The lessons inculcated in the volume are many, but all tend to one end—the propriety of living truthfully and virtuously while on earth. They point to the fact that little wrongs, as well as large ones, inflict their pains and penalties upon us. The lessons also impress upon the reader that ultimate peace and joy are not attained immediately upon entrance into spirit-life, but, instead, they depend upon our purification from the results of evil and wrong done while here, while true soul-growth alone ensures fitness for entrance beyond the gates.

There is a naturalness about the book that brings all it tells into the region of common sense.

Want of space precludes more than the present brief notice, which does but scant justice to an in every way acceptable contribution to our distinctly mediumistic literature. But it may be truly added to by saying that Miss Shelhamer's mediumship thus receives another well merited laurel, and Colby & Rich have added another valuable work to their extensive catalogue of spiritual literature.

In closing, let me append the words of an old and able contributor to our literature, A. E. Newton, who says in a recent notice of the book before me: 'It should be read by parents and teachers, who will find in it many hints of improved methods for training the young; it should be read by children, who will derive from it just and noble views of true living for this world and the next; it should be read especially by mediums of all classes, who may learn from it how to avoid many dangers, and to use their gifts for the worthiest ends; it should be read by clergymen and religious teachers of all persuasions, for they can hardly fail to derive from it some important suggestions of what may be true regarding the life to come, and far worthier views than most of them are wont to teach; and, lastly, it should be read by all who would obtain just and rational conceptions of spirit-life, the relations of the present to the future, and the true means of spiritual progress here and hereafter.'"

An Ohio girl who tired of hearing the farmers growl about wheat-growing not paying, decided she'd see about it. She rented five and three-quarters acres of land, kept strict account of every dollar expended in raising the crop, got an average yield of thirty-five bushels to the acre, and sold it for $142,10. The cost of production was $98,12, including $31,50 for fertilizers, and the gain on the investment was 44 per cent.

Vital or Spirit Magnetic Healing, vs. Christian Science.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I often see accounts of alleged cures made by the Christian Science method, going the rounds of the secular papers, but seldom see anything recorded concerning those made by the practitioners of the vital or spirit magnetic system. Doubtless the editors of such papers associate the magnetic treatment with Spiritualism and the Christian Science process with the church—and this may account for the partiality shown, as there can be, beyond question, two cures cited as made by magnetism to one made by the Christian Scientists and practitioners claiming kindred names.

From my observation the operators, also teachers of Christian Science or Metaphysics, make the cures accredited to them by the same universal law under which all cures are made which are made by invisible forces; the great object and aim of the Christian Scientists, however, seems to be to teach more than to practice, and doubtless this affords a better opportunity for winning the "almighty dollar."

In the Christian Science mode of treatment there seems to be but little physical exertion displayed, but where the operator (calling him or herself such scientist) generates in his or her organism a superabundance of vital or spirit magnetism or life force, he or she is successful, just in the same manner as are the magnetic healers—nothing more and nothing less, and there is nothing new in the operation shown.

Recently I was conversing with an individual who has great faith in the power of vital magnetic treatment to restore health; this person said, in the course of our talk:

"I have just had a word with one of the instructors in massage treatment, and I asked the question as to what causes the great difference between the operators—i. e., in benefiting the sick with massage treatment—and the only reason that could be given was that of the peculiar shaped hand they possessed; the teacher remarking that not more than one out of four who attempted to make a profession of massage treatment succeed to any extent worthy of note."

The natural power that goes with the mechanical operation was not even alluded to as being beneficial or essential with one person more than another. If such teachers would give more attention to the latent invisible powers in the universe and human beings, they would be more able to give a rational solution of the cause that originates the difference between the effect produced by the various operators which makes one person successful in healing while another fails to even benefit the patient, while both are equally as reliable as individuals.

Desire to heal, education, or various religious views, have but little or nothing to do with healing by invisible forces; that depends entirely upon inheritance, adapted organisms, etc., and also in having adapted forces to meet the person afflicted with disease—either with or without human contact.

The so-called mind-craze to-day seems to be running wild over the country, and has gained the attention of many sincere individuals, and any one would surely suppose, upon hearing the new converts talk and the old ones repeat, that there is now no need of sickness, neither is there any reason why any mortal should cross the river of change. The philosophy advanced seems to grow more and more "India rubber"-like daily, and some of the operators go so far as to say that they can teach classes in any part of the country, and can also heal, sitting in their room, and give treatments to all, in any portion of the world, who have confidence in them sufficient to send their name and address with the required fee for services.

Doubtless there are many individuals suffering with disease in all portions of the United States, sitting at their homes patiently, with faith stretched to its utmost capacity, waiting for the Divine Mind to come to them and heal them, while the Christian Scientist receives the fee for the work thus done or undone.

The most absurd thing in their mode of treatment is that the sick are required to abstain from all external applications, also the use of efficacious, harmless remedies; if the sick, in some cases, are with parched lips thirsting for a drop of cold water, and it is taken or made use of, and death follows, the scientists claim that the fault is solely with the individual and not at all with the science itself—the trouble being in the patient not having sufficient faith in the philosophy to allow the process to work favorably.

A well, healthy person would sicken under such a discipline; and it seems to me that a weak, sickly individual needs great care and sufficient nourishing articles to strengthen, allay and soothe—thus assisting nature to restore the system to health—instead of being so dogmatically assured that he (or she) is not sick—that what he (or she) thinks is weakness and sickness is imagination or "mortal error," etc.

When the reaction in these teachings comes, as it surely will (they not being based on sound philosophy), the public will wonder that the so-called "craze" ever found lodgment in the brain of people who are fully sensible in other issues of life. The great trouble to-day is that few of those who embrace the Christian Science theory know anything about the Spiritualistic Philosophy or the different qualities of invisible forces about and around them and in the universe, which are developed in their own organism; and when they are spoken to about being overcharged with either magnetism or electricity, they cannot understand what it means. Without question a large per cent. of disease originates from the unbalancing of the electric and magnetic forces that generate in the system—caused often by overwork, both mentally and physically, and by the climate where the patient resides, and which has nothing especially to do with the mind, any further than that no one can live in a body, earthly or spiritual, without mind; though will-power and mind will not change the condition of the sick, in many cases the application of adapted force or power imparted to the sick often chemically changes the system, and the individual is restored to health. The mind of the patient should be directed aright to act in harmony with this view of healing and to a comprehension that both of these elements or powers are highly essential to the work of restoration—it being unreasonable and unscientific alike to ignore either of them.

Why do people not stop and consider life and its subtle laws before blindly accepting speculative theories that will not bear the close investigation of reason and common sense? Electricity, magnetism and spirit-power have no intelligence in their composition—but intelligence could not exist or be made manifest without them; and it should be the great study of this age to know how they are related and blended and can be of assistance to each other. It is just as necessary for the patient to be well informed upon these subjects as it is the operator or healer whom they employ, that they may not sit quietly and let the spirit leave the body, or suffer physical pain when a remedy—vital magnetism—is often within their reach, and that, too, in nearly every family in the land.

AUTHOR OF VITAL MAGNETIC CURE BOOK.
Boston, Mass.

☞ Referring to the advance points it has received of the forthcoming report of the Board of Indian Commissioners, The Christian Union of March 22d has the following:

"This report justifies fully the accounts we gave at the time of the outrages perpetrated on the Apaches by the Colorado cowboy militia, and on Estermizin and his peaceful community by cowboys who were not militia. This report is founded on official reports, and makes it unnecessary to retract a word which we said at the time in depicting these outrages and in expression of indignation at them. It is the duty of Congress to afford what little reparation it can, and to make some provision against their recurrence.

The table presented in this report gives encouraging evidence of Indian progress in education and civilization. But it also confirms what we have heretofore said as to the bad faith of our National Government toward the Indians. The money which we promised in solemn treaty to furnish in educational facilities for the Indians we have refused, or at least neglected, to furnish. The United States Government cannot be sued; so the wronged and cheated Indian is without remedy. He has a legal right to this money, but no means of enforcing his legal rights. . . . In plain Anglo-Saxon we [the Government] are convicted by this report of being a great National liar to the Indians."

WOMAN.

New York State Convention of Woman Suffragists.

The annual convention of the New York State Woman Suffrage Association was held in New York City March 22d. At the morning session officers for the ensuing year were chosen, and resolutions adopted emphasizing the need of woman's influence in politics as the "best regenerator" thereof; asking the Legislature to pass the municipal suffrage bill, expressing sympathy for working-women, demanding for the wives of this State some adequate legal protection in their share of the joint earnings of the marriage copartnership, and the immediate repeal of the law giving the father absolute disposal of his children by deed or will is demanded, so that the mother may have an equal power.

In the afternoon Mrs. Blake presided, and opened the session by reviewing women's forty year war in this country for the right of the ballot. Mrs. Z. B. Gustafson, of London, said she could understand how women might be denied the ballot in old countries, where feudalism had held sway for centuries; but she could n't see why women were just as unfortunate in a young and vigorous country like America. Mme. Bogolot, of Paris, spoke of the good work accomplished by the St. Lazare Society, of Paris, and Baroness Alexandra Gripenburg, of Finland, reviewed the progress of the women's efforts for independence in her country. The exercises concluded with a reply by Mrs. Blake to Rev. Dr. Dix's recent arraignment of society women.

At the evening and closing session, Mrs. Scatcherd, of England, advised women not to pay taxes until granted suffrage. Mrs. Ashton Dilke spoke of great reformers, and said that while some lost their vigor with age, others, notably Mrs. Gladstone, Mrs. Elizabeth Stanton and most woman suffragists never abandoned their cause. Mrs. Clara Neyman, of Germany, declared America to be the proper field for woman's purifying influence upon the ballot. Miss Bessie Starkeefer, of the Toronto Globe, spoke of woman's superiority over man.

The Mother of Dickens.

The childhood of Dickens was so shadowed by poverty, and his sensitive and imaginative mind was so keenly alive to his position, that it is hardly possible he could draw an absolutely impartial picture of his parents. His mother had a keen appreciation of the droll and of the pathetic, and likewise considerable dramatic talent. She was a comely little woman, with handsome, bright eyes, and a genial, agreeable person. From her Dickens undoubtedly inherited his temperament and intellectual gifts. She possessed an extraordinary sense of the ludicrous, and her power of imitation was something astonishing. Her perception was quick, and she unconsciously noted everything that came under her observation. In describing ridiculous occurrences her tone and gesture would be inimitable, while her manner was of the quaintest. Dickens declares that to her he owed his first desire for knowledge, and that his earliest passion for reading was awakened by his mother, who taught him not only the first rudiments of English, but also a little of Latin. Poverty saddened and darkened many years of her life, and her children were early compelled to leave her and earn their own living, but they all honored and loved her as she deserved.—Woman's Argosy.

Paterson, N. J.—John A. Roney, Corresponding Secretary, writes: "In this industrial centre of locomotives and silks, proudly and justly claiming the title of 'the Lyons of America,' there has been formed 'The First Spiritual Society,' and the dematerialization of Orthodoxy has commenced. The handwriting is already on the slates if not the walls.

With the beginning of the New Year began a new era in spiritual things. A number of pioneers in the cause, Mr. Henry Doherty, Mr. J. B. Clark, Mr. Rose and colaborers, rented the light and cheerful 'Fidelity Hall,' centrally located on Market street, and, with the aid of the author of 'Celestial Sonnets,' Dr. B. M. Lawrence, as an organizer, an efficient Chairman in the person of Mr. Saunderson, and the indefatigable Thomas A. Tuffnell as Secretary, the circle was instantly developed into working order and the manifestations began.

In justice to the interesting speakers we have had I may say that the knowledge of Spiritualism is rapidly growing in this city. After Dr. Lawrence, Dr. Henry Slade gave us a vivid recital of his eventful life—his travels, persecutions and victories—to which his audience listened with rapt attention.

Feb. 28th, Mrs. E. Cutler occupied the platform and drew a large audience. Then came Frank T. Ripley, whose guides lectured and gave tests three Sundays, ending with March 18th, awakening the slumberers out of their sleep and impelling them to put their armor on. Mr. Ripley is a whole corps (not corpse) in himself. His guides possess and impart a deep and thorough knowledge of physical, moral and spiritual law; radical to many sentimental Spiritualists and combative to Orthodox Christians. Few will forget his appeal to young and old to remember that if we could feel that the spirits of those who respected and loved us here knew all we say and do, we would stop and shrink from doing wrong. The earnest, intelligent guides of Mr. Ripley have a worthy instrument, and know well how to smooth the bristling feathers of aggression with the oil of gladness, for what before the benediction seemed to be thorns are all roses, and there are more hopeful and fewer heavy hearts when his work is done. His tests are convincing to the skeptical; his lectures thunder with truth, yet are tender with love as a mother's lullaby.

We believe our society has come to stay, and there is a determination to give materialists as well as Christians an opportunity of judging for themselves whether there is or is not any truth in Spiritualism. Materialistic friends, halt no longer between two opinions. Who among you is greater than the valiant, honest Ingersoll? He is a mightier man than you conceive him to be, and has more faith in the continuity of life than you think he has. When or where has he denounced a spiritual existence? He said to Rev. Mr. Field, in his last letter to him: 'The jury of the entire human race has given the verdict of a future life beyond the tomb, and so long as hope and love linger in the human breast so long will they believe in it.'

Investigate for yourselves and know and grow, and secure a comfort and consolation which passes understanding; then will to-morrow be a sufficient hereafter, and angel-homes in the Summer-Land be less a fond dream than a reality."

The Anniversary at Troy, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism opened Sunday evening, March 25th, before the Star Hall Society, with an address by Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn. Her lecture was based on subjects given her from the audience, and was a very logical and powerful defense of the movement from its introduction at Hydesville, N. Y., in 1848, to the present date.

The exercises were interspersed with music, and an original chorus recitation—by a group of the Lyceum children—written by Mrs. Allyn, which was in rhyme, and had reference to the rise, opposition to and progress made by the cause in the past forty years.

The large audience assembled seemed deeply interested and pleased.

The ladies are to be commended for the very elaborate taste displayed in the decorations of the hall for the occasion. Our bright ensign, the stars and stripes, together with fine pictures and beautiful flowers, everywhere greeted the eye.

The Children's Lyceum exercises in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, were commemorative of the event also, and the assemblage convened were pleasurably entertained.

The greatest event, however, in connection with our celebration here occurred on Tuesday evening, March 27th, in Star Hall: It was a brilliant affair; the programme consisted of recitations, tableaux, music, etc., closing with a grand supper. The hall was filled with young and old who came for a general good time; and I think from the feeling manifest every one enjoyed it hugely. A marked feature of our Tuesday evening's entertainment was the presentation of a beautiful floral emblem to Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn by Charles M. Austin, the worthy Conductor of the Children's Lyceum.

Our Society desires to return thanks to Mrs. Allyn through the columns of THE BANNER for the very able and efficient manner in which she labored among us, and sincerely hope that her work may be crowned with like success wherever her footsteps may be guided.

THE ROARING OF THE SEA.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

I had a dream, a noontide dream,
Thrice it came and thrice it went,
And thrice it left a light and gleam,
As of a purpose why 't was sent.
A dream of mist and blinding haze,
Whereout there issued a drowsy sound,
As of the hum from crowded ways,
Where streams of life go eddying round.
The church-bells muffled in fogs and glooms,
Faintly peal'd over wold and lea,
But clear 'mid the pauses of the booms
I heard the roaring of the Sea.

Sadly the people to and fro
Rock'd and sway'd, they knew not why:
I could scarcely see them come or go,
So thick the vapors draped the sky;
They look'd half form'd, gigantic, vague,
Things of the cloud, but not of the Sun,
As of a City of the Plague,
Where Hope and Healing there were none.
Some were lawyers with wigs and gowns,
Some were priests—or seem'd to be,
And some were kings with tottering crowns—
And they heard the roaring of the Sea.

"Why dost thou linger in the mist?"
I ask'd a sage of snow-white head.
"Not those emerge from it who list;
I cannot see my way," he said.
"All things are out of gear and line,
Men worship money, their only god;
Each thinks himself alone divine,
And tramples his neighbor to the sod.
Ever the weakest goes to the wall,
None of us know what the end shall be,
Except that misery must befall—
We hear the roaring of the Sea."

I mingled in the priestly throng,
And asked of one who seem'd the chief,
"If in the mist he 'd lingered long?"
"Ay, long!" he said, "without relief!—
We know not whether we sit or stand,
Or whether we wander in or out;
We find nor comfort, nor guiding hand,
Nor any glimmering but of doubt.
We feel a quiver of earthquake shocks—
We would be bond, and yet be free,
We tread on the edge of perilous rocks—
We hear the roaring of the Sea."

* * * * * * *

I question'd one, that seem'd a king,
From the vapory, misty crown he wore,
Why to the shadows he seem'd to cling,
Shadows behind and shadows before—
He answer'd sadly, "Ask me not!
I strive to follow my father's trade.
I walk as I may—or can—God wot—
Stumbling and halting, and afraid!
The time is pass'd for Right Divine,
The people have ceased to bend the knee,
The end is coming for me and mine—
I hear the roaring of the Sea."

Down there came like a river in flood
A crowd of people haggard and worn;
And they roar'd and yell'd and clamore'd for blood.
Frantic and furious, and forlorn.
"What do you want?" I ask'd of one;
He answer'd, "The Earth for its children dear,
Farms as free as the light of the Sun,
And fair partition of life's good cheer,
Of corn and wine, and sheep and beeves;
All that the Earth produces free,
Why should we starve mid the bursting sheaves?
We've heard the roaring of the Sea."

The billowy, rising, roaring sea—
The stifling, swathing, blinding mist;
A Chaos big with a new To Be,
And a ruddy sunshine not uprist.
Hear it, ye preachers of the creeds!
Take heed, ye wise, without a plan,
There 's something better than sordid needs—
There 's a futurity for man!
"Each for himself" is a gospel of lies,
That never was issued by God's decree—
There 's fresh fair light on the morning skies—
There 's health in the roaring of the Sea.

TRIBUTES TO THE WORKERS.

Testimonial to Miss Hagan.

The Sunday services held on the 25th ult. at Grand Army Hall closed the engagement of Miss Jennie B. Hagan with the Union Society, although she remained through the Anniversary services, at which she spoke and improvised poems. The following testimonial to her merits was unanimously adopted by the Union Society at the close of her address on Sunday evening:

CINCINNATI, O., March 25th, 1888.

The Society of Union Spiritualists, of Cincinnati, desire to testify to the benefits they have received from services upon their rostrum by Miss Jennie B. Hagan, on the Sundays of March, and to their gratification at her successful labors wherever she is called to minister in the active work of Spiritualism. Those who have listened to her inspired utterances in this city, in prose and verse, will unite with us in the declaration that her exposition of "the word," as Spiritualists use the term, is clear, concise and exhaustive; that her eloquence is persuasive, her poetry brilliant and soothing, and her logic convincing to the apprehension of all unprejudiced minds. Since last she ministered unto this people, one year ago, her good controls have grown stronger in their comprehension of human needs, and they come to us with soul-food which is wholesome to our minds and cheering to the hearts of all who receive it in wisdom. We have been blessed in its receipt and assimilation, and it is hoped we are wise enough to make the most of its grand and noble signification.

We sincerely thank this minister of the better revelation for all she has done for us and for the cause of Spiritualism here and elsewhere; and especially do we thank her for the kindness of heart which has prompted her to give her valuable services to the celebration in this city of the Fortieth Anniversary of Spiritualism—services of great value, as we well know from experience, and services which should be appreciated all the more on account of the liberal spirit in which they are proffered.

To spiritual societies and congregations in all parts of the world, we wish to say that Miss Hagan's services are especially valuable and effective upon the platform, and that their value is largely enhanced by a personal presence which is dignified, modest, gentle, and replete with those silent appeals of truth and goodness which are more eloquent than any language.

Mrs. Amelia H. Colby-Luther.

As noted in THE BANNER last week, this talented speaker concluded, March 26th, a month's successful engagement in Boston with the Spiritual Temple Society meeting in Berkeley Hall. At the close of the morning address, George C. Paine offered the following preamble and resolution, which were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted by the audience, and feelingly responded to by Mrs. Luther:

Whereas, The present is the last Sunday of Mrs. Colby-Luther's engagement, and as it is probable that circumstances may not admit of her accepting another in Boston, it is but just that some expression of the highly appreciative sentiments of her Berkeley Hall hearers should be officially made; therefore be it

Resolved, That the thanks of this audience are hereby presented to Mrs. Colby-Luther and her guides for the able, interesting, instructive and outspoken thoughts to which we have been privileged to listen during this and her previous engagements. We cherish the hope that we may at some future time enjoy a renewal of the privilege.

New Publications.

A KISS FOR A BLOW: A Collection of Stories for Children, Inculcating the Principles of Peace. By Henry C. Wright. Ten Illustrations. 16mo, cloth, pp. 204. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

A book that will never grow old. Though first published many years ago, its lessons are as much needed and as truthful, and its interest as deep now as then. During fifteen years of his life Mr. Wright addressed over fifty thousand children for the purpose of impressing them with a peaceful disposition and the duty of returning good for evil. The origin of the book's name was in this wise: One day Mr. Wright addressed a number of children in Philadelphia, and mentioned that he was soon to publish a book for children, on the subject of peace, and related several stories he intended to put in it. He describes the sequel as follows: "After I had finished several came running to me: 'What name are you going to give to your little book?' they all inquired. 'I hardly know what to call it,' said I. 'Suppose I should call it "A Kiss for a Blow"; how would that do?' 'That is first rate,' said they all. From that moment my mind was decided to give it this title."

REMINISCENCES OF A PREACHER. A Theological Romance by William McDonnell. 16mo, cloth, pp. 232. Boston: J. P. Mendum.

No one who has read the author's previous works, "Exeter Hall," "The Heathens of the Heath," etc., will fail to greet this as a powerful means of loosening the chain and breaking the fetters of creed bound mortals. It partakes of all the strong features of Mr. McDonnell's other writings. It abounds with many pathetic passages of deep feeling; but when error is taught for truth and darkness set forth as light, the author places no obstacle in the way of the torrent of denunciation that flows from his pen against such examples of "man's inhumanity to man."

CASSELL'S NATIONAL LIBRARY.—The latest numbers of this excellent series of standard works, for a dime each, are "A Voyage to Lisbon," by Henry Fielding; "Plutarch's Lives of Solon, Publicola, Philopœmen, Titus Quinctius Flamininus, and Caius Marius," "Prometheus Unbound, with Adonais, The Cloud, Hymn to Intellectual Beauty, and an Exhortation," by Shelley; "The Republic of the Future; or Socialism in the Future; Letters from a Nobleman in the Twenty-First Century," by Anna Bowman Dowd; "King Lear," by Shakespeare; "Seven Discourses on Art," by Joshua Reynolds; "History of the Early Part of the Reign of James II., by Charles James Fox; "Diary of Samuel Pepys from October 1667, to March 1668." Each paper, pp. 102. New York: Cassell & Co.

A. B. FRENCH AND HIS HOME AT CLYDE.

BY WARREN CHASE.

The many friends of Bro. French in the East, and all readers of THE BANNER who have listened in times past to the eloquence that has so inspiringly issued from his lips, will no doubt be glad to learn from one who knows the reason of his partial withdrawal from the platform work he so ably performed for several years.

I had often heard regrets, and sometimes accusations, as if he had deserted us and our cause; and I am glad to be able to assure all that he has in no sense deserted us, but is as much a Spiritualist as he ever was, and as ready and able to defend his views.

First, a large and valuable local business which he had carried on for years, for reasons I need not mention, required his time and presence at home, and no one, knowing the circumstances as I do, could blame him for attending to his business, though it called him from the rostrum as an itinerant speaker.

Second, his anxiety, and that of other friends in Clyde, to have a place for liberal and spiritual lectures, induced them to join with a remnant of a Universalist Society — which was really first organized by and preached to by an old friend of mine, who had often welcomed me to his house and his church, where I have often spoken; this Society had become too poor to keep up preaching or to repair the church, and by joining with them they have raised a sufficient sum to reseat, paint and fit up the commodious and really valuable building (in which I lectured March 18th), and now they have such place and have engaged a speaker (Universalist) for each alternate Sunday, who told me himself that he was a Spiritualist, and wrote his sermons by spirit influence—and the one I heard, proved it to me.

The truth is, Spiritualism has taken no back step in Clyde, O.

The White Lady.

The death of William I, Emperor of Germany, and the precarious health of his son and successor, recall to mind the traditional apparitions of Berchta von Rosenberg, the "white lady." Baldinus has written her history. She lived in the fifteenth century, and was the daughter of Ulrich, Governor of Bohemia, and Commander of the Roman Catholic troops against the Hussites. Her husband, Baron Johann von Lichtenstein, was very unkind to her. Her descendants married into the houses of Brandenburg, Baden and Darmstadt; and she is said to have appeared to members of those families from time to time in case of impending misfortune or an approaching death. She was seen, it is affirmed, in the Royal Castle in Berlin in 1840, a few weeks before the death of the Prussian King. Emperor William forbade all mention of her, yet her appearance in January, 1884, is positively asserted. Several times she has spoken. At her appearance in Berlin, in 1628, she uttered these words: "Veni, judica vivos et mortuos; judicium mihi adhuc superest!" "Come, judge the living and the dead; the judgment still continues for me."

From Our Dumb Animals.

Is There any Future Life for Animals?

We answer, John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, thought there was. So did those eminent Christian bishops, Jeremy Taylor and Bishop Butler. Coleridge advocated it in England, Lamartine in France, and Agassiz in America. Agassiz, the greatest scientist we ever had on this continent, and a man of profound religious convictions, was a firm believer in some future life for the lower animals. A professor of Harvard University has compiled a list of one hundred and eighty-five European authors who have written on the subject. Among the leading clergy of Boston who have publicly expressed their belief in a future life for animals, are Joseph Cook, Trinitarian, and James Freeman Clarke, Unitarian. Some ten years ago a man left by will to Mr. Bergh's New York Society about a hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Relatives contested the will on the ground that he was insane because he believed in a future life for animals. The judge, in sustaining the will, said he found that more than half the human race believed the same thing.

GEO. T. ANGELL.

If the fact that twenty six persons were last year killed by the cars at the grade crossings of three roads only in Chicago, forty-one in Philadelphia in 1887, and thirty-eight in the same city in 1886, not to cite the same kind of fatalities in other places, carries any argument, it is in favor of a change of the system without any further delay. Railroads should enter any city on a level of their own. That is a "reform" which must some day come.—The Advance, Worthington, Minn.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

What's to be Done?

BY N. G. TCHERNYCHEWSKY.

This novel and its author have a remarkable history. The work was written in 1863 in a St. Petersburg dungeon, where the author was confined for twenty-two months prior to being sent into exile in Siberia. The author was not only one of the foremost literary men of Russia, but one of the earliest and most influential of the Nihilists, and, though still in exile, he is looked upon by the Nihilists even yet with a peculiar veneration. His influence upon the youth of Russia was of the most extraordinary and wide-spread character, and was chiefly exercised through this romance, "What 's to be Done?" The book was suppressed by the Czar, but not before it had had a large circulation. The Russian work is now rare, but it is read secretly in Russia still, where copies have been sold for a thousand roubles each. Though it has been translated into nearly every European language, this translation is the first in English.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

GIRARD COLLEGE THEOLOGY.

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D. D., LL.D.,

Author of "Marriage and Divorce," "The Bible—Whence and What," "Man—Whence and Whither," etc.

The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.'"

The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."

THE TYLER BOYS.

BY F. M. LEBELLE.

This is a capital story, well written, lively and entertaining. There is as much dramatic interest in the affairs of these little people as in those of grown-up children upon a wider stage. The characters are so vividly portrayed that the reader can see them every one. The Spiritual Philosophy is nicely interwoven throughout. It is considered a difficult thing to write well for children, but this author has succeeded far better than the average of those who undertake it.

A Parliament of Peace.

The dream of the world, as it is fast taking shape, is of its ultimate peaceful federation. The idea received a fresh start, kindling the emotions of all those who aspire to a higher condition of the nations, when the President of the United States last fall received the delegation from England, sent across the Atlantic by the first men and women of that country to propose that we should unite with England in establishing a high court of arbitration. Its purpose was to be, to refer all questions which might hereafter arise between America and Europe to a select body of statesmen and jurists for their investigation and final adjustment, each nation pledging itself to abide by the decision. The recollection of the pleasure this movement excited in the public mind is as fresh as it is grateful. The large meetings held in the cities of the country to express their cordial approbation bore the best possible testimony to the fact that the right chord had at length been struck in the popular heart. Such a proposal was the more welcome because it was wholly practical.

In his last Thanksgiving Day discourse, Dr. Edward Everett Hale referred to what was in its day called The Great Design of Henry IV., King of France, and regarded historically as the greatest of the entire line of the Kings of France. In all the successful years of his reign he held "the great design" steadily in view. And what was this great design? It was a proposal to form an union of the fifteen most important powers of Europe, with but a single army and navy, for operations against Mussulmans and Russians. Eleven monarchies and four republics were to be united in this league, and the assent of twelve out of the proposed fifteen had been obtained at the time of King Henry's assassination. A Senate, that should be in continuous session, was to determine the regulations of all mutual interests, and the Emperor of Germany was to be the executive to carry out the decisions of the Senate. This was nearly three centuries ago. The plan of course implied the disarmament of all the powers belonging to the union; and that was its weak point, since the jealousy of the smaller powers was naturally excited. It was the same jealousy that our own smaller States felt of the larger ones before they finally consented to come into the Union.

The United States of America are themselves a peace society, said Dr. Hale, and this is the most important thing about it. As such it should be first regarded, and always remembered. The Constitution united in peace thirteen republics, which but for this Constitution would have often been at war. It appointed a high court of arbitration to judge between them in their differences. It created a military force and an executive to carry out the decisions of this tribunal, and from the first took measures to prevent any one of these States of the Union from having any considerable force in hand with which to resist that national power. And the national power could organize itself and act independently of the States out of which it was composed, and over which, for certain specific purposes, it had control. And this new experiment in human government, a peace society in any comprehensive view we may take of it, has had a successful trial for just a century.

This illustration of our Union of States was employed by Dr. Hale to show that it furnishes the only successful instance of the establishment of a court of arbitration, with a permanent executive possessing force enough to maintain the authority of the court. Two nations may unquestionably bind themselves to leave the decision of a single difficulty to the arbitration of a particular tribunal; but an agreement to bind the future must provide guarantees, and then must give somebody the power to carry out any decision which may be made, in the face of any opposition. The fatal fault in courts of arbitration established thus far is, that they fail to provide, as the Constitution of the United States does provide, for this ultimate enforcing power. Dr. Hale thought such a court of arbitration would be more certain of ultimate success if it were established by three nations than between two, and still more certain if by four than by three. Quoting Renan: "Justice between two contesting parties has no chance of triumphing. But where there are three contending parties justice has the away, for justice alone can offer them a common ground."

It is clear enough, thinks Dr. Hale, that if any plan of international arbitration could be accompanied with an agreement by the States that become parties to it to unite in a disarmament, the plan would stand still better chances of success. If, for instance, in accepting a central tribunal, they would agree to reduce their standing armies to one-fifth their present size, the plan of arbitration would have five chances of success to one chance otherwise. It is the people, the world over, who want peace. The peculiar good fortune of the current peace movement is that the kings happen to want it likewise. Hence it is the people's duty, as it is also their privilege, to improve the present opportunity, and when the kings again want to play at the game of war they will find that they are not able to.

The proposition offered by Dr. Hale is that the three States of the European continent and the two English-speaking countries of the world should form a court of arbitration for the five. It should be made up of the most experienced statesmen and the jurists of noblest purposes of our time. And it should assemble every season, and with such accompaniments of ceremony as would give it dignity. Even if there were no dispute it should meet, and its members should be scrupulous to magnify their office. And they should supply themselves, privately and publicly, with all the prestige of their great position in procuring the disarmament of the nations composing the alliance.

They would naturally urge and argue, side by side with their prescribed duties, that this world of ours needs no separate armies, but simply one central force large enough to overawe nations, to disarm piracy and rebellion, and in the end to remand public war to the disgrace in which private war, burglary, piracy, and all forms of robbery now belong. The men now trained to arms would gradually take other places of command—in adventure, discovery and invention, and the accoutrement of battle would be prepared far less frequently. The passions of nations would no longer be aroused for a great display of force which ends in the death of one-half of their harvest and the maiming and undermining of the other half. The wealth and zeal now wasted in the destructive work of war and its affiliated arts would be expended in the improvement of man's condition. The union of Europe under the reign of peace, the coöperation of this Western world, and the establishment of perpetual harmony among all nations, is a consummation not more devoutly wished than sure to come, when the law of heaven will control the passions of the earth.

We have been led to revert to the eloquent and practical Thanksgiving sermon of Rev. Dr. Hale, through noticing recently several plans on foot in various parts of this country and Europe looking toward the bringing in of universal peace among the multitudes making up the grand family of man. The latest which has fallen under our notice is an Appeal for the Foundation of a Permanent International Council of Education, which reaches us from Bonn, and which has been issued in seven languages by a Provisional Committee, of which Herm. Molkenboer of that city is Secretary.

This Committee—whose members proclaim in advance that they are not partisans of any particular religious, political or philosophical party—announces as the foundation of the proposed operations of the new Council: "International Unity in Educational Principles"; an effort will be made by this Council, according as its scope and power will allow, "to make the various races and nations acquainted with one another in a spirit of peaceful international approach." The following extract from the document has the true humanitarian ring:

"The most palpable proof of the want of international unity in educational principles is afforded by the 'war-evil,' the masses which kill the masses.

That patriotic disposition which everywhere increases our war-budgets to enormous heights, ought no longer to be used as the highest aim in the education of the young.

It is that patriotic disposition, which up to the present worships brute force, which suppresses really patriotic peaceful principles of education. Many, many schoolbooks (e. g., history), many, many teachers hold fast by the old routine and prefer to nurse the differences between races and nations and the corresponding warlike spirit.

As matters now stand it is not right they should remain a moment longer.

No longer should war-implements be the last resource of the nations!"

Those in America who wish to know more concerning this new enterprise, which seeks by unity of education to do away with the war-spirit, can address Hon. Thomas W. Bicknell, A. M., L.L. D., editor and publisher Journal of Education, Boston, or Rev. Henry S. Clubb, Vice-President Universal Peace Union, 2915 Fairhill street, Philadelphia.

We refer to this novel effort merely as an example of the feeling which is daily spreading among the people, whatever the kings and titled nobles in the Old World, or the ultra conservatives of the New, may think to the contrary; the present venture is but one means toward the great end the importance of which is, under the liberalizing influence of the new condition of things induced since the advent of Modern Spiritualism, forcing itself more and more clearly upon the comprehension of the masses.

What more noble theme can engage the attention of civilized men, and especially when the echoes of Easter (the anniversary of the resurrection day of the Great Prince of Peace) have hardly ceased to reverberate through the lands whose people profess to worship in his name? Why should not such projects as those of Dr. Hale and that of the Council of Bonn, together with others now before the world, receive the hearty coöperation and good wishes of all—especially of those who, as Spiritualists, have read, in a scroll which angel hands have palpably unrolled before this nineteenth century, the grand gospel of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man!

☞ It is recorded that eleven of the disciples of the humble Nazarene stood looking up into the sky as if their Master were there. But he appeared, and said, Why stand ye looking up into heaven? I will return to you in your hearts, I will return to you in memory, I will return to you in life. This is the lesson he taught; and when he does return, in life, as multitudes of other spirits do, the theologians of to-day deny this momentous fact.

Where is Hell?

If we knew, we should not be backward in telling; but neither do we nor does any one know more of its location than of its existence. It is very singular that there are persons so completely infatuated with the conceit of their exact and exclusive knowledge on the subject as to think it their duty to go about haranguing those who will lend them their ears, and assuring them not only of its reality but just where it is situated. We happen to have one such under our notice at this very moment—the Rev. Mr. Peters of Philadelphia, who has gone as far away from home as San Francisco, to tell the inhabitants what Hell is, "considered in the light of common sense." Considered in that light, we should incline to say—what Hell is not, for common sense at once puts it out of the pale of all conceivable possibilities. If Mr. Peters really wants common sense applied to the matter, he will have to let go his hold on what appears to be his darling dogma.

He felt compelled to admit that the subject was not a very pleasant one, nor yet an easy one to accept. He based the necessity for such a place, however, on the fact that mankind has such an ineradicable liking for forbidden things. Very well, say we; shall the Creator of this natural tendency cruelly amuse himself with punishing mankind for merely being the helpless recipients of his own gift? Why should they undergo a penalty that is alleged to have no end for being just what they were made, with no choice about it?

The speaker, however, was willing to concede that the whole subject of hell was presented injudiciously, that is, too vehemently. With that statement we cannot at all agree; for if there is a hell, and it is such a dreadful place as it is depicted, and the human race needs to be scared into goodness by holding its horrors up before them, and the great majority of men are sure to go there in spite of all warnings, in any event—we do not think it possible to present it earnestly enough.

Our Philadelphia minister has a free-and-easy way of arguing his case, especially a case of such immeasurable and inconceivable importance. He would have people accept the hell dogma simply on the ground that the idea of future retribution is a universal one, an affair of tradition among all kinds of people. It is on pretty much the same ground that we are asked to accept the myth of an ancient flood, in which the world was once drowned. When the preachers abandon their direct revelation claim for the existence of a place like hell, they might as well give it up altogether. Revelation is their strong hold. Universal tradition is a game that all sides can play at. The thing must be a revealed fact, or common sense rejects it.

"Where is hell?" asks this clergyman of his San Francisco hearers. And he answers himself, "Anywhere outside of heaven." Easier said than explained. But the one who is so sure that hell does exist somewhere, is of all others the one who ought to locate it with something like precision. To say in a loose way that it is anywhere outside of heaven is to give no information at all on the subject. If God is everywhere, as they are forced to admit, then he is in hell with the rest. It is an evasion to dismiss the question of locality, and go over to the ground of condition, as those persons do who assume that hell is in the breast, and need not be sought for outside of it. Theology must be held strictly to its own dogmas, that have wrought such dire misery for the human race. It has undertaken to create a place of endless torment to which it has given the dread name of hell, and now it is simply asked to tell just where such a place is. "Common sense" people are not willing to let it off so easily as to permit it to skip, when pressed and cornered, from its original base over to the more convenient and easy one of a state of feeling. They will continue to insist on having a full explanation of the old Jonathan Edwards doctrine of a literal, located place of punishment; after which they may go a step further and demand proof that that punishment is to be without end. Next they may call on theology to show how such punishment, under the circumstances, is consistent with boundless love.

Lord Byron, in "Childe Harold," speaks of

"The zealot's ready Hell,
Which answers to all doubts so eloquently well."

He well knew how convenient the term was for shutting up questioners who held theological dogmas in too little reverence.

In his Life of Sterling, Carlyle fairly cries out against the continued sovereignty of superstition, this dogma of hell being the yawning chasm of them all: "Speedy end to Superstition—a gentle one if you can continue it, but an end. What can it profit any mortal to adopt locations and imaginations which do not correspond to fact; which no sane mortal can deliberately adopt in his soul as true; which the most orthodox of mortals can only—and this after infinite essentially impious effort to put out the eyes of his mind—persuade himself to believe that he believes? Away with it; in the name of God, come out of it, all true men!"

Happily for us all, the time is gone by, and let us hope forever, for paying even the slightest tribute of respect to these ancient myths of the older race of men which for centuries have done service as ecclesiastical dogmas transplanted from pagan fields. And if we truly rejoice at the welcome change, we cannot more effectually testify that joy than by doing all we can to spread the light and freedom we possess.

Warren Chase's New Book.

