides, he could not have known those "calls."

The sounder was worked without connection with a battery, so there was no electricity about the affair: The lever of the sounder was moved directly by what seemed to be fingers, but those fingers were not connected with any earthly body.

Mr. Mansfield stated that this was his first experience with telegraphy in his circles, his mediumship having been confined to other phases. I have had ample opportunity to know that his quality of psychical force, or mediumship, as it is usually termed, is of the highest order, and that the phenomena of his "automatic slate-writing" and dark séances have given the liveliest satisfaction. It gives me pleasure to add that during an acquaintance with him of nearly three years I have found him honorable and conscientious to a fault.

I can heartily recommend him to all desiring honestly to investigate with the aid of a reliable medium. His present address is: Will A. Mansfield, 96 West Newton street, Boston, Mass. Very truly yours,

Buffalo, N. Y. FRANK H. RANSOM.

Spiritual Interviews.

MESSAGES FROM ILLUSTRIOUS SOURCES.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It would seem to an intelligent observer a pedantic folly for literati and clergymen either to deny that we know anything of the future life, or to rehash in profitless discussion the stale and inconclusive arguments that were used before the future life had been demonstrated by the inhabitants of the spirit-world. It is easy to communicate with that world when a satisfactory mediumship exists, and learn its conditions of existence. But old systems of erroneous faith naturally dread this ordeal as a culprit dreads his trial; and the Orthodox minister is unwilling to hear the confession of his predecessor that their theology is mistaken and is of no value in the better world.

We have in Boston at present a most admirable opportunity for spiritual communication, but the Rev. Joseph Cook and his followers have no desire to be enlightened through so reliable a medium as Mr. Charles E. Watkins (109 Falmouth street), through whom the departed are ready to enlighten their surviving friends, and to confess their own errors in mortal life.

A visit to Mr. Watkins a few evenings since enabled me to realize the wonderful range of his spiritual faculties, by which he gains access to the vast realm of our predecessors now in spirit-life. In his presence Psychography (spirit-writing) is always practicable, and frequently the handwriting gives evidence of its source by its strict analogy to the writing of the deceased. This method is so much of a tax on his nervous energies that I take equal pleasure in his clairaudient communications, in which he hears the words of the spirit and speaks them, or in his own slate-writings under spiritual impression. These are to me quite satisfactory, because they are evidently spiritual, as Mr. Watkins has nothing to guide him but the impression from a spirit whose name has been written and folded up in a pellet unseen by him, which the spirit designates to let the observer know his name.

In my first interview I wrote ten names in the absence of Mr. Watkins upon ten little strips, which were folded as small as possible and laid promiscuously on the table. From all of these he gave some sort of communication and mentioned the name of the spirit. For the benefit of the reader I give copies of those communications which are of general interest.

The first pellet that was touched gave him an unusual, reverential feeling, and, standing by the table, he spoke as follows to myself and a lady who was present:

"I feel a beautiful, quiet, soothing, pleasing influence:

"Sister and Brother—It is always proper, or was so considered when I lived on earth, to open all such gatherings as these with prayer.

"My experience has taught me much that I did not understand, still we feel that prayer develops man's spiritual being and draws him near the great life-giver, God, over all, as necessary for the soul as work for the physical body. Now, instead of praying to the unknown God, we would but say we are all with you, and if your spiritual senses were opened you could see and hear all who have gone on before.

"May the help of all good, noble souls be with you in this work. Even as I followed my master, so art thou following the truth. Great good shall be accomplished. May Heaven be with you. ST. JOHN."

I was not surprised when the name of St. John was announced, as he had on three previous occasions, once in public, addressed me in the most interesting and encouraging manner. In the first instance, about eight years ago, I unexpectedly received a spirit-written message upon a sheet of paper laid under the table, signed by St. John. Many of the best psychometers have described this psychography by touch and told the nature of the communication, as well as given the name of the writer, St. John. To me it is indeed a precious relic, which I have cherished in private.

The name of Dr. J. G. Spurzheim (the associate of Gall) was upon a pellet which prompted Mr. W. to a clairaudient communication, as follows:

"My Dear Friend—I have only one regret, and that is that we cannot be in spirit-life and on earth too. If I could with the knowledge that I have derived here return and remain, I think perhaps my followers would still follow me—still perhaps not.

"I know that you have the coöperation and sympathy of us all in your endeavors to benefit humanity—to help men to know themselves better, and to uplift the school of medicine. In fact we all desire very much to have you know that we are ever ready to assist you."

[Is Dr. Spurzheim (said I) familiar with my investigations of the brain?]

"I have become familiar on this side, and would say that I have tried to be of assistance to you."

[Do you recollect your communications at Covington long ago?]

"Through the woman? Yes."

These communications, about thirty-four years ago, were through a lady medium by means of the alphabet, and though not extensive were in some respects very remarkable, especially one made in abridged Latin.

The pellet enclosing the name of Dr. F. J. Gall produced the following communication:

"These physical laws are controlled a great deal in the same manner as if we were really back on earth again. For instance, the independent writing we have many ways of accomplishing. One is, we draw the matter from the slate itself. In this case you cannot hear us writing. In another way we absolutely move the pencil; as you know matter is no obstruction to spirit, our spirit finger penetrates the upper slate, and moves through the upper slate, guiding through magnetism the bit of pencil. In this case you frequently recognize our handwriting, and then you see similarities which otherwise you would not.

F. J. GALL."

[Question—Is Dr. Gall acquainted with my investigations?]

"Of course I am, and have taken great interest with you in this subject."

The following communication was written spontaneously by spirit power on the closed slates, as I had not called for or expected it:

"My Dear Friend—Sometimes even we who are on the spirit-side of life do not know just how to proceed in order to give our friends who are still on earth the best proof of spirit-life. Still we know that in time the fact of spirit-return will be accepted as a truth. Our greatest desire is to elevate man, and have him learn how to control himself. You have a truth in the science of Sarcognomy, for it is the anatomy of life; it combines all of Physiology, and should be thoughly understood by all who desire to benefit man's health. We find in this instrument we are now using wonderful healing powers. Still they are to him now worthless. With a thorough understanding of laws of disease, he would be a second Newton. I greet you to-day, and trust that your new School of Health may be a reality in the near future.

I am, sir, one who is your friend, BENJ. RUSH."

I agree with Dr. Rush in his estimate of Mr. Watkins, and his anticipations of a liberal school, for which the signs are auspicious.

The name of William Denton on one of the pellets produced the following message, written on the slate like the preceding by spirit power, as the closed slates lay on the table before us:

"My Dear Friend—I know that you are ever striving for truth. I am much pleased to see you to-night. I only hope that you may remain on earth for some time yet. Doctor, there is perhaps no other man that can do your work, and so if you will live up to the common laws of life as you are, you will remain on earth for some time to come, in fact, until you give to the world the new school. I send you greetings. WM. DENTON.

This, I think, was hastily written, and the word living or doing, after the word are, would improve it. Messages may be somewhat limited by the capacity of a medium, but there is great truthfulness in whatever comes through Mr. Watkins.

Interesting messages were received from relatives not necessary to mention here.

Desiring a fuller expression from Drs. Gall and Spurzheim, whom I regard as the greatest pioneers of scientific investigation, I had another sitting, in which, instead of their names, I used a brief note, folded in the same manner. The following was addressed

"To Dr. F. J. Gall—I have endeavored to vindicate your discoveries and give you your deserved honor as the Father of True Philosophy, whose footsteps I have followed, and whose name should be immortal on earth, though now neglected by the medical profession. But for you I might have done no great work for progress. May I ask how you regard the science of Sarcognomy?"

The following was written on the slates in reply, under control:

"Dear Doctor—It is true, as you say, that I was, perhaps, the originator of the system of philosophy that you advocate—to all appearances; but still I did not get all of my theories from myself, no more than do you now. It is given us by those who are still in advance of us; and then, besides, you are far ahead of me—that is, I mean as I was then.

"I am certain the old school will accept, or wish to accept, its truth; but I hope you may live to see your work acknowledged as being the correct one—a philosophy that makes a great many mysteries plain, outside of medicine and man's own constitution, as you have already discovered.

"Yes, Doctor, I am satisfied that the hour of triumph has very nearly come. More anon.

Yours in the truth, F. J. GALL."

In reference to spiritual assistance, I would remark that the head of Dr. Gall was more favorably organized for the reception of spiritual impressions than my own, I do not doubt that all who cultivate the higher sentiments receive an influx from the spirit-world which strengthens, brightens and sustains their lives; but as for the reception of any distinct ideas, I have never been conscious of it, though I have ever been eager to receive enlightenment from any source. Continually for half a century I have been mentally in contact with the profoundest problems in philosophy and science, but they have never been solved for me until I had gathered the necessary scientific facts, from which deductions could be rationally made. Of sudden revelations I know nothing.

The following was written and submitted in the usual manner—folded up small, carefully, and laid on the table with no indication of its character:

"Dr. J. G. Spurzheim—I would be much pleased to receive your candid opinion of my psychic system and its organology, as well as my presentation of Pathognomy, Sarcognomy and Psychometry. I am assured by St. John that the intellectual work I am doing is the most important ever done on earth."

The clairaudient response to this was not as prompt as to some others which I observed, when he began:

"I have only been assisting the others, my friend. I have not gone.

"I would say that St. John was perfectly right in what he wrote and said. Doctor, it is one thing to believe, and entirely another to acknowledge and to give up your life for a truth; and yet how foolish it is for any one to be afraid to follow truth. Ah! well, lives cannot be lived over again. If they could I would have worked so much harder. Things which I believed and realized then I have found out since to be true; but I was all alone, and no one to stand with me, and I failed where you have or will succeed. I want you to come again. The other night and this evening we have become acquainted with this young man's control and his mediumship. Very shortly we shall be able to speak to you more fully."

Another interesting and generous message was received from St. John upon the slate, which I take the liberty of reserving, merely remarking that, to me, the existence of such beings as ST. JOHN and JESUS and their exalted character is an established fact, for which I do not rely upon history or tradition. If all history were blotted out, eternal truths in heaven are still within our reach; and they have very poor conceptions of spiritual science who waste their time in obscure historical researches and discussions on this subject.

Finally I thought it quite probable that the learned Prof. Carpenter, whose intense bigotry and hostility to the higher sciences I had sharply criticised in "The Psycho-Physiological Sciences and their Assailants," might have had time enough to become thoroughly enlightened since his decease. I submitted for response, in the usual cautious manner, the following question:

"To Prof. Wm. B. Carpenter: In life you would not tolerate such views as mine; how do you now regard my discoveries?"

When this paper was taken up the response did not come very promptly, and I remarked that I supposed the person questioned would require to exercise some deliberation, to which the reply promptly came: "So would you if you were here and had to come back and acknowledge your mistake." The answer was then written on the slate:

"Professor—One is liable to make mistakes as long as one is in the body. I regard it as the grandest thing yet, and so easily understand your new science of which you are the representative. I also come back willingly and acknowledge that I was wrong. It is a very strange feeling—the coming back here in this manner.

WM. B. CARPENTER."

I have no doubt the feeling was very strange to one who, like Prof. Carpenter, in life cherished so dogmatic a confidence in his own correctness. Mr. W. remarked that he had some doubt of the entire willingness which was expressed. But he has done his duty, and his reply shows that he has been a careful observer since his transition. Since Dr. Carpenter, like the Harvard Professors, has made his recantation, it may become very instructive to mankind to hear from the authors of many false philosophies and theologies such a recantation as would enlighten their deluded followers. CHAPTER I.

O'ER SEA.

The tide of commercial depression that commenced to flow through the United Kingdom in 1878, reached at last the manufacturing town of B——, in Blankshire, causing the B—— town mills to run upon half time. This meant privation for the thriftless, and extra carefulness even for the thrifty. This reduction of working hours had now been in effect for a month, and at the time this story opens the operatives were earnestly speculating as to when full time would be resumed. The usual reports of the condition of trade gave but little comfort to those who read them, and as the year was well advanced through the month of October an uncomfortable feeling began to spread amongst the workers that a bitter winter of struggle and distress was right before them.

B—— town was an ordinary sort of a place; it was celebrated merely for its iron mills, and to that extent was of importance "on 'change," and in commercial Gazettes and Journals and such like uninteresting literature to the general reader. It had its Mechanics' Institute, a public library, its parish church, and the usual dissenting congregations. Its inhabitants were neither better nor worse than the average of such people. Here and there was one family noticeably bad, while here and there were others noticeably intelligent and decent. Ministerial teaching was, as usual, confined to assisting its recipients to live hereafter; and having none to direct them how to best live life here, it must be confessed that most all B—— town's hardy toilers made not too great a success from their advantages and possessions.

There was one home, though, the one that most concerns us, wherein commendable efforts had always been made to maintain comfort and happiness as the results of intelligence and thrift. It was always clean and neat without and within. Flowers were in the trim beds of the front garden and at the windows of the house. The voice of song from a family of canaries rang out blithely upon the summer air, while, basking in the sunshine, a pretty, tortoise-shell cat and a mild-eyed collie dog gave an air of content to the appearance of the home that was in singular contrast to many others thereabouts. The owner of this happy little home was Ralph Masters, and every day, on his return from the mills, his loving helpmeet, Jennie, and their little daughter, Amy, gave him a greeting that made him forget the labors and fatigues of his daily toil.

On the evening we first meet Ralph, he returns home with a sad face, for he has bad news—bad for him, but worse than bad for many others. His wife, with a woman's intuition, divines there is something amiss, but, wise tactician as she is, makes no allusion to her fears, but, instead, nimbly prepares the evening meal, and in the many little ways that mean so much in making up life's happiness, busies herself about her husband's needs.

The evening meal was at last disposed of, and, pushing his chair back from the table, Ralph said:

"It's no use, Jennie. Work is going to be almost impossible for the winter. They have posted a notice that from Monday next the mills will only run until the jobs on hand are done."

"That is sad news indeed for us all."

"Yes, my girl, it is sad news. But the worst of it is that there's no chance of getting aught to do anywhere else, for our trade is dull all over. It looks very black at all sides. I don't think the mills will start again for many a month to come."

"Well, Ralph, what is to become of the poor families that depend upon the mills? If your fears turn out correct it will mean the workhouse for many a one!"

"Your're right, Jennie, it will that; but we, too, must be a-thinking of what's best for us. You know what I've often said about crossing the sea——"

"Oh! Ralph, do n't talk of that!"

"Nay, old lady, do n't you be alarmed at it; but just you listen to me a bit. Something must be done, you know, if we are to keep our heads above water. You know Bob Borden is in the mills at W—— city, in America. Well, you know, too, that Bob always said to me: 'Ralph, if ever you think you would like to come over to us, come, and I'll do all I can to help you on.' Now, you know Bob is 'master mechanic,' as they call it over there, and I am determined, Jennie, to go over, as soon as our mills close, and get a place with him. I am told that workingmen are thought better of in the 'States,' and can even live better than we can here."

"Well, that may be, Ralph, but it will be very hard to break up our happy little home here."

"Yes, it will be hard, but it would be harder to stay here and starve, and that's the only thing before us."

Two weeks after the foregoing conversation the B—— town mills "shut down," and so remained for the ensuing four years, at the end of which time three parts of the population had deserted its smoky sheds, never to return again.

When the works closed, Ralph and his stout-hearted little wife again discussed the American plan, and at last Jennie gave a reluctant assent. The bulk of the cosy little home was sold, and Jennie, with little Amy, went to her father's home in one of the quiet little agricultural villages of the South of England; while full of earnestness and determination Ralph set out for the New World as a passenger on a big Cunarder bound for Boston.

CHAPTER II.

O'ER LAND.

In due season Ralph's uneventful voyage terminated and he was ashore in the new country. The town—or city—of W—— is, as every American knows, just some forty miles from the metropolis of New England, and thitherward Ralph Masters soon directed his steps. It was evening when the train deposited the stranger at his journey's end, and his first thought was how to make his way to Robert Borden's home. This he found was on the outskirts of the town. With anticipations of a pleasant reception from his old-time chum, he set out to walk the distance before him, indulging in many a pleasant fancy as he walked onward. Already he saw himself at work, receiving good wages and full of hope, laying by a sum each week until enough was obtained to send over to bring his loved ones to him. He, too, began to have great thoughts of political equality and independence; saw himself rising in the social scale and becoming an honored citizen in the land of the free. After some half hour's walk he made inquiries for his friend's house, and being set into the right direction before long he found it. Gayly approaching he eagerly knocked at the door, which was opened by a little girl, whose tear-stained face bespoke some great distress. Ralph asked:

"Is this Mr. Borden's house?"

"Yes, sir," answered the child.

"Can I see him?"

"No, sir, for papa's dead!"

Poor Ralph was dumfounded at this statement, and Mrs. Borden being summoned, explained, amid much distress, that her husband had passed from the trials of mortal life in the early dawn of that very day.

Robert Borden had met and married his wife after his arrival in the city of W——, some six years before this narrative commences. Of course Ralph could not remain in the house under prevailing circumstances, so, after taking a look at the mortal remains of his old friend, and promising to attend the funeral, he set out to find a lodging, where, after partaking of some food, he retired to his couch feeling very miserable indeed.

After the funeral of his friend's remains Ralph looked about him for employment, first essaying to obtain it at the W—— City Iron Works, but having no "friend at court," now his old companion was gone, he was met with the stereotyped reply, "No vacancies," at each attempt.

Several weeks rolled past, and the obtaining of employment seemed as far off as ever, so that it soon became a serious question of how food and shelter could be obtained. Needless to say that the hitherto cheerful Ralph became increasingly despondent, being, as he was, alone and in a strange country. He at last determined upon selling all his possessions that were not absolutely necessary, and with the money thus obtained in his pocket, set out to seek work in the iron districts further south. Weeks and weeks rolled past, and at their close he found himself in the ever smoky city of P——, but ill-fortune still pursued him, and he could obtain no labor, while, being now penniless and almost in rags, he was reduced to the very verge of despair. It was by this time nearly eight months since he had bidden farewell to his trustful wife, and up to now he had not written to her. For this, undoubtedly, he was blameworthy. But as she was safely housed beneath her father's roof, and he had left her enough to maintain herself and Amy for at least a year, he could not muster courage to tell her of his failures, disappointments and distress. He hoped yet ere the year was out to be able to tell her all was well.

One evening there was quite a commotion outside one of the large hotels in the main street of P——, for a ruffianly-looking fellow had made a desperate attack upon a man who was about entering the house. Luckily, Ralph, who was passing at the time, observed the attack, grappled with the gentleman's assailant, overpowering and bearing him to the ground. The object of the attack was robbery, and the thief had narrowly avoided adding murder to the crime, for which he was ultimately imprisoned for a year. This little incident was the turning point of Ralph's fortunes, for the man whom he had so fortunately assisted offered him in return a position in the lumber-mills he owned, in the State of Colorado, defraying his expenses thereto, and making him a present of a handsome sum wherewith to replenish his wardrobe.

Ralph Masters duly arrived at his new sphere of labor, and at once wrote off to tell his wife all that had befallen him, urging her to wait a little longer, and he would then send her all that was needful to bring her to him. In the meantime he proved himself so able a mechanic, and excellent a man, that his strangely-made friend resolved upon taking him into partnership, feeling he would prove a valuable supervisor of the mechanical part of the undertaking—consequently the old sign at the mills was painted out, and the new one bore the names of "Lobody & Masters" when it was finished.

CHAPTER III.

O'ER SEA AND LAND.

We must return to the city of W—— for a season now. Mrs. Borden and her family have left for her own home down in Maine, where, after remaining a widow a brief season, she married the captain of a schooner, bore him some children, and ended her days in peace.

But to return. In one of the quiet side streets of W—— a rather singular lady had rooms in a modest and unpretentious kind of house. This lady was chiefly remarkable for what seemed to be a dreamy, far-away sort of expression upon her features, which gave her a species of delicacy that, apparently, unfitted her to battle with the trials of our common lot. Yet the amount of endurance she manifested in nursing the sick, seeking out the distressed, and accomplishing acts of benevolence, would have made many of her sturdier sisters feel ashamed as they compared their own efforts with hers. She was a widow; her husband had fallen upon the awful field of Gettysburg, in the hour of the nation's trial. Her pension, some modest aid from family sources, and a little derived from her profession, sufficed to maintain her in comparative comfort. Yes, she had a profession, the nature of which was variously described as that of a witch, fortune-teller, impostor, seer and medium. In simple fact, she was the possessor of that organic quality or gift that enabled her to be used as an open doorway between our world and the realms where are our dead. Marvelous tales were told concerning her, but not one whisper was ever raised against her own life and character. Such were above reproach. She had practiced in W—— for several years, and, as is often the case, was "patronized" by many of the "leading" people of the place, "under the rose," of course.

It was a bright and beautiful morning in June, and as Mrs. Clarkeston—the lady just described—stood looking from out her window the voice of an unseen friend whom she had long known and trusted—her departed husband—whispered to her inner ear: "Go—to the—dépôt—at once. I will—show—you—her. Bring—her—home—here. It—is—well."

Donning her walking garments, Mrs. Clarkeston at once departed, reaching the dépôt just as a train arrived. The travelers all dispersed, and she was about thinking she had arrived too early, when, suddenly, she saw her husband standing by the side of a strange lady and child. She immediately hurried to them, and the stranger addressed her thus:

"Can you, ma'am, tell me where I can find a Mr. Robert Borden?"

"Mr. Borden has been dead for some time now, and his widow has also left the town," answered Mrs. Clarkeston. Seeing a look of mingled pain and anxiety pass over the stranger's countenance, Mrs. Clarkeston continued: "I see you are a stranger here; will you come to my rooms—they are near here—and perhaps I may be of some help to you?"

The trio then repaired to Mrs. Clarkeston's residence, and after being rested and refreshed, the stranger—who, with her child, was no other than Jennie Masters and Amy—narrated how she had crossed the ocean to find her husband, who had left England for this city, to find their old friend, whom she now, for the first time, learned was dead. She had waited and waited in hope of hearing from him, but month after month passed, and no tidings came. Her mother had sickened and died, and it then seemed that her husband's absence and silence became unsupportable, and at last she had crossed the waters only to fall at the very outset in discovering the slightest trace of him she sought, for Mrs. Clarkeston had never even heard of Ralph's visit to W—— at the time of Robert Borden's death. All unknown to her, Ralph's letter was quietly resting in her old home, three thousand miles away, having arrived there but three days after her departure!

Then Mrs. Clarkeston told her that perhaps, after all, her husband could be found, that her mother, even, whom she mourned the loss of deeply, might also be recovered, and in response to Jennie's looks of wonderment she explained to her how sometimes the seeming dead came to her, brushing aside the clouds of grief from the lives of despairing and sorrow-stricken ones, who had been bereft by death of the dearest treasures. And as she talked thus a deathly pallor spread over her features, her hands became icy cold, and with a long-drawn sigh she fell back in her chair, in what looked like a deathly swoon. To Jennie's wonderment, her new-found friend presently sat upright in her seat, and extending her arms toward her, said, in strangely altered voice:

"Jennie! Jennie! my child. It is I. Do you know me? Your mother dear, your mother. I have come with you all the way from Thornbury. Your father is there, Jennie, my dear, good, faithful husband. God bless you, Alfred dear. I brought you here, dear. For I have found Ralph. No, he is not here. He is miles, many, many miles from here; Weeping Hollow, Colorado, is the place. Write it down, Jennie, write it down, dear child. I am your mother, dear, Hannah Hingham. You thought I was lost; no, no, child, I am not lost; they did not bury me in the graveyard of St. James's. Bless you, dear." Then, piece by piece, to Jennie's utter astonishment again, the events that had befallen her husband were narrated, down even to the letter that had arrived just after her departure. For two hours the medial instrument continued the channel for this wonderful communication, and deep and earnest was the conversation between the two women after the controlling power departed. The result was, that having every faith in the communication made through her, Mrs. Clarkeston advised Jennie to write a brief letter to the address given to her, and abide with her until an answer could be received. The letter was written and despatched, taking in due course four days to complete its journey. There could not be an answer returned under ten days at the soonest, so the anxious wife schooled herself to wait as patiently as she could. To their surprise, on the morning of the fifth day a telegraphic dispatch from Denver, Colorado, was received, bidding her stay where she was until her husband could arrive. On the fourth day after the receipt of the dispatch, Jennie was clasped in her husband's arms again.

There is but little to add. Ralph explained all; was overwhelmed with surprise at Jennie's strange experiences, and from what he saw with Mrs. Clarkeston during his stay in W——, he is now a full believer in the truth that our dead are not so in truth, but are living still, and they can, as they did for him, trace out the parted and reünite them, though their wanderings be never so devious,

THE NEW THEOLOGY—ITS ESSENTIAL CHRIST OUR SAVIOUR.

BY JACOB EDSON.

[Concluded.]

The problem of evil that has given old theology so much trouble, does not disconcert the advanced student in the doctrine of theistic evolution. He sees that "the existence of highly complicated organisms is the result of an infinitely diversified aggregate of circumstances, and that the entire series in each and every one of its incidents is an immediate manifestation of the creative activity of the all-pervading principle of life," which we believe in and call God. He also sees that though the Infinite Father is perfect in every conceivable attribute, his finite outbirths necessarily partake of the states and conditions through which they have been evolved, and consequently express, in a more or less aggravated form, the animality that still adheres; these animalities, spiritual illumination must eliminate, and eventually expose fully-grown, perfected sons of God, differentiated Christs in human form. According to Prof. Fisk in his late work: "God is the power which is always everywhere manifest in phenomena. The source of what we see, and hear, and touch, is the source of what we call matter, but it cannot itself be material." All that we really know is mind and its attributes; once really adopt the conception of an ever-present perfect Cause, without whom "not a sparrow falls to the ground," and it becomes self-evident that the law of gravitation is but an expression of a particular mode of divine action; and what is thus true of one law is true of all laws.

There is a principle in music, by which, if certain notes are struck in their proper relations, other notes will respond. Seven has been considered a sacred number; there are seven notes in music; it is by diversified arrangement of these seven notes that composers endeavor to express their idea, their conception of good, the God-like and divine, the differentiated shadows of substance in the songs and psalmody of life. It is impossible to study nature in any of its departments, with a pure desire to unfold the purest use, the divinest beauty, without opening up within us the supreme personage, the God-like and divine—the living word, its essential Christ.

The writer, as a mechanic, with large experience in the conception and construction of different mechanisms, knows full well the necessity of education on the part of the artisans in the specialties they are expected to manufacture. In order to produce the best results it is not only necessary that they should understand and comprehend the design and specification, but also that they should comprehend the principle involved, the why and the wherefore this and that are thus—the essential function to be performed—so as to distinguish the important from the unimportant part, that they may exercise liberty, great freedom, artistic grace, and be deputed, because of their knowledge, to execute in the most perfect manner such parts as require the best perception and doing that can possibly be done.

It is further required, in order to obtain the very best product, that the producer should be in the love of "the good and use" of life, especially his department of the same; the machine he is to make, and to make well; to put himself into it; not for the pay he may receive for doing it, but for the love of the thing and the growth he will obtain by so doing.

As in music and mechanics so in morals and religion. There is a central truth; it has an exact pitch; all in harmony therewith respond in universal concordance. How is it with literal Christians, who are trying to get God into the Constitution of the United States; to force statements into that document that are not in accordance with its secular use, and thus subvert through constitutional amendments the God-given liberty of being and doing what was designed and expressed in the constitution of things, and is of necessity being evolved?

The untutored Indian, uncontaminated by sectarian bigotry and the so-called Christian civilization, tells us "it is the wigwam, and not the Indian, that is lost." It is said that crooked sticks and small stones can be successfully utilized where straighter wood and larger material cannot be used. Some years since the writer had occasion to have some work done away from home; in having it done he was obliged to tell the foreman that the man who was trying hard to do the job, if allowed to continue would spoil the stock. It was not the workman's fault—his education had been neglected; he did not comprehend the principle involved, and consequently could not successfully apply himself to the doing of what was to be done. The mechanic was a seven-by-nine man; the job required an eighteen-by-twenty man. The "boss" found fault with him; it was like finding fault with a small glass because it could not give or reflect as much light as a larger one. As with the uneducated mechanic, so also with the uneducated or misinformed missionary, with his erroneous doctrine, misinterpreted book and dogmatic creed. What is needed is not so much intellectual book-knowledge pertaining to beliefs, forms and ceremonies, as it is spiritual insight, humane conception and divine love. It should be his spiritual experience, his "know so," rather than his belief, his hope or fear that he is capacitated and ready to elucidate, expound and demonstrate to the comprehension of all it may be his privilege to teach.

If there were not a perfect Cause and Providence controlling all things, through law, the misinformed missionary might spoil the stock; but believing as we do in the perfect Cause that is omnipresent and omnipotent, because of its differentiated agents in every conceivable condition, to inspire, guide and control—so that even the devil in hell, as well as the missionary at his post, subserve the infinite will—everything that is, is well.

Religion is not a material matter. The spiritual heaven consists of states and conditions in soul-growth. It is not to be gained or conquered by strife; it is not necessarily the habitation of the strong. It is within us; it may, it must, it will be evolved. Its substance is, and is to be, the universal religion; truth is to be supreme, and will permit no man to continue to be a slave.

The salvation of the soul is not a literal matter; religion is not an insurance policy to be held prudentially against fire. The wigwam, the pearl, the essential Christ, is within us; it bespeaks a spiritual kingdom. Victory is not in this matter always obtained by the heaviest artillery. The pen may be more effective than the sword, but it is spiritual truth tempered with mercy, divinely expressed, that obtains the prize. It inheres within us, and will be evolved. Some years since the writer had occasion to hire an extra blacksmith. The party that responded to the call was such a one as the Puritan father wanted when he advertised for a "man that feared God and could lift five hundred pounds." The man possessed a splendid physique; he came to work with a will; the way he hauled and handled the iron, bent, burned and pounded it—hot or cold—was a caution to intelligent observers who did not want to be hit, and when told that his services would not be longer required, responded powerfully; Was he not a strong, able-bodied man? had he not been faithful and industrious? had he not done a great deal of hard work? Verily he had. The stock he used, refined iron, was worth five cents a pound; the product, old junk, was worth one and one-half cents. Truth is effective; it is the lightning, and not the thunder, that kills. It is brains, intelligence, skilled in the arts, that is needed. It is spirituality, soul-growth, deputed power to construct, beautify and bless, that is God-like and divine. Zeal without knowledge in the mechanic or the missionary is seldom but little better than brute force, imprudently applied. There are two kinds of service or servants, earnest workers and patient waiters. From a finite standpoint much that is done in the name of reform in politics, morals and religion, is worse than useless. But from the infinite, the omnipresent, the all-controlling, everything that is, is in divine economy, as means to the end—spiritual evolution, all right. How else but through temptation, mistakes, sins, sorrows and innumerable kinds of affliction, is the divine personage, or essential Christ, to be awakened and brought forth from within us? Is there any other way known among men, or given by God, whereby or through which we may be saved here or hereafter?

There are a good many mechanical phases of religious work. "We have mechanical sermons, mechanical prayers, mechanical Sunday schools, mechanical funerals, and even mechanical weddings. Routine, conventionalism, might, were it not for the new theology, its dawning dispensation, convert life into mechanism. There are some things better for being mechanical, but religious services are not among them. We have heard liturgies which were not oiled with one particle of unction, and which fairly creaked in delivery. And we have heard extemporaneous prayers which were just as mechanical as the performance of any heathen prayer-wheel that ever turned." The truly religious soul that worships in spirit and in truth knows by observation, as well as by experience, that the truest insight, the deepest thought, the purest motive, require time, contemplation and spiritual environments to form and express themselves. The patient waiter may through study and spiritual contemplation be enabled to conceive, project and control hidden energy to do what otherwise could not be done. As leaven in meal requires time to operate, so also conceived truth—begotten good—requires time to evolve. Let patience do its perfect work; give the impregnating ray of spiritual illumination, its purest love, its deepest thought, its truest motive, time to come forth, as you would give cream in milk time to rise and be ready for use.

Nature is God's mode of operation, law is a statement of conditions, a mode of divine action, an exhibition of exhaustless energy, seeking to evolve and express itself. The practical student in vegetable life may, by conforming to law, with proper environments produce almost any kind of vegetable, flower or fruit he wants. What is thus true in vegetable life is also true in animal life, especially in its humane department, in which the divine, its Christ, is, or is to be, opened up as the King enthroned. There is in the spiritual department of religious life what has been symbolized as the husbandman, the vine, and the branches from which all fruit fit for seed is of the new growth. To illustrate: The potato vine is the product of the potato, which buds and blossoms in the air and light, but coöperatively yields its product in the soil from its roots below. The potato, by continuing to plant it year after year in the same soil, gradually degenerates, until it may become worse than useless as seed. "The farming man" may continue to plant his degenerate potato year after year, but "the man farming" goes back to Mother Nature for seedlings. He plants the potato balls that grow on the vine in the air and light. The product at first may seem insignificant, but by proper culture and good environment for two or three successive years, the persevering seeker will find many different varieties from which he can select the best. The seedlings of the "Chenango," the "peach-blossom," the "snow-flake," and many other good varieties, were thus produced. As with the potato, so with the truth. The newest of the new theologies does not necessarily antagonize the old, the comparatively dead or dying. The newest theology is, so to speak, the latest seedling from out the womb of Mother Nature. It is a new standpoint reached in spiritual evolution, from which is reflected the newest view of the Eternal, it is the latest speech of the Living Word. It comes not to contend with, or destroy the old, but to fulfill, harmonize and perfect all that preceded it. Its recipients, grateful for what they have obtained, push forward in an inquiring spirit for the latest expression of the Eternal. Literal creeds are old phases of eternal truth bottled up, in most cases corked and sealed. These bottles, the new theology, the spiritual phase of the new view is sure to break. If we would have the highest order of spiritual truth, the living thing, we must go back through Mother Nature to Father God: to his Living Word, the essential Christ or Vine, and if the product degenerates through church association into crystallized creeds and lifeless dogmas, we must go back again, and still again, until we open up or evolve the infinite Husbandman, his perfect personality, in ourselves, and become, so to speak, sons and daughters of the living God.

Is there any propriety in finding fault with small plates of glass because they will not admit or reflect so much light as the larger? How is it with literal religionists? Take a single department of the so-called Christian enterprise, the Home and Foreign Missions, to illustrate; are all our higher dignitaries that officer and direct these movements, large-souled men, above the thinking or doing of a mean thing? Is there no pipe-laying or log-rolling? Is there no "postal-card theology"? Do they always at all times comprehend and express salvation in its very best sense? Are they beyond the possibility of a doubt saved from their own selfish selves? Are there many fully-grown sons and daughters of God still remaining in the literal church? Are the so-called Christian nations preëminently unselfish and peaceful? Does the fruit of the spirit—"love, joy and peace," charity, that quality of love and affection which we call the essential Christ—abound?

How is it with the servants, the missionaries of these societies, in regard to mental, moral and especially spiritual culture, soul-growth, the comprehension and love of the thing that ought to be done? Are they not often stupidly indifferent, if not criminally at fault? In regard to the belief, doctrine and capacity of the so-called heathen they are sent to convert, have they studied, with any considerable degree of success, the principle of salvation, the what it is, the best mode to so inculcate its truth that it may be successfully applied in the salvation of the human race? Do not our missionaries misrepresent and abuse the so-called heathen? and continue to do so knowingly year after year? For a more extended exhibit of facts and philosophy in this regard, we would commend to your careful consideration a very able article by the Rev. Thomas P. Hughes, B. D. M. R. A. S., on "Missions to Muslims," in the January number of the Andover Review, particularly page eleven of that article, in which our Evangelical friend is very explicit and comprehensive. Surely as there is a God in Israel, these spiritually ignorant and supercilious bigots, with their imputed righteousness, have yet to learn that ethics tell, and are as important in religion as blood is important and tells in animal life.

There is a love, a light, a life,
The bigot yet may know;
'Tis charity, the perfect good
The Christ alone can show.

Let us skim, as best we may, cream from off the milk of human kindness and boil it down within ourselves at the fire of love—love to God and love to man—trusting that its effect will serve as oil when the cry is made, "The bridegroom cometh."

In the language of another:

"Day by day the spirit dies out of book and creed; the burning enthusiasm, the quenchless zeal of the literal church have gone, never, never to return. The ceremonies remain, but the ancient faith is fading out of the human heart. The worn-out arguments fail to convince, and denunciations that once blanched the face of a race excite now only derision and disgust. The evidences our fathers thought conclusive, utterly fail to satisfy us. There is an irrepressible conflict between what is called religion and science. Christianity must come forth upon a higher and more spiritual plane or cease to be. While utterly discarding all creeds, and denying the truth of all man-made theology, there is neither in our heart nor upon our lip a sneer for the honest seeker—for the hopeful, tender, and loving souls, uncultured though they may be, who believe that from all this discord will result a perfect harmony; that every evil will in some mysterious way become a good, and that above and over all there is a Being who in some way will reclaim and glorify all the children of men. But for the creeds of those who glibly prove that salvation is almost impossible, that damnation is almost certain, that the highway of the universe leads to hell, who fill life with fear and death with horror, who curse the cradle and mock the tomb, it is impossible to entertain feelings other than those of pity, contempt and scorn."

We do not doubt the depravity of unregenerated men when we consider our heredity; being evolved, as we are, through the animal kingdom, with animalities adhering, depravity is to be expected, and must be eliminated through spiritual enlightenment. If our literal believers in total depravity believe there is nothing good in the unregenerated man, that all is totally bad through and through, in the sense of no spiritual capacity to be awakened, no divine principle, no germ of divine life awaiting awakement, to come forth as Jonah from the great fish, Lazarus from the sepulchre, or the historic Christ from the new tomb, what is the use of preaching? Why did Jesus after his resurrection go down into hell to preach to unregenerated men, spirits in prison? If, on the other hand, our literal believers mean only that the external animal man, the living soul in the sense that brute beasts are souls, is depraved, not including inhering divinity, that is to shape its end, then in spirit we are agreed, the old and new theology conjoin in the essential Christ, and all believers ought to coöperate in all practical ways to render the new phase of the old, the eternal truth, universal and all controlling.

The first coming of the essential Christ came in the love-element of the affectional nature in the historic Jesus. It has obtained an intellectual acceptance in religious minds. It came to bring "Peace and good-will to men." Rivers of blood, contention and strife have contributed their quota in its selfish demoralization. Literal Christianity with its historic Christ has crystallized into creeds. The so-called Christian church, with its dogmatic clergy, is a misnomer and a disgrace to the semi-barbarous age in which we live. The essential Christ now comes through the will and the understanding, in the love-element of humane souls, so environed in spiritual surroundings as to spiritually perceive and clearly bespeak its mission, the gospel of All good, the soul of all science, the evolution of our essential Christ, the Saviour of the world. Its mission is justice, mercy and truth, its fruit love, joy and peace.

To religious men on the animal plane, fighting for the truth is a pleasant occupation; "serving with the truth is a different matter. The highest gifts of knowledge, the prophet's inspiration, the hero's courage, find their right place only when they are used in the service of love."

Well may our friend, the Rev. William Frederick Faber of Westfield, N. Y., ask in his article in the February number of the Andover Review what he calls the real question, "Why have we a church?" In other words: What right has the literal church to be? What is it doing? What can it do? Has it not passed its usefulness, and ought not all spiritually-minded souls in whom the essential Christ has obtained, to leave this dead institution to bury itself, and go on and on in soul-growth, regardless of creeds and literalisms, as they may be guided by the spirit into higher and still higher life?

In conclusion, is not selfishness the cause of all inhumanity to man? Is not salvation from our own selfish self the great desideratum of the age? Is it not necessary, in order to unfold the kingdom of heaven on earth, that we should do more and better for others who are less enlightened or spiritual, than we would want or allow them to do by or for us? When the kingdom of heaven is opened up in the heart and conscience of the race, may it not be seen and known that self-denial or sacrifice may consist more in not doing, in not suffering for others, than it does in going without what we really need for ourselves?

Is not truth, its essential Christ, our Saviour, involved in the basic element of all religion? Are not all speculative religions expressions of it, and does it not appear to professors of science, as well as to professors of religion, "that the earlier stages of human progress have been characterized by a struggle for existence like that through which all lower forms of life have been developed"; and that "the action of natural selection upon man is coming to an end, and that his future development will be accomplished through the direct adaptation of his wonderfully plastic intelligence to the circumstances in which he is placed"? "That war and all forms of strife, having ceased to discharge their normal function, and having thus become unnecessary, will slowly die out"? "That the feelings and habits adapted to ages of strife will ultimately perish from disuse"; "and that a stage of civilization will be reached in which the human sympathy shall be all in all, and the spirit of Christ shall reign supreme throughout the length and breadth of the earth"?

There is a hope, a cheering hope,
The anchor to the soul;
It holds our hearts in love to God,
As magnets to the pole.

Theology, the soul of science, is a gladsome, joyous study; it has to do with our affectional nature, the receptivities of the soul; it unfolds the subjective world, and demonstrates the personal existence and all-controlling power of God in the transformation of the race.

It is believed that in the light of the New Dispensation, its inhering divinity, the essential Christ, our Saviour, will so obtain in the love, will and wisdom of the race, that depravity, with ignorance its occasion, will be dispelled as mist before the rising sun; and children become by their spiritual heredity and environments be born preëminently divine, God-like in their nature and tendencies. Then, and not till then, will the essential Christ of Christianity be seen and known to be the uncreated and indwelling Saviour of the race.

Awake! glad morning dawneth,
Its light comes on apace;
Be up! reflect its glory,
Inspire the human race.
It is no time to slumber,
To idle in the way,
For God, good men and angels
Bespeak the coming day.

BATTLE FIELDS.

The fiercest battles of the soul
Are fought upon the unseen ground,
Where shriek of shell and cannon's roll
Are heard not, nor the dying found;

Where nerve and flesh and throbbing blood
Are charged with more than deadly fire;
Where life lives on through flame and flood
Of anguish that cannot expire;

Where bleeding feet o'er ruins move,
Of shrines and idols widely crushed,
While every tone of hope and love
And pleasure seems forever hushed.

But he who calmly lifts the cross
And bears it up the steps of time,
Counting no discipline as loss,
Will win the crown of peace divine.

Borne up by the eternal power
Of principles and truths of God,
He groweth stronger every hour
To part the sea and break the rod.

For having conquered in the soul
All that disputes the heavenward way,
He findeth in true self-control,
How Love's commandments to obey—

The love that casteth out all fear,
That followeth wisdom where it leads,
Bearing to every plane and sphere
The healing to each heart that bleeds.

He stepped into a restaurant for dinner and a waiter spread before him the printed bill of fare. The eyes of the novice opened wide as he quickly added the figures at the right of the page, indicating prices; then, springing to his feet, he indignantly cried: "What! all this to pay, and I hain't eat a mouthful yet?" The outcome we are not told, but on a subsequent visit the gentleman carried a pail of victuals with him from home.—Lewiston Journal.

THE ANNIVERSARY.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism!

Semi-Annual Meeting of The Mount Pleasant Park and Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Associations.

By authority in me vested, I hereby call the regular semi-annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association, to meet in Library Hall, Moline, Ill., March 30th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and to continue until Sunday evening, April 1st, 1888, to transact such business as may properly come before it; Also for such business sessions as may be deemed necessary of the Mount Pleasant Park Stock Company, the auxiliary organization in charge of the camp at Clinton, Ia., to hear such reports from committees, and attend to such other matters as pertain to the Camp-Meeting season of 1888.

The friends of the cause in Moline will entertain all they can. Good hotel accommodations can be had at $1,50 per day, and at good private boarding houses for less. Friends intending to attend can engage accommodations in advance by addressing L. P. Wheelock, Moline, Ill., Box 2273.

All officers, members and others who desire to attend the meeting can do so by the payment of one and one-third fares from all points on the following lines: Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; Chicago and Northwestern; Illinois Central, and the Chicago, Santa Fé and California. To secure the benefit of the reduced rate friends attending the Moline meeting will pay full fare from the station at which they start, and take a receipt from the station agent. If any one passes over two or more roads and cannot get a through ticket, let such party take a receipt from each road for the distance traveled and amount paid; on presentation of these to the Secretary of the Association he (or she) will be returned for one-third fare.

We expect other railroads will give us the same rate, but the main lines are all we can announce at this time.

Now, friends of the glorious gospel of Spiritualism all over the Western States, get ready and come to Moline and have a good time.

Let us have a grand jubilee, as we will, of song, of speech and tests, in proof of the divine nature of all life. PROF. J. S. LOVELAND, President.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism

Will be celebrated at Cincinnati, O., beginning on Easter Sunday, April 1st, 1888, and ending Thursday evening, April 5th.

The opening services on Easter day and evening, and the services of the day and evening following, will be held at Grand Army Hall, No. 115 West 6th street, and the services on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will occur at Greenwood Hall, 6th and Vine streets.

Some of the best speakers and mediums now in the public work of Spiritualism have been secured for this occasion, and other engagements will be made, sufficient to insure an array of talent rarely enjoyed by Spiritualists anywhere.

In addition to the Anniversary Exercises, it is decided to make this occasion memorable by the formation of THE OHIO VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF SPIRITUALISTS, the object of which will be the systematization of Spiritualistic work in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and in such other States as have adopted few measures for the advancement of our cause; and it is the intention to make this organization the nucleus for thorough and widely-extended labor in the vineyard of humanity. Societies and neighborhoods are respectfully urged to send good delegates to unite in this prime movement for a better defined advancement, and to actively assist in its successful inauguration.

Now is the time for earnest work!

Ample hotel accommodations will be provided at reduced rates; and good boarding-houses will entertain visitors at reasonable charges.

Information upon all points involved in this demonstration may be obtained by addressing any member of the undersigned Committee, in care of The Better Way. Fraternally,

E. O. HARE, President,
C. C. STOWELL, Secretary,
MRS. I. S. MCCRACKEN,
M. G. YOUMANS,
L. BARNEY,
Committee on Invitation.

Anniversary in Connecticut.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated at Unity Hall, in Hartford, Friday and Saturday, March 30th and 31st. The friends of our cause are cordially invited, and no doubt will feel it a duty and pleasure to be present on this occasion.

Let us show by our presence that we are in earnest in the work we have begun, viz., to supply the great demand of humanity for an answer to the world's query, "If a man die, shall he live again?" A part of the great mission of Spiritualism is to solve this problem. While it has been done to the satisfaction of millions, let us still pursue the theme, until all mankind shall know its truth, which alone can give relief and restore confidence to the bereaved, that those who have passed from our sight "still live." Let us rejoice in this work, and not tire in any of its duties, and step to the front with the Banner of Liberty in one hand and with the other give that financial aid which an honest conscience cannot refuse.

J. Frank Baxter and Charles Dawbarn have been engaged for the occasion. Other speakers are expected. Turn out and fill Unity Hall, which is commodious, and one of the best.

The N. Y. and N. E. Railroad will furnish a limited number of return tickets for one cent a mile for those who have paid full fare one way in going to attend the convention.

[Signed.] President, G. W. Burnham, Willimantic, Ct.; Vice-Presidents and Acting Committee, A. H. Bill, Hartford; E. B. Whiting, New Haven; F. A. H. Loomis, Meriden; M. A. Dwight, Stafford; Harriet Johnson, Waterbury; Mr. Winslow, Bristol; Carrie Holey, do.; W. W. Woodruff, New Britain; Flavia Thrall, Poquonock; Mrs. E. R. Davis, Putnam; Mrs. S. A. BRITONS AND MUSCOVITES; or, Two Traits of Two Empires. By Curtis Guild. 12mo, cloth, pp. 230. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Nothing more readable in the way of a narrative of experiences and observations in foreign lands has been placed before the public than this volume, the third of the sharp-sighted and quick-witted editor of the Commercial Bulletin, in which he has shown a ready appreciation of what the stay-at-home portion of the American people will be most interested in. While avoiding everything of a guide-book feature, the author has given much regarding every point of interest that will be of service to tourists, especially to those who for the first time are abroad. Much space is given to a consideration of English hotel management, and the annoyances and disappointments likely to be encountered by those who, even in hotels claimed to be "conducted on the American plan," look for the comforts and conveniences of home.

☞ Why shouldst thou, oh! searcher after truth, allow the wranglings and jarring discords among Spiritualists to disturb the serenity of thy soul? Know you not that believers in our facts comprise all classes of people?... It is only upon the lower or brute levels of life that the undeveloped spirit can find time and inclination to decry its fellows. Press on in thy high calling. There is light and love for thee. Though clouds and darkness encompass thy feet, the sun shines brightly above thy head.—Golden Gate.

Written for the Banner of Light.

THE RISEN SOUL.

Naked and bare the soul shall leave its clay;
Naked and bare beyond the vail arise—
With empty hands—its treasures dropped fore'er:
Gold, pleasures, place, and dazzling rod of power!
Vanished terrestrial burdens, cares and toils;
But not the stains of unrepented sin,
Oh! erring man—of wrong to fellow done,
And lust, and greed, which dwarf thy being all,
And send thee cowering hence, in shade to dwell!

Yet spirit-robes shall quick the soul array,
Robes which in looms of justice woven lie;
With touch of love by angel fingers smoothed,
Or light or dark, as truth hath given the hue.
Dives the garb of poverty must take,
Though passing fair his rich possessions here;
The tyrant clank the fetters of the slave;
And blackest robes (which yet the lie reveal)
Trail 'round the hypocrite—rebuked below!

But the pure soul, free from deception's blight,
Truth, honesty and virtue in her glance,
With tender hands that ministered unsought
To others' needs, in sacrifice and love,
Regal shall be her entrance to the heavens,
Fearless her step, and full of joy her song;
Her robes of light, how beauteous and fair!
For justice, grand, eternal and divine,
The true requital yields, at length, to all.

Yet not forever shall the unrighteous soul
What its own hands have wrought, in sadness wear,
Nor eat the fruitage of its erring deeds
In lasting shade, while God is hope and love!
Light streams apace, and 'neath the tender glow
The heavenly path of progress opens wide;
The vision clears, and high resolve and pure
Quickens the spirit, brightens its array,
And sends it upward on the way to God. —[M.

WORCESTER.—Mrs. Julia A. Spaulding writes: "Having just returned from a flying trip to California, I will give your many readers a few points concerning the same. We journeyed by the far-famed Sunset route, through beautiful as well as historic country—Lexington, High Bridge and the Kentucky river, Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain and New Orleans. San Antonio, with its Alamo and old mission churches, etc.

We watched the old year out and the new one in, passing through the grand cañon of the Rio Grande, its limestone walls glistening like jewels in the moon's silvery light.

Unfortunately for us, we found Los Angeles swamped in mud. However, it possessed some charming scenery, with its snow-capped mountains, and orange groves laden with golden fruit the year round. Notwithstanding its irregular, helter-skelter make-up, the people are social, generous and kindly disposed, making strangers feel quite at home. I attended the Spiritual church; Mr. John Slater, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was laboring there.

Whilst at San Francisco I called on some of the noted mediums; found them all whole-hearted, with the right hand of fellowship warmly extended, including the genial editor of the Golden Gate. Listened to W. J. Colville once, attended a meeting and circle on Larkin street, where I spoke a few words for the cause. The tests were clear and well rendered by several mediums.

In Oakland I found the same warm, soul-inspiring principle prevailing. The three societies there are in earnest. By invitation I made some remarks concerning the spiritual standpoint at home as well as there, which were well received. Though surrounded by millionaires, the Society is not as financially strong as I could wish.

I returned by the Santa Fé route, through many large towns and thriving cities and mountain scenery. The grand piece of engineering, the Loop, is the great attraction on this line, and which once seen will never be forgotten."

GREENFIELD.—Dr. W. L. Jack writes: "A few lines only, and from this paradise of a town in Franklin County: One cannot help but be well in such a place as this. Its grand, noble trees, magnificent avenues, elegant residences, pure water and healthy surroundings make it a choice place for many. I found here an excellent society of spiritual kindred, amongst whom was Dr. Joseph Beals, who presides with his usual dignity of soul and grace over the Society here. He extended a genuine welcome to me, as he does to his many friends, who speak in highest terms of his manliness and advocacy of the grand truth of Spiritualism. I tender my thanks to Dr. Beals, and to the members of the Society at Greenfield for their generous hospitality.

At this Society Mr. Butler presides as organist with excellent acceptance and adaptation. He is an old-time Spiritualist.

In a late number of the BANNER OF LIGHT I saw a communication from George Lyman, whom I knew. He was the son of Father and Mother Lyman, and passed away suddenly, as he said.

I have had more calls for private sittings than I possibly can attend to, and those of my applicants not yet attended to will please cultivate patience until health and time will admit of my giving them my attention."

Maryland.

BALTIMORE.—T. S. Frisbie writes: "The Message Department page of your March 3d paper is so exceedingly good I feel like sending you a few words regarding it. I often hear this remark from unbelievers and doubters of the Spiritual Philosophy: 'Why cannot my friends who have passed away come back and communicate with me the same as they do with others?' or as others say they often do. It would be just as reasonable for them to ask why they cannot receive a telegraphic message in a grocery store as well as at a telegraph office. They overlook the fact that, while every person may be more or less mediumistic, they are not sufficiently developed to receive communications from their departed friends, and in order to get communications they must call on a person who, like a telegraph instrument, can receive and transmit to them from their departed friends the information they are anxious to obtain. Page six of your March 3d BANNER answers all such questions. That page ought to be read by all who doubt and disbelieve the Spiritual Philosophy; if it was, they would never need ask such questions again, for they are fully answered. The paper, to me, is like a dear friend I would not care to lose sight of while here; I am sorry there are not more avenues or public séances where those so disposed could often meet and receive from their departed friends all they desire, for it would surely be a blessing to all humanity, and would greatly assist those who have passed beyond the veil and wish to return and bring joy and light to their friends still struggling with the ignorant masses on earth. Many would, no doubt, join hands and gladly attend meetings where the best spiritual lecturers can often be heard, were it not for the finger of scorn being pointed at them. But why be afraid of your friends or your neighbors? are they any better than you? Does not the sun shine as brightly, do not the birds sing as sweetly for you as for them? Why not assert your manhood or womanhood, and be no longer a slave to fear, whereby you lose the sight of many a bright gem you might otherwise behold? Clouds of fear prevent the sunlight of truth from shining into the minds of many who are anxious to know more of the spiritual phenomena; and it only remains with the individual to say whether those clouds shall continue to obscure their vision or not. To all such I say as a friend: Throw off those shackles of fear; obtain your freedom at once, and enjoy all that you are privileged to obtain through the organs of seeing and hearing, ere the veil shall be drawn between you and the last sunset of life."

PORTLAND.—A. Thayer, Secretary, informs us that "There was quite an enjoyable meeting held at the Red Men's Hall on Sunday evening, Feb. 12th, by the resident Spiritualists, for the benefit of the Children's Progressive Lyceum, which meets there. The exercises were of a literary character and were given in excellent style. The recitation of O. S. Hendee, 'The Polish Boy,' and 'The Soldier' by Charles Bryant, was excellent, and Maud Miller recited in character 'Nobody's Child,' which was realistic. Mrs. C. A. Reed rendered 'I've Found a Place at Last,' one of O. P. Mason's best poems, in a beautiful style, and fairly enchanted the audience. The programme was an excellent one, and the audience, which was large, went home well-pleased with the entertainment."

New York.

BELMONT.—Wilkes Angel writes: "I was at the Cassadaga Camp last summer, at the time A. B. Richmond, Esq., was there, and while his experiences were remarkable, those of others were equally so, including my own. I accompanied a lady member of my family to Mr. Watkins's cottage. She carried her own slates; both of us wrote questions, folded them into pellets, Mr. Watkins sitting at the time on the porch outside. The pellets were mixed promiscuously and laid on the table in front of us. One, written by me, was addressed to a living person. When Mr. Watkins came into the room he took a seat upon the opposite side of the table and directed me to take up one of my pellets. I did so, not knowing to whom it was addressed. Mr. Watkins hesitated a moment and said: 'I think this person is not in spirit-life; they say they cannot find him on that side.' On opening the pellet I found it to be the one I had addressed to a living person. He then directed the lady to take up one of the pellets written by her. She did so, when Mr. Watkins exclaimed: 'You can do this yourself; take the slates and hold them up.' She took her slates and held them up at arm's length, and in an instant was told by Watkins to look at them. She did so, and found written thereon, in a bold hand, an answer to the question on the pellet held in her hand, signed by a German philosopher of the seventeenth century, to whom she had directed an inquiry. In this case there was no pencil between the slates. Mr. Watkins was at no time within reaching distance of the slates or pellets, and could not and did not touch either.

We received many other slate-writings at this sitting from departed friends to whom we had addressed questions on the written pellets."

TROY.—Of Mr. A. E. Tisdale's lecture in this place, "Silex" writes: "He chose for his theme 'Materialism and Agnosticism vs. Spiritualism.' Having announced his subject, Mr. Tisdale at once struck out into its very depths, and delivered a lecture in defense of the spiritual phenomena, etc., which, for profound, scientific reasoning, has seldom, if ever, been excelled. The audience marveled at his eloquence, his logic and power."

Ohio.

TOLEDO.—A correspondent writes: "Mrs. Mary C. Knight, of Fulton, N. Y., has lectured the past winter nine Sabbaths for our Society, and will remain through March and the first Sunday in April.

We are preparing with due consideration for an observance of the Fortieth Anniversary. Our cause is advancing as well as can be hoped for. Harmony prevails among the leaders of our movement. The future looks bright, with tokens of success."

Maine.

ROCKLAND.—A correspondent writes that "Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, of Boston, held spiritual services in the City Hall, Sunday, March 4th, afternoon and evening, giving short lectures on subjects furnished by the audience, and psychometric readings, which were especially interesting to the people here. We have engaged her for another Sunday, and perhaps for the remaining Sundays of the month."

March Magazines.

THE CENTURY.—The prominent features of this issue are articles upon "Some Pupils of Liszt," with portraits of them and of their distinguished teacher; "Franklin's Home and Host in France," the host being M. de Chaumont, of whom and of Franklin there are portraits, and a drawing by Victor Hugo of the house occupied by Franklin. A narrative of thrilling interest is given by Capt. Frank E. Moran, describing the plan, mishaps and finally successful execution of Col. Rose's Tunnel at Libby Prison, through which, on the 9th of February, 1861, one hundred and nine Union officers escaped, the writer included. The article is fully illustrated. Mr. Kennan continues his revelations of Russian prisons, including a celebration in one of them of the Centennial Fourth of July. The Lincoln History deals with "The Call to Arms," the story of Sumter being told from material before unpublished. Mr. Cable gives the conclusion of "Au Large," and in a new portion of "The Graysons" Pres. Lincoln is one of the characters. In poetry some excellent productions are given; in supplementary departments are papers on "The Growing Independence of American Journalism," "The Public School Problem," and a fac-simile of a letter by Longfellow on international copyright law. New York: The Century Company. Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—The opening paper, under the title, "Historic Cannon Balls, and Homes," gives a graphic and minutely detailed account of the British invasion of Connecticut in 1777," several photographic illustrations accompanying it. In view of the interest recently manifested in the question of the discovery of America by the Northmen and the unveiling of a statue of Leif Erikson in this city, Mrs. Ole Bull gives the proofs upon which the affirmative view rests, mainly from Icelandic history and literature. Other of the contents are, "New York and Ohio Centennial," "Central Ohio Seventy Years Ago," "Methods of Teaching History," etc. Among the hitherto unpublished documents are two letters of George Washington. In "Notes" appears the following from a Maryland Gazette of 1746: "On Saturday, May 26th, 1746, two men of repute, fishing off Kent Island, about four o'clock in the afternoon, the weather clear and calm, they saw, to their great surprise, at a small distance, a man about five feet high, walking by them on the water, as if on dry ground. He crossed over from Kent Island to Talbot County, about the distance of four miles." New York: 743 Broadway.

THE QUIVER.—New chapters are given of the two serials, "Not All in Vain" and "Wanted, A Governess." "Some Remarkable Church Towers," five illustrations, will be read with interest. "After Long Years" is a short complete story. "Plato" is the subject of this number of the series of brief biographies of "The Sages of All Ages." Poems, short sketches and reports of humanitarian efforts, etc., fill the remaining portions. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—"Notable Characters of the Day" is illustrated with portraits of Henry Drummond, "Chas. Egbert Craddock" (Miss Mary Murfree), Comte de Paris, and President Payne of Nashville University. Of other articles are "Occultism," "Genealogy" and "Agassiz as a Mesmeric Subject." New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

HERALD OF HEALTH.—In a paper upon "The Cheap Cigar," the "abomination" of that article is clearly set forth; even of the good ones it is stated, on the authority of "a dealer of many years' standing," that "not more than one cigar in fifty is pure." Good, practical instruction is given in "Women and the Household," "Mothers and the Nursery," and "Questions and Answers." New York: 45 Liberty street.

OUR LITTLE ONES.—Some of the annoyances and many of the pleasures of the month of March are recited in musical verses by Sydney Dayre, a fine illustration accompanying them as a frontispiece. The reader is then told "What Happened to Lloyd's Toad," and of "The Pop Family" and other matters. Boston: Russell Pub. Co.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Woburn, Mass., Saturday, March 3d, 7 A.M., of consumption, William R. Mann, aged 21 years.

Willie was the son of John and Elizabeth F. Mann, and the only child left of three; now his fond and loving parents have been called to part with him, but not as those who sorrow without hope, for Willie was gifted with true mediumship, and when in health, with life's prospects fair before him, he predicted his own early death—and singular as it was, the writer can testify to the fact with others that it was verified in the period of time he had stated.

His life was such that all who knew him loved him. During his illness, as he was nearing the close of earth-life, a young man devoted to church creeds called to inquire if his "soul was saved," and advised him to have a minister. Willie's answer was true and beautiful: "My mother is my minister; I need no other." Would that all could say that. His mother, Mrs. Mann, is a very fine medium, and Willie was truly favored by her spiritual gifts added to his own. He is now with his brothers in the home of the angels, and will come to bless his kind and loving parents till they, too, are called to their higher home.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, on Monday P.M., March 5th. MRS. S. DICK.

From Woodstock, Vt., Jan. 24th, 1888, Nathaniel Randall, M. D.

To speak of him just as he was, he and myself entered the field together to investigate Spiritualism thirty-eight years ago, and we have worked from that time to the date of his demise. As he had many acquaintances, please insert this notice in the BANNER OF LIGHT, to inform them of his departure to the higher life. JOHN D. POWERS.

A COMPILATION of the Lectures given by the Spirit-Band through the Mediumship of MRS. MAGDALENA KLINE, and which is called THE EVERLASTING GOSPEL. Vol. I.

A work which has long been promised to the world, was desired and anxiously looked for by thousands who have lived and gone from earth, and which is now being given through the mediumship of Mrs. Magdalena Kline, in lectures, containing Revelations from the Higher Courts, upon the God-Head; also a part of the Universal and Covenant Laws; Evolution; the Origin and Creation of Man; the Plan of God with Man; the Plan of Redemption and the Regeneration and Transformation of Mankind from the Lower Nature to the Higher and Divine; together with Teachings and Preparatory Lessons by the Angels for the benefit of all, etc. It is a work for the world.

This book—Vol. 1st of The Everlasting Gospel—contains nearly five hundred pages, filled with rare and grand lessons upon the present and future life, which should be learned by the whole human family.

It is not claimed that this volume—or others which are to follow this—contains all of The Everlasting Gospel, for all that is Truth, and which enables mankind to free themselves from Error, is, in its place and degree, a part of The Everlasting Gospel; nor is the Bible to be denied or set aside, for this volume contains many quotations from both the Old and New Testament, as an evidence that it should be studied and compared with that now given as The Everlasting Gospel.

THE CHILD'S GUIDE TO SPIRITUALISM. The author of this little work has performed her task in the face of a great difficulty, viz., the opposition of Spiritualists to anything savoring of creeds; but the best wisdom is to avail ourselves of everything of which we can make a proper use in the important matter of training the minds of our children. It is to them we must look in the future for the harmonious carrying out of those plans which dwellers on the other shore are constantly developing. We take great pains to impress the minds of grown-up people with the truths of Spiritualism. Spiritualists have no schools. Our children attend schools where orthodox ideas are constantly instilled, and it is our duty to do all we can to counteract such influences; for the children absorb orthodox ideas almost without knowing it. This work, then, has been undertaken from the feeling that there was urgent need of it. It has been the aim of the author to avoid all disputed points. The book is not a creed, but designed to familiarize the child with the spiritual philosophy, which can, it is believed, be better done in this way than in any other. Flexible cloth, 25 cents.

SUPERSTITION, AND THE DREAD PROPHECIES FOR 1881-1885. By J. S. DAGGETT.

A pamphlet of sixty-three pages, in which are enumerated the various prophecies of events to transpire during the perihelion of the planets, including the Mother Shipton poem. A belief in all these is attributed to superstition. Omens, several of which are mentioned, are placed in the same category, and science is claimed to be the great dispeller of the clouds that darken the pathway of man, which darkness causes him to live in dread of "coming events which never arrive."

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late MRS. J. H. CONANT. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can surpass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

ENGRAVINGS.

"AN ARMFUL."

This charming picture represents a little girl in a barn o rustic architecture in the act of trying to carry off more of the old cat's young than she can well manage, while the other kittens frolic in hay and apples at her feet. The mother, in eloquently pleading attitude, is putting in a decided but dignified protest against the abduction. It is a very animated and pleasing gem of art, finely engraved on steel by F. T. Stuart, from a painting by V. L. Knous, an eminent German artist. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE."

Painted by Joseph John, and engraved on steel by J. R. Rice. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 16x21 inches.

"THE ORPHANS' RESCUE."

Engraved on steel by J. A. J. Wilcox, from the origina painting by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 15x20 inches.

"HOMEWARD."

Designed and painted by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x18 inches.

"FARM-YARD AT SUNSET."

Copied from the well-known and justly celebrated painting designed by Joseph John. Stein, copied in black and two tints. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"THE DAWNING LIGHT."

From the original painting by Joseph John. Engraved on steel by J. W. Watts. Size of sheet, 20x24 inches.

For each additional Engraving 50 cents extra.

Any person sending $3.50 for one year's subscription to the BANNER OF LIGHT will be entitled to Hollyer's Line and Stipple Steel Plate Engraving of the late

Henry W. Longfellow in His Library

At "Craigie House," Old Cambridge, Mass.

The plate is 24x32 inches. The central figure is that of the GREAT POET. He is seated on the right of a circular table, which is strewn with his books and writing materials. The surroundings are harmonious and symmetrical.

This beautiful historic work of art is a lasting souvenir and ornament for sitting-room, parlor, library or office of any American home. We will mail the engraving free to any one sending us $3.50 for a year's subscription for the BANNER OF LIGHT, or we will send the engraving alone for $1.00. The publisher's trade price for the engraving is $7.50.

Another Volume.

The present issue of the BANNER OF LIGHT opens a new volume. The numerals increase their significance rapidly for us, and testify to the steady growth of the influence we were long ago summoned to direct. For all our readers, supporters and friends, we fondly trust that the new volume they now open will inspire fresh sympathy with the work in which we are all alike engaged, and awaken a new purpose to push it forward as fast and far as the conditions may favor.

The Cause which THE BANNER advocates and represents has become one of such wide and impressive importance that no stimulating appeals are needed to bring it before any one's attention. It has reached a stage at which it proclaims its own presence and awakens its own interest. Whatever we may say or do, the mighty spiritual wave that is now rolling over the world, to wash it of its dead and refuse superstitions and purify it of the ingrained misconceptions by which it has so long been governed, will not slacken its energy or change its course until it has made the circuit of the globe and established a spiritual brotherhood of the human race. Before its resistless advance the old forms of belief are disappearing and disused traditions are vanishing away. Whether we recognize the fact or not, it is none the less true that the world of men is passing through such radical changes as will ultimately make over our civilization. It of course requires a long sweep of view to appreciate it, and that is why every added year and each new volume like the present one assists in its recognition. Let us feel as we greet them, one after another, that we are striving for the true and the good, and helping others to advance on the same course along with us. With a consciousness of duty done, the event will never fail to justify all the efforts we may put forth for its accomplishment.

☞ Dr. James G. Hyndman, the throat specialist of the Ohio Medical College, tells how the only Catholic priest in America who wears a beard came to let his whiskers grow. The priest, whose pastoral duties are performed in Cincinnati, O., is subject to throat troubles. On the advice of Dr. Hyndman he let his beard grow, and had no further inflammation in his throat. His superiors, however, objected to the innovation, and the priest was obliged to go to Rome to obtain permission to wear whiskers. He took with him a full account of his case from Dr. Hyndman's pen, and the Church authorities there at once granted him the permission desired. What an idea! Can it be possible that a resident of "free America" is obliged to go to Rome to get permission as to whether he can wear whiskers or not? and that, too, "in this enlightened (?) nineteenth century"?

☞ We regret to learn that Mr. William Morrill, late editor and proprietor of the Exeter News-Letter, died very suddenly of heart disease on the evening of March 4th. He was born in Amesbury, Mass., but removed to Exeter several years ago. In 1879 he purchased a half interest in the News-Letter, and a few years later became sole owner and proprietor. [Chronicling the demise of Bro. Morrill reminds us of the fact that we set up the first types on which the first number of the News-Letter was printed, in conjunction with Bartlett Clark and another apprentice. The paper was established by Capt. John S. Sleeper, who afterward took charge of the Lowell Journal, and subsequently became the editor-in-chief and part owner of the Boston Daily Journal.]

An Important Meeting.