In "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," Mr. Chase gives a very clear and distinct outline of the rise and progress of Modern Spiritualism, with which he has been familiar from the start. It is a book that will be of great use to the future historian of a movement that, in the face of the most bitter opposition, has encircled the globe, and is hourly adding to its millions of adherents, their conviction of its truth being based on an experience that results in a knowledge rather than on faith that is liable to become subject to doubts and misgivings. We shall have more to say of this interesting and instructive volume in an early issue; in the meantime we advise all who would know through what trials and strange vicissitudes one of the early workers of the New Dispensation passed, to secure a copy.

☞ In a report of the meeting of the Progressive Spiritualists in San Francisco, Sunday, March 18th, the Golden Gate says: "Mrs. Maggie Folsom-Butler of Boston was present, and, upon being introduced, spoke of the work and beauties of the Children's Progressive Lyceum in Boston, and earnestly advised action in the same line by every Spiritualist in the land. We agree with her, and think she has struck the key-note to spiritual knowledge."

The Council of Women at Washington.

The much commented on international council of women was in session during nearly the whole of last week in Washington, having finally adjourned at the close of the day on Saturday, the last day of March. A wide variety of topics, political and social, received the consideration of the convention during its continuous sessions, in the form of papers, addresses and speeches. Among the rest, the social evil was discussed, and the remissness of women was justly complained of in not confiding to their children the great secrets and truths of life, in place of suffering them to obtain what knowledge they do obtain from other equally ignorant children and servants. The speaker declared that sons and daughters alike should be taught the awful power of sex, since the construction of the character begins in the very hour of conception.

In answer to the very frequently asked question—what has woman to do with politics? one speaker said that its very discussion had been a splendid education for women. In reference to progeny, it was maintained that a woman should decide when and how often children should be born to her, as she is the molder of their minds and souls as well as of their bodily frames. Men and women are equally responsible for the commission of sexual sin. The dressing for children ought no less to be a moral than a physical covering. One speaker insisted that a wrong done to one was a wrong to all, and that no woman had a right to forgive a man who had done a wrong to another woman. She declared marriage to be, not a mere contract, but an institution of God. A petition was read, to be signed by the women of the Council, urging Congress to pass a bill to raise the age of consent to eighteen years wherever it has absolute control. The Arabs call a pure man "a brother of girls," to typify their best idea of purity. The new day will dawn when woman is not a doll or toy, but is crowned with a heart of love and a brain of fire. The professors in the German universities impress upon the young men the necessity of chastity, if they wish to have a magnificent brain.

Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker spoke on the right of women to vote, under the national constitution, and asserted that the words "the people" showed plainly enough that its framers intended to place women on a perfect equality with men. J. Ellen Foster declared woman to be already in politics, and that the only thing now awaiting a determination was whether she should continue to exert influence in every way except through the ballot-box. The denial of woman's right to vote was declared to be a defiance of the civilization of the nineteenth century. And the assertion was broadly and emphatically made, that the saloon would never go out of the country, to stay out, until women enjoyed the electoral franchise.

Mrs. Everett, representing the Massachusetts School Suffrage Association, said that the Bay State law allowing women to vote on school matters had visibly had a beneficial effect, but that fuller privileges were wanted. Laura M. Johns of Kansas declared that the influence of women on local elections in that State had been only beneficial, and that where women took part in municipal elections the liquor laws were stringently enforced. Mrs. Marble of Minneapolis said she was a suffragist because she wanted better things for her son and daughter than his father and her mother had possessed.

A conference of the pioneers of the cause of woman suffrage was held on the last day, when baskets of flowers, with an eloquent address, were presented to them. And Miss Anthony subsequently included in their number the women pioneers in medicine, theology, temperance, and all movements for woman's advancement. A great many messages of sympathy were sent to the Council. A subsequent meeting adopted a constitution and elected officers for the permanent organization of a national council of women. Frances E. Willard was chosen President. A permanent organization for an international council was likewise agreed upon. A religious symposium was held on Sunday afternoon, and the Council was closed in the evening with an address by Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton.

Decease of Prof. Gunning.

This talented and erudite lecturer and writer on scientific themes passed to spirit-life from Greeley, Col., March 8th, whither he had gone with the hope of obtaining relief from consumption.

Prof. W. D. Gunning was born in Bloomingburg, O., in 1830, and was a graduate of Oberlin, adding to the gifts of his alma mater by courses in comparative anatomy in the New York College, and biology under Prof. Agassiz at Harvard University. His services as a lecturer were of recognized value, and his name was a familiar one among the writers on liberal thought as applied to ethnologic, geologic and other topics.

To Prof. Gunning THE BANNER is indebted for one of the most pointed and irrefutable verifications of the spirit messages published regularly on its sixth page, which has ever yet fallen under its notice—the nature of which is here related: Some time previous to the year of the great fire (1872) which consumed so valuable a portion of Boston, and spared not our office (then at 158 Washington street) in the general wreck, Prof. Gunning called on us, and expressed at one and the same time his marked interest in the subject of the possible intercommunication between the seen and the invisible states of being, and his grave doubts as to the personality behind the words sent out weekly in our columns under the heading of the "Message Department." He wished to obtain personal assurance from us that we really felt convinced that the matter in question was veracious and reliable. We assured him that the subject he treated was not a matter of belief to us, but one of knowledge born of long and repeated experience in the way of testimony received by us from parties yet in the mortal who saw and recognized the words of their returning loved ones; we also narrated to him other facts of spirit communion in the same direction which appealed particularly to our own case individually.

He was evidently much impressed by the conversation, and as he prepared to go, he said, (in effect): "In this number of your paper you print a message from a spirit who claims residence in a certain locality in Scotland, and gives his name, and the street and number, as additional evidence in proof of his personality. I am about going to London; I will cut out this message, and carry it with me; I shall make it a point to call at the address which that spirit gives, and shall make all the inquiries possible with a view of obtaining the truth. If I find the message correct I will so inform you; but if, on the contrary, it proves false, I shall not fail to denounce it, and also the practice of putting such matter before the reading public."

We replied that we had no fears of the result; and the outcome proved that our confidence was (as we well knew it would be) well founded; for on his return to America Prof. Gunning called on us again, stating that he found the address given, and, on the door being opened by a middle-aged lady, he asked for the name claimed by the spirit. The lady said that such a person once lived there, adding, "But he is now dead, and I am his widow." Prof. Gunning then asked her to read the slip which he had brought, upon doing which she expressed much surprise, and asked where he had obtained it. "From the BANNER OF LIGHT, a Spiritualist paper published in America," he replied. She remarked that she could not account for its production (she being a Roman Catholic in belief), but that the communication so strongly resembled—in language and expression—her husband's usual manner of conveying his ideas, that if he were alive she should certainly think he had written it himself. Prof. Gunning at once proceeded to submit her, for his own personal conviction, to a rigid cross-examination as to whether herself or her husband had relatives or friends in America, whether she was in correspondence with any one there, or whether she thought it possible that some one else in the place might have written to the parties who published the message in Boston; to all which queries she returned a decided negative. Prof. Gunning retired from her presence feeling that he had received proof, of no common order, of the verity of spirit communion; and assured us that since that time he had been a silent investigator, and was convinced beyond question of the power of decarnated spirits to demonstrate to mortals, under proper conditions, the continuity of conscious life for humanity beyond the change (mis)called death.

The Fortieth Anniversary

Of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism has been worthily welcomed in many portions of America and Europe, and the BANNER OF LIGHT will, as has been its wont in years past, devote a large portion of its space for several weeks to come in making its many readers conversant with what was said and done on this momentous occasion by good friends of the movement who, while assembling in widely separated localities, were instinct with the same feeling of grateful love to the angels for the gift so kindly bestowed by them upon a world of yearning hearts two score years ago.

By reference to our eighth page reports will be found of meetings held in BOSTON, NEW YORK CITY, and SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

To the meeting in CLEVELAND, O., Messrs. Colby & Rich sent the following telegram—which received the reply appended:

To Thomas Lees, Memorial Hall, 170 Superior street, Cleveland, Ohio:
The BANNER OF LIGHT sends greeting to the Spiritualists of the West. Our halls are crowded, and much enthusiasm is manifest on this the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism. COLBY & RICH.
Boston, Mass.

REPLY DISPATCH.

The Present Condition

Of Miss Mollie Fancher, of Brooklyn, N. Y.—the stricken but gifted invalid whose singular experiences, psychic and otherwise, have often been adverted to in THE BANNER columns—is thus graphically set forth by "Eleanor Kirk" in a recent letter to the Cape Ann Advertiser:

"To see this beautiful woman, as she reclined upon her pillow, her blonde hair curled all over her shapely head, her complexion as fair as an infant's, and like an infant's just touched with pinkiness, no one would suppose her ill. Her eyes are closed, and she is blind, but she can read and write and embroider, and match the most trying shades with an exactitude unknown to physical sight. But to tell of her remarkable clairvoyance would take more space than I have allotted me. Miss Fancher is bright and witty, and between her paroxyms of pain is always cheerful and considerate. Since the accident, which occurred a year ago, when, having a head-rest or some mechanical device arranged for her comfort, she fell from her couch, the invalid has been again subject to trances. In these she rests, but I believe that natural sleep is entirely denied her. And so she waits and prays for deliverance."

"Our friend, Mr. A. E. Newton, takes some exception to an editorial remark, prefacing a citation from the BANNER OF LIGHT of Mr. Brackett's experience in materialization with the Berry Sisters. We made what Mr. Newton calls a 'somewhat dubious remark,' on this wise: 'If his observation be correct it points to a new development.' Now we have striven always to give our readers the benefit of Mr. Brackett's excellent testimony to his observation of materialization, and we should not have done that if we judged it faulty. We intended in what we said nothing beyond this—a phenomenon so new and rare should be observed more than once before we are to assume that the observation is precise. Mr. Newton confirms Mr. Brackett, and adds that the séance 'was full of puzzling surprises to myself and apparently to others.' Now, Mr. Newton, is it not you who are 'somewhat dubious'?"

We may add for the information of our English contemporary and others, that the séance alluded to by Mr. Newton was not the one at which the phenomenon described by Mr. Brackett took place, but one held several weeks subsequent, and at which Mr. Brackett was also present. Further, that a friend of ours, who has attended a number of séances of the Berry Sisters of late, says that at each of them the same phenomenon—that of a spirit slowly assuming visible form at the top and in front of the cabinet—has occurred. It is, therefore, right not only "to assume that the observation is precise," but to claim, so far as human observation can be, that it is so.

☞ Out of the rubbish heap of topics which Mr. Joseph Cook disposes of every Monday with such flippant profundity and patronizing wisdom, we pull that of the Sunday newspaper, which he discusses before his hearers in his usual manner. He asserts that behind the Sunday papers stand the drinking saloon, the gambling den and the brothel; while he charges those who publish them with holding down the noses of printers to the grindstone by their grasping avarice. He should be the last one to complain if not the Sunday press alone but the entire press came forward and knouted his bare back until he took back the vile insinuation. If it is "Sunday work" that affects him in this manner, let him deliver his curses at the papers issued on Monday morning, the (to him) sacred day of his nondescript lectures.

☞ An exchange gets at a popular weakness in this manner: "Think twice before you believe every evil story that you hear, and think twenty times before you repeat it, especially if it is about a woman."

"THE SOUL."—Prof. Henry Kiddle contributes the principal paper, its subject being "The Spiritual Movement." In it he alludes to its inception, to facts all along the path of previous history, foreshadowing its coming, and remarks that to cause it to be of practical benefit to mankind it should become dispossessed of selfishness, a love of the marvelous, dogmatism, arrogance, unreasonable skepticism, and a self-opinionated intellectualism. Dr. Wellington relates a very interesting experience with Charles H. Foster, resulting in a conviction of immortality in one who had reached the age of seventy-two and had "never believed in God or a future life." Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, Dr. George Dutton, and "Kit Clover" furnish instructive articles, and a translation from the German by Mrs. Dawley supplies "A Well-Authenticated Example of Telepathy."

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN. — The opening article is a consideration of the interrogatory, "Are we in the sunlight of a new day, or is it the early dawn?" experiences with psychography being given to aid in a solution of the problem. A characteristic letter is given from Luther R. Marsh, Esq., of New York, describing seventy-five paintings in oil received by him, most of which were produced in his presence without human touch; introducing which Dr. Buchanan relates similar experiences, including a painting upon a card placed between two slates held in his own hands, the medium being six feet distant. The time occupied did not exceed one minute, and it required a month for the oil to dry. Under the headings "Progress of the Marvelous," "Progress of Women," etc., many interesting items of intelligence are given. Boston: 6 James street.

☞ A court of justice in St. Louis, Mo., on a recent occasion, as it appears from accounts given in the papers of that city, resolved itself for the time being into a council of religious inquisition. The case on trial was one in which it was to be decided whether the custody of children should be assigned to the wife or husband. Mary Duff being on the witness stand, the opposing counsel endeavored to impeach her credibility after ascertaining that she was a Spiritualist! The witness was finally allowed, however, to testify. The most singular part of these proceedings was that such interrogations were in total violation of the constitution of the State, yet were permitted by the Court.

☞ Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten was to deliver an address Sunday, April 1st, at the Holborn Town Hall, London, on "The Origin and Spirit of Easter (and) The 31st of March, 1848, a new era in Human History."

The remark made by one of the fair speakers at the Woman's Convention, Washington, that editors are the nicest men on the face of the earth, is one upon which it may not seem good taste to comment. The structure which has just been swept away has been more commonly known as the "Minute Man" bridge, from the fact that just beyond it is French's famous bronze statue of the minute man.

FORTY YEARS

SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM.

BY WARREN CHASE.

A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE," AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS

The World's Child,

WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work.

Peptonix.

DIGESTIVE TABLETS,

The Great English Remedy for

DYSPEPSIA
INDIGESTION.

There is no doubt that the medical fraternity are amply justified in deprecating and opposing the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, or, indeed, of any unscientific method of treating disease. But it must be admitted that there are remedies that are of necessity classed under this head, which, by their intrinsic value, have compelled the adhesion of scientific men, and through years of success have established a public favor. Some of them are the result of many years of experiment and study by eminent physicians, and are placed in the hands of chemists to manufacture, as they could not be produced on a scale large enough to reach the general public except by this means.

Twenty-five years ago an eminent London physician, possessing a wide practice, alike among titled nobility and in the homes of the humbler classes, was startled by the alarming prevalence and growth of those annoying and dangerous maladies—Dyspepsia and Indigestion. These diseases yielding only temporarily to the best-known remedies, he was led, after careful research and investigation, to a long series of experiments, which, after many failures, rewarded his patience and skill with the discovery of a stomachic which not only relieved but CURED these distressing derangements of the digestive organs.

The chronic case of dyspepsia, by careful and continued treatment, has yielded as surely to its influence as the ordinary case of indigestion. The physician employed it in his private practice with great success, and within a few years the demand for the preparation became so great that the formula was placed in the hands of a chemist, who made it a regular article of manufacture and trade, and since that day thousands of suffering individuals have found relief by its use. This preparation was Peptonix.

The great success of Peptonix in England led to their importation by the Allston Co. about five years ago, and at the beginning of the current year this Company commenced their manufacture in Boston. Since that time the demand has grown so rapidly that they have been compelled to largely increase their capacity, and it has been with the greatest difficulty that they have filled their orders. Hundreds of boxes are being sold daily, and Peptonix are rapidly growing in popularity. They are warmly commended on all sides by well-known people who have used them. Peptonix are bound to surpass every article now before the public for the relief of Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Heartburn, Acid Stomach, Waterbrash and other gastric troubles. They are extremely pleasant to the taste and quick in action. One tablet will usually relieve the most severe distress in a few moments, and perseverance in their use has never failed to effect a permanent cure. They contain nothing injurious, and can be taken with perfect safety by invalids and delicate children.

The class of testimonials which we offer are a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of Peptonix. No proprietary remedy in the world ever received such endorsements. Give them a trial and find out for yourself. The experiment costs but little, and we will guarantee that you will receive a thousand dollars' worth of comfort from the use of one box.

The Allston Company:

Gentlemen—The Peptonix kindly furnished me by a friend have been thoroughly tested, and I have experienced such delightful relief by their use from the dyspepsia which has long afflicted me that I write to commend them to any with a like trouble. I have not known them to fail in a single instance of affording immediate relief, and I carry them constantly with me to use in case of need. Besides, they are very pleasant to the taste. I should cordially recommend them to all persons who are suffering from indigestion in its temporary or more permanent form.

A SURE CURE FOR

DYSPEPSIA.

OLIVER N. LAWRENCE, of Boston, says:

"Ten years ago I began to have considerable difficulty with my stomach. I could not eat heartily without being distressed afterward. This indigestion gradually developed into dyspepsia in its severest form, and for nearly seven years I lived on a little fruit, the juice of steak and Graham cakes, with hot water for drink. I tried a number of remedies and the prescriptions of several physicians in vain. My general health was much impaired and my case seemed hopeless, when a friend gave me a box of your tablets. I began to improve at once, and now, after using four boxes, I am able to eat almost anything without ill effects, and am improving every day. Heaven bless the man who invented 'Peptonix.' All the world ought to know about them."

From GEN. JNO. M. CORSE, Postmaster of Boston.

The Allston Company:

Gentlemen—I think that Peptonix are the best things of the kind that I ever saw. Yours truly,
JNO. M. CORSE.

From MAJ. GEO. S. MERRILL, Insurance Commissioner of Mass.

The Allston Company, Boston:

Gentlemen—I have of late been troubled with indigestion, trying various remedies, with little effect. Somewhat skeptically I experimented with Peptonix, and to my grateful surprise found them entirely efficacious, invariably relieving the annoying malady, not once failing to accomplish just what you promised for them. They are pleasant to the taste, and, what is better, sure in results. Very truly yours,
GEO. S. MERRILL.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 7th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! most tender and loving Father, we offer gratitude and praise to thee for all thy gifts of beautiful life. We acknowledge thy power, and bow down before the justice of thy law. We pray that the time be not far distant when thy human children will understand more clearly thy law, and strive to work in accordance with the same. May each one be illumined by some divine power that will quicken the spirit within, that we may more clearly see and understand lessons of thy laws. We offer thee the gratitude of our souls, recognizing that without thee we are as nothing, even less than the grains of sand.

Oh! our God, may we know and realize our responsibility to ourselves and to each other, and our relationship to thee. May we advance higher and higher in aspiration, in thought, in noble effort, until we shall be deemed worthy to mingle with the angels of heaven, fulfilling thy law, and helping to bring peace on earth and good will unto every heart.

Father Cleveland.

Mr. Chairman, I have been respectfully and cordially invited to do the work here of the hour, by your Spirit-President. I come not for the gratification of any personal wish, or, indeed, to partake of this feast of spiritual influence and magnetic sympathy which I find spread before me, but to assist, if possible, such spirits as I have brought hither, in gaining an understanding of their own spiritual natures and of the new life which they have entered upon.

In times past, my friend, I have had the privilege and pleasure of addressing you through this instrument, in the line of my chosen and especial work; and at such times I have presented to you various spirits whom I brought here seeking enlightenment. Such souls have come, repeating their story, leaving their burden of woe with you, and gaining a new impetus, through their experience, to rise somewhat in the scale of moral or spiritual life in the other world.

To-day I have brought a little band of such spirits, but I do not find it necessary for them to take separate control of this instrument and make themselves known to the world. I find here to-day favorable conditions for their helpfulness, because there is going out from the band of spirits centred on this platform, and also from the harmonious assembly of mortals before me, a magnetic atmosphere of sympathy and kind feeling which I discover is just what is needed by these poor, forlorn spirits of whom I speak. They are here at this moment, bathing in that atmosphere and receiving its soothing influence into their lives. It will assist them especially, as I find several parties in the audience who are strongly mediumistic and at this time serve as a battery of strength to one or more of those spirits.

I look upon this place as something more than an avenue of communication between the two worlds. I have considered it for many years to be something of a school of reform, or of especial enlightenment for such unhappy spirits as are in need of strength, assistance or magnetic support. And while I have been more than pleased at the grand work your various mediums and others have performed in this establishment in sending forth intelligent communications to the world at large, I have also been highly gratified at the results I have noticed on the spiritual side of life, unseen and unknown by mortals, to those unhappy or undeveloped spirits who have been brought to this place seeking enlightenment, magnetic strength, or some other healthful support.

These spirits have learned their lessons. Some of them have been brought, month in and month out, to watch the proceedings at this place, not only of those spirits who attempt to communicate, but of the band of beneficent spirits who are here for wise and good purposes. They have been obliged to mingle with the atmosphere of your office from time to time, and as they could take in and assimilate with their lives something of its elements, they found it necessary to part with elements more crude and less spiritualizing which had possessed them; and so they have in turn learned their lessons, gained their experience, and passed outward, while their places have been taken by others.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, I feel that a work of great importance, unconsidered by the public—and indeed perhaps it is no concern of theirs—has been taking place here from year to year, as well as in other places, where we find harmonious conditions and an earnest desire to do good. I am ready always to raise my voice in hearty sympathy with this work; and in returning to day I not only bring my blessing to all who remember me, but I feel as though a benediction of love passed out from my heart unto all mankind. I bring a word of cheer to the hopeless, one of encouragement to the sad. Especially to every soul that is trying to do its best do I say: Keep on, falter not; although the way may seem rugged and the clouds heavy you are sustained and will be protected by a mighty, a divine power. Beyond the shadows the sunlight forever streams; beyond the rugged pathway is a smooth one, lined with pleasant flowers, and leading to still waters of peace and consolation.

Mr. Chairman, I am your old friend Father Cleveland—Charles Cleveland—of this city, and I will listen to whatever questions you have to offer.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[By S. W. K.] Is it wrong for one to exclude himself from general society if from that to which he has access he derives neither pleasure nor benefit?

ANS.—Certainly not. This is a question that every mind should answer for itself—at least we should desire to form our own judgment, and regulate our own conduct in such a matter; but the party who thus desires to exclude himself from society because he may not derive any personal benefit or pleasure by mingling with the outside world, should ask of himself is he pursuing the right course by so excluding himself? Is there not something higher for him to consider than his own personal gratification and benefit? May he not, by mingling with the outside world, impart something of information, comfort or pleasure to some other human soul who moves in the world's circles? And if he can do this, then it is simply his duty to put aside the thought of self alone, and at times, at least, to mingle with the world for the world's benefit. But if the man is so very deficient in mental knowledge, or in that which may be imparted in pleasant ways to his fellows, that he cannot possibly add anything to the enjoyment of his neighbors or associates, and if he be in such a condition that he can neither derive benefit or pleasure from their companionship, nor impart anything of instruction or helpfulness to his kind, then it would be simply his duty to exclude himself and seek such means of self-growth and development as will bring out the hidden powers of his nature until they are in such a condition of unfoldment as will allow him to afford comfort, instruction, pleasure or happiness of some kind to the world and the world's people.

Q.—To attain proficiency in the arts or in scientific pursuits, is the same or an approximate degree of arduous toil and study necessary in spirit-life as upon this plane of existence? If not, how is the power acquired?

A.—The spirit passing from these surroundings and the limitations of physical life will very shortly, if it is aspirational by nature, studious in mind, and possesses any development of the thinking faculties, find itself gaining in what we may call spiritual expansion; that is, the inner powers of the man become increased, so to speak, the vitality is greater, and the perceptions belonging to the individual are enlarged. It will not be long, if he is progressive, before he finds himself able to understand more clearly things and studies which in the past, while on earth, seemed obscure to him. He is obliged to use his reasoning faculties most certainly, for the man in spirit-life, as on earth, who allows his reasoning faculties, his mental nature, to fall asleep, will not soon gain any increased power to develop in mental quality; but we will say, the spirit makes use of these mental faculties of his, and, reasoning upon things around him, he forms his own judgment, and is ready at all times to listen patiently and with tolerance to the opinions of others; in short, he tries to make the best of that which is within him; then he speedily finds that his perceptions are increasing, and he sees more clearly into any subject that presents itself to his mind, and is never wanting for teachers to guide his thought or suggest new ideas to his mind and assist him in the development of his inner nature. Therefore while one may perhaps study as closely any art or science, or any intellectual pursuit which attracts his attention, as when on earth, yet the results of his studies, the close application of his mind, will be far in advance of the results which came to him when he was surrounded by these physical conditions of yours, and he will find himself gaining immeasurably, not only in insight, but in the power of expression.

Your question, Mr. Chairman, speaks of the artist who desires to gain in knowledge and in the power of expression in his own particular line of art. The artist, in passing from the body, is not satisfied with what he has accomplished; he has never reached the height of his ambition, nor has he ever expressed the idea which is within his soul. At first he may be really discouraged on passing from the body, and feel that it is of no use for him to try to express his thought or to cultivate his powers; but in a little while, when the clouds emerging from the physical life have dispersed, and he finds himself surrounded by a vast company of men and women, all doing their best for the expansion of their soul powers, the development of their personal gifts, and the expansion of that which is within, he seems to gain power from the contact, and a new impetus is given him to try and persevere, and he springs up in thought and action. Then are opened avenues which he may trace and through which he may gain instruction; the law of nature is outlined to him, and he comes en rapport with the higher minds of artistic life, who are drawn into the same work which attracts his soul; and, gazing upon and coming in contact with their lives, he breathes in the atmosphere surrounding them and finds his soul-perceptions expanding with every breath.

Can you not understand, then, how he learns, and how he gains power to put into his brush the genius of execution, and the fire of his spirit is communicated to his work, which glows with grander beauty and embodies a loftier theme than it could have done while he was environed with the things of earthly life? The questioner may believe that in the higher grades of existence more of opportunity, more of power, more of possibility is afforded to the soul as it advances; each successive grade of existence and plane of experience widens out, in all that is for the good of the spirit that presses forward.

Q.—Does not an intense hatred or dislike, existing in the mind of an individual for another, even though the feeling is entirely concealed, have an unpleasant or depressing effect upon the one for whom the dislike is entertained, although the latter may be in no way merited?

A.—Yes; thought is substance. You who come to look upon the meaning of the word substance as something material, something that appeals to your objective sight, will scout this idea; but if you remember that substance means that which is underlying, you will learn that really a thing that is substantial, formed of substance, is that which belongs to the spirit that underlies and permeates objective things, and may indeed be the life of those objective things. Thought is a substance; it has an active, potent power which may be more keenly felt than these objective forms when hurled against a sensitive person.

You are all thinking minds, and you send forth thought in all directions day after day. When you think kindly of your brothers and sisters, lovingly wishing for their highest welfare, it matters not whether they are close at your side or at a distant place, those brothers and sisters will feel a wave of something entering into their lives; they know not from whence it comes, but it is uplifting, and makes them feel buoyant and at peace with the world. Presently, operating as this wave of thought must do in its own proper channel, as it enters the mind and surroundings and lives of these brothers and sisters of whom you kindly think, there goes forth from them a corresponding wave of pleasantness and of affection, which in turn will find its way to your lives and to the lives of other men and women, and be uplifting in its character.

So, on the other hand, if you think a hateful thought, one of distrust and dislike of any individual, a wave goes forth again from your lives that is not like a light glowing with beauty, as was the first; it is dark, dense, and weighted with earthly elements; it finds its way through its own legitimate channel to the destination toward which it was hurled; and this wave of corroded thought strikes against the atmosphere, and mingles with the one to whom it was sent. Can you not believe that this is true, that the wave of thought, cold and corroded, will indeed bring unhappiness, and perhaps even misfortune, to the life of that one for whom it was intended?

This is most certainly so, although it is a truth that the more sensitive the delicate heart and mind of that one whom you dislike, the more forcibly will he be affected in an unpleasant manner by the baleful breath of thought; and the more positive he be, the more undaunted in his attitude toward the world, the more ready to wage war against the evils of life or the things that assail him, the less unpleasantly will he be affected by that javelin of thought. None the less will it reach his life and have some operation upon his mind and upon his outward circumstances; therefore one should be very particular not to generate baleful thoughts or encourage the attributes of envy, of slander, of discord within the heart, for they will most certainly bear unpleasant results to the lives of others.

But let us ask another question in relation to this subject. If the wave of thought that is baleful and distrustful unhappily affects the one to whom it is sent, does it not also adversely affect the life of him who gives it forth? Yes, it must do so, because there is ever a rebound of thought to the heart that sends it forth.

The brother or sister who is kindly cared for and beloved, in receiving your pleasant thought is made happier, more sunny in disposition, more loving because of it, and generates a like wave of thought and pleasantness, which flows back to you, while at the same time there returns to its source a portion of that same wave which you sent forth. Even as the waters that flow from the distant shore to the nearest boundary, washing over the sands, doing their work, recede, and again flow back to the shore from whence they came, so will this wave of thought that is unpleasant return to you again with its baleful power, having an unhappy, depressing effect upon your own life, as will, per contra, the pleasant, beautiful atmosphere that you send forth in blessing to your friends and the world at large, return freighted with new elements of power and beauty, with grandeur to overcharge and uplift your life.

Q.—[By I. H. H.] When a demented person passes from earth-life to spirit-life, does he or she become rational immediately after passing over?

A.—Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I think I can speak in the first person on that subject. Not that I was demented, but I have come in contact with many spirits who were thus unfortunately situated when on earth, and have seen various conditions coming to them after they passed from the body. It has been my privilege to receive from the spirit-world many unfortunate ones who have passed out under the influence of some of your insane asylums, and I have given careful attention to their state of mind and general condition. I will take, for instance, one—a young man to whom I was attracted because of some element in his nature, I hardly know what, before he passed from the body: His had been a promising boyhood; he seemed to be endowed with mental activity and with bright moral qualities; his parents and friends were proud of his ability and precociousness, and being not overwise, urged the child on to his utmost limits. They did not check his aspirational demands for knowledge, but bought him books and works of scientific art, and provided him with instructors, and, being influential and moneyed people, engaged for him all the advantages which they felt he should have. What was the result? By the time he had reached the age of nineteen his mental powers began to wane, the physical was debilitated and disorder set in. Two years after, when he should have stepped forth upon the world's platform a finished scholar, and ready to enter into the battle of life well equipped, he was found to be a hopeless mental wreck. All that skill could do was provided for that young man, and yet so thoroughly had his physical frame become disorganized, so rapidly had his nervous forces been exhausted under the great strain borne upon him, that the skill of the physician could not do him any good. For years he lived in a hopeless state of insanity; he was not violent or dangerous to any degree, but melancholy had marked him for its own.

By-and-bye the physical powers waned to such a degree as to allow the spirit to loosen its hold on the body, and it passed from earth. It was my privilege to receive this young man and to convey him to what I may call a sanitarium in the spirit-world, where he might gain the repose he required. At first the spirit did not seem bright, nor did he take especial notice of his surroundings. We only surrounded him with pleasant forms and beautiful objects. Large fields where flowers were growing, filled with the beauties of nature, attracted his gaze, and he began to study the blossoms and the little objects around him that appealed to his fancy. Then he took a new interest in life. We watched him closely, and found him putting forth new efforts to think and to remember. Still, we gave him no especial guardianship, no such training as a physician might give, only helpful magnetism; and in a comparatively short time that man, who had been a hopeless wreck, and had gained the age of thirty-eight years before he passed from life, but had known nothing of the earth and its interests from his nineteenth year, had regained his mental faculty, grown strong and buovant in spirit, happy in disposition, and become really an ornament to that life which he had now entered upon. He is now a working spirit, active and intelligent, doing his work and trying to assist such unfortunates as he was ere he left the body.

This is only one instance. I might still enumerate many, each one of which varied from the other. You may see that, by giving proper conditions and removing the cause of the evil, one who has been demented on earth, because of outward circumstances and a great pressure borne upon the brain and mind, may be speedily restored to a healthful state on entering the spirit life.

I have seen others who are not so soon restored. There was, for instance, a poor woman who, through the untoward circumstances of life, became very depressed in mind; her children were not surrounded by those conditions which she desired for them, and, unhappily, her oldest boy fell into evil companionship. We will not follow his course, but it was a downward one, and by and-bye he committed an act which lodged him in a felon's cell, to which he was condemned for many years. The poor woman, struggling with the adversities of life, tried to do her best, but after a while she succumbed to an overwhelming force and became a hopeless maniac.

Time passed, and she went to the spirit-world. She realized her condition then, but did not recover herself as fully as did the first spirit mentioned, because her boy was still in durance; he was surrounded by those terrible conditions which annoyed her and troubled her heart, and she was over-anxious, a great mental strain still pressed upon her. Not only this, but there were others of her family claiming her attention; they were unhappy and unfortunate, and she was anxious over their fate. Because of this mental anxiety she could not recover the full strength of her reasoning faculties; could not find that health and happiness which belonged to her by right. But the time did come when the cause of the evil was removed; the boy in prison had passed to the spirit-world, unhappy it is true, yet under the supervision and care of good spirits who wished to assist and make him better.

Her other children gained new experiences and rose to better conditions, and then the poor woman began gradually to return to health and strength of mind and spirit. There were those who ministered to her needs, and under the direct ministration of the angel-world she at last was restored to all she had been deprived of, and is now an intelligent spirit, doing her work the best she can, with the help of the higher powers.

Q.—[By John F. Bassett, Wilmington, Vt.] Have spirit and matter always existed coëxtensively, or is one the outgrowth of the other?

A.—This question, Mr. Chairman, might appeal more to an infinite mind for response than to finite thought, for we might differ upon the subject. It would seem as if spirit always required an avenue for its expression, and that matter must have existed in some form through all the ages. It would seem as though this matter of which we speak is but the servant of the spirit, and that it may be molded over into many forms, into infinite expression, serving wise purposes through age after age. The elements that combine to make up matter must belong to the spirit, must have ever existed, and probably will ever exist; but so filled are they with potency that they may be combined and re-combined, disassociated and disorganized, to appear in new combinations and express themselves in new forms. Infinite is the power of spirit, operating through and with matter constantly.

Without spirit, we say, there could be no matter. The question may arise: Can there be spirit without matter? And here we enter upon a field of subtle inquiry. If you admit that all the essential part of matter is the outcome of the spiritual universe, and belongs to it, then will we say: No, spirit does not exist without matter. But if you claim for matter only those crude elements and particles that belong to the earth earthy, that are physical by nature, then we say, spirit may exist, and exist eternally, without these crude material elements of yours, for spirit is all powerful, and it undoubtedly can manifest itself, act its part and do its work without depending altogether upon these cruder forms which you claim belong to objective life.

It is true we can trace the history of life back through many ages, and as the world of thought advances it may extend its vision back indefinitely, counting up the ages and the æons of experience that are past, but never yet do we come to one age when matter was not. Human thought cannot understand such a state, for even if your scientists trace the condition of the universe back to a state of nebulous ether, still will it be claimed that this nebulous ether is, to an extent, material; that it must serve as a vehicle of infinite light; therefore it may properly be called a state or stage of matter. Thus we may not extend our thought into the infinite realm and ask what is there, because the finite mind will not hold these problems; nor can it, at the present stage of the world's growth, weigh and understand these things, which belong to the Infinite Mind alone to unravel and reveal.

Controlling Spirit.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, before I take my leave, that I am strongly attracted to a lady who sits just in front of me, who is seeking advice or influence from the unseen world. I see that the child is caught up into an atmosphere of spiritual magnetism, and that an influx of power comes to her at times from a band of spirits who are anxious to develop instrumentalities for their work in various parts of the country. I feel in sympathy with such work as this band of spirits have in charge, and also in sympathy with the aspirational desires of any mediumistic soul who wishes to be brought into harmony with that work for the good of humanity, and I am impelled to say it seems to me that you will gain influence and be brought under the spiritual instruction that you desire.

This is a thing of slow progress, and the more patiently and perseveringly one follows a line of improvement, the more lasting and sure will be the results. It may not be for many months that a full, clear explanation of what is desired will be given to you; but it matters not; those who have the work in charge know what they wish to do; they are trying to adapt means to ends, and as they bring an impression to your mind, or seek to voice a suggestion through your instrumentality, give heed to what is brought to you, obey the voice, or the monition of the spirit, and you will be strengthened accordingly.

It matters not whether the spirits come to you in the name of a great person, or as humble individuals; it is not names we seek, it is labor, it is the result of work; and therefore, child, if one comes, humble or exalted, place not dependence so much upon the name that is claimed as upon the advice, the instruction or the enlightenment that is given. Those highest in power in the spirit-world, I find, seldom make known their personality to earth's people; they use their influence and their magnetic power for a special work. Sometimes it is necessary for one who comes for spiritual work to give a name by which he was known on earth, but he will not place much stress on that; he will simply mention it for the purpose which is needed, paying more attention to the thought which he desires to unfold, or the work he seeks to accomplish.

Mr. Chairman, you will pardon my coming to day, for I feel that my poor pupils in spirit-life, who are with me, are gaining good by the afternoon's experience, and that is everything to me.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held March 2d, 1888.

Susan E. Marsh.

I lived in Hingham, Mass. As others have come to this place that they might send out a few words to loved ones dwelling in the mortal, I have felt many times as I have come into your room that I would try and do so, but have always failed until to day. I often felt while on earth that the spirit went on to the Father in Heaven. But, mortals, where is heaven? But one step from you to us! How little do you know, while walking here on the earth, how near we are to you, so near we can lay the gentle hand upon you, and still you know it not. I have thought, as I have seen one and another speaking a few words of comfort to some loved one on earth, why could not Susan E. Marsh do the same? Hannah said to me once that she had spoken, and felt better for so doing.

To day I have been passing around this room, and at last have found an avenue open. I will say to William and to Mary that we are not dead, but alive, and able to communicate with them, if they only do their part. Our dear mother, a long time ago, with folded hands across the breast, left her earthly home; and little did we know then that we should come all together, and know as we are known, although now, as long as I have been an indweller in the spirit-life, I think I should have been rather a poor scholar if I had not learned something. In the earth-life it is termed advancement, but in the spirit life it means progression, by learning all we can. If you do not learn on this side of life, you must learn on the other.

Nancy Houghton.

I find, by drifting into this room, we can send a few crumbs of comfort to our loved ones. I passed out in Haverhill, Mass. I have been gone from the mortal, as near as I can count it, almost twelve months.

Oh! children, do not think your mother is dead. No; only changed from the mortal to the immortal. I have a dear son Herbert in Haverhill, and Cromwell in Lynn, and Eddie in Warner, N. H. Oh! do try, children, to feel that mother is not dead. I know, dear Herbert, that you have been trying to learn a little, and that little has helped you a great deal thus far, and I know the words that you have spoken to brother Cromwell, in Lynn, that mother really lives; and, Herbert, if mother lives, father and darling sister also live.

My name is Nancy Houghton. Father is with me, George Houghton, and my darling daughter, Amaretta, also. Herbert has many times said: "Oh! mother, it's too bad you could not open the right hand." But, Herbert, God gave me a new body, and I've got perfect hands now. Dear child, I am often with you in your work and in your little cozy room, and as I look around many things remind me of home, when we were together. I have seen you come into the room when you have been able to hear some little sounds, and would turn the listening ear aside and look so earnestly and say, down deep in your soul: "Mother, is this you?" Quickly this response would come to your own spirit: "Yes, Herbie, it is mother." Amaretta is with me much of the time.

Well do you remember, dear boy, that a long time since the angel-usher came and took the darling sister—all there ever was; but in heaven you have the sister awaiting your coming, dear children; and mother often sends forth an earnest petition for the guardianship of the angels, so you may be able to walk hand-in-hand with them, and feel an influence from them that will spiritualize your own existence here. Dear children, the dearest name to you is mother; but remember, I will keep a vigilant watch over each one, for I love you all, and my prayer shall be that we meet again and know as we are known in heaven, where no partings come.

Harry Crummet.

My home was in Hyde Park, Mass. Mamma and papa don't open the door that you do. Sister Lena knows I am not dead. I am Harry Crummet. I know that the people don't think me dead, if papa does. Mamma, I want you not to forget the 14th of March, for I shall be there so I can talk straight to you—you know where. I suppose if I said this to papa he'd say he would rather see me. Well, he can't see me, because he aint got eyes sharp enough.

I want mother to know that I don't forget it, because I set it down right there [pointing to the forehead] in figures: "March 14th." I guess she knows what that means. I am looking forward to the time just as much as she is, and I guess I'll get as good a time out of it as she does.

I want to tell father that if he don't get the scales off his eyes here, grandma says he will have to do it when he gets to our side, and father don't know when that will be, by any means. But, mamma, the doctor said it was all right on the paper; but you almost forgot it, did n't you?

Harrison Fuller.

I guess there's room enough now. I took considerable room when I was in the mortal form, but I find I don't take quite as much now. I hail from Lowell. You may put me down as Harrison Fuller. I had a little something to do for the city, and I suppose they called me a "guardian of the peace"; but I did n't bring the billy along with me, for I guess I shan't need it here.

I want to tell Arvilla and Emma not to shut their doors so close; if they do, I don't hardly know but I shall have to bring the billy along with me. Charlie is with me now, and I often see some of the old townspeople. I suppose I ought to say city, now, for they won't hardly think it complimentary to call it the town of Lowell.

I see also here Hannah and Mary, Sarah, Daniel, Walter, and a good many others. Well, if I should begin to call them all I should have to stay all night. I am glad, Helen, there is one who has opened the door a little way.

I used often to hear them speak of Spiritualism among ourselves—when walking back and forth on our beats—but I felt this way, that if one returned to earth, another would; if one did, Harrison Fuller would; and I found I came to the right conclusion. It makes very little difference what your occupation is here, or what the creeds and dogmas of the day may be, I find that spirit is all there is, anyway. The covering of the body is like an old coat; we shed it and take a new one. I am satisfied with the home I have, and I have never had any wish or longings to come back and take up the old life again.

I know that Arvilla will say: "Why! why! is it possible that he can speak and send a message?" Not only possible but true. Open your spiritual door just a little way, and you will be much happier, for it will help to lift the burden of life and lighten your spirit while you dwell here. Harrison Fuller, of Lowell, Mass.

Capt. Isaac Hamilton.

I hail from Portland, Me., but not just this minute. I don't hardly know what is the matter with me. I went out, and I did n't have time to pack up, either. I hear them say that a block struck me on the head, and of course it did n't make my neck any stronger. I'll get out of it in a minute.

I'd like to say it is Capt. Isaac Hamilton, familiarly known as Capt. Ike. I ran a vessel to New London, New York, and several other ports. Well, I've only had one mortal I could get near enough to make him know that Capt. Ike did n't die, although his neck was unjointed. Jackson, I thank you, and the angels who have helped to open the door that I might speak.

I would like to get into communication with my brother Benjamin, if possible; but whenever I have before made the attempt to open the door I have found a padlock on it.

I often felt, while running the vessel, that there must be some power back of myself, or I would not have run so true and correctly. Now I understand I had a great deal of what is termed mediumistic power; but when you speak of it in that way you hardly know what you are talking about. I know it was through the influence of the old grandsire and father who had long been dead, and yet not so dead but what they could help and influence me. I thank God that in his wisdom he made the wise provision that mortals and spirits should come into communication.

John, an old friend, but not relative, is with me. Say to Jack that when he can get power enough, he will also send a letter, because his neck is all right. Mine is now, but I get a little of the sensation of the way I crossed over.

Many will remember Capt. Ike in New York and New London.

Abbie Emerson Goodale.

I come from Marlborough, Mass. My name is Abbie Emerson Goodale. My father and mother will well understand why I place Emerson between the two names, as that was my maiden name.

I am thankful that there is a channel which you good mortals have been instrumental in opening so we may come and communicate with the loved ones yet left. Brother Milton and brother Charlie are with me. Charlie says he wants Abbie to speak, for then she will feel happier, for years back he sent a message from this place, and from that time felt happier. I would also state that brother Milton, although passing out many miles away, sends greetings to father and mother, with myself and Charlie, to sister Clara, Maria, and also Eddie.

Remember, Frank, that I don't forget you; I never shall. In heaven you will find your Abbie, although many times after they had taken me away you said in your soul, "Where, oh! where are you, Abbie?" How many times you have spoken that; but how little did you understand that I was close by your side, and felt so happy that I had the privilege granted me to come so near to you while you are in the mortal life.

Dear father and mother, how many times I have asked you why the doors were closed so tightly. It is because of the old teachings of Theology. Mother often says she can't believe her children are dead, but can't believe they can come into communication with her. But she fully understands that I, through thers, sent a message to her and sister Clara, in Salem, N. H. She well knows that Abbie would not send her anything wrong.

My father's name is Dean Emerson, and mother's is Susan. Brother Milton says: "Tell them we are all together, and as soon as possible will send a message direct to them."

Mahala Whitney.

You may place me in Chelsea, Vt. My name, Mahala Whitney. I want to send a few words to my loved ones that are left, still I hardly know how; but I think if little children can learn, I ought to. I am happy. I would not return to earth to stay, if I could by turning my hand. Alvah, I am glad you have taken the course you have, because I know you are happier than you would have been if you had listened to some others.

Frankie, I have felt grieved sometimes for words that have been spoken, which would have been better hidden within the bosom. And darling daughter—my own spirit goes out to her, and many times I have said: Great Father God and the angels, watch over the children, the dear loved ones. Belle is here with me, and Father Whitney. I would say to Alvah that the angels will bless him for what he has done for them all.

I did n't think at first I could speak as much as I have. I have been here a great many times, thinking I would get power or courage—I hardly know which term to use—to send a little message. I don't want them to lay this letter on the shelf and say that you don't care to hear from me; for I know there are things that bring me back to them every day.

I have loved ones scattered in different surroundings. Arvilla says that, when possible, she feels she may send a few lines to James and the children, but the teachings received before she passed away bring her in the same pew with myself.

Silas Ryerson.

I have not been freed from the body a great while, but I don't know as that makes any difference, if I've got enough around me to help me a little. [Aside to other spirits:] Don't go away; I don't know but I'll break down if you do.

I want to place myself—for I feel that is my home just as much as it was when I was in the body—in Roxbury, Mass. I want to tell Fannie that I aint dead. I don't want her to drop a tear over me. I see a great deal differently from what I did when I was in the form. It is all right with H. That's plain enough. You know who that is. This is in meeting now. And I want you to know that I feel perfectly satisfied with Laura. Take care of Ernie.

You did n't succeed just satisfactorily in the interview you had with—you know who—the partner. Don't dispose of the property. I have just as much interest while I am here as I ever had, and if they think they are going to get it for a song, that song will cost them more than they think for. I want them to know, also, that Silas Ryerson aint dead, any more than you that are looking at me this minute.

I had a little hard work to get control; but this kind gentleman by the side of me said: "Make a step forward, and I'll see that you do n't fall out by the wayside."

Be particular in regard to the papers. No matter what you know, that's enough. When I say "papers," I know you'll understand. Fannie, that is right. But in regard to H., as I said before, I have changed my mind, or else it has changed me, wonderfully. It is all right, and when anything is all right there can't be any wrong.

They said they heard it spoken a great many times that Silas Ryerson was dead; but if they had understood a little further, they'd have said I had just begun to live. And now I would like, if I could have any voice in the matter, to have that word death changed. It has made more people sad than any other word; but say alive; that's what I want to say.

I am so well satisfied with the home that I have got, I have no wish to come back to stay. No, no. I have met one and another that had passed out of the mortal. The old grandmother, with outstretched hands, told us to come up higher, and you must know I did n't wait long. I realized all, everything, but could not make them hear my voice.

Samuel Holt.

I, too, come from what is termed the spirit-world. Samuel Holt, of Terre Haute, Ind. As William said he had spoken here, I thought I would make the attempt and see if I could not gain as much power as he did. Sarah and Eunice send greetings. Do n't think for a moment that we are lonely on the spirit-side. Oh! no, we have companions, for they are crossing the portal every moment, and we are happy in meeting the old loved ones; more fully does it give us happiness than it could when we dwelt in the mortal.

April Magazines.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—A charming picture of Venetian life is given as a frontispiece. The scene is upon and above steps leading down to the canal. Upon the steps are seated two girls. On the street above the passing groups include women, children, and others, diversified in apparel and occupation. The artist is Luke Fildes, R. A. Another picture, and one that will attract attention by its peculiar Hogarthian treatment, is "Work," from the studio of F. M. Brown. Various ranks and conditions of life are introduced, rendering it, by their number and minuteness, rather over-crowded. Prominent in the foreground are full-length figures, Thomas Carlyle and Maurice, principal of the Workingmen's College. An instructive paper upon "The Language of Line," by Walter Crane, illustrated with eight drawings, introduces the letter press of this number. Miss F. M Robinson, in the series of "Art Patrons," interestingly treats of Pericles, the mention of whose name conjures up a picture of Athens in the golden age of its prosperity. Engravings of five portraits, ideal and real, of Napoleon I., illustrate an article of much merit by Richard Heath. Of other papers are "Winter in the Forest of Fontainebleau" "The Art Gallery of Manchester" "A Century of English Art," and "Benvenuto Cellini," five illustrations. New York: Cassell & Co.

ST. NICHOLAS.—The contents have their introduction in "An April Shower," as the subject of a frontispiece, and following is an article upon "What Makes it Rain?" and "A Rhyme for a Rainy Day," artistically framed. "Trudel's Siege" is a story, complete in this number, in the characteristic, pleasant style of the lately ascended Louisa M. Alcott, in which is narrated the successful efforts of a little Dutch woman to enable her parents to pass through a time of trial. "The Tables Turned" is a wolf-story reversed. "Ben's Proxy" is an amusing story, and an unexpected imprisonment, bordering on perilous adventure, is described in an account of "The Wreck of the 'Lizzie J. Clark'," and its freezing in on the Massachusetts coast. In "'Ham' Esterbrook's Can Opener" something of a novelty in the line of story-telling is given, including a clear account of the manner of procuring Letters Patent. This month Palmer Cox's "Brownies" are at an academy. "Handiwork for Girls," several choice poems, "Jack-in-the Pulpit," etc., all profusely illustrated, complete the contents. New York: The Century Co. Boston: For sale by Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

WIDE AWAKE.—The season af Easter is celebrated in a finely drawn frontispiece and a poem. In the series "Famous Pets" the favorites of Landseer and Rosa Bonheur are described, ranging from the fireside cat to lions and tigers. The famous London Bridge, built over eight centuries ago, and the relation of old ballads and ballad-singers to it, are interestingly described by Susan A. Weiss. Sidney Luska gives new portions of "My Uncle Florimond," and "The Prince of Bandoung and His Son" is the title of Olive Seward's "Around the World Story." Lieut. F. B. Fremont contributes "Chist-a-pah ens; or, The Sword-Bearer," embodying an account of an Indian of the Crow tribe, who claimed that he conversed with spirits, and was endowed with power to control the elements. In "All Around an Old Meeting-House" the religion, manners and customs of the early Plymouth settlers, when slavery was a New England institution, rum the beverage of haying time, the use of a fiddle a sin, and "the bigger the fiddle the bigger the sin," are described. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—In "Art and Literature for the People" is described a free library and art gallery established by Mr. William Rossiter in London, and largely supported by him, for those who have not the means to pay for intellectual enjoyment. The visitors on some days number a thousand an hour. Mrs. Rossiter is hand-in-hand with her husband in the work, being the originator of the custom of taking poor children into the country during the summer months; the account given of her labors in this branch of humanitarian effort is worthy of imitation the world over. "How We Girls Earned Our Living," "Characters in Feet," "Curious Wills," "Social Life at New Zealand," "Rhyming and Punning," short stories, poems, etc., constitute the remaining contents of this interesting low-priced monthly. New York: Cassell & Co.

OUR LITTLE ONES.—"A Turtle Ship," "The First Snow Storm," "A New Use for Clothes Pins." "Playing Noah's Ark," "Tobogganing," and "The Funny Man from Funny-Land," are among the attractive contents, illustrated with many pictures to amuse and instruct. Boston: Russell Pub. Co., 36 Bromfield street.

☞ You may save a seed from sprouting by proper care, but when a seed has sprouted, no human power can crowd it back again into the stage in which it was before it sprouted. You may prevent an egg from hatching, but when it is once hatched, you cannot get it into the shell again. And the light has dawned that is at once light east and west, all over the world, on all sides, and you cannot shut it back, in material science, sociology, and civil government, equities of every kind, moralities and spiritual religion, historic elements and vital elements, contemporaneous.—From H. W. Beecher's Sermon on Evolution.

"If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?"

The world-wide reputation of Prof. Alfred R. Wallace as one in the foremost ranks of scientists imparts an added strength and value to the clear elucidation and masterly advocacy of the truths of Spiritualism given by him in his lecture having for its theme "If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?" published in a pamphlet of twenty-four pages by Colby & Rich, and supplied at the very low rate of 5 cents a single copy, thirteen for 50 cents, or thirty for $1,00. Let it do its work; buy it and circulate it.

☞ Colby & Rich, the original publishers, have now on sale at the Banner of Light Bookstore the fourth edition of "THE SCIENTIFIC BASIS OF SPIRITUALISM," by the late Epes Sargent. The number of the edition is in itself proof of the warm welcome extended to the book by the spiritualistic public. Despatched as it was almost from the deathbed of this distinguished poet, litterateur and spiritual scientist, to the world of readers, it must ever seem to those who knew him as his last word of encouragement in the mortal to his co-laborers for truth in this sphere of being—while it will, as time proceeds, have a wider and wider reading and a deeper and more profound appreciation on the part of the public generally.

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

Finely executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

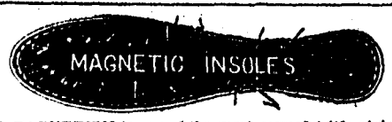
Miscellaneous.



MAGNETISM is one of the most powerful life-giving substances known to our race. Its action upon all animal kind is to quicken into life and polarity the sluggish molecules of the physical body. This majestic substance comes as near the central action of life itself as human intelligence can analyze.

When we apply a powerful Magnetic Shield to a body to eliminate disease, we work in strict harmony with Nature's highest laws, and utilize the most potential force we can employ next to intelligence to overcome morbid conditions of mind and body. Of all the known curative agents under the control of mortal mind and human will, Magnetism excels all others, and is incomparable in its magical action and quick results.

The finer and more subtle the force we use the quicker and better results we obtain.

To impart magnetic power and potency to a physical body is to give it strength, vitality and renewed youth.

The vivifying energy radiated constantly from Magnetic Shields stimulates alike the mental forces of the mind and increases all the animal power.

Magnetic Shields constantly feed the blood with warm, rich Fibrine, multiply the red corpuscles, polarize the iron, and intensify the vivific principle of life.

Whoever wears these Shields will take on awakened mental and physical energies, which in very truth is to renew one's youth. Every Shield we manufacture is worth its weight in gold to suffering humanity.

Good, sound, vigorous health, is worth more than worldly wealth, hence these Shields are invaluable, for these powerful Health Batteries have no other place in life, or work to do, but to vitalize the blood and compel sound health in all physical bodies. If you want good health, and the cheerful, happy days of youth, wear the Shields and know what Magnetic Polarity means.

RHEUMATISM.

THE GERMAN ANTI-RHEUMATIC RING is a speedy and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago, Gout, Paralysis, and all other diseases where a general warming, quickening, strengthening and equalization of the circulation is required. The thousands of testimonials from residents of Boston, well known to the publishers of this paper, attest its value. Price $2. Will last a lifetime. Sent by mail on receipt of price. The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, dependent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

The Fortieth Anniversary.

Anniversary Exercises in New York City; Addresses, Vocal and Instrumental Music, Recitations, etc.

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated by the First Society of Spiritualists at Adelphi Hall on Sunday afternoon, March 25th. Mr. Henry J. Newton, the President of the Society, conducted the exercises. As has been the custom of the Society on the occasion of the Anniversary, the platform was tastily decorated with plants and flowers. The exercises were opened by Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham in offering prayer.

ADDRESS BY HENRY J. NEWTON.

We have come together to-day to celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism. Forty years, laden with the joys and sorrows of our world, have gone into the eternity of the past since the first intelligent and comprehended communication from an invisible intelligence was made at Hydesville. Where in the history of our race can we find forty years freighted with events so pregnant with importance to mankind? There have never been forty years in which such wonderful progress has been made; in which old ideas have been forced to yield and give way for the new.

We claim that Spiritualism has come to be the dominant and moving spirit of the age; that it is in the air; that its resistless power moves upon human minds, it may be silently, but with unceasing energy it presses steadily forward under the guidance of the Infinite Executive and in obedience to the omnipotent law of progress. This being so, the question arises—why is it that these wonderful events and advances along the line of civilization have come in this part of the nineteenth century? To form a rational opinion on this important subject we will have to investigate briefly some of the events which have preceded our time. History will be called upon to guide us down the incline into the buried centuries. In our downward journey we encounter on every hand ruins and wrecks that serve, like tombstones, to mark the place and tell where contending armies have worked ruin and devastation. We continue our journey to the midnight of the semi-civilized world which was the harvest time of the church. The historian tells us that from the eighth to the eleventh centuries the subjugation of the people to ecclesiastical control was so complete and the consequent superstitions so dense and overshadowing that language is wholly inadequate to convey to the mind the depth of the darkness and the utter degradation of the people. They were preyed upon by the monk, priest and prelate. I have called attention to the condition of the people whom we have to recognize as our ancestors, that you may the more fully realize the great difference between the past and the present. They emerged from this darkness and bondage by slow and tortuous paths. Century after century passed with scarcely a visible change for the better. Slowly but surely, however, the process of emancipation went on. Science trimmed and lighted her lamp, though the light was faint and unsteady and her votaries were victims of persecution, torture, and frequently of death itself. She persisted, and to her disciples and the truths they gave us we owe our emancipation from the superstitions and slavery of ecclesiasticism.

When we consider that it is but little more than three hundred years since it was first known that this planet is a sphere, we realize how dim was the light which science had to give or was permitted to give even at comparatively so modern a date. Her disciples were arrested and brought before the Inquisition, tried and branded as heretics, and compelled by torture to recant, and if they refused to do this were burned at the stake. A martyr may die, but the truth will live; one of our inspired poets has beautifully expressed this in the following lines:

"Can ye burn a Truth in the martyr's fire?
Or chain a thought in the dungeon dire?
Or stay the Soul, when it soars away
In glorious Life from the mouldering clay?
The Truth that liveth, the Thoughts that go,
The Spirit ascending, all answer, 'No.'

Ye have builded your temples with gems impearled
On the broken heart of a famished world;
Ye have crushed its heroes in desert graves,
Ye have made its children a race of slaves;
O'er the future age shall the ruin go?
We gather against ye, and answer, 'No.'

The winter night of the world is past;
The day of Humanity dawns at last;
The veil is rent from the soul's calm eyes,
And prophets and heroes and seers arise;
Their words and deeds like the thunders go:
Can ye stifle their voices? They answer, 'No.'"

Notwithstanding the anathemas and persecutions of the Church the light increased and the disciples of science multiplied; the atmosphere of superstition grew less dense; skepticism and the rejection of theological dogmas followed as a natural consequence. Materialism became the general doctrine among those engaged in scientific study—not always outspoken, it is true. The champions of the scientific philosophy, who through all the past had been on the defensive, gradually assumed the offensive, and the assaults of its warriors were irresistible. They said to the theologian: "We have analyzed man; we have put him into the crucible and reduced him to his elementary condition, and we find no soul such as you tell us about; we call on you for proof." The "defenders of the faith" had no proof worthy the name; they were utterly defenseless and at the mercy of the scientific infidels. This was the condition of the world forty years ago, and if there ever was a time in the history of the human race when the cry of humanity was for "light, more light," to guide them out of the increasing gloom, it was when Spiritualism, like a star of hope, rose above the horizon of this age of materialism. Nature provides for her offspring, and Spiritualism came in response to an almost universal call; it came as the foliage comes in springtime, and just as irresistibly. The materialist and ecclesiastical enemy who have made war upon it might as well engage in an effort to abolish the law of gravitation. Spiritualism is the natural product and culmination of all the past ages. People became materialists not from choice, but from the irresistible logic of facts, and the condition of the human mind is forcibly expressed in the following poem, which recently appeared in an English journal, entitled, "My House is Left unto me Desolate":

"A little while, you tell me, but a little while,
And I shall be where my beloved are;
And with your eyes all large with faith, you say,
'Thy dear ones have not journeyed very far.'

'Not very far,' I say it o'er and o'er,
Till on mine ear mine own voice strangely falls,
Like some mechanic utterance that repeats
A meaningless refrain to empty walls.

'Not very far;' but measured by my grief,
A distance measureless as my despair,
When, from the dreams that give them back to me,
I wake to find that they have journeyed there.

'Not very far.' Ah! me, the spirit has
Had its conjectures since the first man slept;
But oh! the heart, it knoweth its own loss,
And death is death, as 't was when Rachel wept."

Following the address, Señor Aurelio Ceruelos played on the piano a march from Chopin; Mrs. J. O. Goodwin sang "With Verdure Clad," from Haydn's "Creation"; Mr. Newton then announced that Mrs. Amanda M. Spence was not present on account of illness, but they had an excellent substitute, Mrs. R. S. Lillie.

REMARKS BY MRS. LILLIE.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie spoke, in part, as follows: Friends: I received a letter of invitation from Mrs. Newton to participate in these exercises. As I was called to minister to the Society in Brooklyn, I have come from that city in order to stand, not as a substitute, as my brother has said, for Mrs. Spence, but as a substitute for the invisibles, whose presence we all look for and feel.

[Mrs. Lillie then proceeded with a poetic improvisation, the opening and closing portions of which are here given:]

What do we celebrate?
The clouds have rolled away
In a place of utter darkness,
And we have the light of day.
What do we celebrate?
The coming of the hour,
When they who stood so close around
Gave us to know their power.

* * * * * *

And this we celebrate—
The coming of the light
That shall with beauty and its might,
Set errors in God's time aright.
Its rays divine and beautiful
Lift up the human mind;
Dispel the darkness and the cloud;
Shut out the grave and the cold shroud,
And give us life; the living form
Drives back the darkness and the storm,
And this we celebrate.
And now we 'll take another view
Out through the distance to the blue,
Where stars of hope are shining bright,
Pointing from darkness into light.
And as the morning ray is given,
The bright stars fade in light of heaven.
I see the sun's effulgent ray,
And know we 're in the growing day.
And this we celebrate,
And know the future looks more bright
With all of God's incoming light,
Until no more we have death's night,
But have the future, bright and fair,
And angels with us everywhere,
And this we celebrate.

So have we not [Mrs. Lillie continued] occasion to-day to be glad and rejoice? Is not this our Easter day? Not only has the Christ arisen, but the dead are with us everywhere, and the graves have opened, and they have come forth; it is only figuratively speaking, for they were never there, but are around and with us in all the ways and walks of life. We may look back in the dim distance, when—as our good brother in his opening remarks, referring to this, said—the midnight was upon us, darkness was over the earth, and the shadows of a great wrong, a false conception of the infinite, false views of life, false ideas in reference to the attributes of God, and false ideas in reference to death (the strange and subtle change) and even false ideas of how we ought to live, and what constituted true living: Even in this sad condition, in this tenebrous time, many were yearning, desirous to know of the way of life, that they might walk therein; to know of immortality; to know of the law of this life of ours; to know why it was—if it were possible to find out—that this life, if it culminated as it seemed to at death, should be so unsatisfactory; why was it our own, or why was it given to us? With all this inquiry reaching out from the souls of men, with earnest desire for knowledge, at last the light came to us; at last the sounds were heard in the distance; not so distant to you did they seem, but they were distant to the world of mankind. The spirits knew the meaning; they stood at the outer door of this our temple of earthly life and demanded admission, and so came this knowledge in the early days of Spiritualism.

It is not ours to-day to give you other than a short summary of these experiences. They reach over what we account as Modern Spiritualism, over a period of forty years. I know, as you know, that ages reach infinitely back of this, with all the preparation necessary for the growth of the mind, until the time when physical, mental and intellectual growth had developed; that then Spiritualists were ready to receive this light, anxious for its coming, and it came! And so across the grave has been a stone, but the stone has been rolled away from the door of the sepulchre. Silence lay between you and them until the revelation that they came to you was in the true manifestations of Spiritualism. And in looking upon the earth to-day I see many times the words "Christ is risen indeed." And I always feel like saying, Yes, and our mothers have risen, our fathers have risen, our little ones have come back again, and they are with us to-day. Have we not, then, most occasion of all on earth to rejoice? Not only have we these messages of faith from the further shores of life, but also such beautiful messages of love in this present life. What we ought to watch over is that which is best within us, the gift divine that belongs to every human soul. How can we best develop ourselves? By doing the very best we can; by so living that life shall be one sweet sunshine, one continued effort in the pathway of progress toward divinity. Are we not divine? Has not God impressed upon each one of us his image, and are we not the sons and daughters of the living God? Is not death the ministering angel of life, that leads us unto life eternal?

We bid you farewell, with the blessings of God's loving angels that we see about you in numbers too many to be told or described; the two worlds are so closely united that they are interested in every movement that we are making and in every step that we are taking; everywhere we go they go: May the angels ever be present with you.

Miss Jennie Pierce then sang "'T is There I Would Wander," and also "Bonnie Doon."

REMARKS BY MR. DAILEY.

The Hon. A. H. Dailey spoke in part as follows: Mr. President and Friends: It is pleasing to greet you on this occasion. We have listened to the songs and the sweet music, and we know that the time of the singing of birds has come. The wheels of time roll on, and forty years have gone by since Modern Spiritualism made its advent upon the world. We celebrate the day in our own way—the anniversary of that advent. As I heard the dirge-like music of part of the excellent production which was given upon the piano, I thought that was the dirge of the dead errors of the past. And the other music, which has been somewhat more exultant in its nature, would seem to invite our hearts to harmony with it, and we should feel encouraged and rejoice at the outlook which is before us. Forty years ago an incident occurred that changed the current of human thought, that brightened the life and made more cheering the soul of man. It is strange what little incidents will produce tremendous results. When we think of the condition of the world forty years ago—and some of us here are old enough to do so—when we remember the thought of the world, when we remember and consider the positions of the religious teachers and instructors, when we remember the creeds of the churches, when we remember the terrible doctrines which were listened to, and many of us then believed, and think how through that advent of forty years ago so great a change has been made, we are justified in saying that from accidental events great influences come to mankind.

The speaker here referred to the life of Thomas Paine at some length, and then continued:

A man had been murdered and his body had been buried deep beneath the cellar of a cottage at Hydesville; the buried bones of the man might slumber and merge back to mother earth, but his spirit haunted the place of the murder, and haunted the soul of the murderer. So through the red hand of the murderer, through the hand of crime, there came into light this great knowledge, this truth of Modern Spiritualism. When the family, one of whom is with us here to-day (referring to Mrs. Leah Fox-Underhill) moved into that cottage the spiritual world found instruments with which to break their silence to us. For forty years this work has been going on, and going on gloriously—not in the way you and I supposed it would go, not through great exhilaration as we expected, but in its own way. It is working its way and bearing its fruit all over the civilized world. It is a grand work. It did not come until the occasion was ripe for it.

You all know how the curse of human slavery hung over our beloved land. You who are younger have read the history of it, and you who are older remember the terrible ordeal through which the nation passed. When brave John Brown invaded Harper's Ferry with a view of freeing the slaves, everybody condemned him. But the spirit of John Brown was higher than the spirit of ordinary mortals. He cared not for laws; he thought he saw his duty, and he must do it, and he died on the gallows in Virginia. Through his death the great crisis was hastened, and who will say that the spirit of old John Brown was not living in that terrible conflict that followed, as our soldiers went "marching on"? And so it is in this great movement to-day, the spirits of the departed are with us, but it is unlike the movement that followed the death of John Brown, for we hear no martial music, we see no soldiers marching through our streets, we hear no beat of the drum, we hear not the roar of the hostile cannon—there are no armies, no hospitals, no places for the reception of the dying and the wounded, no places for the prisoners of war. It is a glorious work that is going on; but it is a work of peace, a work of joy, and it is dear to the hearts and the souls of men. It is bringing people from the darkness into the light, from ignorance to the knowledge of the living truth. It is a great work, and it is the work of Spiritualism. Everything that breaks a shackle of ignorance, everything that breaks a manacle of superstition, everything that disseminates light and knowledge to the world, is a benediction to you and to me, and we ought to receive it in all thankfulness.

Following the address was a recitation by Miss Della Sawyer, "At Paris, it was at the Opera there," and then Señor Ceruelos gave a piano solo, Caprice from Liszt, also a piece of his own composition, "Raranteta de Concerto," in which he delighted every one present by his wonderful execution. The Señor has a wealth of beautiful combinations, a rich variety of melodies, a perfect technique, in fact the instrument really talks through his soulful conception of harmonies, under the guidance of his artistic hand.

REMARKS BY MRS. BRIGHAM.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke, in part, as follows: At this late hour you will expect but a few words from me. You are well aware that in the churches to-day the celebration of Palm Sunday has a very beautiful meaning. They are celebrating the time far back in history when Jesus of Nazareth entering Jerusalem was met by a great multitude who scattered palm branches in his way, and sang joyful hosannas for the coming of the Lord. And yet in a short time after that the cry was "Crucify him." From that life came a truth, the beautiful truth that though our friends go from us yet a little while they come again, and receive us unto themselves. Now to-day is our Palm Sunday. We have palms here that grace our platform. Little palms they are, and who in looking at them would think how tall a palm tree can rise? Because the space is small here their growth must be limited. If you would have your spirituality tall and symmetrical you must give it room. If you plant it in narrow prejudices, you have planted it as in a flower pot, and your spirituality, like these palms in the flower pots here, will be small. Make your lives useful and beautiful, for you have this truth, and you have messages from those who are not dead nor sleeping, but who have only gone a little while before you.

The exercises of the interesting and spiritually profitable occasion closed by the audience joining in singing "The Sweet By-and-Bye."

Berkeley Hall, Boston.

On Saturday and Sunday last, March 31st and April 1st, the Spiritual Temple Society, meeting in this hall under the Presidency of Capt. Richard Holmes, appropriately celebrated the Anniversary. We shall give hereafter an extended report of the interesting and largely-attended exercises.

Tremont Temple, Boston.

A GRAND UNION CELEBRATION took place in TREMONT TEMPLE, Boston, Saturday, March 31st, and Paine Hall, Sunday, April 1st, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE FIRST SPIRITUALIST LADIES' AID SOCIETY, Mrs. A. E. Blinn, President, and CHILDREN'S PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM No. 1, Benjamin P. Weaver, Conductor.

The rostrum was decorated with choice flowers, and the large audience which crowded the place of meeting seemed filled with a spirit of joyous anticipation. The morning service was called to order by Benj. P. Weaver, Chairman; when, after a finely-executed piano solo by Miss F. A. Whittemore, an invocation followed, with an address by the guides of Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, which was replete with the historic record and the bright prospect for the future of the philosophy of Spiritualism as a science, a fact in nature, also a religion when made such by the recipients.

Mr. Weaver then, as Conductor of the Lyceum, made a few pertinent remarks. He spoke of his being connected with the work for some four years, also of the interest he took in it, the great service of teaching the children the laws of life, and the near relations of the spirit and material spheres that are inculcated in the doctrine of Spiritualism; he then contrasted somewhat between the lessons taught by the churches to children, and those taught in their Spiritualist Lyceums.

Miss Anna Peters then gave a reading, which was well received by the audience.

Master Carlton James, a little boy some five years of age, displayed remarkable talent in playing a violin solo.

Hattie Dodge read two recitations, which were finely rendered.

A dialogue between Addie Hazeltine, Fred. Stevens and Mark Abrams, was well received.

Jessie Judkins then sang. She has a powerful voice, and doubtless will make her mark in the future as a professional singer.

Flossie Butler gave two readings, and exhibited fine talent.

Annie Barlow sang two songs to the acceptance of the audience.

Louise Barlow, after a choice selection which showed good talents in this direction, was encored.

Little Bertie Newton displayed fine talent in a piano solo, which would have been a credit to those of older growth.

Little Grace Scales is a remarkable child for one of her age, and displayed wonderful talent in singing several selections.

Edgar W. Emerson closed the morning services with some fine spirit tests, which were in most cases recognized.

In the afternoon—Mrs. A. E. Blinn, President of the Ladies' Aid Society, in the chair—the services were held in the Meionaon Hall, on account of the 31st coming on Saturday, which was not contemplated at the time of securing the Temple, which has been engaged previously every Saturday afternoon by the Sunday School Teachers' Class for many years. The small hall could not accommodate the people desirous of attending.

The services were opened by the Apollo Quartette (four male singers) with a song; reading by Miss Lucette Webster followed.

Mr. J. Frank Baxter then delivered the Anniversary address, which was replete with good sentiments, and will appear in full in a future issue of THE BANNER.

After this lecture he sang one of his appropriate songs and followed with some marked tests of spirit-identity which were recognized.

Reading by Miss Nettie Morris and singing by the Apollo Quartette closed the afternoon exercises.

In the evening the services commenced with a song from the "Apollo Quartette," followed by an address by Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, in which she reviewed the work that had been done for the past forty years, and spoke of the pride she took in the work that she was engaged in; she boldly, on all occasions, declared herself a Spiritualist, and urged her hearers who believed in the New Dispensation to follow the same course. Her guides paid a high tribute to the memory of some of the old workers who are on the spirit-side of life, and spoke of the Anniversary that occurred at Music Hall, twenty years ago, when all the societies united in one grand union. She also spoke of the valuable work of the risen Achsa W. Sprague, Rosa T. Amedey, Thomas Gales Forster, S. B. Brittan and Dr. Henry F. Gardner—referring particularly to the valuable assistance the last mentioned gentleman afforded her in her early mediumship and when she first essayed to speak on the platform. Her hearers were deeply interested in her relation of reminiscences concerning "the day we celebrate."

Miss Maria Falls then followed with a reading, which was well received; then came a song from the Apollo Quartette.

Mr. Edgar W. Emerson then gave some fine tests, which were in several cases quite marked.

Following this Miss Lucette Webster gave some readings which created much amusement. She is a power in her phase of work.

A song followed from the Apollo Quartette.

Joseph D. Stiles then closed the evening services with a very satisfactory test séance, giving names of spirits as fast as he could speak them. No one, however skeptical as to Spiritualism, attending his séances, can doubt that he is assisted therein by an outside power, as claimed; as no man living in the material can do what he does on such occasions without extraneous aid.

On the rostrum sat side by side three veteran camp-meeting workers and managers: Col. W. D. Crockett, President of the Onset Bay Association, and Dr. A. H. Richardson and J. S. Dodge. A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium, was also near them. In the center of the hall N. S. Greenleaf was to be seen as an attentive listener, but who was some years ago engaged in the lecturing field to great acceptance.

During the evening Mrs. E. A. Blinn, the President, read a telegraphic dispatch of congratulation from Mrs. William S. Butler, who was at Chicago, on her return trip from California.

The meeting then adjourned.

Paine Hall.

At this place on Sunday, April 1st, at 10:30 A. M., occurred the grand Anniversary session of Lyceum No. 1, in which a varied programme of readings, addresses, vocal and instrumental music, was instructively carried out.

At 2:30 P. M. Mrs. M. E. Whittemore sang under spirit influence, her voice being clear and powerful; Dr. H. B. Storer made a grand speech, giving his experience, also treating in a vein of deep thoughtfulness the underlying principles of the great movement whose advent was then being remembered; Miss Lucette Webster read some appropriate spiritual selections; Joseph D. Stiles was wonderful in the tests given, which were mainly recognized by the audience.

In the evening Mrs. Byrnes was grand in her discourse, as were also Dr. H. B. Storer, Dr. A. H. Richardson, Thomas Dowling, Jacob Edson, and others in their remarks; Miss Lucette Webster also gave readings, Joseph D. Stiles a test séance, and Mrs. Whittemore sang.

The Anniversary celebration by these two Societies—which is briefly sketched above—proved a social, financial and spiritual success, and as such will be long remembered.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street, Boston.

Interesting Anniversary exercises were held at this place on Sunday, the 1st inst.

In the afternoon remarks appropriate to the occasion were made by Dr. M. V. Thomas, Miss Jennie Rhind, Dr. Ayer, of Brockton, and Mrs. Hugo. Miss Rhind gave a number of symbolic readings, Miss Cullen facial readings, and Mrs. S. E. Buck spirit descriptions, which were pronounced correct.

The evening exercises consisted of interesting remarks and spirit delineations by Mrs. Hugo, Mrs. Robbins, Mrs. Leslie, Mr. Tom Roscoe, and Mr. Wright; and an appropriate recitation given by Miss Lillian Rich, which was warmly applauded by the audience.

San Francisco, Cal.

The Anniversary was observed in an interesting manner by the Golden Gate Religious and Philosophical Society, under the ministrations of Mrs. E. L. Watson and J. J. Morse, inspirational and trance speakers, at Metropolitan Temple, on Sunday, April 1st.

At the morning services, 11 o'clock, a voluntary by Señor S. Arrillaga; a hymn by the audience, "Our Citadel of Defense" (Coronation); an invocation by J. J. Morse; a duet, "Consider the Lilies" (Topliff), Miss E. Beresford-Joy, Mrs. Laura M. Dodge; an Anniversary address, "The Needs of the Hour," by the President, Wm. Emmette Coleman; a vocal solo, "Some Sweet Day, By and Bye" (W. H. Doane), C. H. Wadsworth; and short addresses by Mrs. H. E. Robinson and G. H. Hawes comprised the exercises. The Children's Lyceum held a session at 12:30 o'clock.

The evening services, at 7:45 o'clock, comprised an overture by Señor S. Arrillaga; hymn by the audience, "Joy to the World, the Darkness Flies" (Antioch); an inspirational address on "The Fact We Celebrate and Its Relation to Nineteenth Century Civilization," by Mrs. E. L. Watson; a recitation, "Beyond" (by Ella Wheeler Wilcox), Miss Valerie Hicketheir; a vocal solo, "Heaven and Earth"—Pinsuti—Miss E. Beresford-Joy, with organ accompaniment; a trance address by J. J. Morse (of England); and a vocal solo, "Angels' Serenade," Braga, (with violin obligato and piano forte accompaniment), Miss E. Beresford-Joy, Mr. L. Bressee, Señor S. Arrillaga.

The sessions were free to all and were well attended.

Card from Joseph D. Stiles.

As I am in constant receipt of letters for engagements at Camp-Meetings to be holden during the forthcoming season, I would say that the following are the only ones I can attend: Harwich, Onset Bay, Sunapee Lake and Queen City Park. Physical difficulties, of long standing, will prevent my making any more Camp Meeting engagements than the above mentioned. Any other partially made ones, or otherwise, I shall be obliged to rescind for the above reasons. No further correspondence is needed on this point.

"Did n't Know It Was Loaded."

The young man fell dead!
A friend had pointed a revolver at him.
"He did n't know it was loaded!"

We often hear it stated that a man is not responsible for what he does not know. The law presupposes knowledge, and therefore convicts the man who excuses crime by ignorance!

"If I had only known" has often been an unfortunate man's apology for some evil unknowingly wrought, but in a matter of general interest—as, for instance, that laudanum is a poison, that naphtha is a deadly explosive, that the blood is heavily charged with a winter's accumulations of the waste of the system—it is one's duty to know the fact and the consequences thereof. Our good old grandmothers knew, for instance, that the opening of spring was the most perilous period of the year.

Why?

Because then the blood-stream is sluggish and chilled by the cold weather, and if not thinned a good deal, and made to flow quickly and healthfully through the arteries and veins, it is impossible to have good vigor the rest of the year. Hence, without exception, what is now known as Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla, was plentifully made and religiously given to every member of the family regularly through March, April, May and June. It is a matter of record that this prudential, preventive and restorative custom saved many a fit of sickness, prolonged life and happiness to a vigorous old age, and did away with heavy medical expenditures.

Mrs. Maggie Kerchwal, Lexington, Ky., used Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla "for nervous sick headache, of which I had been a sufferer for years. It has been a great benefit to me." Capt. Hugh Harkins, 1114 South 15th street, Philadelphia, Pa., says "It purified my blood and removed the blotches from my skin." Mrs. Aaren Smith, Topton, Berks Co., Pa., says she "was entirely cured of a skin disease of the worst kind" by Log Cabin Sarsaparilla. Bad skin indicates a very bad condition of the blood.