A meeting of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, in regard to our shipping interests, was held March 8th, Vice President Henman in the chair. In opening the meeting he briefly traced the decline of American shipping, and urged upon all the necessity of the Chamber taking some decisive action in regard to building it up. Mr. C. E. Moody was then called upon to read the resolutions which had been prepared. Previous to the reading, however, Mr. Moody, as an illustrative fact, stated that in 1850, seventy-five per cent. of American productions were shipped in American vessels, while during the last year but thirteen per cent. had been so shipped! Mr. Moody then offered resolutions to the effect that the Chamber of Commerce urge upon Congress the adoption of proper measures for reviving and extending the merchant marine, and that among such measures the Chamber recognize as timely and effective the bill known as the "tonnage bill," which provides that every vessel, sail or steam, built and owned in the United States and trading with foreign ports, shall be allowed thirty cents per ton for each thousand miles sailed or steamed for a period of twenty years; one-third reduction of said rate to be made at the end of the first ten years from the date the act of Congress shall take effect; that the United States mails ought to be carried in American ships as soon as practically consistent with safe service, and that for such service the Government ought to pay just and adequate compensation, regardless of the price at which other nations are willing to carry them for. It is high time that the General Government should take action in this matter; and it gives us great pleasure to be able to put on record the doings thus far of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

The Emperor of Germany

Has joined the great majority. He passed away March 9th, at the advanced of ninety-one years. His career was an eventful one, as the following brief synopsis will plainly show:

Frederic William Louis, Emperor William II., of Germany, was born in Berlin, March 22d, 1797. He was the second son of Frederic William III., King of Prussia. His mother was Queen Louise. He was of feeble health till the age of sixteen, when he was put into military training, and instantly gained vigor. In 1813 he received his captain's commission, and took part in the operations culminating at Waterloo. From this time on his life was devoted to warfare. In 1850 Frederic William IV., being childless, decreed that Prince William should be called Prince of Prussia, and be heir to the throne. In less than ten years the prince became monarch of a powerful nation, despite the grumblings of Europe. In the final conflict for supremacy between Austria and Prussia, King William took an active part and proved himself an iron soldier. When the war of 1870 was finished, he rode in triumph through Paris for the third time, and upon his return to Berlin, in June, 1871, he was no longer King of Prussia, but Emperor of United Germany. In 1829 William married Augusta, eldest daughter of the Duke of Weimar. His domestic life has always been such as to endear himself to the German people.

☞ Rev. M. J. Savage delivered an eloquent discourse at the Church of the Unity in this city last Sunday morning. Subject: "Loss and Gain in Religious Reconstruction." He said:

"Every change means the necessary giving up of something and taking something in its stead, the natural expectation being that the gain is to be greater than the loss. Now that we are in the midst of a great religious change, we find ourselves face to face with the fact that there are two distinct classes affected by this change. One class has come to feel that they have practically given up their religion, that the world has become secularized, and there is no further use of religion. That is not true. A grander religion than the world has ever known is to take the place of that which is passing away.

The second class has not gone far enough along to derive the comfort and strength which they should from the new faith. By the new system we give up the doctrine of total depravity, which is the foundation of the old religion; also the old doctrines of hell and heaven, for we have no logical right to believe any part of a system unless we believe all. But in place of these we shall see what infinitely transcends either of them—a complete religion to match and satisfy without contradicting the intellect of man. No conception which does not cheer and comfort man can be complete; and it must have a hope for the future to match the eternal preparation of the past which has brought us up to the advanced state of the present. We can abolish poverty; we can control and prevent everything but death, and that we do not wish to prevent, for it is the gateway to everlasting life. So our new religion leads us to lift the load of sorrow from all mankind, and to deliver finally the soul of every man. It keeps all that was good, and repudiates all that was bad in the old. It gives us a nobler and grander God, universe, man and home, than the world has ever known."

This is just what Modern Spiritualism teaches, and which has been inculcated upon the spiritual rostrum and in the spiritual press for many years.

☞ The beautiful choice flowers that are placed upon our Free Circle-Room table at each session, we know have a most gratifying effect on the spirits who assemble for the purpose of sending words to their earthly friends. As an illustration of this fact, we were strongly impressed Jan. 10th to purchase a bouquet of flowers, and place them upon the table prior to the séance to be held that day, neither the medium, the Chairman, nor any one else knowing why. On turning to the sixth page of last week's BANNER the reader will find a spirit message from a very particular friend of ours—Father Henry Fitz James—who passed to the higher life many years ago. We once rendered this spirit a signal service, for which he feels very grateful, and he says, in his message, that the flowers, which were for him, aided him in securing control of the medium for the time-being.—We tender sincere thanks to many thoughtful seekers after truth who have of late in like manner furnished tokens of attraction to the invisible ones.

☞ We learn that Capt. Holmes, President of the Boston Spiritual Temple, last Sunday morning spoke of an appreciative letter that he had received from B. W. Dunklee on account of the sympathetic action bestowed by those who were present at the funeral, or who had assisted in the funeral exercises over the body of his brother, W. A. Dunklee, last Wednesday, etc. This letter, coming as it did from a Baptist deacon of long standing, speaks well for Spiritualism and Spiritualists. Spiritualism, when properly understood, will be more and more appreciated by those who have heretofore looked upon it as a myth.

☞ One of our most respectable citizens who was present informs us that at Mrs. Cowan's séance last Sunday afternoon two female spirits stood by the organ and sang the familiar hymn, "What Shall the Harvest Be?" every note being clearly and distinctly enunciated; and in response to an encore, after they had disappeared, reappeared and repeated their performance.

Decease of W. A. Dunklee, Esq.; Short Sketch of a Worthy Life; Funeral Services at Berkeley Hall, Boston; Remarks by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Colby-Luther, and Capt. Richard Holmes.

As announced in THE BANNER last week, this veteran Spiritualist and earnest worker for the New Dispensation passed to spirit-life, after an illness of a few weeks, from his residence, 426 Tremont street, Boston, on the evening of Sunday, March 4th, being in the seventy-first year of his age.

The deceased was born in Brattleboro', Vt., July 12th, 1817, being the fourth son of Benjamin and Ruth Dunklee. Early in life he left home, with the laudable desire of doing something for himself. For more than fifty years he has been engaged in business in Boston, forty years of which was in the drug business for Henshaw, Ward & Co., Seth W. Fowle & Co., and M. S. Burr & Co., and was well known in that connection. Some twelve years since he united with the firm of G. C. Dunklee & Co., furnace manufacturers, of Blackstone street, of which he was a member when he died. He held many responsible positions in various organizations of which he was a member.

Mr. Dunklee was known, in the early days of its existence, as a firm friend of and zealous officer in the ranks of Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, of this city; and devoted time and means to the benefit of that worthy institution. Of late years he has been a prominent member, and lately the Treasurer, of the Spiritual Temple Society, meeting in Berkeley Hall.

For the past few months his health had been below its usual standard, but at the time of Mrs. Lillie's reception—a month ago—he was seemingly in good spirits, and heartily enjoyed the happy occasion.

As one of the officials appointed to settle the estate of the late Moses Hunt, Mr. Dunklee took part in examining the former residence of Mr. H., and the building not having been heated, it is supposed he took a severe cold, which at his advanced age proved fatal, terminating in a general disturbance of the entire system, the checking of the vital forces, the appearance of dropsical symptoms, and a gradual depletion of energy, resulting at last in the exit of the spirit from a form which it could no more utilize.

In the early days of Spiritualism Mr. Dunklee investigated the phenomena, and becoming convinced of their truthfulness, and the reasonable character of the claims made by the philosophy taught by the returning intelligences, he devoted his energies freely, by pen, word and pecuniary means, to the advancement of a knowledge thereof among men.

Mr. Dunklee at one time exercised as a profession the gift of healing the sick by laying on of hands (a power which his widow also possesses in a remarkable degree), and hence gained the title of "Doctor," by which he was known to quite a large number of his acquaintances. He was an intimate friend of the late Judge J. S. Ladd, of Cambridge, Mass., and they were often closely associated in their investigations of spiritual matters.

When the end of his mortal pilgrimage drew nigh the deceased arranged his affairs—even to the details of his own funeral—with calmness; and though the latter portion of his sickness brought great suffering in its train, he bore all with fortitude and a sure conviction of coming rest and peace; satisfied with all that had been done—and it is certain that all was done which loving friendship or medical skill could avail—to bring about his recovery, he accepted the result with the bright resignation of one whose spiritual vision, opened on the bed of death, (as was the case,) showed the mountains of pain and physical dissolution which heaved up around him to be covered with the bright forms of angel loved ones who waited to bear him home.

The funeral exercises were conducted on Wednesday morning—10:30 o' clock—March 7th, in Berkeley Hall, under the auspices of the Spiritual Temple Society. The place of assembly was filled to overflowing. Among the sympathetic audience convened with the relatives to bear witness by their presence to the worth of him who had passed on were many of the veterans among the local Spiritualists, social friends, numbers of business acquaintances, who knew the sterling character of the deceased in the every-day walks of life, and the employés of the firm with which he had been connected (who attended in a body).

We learn that Mr. Dunklee, in arranging for the funeral—remembering that he had many relatives and friends who would be present who had not embraced the Spiritual Philosophy, and thoughtful in this regard—remarked to his son, who worships in Tremont Temple (of the Baptist denomination): "You can, if you desire, invite your pastor to attend the services and make such remarks as seem best to him," but for some reason the minister was not present.

The body was enclosed in a black, cloth-covered casket, and on being brought from the late residence was placed on the platform of the hall, an open book, composed of flowers, over which was a large arch of varicolored hybrid roses, being in the rear. At the head of the casket was a cushion of flowers, with centre motto "At Rest," these two designs being contributed by the Spiritual Temple members, while at the foot was a beautiful standing floral anchor from the Ladies' Industrial Society of the Temple. Beside these, and on the platform and casket, were several bouquets, a sheaf of wheat and a floral pillow from other friends of the deceased. His employés presented a large and elaborate design, "Gates Ajar."

Capt. Richard Holmes, President of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, occupied the chair.

After an appropriate vocal selection by Mr. and Mrs. Lillie, that lady offered a soulful invocation, and followed the petition with a brief and eloquent address upon death and its mission—illumining the minds of all present with the cheering radiance which Spiritualism bestows in the hour of physical bereavement. Her tribute to the worth of Mr. Dunklee was touching in pathos, and rich with the memory of a well-spent life. Reading extracts from views regarding the future life said to have been expressed by Socrates on his approach to death, the speaker compared them with similar ones voiced by Mr. Dunklee just previous to his passing from the form; she described his victory over the change called death, but preferred to state that death had no existence in the universe—change being but the birth of all things to higher conditions in the dominion of life.

Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther was the next speaker. She pursued the same (spiritual) line of thought regarding death and its office for humanity. She also paid a glowing tribute to the memory of the deceased as a man of true worth, noble instincts and practical value in the society and among the general community.

Capt. Holmes improved the occasion to express his high appreciation of his brother and associate in office whose mortal form would be known no more in the places of trust and honor which of late knew him so well. While this earnest laborer on the plane of physical activity would be sadly missed by the society, its members were sure that the kindly interest he had cherished in its welfare would still be felt by him on the spirit shore. The speaker closed his remarks with an original memorial poem.

The speaking closed with a few words, setting forth her own experience, by Mrs. Lillie.

The remarks of the speakers were interspersed with appropriate vocal selections by Mr. J. T. Lillie and Charles W. Sullivan—the latter gentleman closing the exercises with a song beginning: "I feel that the old world is fading from my view."

Capt. Holmes then announced that all who desired might take a farewell view of their deceased comrade and friend—a privilege which the larger portion of the people present availed themselves of.

At the conclusion of the exercises the body was taken to Woodlawn Cemetery for interment in the family lot—Messrs. Enos Ricker, Henry P. Trask, G. C. Paine and Dr. Moore acting as pall-bearers.

Mr. Dunklee was a man of upright character and unswerving integrity. He leaves behind him in mortal life a devoted widow and two sons, also three brothers and a sister, and a large circle of relatives and friends. His obsequies were attended by many who had never before heard Spiritualism's message on a funeral occasion, and the impression produced on them must have been deep, and will be abiding; and thus through this after result of his mortuary ceremony our arisen brother, though "dead" in the parlance of the unthinking world, "yet speaketh" to the children of men!

Anti-Vaccination Matters.

William Tebb, Esq.—who has devoted so much time and labor to combating the popular fallacy of vaccination and opposing the enforcement of the absurd laws framed in behalf of this disgusting and dangerous process—writes us from London recently:

"I cannot express the gratitude I feel to the BANNER OF LIGHT for its constant and able advocacy of our cause year after year, and its successful and crushing exposures of the tyrannical devices of the medical monopolists.—The annual meeting of the London Society for the Abolition of Compulsory Vaccination will be held next month (April) in London, and the Fifth International Anti-Vaccination Congress is announced for next September, at Paris. The executive committee are most anxious that delegates from the United States and Canada should be present to take part in the proceedings of both these important gatherings."

W. J. Colville's Movements.

From the Golden Gate we learn that Mr. Colville, whose lectures in San Francisco have given much satisfaction to large and intelligent audiences, left that city, accompanied by C. H. Heath, for Los Angeles, Feb. 29th. He is expected to labor three months in Southern California, at the end of which time he will return to San Francisco, and attend the Oakland Camp-Meeting in June, on his way to Chicago.

MRS. CLARA A. FIELD, of Boston, (THE BANNER'S subscription agent in the South,) delivered three lectures on psychometry and its significance, at Fry's Opera House, Palatka, Fla., on the evenings of Feb. 29th, March 1st and 2d—illustrating her remarks on each occasion with practical demonstrations of her own wonderful powers in the way of reading the characters of strangers selected by the audience: often giving marked data regarding their lives by simply holding in her hand some article belonging to the person to be examined. Her addresses were well spoken of by The Daily News of that place.

DUMONT C. DAKE, M. D., of New York City, is having remarkable success, we are assured—some of the wealthiest and most fashionable people in Gotham holding themselves in readiness, as patients, to receive benefit at his hands. We wish professional etiquette could be so far "stretched" in Germany as to allow Dr. Dake to try his remedial powers in the unfortunate case of Frederick III.!

☞ It will be seen by the notice elsewhere that the First Spiritual Temple Society in this city will on Easter Sunday inaugurate a Fraternity School for the Young. An excellent move in the right direction, and we hope and trust that it will prove to be a successful affair in every particular.

☞ A. S. Hayward, healer, of this city, is doing a great work for humanity by his successful magnetic treatment of invalids. His methods are manifestly far superior to all the theories of the so-called mind-curers extant. We have tested his powers, and know whereof we speak.

☞ We invariably endeavor to accommodate our numerous correspondents; but at the same time we desire it to be distinctly understood that we decline to give up, under any circumstances, our prerogative as editor.

☞ We are gratified to learn, as we do from our active co-worker, Mr. Thomas Lees of Cleveland, Ohio, that Modern Spiritualism was never so rife in that city as at the present time. "Truth is mighty, and will prevail."

☞ By the notice in another column it will be seen that the well-known medium for the physical manifestations, Mrs. H. B. Fay, owing to continued illness, has given up her sittings for an indefinite period.

☞ We are informed that Rowley's Occult Telegraph—under the skillful supervision of Spirit Dr. Wells—is doing full and efficient service as a remedial agent, at 89 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O.

☞ The Berry Sisters continue to hold their séances Sunday and Wednesday evenings, also Sunday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

Claim of Spiritualists.

Just before the meeting of the City Council of Evansville, Ind., March 8th, a committee of six well-known and prominent Spiritualists waited upon that body and asked for a private hearing, which was accorded them. Their mission was a startling one, says the writer, and if true will shake Evansville from center to circumference: They asked for a permit to exhume the remains of Robert Barnes, one of the wealthiest men in the city, who died in February, 1871, as they had reason to believe, from a communication they had received from an unknown source, that the last will signed by Barnes was in the coffin. This will was a famous one, involving an estate valued at about half a million dollars, and was made by Barnes before his last illness. In it he made a liberal provision for the founding of a college which was to be controlled by the Spiritualists of Indiana. After his death the will could not be found, and suit was brought against the heirs by the State Spiritualist Association to recover the amount bequeathed. In proof of their claims a duplicate copy of the alleged will was produced, but the jury did not deem it sufficient and rendered an adverse verdict and the property was divided among the heirs. In January, 1875, the Spiritualists swore out an affidavit, charging Alfred Ribsel, A. S. Hurst and Charles A. Hurst with abstracting the will from its hiding-place under Barnes's head. On the day set for trial the plaintiff's attorney asked that the case be nol. pros'd, which was done. Subsequently revelations from Barnes were afterward made public through the Spiritualists and said to have been secured at their séances. Another account says the present revelation comes from an earthly source, and that sensational developments will follow. The Council, after deliberation, instructed the committee to apply to Circuit Judge Parrett for the necessary order.

Delayed Mails,

(Late on account of the severe storm of March 12th and 13th,) have caused the non-appearance of much matter of interest in these columns this week. We trust our correspondents in various parts of the country, who have consequently failed to be heard, will be forgiving under a vexatious condition which we were of course wholly unable to remedy.

FAST DAY.—The Governor and Council have designated April 5th as a day for fasting and prayer.

Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Berkeley Hall, Boston.

The Fortieth Anniversary will be celebrated in Berkeley Hall, corner of Tremont and Berkeley streets, on Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st, 1888, under the auspices of

THE BOSTON SPIRITUAL TEMPLE SOCIETY.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, Dr. J. C. Street and other talented speakers will participate in the exercises. Superior musical and literary talent, also reliable test-mediums, have been engaged, thereby rendering the attractions of the entertainment second to none.

On Saturday, as one feature of the entertainment, Mr. Fletcher will give his popular lecture, illustrated with dissolving views.

Tremont Temple and Paine Memorial Hall.

A grand Union Celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will take place on March 31st and April 1st, under the auspices of the

FIRST SPIRITUALIST LADIES' AID SOCIETY AND CHILDREN'S LYCEUM NO. I. OF BOSTON,

The official notice of which appears on our second page.

Paine Hall.

A grand celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will be held March 25th, afternoon and evening, at this place, under the auspices of the Spiritual Phenomena Association. See notice on second page.

Cincinnati, O.

On the second page will be found the statement made by the Committee of Invitation, in the name of the Spiritualists of Cincinnati, regarding the convocations to be held in that city Sunday, April 1st, to Thursday, April 5th, and the important character of the work sought to be inaugurated thereat.

Hartford, Ct.

By reference to our second page it will be seen that the Spiritualists of Connecticut will remember the Fortieth Anniversary by a mass convention at Unity Hall, in the capital of the State.

Moline, Ill.

See second page for an announcement of Anniversary services to be held March 30th, 31st and April 1st, at Library Hall, under the auspices of the Mount Pleasant Park and Mississippi Valley Associations.

New York City.

Mrs. Mary A. Newton writes that "The First Society of Spiritualists of New York will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary at Adelphi Hall, 52d street and 7th avenue, on Sunday P. M., March 25th.

The speakers will be Mr. W. C. Bowen, Hon. A. H. Dailey, Henry J. Newton, Mrs. Amanda M. Spence, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham.

Music will be furnished by Señor Aurelio Ceruelos, Mrs. J. O. Goodwin, Miss Lily Runals; and a reading by Miss Sawyer."

Attleboro, Mass.

The 31st of March will be observed with appropriate exercises. The ladies of the Spiritual Society are arranging for a grand entertainment with unique features for the evening of that date, and on Sunday, April 1st, afternoon and evening, the guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer will address the people on subjects commemorative of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Other Points.

Information reaches us (as per notices elsewhere) that the Anniversary will be observed at NEWBURYPORT, HAVERHILL and SALEM, MASS.; TROY, N. Y.; CHICAGO, ILL.; TOLEDO and CLEVELAND, O.; PHILADELPHIA, PA.; PROVIDENCE, R. I., and elsewhere.

The 31st of March.

As notices are coming in for publication regarding the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, from various sections of the country, THE BANNER desires the friends to send reports to it for publication, and have them prepared as briefly as is consistent with the matter given.

☞ Wanted, a copy each of Crookes's "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism," "Art Magic" and "Ghost Land," the last named work either in paper or cloth covers. Address, stating price for either one or all of them, F. G. T., care BANNER OF LIGHT.

English Notes.

Robert Cooper gives in London Light of March 3d an interesting narrative of his experience with the well-known medium Henry Allen, at the home of Dr. Beals in Greenfield, Mass., in 1875.

***

Light transfers to its columns from THE BANNER of June 27th, 1868, remarks made by Dr. Willis on some points suggested by a narrative previously written by him, introducing them by saying, "It is significant that these twenty years old papers contain as much philosophy as most of us could put into the discussion of to-day." Our English contemporary will bear in mind that truth is ever new.

***

Ghosts are in full season at Redruth, according to accounts in the Cornubian. A lady on returning on Wednesday evening from chapel, where she heard a lecture on "ministering angels and guardian spirits," while standing at her neighbor's door, saw a ladylike person twelve yards in front of her on the path. It gradually faded away. She recognized it as resembling a friend recently deceased.—Medium and Daybreak, London, March 2d.

Children's Lyceums.—From reports in Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten's Two Worlds, quite a number of Children's Progressive Lyceums appear to be in successful operation in England. At their sessions, in addition to the usual exercises, consisting of marches, recitations, singing and calisthenics, instructive lectures and discussions take place. At four Lyceums the following subjects were respectively under consideration: "Heat," "Phrenology," "Astronomy and Physiology," and "The Philosophy of Death."

Successful Materialization Seance

At Adelphi Hall, New York City.

It gives us great pleasure to present our readers with the following unbiased report of the second of the series of public materialization séances held in Adelphi Hall, New York City, through the instrumentality of Mrs. M. E. Williams, on Friday evening last, which we copy entire from the New York Mercury of March 11th, 1888:

A large audience, both spiritual and mortal, attended the second public séance of Mrs. M. E. Williams at Adelphi Hall, Fifty-Second street and Broadway, last Friday evening, and the denizens of both the Here and the Hereafter seemed equally well pleased at how things turned out. The first materialization séance three weeks ago was given in a side hall, but the one last Friday night was in the large hall on the second floor where dramatic entertainments are held. The cabinet was erected on the stage, which rose several feet above the level of the floor, so that those in the rear of the mortal audience had a good and full view of the spirit audience that glided along the stage and talked and called for their friends still in the flesh during the séance. Mr. John Franklin Clark presided, and before the opening of the materializations he made an address. He read from a copy of the New York Catholic News of last Sunday a report of how to a Father Walters, pastor of St. Patrick's Catholic Church in Washington, D. C., while he was working in his study and told him their father was dying and needed the spiritual ministration of the church usual on such occasions. The priest went to the place indicated, and there found a man lying on a bed of straw in a dying condition. "Why did you not send for me sooner?" asked the priest. "Because I had no one to send," the dying man replied. The priest then explained how two little girls had called upon him, and the man recognized them as his two children who had been dead some time.

"I DO NOT KNOW,"

said Mr. Clark, "whether or not the Catholic Church wishes its followers to believe in the materialization of spirits, but that this story should be published in a New York Catholic newspaper is a significant fact and shows the progress which materialization is making." Mr. Clark then appointed a committee to investigate the cabinet and lock and seal the doors leading from the wings of the stage. Mr. Tice, the well-known investigator and exposer of fraudulent mediums, was chairman of the committee. They closely examined the cabinet, the stage and the exits from it, and locked the doors and sealed them. Coming to the front of the platform, Mr. Tice said:

"We have examined everything, and I am convinced

THERE ARE NO CONFEDERATES HERE."

"Did you examine the floor of the stage?" asked a voice in the audience. "Have you seen that there is no trap door?" Mr. Tice said as the audience could see the stage floor during the séance they could easily detect any confederate who might make his or her way up head foremost. Mrs. Williams then paid her respects to the audience, and entered the cabinet framework, around which the curtains were let fall down. In a few minutes Father Holland, the spirit-guide of Mrs. Williams's cabinet, asked that the hymn "Nearer, my God, to Thee," be rendered by the lady at the piano, and sung by the audience. This produced a fervent religious and harmonic condition in the audience, and soon the spirits began to make their presence known.

FRANK CUSHMAN'S REHABILITATED GHOST

came out, and bid all good evening, and expressed the belief that the séance would be a success. Little "Bright Eyes" begun her childish talk, and said very many smart and witty things of the childish order. The deep voice of Father Holland again issued from the cabinet, telling the sitters to concentrate their thoughts on some decarnated friends whom they desired to see. This, he said, would help the spirits materialize and appear to them.

Priscilla, an ancient and very beautiful spirit, then appeared and crossed the stage, in luminous white drapery, like a dream of beauty. The spirit of Julia Hurst, bringing with her a boy named Edgar, appeared and asked for her father, Capt. Hurst. A timid, but fair spirit, named Carrie, came out, and asked for Mrs. Harriet Beach. This lady, who was present, went up on the stage, and said she recognized Carrie as a friend who had been coming to her for five years past. Several spirits then came, among them Carrie and Theodora Wray, but there was no one present to recognize them.

Then Dr. Dio Lewis and Stephen Pearl Andrews, both dressed as in life, came out and said they recognized some old friends in the audience. A spirit, saying she was a Mrs. Curtis, who had lately passed to the spirit-world, came out and was acknowledged by a gentleman from the West. A spirit, announced as Alice, came out in vain, for there was no one present to acknowledge her, and she sadly and silently dematerialized outside the curtains of the cabinet. Sarah Douglass, with a spirit-friend named Emma, was recognized by an old lady sitting near the stage. The rehabilitated ghosts of the late Messrs. Foster and Roberts came out and stated the palpable fact that they still lived. The tall and dignified spirit of Margaret Fuller made a fine appearance, and walked out to the edge of the stage. She dematerialized in full view of all. A spirit named Emily called for Charles, and a gentleman responded, and went on the stage. When he had got through with a satisfactory interview, he announced to the audience that the spirit was that of his dearly beloved wife, who had passed away two years ago in a Western city.

THE FINE PHYSIQUE AND COMMANDING FORM

of Charlotte Cushman, the great tragedienne, as she materialized and walked out in front of the audience, was received with murmurs of pleasant surprise and subdued applause. She was greatly admired, and remained out some time, dematerializing at the aperture of the cabinet curtain. The spirit of Dr. Ewer asked for Mr. Clute, and the gentleman, well known around Park row, went on the stage and had an interview with his old friend. A handsome, tall and graceful spirit asked for her brother, who, however, was not present, and dematerialized at the side of the cabinet. Two male figures came out of the cabinet together and took a stroll along the stage, and seemed to enjoy it as if out for an airing. No one recognized them, and they spoke to no person. Miss Roberts, a very distinguished-looking young lady, came out in the resurrected form, and it was announced by Father Holland, at the request of the lady spirit, that she was the daughter of Jonathan M. Roberts.

ALICE CARY, THE FAIR POETESS, made her début on the stage, and was well received. She looked very poetic, and there was a glimmer of moonshine in her graceful drapery that cast a most pleasing glamour over the eyes of the beholders. Helen and Lucille Western came out together, and asked for Mrs. Anderson, the spiritualistic leader, patron and author. Mrs. Anderson went on the stage, and told the audience that she recognized Lucille as when she knew her in life.

Here the rustle of paper was heard at the little table in front of the cabinet, where paper had been left for spirits to write messages upon. The spirit said it was that of Victor Hugo. He regretted that he could not yet come in illuminated form, so as to be visible to all, but he hoped to be able to do so soon. In the meantime he would write a message. He left a written message behind him, and returned to the transparent condition of spirituality.

Spirits calling themselves Captain Cosgrove, Esther, Ellen, Arthur Burt and Emma Romer, followed Victor Hugo in rapid succession, while little Bright Eyes kept up her childish prattle, and had some set-tos with Father Holland as to keeping still and not talking so much.

The Rev. Dr. Weston came in spirit to Mr. O'Sullivan, an ex-United States Consul. He called upon Mr. O'Sullivan to bear witness that he was a confirmed Spiritualist before he left this life. He hoped the people of St. John's Church would progress. That was his old church.

The spirit of Willie Blanchard was an interesting boy, and he was followed by the spirit of a girl which came to Dr. Cetlinski.

E. V. Wilson put in a good appearance, and said that, although he had passed away, he still lived. Lizzie and Henry Revett were recognized by their father, who had a good time with them on the stage.

A VERY REMARKABLE SPIRIT

was that of Dr. Martinez, the spirit chemist of the cabinet, who stood over six feet in height, and told the audience to cultivate the subject of materialization and to do so in their own homes, free from suspicion and all unkindness.

James B. Stinson appeared and stated that while a denizen of earth he did not believe in spirit-life, but now he came there to testify to its being a truth.

The old Spiritualists present declared the séance a great success. Mrs. Williams certainly had a good congregation, both in spirits and in people still in their own natural flesh. Two police officers were in the rear of the hall, but whether they were there in their official capacity or as investigators did not materialize, as there was no police duty to be performed, everything passing off with religious decorum and even reverence.

Spirit Prophecy Fulfilled.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Many times has the question been asked, "Do prophecies made by spirits ever come true?" I answer yes, a thousand times yes. More than twenty years ago I heard the guides of Mrs. J. H. Conant say that the time would come when the spirits would be able to materialize, standing beside their medium on the public rostrum—being seen and heard by all present. Only a few years before his demise I heard Mr. E. V. Wilson's control make a similar assertion.

On Friday evening, March 9th, by special invitation of Mrs. M. E. Williams of this city, I attended her second séance, given in Adelphi Hall. The cabinet was placed upon the stage; a committee, chosen from the audience, made a critical examination of the cabinet and surroundings, sealing the doors, etc. After some remarks by Mr. Clark, Mrs. Williams took her seat behind the curtain, while the audience joined in singing, when spirit-forms began to appear, recognizing friends, calling them upon the stage, greeting their loved ones with the same expressions of affection as are manifested in this life when long separated friends meet.

Many spirits came during the séance—men, women and children—of all ages and sizes, giving their names and the names of those they came to see.

E. V. Wilson came and reminded us that "this séance, held in a public hall, where he and other spirits could be seen and heard, was what he predicted while in the form."

I have attended a great many private materialization séances, with a select company, where not as satisfactory manifestations were given as on this occasion. Here was a séance held in a hall, with stage and scenery used for other purposes; the cabinet in the midst of all these surroundings; an audience of nearly two hundred people; a brighter light than is usual at private séances, yet about forty spirits appeared—and all, with one or two exceptions, were recognized—and during the whole séance the most perfect order and quiet prevailed; not one disturbing or annoying movement or remark was made. No service in any church could have been more dignified or respectful than was this séance for spirit communion. If this much could be done under such environments, what might not be demonstrated in a church or hall built for and dedicated entirely to the spirits' work, and our mediums surrounded by all the comforts that are provided for ministers and professional teachers of all kinds?

***

By special invitation of Mrs. Williams, I attended the Saturday afternoon séance at her beautiful home on 46th street. Twenty-eight persons were present, all very intelligent, refined people. Many of them were not only strangers to the medium, but strangers in the city and to spirit séances, yet friends came to them, and dear little "Bright Eyes" gave them many tests, telling them they came from the West, etc. The controlling cabinet spirit, Mr. Holland, gave most excellent advice to all present. DR. ABBIE E. CUTTER.

New York, March 11th, 1888.

[From the Medium and Daybreak, London, Eng.]

An Appeal for Mr. Robert Cooper, of Eastbourne, Sussex.

Among the pioneers and active workers in the Movement of Modern Spiritualism, an honorable and foremost place is due to Mr. Robert Cooper, of Eastbourne, Eng.

When, a quarter of a century ago, he became convinced that Spiritualism was a great and important truth, he devoted his time and means unsparingly to its diffusion, first in his immediate neighborhood by public lectures and letters in the local press, and subsequently in a wider sphere among the community at large.

In 1863 he founded, and for four years sustained at his sole charge, the Spiritual Lyceum, Newman street, Oxford street, the first institution of the kind in the metropolis, and where an active propaganda was maintained by the regular delivery of public lectures, the holding of séances and public meetings, the loan and sale of books and publications, and the issue and circulation of tracts. About the same time he established the Spiritual Times, the first weekly London journal exclusively devoted to the advocacy of Spiritualism, and from 1863 to 1867 he bore all the expense of its editing, printing and publication.

In 1865 the Davenport Brothers, accompanied by Dr. Ferguson, visited England, and made a great impression by the remarkable manifestations of spirit-power presented through their mediumship. When Dr. Ferguson returned to America, his place was supplied by Mr. Cooper, who traveled with the brothers in England and Ireland, introducing them to public audiences by appropriate lectures and addresses. While thus engaged, and through his connection with Spiritualism, Mr. Cooper was made the subject of a vexatious prosecution, and was nearly involved in very serious consequences arising out of it.

By reason of the losses and misfortunes in business, he now left England for America, where, as in England, he was an untiring and zealous advocate of the cause he had dearly at heart, and where his single-minded earnestness gained for him the esteem and respect of all who knew him.

Returning to England, worldly troubles gathered close and fast around him, until now, in his sixty-seventh year, with blindness and failing health, immediate steps are necessary to save him from utter ruin. It would be a disgrace to Spiritualists as a body, if one who has so strong a hold upon them were suffered to fall into destitution, so a few friends have determined to make an effort, by means of an annual subscription, to provide him an amount sufficient at least, it is hoped, for his moderate wants, and to enable him to pass the remainder of his days in comfort and content.

Will some of the readers of the Medium cooperate in this good work, by placing their names against an annual subscription for this purpose, which may be sent to Mrs. Tebb, 7 Albert Road, Regent Park, London?

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

☞ All Spiritualists are cordially invited to become connected with THE ALLIANCE—either as resident or non-resident members—and to take an active part in its work.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead," and all such are invited to become members. NELSON CROSS, President.

J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

The Alliance held its regular meeting at 219 West 42d street, New York, Wednesday evening, the 7th inst., and after the regular order of business had been disposed of, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, and continued the consideration of the question as to the best scientific method for studying the so-called "spiritual phenomena" and the objects to be attained by such study. The matter was discussed until after ten o'clock, when the Committee arose, reported progress, and The Alliance adjourned for the purpose of holding the usual séance, to enable the mediums present to announce the presence of such spirits as should make themselves known, and voice the messages they wished to convey.

The next meeting will be held at same place on Wednesday evening, March 21st.

JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

☞ Back numbers of THE BANNER for no special date will be supplied at four cents per copy: But parties ordering papers for any special date will be charged the usual price—eight cents per copy.

☞ WRITING PLANCHETTES for sale by Colby & Rich. Price 60 cents.

THE SULTAN AROUSED.—The great sovereign of Turkey has ordered 500,000 rifles, but has yet obtained only two hundred of them, from lack of ability to pay!

SUSTAINING THE INDIANS.—Acting-Commissioner Stockslager has rejected the application of George Harris and others, to enter, under the homestead laws, lands within the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory. The claim is made by the applicants that President Pierce, in creating this reservation, exceeded his power under the statute, in consequence of which his order is null and void, and the reservation should be subject to entry. The Acting-Commissioner holds that the Secretary recognized the legality of the order creating the reservation by granting patents to the Indians, and, as the general land office has no authority to overrule or disturb his decisions, applications are dismissed.—*Washington, D. A medium who five years ago predicted that Oliver Ames would be Governor, now foretells that the Governor will occupy the presidential chair.—Boston Evening Traveller, March 7th, 1888.

A medium in Washington also predicted, two years before he was elected Governor, that Gen. B. F. Butler would surely be elected chief magistrate of this Commonwealth—and he was at the time foretold by the medium.

The Springfield (Mass.) Union was driven from its new home, on the afternoon of March 7th, by a conflagration which cost seven of its people their lives; while others were injured severely. Cause—no fire-escapes—at least none of any practical use.

The worst storm of mingled hail, snow, rain and wind (51 miles velocity,) known for twenty years, prevailed in the eastern and northern section of the United States, March 12th, creating a general demoralization of railroad trains, and leveling the telegraph lines on all sides from Washington, D. C., to Bangor, Me. At time of going to press (13th inst.) Boston has no telegraphic communication with "the outside world."

SUGAR (TRUST) PLUMS from our exchanges:

The advances in the price of sugar will net the members of the sugar trust $6,800,000 this year. This sum represents the added cost of sugar to the public. There has been no increase in wages, nor in the cost of refining sugar.—The (Worthington, Minn.) Advance.

The people paid fifty millions tax to have the sugar interests protected, and in turn the latter formed a "trust" and taxed the people forty millions more for being such fools.—Kansas Banner.

Faith won't enable a man to lift a ton all at once, but it will, ten pounds at a time.

The Boston Record tells a good story in regard to a "Christian Science" or "Mind Cure" episode which occurred in this city recently:

A lady who is a firm believer in the cure of everything by the mind, or rather in the non-existence of all pains and maladies, has a little boy who complained of a terrible toothache. She took him to a scientist to be cured, and remarked to that lady as soon as she had entered the room:

"My boy thinks he has a terrible toothache, Mrs. Scientist, and I have brought him to you to be cured of it."

Having brought her attention to the case, Mrs. Scientist said:

"Now, my little boy, you must look me right in the eye. [A pause.] Now you haven't any toothache."

"Yes, I have, too!" shouted the boy.

The Scientist smiled patiently and tried it over again.

"You must look me right in the eyes and try to forget your toothache," she said. Then there was another steadfast pause. "Ah! now you have n't any toothache!"

"Yes, I have, too!" screamed the boy again.

The practitioner went through the process once more, with fresh persuasion. The boy seemed inclined to be silent this time.

"Well, I guess you have n't any toothache now, my boy," said she.

"You lie!" said the boy quietly.

He was taken away, toothache and all.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH for March gives an article favoring cremation as a method of disposing of human remains, in which many important facts are stated and opinions cited. Under the caption, "What's in a Name?" the editor gives quotations and comments on that thoroughly spiritualistic book, "The Hidden Way," remarking that though no religious society would submit to being denominated *un*spiritual, they all avoid the terms "Spiritualist" and "Spiritualism" as descriptive of something quite inconsistent with the manners of their lives and professions, even the Rev. James Freeman Clarke, in his introduction to this book, asserting "as if it were a matter of congratulation, that the author 'had had no connection with so called Spiritualism, and is unacquainted with any of the professional mediums,' but neglects to state that she is herself not only a Spiritualist, but a medium, and that her book is, in fact, a very clear and concise exposition of the spiritual philosophy and religion." Several instances of beneficial results following information received in dreams are recorded, and instructions of vital importance regarding health and diet given. New York: 206 Broadway. Boston: For sale by Colby & Rich.

"THE SOUL."—In the March number Prof. Henry Kiddle gives his views of spiritual progression and its requirements in each individual, remarking that among all the truths brought to our attention through spirit intercourse "there is none more positively confirmed, more fully coincident with our rational convictions, or of more vital interest to us, than the ability of the spirit after quitting its tenement of clay to rise to better and higher conditions, no matter how low and depraved it may have become while passing through material life."—A possible modus operandi of some spiritual phenomena is suggested by an article under the heading, "Was it a Clairvoyant Vision or Materialization?" the writer, who was the subject of the phenomenon described, evidently being a medium whose gift would become more fully developed under required conditions.—The remaining contents are, "What is Soul?" by A. F. Melchers, of Charleston, S. C., "Psychometry," by Mr. O. P. Gifford, and "Some Thoughts of the Unknown." Facts Publishing Company, Boston. For sale by Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street.

☞ The details of a curious burial which took place in Yantic Cemetery, Conn., recently, have just become public. It seems that Capt. John A. Robinson, a wealthy gentleman, a resident of the "Plains," who had made a tour of the world, and had resided in Paris many years, contracted a fear of being buried alive during the commune in that city. It grew so steadily upon him that he had provisions made in his will directing that his remains should be kept for three days before they were placed in the grave, where the lid to the coffin was to be removed, and the grave so closed that a person could readily get out. It also provided that food and water be placed in the coffin. A hammer, too, was to lie near his right hand, while a lamp was to burn in his sepulchre for three days and three nights. Every one of the provisions was rigidly enforced. Capt. Robinson was manager of the Tiger Lily and Water Lily of the old Norwich and Watch Hill Steamboat Company, and was responsibly connected with three banks.

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

[Notices under this heading must reach this office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.]

Edgar W. Emerson has engagements as follows for March: March 18th and 25th, Portland, Me.; March 28th, Brockton, Mass.; March 31st, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass. He was in Pittsburgh, Pa., March 4th.

Mrs. S. Dick has been busy of late lecturing and giving tests in Quincy, Clinton, Lowell, Portsmouth, Newburyport and other localities. She will be in Portsmouth again March 18th. All parties wishing to secure her services for platform work will please address her Hotel Columbus, 415 Columbus Avenue, Suite 4, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham will be in Cincinnati for the month of April.

J. V. Mansfield, the writing medium, is, we understand, about to leave Boston for California.

A. E. Tisdale lectured in Springfield, Mass., Feb. 5th and 12th; in Troy, N. Y., Feb. 19th and 26th; in Bridgeport, Ct., March 4th and 11th; he is to speak in East Dennis, Mass., March 18th; in Fitchburg, March 25th; in Lowell, April 1st; in the New Spiritual Temple, Boston, April 8th, 15th and 22d; in Brockton, April 29th; and in Providence, R. I., during the month of May.

W. L. Jack, M. D., of Haverhill, writes us that he cannot be in Philadelphia, Pa., at the Anniversary, as he wishes to visit Boston on that occasion, where he hopes to meet his friends at Tremont Temple and the Temple Society meeting in Berkeley Hall.

Mr. J. W. Fletcher lectured in Providence, R. I., on Sunday. He will be there two Sundays more; the 31st of March, Berkeley Hall; April 1st, in Norwich, Conn.; April 7th, in Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant of Boston, inspirational and trance speaker, and psychometrist, lectured before the Rockland (Me.) Spiritualists on Sundays, afternoon and evening, March 4th and 11th; she speaks there on Sundays 18th and 25th; at Fitchburg, April 8th; would like to make engagements for the last three Sundays in April. All communications should be sent to her address, Rockland, Me.

Mrs. J. J. Whitney, well known in California as a very successful platform lecturer and test-medium, is arranging to be present at the camp-meetings in this section the coming summer.

Dr. Dean Clarke was well received and generally congratulated for his instructive lectures in Quincy last Sunday. Next Sunday he speaks for the Ingersoll Society, at Paine Memorial Hall, at 2:45 P. M., on "Republicanism vs. Romanism"; March 25th is open; April 1st he officiates at the Anniversary in Newburyport, Mass. No speaker in the field is better capacitated than he to teach our philosophy or the science of spirit intercourse. Both new and old Societies should have the benefit of his inspiration and scholarship. Address him for engagements in care of this office.

Helen Stuart-Richings lectured in Memorial Hall, Cleveland, O., Sunday evening, March 4th, before a crowded house; has been re-engaged for the month of May by the Pittsburgh Society, and is open to engagements for the Sundays of June. The months of the coming season for which she can be engaged in the North are September and October, 1888, and March, April, May and June, 1889. November, December, January and February she will spend with her husband in Florida, and will lecture and give tests for societies desiring her services in that State. Address during March 281 Warren Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

Hon. Warren Chase lectures in Clyde, O., March 18th; March 25th he spends with three of his grandchildren at the State Normal School, Ypsilanti, Mich.; the five Sundays of April he speaks in Evansville, Ind., and may be addressed there during April; May and June he will be in Cobden, Ill. He will act as agent for THE BANNER and all the publications of Colby & Rich. His own books may be ordered from him, direct, or from this office.

J. Frank Baxter, on last Sunday evening, closed his engagement in New York City with a largely attended and enthusiastic meeting. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, the 13th and 14th insts., he lectured in Milford, Mass. On Sundays, March 18th and 25th, he will fill appointments in Norwich, Conn.

Other Victims!

A prominent citizen of San José met his death from vaccination a few days ago. His arm became greatly inflamed from the introduction of the virus, and erysipelas set in and finished the work by blood-poisoning. There have been in this city and East Portland within the past two months several very severe, if not dangerous, cases resulting from vaccination. Physicians cannot be too careful in the introduction of virus into the system, and parents should keep cool and not subject their children unnecessarily to a process that may involve consequences even more serious than those from which they would screen them.—Evening Telegram, Portland, Or.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

GIRARD COLLEGE THEOLOGY.

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D. D., LL.D.,
Author of "Marriage and Divorce," "The Bible—Whence and What," "Man—Whence and Whither," etc.

The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.'"

The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 17th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Eternal Spirit of Truth, we would draw the breath of divine wisdom within our souls and become inspired and quickened by its force and power. We would breathe in an understanding of thy laws, that we may comprehend more of life and its duties, more of that eternal and supreme law which controls the universe and operates throughout all the worlds of space.

Our Father God, we would return to thee our thankful praise for the existence which is ours, for the mere thought that we live and breathe in thee, that our ways are quickened by thy power, that our souls are called forth into understanding by thy great law.

The tender love which thou dost bestow upon humanity speaks to us through the tiny flower of the forest and thunders forth in the echo of the ocean waves, and appeals to our inmost souls in the light that gleameth from the stars, or in that most beautiful, grand light which ever shineth into human souls from realms afar. Oh! may this spiritual love baptize our hearts anew; may we become uplifted by its influence, and may the inner and diviner attributes of our beings be called forth by its power, that we may come into sympathy with each other, that we may develop kindly feelings and tender affection for our kindred, that we may press forward in life, seeking to do thy will in helpful service to humanity. May we send forth to thy angels that which shall be as perfume to their hearts, that which shall be grateful to their lives, and an aspiration for truth, holiness and peace.

We ask thy blessing to rest upon all at this time. We ask the coöperation and ministry of the angels; may we walk and talk with them face to face, realizing their presence, recognizing their power, and giving unto them such sympathy and assistance as they may desire and need in their work and mission for humanity. Amen.

S. B. Brittan.

Once more, Mr. Chairman, my friend Pierpont has invited me to preside at your circle, that I may consider, from my spiritual standpoint, such questions as you may present to the thought of the unseen world.

Before presenting your questions allow me to give greeting to my friends on earth, with assurances of my continued coöperation with all friends and laborers in the spiritual vineyard, as well as my continued interest in their work, and indeed in all that pertains to human welfare. I have perhaps no special word to give at this time, because I feel that the great work is growing; the truth is making its way from home to home; it is finding acceptance in human hearts and in all quarters—only that which is encouraging appears before my spirit sight at this hour.

True, there is still much of friction, and undoubtedly this turmoil will exist, even within our own ranks, for years to come. Humanity is growing; there is a pressure upon it which it needs must feel and struggle against. Old errors die hard; superstitions cling with all the tenacity of unruly force; yet they must loosen their hold upon the human mind; they must fall back and be relegated to oblivion.

This means, friends, that you will see and hear and come into the midst of turmoil and confusion; the din of battle and its smoke and heat may rise around you, but truth maintains her hold in the universe and will be heard; she must be felt, and she will win the victory over every foe. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when I behold the smoke of conflict arising in the mental atmosphere, I know that it denotes action, and action is far better than stagnation in any department of life, because action tells of vital life itself; stagnation speaks of death, inactivity, senselessness. Even the smoke and confusion tell the thinking mind that eventually the atmosphere will become clear, the turmoil will subside. When we look forth over the field of battle, counting our losses and our gains, enumerating the slain and those who survive, allow me to predict that among the slain will be a number of old errors and false superstitions, fallacies that have now no place in the world, ignorance and follies that must be swept away, and that which survives will be truth itself—knowledge within the heart of man concerning himself, spiritually, morally, mentally and physically speaking. Wisdom may also take his place and demand a recognition for having received truth and come into an understanding of its laws. Having gained knowledge of himself in each department of existence, man will be ready to wisely make use of that knowledge, applying it to his daily conduct; wisdom and justice will crown his life with blessings, while love universal may shed a halo of peace and beauty over all.

This is my idea of the result that will spring forth out of this conflict and confusion which we behold about us on every hand. True, every circle is enveloped in the smoke and surrounded by the din. Neither political life, religious or social circles, are free from this; but the world moves, justice eternal reigns, and by-and-bye we shall find humanity stepping out upon a broader plane, a higher altitude, from whence it may gaze down over the past, realizing its struggles, its mistakes and failures, while also recognizing its achievements and its triumphs.

But, Mr. Chairman, I must attend to the duty invested in me this afternoon by your Spirit President, and therefore you may now present your questions to S. B. Brittan, who brings his regards to his friends, and extends toward them his most helpful love and sympathy.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—Several years ago Dr. S. B. Brittan questioned the composer of the song entitled "Over the River," as to the way the music was received by him, but as no satisfactory answer could be given, Dr. B. published in his Quarterly Journal at that time his opinion regarding it. Has Dr. Brittan gained any new light since passing to spirit-life, and can he give any additional information as to the transmission of thought or music to inspirational speakers or musicians?

ANS.—I am highly gratified to learn that my friend Longley, who I am pleased to see is present, still sends out his thought to me—although I am a spirit—in relation to this subject, which exercised our minds in times past, and which is of sufficient importance to be entertained by any thoughtful mind.

Since passing to the spirit-life, and freeing myself from those physical limitations which bound my inner powers, I have endeavored to study into this law of inspiration, more especially as it affects the artist, in any department of artistic life. It has been my privilege to watch the transmission, so to speak, of an inspirational influence, from the brain of a highly exalted spirit, to that of a sensitive medium upon the earth-plane, and the study has been one of great interest to me, inasmuch as it proves to my mind that the sensitive must be caught up, so to speak, into a highly spiritualized atmosphere, ere he can properly voice or reflect the inspirations which are brought to him from the world of music, or the world of art in general. Thus I find that when my friend Longley, for example, comes within this atmosphere, he is, to all intents and purposes, dead to the outside world, or at least he is deaf to external sounds, cannot take up an understanding of things passing by his side, although those objects and circumstances might appeal most forcibly to his mind were he not in this, what I may call, superior condition. When caught up into this spiritualized atmosphere such a sensitive will not only reflect and echo the inspirations of the musical sphere, or the artistic world of spirits, but he will also feel his own spirit bathed in a sea of light and beauty; indescribable sensations will appeal to his soul; he cannot give utterance to the thought within him; but let a sound break upon his ear, in external life, and it seems harsh and discordant; let a touch appeal to him in his physical surroundings, and it is crude and unpleasant. And why? Because the spirit is partially withdrawn from the body; it has loosened its hold upon the physical universe, and has come en rapport with the spiritual world and its conditions.

I have beheld an artist seated in his studio, wrapped in what seemed to be profound meditation; those who entered his apartment in mortal form could not gain his attention, his spirit had become absorbed in a contemplation of diviner things than earth affords, and consequently it had lessened its hold in a measure upon the earthly condition, and soared aloft into spiritual space. I have beheld that artist, not under the direct ministration of an individual spirit, but under the concentrated power, so to speak, of a number of minds in spirit-life, all of whom were in congenial association, each exerting his special power, but combining the whole into one magnetic force, which, being poured down upon the sensitive artist-soul, became absorbed, so to speak, within his own life. By-and-bye he awoke from his entranced condition, and seizing the brush and palette, began to work hastily, and without ceasing, until a wonderful landscape appeared on the canvas, more beautiful than tongue can express.

I have seen the same artist, at another time, working away on his canvas, tracing the lineaments of a human face and form, and still he was assisted by the inspiring powers of unseen intelligences; but in this latter case I beheld an individual standing by his side, a man of noble mien and lofty brow, evidently an artist when on earth, and by touching lightly the brow of his sensitive instrument, making magnetic passes over the brain and person, the mediumistic instrument caught the inspiration of beauty and ideality from the attendant spirit, and expressed it in the painted face upon the canvas.

These are two forms of received inspiration and spiritual assistance by one and the same sensitive instrument; and so I may say that inspiration is sometimes caught by the susceptible soul, and given expression in outward life, as from a grand sea of power or magnetic influence, which emanates from countless minds, exalted, wise and noble, in aspiration and altitude; and again, inspiration may be received by the direct contact and presence of one or more individual spirits, who take an interest in their instrument and his work, and who desire to send it forth to the world.

This one subject under consideration concerning that beautiful song, entitled "Over the River," is of interest to my mind, because I behold within its cadences internal evidence of its spiritual origin. I believe that the lines, as given by the gifted poetess, were inspired by angel-helpers, who desired to bring a knowledge of immortal life to man, and found their best means of appealing to the human heart through simple lines and glowing language; and I believe that my friend Longley came under the direct ministration of helpful spirits, who sang these words into his heart, caused their melody to flow through his brain, until he caught them up and gave them external expression, for the helpfulness and joy of mortals.

I might, Mr. Chairman, discourse upon this subject for an hour, but in doing so I should deprive others of their right of propounding questions for our elucidation; but sometime I may have the privilege of communicating with my musical friend in private, through this or some other instrumentality, and discussing this and kindred topics to our satisfaction.

Q.—[By B. F. Randall.] In answer to the question "From whence comes the spirit?" I have been told "From the world of causes," and to the question, "Where does the spirit go?" "Upward and onward through the heavenly spheres." Can the control tell me why it came? Why does it go? and what is it all ultimately for?

A.—I am pleased with the definition recently given of the term "spirit" and the term "soul" by our friend, Mr. Pierpont. He considers the soul of man to be the life-principle or electric force which animates and in every way governs the man himself. This electrical force or life-principle, he claims, springs from the great source of all life, the great fatherhood of intelligence and wisdom; that it is like a divine breath of fire, kindling the spirit into action and vitality. His definition of the term spirit is, that of an instrument for the soul-principle, an instrument endowed with parts, each of which is adapted to the use of the soul, and to the end that humanity may be developed into a grand and active whole.

Now, then, I should say to the questioner, that soul, coming from the world of causes, undoubtedly springs primarily from the great sun of all intelligence and wisdom. We may compare that sun, if we will, to a great sphere of light, vibrating with warmth and power and splendor. The soul is a part of that great sphere of light; it is itself a centralizing force, inasmuch as it becomes the centre and the power of the individual whom it animates and controls. This soul comes into active operation by finding for its use a spirit adapted to its purpose, fashioned in such manner that it may control and vivify it into animation. The spirit and soul become so wedded together that they may be called one, each performing its part in a glorious and complete manner. This being, then, comes in contact with the earth, takes upon itself physical form, and gains experience through contact with material things.

The questioner wishes to know why and wherefore all this may be—what is the end and purpose of it. The soul and spirit gain experience and discipline here, slough off the mortal coil, pass onward into spiritual realms, to take up new experiences and undergo a new discipline; so it may speed on, from sphere to sphere of light, from world to world of experience. It expands in power, develops in knowledge, gains immeasurably in wisdom and in thought. As this human being speeds on, passing through new developments, unfolding new possibilities of its own, it finds a new energy, an exhilaration, a power to investigate and to learn of laws and systems of worlds and universes.

To-day we take up within ourselves a small compendium of knowledge, and we think our minds are vast and far-reaching; but in the eternities that are to be, this small volume of knowledge that we possess will seem but the merest atom, the slightest word, for our capacity will so expand as to enable us to take in a wonderful knowledge of planets and planetary law, of systems upon systems of worlds, and not only concerning worlds, but their various departments, laws and regulations, so that we may, as human beings, grow in power, come into an understanding of life, that will enable us not only to create forms and objects for our own convenience, but to assist in evolving worlds themselves, and sending them forth into life and action.

Is not this a grand thought? I would ask of the questioner: Can you measure its possibility, can you limit the expansion of mind? No; for mind works throughout the universe; intelligence displays itself on every hand, in the formation of a rock, the building up of a star or a planet. Therefore, when you remember that this is mind, intelligence, design, wisdom, and that as a part of this great, wonderful scheme of life, we may also develop in likeness to the Creator, you may feel that we shall need an eternity in which to grow, and worlds upon worlds through which to advance, in order to unfold and express all that lies within us.

Q.—[By the same.] If the final object of the spirit's existence is perfection, what does it do then? what becomes of it?

A.—It were impossible, so far as my knowledge extends, for me to explain, Mr. Chairman, what would follow in spiritual experience when perfection comes; but to my mind we shall be obliged to pass through almost an eternity before we attain that perfection, for the simple reason that, one after another, there will open before our vision greater glories to be attained, higher virtues to be adopted, grander principles for us to understand and incorporate into our lives, for there must be ever an ascending scale, over which the soul must reach toward the heights of progress and perfection; consequently I have known of no spirit who has gained the utmost height of perfection, and who can look back upon its past and recount all that it has gained. We may dream of perfected souls, but when we ourselves come to the altitude of those whom we have thought perfection, we find that they still have something to strive for, something to reach upward for, by way of knowledge, of internal unfoldment, or of spiritual aspiration; and so the spirit marches on, ever seeking, ever gaining, and yet forever, so far as we understand this upward law, learning of something new, more grand and glorious, which lies just beyond.

Q.—[By "Inquirer."] In answer to a question from your platform, the Controlling Intelligence has said that the best way for the development of clairvoyance, or other high phase of mediumship, is to live in strict accordance with natural law regarding physical health, and in cultivating the spiritual graces of love and peace to all. Have our most gifted mediums gained their power by such a course?

A.—For one to gain and cultivate all the graces of sweetness and purity, and the holier virtues in life, is to reach almost a state of perfection, and we do not look for that state, even of imperfect perfection, as viewed from an exalted spirit standpoint, to maintain on earth, therefore we do not anticipate for mediumship the unfoldment of these glorious attributes in the fullness of their beauty and power; yet we know there are mediums on earth to day who are striving to reach the light, who seek to do their duty to their fellow-men—to love their neighbors as themselves, and in other ways to follow the golden rule. Undoubtedly the aspiration and the desire after these gifts of the spirit are helpful in the exercise of their mediumship; undoubtedly this course of life brings to those mediums high and helpful influences who do their best in the dissemination of truth and in teaching the spiritual lessons of life and love through their mediumistic instrumentalities. Possibly, and very probably, these mediums of whom I speak sometimes fall short in reaching their standard of truth and of holiness; undoubtedly they sometimes falter and fall by the way, making mistakes and not gaining that strength of spirit they most desire; but the aspiration is helpful, the desire and effort are strengthening to the soul and its forces, and also of great assistance to those spirit attendants who approach.

I agree with your Spirit President in his statement that, for the best unfoldment of clairvoyance, or other mediumistic qualities, one should try to live in accordance with natural law, and build up a strong physical temple that may endure the storms and tempests of life, and feed his material structure with only that fuel which would give forth the best degree of heat and comfort to himself, with the smallest possible waste or expenditure of force; also in the cultivation of the spiritual graces, such as purity of thought and deed, loveliness of mind that expresses sympathy and affection for mankind, and a strong and earnest desire always for the truth, and the truth alone. If these are cultivated, these rules enforced by him who desires to unfold mediumistic qualities, he may be certain that whatever of mediumship may express itself will come purely and truly from the spirit-world, that it will be useful, even if not always as popular as some other phases may be, or if not exercised to such a large degree as is the mediumship of some other individuals. Seek always for the best, and aim as high as possible in every development of life; then we need not fear failure even though we do not attain that which we most desire.

Q.—[By H. C. R.] Is the spiritual body subject to mutilation, like the mortal body?

A.—The spirit body, so far as I have learned, Mr. Chairman, in my experience and observation, since passing to the spirit-world, is not subjected to the law of accident that the physical body sometimes comes under here on earth. And yet I have seen a deformed body in the spirit-world. Allow me to define my position: I have never seen a spirit body mutilated in the other life; but I have seen a spirit passing from its physical form, and the elements of its new spirit-body coming into juxtaposition with each other, and creating a form for the occupancy of that individual, and noticed a stunted, abnormal appearance. In one case, I observed a spirit whose physical body was straight and symmetrical in proportion possessing a spirit form dwarfed and out of proportion; it seemed as though it had been stunted in its growth, and on investigation I discovered this to be the fact. It was a male form, and I found that the man on earth had been very material-minded, and paid no attention to spiritual things, did not believe really that he possessed an immortal soul. He said to himself, and to others, "One world is enough for me; one life is all I can understand; I shall live to enjoy this world as far as possible. I will take up all the good that it brings to me, and I mean to possess all the luxuries that I can possibly gain." And the man lived true to his word; he developed selfishness, cared more for the luxuries of this life than for any religious teaching or spiritual exercise of thought, and consequently his life did not give out those powerful spiritual emanations which assist in developing the spiritual body into symmetrical form and beautiful feature. And I tell you truly, the man was deformed in his spirit-body, although straight and well-proportioned on earth.

This may serve as an example of what I mean when I say there are deformed spirits who are obliged to pass through experiences that will develop their moral and spiritual natures. You see a deformed child on earth, and there is a possibility of the little form becoming straightened under the judicious care and attention of a surgeon; the child is taken into a hospital and submitted to a surgical treatment, its little limbs are encased with instruments, and daily an application of force is made to stretch the limbs and bring them gradually into better shape. This may serve as an illustration of my theme when I say a man may be deformed in spirit because he has not attained truly spiritual growth and development, and he must pass through an operation, purely mental, but none the less severe and surgical in its treatment and methods. The mind will, after awhile, begin to act; it will send forth a powerful magnetism throughout the entire frame; and by-and-bye, when this magnetic force has operated in constant endeavors to reach up to the light, to grow strong, the deformed body begins to change; it throws off certain particles that belong to the earth and gathers up new stimulants from the spirit-life; the deformity lessens after a while, and the man may become beautiful in feature and symmetrical in form.

The spirit-form, however, that is developed, never becomes mutilated; it may change, grow more beautiful and ethereal in appearance, gaining new emanations from the spirit-life and casting off those which are crude and belong to the sphere below it; but no child is mutilated or injured by any accident in the spiritual world beyond this planet earth.

Q.—[By Inquirer.] Can you explain what makes the uneasiness of animals in a vicinity where a death is about to occur? Or, especially, why dogs—as it is said—howl and whine before a house or in the locality where a person is about to pass away?

A.—I should perhaps give a double explanation to such a question. First, I believe that animals, especially the canine animals, are strongly endowed with mediumistic qualities; that they are not only clairvoyant, beholding scenes and forms which the eye of man cannot perceive, but also clairaudient, detecting sounds which the ear of a mortal cannot hear. They have a keen vision, are strongly endowed with a magnetic force which brings them into sympathy with the invisible powers of the universe, and, consequently, a dog, in the vicinity of one who is approaching the physical change called death, may behold passing scenes and forms, may hear sounds undetected by those human beings who are present.

It is, I believe, generally the case, at least so far as my experience goes, that whenever a soul steps from earth to its home in the spirit-world, there are attracted to its side many spirits who desire, in some way, to be of service to the passing spirit. To the clairvoyant eye, whether of man or beast, there are no limitations, no walls to obscure the vision; therefore a dog that possesses this clairvoyant vision and keen sense of hearing, that may be in the vicinity of a home within which a soul is passing from the body, is not obstructed by the walls of the house, but he may behold the scene and the invisible spirits, and, coming into sympathy with the same, may seek to express himself in a way that is generally known. There is no reason to doubt such a conclusion.

I do believe that little is known of the ability and the intelligence of the animal race. As man begins to study, to understand his own limitations and imperfections, and to acquire knowledge concerning himself, he may perhaps come also to learn more of animal life, its possibilities and its powers.

And also, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, this strange thing may be accounted for when we consider how keen is the scent of an animal. Any magnetic force passing from a human being communicating itself to the ground which he treads, or to any object which he has possessed, may be distinctly recognized by an animal who is called in the same direction; and so a dog will scent out his master who has gone abroad because of that same magnetic emanation, and will seek lost articles because they hold within themselves something of these emanations which belong to their possessor, and which the animal will distinctly discern.

At the period of dissolution the magnetic emanations go forth rapidly from the physical body; the vibrations are constant; and an animal passing in the vicinity of the house where such a change is taking place more freely scents these emanations and recognizes their source and power, although he cannot intelligently convey to you his understanding, and so he may do his best to express himself in whining, howling, or giving some other disturbing sound. We know, friends, that earth itself contains many deep studies to engage our thought. Animal life, the vegetable kingdom, the human department of existence, all contain vast stores of knowledge which future generations may explore and seek to understand for their own unfoldment.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 17th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

George Thompson.

I come from what they term the spirit-world; I should call it the bright and beautiful Summer-Land, for all things are so beautiful there; and sometimes, as I have come to earth, I have heard them say: "I wonder where George is; and if he is able to make himself known in the same way they talk about spirits coming to earth." I will say that George hears your words, so be careful, mortals, how lightly you speak of us.

My home was in Dedham, and I often feel, as I walk the streets, and even take strolls out one way and another, how little do mortals know we are walking close beside them! I work hard and speak loud, but still they go hurrying to and fro, as if this life was all.

I have had but very few privileges of coming into communication with mortals since I passed out, and I felt that if I did n't make an effort I should never be able to give my name. It is George Thompson. I am satisfied with the home I have, and I find that by the life you live here, you are building your home in the spirit every day; so take care and build well, if you do n't want it to tumble down.

Alexander Bailey.

I hardly know whether I had better say anything or not; if I do, I've got to acknowledge some things, but I do n't want to. Walter says, "Yes; you 'll be happier." You may put me down from East Hampton, Conn. I went out of this life, as they call it, pretty suddenly; it seemed to be in a moment I went up; but I do n't know anything about coming down. I have been restless ever since I passed into the spirit-life, and they tell me if I will only acknowledge one thing, I shall lose that restlessness and be happy. God knows I want to be rid of it.

I used to say, when in the mortal, it was all a —— I won't put the adjective there—foolish piece of business—and that if brother had n't been an old Spiritualist he would n't have died. You may know that 's a pretty good bar for me to get over, to say this. It has been a good while since I went out, and I have been restless because I felt I must acknowledge I was ignorant and foolish. I could n't be happy. I feel a little better now. I could n't be happy until I made some acknowledgment. I know East Hampton folks will say that they would n't suppose Alexander Bailey would do that. And he would n't if he had been in the old form. You understand I am a little selfish in the matter, because I want to be happier.

Oh! Mary, as sure as there is an angel in heaven, Walter tells me you have forgiven me, and looked over all my foolish ignorance. If you think a thing it had better not be spoken. I have found it so since I threw off the old mortal. I have found that others have said the same thing. They spoke lightly. It was n't lightly that I spoke, but harshly, and pretty hard, too.

I was one of that kind, Mr. Chairman, that thought I knew it all, and that others were the foolish people. Now I see differently; and what I did here I would n't have been the one to acknowledge.

Father and mother and Walter are here. Say to Mary that Jason is on the other side of me, trying to help me a little by rendering good for evil. Lawton is here. They ask me to say that in time they think they may be able to speak for themselves, but they wanted me to make this acknowledgment first, thinking it would be a benefit to me. Oh! I suffered as I made the attempt to enter the earth again. Alexander Bailey.

Harry Powers.

I will try and not say anything out of the way, but I must defend myself. My home was in Nashua, N. H. I went out suddenly, near Worcester—I think they call it Oakdale—some way by the cars.

I want to say that materialization is true, and there is some fraud. Now I guess I 'll fix it right; if I don't you can help me a little. They said I materialized into a form more than once. But there was a little too much mortal there! I said to a friend, not long ago, through an instrument, that I never materialized to her in a full form, never. I don't like it. Perhaps I 'm a little excited, but I 'm agoing to defend myself, if I can. I never materialized into a full form; and I want the friend that I am speaking about to know I did not.

I can materialize into a full form if they will give me the right conditions. But if they mix things up, they do n't mix worth a cent, no more than oil and water can.

Mother is with me, and I wish the relatives, of which I have some in Nashua, some in Worcester, and one in New York City, to know I have n't called any names to make any fuss.

Eliza Hartshorn.

I come from Shirley, Mass. My name is Eliza Hartshorn, and I am very glad to see the young man defend himself, for it was my sister they were deceiving, and I 'll stand up and say before the angels of heaven, we can materialize, but it is n't all materialization that seems to be. I am sorry to say it.

Oh! mortals, you may cover up your deeds from mortals, but from the angels never. There will be a day when you must meet us, and then these things will be spoken. We shall stand for our rights, because we are alive to-day, as much and more so than you are in the flesh.

I have been saddened, poor darling one, because you feel you stand alone and because many clouds have been in your pathway; when you have reached for roses you have grasped thorns, in your earlier days, and to-day you feel almost without a friend.

Oh! Sister Tunie, we do not leave you, we come often. In the stilly hours of the night we place our hands gently upon your forehead with this thought: "Blessed angels keep your vigils, watch over the loved one here." I thank the Father that he has given us power to visit the loved ones. I know when I passed out they said I was dead. How cruel is the word death! it brings sadness and sorrow to the aching heart, and if only called the beginning of life it would bring so much comfort and happiness to those who are left. Only a veil that comes between, only one step and you are with us.

The children are taught to know the way to the earth, and never to forget the loved ones here, and how wise the provision that there should be dear ones appointed to care for the little ones transplanted into heaven.

Sister is part of the time in Boston, part in connecting towns, for she feels often that she has no home or abiding-place; but, sister, when the loneliness is thrown upon you, and you feel saddened, look a little higher to mother, father and sister.

Isaac Roupe.

I would like to have you, Mr. Chairman, say that I am from South Boston. I would like to say a few words, for I know the paper has been scanned many times. A feeling has also come from Angie, wondering why I don't manifest at the Banner of Light Circle. I have been here often, but did n't get power enough to make myself known. To-day, seemingly, the avenues are open.

I would like the dear ones at home to sit down quietly by themselves as often as they can, and see if we can't give some little manifestations to let them know of a power that comes from beyond the mortal life. I have seen them sometimes sitting by the table, and I think they have received some proof that we were there. My dear one I have met; we are dwelling in one family.

Lyman is here, dear wife, and Hattie, also Margaret and Sarah; and as I turn to the other side Lucian says: "I am here also"; he has a square in his hand, saying that Alonzo will understand what the square means. He usually had one when in the mortal. Say to Alonzo—as he tells me he will not be able to send a letter to-day—that he do n't leave him, but he often walks by his side, the same as Charlie and Arthur. The reason why we do n't make ourselves known is not because of any loss of love we have for you. Now remember, also, to speak of me to Mr. Russell's folks. Isaac Roupe.

Henry Tudor.

I come from St. Joseph, Mich. I have been trying, I guess, nigh on to a dozen years, but I can't just reckon up your time, to get into communication with somebody. I have a nephew, George Gleason. I have been around him, but did n't make out to speak, and my son Henry also says he has spoken a few times, but not much business was done.

I am feeling quite reconciled now as I come to earth, but at first rather a rebellious feeling would come over me. Old associations draw me to earth, making me feel that a part belongs to me here, for many of them were very pleasant to me. At first I felt the bonds that bound me were broken, but when I came to look about, it wan't so bad after all, for the bonds did n't amount to much of anything. I feel I have been outgrowing those old ideas I held when here. I used to think there was but one way of getting into heaven; you could n't get in the back door, nor climb up a ladder. I find now that one way is to just open the door yourself while you remain here; if you do not, it takes you longer to get it open so you can come into communication with your friends.