If you would live and be well, go to your druggist to-day and get Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla, and take no other—there 's nothing like it, or as good—and completely renovate your impaired system with this simple, old-fashioned preparation of roots and herbs.

Warner, who makes the famous Safe Cure, puts it up, and that is a guarantee of excellence all over the known world. Take it yourself, and give it to the other members of the family, including the children. You will be astonished at its health-giving and life-prolonging powers. We say this with perfect confidence, because we have heard good things of it everywhere, and its name is a guaranty that it is first-class in every particular.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—On Sunday morning the hall was crowded at an early hour. The exercises were opened with a piano duett by Master Willie Boyce and Maudie G. Banks; the President, Capt. Richard Holmes, read an original poem written for this occasion by John W. Day, of the BANNER OF LIGHT. A song followed by Mr. J. T. Lillie and Miss Clara A. Clark, "Something Still to Do"—Mintie Eakins being piano accompanist. Mrs. R. S. Lillie then addressed the people with marked effect upon, "Our Place Among the Religions of the World." She followed her address with an improvisation on "Christ's Blessing upon Little Children." Capt. Holmes then stated that, in his opinion, this was the crowning lecture of the season, and a vote being taken upon it, it was passed with prolonged applause by the audience. After a song, "Mother 's With the Angels Now," by Mr. J. T. Lillie, Frank T. Ripley was introduced, and gave correctly the names of many spirits present, which were recognized by friends in the audience.

Afternoon.—The exercises of the afternoon were opened with a song by Charles W. Sullivan. Mrs. Ida Whitlock, piano accompanist, "From Shore to Shore." The opening address, by Mrs. Susie Willis-Fletcher, was very able and eloquent throughout, and received much applause; song by Mr. J. T. Lillie, Mintie Eakins, accompanist. An inspirational address was given by Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, which was very interesting and instructive, and commanded the closest attention of all.

Remarks were made by L. L. Whitlock, John Wetherbee, and Dr. John M. Eames, which were full of deep feeling and earnestness; closing song by Charles W. Sullivan.

Evening.—The exercises opened with a musical selection by Maudie G. Banks; remarks followed by Mrs. S. Dick, which were well received; song by Mrs. Lizzie C. Clapp, "The Hour of Rest"—Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock piano accompanist, which received marked applause. Mrs. R. S. Lillie, under control, made the address of the evening on "What is the Labor Spiritualism Comes to Perform?" Excellent remarks followed by Frank T. Ripley, who also gave the names of many spirits present. Mr. Lillie a song, "The Loom of Life." Mrs. Lillie closed with an improvisation upon "The Warp and Woof of Life."

She will occupy the platform Sunday morning and evening, April 8th, at 10:30 and 7:30.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—A large audience gathered at the Temple on Sunday last to listen to the beautiful "Service of Song" arranged for the occasion by Mrs. Fisher Wellington. The numbers were suitable, and excellently performed, and the sweet strains from human lips, and the mellow tones of the organ, seemed to bear the soul away to a higher sphere, where reign law, order, peace, in short, embodied harmony.

The Temple Fraternity School opened at 10:30 A. M. with an excellent attendance. The children of an older growth, however, predominated, which was not surprising, considering the many and varied attractions Easter day calls forth, especially for the young. Mrs. Stiles, the Shepherdess, presided, and her remarks and improvised poems were excellent, as were also several selections by the little ones. Dr. Wellington gave an object lesson, taking an Easter egg for his subject, which was interesting to the older as well as younger ones; and the remarks of Mrs. Fletcher and Mrs. Burnham were good and extremely pertinent to the occasion. It seems as if this was a very favorable opportunity for all who are interested to unite in accord and harmony, and bring their children to build up a school worthy of our cause.

Next Sunday, at 10:30 A. M., there will be the Fraternity School and the usual service at 7:45 P. M., when the guides of the blind medium, Mr. A. E. Tisdale, will speak. There will also be the usual sociable at 7:30 P. M. on Wednesday. All who are interested are cordially invited to each and all of above meetings. Announcement of subject of discourse will always be found in Saturday papers.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Soul-stirring meetings were held at this place on Sunday last. One general impulse of inspiration seemed to rest upon all of those who took part in the exercises. Discourses were delivered by Eben Cobb, Frank T. Ripley, Mrs. A. E. King, Dr. C. H. Harding, Dr. Augustus Hatch, Mrs. C. W. Odiorne, and Mr. E. B. Stratton. Besides the many tests given by most of the above named speakers, fine communications were delivered by the following mediums: Miss A. Peabody, Mrs. B. F. Willard, Mrs. A. Forrester, Mr. P. McKenzie, Miss Cullen, Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Mrs. Shackley, Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, Miss Gertie Coffin, Mrs. A. H. Moore, and singing by Mrs. Eudora Case, Mrs. Tucker and Mrs. Stratton. Miss Anna Curtis was warmly received in her well rendered recitations.

Holt, Dr. J. L. Paxson, Mrs. A. Forrester and Mrs. Omstead; satisfactory tests were given through Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Shackley, Mrs. Forrester and the Chairman. The services were very interesting, being appropriate to the Fortieth Anniversary.

Baxter and the Blue-Laws of Connecticut.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

When Mr. J. Frank Baxter, last Thursday P. M., 29th ult., arrived in Meriden, Conn., to his surprise, he found that the hall which the Spiritualists had with difficulty secured for their evening's service had that day been completely ruined by fire. The Gospel Temperance women, who leased the hall, had manifested much indignation to think a certain Order regularly using their hall on Thursday evenings had given way and sub-let it to the Spiritualists. There were those not slow to see in the conflagration the "judgment and discrimination of God," for had he not shown his dislike of the use to which the hall was to be subjected in the interest of infidelity, and his love for gospel work, by sweeping out of existence hall and contents, even to the organ to have been used, and saved only one thing intact, and that his blessed Bible? But they overlooked the fact that the liquor saloon on the ground floor was only injured by water, and all the beverages unharmed: Does this show that the Lord loves such things as well as the Bible? This story was too good not to be here told, even if a digression from the object of the reporter.

The G. A. R. Hall, never let to outside parties, under the circumstances was granted to the Spiritualists, and with the aid of hasty advertising in the daily papers and by posters a good audience assembled and listened to interesting exercises, heard a lecture of sterling worth on the pros and cons. of Spiritualism, and witnessed wonderful descriptive evidence of the presence of spirits. The speaker and medium was J. Frank Baxter of Chelsea, Mass.

Another amusing and noteworthy episode is in order. Just previous to the hour of opening, came an officer of the law to the ante-room. "Is Mr. Baxter here?" "No, not yet, but he is expected every minute. Can I do anything for you?" "I am sent by the Chief of Police to demand a license fee, for the privilege of lecturing and performing here to-night." The manager, thus in conversation, paid the money to prevent any hitch in proceedings, but did so under protest, and said, "The end is not yet." The next morning Mr. Baxter, with the Chairman of his meeting, Mr. H. W. Hale, drove up to Mayor Davis's door, but the gentleman was away. Next they called upon the City Clerk, who showed the law, which did not exempt church fairs, concerts, lectures, suppers, etc., (although "by courtesy" they were exempted) from the fee; it was asked why that "courtesy" was not extended to Spiritualists? The City Clerk did not know any license had been demanded.

The Chairman of the License Committee came in. He had given no orders, but he did not know whether any of the other members of the committee had or not; but the Chief-of-Police had independent power as per his judgment. At this juncture entered one of the wealthy and large real estate owners of the city, who chanced to

The Boston Spiritual Temple—Anniversary Exercises at Berkeley Hall.

The celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism, held by the Boston Spiritual Temple in Berkeley Hall on Saturday and Sunday, March 31st and April 1st, was an occasion long to be remembered by those who participated in it.

Early on Saturday morning the spacious hall was filled with earnest, intelligent people, and at every session large audiences assembled. Not only was every available seat on the floor and in the galleries occupied, but many were unable to get more than very limited standing-room; and no better proof of the great interest excited by the exercises could be given than the patience with which hour after hour, they remained in such uncomfortable positions. The exercises of the morning were opened with words of welcome from the President of the Society, Capt. Richard Holmes, who spoke as follows:

GREETING BY CAPT. HOLMES.

Again it becomes my pleasant and agreeable duty to extend to you, in behalf of the Boston Spiritual Temple, the right hand of fellowship, and to cordially welcome you to a participation in our quiet, unassuming, homelike celebration of the birth of Modern Spiritualism.

Round by round has it ascended the ladder of progress, and, after forty years of toil and tribulation, after forty years of persistent opposition and persecution from bigoted theologians on the one hand and skeptical materialists on the other, it has attained at the present time a position that commands the attention and respect of the entire community, and established for itself a basis and foundation that cannot be shaken by an assault from without, and can only be disturbed and its progress impeded by jealousies and dissensions from within. Let us, then, in the love we bear the cause we have espoused, and in sustaining the sentiments it promulgates, realize the responsibility resting upon each one of us to cultivate the principles of love, harmony and union.

United may we ever stand,
And right and justice rule our band.
While here on earth we stay;
And should the good be near or far,
May progress be our guiding star,
Improving day by day.

After the very agreeable rendering of a song by Dr. C. T. Buffum, the President introduced Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther, who was received with much enthusiasm, and spoke substantially as follows:

ADDRESS BY MRS. COLBY-LUTHER.

I come to you in the sunshine of the morning; and the most wonderful occasion of the hour brings to my sensitiveness mingled joy and sorrow. The joy I must accept as coming from you; the sorrow I must attribute to myself.

I am not surprised that these people, as well as millions outside of the city of Boston, meet this morning to commemorate this Anniversary, for in all the ages of the past every thought that has been presented to man regarding the future life has been a thought destructive to the highest hopes, the grandest aspirations, the noblest desires that could possibly belong to or exalt a human being. An element of hope was demanded, and in answer to this demand coming from the universal soul of intelligent humanity nature must give an expression which must tend to the service of life, must meet all conditions of human thought, human development, human philosophy, human understanding. Such expression could not come through literature alone. Art could not evolve nor music express its innate sentiments. It must come in contact with the consciousness of human life. The eye must see, the ear must hear. The deep longing of the human soul must be met with something that should answer their requirements; and they have been met with the grandest revelation that has ever been known, that has ever been penned upon the pages of history. Until it came man could not escape from the grim terror of death in the universe of matter, and the universe of mind as well—death, the destroyer of all love, all hope, all aspiration, all desire! In response to the universal outcry of the human soul, this revelation came to destroy the destroyer, to conquer the conqueror, and now the world exclaims, "Death, where art thou?" and the heavens make answer and reply, "There is no death! there is no death!" Thus, with the advent of Modern Spiritualism, the world has begun to think as it never thought before.

That Spiritualism is true it seems to me is proven by the fact that it invites the investigation and the criticism of the nineteenth century. It moves to the front and it says: "Come here! come here! Here are phenomena that demand investigation." Then comes the scientist with his vast power to calculate, to weigh and measure what he thinks the dimensions and the ultimate atoms of the material universe, and he says: "Show me these phenomena and I will shatter them in pieces." Spiritualism says: "Here is the sublimest philosophy of life that the world has ever known," and the philosopher who has wrapped himself about with the mantle of the dead past says: "Let me investigate it, and I will show you what a stupendous humbug it is." And they do investigate, and the scientist finds a universe too vast for him to measure, the philosopher a science of life too grand to ignore, and they say: "This is what it claims to be"; and so the truth moves on and on—that Spiritualism is the grand centre of science, philosophy, reason, intelligence, wisdom.

In the brief space of forty years this flood of new ideas has spread from pole to pole, from continent to continent, over the face of the whole earth, swept along by a mighty power which is, to a great extent, above and beyond the control of human beings. It has done away with the great powerful God, whose throne is in that strange place known as heaven. It has done away with that strange heaven, and that stranger place known as hell. It can find no use for that strange individual known as the Devil. In the place of God, devil, hell, heaven, it places human beings themselves, with all their hopes, with all their aspirations, with all their understanding, with all their powers of knowledge. Until this time came you could only look upon death as the most dreadful monster of the universe, but with the coming of the tiny rap came light from the very centre of the spiritual universe. It came into your homes without being asked whether it was wanted or not, and shed its radiant beams so far and wide that a world rejoices in the light of conscious immortality. It has broken the chains of church and state. It has given man a right to investigate all questions, all belief, all philosophy, all things high or low, false or true; and so he is expressing himself upon a higher plane of reason and understanding than ever before.

How beautiful for us to know—not to believe, but to know—that there is no angry God, no God possessed, as is taught, of infinite wisdom, but whose anger is as infinite as his wisdom or his power, who at the sound of a trumpet shall awaken the dead from their quiet, harmless sleep, and say to those who believe as John Calvin, or the Pope of Rome, or somebody else says they must believe: "Come into a world of happiness," and to those who could not believe: "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, where shall be weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth!" Spiritualism has made the church admit that the soul cannot "go to hell," into everlasting fire, since spirit cannot burn, and so they are emphasizing the old dogma of the physical resurrection of the body: It is the body that must go to hell and be burned, and as some of them do n't know just how to resurrect this physical body, they are getting to be very much afraid that hell will be lost——to their neighbors!

Very differently talks the church now from what it did forty, twenty five, ten years ago; and if its members would come out and speak their honest convictions, it would be hard to tell the sheep from the goats. When a human being (or class of beings) begins to express to the world his highest conceptions of truth, we have nothing to fear. But when people hide their real convictions behind a screen of worldly prudence and falsehood, then is the light within them darkness. This is the position of the church—Protestant as well as Catholic. Its members are standing behind a screen, and you cannot expect from them what we may hope for from the liberal mind without the church.

Will any minister who is receiving a high salary admit that Spiritualism is true, even though he knows it to be true—knows it because of the mediums in his own family, or through his own honest but timorous investigations elsewhere? He dare not proclaim what he knows to be true—that the proofs of the truths of Spiritualism are so overwhelming they cannot be resisted. If he did he would lose his large salary, and taking that away what would he have left? What Spiritualism asks of its opposers is that they will give it an honest investigation and then honestly declare the result of that investigation. Honesty of purpose and an honest use of the best intelligence that a man has are all that it asks.

I am compelled to proclaim here that the time has come when ministers and priests must be tested to find whether they believe in the Lord Jesus Christ or not. If they stand the test, all right. If they do not, all right, but let them stand out of the way and leave room for honest men to come to the front.

Now Spiritualism has not come to destroy anything. It has not come to destroy governments or systems or Bibles or churches or ministers; it has come to demonstrate truth. Well, supposing the truth is accepted, what will become of all these things? Friends, that is no concern of ours; but if you ask: "How long would they remain in their present position?" I must answer: "Not very long."

Superstition and ignorance recede before the light of Spiritualism, because that light came in on the grand universe of thought that was expressing itself in the higher as well as the lower forms of life. Who of you asked Andrew Jackson Davis to write his Divine Revelations? None of you. Who was willing to accept it? Very few, and those few only those who knew him best and were most closely connected with him. They knew that the simple boy was not capable of writing such a work; they knew that some power beyond their comprehension was at work, and by-and bye they knew what that power was—that it was something belonging to the old, ancient days; that it came from the mighty brains of the most wonderful scientists and philosophers that ever existed on the face of this globe. Friends, did you ask the spirits to come? Did you ask Galen or Socrates or Solon, or any of the great, grand souls of the mighty ages of the past, to congregate in the aura surrounding your earth, and thus come in contact with humanity, teaching that in the world beyond wisdom alone is greatness.

In that world to be great is to be wise. It is not to see how many millions of dollars you can accumulate. It is not whether you have been President of the United States or Governor of Massachusetts. It is wisdom by which souls are weighed, and so those mighty minds did not feel it beneath the grandeur of their lives to come in contact with the poor simple boy born and reared in poverty. They came in power—a power that was to pulsate in the life of humanity, and open the doors of the human soul.

People say: "Look at the mediums." Oh! yes; they have been looked at for some time. If you had never seen them you would not have been Spiritualists. Now what will you do—have the mediums with all the rough and the smooth, or will you, for fear that your hands will get soiled, put them away and let the walls of superstition and bigotry imprison you again? Which will you have? I know which you will have: you will have the mediums with their truthfulness or their untruthfulness, for although the medium, as an individual, may be unreliable, I have never known of any such thing as false mediumship. If any human being within the sound of this voice can demonstrate it, I would like to hear it done. Are mediums, as individuals, always true? If they were, where could they go? Men get more money for misrepresentations than they do for telling the truth. Why, one single minister receives more money for telling what you all know is absolutely erroneous than is paid to all the mediums in the city of Boston. What does this show? Why, that mediums tell the truth, and truth will sustain itself without money. It will not die; you cannot imprison it; you cannot kill it; you have tried, and what is the result? The result is that Spiritualism has grown and grown, until it has spread over the whole earth—until millions openly acknowledge its supremacy. And who can tell the number of those who, unwilling to be known as believers in the new philosophy, are yet compelled to acknowledge, from the evidence that comes to them—against their will even—comes in their own homes, and compels them to admit to themselves that it is what it claims to be? They are compelled to know that the voices that speak to them are the voices of those the world calls dead.

Spiritualism has come, and what has it done? Why, it has shattered old beliefs that the Church has been building for nineteen hundred years. How has it done it? By calling into action the intelligence of human beings; not calling up beliefs or opinions, but the realities of life, and making its demands on the powers of your being, compelling them to come in contact with the uplifting influences from the great beyond. Friends, what can you ask of Spiritualism to do more than this that it has done for you in this time? It has come to you clothed in garments as white as snow, as beautiful as sunshine. From the immortal world it has come to the children of men, bringing the eternal blessings of harmony, knowledge, love, justice and peace."

An improvised poem on "The Day We Celebrate," by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, was a very pleasant feature of the morning's exercises, which were closed by a song from Dr. Buffum.

Saturday Afternoon.—The exercises of the afternoon were very pleasantly begun by a song from Mr. J. T. Lillie.

Mr. J. William Fletcher then gave his extremely interesting and beautifully illustrated lecture, defining and illustrating the nature and growth of Spiritualism, the Spiritualism of the nineteenth century, and the Spiritualism of the Bible as well, and, at the same time, presenting scenes in Palestine and in Europe, and giving interesting personal reminiscences of his tour through those lands.

Portraits of many famous individuals, notably mediums, were presented, among which were those of the Fox Sisters, Daniel D. Home, William Eglinton, Dr. Henry Slade, Davenport Brothers, Cora L. V. Richmond, Lizzie Doten, Charles H. Foster and Mrs. J. H. Conant.

Pictures of the Poet Longfellow, Queen Victoria, the Empress Eugenie, Napoleon III., and other eminent personages were also shown, and full proof of their faith in Spiritualism was given.

The city of Paris, the royal palace at Versailles, the Coliseum at Rome, Westminster Abbey, and other places of great interest and beauty were shown, while copies of some of Doré's most famous pictures gave additional interest to the entertainment.

Taken as a whole, Mr. Fletcher's lecture was both entertaining and instructive in a high degree.

Saturday Evening.—At the closing exercises of the day a large audience again assembled. The first speech of the evening was made by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, who spoke briefly as follows:

ADDRESS OF MRS. LILLIE.

Friends: We are here to make only a few remarks this evening. We are aware of the fact that many earnest laborers in the field of truth are with us this evening, and a few thoughts are expected from each. We have been sitting in your presence to-day, abiding with you as spirits, coming to you through our medium, and now we feel that we would like to make the assertion of our own individual presence, and have it plainly understood that we come as distinct, individual personalities, beholding you, though you behold us not, knowing you, though you know us not, save in the thoughts to which we may give expression through this instrument.

With you we feel a deep interest in this day, which tells us that our Spiritualism counts its forty years of growth and development. We know it is older than that, but this means its modern wave, its latter-day interpretation: It means the coming of the spirit of truth in a time when man had grown to that condition that the race, or a portion of it, was able to appreciate the possibilities of an occasion like this. This is why two little girls, belonging to the sensitives of the race, could be made vehicles for the incoming of this stupendous truth—could receive it in their childlike, simple manner, yet with a rationalism that no one in the ages of the past has been able to give to its interpretation. They belonged to a time that was ripe for such development—an age that gave birth to such movements as the placing of cables beneath the great ocean that should be the means for transmitting thought from continent to continent. It was fitting that in such a time the celestial cable for the transmission of thought from spheres above should make its presence known. Well may you rejoice in this knowledge. Future ages will call the people together to celebrate its advent. Well may you rejoice that, for you, the clouds are lifted and the light shines through. Rejoice that you live in an age that was ripe for such fruitage as this! Rejoice that on history's page will be written that to you was given the true light of spiritual knowledge! Rejoice that at last there shall be no lost souls or wrecked ones, but every imprisoned spirit shall be set free! Then why should not songs all triumphant arise in your musical lays? Why should not glad songs of praise arise? No religion ever brought to man so bright a promise; no science of life, no philosophy of spirit was ever given to him that was so well suited to all his needs.

It was what the ages had waited for. It was what the heart of humanity had fainted for when it stood beside its loved ones and saw the grave close over them, with no knowledge, no positive assurance of meeting them again—nothing but the wan shadow of a hope, whose faint light could do little to pierce the gloom of the dark valley. The want of the ages has been met—met at the proper time and season. Nature waits during her winter for her seedtime, her spring, and then she sows the seed that shall bring the harvest. Well may you rejoice, you whose earth is so young, that you are living in its spring—that its winter has passed and the promise of the glorious harvest has appeared, the harvest whose fruition will be the perfecting of all souls.

Now, while at the future we're gazing
A moment, with you here to-night,
And while the dear angels you're praising
Who have brought you the blessings of light,
The forms of your loved ones approach you,
So near that their breath you may feel,
So near to your hearts are they pressing,
So close to your side do they kneel,
And they point to the opening portal,
And show the broad highway of love,
On which, all triumphant, immortal,
You, too, shall be carried above.

May a realization of this be yours! So shall the gates more widely open and the light more freely flow, the light which leads to peace and joy forevermore.

At the conclusion of Mrs. Lillie's remarks a humorous recitation, "The Inventor's Wife," was given by Miss Addie Hazleton, in a manner that would have done credit to an adult elocutionist, after which Dr. J. C. Street made a few remarks, saying in substance:

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: It is a great pleasure to see so many earnest men and women present on the Anniversary of the day you celebrate, the day which gave you liberty, light and knowledge. Many, many times a creed-bound world has made strong effort to sound its death-knell, but intercommunion with the spirit-world still lives. It is strange that the sublimest truths have always brought hatred and infamy to their first promulgators, but so it has ever been. In spite of persecution and opposition, Spiritualism still lives, and grows and grows, in this land and in all others. No opposition can crush it; no creed or dogma can drive it out. It has come to remain, for truth is mighty, and will prevail. In these eventful days the world demands a spiritual rostrum freed from the narrow prejudices of the past, that shall give forth truth pure and simple. And when we can live up to the level of that truth, Spiritualists will have but one heart, love; but one mind, equality; but one disposition, purity; but one eye, seeing the good in all things; but one form and figure, uprightness. This will be the true religion in which every soul, from the highest to the lowest, can find its place in which to ripen and expand, to gain the knowledge that gives liberty and peace.

If we make no effort to raise our lives to the level of these truths, we are not worthy of them. Oh! let us lay aside the narrowness of the past, and, arising from our littleness, our selfishness, walk in the light of wisdom.

Man's mental capacity is limited only by the limitations that he makes for himself. If he can rise above his own blind selfishness, he can fathom the economy of the universe. He can look through the limitless regions of space and see the numberless worlds that fill it; he can trace the workings of the great spiritual universe that underlies and vivifies the material universe. Walking in the light of this truth, he will not fall into those mistakes that often make such shipwrecks of earthly life.

All over the world the light of the day we celebrate is dawning—coming in silence, it may be, in many of earth's dark places—to those who understand it not. To us it comes in a full blaze of glory, and in its brightness may you find the peace that will bear you to the land of holy rest.

Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock was the next speaker of the evening. She said, briefly:

Ladies and Gentlemen—It is indeed forty years ago since the first tiny rap at Hydesville opened the door between this world and the next. How many lessons have those tiny raps taught to Spiritualists! How many lessons have they taught to those who are not Spiritualists! And yet how many more there are that Spiritualists know nothing of! Away beyond, as far as thought can go, we see an ocean of intelligence, of conscious power and wisdom, which must sometime come to this world to develop spirits while they yet occupy the physical body, and make us what we claim to be, Spiritualists. Spiritual (Spirituelle)—what a word that is! When we look at the word, what does it tell us? It tells of the divinity in man; it tells of a nature closely allied to God, the Father; and yet when we as Spiritualists claim Spiritualism as our religion, we are scoffed at. Why, it is the purest name that any religion can bear—the purest and the truest! We are asked, sometimes, the question: "What does Spiritualism teach? Does it teach you any theory outside of this life?" We answer: "Yes, it teaches of the other life."

On this day, the Fortieth Anniversary of the opening of the door between this world and the next, the influence of Spiritualism is being felt more than it ever was before; and we are told by those who return from the unseen shore, that the time is fast approaching when we shall know as we are known; that we, spirits in a cumbrous body, shall by-and-bye be able to perform the work of life more as the spirits who are freed from this form of matter.

We do feel that many of the disturbances of the present time are caused by the influence of the spirit-world endeavoring to drive away the weaknesses and faults of human nature that we may know ourselves. Then shall we be willing to be known by the pure spirits from the other shore who can come to us bringing lessons of peace, of joy, of wisdom and of strength. Then shall we be able to bear proudly the name of Spiritualists. And proudly may we speak of Spiritualism now, when we look over the wide earth, and see what it has done. We call it Modern Spiritualism, and say it is only forty years old. Is it not, rather, as old as time; so old that the mind of man cannot go back to the day of its birth? When we speak of Modern Spiritualism, let us look back, and say as has been said before, that it takes the conditions of the winter to bring the flowers of spring and summer; so with Spiritualism: it has had its winter, but its summer is approaching, and its flowers shall cover the whole earth. Then there will be but one religion, and every one will be proud to be a Spiritualist, and live under the banner of Spiritualism.

Then followed a song by "Matilda Jane," in which she displayed a great deal of histrionic ability, as well as the capacity of a sweet and powerful voice. Mr. Frank T. Ripley, the well-known test medium, then took the platform. Mr. Ripley said, in effect:

It is a great pleasure for me to be with you this evening, while you are celebrating the fortieth anniversary of Truth—not a new truth, but the same old truth, the truth that will carry you triumphantly across the bridge that spans the river that we call death. I am pleased to see so many earnest faces, so much intelligence here. . . . Spiritualism is a religion for you to die by; not only will it sustain you through life, but it will carry you safely into the eternal world. We, as Spiritualists, know that the life here is simply the beginning of a larger life to come.

Spiritualism is a mighty power, that gives us a knowledge of God—God in everything. Why, I can worship God in these beautiful flowers, in every bud and blossom. I can recognize him in every atom of the material universe, but most of all in the human soul. [Mr. Ripley closed his remarks (which he said were given chiefly to assist his guides to assume control) by a quotation from one of Miss Lizzie Doten's beautiful poems, after which he gave some remarkable tests, which were accepted as positive proof of the presence of returning spirit friends by the parties to whom they were given. He also gave communications from well-known spirits to their friends who were present, which excited much interest, especially one from Dr. Wm. A. Dunklee, of Boston, so long a most efficient worker in the Boston Spiritual Temple Society. Mr. Dunklee came with a beautiful message of love and cheer to his sorrowing companion, assuring her of his continued presence and his enduring love for her, which, as he has gained new powers of life, is stronger and brighter than even in the long years of their happy married life.]

Dr. J. L. Paxson was next introduced, and said:

Mr. Chairman and Friends: I do not propose to consume much of your time this evening, but there are some thoughts that press themselves upon me. At this hour I seem to be carried back into the life of past ages, and I see the thought of the spirit-world that has impressed itself upon the thought of humanity, and that spirituality is impressing itself upon this age, this hour. Wherever the atmosphere of our planet is in condition to receive them, come the messengers of light; and they are with us here to night ready to quicken us into earnestness of purpose and unity of action as never before in the history of our planet.

The next few years will give us such revolutions as you have now but a feeble conception of. I know that the elements of organic life, as far as man is concerned, are rapidly passing through wonderful changes, that new conditions are being formed that will unfold man as he has never been unfolded before in the history of our planet. These conditions will make their impress upon us and unfold our deep, interior natures, giving to us a power of mind that is beyond our ability to understand at all. The power of the soul of man is limitless, under these new conditions of growth and development, and the dawning of the new day is with you even now.

The last speaker of the evening was Mr. J. B. Hatch, sen., who said briefly:

Friends: A few days ago I received a note from Capt. Holmes, stating that the Fortieth Anniversary of Spiritualism was to be celebrated in this hall to-day, and it was expected of me to be present and add my mite; so I came not to make a speech, but only to report for duty, in answer to the roll-call. I am glad our good Bro. Dunklee has manifested his presence here to night, and I want to say gratefully, if it had not been for him I should not have been standing here before you: Many years ago, when the Boston Lyceum held its meetings in Lyceum Hall, I strolled in there as a visitor. Bro. Dunklee was at that time Assistant Conductor of the school. In a few minutes he came to me and said: "I want you to go into the ante room and assist us in our work." I was a stranger to the work of Spiritualism, and hardly knew what to do or say; but a still, small voice whispered: "Do your duty." I went, and from that day to this have been a constant worker. What work have we on hand to day more important than the education of our young people in the truths of Spiritualism? May the time never come when, if asked why they celebrate the 31st of March, they shall be unable to answer.

I want our young people to know that in its forty years of life, Spiritualism has made more progress than old beliefs have made in centuries. Bro. Ripley made the remark that Spiritualism was good enough for him to die by; I say it is good enough for me to live by, and so if is assuredly good enough for me to die by; and if good to live by, and to die by, it is a religion good enough for me to teach my children. If we do not instruct our children in the truths of the New Dispensation we make a sad mistake. [In conclusion, Mr. Hatch stated that as great as the record of Spiritualism had been in the past, he believed there were greater achievements and grander triumphs for it in the future.]

The audience was then dismissed with a few parting words from Captain Holmes, which closed Saturday's Anniversary exercises.

[To be continued hereafter.]

Attleboro', Mass.

The Anniversary was observed with appropriate exercises in the hall of the Spiritual Society.

On March 31st the ladies held a unique and successful bazaar and entertainment, which brought to the treasury of the Society forty-one dollars, after clearing all expenses. This bazaar was opened at 2 P. M., and from that hour until midnight the hall presented a brilliant and animated appearance. The decorations were very fine, especially that at the head of the hall over the speakers' stand, where a large motto, framed in evergreen, bore the inscription: "March 31st, 1848—'Tidings of Great Joy.'" Tables laden with useful and fancy articles to be sold at reasonable prices; a generous refreshment stand, where ice cream and cake found ready purchasers; a spacious booth where all sorts of sweets and fruits were on sale, attracted the eye upon entering the place of assembly. A tripod, from which swung an ancient and huge caldron that had served for culinary purposes in revolutionary times, stood near the centre of the hall. This had been filled with "Japanese pudding," and the "plums," as "spooned out" by the merry crowd investing their nickels, proved both tempting and useful. Many children were made happy at this spot by the kindness of a certain gentleman who treated them generously to the plums of that magic pudding.

In the far-off corner hung a curtain, behind which Miss M. T. Shelhamer, of Boston, under the influence of one of her spirit-band, "Harebell," gave life-readings to eager patrons with most satisfactory results. The medium on this occasion was clothed in the brilliant costume of her little messenger spirit "Lotela," whose teacher and guide "Harebell" claims to be.

As the evening hours wore on, the excitement waxed high. The sales grew more frequent, voting for various useful works proceeded with fervor, and the scene became even more animated than before. Games were indulged in by the younger visitors, while their elders discoursed in a social manner, or busied themselves at the tables and stalls, until the signal was given for the clearing of the floor, when a merry dance was arranged for all who cared to participate, until the midnight hour.

Among the articles voted for were two nicely executed crayon pictures of dogs, each appropriately framed in gilt, the work of their donor, Miss Emma Larabee. One of these was awarded to Mr. Shattuck, the popular President of the Society, and the other to some one whose name the writer did not learn. A copy each of Miss Shelhamer's books, "Outside the Gates" and "Life and Labor in the Spirit-World," was disposed of by vote—the first being awarded to Mr. Forsyth, of the Society, and the latter to the Children's Lyceum.

Great credit is due to the projectors and managers of this festival: especially worthy of mention in this connection are Messrs. Shattuck and Wilbur, with Mrs. Thompson and Miss Larabee, whose indefatigable labors and unfailing courtesy went very far toward ensuring the signal success of the entertainment.

On Sunday, April 1st, the usual services were held afternoon and evening—Miss M. T. Shelhamer presiding as speaker at both meetings.

In the afternoon the guides of this lady selected as their theme: "The Rock on which we Build," opening the discourse with an allegory of an oppressed and persecuted people that had been crowded by the iron hand of despotism until a few of the mass rebelled and determined to flee from their tyrants. A trackless sea swept around their sorry home, but undauntedly the little band launched their frail bark and steered away. At length they came to a rocky point from which arose a giant fortress of stone. Here they paused, and one more daring than the rest resolved to scale the lofty height, nor could he be deterred by the dissuading voices of his friends. Anxiously they watched his upward climb, but as he went he discovered little footholds and tenacious vines by the aid of which he rose still higher; and by-and-bye his companions, one by one, followed in his upward track. At last they reached the summit, and found a prospect fair and broad sweeping around them. The place on which they stood was not as barren as they feared, and inspection proved that it afforded means of sustenance for those who might wish to build thereon. Here the little band tarried and made their homes, finding relief from persecution, coming into contact with nature and gaining knowledge and inspiration from her wondrous works, until, crowned with years and ripened by experience, the original number passed higher, leaving useful records of their work to those who came to fill their places and to emulate their lives.

The speaker then turned to humanity, picturing its struggles with error and superstition, reviewing the ages when the cruel despotism of priestcraft had held mankind in thrall until a few earnest souls had dared to listen to the voice of the spirit, and to launch their boats upon the sea of investigation and sail forth in search of something better beyond their prison walls. These had gone on until the eternal rock of Truth had appeared, and daring to scale its massive height had found fields of knowledge and storehouses of experiences for their welcome and their attainment. There they had builded their homes and begun their labors, and ever and again there came wafted to them from beyond words of cheer and encouragement to inspire their faithful souls. Those who stand upon this eternal rock may lift their heads in fearless calm toward the golden heavens, for no tempest can sweep them from its face; no dashing wave reach their lofty height; for Truth forever shall remain, though man-made systems decay and time be known no more.

The evening service, as usual, opened with singing, followed by an invocation, after which Miss Shelhamer read the following Anniversary Poem, which she had written for this special occasion:

MARCH 31ST, 1848-1888.

BY M. T. SHELHAMER.

Hark! what joy-bells gladly ringing
O'er the earth this holy night!
What the message they are bringing
With their tongues of silvery light?
'T is the story of salvation
From old superstition's power,
For the hope of man's redemption
Comes to quell his fears this hour.

Fear is conquered, for the portal
Of the tomb but leads to Life;
Love forever soars in triumph
Over discord, pain and strife.
Hear the joy-bells in their pealing,
Listen to the words they sing:
"Death forevermore is vanquished,
Life itself is Lord and King!"

Back and forth 'twixt earth and heaven,
Hark! the glad bells grandly swing,
Pealing forth this sweet assurance:
"Tidings of great joy we bring!"
Every tone is full of meaning,
Every note 's an angel's voice;
Each vibration is an anthem,
Bidding all the earth rejoice.

Forty years have slowly gathered
Since those bells first swept the air,
Ringing forth in exultation
From Life's highlands "Over There."
Forty years since first the heavens,
Touched by an immortal light,
Flashed and flamed with radiant splendor,
Banishing the clouds of night.

Forty years! and earth grows fairer
With a bright perennial bloom,
Caught from breezes warm and genial,
Blowing from beyond the tomb.
Forty years! and man, awakened
From the spell of doubt and grief,
Finds himself a new born creature,
Through this blessèd glad relief.

Forty years! and myriad voices
From the angel choirs above,
Still rehearse their wondrous chorus
In united tones of love:
"Jubilate! Jubilate!
Man shall live forevermore!"
Earth and sky repeat the anthem
As it rolls from shore to shore.

Forty years proclaim the story:
"Human love can never die;
Friends by death once torn asunder,
In the glorious by-and-bye
Shall again be reunited;"
Thus the joy-bells grandly sing:
"Death forevermore is vanquished,
Life itself is Lord and King!"

The guides of the speaker then proceeded to deliver an earnest and forcible lecture upon "The Advent, Growth and Results of Modern Spiritualism." It would be impossible to do justice to this discourse in any ordinary abstract; it was replete with information concerning the appearance of Spiritualism at Hydesville, N. Y., in 1848; it traced the growth of the movement throughout the land; inspected the development and exercise of the various phases of mediumship—each of which, the speaker affirmed, contains useful and nourishing elements for the spiritual instruction and support of its learners and investigators—gave a synoptical report of the work that had been aimed at and accomplished by Modern Spiritualism in the brief period of forty years; summarized the united efforts of spirits and mortal reformers to cleanse the world of ignorance and to free mankind from error, and predicted the sure progress of the cause of truth throughout the entire globe.

Why should we not observe our Anniversary (said the speaker), since it is, to millions of hearts, the death of bigotry and fear, the birth of happiness and of undoubted knowledge? Christendom to-day observes with joyful recognition what it is pleased to call the resurrection of Christ: the triumph of life and immortality over death and the sepulchre! What was this but a stupendous spiritual manifestation? for we are told that Jesus, after suffering martyrdom and death, arose at the third day and came forth a living man. Thus is the triumph of spirit over matter observed with joyful acclaim, with floral decorations and service of harmonious praise on every hand. Why should not we who, as Spiritualists, have seen the dawn of a new era, beheld the light of a grander dispensation of truth, listened to the voice of the Immortal Spirit, witnessed the reappearance of our dead, and become aware of the bursting of the tomb by angel-power, celebrate our spiritual Easter with thanksgiving and song, uniting in thought and aspiration and desire to speed on the noble work that spirits pursue in helpful service to mankind, and in spreading the joyful tidings of immortal love o'er all the earth. ***

Brockton, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society of Brockton celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary at its Parlors, No. 138 Main street, Wednesday, March 28th. Although the weather was unfavorable and the traveling bad, there was a fair audience in attendance in the afternoon, and they were well paid for braving the storm.

The services opened at 2:45 with a piano solo by Mrs. May, followed by an invocation by Rev. S. L. Beal, after which the following programme was rendered:

After a song by Mrs. R. C. Brown, remarks by the spirit-guides of Mrs. C. M. Nickerson, of New Bedford (formerly of Orleans), were in order. She said the present was but the beginning of a long series of celebrations, each one of which would work an advance in spiritual growth and the dissemination of this new gospel of peace. As the winter has passed, and spring, with its warmth and sunshine, has come to us, so has the winter of superstition and bigotry gone into the vanished past, and the bright, glad spring of reason and truth opened to the waiting children of earth! And as we are this afternoon looking for the storm-clouds to break away and the sun to shine forth and gladden the earth, so are we looking for the clouds of priestcraft and ignorance to be dissolved, and the sun of spirituality and wisdom to brighten and gladden the hearts of mankind. And as surely as the sun will shine after the storm, so surely will the sun of reason, truth and justice come to guide our spirits onward and upward to a more perfect knowledge of the land beyond the "crystal sea." She closed with a fine impromptu poem.

Next came a song by Miss Orr, of Lynn, and Prof. W. F. Peck, of Boston. Prof. Peck then read a poem by Lizzie Doten, and supplemented it by some remarks on Modern Spiritualism. This was followed by a song by Walter D. Packard.

Next came tests by that truly wonderful young man, Edgar W. Emerson. No commendation is necessary for him, as all who know him know that he is doing a wonderful work for Spiritualism, aiding our spirit friends to open wide the "golden gates," so long standing ajar, and revealing to the vision of mortals the beauties of the land of souls. God speed him in his noble work. The afternoon services closed with a song by Miss Orr and Prof. Peck.

Supper was announced at 5:30. The tables were bountifully supplied with cold meats, pies, cakes, fruits, etc., and neatly and tastefully arranged and ornamented with flowers. Over two hundred partook of the supper, and left the table feeling as those who patronize the "Ladies' Aid" suppers always do—perfectly satisfied. From the supper table we repaired to the audience room to listen to the evening exercises, which were substantially the same as the afternoon services, and closed with a benediction by Rev. S. L. Beal. On the whole it was a pleasant, enjoyable and instructive entertainment, and was, socially and financially, a success. R.

Greenwich, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Independent Liberal Church in Greenwich appropriately observed Easter, and the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, in the services of Sunday, April 1st.

In response to an invitation to the audience of the Sunday previous, to provide potted plants and cut flowers for decorative purposes, abundant material was early brought to the church, and in the hands of an efficient Committee the platform was transformed into a scene of rare beauty. A large proportion of the floral offerings were tributes of love, tenderly dedicated to friends in spirit-life, each bearing the name of the remembered loved one, and of the loving giver. Fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, children dear, and honored friends, Indians of the valley, and John M. Spear as spirit presences, must have responded to the mute appeals.

The services were opened with appropriate music, followed by readings by the speaker (Mrs. Juliette Yeaw) of a portion of the twentieth chapter of John; then a short account of the origin of the spiritual manifestations, and some extracts from THE BANNER'S account of the celebration of the Twentieth Anniversary of Spiritualism, from which a discourse was elaborated, touching upon the observance of Easter, as based upon the resurrection of Jesus, as not adequate to meet the soul-yearnings of to-day, which were met and answered in the revelations commemorated by the modern Easter.

The exercises of the Lyceum were held in the audience-room, and were of exceptional interest. The recitations of the children were all aptly chosen for the occasion. The general lesson, "Spirit," called forth several fine readings, after which the speaker briefly addressed the Lyceum upon the same subject.

Thus closed the exercises of a day replete with blessed memories, sweet and refreshing alike to old and young; encouraging the heart of him who has planted this fair garden in the desert of bigotry and conservatism.

JULIETTE YEAW

Lynn, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At the session of the Children's Progressive Lyceum, April 1st, the attendance was smaller than usual, as many availed themselves of the opportunity to attend the Anniversary exercises in Boston. We had a fine literary programme by the following members: Jessie Hutchins, Celia Goodwin, Lena Lamphier, Ethel Herrick, Stanley Balcom, Mabel Cheever, Mrs. Durgin, Miss Collyer, and Mrs. Pierce; remarks by Dr. Furbush, and Mr. Shaw of Peabody.

The First Society of Spiritualists, the Ladies' Aid and the Lyceum, joined in a union celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary, at Mechanic Hall, on Friday, March 30th. It was a very pleasant service, and was enjoyed by a large audience both afternoon and evening. George A. Fuller gave the address, and Edgar W. Emerson presented several recognized tests in the afternoon.

In the evening a fine musical and literary entertainment was given, and a dance was participated in, in the lower hall.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Our Society noticed the Fortieth Anniversary by interesting meetings at our hall on Sunday, April 1st. A number of mediums assembled at the first session, and conference exercises, etc., consumed the time.

In the afternoon A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium, delivered an eloquent address, and was listened to with marked attention. His evening discourse was one of the most able and interesting lectures we have ever heard upon our platform. Mr. Tisdale improvised music at the close of his lecture, which every one was delighted to hear. He is a fine orator, and should be kept busy upon our platforms.

B. S. FREEMAN, Cor. Sec'y.

No. 5 Brooks street.

Philadelphia, Pa.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated on Sunday, April 1st, with even greater spiritual inspiration than many of its predecessors. The interest manifested by Spiritualists and those not recognized as such was of the most decided character.

The attendance in the morning was large, and in the evening unusually so—filling the hall to its fullest capacity. The decorations were of impressive character, and—particularly in the display of plants and flowers, natural and artificial, which graced the platform—especially noticeable. The choir gave appropriate voice to songs and hymns arranged in the programme for the day and evening.

The following order of exercises was adhered to, and met with a responsive fervor, which, under the inspiration of two lectures by that queen of platform speakers, Mrs. H. S. Lake, of Boston, gave the whole an eclat that fulfilled the hopes of those who contributed to the occasion their labor and material aid, which in their spiritual sense doubtless were acceptably appreciated by the attendant and controlling spirit intelligences.

Morning: Conference from 9:30 to 10:30; Anniversary hymn—"We have Come Unto the Mountain," congregation; selection, choir; poem, Mrs. H. S. Lake; selection, choir; invocation and address, Mrs. H. S. Lake; hymn—"We Love no Triumphs Sprung of Force," congregation.

Afternoon.—Conference from 1:30 to 2:30; Lyceum exercises.

Evening.—Conference from 6 to 7:30; Anniversary hymn, "The World hath felt a Quickening Breath," congregation; selection, choir; poem, Mrs. H. S. Lake; selection, choir; invocation and address, Mrs. H. S. Lake; hymn, "Sweet Home Above," congregation.

The theme of the morning lecture was: "The Distinctive Features of Modern Spiritualism," which, through its exhaustive force and keen spirit logic, was grand and instructive.

The poem of the morning, from spirit dictation, was beautifully expressed. It was entitled: "The Land where our Dreams come True," and was received with appreciative demonstrations.

The evening lecture exposed the dangers that menace spiritual mediumship and Spiritualism, and was listened to with earnest attention from the beginning to the end. The poem entitled: "The Three Preachers," was read with an emphasis and duly appreciated by the audience.

The Lyceum exercises were witnessed and listened to by a crowded assembly, and, we may add, were accorded frequent applause.

There was a large attendance at each of the three conferences, presided over by Bro. Thomas Phillips. The President, Joseph Wood, and B. P. Benner, Vice President, contributed a very pertinent and appropriate measure of official duty; and take it all together, the Fortieth Anniversary will be pleasurably remembered. Z.

In addition to the information furnished by the above correspondent concerning the Anniversary and its observance in Philadelphia, we are in receipt of a letter from R. A. Thompson, from which we glean the following points:

"At 2:30 P. M., on Sunday, April 1st, the Lyceum exercises were opened under the charge of Mr. Robert Coffman, assisted by Bros. Huber, Smith, Peterson, Shultz, and many others, who seemed to vie with each other in helping to make it one of the most successful features of the Anniversary Day. The many bright and beautiful happy children, with their splendid banners and flags—with their musical tread—constituted a scene not to be soon forgotten. The calisthenics by a group of young ladies—as also a drill by young gents—were heartily applauded. Recitations, solo and duets by the scholars were particularly fine."

"During the previous week the Ladies' Aid, composed of Spiritualists of the First and other associations, held a Fair in the hall. Fancy and useful articles were in abundance. The refreshment table, under the able management of Sisters McCahan, Bailey, Fariena, Cadwallader, Jackson, Dubois, was very successful. Tables also under charge of Sisters Hutchinson, Doll, Bronson, Thompson, Faust, Fray, Hofman, Ewers, Shumway, Benner, Galloway, Shuster, Stauffer, Humphries, Bache, Perry, Jagol, Miss Carroll, and others, with a profusion of fancy goods, baskets, glass ware, groceries, etc., made a fine display. The soda fountain, under charge of Messrs. Dubois, Benner, McCahan and Langley, was quite a feature, as also was the Fish Pond of Messrs. Morris, Jennings, and others. Many happy evenings were spent by all, ending with a concert by a fine band of music of Bro. Thaler."

Cedar Falls, Ia.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was observed here by a parlor lecture from Dr. Edward L. Lyon, at the residence of Mr. Douglas Smith. The Universalists here, though not numerous, are liberal, and freely grant us the use of their pleasant church on our Anniversary and other occasions; but that edifice being closed for repairs just now, we held our services in a private house rather than omit the meeting altogether.

Dr. Lyon gave a very interesting discourse upon the Bible evidences of Spiritualism, also showing what Spiritualism has accomplished during the forty years since its advent.

Very few men, whether clergymen or others, are better informed concerning biblical lore than Dr. Lyon, and he always deals heavy blows in favor of Spiritualism. J. C. N. A.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated on Sunday, April 1st, at 3 and 8 P. M., by the Progressive Spiritualists of this city, at Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th street.

Both sessions on this memorial occasion proved of unusual interest to good and appreciative audiences, in the development of facts in our movement.

The afternoon meeting consisted of a memorial address by the Conductor; Miss Fanny Naegeli, organist, in Easter hymn; remarks and an inspirational poem by Mrs. Effie Moss, materializing medium; Sidney R. Allen, in song and words of cheer; poetic recitation and address by Mrs. S. Self; Mr. Scott, in song, etc. Closing exercises in spirit tests by the Conductor, which were acknowledged to be definite and correct.

Evening Meeting opened by invocation and lecture by Dr. J. S. Williams. Songs, by organist and Mr. Whitcomb. Appropriate remarks and tests of spirit presence (for one hour, most of which were fully recognized,) were given by the Conductor.

PROF. G. G. W. VAN HORN, Conductor,

Brooklyn, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Spiritual Society of Brooklyn held its Anniversary exercises on March 25th, that its members might avail themselves of the services of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lillie, who had ministered most acceptably to that organization the previous two Sundays.

On the evening of the 25th, Conservatory Hall was packed to the utmost with old friends and new investigators to enjoy this Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

Judge Dailey made the opening address, in his usual felicitous style, and among many cheering statements concerning our spiritual outlook in the future said he believed that fully one-half of the people of Brooklyn were Spiritualists, in the sense that they believed in spirit communion. Judge Dailey also said that within a few weeks he had a conversation with a prominent politician of Brooklyn, who remarked that the time is soon coming when there will be only two parties, the Spiritualist and Materialist. These statements were heartily applauded.

Mrs. Lillie then gave a logical and eloquent discourse upon: "The Past, Present and Future Outlook of Modern Spiritualism," followed by an improvised poem upon "Heaven." Mr. Lillie sang: "Do Not Drink To-night, My Boy," in a pathetic and exquisitely touching voice. Others participated in these exercises—Miss Vanderbilt giving a perfect recitation. E. B. R.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A gathering of—to quote the next morning's Standard—"about one hundred and fifty well-dressed and intelligent-appearing people" occurred at Odd Fellows Hall, in this city, Sunday evening, April 1st, to commemorate the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism.

The occasion was pleasant and profitable to the participants, who all rejoice that the event was not allowed to pass without public recognition.

Miss Carrie E. Downer of Baldwinsville, N. Y., was present and appropriately addressed the meeting. H. H.

Portland, Me.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary was duly celebrated in Portland on Saturday evening, March 31st, at Mystic Hall.

For this occasion a committee of ladies had most tastefully decorated the platform. The words: "Progress of Spiritualism—1848—1888," adorned the background of the stage, and underneath this legend on a table was placed a very large and beautiful floral piece representing "The Gates Ajar." On one side of the platform was a rustic basket filled with beautiful flowering plants and trailing vines; on the other side a table with bouquets of rare cut flowers tastefully arranged. In front of the stage was a large table completely filled with baskets and vases of cut flowers, all arranged artistically. From the auditorium the whole stage looked like a most exquisite floral design. On the right, partly hidden by trailing vines, was suspended that picture, dear to all Spiritualists on account of its sweet associations—"The Dawning Light."

The exercises commenced at 8 P. M. Mr. H. C. Berry presided with grace and dignity. He opened the meeting with brief remarks appropriate to the occasion. A most beautiful and impressive invocation was pronounced by Mrs. Berry.

The address was then given by Geo. A. Fuller, M. D., of Dover, Mass. The speaker chose for his subject: "The Origin and Progress of Spiritualism." The discourse was an elaborate exposition of the theme, and was listened to most attentively by the large audience, which taxed the seating capacity of the hall to its utmost.

The exercises were interspersed with appropriate songs beautifully rendered by Mrs. Woodman and Mrs. Runnells.

Certainly the friends in Portland may feel that their celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism was a most successful one. ****

The People's Spiritual Society of Chicago—presided over by G. L. S. Jenifer—celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary at its Hall, 116 Fifth Avenue, on Sunday, April 1st.

The following programme was rendered: Singing by the audience; a poem, given inspirationally, by Mrs. Bromwell; singing by the choir; reading, by Mrs. Jenifer, of an account of the early phenomena as manifested through the Fox Girls; singing by the audience; address by Dr. John Arnoup; duet, by Mrs. Orvis and Mr. Wendell; fire test by Mr. and Mrs. Bernell and grandchild; psychometrical reading by Mrs. Graham. Several mediums gave good tests.

The entire affair passed off in the most agreeable manner, and will long be remembered by all who were present. G.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary was observed at Druid's Hall, 303 Main street, under the auspices of the First Society of Spiritualists, on Easter Sunday, April 1st. The morning service was held at 10:30 A. M., the evening at 7:30 P. M. J. M. Allen, of New Orleans, La., inspirational trance speaker, gave the addresses, which were followed by psychometric readings. †

Providence, R. I.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther gave the Anniversary address Sunday morning, April 1st, eliciting much applause from the large audience.

Sunday evening, Rev. F. A. Hinckley lectured on the Proposed Amendment to the Constitution of Rhode Island—the controls of Mrs. Luther supplementing his lecture with remarks very pertinent to the matter in hand.

The entertainment of Saturday evening, March 31st, passed off very pleasantly—Mrs. Luther, J. V. Mansfield, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Pope, Dr. C. T. Buffum, Mr. Arthur Fenner and Master Boyden taking part in the exercises.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Spiritual Union held Anniversary exercises at Grand Army Hall, on Sunday, April 1st.

A committee of ladies, under the direction of Mrs. C. W. Spalding, decorated the platform with lovely flowers, and there were several choice pieces contributed by members of the Society—noticeable among which was a magnificent star, placed on the speakers' stand by Mrs. Chapman, who, in her office as Secretary, has aided greatly in the success of the lectures for the past three seasons.

Mr. J. W. Fletcher was the orator of the day, choosing as his theme for the afternoon: "Christian Science," and in the evening: "The Harvest of Forty Years."

The hall was crowded at both lectures, and the speaker was repeatedly applauded. The local papers gave us fine notices. X.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was not allowed to pass unnoticed here. A commemorative circle was held at the house of R. R. Callender, and, as usual, proved a most enjoyable and instructive meeting. A short review of the history of the movement, a thoughtful discourse, and tests through Mr. Callender, music, flowers and good feeling made the occasion one to be remembered by those present. E. S. Blackfriars' Theatre.

A chancery suit of 1612, in the public record office, which has hitherto escaped notice, furnishes some interesting details concerning theatrical matters in the time of Shakspeare. The suit was brought against Richard Burbidge, John Hemings, and others, in respect of the lease of Blackfriars' Theatre, which the said Burbidge, by deed dated 2d September, 42 Elizabeth, demised to Henry Evans, "whoe intended then presentlye to erect or sett vp a Companye of boys... or others, to playe playes & interludes in the said Playhowse in such sort as before tyme had bene there vsed." By reason of the plague in anno 1 James I. Evans "grewe wearye" of the play-house, and desired to give up his interest in it. He surrendered the lease in August, anno 6, following. The complainant, in his replication, states that "duringe such time as the said defendantes Heminges and Burbidge and theire Companye contynewed playes and interludes in the said great Hall in the ffryers... they gott, & as yet dothe, more in one Winter in the said great Hall by a thousand powndes than they were vsed to gett in the Bancksides;" also, that Evans "was censured by the Right Honorable Courte of Starr Chamber for his vnorderlie carriage and behaulour in takinge vp of gentlemens childeren against theire wills, and to ymploy them for players."—London Athenæum.

Free Thought.

WHAT IS THOUGHT?

BY A. F. MELCHERS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Thought is a definite expression of intelligence through the agency of spirit, or magnetism, in its highest state of purification—man's spirit-body so-called constituting this condition of existence—and is an essence or an etherealized counterpart of his material or physical body, although this, in itself, is an evolution from the animal kingdom, only that through so-called human life it undergoes a still higher state of purification, and naturally partakes of the essences of man's physical body, as it was originally created from the essences of animal bodies. But man, although of one genus, is as diversified in point of character and mode of living as many of the animal species, and might be classified as such without detracting from his claims as a spiritual or an immortal being—the lowest being but one grade above the animal, and many of the latter species having as much intelligence as the lower human races as far as construction, providing for their young, etc., is concerned, only that they lack the material or mortal facilities through which to operate for a more general effect—their physical body permitting but one modus operandi, and thus unable to swerve from their specific manner of laboring for their needs, providing for their comforts, etc. But their acts are expressions of intelligence nevertheless, and due to an innate life-impetus or soul-motion acting on or through their exterior spirit condition—the same taking form according to the purification of the magnetic or spirit-body, and expressing itself as best it can through its material appendage.

Thus man is not the only life-condition that reasons—he merely having superior facilities through which to express it, and even then is surpassed in his primitive state by some inferior life-conditions, in the art of building, laying in stores and planning, and exhibiting characteristics which are equal to many that are called human. His biped construction does not lend him any superiority as far as Divine favor is concerned, because every four-footed animal is capable of reaching the same condition if the earth holds out long enough to permit the last comers to evolve into human beings, or soul-individualization does not take place before the human condition is reached, for animal life is subjected to this soul-individualization as well as man is, and in which event it remains intact in spirit as such. It is only the spiritually undeveloped animals that continue their progress as life-beings in the same manner that spiritually undeveloped mortals do, by reincarnation [reëmbodiment]—the law of nature which constitutes the only cause of higher mortal beings existing in the world than those of primitive type. If soul, or intelligence, were to individualize itself in the first forms of life, no higher types would exist; and so it would be if mortal life, so-called, were to constitute the aim of existence; for the lowest of savages are classed as such; and that soul-evolution does not cease here is proven by the manifold superior races. Then why cannot bipeds be classified in species as well as quadrupeds? But this is of no importance, spiritually considered. All are God's creatures, and we have no right to despise any of them, for they not only constitute our forefathers, but every human soul once upon a time inhabited an animal body of some kind and of a variety before having attained the human state. Every mother of the primitive human races has and is yet fondling, nursing and rearing some animal spirit in human form, and the species of which might be readily traced by a keen observer of character, a psychometrist or a clairvoyant discerner of causes—the latter two being able to do so even after several reïncarnations—psychometry revealing it through an innate conscious sensibility, and clairvoyance through an illuminated imprint within, a higher condition of intuition, and one which reflects causes in dimensional form. A close observer cannot help from seeing the animal spirit expressed through some mortals very definitely, and which is either due to their recent transition from the animal to the human state, or to the strong characteristics of their last animal condition still manifesting themselves actively, even if unwittingly.

Furthermore, do not some manifest them consciously, wittingly, and unable to overcome them in many instances? Such beings have not yet reached the aim of life, namely: the subjugation of the animal by the spiritual, and which some animals already attain, either by natural unfoldment, force of circumstances or accident, and which constitutes its individualization, at whatever period attained. Why this is may be due to the same reasons that some flowers in the same bed bloom out more fully or attain perfection sooner than others—surrounding material conditions favoring the inherent soul or life-principle to purify or spiritualize its exterior envelope to an extent that makes it positive to matter, or to further reïncarnation, at so-called death of the physical or material body, and which may occur to flowers as well as to animals, insects, birds, fishes, reptiles, etc. And if not to the former, how will human spirits be able to enjoy the sight of flowers when this earth shall have decayed? The spirit body of the flower alone does not make it immortal. It is the soul or life-principle which remains in the same that prevents its disintegration.

If simply the spirit of things were to constitute immortality, a reïncarnated animal or mortal would have many such to review in the future, and would probably not know himself from the last, if no progress has been accidentally made upon his return. But as the soul constitutes the ego of every life-condition, this reïncarnates itself where necessary, and takes its spirit-body along, for it cannot only exist without it, but it is this appendage which is to be purified through matter in order to have a life-condition through which it can operate in the future as an individualized intelligence. In fact, it is the spirit-body which gives it individuality, and without which the soul would return to or resolve into original causation.

Now, according to the force of spirit, as it were, or the quantity of refined magnetism, the essence of matter, etc., of which the exterior envelope is composed, the soul or intelligent life-principle is enabled to manifest itself. The greater in bulk, the more expression may be given to it, and thus the longer the soul sojourns through matter, the greater it becomes in the end, or when its spirit-body has been perfectly purified from its animal impetus, or converted from a grossly electric spirit-body, into a refined magnetic spirit-body. The latter constitutes its perfection, and enables the inherent life-principle to manifest, and actuate every particle of the spirit-body for a purely intelligent effect, but naturally in comparison to its unfoldment in wisdom, power and love—the flower manifesting the least intelligence in merely having an intelligent appearance, the animal according to the degree manifested in the last physical condition, and man according to his individual degree of spirituality, or intellectuality, will-power and love attained as a mortal during his various reïncarnations.

Such constitutes intelligence individualized, or life attaining a state of immortality or absolute existence; but of all these conditions man is the only one that can give expression to its innate intelligence in the form of thought, or as a thought—thought being a definite expression of intelligence through the agency of spirit, or a magnetic envelope in its highest state of purification, and which condition of spirit can only be attained through a human or so-called mortal state of existence. Thought is not only intelligence definitely expressed, but constitutes intelligence in its pure or unalloyed state—intelligence in its absoluteness and as it exists in the cause, divine nature, or God so-called, and which power of expressing intelligence makes man the image of God, or a God in miniature.

Now, whether this power of giving expression to intelligence in its purely spiritual state only begins in the biped race of beings, or already in certain or a variety of lower creations, or not until man has attained a superior degree of unfoldment, is a subject for contemplation or comment, and will probably rest on the question what is understood by thought, or a purely intelligent expression. Can such be expressed through matter in any form? Is perhaps not intuition the only pure condition of intelligence, and thus incapable of being expressed, except as it was obtained or created, i. e., through mental telegraphy? Is animal instinct a form of intuition or inspiration? The latter may be repeated in the shape of language. But is language thought? Is the reflection or a photograph of a human being the original? What is that which expresses itself definitely without sign, motion, or words? Echo answers: Love! What higher and purer form of intelligence exists than love? May not this answer the question: "What is Thought?"

The Reviewer.

"What I Saw at Cassadaga Lake," by A. B. Richmond, Esq.

The above is the title of a book just issued by Colby & Rich, and is a "Review of the Seybert Commission Report," on the truth of Modern Spiritualism. Any one who admires keen logic, satire, analysis and conclusive argument concentrated on a given point and driven home with the force of forged bolts hurled from a catapult, will be pleased with this book. Taken merely as a study of the plan and manner of forensic attack the book is valuable, particularly to such as contemplate encounters of that kind.

It is needless to say that the "Preliminary Report" is handled unsparingly—is in fact pulverized, and it is not likely that any respectable literary genius will undertake the task of gathering up the dust.

All its weak points are exposed and irritated by rasping abrasion until they become festering sores. The weapons used against spiritual phenomena are seized and turned upon its assailants with fearful effect. The Scriptures are arrayed in support of its theories, and the charges of materialism, skepticism, infidelity and irreverence are sent back with a precision and force that is hard to evade.

Thoughtful men caring to investigate this matter ought to read Mr. Richmond's book, as it presents the subject in a new light, and from an ethical point of view reverses popular conclusions, claiming and maintaining that these phenomena are not inconsistent with the Christian faith, and that their development must and will harmonize with the cherished hopes of the great and good of all ages.

In this view of the case Mr. Richmond probably differs from other Spiritualists. He claims to believe in Spiritual Phenomena but rejects Spiritual Philosophy. We have not studied this matter, and are not well enough informed to draw the line of distinction. ... This certainly raises a new question, but it is one to be determined among the Spiritualists themselves; outside we have nothing to do with it. The right of eminent domain in this "Spirit-Land" belongs, according to international laws recognized by all Christian nations, to the discoverers and the ghostly inhabitants thereof, and if mortals persist in pushing their conquests in this direction this rule must obtain and in them must vest the right to shape the policies of the new state. Hence they must settle their differences in their own way.

If, however, through this occult agency, these people, living and dead, can develop some great truth that will forever set at rest the countless religious controversies of our times, we will hail it with joy; but, on the other hand, if it simply raises doubts and multiplies contentions among men, we want none of it, come from whence it may....

But we had not intended to discuss this question or take issue upon the hypotheses involved. Our information is insufficient, and we acknowledge our incapacity to wrestle with a subject so abstruse, but we are, nevertheless, pleased with Mr. Richmond's book. He sets up the Seybert Commission as a dummy. It provokes the attack, and is of course demolished; but those sturdy blows are aimed higher and beyond.

The Commission is used simply as a pretext, and its demolition is a trifling incident in the contest—it is a man of straw leaning for support against a solid wall of bigotry, and this is the object really assailed....—The Weekly Press, Sœgertown, Pa.

THE FLOWER PEOPLE. By Mrs. Horace Mann. 16mo, bds., pp. 176. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Very welcome to young and old will be this new and illustrated edition of one of the choicest series of allegorical stories published, in which flowers are the heroes and heroines, and a floral community has its ways and habits, its words and thoughts, even, described. No purer-minded book, or one more inculcative of the precepts of the golden rule, can be placed in the hands of the rising generation. It also imparts much botanical instruction.

JOHN BULL, JR.; or, French as She is Traduced. By Max O'Rell, with a Preface by George C. Eggleston. 18mo, bds., pp. 172. New York: Cassell & Co.

The popular and witty author of "John Bull and His Island," etc., gives in this new volume what, to those equally familiar with French and English, will prove a very enjoyable feast of good things. Here, as in all he has written, there is a biting wit, which saturates the serious substance as good, sharp vinegar pervades a pickle; but here, as in his other works, the main purpose is earnest, and the wit but an aid to its accomplishment.

THE MAJOR'S LOVE; or, The Sequel of a Crime. By Ella Brown Price, author of "Sorrow's Sunlight." 12mo, paper, pp. 179. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Bros.

A story, the scene of which is Western Missouri; the period, after the rebellion; the theme, the love of a Union officer for the daughter of a rebel raider, believed to be killed during the war.

I PURITANI.

Devoutly devout, and austerely austere,
Was Hew-Them-In-Pieces Sellew.
A Puritan he, with a capital P,
Of seventeen hundred and two.

Of taking a shot at a Quaker on sight
He made a particular boast;
While, given a witch and a barrel of pitch,
He'd manage an excellent roast.

Could such a one, think you, have fallen from grace?
Then list to this narrative true.
A maiden one day did the heart steal away
Of Hew Them-In-Pieces Sellew.

His sad colored garments he speedily doffed,
Did Hew-Them-In-Pieces Sellew,
For gewgaw and gaud, which he could n't afford,
Although they improved him to view.

His former amusements forthwith he eschewed,
Nor longer the Quaker did quake,
The witches were merry, and singular, very,
Not one of them went to the stake.

* * * * * * *

The twain to the solemn Assembly were haled,
The trial gave infinite sport,
As one might expect from so plainly select
And rigidly orthodox court—

As All-The-Day-Roaring Pigwhistleton Pratt,
And Strike-The-Loud-Psaltery Snell,
With Cherubim Cutts, and with Behemoth Butts,
And Howl-Ye-Oh-Kadesh Bedell.

Grim Behemoth Butts was for boiling in oil,
And Cutts recommended the knout,
While death on the wheel, all the rest seemed to feel,
Was nothing too much to give out.

Then to his right mind was good Master Sellew
Restored, quite uninjured and whole,
But he could n't forget a snare had been set
For his infinitesimal soul.

* * * * * * *

With arrogance swollen beyond all belief
He calmly the bailiffs defied,
And yet what to do with presumptuous Sellew
The court could n't really decide.

Until, to their infinite joy and relief,
'T was quite unexpectedly shown,
The horrible schism of Arianism
Had counted him one of its own!

With arrows, and bullets, and missiles diverse,
They bored him most thoroughly through,
And so in his pride, most uncomfortably died,
Stern Hew-Them In-Pieces Sellew.

Banner Correspondence.

Maine.

SKOWHEGAN.—Dr. C. F. Bigelow writes, March 25th: "Dr. H. F. Merrill, the test medium, has been with us for a few days, holding circles with the best of results. Remarkable tests have been given through his mediumship to the entire satisfaction of all, and we consider him one of the best of mediums for the spirit-world. He has done a great work for our cause throughout the State of Maine the past winter; we hope to have him with us again soon, and we are sure to organize a good society here and secure the services of the best lecturers and test-mediums we can find."

PORTLAND.—"A Spiritualist" writes: "'Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise' may be regarded as a very appropriate quotation to apply to the case of Rev. Wm. A. Fenn, of the Congregational High-street Church, Portland. In his pulpit, a few Sundays ago, this reverend gentleman attacked a large number of our most respectable citizens because they have received satisfactory evidence that 'death does not end all,' that we live again, and can, under suitable conditions, communicate with those who were near and dear to us: The great question, 'If a man die, shall he live again?' has been answered for them; they no more grope in the darkness of doubt; the terrible pang of sorrow for loved ones has been removed from their hearts; but Rev. Mr. Fenn is not pleased thereby.

In the sermon alluded to he devoted his great powers (?) to an attack upon the phenomenal evidences of immortality presented by Spiritualism. He informed his audience that slate-writing was a fraud, and materialization a greater one; that our mediums were tricksters, and all the manifestations were performances of legerdemain—thus showing his utter ignorance of the whole subject. Again, he declared that Spiritualists were low and uneducated, and that no respectable persons could be found among them. Was the gentleman thinking of Rev. John Pierpont, Epes Sargent, Robert Dale Owen, Judge Edmonds, Prof. Robert Hare, Profs. Crookes and Wallace and Varley? He admitted the number of believers to be eleven millions, and was sorry to learn that many church people are interested in the subject; still, he declared the 'believers are growing less every year,' a statement which any one who knows anything about the matter will perceive at a glance to be a gross mistake—to give it no harsher name.

As Spiritualism has been thus summarily disposed of(?) by this reverend gentleman, we evidently shall have to content ourselves that we are not to receive further communications from our spirit friends. Our much cherished belief has been demolished(!) in one sermon—and that delivered by a person whose total ignorance of the matter in hand is only equalled by the reckless manner of his wholesale denunciations. Spiritualism, however, will be found to still exist in Portland by all who choose to make the necessary investigations as to its continued life and activity."

New York.

POTSDAM.—Mrs. H. P. Butler writes: "The BANNER OF LIGHT is worth many times the amount it costs. It has been my cherished friend and companion for twenty-five years, and now, as I am fast hastening down the decline of earthly life, it grows more dear with every passing year. In sickness, sorrow and almost spiritual isolation—as far as the external life is concerned—I gather strength, solace and companionship, life, light, hope and love from its pages, that bear me through and above the many shadowy scenes and deep waters that were otherwise too stern and dark to endure. Long may it live to dispense its glad tidings of great joy to all people."

BROOKLYN.—Emily B. Ruggles writes: "During the recent stay among us of Mrs. R. S. and Mr. J. T. Lillie we had a joyous season, as their presence brought together, from various points, friends who have not frequently attended the spiritual meetings since the closing of the 'Church of the New Dispensation,' of which it may be said Mrs. Lillie was the corner-stone. She has at various times, for the past nine years, filled engagements as speaker for both our societies, and has in all this time continued to have many—very many—most ardent admirers and sincere friends in our city. Mr. Lillie is deservedly a favorite because of his gifts as a vocalist and musician, and we were charmed and cheered by their exercise during his brief stay in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Morgan, our efficient Treasurer, gave a reception to Mr. and Mrs. Lillie, on Friday evening, March 23d, which proved a delightful occasion—speeches by Judge Dailey, Prof. Dean and Mrs. Lillie, and most charming instrumental music and songs by Mrs. and Miss Tuttle and Mr. Lillie constituting the exercises.

Our Brooklyn Conference is now prospering. We have a commodious and accessible hall at 310 Livingston street, and our numbers are increasing. Many excellent and intelligent people are constantly attending, and the utmost harmony and good feeling prevails."

Louisiana.

SIMMESPORT.—M. K. P. writes: "How often are we asked the questions, 'What good has Spiritualism done?' 'Supposing the phenomena do take place, of what use are they?' How strange it appears that all around us are individuals, endowed with capacities fitted for their spiritual and intellectual development, who apparently never think.

It would seem that a ray of light from some one of the multitudinous benefits accomplished by Spiritualism for humanity, might penetrate the understanding of the most impervious.

Can he who has struggled to achieve success in this world, and failed, ask of what use is Spiritualism? Can he who has ever felt utterly desolate, friendless and alone, ask the question? Above all, can he who has stood by the grave of a loved one, who has seen the brightness and joy of life go out in a coffin, who has felt his very heart-strings quiver and break under the great grief, ask what good it has done? Can one who thus questions fail to see that the terrible river of death, whose swelling flood is so much dreaded, is only a tiny silvery stream, across whose bridge of Spiritualism the loved ones gone before pass to and fro? Can you not in the still night-time hear their voices softly whispering that what you dread is not death, but the beginning of life?

Can you not realize how much more blessed it is to know that your dear ones and yourself will once more be united, than to fear that once gone from this life, they are forever lost to you? Stop and think. Let the reality enter your mind that there is another life where the loved and lost shall once more be found; and where the mistakes of this life will be made right, our strivings for a better and brighter existence realized."

New Hampshire.

PORTSMOUTH.—S. A. Foster writes: "We are holding meetings every Sabbath, and are greatly encouraged by the increasing interest and attendance. We have no regularly organized Society as yet. Dr. Wm. C. Itchley, who conducts the meetings, has proved himself the 'right man in the right place,' and success attends his efforts.

Easter Sunday we listened to a soul-stirring lecture by Miss Lizzie Ewer, who is controlled by a high order of spirits; her lectures are full of inspired thoughts that command the attention of her audiences. Miss Ewer is an earnest worker for truth and the uplifting of humanity, and as she fulfills her mission will, I believe, become a 'shining light' to many groping in the darkness of the old theology—helping them into the brighter way by the revelations that come through her organism."

New Jersey.

NEWARK.—Mrs. G. Dorn writes: "We have had very pleasant and profitable times in our circle on Sunday evenings, and a full house for some time past. March 25th we had with us Mrs. Abby S. Cochrane of New York, a newly developed medium. Her mediumship is inspirational writing. The poem and essay she read were entertaining and instructive. Mr. Dorn, under control, gave spirit-tests and good advice. The meetings will be continued every Sunday evening, conducted by 'White Feather,' the spirit-guide of Mr. Dorn."

California.

LOS ANGELES.—Dr. Alfred R. Street writes: "Mr. W. J. Colville is drawing together large, increasing, enthusiastic and appreciative audiences and classes. After April, to be spent in San Diego, we hope for and expect his return to this place."

Dr. P. P. Quimby.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

My attention has been called to an article in the March number of the New England Magazine, which gives a brief account of the life-work of Dr. P. P. Quimby, of Maine (from the pen of his son). As there seems to be a labored and concerted effort on the part of all "mind-healers," so-called "Christian Scientists," non-Spiritualists, et al., to show that the gift of healing by some new process has nothing whatever to do with Spiritualism, I desire to criticise Mr. Quimby's report of his father's views—not that he is not scrupulously honest in his version of the matter, but because he evidently did not get at all of his father's views: as I have obtained facts and evidence from many of his patients who appear to be trustworthy, and they do not speak of his "no disease" theory, etc.

It seems by the report that in 1838 Dr. Q. attended a lecture on mesmerism, and was greatly interested in the effect produced upon the minds of individuals; he commenced to experiment himself, with many failures, but succeeded with a young man, and he traveled with him, giving exhibitions in mesmerism. Now, while to my mind mesmerism is a fact that cannot be gainsaid, I have my doubts as to the utility of public exhibitions of this power merely for amusement or gain.

It will be seen by the article in question that Dr. Quimby was engaged as a mesmerist in this form of exhibition, in the year 1843; Dr. Quimby, his son asserts, at this time allowed the young man to examine the sick in a clairvoyant or mesmeric state, but he soon found out that the examinations were not reliable, and the diagnosis was simply mind-reading of the patient, or was, as some one else believed, the stating of a truth acquired by himself; hence he gave up the young man and began the developing of what is now known as mental healing or curing disease through the mind.

Mr. Quimby says that his father spent years of his life fighting the battle alone; but perhaps he is not aware of the work wrought by Prof. Grimes and Dr. Cutter and a host of others in this country—as well as by others in various countries since the days of Mesmer.

His son says that as the truths of his discovery began to develop and grow in him, "just in the same proportion did he begin to lose faith in the efficacy of mesmerism as a remedial agent in the cure of the sick; and after a few years he discarded it altogether." He also says he "sometimes, in cases of lameness and sprains, manipulated the limbs of the patient, and often rubbed the head with his hands, wetting them with water." He declares that his father "always denied emphatically that he used any mesmeric power or mediumistic power. He never went into any trance, and was a strong disbeliever in Spiritualism, as understood by that name." His son claims, also—and cites an illustration to prove it—that his father thought disease to be an error, and when the error was righted or corrected there was no more sickness with the individual.

There is no one of clear mind and comprehension who does not know that good news affects an individual, and that sad news often produces sickness, and that is all there is to it, and it is as old as life itself—there is no new principle involved in such a declaration. It seems, by Mr. Quimby, that his father, while strong, had always been able to ward off disease that would have affected another person; but when tired out and weak he no longer had the strength or will nor the reasoning powers to combat the sickness which terminated his life. His son says:

"An hour before he breathed his last, he said to the writer: 'I am perfectly willing for the change myself, but I know you all will feel badly, and think I am dead; but I know that I shall be right here with you, just the same as I always have been. I do not dread the change any more than if I were going on a trip to Philadelphia.'"

If these remarks do not have the semblance of Spiritualism, what can? If his "last sickness" does not indicate that disease exists either with himself or his patients, it is metaphysical in its meaning, and as it is alleged that he once said publicly: "I deny disease as a truth, but admit it as deception, without any foundation, handed down from generation to generation, till the people believed it, and it has become a part of their lives." How does this latter sentence compare with the remarks of his son concerning his last sickness and exit?

I hope no one will attempt to convince the public that Dr. Quimby is still in the material body, as, according to present doctrines, he had no disease, and he said, himself, that the change called death to him was precisely as the Spiritualists have advanced for the past forty years.

I wish I could harmonize all the different views that are advanced concerning Dr. Quimby's mode of treatment. In the year 1869 the Portland Press and Argus printed an advertisement of mine wherein I stated that my mode of treatment is like that of the late Dr. Quimby, and I still think it is, from what I gather from his old patients.

I will admit that I wish to get at facts and truth for the purpose of harmonizing his modus operandi of treatment with that of Dr. J. R. Newton, Dr. W. F. Evans, (who is the author of the "Mental Cure" book printed in the year 1869, and since reprinted in England and France,) also that of hundreds of magnetic healers or magnetic physicians located in all portions of the United States, and the world. If disease is a myth, and annihilation marks the destiny of the human soul, it might be well to teach it, but as in the light of spiritual revelation we know that such a kind of philosophy is sheer nonsense, I cannot discover the need or necessity of its resurrection—even if persons have said to individuals in the past who in fact had no disease, "You are not sick."

We know that disease is broadcast, if we know anything; it affects the rich and poor alike; no philosophy can change the order of things in this regard; it is folly to attempt to build up a system or theory on that basis; and how "level headed" men and women can engage in teaching it, or how sensible people can see anything new in it, that can be held by copyright, and imparted with a diploma, is a mystery—and I think the latter word is all there is to it, at best.