Just please say it is Henry Tudor; and Henry Tudor, my son, who lost his life on the plains from thirst, is with me.

Ella Clark.

I am Ella Clark, from Landaff, N. H. Mother is here, and father feels very lonely when he thinks I am gone, and Frankie too. Mother went away, as near as we can reckon, hardly one year ago. But I was a little child, and so was Frankie, when we left our home. Father often says, as he sits weaving the strands in the basket: "If Julia Ann was here, my happiness would be complete." But, oh! father, you do n't know how near mother is to you. Speak to Uncle Henry: he has allowed me to talk to him several times, and I feel much happier for just saying a few words; so I said to Uncle Henry: "I will send a little letter to father, and say that mother is with him too, and in a little while we 'll all be together, where there is no parting."

Charles Hayward.

You may place me in Attleboro, Mass. I would like to send a few words there. I have but one channel I can speak through, and thank the Great Giver of all good, that that channel has been opened. I will say: Charlie, the thing is progressing in a business way, and only a day or two before it will be settled.

Just a little while since (I would give you, perhaps, two or three hours, at the longest,) the lady tried to come into communication with a male spirit—you will understand what I refer to—so he says to me, thinking it would be better that he did n't direct a letter to you to-day: "I am glad in my soul that it is a truth, a truth beyond all doubts, that we live and have the power given us of coming into communication with you in the mortal, that we enjoy coming to you as much as you can a visit from us."

Charlie, go on; the darling child, Helen, stands beside me. I would not have spoken to-day, only a little blindly in business, and I think, as the lady comes into communication with the gentleman, things will be adjusted. Then please to give my name as Charles Hayward.

SPIRIT MESSAGES

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

REBECCA BARTLETT.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan. 14th, 1888, we printed a spirit-message received through Mr. Fletcher's mediumship, Dec. 22d, from MRS. REBECCA BARTLETT, late of Plymouth, Mass. A few days ago her daughter, Miss P. S. Bartlett, called at this office and informed us that she had read the message and found it correct, except in one particular: the middle letter—W.—in her name was left out; but with that exception it was very gratifying and satisfactory.

FRANCES ROSIER.

IN THE BANNER of Feb. 18th I saw the message from MRS. FRANCES ROSIER, of Rochester, Michigan. Myself and wife became acquainted with her about the year 1857, and were much pleased to see the message from her, and as being very characteristic of her—her daughter, Mrs. Celestia Mann, being our neighbor. Yours, C. S. BEMIS.

Rochester, Mich., Feb. 18th, 1888.

MRS. H. H. SMILEY.

In a copy of the BANNER OF LIGHT of March 3d, 1888, I read a communication purporting to come from Spirit MRS. H. H. SMILEY, of Piqua, O. The communication was correct in every particular. Her husband, Dr. H. H. Smiley, is still living in this place.

I waited for others who had read the communication to acknowledge the same, but have not seen any acknowledgment.

I think it due the medium, Miss Shelhamer, to make this statement, if it is late. Dr. H. H. Smiley corroborated every statement made in the communication to the writer of these lines.

I have resolved never to let such a thing pass unnoticed again.

May God and the angel world protect and care for your public medium, is the wish of the writer.

Most respectfully, MRS. CHAS. STEWART.

Piqua, Miama Co., Ohio, March 6th, 1888.

The Reviewer.

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE. A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report. By A. B. Richmond. Boston: Colby & Rich, 1888. pp. 244. 12mo, muslin. Price, $1.25.

We announced last week that the above-named sterling work had created such a profound impression on the reading public that the first edition had already been exhausted, and that a second edition was now on the counters of the Banner of Light Bookstore. Wherever this book has gone among thinking men, it has called out words of commendation by and through the practical value of its contents and the peculiarly attractive manner adopted in its pages in treating the matter in hand.

In addition to what we have already published in commendation of this remarkable work, we are in receipt (from other periodicals) of several reviews in the same direction, excerpts from which we shall transfer to our columns as occasion offers: Being content the present week with giving the subjoined extracts from a lengthy review by HUDSON TUTTLE, in the Religio-Philosophical Journal of Chicago:

"A. B. Richmond is one of the most able lawyers in the State of Pennsylvania, and especially has he achieved fame in criminal cases. He has thus been trained by long practice to distinguish the essential points of evidence, and to weigh the motives which actuate men in their relations with each other. His style is that of a lawyer pleading his cause, eminently interesting, lucid, convincing, but diffuse, personal, and aggressive. He was induced to visit the Spiritual Camp-Meeting at Cassadaga by curiosity, expecting to find a set of deluded fanatics. He was 'surprised at the class of visitors'—'judges of our courts, doctors, lawyers, and learned men, in every condition in life.' His skepticism was baffled by the manifestations he received, and he inadvertently, or rather fortunately, published an account of what he saw. The reporters so misstated his position that he was induced to go over the whole ground at length, making his narrative a virtual reply to the Seybert Commission. This course seems to have been taken through the influence of a communication received from Seybert through independent slate-writing, as follows:

'Dear Sir: Do all you can to combat the error into which my Commissioners have fallen. They were unworthy and unfaithful.'

The Report of the Commission is written in a style unworthy of the subject discussed, and disgraceful to the authors. Mr. Richmond seizes on this most available point, and destroys by ridicule the position ridicule has attained, quoting in full the acting Chairman's account of his efforts to become a medium. Well does Mr. Richmond ask: 'Are you not ashamed of the foregoing pages copied verbatim from your Report?' and continues: 'When we take into consideration the munificence of the gift of Henry Seybert, and the high character of the institution to which it was given, can any one for a moment suppose that the donor intended that a portion of his money should be expended in employing a troop of comedians to enact a comic opera before the public, or exhibit a harlequin or pantaloon for the amusement of sc offers and the thoughtless? According to his own words, the acting Chairman, Horace Howard Furness, sat for six months with 'Caffray's magnetized paper' on his head, holding the slates in his hand, expecting to become a medium! and yet he received no communication!...

It would be a libel on Mr. Furness to believe this story he tells on himself, for he is not a fool. He concludes it with a receipt from Punch for 'Gooseberry Fool,' which he applies to Spiritualists in their vain search:

'Carefully skin your gooseberries, extract the seeds and wash the pulp in three waters for six hours each. Having done this with the gooseberries, the Fool is perfect.' This might be written:

'Take a college professor, put a sheet of Caffray's magnetic paper on his head and a slate in his hand, sit him in the dark, and after six months your fool will be perfect.'

Mr. Richmond takes the Bible and searches its pages for evidence of Spiritualism. His task is easy, for on every page he finds brilliant gems, and gathering all together he hurls the mass at the Commission. The biblical evidence ought to awaken the interest of all Christians, for from their standpoint it is incontrovertible. The Report is unusually prolix on what is termed 'the Slade-Zöllner Investigation.' This portion is the work of Prof. Geo. S. Fullerton, who by interviewing Zöllner's friends came to the conclusion that he was entirely untrustworthy.

In reply, the 'Open Letter' of C. C. Massey is introduced, which completely covers the ground and demolishes every statement of Prof. Fullerton, showing him to be unreliable, to use the softest term to cover the reckless perversion of facts and their adroit misinterpretation.

The personal reminiscence of the introduction of Spiritualism before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, is intensely interesting. It was in 1854, and Mr. Richmond had at that meeting become a member. An announcement of a spiritual meeting was laid on the President's table, which he read because unaware of its contents, and apologized for so doing. The learned members smiled, as though they had been invited to a Punch and Judy show.

At length Robert Hare arose, and in a dignified manner requested permission to say a few words, as a committee had just retired and there was nothing before the house. Of course his request was granted. The dignified and noble-looking old man paused a moment as he looked over the assembly—many of whom had received their scientific education from his books—then said: 'Mr. President, as a body of learned and scientific men, met together to consider all natural phenomena, would it not be more becoming for us to investigate a subject before we condemn and deride it?' He then briefly gave an account of his experiments and the marvelous results he had received.

At the reception given at the residence of Jeff. Davis that evening to the Association, the scientists 'shook their sage heads, and I heard them frequently remark, "the old doctor is becoming crazy on that subject." Poor old man, how I pitied him; and yet the next day, when I heard him most eloquently and learnedly discuss one of the abstruse scientific questions before the Association, and observed with what profound attention he was listened to, and saw how clearly he demonstrated his views on the matter under discussion, I thought I had never before seen such brilliant and intellectual symptoms of mental aberration, and after all the dreaded disease of insanity was not so terrible a calamity as I had supposed.'

In these memories of early days of the cause the author is delightful.

After rapidly glancing at the facts furnished by rappings, slate-writing, etc., the author reaches his conclusions. He says: 'Let the alleged facts of Spiritualism once be fully established, and the dark cloud of infidelity now overshadowing the earth would be dissipated as the mist of the morning vanishes before the light of the sun. It would open heaven to the sight of the skeptic, and teach him the paths that lead to its infinite happiness.'...

Mr. Richmond has written a most complete and exhaustive review, leaving not a single shred of the evidence or the conclusions produced in the Report."

He Telephoned Her.

My father owns a very fine spaniel dog. Her name is Curley. She generally stays at my father's office. The other day I was at home, sick, and telephoned to the office to know if Curley was there, and one of the men said she was. I asked him to hold her up to the telephone, and whistled. She pricked up her ears and turned her head and acted as though she knew my voice. I told her I wanted her to come home. The man put her on the floor and opened the door, and without his saying a word she started at once and came to the house.

EPPS'S COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

MAGNETIC INSOLES

MAGNETISM is one of the most powerful life-giving substances known to our race. Its action upon all animal kind is to quicken into life and polarity the sluggish molecules of the physical body. This majestic substance comes as near the corporal action of life itself as human intelligence can analyze.

When we apply a powerful Magnetic Shield to a body to eliminate disease, we work in strict harmony with Nature's highest laws, and utilize the most potential force we can employ next to intelligence to overcome morbid conditions of mind and body. Of all the known curative agents under the control of mortal mind and human will, Magnetism excels all others, and is incomparable in its magical action and quick results.

The finer and more subtle the force we use the quicker and better results we obtain.

To impart magnetic power and potency to a physical body is to give it strength, vitality and renewed youth.

The vivifying energy radiated constantly from Magnetic Shields stimulates alike the mental forces of the mind and increases all the animal power.

Magnetic Shields constantly feed the blood with warm, rich Fibrine, multiply the red corpuscles, polarize the iron, and intensify the vivific principle of life.

Whoever wears these Shields will take on awakened mental and physical energies, which in very truth is to renew one's youth. Every Shield we manufacture is worth its weight in gold to suffering humanity.

Good, sound, vigorous health, is worth more than worldly wealth, hence these Shields are invaluable, for these powerful Health Batteries have no other place in life, or work to do, but to vitalize the blood and compel sound health in all physical bodies. If you want good health, and the cheerful, happy days of youth, wear the Shields and know what Magnetic Polarity means.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

WHY WE LIVE. By SUMMERDALE. This is a book that Spiritualists and others will read with pleasure and profit. Written in the style of the old "Pilgrim's Progress" of John Bunyan, it possesses the peculiar charm of that work, with added interest and value from its treatment of higher states of being. It describes glowingly the beauties of the future life, its mansions of abode and temples of worship, its fruitful groves, fragrant gardens, green valleys and crystal waters; portrays the happiness of families reunited, and the never-ending bliss of those who, after a weary pilgrimage on earth, fall by the wayside, almost disheartened, and awaken to the enjoyment of rest in a life that is immortal.

CELESTIAL SONNETS.

A COLLECTION OF

New and Original Songs and Hymns of Peace and Progress, with Music.

DESIGNED FOR

PUBLIC GATHERINGS, HOME CIRCLES, RELIGIOUS, SPIRITUAL, TEMPERANCE, SOCIAL AND CAMP-MEETINGS, ETC.

BY B. M. LAWRENCE, M.D.

In preparing CELESTIAL SONNETS, the desire of the author has been to meet the growing demand for an entirely new and original book of Spiritual, Temperance and Progressive Songs, with simple, appropriate music easily arranged, having suitable choruses for home, circles, social or public gatherings. While the aim has been to avoid everything of a purely sectarian character, it will be seen that only the highest moral principles have been inculcated, and it is believed that by adopting this plan, the wonderful power of music will become a still greater blessing to mankind; and that the book will more effectively console the sorrowing with the hope of happy reunions; comfort the care-worn toiler with greater assurance of a final full reward; refine and purify the affections; rekindle latent loves of home and country; harmonize conflicting creeds and opinions; counteract the cold chilling waves of materialism; unfold the higher moral and spiritual faculties; assist in developing a scientific religion of evolution, and help eventually to discover the "missing links" in the great chain of human sympathies which will at last unite all nations and people in one grand effort to secure "Peace on earth and good will to men." One feature of the words is the effort made to frequently enforce the teaching of that greatly neglected text, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap"; a grand truth that cannot be too often repeated, either in song or story.

The book contains one hundred and twenty-eight pages, nearly the same number of songs, with about seventy-five entirely new pieces of music, a great many choruses and a few old standard selections.

Boards, pp. 128. Price 50 cents. Twelve copies, $4.50.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday the morning exercises opened with music by Miss Maudie G. Banks, followed by congregational singing, remarks by the President, and a vocal selection by Mrs. Lovering, as a tribute to the memory of Mr. W. A. Dunklee. Mrs. Colby-Luther, under the inspiration of her guides, spoke upon "The Origin of Nobility and Aristocracy." The lecture was a radical presentation of truths of vital interest to mankind in the present age. Reference was made to the government of Great Britain as having been originally established by the most aggressive classes, nothing less than banditti, who, lawless themselves, undertook and succeeded in making laws for others, and compelled them to bow to their imperious will. The principle they acted upon exists and is acted upon today, though under a softer and more pleasing name. The relations of capital and labor were considered at some length, and it was said that the situation of the American people to-day in regard to them has called into active service Washington and Jefferson and millions of other spirits, to do what they can to stay the growth of what might culminate in an evil that no power could control, and to assist in an amicable adjustment of human rights and wrongs. Singing by the congregation closed a service that throughout had been of deep interest to all present.

Evening.—After the singing of a song, "At Rest," by Mr. Charles W. Sullivan, remarks by the President, and a vocal duet, "Whispering Hope," by Mrs. Lizzie C. Clapp and Miss M. E. Pierce, which elicted well-merited applause, the guide of Mrs. Luther very ably and eloquently spoke upon "The Duty of Spiritualist to Meet the Impending Revolution." Mr. Charles W. Sullivan sang the closing hymn.

Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther will occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society, connected with the Boston Spiritual Temple Society at Berkeley Hall, held its regular meeting on the afternoon and evening of March 6th. After the business meeting Mrs. H. W. Cushman gave personal tests of spirit presence. At 6 o'clock supper was served to over fifty. In the evening the President, Mrs. C. N. Mellen, presided. Master Willie Boyce opened the exercises with a piano solo. Mrs. Ida Whitlock read one of Jacob Edson's essays entitled "The New Theology." Song by Mrs. Hattie C. Mason. Inspirational address by Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, which was very able and well received. Mr. Eben Cobb paid a well deserved tribute to the life and memory of Mr. W. A. Dunklee, feelingly alluding to his faithful labors and remarking that we emulate his worthy example. He still lived in the hearts of the people, and those who knew him best loved him the most. His dear companion should be remembered in her hour of sorrow and bereavement, and needed sympathy extended to her by all. The audience joined in the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Mrs. Ida Whitlock, under control, made a brief address, Mr. Whitlock following with suitable remarks. Capt. Richard Holmes closed the meeting with an address in which he alluded to the departed in a very feeling manner. After singing the audience dispersed.

The next regular meeting, at which supper will be served at 6 o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of March 20th. A cordial invitation is extended to all Spiritualists and friends of the cause to be present. MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

81 White street, East Boston.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Mrs. Kate R. Stiles's guides gave a pleasant discourse last Sunday at the Temple. They quoted the words from scripture, "Come, let us reason together," not as a text, but as indicating the drift of their remarks, and proceeded to speak of Spiritualism as not being the thing it was estimated to be in the popular mind—nor what many believers in its phenomena thought it—but something far more, for it covered all science and all life, being more than a creed, a religion, or even a philosophy. Within its folds it embraced all these, and the whole of truth and life here and hereafter. No true science or religion could conflict with it, for it dealt with the absolute facts of man's existence, and the province of its believers was to make clear these facts, so that the superstitions and dogmas of the past might be expunged.

All forms of manifestation were valuable, the physical as well as the mental, but it was a fact not to be lost sight of that "spiritual things must be spiritually discerned," and the phenomena were but the stepping-stones to the spiritual truth that lay behind.

Next Sunday Mr. John Wetherbee will relate some of his experiences in materialization, which will doubtless be very interesting to many who have not been as favored as he with opportunities to investigate this great phase of spiritual phenomena.

Services will be held as usual at 2:45 P. M. There will also be the regular Wednesday evening sociable at 7:30 o'clock. All are cordially invited.

On Easter Sunday we shall inaugurate our Temple Fraternity School for the young. A cordial invitation is extended to all who are interested to bring their own or others' children; and it is hoped we shall have the sympathy and assistance of those who desire the education and development of the little ones in advanced spiritual thought. W. H. R.

The Independent Club.—Considering the fearful storm, there was a goodly attendance at the Rooms on Monday evening, 12th inst. Mr. William Falls presided, and after a few remarks introduced Dr. Paxson, of Philadelphia, who proceeded to deliver an eloquent and scholarly address on "The Independent Club and Its Principles," which was listened to with marked interest and attention. He particularly enunciated the idea of individual sovereignty, and the necessity for a better understanding of spiritual laws.

Miss Gracie Scales sang a sweet little ballad in her charming way. Miss Amy Peters recited the "Sailor's Story" with true dramatic ability. By general request Mr. Fletcher recited several selections from the "Poems of Progress," and after social converse the session was brought to a close.

On Thursday evening the regular business meeting will be held.——Next Monday night will be a "musical evening." REX.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The meeting at this place on Sunday last was largely attended and deeply interesting.

The afternoon exercises were opened with a short address by Mrs. Mina Olmstead, under control of her guides. She was followed by Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Mrs. M. W. Leslie, and Dr. M. V. Thomas, all of whom made interesting remarks. Clear tests were given through the mediumship of Mrs. Chandler, Mrs. Leslie, Dr. Thomas and Mr. McKenzie; psychometric readings by Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, and facial readings by Miss Cullen, which were pronounced correct.

In the evening Dr. P. C. Drisko delivered an excellent address, embodying many original ideas. His remarks were listened to with unusual attention. He was followed by appropriate remarks and recognized tests by Mrs. M. W. Leslie; excellent tests, spirit descriptions and psychometric readings were given by Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, and a few clear tests by Mr. McKenzie.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall.—Attendance good as usual. A fine programme of readings, recitations and music was presented in connection with the usual marches, calisthenics, etc.—all under the direction of our efficient Conductor, Benjamin P. Weaver. The names of those who participated in the exercises were: Recitations, Grace Scales, Lottie Giles, Jessie Benner, Allie Cummings, Sadie Peters, Miss Gertie Coffin, Rebecca Axe.

The address of the day was delivered by Mrs. J. F. Dillingham, whose labors in our behalf in the past and to-day are highly appreciated.

Mr. W. A. Dunklee, who recently passed to spirit-life, was for a long time connected with our Lyceum, and one of its best officers. A man of moral integrity and noble character, his presence in the form will be greatly missed by the Spiritualists of this city.

All should attend the great Anniversary meetings.

F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualists' meeting was held at this hall on Sunday last. The afternoon session comprised singing, an address by the Chairman, tests and spirit-descriptions by Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. J. E. Davis, and Mrs. Shackley. Evening session: the hall was filled with earnest listeners to the lecture by Miss Emma Ireland; tests were given by Miss Nettie M. Holt, also by Mrs. Shackley; meeting closed by singing. W. A. HALE, Chairman.

Washington, D. C.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

We are moving onward and upward with a steady pace, not equal to Boston or San Francisco, where they do things on a grand scale, but still doing well with our conditions.

We have just closed a successful month with G. H. Brooks, a Western man, who is destined to make his influence felt on the world of skeptics. With the way wide open for a career in the church, he yielded to the demand of the angel-world, and has dedicated himself to the work of propagating the facts and truths of Spiritualism.

Coming among us as a stranger, he gradually won upon our people, so that at the close of his last lecture they endorsed him in a series of well-worded resolutions expressing confidence in his ability, thanks for his services in inaugurating anew the Lyceum work, for which he is eminently adapted, and an invitation to come again.

At the sociable on Tuesday night he was surprised with a beautiful ring, given him in token of our appreciation of his Lyceum work.

We have Thursday evening sociables—sometimes fact-meetings, at others "picnics"—the net proceeds of which go to the Lyceum work.

We have had few outside mediums of note the present season. Mrs. Lease (803 4th street, N. W.) is doing a good work. Miss Simmons, one of our choir, has joined Mrs. L. in her Friday nights, and will widen her field.

The spirit of inquiry and investigation is manifest, thus showing an increasing interest and growth. Numerous private circles, occasional and regular, are being held by outsiders with now and then an outcropping of manifestations in unusual places.

A recent issue of The Star contains an account of a peculiar experience of a Catholic priest in this city, to wit:

Two spirit children called at his door, knocked, were admitted, stated that the father was dying, described the place and begged him to go and see the father. The father was found and received the last rites of the church. Inquiry evolved that these same children had been dead three years; and the Priest was puzzled.

There is also a Lutheran preacher here, who, I am told, has the return of his first wife, who comes to communicate with and look after her own children. He suppresses the truth, on the plea that his "people are not ready."

Mrs. Glading opened her third month under favorable conditions, being greeted with a full house in sympathy, which resulted in a good lecture, numerous tests and great satisfaction. The Society is preparing for a more perfect organization under a regular charter. I long for the time when Washington will have a strong society, a good hall with all the needed appointments, and become as a great city set upon a mountain for the light of the whole country.

428 B street, N. E. HENRY STEINBERG.

Another correspondent writes us as follows regarding the entertainment mentioned above, whereat a ring was presented to Mr. Brooks:

"On Tuesday evening, February 28th, an entertainment was given at the G. A. R. Hall by the local Spiritualists for the benefit of the Children's Lyceum which was founded by our speaker for February, Mr. G. H. Brooks. The exercises consisted of music and recitations, at the close of which Mr. Brooks was presented with a handsome seal ring, as a slight token of the esteem in which he is held here. The presentation was made by the Guardian of the Lyceum. At ten o'clock a lunch was served, and the young people enjoyed dancing until midnight. The financial aspect was very gratifying and the proceeds will go into the Lyceum treasury."

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday was a most interesting one at Brittan Hall, the platform being occupied a second time by Mrs. M. J. Wentworth an inspirational speaker, of East Knox, Me. Her afternoon theme was, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" In the discussion of that question, life physical and life spiritual were considered in a most interesting and instructive manner.

In the evening, the subject of inspirational thought was suggested by the expression of the opening hymn, "Resting in the Shadows," and most effectually illustrated the depth and force of the speaker's inspirational gift. Following this came the answering of questions from the audience, and several character readings, with descriptions of spirits purporting to be present—giving evidence of the possession of varied and most interesting spiritualistic powers.

The Steele children—Masters Henry, thirteen years old, Charles, eleven years, violinists, and Louise, nine years, piano accompanist—furnished much-admired orchestral music. Most excellent vocal and instrumental music was also executed by the Bendens.

After the services, the Association chose its committees to prepare for the Anniversary celebration, which it was decided to hold in part on Friday evening, the 30th, when a supper and other exercises will be combined; to be followed on Sunday, April 1st, with an appropriate recognition of the event, connected with the regular services, to be supplied on that day by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester of West Randolph, Vt.——Next Sunday the platform will be occupied by Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball, inspirational and platform test medium, of Lawrence, Mass. E. P. H.

Baltimore, Md.—The Third Spiritualist Society of Baltimore have held regular meetings for upward of five years. Our principal medium, Mrs. Minnie Brown, who gave us her services the last three years, having left to make her home in Philadelphia, where she is now working with love and earnestness for our glorious cause, her place is filled by Mr. Samuel Wheeler, of Philadelphia, who, though not much known outside of his own city, is destined to make his mark in the lecture-field. He is very logical, has a pleasing address, and is an earnest worker. He has been identified with the spiritual movement in Philadelphia many years. He organized the Temple Association of that city, and is still its President. He has been with us during the month of February, and given great satisfaction. He will speak in the city of Washington the month of April, and has calls for other cities. He is winning his way on the merit of earnest love for the cause, and truthfulness which characterizes all his efforts. Our Society tender him sincere thanks for the great good he has done in our midst, and invoke blessings upon him and our cause.

Miss Maggie Gaul, our talented test medium, is giving grand evidence of the nearness of our departed friends. She holds public circles in our hall once a week, and the large audiences prove that she is loved and appreciated.

Mrs. A. M. Glading is with us every Friday this month, after which she will lecture in Pittsburgh and other cities. GEO. KOCH, Sec'y.

Lowell, Mass.—A correspondent writes: "At the annual meeting of the First Spiritualist Society, held Monday evening, March 5th, the following officers were elected: Moderator, M. H. Fletcher; Clerk, Benjamin S. Freeman; Treasurer, Amos Green; Assessors, John D. Dow and Miss Mary E. Hyde; Prudential Committee, James Coffin, Mrs. Sarah J. Freeman and Mrs. Hattie Fosdick. Interest in marked degree was manifested to continue the meetings that are now being carried on in G. A. R. Hall. Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, of Lawrence, occupied our platform March 11th, and an audience composed of some of the most intelligent class of our citizens listened to her wonderful tests both afternoon and evening. Most of the tests were recognized, and as she came here a stranger to us all, these proofs were the better appreciated by many.——Next Sunday Miss M. T. Shelhamer will occupy our platform.——March 25th Mrs. Manchester will be with us again. The morning Times of this city has noticed us quite favorably."

Los Angeles, Cal.—A correspondent writes: "Spiritualism in this place has made great advance of late, through the activity of those who having long known its truth have labored to make it known to others. Meetings are held in Odd Fellows Hall, Miss Susie Johnson being the regular speaker, having been employed as such about three months. Previous to this engagement she spoke in private houses and wherever an opportunity was given for her to enlighten the people. Her course has from the first been self-sacrificing, earnest and faithful."

Providence, R. I.—Mary E. A. Whitney writes: "Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher gave two fine and interesting lectures, Sunday, March 11th, to large and appreciative audiences. Mr. Fletcher will occupy the platform at Blackstone Hall the remaining Sundays of the month.——There will be an entertainment given on the evening of Anniversary Day in Blackstone Hall. Mr. F. H. Pope, Dr. C. T. Buffum and others are expected to be present and participate."

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. F. O. Hyzer of Ravenna, O., (lately of Baltimore, Md.,) the distinguished inspirational speaker, who has been delivering a course of lectures in this city under the auspices of the Lyceum, was recently asked whether she would take a question for her lecture from the audience and treat it in a poem. On saying she was willing, if the inspiration came that way to do so, although she had never attempted it before, a committee of skeptics was chosen from the audience and presented the following subject: "Of all the Religious Faiths on this Earth, which is the True One?" In speaking of this improvisation, the Cleveland Plain-Dealer said: "Mrs. Hyzer treated the subject in poetic verse, in the most easy and graceful manner, without a single trip or hesitation of a word, in an address of one hour and ten minutes, at times rising to the very sublime." It was a poem that will never be forgotten by those present, and regarded as a wonderful test of spiritual inspiration.

Helen Stuart-Richings.—This accomplished elocutionist, lecturer and psychometrist, addressed the largest audience of the season at G. A. R. Hall, Sunday, March 4th, to the edification and pleasure of all. Her address on "Spiritualism and Its Uses," was replete with pungent truths, and should serve to arouse Spiritualists from the apathy they relapse into when convinced of the truth of phenomenal Spiritualism. Her readings were faultless as elocutionary efforts; her spirit tests were nearly all recognized, but her psychometrizings of different articles sent up to her were not considered equal to her usual standard, owing to the misunderstanding of those who sent them up. Mrs. Richings has placed the Cleveland Children's Progressive Lyceum under great obligations to her, for the very kind and gratuitous services rendered it by this talented lady and medium.

Anniversary Exercises.—The Spiritualists of Cleveland and vicinity intend celebrating the birthday of Modern Spiritualism, by a two days' meeting (Saturday, March 31st and Sunday, April 1st.) Mr. J. Clegg Wright and Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing as speakers, besides local talent. A right royal good time is anticipated, and everybody is invited to the spiritual feast—(see notice elsewhere.)

The Growth of Spiritualism.—There never was a time (in this city at least) when investigation of spiritual phenomena and philosophy was so rife as now. Of course very much of it is done privately, but the undercurrent is visible to all who are watching the movement, and an abundant harvest will in the near future rejoice the hearts of those who helped in seed-time.

Hoping that the forthcoming Anniversary will be celebrated wherever a score of Spiritualists can be assembled, and that the cause may be honored by its general observance, is the wish of

Yours truly, THOS. LEES.

Haverhill, Mass.—Music Hall.—Miss M. T. Shelhamer spoke for the First Spiritualist Society of this city, Sunday, March 11th, before large and appreciative audiences.

At the afternoon service Miss Shelhamer took as her subject: "The Ethics of Spiritualism." The speaker contended that Spiritualism was grounded upon and largely allied to its phenomena as set forth at the present day; also that it entered into every department of the life and life-work of humanity. The full hour was devoted to a thorough analysis of Spiritualism and its mission to humanity.

The evening service was devoted to answering questions—which was done in a manner that secured the closest attention of the whole audience. Among the questions answered were the following:

1. The Christ-principle in Spiritualism, and the Christ-principle in theology—what the difference? 2. Charity for the erring 3. Would not a commonsense, practical, every-day religion, that would enter into the home and work-shop, be a step in advance of the religious formalities of the church—and why? 4. Was Jesus a great medium? and were his teachings in harmony with the Spiritual Philosophy? 5. (Personal.) "Please state if my husband is happy in the society of his three children and friends who passed on before him? and does he recognize his family here on earth?"

A partial report of the answers would not do the speaker justice; suffice it to say: Hear Miss Shelhamer whenever you can.

Next Sunday, the 18th, Dr. H. B. Storer of Boston will occupy the same platform.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism will be appropriately observed by the First Spiritualist Society, in conjunction with the Ladies' Aid, on the 30th. W. W. CURRIER.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. S. Dick lectured and gave tests last Sunday.——Joseph D. Stiles, the noted test medium, comes next Sunday.——A party went from this city to Amesbury on Sunday to hear Mrs. Lake.——Dean Clarke has been engaged to deliver the Anniversary address, and we expect a mental treat.——The Ladies' Aid Society has disbanded, and the money and property has been divided. A Society which promised much has thus become a thing of the past.——The new Society which is to be known as the "Newburyport First Spiritualist Independent Club," has already held a preliminary meeting. It is to be an incorporated body, and will number among its members nearly all the prominent local workers in the cause. H.

Norwich, Conn.—Mrs. J. A. Chapman, Secretary, writes: "Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lillie have completed their engagement with our Society for this season. The fine, intelligent audiences which have greeted them show in part the esteem the people hold for the eloquent ministrations of the guides of Mrs. Lillie, and the soul-inspiring music rendered by Mr. Lillie.——The two remaining Sundays of March Mr. J. Frank Baxter will occupy our platform."

Salem, Mass.—W. H. H. Thyng, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "Joseph D. Stiles lectured and gave tests for our Society Sunday, March 11th, afternoon and evening; over fifty names were given, of which all were recognized but three.——Next Sunday we are to have our anniversary, under direction of Miss Amanda Bailey."

Saratoga, N. Y.—The Eagle of the 10th inst. announced as the Spiritualist speaker, in the Court of Appeals Room, next day, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham; J. Clegg Wright was to speak in the same place March 13th, 14th and 15th.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

☞ Dr. Abbie E. Cutter, the noted medical lecturer, intends giving an address on physiology soon, to ladies only, at Adelphi Hall, under direction of her spirit guide, Dr. J. C. Warren: "All women desirous of learning how to properly take care of their physical systems, and those," she says, "whom God has placed under their care," should attend. But our informant omits to say at what date the lecture will take place.

RECEPTION TO MISS FIELD.—Villa Montezuma was the scene on Tuesday evening of a brilliant reception to the distinguished authoress, Miss Kate Field, which was largely attended by representatives of the wealth, beauty and culture of San Diego. The beautiful mansion was, as usual on such occasions, profusely decorated with rare exotics, and brilliantly illuminated throughout, displaying to the utmost advantage the Oriental magnificence of its decorations. The early part of the evening was spent in social conversation, and the viewing of the exquisite miniature palace; and shortly before ten the company gathered in the music-room, which was lighted with colored candles, where the gifted musician and host, Mr. Jesse Shepard, entertained them with a number of selections, both vocal and instrumental, which were rendered in his usual unapproachable style, exhibiting his phenomenal gifts in all their marvelous power.—The Coronado, San Diego, Feb. 18th, 1888.

[HYDRAULICS EXTRAORDINARY.]—"Talk about filtering," said a Dallas man the other day when enjoying our pure artesian water. "Just drink a pint of Dallas water, stand in the sun for five minutes, and the water will come out of your pores beautifully filtered, while your stomach becomes converted into a sand bag."—The Colonel.

The Funereal Month of March.

An observant metropolitan barber says that he can tell one's physical condition by the state of the hair!

The Bible tells us that with his hair gone Samson lost his strength. The Romans considered baldness a serious affliction, and Julius Cæsar was never quite satisfied with himself because his poll was bare.

The face, however, is the open book, and one can readily trace in its various expressions, lines, changes and complexion the state of the system.

The eye that is unusually bright and yet has a pallid brightness, the face upon whose cheeks nature paints a rose of singular beauty and flush, more marked in contrast with the alabaster appearance of the forehead and nose and lower part of the face, is one of those whom the skilled physician will tell you will some day dread the funereal month of March, because it is then that consumption reaps its richest harvest. Consumption, they tell us, is caused by this, that and the other thing, by microbes in the air, by micro-organisms in the blood, by deficient nutrition, by a thousand and one things; but, whatever the cause, decay begins with a cough, and the remedy that will effectually stop the cause of that cough cures the disease of the lungs.

That is all there is of it.

The cough is an evidence of a wasting. To stop it effectually a remedy must be used that will search out the cause, remove that, and then heal the lungs and do away with the cough. This is the power, special to itself, possessed alone by Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption remedy. This is no new-fangled notion of narcotics and poisons, but an old-fashioned preparation of balsams, roots and herbs, such as was used by our ancestors many years ago, the formula of which has been secured exclusively by the present manufacturers at great trouble and expense. It is not a mere cold-dryer. It is a system-searcher and upbuilder, and a consumption-expellant. Where others fail it wins, because it gets at the constitutional cause and removes it from the system.

J. W. Hensaw of Greensboro, Pa., on Jan. 15th, 1888, reported that "he had derived more real benefit for the length of time, from Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption remedy than he had for years from the best State physicians."

If you have a cough, night-sweats, "positive assurance in your own mind that you—oh! you have no consumption," and yet lose flesh, appetite, courage, as your lungs waste away, you may know that soon the funereal month of March will claim you, unless promptly and faithfully you use the article named. If other remedies have failed, try this one thoroughly. If others are offered, insist the more on trying this unequalled preparation.

Some persons are prone to consumption and they should never allow the disease to become seated.

Programme of the Grand Union Celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at Tremont Temple, March 31st, and Paine Hall, April 1st, 1888, Anniversary in Chicago.

The Young People's Progressive Society will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism on Thursday evening, March 29th, when a musical, literary entertainment, ball and supper will be given in its new hall, Martine's Dancing Academy, corner Indiana Avenue and 22d street.

Anniversary services will be held April 1st, afternoon and evening. Several leading speakers are engaged for the occasion.

The proceeds from the entertainment will constitute a library fund for the benefit of Spiritualists and those investigating the phenomena and philosophy. The friends are kindly asked to aid us in making this Anniversary occasion a grand success, both financially and otherwise. A. L. C.

A New Book:

Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum. A Sequel to "The Life-Line of the Lone One."

This book, of three hundred and twenty-four pages, is now in press, and will be out and on the counters at the Banner of Light Bookstore about the 20th of March (of which due notice will be given), and the copies mailed to my friends who have so kindly sent me their subscriptions—for which I return my thanks, and trust the book will be satisfactory to them.

My address and home will, after this date, be in the West, but duly advertised in the BANNER OF LIGHT. Copies of "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," and my other books, will be mailed as ordered at the BANNER OF LIGHT office in Boston, and also by me at any time on receipt of price, as before stated, $1,10 for the above, or $3,00 for my four books—two in paper and two in cloth—sent by mail, postage paid. Persons in the West may also pay me their subscriptions to the BANNER OF LIGHT, and the price of any book published by Colby & Rich, and receive the same by mail. WARREN CHASE.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close

REASONS FOR ORGANIZED CO-OPERATION.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The inspirational discourse on "Harmony in Diversity," by W. J. Colville, printed in your issue for Jan. 7th, presents, as is usual with Mr. Colville's discourses, many valuable thoughts, felicitously expressed, and well worthy the attention of thoughtful Spiritualists. He has plainly shown the unwisdom of such schemes for general or national organization by Spiritualists as have frequently been proposed. Yet there is one aspect of the organization question which he has scarcely touched upon, and which should be seriously considered by all who desire the elevation and improvement of humanity through the prevalence of spiritual truth.

Let me premise that I wholly agree with Mr. Colville and his inspirers as to the undesirableness of organization among Spiritualists for the mere sake of organization; or for the purpose of securing uniformity of belief by the adoption of a creed, or for exercising the least constraint over the opinions or the liberty of action of individuals; or even for the purpose of presenting an united and imposing front to the enemies of spiritual truth, in order to secure a greater respect for its claims. The only proper way to seek respectability for Spiritualism is to show that it embodies truths and prompts to actions that are worthy of respect. Nor should any form of organization be adopted which permits an individual or any limited number of individuals to think or act or legislate for others, in any way to interfere with personal liberty or responsibility. If Spiritualists cannot devise a mode of organized action which avoids all these evils and unworthy aims, then it is doubtless best that they should abstain from anything of the kind.

But it hardly needs be said that the only rational and justifiable object of coöperation is to promote certain useful and important ends which those who coöperate are agreed in regarding as desirable, and to accomplish which individual action is inadequate, or which can be better accomplished by the union of numbers. Of course, any participation in it should be entirely voluntary, and from individual conviction of its desirableness.

Organization is merely the common-sense method of facilitating coöperation. An unorganized body of people is but a mob, which can do little except destroy; or it is like a jelly-fish, that can only absorb and float. A human body without organs would be a useless thing. A body of people who would accomplish any useful work must have its head to plan and direct, its hands to execute—in short, its special organ for every function it proposes to fulfill; and all these should work together for the common end. There should be no useless members—mere dead weight for others to carry. Persons should join it for what they can do—not for what they can get. This is organized coöperation.

The proper use in such an organization of a statement of principles and objects—or a "creed," if any so please to term it—is not to set up a standard of belief for Spiritualists at large, to which all must assent or be regarded as heretics and excluded from sympathy; but, rather, it is simply to furnish a necessary basis of agreement on which the members of a particular society can coöperate; since they cannot be expected to work together intelligently, harmoniously and successfully unless they are agreed both as to the principles or truths they wish to advance and the methods by which it shall be done.

Mr. Colville refers in very complimentary terms to a statement drawn up by myself some years since—he says, "as a sort of creed for Spiritualists." He would have been more correct had he said it was suggested merely as a basis for local societies of such Spiritualists as wished to engage in ethical and spiritual culture and philanthropic work—for I did not presume to think I could propose a creed that would suit all Spiritualists in their varied conditions of growth and enlightenment. He does me the credit to say that such suggestive "creed-making" as I attempted "is innocent"—for which opinion I am duly grateful; but I could not justify myself in proposing anything of the kind that should be merely "innocent." I should wish it to be useful, helpful, conducive to important ends. Yet no creed should be made of cast-iron: it should be readily modifiable, as increasing knowledge and growth may demand. I think I could now decidedly improve on the statement of a few years since.

And are there not useful and important objects for which intelligent and philanthropic Spiritualists may and should combine their efforts in organized coöperation?

I am not sure that the spread of the mere knowledge or belief of spirit-return and intercourse requires combined action. It surely has thus far extended very rapidly throughout the civilized world, mainly through the force of individual impulse and curiosity; and from the very nature of the case it may be expected that all who are prepared by internal growth to profit by this knowledge will be drawn to it by inward attraction. For it must be obvious to thoughtful observers, not only that its bitter and prejudiced opponents lack the spiritual development which would open their eyes to its truth and value, but that numbers who have been in a sense compelled to accept it by force of irresistible sensuous demonstrations, lack the spirituality of mind and heart which alone makes it an incentive to personal improvement and humane effort. Those who are thus brought by external demonstrations prematurely to an intellectual belief in spirit-return, are wont to manifest their interest chiefly in a perpetual craving for new and more wonderful phenomena, or in profitless inquiries and controversies about novel theories and strange doctrines, with little concern for either personal or humanitary emendation. I have nothing to urge, therefore, in favor of organized efforts for proselytism to a mere belief in spirit-intercourse—knowing that mere proselytes, without spiritual growth, like some we read of in old times, are apt to become "two-fold more the children of hades" than those who compass sea and land to gain them.

But an intelligent application of the truths of Spiritualism to the needs of humanity—to the improvement of individual character and the melioration of society—does call for earnest coöperation on the part of those who have been enlightened by these truths, and who have any desire for the welfare of their kind. The practical bearings of spiritual truth on life and on the customs and institutions of human society need to be studied and expounded by competent teachers; places of assembly, with the necessary conveniences and appliances of instruction, need to be provided for both adults and the young; the agency of the press needs to be employed for popular enlightenment; judicious aid to the poor and unfortunate needs to be provided, and measures need to be taken to sustain and protect approved instruments for inspirational teaching and for demonstrating to inquirers the reality of spirit-existence, instead of leaving all such to struggle alone with the difficulties, temptations, and often bitter hostilities which their work encounters.

Much can be and has been done, it is true, in all these directions, by individual effort, enterprise and devotion. But much more may be accomplished, and in a vastly more efficient way, by the combined efforts of numbers who see eye to eye as to what needs to be done, and who can work in organic harmony for its accomplishment. Much, indeed, has been done, in some localities, by organized societies for maintaining public lectures in exposition of what is vaguely termed Spiritualism, or the Spiritual Philosophy—which lectures, coming from various planes of thought or inspiration, are often incongruous if not flatly contradictory in their theories and affirmations, and serve only to bewilder the hearers and paralyze any action in the direction of moral culture or societary reform.

Of course those only who are sufficiently advanced in the knowledge of spiritual truth, and in interior spiritual growth, to have some clear convictions as to what is good and what is evil in human practice—what will elevate and what degrade human character—can be expected to engage in such constructive work. Mere investigators or inquirers, who have reached no settled convictions on ethical and spiritual questions (which seems to be the condition of many who are known as Spiritualists), as well as merely selfish persons who seek chiefly their own gratification or entertainment in spirit-intercourse, and care little or nothing for personal improvement or the welfare of their race, cannot be looked to to enter upon coöperative effort for the purposes named.

But how can they whose minds have been at all illuminated by the heavenly wisdom; who have any realization of the heavy burdens under which humanity is groping and groaning in its ignorance and blindness—burdens which might be lifted or lightened by a practical acceptance of the truths involved in Spiritualism (such truths, for example, as Human Brotherhood, with all that it implies; the uplifting power of service for others; the nearness of angelic aid for those who seek it rightly, etc.)—how can they who have at all apprehended these grand truths refrain from desiring to unite their efforts for the benefaction of their fellow-creatures and the redemption of the world? How can they be satisfied with the mere personal enjoyment of communion with spirit-friends or the witnessing of marvelous phenomena, or with listening to wordy expositions of "our beautiful philosophy" which end only in words?

But, as already stated, those who would work together must be of one mind, both as to the grand principles which underlie and guide their work, and the methods they will pursue. And to this end a clearly-defined platform is requisite—not in any sense as a limit to individual thought or action, but simply as marking out the common ground on which they propose to work unitedly. Individuals may have beliefs or convictions reaching far beyond the statements of this common platform, and yet not incongruous with it; and they may desire to engage in other work not contemplated in it. No restriction should be placed upon such, nor should there be the least obstacle to withdrawals from membership in case any one experiences a change of opinion regarding any principle avowed or any mode of effort proposed. And the statement of principles and objects adopted should ever be open to amendment, whenever a higher perception of truth, or a clearer statement of it, or a wiser mode of action, shall be discovered. In this way the limiting tendency of a "creed" may be wholly avoided.

For the above purpose it is plain that a platform or creed should express only truths of cardinal importance—such alone as are deemed essential to a true and worthy life and to working harmony in association. All mere theories or speculative opinions of no practical utility may be left out. Doubtless many different formulas, of more or less value, may be proposed and adopted by different societies; but it may be expected that in the long run the fittest will survive.

Mr. Colville portrays a sort of organization or society which he regards as natural, healthy, and wholly unobjectionable, in the following words:

> "Certain persons meet, and feel attracted mutually; they enjoy and profit by one another's society; they are happier when together than when apart; they feel themselves in a manner necessary to each other's happiness and welfare. A mutual interchange of ideas is profitable; they agree to form a harmonious band of spiritual communists, or at least coöperationists; in no way interfering with the work of others; in no sense objecting to individual independence and even solitary effort. They, feeling isolation to be foreign to their needs, coöperate so as to form, if possible, a natural spiritual household. They in this way constitute a sphere or society of kindred minds, and when harmony prevails, unity, not uniformity, is certainly a source of strength."

This, surely, is very proper, and very desirable, so far as it goes. But it seems to contemplate only the pleasure, the happiness, the welfare, of the associated members. It mentions no philanthropic, humanitarian purpose—no design of working for the general good. It would thus appear to be purely selfish in its objects, although its selfishness may be of a very refined and spiritual sort. But what the world needs, at the present juncture, is not associations of recluses, seeking merely their own enjoyment, physical or mental, or their own culture, ethical or spiritual; it needs combinations of strong men and noble women who can not only provide means for the best ethical and spiritual culture of young and old, but can extend the helping hand to the wretched victims of our present imperfect social and industrial systems, and lead the way to something better—who shrink not from grappling even with the giant problem of the true adjustment of Capital and Labor, and seeking its solution on the basis of Brotherhood—in short, who are willing to assume in the coming civilization the grand function which the Church of the past and present has so signally failed to fulfill—that of spiritual guide to the masses on the advance from Barbarism to Brotherhood.

Nothing less than this will meet the demands of the time; and if Spiritualists are incompetent to the work, they must inevitably stand aside for those who will attempt and achieve it.

If societies now existing, or those which may hereafter be formed, feel that this question of social and industrial reconstruction is too large and too difficult for them to practically grapple with at present, they can at least appoint special committees whose duty it shall be to consider and devise what may and should be done through their agency for the instruction of their own membership, and for popular enlightenment on the subject—what measures of relief to unfortunate sufferers under the present system are wise and within their power—and what steps may be practicable toward the attainment by their members, through coöperation, of more fraternal and spiritually helpful conditions of living. Here is a grand and noble field of work for the best and ablest minds. And, when it is desired, it will be found that ample helps for the study of these problems are at hand; yea, that treasures of inspiration from higher realms await our call. (For a proof of this, see a remarkable Inspirational Discourse through Mrs. Richmond, at Cassadaga Lake, in answer to the question "What Can we Do?" printed in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Sept. 24th last.)

As to making a proper care and provision for worthy and useful mediums one of the objects of organized coöperation, the following plea was put forth in a recent inspirational address through Mrs. Lillie (printed in THE BANNER of Feb. 4th):

> "Spiritualism should be so organized as to control its phenomena by holding mediums above the power of temptation; and spirit-manifestation will not be based upon the solid foundation that it should be until such time as you hold it so sacred that you will raise a fund and prepare a place for the carrying on of the work under holy and pure conditions. Your mediums who publicly represent Spiritualism should be cared for beyond 'the dollar limit,' as far as they individually are concerned. When that time arrives, the earnest, investigating public can come to you as an organization or society, to recommend to them a medium for the particular phase they desire to witness, as they would come to you for a minister.... If the money that is thrown promiscuously about to-day, a dollar at a time, so many times a week or month, in places that you have doubt concerning, was gathered in an organized way, and systematized, it would be enough to present the phenomena of Spiritualism to a skeptical world under conditions that could not be gainsaid. Such mediums, then, as valued the truth for its own sake and prized their high and holy gift, would willingly place themselves in a position to be cared for by an organized body that would see them protected, cared for and supported in a way that the needs at least of the body should not lead them into temptations of a pecuniary order."

It would seem that nothing further need be said to reasonable minds on this point. And in regard to coöperation for charitable or eleemosynary objects and for general social reconstruction, the same inspirational speaker, in a later discourse on "Charity" (see BANNER of Feb. 25th), urges that "As Spiritualists we are in need, first, of systemization or organization, with a view to establishing charities as a means of doing a work that must be carried out upon the love-principle, in order that justice may be done upon the earthly plane, among ourselves at least." And she proceeds to point out the need of providing charitable homes for worn-out mediums, and for those whose necessities make them dependent on the kindness and charity of others; and urges "the necessity, which the spirit-world has constantly pointed out, of a form or system of society that shall permit a growth into that oneness of interests that will make the entire race one large family."

Such a system of society, of course, is that system wherein Brotherhood and mutual helpfulness shall prevail, in place of the antagonistic competition which characterizes the present selfish civilization. To introduce that better system, which will be "the kingdom of heaven" on earth, is no doubt the ultimate purpose of the grand spiritual movement of to-day. That few of the human race—few even of the most enlightened nations on earth, few, indeed, of those who call themselves Spiritualists—are as yet ready to enter upon and realize this higher form of social life, is no doubt true. But it is also true that they are becoming fitted for it in proportion as spiritual truth acquires power over them, or as they advance in true spirituality. Their unfitness, then, is all the stronger reason why they should unite for the study of the principles of Brotherhood, that they may learn to apply them as rapidly and fully as practicable in the affairs of daily life.

It is thus apparent that not only the needs of the time, but the drift of the great current of progress, and the wishes and designs of the celestial intelligences who are guiding it, call for earnest coöperative effort, not merely to proclaim the heavenly truths of the opening era, but to practically embody them, or at least approximate to their embodiment, in the customs and institutions of the new social state which is now evolving. The first steps in this work are necessarily educational. And it is none too soon to begin an earnest study of what is required of us, as individuals and as a people, by the grand spiritual principle of universal Brotherhood.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

A Spirit Statement Confirmed.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I had been disappointed at a séance at the Berry Sisters' in the failure of Alice to meet me, but I went there a week after, when not only Alice but Fred, Florence, Gracie and Flossie all came to me. Gracie came first, and alone, giving to Mr. Albro her full name, which I had never heard spoken there before; but so large and tall I could hardly believe her to be Gracie, until she had greeted me in her old loving way. "Oh! papa," she said, "we were so sorry aunty had to disappoint you before. You know we told you she was here, but she had spirit-work that called her away, and she had to go, and we were all so sorry."

No one else came till Gracie was gone, but before I could return to my chair another followed me, with outstretched arms, and turning back, I met Florence, in form so like Gracie that I thought it was her come again. When I found it was Florence I mentioned this, whereupon she explained that, when "making up," as she called it, they sometimes took almost the same form that was out last. Alice also once told me substantially the same, and has often said, "You should not judge us by our forms."

After Florence, but somewhat later, came Fred, and he had been with me but a moment when Gracie also came out. Both Gracie and Fred have at times changed their height while with me, and while I have had an arm clasped about them. Fred's height once increased nearly a foot, and Gracie's diminished as much. She sometimes comes too large and too tall, and in several such instances has changed to a more natural size, and to a height that would indicate some fourteen or fifteen years of age. At one séance she came twice, each time too tall, and each time, while I had an arm about her, she changed to her usual height. The form in which she now usually comes is very slender—so slight as to almost preclude the possibility of its being human, her head proportionately small, but thickly covered with fine, soft hair, which falls loosely over her shoulders to her waist. The first thing she now said was, "Florence told me, papa, that you thought I did n't seem like myself—that you was n't quite satisfied, so I have come again."

"You are more like yourself now, Gracie," I replied; "but I wish I could see you once just as you were when you ran to meet me as I was coming home."

The gratification I sought in this particular was promised to be given me sometime, and the possibility of doing so seemed to give as much happiness to Fred and Gracie as its accomplishment will to me.

Fred held his form full five minutes. "I am not going to say good-bye, for I am coming again," he said as he began to sink at my feet. I held his hand till I could no longer retain it without stooping, when I let it go, and in an instant he vanished.

"You are not going yet, are you, Gracie?" I then said. "No, papa," she answered, "I am going to stay just as long as I can!" and, clinging to me still more closely, she told of some of the beauties of her spirit-home—of the birds, the flowers, the music; "but," she added, "you cannot realize how beautiful it is from any description I can give." She had before told me that when I come to that beautiful home she will run to meet me just as she used to here on earth.

If such is to be my heaven—a heaven of which I feel all too unworthy—I can well afford to let my good Orthodox friends enjoy theirs, and all their hope of getting to it. I am quite willing they should; and yet I would like to have them see the beauties of mine, and have them know, too, that the latch-string is always out; they can come in; but they must be willing to be led—willing to have it made known to them that spiritual ways are not mortal ways—that spirits are not governed by mortal laws; for, even as Jesus said, unless they become as little children they cannot enter in.

After Gracie had left me, but not till near the close of the séance, Alice came, from above and in front of the cabinet, as I have before described, this being the third time she had materialized in that way. After the first words of greeting she said: "I was very sorry, brother, that I had to disappoint you the last time you were here; but there was spirit-work that called me away, and when we have work to do every moment is precious. I was sorry to disappoint you, but I had to go. You are not feeling quite well to-day, brother?"

"It is only a headache," I said; "I am well other ways."

"Yes, I knew it was your head—I take it from you; you have been working too hard."

"Perhaps so. I was up last night writing an account of some of my experiences here for the BANNER OF LIGHT; did you know that?"

"No, I did not; I am often with you, but not always. I wish you would read what you wrote—I would like to hear it. I wish you would read it aloud."

I did read aloud that night, when in my room alone, the greater part of what I had up to that time written regarding her manifestations, and the next time we met I asked if she had heard me. She and Gracie were together, both having materialized at the same time outside of the cabinet.

"Yes, oh, yes," she answered; "and Gracie heard it, too. We did n't know before that our manifestations were so interesting. I had no idea that my coming from over the cabinet was so beautiful. I told Charlie (the medium's control) I would like to materialize and go out into the circle and see such a manifestation myself. I shall try to give you all the facts I can."

But—returning to the séance in which she asked me to read—as soon as I could I changed the subject of our conversation to her children's names. "The last time you were here, Alice," I said, "you gave me the names of your children who are with you in spirit-life; can you give me the names of any of the others now, and tell me where they are?"

After a moment's hesitation she said: "I can't find them all. You know, brother, I am not all Alice—I can't always remember things that have not been impressed upon my mind before materializing. (My father had before this told me the same at Mrs. Cowan's.) It is difficult to remember what has not been upon my mind. Sometimes I take what I tell you from your own mind—in part, at least—and of course I am influenced by the medium and her control, as well as, to some extent, by all who are in the circle. You must understand that I can't always remember."

Then, after a moment's reflection, she said: "One of my daughters was named Alice; she was named for me"; and besides Alice she gave three other names, all of daughters, Frances being the only one of the three that I can be quite sure of; then, after another brief pause, she said: "I wish I could find Alice. I thought I could, but it is all going from me."

"You said you had a little one with you," I suggested.

"Yes, but he was only a babe a few weeks old when he passed out."

What she said in this connection seemed to me to be somewhat inconsistent with what I supposed to be the truth. Of course my faith in spirit-communication was somewhat shaken. I did not doubt that Alice was a spirit, but was she really my sister, as she claimed to be? Notwithstanding the many proofs she had before given me, and what she had now said about the difficulty of remembering—that she was not all Alice—I could not feel sure. Yet inquiries subsequently made by me substantiated in my own mind the correctness of statements made by her, that at the time of her making them I questioned the truth of, and reassured me of her personal identity.

The result of my inquiries has therefore given me still further proof that Alice is the sister she claims to be, while it also gives additional emphasis, as it were, to what both she and my father had before told me—that they cannot, when in their materialized forms, recall their earthly experiences so clearly as to give any very reliable information regarding them. It would seem that they simply do the best they can, and that I ought not to expect too much of them.

The explanation, as given by Alice, seems a very reasonable one, that she is not all Alice when in these strange forms—as strange to her, she once told me, as they are to me—and understanding this, it is rather a matter of wonder than of doubt that she has so clearly proved her identity, and that these last statements of hers were so nearly correct as I have found them to be. At all events, I have learned from her and my other spirit-friends that which enables me to truly say that unto me, though one of the least, the "hidden way" has been revealed.

And yet, to try to impress this upon some of the unbelieving ones would indeed be "like casting pearls before swine"—they would give only scoffs and sneers in return. Hereditary prejudices are hard to overcome, but facts are even more stubborn things, and unless I am myself a phantom, and all my life has been a dream, these which I have seen, and felt, and heard, are facts, and as facts they will forever stand. Seance with C. H. Bridge.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On the evening of March 13th I was present at a séance, Mr. C. H. Bridge of 46 Chandler street, Boston, being the medium, at Mr. Kinney's house, No. 130 Austin street, Cambridgeport. There were about twenty-five persons present. Mr. Kinney built the cabinet himself in one corner of the room. Mr. Bridge arrived about fifteen minutes of eight, never having been in the house before. Mr. Bridge sat in front of the cabinet under strict test conditions. In a bright light, hands of spirit-friends were seen, six and seven at a time; instruments inside of the cabinet were played; flowers were given to every person in the room, fresh with moisture; messages were written and signed—every one fully recognized.

After the above, Mr. Bridge sat behind the curtain of the cabinet, the light being extinguished. Forms appeared, two or three at a time, giving names and circumstances understood by those to whom they came. About fifteen forms appeared, so ethereal that all could see through them. Mr. Bridge took three or four of the company in the cabinet, and the phenomena took place and messages with full names signed were written.

As Mr. Bridge was an entire stranger to all present, it was an impossibility for there to have been any collusion, as he knew not who were going to be there.

The party had formed and expected Mr. Bridge at six o'clock, and as he did not come until late, it was thought doubtful about his getting such manifestations away from his own house; but he convinced many who were before skeptical that there is something to spiritual phenomena. Those in doubt of the fact of there being spiritual phenomena should have a séance with Mr. Bridge. I freely recommend him to all earnest investigators. E. T.

March Magazines.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—The month brings us an exceptionally fine issue of this magazine, every page of which will entertain or instruct its readers, who appear to be constantly on the increase. The opening paper, "Michimackinack," by Charles Ellis, is a descriptive sketch, fully illustrated, of Mackinac Island, a rock-walled piece of land in Lake Huron, whereon, according to an ancient Indian legend of creation, the Great Spirit (Michi Manitou) placed Adam and Eve, the modern meaning of its Indian name being "the place of dancing spirits." Following this is an account of a venerable woman, "Minnicuccia," who for more than half a century has been a famous model for artists in Rome. Her personal character has been and is of the highest type. "Charity exhaled from her as naturally as does the odor from a flower." She is kindness and goodness personified, occasionally posing as a model where the type of gentle old age is needed. "At others," continues the writer, "she sits at her window, which looks out over the Campagna toward the blue of the Alban Mountains, folding her almost shapeless hands in her lap, in silent hope for the day of departure to a land and crown that await none more deservedly than her." We have space to give the names only of a few of the remaining articles: "A Jam on the Me-quam-e-cum," "Among Moravian Ghosts," "The Last Wampum Coinage," "An American Palace of Delight," "The Harmonite Community"—all finely illustrated. New York: The American Magazine Company.

THE VACCINATION INQUIRER informs its readers that the Bill presented by Mr. Picton for the repeal of the compulsory clauses of the Vaccination Acts is to receive its second reading March 27th, and that Mr. Bradlaugh intends to move for the appointment of a Royal Commission of Inquiry. A correspondent writes that a dearly-loved child, who had "never ailed from his birth," was vaccinated Feb. 3d and died Feb. 13th. "The cause of death was stated to be convulsions, but," continue the parents, "the doctor knows as well as we do that vaccination was the cause of the convulsions." To meet the rapidly growing and already large demand for information regarding the anti-vaccination movement, it is proposed to issue the Inquirer weekly instead of monthly as now. We trust the effort to do so will succeed. London: E. W. Allen, 4 Ave Maria-lane.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER.—"Electric Railways for City Traffic" are editorially treated upon, followed by remarks upon "Disastrous Economy," resulting in a deterioration of the quality of telegraphic service; an "economy" that places important business in the hands of inexperienced young operators being deemed an expensive one, the disastrous feature of such a course showing itself chiefly in railroad service, three hundred and nine collisions having been traced to this cause, in 1887, against one hundred and twenty in 1885. New York: Elec. Pub. Co.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—Seven subjects are dealt with in the "Review Section," among them "Harmful Books"; all not in harmony with the doctrines of the Church being, of course, classed as such; and "Was Adam the First Man?" the conclusion of the writer being that he was the first that bore that name! From that point of view there have been a great many "first" men. "Higher! Higher!" is the subject of a sermon by Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, in which he claims continuous growth in spiritual attainment, and advocates a breaking away from old theologic moorings and an advance to higher planes. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES, issued by Grant & Co., Boston, Mass., is filled with matter of interest to inquirers regarding Astro-Meteorology, Celestial Astrology, and kindred themes.

THE SIDEREAL MESSENGER contains its usual quantity and variety of instructions for students of astronomical science. Northfield, Minn.: W. W. Payne.

Co-operation the Law of the New Civilization.

WHAT THE SOCIOLOGIC SOCIETY TEACHES.

That law governs everything in life.
That society is an organism, and, like all organisms, is subject to the law of growth.
That, inasmuch as the social organism is composed of individual units, and these units are forever changing—old ones dropping off and new and better ones taking their places—the growth of society is always toward a higher, finer and more complete expression of life.
That all development is by differentiation, variation, and the introduction of new types and orders, and is toward stable equilibrium.
That this is sociologic as well as biologic law.
That society has reached a stage in which the transition from a lower to a higher industrial system must occur, and that this transition involves danger to the extent of the non-adjustment of social forces to the requirements of a new civilization.

UNREST.

The farther you journey and wander
From the sweet, simple faith of your youth,
The more you peer into the yonder
And search for the root of all truth,
No matter what secrets uncover
Their veiled, mystic brows in your quest,
Or close on your astral sight hover,
Still, still shall you walk with unrest.

If you seek for strange things you shall find them,
But the finding shall bring you to grief;
The dead lock the portals behind them,
And he who breaks through is a thief.
The soul, with such ill-gotten plunder,
With its premature knowledge oppressed,
Shall grope in unsatisfied wonder
Alway by the shores of unrest.

Though bold hands lift up the thin curtain
That hides the unknown from our sight;
Though a shadowy faith becomes certain
Of the new life that follows death's night;
Though miracles past comprehending
Shall startle the heart in your breast,
Still, still will your thirst be unending,
And your soul will be sad with unrest.

There are truths too sublime and too holy
To grasp with a mortal mind's touch.
We are happier far to be lowly;
Content means not knowing too much.
Peace dwells not with hearts that are yearning
To fathom all labyrinths unguessed,
And the soul that is bent on vast learning
Shall find with its knowledge—unrest.

REST.

BY R. SHEPARD LILLIE.

[In reply to "Unrest," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.]

Is rest, then, so wondrous a blessing
That wisdom's pursuit we 'll forego,
Lest we find that unrest in possessing
Which keeps us still wanting to know?
And of so little value is truth
That we then should give up the quest?
Clinging still to the faith of our youth
For fear we shall walk with unrest?

Are you sure that "the dead lock the portals"?
That "he who breaks through is a thief"?
That such knowledge if found by us mortals
The finding would bring us to grief?
Might not the same hand then, I wonder,
That closed the door, open it wide?
And we have no "ill-gotten plunder"
In a view from the fair "other side"?

Would the eagle be "happier lowly",
Content with not soaring too much?
Or find the clear air of high heaven
Too pure for his bright wings to touch?
Would ocean still be the old ocean
If no wave ever rippled its breast?
Or hushed were its music and motion
Instead of its ceaseless Unrest?

There is joy beyond all comprehension—
Contentment, in truth, must increase—
In fulfilling the soul's high intention!
There rolls the deep river of peace:
There 's rest comes of active endeavor,
By this are all earnest ones blest—
It comes to the sluggard soul never;
That always is sighing for rest!

Prof. Alfred R. Wallace on Evolution,

At Newcastle-on-Tyne, Sunday evening, Feb. 19th.

The above-named eminent naturalist, author and Spiritualist, delivered a lecture on "Evolution," of which the following report gives a fair summary:

Prof. Wallace began by referring to the popular notion current when Darwin wrote the "Origin of Species," that species were absolutely fixed, and that each was due to some mysterious and wholly unimaginable act of creative power. Charles Darwin, the most modest of men, after prolonged study, rejected this idea of independent creation, told the world his reasons, and placed natural selection in the forefront of the important means that had molded, as it were, the animal and vegetable kingdoms into their present wondrous forms. Upon two simple well ascertained facts did the Darwinian conception rest, viz., the enormous multiplication in geometrical progression of all living things, and the individual variation of offspring from parents within the limits of ascertained species. One sparrow is not at all like another sparrow, one lizard not at all like another lizard, one plant not at all like another plant; when closely examined and compared, the amount of variation is enormous, and the variations extend not only to separate parts but to the general size and form. Careful measurements of common wood snails, of many lizards of an identical species, of common birds of the same species, age, apparent size, country, and caught at the same time, all showed great variability. In the birds, for instance, in such important particulars as the length of the bill, the total length of the tail and the wing, the variations amounted to fifteen and twenty per cent. of the average specimen. What was true of the reptile and bird kingdom was true of the mammalia. Soft internal parts too, the gall bladder, intestines, number and size of ribs, the arrangement of muscles, all varied in different, but apparently identical, members of the same species.

In the vegetable kingdom the same variability in the same species existed. To give an idea of the extent of these variations, Mr. Wallace mentioned that of a common description of bramble one eminent botanist instanced five species, and another forty-five, while of the familiar hawkweed one gave seven species, and another thirty-two. Everywhere it was the same; there was no fixity of type, but constant and enormous variation. Coming to the domestic plants and animals, the lecturer pointed out that whenever man wanted a particular plant or animal to vary in any particular way it invariably did so, while still retaining its other characteristics practically unchanged. He instanced the potato and the root tribe, all varying little in leaf and flower, but immensely in the tuber, giving us all the varieties of potatoes and turnips. We had the lettuce and the cabbage, varying greatly in the leaf, not so much in other respects. The same with fruits, flowers, animals, the wool of sheep, the milk udder of the cow, the varying breeds of dogs, horses and pigeons. Man, by artificially selecting those that varied in the right direction, and using them to perpetuate the species, brought out at last the apple from the wild crab, the peach from the wild almond, the racehorse, the carrier pigeon and the pointer. Having established the variety in species held to be fixed, Mr. Wallace proceeded to illustrate the enormous struggle for existence going on on every square inch of the earth's surface, and the changes in all species that this involved. Taking vegetation, he showed how one tree will supplant another—evict it, in fact, from the country, as the beech in Denmark is evicting the fir and the oak, for which latter Denmark was famous in the days of the Romans. In plants, too, the fight wages most fiercely, and only the fittest survive; only those best fitted, that is to say, to withstand the risks and dangers to which they are exposed, those best fitted in every way to the particular spot whereon they grow. As vegetation changes so do the insects change, and the balance sways to and fro throughout nature.

If one pair of partridges, laying eighteen eggs in the first year, lived for sixteen years, and all their progeny from the start carried the process on, at the end of sixteen years there would be twenty thousand million millions of partridges, sufficient, allowing each bird half a square foot, to cover the surface of the globe! The same rate of increase prevailed throughout the realm of Nature, and tremendously repressive powers were thus needed to keep the population of the globe within bounds. Tremendous powers did exist, for of the vast numbers born momentarily into the world, almost all died as rapidly, and of the countless thousands coming into the world annually, almost all died within the year. Which lived, then? Those best fitted to survive in the circumstances in which they were placed, not the strongest necessarily, but, in animals, those who could conceal themselves best, the swiftest, those who could stand cold or heat best, and so on. It was this natural selection, as it was called, which had given to all we saw in Nature the wonderful harmony between life and its surroundings. An alteration in climate, the introduction of a fresh animal from a neighboring country, will soon result in corresponding changes; emphasising variations, that would, in prolonged series of years, give us fresh forms and new species. Answering the objection that there was no explanation of the beginning of important organs, such, for instance, as the eye, Mr. Wallace said this was appealing from our knowledge to our ignorance. They could deal with what was before them palpably in Nature, not with what happened thousands and millions of years ago. Darwin had pointed out some suggestive indications of changes as to how the mammary glands, for instance, had arisen.

Having demolished the idea of the fixity of species, Mr. Wallace proceeded, in conclusion, amid evidently an accession of interest, to deal with the "descent of man" question, contenting himself, however, with referring readers to Darwin's book on the subject, and with the recapitulation of what Darwin had striven to do in that book. He had shown, he said, that in man's bony structure, in his muscles and important organs, he was closely related to the higher apes; that in man to this day variations occurred in individual members which brought them nearer to the animals than we now were; that there were rudiments of organs and muscles in man of no use to us, but of prime service to animals wherein the same organs existed in full power. It was impossible to explain these on any other hypothesis than that man, so far as his physical structure was concerned, was of animal origin. Accepting the conception that all the beautiful gradations of animal form around us had been produced by the operation, through countless ages, of natural laws, was it not improbable that the small gap between the higher ape and man was filled up in some totally different and unusual way? He held it as incontrovertible that man had an animal origin, so far as his bodily structure was concerned.

But man had a mind, a soul. Natural selection could only act for the benefit of a creature for the time being, but there were faculties in man which must have been latent in him from the first, which could not be affected by this law. The mathematical faculty, as in Euclid and Newton; the musical faculty in a Beethoven and Mozart, the sense of ideal perfection, the realization of an immortal destiny, and kindred conceptions that had no relation to man's well-being here, were attributes that could not be created by laws known to us, and must have been latent in man from the beginning—all these told of something higher. The real man was the soul within, the spirit temporarily sojourning in the body, and this conception of the body man himself derived, would help us to understand a little of the purpose of the creation we were permitted to see around us, something of the nature of the struggle by which man's mental and spiritual nature was perfected, something of the nature of evil—in short, Darwinism, rightly understood, and the spiritual conception of man's nature, were not antagonistic. Here we were but as seed, to blossom in higher spheres beyond.

Such is a very imperfect sketch of the lecture from rough notes. Why is it written? Because if it is right that it should be given to hundreds of Tynesiders on a Sunday evening, it is right that outsiders should have the opportunity of hearing what it was all about. Mr. Wallace's reputation is known; his opinions upon any matter are worthy a patient hearing, however much we may differ from his conclusions.—Durham (Eng.) Chronicle.

Christian Missions in India.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Proselyters, ancient and modern, are alike zealous and wide-planning in their work. In the lifetime of Jesus they compassed sea and land to make one convert. In our days they assail every continent, all nations, and the islands of the sea, with their schemes and forces. Jesus denounced the missionary Scribes and Pharisees as hypocrites. Modern missionaries are not unfrequently alluded to or described as "narrow-minded," "impertinent" and "mischievous" "intermeddlers," and that, too, not only by the more intelligent of the people among whom they work, but by disinterested observers of their own nation and kindred. But are they successful in their labors? Jesus declared that the proselyte of his day was twofold more a son of hell, than were his converters; whether better results, upon the whole, follow the labors of modern missionaries in India may be inferred from the following cutting from the Tablet, the leading English Roman Catholic organ. It is very suggestive, and might be reprinted with advantage in all missionary reports:

"The official statement as to the moral and material progress of India, which has recently been published, supplies a very interesting contribution to the controversy on the missionary question. It appears from these figures that while we effect a very marked moral deterioration in the natives by converting them to our creed, their natural standard of morality is so high that, however much we christianize them, we cannot succeed in making them altogether as bad as ourselves. The figures representing the proportions of criminality in the several classes are as follows: Europeans, 1 in 274; Eurasians, 1 in 509; Native Christians, 1 in 799; Mahometans, 1 in 856; Hindus, 1 in 1,361; and Buddhists, 1 in 3,787. The last item is a magnificent tribute to the exalted purity of Buddhism, but the statistics are instructive throughout, and enforce with resistless power the conclusion that, as a mere matter of social polity, we should do much better if we devoted our superfluous cash and zeal, for a generation or two, to the ethical improvement of our own countrymen, instead of trying to upset the morality, together with the theology, of people who might reasonably send out missions to convert us."

As pertinent to the subject and confirmatory of the foregoing, are the opinions of Canon Isaac Taylor, expressed at the recent Church Congress in Wolverhampton, England. Having previously traveled in Africa and elsewhere, he declared that Mohammedanism was more effective than Christianity, in converting the people, and that its influences were not only moral, but were more certain and enduring for good, than were the labors of Christian missionaries.

Recent preferences by the American Congregational Board for preachers of damnation as missionaries to the heathen, in lieu of messengers of good tidings and salvation, tend to draw special attention to the hideous nature of the theology it would promulgate. Rev. Prof. T. T. Sawyer, D. D., in his recent published letter to the editor of The Independent, earnestly remonstrates with the Missionary Board, for professing to believe (it is the logical result of their theology,) that God creates and damns one Pagan soul every second of time; and designates such theology as bold blasphemy. But the Scribe of the Congregational Board, it is said, fears that the proclamation among the heathen of a more gracious gospel, may cut the nerve of missions, and therefore prefers terrorizing messengers to act as missionaries. Yet the special text of Scripture, the great commission which Jesus is supposed to have given to his disciples (Mark xvi.: 5, 6) to go into all the world and preach the gospel, is now discredited by modern scholars as an interpolation, and is marked and set apart in the Revised Version, as not found in the earlier manuscripts.

To rescue the holy sepulchre from the Moslems, was a work carried on for centuries, by Christian crusaders, at immense loss of human lives and treasure; but the sepulchre to this day continues under Moslem rule. Probably not less futile will be the efforts of Mission Boards to supplant the religions of the Orient. What the Eastern nations need, and what they ask for, are not teachers of Christian superstitions and dogmas, but missionaries of science, and knowledge of human rights and liberties.

"What security," once asked Bishop Butler, author of "The Analogy," "is there against the insanity of individuals?—the physician knows of none"—and then, after a pause—"why may not whole communities be seized with fits of insanity as individuals? Nothing but this can account for a great part of what we read in history." Could Bishop Butler have had then in mind the unjust and useless wars of the Crusaders, or certain other blood-stained annals of the Church?

In the meanwhile, let it not escape notice that in Boston, the home and official place of business of several Boards of Foreign Missions, Spiritualism publicly manifests in many phases, essential and phenomenal, and the common people receive it gladly; yet the missionary Scribes and Doctors of Divinity see it not. Was it not Solomon who wrote (Proverbs xvii.: 24—new version)—and what did he mean by it?—"Wisdom is before the face of him who hath understanding; but the eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth." LIGHT FROM THE PULPIT.

Rev. Mr. Gilbert, in a recent statement of a year's experience outside of Orthodoxy, in the Unitarian Church at Vineland, N. J., gives his reasons for leaving the Methodist pulpit, the chief of which was disbelief in the alleged infallibility of the Bible. He said that Orthodoxy demanded that the pulpit should speak out in favor of all the dogmas of the Church. He feels free from its shackles forever. He stated from his own knowledge that many an Orthodox minister would be ashamed to let his people, or even his family, know what he read and investigated outside of the rules prescribed. Mr. Gilbert joyfully confessed himself free from anxiety as to what he should believe in the future. A great change, he observed, is going on within the Church. Dr. Curry, one of the ablest theologians of the Methodist Church, who has been revising Clarke's Commentaries, said in the columns of the Christian Register that there are "ten thousand old wives' fables in the Bible," and the whole needed revision. The speaker said he had given up trying to reconcile the contradictions of the Bible. He now has the universe to draw from. Poverty of thought is the worst form of poverty. He said his belief in immortality had grown. He did not pretend to know by what name the church organization of the future would be called, but he felt very sure that the face of the Liberal was turned in the right direction.

Rev. Mr. Malcolm recently delivered a discourse, which was pronounced by the press very interesting, in the Park Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., on "Spiritualism and Christianity, as related to the Other World," in the course of which he said that although this subject is handled with gloves by the clergy, yet it is so closely linked with our Christian piety that it appeals to the reason of all thinking people. It is no reason for saying that we will not believe a word of it because it is not yet thoroughly understood. The preacher thought that men and women should be classed in the category of little people who lift their eyes to heaven and say there is no truth in it because its precepts do not happen to meet their views.

After the body dies, the speaker believed the spirit continued to live. He asserted that Christ even taught Spiritualism in saying that the spirits of the departed good came back to their loved ones, when the time was right to receive them. He further declared that the prophetic teachings of the Old Testament were forms of Spiritualism, and he read a number of passages from the Bible to substantiate it. And he recited evidences of the action of the spirits of the departed to be found in the histories of the lives of Swedenborg and John Wesley. Finally, he freely admitted that premonitions are the direct influence of the sympathies of spirits.

"Science on the Other Foot."

A Christian scientist, whose time was fully occupied in thinking about the unreality of disease, at two dollars per think, once treated a highly unappreciative man for chronic nervous affection of a very painful character. Under the glowing promises of a speedy recovery which the healer made, the man came every day to get his two dollars' worth of thought on the non-existence of his complaint, and all went well for several weeks. At the end of that time, the pain continuing with a cheerful assiduity that could not be disregarded, the patient grew restive and intimated that, although he had paid out forty dollars, there was not a cent's less pain than before. He also respectfully submitted that a clear statement of just about when the amelioration was expected would be highly satisfactory to him and his family, who were cramped by the daily depletion of their funds. Then the Christian scientist waxed worth and said: "Oh! you of little faith! know that you would already have been cured if you had believed me when I told you that your pain was not real. Pain and suffering do not exist; they are merely fantasms of the brain. There is no such thing as matter," continued he with so much emphasis that it rattled some silver dollars in his pocket, "none whatever; the only real thing is thought. All this is too subtle for your commonplace mind, and hence I can do nothing more for you; you had better go and fill your coarse, unappreciative system with drugs." Then a vision of forty dollars that had vanished and of pain that had vanished not came before the mind of that long-suffering man, and he arose and he took the Christian scientist, and he smote him sore upon the head and back, so that when he was through, congestions, abrasions, contusions, incipient ecchymoses and epistaxis were among the phenomena presented by his Christian countenance. "There is no real suffering," said the Unappreciative Man with withering scorn. "The bruises on your alleged head are entirely hypothetical; the choking I gave you was simply an idea of mine, and a good idea, too; the pain which you feel is merely an intellectual fantasy, and your nose-bleed is only one of the ideal conceptions of the cerebral mass. Believe these things not to exist and they vanish. Good day, sir." And the patient departed.—The Medical Visitor.

THE ANNIVERSARY.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism

Will be celebrated at Cincinnati, O., beginning on Easter Sunday, April 1st, 1888, and ending Thursday evening, April 5th.

The opening services on Easter day and evening, and the services of the day and evening following, will be held at Grand Army Hall, No. 115 West 6th street, and the services on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will occur at Greenwood Hall, 6th and Vine streets.

Some of the best speakers and mediums now in the public work of Spiritualism have been secured for this occasion, and other engagements will be made, sufficient to insure an array of talent rarely enjoyed by Spiritualists anywhere.

In addition to the Anniversary Exercises, it is decided to make this occasion memorable by the formation of THE OHIO VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF SPIRITUALISTS, the object of which will be the systematization of Spiritualistic work in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and in such other States as have adopted few measures for the advancement of our cause; and it is the intention to make this organization the nucleus for thorough and widely-extended labor in the vineyard of humanity. Societies and neighborhoods are respectfully urged to send good delegates to unite in this prime movement for a better defined advancement, and to actively assist in its successful inauguration.

Now is the time for earnest work!

Ample hotel accommodations will be provided at reduced rates; and good boarding-houses will entertain visitors at reasonable charges.

Information upon all points involved in this demonstration may be obtained by addressing any member of the undersigned Committee, in care of The Better Way.

Fraternally,
E. O. HARE, President,
C. C. STOWELL, Secretary,
MRS. I. S. MCCRACKEN,
M. G. YOUMANS,
L. BARNEY,
Committee on Invitation.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism:

Semi-Annual Meeting of The Mount Pleasant Park and Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Associations.

By authority in me vested, I hereby call the regular semi-annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association, to meet in Library Hall, Moline, Ill., March 30th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and to continue until Sunday evening, April 1st, 1888, to transact such business as may properly come before it: Also for such business sessions as may be deemed necessary of the Mount Pleasant Park Stock Company, the auxiliary organization in charge of the camp at Clinton, Ia., to hear such reports from committees, and attend to such other matters as pertain to the Camp Meeting season of 1888.

The friends of the cause in Moline will entertain all they can. Good hotel accommodations can be had at $1.50 per day, and at good private boarding houses for less. Friends intending to attend can engage accommodations in advance by addressing L. P. Wheelock, Moline, Ill., Box 2273.

All officers, members and others who desire to attend the meeting can do so by the payment of one and one-third fares from all points on the following lines: Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; Chicago and Northwestern; Illinois Central, and the Chicago, Santa Fé and California. To secure the benefit of the reduced rate friends attending the Moline meeting will pay full fare from the station at which they start, and take a receipt from the station agent. If any one passes over two or more roads and cannot get a through ticket, let such party take a receipt from each road for the distance traveled and amount paid; on presentation of these to the Secretary of the Association he (or she) will be returned for one-third fare.

We expect other railroads will give us the same rate, but the main lines are all we can announce at this time.

Now, friends of the glorious gospel of Spiritualism all over the Western States, get ready and come to Moline and have a good time.

Let us have a grand jubilee, as we will, of song, of speech and tests, in proof of the divine nature of all life. PROF. J. S. LOVELAND, President.

DR. J. H. RANDALL, Secretary M. V. S. Asso'n.

Anniversary in Connecticut.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated at Unity Hall, in Hartford, Friday and Saturday, March 30th and 31st. The friends of our cause are cordially invited, and no doubt will feel it a duty and pleasure to be present on this occasion.

Let us show by our presence that we are in earnest in the work we have begun, viz., to supply the great demand of humanity for an answer to the world's query, "If a man die, shall he live again?" A part of the great mission of Spiritualism is to solve this problem. While it has been done to the satisfaction of millions, let us still pursue the theme, until all mankind shall know its truth, which alone can give relief and restore confidence to the bereaved, that those who have passed from our sight "still live." Let us rejoice in this work, and not tire in any of its duties, and step to the front with the Banner of Liberty in one hand and with the other give that financial aid which an honest conscience cannot refuse.

J. Frank Baxter and Charles Dawbarn have been engaged for the occasion. Other speakers are expected. Turn out and fill Unity Hall, which is commodious, and one of the best.

The N. Y. and N. E. Railroad will furnish a limited number of return tickets for one cent a mile for those who have paid full fare one way in going to attend the convention.

[Signed.] President, G. W. Burnham, Willimantic, Ct.; Vice-Presidents and Acting Committee, A. H. Bill, Hartford; E. B. Whiting, New Haven; F. A. H. Loomis, Meriden; M. A. Dwight, Stafford; Harriet Johnson, Waterbury; Mr. Winslow, Bristol; Carrie Holey, do.; W. W. Woodruff, New Britain; Flavia Thrall, Poquonock; Mrs. E. R. Davis, Putnam; Mrs. S. A. Chapman, Norwich; James Wilson, Bridgeport; Claudius Harvey, Rockville.

Willimantic. J. C. ROBINSON, Sec'y.

Anniversary Exercises in Cleveland, O., March 31st and April 1st.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated by the Spiritualists of Cleveland and neighboring towns by a two days' meeting in Memorial (G. A. R.) Hall, 170 Superior street, Cleveland, Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st.

Speakers, Mr. J. Clegg Wright, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, and others.

Friends in and out of the city will meet with a warm welcome.

N. B.—Refreshments a few feet from the hall at reasonable rates.

Come and help us make a good and profitable time.

R. CARLETON, Chairman of Committee.

Anniversary in Chicago.

The Young People's Progressive Society will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism on Thursday evening, March 29th, when a musical, literary entertainment, ball and supper will be given in its new hall, Martine's Dancing Academy, corner Indiana Avenue and 22d street.

Anniversary services will be held April 1st, afternoon and evening. Several leading speakers are engaged for the occasion.

The proceeds from the entertainment will constitute a library fund for the benefit of Spiritualists and those investigating the phenomena and philosophy. The friends are kindly asked to aid us in making this Anniversary occasion a grand success, both financially and otherwise. A. L. C.

DEATH AND THE EMPEROR.

[Translated by Henry Greenbaum for the Chicago Inter-Ocean.]*

The Emperor.

(After looking for some time at the picture in silent contemplation speaks at it pleasantly):

My friend, I greet you. I should dread thee,
Thee, whom mine eye has seen in hundred battles,
Who, sent by assassin's hands,
Considerately has fled my path.
How strange indeed my picture
In a courtier's brain is painted.
Thee should I fear whom
Daily submissively I think of,
For whom I ready stand, since my head,
Through weight of years, to silver turned.
'T is long ago. Long since, I reach
From generations dead and gone, alone
Into this world which I regenerated,
And whose thanks my age make green—
Wouldst have me, Death, to-day? Behold,
Here I am.

Death.

(Begins to move and motions negatively with his hands.)

The Emperor.

A further term is given me?
When will you come?

Death (Speaks).

I had come. Ofttimes I have
Slowly moved around thy simple couch.
Then murmurs all around arose, and supplications
Thousand-voiced from out the air,
From the depths of earth—these took the hand
That was to grasp thee feebly down.
Thy people's love had prayed for thee—
My strength was gone—but when some day,
Wayworn, thou wouldst lie at rest,
And from me wilt ask for final peace—
Be certain I with gentle breath
Thy lids will softly kiss. And thus I 'll end
In smiles thy life's great course.

The Emperor.

(Folding his hands)—
I am a man who has his duty done.

EDWARD RAAB, in Berlin Journal.

* Some two years since these lines regarding the now deceased Emperor of Germany were republished in several of the secular dailies: The language which the poet then placed in the mouth of the "Angel of Change" proved eminently prophetic of the peaceful manner in which that veteran ruler lapsed at last into the beyond.—ED. B. OF L.

Banner Correspondence.

Massachusetts.

NEW BEDFORD.—George Y. Nickerson writes: "Mrs. C. B. Bliss held a séance at No. 70 Hillman street, on Sunday evening, March 4th. There were thirteen persons present. After about fifteen minutes the curtains of the cabinet parted, and before us stood our old friend and worker for the good cause, Mr. J. M. Roberts, editor of Mind and Matter; he was recognized by those who knew him. Other spirit-friends came, to the number of thirty or forty, and to the surprise of us all Mr. Joseph Edmund Gillett, of this city, who passed to spirit-life on March 1st. His funeral was on Sunday, March 4th, at one o'clock, and his remains were at the time at his former home. He took me by the hand, gave me his name, and said, 'Tell father that grandfather was the first one to meet me, and that grandfather passed to spirit-life about three weeks ago.' This proves that the veil between this and the future life is easily parted for those who desire to return and make their presence known."

BOSTON.—"Franklin" writes: "There is in every human being, even before death, a spirit which is neither the mind nor the body of that being, though inseparable in life from the body and mind. There is great need of a proper recognition of spirit here in mortal life. Till people know about spirit as a distinct conception, there is little use in attempting to teach them arts, morality, or the fundamental conceptions of social science, for the simple reason that without knowledge of spirit these other conceptions become vague and meaningless. Education of the mind, now so vigorously pursued in this country, and education of the senses, and bodily culture, now being generally introduced, can never, without education or development of the spiritual nature, produce good citizens, or human beings harmonized in their own nature and properly related to their surroundings and their fellow-beings. The Roman Church, though preaching much that I oppose, and denying much that I believe, still has an idea of the needs of this spiritual culture which urges those in its communion much more seriously and persistently than many other bodies of people to promote spiritual cultivation among the masses. Their methods of doing this I object to, yet there is much need of the cultivation of the spirit in a proper manner."

FALL RIVER.—James M. Rogers writes: "There is one feature in the Monday's issue of some of the leading dailies that is to me objectionable from every point of view—the absorbing of so much space in printing Sunday sermons. A newspaper is for news—foreign and domestic—the details of business transactions, for advertisements and matter of like character. Men subscribe for or buy those papers for such information, and so much of the regular matter is crowded out as the length of the sermon requires. Who request this? Has a majority of the readers of any one of the great dailies desired this? I do not believe so. I think a majority is entitled to consideration. Through these channels the sensational utterances of men—often wanting in clear logic—are flung broadcast over the land.

Through them false opinions and distorted conceptions of the Deity and of the future of man are disseminated. There is too much, already, of the cheap sensational injected into daily life. One cause of crime is the lack of self-poise and the want of a firmer spiritual nature. Such articles increase the evil. This comes, too, with a remarkably ill grace from the gentry who would stop the circulation of the same papers on Sunday. They preached the sermons on Sunday, they are reported on Sunday, yet one must not read legitimate matter on Sunday! The jewel of consistency is very bright at times! Now there are plenty of religious papers published each week, devoted to the propagation of their multitudinous creeds; let those who hunger for such mental food obtain it in such papers, they being its proper source of supply."

Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURGH.—C. E. Meskimen writes: "This region has been favored with so much spiritual manna of late that we scarcely know ourselves. Succeeding Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings came Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates—the latter a fine psychometrist and trance speaker, and the gentleman an able exponent of the harmonial philosophy. In addition to their Sunday work they give Monday and Friday afternoon receptions at our hall, that are well attended, and productive of much good in the fact that Mrs. Kates's guides give tests of spirit identity that are very positive and convincing. Following the arrival of the foregoing came Edgar W. Emerson, who kindly stopped over en route from Cincinnati to the hills of the old Granite State, to greet some acquaintances he had made in the past, and by request stayed over with us a week, during which time we were favored with two of his grand séances. Our little hall, which is pronounced a gem, and is exclusively ours, was taxed to its utmost capacity to hear this famed test medium. Thirty-five recognitions of spirits were made the first night, the details attending the descriptions being so satisfactory and minute as to carry conviction to many hard skeptics, and I have heard of a number of converts who date as such from hearing Mr. Emerson. I have been greatly edified by mingling with the audience, and hearing the confessions, one to another (ladies), such as, 'I feel more at home in these meetings than in our church,' and, 'I went to church this morning, but had my own way to-night, so came here.' Said one lady to me, 'You Spiritualists appear cheerful, and look on the bright side of life,' to which I readily assented, assuring her there was no reason, human or divine, why we should n't.

Truly we are progressing into the broad light of eternal liberty and freedom.

Mrs. Ada M. Glading is our speaker for April. The glorious BANNER OF LIGHT is eagerly obtained each Sunday morning from the young brother who has the copies in charge; long may it wave."

Florida.

JACKSONVILLE.—Mrs. F. A. Warner writes: "We are here for a visit in the summer-land State—Florida; the climate is delightful. The tropic and evergreen scenery is very beautiful. The lovely, long, gray Florida moss is here in great abundance. It grows in the tree-tops and hangs from the branches in graceful festoons, yards in length. In the twilight it presents rather a lonely, weird appearance, silently swinging to-and-fro with the breeze. Any one who would like a package of the moss for decorating may have it and welcome by sending me one-half dozen stamps to pay the postage."

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—Mrs. M. C. Morrell writes: "The Soul Communion Meetings which have been held every week since the 27th of September, are well attended, and seem destined to do a good work by way of developing mediumship. The quietude of thirty minutes tends to spiritually harmonize and concentrate the minds of the people and bring them in closer sympathy with the loved ones who have crossed the threshold and become the residents of the Summer-Land. One lady at her first attendance saw and described several spirits so clearly that they were recognized by friends. We supposed the lady to be an old medium, but to our astonishment found it was the first time she had known anything of mediumship.

Several others have seen spirits who had never before attended a spiritual meeting or known anything of Spiritualism.

One who commenced attending the meetings about six weeks since, and who had sat two or three times only with a well known medium, is now giving communications, and commencing to speak from the platform.

A gentleman of prominence, well known all over the country, attended this week for the first time. He told the audience he had been an investigator of Spiritualism twenty-five years—attending circles, meetings and séances—but for the first time in his life he was conscious of the presence of a spirit. This gentleman has had circles at his own house, in Washington, D. C.

So you see the work goes on, and the quiet, silent sitting at these weekly meetings brings just the conditions necessary for development; it opens the door between the mortal and the immortal spheres. It says to the immortal: 'We welcome you in our midst; let us coöperate—work hand in hand; in unity there is strength.'"

Kentucky.

HARRODSBURG.—O. S. Poston writes: "Many years ago I had the pleasure of hearing lectures on Psychometry, by Dr. Joseph R. Buchanan, the discoverer of that capacity of the human mind. I have tested a number of psychometric readers within the past twenty years, but I have found none more satisfactory than Mrs. A. B. Severance. Her prescriptions for disease are purely hygienic, and based on the idea that the cure of disorders in the human body are made by the inherent vital powers properly husbanded and directed. In addition to all I have stated I can testify that she possesses a prophetic gift as regards future events of one's life I have seldom found in others. I have no acquaintance with her except as a correspondent availing myself of her spiritual gifts."

Vermont.

SOUTH ROYALTON.—H. J. Severance writes: "We are doing all we can to scatter the seeds of progress and a knowledge of the new dispensation in this vicinity. The copies of the BANNER OF LIGHT received by us are sent off as silent but effective missionaries, soon as read. They grow better every week."

Demise of a Noble Woman.

The death of Mrs. Anna Kingsford, M. D., of London, occurred Feb. 21st. She was for some time President of the London Theosophical Society, and more recently of the Hermetic Society. In a mention of her decease, "M. A. (Oxon)" says:

"She was a clear and polished writer; a persuasive and eloquent speaker. Outside of the occult, with which she chiefly concerned herself, her energies were mostly directed against vivisection, of which she had a horror. Others who knew her more closely will speak with more fullness of her life. I desire only to add my tribute to a singularly worthy and self-denying life, chastened by much suffering, and to exceptional intellectual endowments never unworthily used."

The Pall Mall Gazette alludes to her departure as leaving "a blank which will not easily be filled, even at this period so rich in women of intellect and energy." "Deeply imbued," it says, "with the spirit of the poet's maxim: 'Never to link our pleasure or our pride with suffering of the meanest thing that lives,' Mrs. Kingsford wore neither fur nor feathers; and recently during the time she was lying ill, she wrote a letter to the Press, pleading with tenderness and power the cause of the seal and other helpless creatures who are slaughtered each year for the sake of their fur. She was greatly beloved and admired by a large circle of friends, both on account of her intellectual endowments and her unwearied labors in the cause of the helpless, to which the works she has written remain as a lasting testimony."

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

MRS. METLER.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 4th we noticed a communication from Spirit MRS. METLER. We have waited, thinking some one better acquainted with her than ourself would verify it; but as no one has, to our knowledge, we will say that she is remembered by many of the older ones as one of the pioneer spiritual speakers in this locality some thirty or more years ago, and we hear she labored long and well and with good effect for the cause. We are glad she still recognizes her Connecticut friends, and we trust will assist us to gain new light in the future as in the past. DUMONT KINGSLEY.

Willimantic, Conn.

JOSEPH HALL.

I recognize the name of JOSEPH HALL in the BANNER OF LIGHT of March 10th as a spirit that manifested at the Banner Circle-Room through Mrs. B. F. Smith. Joseph Hall was a resident of Dunkirk, N. Y., and was known in his lifetime on earth as an earnest and honest Spiritualist. He attended Cassadaga Camp-Meeting for the last time in 1886, and left the camp before it closed to go home and make the change from earth to spirit-life. I shook hands at the parting, but shall meet him again—as I have many times since he left the body. Yours,

Buffalo, N. Y. J. W. DENNIS.

[From the Open Court.]

An Argument for Woman Suffrage.

To the Editors:

The movement is based on the fact that women are not sufficiently represented by men. If they were, there would be no agitation. And men are even less unfit for representing children than for representing women. The child and the man differ much more than the child and the woman, in character, in average state of opinion (for instance about religion) and in amount of home life. Most children have much more to do with the mother than the father, as well as much more in common. The women who are not mothers usually have something to do with children as aunts, sisters or teachers. The fact that the female bird and the young are alike in plumage is not without a parallel in our race; and neither is the fact that it is the female who stays by the nest. When we consider how much children gain by a government good enough to make the schools what they should be, and how much they lose by a government bad enough to let civil war, famine or pestilence break out, we must admit that their interests need as full a representation as possible. And this cannot be given unless women vote. F. M. HOLLAND.

ELSIE AINSLIE,

A Victim of Social Wrong.

BY CAROLINE LEE HENTZ.

SARA L. MECRACKEN, Scribe.

This absorbing little story is written to teach a very important lesson to young women. The story is thrilling, dramatic and touching, yet it carries a high moral purpose through all its pages. It is a book that every young woman should read who is receiving beaus. The lessons taught are very practical, yet so well woven into the story that no one can begin to read it without an increasing desire to finish it.

CONSOLED.

BY ANTOINETTE BOURDIN.

This work is intended as a message of consolation to bereaved and sorrowing spirits. As it lays no claim to literary finish or scientific depth, it does not crave or expect the favorable mention of such critics as admire solely purity of diction and grandiloquence of style; at the same time for genuine depth of thought and true insight into the realities of the spiritual world and life, this humble brochure has few equals and fewer superiors.

Timely Thoughts after Forty Years.

The one true Anniversary for Spiritualists all over the world is now close at hand, and its approach should excite only thoughts of the highest significance in all minds that are self-conscious of genuine emancipation. There will be things said everywhere by assembled Spiritualists which it is not for us to anticipate. The emotions that will overpower millions of human hearts in the public celebration of the event cannot be portrayed in advance of their demonstration. It will be the FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM! In the term of two score years, at this age of the world, vast changes have taken place, spiritually as well as materially. It would call for the pen of a ready writer to begin to enumerate and describe them. The marvels of discovery and invention which have been recorded in that period are as toys in comparison with the great marvels of truths which have been brought home to the knowledge of mortals in the same lapse of years.

Others will properly rehearse the wonders of the modern development of Spiritualism to listeners who never weary of the story. Our present purpose, in view of the nearness of the Anniversary, is to ask Spiritualists everywhere to pause for a little while and reckon up, not the visible and outward achievements of Modern Spiritualism, such as the conversion of a certain number of persons to its belief, but the absolute advance it can claim to have made as a moving, inspiring and guiding power in the lives of its acknowledged believers. It is by this test that it will be tried at last, and it is wise to apply it here and now. Many times has the question been asked: What good has Spiritualism done? The answer sought is always a material one. Rather let Spiritualists honestly set about giving a spiritual one. How does this positive knowledge of continuous life, and of the presence and communicating power of the departed, affect the conduct and profit the lives of those to whom it has been imparted in its convincing completeness? This is the vital question in the case. If Spiritualism has indeed made the circuit of the globe in these forty years past, with what kind of power over human hearts has it impressed itself as the great final revelation so long waited for? Has it mainly aroused the curiosity and excited the emotions of men, or has it directed their thoughts into new channels, and lifted their lives up to a higher level, and inspired their mutual conduct with purer aspirations and larger purposes?

Experience is the best witness that can be summoned to give testimony in the case. The clearest proof of the character of the New Revelation is its operative influence on believers. It is all well enough to repeat the statements which are become familiar respecting the spread of the knowledge of this grand revelation from the world invisible; the vital thing, however, is to know of a certainty what effect it has had and continues to have upon those who have accepted it with such joyful enthusiasm. Unless it can be shown to be performing active and lasting work in the world, it has come as a mere pageant, and its character is transitory. Have Spiritualists stopped to soberly think that it is to this single test that their belief must be submitted? that they are as surely to be known by their fruits as are men and women of other professed beliefs? If Spiritualism comes to dissolve in viewless nothingness the impediments of creeds, to remove the barriers of tradition and dogma, and drive back all burdensome superstitions into the darkness in which they had their origin, then it is bound to vindicate its claims as a welcome emancipator by producing satisfactory evidence of the superior work of which it is capable.

The necessity is rather for the believer to look within, to search the motives of his conduct, and to see if this wondrous revelation has done for him the good which was contained in its original promises; if it is indeed a blessing to human lives by the thorough renovation of human character; if it has disciplined men into gentleness of temper, and inculcated the spirit of charity, and exalted their estimate of existence, and made them modest, forbearing, forgiving and humble. These are the real fruits of the spirit, if there are any. The Spiritualism that is truly spiritual, and far more than a new specimen of nomenclature, must bear such fruits as these, or it is little more than a name.

How could the approaching Anniversary be so suitably observed as by bringing it as a revelation to this approving test and seeking to apply it to this real and enduring standard? It could be done in no way that would be so strictly appropriate, or one on which the invisibles that are looking on with such living interest would pour out their silent benedictions more earnestly.

American Judaism.

Rabbi Solomon Schindler, of Boston, to whose most intelligent and liberal public utterances we have frequently directed much approving commentary, delivered last week at the Temple Adath Israel a lecture on "Modern American Judaism," which deserved to be listened to by all persons who would get a just apprehension of the actual status of Judaism in this country. Short as is the history of American Judaism, he said, it is full of momentous events. The earliest Jewish comers to this country were of Spanish, Dutch and English descent. As soon as we had won a national independence, and had offered this country as an asylum to the oppressed of all nations, the germs of a congregational life began to spring up among the Jews of America. As they took their first free steps, and timidly began to bring order out of their chaos, and to introduce reform, they were almost frightened at their own audacity. It was in Charleston, S. C., that an English hymn was chanted for the first time in a Jewish synagogue, and this was about the year 1830. Congregations in Baltimore and New York followed suit.

The German contingent was the one that was pushing forward, the leaders of the reform movement being mostly of German descent. Dr. Isaac M. Wise has been the supreme one of them, having identified himself with that portion of the Jewish population which was born on American soil and trained in American schools, and had learned to value American institutions far beyond the estimate placed upon them by their foreign-born parents. Dr. Wise found American Judaism a chaos. He studied the laws of the land, and found them to be the most liberal of any under which Israelites had ever lived. He at once adopted this as his country, and came to love it with the same love that he gave to the land of his nativity. He saw in it the promised land which had been the dream of Israel for centuries. If Canaan was to be found anywhere, it was to be found here. If Judaism had ever been destined to live, to grow, and to win for itself a respected position among the nations of the earth, here was the place where these hopes could be realized. And his first idea was that all national distinctions among the Jews of America should be abolished. They must cease to be German, Polish, Russian, or English Jews; must not be split up into so many congregations; must become American Israelites, if healthier conditions were to be established.

Dr. Schindler explained further that the reform idea of Dr. Wise consisted in making all Israelites into American citizens in the widest and truest sense; in making a common ritual suffice for them all, which in turn should correspond with the demands of the time; in governing this uniform religious body, neither by a pope nor by one or many rabbis, and surely not by the rabinical authorities of Europe, but by a synod that should decide in all matters of religion and be the expression of the popular will; and that the leaders of American Judaism should be Americans and not foreigners, who, nine times out of ten, are utterly incompetent to grasp the spirit of American institutions. Dr. Wise has worked strenuously to break up the absurd race prejudice. He has at all times insisted that the English language, being the language of the land, should be the language of the synagogue, and that the Israelites should learn to look upon themselves as members of a large body, of a nation so large as the American. He would have the prayers of Israelites express gratitude to God for the large, prosperous and free country that has been given to them, and cease to whine for a restoration of Israel upon Asiatic ground—a wish which nobody harbored and nobody would help to realize!

With the abandonment of the Messianic expectations, said Rabbi Schindler, with the substitution for these antiquated hopes of the modern idea that it was the mission of Judaism to help, in union with other creeds, to raise men to a still higher plane of civilization, and with the full reïntroduction of the Israelite into society, it became absolutely necessary to remove all those laws and prescriptions which had made him a stranger in the world. The old table laws had become utterly untenable, and it was high time that the religion of a man should not be measured any more by what he ate or refused to eat, but by the way he conducted himself as a man and a citizen. It was high time, said he, that the seat of religion should be removed from the stomach to the heart. Modern researches and modern Bible criticism had undermined the infallibility of the Bible. Its divine authorship was denied in toto. Miracles were discredited, and truth was sifted from fiction.

The difficulty of finding such an authority, to which all American Jews should reverently bow, is an obvious one. As Dr. Schindler wisely observes, the unsolved question of the time is by what authority one law is abolished while another is upheld, or by what authority any religious obligation could be imposed upon a member of the community. For that authority modern Jewish theology had been driven back to the Sinaitic revelation; but Dr. Schindler is obliged to confess that this chapter of the Bible needed, in a time of skepticism and disbelief, as much the support of indisputable evidence as did the most insignificant of the ordinances contained in the Bible. The proof of infallibility is wanting for the whole Scripture. After making a rapid review of the results of the nobly intended work of Dr. Wise, we are frankly told by Dr. Schindler that, after all, it is a question still awaiting an answer whether an authority is actually needed by the Israelites to guide their religious life.

The Jewish rabbi, according to Dr. Schindler, has never been the steward of God on earth. His office was simply that of a teacher. The platform, and not the pulpit, belongs to the outfit of a Jewish synagogue, and the lecture, not the sermon, is essential to Judaism. The sermon, in which the preacher felt at liberty to abuse his hearers by an effusion of undeserved vituperations, has now fallen into desuetude, and the lecture has risen in favor, in which the rabbi as a teacher attempts to enlighten his hearers on all such subjects as he thinks will make them wiser and better. And this he credited to the good judgment and discrimination of Dr. Wise.

Thus we are informed, by one of the brightest and most liberal minds in American Judaism, of its persistent struggles to slough off the Old-World conservatism and to become thoroughly American in spirit; of its desire to place itself in as full harmony as may be with American laws, and to be governed, if governed at all, by those born on American soil, who are in complete sympathy with the spirit of the life of the New World and its progressive aspirations and tendencies. Dr. Schindler courteously abstains from any open reference to Romanism in this country, the outline of his discourse being mainly biographical; yet he none the less to our mind sharply arraigns—while making no mention of—the working methods of the Roman hierarchy, that too plainly aims to govern its subjects in America from Italian ground, and further seeks—as in its open effort to break down our common school system—to antagonize the spirit of republican freedom.

Dr. Schindler shows that the Jews in this country are pursuing the right course and have taken the true position, while the Pope of Rome and his obedient followers here are utterly and fatally wrong. The latter would make wreck of this blessed heritage of freedom, rather than forego the opportunity to extend its power through the present enjoyment of that freedom. It is particularly to be noted, as Dr. Schindler states it, that the Jewish rabbi in this country is only a teacher, not God's vicegerent; that the Bible is very far from being infallible authority; and that religion with the modern American Israelite is to be made apparent in the man and the citizen rather than the creed and ritual.

How do Orthodox Protestants regard such a frank admission as this from a learned Jewish rabbi that the Genesaic record is anything but an infallible authority? It ought to open their eyes widely to the progress which truth is making. And with what grace or decency can such an organization as the Young Men's Christian Association continue its meddlesome and self-righteous efforts to capture our politics, for which they are quite as ready to assail the Catholics as any other religious believers? Or how can professing Protestants of any denomination persist in their Quixotic plans to change the spirit and structure of our common governmental Constitution, the fundamental law of the land, by making it bend to their conceits respecting God's presence, as if he could really be OUTSIDE of anything in his wide universe? The American Jews teach them a timely lesson here, which they would do well to heed. As the policy of the Jews now stands outlined, they promise to become examples for even Americans themselves to emulate.

One "Trust" Not Yet Tried.

There is one trust in the list of trusts of which we hear so much now, that has not been generally mentioned, even if it has been thought of. It is a farmer's trust. If the oil men can form a trust, and the cotton seed oil men, the sugar men, the rubber men, the express men, and all the rest of them, why, it may fairly be asked, should not the farmers, who are the bottom producers of the country, on whose yearly products we all depend for our continued existence, likewise take advantage of the contagion, and see how they can secure a big profit for themselves at the cost of everybody?

We find this rather dangerous suggestion worked out with fine effect by the Chicago Tribune, which runs out the proposition to its furthest consequences. What, says that paper, if the farmers of the Northwest should form a trust and appoint a Board of Trustees to limit production, fix prices, and regulate the sale of all food products. It might be called a trust, but it would better be called a defensive alliance. It could not be called a conspiracy, and would not be illegal. It would be in violation of no known law for them to agree among themselves how much they should produce and what they would sell it for. If it be suggested that they could not very well form the combination required, the Granger organization of 1872–74 is pointed to in answer, which shows a remarkable capacity for concerted action by the agricultural class, on short notice and with hastily devised machinery. The Chicago Tribune does not hesitate to say that if the farmers should get together in the same spirit again, and organize a food trust, they would soon bring other people to their knees, and make many mouths water and stomachs hunger.

What would be their plan of operation? Following out the "trust" idea, the farmers would select trustees to take charge of all produce and of putting it upon the market so as to benefit them all. The produce would be put into warehouses; prices would at once be doubled; and grain, breadstuffs and meat would be doled out so as to hold up the market. Territory would then be parcelled out, and the farmers ordered to raise one-half less the next year. Then prices could be advanced again; and while the farmers would be doing half the work they now do, they would receive double the pay. Should the manufacturing trusts then attempt a new levy on agriculture, the farmers' trust could retaliate by squeezing the former still harder. Food could be put up to famine prices, and the population of the cities would be starved out while the farmers would take things easy. They would have enough to eat themselves, while other people were suffering from the lack of necessary food.

It is true that in order to carry out such a scheme to perfect success it would be necessary to look after importations of meats and breadstuffs from abroad, on which there is at present a nominal duty as agricultural produce. These would have a decided tendency to flow in over the duty imposed, to relieve the scarcity created by this new agricultural trust. But the easy remedy for that would be to put up the duties on farm products to still higher figures, making them equal to the rates imposed on foreign manufactured articles. The farmers could easily do this, for they have votes as well as the manufacturers, and a great many more of them. And in such a contest they would all vote, and all concentrate their ballots on a single purpose. Then the farmers, having first raised the tariff for themselves to the top notch, could charge up to the same level, and have no fear whatever of competition from abroad.

Would all classes but farmers be made to suffer from the operation of such a plan? Of course they would. But have they not been made to suffer from the plans operated by the oil and sugar and rubber and other men? And why should not the hard-working farmers enjoy as good an opportunity to drag profits out of the pockets of consumers as any other class of their fellow-citizens, manufacturing, commercial or mining?

Professor S. B. Brittan.

The grand spiritual medium, PROF. S. B. BRITTAN, as is well known by the readers of this paper, contributed, while in the earthly life, a vast amount of literary matter in advocacy of Modern Spiritualism. His great book, "MAN AND HIS RELATIONS," had an extensive sale, the matter having first appeared in the BANNER OF LIGHT columns. He was one of nature's noblemen; he made a history that will live through all the ages, which, when the mists engendered by theological dogmas shall have disappeared from the earth, as they surely will, will cause his name to be emblazoned upon the scroll of intellect as that of one of the grandest lights of the nineteenth century. He still lives! and by and through medial instruments can speak as of old to the children of earth.

Fully appreciating the fine intellect of this man years ago, we were drawn toward him as a brother, and aided him in many ways. Our friendship was mutual; and as the grand law of compensation is immortal, continuing on from the earthly life into the supermundane existence, our beloved brother now sends us greetings from his spiritual abode, bidding us to remain faithful to the Cause we espoused so many years ago, assuring us that our labors in the spiritual vineyard are bearing fruit that will compensate us a hundred fold when our earthly labors cease. He assures us that when we sometimes faint by the way a host of guardian spirits come to the rescue to sustain us. Of this fact we are fully aware, knowing, as we do, that the world of Causes is superior to the world of Effects—that a Divine Intelligence governs all things.

We are led to make the above remarks at this time, in consequence of perusing Bro. Brittan's message, given through the lips of our angel-medium, Miss Shelhamer, at our Public Circle on the afternoon of January 17th, and published in last week's issue of THE BANNER. He was requested by Father Pierpont, the President of the Circle, to preside on the date above named, and gave such strong evidence of his identity that none who ever knew him could, we think, doubt his identity. He gave assurances of his continued coöperation with all the friends and laborers in the spiritual vineyard, assuring them of his deep interest still in their work, and indeed all that pertains to human welfare. He spoke of the friction existing in our ranks, and said that it would continue until the turmoil incident to human life should give way to a better state of things; still, he said, the outlook was encouraging as it appeared before his spiritual vision at the present time. Those, therefore, who may have omitted to peruse Prof. Brittan's remarks and cogent answers to questions propounded, should turn to the sixth page of THE BANNER for March 17th, and carefully peruse them.

Our Massachusetts Dogs.

The dog has been, from the remotest period of human history, the friend, companion and protector of man, often the best, and in some instances the only friend a poor man has had. The intelligence it has manifested, the affection it has displayed, the sacrifices it has undergone for the individual to whom it had become attached have been unsurpassed; and though probably not less than a million of our Massachusetts people, including the children, love dogs, we have had at periods more or less frequent, attempts to obtain laws which would compel the killing of nearly every poor man's dog in the State.

We now learn from Our Dumb Animals that the present Legislature of this State is to be asked to enact a law taxing all male dogs at a valuation of $300, and all female dogs at a valuation of $600, and that every dog even when so taxed, if found anywhere without its owner or keeper, may be summarily shot, clubbed, stoned or poisoned. And this, too—remarks that watchful protector of such as have not the means of protecting themselves against the cruelties of those who claim to be their superiors—despite the well-known facts that burglaries, fires, losses of life and property by the vigilance and alertness of dogs are almost daily reported. One of these reports is that of a dog a few weeks since saving the lives of seven men whose boat became lodged on one of the reefs of Great Spoon Island, in Penobscot Bay, Maine. The men had hoisted signals of distress, and were in momentary danger of being swept away. Tremendous waves were running, and the excited fishermen on the shore knew that it would be fatal for them to attempt a rescue, as no boat could withstand the heavy sea. The account states that Mr. A. C. Buell, a Washington journalist, had left his dog in the neighborhood to be cared for until the next hunting season, a very fine-bred Irish retriever. Suddenly it occurred to his keeper that the dog might do what no man could. Calling him, a long line was attached to a piece of lath, and flung as far as possible into the water. The dog promptly sprang in, swam to it, and brought it to the shore. Several times he repeated this. The fishermen were in despair. The waves were so high that they could not direct the dog's attention to the men on the reef.

Finally the dog seemed to comprehend that there was something serious on hand. He raised his head and looked intently over the water. His eye caught sight of the boat with its signals of distress, and the waves dashing over it. When the lath with the line attached was again thrown, he sprang after it, took it in his teeth, and, instead of turning to the shore, struck out through the roaring surf to the reef. Many times he was buried under the waves, but after a few minutes of intense suspense he was seen from the shore clambering up the side of the reef, and a great shout went up as the imperilled sailors took hold of him and lifted him into the boat in an almost exhausted condition.

In a brief time a strong rope was attached to the line. The men on shore were signalled to haul, the rope was made fast to the reef and the shore, and one by one the men passed over it from their place of danger, the brave dog following as soon as he had slightly recovered from his great exhaustion.

It is urged as a reason why the proposed law should be adopted that dogs destroy sheep; but it should be borne in mind that in all sheep-raising countries dogs abound—that in former times, when sheep were far more abundant in Massachusetts than at present, dogs were more plentiful than now, and that the Ettrick Shepherd, whose experience entitled his words to consideration, has said that "the whole mountain-one country of Scotland would be worth hardly a sixpence but for the dogs that watch the sheep." Even admitting that loss results to a few sheep-raising communities from dogs, there are better means of averting the evil than a law that would result in the slaughter of a thousand innocent as a punishment of one that is guilty. The practicability of employing shepherd dogs, bells, goats, wire-fences and other protective agencies has many times been conclusively proven.

Another, and with many the most serious charge, is what is thought to be the liability of dogs to hydrophobia. On this the journal we have quoted says: "We have had occasion to prove that in the large city of Boston, during about forty years since the records of deaths have been kept, only two deaths from this cause have been reported, both of which were doubtful cases; and that actual deaths from this disease have been so rare as to lead various of our most eminent physicians to doubt whether hydrophobia is anything more than a disease of the imagination."

What with the attempt to make it a crime punishable with fine or imprisonment, or both, for a mother to administer relief to her sick and suffering child; to graft upon the liberty tree of our nation a scion of sectarian religious belief; to propose a law which might be so construed that not one spirit medium could exercise his God-given gift without being rendered liable to be thrust into a felon's cell, and this new scheme—which in the large cities and towns of this Commonwealth would, if it became a law, amount to a measure really passed for the assistance of burglars and "crooks" in the plying of their nefarious trade by suppressing the watchful canine servitors, which these lawless midnight operators fear far worse than the police, and would compel every poor man to kill the dumb friends of ours whom Cuvier, the greatest naturalist of the world, has declared to be "the most useful conquest ever made by man"—it would seem that legislative bodies are thought by some to be crushing machines, established for the purpose of destroying the rights of the people to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

We cannot suppose that the legislators of this State will give heed to the petition of a small minority, so far as to enact a law that will so seriously affect not only the best interests of the dogs but in diminishing the happiness and protection of all ages and classes of people, the best interests of this Commonwealth.

The Parker Tomb Fund.

Our readers are aware that a plan to restore and beautify the resting-place at Florence, Italy, of the remains of that great apostle of religious advance, Rev. Theodore Parker, was set on foot by The Index some time since, and was favorably adverted to in these columns. A note from B. F. Underwood, Esq., at that time editor of The Index, informs us, under date of the 13th inst., that all the remittances to "The Parker Tomb Fund" received at that office—together with others coming to hand since his (Mr. U.'s) residence in the West—have been handed over in due course to Mr. John C. Haynes, Treasurer of the Index Association.

The Spiritualist Press.

There are one hundred and twenty-two papers and periodicals published specially devoted to Spiritualism, and probably more than twice that number which favor it, and occasionally place in their columns evidences of its truth. Of the former, twenty-four are published in this country, and ninety-eight in foreign countries.

Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Berkeley Hall, Boston.

The Fortieth Anniversary will be celebrated in Berkeley Hall, corner of Tremont and Berkeley streets, on Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st, 1888, under the auspices of

THE BOSTON SPIRITUAL TEMPLE SOCIETY.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, Dr. J. C. Street and other talented speakers will participate in the exercises. Superior musical and literary talent, also reliable test-mediums, have been engaged, thereby rendering the attractions of the entertainment second to none.

On Saturday, as one feature of the entertainment, Mr. Fletcher will give his popular lecture, illustrated with dissolving views.

Tremont Temple and Paine Memorial Hall.

A grand Union Celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will take place on March 31st and April 1st, under the auspices of the

FIRST SPIRITUALIST LADIES' AID SOCIETY AND CHILDREN'S LYCEUM NO. I. OF BOSTON,

The official notice of which appears on our second page.

Paine Hall.

A grand celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary will be held March 25th, afternoon and evening, at this place, under the auspices of the Spiritual Phenomena Association. See notice on second page.

New York City.

Mrs. Mary A. Newton writes that "The First Society of Spiritualists of New York will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary at Adelphi Hall, 52d street and 7th avenue, on Sunday P. M., March 25th.

The speakers will be Mr. W. C. Bowen, Hon. A. H. Dailey, Henry J. Newton, Mrs. Amanda M. Spence, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham.

Music will be furnished by Señor Aurelio Ceruelos, Mrs. J. O. Goodwin, Miss Lily Runals; and a reading by Miss Sawyer."

Attleboro, Mass.

The 31st of March will be observed with appropriate exercises. The ladies of the Spiritual Society are arranging for a grand entertainment with unique features for the evening of that date, and on Sunday, April 1st, afternoon and evening, the guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer will address the people on subjects commemorative of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Other Points.

As will be seen by notices elsewhere, the Anniversary will be observed at NEWBURYPORT and HAVERHILL, MASS.; SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.; CHICAGO, ILL.; CINCINNATI, TOLEDO and CLEVELAND, O.; HARTFORD, CT.; PROVIDENCE, R. I.; and MOLINE, ILL. The occasion will also be remembered in PHILADELPHIA, PA., BROOKLYN and TROY, N. Y., and elsewhere.

Practical Advice.

In our issue of March 17th we gave to the reader the report of Mrs. M. E. Williams's second public séance for form manifestations at Adelphi Hall, as contained in the New York Mercury. An original report, it seems, was en route for our own use, but the recent severe storm prevented its arrival in time for publication. We, however, regard the prefatory remarks made by the Chairman, J. Franklin Clark, on that occasion (and forwarded with the document in question), to be so full of practical value that we here present them:

Because of the fact that I have given earnest attention and study for many years to the spiritual phenomena, in an honest endeavor, and with an unbiased mind striving to become familiar with its facts, and to the deduction of the philosophy to be drawn from them, I have been requested by Mrs. M. E. Williams, who is to appear before you this evening in her character as a medium for full-form materializations, to say to you a few words upon the subject, calling your attention particularly to the differences that exist between the two classes of phenomena known as natural and spiritual.

The phenomena of Modern Spiritualism have now been before the world for forty years, and the 31st of the present month will be the fortieth anniversary since the raps that demonstrated that they were produced by a conscious intelligence first broke the silence in that humble home at Hydesville in the western part of this State.

But while Modern Spiritualism counts but forty years since its advent among men, it has opened the doors between the mundane and supermundane planes of human life so widely that we now know that spiritual phenomena date back to the so-called death of the first human being, for the facts of Modern Spiritualism have fully demonstrated the truth that death is but another name for birth into higher conditions.

As one of our gifted poets has beautifully and truthfully said,

"There is no death; what seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian
Whose portal we call death."

And, friends, we trust and hope that before the evening shall have passed, some of those who have experienced that second birth will present themselves before you, encased in material elements that will make them visible to your sight, and palpable to the touch of their friends.

The great and fundamental difference between natural and spiritual phenomena is found to be that the operative cause, whatever that may be, that produces natural phenomena, gives no indication of possessing either consciousness or the power of volition; hence like conditions always produce like results; while, on the other hand, the operative cause, whatever that may be, that produces spiritual phenomena, always shows that it possesses both consciousness and the power of voluntary action, and that the particular manner in which the phenomena shall be expressed is determined by the will of the producing cause, hence like conditions do not always produce like effects.

Having this well-established fact before us, we can readily perceive that no medium for spiritual phenomena can ever say in advance what phenomena or whether any phenomena will be produced at any séance, for the very obvious reason that the medium is not the operative cause, but only an instrument used by an operative cause that acts or declines to act as its own desires prompt it.

Mediums can no more assure you, when they enter a cabinet, what spiritual phenomena will be presented, than a piano could tell you what music it was to be made to express, or whether it would be used to give expression to any music. That question lies in the determination of the performer, wholly independent of the piano. All he asks of the piano is that it shall be a good instrument, in perfect tune; and all that the spirit-operators ask at a séance is that their instrument shall be a good one, and in perfect condition. It is their part to produce the phenomena, as it is the part of the musician to produce the music.

But—to carry our illustration further—suppose the piano were to be placed in a steam-boiler factory, where a hundred men were all actively engaged riveting boilers, how much of the music evoked from a piano so placed would reach and charm an audience there assembled?

You would all say that the performer had not been given a fair chance to prove his ability as a musician. The conditions were all wrong. Just so, my friends. Even a piano, be it ever so good and in perfect tune, must be properly placed before the performer can do himself justice in using it. But suppose it properly placed and in perfect tune, and while the musician is seated before it some one should strike it a heavy blow that would jar loose many of its tuning pins and throw it hopelessly out of tune; would you still expect the musician to give you good music full of sweet harmony?

Well, now, consider that what the piano is to the musician, the medium is to the spirits; and that a wrangling, inharmonious audience would compare very favorably with the boiler factory, and that one or more persons in the audience who were constantly saying to others or to themselves, "That is a fraud, I know it is," would have much the same effect as striking the piano with a hammer. It might put it out of tune, and it might not; and so such thought-waves reaching the medium might or might not destroy the harmonious conditions in the medium which are essential in order to make her serviceable for the use of the spirits.

In all cases the persons who are assembled in the presence of a medium sitting for spiritual phenomena help to make up the prevailing conditions; therefore they have a great influence in determining the reality of the manifestations. They are one of the elements that enter into the combination that constitutes the conditions.

My experience has taught me that the best way to study and investigate spirit-phenomena is, first, to completely divest yourselves of all prejudice and bias, either for or against, and determine to examine them wholly on their merits as to the facts they may present, if they have any, making yourself wholly and absolutely indifferent to the consideration as to any effect such facts may have upon your beliefs or hopes. Second, that you will take nothing for granted, but require demonstration every time. When you have succeeded in getting yourself into such a condition you will be ready to begin an investigation that will enable you to grasp the truth in regard to this matter, and with a series of well-established and demonstrated facts at your command, you will be able to determine what the facts signify and to utilize them for your own advantage.

There is nothing about the spiritual phenomena supernatural. They are supermundane. That is, they are produced by men, women and children who were born on the mundane plane of this or some other planet, who have passed through the change called death, and who now have their place of abode in the supermundane spheres of this world, and who can and do return to the mundane plane and through a medial instrument, a sensitive, hold intelligent intercourse with the inhabitants here.

The term supermundane phenomena is much more appropriate and descriptive than is spirit-phenomena, and "supermundane planes" is also more appropriate and descriptive of their place of abode than is the term "spirit-world." All supermundane phenomena are produced in strict conformity with natural law, brought into operation by the intelligent action of the inhabitants of the supermundane planes, just as, for example, telegraphy or photography is done by the intelligent control of natural law.

Mrs. Williams has been an instrument for the spirits for the manifestation of supermundane phenomena for over ten years, and during all that time has, when in the city, (except in very warm weather,) given two public séances a week at her home, besides many private séances each week, and is still doing so.

During all these years the work done through her and hundreds of other mediums has gradually been opening the eyes of the people to the facts of the phenomena, until at last there arose a pressing demand that she should try and give the same phenomena in a public hall that had for so long been obtained at her own home. Yielding to this demand, which was more urgent from the supermundane than from the mundane side of life, she consented, and some three weeks ago gave her first séance for full form materialization to a large audience in a public hall.

This matter is wholly under the direction of her spirit controls. What they hope to accomplish, or how long they will be continued, she does not know, further than that they desire to bring the fact of spirit return to the knowledge of those who otherwise might long remain in doubt.

While they do continue they will be conducted as spiritual services, wherein levity of action will not be tolerated, but an earnest spirit of inquiry for the truth will be invoked. That those unacquainted with the facts of spirit-return should be skeptical is expected. We do not see how they can easily be otherwise, and we only ask all simply to not deny the possibility of its being a fact, but to candidly and honestly, without preconceived bias or prejudice, weigh the evidence, and let that, and that alone, determine the issue.

As I have already pointed out to you, the medium cannot, from the very nature of the phenomena, promise that anything will occur. That rests wholly with the spirits who may use her, and they may find the conditions produced by the people present such as to render them unable to accomplish their wishes.

I therefore, by the request of the medium, now say to any and all present, that if, after hearing this statement, you do not wish to remain, you can retire, and receive at the door the money paid for entering. If you do not now retire you will not be permitted to do so until the close of the séance, as any movement disturbs the conditions. Therefore after the medium enters the cabinet no one will be permitted to enter or leave the hall. We cannot state how long it will be, but probably about an hour and a half. That will be determined by Spirit Holland, the medium's chief control.

MRS. M. E. WILLIAMS, materializing medium, of New York City, will hold a séance in Conservatory Hall, Brooklyn, Wednesday evening, March 28th.

When you please the stomach through the imagination you are sure to get the dyspepsia.

☞ A frequenter of Mrs. M. E. Williams's séances writes: "Since her public séances at Adelphi Hall I observe a great many new faces at the séances given at her residence. Her seance-room is filled to overflowing, and a deep interest is manifested, and Spirits Holland and Cushman avail themselves of the presence of the seekers after light to speak many words of kindly advice and encouragement. The public séances have done effective work already in awakening a deeper interest in the community at large, and Mrs. W. is entitled to much credit for the work she has accomplished in the right direction thus far.

☞ The Berry Sisters—so we are informed by their gentlemanly manager, George T. Albro—are now holding their concluding séances for the season; only a few weeks more and they will leave Boston for the camp-meeting grounds, and, later, for work in other parts of the country which have not yet been fully determined upon, though it is definitely certain that it will be a long while ere the Spiritualists of New England will have an opportunity of witnessing the manifestations occurring in their presence: A fact which should be borne in mind by believers and investigators in this vicinity.

☞ We are informed that C. E. Watkins—now at 109 Falmouth street, Boston—is having excellent success in diagnosing disease by independent slate-writing.

MR. WILLARD WHEELER passed to spirit-life recently (after an illness of but five hours) from Sudbury, Mass., at the advanced age of eighty-three years. He was formerly a business man in Boston, where he met with good success, and was known as a man of fixed principles in all the concerns of life. He was the first person who sat in the early message séances of the BANNER OF LIGHT, then conducted by our late partner, William Berry. At the opening of those séances it was thought that the presence of the medium, Mrs. J. H. Conant, and Mr. Berry as reporter, was all that could be allowed at the obtaining of the messages, but Mr. Wheeler, being permitted to attend once, as an experiment, became so interested that he made it his custom to be present regularly thereafter for a long time—becoming thereby perfectly satisfied of the fact of spirit-return and communion.

RAIN UPON THE ROOF.

STANZA SIX.

Art hath no tone or cadence
That can work with such a spell
In the soul's mysterious fountains,
Whence the tears of rapture well,
And joy with sadness mingles,
As the sad, subduing strain,
That is played upon the shingles
By the patter of the rain.

There is an "Anti-Poverty Society" in New York City, but we have failed to see any account of its doings in regard to the feeding of the half-starved bipeds of the great metropolis.

A PUZZLER.—A so-called "Christian Scientist" was asked "if it was known whether the recent cold-snow blizzard that has done so much damage was a reality or simply a "mortal error," and whether it was all spirit, or some matter? This was a sticker for the scientist to solve, therefore it was given up—to be settled by those further advanced in the science! It is thought that a portion of the question could be solved by the railroad and telegraph wire men—as far as the work on the material is concerned.

We should think Prof. Longley, the musical composer of this city, would be delighted with Spirit Dr. Brittan's eulogy of him. Well, Bro. Longley is a talented composer of music without doubt.

As the result of revival meetings at Fostoria, Ohio, Mrs. William Stahl, wife of a prominent man, has become a raving maniac, and a violent and dangerous person. Adam Saur, once an inmate of an asylum, but discharged as cured, has relapsed into insanity under the religious strain.—Boston Journal, March 15th.

A full column report would have expressed the above, with large head-lines, doubtless, if the parties had been Spiritualists. It is a great wonder that there are not more cases of this kind, when the subjects or victims actually believe that a "burning hell" awaits them and their relatives and friends if they do not accept the essential dogmas and creeds of the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches. An antidote is rational Spiritualism in all such cases.

The dead Emperor has been buried at Berlin with solemnities and display wonderful to the eyes even of aristocratic Europe; and now, as we go to press, all eyes are turned on the critical condition of the new German ruler; there are indications that his disease has reached a malignant stage; another operation has been decided upon, which, if unsuccessful, will probably prove his end. Berlin is wild with excitement.

DESPICABLE CHARACTERS.
There are scandal mosquitoes
Abroad in the land,
Who are smooth-tongued, but slippery,
While remarkably bland.
They preach, but do n't practice,
As every one knows,
While crying "Caw, caw,"
Like a flock of black crows!
They condemn all their fellows,
Whenever 't will pay,
Forgetting, alas!
There 's a reckoning day,
But, sooner or later,
'T is surely to come,
For God 's compensation
Foots up the right sum!

It is a curious and significant fact that the Paris Exposition Universal of 1889 has been officially recognized by only two foreign governments—the United States and Switzerland—the European monarchies evidently being afraid they may somehow encourage the republican idea by taking cognizance of France's celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the fall of the Bastile.

We understand that at a late meeting of railroad managers in Boston it was voted to place the price of fare from Boston to Onset and return, from May 1st, 1888, at $2,15; to Lake Pleasant from Boston and return, from July 15th to Sept. 15th, at $3,75.

Decaying and moribund religions are, as in this vile persecution of the Jews in Russia and Germany, betaking themselves to their last resources; they have lost everything but their myths, once the illusion of the childhood of humanity, but now the scorn of its maturity; once accepted by ignorance, but now contradicted by science; leaving to the clinging believer, whose eyes are closed and ears stopped, no other refuge than the frightful and absurd creed, Credo quia absurdum (I believe because it is absurd).—Victor Hugo.

Appeal in Behalf of Robert Cooper.

In our issue for March 17th we transferred to our columns from those of the London Medium and Daybreak an earnest appeal in behalf of the Spiritualistic veteran, ROBERT COOPER, Esq., of Eastbourne, Sussex, Eng., who has for over a quarter of a century been a prominent advocate in that country and America—his services embracing Lyceum work, journalistic publication, platform speaking, etc., etc., besides which he has written several choice spiritual songs. He was at one time manager of the far-famed Davenport Boys.

Worldly troubles have gathered around him in his latter days, and he who unstintedly devoted time and money to sustain the cause in its early stages, now finds himself, in his sixty-seventh year, smitten with blindness and failing health. In this emergency the English Spiritualists are taking steps to save him from utter ruin and want. The subjoined figures are here submitted as evidence of how strongly the appeals of the Medium have worked upon the friends in England.

Over the Hills to the Westward.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Having filled my engagements in Eastern cities, closing with excellent audiences and success in New York March 4th, I was soon on my way to the Mississippi valley, where I expect to make my voice heard in defense of the facts, philosophy and truths of spirit-life and intercourse. During my forty years of itinerant labors in the cause, I have never missed an engagement or an appointment from sickness, personal accident, or other cause; and only a few times when the conveyances could not carry me to the place. I have missed but few Sundays, and those were more than trebled by week evening gatherings. I can safely say I have lectured more times, more years and in more places than any person on this subject, yet I do not feel that my work is done, although my forty years' travels in the sequel to the "Life-Line" is filled out for the readers of our literature.

Since my return from California I have spent most of my time in New England—home of my unhappy childhood, and yet dear to me from the many kindred souls it contains, and the many pleasant homes that have sheltered and rested me, and which are always open and dear to me; and as the inmates read this, they will know each is included. It may be my lot to visit some of them again, but not many, as my closing few years will be spent among my dear and loving descendants, whose homes are in the West. March and April will be spent in Ohio and Indiana, and all the time occupied; but May and June I have reserved for rest at the home of my daughter and son-in-law in Cobden, Ill., where berries and other fruits are abundant. I shall be glad to get letters from my many Eastern friends at my Cobden home in May and June, or at Evansville, Ind., in April. The books will all be mailed as ordered from the BANNER OF LIGHT bookstore soon as out of press, and I trust my many friends will be pleased with them. WARREN CHASE.

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

[Notices under this heading must reach this office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.]

J. Frank Baxter last Sunday, 18th inst., appeared before interested audiences in Norwich, Conn., and will again lecture there next Sunday, 25th inst. His lectures on the occasion of the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism are fixed for Meriden, Conn. (probably), Thursday evening, March 29th; Hartford, Conn., on Friday, March 30th; Tremont Temple, Boston, Saturday afternoon, March 31st, and Haverhill, Brittan Hall, Sunday, April 1st. He will also lecture in Haverhill, Sunday, April 8th, and in Providence, R. I., the three remaining Sundays of the month.

Mrs. S. R. Stevens has returned to Boston and is now located at 96 West Newton street, where she may be addressed for lecture engagements.

Dr. Dean Clarke, who gave great satisfaction to the Ingersoll Society last Sunday, speaks at Springfield, Mass., March 25th, and at Newburyport, April 1st—Anniversary. Is open for the rest of April and May. Address him in care of this office.

W. F. Peck finished a very successful two weeks' engagement last Sunday, at Lynn. The audiences increased from the start. He will speak at Brockton, March 25th, 28th and April 1st; at Haverhill, April 15th and 22d; at Fitchburg, April 29th. Will be in Worcester the greater part of May, and in Willimantic, Conn., during June. He will have charge of the vocal music at Cassadaga Camp-Meeting. His time, with the exception of one or two Sundays, is all engaged until September. Societies desiring his services for next season would do well to apply soon. "First come, first served." Address 566 Columbus Avenue, Boston.

Mrs. Abby N. Burnham lectured during the month of February in Trenton, N. J., to increasing audiences, the Daily Emporium and The Times of that city speaking appreciatively concerning her addresses. She spoke in Philadelphia, Pa., March 1st; Pigeon Cove, Mass., March 4th. She can be addressed at 304 Shawmut Avenue, Boston, Mass.

J. W. Fletcher lectured to excellent audiences in Providence on Sunday, giving a large number of tests. He will speak there for the last time next Sunday. Mr. Fletcher will deliver "A Ramble over Europe" at the Unitarian Church, Milton, Mass., on Friday evening—illustrated by many dissolving views.

Mrs. Clara A. Field, THE BANNER'S Southern agent, has closed her engagement with the Spiritualist Society of St. Augustine, and gone to Palatka and the southern section of Florida. The Press of St. Augustine makes editorial reference to her departure from that city in a kindly and appreciative vein; we shall copy its remarks next week.

Mrs. H. S. Lake speaks at Newburyport, Mass., Sunday, March 25th; the Sundays of April she will be in Philadelphia.

Dr. Dean Clarke before the Ingersoll Society.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Dr. Dean Clarke addressed the Free-Thinkers at Paine Memorial Hall last Sunday afternoon on "Republicanism vs. Romanism." A large and enthusiastic audience was in attendance, and listened to his stirring portrayal of the dangers threatening our Republic from the insidious machinations of the arch foe of civil and religious liberty. The audience was in hearty accord with this able speaker, frequently interrupting him with applause, and at the close of his most eloquent peroration their applause continued for some time.

Doubtless Dr. Clarke will have another call to quicken the souls of those who so highly appreciated his grand effort. J. C. S.

A New Book:

Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum. A Sequel to "The Life-Line of the Lone One."

This book, of three hundred and twenty-four pages, is now in press, and will be for sale at the Banner of Light Bookstore in a few days, and the copies mailed to my friends who have so kindly sent me their subscriptions—for which I return my thanks, and trust the book will be satisfactory to them.

My address and home will, after this date, be in the West, but duly advertised in the BANNER OF LIGHT. Copies of "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," and my other books, will be mailed as ordered at the BANNER OF LIGHT office in Boston, and also by me at any time on receipt of price, as before stated, $1,10 for the above, or $3,00 for my four books—two in paper and two in cloth—sent by mail, postage paid. Persons in the West may also pay me their subscriptions to the BANNER OF LIGHT, and the price of any book published by Colby & Rich, and receive the same by mail. WARREN CHASE.

The 31st of March.

As notices are coming in for publication regarding the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, from various sections of the country, THE BANNER desires the friends to send reports to it for publication, and have them prepared as briefly as is consistent with the matter given.

Lynn, Mass.—S. H. Holbrook writes: "W. F. Peck lectured before the First Progressive Society of Spiritualists of Lynn on the 11th and 18th insts., to good audiences. The eloquent utterances of the speaker, and the forcible manner in which he presented them, together with the masterly handling of his subjects and the fine rendering of his vocal selections, held the attention of an appreciative audience to the close.—On the 25th inst., Frank T. Ripley, the test medium, will occupy the platform."