Either the persons who claim to be sick, and employ the "Christian Scientists" to tell them that they are not, are becoming unbalanced in their minds, or the individuals who practice the "mind-cure" or "Christian Science" have a psychological power over their subjects by which they may be led to believe black to be white or vice versa, as the case may be. Because there are latent invisible spiritual as well as material forces in the universe and human beings, that are being utilized in healing the sick, that is no argument against the fact that disease exists, or that spirits do not return to bless and assist the sick, as it is alleged was done in the past. "Do not be deceived," should be the motto in this age of speculative theories that will not stand the investigation of reason and common sense.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From the residence of Mrs. M. E. Thompson, 178 Meigs street, Rochester, N.Y., at 10 P.M. Friday, March 2d, after a long and painful illness, Col. S. S. Norton, A. M., aged 60 years.

Prof. Norton was a graduate of Union College, N.Y., having previously attended Hamilton College. Soon after graduating, he opened and conducted large and flourishing military colleges at Vernon, N.Y., and Chicago, Ill. After these engagements, he came to Rochester, bringing with him personal letters of recommendation from Hon. Roscoe Conkling, Senator John A. Logan, John J. Knox, late Comptroller U. S. currency, and many other eminent men.

His many friends in Oneida County, the place of his birth, and in fact in every town and city in the Union, will learn of his death with deep regret.

The last words spoken by the tongue that had many times uttered noble sentences of teaching and admonition to young men in ways of manly moral training, were: "Good night to all my friends." Then he sank peacefully into the embrace of change. Thus closed a life which had been lived in true accord with nature's religion and philosophy. The immediate family relations are three sons and one daughter, all residing in the West.

The secular press of Rochester spoke in high terms of the deceased—the account in the Post-Express setting forth the fact that "with little or no sectarian bias, the tendencies of his nature were broadly humanitarian." He was known by the writer to have been an investigator of the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism, and had many friends among the BANNER readers, particularly in New York City and Oneida County.

Funeral services were held by Rev. Dr. Saxe. The remains were taken to Rockford, Ill., for interment.

M. E. T.

From her home, in Middlefield, O., March 14th, Mrs. Mary Jane Morse, in the 68th year of her age.

She was born in the western part of New York State. Early in life she moved to Middlefield, married and reared her family. She leaves a husband, children and many kind friends to miss her presence, but not without the consolation of the open door prepared by the angels for future communication. She has children who are mediums: she early accepted the beautiful teachings of Spiritualism, and was firm in expressing her ideas, wherever opportunity would permit, for the benefit of others. She endeared her memory to all who knew her by an earnest, industrious life. Services were conducted by Mrs. Mary C. Knight of Fulton, Oswego Co., N.Y.

From Leominster, Mass., March 4th, Mrs. Mary Ann Palmer, widow of Capt. Israel Palmer, aged 80 years and 11 months.

She leaves two daughters: one Mrs. Wm. Rugg, the other Mrs. Etta Spaulding, who has lived with and devotedly cared for her mother for several years.

Mrs. Palmer was a gentle, kindly and unobtrusive lady, whose worth was appreciated by all who knew her. Spiritualism was to her a staff sure and steadfast, which did not fail her when husband and son were lost to sight, nor when the silent messenger beckoned her to join them.

The funeral service was performed by the writer, the Prevear Quartette rendering some beautiful music.

The face of the dear mother was peaceful as that of a sleeping infant: the flowers she loved abundantly surrounded her; it hardly seemed the parting hour had come in any sense. In the larger, fuller sense, her children realize that she cannot leave them but to come again.

JULIETTE YEAW.

From the city of Toledo, O., March 19th, Agnes Jennings Cole, aged 5 days, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert B. Cole.

The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. Mary C. Knight, of Fulton, N.Y.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR OF "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

LIFE AND LABOR

In the Spirit-World:

Being a Description of Localities, Employments, Surroundings, and Conditions in the Spheres.

BY MEMBERS OF THE SPIRIT-BAND OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER,

Medium of the Banner of Light Public Free Circle.

When one becomes fully convinced that friends who have passed from existence on earth still live, the questions naturally arise, How do they live, and what are their occupations? The purpose of this book is to answer these inquiries, and, so far as the language of a material life is capable of describing a spiritual one, it does so. These descriptions are not mere theories and surmises of what may exist beyond this state of being, the acceptance of which depends mainly upon the faith of the individual to whom they may be presented, but statements of facts made by those who live that life, and are familiar with the scenes and experiences of which they write.

In one volume of 426 pages, neatly and substantially bound in cloth. Price $1.00, postage 10 cents; full gilt, $1.50, postage free.

An Edition of Life and Labor in the Spirit-World has been issued by COLBY & RICH which is embellished with eight illustrations representing scenes in spirit-life. The titles of the illustrations, which are very suggestive of the scenes portrayed, are as follows:

At Home in the Summer-Land.
Little George and his Spirit-Mother.
Lucy Aiken and her Kind Ministrations.
Beulah, a Spirit Missionary.
Unhappy Spirits. What we Sow we shall Reap.
Fannie Davis Under Spirit Control.
Little Bertie. "For Mamma."
An Excursion to Sunny Island.

The price of the Illustrated Volume, which in all other respects is the same as the edition above advertised, is $1.50, postage 10 cents.

GIRARD'S WILL

AND

GIRARD COLLEGE THEOLOGY.

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D. D., LL.D.,
Author of "Marriage and Divorce," "The Bible—Whence and What," "Man—Whence and Whither," etc.

The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.'"

The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.
Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

Oklahoma Again.

Oklahoma may be accurately described as being in the heart of the Indian Territory. Interior Department maps give it about a million and one-quarter acres, with its nearest line one hundred and twenty miles south of the Kansas border. It was a much larger tract originally. It is reached by traversing an unoccupied strip known as the Cherokee country, though the Cherokees live to the east of it. The entire tract known as Oklahoma consists of 5,429,640 acres, purchased of the Creeks and Seminoles in 1866 for $1,303,530. A number of tribes have been located on parts of this domain, while it is what is left and unoccupied that the "Couch's" old-time class of invaders regarded for their own purposes as open for entry. These lands, situated in the heart of a country which was set apart for Indians alone, were sold at low prices to the Government for the very purpose of protecting themselves against the contesting interests and claims of the whites. By the terms of the sale made by the Creeks and Seminoles in 1866, "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon," these lands were "to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon." This was the language of one of the deeds made to the Government.

The New York Sun has already called the attention of the people to the fact that the Government acquired these lands at a low price for a specific purpose, and proceeded faithfully to execute that purpose in regard to more than three-fourths of the purchase. It is as much bound by its contract in reference to the remaining portion, as in reference to the parts already occupied.

This unoccupied land is not like other Government land, to be preëmpted by the restless squatter. It was sold to the Government only on condition that it would put it to a use specified, and that use was not its settlement by white men, but quite the contrary.

Congress has taken the matter of opening Oklahoma in hand, and the outcome of its action is before the country in what is known as the "Springer"* bill, which aims, as we understand it, to put the land on the market, at so much per acre, provided the consent of the Indians is obtained; and the measure is now pending. Naturally so important a step has aroused the attention of the editorial fraternity in many parts of the country, and called forth comments peculiar, of course, to each individual making them, and in consonance with the conditions surrounding, and the opinions concerning the public interests entertained by the papers in which they have appeared.

We find, for instance, in a recent issue of Harper's Weekly (New York) an editorial article which, while it sets forth an opinion that "the vast domain of Oklahoma will be and should be made accessible to settlers," still urges extreme caution in any action to be taken by the law-making power "in order to prevent the necessity of the step being made a pretext for wrong of any kind."

If we understand the matter aright—in which conflicting interests are so numerous, and consequently the reports and opinions based on them are so conflicting—a proposition is on foot looking to a removal of the Indians west of this district into it—perhaps with the expectation of consolidating the aborigines, and giving additional land for sale, and this the Weekly openly denounces, in the name and on the testimony of Prof. Painter, whom it alleges to be one of "the most devoted and intelligent and experienced friends of the Indians"—who is reported as saying "that the proposed removal would be a very great wrong to the Indians, who are not only living upon lands to which they hold an unextinguished title, but have taken deep root, building homes and cultivating farms. The lands to which they would go are not so good as those they occupy, and they are strongly averse to removal."

The Weekly's account proceeds: "The Commissioner [of Indian Affairs] recommends that a Commission should treat with the Indians to secure their consent to removal. But this, Prof. Painter says, simply means, as Mr. J. P. Dunn, Jr., states in his 'Mountain Massacres':

'The President is authorized and empowered to drive the Indians from their native homes, and place them on unhealthy and uncongenial reservations, whenever sufficient political influence has been brought to bear upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, by men who desire the lands of any tribe, to induce a recommendation for their removal. Provided that, before any tribe shall be removed, the members thereof shall be bullied, cajoled or defrauded into consenting to the removal.'"

After emphasizing the fact that our "Indian wars have generally arisen from the irritation produced by such forcible removals, and nothing could more discredit with the Indians the national good faith than now, when they are happily settled, to compel them to remove in order that the lands which they have improved, and to which they are attached, can be seized by greedy white settlers," Harper's Weekly refers to the list of outrages against the Indian, so long and black, and holds that while in its opinion "the reservations are to be broken up," "we must have the courage and the honor to defend the Indians against ourselves." Pertinent and portentous words! It is to be noted that this same fear of a coming misinterpretation and misapplication of the Land-in-Severalty law in favor of the whites seems to haunt every friend of that measure who is at the same time a humanitarian at heart, and hopes for justice to the Indian.

There certainly is, to quote from the Washington Critic, great "danger that acts of Congress ostensibly in the interest of the Indian may result in his ruin," and every friend of the red man on this continent should be on the alert to protect these persecuted wards of the government.

Other journals denounce such Congressmen as have pronounced themselves in favor of the "Springer" bill—taking ground almost identical with that of the followers of the late Capt. Couch, that the land is the people's domain—lawful homestead land—and that the government's being empowered to sell it by this proposed bill to those who can pay will be a direct national legislation against the poor and for the sole benefit of the rich.

A certain book which divers minds in the United States and the world in general have agreed to consider the source and sum of all inspiration, contains the sententious statement that "in the multitude of counsellors there is safety," but amid the whirling volume of complex and conflicting views and plans which seems to converge around the central vortex of the Indian problem we submit that even Solomon and such other worthies as he might feel to call to his aid would stand aghast if, for "safety," they proposed to read "justice" in the proverb. The only safe way to settle this matter is the way which is in harmony with right doing, never for a moment losing sight of the general good, whatever may become of any particular or individual points at issue. The BANNER OF LIGHT has, from the earliest days of its existence, defended the Indian against the white man's aggressive policy; and it is with sorrow that we perceive at this time indications that, by some unexplainable process, many of the well-wishers for the red man have been led—through their endorsement of the land-in-severalty bill, whose peculiar nature and operation were so ably "shown up" by Gail Hamilton in a recent number of the North American Review—into what strongly resembles a temporary alliance, at least, with his worst enemies. We earnestly trust that wisdom will be given to our law-makers at Washington to reach, in the important matter of the Oklahoma lands and the Reservations generally, some solution in harmony with the broad and enduring principles of justice between man and man; that the Indian may be treated in the manner which best accords with his permanent advancement, and may be protected in his political and proprietary rights until he shall be fully prepared, by literary and industrial education, for becoming an intelligent citizen of this great commonwealth of States; that no arbitrary and forcible act, born of selfishness and greed, shall be resorted to on the part of the white man to hasten a development which at best must be gradual and come with the lapse of time; and that the people of this American nation may prove in the future—as they certainly have not done in the past—that they really "have the courage and the honor to defend the Indian" against themselves.

The Springer bill to establish the Territory of Oklahoma has received attention. . . . The position of the Osages is that they were induced to purchase the territory they now hold by the representations of the United States, in various treaties and laws as well as in the negotiations that terminated in their assent to go to the Indian Territory, that that Territory should, so long as the Indian tribes existed and continued to occupy it, remain exclusively devoted to Indian occupancy. They object, therefore, to the bill, which may have the effect, without their consent, to surround them with white settlements, contrary to the solemn assurances given to them by the Government of the United States as a means of inducing them to purchase their present reservation. Unless there is something in the idea that has been advanced, that no pledge of public faith made with the Indians is binding upon the people of the United States, it is evident that without an act of great injustice the Indian Territory cannot be taken away from the occupation by Indians, which has been guaranteed to the tribes now resident there.—Judge A. J. Willard, Attorney N. I. D. A.

The Coming Woman.

In treating of the woman of the future, or the Coming Woman, Marion Harland blesses for her sex the steady advance of sound sense that has delivered it from the pitiful weakness of being vain of bodily infirmity. Our foremothers, she observes, in sober literalness "enjoyed poor health." Pallor, slimness, even fainting fits, were reckoned among the recommendations of gentlewomen to the chivalry of men. The fair one of that day was "all cling, and droop, and bedewment." "Red, round cheeks were blanched by external applications of prepared chalk and internal ones of vinegar. Plumpness was physicked and dieted into lines of fragile grace, and the owner of perverse robustness blushed at her own vulgarity."

Contrast the women of to-day with those of thirty years ago. The gain is not altogether in adipose tissue and coloring. The carriage is more erect, the tread more springy, and there is a general air of conscious vitality. The Coming Woman, barring late hours and too much dancing, will be physically a fine creature. Calisthenics, out-door life, tennis, boating and riding clubs all show the trend of current popular sentiment for her. Instead of wearing a veil out-doors and sleeping in a linen mask, she will court the salt and mountain breezes. She will drive, ride and row, and do each well. She will enjoy camping out in the woods and a morning dip in lake or surf.

The former days, Miss Harland puts it into her mind to remember, were "dirtier" than these. Doctors, nurses, and mothers were afraid of fresh air and water. Bedroom windows were listed and calked and nailed down in December, and not raised until April. Babies were daily dabbed all over with a wet cloth, unless the weather was very cold, and parents took a sponge bath two or three times in the season. Personal ablution was very little esteemed, painstaking as our grandmothers were about their housekeeping, while pestilence-germs rioted without hindrance or discouragement.

And the girl of the future is not going to be ashamed of confessing that she is hungry and has an appetite for substantial food. She will be proud of her knowledge of cooking. She will understand what beef-tea is and is not good for, and that milk can do as much harm in one case as it does good in another. The Coming Woman, too, will probably select for herself a special pursuit. The false shame of working for wages will be dissipated. Women doctors will meet for consultation with their brethren of the other sex. Girls' colleges and annexes will excite no more talk than the mechanical application of steam-power and electricity does now.

Woman's heart and intellect will keep step in their development, and a sound body will be the faithful servant of both. The home of the future will be more full of happiness than the home of the present, and will abound more with elevating influences. The household is not going to be overtaken with any such ruin as is regularly predicted for it if matters proceed at their present pace. She who is to be the future queen in that realm will possess a developed individuality and a native strength which are to be the product of the present advance in ideas respecting woman's development. The home of the future is to be far the superior of the home of the present in point of healthfulness, of taste, of rational comfort, and of love and perpetuity. The over-worked, under-fed, short-lived woman has had her day.

Wisdom and Blind Faith.

In another of his stimulating practical discourses in Boston, Rabbi Solomon Schindler made the distinct declaration that every age has formed its own religious views, and hence that religion must not be sought for, nor can it be found, in the past; it is the very product, the very result of our present attainments, intellectual and moral. For so obvious a reason as this, true religion is to be sought in wisdom rather than in a blind faith. Humanity is a compound of progressive and conservative elements. They are the two halves of the whole. All history shows that the wheels of progress cannot be arrested in their motion. The newer idea is all the time supplanting the old one. The pupil advances beyond the teacher. And in proportion as mankind has grown wiser it has grown better.

The standard of morals is higher in the present age than in past times. It is inevitable that it should be so, in obedience to the recognized principle of evolution. It is not to be denied that mankind has grown less superstitious, less fanatical, less barbarous, less cruel, less intemperate than it ever has been before. When the vitalizing principle of a religion has lost its vigor, the religion growing out of it has been changed. Sacrifices did not give place to prayer in consequence of any whim of fashion, but because people ceased to believe that God needs them or is pleased with them. Sacrificial offerings were brought to the altar as long as those who made them believed that they were efficacious to ward off danger and disaster or to gain coveted favor. When higher ideas of God prevailed, sacrificial worship was doomed. And so, too, the accepted belief in the divine character of the books called the Bible inspires religious observances that will surely pass into disuse when such a belief is supplanted by a very different and a more true conception of the origin and character of that volume. We can see a very positive modification of that superstitious belief going on around us to-day, to be duly followed by its complete abandonment.

Rightly and rationally does Rabbi Schindler assert that we are just as free to change our religious forms and practices as our ancestors were. There is no more restraint in this respect imposed on us than was imposed on them. And we not only have the right, but it becomes our duty, to conform our religious customs to the requirements of our time, which simply means, with the principles we accept as valid for our conduct. Every religious act and ceremony ought to express precisely, or at least as near as possible, what we believe, or else it ought to be given up altogether as useless.

The religion of the future will be an ever changing but ever living one. It must be a rational and consistent religion if it hopes to stand. It must be something more than blind faith, which ordinarily is but credulity, with superstition to feed upon. When what we call religion claims to have reached its ultimate, and can make no further progress along with humanity, it may be positively affirmed that it is worn out and useless, and deserving only to be abandoned for what more nearly conforms to the needs of the human race. As wisdom comes from experience, which is the test of all thought and theorizing, so does religion go to the same unfailing source for its origin and continous renewal. The notion that something is given us wholly outside of our cognition, and which cannot therefore be verified by our experience, is a dogma on which ecclesiastical authority reposes with the utmost assurance. Once knock from under it this prop, and all goes with it, the entire machinery by which the human spirit is cramped and commanded by those who claim to be nearer God than we are ourselves.

A Most Important Admission.

A late discourse on Spiritualism in San Francisco by Father Prendergast, the Roman Catholic Vicar-General, contains full and complete admissions of the fact of the phenomena. He said it was an error to suppose that Spiritualism is a product of nineteenth century culture and mental advancement; that it is as old as the world, and the human mind is not more subtle, penetrating, or capable of discovery in itself than it was centuries ago. The philosophers and learned men of India, Greece and other lands were intellectually as well endowed, if not better, than those of to-day.

He admitted that there is no denying the fact of spiritualistic phenomena. History abounds in proofs of intercourse between the visible and invisible worlds. And he related a number of entertaining episodes, showing that the "divinations" practiced by Spiritualists in this age were common among barbarians and the Grecian, Roman and other ancient nations. Passing from Paganism to what the Church styles Revelation, Father Prendergast read from the Bible several accounts of the communications between spirits and mortals, and dwelt on those which showed the power that malevolent, spirits so-called, sought to exercise over men.

This is certainly admission enough to be made on the part of the Reverend Father, nor is it possible for the one making it within the Church to weaken its manifest effect by asserting the belief that the manifestations in question are necessarily by malevolent spirits, since there certainly is no more evidence of this than there is that the manifestations all come from good spirits.

The Roman Catholic Church, continued the vicar-general, has never disbelieved in "Spiritism," as the ceremonies it has prescribed for "exorcising," etc., show. He reminded his hearers that one of the functions belonging to Christ's ministers was that of "casting out devils." And in the Bible the Christian believer is enjoined against soothsayers and the divining practices of the Pagans. Hence he particularly sought to impress the idea that good, or benevolent spirits, do not participate in spiritualistic exercises.

Without venturing on anything like a discussion of the issue thus presented, we are content for the present to place on record this very broad and timely admission by one holding such high authority in the Roman Church in this country, that spirits do freely communicate with mortals. It is not a specially disturbing consideration, either, that he assumes—for he cannot prove it—that all spirits thus communicating with mortals are malevolent spirits, which the priests of the Church are enabled to exorcise. The same Bible from which stories about "evil" spirits are so fluently recited contains, equally, stories about good spirits, commonly called angels, or heavenly messengers. It would therefore be a very close question to put to Father Prendergast, how he can know that good spirits never manifest? If the lower order of spirits are so freely endowed with this power by a being that is all goodness and love, and by means of it are enabled to work evil effects on mankind—why is it not strictly logical that good spirits should be endowed with this power in even larger measure, if but to maintain the supremacy of good over evil?

"A Highland Seer and Scotch Superstitions."

The Lowlands of Scotland have for centuries been known as the birthplace and chief abode of fairies and their kin, the stories of whose powers and doings, recited in innumerable households, have fascinated the young, and made lasting impressions not only on their minds but upon those of their elders. Though the whole matter has been termed "supernatural" by some, and freaks of imagination by others, while still others have attributed them to Satanic agencies, in the light of present-day revelation it cannot fail to be seen that they were neither. It has been said that the Eildon Hills, the country by Melrose, Moffat and Abbotsford, were peopled by spirits that were the offspring of Scott's fancy, and that Burns invested those localities with a halo of supernatural interest. We do not propose at this writing to enter into an elaboration of a more rational theory of the origin and nature of these appearances, though it will be evident to every observer and student of the phenomena of Spiritualism that such a one exists.

It was not supposed that in the Highlands, whose inhabitants were of a more warlike and savage character, the softer influences that prevailed in the Lowlands existed; but when the excitements following the rebellions of 1715 and 1745 subsided, and the country began to be opened, it was found the same beliefs therein prevailed, and that the people of the Highlands were no less gifted than those of the Lowlands. Under the heading above given, Murray's Magazine (London) for March contains an article by Mary Jeune, describing some very striking instances of their possession of the faculty of prevision or second-sight. As a rule the gift is most common among women, they being, the writer says, of a more impressionable nature than men, yet it has been and continues to be possessed by people of both sexes, the trance during which the power of reading the future exists coming at longer or shorter intervals of greater or less intensity.

The most interesting figure in all Scotch history of prophecy and second-sight was Kenneth Mackenzie, better known as Coinneach Odhar, examples of whose remarkable utterances have been known throughout the Highlands for over one hundred and fifty years. Sir Walter Scott was familiar with them, and the pages of his novels are deeply imbued with traces of his faith in them. The Mackenzies of Scotland had from time immemorial been a mediumistic race. Much that occurred in their lives greatly influenced the people to believe in their infallibility; and though the reliance in what these seers claimed to know of the present and predict of the future, entertained by all classes, from peasant to prince, is, by this writer and others, pronounced "superstition"—which, with imagination, seems to be an ever-open receptacle for what is failed to be understood—there unquestionably was a large percentage of truth from a high spiritual plane, often clouded with the ignorance of the channel through which it was transmitted, or the credulousness and misunderstanding of those who received it. Beliefs like the following, almost universally held, cited by the writer, must have had other than a mythical foundation:

"Among the Mackenzies the death-candle was always said to appear before the death of any leading member of any branch. A large light appeared at some distance in the sky, sailing slowly till it arrived above the place where the person whose death it predicted lived; when it would slowly disappear in a brilliant coruscation of light. In Tulloch Castle a cold hand was always said to be laid on the face of the person whose death it foretold. In another family a white owl always appeared when any member was going to die, and in another a black dog; while on the west coast of the Highlands an old woman, commonly called the 'Gruagach,' appeared to foretell the death of some important member of the family to which she belonged."

Similar beliefs and so-called superstitions have existed not alone in Scotland but in this and all other countries, and it would be an interesting study to trace them to their origin and to the events and conditions in which they had their rise; it would probably lead the inquirer into another realm of being than the visible and material, their present incongruous form being due, doubtless, to interpolations, misconceptions and errors adhering to them from repeated traditional versions.

Kenneth Mackenzie was born on the island of Lewis. Various traditions as to the means by which he became possessed of the gift of second-sight are told, the most generally accredited one being that having fallen asleep on a hillside, he upon awaking found a small round white stone on his breast, which gave him the power of prophecy, and saved his life in several instances. "He occupied a comparatively humble position, but being a man of some slight education and refinement, was much sought after by the great people who lived in that part of the world, not only for his wonderful knowledge but for the gentleness and excellence of his life and influence."

Among his prophecies of general interest was the following: "The day will come when long black carriages, without horses, will go through the country, and cross the stance (market-place) of the Muir of Ord." This is fulfilled by the Highland Railroad now crossing the spot mentioned. Another: "The country will be crossed from sea to sea by white bands." This was fulfilled by the building of roads after the battle of Culloden by Gen. Wade and his army. An interesting corroboration of this was related to Mary Jeune, by a lady who, soon after her marriage, made an expedition into Kintail to see the country. "She was," she says, "an Englishwoman, and had never heard of Coinneach and his prophecies, and one day was taken to the summit of one of the highest hills in Lochalsh by one of the MacRaes, a family of great antiquity in Ross-shire, and one of the subject clans of the Mackenzies. On arriving at the top she was struck by the curious effect on the scenery of the great roads which intersected the country on all sides, and exclaimed to her companion, 'Oh! Capt. MacRae, the country looks as if it were covered by white bands of ribbon!' To her surprise the old man reverently took off his hat, saying softly, 'Eh! my dear, but those are the very words that Coinneach Odhar himself said over a hundred years ago.'" One other prediction was that the day would come when Tomnahurich would be kept under lock and key, and large ships sail around under its shadow, events at that time most improbable. But since then the Inverness people have made a cemetery on Tomnahurich, with two gates, which are opened only to admit visitors, and the Caledonian Canal now runs below the hill; in these the dual prediction of Coinneach finds its fulfillment.

Coinneach was all his life closely related to the family of the Earls of Seaforth, then the great head of the Clan, and one of the most powerful chiefs of his time, and it was through the malignancy of the wife of Lord Seaforth, "a haughty proud woman of violent and jealous temper," that he died the death of a martyr. Lady S. often consulted the seer. Lord Seaforth having gone to Paris leaving Lady S. at home in Scotland, the latter became uneasy at his protracted absence, and summoning Coinneach, demanded that he should tell her where Lord Seaforth was. "The seer put his white stone to his eyes, and assured Lady Seaforth that her lord was well and happy. 'But,' asked Lady Seaforth, 'where is he?' 'That is not necessary for your ladyship's knowledge,' answered Kenneth, 'be assured he is well.' His assurances only increased the curiosity and anxiety of Lady Seaforth, who from persuasion proceeded to use threats, until Kenneth at last said, 'Your lord is well and happy, and he is in a fair chamber hung with fine tapestry; there is a bonnie lady with him, and he is on bended knees before her, with her hand pressed to his lips.'"

At this the rage of Lady Seaforth knew no bounds. The disclosure became public. She branded the seer as a liar and slanderer, and declared that there and then she would take instant vengeance and have him burnt as a wizard, for exercising all the black arts he possessed in degrading the name of his great Chief, and defaming the most noble and honored name in the North.

"No time was allowed for preparation, no prayers for forgiveness were heard, no opportunity given for intercession, and the seer was led forth to execution. Finding that all hope was gone and he was abandoned, Kenneth resigned himself to his fate, and on his way to execution, before the vindictive Countess paused, and, drawing forth his white stone, uttered the prophecy or doom of the family of Seaforth. Having uttered the solemn and terrible prophecy, he threw the stone away from him, and tradition says it fell into a small well close by, from which immediately gushed out a large spring of water, which, spreading, formed Lake Ussie. From Brahan, Kenneth was dragged by order of Lady Seaforth, now doubly incensed by his prophecies, to Chanory Point, some twenty miles distant, where he was burnt to death. Lord Seaforth arrived at Brahan shortly after, and, hearing of what had occurred, rode furiously to Fortrose, hoping to avert the doom of the seer, but arrived only in time to see the expiring embers of the fire that had destroyed his devoted vassal."

The prophecy regarding the line of Seaforth covered a long period, ending with the time when its broad lands should pass to strangers and itself be no more; the prediction was fulfilled to its minutest detail.

The presence of spirits from the unseen world has been generally recognized in the Scotch Highlands, but the character given them was in keeping with the severe doctrines of the church, that appear to have held to a belief that the God of the universe had either voluntarily or by force relegated all his governing and controlling prerogatives to Satan, so far, at least, as this world was concerned. After describing several of the most prominent "superstitions" and beliefs, our author notes that in all of them a "very important part was played by the devil." She then proceeds to narrate events that rival in their diabolic aspects the old days of witchcraft; in which affairs the church seems to have enacted the leading parts, presumedly to counteract the disorder; but, however honest and good-intentioned in its motives, it unquestionably, as in this country in the seventeenth century, increased rather than allayed it.

A Seance with the Berry Sisters.

A personal friend of ours, not a resident of this city, informs us that he attended a séance at 55 Rutland street, on the afternoon of the 5th inst., where he found congregated nearly fifty ladies and gentlemen. This séance, he said, was in many particulars similar to those heretofore reported in print, various forms appearing from time to time, apparently old and young, male and female. After the session closed our friend questioned many of the visitors in regard to the conclusions they had arrived at as to the reliability of the manifestations they had witnessed: and it seemed to be the universal opinion that they were bona fide. He said that sometimes three spirit-forms were seen in the room at one and the same time; and in the course of the afternoon forms, palpable to the view, dematerialized before the eyes of the beholders. One gentleman said he came two hundred miles to witness the manifestations, as he had a special purpose in view in so doing, namely, that he had had sittings at his house the past winter, whereat independent slate-writing occurred. On several occasions communications were written upon the slates by three different spirits, who gave their names, and said that if he would go to Boston and visit the Berry Sisters they would materialize, state what they had written, and repeat their names. He said that not a word of this was known to any one in this city previous to the séance, and he considered it a conclusive test of direct spirit-communion. Others also received, they said, evidence of spirit-return.

And yet, because there are impostors abroad in the land, many people condemn those who are genuine mediums. But the chaff is being winnowed from the wheat; and the time will surely come—and is not remote either—when such palpable evidence will be forthcoming that none will doubt the fact of spirit-materialization.

The Anniversaries.

By reference to our first and second pages the reader will find numerous reports of what was said and done at different points in honor of the recurrence of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism. Brief additional mention in the same direction will be found on the eighth page.

We have still on hand a number of such reports—notably from Cleveland, O., New Orleans, La., Haverhill, Mass., Saratoga, N. Y., and other localities—to which we shall give publicity as rapidly as our space will permit.

Our thanks are hereby returned to the friends everywhere who have so kindly acceded to our request for accounts of their local celebrations.

Sure of What He Saw.

The April number of The Woman's World (Cassell & Co., New York, London and Paris,) has an article on "Swiss Goblins," by the Countess Martinengo-Cesaresco, at the close of which occurs this instance of sturdy adhesion to what he perceived, which could be with profit copied in America by that class of people who, visiting spirit-mediums and being satisfied at the time, allow themselves afterward to give up all they have gained through outside pressure or some of the foolish scientifically(?) explanatory theories now extant, such, for instance, as that what they have seen is due to the action of "the optic nerve entranced by the imagination,"(!) etc., etc., ad nauseam:

"We will conclude our gleanings with a story which puts ghost-seeing in an entirely new light. At Chesières, in 1804, a poor bell-ringer was cited to appear before the Juge de la Paix, to answer the charge of having asserted in public that he had seen his cousin's ghost. He had duly attended the funeral, and he probably supposed that he had seen the last of his deceased relative, but three weeks later the ghost met him on a lonely road by night, and obstinately dogged his footsteps. He called in the assistance of a friend who had formerly followed the profession of treasure-seeker, but this friend said nothing at all. 'See! there he is! He's moving his lips. What eyes! one would say that he was going to speak.' 'Well,' suggested the treasure-seeker, 'ask him what he wants.' 'I speak to him? Heaven forefend!' Now the family of the dead man took it amiss that he was thus described as haunting the neighborhood instead of lying quietly in his grave, and the bell-ringer was called upon to retract his statements, which he stoutly refused to do. They might do what they would with him, but he would not deny having seen what he had seen. At length, on the recommendation of the judge, the charge was withdrawn, and the ghost-seer was suffered to depart."

The Twelve Spirit-Children of Henry Lacroix.

Our old friend, Henry Lacroix, formerly of Montreal, Canada—father of fifteen children—has presented us with a reduced photographic copy, 8x10 inches, of his twelve spirit-children: six daughters and six sons. The original crayon drawings, forming an elongated group in two rows of six pictures each, were executed by himself, as mechanical medium, under these children's control. This labor of love has entailed on him many years of patient endeavor before his subjects were somewhat satisfied with the result. This view is unique of its kind, and its execution is exceedingly fine. These children of Mr. Lacroix all passed away in infancy, but are represented grown up, as they are, in their normal spiritual state.

The Camp-Meetings.

While the echoes awakened by the Fortieth Anniversary celebrations all over the country have hardly subsided, the energetic managers (and their friends) of the various summer camps are approaching the public with announcements of good things to come, in the forest and by the seaside, when the now swelling buds of spring shall have become transformed by Nature's alchemy into the golden and vernal glories of the summer-time. THE BANNER has interesting details to present to its readers next week concerning the camps at ONSET BAY and LAKE PLEASANT, MASS., CASSADAGA, N. Y., PARKLAND, PA., and VERONA PARK, ME.

☞ Amesbury, Mass., has had the most disastrous fire ever known in that locality, which occurred on the night of April 5th, destroying carriage factories and dwelling-houses. The loss is estimated at $800,000—insurance $300,000. The Boston Globe—with its usual enterprise (?)—has, in its edition of Saturday last, what purport to be two engravings of the burnt district, covering a quarter part of the first page of that paper. The first one was taken evidently from a southeast position, as it endeavors to show the old village in the background, but it looks more like a graveyard with a church in the centre, the gravestones popping up all around. The Globe also states that the fire gained great headway on account of inefficiency of the Amesbury fire department. We learn from the chief engineer, Mr. Nayson, that such was not the case, as they had ample water, which was thrown upon the fire through over a dozen lines of hose from powerful hydrants that have a pressure of over one hundred pounds to the square inch, while the Newburyport hydrants have only forty pounds to the square inch. So much for the Globe's correctness. All the citizens of Amesbury aver that their firemen did splendidly under the circumstances, taking into consideration the strong wind, and the highly combustible materials which fed the flames.

☞ A writer in the New York World of last Sunday endeavors to impress upon the readers of that paper that the medium Dr. Henry Slade is a fraud. An Englishman, who had witnessed the slate-writing in the Doctor's presence in London, writes as follows: "Any sane man who may witness the phenomena that occur in his presence, has proof beyond cavil of a power intellectual; and, for my part, I and many of my friends have had messages from mothers, fathers and children; slates written on our breast, under our own hands, ah! and under the feet of some most skeptical, and these very skeptics now accept the evidence as of supermundane origin."

A PLEASANT MEETING occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hatch, jr., in Boston, on the evening of Monday, April 2d—the occasion marking the anniversary of the date when Miss M. T. Shelhamer was first controlled by the lively spirit intelligence known to readers of the BANNER OF LIGHT, and her friends generally, as the Indian maiden LOTELA. The company present were mainly personal friends of the family; the exercises consisted of singing by Prof. C. P. Longley, Mr. and Mrs. Hatch, Mrs. Nellie M. Day, and others; appropriate remarks by Miss Shelhamer under control of her sterling guide Father Pierpont, and personal greetings by LOTELA to her friends present. Social converse also lent interest to the hour. The enjoyable memorial session closed with the partaking of refreshments, and the expression at their leave-taking of many good wishes toward spirits and mortals on the part of the retiring guests.

☞ The Banner of Light Free Circle table was decorated on the afternoon of Tuesday, April 10th, with several choice specimens of the Easter lily, which were the gift of Dr. L. Keyes, of 5 Temple street, Boston, who received them from her sister, now at the Bermudas. These beautiful flowers are said to grow wild in those favored islands. The donator will please accept our sincere thanks, and those of the invisibles, for the fragrant offering.

☞ A movement originating with the New York Academy of Sciences to erect a monument in memory of the distinguished American naturalist, J. J. Audubon, has received an impetus by the appointment from members of the Linnæan Society, of a Committee to advance its interest. An appeal for funds has been issued. HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.—The attraction the present week at the Hollis is Augustin Daly's celebrated company, which, en route for Europe, has devoted a short period in Boston to the production of one of its special successes in New York, entitled "The Railroad of Love." The play may be witnessed at the Hollis every evening, and on Saturday afternoon. Robson and Crane and Mr. Sothern are among the coming attractions at this popular theatre.

He did it, too. It was a postage stamp that cost three cents, but it was a "first-class steel engraving." Yes, a very sharp steal!

Spiritualists and all others should not be deceived by such vile advertisements. It looks as though Chicago was being overrun with this class of impostors just now.

A Maine newspaper says that Mrs. Esther Potter of Long Ridge, who has just died after a long illness from consumption, was the mother of four children, the youngest a babe. She could not bear to think of leaving the little one, and constantly prayed that it might go with her when she died. A few days ago, when it was plain that she was about to die, she called her family around her and bade them good-bye, and then, clinging to the baby, prayed that it might die too. It had been perfectly well, apparently, but, after a kiss from its dying mother, closed its eyes, and in five minutes was dead.

POOR MILK.—It is alleged that the producers of milk who live within twenty-five miles of Boston do not receive one-half the price for their pure milk that the milkmen in Boston get for their milk, which it is claimed is largely extended in quantity, and prepared in a manner with some chemical to keep it from souring, which is retained sweet much longer than pure milk. If the Boston milkmen more than double the price paid for pure milk, they should surely keep the standard up to that which it was in when purchased of the producers, not only for health but for their own good as honorable citizens.

"THE STURDY OAK" is the name of a new sixteen-page monthly publication in this city. "Devoted to the rights of 'We, the People,'" and "the interests of common humanity." In furtherance of this purpose it advocates the purity of the ballot and the right of women to exercise it. In its introductory it states its central idea to be that many of the evils and corruptions of our modern life are the results of defects in our political management. It will therefore strive to introduce simpler, purer and juster methods than prevail at present, asserting that "the salvation of America as a republic demands an equality of rights and opportunities, limited only by the natural capacities of its people." The price is fifty cents a year, and its office at 28 Oliver street, Boston. William A. Sturdy, editor.

THE THEOSOPHIST for March gives a translation of the larger part of a volume recently published in Paris, upon "Elementary Occultism," appending such notes as the editor deems called for to render a clear understanding of certain passages. A lecture upon "The Sankhya and Yoga Philosophy," delivered in public last December, is reported in full. Other of the principal articles are "Esoteric Buddhism and Its Cosmogony," "Travestied Teachings," "Kalvalyanavanita," and "The Anatomy of the Tantras." In "Correspondence" "A Strange Case" is described, some instances given of the appearance of an individual at a distance at nearly the moment of his decease, and a theory suggested as to the means employed in self-levitation. Of the remaining articles are "Rules of Sleep," "Heavenly Messengers," "Another Georgia Wonder-Woman," "Influence of the Planets," etc. New York: 206 Broadway.

Never in the history of remedies which cure disease has there been such a success as has just been recorded by

Peptonix

The druggists, both wholesale and retail, never saw any such rapid sales.

This is because Peptonix instantly relieves sufferers, and they carry the glad tidings to others whom they know are afflicted with

DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

It is said that a dyspeptic grasps at a suggested remedy as a drowning man grasps at a straw. How surprised he must be when—having tried a hundred articles, more or less, and found them all useless—he finds that in PEPTONIX he obtains a substantial and immediate relief.

Dyspepsia is a Disease

With which our physicians have struggled in vain for years. Hundreds of proprietary remedies have been offered to the public and have proved unavailing, but for the past twenty-five years Peptonix, a remedy compounded by an eminent English Physician, has met with unqualified success abroad. Since the introduction of Peptonix into this country thousands have been cured, and hundreds of boxes are selling daily.

Ask your druggist for them. If he does not keep them, we will mail them free on receipt of price,

From HON. CHAS. J. NOYES, Speaker Mass. House of Representatives.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
SPEAKER'S ROOM, STATE HOUSE, BOSTON, MASS.

The Allston Company:

Gentlemen—The Peptonix kindly furnished me by a friend have been thoroughly tested, and I have experienced such DELIGHTFUL RELIEF by their use from the dyspepsia which has long afflicted me that I write to commend them to any with a like trouble. I HAVE NOT KNOWN THEM TO FAIL IN A SINGLE INSTANCE OF AFFORDING IMMEDIATE RELIEF, and I carry them constantly with me to use in case of need. Besides, they are VERY PLEASANT TO THE TASTE. I should cordially recommend them to all persons who are suffering from indigestion in its temporary or more permanent form.