The Children's Lyceum.—Mrs. E. B. Merrill, Secretary, (53 Lowell street, Lynn,) writes: "At our session March 18th, we had an attendance of fifty-two members, with every officer and leader present. Recitations were given by Gracie Barrett, Jessie Hutchins, Jessie Watson, Stanley Balcom, Ethel Herrick and Lilla Hurd; Mr. Bartlett sang, and readings were given by Miss Estes, Mrs. Barrett, Mr. Emerson and Mrs. Williams. Mrs. Smith of the Boston Lyceum was present and favored us with a few remarks.—We had an entertainment concluding with a dance on the evening of Wednesday, March 7th. The comedy of "The Only Young Man in Town" was given by members of the Lyceum, and was a success both in detail and financially.—We meet at Cadet Hall every Sunday at twelve. Would be happy to see friends of the cause at any time."

Newburyport, Mass.—Joseph D. Stiles, the well-known medium, lectured and gave tests on Sunday, affording great satisfaction.—Mrs. H. S. Lake comes again next Sunday, for the third time this season.—Mr. and Mrs. Rufus E. Brawn, who leave this week for Kingman, Arizona, were tendered a farewell reception on Saturday evening last, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Pride.—The Independent Club, which has been duly incorporated under the laws of the State, has completed its organization by electing Albert K. Patten, Grand Master; Mrs. N. A. Easson, Grand Matron; Frank H. Fuller, Scribe; Mrs. Louise V. Hidden, Treasurer; and the following Board of Directors: Mr. and Mrs. William Jameson, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Ash, Mrs. Dr. M. A. Green, Mrs. Annie B. Varina, Oscar A. Edgerley, Mrs. Catharine Poor, Mrs. Jennie Thomas and the Board of Officers. H.

Portsmouth, N. H.—Dr. Wm. Critchley writes: "March 4th Mrs. S. Dick gave general satisfaction in this place. On the 11th we had the great pleasure of listening to Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock. On the 18th Mrs. S. Dick again addressed us under influence of Bro. Charles W. Gardner, and gave a number of readings and tests; she will be with us again April 22d and 29th."

Fitchburg, Mass.—Mrs. E. S. Loring, Secretary, writes: "Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes addressed this Society March 11th, in Knights of Labor Hall, at 2 and 7 P. M., upon Spiritualism, Science and Progression, Past and Present—two very eloquent and instructive lectures, which were closely listened to.—The 25th of the present month Mr. A. E. Tisdale will occupy the platform."

Providence, R. I.—Mary E. A. Whitney writes: "J. William Fletcher addressed two large audiences in Blackstone Hall, on Sunday, March 18th. He will be with us again Sunday, the 25th.—We expect to have a very enjoyable time at the entertainment to be given on the evening of Anniversary day. We hope for a good attendance to celebrate our Easter."

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

GIRARD COLLEGE THEOLOGY.

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D. D., LL.D.,
Author of "Marriage and Divorce," "The Bible—Whence and What," "Man—Whence and Whither," etc.

☞ The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.'"
The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 24th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Most Holy and Divine Spirit! thou Great Sustaining Power which doth give animation and force to every form of existence! thou Supreme Breath, permeating the entire universe with force and activity, we acknowledge thee as our Father God. We bow before thee in recognition of wisdom and almighty truth. We would breathe in something of thy tenderness and love; we would receive in our souls some new measure of thy priceless truth that will uplift and illuminate our hearts, and make our minds more and more receptive to knowledge and understanding. We accord to thee all praise for the blessings of life; for we realize that from thee we gather all that is ours by way of experience, of discipline, of effort and achievement. Oh! our Father God, we would become so thoroughly imbued with thy divine spirit of peace and harmony as to feel our souls awakened into new life, and into new sympathy with our brothers and our sisters.

We ask that this day we may receive from angelic sources pearls of truth and wisdom that will be as a crown of joy to our inquiring spirits. We ask to receive the sympathy and assistance of angel ones who dwell in worlds beyond, that their sweet, uplifting influence may fall upon our lives, creating a sustaining atmosphere around each one that will benefit and bless us. As we cry, oh! our Father God, for such helpfulness from the angels above, may we each one be ready to accord to them something of welcome, of sympathy and kindly feeling that will bless and uplift their own efforts in seeking to befriend humanity.

We ask thy benediction to rest upon all mankind, especially upon the lowly and the weak, who need it so much. May they be blessed and uplifted, strengthened and consoled in the hour of woe, until they shall realize and acknowledge thy power and presence, and the love of thy angels forevermore.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By L. R. S.] From the Message Department of the BANNER of Jan. 7th I take this extract: "Should the magnetic attachment between the spirit seeking expression and birth in mortal life, and the prospective mother, become severed and the spirit be obliged to pass out of her atmosphere and be unable to re-connect itself with her form and with the fœtus within," etc. Please tell us where the spirit, in such a case, will keep itself until another body is ready for it?

ANS.—A spirit of this class would, if enabled to express himself to your understanding, call himself an unfortunate individual or entity, because he had not secured that lodgment within, or attachment to, the physical form which he desired to possess and to operate for his own use. Such a spirit will not be impelled back into that realm of space from which he came, seeking contact with material things, but he will find a habitation within the spiritual atmosphere and environments of this earth. Possibly he may find an opportunity of coming into direct contact with another physical form, within a comparatively brief space of time, and perhaps not; it depends very much upon the operation of this law of which we speak.

Possibly this spirit may, for many, many years, reaching into centuries, not find favorable conditions for expression through a material form; and if this be so he will be surrounded by a spiritual atmosphere which will buoy him up, give him, to a certain degree at least, an experience that will be of use to him in time to come.

We know that this touches upon another question, and one which has been canvassed between spirits and mortals during the revelations of Spiritualism to mankind—the question of the existence of those beings who never found an experience in contact with vital matter. Spiritualists, or many of them, believe that those members of their family, so-called, who did not receive any active experience on earth, but loosened their hold upon matter, even at the hour of birth, or perhaps had never gained a direct hold upon the physical life, but had anticipated so doing, in watching the formation of a physical form and coming into the direct atmosphere of a prospective mother, live and hold a relationship in other worlds to those parents whom they would have claimed had they been born under the direct law of birth, in accordance with natural events; and this is true, even though it may not seem to harmonize with the statement we have made concerning the birth, or the lack of generation and birth, of those spirits of whom we speak.

For example: take a case of the birth of a physical form where no life is manifested. You have only a clay-cold body, senseless to the touch, giving no response to the care of those who receive it, and, you say: "This is a still-born child," and ask: "Where is the spirit which should have animated the form?" And we distinctly declare that the spirit has either never completely attached itself to that tiny form, or, if it has done so previous to the birth of the physical form into the outward life, the attachment has been broken, the spirit has loosened its hold and been propelled outward, beyond the atmosphere of the mother and the environment of the home. Does it mean, then, that the spirit is to be forever deprived of an experience with material things in outward life upon this planet? Decidedly no. It may be that the spirit feels a kinship between itself and those who would have proved to be its natural protectors had it gained a footing on the earth, for spiritual kinship is what really forms a true relationship between souls, and those who would have been its earthly parents may claim the spirit as of their own kind, belonging to their own family, and give and receive care and sympathy in the ages to come. Nevertheless, sometime in the years before it, that spirit may and undoubtedly will find an opportunity of expressing its activity and its individuality through a material existence; it will, under the great law, come again sometime within the atmosphere of a prospective mother.

Possibly there may not be the same degree of sympathy and affection existing between the two spirits, and yet conditions may be provided by which that soul may attach itself to a physical organism, pass through the experiances of birth, growth and physical decay, gaining discipline and opportunity for developing its interior powers and perceptions in contact with physical objects and material laws, which must be of untold benefit to its soul in time to come. Perhaps ages may pass before the spirit finds this opportunity of which we speak, but it will be environed by an atmosphere tending toward its soul-unfoldment, and possibly may come in contact with physical life in a sufficient degree to watch the evolutions of material law, and when the time comes take advantage of them.

Q.—Which is best for a person's health, the sleeping late in the morning or rising early?

A.—That depends very much upon the constitution, temperament and general condition of the individual. One rule will not apply to all cases. We have seen persons who have been greatly benefited in health by rising at a very early hour and inhaling the morning atmosphere, while we have known other persons who have been depleted of physical vitality by pursuing a like course. One whose nervous energies are very strongly acted upon during the day, and who has duties devolving upon his attention to a late hour in the evening, will perhaps find it impossible to recuperate his vital forces during the early hours of night, and may be obliged to remain upon the couch until what would seem a late hour to another person filled with vital force, whose occupations and duties are such as do not wear upon his nervous system and tax his vital energy; therefore this is a question which each individual must answer for himself.

It is well for each one to experiment according to his own light in this direction. If one can continue his repose until a later hour than perhaps another can do, and finds that it only invigorates his system and gives his mental nature strength, he is justified in so doing; but if he discovers that he feels generally better in mind and body by rising at an early hour, then it is his duty to pursue that course.

Q.—[By R. G. Dowson.] Did man at any time exist on this planet with a different anatomical structure from that which he has to-day?

A.—In gazing back over the history of mankind, we may trace the ascent of man from the lower kingdoms, although this tracing back can be pursued only by ideas, because there are links in the chain that are broken, and even lost, and so we cannot prove conclusively by physical testimony that man has thus ascended. We believe, from the history of this planet, that ages upon ages have elapsed since this world came into existence; but we can understand that in its earlier stages the earth's surface could most certainly not have produced man—the human being—as he is to-day, or as he has been in the centuries past. From a stage of wild chaos to one of partial order, must have taken a long series of centuries and a long process of development.

We are told that the primeval years could show only a state of wild disorder, not only of vegetable growth but also in animal life; strong, uncouth, coarse forms appearing in both these departments of existence. But as the ages rolled on, and the development of the planet increased, we discover that higher types of vegetable growth, more symmetrical forms of animal life made their appearance in various quarters of the globe; and so the years rolled on, until by-and-bye that appeared which, while it resembled in some respects the forms of animal life which had lived and passed on, still bore a more symmetrical form, a grander proportion of stature and general feature, and we find that this strange being, scarcely animal, certainly not human, as we gaze upon humanity to-day, was endowed with a degree of intelligence that manifested itself in calculation, in forethought, in the exercise of superior sight that, as it planned and adapted means to end, may have been the progenitor of the human race as it stands in the present time.

Anatomically considered, there has been a close relationship between the earliest man of the world and the highest type of manhood of this age, and we may even discover a relationship between humanity and the animal kingdom, anatomically considered, because as we study the foot of that most ponderous animal, the elephant, and continuing our investigations, study the feet of various animals until we come down to those of our domestic life, we find a relationship, an analogy between them. Then we take the hand and foot of the human being and study them closely, still defining the relationship between these and those members that belong to the animal form.

We believe that the highest type of anatomical structure is presented to earth in our present form of humanity, and yet to our mind this present form will, through the ages to come, so symmetrically develop, become so refined in feature and in general appearance as to bear but a slight resemblance to those forms which are yours at the present time.

Q.—If man, in the beginning of his life on earth, was a special creation, was a single pair only created, or were there innumerable pairs?

A.—Believing, as we most profoundly do, that man was not a special creation, but that he has ascended rather than descended from those forms of life and activity which appeared below and before him, upon this planet, we certainly cannot believe the theory and affirmation that one pair of human creatures first appeared upon this planet, and that from that one pair have descended all the human beings who have dwelt upon this plane during the thousands of years that have gone. To our mind life is ever in evolution, developing possibilities from within, of external growth and manifestation, and as we do most sincerely believe that the earlier ages produced only animal life upon this planet, because the earth had not become prepared for the habitation of man, and that from these higher, more fully developed forms of animal life, the human form has evolved, until it has grown up to its present condition, we must believe that there has come down through the ages one grand symmetrical law, from which there has been no appeal, the law of development and growth, of evolution, if you will, and that, through the operations of this law have come forth the grandest types, not only of matter, but also of intellectual growth, which exist among you at the present day.

You may ask, in connection with this question: If this be so, when has mind or spirit come in contact with matter, and taken possession of the human form, to express itself in mental and in spiritual ways? And we reply: To our understanding, all forms of life have forever been endowed with and permeated by the great soul-principle of life, and this soul-principle or spiritual power has been making its way forever, throughout the various departments of existence, upon this plane of planetary life. Therefore we do not deny a soul-force, a spiritual power, to even the forms of animal life that we see around and beneath us.

We believe that the same soul-force, in higher development, in grander power, has forever vitalized and electrified all forms of human life; that the first rude races of humanity which sprung forth in savage guise scarcely higher in form and appearance than the higher types of animal life, must have been endowed with the same spiritual principle and soul-power. Through the operations of this principle, ever making its way, have come forth the intellectual thought and mental activity which to-day surprise and delight the world.

What does it portend? It speaks of the possibility within mankind, of the grand reservoir of mental and spiritual force stored up within humanity, which may some day be revealed and expanded, in grand, utilitarian ways, for the benefit of the race, and we may learn from this the lesson that as man utilizes his energy, puts forth his mental power into active operation and external expression, he only develops more and more of that vital force, enables the possibilities of his nature to work out and express themselves in large measure and grander results for himself and his race.

QUES.—[By V. S. P.] When happiness, either in the pursuit of knowledge by interchange of thought with those whose conditions are such that a reciprocity of feeling exists, or the deeper feeling induced by a condition of friendship, or of love, cannot be manifested without causing pain and sorrow to those who have been accustomed to "look up" to us for aid, counsel, protection, etc., is it not the nobler part to forbear from such happiness, and from a sense of "duty" hold in abeyance such conditions of happiness, trusting in the future ("that panacea for all ills") for all the rights, privileges, blessings, necessities, etc., that our soul-being may require?

A.—This question brings us into the realm of self-abnegation, and those who dwell within that atmosphere do indeed occupy a high moral and spiritual plane of being. One who can suppress his natural desire for the reception of that love and sympathy which he feels must overflow the hearts of friends whom he admires, because he feels that by the cultivation and the expression of that love and sympathy he may perhaps cause pain to another, or in some way affect the peace of mind of those whom he desires to bless, comes into this realm of self-abnegation, and places his desires, his hopes and his happiness beneath his feet, and must, of necessity, think more closely of the welfare of his fellows than of his own pleasure.

Certainly one who practices self-denial in this or in any other respect, grows in spirituality, and comes to find a comfort and consolation in things above the merely sensual plane of existence, grows into harmony with the spiritual forces of life to such a degree that he is not dependent altogether upon the exercise of his physical sensations for pleasure and for happiness. One who puts himself aside, so to speak, thinking only of the good and the delight that may be brought to others by his so doing, gains immeasurably, after a time, in that spiritual compensation which flows into his soul from the higher life.

At first his experience may be a very trying one, his struggles with self keen and severe; he may be obliged to put his hopes and desires under subjection, time and time again, before he gains a self-mastery; but every effort he makes only increases his mental strength, his spiritual power, and builds up the activity of a good, clear character, and helps him in overcoming self and the adversities of the world.

But one would say: "How can we do this when all things seem to call us out into an opposite direction? The allurements are such as to make us again and again gratify our own personal desires, even if it be at the expense of another's happiness." And we reply that it is only by making the effort. At first you may be weak, because of the blinding glare of these external things; but as you endeavor to forget self in the thought of your friends and those who are near to you, you will grow stronger until the perfect day when all selfishness may be overcome. Such a soul finds and must forever find compensation for its denial and sacrifice in the world beyond. There all mysteries will in time be explained, for the spirit has the opportunity of investigating every realm of seeming mystery that obscures his sight; he finds his mind expanding, becoming enlarged so as to take up new studies and new lines of thought, which bring an elucidation of these puzzling things. As he goes on the misunderstandings of life are swept away, the problems explained, and he begins to grow into the perfect harmony of soul-life, so that he will blend with those spiritual beings, whether they are on earth or in higher worlds, who are in kinship with his life, his own line of conduct, his own aspirations, and growing into harmony with these, he will gain that supply for his affectional nature, of love, of sympathy, of kindly feeling, which will more than repay him for any sacrifice he has made in the past or for any hope which he has been denied.

Spirit Violet.

I always feel that I am one of the large band of spirits who are interested in this circle-room and its good work, and I have always felt at home on this platform, whether I have attempted to voice a few words of love to dear ones, or whether I have remained a silent watcher of the work attempted by other spirits.

To-day I am privileged to appear principally to assist a good spirit to make himself known to his friends. He has been somewhat cramped and limited in his spirit-life because of untoward circumstances attendant upon his departure from the body. He met with a severe accident, and there still remains with him a memory, or rather something connected with the law of association, that disturbs him in his efforts to understand more of spirit-life, to take a practical hold upon its events and experiences. I have advised him to come here and make himself known, thus perhaps partially freeing himself from those unpleasant conditions, and at the same time coming into communication with his friends on earth, and I am pleased to make way for that spirit. He was a good man, and is still; a foreigner by birth, and perhaps one not always understood; but in spirit-life these things count for nothing; the man or the woman, in whatever guise presented, is considered there as operated upon by motive, by thought and aspiration.

While here, I would send my greeting to my dear friends, and especially to my beloved father. Less than a week has passed since he again rounded out one of his earthly years. I was with him, and sought to make myself felt and understood by my spiritual greeting and congratulation on the return of the anniversary of his birth. I know that he felt a peaceful influence, that he understood my presence, and that of other dear ones, which gave me satisfaction; and to-day I bring him the greeting and love of brothers and sisters, and of my dear mother, from the angel-world, and also many remembrances and words of cheer. If I could only utter each one, I know he would feel that he was indeed truly blessed, by such pleasant memories and happy tokens, flowing out to him from the spiritual world. I would also like my brothers and sisters on earth to know how dearly I remember them, and how I am, at times, privileged to watch over their lives, and to bring a peaceful influence to their hearts.

I have, in my beautiful home, the sweet little blossom that faded in the household of my sister, only to bloom in brighter beauty on the other shore. Mother is watching over her, and in our pleasant home the little bud finds happiness, peace, and everything that is beautiful, to assist in her development and spiritual growth.

I would like, also, to give my greetings to Mr. Barney, and to thank him for all his kindness, not only as exercised in sympathy toward me, but also toward many spirits who are seeking communion with their friends on earth. I am interested in his good work, and I know that he will prosper and succeed, not so fully, perhaps, in material ways as one might wish, but in many spiritual directions; and I realize that a harvest will by-and-bye come to his life, which will prove the fruition of his works and efforts to assist mankind. I have seen the shadows pressing down upon his heart, and known that he has been misunderstood by those who should have understood and appreciated his efforts; but I would say to that dear friend that every shadow must be swallowed up in the clear sunlight of truth, which is even now streaming down upon your way.

By-and-bye all misunderstandings and bitter feelings will subside, because they will have no room for growth or for development.

I wish also to say to a dear friend of mine: Allie and Estelle send their greetings and their best love: they are watching over their dear mother, and are doing their best to bring to her that encouragement and instruction which she most desires at this time. They will do their best to guide the dear brother into the right path, which is for his happiness and prosperity, but they wish him to be cautious, and to move slowly, because sometimes there seems a shadow of doubt falling over the way which he would like to tread; it may prove a more bitter experience than in his aspirations he looks forward to.

I will now close. You may announce me as Spirit Violet, to her Cincinnati friends, and I think I will be understood. I would like to say, also, to many friends who are sending out their thought to me, in the spirit-world, I understand and appreciate their thought, and I would respond to all in tangible ways, if possible, but I always do respond in loving sympathy and spiritual attention to those who reach out to me for something of assistance and influence from the world beyond.

John Shobe.

Mr. Chairman, I knew well about this spirit-return, but I have not made use of it as I would like, and as I hope to sometime. This light from the spirit-world streamed across my way, and gave me strength, and many times when I felt the illuminations from beyond, and knew that the good spirits were about me, helping me in my work, it seemed that I was blessed beyond all others. The good spirits brought me power to move my pencil, so that I could make the pictures they wished to show to mortals. I could see the representations within my own soul, and I tried to give them expression, but while I did the best my poor hand and brain could do, they never quite came up to my thought, and so, sir, I was never entirely satisfied with the production. Now I am trying to get into this work in other ways on the spirit side.

Sometimes I feel as though I could grasp the conception clearly, then again a shadow comes before my vision and I lose hold of that which I want to get; so I have thought of coming here, and the sweet spirit who has spoken to you, and for whose work I had the great privilege of outlining the illustrations before I went from the body, has assisted me to-day. I feel that it was one of my best works; it gives me more satisfaction than many others have done. I knew I was assisted by the spirit-world; I felt its power all through my being as I worked for the angels.

Now, sir, I would like to give my greeting to my friends. I have tried to manifest to them, and have, in certain instances, given a little knowledge of my presence, but I have not come here, and I have not made myself known as I want to. I would have them know I am alive and trying to be busy. I find circumstances more favorable to me now than I did here, and, take all things together, I am pleased with the change. I would not have gone out quite so suddenly and in such a lonely place, if I could have had a choice, but we are not asked our will in this matter, and must go as we are summoned.

I wish to thank my friends for all their kindness to me, especially the father of the spirit who has just spoken; and tell them, sir, that I shall try to repay every kindness, to return in some way the benefits that have been showered upon me. You will excuse me for coming. I am John Shobe, of Cincinnati.

Lizzie Hall.

I have only a few words to say, Mr. Chairman, but I feel if I do not take the opportunity now I may never find it again. I am assisted, magnetically speaking, to approach by one who is present in the audience who has known of me, and who perhaps will not feel sad that I have come. I wish to send my love to my friends, and to have them realize in its fullness the grand truth of spirit return. It seems to me something of vast importance to know that those who die are not really dead nor lost, but that they live in pleasant homes, and have the power of making their homes as pleasant and beautiful as they can wish.

I would like my near friends and relatives to give me an opportunity of coming to them personally, as I have many things to say. There are several little matters connected with material life, my own past, that I would like to discuss, but I cannot speak of them in a public way. If my friends will visit a medium somewhere, and really desire me to come, I will do my best to answer that desire. I have in my possession such knowledge concerning these papers that are now coming up for consideration as I think would be of benefit if I could give it. This may not be understood by any but those bound to me nearest by family ties, but it will be understood by them, I think, and if they care to know what information I have I hope they will do their part in seeking for it. I send my love, and other friends with me do the same.

Samuel desires me to mention him, as he never has had an opportunity to come for himself, and does not know that he will have one. He wishes his friends to know he is alive, active and doing well in another life.

My friends live in Cambridge, and I am Lizzie Hall.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 24th, 1888.

William Cutts.

I lived in Kittery, Me., when I was in the mortal form. You may take my name as William Cutts. I would like to get into communication with Mabel, if possible. Perhaps she may see my letter, read it, and say: "I know that is, after all, grandfather's writing." Sarah is with me, also the little one whom years ago we considered "dead." There is no death, only changing from one form to the other. "These little children taken out of their homes! where, oh! where have they gone?" has been the question often asked by the mother. Only gone to bloom in heaven. And then, again, they ask: "Why, oh! why do they take them away when just starting out in the bud?" The echo comes back again, Why? We look down the ages past and find it is the same to-day as it has been.

I will say, as near as I can reckon, it is not far from twenty-five years since they said William Cutts was dead. I think some of the old town's-people will remember me (for I hope I am not forgotten by them), and also some few loved ones that yet remain on the earth side.

Sarah Hodgman.

I, too, would like to say a few words. We all come asking for the privilege which we know the angel world gives out to us.

I belonged in Manchester, N. H. You may write my name as Sarah Hodgman. I would like to get into communication with my children, Chandler and Henry. Chandler has often tried to receive a message from me. He said, but a little while since, "Why, Clark! why is it? I have been to mediums, but I never can get anything from mother. Is it because there is not power enough? or is it because she cannot get control of the medium's organism?" Chandler, try again.

Father is with me, and Solomon Hodgman; also grandfather, grandmother, your Aunt Mary, and Uncle Robert. We often come together, but we are not together all the time any more than you are in the mortal. You know, since you made a little change in your business, Chandler, that you and Henry are not together all the time; therefore it proves to you also that we do come together at times, but not all the time, any more than you do here.

Chandler, try again, and I feel I may be able to control some one in the mortal so clearly that you will say: "Oh! mother! mother! you do live and are watching over me." Yes; my children, not a day passes but I come to you. Sometimes I flit away quickly; at other times there is an attraction that holds me longer by you.

Many years since they said that "Mother is dead." Not a great while since they said, "Father is dead." But, Chandler, I'd like you to try again; do n't be discouraged, for we can't control every organism. I find that so, but I will do the best I can.

Be patient, dear children. But a little while at the longest, and you will be able to lift the veil, as we do. You say, "Oh! mother, why did you leave us when we needed you so much?" The Father in heaven knew best, dear children.

Sarah Gould.

I know very well what they will say if I speak, but the gentleman says do n't stop to think what they are going to say. I lived in Boston. My name is Sarah Gould. I know—and I aint going to deny it—I was what they call a rank Methodist. What of it? It did n't hurt me any. But I find now I might have learned a little while I was here. I think, when I come to look back, it was rather a hindrance. I might have learned a little here. Now I must commence again and go to school.

I was just as honest and sincere in my belief as I am to-day in the knowledge of spirit-return. All we can do is to acknowledge we were in the dark. Hannah is here, and she says to me: "You may acknowledge; I'm not a-going to." Well, it makes no difference. I am merely speaking for myself.

I would like to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I see one in your meeting who will know who Corbin Gould's wife was. Corbin Gould lived up on Myrtle street.

Harrison is here, and wants to leave a letter also; but Hannah and Mary will not just yet. Here there is no sect or creed! we are all reaching for one place—that is heaven. I am willing to make the acknowledgment; as Corbin has said before, it is all we can do.

Helen, remember that the trials you have here will only be so many stars added to your crown in heaven. Do as near right as your spirit tells you, and you will at last reach the home beyond, where no trials enter and no ill words are spoken, no harsh looks come; but I would advise you, as you know Aunt Sarah would, to stay by the children; do right, and you will build your home more beautiful.

Eustis Jackson.

I am not going to tell where I went out. I lived once in Boston Highlands. My name is Eustis Jackson. It is no matter about the hospital: need n't say anything about that. They do n't care where I was.

My dear old mother yet stays in the mortal, away down in Maine. I often hear you say: "If I only knew my boy could come to me, how much it would lift the burden of life!" Oh! may the great angel host come nearer and nearer to you, mother, that you may fully realize that your boy lives, and not only lives, but is able, through the channel opened for him, to come and tell you, mother, that I am with you every day, and whenever there is an opportunity for you to come into communication with me privately, I will tell you many things that I would not like to speak publicly.

I know this letter will be sent to you by Laura, for she told me she would buy the paper every week and see if I could send a letter; and then she will send one to your own dear mother. God bless her efforts!

Zeke, as I call him—but I suppose I had better say Ezekiel—it was all right that you did n't go into that little scheme you were thinking of a few months ago. Too much money there! It will all come right eventually, but do n't think of getting too many irons in the fire at once; if you do, as sure as you live, some of them will get scorched.

I wish to say a few words to Helen and Laura; they will be a little surprised when they find I can write a good long letter; and I know also that they will understand the meaning of what I have said. Helen, do n't lose your courage; the angels will come and help you every day. Sometimes I find Zilpha by your side, and she tells me that as soon as possible she will send a message through the same post-office. I know she will, for she would n't have told me so if she had n't intended to do it. I am glad, Laura, that you are drifting into something that will give you a little more happiness this side, for you often feel lonely. Betsey tells me that she will send a letter too, so I think you will need to have a postman of your own.

They called me "Jacky" sometimes.

Ellen Clark Sherman.

I would like to send a word, but the team aint coming, is it? There was a team coming—that was all I knew about it.

You may place me at Tilton, N. H. Ellen Clark Sherman.

That team is all I can remember. I guess it had something to do with my going out. Father says so. I would like to say that father is with me, and mother too.

I am going to talk to you, Henry, for a few minutes. You will understand more fully why I thought the team was here. I did n't suffer any; had no realization of passing out, and the first I knew I saw one and another coming around me—Flavie and Harvey and Grandmother Clark all were coming. But I had left the mortal form. That is why I partook a little of the sensation that I had when I went away.

My home is beautiful, oh! beautiful beyond description, though so different from what I had ever outlined. Father said he could not have believed that it could possibly have been so beautiful, in conversation with Henry. He says that sometime he will send a communication direct.

My father is Moses Clark. Henry Clark is a cousin, and therefore is the nearest one we can reach. Many loved ones are also here, all anxiously thinking perhaps that they may some day be able to send a message.

Flossie Smith.

A gentleman said I could speak jess a word. I want my mamma and my papa to know I aint dead. I's only gone with a pretty lady. I is Flossie Smith. I lived here in the big city, way up in a high building. Gran'ma said I must n't talk much in meetin'. I want to thank Addie for the dolly; oh! big, big dolly! Flossie Smith.

Frank Butman.

I am Frank Butman, of Newburyport, Mass. I suppose by the movement of things they think I have got so far away that I do n't come home, but they are greatly mistaken. If I have tried once I have tried a dozen times to get control in your meetings here, but I did n't succeed. To day I feel as if I 'd got the floor.

I would like Nellie to know that Frank do n't get so far away but he can make his voice heard—and I will make my voice heard in old Newburyport. I have often been into their meetings where were one or more mediums, and still not a word would they say about Frank being there. Well, I've got to pardon them, I suppose.

Now, Ed Lunt, I would like you to know, and Ellen and Nellie and Pride, and every one of you (it would take me about three weeks to mention you all), that when I found Eben Manson had sent a letter it rather started me up a little, and I thought if I had had the power to materialize into perfect form with my blue suit on, then I ought to make one great, grand effort to send a letter.

Many changes have been made since they said that Frank Butman was dead. Never was there a greater mistake. I have gained a good deal of strength from one and another who are near me; when I first made the attempt to speak in some of their little circles hardly could they understand all I said. This was because of my passing out with the old dread disease, flattering and flattering on until the angel usher came for me.

I am happy, and to-day I would not exchange places with one here, not even if they 'd give me all old Newburyport contains, and they might add Plum Island.

George Wiley.

I would like to say a few words, if I can get my head just right. I had a good deal of trouble with my head or brain, when I went away. You may call my name George Wiley, from Wellfleet, Mass. I have tried so many times to get enough control in your meetings, sir, to send a few lines to my dear, dear old mother, who is looking for and waiting anxiously for a few words from George. Often she is worried, and feels so troubled on account of the way I went out—for I am not ashamed to say it was from the Danvers Asylum—the way I left the old mortal, that I was alone in my room when the death-angel as you call it, came and said, "Come up higher." Poor mother, to-day, cannot be reconciled to my going away.

Cousin John is with me, but for certain reasons I shall not speak much of him. He says those that were so closely connected with him in life, close the door and lock it closely. But there is a power that will unlock every door.

Mother! dear mother! your George lives to-day, and not only lives, but is awaiting the time when you, dear mother, shall come to meet me at my heavenly home. Father is with me, and uncle and Aunt Zuba. We are not together all the time, but at intervals. Another has just joined our happy number; and another in God's own good time will soon be added.

I have often stood by your side, Matilda, through the trials that have been placed on your shoulders. The burdens have been heavy, but there is a home beyond the veil, where no wrongs, no worriments come; no sickness finds us there; we do not need asylums or doctors, or attendants.

Mother, be patient; a few more rising and setting suns, and you will be with us.

Reception to J. Frank Baxter.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Underhill, 232 West 37th street, on Saturday evening, March 10th, a reception was tendered to Mr. J. Frank Baxter, who is occupying the platform of the First Society of Spiritualists during Mrs. Brigham's temporary absence. Mr. Underhill is at the Hot Springs in Arkansas for the benefit of his health. Mrs. Underhill received the guests in her affable and cordial manner, well known to all who have had the privilege of an evening at her pleasant home. An hour was spent in a social manner, and then Mr. Baxter remarked that he had been requested to say a word. He said that he was not an impromptu speaker; he wished, however, to say that he appreciated the gathering there that evening, and was glad to meet one and all; he wished he could remember every single face, and the name that belonged to the face; he begged to be excused from any extended remarks, because it was entirely out of his line to speak extemporaneously; those who had heard him lecture knew that he was not an inspirational speaker; he prepared all his lectures, writing them out in full.

Mr. Baxter's manner is easy and unassuming. He favored the company with singing "Beautiful Gates Ajar" in a soulful manner, every word being distinctly articulated, and therefore easily understood.

During the evening Miss Della Sawyer recited, with dramatic effect, "Discharged Again," and also a selection from "Romeo and Juliet."

Miss Edith Mason, a favorite wherever she may be, sang, "Tell Us Where Art Thou," "Welcome, Little Primrose Flower," and "Polly, the Cows are in the Corn."

A number of questions were asked, to which answers were given through Mrs. Underhill by means of raps. It was requested that raps might be given as though they were upon the piano. Mrs. Underhill said she never directed the spirits. She remarked that raps were not adapted to a large company; that they were more potent when there were but a few persons present; she was not as strong a rapping medium as she was twenty years ago, but was just as firm in her belief in Spiritualism as she was then; she could not control the raps twenty years ago, and she could not control them now. She often thought of her friends, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Newton, how much they had sacrificed for the cause of Spiritualism, and sometimes felt she did not do enough for the cause herself.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. LaForest, Mr. Benn, Mrs. Mason, Dr. Utley, Miss Kelsey, Mrs. Manchester, Mr. T. Merritt, Mr. and Mrs. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Mellish, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Chase, Mrs. De Boise, Mrs. Morrow, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Sawyer, and Mr. Sykes.

New York, March 12th, 1888. HERBERTUS.

Hon. Warren Chase.

Previous to the lecture of Hon. Warren Chase before the First Spiritual Society of Albany, N. Y., Friday evening, March 2d, the following preambles and resolutions were read and adopted:

Whereas, Our brother and fellow worker, the Hon. Warren Chase, is to lecture for us this evening, and is en route to the West, in compliance with calls made by Spiritualists of that section; and

Whereas, We realize that nothing but an unselfish interest in the cause he loves could at his ripe age prompt him to enter a broader field and make further sacrifices; therefore,

Resolved, That the forty years or more of faithful service rendered by him to the cause of Spiritualism have been greatly blessed in freeing humanity from theological bondage and mental servitude, and making known the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

Resolved, That for his earnest ministrations to the spiritual needs—for the solicitude and sympathy which have always brought him near the hearts of the people—for his exertions to ameliorate the conditions of suffering humanity; for his undaunted courage in battling against the popular error of salvation through the blood of an innocent person—the members of this and all spiritual societies owe him a debt of gratitude which we nor they can ever fully pay.

Resolved, That when he leaves here for his labors in the West, our kindest wishes will attend him, and he will always have our full confidence and highest esteem.

New Publications.

PHYSICAL CULTURE FOR HOME AND SCHOOL, Scientific and Practical. By Prof. D. L. Dowd. With 80 Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, pp. 300. New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

The author, who states that he has long realized that there existed a demand for an intelligent and practical system of teaching physical culture, one that would "not only develop muscle for muscle's sake, but for health's sake, and for the sake of intellect, morality and beauty," has written this book to meet it, and it will be found admirably adapted to the end in view. It embraces physical culture in its entirety, not excluding the vocal organs and the muscles of the face, numerous engravings greatly assisting to a clear comprehension of the instructions. The exercises it prescribes are such as can be performed by any one in his own house.

WHO CARES? Episodes in the life of Mary Campbell. Facts, not Fancies. By Mrs. Harriet N. K. Goff, with an Introduction by Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler. Sq. 12mo, cloth, pp. 212. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Bros.

The leading character of this is one driven by the falsities of society life into evil ways. Her course through vice to virtue and her subsequent efforts in behalf of her fallen sisters are vividly depicted. Dr. Cuyler says in his introduction that the book is written by a benevolent lady who has devoted many years to unselfish philanthropic labors. Its purpose is to warn the unsuspecting, lift up the fallen and incite to efficient action in a much needed reform.

LITTLE POEMS FOR LITTLE CHILDREN. Suitable for Memorizing and for Recitation at School and at Home. Compiled by Valeria J. Campbell. 16mo, cloth, pp. 203. Boston and Chicago: Interstate Pub. Co.

Excellent good judgment and an appreciation of the tastes and requirements of young children is displayed in this volume of favorite poems, proverbs and maxims, compiled with the fact in view that lessons in rhyme, thoroughly learned, are seldom forgotten. The children will like it.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE; Discourses Upon Holy Scripture. By Joseph Parker, D. D., Minister of the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, London. 8vo, cloth, pp. 358. New York: Funk & Wagnalls. For sale by De Wolfe, Fisk & Co., Boston.

This is the seventh volume of a work previously noticed by us, and treats upon topics of the Old Testament from I. Sam. xviii. to I. Kings xiii. The reputation of the author will commend it to those of his way of thinking.

MINON. A Tale of Love and Intrigue. By Frederick W. Pearson. 16mo, paper, pp. 135. New York: The Wells Pub. Co.

A story founded on a Canadian mystery, pathetic and tragic in tone; the first volume of the "Elite Library."

SNATCHED FROM THE POOR-HOUSE. A Young Girl's History. By J. N. Clodfelter. 12mo, paper, pp. 272. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Bros.

A realistic novel, of strength, originality and interest.

Men who deny to others the right of speech are not fit to live with honest men.—Ingersoll.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From his home, in Pomfret, Conn., March 2d, 1888, Hon. William Osgood, aged 82 years and 1 month.

Mr. Osgood was a man beloved and respected by all who knew him; a genial friend, a whole-souled reformer, and consistent Spiritualist. He was a constant and devoted reader of the BANNER OF LIGHT, which he prized above all other papers. He was for many years a worthy deacon of the Abbington Society Congregational Church of Pomfret. He represented his town in the Connecticut Legislature two years with credit to himself and his constituents. He was one of nature's noblemen; was strictly honest in his dealings with his fellow-men, and will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends, who were cheered by his kind words and deeds of charity. LUCIAN CARPENTER.

78 Cranston street, Providence, R. I., March 12th, 1888.

From Walden, Vt., March 2d, 1888, Matthias Stone, aged 85 years.

He was a firm believer in Spiritualism many years. He had such evidence of the fact of spirit return and communicating with mortals that he could not doubt. Blessed spirit! now may you enjoy the full fruition of all your hopes.

For The Nervous
The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

Dr. Hardcastle's
TOOTH-LIFE.
A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

This Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

Put up in a neat box. Sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. For sale by COLBY & RICH.

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

Finely executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

MAGNETIC INSOLES

MAGNETISM is one of the most powerful life-giving substances known to our race. Its action upon all animal kind is to quicken into life and polarity the sluggish molecules of the physical body. This majestic substance comes as near the central action of life itself as human intelligence can analyze.

When we apply a powerful Magnetic Shield to a body to eliminate disease, we work in strict harmony with Nature's highest laws, and utilize the most potential force we can employ next to intelligence to overcome morbid conditions of mind and body. Of all the known curative agents under the control of mortal mind and human will, Magnetism excels all others, and is incomparable in its magical action and quick results.

The finer and more subtle the force we use the quicker and better results we obtain.

To impart magnetic power and potency to a physical body is to give it strength, vitality and renewed youth.

The vivifying energy radiated constantly from Magnetic Shields stimulates alike the mental forces of the mind and increases all the animal power.

Magnetic Shields constantly feed the blood with warm, rich Fibrine, multiply the red corpuscles, polarize the iron, and intensify the vivivic principle of life.

Whoever wears these Shields will take on awakened mental and physical energies, which in very truth is to renew one's youth. Every Shield we manufacture is worth its weight in gold to suffering humanity.

Good, sound, vigorous health, is worth more than worldly wealth, hence these Shields are invaluable, for these powerful Health Batteries have no other place in life, or work to do, but to vitalize the blood and compel sound health in all physical bodies. If you want good health, and the cheerful, happy days of youth, wear the Shields and know what Magnetic Polarity means.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Sundays, at 10½ A. M., 2½ and 7½ P. M. Eben Cobb, Conductor.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street, corner of Essex.—Sundays, at 2½ and 7½ P. M.; also Wednesdays at 8 P. M. Able speakers and test mediums. Excellent music. Prescott Robinson, Chairman.

1031 Washington Street.—The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society meets every Friday. Mrs. H. O. Torrey, Secretary. Private séance for members only, first Friday in each month; doors closed at 3 P. M. Public meetings every Friday evening at 7½.

The Independent Club, 1031 Washington Street, holds regular meetings every Monday evening, at 8 o'clock. The best speakers and music.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—Sundays, afternoon and evening. W. A. Hale, Chairman.

Chelsea.—The Ladies' Social Aid Society meets in Mrs. Buffum's parlors, 196 Chestnut street, every Friday afternoon and evening. All are invited. Mrs. E. H. Pratt, President; Mrs. M. A. Dodge, Secretary.

Cambridgeport.—Meetings held each Sunday evening at 7½ o'clock at St. George's Hall, 603 Main street, by the Spiritualist Society. H. P. Trask, President.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning, after congregational singing and a vocal duet by Mrs. Lovering and Charles W. Sullivan, Mrs. Luther announced as the theme of discourse, "The Wages of Sin is Death," and said: What is sin? It is the offspring of ignorance. If you transgress a law of your spiritual nature, the law is the master, and you become subject to the penalty attached to its transgression. If law is God, you sin against God. If the transgressed law is death, you must die. A selfhood belongs to every individual. Those who are not wise make mistakes, as with them ignorance is the prevailing power. Spiritualism has come to demonstrate a fact; it stands as the philosopher of life, and has wrapped itself in a mantle of hope. It has gathered together the giant minds of the present age, and numbers millions of truthseekers among its adherents, and the duty of every one of them to day is to protect mediumship, for it furnishes the foundation upon which Spiritualism rests. A large audience listened very attentively to the interesting and eloquent address. The President, Capt. Richard Holmes, announced that the Fortieth Anniversary would be celebrated by this Society in Berkeley Hall on Saturday, March 31st, and Sunday, April 1st—three sessions each day. Able lecturers, test mediums and musical talent have been secured for the occasion, and a very enjoyable time is anticipated. After a song by Charles W. Sullivan, Mrs. Luther closed with an invocation.

Evening.—After congregational singing, remarks by the President, and a song by Mrs. Lovering, the guide of Mrs. Luther very ably and eloquently spoke upon "American Liberty vs. Romanism." The same speaker will occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of March 13th, the members and friends of this Society held a social meeting at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. After a half hour's pleasant converse, a spiritual entertainment followed, Jacob Edson presiding. Mrs. Lovering opened the exercises with a pi ano solo and song, and read spirit-communications from her guides. Jacob Edson made a characteristic speech, which elicited applause. Dr. N. P. Smith and Mrs. Ida Whitlock made addresses, which commanded the closest attention of all. Mr. L. L. Whitlock spoke, and Mrs. Whitlock closed the exercises with a musical selection.

The next social meeting will be held March 27th. All are invited. MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

The Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society held a very enjoyable meeting in their rooms, 1031 Washington street, March 16th. A short but interesting address was made by Mr. Jacob Edson. Dr. Charles Harding gave a few character readings, and to Miss Amanda Bailey several very remarkable tests which she recognized as such. Mrs. M. E. Whittemore sang selections that were highly appreciated. Miss Lillian Rich read a selection with great ability, and Miss Bailey rendered several songs. The interest in this Society continues unabated, as the following announcements of its movements will show: On Friday evening, March 30th, the "Ladies' Aid" will tender the well-known test-medium, Mr. Joseph D. Stiles, a reception; Friday evening, April 6th, Mr. Charles Dawbarn will be given a reception by this Society; on the evening of Friday, April 13th, Miss Lucette Webster, assisted by her pupils, will give her thirteenth annual literary and musical entertainment, complimentary to the Ladies' Aid Society. The work is being rapidly pushed forward toward holding a fair in our hall during the third week in April, and we earnestly hope all who are interested in the Society will be generous in their donations of articles for sale, as well as honor us with their presence on all of these occasions.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington Street.—The guides of Mrs. H. S. Lake spoke for this Association on Sunday afternoon and evening, March 18th. The audiences were intelligent and appreciative. The afternoon lecture was upon the "Phenomena and Philosophy of Spiritualism," and was an able exposition of the same. It was followed by many excellent and convincing psychometric tests, given through the mediumship of Mrs. Loomis-Hall.

The subject of the evening lecture was: "The Problem of Life, or What Shall we Do with Ourselves?" and was presented in a strong and effective manner, illustrating the necessity of the exercise of the spiritual faculties as by their activity alone is it possible to arrive at any satisfactory reason for the phenomena of human life. The lecture produced a profound impression, and was heartily applauded.

At its close Mrs. Lake's Indian guide, "Prairie Flower," took possession of her, and greatly amused the people with witty and queerly-expressed instructive remarks. She gave, also, a number of peculiar and satisfactory psychometric readings, expressing very markedly her own individuality in all that she did.

Mrs. Nickerson gave excellent music, and Prof. W. Milligan presided at the piano.

The Chairman pronounced the service "an Ideal Meeting," whereupon the audience enthusiastically responded. E. P. M.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—At this place of meeting, on Sunday last, the exercises were opened with well chosen remarks by Dr. J. L. Paxson. He was followed by Mrs. S. E. Buck, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, David Brown and Dr. P. C. Drisko, each of whom made excellent remarks which were well received and highly appreciated by the large audience present. Miss Cullen gave a few facial readings which were pronounced correct. David Brown, Mrs. Chandler and Peter McKenzie gave tests and spirit-delineations which were promptly recognized.

In the evening Mrs. M. W. Leslie delivered a short address couched in appropriate language. The speaker closed with several tests and descriptions of spirit-friends, which were recognized as correct. She was followed by Mrs. Jane Hugo, who read a beautiful and appropriate essay which was well received by the audience. Mrs. M. E. Johnson gave psychometric readings which were recognized as correct, and Mr. F. W. Mathews clearly recognized tests with psychometric readings.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—There was a good-sized audience present last Sunday afternoon to listen to the remarks of Mr. John Wetherbee, who related many of his experiences in witnessing and investigating full-form spirit materialization. He opened his address with "Are you sure you are not mistaken?" This was a question, he said, which was asked him by a friend to whom he had related some facts concerning spirit-materializations which he had witnessed. He then proceeded to relate many of his experiences in the investigation of this phase of spirit phenomena, showing very conclusively that he had exercised good judgment in his investigations, and proving that he had not been mistaken.

The audience listened for an hour and a quarter with the closest attention, which showed how deeply they were interested in what he said, and in the subject.

Next Sunday afternoon at the usual hour (a quarter before three o'clock) Mr. D. E. Caswell will occupy the platform, and speak under control of Temple Spirit (so-called), notice being taken of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism. Other talent will also be present.

On Wednesday evening will be held the usual Social at 7:30 o'clock, in the lower hall of the Temple. All are invited to attend.

On Easter Sunday morning the Temple Fraternity School for children will be inaugurated. "Bring your little ones."

The First Independent Club.—At our recent business meeting twenty-six accessions were made to the membership roll. Our members are by no means confined to Boston and suburbs, but include fifteen other cities in eight different States. One member may even be found in far-away India. Many non-resident members sit by themselves at the hour of the Club meeting with their mentality centred upon the Club, and several letters have been received enumerating instances in which marked beneficial results have been perceived in cases of mental and physical infirmity. On Monday evening, following our period of silent concentration, the Grand Master read a number of answers to queries propounded at the Thursday afternoon circle.

Those interested in spiritual literature are advised to peruse these answers with consideration, for seldom are thoughts upon these subjects expressed with more force and aptness and yet withal in such simplicity.

By request Mrs. H. P. Griffin recited with touching effect the poem of "Ostler Joe," and responded to an encore with another well-received selection. Miss Annie Dunlap favored us with two brilliant executions upon the piano, and Mrs. Nettie Wentworth sang in her usually acceptable fashion. Mrs. J. W. Fletcher brought the exercises to a close by giving her usual "notes" concerning the Club doings, and related an interesting anecdote from her experience.

Next Monday is "Mediums' Evening," and Mrs. Colby-Luther will open the exercises.

About fifty more can be accommodated, and you, reader, are one of the elect.

F. V. FULLER, Rec. Sec'y.

Lyceum Hall.—On Wednesday evening, March 28th, at this hall, 1031 Washington street, the children connected with Lyceum No. 1, also with Mrs. Wm. S. Butler's Sewing Circle, will present an unusually attractive programme, under the personal direction of Miss Lucette Webster. All who feel interested in the advancement of spiritual truths in the minds of the children will fully appreciate the effort that is being made in this direction, and encourage and stimulate not only the children, but the workers engaged in this movement, by their presence on this occasion.

A. P. T.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualist meeting was held at this hall, on Sunday last; there was a full attendance and an unusual interest was manifest day and evening. The Chairman, Mrs. Mina Olmstead, Mrs. Shackley, Mrs. Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. J. E. Davis, Mr. Johnson and Dr. W. A. Hale participated—the lecture by the last-named gentleman being regarded as specially interesting and instructive.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—A report of the Lyceum services is received, but too late for use. The meeting was of interest and the programme varied and entertaining. The other matters touched on by Secretary Woodbury will be utilized in our next week's issue.

A Pleasant Surprise Party.—"M." writes: "The friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hall gave them a genuine surprise on Friday evening, March 16th, at their residence, 128 West Brookline street, Boston. The evening was spent in social and musical enjoyment. A bountiful collation was served by Mrs. Hall, after which brief speeches were made by Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham, Dr. Moore and Mrs. Hall. At a late hour the company separated, highly pleased with the evening's entertainment, and feeling that they had paid a deserved compliment to those veteran workers in our cause—Mr. and Mrs. H."

Tenth Anniversary.—Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Willard celebrated, at their residence in Chelsea, on the evening of March 13th, the tenth anniversary of their marriage—the exercises taking on the form of a general and pleasing entertainment, comprising eloquent remarks by Eben Cobb and others, readings, music and dancing. Many presents, to host and hostess—among them a French clock, and various articles of silver ware—testified the appreciation of the friends present.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M. Admission free.

Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th Streets.—The People's Spiritual Meeting (removed from Spencer Hall). Services every Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. Mediums and speakers always present. Frank W. Jones, Conductor.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity, Rev. Mrs. T. H. Stryker, pastor, will hold services every Sunday at 2½ P. M., in Macgregor Hall, Madison Avenue, South-East corner of 59th street (entrance 42 East 59th street). All are cordially invited to be present.

Meetings for Spiritual Manifestations will be held at Adelphi Hall, corner 7th Avenue and 52d street, New York, every Sunday at 2½ P. M. Tests given by Mrs. E. A. Wells of New York.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 3 and 8 P. M. Mediums and speakers welcome. Test Medium and Conductor, Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn.

Soul Communion Meetings every Tuesday at 3 P. M. sharp, at Mrs. Morrell's, 230 West 36th street.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—J. Frank Baxter spoke in the morning of March 10th upon the subject, "The Position and Tendency of Modern Thought," showing how superstition takes to itself wings, and how all ideas of the supernatural and the miraculous vanish in the light of modern research and development. Particularly was it shown how thoroughly instrumental in the work was Modern Spiritualism, not alone in its open work, but in its silent force. The tendency everywhere was toward a natural religion, while Spiritualism was not considered a finality, yet it was believed to be the very climax of religious consideration to day. Mr. Baxter spoke for over an hour, and was frequently interrupted with the applause of the audience.

The evening discourse was on "The Persistence, Permanence and Purpose of Spiritualism," demonstrating it to be as old as death itself, its path marked by revivals and periods all the way along to the present manifestations, and showing its permanence in the fixed and lasting work accomplished and projected; proclaimed its mission to be to correct materialism and reclaim the materialist, to redeem declining spirituality and save the church, to rationalize religion by creating its theology, to fraternize the thoughts and actions of men, and to assure the world that death is but the doorway to life eternal.

In the afternoon, as a preface to Mrs. Wells's tests, Mr. Baxter considered "The Positiveness of Spirit-Demonstrations," prefacing and concluding his remarks with appropriate poems. Mrs. Wells gave eighteen recognized tests, some of them very remarkable.

On Saturday evening, (9th) a reception was given Mr. Baxter at the residence of Mr. Underhill, 232 West 37th street. There was a large attendance of the leading Spiritualists of the city, who called to give honor to one of nature's noblemen, as well as one of the brightest speakers in our land.

Mr. Baxter will speak in Norwich, Conn., the fourth Sunday in March.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, after an absence, was joyfully welcomed. She spoke in the morning of Sunday, the 18th, in her usual convincing way, her principal subject being "Spiritual Growth," closing with an impromptu poem. In the evening she spoke upon "The Prodigal Son," a subject selected by her guides. Next Sunday evening the subject will be "Spiritualism as an Infant."

The meeting for manifestations in the afternoon, after singing, was opened by the reading of an inspirational poem by Mrs. A. S. Cochrane, who also read an essay entitled "Scientific and Scriptural Proofs of Spiritualism." It was listened to with profound attention. Mr. H. J. Newton made remarks on "Facts," promising more detailed statements in the near future. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave twenty tests, and all fully recognized.

Next Sunday the Fortieth Anniversary will be celebrated under the auspices of the First Society at Adelphi Hall at 2 o'clock P. M. An interesting programme has been arranged. S.

New York, March 18th, 1888.

The People's Meeting.—Warren Chase attracted large audiences on the afternoon and evening of March 4th. His theme in the afternoon was "Three Grand Discoveries: Astronomy, Geology and Spiritualism"; that of the evening, "Whence Come We? Why Are We Here? and Whither Are We Going?" His hearers listened throughout with rapt attention.

March 11th the exercises were principally conducted by Mrs. Whittier of Onset, Mass., Mr. Goodspeed and Mrs. T. J. Lewis. Tests of spirit-presence were given, with which the friends seemed well satisfied. In the evening Mrs. Abby S. Cochrane read an essay and a poem; Mrs. Webber of Boston followed with remarks and tests, and remarks were also made by Mrs. V. M. George.

The reading of one of Emma Train's poems, and an invocation, remarks and spirit descriptions by Mr. Goodspeed, opened the exercises of the afternoon of last Sunday. Mrs. Mary C. Morrell offered remarks, purporting to come from Spirit Jonathan M. Roberts, the language and ideas being characteristic of him. Proofs of the presence of spirit friends were given by Mrs. Morrell to a stranger who was exceedingly well pleased, and acknowledged publicly their correctness.

In the evening the session was opened with remarks by Mr. Stone, followed by Mrs. Morrell, Mr. Cooley and Mr. Craig.

Sunday, April 1st, will be the day we celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary, and it is decided to have a Mediums' Meeting afternoon and evening, the afternoon being principally devoted to the pioneers, and the evening to all. An invitation is extended to all mediums in New York City and vicinity to come and take part with us on that occasion, and the Conductor of the meeting respectfully invites all who will feel it a pleasure to participate in these Anniversary exercises to notify him by mail before that day.

Do not forget our place of meeting is Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th streets.

F. W. JONES.

230 W. 36th street, New York, March 19th, 1888.

☞ A correspondent assures us that Mrs. Effie Moss is meeting with marked success in her mediumship for full-form materializations. She is giving four public séances each week at her rooms at 52 West 15th street, New York, which are well attended, and all who go there seem satisfied. Some of the cabinet spirits so manifest that it carries conviction to the minds of the sitters that the manifestations are just what they purport to be.

The familiar control, Lillie, who comes as a little child, of late has opened the séance by presenting herself at the front of the cabinet, asking some one from the circle to come and kiss her, and as they essay the pleasant task she vanishes, at the same time drawing back the curtain and revealing the medium sitting in her chair, fully entranced. Granny Brooks also so comes out and takes the hand and salutes each one in the circle, and then dematerializes in their sight while singing her favorite hymn, until only the head remains resting on the floor, that she carries conviction to every heart.

***

☞ We much regret to learn that Mrs. M. E. Wallace, who has been conducting a series of spiritual meetings on Sunday evenings at her residence, 219 W. 42d street, New York, is seriously ill; has been confined to her bed since early in the present month. On the 11th inst., the meeting which had been advertised was held, and addressed by Mr. Bowen of Brooklyn, Mrs. Wallace declining to disappoint the people, though unable herself to leave her bed. Notice was then given that the meetings would have to be discontinued, at least for a time. We understand that she will visit Florida, if within a short time she recuperates sufficiently to enable her to make the journey.

***

☞ We learn that Mrs. Carrie Sawyer's séances are well attended, and that her chief control, Elan, is striving to perfect conditions that will enable him to impart to the sitters a fuller knowledge of the modus operandi by which the phenomena are produced than they now possess. For this purpose he is trying to secure a number of ladies and gentlemen for a series of strictly private séances, and from these much is hoped for. This is a move in the right direction. Let us learn not only the facts of the phenomena, but how the phenomena are produced, and the principles that underlie and govern them.

***

MRS. PENNELL, D. Ellsworth informs us, is still calling together large audiences at 52 Union Square, giving many remarkable tests and inspirational thoughts through her little control "Prairie Flower," also in her normal condition. A new development and stronger forces, it is stated, seem to be coming to her. She is (our correspondent is sure) doing a noble work in this city.

Los Angeles, Cal.

On Sunday, March 4th, W. J. Colville commenced his work in Los Angeles, Cal., under favorable auspices.

Two meetings were held; the first was in Odd Fellows Hall, Spring street, at 2:30 P. M., where there was a large and representative audience. Los Angeles is famous as a place for meeting people from all parts of the world: In Mr. Colville's audience on Sunday were several friends who first made his acquaintance in England, beside a number from the Eastern States of America; among these friends from the eastward Mrs. Maggie Folsom-Butler was particularly observed. Mrs. Butler is one of the most active and generous Spiritualists in the world—and is always on the alert to assist in every worthy charitable as well as spiritualistic undertaking.

The exercises of the meeting were opened with a piano solo, followed by a congregational hymn, after which Mr. Alfred R. Street introduced the speaker to the audience in a few kindly and appropriate words. After singing a sacred solo, "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer," and delivering an impressive invocation, the lecturer proceeded directly with his address, which was prefaced with a quotation from a speech delivered by Socrates to his friends concerning the relations of soul and body.

Spiritual science, said the speaker, is expressive of knowledge concerning spiritual things; it is, correctly speaking, true anthropology, for man must be considered as a spiritual being to be correctly understood at all. How can we conceive of ourselves as compounds of earth and spirit, and then maintain that when our mortal bodies sleep in dust we shall enjoy a higher and fuller life in the immortal world than we ever did below? How can man rise to his highest dignity, if something of him is lacking, as it must necessarily be in spirit life, if flesh is any part of man?

We may employ all the natural and artistic similitudes we please, such as the egg, the chrysalis, tools, garments, etc., when describing the relation of the mortal robe to the immortal spirit; we may acknowledge the outward body and its manifold temporal uses as much as we please, provided only we can always exclaim: "It was mine; it was not I." Between spiritual and physical science there is and can be no conflict, though Materialism and Spiritualism, as systems of philosophy, are of necessity antithetical. The most "extravagant" claims made by many spiritually-minded philosophers should be regarded as prophetic of man's capabilities, so far as their actual fulfillment in externals is concerned—but our ideals can never be too high; our misfortune is that they are constantly far too low. To know ourselves is to know the universe; yea, it is to know the nature of the Infinite!

We must believe in man as well as in God. Many Theists are positively atheistic where human nature is concerned, while they stoutly defend the doctrine of an Infinite Spirit pervading the universe.

Anthropology is unsound unless it be spiritual; true spiritual science is the science of life, and embraces physics as well as metaphysics in its all-comprehending grasp.

After the lecture a practical improvisation was given, which greatly pleased the audience.

In the evening, notwithstanding a violent rain-storm, a good and appreciative audience greeted Mr. Colville at the same hall. His theme was on Spiritualism in its varied phases, every one of which was highly commended by the influences directing the speaker's utterance, while the kindest mention was made of Mrs. Whitney, Dr. Stansbury, and other mediums who were presenting phenomenal evidences of spiritual existence at the same hour in other parts of the city.

Classes in Spiritual Science were opened March 5th at 7:30 P. M., in Bartlett's Hall, and on Tuesday, March 6th, at 2:30 P. M., in Odd Fellows Hall; the students were numerous, and were pleased with the exercises.

Mr. Colville remains in Los Angeles over Sunday, April 1st, and commences a term of work in San Diego Sunday, April 8th. All letters for him may be addressed in care of the Golden Gate, 734 Montgomery street, San Francisco—from the office of which paper they will always be promptly forwarded.

Spiritualism in Los Angeles is permanently represented by an efficient and harmonious society, to which that excellent speaker and most amiable lady, Miss Susie M. Johnson, frequently ministers. Efforts, we are informed, are being made by a gentleman of some means and abundant good will to erect a substantial edifice to be dedicated to spiritual work in perpetuity. Judging from present indications the field in the City of the Angels is very ripe for a rich spiritual harvest. The Unitarian minister, Dr. Eli Fay, is a very liberal man; many of his congregation are investigating Spiritualism with most satisfactory results, and a spirit of earnest inquiry pervades the minds of the truly cosmopolitan and hospitable population.

Salem, Mass.—The First Society of Spiritualists celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, in Cate's Hall, Sunday, March 18th. The exercises consisted of an invocation by Mrs. Hattie Eastland of Marblehead; remarks by Mrs. Lincoln of Boston, Mrs. Ricker of Chelsea, and Mr. Moreland and Mr. Webb of Salem; readings by Mrs. Moreland of Boston and Mrs. Fuller of Peabody; poem by Dr. N. P. Allen of Beverly Farms; psychometric readings by Mrs. Kimball of Peabody; singing by Miss Bailey, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Bill, Mr. Heathcott, Messrs. Legrand, Kenney, Young and Glazier of Salem. It was a first-class entertainment, in every particular, and one long to be remembered by all present. Next Sunday, March 25th, Mrs. Sarah A Brynes of Dorchester will occupy our platform.

W. H. H. TYNG, Cor. Sec'y.

San Diego, Cal.—R. H. Allen writes: "Among Spiritualists of San Diego there is a forward movement. A society is about being formed and incorporated of Spiritualists and Liberalists to support regular meetings for mutual helpfulness in spiritual growth."

"Nasal Voices, Catarrh and False Teeth."

A prominent English woman says the American women all have high, shrill, nasal voices and false teeth.

Americans don't like the constant twitting they get about this nasal twang, and yet it is a fact caused by our dry, stimulating atmosphere and the universal presence of catarrhal difficulties.

But why should so many of our women have false teeth?

That is more of a poser to the English. It is quite impossible to account for it except on the theory of deranged stomach action caused by imprudence in eating and by want of regular exercise.

Both conditions are unnatural.

Catarrhal troubles everywhere prevail and end in cough and consumption, which are promoted by mal-nutrition induced by deranged stomach action. The condition is a modern one, one unknown to our ancestors, who prevented the catarrh, cold, cough and consumption by abundant and regular use of what is now known as Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy and Log Cabin Sarsaparilla, two old-fashioned, standard remedies handed down from our ancestors, and now exclusively put forth under the strongest guarantees of purity and efficacy by the world-famed makers of Warner's Safe Cure. These two remedies, plentifully used as the spring and summer seasons advance, give a positive assurance of freedom, both from catarrh and those dreadful and, if neglected, inevitable consequences, pneumonia, lung troubles and consumption, which so generally and fatally prevail among our people.

Comrade Eli Fisher, of Salem, Henry Co., Iowa, served four years in the late war and contracted a disease called consumption by the doctors. He had frequent hemorrhages. After using Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy, he says, under date of Jan. 19th, 1888: "I do not bleed at the lungs any more, my cough does not bother me, and I do not have any more smothering spells." Warner's Log Cabin Rose Cream cured his wife of catarrh, and she is "sound and well."

Of course we do not like to have our women called nose talkers and false teeth owners, but these conditions can be readily overcome in the manner indicated.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Conservatory Hall, Bedford Avenue, corner Fulton Street.—Services every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M.

Fraternity Rooms, corner Bedford Avenue and South Second Street.—Services every Sunday at 7½ P. M. Children's Lyceum at 3 P. M. The Spiritual Literary Union meets the first and third Saturday of each month at 8 P. M.

310 Livingston Street.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Eureka Hall, 378 Bedford Avenue, near Broadway.—Mrs. A. C. Henderson speaks and gives spirit tests every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

Brooklyn Conference.—Saturday evening, March 3d, Mrs. H. M. Walton spoke upon "Bible Mediums," and Saturday, March 10th, Mrs. H. F. Holmes upon "Work and Workers." On the 17th Mrs. E. C. Aldrich Hall spoke, her address being mostly of a metaphysical turn. Each of the above speakers was listened to with profound interest and all seemed edified and instructed. Next Saturday evening, 24th, Mr. A. E. Lawrene, of the E. D. Conference, will give his third lecture upon "Mediumship."

We shall celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary Saturday evening, 31st. Addresses may be expected from Mrs. H. M. Walton, Mrs. Stringham, Mrs. F. M. Holmes, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Slocum, Mrs. Vittum, Mrs. Bertine, Wm. C. Bowen, Capt. Dey, Mr. Harris and others. The ladies have decided to furnish refreshments, and a spiritual and material feast is sure to be enjoyed. The exercises will commence precisely at half past seven o'clock. Meetings held at Intermediate College Hall, 310 Livingston street, near Hamden Place. F. W. JONES, Conductor.

J. Frank Baxter in Milford.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The great storm came near seriously interfering with Mr. Baxter's appointments, but fortunately he left New York after his lecture on the night of Sunday the 11th, and was able to address the people of Milford Tuesday evening, March 13th.

On Wednesday the storm continued, but to the surprise of all an audience of nearly two hundred convened, notwithstanding the difficult passing, the still threatening weather and a necessitated door-fee.

The Milford Journal and Daily News spoke well of Mr. Baxter, and the Spiritualists, and their meeting. Of that of Wednesday evening the Daily News among other things said:

"Mr. Baxter appeared alone on the platform, save an organ to accompany his singing, and which he played himself. The speaker commenced by reciting a poem, and then singing a beautiful song, which was rendered in a sweet and clear tenor voice, seldom if ever surpassed in Milford. Mr. Baxter then delivered a lecture in eloquent style explaining why Spiritualism was a truer, better and more humane doctrine than the Christian religion. He was listened to with deep interest, and the elocutionary and dramatic powers displayed were very good indeed, and plainly showed that Mr. Baxter possessed a combination of talents enjoyed by few speakers of the present day. The lecture having ended, the audience were again favored, by request, with a song, the rendition of which was exceedingly fine. Mr. Baxter then proceeded to call from the spirit-land persons who had been deceased from three months to thirty years, and was apparently very successful, as at once began conversation with persons familiar to his hearers, calling their names, describing their forms and features, and telling their exact ages, sizes, manners whilst living, and the exact time they had been in the spirit-land. He seemed to make no failures, and as he called the departed spirits, and described them and their past lives, he would ask the audience if there was not some one present who recognized them. Every spirit was identified by some one present, however, mostly all of whom were Spiritualists themselves. He named at least twenty-five men, women and children, after which one of the most successful spiritualistic meetings ever held in Milford was brought to a close."

I quote this editorial, in part, for report, as it was so fair and so unexpected from an outside secular source, and because from a local daily which deemed the meeting and matter worthy of more than a mere mention.

It is expected Mr. Baxter will soon visit us again. The meetings were held under the auspices of a Ladies' Sewing Union of Spiritualists.

INQUIRER.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday was one of much interest with the Brittan Hall Spiritualists, the day being clear and bright, which was favorable to the assembling of unusually large audiences, whose deep interest was expressed in the addresses and platform descriptions given by Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball of Lawrence. About one hundred descriptions were given of spirits present, together with several messages of interest. The Brittan Hall Association, united and strong in purpose, is completing arrangements for the celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary by a supper and entertainment on Advent Eve, March 30th. Three platform mediums, Mrs. E. C. Kimball of Lawrence, Mass., Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester of West Randolph, Vt., and Mrs. M. F. Cross of Hampstead, N. H., will be present, together with several private ones. On the following Sunday, April 1st, there will be a continuation of Anniversary exercises, joined with the usual services, which are to be supplied by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester. Next Sunday Mrs. M. F. Cross of Hampstead, N. H., will occupy the platform.

E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass.—Music Hall.—The First Spiritualist Society held services Sunday, March 18th, in small Music Hall. Dr. H. B. Storer of Boston occupied the platform at 2 P. M., his subject of discourse being "Some of the Obligations We Owe to Spiritualism." He divided his remarks into three parts, speaking at length upon the Phenomenal, the Philosophical and the Emotional.

At the evening service, after singing by the choir and the beautiful rendering of several choice selections by Miss Jessie M. Little's Home Orchestra, Dr. Storer took for his subject "The Book of Life." He was in one of his best moods, and the lecture met with a hearty response from the audience.

W. W. CURRIER.

Chicago, Ill.—The Children's Lyceum opened March 11th, with seventy-five in attendance. The usual exercises of singing, reading and lessons in groups were carried out, after which recitations were given by Freddie Parker, Laura Mousure, Ada Phelps, Gertie Mullen, Ethel Garner, Mamie Phelps, Milton Openheimer, Willie Haberlehter, Josiah Openheimer and Joseph Flinterbald. Song by Edith Worger and Rose Barton. Instrumental solo, Mrs. Zimmer. Lyceum Journal, edited by W. B. Sinn, read by Evan Morton. The session closed with the Banner March and a song. O. A. PARSONS, Sec'y.

Attleboro, Mass.—Mrs. Benj. F. Boomer writes: "On Sunday, March 11th, Mr. E. B. Fairchild, of Stoneham, occupied our platform, giving in the afternoon a profound discourse on the subject, "What is Spiritualism?" In the evening his subject was, "Why I Became a Spiritualist."—On Sunday, March 18th, Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Boston, lectured for us afternoon and evening, and gave psychometric readings after the evening lecture. Her lectures were of a high order. We expect her again the 8th of April.—Next Sunday Mrs. K. R. Stiles, of Boston, will speak for us."

A REVIEW OF THE Seybert Commissioners' Report OR, WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission

THE INNER MYSTERY.

This Poem was delivered by Miss Lizzie Doten, at a Festival commemorative of the Twentieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, held in Music Hall, Boston, March 31st, 1868. Reported by H. F. Gardner, M. D.

In the valley,
Where the darkness dropped its poisonous vapors on my head;
Where the night-winds
Moaned and murmured, like the voices of the troubled dead,—
Groping, stumbling, weary, and alone,
Did I make the earth my bed;
And my pillow was a stone.
Oh that slumber! It was long and dark and deep;
Till a voice cried, "Come up hither!"
(And I started from my sleep.)
"Whither?" cried I.
And it answered, "Come up hither! for the day is dawning:
Through the gates of amethyst and amber
Shines the kindling glory of the morning."

Then I looked, and saw the blest assurance of the coming day.
Hopeful-hearted,
O'er the mountain-path I took my upward way.
'Mid the slumbering pines I heard Life's drowsy pulses start,
Swinging, singing,
Making mournful music;
Thrilling, filling
All the lonely places of my heart.
Then the embers of the morning,
Smouldering on night's funeral-pyre,
Kindling into sudden brightness,
Lit the mountain-peaks with fire;
And the quickened heart of Nature
Thrilled responsive from her Memnon lyre.
Eager, earnest, still ascending
Toward the glory of the perfect day,
I could hear that voice my steps attending,
With the matin-hymn of Nature blending,
Ever crying, "Come up hither! come up hither!"
And I followed in the way.

Bright the sky glowed
With celestial splendor,
Like the light of love from God's own eyes;
And the lofty mountains
Seemed to tender
Back their crowns of glory to the loftier skies.
Far above me,
In the heights so terrible and grand,
I could see the glaciers gleaming
In the hollow of the mountain's hand.
Flashing, dashing,
From the steeps the foaming cataract poured
Over pathways
Which the mighty avalanche had scored;
Dim and ghostly
Rose the clouds of wreathèd spray,
Rainbow-mantled,
Vanishing in air away.
Elfin shadows
O'er my pathway leapt and played,
As the pines their murmuring branches swayed.
All the air seemed filled with voices
Which I ne'er had thought to hear again;
And I fled, to leave behind me
Sound of pleasure close allied to pain:
Upward, onward, did I speed my way,
Nearer to the perfect source of day.
Awed by beauty and by terror,
Tearful, prayerful, did I sink,
Where the tender, blue-eyed gentian
Bloomed upon the glacier's brink.
"Save me! save me! O thou loving Lord!" I cried,
"From the unforeseen intrusion
Of this sad, but sweet delusion,—
From this cruel semblance to the love that long since died."
"Come up hither!"
Cried my unknown guide who went before;
And I followed in the way once more,—
Onward, upward, where the tempests gathered;
Where the lightnings crouched within their secret lair;
Where the mighty God of thunder
With his hammer smote the shuddering air;
Where the tall cliffs, battle-splintered,
Reared their lofty summits bleak and bare;
Higher yet, where all my life-tide
With the breath of heaven grew chill;
And I felt my pulses quickened
With a strange, electric thrill.
Not one blossom brightened in my pathway,
Not one lichen dared that wintry breath;
But above me and around me
Brooded awful silence as of death:
And I walked where ragged precipices,
Overhanging wild abysses,
Frowned upon the dizzy depths below;
Where the yawning chasms,
Rent by earthquake spasms,
Strove to fill their hungry throats with snow.
Burdened with a sense of solemn grandeur,
Reverent and adoringly I trod
'Mid those awful and majestic altars
Of the Unknown God.

Musing deeply,
As I turned an angle of the rocky wall,
Lo! before me
Stood a figure, ghostly, gaunt, and tall;
Like the famous fabled image, falling
From Dardanian skies;
Wrapped in white, marmoreal silence,
Did he greet my wondering eyes.
Straight upon the narrow pathway,
Fixed as fate he seemed to stand,
With a widely yawning chasm,
And a wall of rock on either hand.
"Come up hither! come up hither!"
Cried the voice that went before;
And my spirit leapt impatient
To obey the call once more.
"Let me pass, I pray thee,"
Said I in a calm and courteous tone;
But he only gazed upon me
With a face as fixed and passionless as stone.
"Prithee, stand aside!" I said more firmly;
"For I may not stay:
I must reach the mountain-heights above me
Ere the close of day."
But he stirred not, spoke not, breathed not;
Only turned his cold and stony eyes
Downward—to the yawning chasm:
Upward—to the distant skies.
"Wherefore," said I,
With a slowly-kindling wrath,
"Do you seek to stay my progress,—
Do you stand across my path?
What have I to do with thee,
Or thou with me?
Stand aside; or, prithee,
Which is strongest we shall shortly see."

Like a statue did he stand immovable,—the same.
Then my wrath waxed hotter,
"Demon! speak thy name,
And tell thine errand!" cried I with a ringing shout;
And his cold lips parted, as he answered,
"I am DOUBT.
Go no farther,
For it is a phantom that hath lured thee on thy way:
Upward striving
Will not bring thee nearer to the perfect source of day.
In the valley,
All is warmth and rest and kindly cheer:
Go no farther,—
It is lone and very cold up here.
Trust to prudence and to reason
All your aspirations to control:
Man grows ripe before the season
When he listens to the promptings of the soul."

"Come up hither! come up hither!"
Cried the sweet and tuneful voice again:
"Doubt should never counsel Duty when the way of truth is plain."

"Stay!" replied the watchful demon;
"Thou shalt lend a listening ear to Doubt;
For, by Heaven! thou shalt not pass me
Until thou hast heard me out.
Thou art cursed from the beginning;
All your nature is corrupt with sinning;
God refuses you his gifts of grace to-day;
Christ alone his righteous wrath can stay.
All your prayerful aspiration
But retards your soul's salvation,
All the efforts of your godless will
Make your deep damnation deeper still.
O thou self-deluded dreamer!
O thou transcendental schemer!
Leave your idle speculations,
Trances, visions, exaltations,
And your toilsome upward progress stay.
By your fallen, lost condition,
By the depths of your perdition,
I have promised,
Yea, have sworn, to turn you backward in the way."

"Come up hither! come up hither!"
Cried the voice persuasive from above.
Then I looked; and, bending o'er me,
I beheld my long-lost angel-love.

"Back!" I shouted to the demon.
"Never," in a measured tone he said,
"Till the final resurrection,— Till the earth and sea give up their dead."

Then I smote him,—
Smote him in the forehead and the eyes;
And I shouted,
"I will not be cozened with your lies!
Go to brainless cowards
With your Hebrew husks and pious pelf;
For MY SOUL IS OLDER THAN THE TRUTH,—
ONE WITH GOD HIMSELF."

Then my blows fell faster, fiercer, harder, hotter,
Till he yielded like the vessel of a potter;
And I crashed into his brainless skull;
Smote his stony eyes out, cold and dull;
Into shards amorphous dashed his lips profane;
And, as brittle as a bubble, clove his shattered trunk in twain.
Then, as if God's millstones surely
Had been given me in trust,
On the rock I stood securely,
And those scattered fragments ground to dust.
But, O God! what wondrous transformation
Seized me in its mighty grasp of power,
As a bud, by Nature's potent magic,
Bursts at once into a perfect flower!
Like the record of a wise historian,
Lay unsealed the wondrous Book of Life;
Swelling grandly, like a chant Gregorian,
Perfect unison arose from strife:
And I knew then that this grim, defiant elf,
That this clay-born image, was my weaker self;
That this demon Doubt, with which I held such strife,
Was the sense's logic,—the phenomena of life;
And, as Perseus slew the Gorgon,
Must this mocking fiend be slain,
That transfixed in stony silence
Faith and hope might not remain.
Only when the soul asserted
What the flesh and sense concealed,—
GOD WITHIN, ONE WITH THE HUMAN,—
Did the INNER MYSTERY stand revealed.
Oh, what glorious consummation to my strife!
Death of Death! and Life unto Eternal Life!
All around, the grand and awful mountains
Hushed in silent reverence seemed to stand,
White and shining,
Like the pearly portals of the better land.
Then I heard the angels singing,
Soft and clear the sweet notes ringing,
Dropping gently, like a golden rain,
From the treasured wealth of day;
And I caught these words of blessing
Floating down the heavenly way:—

"Oh! what is the life of the soul
But the life of the Infinite Whole?
For God and his creatures are One,
As the tide from the ocean of light,
Which sets through the day and the night,
Is the same in the star-beam or sun.

"He hath laid out the sea and the land;
He hath balanced the heavens in his hand;
And the Earth, in that order sublime,
How greatly and grandly she rolls,
And casts off her harvests of souls,
In the boundless fruition of Time!

"We ask not his face to behold;
Of his glory we need not be told;
For the Word of his witness is near.
His Life is the Infinite Light,
Which quickens our blindness to sight;
And he speaks that his children may hear.

"He suffers and sins with them all;
He stands, or he falls when they fall;
For he is both substance and breath.
Their strength from his greatness they draw;
His wisdom and will are their law;
And he is their Saviour in death.

"When the depths of all hearts are unsealed
Shall the word of his truth be revealed,
That MAN is by NATURE DIVINE;
And faith in God's presence within
Shall strengthen the spirit to win
A peace which no tongue can define."

Then the music floated upward,
Where the light of parting day,
With its gold and crimson glory,
On the mountain summits lay;
And it left me longing, praying,
And with quickened steps essaying
Swift the nearest heights to gain,
That my captivated being
Might unto a clearer seeing
Of those fading forms attain.
And ere long, with hands uplifted,
Kneeling on the mountain high,
Out into the listening silence
Did I send my pleading cry:—
"O thou beauteous land of Beulah,
Just beyond my longing sight!
O ye bright ones, loved and lovely,
Dwelling in celestial light!
Leave, oh! leave me not behind you
With the darkness and the night!"
In the sunshine and the shadow,
Then I saw an open door;
And a voice cried, "Come up hither!
Life is yours forevermore."
Gales of Araby around me
Seemed to wave their fragrant wings;
Strains of music, low and tender,
Thrilled along celestial strings.
Like a spotless lily, blending
Matchless bloom and breath divine,
Did my lost one, long lamented,
Lay her soft white hand in mine;
And uplifted,
Strangely gifted,
With a power unknown before,
Did my love and I together enter at the open door.

Lo! again those bright immortals, as their fadeless flowers they wreathe,
Words of greeting
Oft repeating,
Celebrate this festive eve.
Listen to their tuneful message for the hearts that joy or grieve:—

"Truth's heralds bright,
With feet of light,
Upon Life's mountains stand;
Sent to proclaim,
In God's high name,
Glad tidings to the land.
With smiles of love
They wait above,
And 'Come up hither!' cry.
When souls shall climb
Life's heights sublime,
Then Death itself shall die.

"The little child,
Whose bright eyes smiled,
Whom angel-hands upbore,
The good, the kind,
The pure in mind,
Glide through Life's open door.
With voices sweet,
Their lips repeat
The chorus of the sky:—
'All souls shall be
From doubt made free,
And Death itself shall die.'

"Joy crowns with flowers
Life's summer-hours,
When storms of sorrow cease;
And winter-snows,
And calm repose,
Bring thoughts of holy peace.
Thus pales or burns
Life's star by turns,
As swift the moments fly;
But winter's blight,
And sorrow's night,
And Death itself, shall die.

"From Death's abyss
To heights of bliss
Must souls immortal strive;
While loss and gain,
And peace and pain,
Shall keep their faith alive.
But higher still,
With tireless will,
Their course shall upward lie,
Till palms shall wave
Above the grave,
And Death itself shall die."

SOME PSYCHICAL RESEARCH FACTS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Boston Globe of a recent date devotes several columns to the results of an interview with Richard Hodgson, LL.D., Secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research, a body of gentlemen mostly bearing ponderous titles in the learned professions, and who have their headquarters in the city of Boston. Dr. Hodgson is described as "an Englishman, about thirty-seven years old, a graduate of Cambridge University, a profoundly learned scholar, and a level-headed man of much sound common sense." He is understood to have been imported into this country for the special service of the Society above named, whose ostensible object is to search for and verify facts of a spiritual or psychic nature—though some of its out-givings, or those of its leading members, together with certain antecedent performances of Dr. H. in connection with a British Society of similar name and pretensions, have given rise to the belief in many minds that the real object is to discredit or explain away all facts of this nature.

However this may be, it appears from this interview that Dr. Hodgson—this "profoundly learned scholar" and "level-headed man of much sound common sense," who has come all the way from England to teach us, credulous Americans, what we ought to believe, and what not, on spiritual and psychical matters—claims to be himself a Spiritualist! So, at least, he is represented by the Globe reporter. Being asked as to his personal belief, the Doctor is reported to have said:

"Well, I suppose I should be probably called a Spiritualist. A number of years ago, when I was a student in Cambridge, Eng., I met a man, an utter stranger to me. I have sufficient cause for believing that he knew nothing whatever about me or my past life. And yet this man told me, with such minuteness of detail, circumstances and events of my life, which I knew every one but myself to be ignorant of, that I was forced to confess his miraculous insight.

"This man, whom I met almost by accident, described to me with absolute fidelity to truth the peculiar manner of my cousin's death in Australia twelve years previous, where I was then living. He said he saw my cousin present with us in the room, where he and I were sitting alone, talking just as you and I are talking now. He told me of our boyish pranks together, and of little childish secrets that my cousin and I had between ourselves. He described with perfect truth many insignificant and yet enduring impressions received when I was a youth. In fact my whole past life lay before him like an open book. He read my inmost soul. I was at the time, as a sort of recreation, investigating Spiritualism, and from the number of frauds I had come across you may imagine how hard I was to convince. But this experience was sufficient to overcome my skepticism.

"Another incident, of a different character, however, which came within my personal knowledge, served to confirm my belief that mind acts upon mind independently of matter or of time and space. An English lady of my acquaintance, living in London, saw suddenly before her one afternoon the figure of her sister, clad in a shroud, and with her hair cut close to her head. This sister was at the time on the voyage home from India. It afterward proved that on the very day and at the very hour when my lady friend saw the apparition her sister died on board the vessel. She had had her hair cut off to send to her friends at home as a souvenir."

Thus he distinctly avows himself convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, by proofs which appealed to his own intelligence and consciousness, and overcame his skepticism. How the Globe can continue to regard him as a "level-headed man of much sound common-sense" after this avowal, and after its long-continued and persistent efforts to cast ridicule and contempt upon Spiritualism and its believers, is one of the mysteries of modern journalism.

It might reasonably be supposed that the learned and level-headed Secretary of the Psychical Research Society, having been thus himself convinced by indisputable facts, would be ready to concede that other people may have equally good reasons for their belief in the same truth. But it would appear that he thinks all testimony from other sources needs to be not only largely cumulative, but to undergo the scrutiny of committees of the Psychical Research Society, before it is worthy of credence, or fit to be submitted to the public. As if the statement of an intelligent and reputable person would be any more or any less true for such scrutiny! He claims that the Society has collected a vast amount of evidence bearing on the subjects of inquiry; but it "guards its gathered materials with great secrecy," and will not publish them "until they have been passed upon, and thoroughly examined by the various committees." Yet the Doctor graciously condescended to impart some of these carefully-guarded facts to the interviewer, who pronounces them "astounding," and proceeds to lay them before the readers of the Globe.

We do not, however, find the facts reported to be in any respect more remarkable, significant, or well-authenticated, than those with which every well-informed Spiritualist is familiar, either in his own experience, or in the abundant literature of the movement. Similar facts have been occurring with especial frequency for the last forty years; they have been testified to by multitudes of unimpeachable witnesses in all parts of the world, and have been put on record in multitudinous books and publications. The only "astounding" thing about the matter is that a journalist who pretends to be wide awake as to what is going on in the world should at this late day regard these occurrences as in any way "astounding," or that a society of intelligent men, under the lead of "a profoundly learned scholar," from one of the oldest universities in the world, should deem it necessary to enter upon an elaborate "research" for such facts, advertising for them in the public prints, and deliberating over them in "great secrecy" before allowing them to be published to the world!

However, the work of these plodders, should it ever be brought to an affirmative issue—of which there is much doubt, considering the materialistic tendencies apparently dominant among professional "Psychical Researchers"—may doubtless be useful to a certain class of people: that class whose belief in anything depends on the dictum of some "profoundly learned scholar" or some titled dignitary.

The instances given in the Globe of direct mental communication between friends wide apart, of distant apparition at the moment of death, of ghostly appearances in haunted houses, etc., will seem but commonplace to the readers of a Spiritualist journal; yet two or three are here appended as specimens of the work of this Society:

"An old gentleman living at Albany had been ill for months. His married daughter resided at Worcester. One evening last summer she suddenly laid down the book she was reading and said to her husband: 'I believe father is dying.' She was strangely overcome by the impression, as there had been nothing whatever in the conversation or in her own thoughts to lead to the subject of her father's health. All that evening and the next morning the feeling haunted her until a dispatch came saying that her father had died the evening before.

"A Lowell physician was called to see a patient about ten o'clock one night. It was extremely dark, and in alighting from his conveyance he made a misstep and sprained his ankle severely. His wife, who was at home in bed asleep, suddenly awoke with the vivid impression that an accident had occurred to her husband. She arose, awakened the servant and communicated her fears to her. Nothing could induce her to return to bed. At one o'clock the doctor returned, and it was found that the moment of his accident and of his wife's awaking were simultaneous. He was three miles away from home at the time.

"A young lady of Boston was visiting her uncle at Montpelier, Vt. He had but recently moved there, and she had never been in the Green Mountain State before. The day after her arrival he took her to a jeweller's to see a curious timepiece which had been mentioned in a local newspaper. This jeweler was a perfect stranger to both uncle and niece, neither having even heard of him before. The gentleman introduced himself, made known his errand, and presented his niece. The jeweler, a very courteous, affable man, stretched out his hand to the young lady. Her eye caught sight of it, she turned pale, began to tremble, and did not take the proffered hand. On leaving the store she said to her uncle: 'I could not shake hands with that man; there was blood on his fingers; he is a murderer.' Her uncle ridiculed the idea, but it was afterward learned that, thirteen years before, the jeweler had been indicted for murder, although, owing to the breaking down of a witness, who at the first examination had told a straightforward story, he had escaped conviction."

LABOR.

Labor clears the forest and drains the morass. It drives the plow and scatters the seed. It reaps the harvest and converts it into the staff of life. Labor drives into the earth and brings up the hidden store of coal, iron, lead, gold, silver, etc. Labor smelts the iron and converts it into a thousand useful purposes, from the tiny needle to the ponderous engine. Labor builds the cities and supplies them with food and raiment. Labor builds the railroads and constructs and builds the cars and engines. Labor takes the timbers out of the forests, and erects ships to traverse the ocean. Labor builds the printing-press and makes the type and the paper, and sets up the form to print the books and newspapers that fill the world with intelligence. Labor erects the telegraph and sends forth the news on wings of lightning. Labor is the mother, and hence the true source of all wealth. Without labor, there could be no capital. Labor creates capital.

THOUGHT.

It is thought that gives shape to the axe, the saw, the hoisting screw of the log cart, and marks the level of the drain. It conceives the ingenious harvester, and masters the mighty power that whirls the roller-mills. Thought applies the scientific laws that separate the precious from the coarser earth and directs their shaping for their thousand uses. Thought directs the workmen who build the city, the railroad, and skillfully shape the cars and engine; it controls the power of steam that whirls the cars a thousand miles a day, and over the sea bears the treasure-laden ship from land to land. Thought shapes the very power of its own dissemination from mind to mind by the type, the printing-press, the book, the paper—yea, it hath chained the lightning to its use and the electric current obeys its wish. Thought is the mother of invention, the true source of all wealth. Thought lifts the mind from earth and prepares the soul for a higher and grander existence. So, teach the children to think; for the true mastery is of the mind.

Protest Against Land-in-Severalty.

"I MYSELF COUNTED IT THE ONLY PROPER POLICY UNTIL I WAS SHOWN THE INDIAN SIDE OF IT BY THE INDIANS THEMSELVES."
—Gail Hamilton.

The North American Review (Now York City), so ably edited by Allen Thorndike Rice, has never given to the public a more cogent and comprehensive appeal for justice in any department of social, theologic or governmental affairs than is contained in the pages of its March number, in an article from the pen of Gail Hamilton entitled: "The Lion's Side of the Lion Question," in which due protest is entered, in the name of infant civilization among the red men, against the "land-in-severalty" project.

Starting out with the potent facts that "the Indian question in our politics is not a question of choice," but that it is inexorable and pressing—and that money and human lives have been freely paid in the past for errors and crimes multitudinously committed in our treatment of it as a nation: and further that the better elements of the Indian and Caucasian races, now face to face on this continent, meet and mingle to mutual advantage, while the worst elements of both races meet and cheat with the inevitable result that the blood of the bravest and best is shed in atonement, this clear-headed writer proceeds to a consideration of the question of the best solution of the points in dispute. She is of opinion, as are thinking people in both races, that the barbaric type of Indian must eventually yield before the steady pressure of Anglo-Saxon civilization now existing around him, giving place to a progress-loving people who, while proud of their Indian parentage and race, yet set their faces sunward to achieve triumphs which the mere warrior never knows; but she evidently sees no reason to hope that this important step is to be achieved by destroying the present tribal relations at a blow, and leaving the disintegrated fragments of the aboriginal peoples to fight the battle each single-handed and alone with the same powers that even when under the full protection of the United States are found so hard to withstand.

It is useless, she says, for any optimist to expect that the question may be settled by the Indian dying out before the white man. The two races have already been in contact for two hundred years and neither is yet moribund:

"The question [she continues] is not whether the Indian is civilizable. He is already civilized in large sections."

In this connection she would have all classes remember that the divine gravitation leads to right-doing; and if the nation would put itself in the right in this matter it should place itself in harmony with honesty, which is the best principle as well as the best policy. The murder of Indians under the idea that "the only good Indian is the dead Indian" is alike bad morals, and, judged by its fearful cost in retaliation, bad administration.

She is willing to bear witness that "great efforts have been made to protect and sustain them [the Indians] and not without success" by the U. S. Government—though failures in this respect were inevitable, too, because "the problems are so complicated, the conditions so varying, the instruments so human." She is willing also to believe that among the disciples of the movement for "the distribution of lands in severalty, involving the destruction of the reservation system," there are many who act through benevolence, and not from greed—but she has evidently reached other conclusions as to the correct method to be employed in "bringing the Indian out of the individualism of barbarism to the organization of citizenship and civilization." How truly in the subjoined paragraph does she set forth the present status of affairs:

"In this country it should be a truism to say that whatever is done for the Indian should be done by the Indian, by his assistance if not wholly through his agency. He understands his race as another race cannot. If Indian affairs were, as far as possible, in the hands of Indians; if the Indian Department were, as far as practicable, composed of Indians, we should have fewer Indian massacres, Indian uprisings, Indian scares. The civilized Indian, backed by the whole power of the United States Government, would be a mighty force, a potent object lesson to the wild Indian. Proof of this is found in the beneficial effects of the employment of Indians by Government as Reservation police officers, United States Indian police, and Indian scouts. I have the greatest mistrust as to the existence of Indian uprisings. The Indians are perfectly aware of the might of the United States. There is no reasonable doubt they want peace. They fear war more than we do. I believe that these Indian troubles are very largely fomented by the greed of the white race in its lower circles—deliberately designing trouble in order to possess themselves of Naboth's vineyard. When Poor Buffalo informs Bishop Whipple that he is known by almost every Western tribe, and that he is now no more a warrior, but is trying to keep the peace among all his tribes, he is to be believed and he ought to be used as a medium of peace and good will. One such 'uprising' as that among the Utes, quickly as it was seen through and put to shame, cost the government more than would the salary of a commission for twenty years. The Creeks, the Choctaws, the Five Nations, have so strong an element of civilization that they could be brought to bear upon the wilder tribes with the greatest economy... Peace seems now to be restored, but is any sufficient restitution made to the Indians who have suffered? Is any punishment meted out to the miscreants who, in the name of law and under color of law, degraded the law of the land in the eyes of the Utes? Is anything done to deter other miscreants in other places from involving the Government in similar shame and loss? It ought to be understood that any person who brings the word of the Government into disrepute among the Indians is doing the greatest possible harm, is helping to shed blood. The lives of United States soldiers are as sacred as those of any other United States citizen, and to imperil their lives that lawless citizens may get lawless possession of the fair Indian lands is murder in the first degree."

Concerning the capability of the Indian for civilization she speaks as follows:

"The Five Nations in the Indian Territory have adopted the arts and the sciences, the manners and the religion of civilization. The first considerable town which the traveler approaches from the East is Vinita, and it is externally undistinguishable from any Missouri town. From the railroad station it is wide and shabby and dusty—but the vicinity of a railroad station is seldom attractive as a residence to Caucasians. Vinita has broad streets, frame, brick and stone houses and stores. It has all the machinery of a Caucasian town—mayor and council, town clerk and treasurer, taxes and municipal regulations, and courts of law, four churches, a high-school, and a large public school-house—till a United States citizen set fire to it. The Indian residents subscribe for the daily papers and the magazines. The Cherokee government is on the general model of the United States Government. The treaties with the United States are the supreme law of the land, and there is a written constitution.

The principal chief is the President or Governor of the Cherokee Nation. At present it is Chief Bushyhead. He has four secretaries, educated at Princeton. There is a treasurer who is under a $75,000 bond, and who has also a secretary and an auditor. There is a National Council and an Executive Council. The latter is the Cabinet and the former the Congress. It is composed of Senate and House of Representatives, and is controlled by the usual Parliamentary rules. The language employed is both English and Cherokee. A majority speak English, nearly all understand it, and an interpreter serves those who do not....

Their judicial system is furnished with district courts, circuit courts, supreme court, juries and grand juries, and all the engineery of appeal and delay.

At the capital, Tahlequah, the government building is of brick, stone-capped, with cupola and committee rooms, court rooms and abundant offices. The nation supports printing-office, newspapers, a prison, seminaries, orphan asylums, blind and indigent asylums, male seminaries and female seminaries.

It is a nation within a nation. It is a civilized nation within a civilized nation. Seventy years ago the Five Nations wore the blanket. When a people has thus organized itself, it is idle to discuss whether it is capable of becoming civilized. It is civilized."

This work TIME has accomplished in the above regard, and the writer of this able Protest evidently wishes time to be given for other tribes to become gradually permeated with this worthy sentiment, and led into a laudable imitation of this grand example. She does not believe that any unseemly readiness on the part of the whites to hasten the process will prove a promising factor in the solution of the problem: She crystallizes her thought in the subjoined sentences, which deserve to be read throughout the United States:

"The 'burning question' in Indian politics at present is the land-in-severalty question. Some of the best of our statesmen and citizens are urgent advocates of this policy. It will not, perhaps, be entirely insignificant to say that I myself counted it the only proper policy until I was shown the Indian side of it by the Indians themselves. All the best, the most advanced Indians that I saw—as well as those less remote from the wilderness—view the new policy with the gravest apprehension. They look forward to attaining citizenship in the future. They hope and aim one day to become a State, or a group of States, inherent and equal parts of the nation, but premature citizenship precipitated upon an unprepared community seems to them not only disastrous, but fatal."

The status of the Indians and their land title at present is clearly set forth by her as follows:

"Their present tenure is peculiar, but is guaranteed by solemn treaty—as sacred a compact as a government can make. Under this compact the Indian may own, occupy, cultivate, bequeath all such land in the Indian territories as he chooses to fence in and cultivate, but he may not sell it, nor own it as an absentee, or bequeath it to an absentee. It goes in direct line to his children, but only while they occupy it. If he leaves it, if he ceases to live on it, or utilize it, it reverts to the community. While he is on it his right is inalienable. If he abandons it all his ownership lapses. No one can take up land in the Indian Territory unless he is Indian or married to an Indian. The white husband of an Indian wife or the white wife of an Indian husband enters into all the privileges of a full-blooded Indian. Otherwise the white man is forbidden....

Practically, it will be seen, therefore, that all the Indians who are in any degree fit for land ownership already own the land. Those who do not see clearly enough the value of property in land to make the small effort requisite to ownership, would not be benefited by having ownership thrust upon them, and the nation would be destroyed. Many of them would fall a prey to the scheming whites who would pounce upon them. They would sell their lands for whiskey, and would then be turned adrift without resource to be the pest and terror of communities. From becoming an outcast to becoming an outlaw would be but a single step.

To make the title inalienable for a period of years will not prevent giving bond for title and present occupancy. Law can hardly deny the right of contract to the new citizen, and if it did it would be easily evaded and amended by the appeal to Congress of the very people its terms were intended to protect. Where titles have been made inalienable for a period of years, the ignorant allottees have been ingeniously aroused, by interested speculators, to indignation at the limitation of their right, and urged to petition Congress, declaring their ability to manage their own affairs, and asking removal of this injurious(?) restriction.

With the Indian title in the nation or community the individual is comparatively safe. He cannot dispose of an acre, and hence is not subjected to temptation. His nation educates him, gives him all the land he cares to cultivate, and if he is not sufficiently educated to realize the value of land, he is yet safe from vagabondage, and may make an humble home, secure against ejectment or the vagrancy that would be the lot of his ignorant helplessness in the States. If he is sufficiently educated, his nation gives him ample opportunity to use the land, gratify his ambition, and stimulate his weaker brother by his example.

In the Cherokee Nation, there is said to be no Indian pauper, except where physically disabled, and certainly there is no need to be, for while monopoly is controlled, every man willing to work can make a decent living."

The possession of this land was sacredly pledged to the Indians by the solemn faith of our government "as long as grass grows or water runs"; and to disturb existing relations by the new policy of lands in severalty, while it violates the treaty "takes wholly away from the Indian Nation the land allotted to it by treaty forever. It destroys all national and patriotic feeling and ambition. For the influence of the civilized Indian upon the wild Indian, it substitutes the influence of the most unscrupulous of the whites, whose one aim is to possess themselves of the land which the barbaric Indian too little values, and which he is only too ready to barter."

As evidences of what the Indians themselves think of the new project, and the manner in which those are treated who protest against the measure, she gives the following:

"The Caddo Chief, Jake, narrates through an interpreter his experience: 'I took the trip to Washington to protest before the Commissioner against the sectionalizing of the lands of my people. I told him my people were alarmed in consequence of the law enacted to divide our lands in severalty. I told the Commissioner that I had seen other Indians whose lands had been sectionalized and they said it was bad for them to have their lands divided, and as it was bad for them it must be bad for my people and other Indians, and it would bring misery and ruin upon my people. In former times and up to the present time, he and all his people had advised us and all the Indians to learn to labor and to gain education, and now when my people are just beginning to realize and accept the benefits of knowing how to work, you are attempting to change our customs and entail ruin on my people. When I spoke thus the Commissioner grew angry, and pointing his finger in my face said I was not telling him what was my own mind, but only what the white men who had inter-married had told me, and what the half-breed Indians told me, and the educated Indians who had instructed me to go on there and talk as I did. But I told him I was telling him the truth and giving him the views of myself and my people.'...

So great is the feeling among them against this alienation of land from the nation, so jealous are they of their tenure, that a considerable portion of the time of their last International Council at Eufala was devoted not so much to discussing as to deprecating it. The existence of such a council is worthy of notice by those of us who think the only good Indian is a dead Indian. The Council is the natural offspring of that which was established or authorized by treaty of 1866, and let it always be remembered that the United States treaties are the supreme law, the constitution, the very basis of organized society in the Indian Territory. The Council is composed of delegates from the five civilized nations and all the wild tribes of the plains. As an instrument of civilization its importance cannot be over-estimated. Delegates from fourteen of the wild tribes were present at the last Council, and a Cherokee informed me that but for the unwarranted interference of the United States agent he believed that the deadly Apaches and many other tribes would have come....

This Council prepared, and by unanimous consent adopted, a memorial to the President of the United States which, in its complete insight, its absolute helplessness, and its pathetic loyalty, seems to me worthy of remembrance."

From this remarkable document we have space for but one quotation, replete with perspicuous thought—prefacing its presentation with the statement that the other two sections preceding it set forth that the memorialists do not desire to antagonize or obstruct the operation of any effective policy of the United States, but trust that those conditions will be afforded the Indians which will enable them effectively "to adapt themselves to the requirements of civilized life in the least possible time":

"For attempting to present this view of our brothers to the President we will be pardoned when it is remembered that we are alike opposed to its provisions [land-in-severalty bill]; regarding them merely as a departure from the policy under which we have prospered, to one which will, in the near future, engulf all of the nations and tribes of the Territory in one common catastrophe, to the enrichment of land monopolists, before whom even your own citizens, with all the civilized machinery of justice, seem powerless to secure their rights. We deprecate any measure or law which will, in our judgment, lead to placing any of the Indians of the Territory as party to so unequal a contest. Like other people, the Indian needs at least the germ of political identity, some governmental organization of his own, however crude, to which his pride and manhood may cling and claim allegiance, in order to make true progress in the affairs of life. This peculiarity in the Indian character is elsewhere called patriotism, and the wise and patient fashioning and guidance of which alone will successfully solve the question of civilization. Preclude him from this and he has little else to live for.

"Your memorialists, especially of the five tribes, have undergone sad experience in transactions with the United States of an identical nature in 1830 and 1832, and shudder at the thought of the misfortunes that must surely come to the tribes of the further West if the provisions of this law are enforced. The tribes earnestly desire and ask that the President stay the operation of the law until they shall be in a condition to be benefited by it; and the five civilized tribes also join in an earnest and respectful request that the President do not put in force the land-in-severalty act upon a powerless and protesting people until they may at least have the opportunity of testing the validity of their rights before the judiciary of the United States."

Yet, she says, with all the wisdom, the moderation, and the submission exhibited in this Council, it was denounced in a high political office under our government as an attempt of the Five Tribes "to make trouble where they have no interest and no business to interfere."

It would seem difficult for political darkness to be deeper. Even should their position be wrong, their deepest interest is in their less civilized brethren, and their noblest business is to assist, advise and sustain them.

"If [she continues] the Indians were making no efforts to civilize themselves we might have some pretext for breaking our treaties in the impossibility of keeping them. But the Indians are painfully striving for improvement. Undoubtedly hosts of them will fall by the way, will die in the blanket. Many more will die in the full communion of civilized vice. But a remnant will remain. If we keep faith with them, the remnant may be a compelling majority, and presently be incorporated as a constituent part of the Great Republic. At any cost, we should keep faith....

To say... that the Indians are hopelessly welded to barbarism is an absurdity. To look at their worst and to judge thence of the whole, is as unreasonable as it would be to look into the purlieus of a great New York and judge thence that Americans are incapable of civilization. The white man, adventurous, restless, eager, looks over the acres, fair and wide, but the mere remnant of a continent in past possession, now the last award, refuge and resource of the Indians, and greedily prates of the impracticability of reserving this to barbarism; but of many remarks which might be made, one is that, barbarous as it is, it is hardly more barbarous than many tracts in the surrounding States.

With all its barbarism, it is very certain that the Indians are doing more to civilize their tribes than are the white Christians who cheat and steal and foment Indian disturbances, and raise Indian wars, under the horror and dread of which public sentiment may be inflamed against them to the violation of our treaties, the occupation of their land, the destruction of their autonomy, and the gratification of their greedy foes."...

Letter from W. J. Colville.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

As it is quite a long time since I have written anything for your hospitable columns, and especially as my many friends in the East do not forget me, but are so kind as to send me gracious epistles, which I am most thankful to receive but have no time to answer, I must request you to allow me space in which to state a few facts of general interest concerning our work in California. At time of writing, Mr. Heath and myself are spending a delightful month in Los Angeles, which I think is rightly named, for not only is the city beautifully situated and in possession of a charming climate, but its inhabitants are among the kindest, most liberal and hospitable people I have ever met. Never in all my travels have I been more cordially welcomed than here, and one particularly charming feature of society in this place is that it is made up of delightful people from all parts of the world.

Our farewell in San Francisco was the scene of an immense amount of kindly and earnest expression of sincere good feeling. It is utterly impossible to adequately describe a pleasant gathering anywhere, under any circumstances, as so much depends upon that silent, subtle, all-pervasive something we may, perhaps, for want of a better or more explicit phrase, call mental atmosphere.

I hear glowing accounts of the good work being carried on in San Francisco in various directions. The Golden Gate is just as fearless and interesting as ever. Mr. and Mrs. Owen are simply indefatigable in their exertions to spread whatever they know or feel to be the truth: and with all their earnestness they are always temperate and sunny. They are ably assisted by a noble corps of helpers, and I am glad to say the circulation of the paper is rapidly increasing. We take new subscriptions for it at our meetings almost daily, and it invariably meets with the most cordial appreciation.

Mr. and Mrs. Chainey have returned from Australia and New Zealand, and are now conducting successful meetings in Room 7, Odd Fellows Building, the place we formerly occupied. The Gnostic, a monthly of which I am now associate editor, is published with a view to present the teachings of theosophy in a popular and intelligible form to the general reader; it is meeting with success; I have a corner in it for the purpose of answering the questions of inquirers into spiritual science. A number of my best and staunchest friends have opened a hall for permanent occupancy at 106 McAllister street. During my absence Mrs. Sara Harris, Mrs. J. K. Wilson, Mrs. Helen Moore, Dr. McKaig and many others are entertaining and instructing large audiences. Dr. McKaig is a singularly gifted speaker, eloquent and scholarly. Mrs. Harris is intensely practical and profound. Mrs. Wilson is always earnest, bright and cheery, and so is Mrs. Shepard, who is now engaged in spiritual healing. Mrs. Moore is one of the best disseminators of progressive literature I have ever encountered. Miss Young is busy as ever, helping people all round; under her auspices I had a very successful class in Alameda during February. Dr. Morton, owing to press of business, has given up the management of spiritual meetings temporarily. He and I are still the best of friends, and as to Mrs. Morton, I can only repeat what I have said on previous occasions, both as a medium and a woman she has few equals and no superior.

The Society of Progressive Spiritualists is flourishing; some very able people are connected with it, and with its free platform and large circulating library it is assuredly doing an immense amount of good. I should have gladly spoken under its auspices while in San Francisco, in response to most kindly invitations, had not the press of other duties rendered my doing so impossible.

Here in Los Angeles the Spiritualists use a beautiful hall on Spring street, in the very centre of the city. The Society contains a large number of able and progressive men and women. Miss Susie Johnson, who lives at Long Beach, twenty-five miles away, is an eloquent speaker, and her utterances are highly appreciated. She strikes me as being a very kind and active woman. The only fault we have had to find with anything has been the paucity of chairs on Sundays; the people here literally rushed to the lectures; they came in droves. On Sunday evening, March 11th, every seat was occupied, and every inch of standing-room taken.

Mrs. Maggie Folsom-Butler, Mrs. O. K. Smith and many other Boston people are here; all look smiling and happy, and say they are doing well. Mrs. Maud E. Lord is a resident here, and has a host of friends as usual. Mrs. Whitney and Dr. Stansbury, from San Francisco, have been giving public séances and private sittings here to multitudes; they are both remarkable mediums, and are doing a vast amount of good. Dr. Eli Fay, the Unitarian minister, formerly of Sheffield, Eng., is a noble man beside being an excellent preacher. I am happy to know him personally, and find him one of the broadest, kindliest spirits I have ever met; he is a universal favorite.

In this part of the country liberal-minded people are wonderfully united. Progressive Jews and Unitarians exchange pulpits, and many of the so-called Evangelical Churches are broadening out wonderfully.

In San Francisco, during the building of the new Unitarian Church (Starr King's church has been taken down and the site used for commercial buildings), Dr. Stebbins preaches twice every Sunday in Temple Emanu-El, on Sutter street, the largest Jewish Temple on the Pacific coast; and the Unitarian Sunday School meets in the vestry of the First Congregational Church. Thus Trinitarians, Unitarians and Jews have so far outlived their differences and overcome their prejudices as to meet in each other's houses of worship as children of the one Infinite Spirit, and fellow-workers for the elevation of our common humanity.

In Los Angeles, on Sunday, March 11th, Mr. Levy, the talented and scholarly Rabbi of Oakland, preached for Dr. Fay at the regular morning service; I am sure the day is not far distant when all truly progressive minds will cease their apparent strivings and meet outwardly as one, as they are already one in spirit. The Theosophists in this lovely city have indeed reason to be proud of their gifted Secretary, Miss Louise Off. She and her mother have arranged a series of sociable reunions at their residence, where liberal-minded people of all shades of opinion gather to exchange thoughts amicably on topics of paramount importance to mankind. These gatherings are intensely interesting, and productive of more good than words can express. I know at least one hundred avowed Theosophists in California alone, and not one of them in my hearing has ever expressed an opinion hostile to Spiritualism, or in denunciation of any phase of honest mediumship, while the metaphysical teachers and healers here attend spiritualistic meetings frequently, and are all prepared to endorse as much of Spiritualism as they can individually discover to be true.

Among the new books which I have seen, there is one which I am glad to see you advertise. It is, in my opinion, calculated to remove more prejudice and enlighten more minds than perhaps any other work before the public. I allude to that marvelous gem of spiritual thought, "The Soul, and its Embodiments in Human Form," by the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. I have never seen anything on that subject to compare with it; Allan Kardec's works are truly excellent, and we have had many profound discourses on the theme from many speakers, but never anything to equal this stupendous revelation—for it is nothing less. Whenever any one broaches the subject of reembodiment in my hearing now, I say, send for a copy of Mrs. Richmond's latest publication, and then discuss it. I am happy to say I have already sold fifty copies in my classes, and hope to sell several hundred. When last I wrote to you, I mentioned the pleasure I had experienced in reading Thomas Gales Forster's discourses under the title, "Unanswerable Logic." My simple mention of this fact brought me one of the finest letters I have ever received from any one, from Mrs. Carrie Grimes Forster, in which she gives me a fuller insight than I ever had before of the lovely character both of herself and her arisen husband. There are truly a number of delightful people in the world, and it is not difficult to take a happy view of life when one associates with them through their writings, if face-to-face communion is impracticable.

As I am often written to by parties from the Eastern States, and even from across the ocean, as to the prospects of success awaiting those who take a trip to California, allow me to say frankly to all who may peruse these lines, that I have plainly discovered two distinct and widely opposite phases of California life. I believe every one with talent and energy, no matter in what direction his or her abilities may lie, can succeed in California, but only by dint of honest and continuous exertion. This land of boundless resources and unceasing effort is no place for idlers, or even for romantic dreamers, unless they have the wherewithal to live without exertion. Wealth can be earned here, and that without many of the serious drawbacks incidental to inhospitable climates. In the second place, extortionate remuneration will not be long afforded; prices for everything are beginning to find a reasonable level; those whose expectations are unreasonably bright, if they come out here will meet with many bitter disapointments; but, on the other hand, those who are desirous of giving a full equivalent for value received, and whose motto is "The workers win," will doubtless realize a fulfillment of their most sanguine expectations. To lecturers and mediums I would say: If you have ability and are moderate in your demands you will undoubtedly succeed. You will find many warm friends ready to extend to you most lovingly the right hand of fraternal fellowship; but if you expect fancy prices for your services—say five dollars for a private sitting or one dollar for admission to a lecture—then stay where you are, for you will not get it, at all events for any length of time, on the Pacific Coast. People here, for the most part, are not fabulously rich, neither are they prodigal in their expenditure. They are, as a rule, both generous and just; a few are wealthy, a large percentage are comfortably well off, but many are struggling. The natural resources of the country are practically limitless, and influences unseen, as well as the most sagacious minds expressed in mortal form, unite in assuring me and many others that ere long there will be harvests here, both material and spiritual, far surpassing any of the ingatherings of the past.

I could expatiate at great length, had I the time and you the space to spare, on the gorgeous and diversified scenery of Southern California, the paradise of fruits and flowers; but as many of your readers are doubtless familiar with more than I could describe I will draw this letter to a close by simply remarking that a prolonged residence in California only endears the country and its inhabitants ever more and more to the appreciative mind; this is the testimony of thousands. As to my future engagements, I will say that we commence a term of work in San Diego April 8th. Then we expect to return here for two or three weeks, on our way back to San Francisco. I am expecting to speak at the Oakland Camp-Meeting during June. Probably I shall be in Chicago and at Cassadaga during August and September, and then will it be San Francisco again, or where? Let those who know, answer; I am in ignorance.

With kindest regards to friends innumerable, believe me, as ever, your sincere friend,

W. J. COLVILLE.

SPIRITUAL ECHOES FROM THE SECULAR PRESS.

"What Is It Worth?"

The Cleveland (O.) Plain Dealer of the 5th inst. contains a hearty commendation of a discourse by Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings, delivered the night before in Memorial Hall, that city, from which we make the subjoined extracts:

"The questions, she said, that she proposed to discuss were, 'What shall we do with our Spiritualism? What is its practical value to the world? Granting it to be true, what good does it do the world?' It may be said that Spiritualists know Spiritualism to be the truth, and what is true must be good, but that answer will not do for those who do not know what Spiritualism is. To them we can only say: Get rid of your prejudices and preconceived opinions, and investigate, and you will soon find out that there is truth in Spiritualism, and good in it, as millions of people are ready to attest.

Christianity had to be before Spiritualism could be, and if there had been no Christianity there had been no Spiritualism. Christianity has been of use to the world, and never was there a nobler gospel or a more spiritual and elevating religion taught than that of Jesus Christ. True Spiritualism is evolved from Christianity, and Spiritualists should understand Christianity better, as Christians should know Spiritualism better. We cannot know anything from the outside. We must get into the spirit of it. The real matter of complaint against Christianity is not in its teachings, but in the fact that its professors do n't live up to them. If Jesus were to walk the earth to-day he would not recognize many of those who call upon his name.

Now Spiritualists must take care that the same thing is not said of them. It is not enough to know that a thing is true; you must be what you believe. Spiritualism should lead us to live better lives, to grow in spirituality, to cast out scandal-mongering, uncharitableness and selfishness.

[To those who approach spiritual investigations with improper motives she said:] No deception will serve. The mask of your face will not serve to hide the evil in your heart, and that which you attract in the séance-room or circle will come to you. When you get rubbish or lies from a medium, the chances are that you are receiving nothing but the reflections from the evil in your own heart. The first thing, then, is to purify your own heart and life, and then, and only then, are you fit to open the door into the angel-world, and receive the messages that go and come. But until you do this beware how you tamper with the spirit-world."

"Spiritualism Not Satanic."

A San Francisco daily of a recent date states that J. J. Morse gave at Metropolitan Temple, not long since, a discourse titled as above, in reply to an attack made by Rev. W. N. Meserve, in his address before the Congregational Club.

"The reverend gentleman," said Mr. Morse, as he arose with his eyes tightly closed and waved his hand in the direction of his audience, "out of the goodness of his heart took occasion to say: 'Spiritualism is a bad thing, satanic in origin, demoralizing and degrading in its results.' It is the duty of Rev. Mr. Meserve to demonstrate his own proposition. We ask the reverend gentleman what proof he has that Satan exists and that there is such a place as hell? Ignorance is probably his best excuse. There are two theories as to the origin of the Devil. We will deal with the Mosaic theory, which is that Satan was a prince in heaven, and that he was expelled. Everything was lovely when this happened. Adam and Eve were enjoying themselves, when he sneaked into the Garden of Eden as a snake, and caused their expulsion by causing them to taste the forbidden fruit. Singular to say that after his Satanic Majesty had accomplished his dire results we hear no more of him for four thousand years. There is no evidence that the Devil appeared during that time. The first evidence of his reappearance was before Jesus of Nazareth. There had been no religion advocated in the meantime, and consequently no work for the alleged Devil. In the Old Testament will be found a record of spiritual manifestations. Does the Rev. Mr. Meserve know more than the old Jewish prophets? If so, we ought to bow down our heads and say 'Here is a man greater than Moses and the prophets.' What is that which comes from the Devil? What is Spiritualism? What do mediums do? Call up the spirits of the dead? There never was one called up. The spirits are intelligent men and women who want to communicate with their friends and prove that there is no everlasting death.

It is easy enough to throw stones and hurl mud, but when a minister, reckless of facts, says that Spiritualism is degrading, it is time that Spiritualists should stand up and ask him to prove the fact that shall substantiate his own position. Whosoever opposes Spiritualism as demoralizing should have the assertion hurled back in his teeth."

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.—The opening paper is by D. R. Wallace, M. D., treating upon "George Eliot's Evangelical Picture Gallery;" the picture made most prominent in this section being one of Dr. John Cumming, a clear-cut, incisive one that leaves nothing for imagination to portray, and which sets forth with distinctness the characteristics of some of our present-day pulpit occupants. "Immortality" is the topic of an eloquent article, and with others treating upon liberal themes constitute an excellent number for the first of a new volume. Referring to its entrance upon the sixth year, the editor says: "There will be no change either in the style or price of The Pulpit, and unless we can make it a little better, there will, we hope, be no change in its moral and intellectual tone. Our motto is 'upward and onward' in the direction of the truest and the best; socially, morally and intellectually." Waco, Tex.: J. D. Shaw.

THE BIZARRE.—NOTES AND QUERIES gives the dates of the first publication of the "Letters of Junius," and the names of various persons—fifty in all—to whom their authorship has been attributed. The proposed universal language, "Volapük," to take the place of the eight hundred said to be in use at the present time, is described. It is said that it can be learned in a very short time, a month's study and practice qualifying one to write and speak it fluently, and that there are now a dozen or more periodicals published in Volapük. CORRY.—G. F. Lewis writes: "The last words of Charles Hall, who recently passed to the higher life, were: 'See, the change that I have so long dreaded is coming, and I am so glad!' The 'dread' had been dissipated by the glimpse he had caught of the new light that dawned upon him from the spiritual realms. To me the evidence of a future and better existence given by such words from those whose feet touch the threshold of another life, call forth grateful feelings that, after a long night of superstitious darkness, we are coming to know that death, so long styled 'the grim monster,' is not our enemy—is in no sense a punishment, but a development, or birth, into a higher life, like the birth of a worm into a butterfly, or an egg into a chicken. The divine law of evolution, or continued progression, is beginning to be understood. After a cold winter we are approaching a warmer atmosphere, when the birds will sing their sweet songs in all places where not repulsed, and roses will bloom wherever they have been cultivated. Still more joyous is the warm spiritual wave of love and wisdom coming into the souls of millions. What we now have are only the early household plants—hyacinths and lilies—cultivated in refined homes. Ere long the whole planet will blossom with flowers that bloom eternally.

A dear friend of mine has lately joined her friends in the higher life. She, too, saw clearly, and said, shortly before her departure:

'I have enjoyed the spring of life; I have passed the glories of summer; have culled the fruits of autumn; am now passing through the rigors of winter. I see at no great distance the dawn of a new day, the fruit of a spring that shall be eternal. It is approaching to meet me. I haste to embrace it. Welcome! welcome! eternal spring!'

The Hon. A. B. Richmond in his new book, 'What I Saw at Cassadaga,' describes the death of his sister as follows: 'She was a matured woman, a victim of the remorseless consumption, yet a fragile girl with an exceedingly acute nervous organization. I stood by her bedside a few moments before her death, when, suddenly opening her eyes, she looked upward with a gaze of ecstasy, and clapping her feeble hands she exclaimed, in a voice much more distinct than she had uttered for many days: "Oh! mother! see! see! There is father, and Mary, and Almira, come to welcome me home. Oh! I am so happy! so happy!" and her lips were silent forever.'"

PITTSBURGH.—A correspondent writes under date of March 19th: "Next Sunday will close the engagement of Mr. and Mrs. Kates for the present. Yesterday (18th), Mr. Kates delivered one of the best lectures ever heard here.

In the evening Mrs. Kates lectured upon a subject taken from the audience; she also sang and improvised a song, the subject being given her from the same source. She then gave tests, which consisted of spirit-descriptions and names of those described. Mrs. Kates is undoubtedly the best medium that has occupied our platform, giving character-readings, and descriptions with names, with correctness, improvising songs, etc."

BRADFORD.—Rev. S. Weil, Rabbi of the Reform Temple, writes: "The eminent German philosopher, Eduard von Hartmann, author of the famous 'Philosophy of the Unconscious,' has written a treatise entitled 'Der Spiritismus.' The first chapter treats the question in general; its present aspects. The author recognizes the reality and genuineness of the spiritual phenomena, after eliminating what he conceives to be spurious. Then he enumerates the principal works, scientific and empirical, that comprise the literature on the subject. He sharply criticises the attitude of the majority of scientists, who disdain to investigate what seems to transcend their very limited scientific horizon. This attitude he stigmatizes as unscientific. The next chapter discusses the physical phenomena, which he ascribes to what he calls masked somnambulism. This theory of somnambulism he seeks to confirm in the third chapter, by considering the nature and scope of the mediumistic revelations, calling to his aid the gift of mind-reading, second-sight and clairvoyance. Next, the materializing phenomena are discussed from the same standpoint. He is candid enough, however, to admit that there are manifestations which cannot be explained by his theory. This residue he relegates to the realm of the unconscious, or the absolute; that is, to pure being, or to what Sir William Hamilton calls the unconditioned, untrammeled by space and time. Of the hypothesis of the agency of decarnated spirits he speaks last, disavowing his belief in such an agency. Von Hartmann declares in his introduction that he himself has never had personal experience in the matter, having never attended a séance(!); and he claims that this very freedom from the spell which he assumes mediums cast over persons in séances enables a philosopher to judge without bias the whole subject. The writer of this is not aware of the existence of any English translation of this remarkable little book, which is published by Wilhelm Friedrich, Leipzig and Berlin, 1885.

The desideratum would be to confute Hartmann's central idea of Somnambulism, and to show that spiritual phenomena are not subjective products of the minds of mediums. It is to be regretted that no English translation is extant. The reader is apprised of the treatises of Wallace, Crookes, Zöllner, and of all the leading scientific writers on Spiritualism."

Massachusetts.

AMESBURY.—T. E. Boutelle writes: "Sunday, March 11th, Mrs. H. S. Lake occupied the platform of the new hall in the Opera House. Her afternoon subject was 'The Distinctive Features of Spiritualism.' At the evening service subjects were received from the audience, all of which were elucidated in a logical, clear and impressive manner.

The 18th, Mrs. Hattie C. Mason was with us again, but by reason of physical disability her lectures were brief. 'Sunshine' filled in the time, giving many tests that were recognized, some of them being to those present at a spiritual meeting for the first time, all receiving unmistakable evidence of the presence of their loved ones who had passed on through that change miscalled death.

Mrs. Lake speaks here again April 1st, on which date our meetings will probably close for this season."

BROCKTON.—The following card furnishes its own explanation:

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In THE BANNER of March 10th I saw a communication purporting to come from me in regard to a lecture given by F. A. Wiggin, of Salem, in Brockton, Feb. 26th.

I wish that statement to be corrected, as I have not written or given any one authority to use my name in regard to that lecture in any way or manner.

Fraternally, MRS. H. N. KEITH,
Sec. of the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society.
Brockton, Mass., March 12th.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Cortland Ball writes: "Spiritualism is spreading daily in this city, and that very fast, too, but the growth and development are due wholly to our local mediums. We have some who are very good, who are constantly making new converts to the spiritual cause, and prominent among the number may be named Mrs. M. C. Jacob, residing at 320 North Mississippi street. Her gifts of mediumship are independent voices and slate-writing. Through the instrumentality of this medium hundreds have had all doubts of immortality removed, and the light of a future life has dawned upon them with more resplendency and beauty than they had ever dreamed of. Investigators and honest skeptics will never regret visiting Mrs. Jacob, if they wish to obtain evidence that cannot be gainsayed, that their spirit-friends can and do return to them from that bourne from which some believe 'no traveler returns.'

Mrs. A. M. Rankin, residing at 468 North East street, is undoubtedly one of the very best trance and clairvoyant mediums that can be found anywhere. Through her delicate and sensitive organism many wonderful and startling facts have been given to skeptics and investigators, convincing them, beyond all doubt, that the change we call death does not end all.

Owing to the conditions by which some of our best mediums are almost constantly surrounded, I often wonder how the spirit-world can use them at all. Mediums, above all others, should be surrounded by as perfectly harmonious and pleasant conditions as it is possible to attain, but it is a lamentable fact that the reverse of this is too often the case.

Quite a number from this city and vicinity are making preparations to visit Cincinnati the coming Anniversary.

I hear nothing but kind words spoken for THE BANNER and its management. In the future as in the past may it ever be the true standard banner of the Spiritual Philosophy."

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Wm. Emmette Coleman, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "The second annual meeting of the Golden Gate Religious and Philosophical Society, for which Mrs. E. L. Watson is the regular speaker, and to which Mr. J. J. Morse has been successfully ministering since last September, owing to the ill health of Mrs. Watson, was held in Metropolitan Temple, Sunday, March 11th. Mr. F. H. Woods, the efficient and zealous President for two years past, announced his intention to retire from that position, owing to ill health. During the past year of our Society it established a Ladies' Aid Society, still in successful operation, and assumed charge of the Jessie-street Kindergarten, yet under our control. Our doors were also thrown open free to the public, as they now remain. When Mrs. Watson's illness compelled her absence from our platform, Providence favored us with the very man, of all others in the country, that we needed to supply her place, Mr. J. J. Morse. He has done a noble work here, and we all love him. When he shall have closed his labors with us next May, we shall have finished six years of the presentation of the purest and best Spiritualism in the world.

Mrs. H. E. Robinson submitted the reports of the Kindergarten and the Ladies' Aid Society. There was an average attendance of fifty in the school, and a balance of twenty-eight dollars, Kindergarten funds, on hand. The Ladies' Aid Society had distributed during the year two hundred and fifty garments, and had received one hundred dollars in money, of which a small balance was unexpended.

The following Board of Trustees for the ensuing year was then unanimously elected: F. H. Woods, M. B. Dodge, Mrs. H. E. Robinson, Adolph Weske, J. B. Chase, Abijah Baker, C. H. Wadsworth, J. H. Moore, Wm. Emmette Coleman and G. H. Hawes. The Trustees met immediately after adjournment of the Society and elected the following officers for the current year: President, Wm. Emmette Coleman; Vice-President, Mrs. H. E. Robinson; Secretary, G. H. Hawes; Corresponding Secretary, Wm. Emmette Coleman; Business Manager and Treasurer, M. B. Dodge. Mrs. H. E. Robinson was continued as Manager of the Kindergarten."

Vermont.

WEST RANDOLPH.—Dr. S. N. Gould informs us that the Convention at Waterbury was successful in the spirit of all attending, but was sadly interfered with by the stormy weather. Judge Crossett and Mrs. Crossett, the President, (who reside three miles out of W.) arrived after great difficulty; all who reached the Convention outside of Waterbury were: C. B. Clement, of Barnet; Mr. Summers, of New Hampshire; L. Webb, of East Granville; Dr. Gould, of West Randolph, and two ladies of Montpelier. Most of these were two days on the way.

The time was occupied with conferences and regular addresses—spirit communion being participated in also by séances. Mrs. Crossett, L. Webb (Vice-President), Dr. Gould, C. B. Clement, Mr. Corse, L. C. Turner, Mrs. Ambler, and others, participated in the speaking, etc.

Mrs. Lilla Turner, Albert Turner, and the Duxbury Glee Club furnished the music, which was very highly appreciated. Prof. Elmore and wife, with violin and harp, were heard from with great pleasure.

Among the closing exercises the following preamble and resolution were unanimously passed:

Whereas, We have assembled in the beautiful village of Waterbury to hold a Quarterly Convention for the purpose of promulgating the true principles of the Spiritualistic Philosophy; therefore be it

Resolved, That we tender a vote of thanks to the proprietors of the Waterbury Hotel and their assistants for their well-spread tables and the many kindnesses granted, and for the use of the parlor for the Convention; also to the singers for their sweet and soul-inspiring music; and especially to Mrs. Crossett for the fine addresses given; also to the different railroads for courtesies extended; and to all who have assisted to make the Convention a pleasant gathering.

It may be expected that the June or October Convention will be held at Waterbury.

Minnesota.

MORRISTOWN.—D. Birdsall, Cor. Sec'y, writes: "Our Rice Co. S. M. R. Association is doing a good work, and I would earnestly commend our system of organization to all other counties in our State and other States, as an efficient and successful means of developing liberal ideas; that is, by organizing local circles or clubs to meet weekly and to hold monthly meetings. We are developing home talent rapidly. We started by employing an agent, at thirty dollars per month salary, who visits each club weekly. He has no hotel expenses, and consequently can do very well on a small salary. Our call for liberal literature has been so generously responded to that we have received more than our agent can circulate, and, as it is necessary to support our liberal press, we believe it will be better for our members to subscribe for papers than to be supplied by free gifts, hence we do not require any more donated."

Colorado.

LEADVILLE.—Moses Hull writes March 19th: "We leave the City of the Clouds for our home among the Hawkeyes to morrow morning. We have spent ten weeks here very pleasantly. Never before have we breathed such pure air or drank such pure water. The people are intelligent and generous, and many of them finely developed spiritually. A society has been organized and a hall procured, and an effort will be made to keep up regular meetings. Mrs. F. A. Logan is now here, and hopes to take up the work where we lay it down. We have been repeatedly urged to spend another month or two here, but duty calls in other directions. We have spoken nearly every day for ten weeks, and the interest has increased from first to last. Speakers and mediums desiring to come this way would do well to correspond with L. Agnese Moulton of this city."

Maine.

ROCKLAND.—F. W. S. writes: "Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant was with us March 4th and 11th, and our people were much interested in her psychometric readings, in which she excels. This phase of public mediumship is comparatively new in this place, and creates considerable interest, calling out good-sized audiences.

Our community is becoming more and more permeated with the ideas promulgated by our mediums, and the cause is getting a foothold here that will soon enable us to have an organized society and regular meetings."

New York.

SARATOGA SPRINGS.—E. J. Huling writes that much interest is felt in preparations for the observance of the forthcoming Anniversary. "The Ladies' Aid Society," he writes, "met Monday evening, March 19th, to see to the arrangements. During the past winter the Society has enjoyed lectures from Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. Caroline E. S. Twing, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, and others."

☞ In a country like this, says the New York Sun, where there is no State Church, and where not even Christianity is recognized as a State religion, it seems to be impossible to logically and justly enforce any sort of religious teaching in schools supported by general taxation. If, therefore, the different churches regard such teaching as an imperative necessity, apparently the only course for them to take is to set up schools of their own. But then would come up among Protestants also the question which has been raised by the Catholics, as to whether the State can rightly compel people to contribute to the support of schools of whose instruction they disapprove; and the permanence of the whole public school system would be endangered.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Paoli, Pa., March 12th, 1888, James Ogdin, First Assistant Engineer U. S. Rev. M.

He was a man in the fullest meaning of the word, noble-minded and helping whenever opportunity offered; consequently he was loved and honored everywhere, especially among Spiritualists as one of the best workers in their ranks. He will live in the memory of many friends here, as well as in other cities, where, through his station in earth-life, he had made acquaintances. We are all anxious to be favored with a communication from his spirit. Whilst in the form he possessed the gift of a rapping medium. His material remains were returned to mother earth on the 17th at Paoli, Pa.

THE

Eleusinian

AND

Bacchic Mysteries.

A Dissertation, by THOMAS TAYLOR, Translator of "Plato," "Plotinus," "Porphyry," "Iamblichus," "Proclus," "Aristotle," etc. Third edition. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Emendations, and Glossary, by ALEXANDER WILDER, M. D.

In the Mysteries, the dramas acted at Eleusis and other sacred places, were embodied the deeper thoughts and religious sentiment of the archaic world. The men and women initiated into them were believed to be thenceforth under special care of God, for this life and the future. So holy and interior were the doctrines considered which had been learned in the Sanctuary from the two tablets of stone, that it was not lawful to utter them to another. What was seen and learned elsewhere might be admirable; but the exercises of Eleusis and Olympia had in them the something divine, and those who observed them were "the children of God," and imaging him in wisdom, intuitive discernment, and love.

The reader desirous of getting the kernel of the doctrines of Plato, Orpheus, Eumolpas, and their fellow-laborers, as well as of the Alexandrian Eclectics, will obtain invaluable aid from this treatise.

THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE; or, Autobiography of Warren Chase. By THE AUTHOR.

Those who sympathize with the many great purposes, high aspirations, broad charity, and noble individuality of the author, will give wide circulation among the young to this autobiography of Warren Chase, who, struggling against the adverse circumstances of a "dishonourable birth, and the lowest condition of poverty and New England slavery," conquered ignorance, obscurity, poverty and organic inharmony, and rose to the position of legislator, public lecturer, spiritual teacher and trenchant writer.

WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT. By A. B. CHILD, M. D.

This book aims to speak of life as it is. It has approbation for everything, and condemnation for nothing. It recognizes no merit, no demerit, in human souls; no special heaven for pretended self-righteousness, and no special hell for a bleeding, suffering humanity. It accepts every creed, belief, and doctrine, every action, good and "bad," as being the lawful effect of a cause that lies in unseen spirit, which cause is above the power of human volition.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

Or choice of ONE of the below-described beautiful works of art:

ENGRAVINGS.

"AN ARMFUL."

This charming picture represents a little girl in a barn o rustic architecture in the act of trying to carry off more of the old cat's young than she can well manage, while the other kittens frolic in hay and apples at her feet. The mother, in eloquently pleading attitude, is putting in a decided but dignified protest against the abduction. It is a very animated and pleasing gem of art, finely engraved on steel by F. T. Stuart, from a painting by V. L. Knous, an eminent German artist. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE."

Painted by Joseph John, and engraved on steel by J. E. Rice. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 16x21 inches.

"THE ORPHANS' RESCUE."

Engraved on steel by J. A. J. Wilcox, from the original painting by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 15x20 inches.

"HOMEWARD."

Designed and painted by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"FARM-YARD AT SUNSET."

Copied from the well-known and justly celebrated painting designed by Joseph John. Stein, copied in black and two tints. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"THE DAWNING LIGHT."

From the original painting by Joseph John. Engraved on steel by J. W. Watts. Size of sheet, 20x24 inches.

For each additional Engraving 50 cents extra.

Any person sending $3.50 for one year's subscription to the BANNER OF LIGHT will be entitled to Hollyer's Line and Stipple Steel Plate Engraving of the late

Henry W. Longfellow in His Library

At "Craigie House," Old Cambridge, Mass.

The plate is 24x32 inches. The central figure is that of the GREAT POET. He is seated on the right of a circular table, which is strewn with his books and writing materials. The surroundings are harmonious and symmetrical.

This beautiful historic work of art is a lasting souvenir and ornament for sitting-room, parlor, library or office of any American home. We will mail the engraving free to any one sending us $3.50 for a year's subscription for the BANNER OF LIGHT, or we will send the engraving alone for $1.00. The Work Spiritualism is Doing.

At this interesting stage of the progress made by Spiritualism, it becomes all those who accept its truths and try to live according to its doctrines to pause and review the extent and character of its work, to examine anew the extent of its claims as a later revelation to the human race, and to establish in the heart such an appreciation of its blessed worth as will give a new depth and richness to the entire life. Viewed in this manner, one is better enabled to understand what a reform power Spiritualism really is in the world. And that we may illustrate the subject with all possible clearness and impressiveness, we refer to a recent discourse on this very theme uttered through Mrs. Richmond at Chicago.

She remarked at the start that, as spirit formed all things, all reformation must in consequence proceed from the spirit. The law of growth is to unfold that which is within; the new growth is from within the new life. It is with the spiritual as it is with the physical birth. When truth is ready to appear, and the new form of truth is ready to be expressed, all things coöperate to assist the wonderful birth. The spirit of man is the source of all reform in man. Do as you will with external laws, make them or unmake them, still the man who is a slave will forge new gyves to keep himself in bondage; but if he is free, there is no bond on earth that can hold him. And so with reform: from within the church and within politics the lives that are ordained come forth, by their growth to speak it, to herald it, to work for it. Even thus man's spirit builds for future generations. The tributes which the world pays to Dante to-day, to the genius of his song, the wonder of his inspiration, are tributes to the inspiration of the skies.

There are those who think it possible successfully to carry forward reform without a spirit. Many have been driven out of the church into materialism, who expect, upon the foundation of science, by physical laws, to reconstruct the world, who expect, upon the foundation of political economy alone, to reconstruct the nation. But they do not remember that it was the religious impulse of the Puritan fathers that brought them across the ocean to found a new republic in this western land; that it was the spirit of prayer that forbade the Father of his Country to accept a crown and kingdom, though laid at his feet after he had won victory for the land; that the spirit of that prayer, of that reform, however much it may have been abused, has been carried forward in such light as the nation has had. And the further it has been carried from the true spirit of freedom, the more it has parted with its religious light.

We shall have reforms in government, not when the laws are taken to pieces for the sake of supplanting them with laws equally objectionable—not when legislators tear down what has been done to build up other things not less monstrous and wrong; but when the spirit of man's life shall fashion laws in accordance with that spirit—when the highest that is in man shall be typified in the laws, instead of what is lowest in him. The standards of humanity are so low because of the materialism of Church and State and the loss of spiritual inspiration in both. This is the reason why so many methods are devised for the mitigation of human wrongs and human suffering, while the keynote is not yet struck. Harmony cannot be evoked until the right note is found. There is not so much need that the body of man be rebuilt as that the spirit shall assert its power. It is not that man physically needs patching up; rather should we all strive especially to be free from the physicians.

The present state of the world conclusively shows that man's teaching always has been that the two existences are separate here, even if the spirit exists at all; that while man is in the body he must attend to the conditions of the body, and that if he prays for salvation it must be the salvation that comes after death, not for salvation here—since the body claims him, and mammon is the thing for him to pursue. While materialism boastfully asserts that there is no other life, no other world, that matter claims the entire service of humanity, there is a still voice in the world that denies this to-day. And this is why Spiritualism must constitute the basis of any and all real reform; the Spiritualism that in every age has interposed between man and the mere shadow of religion and of liberty, and has shown him the better way. It is the spirit in the world to-day that declares it to be impossible to have a perfect State or a perfect church until the individuals composing each are more perfect. It declares that if society is to be reconstructed, it is not to be reconstructed from without but from within.

Punish willful boys by confining them with criminals, and they will not fail to harden into criminals. Under a different influence they will make good citizens. This simply signifies that the State must be pervaded with the influence of the best lives, the best that the community can afford; otherwise we sow the seeds of crime, nurture them in hot-houses set apart expressly to receive them, and complain after they are ravaging the world around us. Spiritualism says that every individual spirit is of equal value in the light of its Creator as every other spirit. It says that neither hanging nor any other kind of violence can put a spirit out of existence. It declares that the spirit-world is peopled with just such human beings as are daily being sent from our midst. If, then, the message we receive from our loved ones is such that no thought nor deed can perish, that not one of our aspirations or errors can escape chronicling by our own spirits, what is the value of such knowledge to the world? Only of such value as the individual himself makes of it. It is a meaning voice, a warning note, the only enlivening and animating power to-day. It encourages us to the best; it assures us that the worst shall be forgotten; it bids us feed and strengthen the highest, telling us that that which is lowest shall have no existence.

Spiritualism announces that the individual wrong must be righted, that each individual spirit must overcome evil with its own strength. It instructs us, therefore, to believe in the strength of right and goodness, in the law of truth and love, in the dominant power of man's excellence when it shall be fairly and sincerely tried. In its renovating power, it means to see to it that human lives shall so conquer their individual weaknesses and follies that they can bear the test of self-examination; that they can afford even to mingle with the downtrodden and lowly and the outcast, and have no fear of contamination. If the terror with which theology surrounded death has been dissipated, can there be any shadow in the earthly night so dark, or any human terror so dreadful, that the same light which has scattered the one will not likewise scatter the other? Every human being is to be made to understand that he or she stands for something distinct in the light of humanity and eternity. None are to be permitted to feel that they are perpetual outcasts from the kingdom of God. Every one is to be helped to overcome his shadow.

As the watchful and waiting mother sets the lighted lamp in the window when her son is abroad that it may light him on his way home, so should we set the lamp in the dwelling of the Father's kingdom who have the light ourselves. If instead of judging us harshly our angel ministrants have bidden us to come this way, the way of the light, and led us gently and kindly and tenderly toward that light; if the burden of our grief has been lifted and the stone rolled away from the sepulchre of human life; if poverty has been mitigated by the riches of the skies; if though hungry in the body we have been fed in the spirit; then should we set the light in the window of our dwelling for others, that shall tell them that by this path we have found peace, in this way found rest, and the light of the spirit has lifted the pall of its gloom, and banished sorrow and sadness from the heart.

It is not in the outside vestibule, in the external adornment of the temple of humanity, that the angels and ministering spirits are working, but in the innermost heart, in the secret life, in the places of conscience; and when the whole shall be fashioned into the fabric there will not be a single spirit left out, not a soul that will not be included in that divine kingdom, not a place in that temple that is too good to receive any child of God. As in the heavens and on the earth there is no soul that can be shut out from the love of God, so in the kingdom of the new life, in the reformation that is being wrought and is to be wrought on the earth, none are so lowly, so ignoble, though placed upon the highest seats of power, that the spirits do not well know that the light of the skies will one day reach them.

The particular anniversary which Spiritualists are at this time celebrating with festivity and rejoicing, fitly requires of them that they should pause, and seriously consider how far they are aiding in the promotion of its chosen work, and whether either in their lives or their words they are obstructing its clear advancement. No rejoicings are sincere that cannot be verified with a show of a consistent, sustaining example. If we believe and know what we openly profess, nothing should be more natural than to demonstrate the reality of that knowledge and belief in our life and character. The peculiar work to which Spiritualism has clearly been appointed it will surely perform. If we are sincerely desirous of sharing in it, our rejoicings at this anniversary season ought to be accompanied with the actual proofs of the absorption of our new and larger belief into our daily life and conversation.

ON THIS FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ITS ADVENT WE MOST EMPHATICALLY PROCLAIM THAT THE REFORM WHICH MODERN SPIRITUALISM IS WORKING IN HUMAN CONCEPTIONS IN EVERY DEPARTMENT OF LIFE, WHETHER HERE OR HEREAFTER, IS IN BIDDING MEN TO FOLLOW THE LIGHT THAT WILL LEAD THEM FROM THE MIDNIGHT DARKNESS OF IGNORANCE TO THE MORNING LAND OF KNOWLEDGE!

☞ The present week being the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, we are grieved to see so much inharmony in our ranks in certain quarters. "Let us have peace."

The Twentieth Anniversary.

The recurrence of the Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism naturally leads to a retrospection of the past and of former observances of the day, of which, to Spiritualists of this city and vicinity, none will be remembered with greater satisfaction than that of twenty years ago to-day. It was arranged and conducted under the energetic and efficient management of Dr. Henry F. Gardner, with Mr. M. T. Dole as Secretary, both of whom labored most assiduously to make it the remarkable success that it proved to be.

The exercises were held in Boston Music Hall. The afternoon was devoted to the various Children's Lyceums of the city and adjoining towns, seven hundred of whose members were marshalled in order, and, accompanied by a full band of music, marched with banners, waving flags and happy faces from the Tremont street entrance of the hall to the Common, through the Park and Beacon street malls, thence across to Winter street on their return to the hall. Crowds of interested spectators were along the whole line of the march. The indoor exercises, led by Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Davis, were greatly admired, and consisted of addresses, recitations, marches, gymnastics, singing, etc. W. H. Doolittle recited an original poem, "The Spirit's Greeting," composed in spirit-life and given through the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant, by Anna Cora Wilson. At the close of the afternoon an excellent collation was served to the children in an adjoining hall. The Lyceums that took part in the exercises were the Boston, John W. McGuire, Conductor; the Charlestown, A. H. Richardson, Conductor; the Chelsea, Leander Dustin, Conductor; the East Boston, John T. Freeman, Conductor; and the Cambridgeport, Martin Barri, Conductor.

In the evening an audience of three thousand filled the seats, aisles and platform of Music Hall. Dr. Gardner called the meeting to order at 7:30, and introduced the services with an address congratulatory of the glorious success that was attending the celebration, as evinced by the afternoon assembly, and emphasized by the throngs that were before him. The speaking was continued several hours, and was participated in by Mrs. Emma F. Jay Bullene, Selden J. Finney, Prof. William Denton, and Mrs. Mary F. Davis. The Providence press was represented by William Foster, Jr., that of Montreal by Henry Lacroix, and the Boston journals by their reportorial attaches. During the exercises telegrams were received from similar gatherings in various cities, and responses transmitted, that to Chicago being: "The East sends greeting to the West. Three thousand assembled in Music Hall: One with you in Principle—One in Action—One in Destiny."

At ten o'clock the floors were made ready for dancing, and under the skillful management of Mr. J. H. Conant, the exhilarating exercise was participated in until one o'clock, when the twentieth anniversary observances closed.

Several poems additional to the one above mentioned, written for the occasion, were read, recited or sung during the evening, the principal being a lengthy and masterly one, "THE INNER MYSTERY," subsequently published in book form, and which, by the kind permission of its mediumistic author, Miss Lizzie Doten—who then delivered it—we place before our readers on another page of this Fortieth Anniversary issue of the BANNER OF LIGHT. Another one, composed in spirit-life by John Pierpont, and given through Miss Doten, bore the title, "Grand Halleluiah Chorus," the first verses of which are as follows:

"We have come unto the mountain, and the city of our God,
To the ways of truth and beauty by the souls perfected trod,
And the resurrection trumpet shall not wake us from the sod,
As we go marching on.

Break the bread of consolation to the souls oppressed with care,
For in our Father's mansions there is bread enough to spare,
And none need faint with hunger, while we have such blessed fare,
As we go marching on."

This was sung by a quartette, the immense audience joining enthusiastically in the chorus. Belle Bush contributed two lengthy poems, one of them entitled "The New Evangel." Achsa W. Sprague also transmitted one from her spirit-home, through the agency of Miss Doten, which has since become familiar to all spiritual circles, commencing with the lines,

"The world hath felt a quickening breath
From heaven's eternal shore."

The exercises were favorably remarked upon by the local press, the Post saying: "The vast and beautiful hall presented a most animated appearance, thronged as it was with one of the most brilliant audiences that ever assembled within its walls."

☞ The Boston Investigator, for March 21st, notices the fact that on the 18th inst. the Ingersoll Secular Society meeting in Paine Memorial Building was addressed by "Dr. Dean Clarke, a well-known and able Spiritualist teacher. Subject—'Republicanism versus Romanism—the Irrepressible Conflict.'" Bro. Seaver then shows his liberality of sentiment by giving Dr. Clarke a good abstract report, speaking appreciatively of his effort, and concluding as follows: "As the lecturer sat down he was complimented with several rounds of the heartiest applause. Dr. Clark's lecture was able and instructive, and the rapturous commendation he received for the many good points which he made, showed that he gave great satisfaction to his attentive and intelligent hearers."

We are glad to note this kindly act on the part of The Investigator, and trust that Spiritualists themselves will show a like appreciation of Dr. Clarke's good talents by keeping him fully employed.

PATERSON, N. J.—The state of the cause in this city is reported as very encouraging by Secretary J. A. Roney, whose article, put in type for this week, is unavoidably deferred to the next. A note from WARREN SUMNER BARLOW, Esq., is received to the same effect, closing with the following:

"We hope to establish permanent meetings, and to this end are confident that first-class speakers will find a field that can be cultivated and bring forth rich results in the development of our growing, glorious philosophy."

☞ Copies of the neatly-executed brochure containing Miss Lizzie Doten's sterling poem: "THE INNER MYSTERY"—to the republication of which we devote our first page the present week—can be found on sale at the Banner of Light Bookstore, 9 Bosworth street, Boston.

☞ Read the tribute of the St. Augustine (Fla.) Press (on sixth page) to the value of Mrs. Clara A. Field's work in that city.

A Council of Women at Washington, D. C.

An International Council of Women—assembled by the National Woman Suffrage Association of the United States, to celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of the First Woman's Rights Convention—began its sessions in Albaugh's Opera House, Washington, D. C., last Sunday, and continued them during the current week, closing to-morrow, April 1st, with a Religious Symposium at 2:30 and concluding services at 7:45 P. M. Religious service on Sunday, March 25th, introduced the work of the Council, the sessions that followed being devoted to the consideration of the following topics: Education, Philanthropies, Temperance, Industries, Professions, Organization, Legal Conditions, Social Purity, Pioneers' Conference, and Political Conditions.

On Saturday, the 24th, a public reception in honor of the delegates and visitors was given at the Riggs House. Among the Pioneers who occupied seats on the platform during their "Conference" day was Mrs. Amy Post, the friend and protector of the "Fox Girls" upon their early visits to Rochester to demonstrate the reality of spirit phenomena. The meetings throughout were largely attended, and an elaborate programme carried out with satisfaction to all.

The Anniversary in London.

The London Medium and Daybreak is to be commended for the interest it is taking in the movement to pecuniarily aid our friend, Mr. Robert Cooper, who, by the way, has consented to contribute some account of his early experiences to that paper. An effort is now being made to celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary in London, by a reünion of Spiritualists, at which Mr. Cooper will be present, and for whom a moneyed testimonial is to be provided and given him, as a token that the beneficiaries of spiritual truths hold in kind remembrance the pioneers of the cause. We trust that the proposed meeting will be held, and that the testimonial will be befitting the man and the occasion.

☞ We trust the managers of the Spiritualist societies throughout America will personally call the attention of their various organizations to the case of Mr. Cooper, that all may do what is possible to them for the assistance of this worthy brother.

Attleboro, Mass.

The 31st of March will be observed with appropriate exercises. The ladies of the Spiritual Society are arranging for a grand entertainment with unique features for the evening of that date, and on Sunday, April 1st, afternoon and evening, the guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer will address the people on subjects commemorative of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

The 31st of March.

As notices are coming in for publication regarding the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, from various sections of the country, THE BANNER desires the friends to send reports to it for publication, and have them prepared as briefly as is consistent with the matter given.

☞ One of the most important hearings that came before the Massachusetts Legislative Committee on Education, on that portion of the joint special committee on child labor, relating to the schooling of children, and especially to private schools, is perfectly well understood to mean parochial schools. When this matter does reach the House or Senate, there will undoubtedly be a hot debate. The bill is meeting with considerable opposition from prominent educators who have no love for parochial schools, but who think that some of its provisions, particularly that requiring the supervision of private schools by public authorities, are unwise.

☞ A correspondent furnishes the Philadelphia Press with an account, the truth of which is well authenticated, of a vision experienced by a lady of New York, in which the details of a disaster, resulting as foreshadowed in the death of a gentleman, were vividly presented. The vision that shortly after became a fearful reality came to the lady on three consecutive nights. On the morning following the first she awoke with it clearly photographed on her mind, and related it to members of her household. A long period of illness from nervous prostration followed its fulfillment in a fatality from which she herself barely escaped.

☞ The Société Magnetique de France has just been constituted. Its seat is at the office of the Journal du Magnetisme, 5 boulevard du Temple, Paris. Among its members we notice the "Doctors Ochorowicz, H. Vigouroux, Moricourt, Reignier, Luce, Denlau, à Paris; Liébeault, Fontan, Perronnet, Alliot, Bonnefoy, Cornilleau, David, Dupouy, Mora, Ripault, Anfossi, Babbitt, Bourada, de Das, Letoquart, etc., etc., correspondents; the savants ou littérateurs W. Crookes, Eug. Nus, Eug. de Bonnemère, Delbœuf, Pèladan, E. Yung, Stainton Moses, Durville, Papus, Fauvety, Mme. Blavatsky," etc., etc.

☞ We are pleased to learn that Sherman F. Denton (son of our late lamented friend, whose name is revered in every household where free thought is encouraged,) has been induced to write a series of articles on New Guinea especially for young people. RELEASED.

If one had watched a prisoner many a year,
Standing behind a barred window pane,
Fettered with heavy handcuff and with chain,
And gazing on the blue sky, far and clear;
And suddenly some morning he should hear
The man had in the night contrived to gain
His freedom, and was safe, would this bring pain?
Ah! would it not to dullest heart appear
Good tidings?

Yesterday I looked on one
Who lay as if asleep in perfect peace.
His long imprisonment for life was done,
Eternity's great freedom his release
Had brought. Yet they who loved him called him dead,
And wept, refusing to be comforted.

The body of Chief Justice Waite has been embalmed, and Saturday morning a plaster cast was taken of the face. The features are perfect and peaceful. The casket is of red cedar, covered with English broadcloth. It is finished with oxidized silver extension handles, and the only polished portion is a plain silver plate, bearing the following inscription: "Morrison Remick Waite, Chief Justice of the United States: born Nov. 29th, 1818; died March 23d, 1888." Inside the casket is a copper case, air tight, lined throughout with tufted cream satin, and over the face is a heavy plate glass.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.—Mme. Helene Modjeska commenced a two-weeks' engagement at this popular resort on Monday evening, March 26th—being received by appreciative Bostonians with a perfect ovation. The play on the evening in question was Shakspeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," with Mme. Modjeska as Beatrice. Thursday evening, March 29th, and Saturday evening, March 31st, "Cymbeline" will be the attraction; Friday evening, "Much Ado About Nothing"; on Thursday afternoon, by special request, Mme. Modjeska will appear in the title rôle of "Dona Diana," this being the only time this play will be performed during her engagement; Saturday matinee: "As You Like It."

A drift was formed in one of the principal streets in the village one hundred and eighty feet long and fifteen feet high, filling the whole width of the street, and packed so firm that horses could be trotted over it with safety. The young men and boys conceived the idea of tunneling the barricade. As the matter was talked up all became very enthusiastic, and many volunteered from other districts to assist. Wednesday they organized and commenced operations. They sunk a shaft in the center, and commenced on each end. For two days it was a busy place. Friday they completed a tunnel one hundred and seventy-five feet long, seven feet high and eight feet wide, and had a gala time. The Fortieth Anniversary.

Celebration of the Event by the Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, of Boston; Addresses by Dr. H. B. Storer and Prof. W. F. Peck; An Attractive Literary and Musical Programme, etc.

The Spiritualistic Phenomena Association held highly interesting Anniversary exercises on Sunday, March 25th, afternoon and evening.

Paine Hall, the place of assembly, was thronged on both occasions by representative audiences, and the details were skillfully conducted under the chairmanship of the Association's efficient President, James H. Lewis. Great credit is also due Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hall (among others) for their earnest efforts in preparing the way for the successful issue which characterized each session.

At 2:30 P. M. the meeting was called to order by President Lewis—a choice selection (piano) by Prof. Willis Milligan adding to the harmony of the opening service. Mrs. Nickerson (vocalist), Mr. Adolf Lowinsky (violin) and Mrs. Nellie M. Day (piano) then joined in a well-executed selection, after which Prof. W. F. Peck proceeded to deliver the address of the afternoon.

REMARKS BY W. F. PECK.

It is advisable to review the past occasionally, said the speaker, in order to ascertain the progress we have made as an encouragement to future efforts. The years of Spiritualism have been few but eventful. Only forty years have elapsed since occurred those tiny raps that heralded the dawn of a new era—an era of knowledge instead of faith, of hope instead of despair; which opened wide the door between this and the world of souls!

Although it is the custom to date the Anniversary of Spiritualism from the manifestations at Hydesville, yet for some years previous strange happenings indicated that the spiritual waters were troubled. The writings of A. J. Davis did much to prepare the minds of the people for the physical phenomena that followed.

All classes were interested in the early phenomena; even the ministers did not oppose them until it was found that the spirits were not "Orthodox"; then they hurled against them the thunders of Sinai. Had the spirits confirmed the teachings of the Church it would have held circles as regularly as prayer-meetings, and would have regarded the teachings of the invisible intelligences as of as much authority as the Bible.

The speaker related several amusing incidents connected with the early movement.

Many profound thinkers, ripe scholars, and able men and women embraced the new gospel. The writings of A. J. Davis, Dr. S. B. Brittan, Judge Edmonds, Robert Dale Owen, Prof. Hare, Epes Sargent, and many others had great influence on the growth of Spiritualism.

Soon after their advent in America the phenomena made their appearance in Europe, and spread rapidly, until now by their means the New Dispensation is known among all peoples in every quarter of the globe. Mediums and speakers are numbered by tens of thousands, and believers by millions. History nowhere presents such a record of the growth of a religious body as that presented by Spiritualism. A moderate estimate places the number of believers at about eleven millions; at that rate it will require less than three hundred years to convert the whole human race. Christianity is nearly two thousand years old, yet less than one-fourth of the population of the globe are even nominal Christians.

The United States is still the stronghold of Spiritualism. Every State contains thousands of believers. Periodicals devoted to a dissemination of its truths are numerous and largely circulated. The BANNER OF LIGHT has a larger circulation than any religious paper in the country, and other spiritual papers are not far behind.

A most striking characteristic of the growth of Spiritualism is the progress that has been made in the arts, sciences, inventions and reforms during the same period. This remarkable progress begun with the advent of Spiritualism, and has kept pace with its growth, indicating that there is a practical union between the two—a fact which is further proven by the admission of inventors that they are indebted to the spirits for their discoveries.

The emancipation of men and women from the anticipated horrors of an Orthodox hell and an angry God is one of the results of this New Dispensation.

Spiritualism has done more to elevate woman to an equality with man than all other causes combined.

The speaker gave a graphic description of the striking off the fetters of the slave by Abraham Lincoln in obedience to the advice of spirit-intelligences.

The past of Spiritualism has been glorious, but the future promises to be even grander. The signs of the times, the agitation of thought, all point to the fact that we are in the midst of a spiritual revival such as the world has never before seen. All classes of society are being moved by the undercurrent of spiritual forces, and the time is not far distant when Spiritualism will be in the ascendant, and, as in the case of the abolition movement, many will try to forget that they ever opposed it. The scientists are falling into line, and the clergy, too, are trimming their sails to catch the breeze. Some of them, like Mr. Talmage, are even now "stealing our thunder," and preaching the Spiritual Philosophy without having the moral courage to admit it.

When man places himself under the influence of the higher spirit-spheres, then the millennium will dawn, and white-robed peace will reign over all the earth.

The audience was then favored with a flute solo by J. M. Vail; and by Mrs. Nickerson with a finely rendered song; after which Mrs. M. C. Bagley, platform test medium, gave clear evidence of her remarkable powers in this direction.

Mr. Adolf Lowinsky came next with a violin solo, rendered in the highest style of the art, in which pleasing service he was skillfully supported by Mrs. Nellie M. Day as accompanist. Encored, he executed "The Flower Song." This young gentleman (from the Leipsic Conservatory) has before him a brilliant future in his chosen profession——or the writer of these lines has no gift of prophecy.

Mrs. N. M. Day (of the New England Conservatory) followed with a vocal selection, "The Angels' Serenade" (violin obligato by Mr. Lowinsky), which added greatly to the excellent reputation she has already achieved as a soloist and musician.

Mrs. E. C. Kimball then interested the audience with many recognized tests of spirit presence; after which Miss Nellie Miles showed the wonderful dexterity combined with delicacy of conception which she had attained as a xylophonist; and Miss Lizzie Thompson (once of the Boston Lyceum, now of Lynn) awoke old memories by her familiar voice and admirable work as an elocutionist. Congregational singing then closed the pleasant session.

Evening.—At 7:30 a piano selection opened the meeting—a choice rendition of "Marguerite," by Mrs. A. B. Gomez, following next in order. Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, was then introduced as the regular speaker of the evening. The following is but a brief digest of

DR. STORER'S ADDRESS.

The speaker said that after the concise and graphic picture of the rise and progress of the great spiritual movement of the nineteenth century presented by Prof. Peck, it would not be necessary for him to dwell upon its external history. That event at Hydesville, which we commemorate to-day, was as obscure and lowly in its conditions as the birth of Jesus in the manger of Bethlehem—but like that was destined to influence the world's thought through all coming time. Historical events are the symbols and expression of forces that like confluent streams unite to deepen and broaden the river of human life as it flows on toward its resistless destiny.

Spiritualism is nothing new under the sun. In varied forms of expression it is as universal as mankind. All the great religions are based upon it—it is, primarily, that sense of the great mystery which environs human life, origin and destiny—the consciousness of a power other than our own that directs our lives, and to which we involuntarily though blindly turn for help in the great emergencies of life.

The nature of this power had always been a subject of human speculation. Theologies were men's guesses at this problem. Prayers, sacrifices, ceremonial observances of all kinds, divination and the consulting of oracles, were efforts to reach and obtain help from this mysterious power. The Christian who pronounces the word "God," has no clearer conception of what he means, than the aboriginal Indian who calls upon "the Great Spirit." Spiritualism, like human nature, takes on the conditions of the age in which it appears. In our time, its presence (announced by the phenomenal manifestations at Hydesville, and which have since increased in variety and power in every civilized land,) assumes a scientific character, and we are invited to investigate spirit by the scientific method, instead of the theological—no longer basing our belief as to the nature of man as a spiritual being, his origin and destiny, upon so-called divine authoritative revelations, or upon the speculations of other men equally ignorant with ourselves, but upon the observation of phenomena, the analysis of facts, and the comprehension of forces which affect us.

Thus far, this is the chief service which Modern Spiritualism has conferred. It is rapidly changing the attitude of the public mind toward spiritual subjects, and in harmony with the spirit of the age turning men's thoughts toward Nature as her own revelator, adjusting the faculties of the human mind to the interpretation of her manifestations in every department of life.

Alluding to the charge that Spiritualism was opposed to Christianity, the speaker said that Christianity had no authorized exponent of what it really is, whose definition would be accepted by all the warring sects. So far as the noblest attributes of human nature were manifested in the character and teachings of Jesus, we appreciate and sympathize with his essential spirit. So far as his belief in and practical communion with attendant spirit friends who antedated him in their earthly life, we recognize him as our elder brother in Spiritualism and one of the great mediums of his time. So far as the dogmas of sectarians are concerned, we have no sympathy with forms of belief that are inconsistent with the principles of nature as revealed by the experience of mankind.

And now having, like the children of Israel, wandered forty years in the wilderness of experience since we were first summoned to leave the land of Egyptian theological darkness and ignorance for the promised land of light and knowledge, we may well ask the question: What have we attained?

After encountering the Hivites and the Hittites and the Amorites and the Jebusites, and all the other ites that represent the various sects that have possessed the land of spiritual thought for so long a time, and the scattering band of marauders who affirm that there is neither spirit nor a spiritual world, we can at least say that we have never yet been worsted in any encounter, whether of argument or fact.

In the phenomenal department every phase of manifestation—from the initial raps at Hydesville to the full form materializations of the cabinet séance—has been abundantly demonstrated to the most competent and intelligent witnesses. Our philosophy is in harmony with the philosophy of Nature, as illustrated by modern scientific discoveries and the experience of mankind, and our religion binds us to the practice of all the virtues which are involved in human relationship—the daily life of love and happiness, which, with charity to all and malice toward none, enables us to walk together in mutual helpfulness, sharing the progress which all souls in earth-life and in spirit-life are inevitably aiding.

The speaker then traced the influence of Spiritualism upon the personal lives of those who had adopted it as an aid to intellectual and moral development, and whose beneficent influence, as a divine energy in the unfolding of a higher life and nobler type of being, would become recognized as the most perfect test of its truth and value.

Marion M. Ogden then favored the people with a violin solo, which called out applause amounting to a demand for a re-hearing; Little Flossie Waitt gave a highly appreciated recitation; Mrs. Nickerson sang "The New Kingdom" with soulful earnestness; and Joseph D. Stiles gave one of his unique séances (which must be attended to be fully comprehended), with "Swift Arrow" as the amusing transmitter from the unseen side of being. Mrs. Nellie M. Day effectively sang "The Spring Song" (by Reinecke), (violin obligato by Mr. Lowinsky); Miss Nickerson gave a reading; Mr. Lowinsky executed the ninth concerto by De Beriot, in a style which called out the enthusiastic applause of his auditors, and Mrs. E. C. Kimball afforded direct demonstration of the presence of spirit friends. The service closed with a recitation by Miss Thompson, a selection on staff bells by Miss Miles, and congregational singing.

The services from first to last were alike an honor to the Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, and to the Anniversary for whose loving commemoration they were presented.

The First Society of Spiritualists, New York City,

Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, of Boston, has recently addressed large audiences in Rockland, Me.—her subjects being chosen by the people; large numbers of psychometric readings have been afforded by her, also improvised poems. Mrs. C. will conduct services there April 1st, at 2 and 7 o'clock P. M. She, with others interested in the cause, will hold services commemorative of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, in Armory Hall, Rockland, March 31st, at 2 and 7 o'clock P. M. All are invited. Her present address is Rockland, Me.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan's address until April 5th will be at Walnut Street House, Cincinnati. Her journey to Ohio has proved a very pleasant and spiritually profitable one; and her ministrations have called out the highest encomiums from constantly increasing audiences.

Dr. Fred L. H. Willis speaks in Bridgeport, Ct., the first two Sundays of April.

Mr. Elison Ellwood, author of "An American Iconoclast," is preparing to give readings from that work. See advertisement.

Dr. Abbie E. Cutter is delivering a series of lectures to ladies only in the parlors of Mrs. M. E. Williams, 232 West 46th street, at 3 P. M., Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, until further notice. Mrs. Williams will spend the summer at Mrs. Cutter's home at Wickett's Island.

Bishop A. Beals closed a month's engagement at Albany, N. Y., on Sunday, March 25th; he speaks in Saratoga Springs, Sunday, April 1st.

J. Frank Baxter gives addresses with accompanying spirit-delineations this week at Meriden, Conn., Thursday evening, March 29th; in Unity Hall, Hartford, Conn., on Friday afternoon and evening, March 30th, in connection with Mr. Charles Dawbarn; in Tremont Temple, Boston, Saturday afternoon, March 31st; and in Brittan Hall, Haverhill, day and evening, Sunday, April 1st. On Friday evening, April 6th, with Charles W. Sullivan, he will give an entertainment under the auspices of the Odd Fellows' Lodge of Clinton, in that town.

Frank T. Ripley has returned to Boston from successful engagements in New York, New Jersey, Pittsburgh, Pa., and other places; he will remain in this city for two months. He would like engagements near Boston to lecture and give platform tests. Letters can be addressed in care BANNER OF LIGHT.

Mrs. A. E. Cunningham spoke and gave tests in Quincy, Mass., March 18th and 25th. Will be in Fitchburg, April 1st, and the week following.

Dr. and Mrs. Roscoe of Providence will be in attendance at the Anniversary exercises at Berkeley Hall and the Temple the present week.

Prof. J. M. Allen, having closed his six weeks' labors in St. Louis, Mo., goes next to Peoria, Ill., to fill an engagement with the Spiritualist Society of that place, commencing on the 31st of March with Anniversary exercises. Would like to make a few more engagements for summer and fall months. Address Peoria, Ill.

Mr. J. W. Fletcher delivers his "Spiritualism Illustrated," with the two hundred dissolving views, at Berkeley Hall, Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. He will also hold a test séance in the morning, after Mrs. Colby's lecture. On Sunday he speaks in Norwich, Conn.; Monday evening at New London; Sunday, April 7th, in Music Hall, Haverhill, Mass.

Edgar W. Emerson's engagements for April are as follows: April 1st, Music Hall, Haverhill, Mass.; April 4th, Manchester, N. H.; April 8th and 15th, Norwich, Conn.; April 22d, Brittan Hall, Haverhill, Mass.; April 29th, Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Boston.

Mrs. E. Cutler, trance medium of Philadelphia, will speak in Rochester, N. Y., during April. Address 373 State street, that city.

G. W. Kates and wife closed a month's engagement at Pittsburgh, Pa., March 25th; then held meetings at Washington, D. C., March 27th; Baltimore, Md., March 28th. They are to speak in Brooklyn, N. Y., during April.

Mrs. J. Wm. Fletcher will deliver an address at Berkeley Hall, Sunday afternoon, in connection with the Anniversary exercises.

JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN AKADEME.—Prof. Van Laer's paper on "The Relation of the Painter to the Public," read at the February meeting, led the Akadémé into new paths, parallel, however, to those of its stated deliberations. Its full text, together with a report of the conversation which followed, and a few minor articles, constitute the contents of this month's Journal. Editorial mention is made of the decease of A. B. Alcott and his daughter, Dr. Hitchcock, of Liverpool and Dr. Anna Kingsford. Of the latter it is said, "She would not make use of animals, either for food or dress. Even her boots were made of vegetable leather. She left a legacy to Madame Hust, who is more ardent, if possible, in the cause of animals than Mrs. Kingsford was." Newark, N. J.

WITH THE enterprising house of J. H. Pray, Sons & Co. may always be found the latest and most artistic effects in carpet and upholstery fabrics. Their buyers are always on the alert for the latest novelties in both the foreign and domestic markets.

The great advantage of buying carpets and upholstery together in one establishment is apparent to all, as by so doing perfect harmony is readily obtained, and the annoyance and inconvenience of going to two places is avoided.

COCINISM,
The Science of Practical Will-Ability and Psychological Hygiene.

THIS wonderful science teaches man how to obtain control over the greater part of his nervous system, and to such an extent that, by the exercise of his will, he can direct currents of vital force through any part of the body. When the exercise of this power is once learned, the brain and the whole nervous system can be cleansed, more or less, according to the amount of force exerted by the will.

If pain is experienced in any part of the body, when not the effects of physiological changes, it can be removed simply by removing the cause thereof; and even where such changes have taken place, if powerful currents of vital force can be forced through the parts affected, much foreign matter can be removed, thus giving Nature a chance to repair damages, especially in affections of the Liver. Failing Sight and Memory have been restored in many cases, whilst chest diseases are always amenable to this power.

There is another Phase of the Science:
The Psychology of Mediumship.

This branch deals directly with the development of Sensitives. Hundreds of persons have been developed as seers who never dreamed that they were mediumistic; whilst, when making experiments, many persons were invited to sit, without knowing anything about what they were sitting for, yet the results were the same; proving, beyond doubt, that to become a medium, all that is required is the proper organism and a fair stock of common honesty.

Sensitives developed by this process never lose their consciousness whilst traveling through the Realm of Spirit; therefore, all descriptions of places seen and information given, whilst journeying through space, are indelibly impressed upon the memory, and to such an extent that, where there is sufficient ability, maps of the country and plans of buildings are readily obtained, whilst the identity of spirits seen and spoken to are placed beyond all doubt.

In the event of the world saying that I claim too much for the Psychology of Mediumship, I would refer to an account of a portion of my work in South Africa written by the Spiritualists of Cape Town, together with the address that I received on the eve of my departure for South America, both of which were printed in the Medium and Daybreak, April 24th, 1885.

I feel impressed to give these facts to the world at large, with the view of demonstrating them, wherever I am called upon to do so. Business matters will detain me here in Rosario until next June, after which time, if the people of the United States think sufficient of my Science to invite me to their shores, I can readily prove all that is herein stated. If societies or communities wish to write to me, my address is C. M. COGIN, F. C. C. A., Rosario de Santa Fé, Republica Argentina, South America. O22 eow

RHEUMATISM.

THE GERMAN ANTI-RHEUMATIC RING is a speedy and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago, Gout, Paralysis, and all other diseases where a general warming, quickening, strengthening and equalization of the circulation is required. It cures Rheumatism by quickening the circulation—then the Blood itself, coursing more quickly through the veins, dissolves the ACID CRYSTALS, which are the direct cause of pain. The thousands of testimonials from residents of Boston, well-known to the publishers of this paper, attest its value. Price $2. Will last a lifetime. Sent by mail on receipt of price. FORTY YEARS
ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM.
BY WARREN CHASE.

A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE," AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS The World's Child,
WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known: scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work.

SECOND EDITION.
A REVIEW
OF THE
Seybert Commissioners' Report
OR,
WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.
BY
A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Prescriptum, closes the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 31st, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Infinite Spirit, Lord of Life and of Perfect Truth, we behold thy smile in the sunshine; we feel thy blessing in the passing air; we listen to thy voice and words, ringing through human hearts, and manifesting in human speech from age to age. In the solitude of the mountain fastnesses, and by the side of the roaring sea, may the thinking soul still listen to thy voice, and come to know of thy law and thy majestic work.

Oh! our Father God, we believe that thou art the Supreme Spirit of all Intelligence, of all Wisdom, and of all Love; and it is our privilege to understand, in a measure, that thou doth express thy divine presence throughout every object of life, in whatever kingdom it may be found.

We worship thee in spirit and in truth, we worship thee in the sunbeam and the shadow, in the flower that nods and bends, and scents the air with its fragrance, and in the grain of sand that taketh its place upon the seashore. We worship thee in the human heart, as expressed in intelligent speech and outward deed. And oh! our Father God, we would that every heart should send forth its hymn of praise and its prayer of gratitude to thee, who art the all in all, the sum total of entire existence. We would feel thy benediction at this hour; we would receive it into our souls like the sunshine and the breath of heaven, that we may become inspired anew to lift up our hearts in good thoughts, and our efforts in more perfect deeds, now and forevermore.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now proceed with your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By R. G. Dowson.] If we are the result of evolutionary changes, what will be the ultimate condition and form of man?

ANS.—To our mind, manhood is the height of all creation, therefore the process of evolution only brings forth from the crude form—from the crude animal form perchance—a diviner expression of not only objective life, but of spiritualized existence. We know of no type of creation that surmounts and surpasses the human form, and yet that highest type of humanity with which we are familiar, in the higher circles of heavenly life, far surmounts and surpasses those lower types of the human form which are so generally known in many portions of the earth as to almost seem a distinct creation and separate from them. As the soul of man gains power over material things to express itself, and the spirit gains in energy and activity to surmount the limitations of time and space, and to subject natural law to its will, man becomes more beautiful in appearance, more refined, more spiritualized in every way; he loses that expression which seems to link him with the earth or to connect him with animal existence; and as he goes forward, age after age, reaping new experience, unfolding new powers, developing the grander possibilities of his being that may become manifested in his works and life, his form comes into harmony with the growth of his thought, the development of his spirit, and thus, while it retains the human semblance, bears a very slight resemblance to the more physical bodies belonging to the earth.

Q.—[By the same.] If the law of evolution has not prevailed in the spirit-world, why may we not get information regarding the progenitors of man?

A.—Investigators into Spiritualism have, in many cases and in different ways, exercised their thought and spirit of inquiry in this and other departments of research and knowledge, but we have yet to learn of any case where advanced intelligences from the spirit-world have returned into communion with mortals to describe, explain and delineate the conditions of the progenitors of mankind. Many have come from the other world declaring their belief in the development theory, claiming that they are satisfied—as we do personally at this time—that man has ascended from a lower condition of being gradually, naturally and in accordance with all the laws of life, and that he has arrived at his present stage of progress not only through the evolutions of time, but because of the struggles he has made with the limitations of physical life. We claim, in spite of this fact, that man must have been obliged to reach his present height of unfoldment and discipline through a gradual ascent from the lower kingdoms in nature; yet to our mind there is distinct evidence that intelligence per se has always existed and ever will exist; that the spirit of man lived as an entity before it entered the physical body and took its place amid the things of time on earth. How, then, you will ask, can you reconcile what seem to be conflicting statements, that man has become evolved from a condition of animal life on the one hand, and on the other that he has always existed, as he ever will, as a spiritual entity, filled with the power of intelligence, even though he had not the means of expressing that intelligence and innate activity in outward ways? And we reply: There seems to be no conflict of statement between the two assertions; for physically we believe that it must have been for man to develop his bodily functions, the organic form and its outward semblance, through the gradual changes taking place in the lower departments of life. Not only do we affirm that it was not possible for man to exist as a human being on this planet, in the earlier years of its formation and development, and that it was absolutely necessary that animal life should take its place here, gain its experience and prepare the way for higher types of created being, but we also think that we are justified in declaring that as development has always proceeded from the earliest dawn of the ages, cycle after cycle of time bringing forth a grander unfoldment, a more symmetrical form of beauty and of utility, both in the vegetable and animal kingdoms, so may we believe that as the ages proceed in their outward march, the animal, or that development of existence which could only at the time support the animal form and function developed from the innate powers and potentialities belonging to it, this higher, grander form that was adapted to the spirit of man, which provided means and ways for the manifestation of that intelligence which belongs especially to the spirit, which had been waiting opportunities of manifestation through these external forms of being. And so man passes on. After gaining his experience on earth he finds that he has done with material things—that is, as material things are manifested to you on this plane—and he steps forward into a new condition, finding himself still a human being, still possessing faculties, functions, organs, and all that is necessary for his use and convenience; but he may also find, if he desires and seeks for it, such a grand opportunity for the further development of that which he feels is within, as to give him an impetus to press forward, to reach out for diviner understanding, and to learn of grander laws in the universe than he has ever conceived of in the past.

Q.—Do the lower animals live hereafter? If so, for what purpose?

A.—We may reiterate the statement which has before been made from this platform that, in certain departments of spirit-life adjacent to this planetary condition of yours, we have seen forms of animal life, displaying a degree of intelligence which one might suppose could not be expressed through such seemingly organic forms, yet there have existed on earth certain types of animal life which we know nothing of in the spirit-world, and we are taught as the planet has progressed, developing its powers and activites, certain crude and ponderous forms of animal life which came into being, having served their time, have given up their life-principle, preparing the way for higher, more symmetrical forms to appear, and that the life principle which once animated those cruder, coarser forms of animal life, remained, for a time, within a spiritual atmosphere, if you so desire to call it, that mingled with this atmosphere of your earth; but by-and-bye, after the advance of many years, or perhaps ages, this same flow of life-principle was again caught up on this planet, into contact with other organic forms, and made itself manifest through higher developments of the animal kingdom.

And you will say: What is this but the old theory of reincarnation, adapted to animal life? We reply: That is simply what it is, and nothing more.

Those forms of animal life which one may behold in certain departments of the unseen world, bear a close relationship and resemblance to many forms of animal life that now exist on earth, and are to be found near the earth and its physical limitations. They are conscious, active and intelligent; serving the purpose of companionship to many human beings who delight in animal life, and who have not yet advanced beyond the plane of taking pleasure in the animal unfoldment of existence, and who may be long doing so.

Do we deplore this fact? No. One of the noblest attributes of mankind may be exercised in its fidelity to the higher forms of animal life, and we may find in many an animal form such a degree of affection, intelligence and noble characteristics as to teach us a wise and useful lesson.

We believe that every form which comes into being is brought forward for a special work and purpose, that the Great Creator of all Life understands his work, and that in his own good time we may come to understand and appreciate it also.

Q.—[By L. O. Weeks, Proctorsville, Vt.] Can you explain the phenomenon of human bodies turning to stone, so to speak? One near here recently so changed, in being moved some twelve miles. It had been buried thirteen years, and was not of unusual weight when taken from the ground, but upon moving it, to again put into the grave, was thought to weigh seven hundred pounds.

A.—Another body, treated in exactly the same manner as the one spoken of, might not show any difference of weight or appearance; yet undoubtedly the action of the soil or certain chemical elements in the soil, or in the atmosphere, must have had an effect in changing the various component parts of the organic form brought under their control, and thus have communicated a specific gravity to every particle within the human form at the time of which your correspondent speaks. This is a matter worthy of scientific observation and study, and we are surprised that your scientists, who devote so much of their time to an analysis of the different elements of the earth and the atmosphere, do not undertake a study of this especial description, for we believe it would yield satisfactory results; and doubtless the time will come when it will be taken up and carefully followed.

Q.—[By Inquirer.] On the first page of THE BANNER of Dec. 31st appears what seems to be a well authenticated account of a person's double being seen by himself. A professional gentleman approaching his house—which he had left untenanted at an early hour—late at night, finds it brilliantly lighted, and through the window discovers and recognizes himself at literary work within. Astonished and perplexed, he decides not to enter his home, but craves shelter with a friend who lives opposite, and is assigned a room from which he can gaze upon his own apartments and watch the doings of his double, etc. In the morning the doctor seeks his home, finding all things undisturbed until he enters his bed-chamber, where he discovers the bed covered with the débris of a fallen wall, which would have killed him had he been the occupant of the bed the night before. Admitting the truth of this story, can you tell us if it was really the double of the man that was seen?

A.—We have no doubt of the possibility of the spirit of a human being so far separating from its material form as to project itself at a distance, at which time this spirit-form, bearing a close resemblance to its material body, might be seen and recognized by those who were familiar with the outward man. In this case, however, we should not suppose that the double of the man had projected itself from the material casement, entered its own home and revealed itself in this singular manner to the external eye of its double, for the simple reason that we should hardly believe the spirit of the man had the full knowledge of what might occur during the night, or possessed the power to warn his outward self of the circumstance.

True, in the manner mentioned, sometimes the spirit, even while tenanting the mortal form, may have a prevision of coming events, sense circumstances that are to arise, so to speak, in the air, vaguely feel and understand their coming and their source, even though the external form does not realize their approach. In this case, however, we should judge that some spiritual attendant of the man in question, knowing the danger that was imminent, made its appearance in the apartments, revealing itself in this way, in order to frighten away the friend who might otherwise be injured beneath the catastrophe. The spiritual attendant, whoever he might be, must have known that his earthly friend would be alarmed, and that seeing the manifestation of himself from the pavement, through the lighted windows of his room, he would not have the courage to take up his abiding place during the night in that haunted locality, and that he would seek refuge elsewhere. Knowing this, undoubtedly the spiritual guide thought best to manifest himself in the guise and semblance of his mortal friend, to make the warning and even the fright more complete; this perhaps being the only way possible for the spirit to keep his friend apart from the dangerous locality.

Spirits, in their approach to mankind, and their efforts to influence the lives of their friends, adopt many strange ways and methods, not only in making their presence known, but in shielding their friends from impending calamities; and if one can do this by adopting the guise and semblance of another more effectually than he could otherwise, then he would be justified in thus working. Undoubtedly, the accounts given from age to age of strange appearances of mystical beings in animal or in human form, have had their foundation in truth, and if their source was sought for with careful scrutiny and investigation, we have no fear but there would be revealed evidences of intelligent and immortal guardianship over the lives of men.

Q.—[By J. G. A.] Which is the divine spark, soul or spirit?

A.—To our understanding (and the thought grows upon us more and more clearly as we continue to enter into communion with the angel world and its surroundings) the divine spark, so to speak, is that life-principle and electrical force which is commonly called soul. We know there has been a confounding of the terms soul and spirit, and it seems, to our best judgment, that the word soul should be confined to the delineation of that great vital and electrical force which fills the spirit of man, brings it into animate power, gives it activity, and causes it to become really a useful, individualized, active being. Soul, then, we do not judge to be really a personal entity, an individualized being, only that divine and potential force which animates and governs the created and personal entity; spirit we look upon as the individual, made up of many component parts, acted upon by intelligence or soul-life—the two, soul and spirit, completing the human being, the personal entity; these, wedded to the outward form, the instrumentality of expression, make up the triune being, which might properly be called matter, spirit and soul.

Samuel Sage.

I am highly gratified, Mr. Chairman, at this opportunity of announcing myself to a particular friend of mine who resides in Pittsburgh, Pa. He has occasionally looked for my coming—hardly, I think, with a positive feeling that I would respond to his wish, for he is not yet entirely satisfied with regard to the question and the claims of Spiritualism.

In former days, when we were associated in business ways, I had many talks with my friend, and occasionally there came up in our conversation thoughts and expressions concerning the spiritual life of man, and we wondered if there was really a continuous existence for a human being.

We did not exactly, sir, enter into a compact that whichever one should pass from the body first would return to the other, but we did speak of how privileged we would feel were it possible for the one who went first to communicate with the one who survived on earth, and I have many times thought I would like to have the privilege of speaking to my friend in such a way that he could not misunderstand.

This is especially true at this time, because during ten months back I have seen my friend plunging into some shadowy ways. True, these shadows have been connected with his material prospects only, but I would like to stretch out my hand and snatch him from them. I feel that it is not well for him to thus be troubled, because he is a good man, and certainly worthy of all consideration.

I will say to my friend: Yes, Joseph, it is true that the dead live and can return and communicate. It has been said that "dead men tell no tales," but, from my own experience, I am satisfied that the dead can tell many a tale that may be proven as undoubted fact, and that if our friends would give us the opportunity we might reveal to them secrets and mysteries which have been puzzling them from year to year.

In relation to your own affairs, my friend, I will say that if I were in your place I do not think I should continue in the business connection which has held you during the last two years, and if terminated it would be very much for your advantage; but if continued I only see disaster ahead. Not that I claim to be a prophet, or a son of a prophet; but when I can see things that are hidden from the external eye, I really know the motives and workings of certain individuals who are trying to keep these workings and motives from the world. I can reason from cause to effect, and understand that if a certain line is followed in a way that has been mapped out, only certain, sure results in a particular line will follow; consequently I tell my friend that if that affair is continued only injury to himself will arise; and if broken, he may launch out into new lines and come under brighter prospects.

I have an instinctive feeling that my friend will know of my return here, read my message, and I hope take advantage of it. I bring him my regards, and I will say that should he come in contact with any of my near and dear ones, please give them my love and blessing, and assure them that I do not forget, even though I may not return and communicate. They will not, perhaps, understand and acknowledge this spiritual truth while on earth, but when they pass from the body they will most certainly come to know and comprehend it, because then will their eyes be opened, and the cramping conditions of belief which have clung around them fall to the ground.

You may call me Samuel Sage.

Henry Coburn.

I make haste to enter, fearing the way may be closed if I do not. When one has visited a place like this many times, he comes to take advantage of whatever little ways may be opened to him, and so I step forward in haste, and beg your pardon if I intrude.

I would like to say that I come from Cleveland, O. That may not be strictly true if I think only of my spiritual habitation, and the experiences that have been mine since I left the body; but it is true when I think of my friends on earth, and of the familiar places I have known, and I believe I may make that assertion. I bring my friends every true regard which held me to them in the past; they are still dear to me, more so, perhaps, or I understand and appreciate them more, because the little glimmering clouds that arise in one's association with his fellows on earth have somehow been swept away, and I see only the brightness of their lives, and know that my friends have been trying to do that which they thought best.

I would be happy to have them know that there are homes for them to find after leaving the earth, that reünions are formed, and that old associations are reëstablished between kindred hearts. This seems sufficient to me, but I remember also that mortals must have evidence of spirit-return; that they ask their returning friends for facts and identifications by which they may be known. I am willing to afford all that I can in this way, if my friends will seek an avenue in their own city where I may reach them by speech or pen, for it seems to me there is much to be said on both sides.

Little Johnnie is with me in the spirit world, not now feeble and undeveloped in physique or mentality, but a growing youth, strong and vigorous, in hearty accord with all bright and spiritualizing things, and I feel that it was only in infinite wisdom that he was removed from the earth and its conditions. He joins me in love to friends.

I thank you for permitting me to come in this way. I am Henry Coburn.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 24th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Clara Barton.

I came from East Hampton, Conn. I was but a little child when I passed out; I have been an inhabitant of the spirit-world for more than half a century of mortal time. My name is Clara Barton. I have many loved ones left in earth-life: a sister, Adeline, in Philadelphia, sisters and brothers in East Hampton, also one dear, loving sister in the city of Lawrence, Mass. I have many relatives in Lowell and different places.

To-day I wish to send a message to the darling ones, for I have never known earthly life, only as I have been permitted to visit earth. Dear sisters and brothers, remember that although I have been gone so long, as you term it, I am only a step from you. Our own dear mother—angel mother she is to-day—has crossed the portal which you all must, and father is with me. Grandma Clark is with me, and brother Jason also; but the dear Father God has given him a perfect body—the arm is not missing to-day that he lost for his country's sake. Brother Lawton is here, too, and we all send greetings, for we are only too glad to be able to say we live, and it is true that through channels which may be provided for us we can come into sweet communion with the loved ones here.

Brother Elijah often says that he fears it will interfere with the old theory that was so firmly established years ago. Dear brother, if spirits returned eighteen hundred years ago they do to-day. God's law cannot be changed or broken. Spirits always did return and always will. There was no beginning and there will be no ending.

Live a good life here in the mortal; do right as near as you know the spirit dictates, and a beautiful home yonder will be built. Earth-life is a life of parting; spirit-life is one of reünions. How oft I hear the good-byes spoken I many times with a smile, at others with anguish that grieves the soul. Little children lisp them, and old age answers back "Good-bye." No good-byes in heaven; it is a welcome in the air, a welcome at the gate, a welcome at the mansion the dear Father God has given to his children.

Leora E. Dexter Chandler.

I asked permission of the controlling spirit to speak a few words to-day, because I have been here a number of times, and they always said, "Not just yet."

I came from Lawrence, Mass.; my name is Leora E. Dexter Chandler. It is but a little while since I passed away. God bless grandma and grandpa; they are sad without me. I feel I am more their child than mamma's or papa's, for I have lived with them as nearly as long as I can remember.

I felt, for some months before I passed away, that the angels came to me. I was in one meeting of an evening, and oh! I did enjoy so much hearing the spirits talk. I said to grandma: "Will you talk with me if I should die?" She looked at me wonderfully strange, and said: "Darling, you are not going to die;" but from that time I felt that I communed with the angels, and I would go to my own little room, where they seemed to be close around me.

Grandma has seen me once, and she is looking anxiously to see me again. As I stood beside the bed, she said to grandpa: "George, look! look quick! Leora is here." Oh! grandma, grandpa did n't have the same eyes, and he could n't see me as well.

I am so happy in my spirit-home. Mother! oh, mother! do n't say that I am dead! Mother, do n't say there is no returning of the spirit! I feel that father would listen and believe a little more than you do. I come home, mother, but I do go to grandma's a little more, because it seems more like my home.

I would like to thank Gertie and Ida Arundel. I would also like to thank my Sabbath school teacher for all the kind words and good advice she has given me. She used to say to us, when we passed out of this life, that we should go to heaven if we were good. I find that she did n't understand how or where heaven was. It's only a step. Before the breath ceased, I caught a glimpse of the beautiful beyond, that I cannot find words to explain. I wish to thank them all for the flowers that were so beautiful.

The flowers here on earth are not to be compared with ours in heaven, which seem more real and tangible than yours can be. I thank you all the same, for it shows your loving kindness for me. I well read the flowers' meaning, as they were placed on the pillow, "Classmate." I understood, dear classmates, the goodness and kindness of your hearts, which opened the door so wide in bringing the flowers for me; I was able to know and see all that was passing, and also able to see a little trouble at the time of the funeral; and I asked grandma what was the matter with one of the horses, as it would not go, and the other did. "Why," she said, "did you see it?" Most assuredly I saw it and knew it all. The minister did n't say anything harsh of me. Oh! no, no; but he spoke well, and placed me in heaven.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the privilege of speaking.

Martha Hodges Kittredge.

My name is Martha Hodges Kittredge, and my home was in Reading, Mass. I have loved ones there, and also in Andover. I have dear loved ones in Methuen, and some dear friends in other surroundings.

I promised myself and the angels that, if possible, I would send a message to mother, my darling mother. Father is with me, and grandfather Kittredge is present, also grandma Sargent and aunt Hannah. I am happy, for I do love to come to earth often, although the doors are partially closed.

Oh! dear mother, God bless you for what you do for mine. God bless you for listening to us as we have tried to come en rapport with your spirit. The dear name of mother is sweet to repeat. Going out suddenly, as I did, dear mother could never fully be reconciled to it. I thank the angels that there is a channel that we can work through.

Henry would not open the door, for fear it was all fraud; but let me say, dear Henry, that if there is no more fraud than listening to the voice of the loved ones, you will never do many wrong things. Dear Alice, learn the lesson from grandma. Tommie, remember your angel mother watches over her children. Oh! how many times in the stilly hours of the night do I glide in softly and gently, and touch them each one, and ask, from the depths of my soul, that the angel will take care of them. How many times have I said, as I have come to earth, oh! mortals, do not express the thoughts that may grate harshly on our ears, and be more sensitive if possible than yours can be in the mortal form.

I know, mother, that father saw me before his spirit took its flight, and then he reached out to me, saying, "Martha, Martha." I was welcomed by father. Oh! mother, it was a trying moment for you. Only remember it is but a step from you to us, and in a little time you will come to join the happy number. I have but two brothers, and I send greetings to each one.

Henry Ingalls.

My home was in Salem, Mass. I am Henry Ingalls. I have many loved ones yet waiting to join the happy number. It is no new theory with Lydia or with Edmund, and no new theory with many who are still left, but I would like to say that they think they understand a great deal of spirit-return, which most certainly they do; but when the time comes that they throw off the old mortal and put on the immortal, they will say that we never told them half. But we cannot find words to express the beauties of spirit-life.

Lydia, remember I come to you often. I often find Elmira there, and some of the children—all of whom are with me to-day, not one, not even one was left for you—but I promise you that we shall all be together, and the family will be made whole, not one link will be left out of the chain.

Our children are not the little ones that were laid away so tenderly; they have grown in the spirit-life; but there the tie of affection is never broken, therefore we shall all come together, and you will know the children as really as if they had grown up in the mortal.

Frank is here, but cannot communicate to-day. Annie is here, and little Annie, also. Many would send greetings, but cannot all communicate at one meeting.

Clara Welch Holland.

I am Clara Welch Holland, of Haverhill, Mass. Eddie is looking for a word from me. Say to him that father is with me, and sister Emma. Oh! Fannie, do n't say those things. You love the children, I know; but, Fannie, do n't speak it if you think it, it hurts us so much.

I am glad I found life, and not death. Eddie, I often see your father, Mansfield, and sister Carrie. We are not together all the time, but occasionally meet. He often says that he is trying hard to hold Eddie, so they won't turn his head the other way. Father says that Eddie used to scorn and laugh whenever he said anything to him of spirit return. Father was a medium himself, therefore Eddie used to laugh, but after Clara was taken out of the home it led him to look and see if it was possible that we could come and converse with them. At the first attempt I did the best I could, but it was n't perfect.

I send love to Ida, Fannie, mother, the children and Eddie—each one.

Eddie, learn all you can; I know it will help you when you come to join us; but when you go to the mound, oh! do n't think I am there. I am standing close by the side of you, and so near that I place my hand on your shoulder. I know you sense and feel me by you in the room.

Oh! take care of the darling boys, and I will pray the angels to watch over them. Dear mother, I often visit you, and so does father, and am looking forward to the time when she will come and join the happy number.

William Emerson.

I come from Manchester, N. H., and my name is William Emerson. Many long and weary years they called me sick, but I got well pretty quick when I got out of that old shell.

I'd like to thank Amber—that is my angel wife—for all her watchfulness over me, the weary hours she spent over me. Sometimes I 'd look at her really to see if she had any feet, for she had to take many steps for me; but I've got now where I can take my own.

I am only too glad to send word back to Manchester. I have sometimes stood close beside Edgar Emerson (no relation), yet I never could make him say that I was there. But then I aint going to blame anybody. I would ask Amber to communicate with William whenever she can; if she sees there's a channel open, grasp it, and hold it till she can get hold of his hands, and then he 'll talk to her.

I do n't know but what I've talked too much now; but I've stood here, I venture to say, about an hour and a half, waiting to see if I could control. That gentleman said to me: "You 'll learn, after awhile, that in spirit-life the present is the accepted time, and not to wait for somebody else." I got a little tired waiting, but, as he tells me, it was my own fault. I am much obliged to you for this privilege of speaking.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

GEORGE E. LYMAN.

The communication in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 11th from our beloved son, GEORGE E. LYMAN, is a clear-cut test that our loved ones can and do return and talk to us through the avenue that you, Mr. Editor, so generously provide for them. As he says, we have wondered why he had never communicated through the Banner Circle, as he knew of it, and was a believer in our glorious philosophy before he passed away. He retired feeling pretty well, and expected to go to his office in the morning. But his brother Charles, who slept with him, on rising and speaking to him, found he had passed away. We were all living in Springfield, Mass., at the time. The same Dr. Stickney who follows him in your "Message Department," was the first doctor that was called in to see him, and on examining him said he had ruptured a blood vessel between the head and heart. I believe he did not awake to consciousness till he heard us calling him, and trying to awake him by every means we could think of. I have no doubt he shed tears when he found he could not take possession of his body again, for he loved to be with his friends about the new house his brother "Johnnie," as he called him, had built, and where we live. The whole message is very correct, and characteristic of our precious son, and we feel very thankful to the Spirit Winona, and Mr. Fletcher, and to you all, who have made it possible for our loved ones to return, and prove that they still live. Yours fraternally,

MRS. M. A. LYMAN.

CORNELIA C. CRANDALL.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 11th, 1888, is a message from MRS. C. C. CRANDALL, of Deansville, Oneida County, N. Y. Mrs. C. was a firm and outspoken Spiritualist for thirty-five years or more. She came to live in my father's family about thirty-five years ago, and has been a close reader of THE BANNER for many years. She came and reproved me sharply for not taking any notice of her message, and said she did not wish me to think that the message in THE BANNER was entirely for myself and family, but that it was for all her friends and acquaintances. The message is good, and so admitted by all.

Respectfully yours, F. A. ELY.

Deansville, N. Y., March 13th, 1888.

HARRY POWERS—ELIZA HARTSHORN.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of March 17th I have read a spirit message through Mrs. B. F. Smith, at your Circle, from HARRY POWERS, and recognize everything he says as correct.

Also in the same paper is a message from ELIZA HARTSHORN, a dear friend of mine, which I recognize as from her, through Mrs. Smith's mediumship. She was a member of the Baptist Church for a number of years before she passed away.

MRS. S. TUNIE KENDALL.

Spiritualism.

Mrs. Clara A. Field closed her engagement with the Spiritualistic Society of this city last Sunday, and left for Palatka and the southern section of the State. During Mrs. Field's stay in St. Augustine she made many warm friends, and her departure was much regretted. Her lectures here were well attended and highly appreciated, and were the means of awakening great interest in the mysterious phenomena which Spiritualism has introduced. We attended several of her lectures, and though we have never witnessed or investigated the subject, we are forced to the conclusion that there is more truth than fiction in the philosophy which she so eloquently and logically demonstrated; and while we cannot admit the absolute truth of what the Spiritualist claims, we most sincerely and hopefully wish that the actual fact of communication between this world and the departed is as claimed. The very thought of such a condition fills the mind with a thrill of joy and pleasure which cannot be described. We can readily understand why those who believe in Spiritualism look forward with joy instead of sorrow to the approach of death. They seem to fully realize the words of the prophet: "Oh! death, where is thy sting? Oh! grave, where is thy victory?"

An Attempt to Father the So-Called Christian Science Craze Upon Maine.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A letter appeared in the BANNER OF LIGHT for March 10th (written by a lady in Chicago) with the perusal of which I was delighted, as it spoke volumes for Spiritualism and its philosophy; also made manifest the absurdity of the so-called "Christian Science" theories, which are proclaimed under various names for one and the same thing—the only difference being that historic division which is supposed to exist between "tweedledum and tweedledee"! "All is spirit" or "there is no matter"; you can take your choice; one rendering may cost you three hundred dollars—the other three dollars and upward.

I hope the spirit of Dr. Quimby will come to the front, and give his views by and through the Chicago medium, and settle the controversy; he must know more about his views as held by him when on earth than mere strangers to him can or do.

Rev. Dr. A. J. Swarts, publisher of Mental Science Magazine of Chicago, has recently been in Maine, looking up the record of Mrs. Eddy and Dr. Quimby, also Dr. Evans, the author of the mental cure treatise, and doubtless he will soon announce to the world that the origin of the so-called "mind cure" craze is to be traced to that State, and not in Massachusetts, and then what a relief the latter State will experience! But the world's inhabitants will still continue to be sick and get well, and pass on to the spirit-world as they always have done.

From what I can gather from Portland papers the great object Mr. Swarts has in view at this time is to establish the origin of the craze with Dr. Quimby, and soon, doubtless, the public will have a new treatise which will contain the views of the doctor while in practice twenty-five years ago—never before printed. Mr. Swarts and Mrs. Eddy were once sworn friends, now the contrary. And why Mr. Swarts desires to reflect on the memory of Dr. Quimby by making him the father of the "Christian Science" fallacy, is more than I can comprehend, unless he has a pecuniary interest in anticipation.

He seems to be in a muddle as to which of the two individuals, Dr. Evans or Dr. Quimby, were the first to put forth the mental healing process. I would not like to accuse so unjustly the now living Dr. Evans,* or the so-called dead Dr. Quimby, with originating such singular views as have been advanced by Mrs. Eddy in her books and teachings.

Mr. Swarts seems to be laboring hard also to make the public believe that all of the different mental healers, under a thousand and one different names, (including himself) do not recognize excarnated spirits in their teachings, or as assisting in their mode of healing. Mr. Swarts, in the Portland Sunday Times of recent date, says: "We do not hold to spirits so-called," etc. He should have remained with Mrs. Eddy until he had fully outgrown such sentiments, as he is now patterning after her in this regard.

A lady in the year 1885 wrote to me that she was a patient of Dr. Quimby, and became frightened when she called upon him, and he said he had a medium—that the spirits would rap out what her disease was, also the prospect of cure; she tried to get as near the door as possible, as it was the first time she ever heard such things, she being a Baptist in belief. The raps, however, came, and proved correct in the information given concerning her case.

If human testimony is to be relied upon, Dr. Quimby was nothing more, nothing less, than a psychologist, or magnetic physician or healer; I have written to some of his old patients and have talked with others in various portions of Maine, and this is the universal opinion, with but few exceptions, and these wish to make out that he was in his treatment new, or outside of anything that was ever known or practiced before his day and by himself. Mr. Swarts presents but a poor showing when he tries to make Dr. Quimby father such nonsense as Mrs. Eddy advances in her books and writings; in proof of his position he brings up Mrs. Eddy's writing to the secular papers at the time she was under his (Dr. Q.'s) treatment in proof that she thought he was the father of the new discovery.(?) In the Portland Advertiser of recent date, Mr. Swarts says Mrs. Eddy, while with the Doctor, wrote an article in the Portland Evening Courier, in which she commends his power to cure:

In it she described her own cure by Dr. Quimby—which I will not quote at this time—but she said that he (Dr. Q.) denied that his power to heal the sick was borrowed from the spirits of this or another world, and also declared that: "The truth which he established in the patient cures him." The next day after this appeared, the Portland Advertiser criticised her article; she then wrote a second article in reply, in which she said: "P. P. Quimby rolls away the stone from the sepulchre of error, and health is the resurrection." She also said: "He speaks as never man before spake, and heals as never man healed since Christ." . . . . "Is he not identified with truth? and is not this the Christ which is in him?"

Is it anything strange or new for a sensitive woman, who has had sectarian Orthodox views concerning a future life, to make such remarks when cured of disease? Thousands before her and since have done the same thing, but the sentiments do not show anything but gratitude and religious excitement, and ignorance of the laws of life and the universe, and doubtless from this excitement grew, in a great measure, the teachings of the no-disease theory, and that "all that exists is spirit," and "there is no matter," which is an entirely different doctrine from that inculcated by Dr. Quimby twenty-five years ago, when he cured Mrs. Eddy, as she claimed.

What Mr. Swarts said (as here subjoined) in the Portland Advertiser of a recent date concerning Dr. Evans and his book, which was printed in 1869, four years before Dr. Quimby cured Mrs. Eddy, is doubtless true, to wit:

"Dr. W. F. Evans, the first and able author in mental healing, was for over twenty years a clergyman in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and subsequently became a minister of the Swedenborg faith. In 1869 he put out a large able book called 'Mental Cure.' He resides in Massachusetts. Some of his books in the science have been translated into several languages. He told me recently that he was passing through Portland over twenty-five years ago; that he called upon Dr. Quimby in the United States Hotel to ascertain his methods of treatment, and that he found them to be like those he had employed for some years, which was a mental process of changing the patient's way of thinking about disease. He said that Dr. Quimby would manipulate the head sometimes.

A merchant's wife in Portland told me this week that she knew of Dr. Evans curing mentally over twenty five years ago. The statements made to me by citizens of this place confirm the claim held by thousands that the system, in its modern development, originated with these two men, and that it is difficult to say which practiced it first."

In the above remarks I do not desire to misrepresent or mystify, but on the contrary to show up the so-called "craze" that is going over the country to-day as not being healthful, practical or desirable, and that it is foolish and unnecessary for any one to purchase a diploma from any college for the right to exercise the power of "mind over mind and disease," for that right is an inheritance, the same as is the air we breathe; no individual has the right to grant it or withhold it from mortals, neither should such teachings be encouraged or made use of in this nineteenth century to establish sectarian church views that have been outgrown by thinking minds years ago—such as infant baptism, and other dogmas—that go to establish sectarian church organizations with settled "pastors," and directly or indirectly ignore the modern spiritualistic philosophy, which includes in its teachings the gift of healing by invisible forces of every form and nature!

When any assumed public teachers attempt to ignore excarnated spirits and their near relations to mortals, to benefit and bless, rest assured that their doctrines have no foundation in fact.

We cannot consistently, in the art of healing the sick, separate the spirit-world from the earth-sphere of existence; hence, when we hear an individual ignoring the denizens of the spirit-world, we come to the conclusion that the instructor, so-called, needs a little more instruction before setting him (or her) self up as a reformer.

A. B. HAYWARD,
Boston, March 8th, 1888. Magnetic Physician.

*On the contrary, Dr. Evans is the furthest removed from such ideas, as, in writing to The Soul (Boston), for March, from Salisbury, Mass., he says:

"Honest, unbiased investigation of Spiritualism is what is needed. I fully believe in the possibility of communicating with the spiritual world in perfect harmony with the laws of mind. I cannot see why so many persons who practice the so-called Mind Cure should ignore this truth. The genuine principles of mental healing, instead of being in conflict with the natural claims of Spiritualism, go far toward laying a scientific foundation for those claims."

DR. WILLIS may be addressed as above. From this point he can attend to the diagnosing of disease psychometrically. He claims that his powers in this line are unrivaled, combining, as he does, accurate scientific knowledge with keen and searching psychometric power.

Dr. Willis claims especial skill in treating all diseases of the blood and nervous system. Cancers, Scrofula in all its forms, Epilepsy, Paralysis, and all the most delicate and complicated diseases of both sexes.

Dr. Willis is permitted to refer to numerous parties who have been cured by his system of practice when all others had failed. All letters must contain a return postage stamp.

TOOTH-LIFE.
A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

This Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

Put up in a neat box. Sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. For sale by COLBY & RICH.

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

Finely executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

MAGNETIC INSOLES

MAGNETISM is one of the most powerful life-giving substances known to our race. Its action upon all animal kind is to quicken into life and polarity the sluggish molecules of the physical body. This majestic substance comes as near the central action of life itself as human intelligence can analyze.

When we apply a powerful Magnetic Shield to a body to eliminate disease, we work in strict harmony with Nature's highest laws, and utilize the most potential force we can employ next to intelligence to overcome morbid conditions of mind and body. Of all the known curative agents under the control of mortal mind and human will, Magnetism excels all others, and is incomparable in its magical action and quick results.

The finer and more subtle the force we use the quicker and better results we obtain.

To impart magnetic power and potency to a physical body is to give it strength, vitality and renewed youth.

The vivifying energy radiated constantly from Magnetic Shields stimulates alike the mental forces of the mind and increases all the animal power.

Magnetic Shields constantly feed the blood with warm, rich Fibrine, multiply the red corpuscles, polarize the iron, and intensify the vivivic principle of life.

Whoever wears these Shields will take on awakened mental and physical energies, which in very truth is to renew one's youth. Every Shield we manufacture is worth its weight in gold to suffering humanity.

Good, sound, vigorous health, is worth more than worldly wealth, hence these Shields are invaluable, for these powerful Health Batteries have no other place in life, or work to do, but to vitalize the blood and compel sound health in all physical bodies. If you want good health, and the cheerful, happy days of youth, wear the Shields and know what Magnetic Polarity means.

EPPS'S COCOA.
BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

The Ghosts,

AND OTHER LECTURES.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear, beating against the shores and rocks of time and fate, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as Love kisses the lips of Death.

This work treats upon various subjects, viz:

The Liberty of Man, Woman and Child.

Liberty sustains the same relation to Mind that Space does to Matter.

The Declaration of Independence.

One Hundred Years Ago our Fathers Retired the Gods from Politics.

About Farming in Illinois.

To Plow is to Pray; to Plant is to Prophesy, and the Harvest Answers and Fulfills.

The Grant Banquet.

Twelfth Toast—Response by Robert G. Ingersoll Nov., 1879.

Rev. Alexander Clark.

The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream.

Extract from a Speech delivered at the Soldiers' Re-union at Indianapolis, Sept. 21, 1876.

This work is elegantly bound and printed in clear, bold type, on heavy, tinted paper.

The author takes the ground that man belongs to himself, and that each individual should at all hazards maintain his intellectual freedom.

Cloth. Price $1,00, postage 10 cents.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1888.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Boston.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning, March 25th, after congregational singing and a vocal duet by Mrs. Lovering and Charles W. Sullivan, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther announced as the theme of discourse, "The Necessitated Value of Spiritualism." It is a known fact, said the speaker, that there was an age when the human family were in an undeveloped state, and it should be equally well known that underlying all crude conditions there exists a law of universal unfoldment. Truth is grander than all dogmatism, the power of truth levels all things. A few years ago truth and justice demanded the unlocking of the shackles of the slaves in this country; the demand was met, but it cost the lives of three hundred thousand men; this was a fearful sacrifice, but justice demanded it, and to-day it demands that the chains of religious bigotry and superstition be loosened, broken and cast aside. Modern Spiritualism came to us forty years ago, and is now established upon a firm basis. It is an engine of truth on the track of progress, and the church of old theology can by no possibility impede its progress; if it builds upon its track it will be swept away by its power.

At the close of the lecture Dr. C. T. Buffum sang with great acceptance, and it was announced that the Fortieth Anniversary would be celebrated by the Society in Berkeley Hall on Saturday, March 31st and Sunday, April 1st, three sessions each day; Mrs. Luther would occupy the platform Saturday forenoon.

Mr. George C. Paine presented a resolution of thanks from the Society to Mrs. Luther for her very instructive and eloquent discourses the past month. The resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote. Mrs. Luther feelingly responded in her normal condition, narrating in a brief outline her platform work during the past thirty years.

Evening.—After congregational singing and a song by Mrs. Lovering, Mrs. Luther, under control of Thomas Paine, spoke very ably and eloquently upon "The Destiny of the American Mother's Boy," and held the close attention of the large audience over one hour. Dr. C. T. Buffum sang as a closing song, "Out in the Cold," which elicited applause.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie will occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7 o'clock.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—The Ladies' Industrial Society connected with the Boston Spiritual Temple at Berkeley Hall, held its regular meeting on the afternoon and evening of March 20th. At six o'clock supper was served to a large company. In the evening, Capt. Richard Holmes presiding, Master Willie Boyce opened the exercises with a piano solo. Dr. Eames spoke with deep feeling and earnestness in regard to the future work of Spiritualism. He was followed by Mrs. Hattie C. Mason in a song, "We are Building for Eternity." Mr. L. L. Whitlock reviewed the past religious trainings, the present agitation of thought and the advanced light of the future. Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, under control, made a very instructive and characteristic address, which was listened to with deep interest by the large audience. Song by Mrs. Mason, who at its close related some recent experiences in her spiritual work, stating a Baptist minister and wife had become converted to the truth as found in Spiritualism. Capt. Holmes made the closing remarks. The audience joined in a hymn and then dispersed, feeling assured that those they term the departed are often with us to instruct and comfort.

The next regular meeting, at which supper will be served at six o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of April 3d. A full attendance of members and friends is desired.

MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

81 White street, East Boston.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The service last Sunday was unusually impressive, the music extremely satisfying, and an atmosphere of peace seemed to rest on all present. A short poem by the guides of Mrs. W. H. Churchill was read, being a farewell to the "Temple Spirit," who subsequently addressed the audience through the mediumship of Dr. Caswell. His farewell to his work as one of the "Temple Band" was affecting, as he was about to cast off the physical body and environment that had surrounded him, and henceforth would operate on a more spiritual plane and not directly through any materialized form or medium. He paid a glowing tribute to the Temple builder for his faithfulness, and also to the absent one who has given so much of her strength to the cause, and whose illness made it necessary to seek health under the warmer skies of a Southern sun. He spoke of the Fortieth Anniversary, now so near, of the tiny rap that first attracted the attention of the world and awakened the knowledge of modern Spiritualism.

No religion of any past time had made such strides in so short a period. He alluded to the new Temple Fraternity School about to be instituted for the young, who would soon fill the places of the present workers, and bear the banner of truth aloft, and bespoke for it the interest of all to see to it that these little ones were truly educated into our beautiful religion and philosophy, and made worthy to act their parts when their time should come; and closing, invoked a benediction on all, especially those who had helped to carry on this great work of giving a true knowledge of the continuity of life here and in spirit spheres.

At 10:30 A. M. on Sunday next, the First Temple Fraternity School will be opened, and it is earnestly hoped that all Spiritualists, and those interested, will bring children, and that we may start off with a good attendance.

The usual weekly Sociable at 7:30 P. M. will be held on Wednesday in the lower audience-room. All are cordially invited.

A Service of Song will be held on next (Easter) Sunday at 2:45 P. M., comprising the following numbers: Organ prelude, (a, March in E-Flat, Wely, b, Offertoire on two hymns) Guilmant; quartette, Easter anthem, Mozart; congregation; invocation; trio, "Bright Paradise," Leslie; organ solo, Communion, Batiste; solo and quartette for Easter, from "St. Cecilia," Gounod; congregation; invocation; recitative and aria, "With Verdure Clad," Haydn; organ solo, Pastoral (Opus 163), Merkel; Easter song, "Immortality," Holden; quartette, "Praise the Lord," Mason; congregation; organ postlude, Finale from Sonata in G Minor, Truette.

W. H. R.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Never has the interest in these meetings been more marked than at the present time. On Sunday last Eben Cobb answered a number of questions handed in by parties seeking spirit-information, and spoke upon "The City just over the Hill." Following Mr. Cobb, entertaining and instructive remarks were made by Dr. J. L. Paxson, Mrs. A. E. King, Mrs. C. W. Odiorne, Mr. Stratton, Dr. Leighton and Dr. A. Hatch. Dr. C. H. Harding spoke and gave many fine psychometric readings. Mrs. Ricker of Chelsea gave a recital of her mediumistic experiences. Tests and readings were given by Miss A. Peabody, Dr. W. S. Eldridge, Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Mrs. Hattie Young, Miss Cullen, Mrs. A. Forrester, Arthur McKenna, Mrs. A. F. Moor, Mrs. B. F. Willard, Miss Gertie Coffin and Mr. McKenzie. As usual, the evening audience was favored with a recitation by Miss Annie Curtiss.

College Hall will celebrate the coming Anniversary Sunday next, on which occasion some of the best local speakers and mediums will be present; those from abroad are cordially invited to take part in the exercises; such as are disposed to do so will please hand their names at the door upon entering.

VINDEX.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall.—The exercises were interesting as usual at the last session. A large company of the friends of the school were present.——The fine programme to be presented at Tremont Temple, Saturday morning, March 31st, will certainly be appreciated by a large audience. Go in good season and secure a good seat.——More than one hundred children will be upon Tremont Temple platform and participate in the exercises.——Tickets for the three sessions are only twenty-five cents.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualists' meetings were held here last Sunday, W. A. Hale, Chairman, with large audiences. Remarks by the Chairman, Mrs. I. E. Hurd of Lynn, Miss Nettie M. Holt, and Dr. Paxson were especially interesting. Tests and life-readings given through the organisms of Mrs. Hurd, Mrs. J. E. Davis, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. Shackley, Dr. Paxson and Mrs. Johnson, were unusually clear, and duly recognized.

DR. W. A. HALE.

The First Independent Club.—The circle of Thursday afternoon, held under the auspices of this club, was favored with a large attendance, and many answers to questions were given by the Guardian with the usual clearness of thought and terseness of expression. After individual messages have been recorded a feature of interest is the prophetic reading, which in turn will be given to each member of the outer circle.

On Monday afternoon the sewing circle held a busy and useful session.

In the evening the Vice Grand Master, Mr. Falls, presided, and began the exercises by introducing Mrs. Colby-Luther. Mrs. Luther referred to the commands of Buddha, the prayer of Socrates, in a vivid and glowing manner, and said if those truths and ideas were taught and had always been taught, no such motto as ours would to-day be necessary. Her address was soul-stirring and eloquent, and frequent bursts of applause greeted her well-rounded sentences. The central ideas of her discourse were Liberty and Freedom, and her pertinent allusions to those champions, Thomas Paine, Lincoln, Washington and Wendell Phillips, and to the fact that they all still lived, reasoned and sought to impress mankind, were very powerfully and positively wrought out. She reviewed the aims of the Club, lauded its objects, and desired to become better acquainted with it in future.

Our petite singer, Gracie Scales, and Dr. Henry J. Sweeney, contributed melody and song for the occasion. Mr. Falls alluded to the sudden transition of one who had on many occasions assisted at the teas served in the hall—Uncle Johnson, born a slave in a Southern State, with no chance to acquire the most ordinary education of now-a-days, yet he lived that kindly, helpful, unselfish life, which is the true test of soul growth. May peace come to his spirit. Felicitous remarks were made by Capt. Richard Holmes. Mr. Fletcher made a number of telling points concerning Theosophy and Christian Science, showing that their parentage was found in the Spiritual Philosophy, and so they should join in the Anniversary exercises soon to be celebrated. Mrs. M. A. Chandler told of some spirits present, and made an effective and fitting address, soon after which the exercises were closed. Despite a beating storm the attendance was very good indeed.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

People's Spiritual Meeting.—The sessions at Columbia Hall, 878 Sixth Avenue, this city, yesterday, were not without their usual interest. The representatives of the spirit intelligences in the afternoon were Mrs. Whittier (of Onset, Mass.), Dr. Sara E. Hervey, Mrs. Mary C. Morrell, Mrs. Fox and Mrs. Hamilton; and in the evening Mr. S. A. F. Goodspeed, Mr. Whittlessey, Mrs. Fox and others.

Sunday, April 1st, the pioneer mediums will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary in the afternoon at our beautiful little hall; and the younger mediums in the field will celebrate in the evening. A truly inspirational occasion may be expected. Among those who will take part in the afternoon session are Mrs. Leah Fox Underhill, Mrs. M. C. Morrell, of this city, and Mrs. H. M. Walton, of Brooklyn.

No extra admission fee will be taken.

F. W. JONES, Conductor.

New York, March 26th, 1888.

Adelphi Hall.—George Weber (320 West 36th street) writes: "Mrs. Aby S. Cochrane, a newly developed medium for inspirational writing, read on the afternoon of March 18th an essay entitled 'Scientific and Scriptural Proofs of Spiritualism,' also a poem on 'Angel Visitation'—both of which papers were much enjoyed by a large audience assembled in this hall, under the auspices of Mrs. E. A. Wells, the celebrated materializing medium. We predict great things for Mrs. Cochrane in the field, as her essays are truly cultured and scientific; and we also understand that she knew nothing of Spiritualism until last summer—which shows how rapid has been her development."

☞ Mrs. Gray, No. 323 West 34th street, will give a reception to Mrs. Pennell, Saturday evening, April 7th, at 8 o'clock, as a "God speed" to this gifted medium before her departure for New Orleans, where her gudes wish her to go (in April) for her health. Mediums and friends of the cause are invited to be present on that occasion.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Spiritual Conference.—A. E. Lawrene, Chairman of the Eastern District Conference, delivered a highly instructive address before the Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference last Saturday evening upon "Mediumship and Psychology," which was listened to with profound interest. A. P. Dey, C. L. Harris, Mr. Earle and Mrs. Slocum, ably supported the lecture by remarks.

Our removal to our present location in Intermediate College, 310 Livingston street, seems to have been a fortunate one; the interest in the meetings has increased during the two months we have occupied the place, and there we shall celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary Saturday evening, 31st inst. We will cordially welcome all who wish to participate with us on that occasion.

F. W. JONES, Conductor.

North Scituate, Mass.—D. J. Bates, Conductor, writes: "At the regular session of the North Scituate Children's Progressive Lyceum, held at Gannett Hall, on Sunday, March 25th, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: Albert F. Damon, Conductor; Mrs. Georgietta Turner, Guardian; Mrs. M. C. Morris, Secretary; Alba P. Smith, Treasurer; John Nott and D. J. Bates, Guards; Mrs. Angie Damon, Librarian; Miss Abbie A. T. Morris, Musical Director; Mrs. M. C. Morris, A. A. Seaverns, Mrs. Sarah Marsh, Miss Millie Veale, Miss Etta Litchfield, Miss Jessie Merritt, Miss Lottie Carter, Miss Eunice Gammons, Leaders of Groups.

The report of the Treasurer declared the finances of the Lyceum as remaining in the same prosperous condition as at the last yearly report of cash on hand. The Secretary reported an enrollment of one hundred and fifteen members, with an average attendance of about forty.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated by the Children's Lyceum by a supper, entertainment and dance until 10:30 on the 31st.

The installation of officers will take place on Sunday, April 1st."

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday the Spiritualists of Haverhill and Bradford were addressed by Mrs. M. F. Cross of Hampstead, N. H., in the afternoon her control speaking of "Pre-Historic Man," and in the evening upon "The Religion of Nature."——The coming Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism is to be variously celebrated by the Brittan Hall Spiritualists. On Friday evening, 30th, which is Advent Eve, a supper and entertainment will be given, composed of orchestral music by the Bendens; singing by the Alpine Quartette; violin duets and solos with piano accompaniment by the Steele children; juvenile instrumental duets; also exercises in mediumship by Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball of Lawrence. Mrs. Manchester and Mrs. Cross, with other mediums, will be present. The Anniversary observance will be continued by extra addresses on Saturday evening and Sunday forenoon, by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester of West Randolph, Vt., followed on Sunday afternoon and evening by the regular Sunday services by J. Frank Baxter.

E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass.—Music Hall.—W. W. Currier states that Mrs. S. R. Stevens, 96 West Newton street, Boston, spoke for the First Spiritualist Society of this city Sunday, March 25th. At the 2 P. M. service her subject was "Obsession." The subject of the 7 P. M. lecture was "We Reap What We Sow." Both lectures are spoken of as replete with sound sense, and as being listened to with marked attention. Mrs. R.'s control "Starlight" gave a séance at the close of each lecture, answering questions—the friends fully availing themselves of the opportunity.——Mrs. Stevens will be with the friends in Music Hall next Saturday and Sunday, also Mr. Edgar W. Emerson, on the occasion of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. H. S. Lake lectured again on Sunday, for the third time this season. She has become a prime favorite here.——The Independent Club held a "house warming" at their new rooms Tuesday evening, and had a pleasant time.——The Ladies' Aid Society has reorganized, with Mrs. T. H. Goodwin as President; Mrs. Esther M. Porter, Vice-President; Mrs. John Pike, Secretary; and Mrs. Ida M. Jaques as Treasurer.——Dr. Dean Clarke will deliver the Anniversary address here next Sunday, and on Monday evening a fancy dress ball will be held in Fraternity Hall. A large attendance on both occasions is assured.

H.

Fitchburg, Mass.—Mrs. E. S. Loring, Secretary First Spiritualist Association, writes that A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium and speaker (of Merrick, Mass.,) effectively addressed that organization on Sunday last, morning and evening, interspersing his remarks with inspirational poems and good singing. The friends hope to hear from him again ere long.——Next Sunday evening Mrs. A. E. Cunningham will give platform tests for this Society.

Providence, R. I.—Mary E. A. Whitney writes: J. Wm. Fletcher closed his engagement Sunday, March 25th, with two fine lectures, giving entire satisfaction to large audiences. Many tests were given and recognized.——Next Sunday morning Mrs. A. H. Colby Luther is to lecture. In the evening the platform will be occupied by Mr. Fred A. Hinckley of the Free Religious Society.——The entertainment of Saturday evening promises to be a success.

Portsmouth, N. H.—Dr. Wm. Critchley writes: "The young medium and lecturer, Oscar A. Edgerly, of Newburyport, gave us two grand lectures last Sunday, followed by very satisfactory tests. He should be kept busy, friends."

Norwich, Conn.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Very effective and thorough has been the work accomplished by J. Frank Baxter in and for the city of Norwich, Conn., on the last two Sundays. The city has had an opportunity, with the violent storms and the united efforts of the churches in revivalism, to see what a hold Spiritualism has among its people. Thousands of dollars were spent, elaborate and "catchy" music was sung by a chorus of a hundred, tracts were distributed, church members were recruiting, and papers "boomed" the affair, while the crowds rushed and added to the excitement. Many thought the Spiritualists' meetings would suffer; that aside from the Spiritualists themselves a "corporal's guard" would not come together; but large and interested have been the audiences, and the Society takes fresh courage. It must be said, however, that no better off-setting workers could the Society have had than Mr. and Mrs. Lillie and J. Frank Baxter, with their versatile gifts, who for the past month have ministered in the city.

Mr. Baxter's power as a speaker lies in his aptness to feel and meet the demands and criticisms of his hearers; and the lecture on Sunday evening, March 18th, wherein the questions pertaining to the independent position of Spiritualism, and the decided assurance of mediums and lecturers, was weighty with convincing arguments. Not less so were the lectures of last Sunday, the 25th inst., on "Spiritualism as a Humanitarian Philanthropy," and "The Revivals of Spiritualism," the former considering the moral, elevating and religious influences of the spiritual philosophy, and the latter being historical in its nature and fraught with lessons drawn and applications made.

Mr. Baxter's test séances have been excellent, and although he has given hundreds of delineations in Norwich, no séance, as a whole, has ever equalled that which followed his last lecture. Complete in detail, finished in manner, and conveying an insight of the modus operandi of spirits and law, Mr. Baxter's mediumship, aside from being convincing, is an open book for every listener to understandingly read.

Mr. Baxter's worth and work are highly appreciated everywhere, doubtless, but in no place more so than in Norwich. With Sunday, March 25th, his labors in this city closed for the present, but in November next he will be here again through the entire month.

As the Connecticut State Association will observe the coming Fortieth Anniversary at Hartford, on Friday and Saturday, March 30th and 31st, (Mr. Baxter, by the way, being one of the speakers for Friday,) the Norwich Society will defer its celebration from the 31st inst. to Sunday, April 1st, when, with floral decorations, special music, and Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher as orator, the event will be appropriately observed.

UNCAS.

Lowell, Mass.—B. S. Freeman, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "Our Society was favored, afternoon and evening, with most interesting lectures on the 25th of March, by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester. At the close of the evening lecture Mrs. M. improvised music from subjects given by the audience.——Next Sunday, April 1st, we have with us A. E. Tisdale, and as it is the Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism, we have made arrangements to recognize the event by holding a meeting in the forenoon, at 10:30 A. M., whereat our mediums are invited to assemble and give us the truths and illustrate the phases of forty years' progress in Spiritualism."

Lynn, Mass.—A correspondent writes: "Frank T. Ripley occupied our platform March 24th; in the afternoon answering questions from the audience—in the evening treating the subject, "The Gods of the Past and the Future:" giving a number of recognized tests after each lecture.——Next two Sundays we shall have Charles Dawbarn of New York with us."

Boston Lyceum Matters, Etc.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On account of business engagements I shall be obliged to resign at Anniversary time the positions of Assistant Conductor and Corresponding Secretary, which I have endeavored in my humble way to fill during the past four years. Not without regrets, for I remember the many, many kind friends whose friendship I shall always cherish as something which has been a constant source of helpfulness and strength. Every child of the Lyceum, in future as well as now, I shall watch, and every success which shall crown their efforts I shall rejoice at as much as if the success was my own, knowing that the work will still go on, until at some future day I may be privileged to again "put on the harness" and labor in this branch of the spiritual vineyard, where so much can be done for the cause of truth.

The Adonis Club presented "Among the Breakers" at Wells Hall on Thursday evening, March 15th, before an audience of three hundred. Benj. P. Weaver, having a fine conception of his part, acted well, and was highly appreciated. Mr. Charles Fearing presented the part of the Light-Keeper as few amateurs are able to do. Miss Nettie Morris gave a fine presentation of the Fortune Teller, Miss Setchell and Miss Grant were excellent in their respective parts, while Mr. E. R. Fearing, Mr. H. Bradford, Miss Wilbur and Mr. Setchell ably seconded the others, and by their admirable support made the affair a great success. The audience, by their hearty applause, called the whole company before the footlights at the close of the entertainment, thus showing their appreciation of their efforts.

The Adonis Orchestra, twelve pieces, under the direction of Mr. Louis Poole, rendered exquisite and appropriate music for the occasion.

F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

The New Spiritual Church—Rev. James A. Bliss, pastor—meeting in Murch's Hall, 278 West 6th street, will observe the Fortieth Anniversary on Saturday evening, Sunday afternoon and evening, and Monday evening, March 31st, April 1st and 2d, by appropriate exercises, consisting of instrumental music, vocal selections, lectures, addresses, psychometric readings, spirit-tests, a concert by its Sabbath school, etc.—all the participants being announced as home talent. The celebration will find a pleasant termination by a grand banquet on Monday evening.

The preparations are under the direction of a committee consisting of Andrew Riedel, Mrs. Kate M. Warden and Martin Metzger. The hall will be decorated with flowers, and the committee request that all members of the church and others who purpose to send flowers or donations to purchase them will have their offerings at the hall by twelve noon, Sunday, April 1st.

Correction.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

There were two mishaps in regard to the article signed Henry Steinberg. It was not intended to omit mention of Mr. P. L. O. A. Keeler, who has been eminently successful during the past season, giving special satisfaction in his séances and slate-writing, besides having given public tests at our hall gratuitously for one month; or Mrs. Leslie of your city, who also lectured here with great acceptability. The fault is all mine, and THE BANNER readers may set me down as the author of the mistakes, as well as the whole article.

New developments are taking place; many new converts are being made; we had a successful flower séance last night—Mrs. Lease the medium.

JOHN B. WOLFF.

Washington, D. C., March 26th, 1888.

☞ In Boston, the seat of intelligence and the city of liberal ideas, for over a generation there has appeared a paper called the BANNER OF LIGHT, which has just entered upon a new volume. This light-dispenser has in all this long time presented such a mass of proof that if a man die he shall live again, that it is truly a wonder that this truth has not enveloped the entire world. But man is such a peculiar creature that he will not always accept the best gift of the higher powers, and his circumscribed understanding opposes a truth which is as old as humanity, and yet is ever new to each one. "Seek, and ye shall find," and the "truth shall make you free."—Deutsche Zeitung, Charleston, S. C., March 22d, 1888.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—J. W. Dennis writes: "Walter Howell, the noted lecturer, is with us for March and April. He fills our hall to overflowing. He is 'a host in himself,' and is well liked by all."

EASTER CAROLS.—Louisa Parsons Hopkins has prepared a very choice collection of musical lyrics appropriate to the coming festival of Easter, and those enterprising publishers of this city, Messrs. Lee & Shepard, 10 Milk street, have issued them in a very tasty and appropriate, gilt edge, ribbon-tied form. As a souvenir of the day for one's own delectation, or to hand to a friend, nothing can be more in keeping with the occasion, or more acceptable

The Lessons of "Unser Fritz" Case.

The greatest doctors in Europe don't seem to know what ails "Unser Fritz."

Thus are the Garfield and Grant episodes repeated, and public confidence in "expert" medical knowledge is again shaken.

The effect is a revulsion.

Since the fatal days of 1880, many of the doctrines of the schoolmen concerning extensive medication have been abandoned, and all schools of practice are more and more relying upon old-fashioned simple root and herb preparations and careful nursing—the only reliances known to our ancestors.

These methods and reliances are illustrated to-day in a series of old-fashioned roots and herbs preparations recently given to the world by the well-known proprietors of Warner's safe cure—preparations made from formulæ possessed by many of our oldest families and rescued for popular use, and issued under the happy designation of Warner's Log Cabin Remedies.

"My son," exclaimed a venerable woman to the writer when he was a boy, "my son, you're yeller and pale and weak like lookin'; you're needin' a good shaking up with some sas'pa-ril'."

A jug of spring sarsaparilla was just as necessary in the "winter supplies" of fifty years ago as was a barrel of pork, and a famous medical authority says that the very general prevalence of the use of such a preparation as Log Cabin Sarsaparilla explains the rugged health of our ancestors.

While Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla is an excellent remedy for all seasons of the year, it is particularly valuable in the spring, when the system is full of sluggish blood and requires a natural constitutional tonic and invigorator to resist colds and pneumonia, and the effects of a long winter. Philo M. Parsons, clerk of the City Hotel of Hartford, Conn., was prostrated with a cold which, he says, "seemed to settle through my body. I neglected it, and the result was my blood became impoverished and poisoned, indicated by inflamed eyes. I was treated, but my eyes grew worse. I was obliged to wear a shade over them. I feared that I would be obliged to give up work."

"Under the operation of Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and Liver Pills," he says, "the sore and inflamed eyes disappeared. My blood, I know, is in a healthier condition than it has been for years. I have a much better appetite. I shall take several more bottles for safety's sake. Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla is a great blood purifier, and I most heartily recommend it."

A few bottles of Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla used in the family now will save many a week of sickness and many a dollar of bills. Use no other. This is the oldest, most thoroughly tested, and the best, is put up in the largest sarsaparilla bottle on the market, containing 120 doses. There is no other preparation of similar name that can equal it. The name of its manufacturers is a guarantee of its superior worth.

While the great doctors wrangle over the technicalities of an advanced medical science that cannot cure disease, such simple preparations yearly snatch millions from untimely graves.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism

Will be celebrated at Cincinnati, O., beginning on Easter Sunday, April 1st, 1888, and ending Thursday evening, April 5th.

The opening services on Easter day and evening, and the services of the day and evening following, will be held at Grand Army Hall, No. 115 West 6th street, and the services on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday will occur at Greenwood Hall, 6th and Vine streets.

Some of the best speakers and mediums now in the public work of Spiritualism have been secured for this occasion, and other engagements will be made, sufficient to insure an array of talent rarely enjoyed by Spiritualists anywhere.

In addition to the Anniversary Exercises, it is decided to make this occasion memorable by the formation of THE OHIO VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF SPIRITUALISTS, the object of which will be the systematization of Spiritualistic work in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and in such other States as have adopted few measures for the advancement of our cause; and it is the intention to make this organization the nucleus for thorough and widely-extended labor in the vineyard of humanity. Societies and neighborhoods are respectfully urged to send good delegates to unite in this prime movement for a better defined advancement, and to actively assist in its successful inauguration.

Now is the time for earnest work!

Ample hotel accommodations will be provided at reduced rates; and good boarding-houses will entertain visitors at reasonable charges.

Information upon all points involved in this demonstration may be obtained by addressing any member of the undersigned Committee, in care of The Better Way.

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism:

Semi-Annual Meeting of The Mount Pleasant Park and Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Associations.

By authority in me vested, I hereby call the regular semi-annual meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association, to meet in Library Hall, Moline, Ill., March 30th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and to continue until Sunday evening, April 1st, 1888, to transact such business as may properly come before it; Also for such business sessions as may be deemed necessary of the Mount Pleasant Park Stock Company, the auxiliary organization in charge of the camp at Clinton, Ia., to hear such reports from committees, and attend to such other matters as pertain to the Camp-Meeting season of 1888.

The friends of the cause in Moline will entertain all they can. Good hotel accommodations can be had at $1.50 per day, and at good private boarding houses for less. Friends intending to attend can engage accommodations in advance by addressing L. P. Wheelock, Moline, Ill., Box 2273.

All officers, members and others who desire to attend the meeting can do so by the payment of one and one-third fares from all points on the following lines: Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; Chicago and Northwestern; Illinois Central, and the Chicago, Santa Fé and California. To secure the benefit of the reduced rate friends attending the Moline meeting will pay full fare from the station at which they start, and take a receipt from the station agent. If any one passes over two or more roads and cannot get a through ticket, let such party take a receipt from each road for the distance traveled and amount paid; on presentation of these to the Secretary of the Association he (or she) will be returned for one-third fare.

We expect other railroads will give us the same rate, but the main lines are all we can announce at this time.

Now, friends of the glorious gospel of Spiritualism all over the Western States, get ready and come to Moline and have a good time.

Let us have a grand jubilee, as we will, of song, of speech and tests, in proof of the divine nature of all life.

PROF. J. S. LOVELAND, President.
DR. J. H. RANDALL, Secretary M. V. S. Asso'n.

The Anniversary at Toledo, O.

The First Alliance of Progressive Thought (Spiritual Society), of Toledo, O., will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism at its usual place of meeting, Clarke's Hall, Cherry street, on Saturday evening, March 31st, and Sunday, April 1st.

The exercises on Saturday evening will consist of a literary and musical entertainment, to conclude with a cabinet séance by Mr. J. B. Jonson.

On Sunday, April 1st, there will be speaking, day and evening, by good speakers.

A cordial invitation is extended to the friends in Northeastern Ohio and Southern Michigan to unite with us in celebrating this Anniversary.

Friends wishing to attend, by forwarding their names to the Secretary will have quarters assigned them.

W. M. SMITH, Sec'y.

Anniversary Exercises in Cleveland, O., March 31st and April 1st.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated by the Spiritualists of Cleveland and neighboring towns by a two days' meeting in Memorial (G. A. R.) Hall, 170 Superior street, Cleveland, Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st.

Speakers, Mr. J. Clegg Wright, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, and others.

Friends in and out of the city will meet with a warm welcome.

N. B.—Refreshments a few feet from the hall at reasonable rates.

Come and help us make a good and profitable time.

R. CARLETON, Chairman of Committee.

The Anniversary at Milwaukee.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism will be celebrated Saturday evening, March 31st, and Sunday, April 1st, 1888, at Fraternity Hall, No. 216 Grand Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis.

The exercises Saturday evening will consist of social, recitations, music, etc.

On Sunday, at 10:30 o'clock A. M., a discourse by Prof. W. M. Lockwood, of Ripon, Wis.: subject, "Savagery in Civil and Social Ethics." At 2:30 P. M., a conference, to which the public is especially invited. At 8 P. M., a discourse by Mrs. DeWolf, of Chicago: subject, "The Harvest and the Gleaming." Mrs. DeWolf is a popular seer and test medium, and can be consulted during her stay in the city.

Spiritualists and progressive thinkers are cordially invited.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

Cromwell F. Varley's Scientific Demonstrations of the Verity of Spiritual Phenomena.

In 1869 a discussion was engaged in in the Pall Mall Gazette, London, regarding spirit-phenomena, more particularly those occurring through the mediumship of Mr. D. D. Home, in the course of which Prof. Tyndall requested that "men with scientific appendages to their names" should give him some facts. The well-known and since departed electrician, Cromwell Fleetwood Varley, responded with the following letter, (which appeared in the first number of Daybreak, April 1st, 1869,) which, though treating upon what is at this day generally admitted to be true, is of interest showing the quality of evidence one scientist placed before another nearly thirty years ago:

MY DEAR SIR—Mr. Wallace has forwarded me your letter to him, dated 7th inst.

In compliance with your desire, I will endeavor to describe briefly some of the "physical phenomena" I saw on two occasions, in the presence of Mr. Home, together with the precautions I adopted to guard against trickery. To facilitate the explanation, permit me to premise that the object of the séance was to demonstrate to me that the "physical manifestations" were not the result of trickery, and that there was some other intelligence at work besides Mr. Home and the observers. I had repeatedly heard from well informed people of extraordinary manifestations occurring in the presence of this much-abused gentleman, and became very anxious to ascertain for myself the nature of them.

Having no introduction, I called one Tuesday morning in the spring of 1860 at his residence, 134 Sloane street, and told him that I was Electrician of the Electric and International and Atlantic Telegraph Companies, that I was well acquainted with electricity, magnetism, and other physical forces, that I had heard of extraordinary phenomena occurring in his presence, and was desirous of seeing them, and of investigating their cause. I asked him if he would permit me to witness them. His answer was, he would "be delighted to do so." At the same time he warned me that he could not promise that any manifestations would take place, that the phenomena were of a delicate character, and that it generally required several sittings before the necessary rapport was established to permit of anything decisive.

The next day I received a formal invitation for myself and Mrs. Varley, for Thursday evening, between seven and eight o'clock. Mr. Home was residing in furnished apartments, and the drawing-room into which I was introduced on the Tuesday, and in which the phenomena occurred on the Thursday, was over a chemist's shop.

On each of those occasions I examined the staircase to see if the floor was of unusual thickness or not, so as to permit of the introduction of machinery, and I also went into the shop underneath and examined the ceiling under the drawing-room, but there was nothing unusual. The room was rather scantily furnished; there was a couch, about a dozen chairs, and nothing else capable of concealing any quantity of apparatus.

Eight of us sat down at a large, heavy, circular table. I had previously arranged with Mrs. Varley to observe very closely, to look out keenly for anything resembling trickery, to observe the room, the furniture and those present for anything that might appear suspicious, and if anything unusual happened to note it carefully, and fix it in her memory, so that we might collate our observations. On a slip accompanying this I give you in confidence the names of those who were present, all excepting one whose name I do not recollect, and their positions around the table. Finding so many ladies I felt some disappointment, fearing it would prevent a rigid scrutiny.

The lady who sat on Mr. Home's left, i. e., between me and him (and whom I will call Mrs. A.), and who had devoted considerable attention to the subject, entreated me, as did Mr. Home, to use my utmost endeavors to satisfy myself with regard to the phenomena, and he again urged me on no account of etiquette or otherwise to hesitate to make a complete scrutiny.

I availed myself of this. After sitting at the table for twenty minutes the first phenomenon occurred. We heard a number of sounds or raps, as they are frequently termed. I examined the table underneath, while Mrs. Varley observed above. There were four full-sized gas burners in the room, burning brightly, all hands were on the table, all feet, as previously desired by Mr. Home, were turned back under the chairs.

The following simple telegraphic alphabet was then explained to me:

1 sound or movement, or action of any kind, No.

3 sounds or movements, or action of any kind, Yes.

2 sounds or movements, or actions of any kind, Doubtful, i. e., that neither No nor Yes would answer the question.

5 sounds or movements, etc., of any kind, the Alphabet, i. e., that the alphabet was to be run over, or repeated aloud, and on the right letter being reached the fact was indicated by three sounds. In this manner words could be telegraphed easily, though slowly, by any one capable of producing the signals in question.

Mrs. A. audibly expressed a wish that I should be touched—immediately five sounds were heard and telegraphing commenced. We were informed by this means that the communicator was afraid to approach me. I made no remark, but simply kept a sharp look-out, and endeavored to find whence the sounds proceeded. Shortly after, the table tipped up, first on one side and then on the other, remaining sometimes for many seconds in the inclined position, having described an arc of about 30°. I examined under and over the table—all hands were resting gently on it, and I could see no indication whatever of any exertion of muscular force on the part of any of us. About this time the sounds became louder, and there were two distinct kinds of raps—the one being a lower, but louder note than the other. The lighter and higher sound communicated that it had now lost its dread of me, and would move my coat. It was pulled or jerked three times—about half a second of time elapsing between each pull. As these jerks were given to my coat, low down on the right-hand side, between my chair and that of Mrs. A., the thought flashed through my mind that this could not be accepted as evidence; but that, if my coat were pulled above the table, so that I could see it, it would be far more satisfactory. The instant this thought had passed through my mind, the flap of my coat, on the right-hand side, within a foot of my face, was turned up three times. Immediately, and in order to test it carefully, I mentally wished the left-hand collar to be moved in a similar manner. Before the thought had been put into words in my own mind, the left-hand flap moved three times, as requested.

Very shortly afterward information was signalled that I should be touched on the knee; without moving I again inaudibly desired that my right knee should be touched three times, and instantly I felt three distinct pressures. I mentally said, "Left knee," and it was touched three times without waiting a second. I mentally said, "Right shoulder," and it was instantly touched, but I could see nothing. I then mentally said, "Left shoulder," and finally, "Top of my head," and was touched accordingly three times at each place—the whole occupying not more than ten seconds. As I did not speak or move, or make any gesture, no one was aware of what had taken place until I described it to them. The table was tilted about a great many times, and by means of the signals we were instructed to stand up, which we did, resting our hands lightly on the table: the latter, after rocking about for a little while, suddenly rose up bodily off the floor fourteen or fifteen inches, moved about, and then descended. I examined underneath during this phenomenon, but there was nothing visible. The hands were well over the table, and it certainly was not supported by them. It then occurred to me, as my unuttered thoughts had been responded to in the early phenomena, that if the table rose off the floor again, I would wish it to be moved in various directions; after waiting three or four minutes, the table rose again into the air about twelve or fifteen inches, and remained up fully half a minute, I think more nearly a minute. I mentally wished it to move in various directions, and it did so, before those thoughts had assumed the shape of words in my own mind.

During a portion of the séance, as many as four distinct kinds of raps were heard at the same time, and as many people were putting questions and receiving answers at the same moment. When requested, the raps were produced on the walls, on the ceiling, on our chairs, which latter were distinctly shaken by them; and on several occasions the whole vibrated sufficiently to simultaneously attract the attention of every one.

Several of us, while seated in our chairs, were suddenly twisted round; and subsequent experiment showed that it required a good vigorous effort to perform a like operation by the hands. These twistings occurred to those who were far from as well as those who were near to Mr. Home. The séance continued till about eleven o'clock; Mr. and Mrs. Home, as well as Mrs. A., pronounced it unusually successful, and expressed surprise at such a display of force at my first investigation.

On returning home, Mrs. Varley and I compared notes. I found that she had put a great many questions mentally and received answers as rapidly as I had.

It was between twelve and one o'clock when we reached our dwelling at the other end of London, five or six miles from Sloane street. Before retiring, I requested Mrs. Varley to sit with me in the drawing-room, and once more think over carefully what we had seen, together with the tests we had employed to guard against delusions; while so engaged, although five miles away from the medium, the sounds or raps commenced upon the walls of our own house.

The next evening I received a letter from Mr. Home, in which he informed us of the fact that we had heard these sounds in our own house.

I saw him shortly afterward and asked him how he knew this, and he said that the same power which had produced the phenomena at his house had produced the sounds in my own room, and had informed him of the fact and instructed him to write to me as an additional evidence.

Second séance at my own house, at Beckenham, Kent.

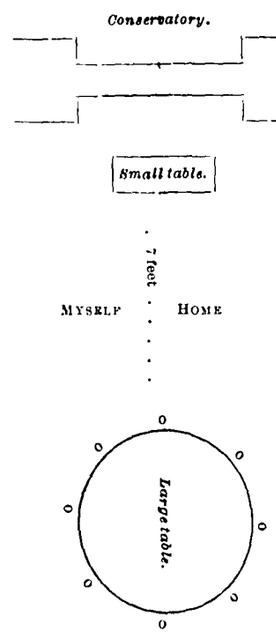
Present: D. D. Home, a lady, a city accountant, a merchant, a gentleman, the first officer of a ship, Mrs. Varley and myself.

I purchased this house in the latter part of 1863, while it was in course of erection, and before any of the flooring was laid; I am, therefore, well acquainted with its internal structure.

In the summer of 1864 I requested Mr. Home to keep his promise of giving me a séance at my own house, and I invited the people to meet him. He had never been in the house before.

We had a great many phenomena similar to those already described; there were some, however, different from those we had seen in his house. During the course of the evening he became apparently nervous, and requested me to hold his hands, and said, "Oh! look behind you," and became somewhat alarmed.

He then put both his legs over my left knee, and at his request I held both his legs between my legs, and grasped both his hands in my own. We all of us looked in the direction which he indicated. There was a small side-table close to the conservatory window, seven feet behind Mr. Home's back, Mr. Home and I being the nearest to it. We were seated thus:



Shortly afterward the side-table began to move. This table is mounted on castors, and it was driven up to me by some invisible means, no one being near it, and while I had hold of both Mr. Home's hands and legs. A large ottoman, capable of seating eight persons, was moved all over the room, and we were all driven by it up to the pianoforte.

Imposture was impossible. Phenomena of this kind were abundant this evening. As many of them occurred in the dusk of the evening they hardly come within the scope of your demand, viz., under a "bright light." I have witnessed the "physical phenomena" more than twenty times; but the higher psychical phenomena, which convey better proof to those who actuallly witness them than do the physical, have been witnessed by me more than a hundred times both in England and America.

You may ask why I have not published this before. The answer is simple—you yourself know how all new things are received in this world of contention.

I have endeavored, whenever opportunity, health and business would permit, to ascertain the nature of the force by which these phenomena are produced, but I have not progressed much further at present than to find out the source whence the physical power is abstracted, viz., from the vital systems of those who are present, and especially from the medium. The part of the subject under discussion, therefore, is not yet ripe for publication.

As to the phenomena themselves, there are numerous accounts on record—some excellently authenticated, both in this and the previous century. We are only now re-studying what has been investigated by the philosophers who lived two thousand years ago; and when some good Greek or Latin scholar, who has made himself acquainted with the character of the phenomena which have been presenting themselves so numerously since the year 1848, will properly translate the writings of those great men, the world will find out that what is happening at the present time is only a new edition of an old page of history, studied by keen intelligences to an extent that will redound greatly to the credit of those good and clear-headed old sages, who seem to have risen far above the narrow-minded prejudices of their age, and to have investigated the matter under discussion to an extent in some respects transcending our present knowledge.

I am, my dear sir, very truly yours,
(Signed) CROMWELL F. VARLEY.

Unexpected Materializations.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Because there had been no arrangements made for holding a séance, and nothing of the kind had been expected, the phenomenon related below is of especial value as bearing upon the fact of full-form materialization.

Last evening Mrs. Effie Moss called, socially, upon Mrs. Clark and myself at our apartments, arriving about 7:45 P. M. Seated in our chamber, a general conversation was carried on for about a half hour, when Mrs. Moss was fully entranced by her chief cabinet control, "Jack," who, after greeting us, began using his medium to manipulate Mrs. Clark's hands and arms, desiring, as he said, to try and impart to her some strength, Mrs. Clark being an invalid.

After about twenty minutes "Ben" took control and had a talk with us, and then her familiar child control, "Lillie," came and gave us greeting. Lillie said our children were very anxious to come in the form and greet us, and wanted to get the medium in the closet, and she was going to take her there.

Now off our chamber is a dressing-room, about ten by eight feet in size, and at the far end of this room a closet, six by three feet, has been made by setting up a frame and covering it with cretonne. In this curtain-made closet I placed a chair, and Lillie took her medium and seated her therein, and Jack told us to take seats just in front of the door. The gas was turned off, but the grate was full of glowing coals and gave a strong light.

In a few moments our son Eddie came to the front of what we will now designate as the cabinet; but, after trying several times, was unable to approach us. Jack said Eddie, with others, had been out to a florist's, and had some flowers for his mother, which he had hoped to bring out to her, but was unable to do so, and said if she would come up to the cabinet Eddie would place them in her hand. She went up and received a handful of out flowers—roses, pinks, ferns, geraniums and heliotrope, all fresh and sprinkled with water.

Then Lucille Western came, called us both up, and taking a hand of each walked with us through the dressing-room and out into the chamber before the bright grate fire, and said she had come to redeem the promise she had made to appear before us in our own home. She appeared to be about five feet five inches in height. Then our daughter Fannie came, about five feet one inch in height, estimating these by my own height. She also walked out before the grate, and stayed and talked with us for fully ten minutes.

Then the little Indian maiden, "Spring Water," the familiar control of Miss Anderson, came, full of glee, and asked for music. Mrs. Clark went to the piano and began playing, and Spring Water, with bare feet, danced gracefully for several minutes in the dressing-room, and calling me to her, placed her arms around me and stood me on my feet on top of a large trunk, and then called Mrs. C. to see where she had placed me. Spring Water came less than five feet in height and very slight in figure.

Then "Giptia," the spirit sister of the medium, came and took our hands and conversed with us. Mrs. Clark returned to the piano and began playing a waltz, when a beautiful spirit, slight and graceful in figure, announced as the aunt of Spring Water's medium, appeared robed in lace, belted in at the waist with a broad, lilac-colored ribbon, and, advancing through the dressing-room into the chamber, executed a most graceful waltz.

Then our son Eddie succeeded in taking on a form, and, taking a hand of each of us, conversed with us for some time. Then Cornelia, a dear friend of us both, came, and taking a hand of each walked out before the grate fire and showed us her features, then returned; and Mrs. Clark having leaned up against a trunk, Cornelia climbed to a seat upon it, and, laying her head fondly upon Mrs. Clark's shoulder, conversed with her of the time when she was with us before passing over. She remained for a long time, returning to the medium to renew her strength and again coming out to us.

Many spirits greeted us from the cabinet who did not take on a material form; but little Lillie materialized and gave us a loving greeting ere they all bade us good-night.

Here, Mr. Editor, in our own home, where no preparation of any kind had been made for a séance, where confederates were out of the question, and with a light sufficient to enable us to distinctly recognize the expressions of the countenance, even at the cabinet, our friends came to us, walked out into our chamber, and conversed as familiarly and naturally with us as when they had their home on the mundane plane. They fully identified themselves, all appearing in their own proper shape and size.

WHAT MORE CONVINCING EVIDENCE OF THE FACT OF SPIRIT RETURN IN MATERIALIZED FORMS CAN BE ASKED FOR THAN WAS GIVEN TO MY WIFE AND SELF?

JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK.

New York, March 24th, 1888.

Materialization at the South.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At last Charleston has what our most ardent Spiritualists have for a long time wished—a materializing medium. Mrs. Smith, a lady from Sumter, S. C., was here a few years ago and gave dark séances, but they were not convincing for skeptics. A short time since she returned and sat for materialization at the solicitation of a few chosen friends; and yesterday she gave her first public séance.

With about twenty-five gentlemen and ladies I had the good fortune to be present. The séance was held in the parlor of a private house, a black curtain across a corner of the room forming the cabinet. Several gentlemen examined it before the séance, and found that it was totally impossible that any one could get in there, except in front, through the opening of the curtains, in presence of the sitters.

The medium, dressed in black, sat on a common cane-seat chair; the light was lowered and the curtain closed. After a little singing, in a few minutes the curtain opened and a little child, apparently about two years old, came out and called for her mamma in a tiny voice. The child was not recognized. Presently another child came, of about the same age, and called her name, "Mimi," which was recognized by her grandmother in the audience. Then a tall spirit, dressed in white, appeared; but she could not speak, and nobody recognized her. Afterward (as her name was called by the control) a gentleman in the audience recognized her as his mother. One beautiful spirit materialized just inside the curtain (at the opening), and dematerialized the same way, so that all could see the form. In all about nine spirits appeared; but no others were recognized, owing perhaps to the yet undeveloped state of the medium.

Among the spirits appearing was one with a baby in her arms. She showed herself twice, and afterward the control, a Mr. Owen, requested the writer to take down the message of this spirit and send it to the BANNER OF LIGHT, as her friends would see it therein. The message is as follows:

"My name is Mrs. Florence Wilson; my maiden name, De Young; and I am from Houston, Texas. My brother George is with me, also my friend, Mrs. Betty Hampton. Her maiden name was Betty Thompson, and she is with her brothers, George and Charley. I desire my mother to know that I am alive, and tell her that my life now is the real life, and hers is but the shadow.

After the materialization several spirits performed on some musical instruments in the cabinet. We could distinctly hear three instruments at the same time. Then a spirit was heard to moan terribly, and said: "The Lord have mercy upon the guilty!" and after a while she said: "L. A. N. is guilty." A lady in the audience recognized the spirit. Another spirit called the name of George. A gentleman responded, and the spirit made himself known as a friend who died in the up-country, of which the medium could not have known anything. A voice was then heard saying very quickly: "Wie gehts?" in German, when presently a terrible noise was heard behind the curtain. Bricks and mortar seemed to fall, and all the noises of an earthquake were represented. A gentleman and his wife present stated that the spirit had been their servant girl, that she lost her life during the earthquake by falling bricks, and that the noise was identically the same as on the night of the 31st of August, 1886, in their home, as the poor girl was running out of the house and got killed by the falling bricks of the chimney.

Several other spirits manifested, but they were of minor importance, and I will not occupy the space of your widely circulated journal with the recital. Suffice it to say that we know there is a conscious life here after, and that the spirits of the (so-called) dead can and do communicate with the people of earth when the proper conditions are given them to do so.

Respectfully, FRANZ MELCHERS.

TEST CONDITIONS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I have bought the good BANNER OF LIGHT in almost every town in the United States and Canada within the last ten years, and at last I have found "Patterson," who wants mediums to always sit under "test conditions," so as to satisfy and convince every one that they are not frauds. Well, Mr. Editor, I am a medium, but do not sit as a public medium. "Patterson" says that ninety per cent. of those who thoroughly believe in Spiritualism are of his opinion, while the ten per cent. remaining are "knowing ones who are ever ready to accept anything." Now, Mr. Editor, I will admit right here that ninety per cent. of all old Spiritualists seem to desire that a medium be used like a dishonest dog, and chained up—or down rather—every time that he or she may sit for manifestations. These "thirty-year old" Spiritualists are the hardest people in the world to convince of spiritual truths. They need, on each occasion, a manifestation that will knock a bullock down, or else they are not satisfied. I have seen representatives of this order of Spiritualists try to corner Charles E. Watkins, on Cassadaga Camp-Ground, until a combination of three or four of them, if allowed full swing, would wear the life out of him in a day; while at the same time Mr. Watkins was giving, hourly, tests that would convince anything short of a solid rock. I for one did not blame him when he at last rebelled against such stupid, inhuman badgering.

"Patterson" says that he admires the zeal of the ten per cent. among Spiritualists who accept manifestations without test conditions. So do I admire their zeal, Mr. Editor, but I admire their brains and common sense more!

What a shameful, humiliating and disgraceful sight it must be to the spirit-world to see its mediums bound like felons, hand and foot, to the floor; what a nice condition of things, when a sitter comes to a medium to communicate with the dear loved ones! I have had my blood boil to see a man who called himself a human being bind a slight built man, or woman, as one would bind an ox, until the medium would beg for a little mercy, and then have the imputation of fraud thrown out—all because they were flesh and blood, and could not stand such rough usage. I have seen Mrs. Sawyer, the materializing medium, tied to a heavy chair, with her body bent down so that both her hands could be (and were) tied to the lower round of the chair, and, after the séance was over, three-fourths of the audience, even then, did not believe but that she (the medium) had produced all these manifestations herself. I examined her wrists afterward and found that I could lay my finger in the grooves and indentations made by the cords. And Mr. "Patterson" likes this kind of usage toward humanity—does he? What is his gauge for test conditions, pray? Mine would be to test and gauge the obtuseness of the sitters' brain, and in accordance with that proof would I put the sitter and medium under test-conditions, if either's life could stand the pressure.

It is time that we talked and argued somewhat in favor of our mediums. Test conditions, forsooth? Yes, I say test conditions for the suspicious church-goer who sneaks slyly in to see how much fraud he can find in a Spiritualist circle; I say test conditions for the "thirty-year-old Spiritualist" who dares not trust to his thirty years of "fraud-hunting," and who at the end of thirty years wishes to insult the spirit-world by binding like thieves those who have been chosen by it to bear the cross of mediumship.

"Patterson" says that a long experience has taught him that you must always have "test conditions"; which convinces me that "Patterson" is nearing the "thirty-year" limit, and is really in danger of becoming an "old fogy."

"Patterson" says also that if all Spiritualists—or if Spiritualism—would take the broad stand which he recommends, the cause will command respect. If that be true, then why not bind up J. C. Street, the Keelers, Watkins, Mansfield, the Fletchers, and all of our medium speakers, box them up and send them on in cattle cars, or as freight, to Cassadaga in August next, so as to command the respect of the world? I will guarantee that there will be people enough on the grounds with prejudices as thick as their craniums, who would desire, were it possible, to keep them under lock, and boxed, for the whole term of the meeting.

Putting mediums under "test conditions," "Patterson" says, would convince all and every one who came in contact with them. Does he know what he is talking about? I know of hundreds of fossilized specimens of humanity whom you could not change from their orthodox faith unless you change the condition of their skulls by putting something inside which may prove as a medium for the reception and comprehension of knowledge and common sense.

"Patterson" is unfortunate in his statement that when a medium gives him a certain order or class of communications, that medium is not fully developed; since there are those who, hearing both sides, will undoubtedly arrive at the conclusion that the development necessary for appreciating such messages may be lacking in his own mental make-up. The fact is that mediums are as a class better developed to give a test without test conditions than ninety-nine out of a hundred sitters are to receive a test; for but very few know when they get a test anyway.

"Patterson" further says that the peculiar one-tenth of the Spiritualists who accept spirit manifestations without test conditions, form a very small part of the world's population. In return let me assure him that the number of "Pattersons" on earth would not make a corporal's guard as compared to the noble souls who have sense enough to know when they get a message from the spirit side of life—and who do not wish to put all mediums under strict test conditions to find it out, either.

Once upon a time Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was speaking in Chicago, Ill., when a pompous lawyer proceeded to ask several questions which were to him, and the little knot of people who were with him, of great importance. After he had propounded the questions in a very grandiloquent style, he added: "Mrs. Richmond, we would now like to know whether you can answer those questions so that we can understand them?" Mrs. Richmond, being under control, very meekly and politely said: "Oh! yes; I can answer all those questions, but I cannot find you all brains with which to understand the answers." So with most of the mediums: they can give good tests, but, Mr. Editor, can they furnish people with brains to know when they get a test?

Yours for truth, honesty in sitters, fair play toward mediums, kindness toward all.

SONG

Dedicated to Spirit-Controls and Cabinet-Workers.

BY JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK.

Air: "The Watch on the Rhine."

To you who come to teach us truth,
And guide us on our upward way;
Who draw aside the shimmering veil
That shuts from us the light of day;
Who prove to us there is no death,
Within the scope of spirit ken;
To you, who come to teach us how to live,
We greet and thank you, fellow-men.

You who have trod the paths we tread,
You who were numbered with the dead;
You who return from out the vale,
And throw your banners to the gale;
Leading the hosts who've gone before,
And op'ning wide for us the door;
To you, our fellows from a higher plane,
We give our thanks, for this our gain.

When darkness shrouded all the land,
And error's chains bound every hand;
When no voice came from out the gloom,
That veiled the portals of the tomb;
Then you, who long had gone before,
Threw open wide the long closed door;
And through it from the other side there came
Loved ones we welcomed with acclaim.

Our thanks to you, most noble band,
That ofttimes here before us stand;
Who come as teachers, friends, nay more,
As brothers, sisters gone before.
One glorious host are all mankind,
A band of brothers, hearts entwined;
Oh! let all learn the universal Truth:
Man's destiny? Eternal youth.

Kansas.

WICHITA.—A correspondent writes: "The windows of heaven have been opened, and a mighty flood of the waters of Truth is fast washing away the bulwarks of false Theology. The frantic expounders of olden tradition have climbed from rock to rock, abandoning each foothold as the whelming waters rose about them, until now they stand upon the topmost peak, calling upon heaven in their dire distress. No ark of safety appears to rescue them from the wave of science, and soon their last despairing wail will be drowned by its rising flood.

I realize the fact that there are many Christians who are dissatisfied with the present system of theology, but yet cling to it for the lack of something better. They do not understand the spirit of the New Dispensation, and are suspicious of any change in their old beliefs. They say: 'If you take away our system, what will you give us in the place of it? If you take away vicarious atonement, how shall we be saved from the consequences of our sins?' I reply: God's word is written in the book of Nature, and all who will may read. The modest flower that blooms by the bubbling spring and casts its sweet perfume upon the air is a revelation of God. The song of birds in the bending branches of the trees; the whispering breeze that rustles through the waving boughs; the glad sunshine, pouring in a golden spray through drooping vines; the soft murmur of the brook and the wild roar of the angry sea—all these are sentences in that divine book, and the humblest child may read as well as the learned sage. As to salvation from our sins, our only saviour is virtue and knowledge. Science tells us that all phenomena in the Infinite Universe are governed by eternal and immutable laws. In our ignorance we often suffer from the violation of some law of nature, but knowledge enables us to turn these laws to account in our every-day life. All the benefits of civilized life to-day have been gained simply by utilizing natural laws; and all the misery and wretchedness result from the infraction of these eternal statutes of nature. So to know and to obey these laws of nature is the only saviour of the human race. Mankind are beginning to study these laws, and the day is fast approaching when they will read the book of nature, and look for revelations in that eternal volume, instead of in a musty scroll handed down by the past; when they will obey a natural law instead of a so-called divine command; when they will see that the true religion is a natural necessity, not a divine infliction; when they will see that holiness consists in obeying, and sin in disobeying these eternal laws of nature; that happiness is a state of harmony with existing conditions, and hell-punishment simply discord with another name; that since every cause must have an effect, and every law produce the end for which it exists, happiness inevitably follows a pure life, and misery an impure one; that no creed or expression of faith can change a single law of nature, and that no being can interpose his body to ward off the consequence of a broken law.

The light of truth is dawning upon the world, and blessed are they who open the windows of the soul to let the glorious rays shine in. The owl may sit upon the dead and hollow limb, and hoot when he sees the dawning day; but the lark will rise from the bending grass, and as she sees the beams of the morning sun will soar to the heavens on gladsome wing, and pour forth her song in a glad anthem of joy and praise."

MORSE.—Mrs. Dr. M. Henderson writes: "I wish to inform such of our Spiritualist friends as would like to better their condition by coming West and settling near each other, that there is now a rare chance offered in Aubrey Township, Johnson Co., Kan., where they can buy at small cost lots of ten acres, or less, and form a rural neighborhood in easy railroad communication with Olathe ten miles, and Kansas City only twenty-five miles distant. The location is beautiful; the soil rich and fertile, well adapted to gardening and small fruit culture. By coöperating in buying and selling, financial advantages can be attained that will be a blessing to all.

A healing institution, with hotel accomodations for the public, would do a good work by sustaining mediumship for healing and demonstrating the truths of our glorious cause. We invite mediums to come here and make their homes in this delightful country, joining with us, so that while we sustain them by material things and our spiritual elements, they may give to us a means of communication with those of our friends who have entered upon the life beyond. Were there such an institution here hundreds of persons would make it a resort for rest and to learn something of the after-life, away from the turmoil and excitement of the throng who know nothing and care nothing for that which alone has real value.

By an action of Congress the past winter opportunities of rare excellence are now presented to those who would like to purchase farming lands in this vicinity, and it is hoped many Spiritualists will avail themselves of them. Further information will be cheerfully given by me to any one who will address me, with stamp, at Morse, Johnson Co., Kansas."

FRANKLIN.—E. E. Phillio writes: "Some years since I occupied a seat at the side of a lady in a car. As I did so at her request, no other being vacant, we entered into conversation in a general way—perhaps for an hour—when, without any apparent change from my normal state, I saw rise over the seat in front of us the form of a little boy some eight years old. I at once described the little fellow, for he appeared so beautiful I could not resist giving a minute account of him. I noticed his dress was of broadcloth—the coat being cut in the 'round-about' style, common some years ago for boys of his age. As I related to the lady what I saw, tears came to her eyes. She told me the form was that of her little brother, who was drowned not long before. She said they had made him clothes like those I described only a few days before he died. The form soon faded away, and in its place came one resembling the lady. I described the form minutely, adding that I heard a voice say, 'We were always together.' The tears coursed down my companion's cheeks again as she said, 'That is my sister who died.' This form vanished, and what seemed a hand on each side of my face turned my head to the left, where I saw standing in a dignified manner a man, whom I described; whereupon the lady exclaimed, 'That is my stepfather, who died many, many years ago.' She said the description was perfect.

As this form passed from my view, instantly the rush and noise of the train—that I had not before recognized—burst upon my ear. I also saw the passengers sitting ahead of me. I had not realized their presence before; yet I recollected being able to see the back of the seat immediately in front of us, likewise the lady occupying the seat with me, also hearing our conversation and description of the forms. I should be pleased to have some one make clear to my mind what state I was in, and why I could not hear the noise of the train and see the passengers, though I could see and describe the deceased friends of the lady, and our own persons. I shall feel grateful for a satisfactory explanation."

CLAY.—J. Reinhard Alter writes: "About the time of the advent of Modern Spiritualism there came to my knowledge some interesting facts in regard to a woman in Eastern Ohio, whose name was Mrs. Birney. I did not take much interest in the spiritual philosophy at that time, 1850, and I presume not one in a thousand knew the cause of the influence acting upon or through her organism. That her condition at such times was not normal, scarcely any one doubted.

Mrs. Birney was a woman of good character, a Presbyterian, lived on a farm, and had a family of children. At what year the influence began I cannot say—I lived some fifteen miles from there—but as near as I can remember she had been influenced to preach for about twenty years at the time I became acquainted with her. When I knew her she preached regularly on alternate Sundays at 11 A. M. She would become unconscious, when her friends would prop her up in bed with pillows, etc. She would take a text and deliver something of an Orthodox discourse, mostly of a practical nature. I remember that at one time her text was, 'Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.' In summer-time the farmhouse would be crowded with visitors. For years the farmhouse on the hill was the resort of young people, and many older ones. I remember that 'wise men,' or those who would be so, visited her and thought they could fathom the mystery.

One thing was certain: her sermons were far above her capabilities in her normal state. I write this sketch in hopes that it will meet the eyes of some one who was familiar with all of the circumstances, and, if possible, write a full account of them, and thus preserve one of the oldest landmarks of Modern Spiritualism.

I think Mrs. Birney was influenced thus several years before the rappings began at Rochester, and that she spoke under spirit-influence I now have not the least doubt. Possibly her biography may be obtained by writing to some one at Tippecanoe, Ohio, near which place Mrs. Birney lived. I hope Eastern spiritual papers will copy this, and thus aid us in the laudable work."

SHERWOOD.—J. P. Mothersbough writes: "The people of Sherwood for the week ending March 10th listened to the inspirational teachings of F. D. Dunakin, of Cecil, O., on 'Spiritualism and General Reform.' One of the subjects on which he spoke was 'Joan d'Arc.' The discourse was above the average, and made a deep impression on the audience. The concluding lecture was 'Spiritualism Viewed from a Scientific Basis.' His aim was to show that Spiritualism is not only a religion, but a scientific fact demonstrated upon philosophical principles, and that what is termed matter is only a mask or covering that conceals the divine essence or soul from the material senses; that man being a God in miniature, he possesses all the attributes of deity. He claimed that the idea of a personal God, as described by popular theology, is a fiction, a relic of the dark ages; but he believed in a Divine Spirit, which permeates and gives life to the whole universe; as the poet says, 'Lives through all life, extends through all extent.' The musical selections throughout the whole were good, and added to the harmony of the meetings. Prof. Harry Rock, his amiable wife and several others constituted the choir. The seed sown has fallen on good ground, and will bring forth a bountiful harvest."

CARDINGTON.—Mrs. M. B. Pollard writes that she sent for a friend of hers a sealed letter to Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Columbus, O., addressed to the husband of that friend, who passed to spirit-life in 1871. The letter was securely stitched on a sewing-machine, and returned in precisely the same condition. Very satisfactory answers were given to the several questions it contained. From this experience and those of others she expresses the utmost degree of confidence in Mrs. Martin as a reliable medium for answering sealed letters, and recommends her to the public.

Virginia.

BIG STONE GAP.—J. B. Adams writes: "Down among the mountains of South-West Virginia I find an occasional Spiritualist, but in a crude form. Still the shell of old theology is being pricked, and when it is once broken open the new gospel will enter. I am a missionary, and with the aid of the BANNER OF LIGHT have sown some seeds that have taken root, and will in time produce fruit.

The South is in an undeveloped condition. The old leaven of slavocracy and progress are contesting. In religion, in politics, and in social relations these elements are striving for the mastery. The fight against prejudice and intolerance is a severe one, but the victory is certain. Hundreds of intelligent citizens with whom I have conversed are Spiritualists, but do not know it, and would not even admit the fact. Still they are thinkers and doubters, an essential step necessary for throwing off the chains and dogmas of the so-called religious creeds. They are entertaining angels, and in time, with the aid of spiritual friends, will see things as they are to day, and not as they have been taught from their infancies.

I read the BANNER OF LIGHT weekly, and each reading I grow in spiritual knowledge, and gain new aspirations, more enlarged views, and a better insight of my duty to myself and my neighbor."

Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURGH.—C. E. Meskmien writes: "Sunday, March 25th, closed the engagement of Mr. and Mrs. Kates, for the time being. I am pleased to write that that they have been reëngaged for next fall. Mr. Kates furnished about the best lecture heard here last Sunday night, and I can truthfully say that Mrs. Kates is the best medium on the platform that has visited this city.

I am sorry to have to state that one of the pioneers of Spiritualism, Mr. Hays, and family, are about to move to Ohio. They have been true, earnest workers for the Society since it first started, and I can safely say the loss is deeply regretted by all. The wish here is that success may attend them wherever they go.

Mrs. Glading has been engaged for April. She has never been here, but has been so highly recommended by previous lecturers and the press, that I know she will be liked."

WALNUT BEND.—Isaac Baker, upon remitting his yearly subscription, writes in eulogistic terms of the BANNER OF LIGHT and of the hearty welcome he gives it upon its weekly appearance.

NO LANDLORDS YET ON THE RIVERS.—The laborers of Burlington, and the merchants and citizens and other parties whom these laborers patronize, have reason to be thankful that the "trusts" have not yet secured from Congress or some other usurping authority the exclusive ownership of the Mississippi, otherwise the surface of that stream would be like that of the earth, private property, whose owners would neither cut ice nor permit others to do so without paying rent for the privilege. While the river is free to all, a man can work for himself or for some one else, as he chooses. But were the river owned, the owners would demand all they could get as rent, the ice men would cut down wages, the men would compete for employment, and both sides would combine—no, the employers would combine and the laborers conspire; strikes and lock-outs would take place on the river, and the ice lords, water lords, untaxed or lightly taxed, would draw their rents regularly and enjoy the conflicts between capital and labor, as the landlords do under the present tax system.—Burlington, Ia., Justice.

The Reviewer.

VOICES FROM MANY HILL-TOPS, Echoes from Many Valleys; or, The Experiences of Spirits Eon and Eonè, in Earth-Life and Spirit-Spheres, in Ages Past, in the Long, Long Ago; and Their Many Incarnations in Earth-Life, and On Other Worlds. Given Through the Sun Angels' Order of Light. 8vo, cloth, pp. 650. Oswego, N. Y.: J. B. Fayette.

One need have an abundance of leisure and a condition of great passivity to read, comprehend in part even, and fully appreciate, the contents of this remarkable volume. As it treats of what Earth's inhabitants know nothing from their own experience, its subjects and the statements concerning them will be by many looked upon as imaginative; but, what imagination is, how it can, be it what it may, conceive of and describe persons, scenes and events that do not exist, is a problem we leave for those wiser than ourself to solve.

The work professes to give an account of the life of two mated spirits, beginning on earth in a prehistoric age. Then, we are told, their home was in the land where the blue skies whispered ever of summer; their cottage roof the palm trees' kindly shade; their cups shells, their knives the bones of animals made shapely by various devices; their table a stone, their boats limbs of trees bound together with branches. In that remote period of their lives, they worshiped the spirit of nature and received instructions from higher beings of superior intelligence. From the account they give, the reader is led to consider whether the state they describe may not have been the foundation upon which the story of the Garden of Eden was constructed, more or less recognized in every form of religion.

After a long period of existence in this sphere, Eon and Eonè suddenly became, through a strange convulsion of earth, inhabitants of a land where the bodily form they had been accustomed to was unknown. An account is given of their experience in this new state and the means by which they advanced in knowledge and wisdom. Succeeding states are described with great minuteness, and made as comprehensible to mortals as the limitation of human language will allow, and to a point where human perception utterly fails to conceive of what is beyond. Referring to what they learned of conditions of spirit-life it is said:

"Whatever is won is worn, and the robes of immortals tell of the soul's wealth, as the houses, lands and costly wrappings indicate the purses of earth-dwellers. They who are rich on earth shores are often destitute in the better land, for gold is at a discount among the heaven-born; besides, there are in the summer-lands no banks that deal in the world's trash, termed thus because earth-dwellers make of it hedge-rows bearing sharp thorns, that keep out the great good that only awaits their bidding. Many men and women in whose purses the gold of earth glitters while they turn deaf ears to the known wants of earth's less favored children, will find on their entrance to the other life their destitution appalling, and will seek in their shame to hide themselves from the eyes of the passers-by. Such have to learn the lesson that they have impoverished their own souls through their intense greed for gold, that in turn curses them with a curse that they have to outlive and outwork before they can be anything but paupers on the borders of the beautiful land that seems to know them not."

The work is too voluminous for us to attempt to place before our readers a just idea of the vast field it covers, or the extent and beauty of its unfoldments—its revelations of life and scenes in worlds beyond. The narrations it gives of transitions from one to another sphere are poetical and entrancingly beautiful at times. After mentioning previous incidents, the approach to the fifth sphere is described as follows:

"We were nearing the fifth sphere, from whence waves of harmony floated outward like the breathings of Deity. Already we breathed the air thereof, laden with the odor of spices and balms. Already the spires and domes from the city of light touched with the sheen of silver the fleecy clouds that floated above them. Already in our united hearts brooded the white-winged dove of peace, while we felt the welcome wafted to us on every breeze, and the tender home-feeling creeping into our hearts as an abiding guest. The cloud-wrapped isle [this had been before described as a means of transit] floated on, the music filled with soft undulations every breeze that passed us, and we wondered that we had never caught the echoes thereof in our other home. We passed over the city until we came directly over the Temple of Wisdom, from which radiated a light so intense that seen elsewhere it would have terrified us, but not here. We were in the realms of peace, and the great light thereof but served to increase the peace that was enshrouded in our souls."

The book contains sixty-seven chapters; is handsomely printed, durably bound, and will afford instruction and satisfaction to its readers; all of whom, whether accepting it as a revelation of truth or not, will find pleasurable entertainment in its perusal. Mr. Eglinton, the well-known English medium, pronounces it "one of the most valuable books ever published"; it certainly is to a Spiritualist one of the most interesting.

OUTSIDE THE GATES, by a band of Spirit Intelligences, through the mediumship of Miss M. T. Shelhamer. Colby & Rich, Boston, Mass. Price $1,25; postage free.

In the course of a review of this choice work by a gifted medium, J. J. Morse uses the following language in The Carrier Dove, San Francisco, Cal.:

"As concerns 'Outside the Gates,' Miss Shelhamer is but the medial instrument through whom the matter contained in these instructive and pleasing pages has been communicated. The narratives are presented by the intelligences concerned, and are in all cases clear, distinct, practical statements of actual post mortem biography. The story of 'Outside the Gates' is the career of a woman in spirit-life, telling of her death, describing her entrance into the next state, her encounters with a penitent, and with spirits in darkness; her observations in the Children's Valley, her entrance 'within the gates,' and her beautiful home in the Sunrise Land, and a more interesting and instructive narrative it would be difficult to find.