With high esteem, I am sincerely,
CHARLES J. NOYES.

OFFICE OF DOR, HUNNEWELL & CO., 4 ARLINGTON STREET, BOSTON.

The Allston Company:

Gentlemen—Please send me another box of "Peptonix," I find them of great benefit to me, my indigestion having ENTIRELY DISAPPEARED since using them. Shall keep them constantly on hand.

Very truly yours,
E. R. HUNNEWELL.

From GEN. JNO. M. CORSE, Postmaster of Boston.

The Allston Company:

Gentlemen—I think that Peptonix are the best things of the kind that I ever saw. Yours truly,
JNO. M. CORSE.

From MAJ. GEO. S. MERRILL, Insurance Commissioner of Mass.

The Allston Company, Boston:

Gentlemen—I have of late been troubled with indigestion, trying various remedies, with little effect. Somewhat skeptically I experimented with Peptonix, and to my GRATEFUL SURPRISE found them entirely efficacious, invariably relieving the annoying malady, not once failing to accomplish just what you promised for them. They are PLEASANT TO THE TASTE, and, what is better, SURE IN RESULTS. Very truly yours,
GEO. S. MERRILL.

If you need to be convinced further, try one box. It costs but little, and the effect will be magical.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon Mrs. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 14th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! our loving Father, as the flowers in the springtime lift their heads into the clear sunshine for warmth and light, as the little child lifts its face to its mother's smile for tenderness and care, so we turn our souls unto thee for love and for approval. As the birds in the summer-time pour forth their praises in the sweetened air, so would our hearts, Father God, in lofty exultation, pour forth their thanksgiving unto thee who doeth all things well.

We realize thy power, we recognize thy protecting care exercised over all creation; and oh! at this time we would express our thought, our gratitude and our aspiration, in words of praise that may flow forth unto thee, who art indeed the tender parent of all life.

In the midst of sorrow and affliction may we behold the bright sunlight of eternal love; amid the dark experiences and discipline of time, may each spirit understand something of thee and thy law, and realize that thou art guiding it onward and upward to grander heights of unfoldment, to more beautiful worlds of light and truth.

We ask thy benediction to rest upon each one; that all may open their hearts to the reception of thy grace and love, and that each one may be uplifted to a plane of understanding where he may receive and learn of thee and thy angel hosts.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By A. H. N.] A person of sensitive nature is sometimes troubled with bitter thoughts and memories of the blunders, sins and errors of his past life. These unwelcome thoughts cloud his mind and mar his pleasure, in spite of all his efforts to avoid them; yet the person has progressed to a higher plane by leaving off evil habits, walking in better ways, and takes pleasure in pursuit of light and knowledge leading to the truth and right. How may we avoid trouble from this source? Are these memories of the past life a part of the individual, and will they follow him to the spiritual realms and trouble him there?

ANS.—Any person who seeks to break evil habits and to attain elevation of heart and spirit will certainly progress, even as that individual of whom the questioner speaks is said to have done; but memory is a part of human life, and belongs to each individual; its law is unerring and cannot be violated. The person spoken of in the question has, we understand, committed follies in the past, violated, to an extent at least, the laws of conscience, and such memory reappears, even in these days, when he is striving to live a better life, and confronts him with records of the past. This is something which he cannot avoid, and the more sensitive the man the more keenly will he feel the bitterness and the sorrow which the reflection of his past seems to cast upon him; and yet, even through the bitter memory, through the scourge which it lays upon his quivering spirit, may he rise to grander heights of unfoldment, to more glorious planes of spiritual effort and achievement if he will.

One who is aspirational, who earnestly seeks to be and to do better, day after day, will not succumb, in bitterness of spirit, to any sad or corroded memories which may arise; even though they strike deep into his soul with sorrow and remorse he will endeavor to rise higher and make grander effort in that direction. He must, however, examine himself and understand fully whether he really desires to rise in spiritual attainment. He should not brood over his wrongs and mistakes any more than will assist him in guiding his steps and habits for the future by the memories of the past. He may avoid the mistakes and step out into clearer pathways by adopting purer habits in his daily conduct. But let him not be too thoughtful of self alone, but rather direct his attention to others who are suffering, and see, if possible, if he may not give them some word of advice or helpful assistance which will aid them to rise above their unhappy condition. In doing this he will, in a measure, forget himself and the pangs of self-accusation will cease to affect him as keenly as they have done.

The questioner wishes to know if those memories will follow him into the spirit-world. While life and consciousness remain, remembrance must be a part of his life; but as he goes on from year to year, realizing that he is stepping higher, doing better, unfolding greater possibilities within his being, such stings will gradually fade away. He will look back upon his past follies and mistakes somewhat as mortals look upon the failures of childhood, and so make allowance for them, because of the ignorance which clouded his life at the time they occurred. The strongest question that should afflict him now is whether he is strong enough to avoid the recurrence of those follies and how to constantly resist temptation.

If he finds himself strengthened in spiritual character, then he need not sink down under the memories that weigh upon him, for he may press on and on, working toward the light, seeking assistance from higher spiritual sources, and finally he will find that peace and contentment which at present seem so far away.

Q.—[By Gus. Perry, editor of the Star, Gatesville, Texas.] One night I attended a well-lighted church, and just after the singing of the choir and while the minister was giving out his text, my attention was attracted to the wall just back of the pulpit, by a bright light on the same. I then looked steadily for a moment, and saw the face of an old man on the wall where the light had been. The face, too, was very bright and disappeared. I again looked, and saw the outline of another face, a little higher up, but it lasted only a moment. The wall is painted white, and the faces were brighter than the lamp-lights. I am sure that it was no optical delusion. Was it a materialization? or what?

A.—This was undoubtedly a spiritual manifestation; we should not judge it a materialization, in the proper acceptance of the term, but should rather believe that your correspondent had been brought into a receptive condition of mind through his surroundings, and that for the moment the physical senses were subjected to the operation of the spiritual perceptions, and consequently his clairvoyant vision had become opened sufficiently for him to behold the light and faces of which he speaks. Undoubtedly the light was produced by attendant spirits who had the service in charge, and who were making use of the minister in attendance as an instrument for the exercise of their power of inspiration.

It is a fact, however little it be understood by the clergy of the present day, that spirit intelligences are scattered far and wide over the entire earth, for the purpose of bearing an uplifting spiritual power to those who are teachers and leaders of the people. Especially is this so in the religious department of life; for true religion appeals entirely to the spiritual nature of mankind—is adapted to the inner being—and is calculated to call forth the better attributes of man into active operation. This means the office of true religion: to help mankind to live rightly, to send forth aspirations and good motives of character. Spirit intelligences are awake on every hand to further this movement and assist humanity in its spiritual unfoldment by making use of whatever instrumentalities are at their command. In many churches and private homes are mortals who have been utilized in this way. Clergymen generally give what they believe to be the word of truth, and in many instances—as was undoubtedly the case the question alludes to—wisely intelligent and loving spirits succeed in expressing a thought or utterance through the lips of instrumentalities—which is effective in doing good.

Q.—[By the same.] I have the power, sometimes, when I lay my hands on a person's head who is suffering with the headache, to cure it. What does this signify?

A.—We should judge the questioner to be a fine mediumistic subject for spiritual power, and that at times the medial qualities which are his are acted upon by unseen intelligences for useful results.

His first question proves to us that he is endowed with clairvoyant vision, which at times may be exercised as in the case mentioned. The second question shows that his organism may be a reservoir of magnetic force, which magnetism may be drawn upon and distributed by unseen spiritual attendants in helpfulness to suffering mortals; therefore when he places his hand upon the heads of those in pain he finds that he relieves them of their suffering. And why? Because the magnetic forces of his nature become distributed, and are imparted to the one in pain, consequently in parting with these forces he restores the equilibrium of the circulation of the nervous force in the system of those whom he treats, and in this way helps them to overcome disease or suffering.

We advise the gentleman to practice his gifts, and to sit—even if he does so alone—at regular intervals during a late hour in the evening, so the spiritual attendants may experiment with his forces and further unfold his mediumship for such service.

Q.—[By the same.] I can also see, as it were, surrounding the heads of certain persons, under certain conditions in daylight and by lamplight, a halo of light that looks more like the sun beating down on the earth, and casting its reflection back. What is this? Does it represent any particular phase of mediumship?

A.—This power of sight represents a high phase of mediumship, or rather of unfoldment of spiritual perceptions, which, as we have said, may be utilized for good work. Undoubtedly, the questioner is clairvoyant, and may, under proper conditions, become so en rapport with the spiritual world as to not only be able to see and recognize spirits and spirit-surroundings, but he may also be developed to be able to perceive clairvoyantly the surroundings and spiritual attendants of mortals with whom he comes in contact. Not only does his spirit-clairvoyance seem to be struggling for exercise, but his spiritual perceptions are gaining unfoldment. In time he may, by coming in contact with persons, read their characters, and gain a knowledge of their general condition.

This halo of light of which he writes as being seen around the heads of persons or parties whom he approaches, is the magnetic aura emanating from those individuals. Every person is constantly giving forth magnetic emanations which go to make up an envelope or halo around their forms. This magnetic envelope serves as a protecting shield to the individual from the encroachments of any person or spirit, for none can enter within that atmosphere who are not entirely in sympathy with the individual himself; and those of an adverse nature are repelled when they approach, because the two spheres of magnetism do not blend; consequently this aura or emanation is not only a part of the spiritual life of the individual, but is a shield. From this covering of magnetic elements is made up the spiritual body, which will be needed by the indwelling spirit when it parts with its physical covering and passes from earthly scenes.

Q.—[By C. A. W.] Does spiritual vision help spirits see any more clearly what is going on in this world than mortals do of what is taking place in the world of spirits?

A.—All will observe that those who are mediumistic on earth, in any department of medial unfoldment, afford conditions to approaching spirits by which they can more closely perceive, realize and understand the passing scenes and objects of earthly life than they could do were they not in contact with a mediumistic individual.

Mortals who are endowed with spiritual clairvoyance can sometimes, by laying aside all anxiety and care concerning the external things of life, see clearly and closely into certain departments of the spirit-world, and perceive individual spirits passing to-and-fro, and describe them so accurately as to have those spirits recognized by their earthly friends. We do not know that a spirit-friend, approaching a medium and making use of that medium's clairvoyant powers, can see more clearly into the earth-life and the material things around him than can a medium clairvoyantly endowed, in gazing into the spirit-world, see clearly the persons and objects of that usually invisible world.

A spirit who understands communication with earth and is familiar with it, and makes constant use of a mediumistic organism for prosecuting some useful work on earth, will so grow into harmony with his medium and with the surrounding objects of that mediumistic life, as to be able clearly to see, understand and know what is taking place in that vicinity. A medium gazing into the spirit-world cannot so closely follow the persons and scenes of that life as can the spirit in returning, unless that medium be detached in mind, and even, to an extent, in outward surroundings, from the world and its pursuits—be lifted up constantly into an atmosphere of spirituality, and indeed pass through a succession of trance experiences, during which time the body is, to all intents and purposes, devoid of active life.

Q.—[By the same.] Is it any easier to communicate with those we love than those we hate—if there are such—in spirit-life?

A.—Not always. Sometimes the atmosphere of hate going out from the mortal on earth reaches the spirit in the other life who is thus thought of, and forcibly impels that spirit to approach in contact with the mortal who thus dislikes him. By the law of association, which may operate in a two-fold manner, the distrusted spirit may be held closely to the mortal who dislikes him, and perhaps may be swept into communication with that mortal.

Now, possibly, the one on earth who thus dislikes a spirit has some dear friend in the higher life to whom he is much attached, and he desires to communicate with that friend, but the elements of hatred constantly going out from the spirit on earth may create a barrier between himself and his spiritual friend, and so prevent the communication which he so much desires.

It is wise, always, to subdue any feeling, such as distrust, dislike or hatred of a fellow-creature, whether on earth or in spirit-life. Those who are aspirational by nature, who are spiritual in thought and in effort, are not those who cultivate the feeling of hatred toward any one. Those who are thus refined in character usually exercise a loving forbearance even for those who are enemies, or who dislike them, because the higher qualities of the mind and heart are in operation, and in them there is no room for hatred or distrust. A loving spirit-friend will seek harmonious associations, whether it be on earth or in the higher life; and also such a spirit may have friends on earth whom he loves, yet if those friends on earth send out a repelling atmosphere he may not be able to approach them and to communicate; thus a person may, in exercising a feeling of hatred toward one spirit, build up a mighty barrier between himself and the one whom he most tenderly loves.

Q.—[By J. R.] Why is it that some mediums can see, speak, write, etc., whenever they seat themselves for that purpose? Has a special control anything to do in such cases?

A.—Such mediums—and they do exist despite the skepticism of the world in regard to their claims—must be very negative individuals, and constantly receptive to the influences that play around them from the spirit-life; and whenever they seat themselves in a passive condition, their natures are thrown open to the entrance of those spirits who approach; and as there are very many spirit intelligences seeking ways and means of communicating with earth, such a medium may be utilized for their purpose at any hour or moment of the day. A special spirit control may have something to do in such a case. All mediums are attended by one or more spirit intelligences known as guides, and it is the business of these intelligences to not only guard their instruments against danger, but also to utilize their mediumistic powers for the accomplishment of spiritual work.

A very negative or sensitive medium may have the constant attendance of some especial spirit intelligence who desires to make use of his instrument at any moment when it is possible to do so, and may feel it his duty to express a thought, either for himself or some other spirit, at any moment when he can find the medium in a passive condition, and so be at hand to seize such moments and make the most of them.

There are other mediums who voice or in some way reflect the thought, the sentiment and the purpose of attendant spirit intelligences for some wise and useful work; and yet the guard in attendance may exert on their subjects such a positive influence at times as to make them impassive and not easily accessible to other spirit intelligences. By exercising this positive influence over their charge, the spiritual attendants give to that charge an assistance in passing through the world and meeting its experiences; consequently at such hours as the instrument is used by the spirit guides, he or she may reflect closely and tersely what they have to give, and at the same time remain impervious to the encroachments of other spirits, or the advances of such influences as come, through the law of psychology, from persons in the flesh, which might act adversely upon their sensitive instrumentality.

William White.

Before you close, Brother Wilson, I desire to express a few words to old friends and associates. It was at my desire Mr. Pierpont brought Luther into the little apartment, for I wished to make use of his magnetism as a battery for my coming to-day, not feeling sure of my ground.

It has been thought very strange that I have not expressed myself more frequently from this platform. I have seen questions coming up from the minds of individuals on earth, who formerly took a great interest in this establishment, to me in the spirit-world, one of which is: "Have you lost interest in the Banner of Light Free Circles? and if not, why do you not communicate through that channel to the world?" You know, and all connected with this place know, that I have not lost interest in the grand and good work which the spirit-world sends forth through its instruments here to suffering humanity; but I have taken my place in other departments of labor, which belong more exclusively to the spirit-world than to the mundane sphere of life. While my sympathy and cheerful influence come to this place year after year, and I at times stand upon this platform, unseen by mortal eyes, as one of the large band of spirits present, yet I do not think it necessary to raise my voice or to give utterance to my thoughts in a public way.

To-day, however, I feel moved to speak and bring my love, greetings and dear remembrances to all co-workers and friends, and to assure them that as year after year of spiritual life opens to my view, they bring me stronger evidence of the responsibility of human life and press upon my spirit more and more appreciation of all the good things which immortality brings to man. In studying out these laws, and seeking to understand them, I find much of active work. I ask each friend not to think of me as dead, or as having deserted my post. There is a strong guard set on the material side to do its work through mundane instruments; there is a large guard set on the spiritual side to send forth magnetic forces for the elevation and instruction of spirits who are in need of such work, and who, from time to time, try to make use of such places as this. I belong to the latter company. The dear medium who for so many years filled a place on this platform (Mrs. J. H. Conant) belongs to the same company, sending out her work and influence in such ways as may find useful results.

I would say to my dear friends especially connected with this office, that I have been aware of the friction and turmoil passing around them during the last few years, and especially within the last twelve months; but I come with the cheerful word of encouragement, that the clouds are going to disperse, and after a time, it may be a year or two, but not much longer, I think, more of quiet, of peace, and of happy result for their labors will come to them William White.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held March 2d, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Robert Alexander.

Robert Alexander, of Derry, N. H. I would like to say a few words to Clark—that 's all the one I can reach; the rest have got every door and shutter nailed down with ten-penny nails. But mind one thing, children: if you do n't open the door this side, your nails aint worth a cent when you get ours. Ellen, I want you to know I have heard the conversation that has come up, many a time, between you and Clark, and you even went so far as once to say you wished all Spiritualists were dead! Ellen, remember you will meet us on the other side. I know you 'll say, "Father, I was a little in temper." But hold it back a little.

Mother is with me; and Lucy, the little one when here, is with me; also Aunt Sally, who has just put on the new body; and Peter, too, but not able to realize where they are yet—hardly coming to consciousness enough for that. Clark, if Lucy—that is, this side, for I had two of the same name—or Ellen, or Harrison, or Morrison, or any of the rest of them, do n't want to learn anything here, why, let them wait until they get on to our side.

Mother says: "Robert, do n't talk quite so loud; people can hear;" but I've got to be Robert when I have anything to say. I would like for Clark to know I've been trying for a long time to send a few words, that the children might know I was not dead. I fully can understand all the changes that have been going on in front of the house; but, Clark, keep the old farm in the family, and that means for you to keep it. Robert is feeling a little better; but I know—and you will understand why—what some others say makes no difference. We see plainer and clearer than they do in the flesh. I am thankful, Clark, for what you have done for the children; and also the boys have done a great deal for them, too.

Emma and Mary, go on with your learning; but that is n't all; education here is all right and well enough, but also you could take in a little spiritual education, and it would not interfere with the earthly. John is here with me and the others that I mentioned, just beside the boundary. Mother is here. I never regret the day when I was able to say: Mary, you have been a good, faithful wife and mother. I can get into communication with but one—Clark. I suppose you 'll see the letters that are printed, and know that your Aunt Sarah has given a message.

Polly Jordan.

Now that I am going to speak I know what they will say: "Aunt Polly Jordan is dead." I guess not, now. I feel as if I 'm more alive than I ever was here. I know I could not get away from early teachings—I did n't want to, neither. Now I am satisfied that it was rather a hindrance to me. I did n't learn as much as I might have done if it had n't been that I thought there was only one way to get to heaven. Well, in one sense that is true.

Mary Jane will say that aint Aunt Polly, for she would n't come back and admit that. I've tested the other side, Mary Jane, and you have n't. I do n't care if all the people of Raymond and Poland, and all the rest of the towns round there, should say that Polly Jordan do n't come back to earth, I will hold up both hands and say I am here.

[To the Chairman:] Do I talk too loud? I guess I got a little excited. No matter. I want to say what I've got to say—I've been long enough about it. I've been round in this room two or three days. I was afraid I would n't get here by the time your meeting begun. I aint the only one; there 's others here beside me. I see some of the men folks—'t aint all women folks that come back and talk.

When I was in the flesh I would no more listen to one word of spirits coming back and talking! Why! I do n't understand hardly how I got in here now. I suppose it 's because I 've been standing round here so long. I was here in the last meeting, but they shut the door. I said, I've got to wait till next time, and I got here early enough this time.

I want this letter sent to Raymond, Me. Mary Jane will be looking out, because sometimes she hears people say something about this, and she 'll only be glad when she comes really to know it. It takes a good deal for some folks to really know.

Joseph Lane.

I come from Poland, Me. I am Joseph Lane. I have tried several times before to make a few remarks, but did n't get quite power enough until to-day. I feel as if my loved ones here will be looking earnestly for a few words from father. And Sarah, I know, will be glad to hear that Joseph can speak as well as others. I have Wentworth with me, and Messina and Lester and Josie, and mother and father, but they are not able to say anything now. The children were divided between us—Sarah giving you half and me half. I feel like saying: Thank God that he knew how to make wise provision that we should never die, but should be given power to come among you daily and hourly.

I know there have been some trying hours that looked dark to each one of you, but I find when I come to earth that I am in sympathy with you all.

I wish Nelson would learn a little on this side of life, though it be but a shadow compared to ours, which is the real life. You just commence to live, as you throw off the old garment and put on the new. I am happy in my spirit-home. Do n't think the dear ones there remain children, for they have grown up to manhood and womanhood, as really as they would here. But, Sarah, you will know them, and will make no mistake, as you come into spirit-life. You will know they are our children, although changed and grown in the spirit-life. The tie of affection is never broken, never lost. We love to come to earth and hold sweet communion with you, although many times you cannot realize we are there, yet we try in every way to make our presence felt. Sometimes we fail, and at other times we feel that you understand our coming. I am happy and satisfied with the home. I hope these few words may reach the dear ones here, some in the immediate surroundings, and some just a little out of your large city.

Frank Downes.

I ought to say I went down or off a building, here in your city. Frank Downes is my name. There has been a great deal of talk as to whether I had spurs on or not. No; if I had, what good would it have been; I could n't have put them in the slate.

Now, father and mother, each one of you, I want you to know I am happy—and that 's good enough. Clara, you might open the door—as I told Lowe a good many times—if you were not so much afraid. And, Susie, you did n't quite get into the church, did you? It do n't make any difference; there 's no church on our side.

Will Neal, I know where you are; it 's just in Cambridge, that 's where you are. I want to tell you that Ella is with me, and she is going to send a little letter just as soon as she can get it all copied off what she wants to say. You know, Will, when she sent a letter it had to be just exactly so. So she 's waiting a little.

I want Ed. to know, also, that I have been in his home. I want to tell Belle to take care of that little one, for it 's a pretty tender sprout. I want Lowe to know I have been round with him and Henry a good deal, and I think this scheme will work to a T, and if it does, they 'll be all right. I have been out in New York. I go round there, where the old office was, Ed., a good many times. Yes; I have been down to the office here, Will, where you tie up, sometimes. I saw you only a few days ago talking with a gentleman on Washington street. I was right beside you. Will, you 'll understand what I mean, or what I am driving at? Frank, do n't cover up very close. Little Daisy is right by my side. All send love to each one.

I did n't hardly expect I was going to get in here, but I have, and while I am here I might as well spell it all out now. They thought they were going to fool me, so they tried one instrument and another, and came all bundled up, but you know they did n't cover up the spirit worth a cent. I knew it all. I said to Clara that I knew it. You can't cover up the spirit from us, you cover up the face.

Susie, when there 's an opportunity try to learn all you can here; it will be a great deal of help to you when you cross over. That 's what I would say to them all. I know, Will, I have n't many words to say to you; you do well; and the rest of them take in a little, once in about six or twelve months.

I am happy, and I would n't come back to stay, and climb over the high buildings you have here. My work had something to do with the telegraphic wire.

Kirk Smith.

I went out from Detroit, Mich. My name is Kirk Smith. I am thankful I have the power to speak to-day. I have been here so many times that I cannot number them, and I want to thank the angels in heaven that a channel is open to all, which you mortals have been instrumental in opening, so that spirit and mortal can come into communication. If mortals knew how much happiness it gives us, never would they close the door against us. Oh! how many times have I tried, as I have stood close by this desk, thinking perhaps I might give a few lines, but have always failed.

I will go back to when there was a lady here before—yes, two—and a gentleman; but I could not get control of the organism of either.

I have some friends in New York, and some dear ones in Hyde Park.

Mother, oh! mother, try to open the door; do n't close it and say you can't hardly believe that your boy comes home. I know, mother, it was a hard stroke, when they said you could not look on his face; but in heaven you will look on your dear boy's face again.

I have often wondered why the angels did not come for father and take him from the suffering that he has endured ever since dear little sister Gussie went. Dear sister Marion, you have been a ministering spirit to father, mother, sister, brothers; and also has brother Charlie, for I claim him a brother to-day; and would to God I did not have any sadness as I come into the home.

I wish Arthur to remember that mother has had much to bear, more than you will ever realize on this side.

Stand by mother, boys! Brothers, stand by the mother who has done for you when you could not do for yourselves! How many times has sister Marion crossed the street to see that all was done right. A ministering spirit in the mortal! How many times have I sent forth the earnest petition that the angels might guard and guide you through life!

Yes, darling Helen, I 'll tell mamma you are here. I know she 'll be glad to know you are with Uncle Kirk, and also grandpa. She says, many times, "Oh! the pretty flowers." Bless the child! she has all she wishes of them now. Our flowers are more beautiful, more real and tangible to us than yours can be.

I bless the Great Father, God, that in his infinite wisdom he hath made a provision that we should not die, but should fully recognize our loved ones in heaven, where no partings come. This life is a life of partings; ours is a life of reünion. We are looking forward to the day when we shall all be reünited. Mother, open the door a little wider, and I will come and try and comfort you, and when sister speaks of us, open your own spirit-door as wide as she has done, and your burdens of life will not seem so heavy.

To Aunt Lizzie and Jane I will say: your doors are not open as wide as they should be, but I feel, in God's own good time, you will learn a little more than you have learned here so far; because you can learn while dwelling in the mortal, and will only be too glad to acknowledge it in spirit-life.

Annie Newell Peck.

My name is Annie Newell Peck. I lived in Boston. I went out of the world suddenly at last. Grandfather is here to-day, and he says he will sometime send a message, and is very anxious to do so. I would like Carrie Marsh to know that I have returned. If you will send the letter to 34 Cedar street, I think it will reach her.

I would also say to Jackson that I thank him very much for opening the door. I have spoken to him more than once. I know Carrie would open the door, if she had the privilege, where I could meet her. She has many cares, and sometimes they seem heavy and burdensome. Look up, grandfather says; never are we so far away but we can come to you and help you bear the burdens of the day, which we know are heavy while you dwell here.

I would like each one to know how beautiful our spirit-home is. But you must wait. Mother often says: "How dark it was on earth! but in the spirit-world how light everything comes to us!" No, no, dear Carrie, I would not ask to come to stay, but I would love to come to communicate with you, and I would like you to know I am happy. No more aches or ills find us there. And grandfather says that just as soon as possible he will send a letter.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

ALEXANDER BAILEY.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of March 17th I find a message from ALEXANDER BAILEY of East Hampton, Conn., which is true in every particular. Walter was his brother, who passed to spirit-life more than thirty years since; Mary was the wife of Walter; Jason and Lawton were his brothers, who more recently passed over. I was living in East Hampton at the time of the funeral of Walter Bailey, and know of the prejudice existing in that place against the cause of Spiritualism. Alexander Bailey was blasting a ledge, and, as he says, "went up."

M. W. COMSTOCK.

HARVEY MERRILL.

In THE BANNER of March 10th I noticed a communication through Mrs. Smith, purporting to come from one HARVEY MERRILL, who went out from Wells River, Vt. This being so near home, I thought I would see if any such person ever lived in that place. I have ascertained that, a good many years ago, a Harvey Merrill went from Landaff, N. H., to Wells River, and that he died in a pasture, which accounts for the pair of bars spoken of in the communication. It affords me much satisfaction to find such things true.

Yours truly, E. B. CLEMENT.

Barnet, Vt., March 27th, 1888.

HENRY INGALLS.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT, under date of March 31st, is a message through Mrs. Smith, given by a spirit purporting to be HENRY INGALLS, who says that his home was in Salem, Mass.; and I am requested by the lady whom he calls Lydia—now Mrs. Edmond Gage, of this city—to say that the communication is true to the letter; also that the Frank and Annie mentioned in the communication reported at our Anniversary exercises in Music Hall, Sunday afternoon, April 1st, through the mediumship of Edgar W. Emerson. Yours for spirit-communion,

W. W. CURRIER.

Haverhill, Mass., April 4th, 1888.

ELLEN CLARK SHERMAN.

A message given through Mrs. B. F. Smith in your paper of March 24th I recognize as from a cousin of mine, ELLEN CLARK SHERMAN, and the reason she speaks of a team coming is because she came to her earthly end by being run over by a team. Her father, Moses Clark, was of course an uncle of mine, whom I well knew; also Flavia and Harvey were well known by me. HENRY N. CLARK.

"If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?"

The world-wide reputation of Prof. Alfred R. Wallace as one in the foremost ranks of scientists imparts an added strength and value to the clear elucidation and masterly advocacy of the truths of Spiritualism given by him in his lecture having for its theme "If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?" published in a pamphlet of twenty-four pages by Colby & Rich, and supplied at the very low rate of 5 cents a single copy, thirteen for 50 cents, or thirty for $1.00. Let it do its work; buy it and circulate it.

April Magazines.

THE CENTURY.—The closing number of the thirty-fifth volume is filled to repletion with the best of reading. The opening pages contain a finely illustrated article descriptive of Palestine, under the name, "From Dan to Beersheba," the illustrations being mostly from photographs taken by the author. A deeply interesting account, historically of great value, is given by Franklin L. Pope, of "The American Inventors of the Telegraph." Portraits accompany it, and engravings of early instruments, experimental apparatus, and transmitted messages given, together with much information now first made public. Nicolay and Hay's History of Lincoln presents a spirited account of "The National Uprising," Baltimore and Washington being the prominent scene of events. Minute details are given of the passage of the Mass. Sixth Regt. through the former city, and a pathetic statement is made of Lincoln's anguish of mind at the dangers menacing the country. Geo. Kennan treats of the Russian Penal Code, explaining its astonishing provisions. A series of papers on "Bird Music" is commenced with the songs of the Bluebird and Robin. Several specially fine poems enrich this number. In fiction we are given new chapters of "The Graysons," "Two Kentucky Gentlemen of the Old School," etc. In "Topics," "Shall Fortunes be Limited by Law?" is discussed. "Open Letters" and "Bric-à-Brac" have capital articles in their respective veins of thought. The Century Co., New York. Damrell & Upham, Boston.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—That which should be read, pondered and have the widest influence for good in this month's number, is a sermon by Dr. C. S. Robinson, that has for its theme, "Does Dominion Over Animals Include their Destruction." It is not very creditable to a professed Christian people that such an appeal should be thought called for; but that it is, is evident on every hand. Those who profess to love and worship a God of a character he whom they adore is said to possess, will not hesitate to inflict momentary pain where he inflicts it unceasingly and without end. The sermon contains illustrations of wanton cruelty to animals which no person of a moderate degree of sensibility can read without a shudder. Here is one passage that should not pass without a salutary influence:

"In Louisville I saw in an apple orchard a man catching the Southern red-birds in a trap. He skinned them alive before my eyes, and was paid fifty cents each for their skins. Every red-bird I have seen since, in milliners' shops, or in church or street, has recalled that blear-eyed man, bloody handed amid the sweet fragrance and song of that peaceful orchard. Five hundred thousand skins of this species alone have been used this fall. Every humming-bird I see on a woman's bonnet, every bright-hued wing or velvety breast of bird that trims a fashionable hat, hurts me. A human scalp displayed by a savage is less barbarous, for at least human fought human, and the scalp is the reward of prowess, but the bird-skin is the badge of cruelty and cowardice. Is womanhood inherently cruel, or only thoughtlessly so?"

The writer closes by saying that one day a rude boy was tormenting a kitten; his sister, with her eyes full of tears, exclaimed, "Oh! do not hurt her, she is one of the creatures of God." The rough fellow kept on, but the word of warning so gently spoken struck in. The next day he in his turn saw a comrade beating a half-starved dog, and he remembered his sister's words. "Hold on there," cried he; "that is one of God's creatures." That second boy looked ashamed, and stopped. And just then a desperate drunkard passed by; he overheard the talk between the lads, and said within himself quietly, "I too am one of God's creatures." And from that moment he became a better and braver man. "Even so," he remarks, "my words may fall on listless ears, but some one may send them along further, for every heart pities a brute when some one else is striking it." New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—The frontispiece consists of copies of the famous Robertson miniatures on ivory of George and Martha Washington, never before engraved. Another portrait of Washington now for the first time engraved is from a painting by C. W. Peale, who produced fourteen portraits of Washington from life. Early methods of transportation are described by Prof. Hopkins, of Hamilton College, in "Between Albany and Buffalo," and "Church-Going in New York City in 1787," in several pages from the diary of Rev. Manasseh Cutler. From a quaint and racy little note-book sixty years old are given memorandums of what an Englishman saw in America in 1828. Contributions to this number of sterling merit are "The Acquisition of Florida," "The Fallacy of 1860" and "Conquest of the Mayas." "Original Documents," "Notes," "Queries" and "Historic and Social Jottings" will be perused with much interest. New York: 743 Broadway.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER has published a Supplement containing a stenographic report of the Judgment of the United States Supreme Court in the Appealed Telephone Cases, and the Dissenting Oral Opinion, delivered March 19th. New York: 115 Nassau street.

HEALTH AND HOME LIBRARY.—The present month's issue is the second number of this new quarterly publication. Its several departments, Literary, Health, Home, and Editorial, occupying one hundred and eight pages, are well filled with profitable reading. Its mechanical execution is exceptionally fine. Independent Slate-Writing Through the Mediumship of Chas. D. Cowan.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I was in Boston about three weeks ago and had a sitting with Mr. C. Davenport Cowan, at No. 219A Tremont street, who has lately become developed as an independent slate-writing medium. Being well satisfied with the tests given me, I invited Mr. Cowan to visit Portland, which invitation he accepted, and was with me March 1st and 2d. On those days he gave several sittings at my house, which, so far as I can learn, were very satisfactory. I herewith give you the communications received by Mrs. Maria C. Smith of Haverhill, Mass., mother of my wife, lately deceased, under the following conditions: Two ordinary slates having been thoroughly cleaned and securely bound together with cord, were prepared by my housekeeper, Miss Mary J. Conley, and given into the keeping of Mrs. Smith. These slates did not pass from her possession until after the writing had been done. Upon opening the slates the following was found legibly written:

"Dear Mother: This is such a grand chance for me to come to you that I am going to improve it. I know that it will be a great comfort to you to have this little message from me. Little Willie and I are standing right beside you now, and are throwing about you a tender influence. Give my love to 'Tommie' and all the family and friends.

Good-bye. MARY M. HARDY.
'MOLLIE.'"

"Mother: I am very glad to see you here in the old home. I was present on Saturday evening last, and enjoyed the exercises very much. The nice flowers, the nice music and the poem were beautiful. I was so glad to see 'Hubby' so happy. You do not know how much it pleases me to see him so kind and good to you and all, and the pleasant memories that he cherishes toward me. If Tommie is willing, you may have the dress. Yours, CELIA A. BEALS."

The reference of my wife to Saturday evening is explained by the fact that on that evening, which was Feb. 25th, and the anniversary of her birthday, we gave a reception to a few invited friends. There was music; poems were read, and the occasion made pleasant purposely for her, which, according to her communication, was appreciated as in this life.

THOS. P. BEALS.

The above communications were written upon slates in the manner and under the conditions stated.

Preachers, bigots, skeptics, and other spiritual ignoramuses without number, are centering their little popguns upon the citadel of our positive knowledge, vainly imagining that they can exterminate a monumental fact of nature. They might as well attempt to arrest the law of gravitation, or roll back the tides of the mighty deep to a dead sea level.—Golden Gate.

The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

COCINISM,

The Science of Practical Will-Ability and Psychological Hygiene.

THIS wonderful science teaches man how to obtain control over the greater part of his nervous system, and to such an extent that, by the exercise of his will, he can direct currents of vital force through any part of the body. When the exercise of this power is once learned, the brain and the whole nervous system can be cleansed, more or less, according to the amount of force exerted by the will.

If pain is experienced in any part of the body, when not the effects of physiological changes, it can be removed simply by removing the cause thereof; and even where such changes have taken place, if powerful currents of vital force can be forced through the parts affected, much foreign matter can be removed, thus giving Nature a chance to repair damages, especially in affections of the Liver. Failing Sight and Memory have been restored in many cases, whilst chest diseases are always amenable to this power.

There is another Phase of the Science:
The Psychology of Mediumship.

This branch deals directly with the development of Sensitives. Hundreds of persons have been developed as seers who never dreamed that they were mediumistic; whilst, when making experiments, many persons where invited to sit, without knowing anything about what they were sitting for, yet the results were the same; proving, beyond doubt, that to become a medium, all that is required is the proper organism and a fair stock of common honesty.

Sensitives developed by this process never lose their consciousness whilst traveling through the Realm of Spirit; therefore, all descriptions of places seen and information given, whilst journeying through space, are indelibly impressed upon the memory, and to such an extent that, where there is sufficient ability, maps of the country and plans of buildings are readily obtained, whilst the identity of spirits seen and spoken to are place beyond all doubt.

In the event of the world saying that I claim too much for the Psychology of Mediumship, I would refer to an account of a portion of my work in South Africa written by the Spiritualists of Cape Town, together with the address that I received on the eve of my departure for South America, both of which were printed in the Medium and Daybreak, April 24th, 1885.

I feel impressed to give these facts to the world at large, with the view of demonstrating them, wherever I am called upon to do so. Business matters will detain me here in Rosario until next June, after which time, if the people of the United States think sufficient of my Science to invite me to their shores, I can readily prove all that is herein stated. If societies or communities wish to write to me, my address is C. M. COGIN, F. C. C. A.,
O22 eow Rosario de santa Fé, Republica Argentina, South America.

MAGNETISM is one of the most powerful life-giving substances known to our race. Its action upon all animal kind is to quicken into life and polarity the sluggish molecules of the physical body. This majestic substance comes as near the central action of life itself as human intelligence can analyze.

When we apply a powerful Magnetic Shield to a body to eliminate disease, we work in strict harmony with Nature's highest laws, and utilize the most potential force we can employ next to intelligence to overcome morbid conditions of mind and body. Of all the known curative agents under the control of mortal mind and human will, Magnetism excels all others, and is incomparable in its magical action and quick results.

The finer and more subtle the force we use the quicker and better results we obtain.

To impart magnetic power and potency to a physical body is to give it strength, vitality and renewed youth.

The vivifying energy radiated constantly from Magnetic Shields stimulates alike the mental forces of the mind and increases all the animal power.

Magnetic Shields constantly feed the blood with warm, rich Fibrine, multiply the red corpuscles, polarize the iron, and intensify the vivific principle of life.

Whoever wears these Shields will take on awakened mental and physical energies, which in very truth is to renew one's youth. Every Shield we manufacture is worth its weight in gold to suffering humanity.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 50 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning, April 8th, Mr. J. T. Lillie opened the exercises with a song, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," Miss Mintie Eakins, piano accompanist. After an invocation by Mrs. Lillie, and another song by Mr. Lillie, the guide of Mrs. Lillie spoke upon several subjects presented by the audience, choosing "The Capabilities of the Soul" for that of her discourse. The soul, she said, is the part of man which survives all change. Though my form is invisible to you, my thought lives; it is eternal and deathless. The all-important question is, "What is True?" It is true spirits surround you as a cloud of witnesses, and in taking their testimony you must use your own judgment and reason in regard to their truthfulness. The fact that intelligent beings communicate in various ways proves they live beyond the change called death. We should rejoice that death is the law which liberates the soul, and enables it to follow the light forevermore. Old Theology has told you of God's wrath and of the only means whereby you could be saved from its infliction in a place of torment. You took it for truth; but spirits return and inform you heaven is not a place, it is a condition of the mind whether in or outside the form. The law of evolution is busy to-day, the power creative is in air, in water, and has never ceased to be or to act. The law is having its fulfillment, and man is gradually rising to a more spiritual plane of thought, and you will find that progression is the watchword through all eternity. After an improvisation upon "Eternal Youth," the large and attentive audience joined in a closing hymn.

Evening.—After singing by Mr. Lillie and an invocation by Mrs. Lillie, her guides spoke in response to a question concerning Swedenborg's doctrine of hells and their eternal duration, in the course of which it was said that of all the seers of past ages, no one had such clear perceptions of spirit-life, or has given so correct a revelation to mankind of that life, as Swedenborg. He saw all conditions; and though those conditions exist, they who are in them can outgrow them, and in doing so gain the higher conditions known as the kingdom of heaven. After the consideration of another question submitted by the audience, a poetic improvisation, a song by Mr. Lillie closed the service.

Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform next Sunday forenoon and evening at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The guides of the blind medium, Mr. A. E. Tisdale, spoke very acceptably to a good audience at the Temple last Sunday. The address was very logical and scholarly. He alluded to the materialistic views and conclusions of our so-called scientists, and claimed that many of them were very fallible. Herbert Spencer's syllogistic reasoning that from premises unknowable we could only reach an agnostic conclusion might sound logical, but while there was much in God and nature but dimly apprehended on this plane of being, yet the very fact that we can reason upon God and his universe, upon mind and matter, and discover the laws controlling them, proves the premises not entirely unknowable. Laws are but the sequence of a power that stands behind, which is spirit; and Spiritualism is the solvent that makes plain much that puzzles these reasoners. If all the potencies of life are in each molecule of matter, then matter, when arranged into organic forms, should always express the same life and power, but the fact was, it was dead and inert, except when breathed upon and infiltrated with spirit; and whatever individuality forms may have, is lost the moment spirit ceases to animate. It is unreasonable to assert that any class of facts in the universe is unknowable. It is for human intelligence to penetrate all secrets, and to read the book of life aright; and there is nothing too high or too low to escape the scrutiny of human intellect. Nothing short of a full text would do justice to this address, which was filled with close reasoning throughout, and seemed to carry conviction to the listeners.

Next Sunday at 10:30 A. M. the Temple Fraternity School will be held as usual. All friends are invited to bring their children. The exercises last Sunday were very interesting.

Mr. Tisdale's guides will speak again next Sunday at 2:45 P. M. Subject: "Moral Evolution through Soul Involution."

There will also be the usual sociable in the lower audience-room on Wednesday evening at half-past seven o'clock. All who are interested are cordially invited to each and all of above meetings.

W. H. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington Street.—The services in this hall last Sunday were largely attended and of unusual interest. After an opening song very finely rendered by Miss Nickerson, Chairman Lewis introduced Dr. Dean Clarke, who gave an address upon "What is Truth, and the best means of attaining it," remarking that we are living in an age of investigation; each one in his own way is seeking to know the truth in regard to the future life. One religious denomination has pointed this way, another that, each claiming to be right. While they have been debating the question of a continuity of life, Spiritualism has come to us, opened the door of the unseen world, and the spirits of those whom we knew and loved upon earth, come to us and give assurance of a life beyond. The speaker discussed, somewhat at length, the best methods to adopt by which we shall know the truth and the truthfulness of mediumship. His lecture was full of inspiration and heartily applauded. Tests and readings given by Mrs. B. F. Willard and Mrs. J. D. Bruce were well received and nearly all recognized.

At the evening session the hall was crowded and the service opened with "One by one we cross the river," sung by Miss Nickerson, accompanied by Prof. Milligan. The well-known blind medium, Mr. A. E. Tisdale, spoke upon justice as the principle which governs both in the civil and religious domain, giving to every one, here and hereafter, just what his merits entitle him to, and opening the way for a grander development in the life eternal, adding that the glories of the other life are nearer to us than we think. To-day justice is the stepping-stone to that land of celestial beauty, and we are made purer by the trials of this life, and the better fitted to enter upon the work we have to do over there. The service closed with an inspirational poem of great merit. Mr. Tisdale is one of our best speakers, and we heartily commend him to the fraternity everywhere. Mrs. L. Boyden gave very remarkable tests of spirit presence, giving, among others, the name of George Faulkner of Somerville, who desired recognition, closing one of the best meetings it has been our privilege to attend this season.

HEATH.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—The Ladies' Industrial Society connected with the Boston Spiritual Temple, Berkeley Hall, held its regular meeting on the afternoon and evening of April 3d. After the business meeting Mrs. H. W. Cushman gave tests of spirit presence. At six o'clock supper was served to a large company. In the evening, Capt. Richard Holmes presiding, Mr. J. T. Lillie opened the exercises with a song. Prof. W. F. Peck gave a recitation, which was highly appreciated, and Mrs. Hattie C. Mason and Mrs. Hattie C. Stafford a duet, Mrs. Lovering piano accompanist. After remarks by Capt. Holmes, a recitation was given by Mrs. C. M. Howland, of Brockton, which received well-merited applause. Excellent addresses by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham and Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, and a recitation by Miss Ida Burnham followed, and gave much satisfaction. Mr. J. T. Lillie closed the exercises with a song.

The next regular meeting, and the last for the season at which supper will be served at six o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of April 17th. A full attendance of all members and friends interested in the cause of Spiritualism is solicited.

MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

81 White street, East Boston.

The First Independent Club.—On Monday evening, April 2d, the exercises were opened with an address by Dr. J. C. Street, who stated that the recent anniversary was marked with greater interest than any previous one. An oncoming wave of spirit power was near at hand, on which higher and nobler intelligences would speed to earth's assistance.

The Vice-Grand Matron, Mrs. Hull, related an entertaining anecdote and manifestation of spirit power. Mrs. Abby N. Burnham spoke acceptably, and made known her interest in the Club and her desire to become one with us. Prof. Trask followed with forcible and entertaining remarks, and congratulated us on the breadth and liberality of our principles.

Mrs. Fletcher gave notices upon matters of interest, and made fitting allusions to items of profit.

The First Spiritual Temple has invited the entire membership to be present with its congregation on some Sunday in the near future, and by advice of our Guardians the last Sunday in April has been selected. It is desired that members wear their stars on this visit, and later a place of meeting will be arranged, that we may go in a body.

Mrs. Wentworth is quite ill, and receives our united condolences and wishes for recovery.

Our motto is "Speak no evil," and to its general observance is due that unity of feeling and harmony which prevails among our members. A form of greeting suggested, by our Guardians, is the beautiful Eastern salutation: "Peace be unto you;" the response being, "And unto you, peace." If we strive to let the spirit of this motto and greeting penetrate our daily doings undoubted kindliness and good-will will dwell about us, and lead to right thought, speech and action toward all.

F. V. FULLER, Rec. Sec'y.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Interesting meetings were held at this place on Sunday last, both afternoon and evening.

In the afternoon Mrs. J. F. Dillingham opened the exercises with a few appropriate words under control of her guides, and concluded with many positive tests. Appropriate remarks were made by David Brown, Mr. Kirsch, Miss M. F. Wheeler, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, and Dr. M. V. Thomas. Miss J. M. Grant, Dr. Thomas and others gave clearly recognized tests and spirit-descriptions.

The evening exercises were opened by Dr. W. S. Eldridge with interesting remarks and many recognized tests. Tests were also given by Mrs. O. A. Robbins and Mr. McKenzie, which were pronounced correct by those to whom they were given. Able and instructive remarks were made by Mrs. J. B. Hugo, Mrs. Robbins and Dr. P. C. Drisko, which closed the exercises for the day.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Sunday, April 8th, there was a large attendance at this hall. Mr. Cobb made two fine speeches—his remarks being especially good in the afternoon. Miss Peabody and Mrs. C. W. Odlorne gave fine readings; Frank T. Ripley presented remarks, also gave some excellent tests, which were all recognized. Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Mrs. G. Coffin, Mrs. A. Forrester, Miss Cullen, Mrs. A. W. Rich, Dr. W. S. Eldridge and Arthur McKenna all gave good tests. College Hall is not large enough to accommodate the people who come to the meetings.

A Reception

Was given Saturday evening, April 7th, to Mrs. A. L. Pennell by the Spiritualists of New York at the residence of Mrs. Gray, 323 West 34th street, under the auspices of Mrs. Harriet Beach, who was mainly instrumental in arranging for the same. At the same time it was somewhat of an anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, and also of the twentieth anniversary of Mrs. Beach's entrance upon her spiritual work.

Mrs. Pennell has, for several months past, been ministering to the people of New York at one of its public halls, and has made many friends through the exercise of her mediumship. Between one and two hundred people were present, including nearly all the prominent mediums of the city, and all united in congratulations to her upon the success that had attended her labors here, and extended their wishes for her success in the fields of labor she is about to visit.

Short addresses were made by a number of the mediums and speakers present, and recitations, and music, and song, helped to make the evening an enjoyable one.

Mrs. Beach had present a number of pictures that had been produced by spirit agency, the history of which she gave.

Mrs. Pennell said that a gentleman present had asked her if she was at Onset Bay when Madame Diss Debar was there; and if so, what did she know of her mediumship? In answer to this, said Mrs. Pennell, I will state that while at Onset I once saw a picture produced under circumstances as follows: Madame Diss Debar was standing in the waters of the Bay, when a gentleman upon the shore took a card from his pocket, and asked if she could get a picture upon it for him. Madame told him to place the card on his bare head, and she would try. He did so, and a picture came upon it, then and there, and the Madam did not have the card in her hands, or touch it before the picture came upon it.

Mrs. Clark, also a medium, who was present, then told how she a short time ago visited Madame Diss Debar and tried to get a picture, Mrs. Goodwin being present at the time. She held a card, and they sat for two hours without getting anything upon it, and the Madame and Mrs. Goodwin, who is also a medium, wished to give up the attempt, saying nothing would be given; but Mrs. Clark said her influences told her that a picture would be given, and urged a longer sitting. Then her guides showed her clairvoyantly the picture that would be produced, and she described it in detail to her two companions. In a little time after her description of the picture shown her clairvoyantly a light came upon the card, and finally the finished picture flashed out, corresponding in every detail to the description she had given of what it would be.

Mrs. Beach described the conditions and circumstances under which a crayon portrait of Spirit Edward S. Wheeler was produced upon a blank canvas at a séance given by Mrs. Carrie Sawyer, which statement was confirmed by Judge Cross, who was present at the time it was produced, also a picture of Maudie, the child-control of Mrs. Sawyer, produced under similar conditions.

A number of the deparnated spoke through their medium and expressed their pleasure at the gathering of the friends, and advised more frequent assemblings of such kind.

J. F. C.

First Society of Spiritualists.—Sunday, April 1st, the platform was occupied by Mr. A. C. Pease of Saratoga. The subject in the morning was "The Practical Relation of Spiritualism to the Here and the Hereafter," in discoursing on which it was shown that spiritual activity, as an educating force for highest attainment, should characterize this life, and not merely be hoped for as a coveted condition in the spirit-world. In the evening, as supplementary to the morning discourse, Mr. Pease spoke of "The Ethical Relation of Spiritualism to the Ideal and the Real." All progress, he said, influenced the material, intellectual and political, and in art, science, culture and religious faith is attained by a pursuit of higher ideals, the realization of still higher spiritual possibilities. All systems serve the future in their decay, and ultimately to each individual the death of the body will prove to be the birth of the spirit, and we never shall be deathless till we die. Mr. Pease's arguments were logical and well received. The meeting for manifestations was opened by Mr. Pease by giving some of his experiences as to how he became a Spiritualist, supporting the phenomena of Spiritualism in a masterly manner. Mr. G. W. Kates of Atlanta, Ga., spoke briefly upon the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism, saying that both were necessary, and that a comprehensive view of either must be from the intuitive before there can be a thorough sensuous realization. He said that we must not be so self-opinionated as to think we know it all, and can better judge than others who have received evidence. Mrs. Kates gave several excellent readings and tests, and improvised and sung a beautiful song upon the united subjects, selected by the audience—"Mother, Spring, and Spiritual Growth." The song was loudly applauded. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave numerous tests, all of which were recognized.

Last Sunday, April 8th, Mrs. M. Reynolds of Troy, N. Y., occupied the platform morning and evening, speaking in the morning upon "The Evidences and Proofs we have of Immortality," and in the evening upon subjects selected by the audience. After the lecture Mrs. Reynolds gave very satisfactory psychometrical delineations of character and tests, showing her power as a medium of rare qualities and worthy of a generous support. Mrs. Reynolds opened the meeting for manifestations in the afternoon by giving a short address and several descriptive tests. Mr. G. W. Kates made appropriate remarks upon the course the press of the country is taking toward Spiritualism, and promised that on next Sunday he and Mrs. Kates would take part in the meeting for manifestations. Mrs. Wells gave numerous tests in her usual satisfactory manner, all of which were fully recognized, and hurriedly left the hall to fill an engagement in the evening for the First Society of Spiritualists in Paterson, N. J.

New York, April 8th, 1888.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity closed its sessions for the season on Sunday, April 8th—the step being rendered necessary through a change of lease of the premises which have been used for its meetings. We shall print next week an account of the services held by this society, on that date, in remembrance of the Fortieth Anniversary.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Eureka Hall, 378 Bedford Avenue, near Broadway.—Mrs. A. C. Henderson speaks and gives spirit tests every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

The Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary on the evening of March 31st at 310 Livingston street. A large, interested and intelligent audience greeted those who supplied the intellectual portion of the exercises with frequent applause. Mrs. A. M. Stringham made the opening remarks, interspersing the same with short inspirational poems. Mrs. H. M. Walton followed with an essay and poem upon "The Birth of Spiritualism." An address was made by Mr. A. P. Dey. Mrs. Brown for the committee on refreshments announced that the good things that had been prepared for the sustenance of the physical body were ready, but that Mr. Wm. C. Bowen had a few words to say before the repast commenced. Mr. B. then stepped forward and greatly surprised the Conductor of the meeting, Frank W. Jones, with a few remarks (very materially to the point) and the presentation of a sum of money expressive of the appreciation of the patrons of the B. P. S. Conference of his efforts for nearly a year in its behalf. Mr. Jones tendered his grateful acknowledgments for the unexpected recognition of his services. A bountiful collation was served, during which several humorous songs added delight and variety to the occasion. On resuming the exercises Miss Gracie Shank gave a fine recitation in harmony with the spirit of our philosophy. Mrs. F. M. Holmes, Mrs. M. C. Morrell (of New York) and Mrs. E. C. A. Hall, closed the celebration with stirring addresses. Mrs. H. M. Walton and other ladies who provided bountifully for the repast are entitled to great credit, and a vote of thanks to them for the same, offered by Mrs. Brown, was adopted.

F. W. JONES, Conductor.

New London, Conn.—In commemoration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, the Pierpont Lyceum Association of New London engaged Mr. J. W. Fletcher, of Boston, to speak before that Society on Monday evening, April 2d. This was Mr. Fletcher's first appearance before a New London audience. Pierpont Hall was filled with an appreciative audience, who assembled to hear his lecture on "Spiritualism vs. the Bible," which was fairly reported in the New London Telegraph, which said, "The lecturer did not spend any unnecessary time in attacking or decrying any of the Orthodox creeds, but during his discourse laid down in a very clear, succinct and able manner the salient points in the belief of Modern Spiritualism. The audience applauded heartily during the lecture, and at the close were quite demonstrative in their approval. After the lecture Mr. Fletcher gave a number of tests, which were readily recognized by the audience."

There was a good sprinkling of Baptists and Methodists in the audience, and the attention which the speaker received plainly showed the deep interest his subject awakened, the extent of which was made more manifest by the fact that Mr. Fletcher was engaged the next day to speak before this Society on Sunday, April 15th.

On Friday evening, April 6th, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther spoke for the Society to a good-sized audience. Her subject was "Woman Suffrage from a Spirit's Standpoint." It was an able effort, and gave the greatest satisfaction to every one present. Mrs. Luther is understood will return in the near future.

April 7th. H. P. MILLER, Sec'y.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday was a day of much interest, it being the last time in the present lecture course when J. Frank Baxter would be heard, and a great audience was in attendance in the evening. In the afternoon his subject was, "Humanitarian Religion"; in the evening his theme was "The Plausibility of Spirit-Life Independent of the Facts of Spiritualism," and his effort proved to be an exhaustive discussion of a very important and interesting question. The séance which followed was also most interesting, a large number of descriptions being given of persons well remembered by the audience, the guide entering into many details of interest with surprising accuracy.

On Sunday, April 1st, a report of which failed to reach you in season for publication last week owing to your issue being a day in advance, our speakers were Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., and J. Frank Baxter—Mrs. Manchester speaking also on the Saturday evening previous. The occasion was one of extraordinary interest, it being joined with the Anniversary hour.

Next Sunday the platform will be occupied by Mrs. S. R. Stevens, late of California.

Haverhill, Mass., April 9th, 1888.

Rockland, Me.—Meetings in this place, held under the management of Mr. George Mugrige, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant occupying the platform, have the past five weeks been largely attended by all denominations. Mrs. C. has made a host of friends. Through her efforts on Saturday, March 31st, meetings in observance of the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism were held in Armory Hall. Many beautiful flowers, contributed by Mrs. Conant's friends, decorated the speakers' stand.

In the afternoon remarks were made by Dr. Fairfield and Mrs. Conant; Mrs. C. gave thirty-five psychometric readings.

In the evening there was singing by a fine choir, Mrs. Fairfield presiding at the organ. Brief addresses were made by Dr. Fairfield, Mrs. Conant, Mr. Mugrige, Mr. F. W. Smith, Mrs. G. L. Snow, and others. The Spiritualists of this city have reaped a harvest of spiritual truths during the visit of Mrs. Conant, who has more than met the expectations of the people by her spiritual gifts.

M.

Fitchburg, Mass.—Sunday, April 1st, we had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. A. E. Cunningham. Subject: "Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism." She reviewed its rise and progress from Hydesville to the present, predicting new and more startling developments in the future. After her remarks she gave readings and tests. She was very successful in her circles and private sittings during the week, giving good satisfaction. Her friends here wish her success in her work.

Last Sunday, April 8th, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant occupied our platform, confining herself entirely to psychometric readings and tests. Her readings were the best we have had here, psychometrizing seventeen articles; all pronounced correct.

Next Sabbath, the 15th, Dr. J. L. Paxson will lecture and give tests.

MRS. E. S. LORING, Sec'y.

113 Blossom street, Fitchburg, Mass.

Amesbury, Mass.—Sunday, April 1st, Mrs. Hattie C. Mason, of Boston, spoke for the Spiritualists of this place. After a brief Anniversary address "Sunshine" gave excellent tests, in one case to a clergyman in the audience. After telling him of a number of spirit friends his mother took control, and talked to him as only a mother could to a dear son. My own sorrowing heart was comforted by messages from a loved mother and daughter, whose earthly forms I had within the last three weeks seen placed in a tomb in my native State. As fresh tests are given that our loved ones still live, again are we led to exclaim "Oh! death, where is thy sting? Oh! grave, where is thy victory?" May God and angels attend Mrs. Mason, and through her instrumentality may many rays of sunshine fall on the hearts of earth's sorrowing children.

MRS. E. A. ATWOOD.

Quincy, Mass.—Mrs. A. E. King, of Boston, lectured for the Spiritualist society meeting in Faxon Hall last Sunday, the 8th, to good acceptance, large audiences greeting her both afternoon and evening. Excellent tests were given after each discourse by her sprightly control, "Flossie," which proved of interest to skeptics as well as believers. Mrs. King's visit to Quincy has aroused a decided interest in spiritual matters, so much so that she is soon to appear before the society again.

What Your Friends and Neighbors Say on a Matter of Vital Importance.

The following unsolicited opinions from your friends and neighbors, men and women, whom you know and respect, ought to carry conviction to any doubting mind. These words of gratitude are from those who have been afflicted but are now well, and the persons giving them are naturally solicitous that others, troubled as were they, may know the means of cure. There is no reason why you should longer be ill from kidney, liver or stomach troubles. You can be cured as well as others. Do not longer delay treatment, but to-day obtain that which will restore you to permanent health and strength.

BOSTON, Mass. (1314 Dorchester Avenue), Nov. 20, 1887.—Although it is four years ago that I was cured by "Warner's Safe Cure," yet at this late date I do not think that I need hesitate in acknowledging the same, particularly as the cure was permanent. It was in the fall of '83 that I first realized that I was not a well person. It was indicated by frequent spells of languidness, loss of ambition, occasional pains across my back in the region of my kidneys, an unusual flow of urine and afterwards scanty, with sediment in the vessel. I put myself under treatment and took quantities of medicine, which would relieve me for a short time, but when the effect wore off I would feel worse than ever. The pains across my kidneys increased, and even extending up between my shoulder blades. Also a new pain developed across my right side in the region of my liver. As month after month passed my condition became more and more critical and my sufferings increasing fourfold. I had arrived at that stage when the prescribed medicines I took failed to have the least effect. My limbs were swollen, particularly my knees, and they pained me so that I could hardly raise them. I also had dizzy spells, and during them I would become almost blind. This would be followed by numbness all over my body, the same feeling as one has when their limbs are asleep. After all this I would be prostrated for several days with a most excruciating headache. I concluded to give "Warner's Safe Cure" a fair trial, and by the time I had taken half of the second bottle. I certainly experienced a marked relief. The pains were gradually leaving, my rest was not disturbed, my appetite was returning, which, by the way, I had lost. Then my faith was assured. I went right ahead until I was completely restored, and, as I said, permanently.

Mrs A. E. Taylor

BEDFORD, Mass., Oct. 13, 1887.—Three years ago I had a serious trouble with my Kidneys, so much so that I thought I had that terrible Bright's disease. I was in constant pain in my left kidney, as well as in the bladder and groin, with a weakness in my eyes. Having five years before buried my daughter with Bright's Disease, made me more anxious about myself, as I had watched the different symptoms as the disease progressed, which had fastened itself upon her before we were made aware of its approach. I commenced at once the use of "Warner's Safe Cure," and persevered in its use until I found a decided improvement, and kept on until I found my troubles removed. Last fall I had a partial return of the same symptoms, and again had recourse to the same remedy with the same result.

J. W. Fisk

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (150 Main St.), Jan. 16, 1888.—I am an enthusiastic advocate of "Warner's Safe Remedies." "Warner's Safe Cure" and "Warner's Safe Pills" cured me of kidney and liver difficulties with which I had been troubled for some time and which caused me no little alarm. My liver was torpid, and for days I would have no movement of the bowels. Pains in my back, across the kidneys—retention of urine—headache and indigestion. I have tried four physicians, but they failed to relieve me. I was considerably worried. I began to take "Warner's Safe Cure" and it made me sick at the stomach, but I kept on, taking also "Warner's Safe Pills, and it was not long until all feeling of nausea passed away and I began to improve rapidly. I faithfully continued the use of "Warner's Safe Cure" until I was entirely cured. I now feel like a new man. Through my efforts one of our citizens, who was quite low with Diabetes, began the use of "Warner's Safe Diabetes Cure" and is rapidly recovering. I am a strong endorser of "Warner's Safe Remedies."

Joseph S. Whitcomb

(Whitcomb Bros.)

DANVERS, Mass., Dec., 1887.—My brother has for a long time been afflicted with Constipation, Acid Stomach, etc. He now finds relief in the use of "Warner's Safe Cure."

Sylvia C. Fiske

LOWELL, Mass., (No. 80 Berkley street,) Oct. 17, 1887.—I have taken "Warner's Safe Cure" with marked benefit. I was troubled with a Cold and Fever. Two bottles of the remedy named effected a cure.

W. C. Allyn

Attleboro, Mass.—At a regular meeting of the First Spiritual Society of Attleboro, it was voted that we extend our deepest thanks to Miss M. T. Shelhamer and her numerous friends for their untiring efforts to make our anniversary of March 31st a marked success—for through the aid of herself and her guides it was such.

MRS. ABBY J. THOMPSON,
Chairman Anniversary Committee.

Brockton, Mass.—The platform was occupied Sunday, April 1st, by Prof. Peck, who gave an interesting, entertaining and instructive lecture appropriate to Anniversary time. Bro. Peck is a powerful speaker and a fine elocutionist, and holds the attention of his audience so closely that the hour of his lecture seems but a few minutes. His songs are unexceptionally fine.

R.

Providence, R. I.—Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther closed her engagement Sunday, April 8th. Large and enthusiastic audiences listened to the lectures. One of her subjects was: "Of What does Spiritualism Consist?"—J. Frank Baxter is to speak for the Association the remaining Sundays of April.

MARY E. A. WHITNEY.

Newburyport, Mass.—W. F. Peck lectured here, Sunday afternoon and evening, April 8th. The subject of the evening discourse was "The Growth of Spiritualism in Forty Years." His remarks were historical in nature and eloquent in delivery, and were received with hearty applause.

☞ We call attention to the Prospectus of the BANNER OF LIGHT, in this issue. THE BANNER has been published in Boston, Mass., for a great many years, and is undoubtedly an able and interesting exponent of Spiritual Philosophy, numbering among its contributors some extraordinary minds. This being an age of investigation and advancement in religious doctrines, those who want to keep posted should subscribe for the BANNER OF LIGHT, and read its articles. It is worth a good deal more than the price of subscription.—Virginia (Ill.) Enquirer.

A Needed Movement in Sunday Work.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It is not often that I have a Sabbath at home, my mediumistic service calling me out to various platforms from Sunday to Sunday, from which my guides discourse upon spiritualistic and humanitarian themes as they think best. But to-day, finding myself at leisure to follow my own inclination, I availed myself of the privilege of accompanying my people to the new Sunday-school which has been established at Mr. Ayer's Spiritual Temple, corner of Newbury and Exeter streets, this city. To say that I was pleased with the school, its methods of management and its beautiful surroundings, but faintly expresses the genuine feeling of approval and interest I experienced during the session I attended.

I have long maintained that we, as Spiritualists, believing in immortality as demonstrated by returning spirits, need to pay more attention to the spiritual instruction of the children. Schools in which the best thought of the childish mind can be encouraged and brought out are really demanded in our ranks. Something more than a mere literary entertainment is required for the spiritual elevation of the young, and I hope the time is at hand when schools like that established by Mr. Ayer will be opened every Sunday in many localities.

I am told that good spirits have advised this new departure at the Temple, and that such have the school in charge. From the report which my relatives brought me of the opening session, and from my own observation of to-day's service, I think it must be so, and I trust the managers and workers of the school will find aid and encouragement from others in their good work. The opening exercises are such as to elevate the thought, as well as to prepare the mind for spiritual teaching. The addresses to the young are befitting the work and the aim in view, and the object lessons presented at these meetings are intended to interest as well as instruct. All with whom I have spoken on this subject are in favor of this Sunday-school as a means for the mental and spiritual growth of the young, and each one wishes it the best of success, as also does,

Yours most truly, M. T. SHELHAMER.

ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.—Mrs. Clara A. Field entertained one of the largest and most intellectual audiences of the season at the rooms of the Spiritual Society of St. Augustine last Sunday afternoon and evening. Mrs. Field unexpectedly arrived from Ocala Saturday afternoon, and consented to remain over and speak before the Society. Her discourse was in response to questions from the audience, and gave great satisfaction to those who were present.—St. Augustine Press, March 3d.

The World's Child,

WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas,

An Address on the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

Delivered Saturday Afternoon, March 31st, 1888, in Tremont Temple, Boston, at the Union Celebration held by the Ladies' Aid Society and Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, by

J. FRANK BAXTER.

[Reported for the Banner of Light.]

"If Christ be not risen, your faith is vain," was preached and written to the ancient church by St. Paul; and the same is accepted by the modern Christian church. The story of the resurrection of Jesus is the basis upon which the church rests. By it Christians arrogate a belief in immortality; in fact, cling to it as the sole teacher of a future life. It is not, then, surprising that a day is yearly set apart by Christendom to celebrate the birth of one through whom it believes immortality to have been brought to light; or that an Easter Sunday should have been established whereby the religious world may memorialize so important an event as his resurrection. This faith in immortality is the result, however, of a firm, and I believe intuitive desire—an implanted seeming fact of man's nature—because of which he has ever been found, as we now find him, yearning for positive assurance of this belief he naturally entertains. Many have accepted the story of Christ's resurrection as such an assurance, and their faith has been strengthened. This alleged event, then, which corroborates their faith, born of intuition, is a memorable one, and it is no marvel that to-morrow's dawn—the Easter morn—will be ushered in by merry ringing chimes, and the day spent in carols, anthems and rejoicings. But after all assurance of immortal life does not and cannot rest on a belief in intuition, or on a belief that Jesus was resurrected. Do we know this longing to be intuitive? do we know Jesus arose from the dead? then can we assert immortality a fact, and write truthfully above the tomb "Resurgam"; but it is at most a faith still, a mere faith in the record—faith in the book, too, as expounded through the preacher, that is productive of so much joy of anticipation. Query: If faith inspires such pleasure, if belief affords such comfort, what must be said of knowledge pertaining to this great question of continued existence—be said of actually demonstrated facts as proofs of immortal life, and still further of immortal presence? Would not a day which brought to man's notice a train of circumstances which upon careful investigation proved conclusively his life immortal, demonstrated by his continued presence and communication as a spirit, be of as much, yes, of more importance, vastly more, than any account of alleged yet doubtful transactions on an assumed day nearly two thousand years ago? In other words, would not the Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism be of more moment than the Easter day? In fact, if Spiritualism is true, is not every day an Easter day to the Spiritualist? Yes, our Easter is perpetual. We need not especially make overtures on the Easter day of Christendom, for all services in the interest of Spiritualism are real Easter occasions. We ever teach of eternal life, of the spiritual resurrection and reünion, of spirit return and spirit communing.

Spiritualism is as old as man or death, but because its latest revival began on March 31st, 1848, as Spiritualists per se we celebrate the event on each successive March 31st as the years go by. To-day, therefore, is

OUR ANNIVERSARY.

I do not feel to enter into argument, especially to-day, or to take any special theme, but rather to talk in a general way, and perchance offer some thoughts and hints in view of the rapid progress Spiritualism has made within the past forty years. Spiritualism to me, let me say, is

A PEARL OF THE GREATEST VALUE.

I look upon mediumship as a most sacred trust. Without a medium there were no phenomena; without phenomena there were no Spiritualism. Spiritualism, as to its phenomena, is in and of itself a matter of facts, and as such should gain the attention of every thinking individual—especially every student of natural law. As to the corollary deductions and problems evolved and involved, Spiritualism is a great philosophy. As to the effects on individuals and the practical bearing upon humanity, Spiritualism is a religion. In either light considered, as a science, a philosophy or a religion, all admit—opponents included—that naught like unto it in appealing, in spread and in influence, has ever before obtained. Some have accepted it as truth; some are afraid of it because they cannot understand it; some have nothing to do with it because they cannot turn it to money and to selfish account; and others, in their ignorance, decry it as wholesale deception and wickedness.

Well, friends, it is either a valuable truth, a monstrous misconception or a wicked imposition. To all, in its various phases, there is much that is mysterious, and to some it is incomprehensibly strange. But as long as aught is mysterious, or has anything of mystery obtaining, it behooves all lovers of truth and right to study that thing and clear it of its seeming inscrutability, if possible, and put it in as clear a light as possible, whether favorable or unfavorable to any advanced theory, before the world.

Only forty years of mortal time have the phases of Modern Spiritualism obtained, and yet above the strifes and quarrels in the house of its friends, the attacks and blows of its enemies, the listlessness and apathy of its recipients, the ofttimes rashness and indiscreetness of its advocates, the obnoxious and extraneous matter thrust upon it by unprincipled individuals, it stands to-day exerting its powerful influence. Men may shut their eyes, may stop their ears, may turn their backs, yet such is the power that it does, despite all opposition or volition, take its hold upon the heart. Spiritualism is in the air, and even the stone walls and closely closed doors of the church have not kept it out. For "Those raps were like to bugle calls,

Summoning friend and foe;
Though e'er so high men build their walls,
Where spirits will, they go.

Thus from the heart rejoicings spring!
Since to us here below
Came spirits rapping earnestly—
Just forty years ago."

Not even the matter-of-fact materialist has been unmoved. Although as impenetrable as adamant has he seemed, though he has asserted that death ended all—that spirit-existence was not, that Spiritualism was unfounded, false and absurd, yet to-day we hear far less of this; although he deems Spiritualism improbable, he rarely says "impossible." Where once he said: "It is not a fact," he, for some reason, prefers to say: "I do not know; it may be so." In view of the possibility of spirit-return, based in his mind upon accredited and witnessed phenomena, often to him unaccountable, his hard, cold, dogmatic materialism has changed to a plastic, cool and philosophical Agnosticism.

Taking the masses in general, of them I must say that those who do not embrace Spiritualism, or cherish some form or phase of it, or who are not more or less changed in their opinions because of it, are hard to find. Let me be understood, however: I know true, outspoken Spiritualists are limited. The majority, it is found, have become convinced of the error of old opinions and beliefs, and have evidences of the truths of Modern Spiritualism; yet the state of society is such in many communities—to its shame be it spoken—that policy withholds open acknowledgment of their disbelief of past opinions and much more of the truths newly unfolded to their minds. Church prejudice and public opinion, an opposing world's displeasure and frown, they stand in fear of. Oh! that there were more ready to practice in accord with the dictates of sterling principles, rather than be governed so by policies and expediences.

But in spiritual knowledge within the past half century has been

INAUGURATED AN ERA,

And, notwithstanding the state of fashionable society, the frowning of the Church, and the force of popular opinion,

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand, eventful time;
In an age on ages telling;
To be living is sublime!"

At different stages in the advance of races, nations and men, there come those quickening periods which revolutionize affairs, change the current of thoughts and elevate all life. If we do not greatly mistake, this spiritual era is one. In the onward speed and influence of Modern Spiritualism we have all, with no exception as to condition, character, race, color, persuasion, opinion or taste, during this era, gathered such an impetus as will insure us, inevitably, swift progress in the line of our destiny.

The Church has ever based its belief in immortality, as we have before said, on the traditional and doubtful story of Jesus's life, death and resurrection, but the Spiritualist founds his knowledge of immortal life on the absolute emancipation of every spirit whose earth-form is bereft, the same demonstrated by the return of and communication with those spirits. 'T is true, there are those who do not believe we are in possession of this knowledge. They attempt to maintain, as they affect, that our Spiritualism is a mere faith. But this alters nothing. Belief, comparatively speaking, is of very little consequence. In accordance with our experiences, so stands our knowledge: one knows what another does not know; and one may not know what another knows. But my experiences have brought me to be a Spiritualist; and I am thankful that I have had ever the courage to say it. I feel honored in being called to address you to-day. Conditioned as I have been, there is no occasion I feel more pride in, no event I love more to celebrate, than that which has brought us now together. Had I the inspiration of an ancient Demosthenes or the oratorical power of a modern Ingersoll I might better honor the occasion.

Again, I am not a trance or an inspirational speaker. But I am appreciative of the freedom and influence which Spiritualism has brought me, and I am most enthusiastic in the advocacy of its truthfulness, and ever ready to discuss its claims. Facts, however,

OUTWEIGH ALL REASONING,

And I often regret I cannot exchange places with an investigator, and let him experience through his organism what I from time to time experience through mine as a medium. But we are differently organized and circumstanced. The consequence is, Nature in various ways appeals to different individuals. Tastes and proclivities lead one to certain, and another to certain other researches. Psychologically, psychometrically and spiritually, each, in accord with his constitution, senses differently the "soul of things." One person observes and learns certain facts, and another certain others; then these point out to each what the other has gained of knowledge. In this way have we progressed, and many are the men to-day who, after careful study, have come to sense in various ways the fact that our friends whom death had sometime since claimed, are dead only as to their flesh; that spirits live, retaining certain properties and qualities which they acquired here, and that they are able to visit us who are still in this life or world. I mean simply that men and women have found—whether pleased or otherwise—that Modern Spiritualism is upon them, grown upon them, and abides to-day as an established living fact. Millions are its believers. And yet, though through and by popularity and fashion—but I think as often through envy—sneered at, taunted and spit upon; and, though denounced and pronounced unchristian, demoniacal and infidel by the church, which has seen its inroads into its domain, still it stands now the most rational and firmly established idea of the age—a fact set at naught, although attempts have been strenuous, by no one, by no thing. The human soul has in great masses of men shot up from cold, hard materialism in ardent longings and yearnings after spiritual realities until the knowledge of Modern Spiritualism has overrun every portion of the civilized world.

"There is no death!
What seems so is transition!"

The spirit-world—

"It lies around us like a cloud."

These poetic expressions have become realities. Where once we sung by faith,

"How cheering the thought
That the spirits in bliss
Will bend their bright paths
To a world such as this,"

And

"Angels are hovering round,"

To-day they are sung more intelligently and truthfully. Spirits survive the flesh—live—come to us. Facts, are these I emphasize. Oh! how glad am I that I can rank myself with those who believe Spiritualism true; and better still, with those who know it true. No doubts, no fears have I! I rejoice! I rejoice!! Call me fanatic, declare me fool, proclaim me insane, think me deluded, pronounce me a fraud, cry me what it may be, I am what I am (through experiences and reason made)—a Spiritualist.

Remember, it is Spiritualism as a fact, a truth, a SCIENCE, to which the world thus far has been invited, leaving each one's creed, theology, religion, morals and actions to shape themselves for each individual as Spiritualism has been accepted. Where individual Spiritualists—who are mostly independent, liberal thinkers—stand on the various themes of the day, no one can know until such individuals define; and, thank God! Spiritualism is so broad in its scope and so powerful in its influence that it naturally leads its adherents and advocates to consider for humanity's needs all questions, even though it makes Mother Grundy gossip and scold and lie—and sometimes even Spiritualists themselves to wince.

I have said that Spiritualism I prized far above all things else. I am called upon to assure all who hear me wherever I go, and particularly when called to the house of mourning, that

SPIRITUALISM IS TRUE.

This, I am aware, does not make it so, but it satisfies me in my line of duty. Why, if Christians can say, on faith, "I know that my Redeemer liveth!" and can sing from assumption:

"I love to tell the story,
Because I know it 's true;
It satisfies my longings
As nothing else can do,"

Why, I feel with more propriety, because based on demonstration, I can exclaim:

I love to tell my story,
Because I KNOW it 's true;
It satisfies my longings,
And is my duty, too.

I am not a dogmatist, because I stand on a foundation of investigations and conclusions, themselves underpinned with a rock-bed of facts, and have taken nothing on assumption, nothing on faith. What you or I believe, matters little as compared to what we know. The more a person believes, the worse off he may be, and is often; but for every additional grain more he knows, the better off is he always. Oh! that all would tell us what they feel, what they know to be true, however much pride may be affected, opinions clash or creeds and Bibles totter. Most thankful am I that we are living in an age and a country which allow a freedom—comparatively speaking—of telling, as well as a right to tell, what the eye may see, the ear hear and the soul comprehend.

I stand here, therefore, to-day, a free man, rejoicing with Spiritualists everywhere in this knowledge which is ours—revealed to us since the resolution of those eventful and apparently chaotic sounds to raps of definiteness.

A gentleman of prominence and observation said to me last evening in Hartford, where I lectured on this grand theme, "If Spiritualism were popular, all the churches in the land were not sufficient to hold those who are Spiritualists at heart, but without the courage of open conviction." I shall be glad to have it popular, but when anything is popular then is the time to stop preaching it, and to be teaching something new. The unpopular, if true—and generally the unpopular has proven true in time—will stand and exert power, though peoples and institutions, creeds and theologies fall. Generally, whatever doctrine addresses the reason, or invites the critic, proves true at heart. At any rate what is true, lives, and what is false, nothing can save from destruction.

I think we may justly congratulate one another upon the present condition of things, as evidence of healthy growth, and we need not fear. There are things to deplore, true, but not of them to-day and now. But if the fundamental principle in Spiritualism, viz., the ministration of decarnated intelligences, is a saving power, we need not be alarmed as to ultimate results. As it is the truth, it necessarily must be disintegrating and searching, at least before we shall know how to appreciate it. It is always so with truth. Hence, for a time, Spiritualism naturally must be unpopular—possibly for a long time. But I must say, as I find matters standing to-day, Spiritualism is not so much the unpopular thing among people of culture, refinement and thought, as is the average Spiritualist himself.

I am here reminded of a conversation with a clergyman. He said, "The idea of angel guidance and spirit communion is beautiful and attractive; but Spiritualists, as a whole, are crotchetty, erratical, not to say cranky, repulsive, and in instances vulgar." That there are crude elements and undesirable characters among Spiritualists, I shall not deny. But the erroneous position taken by this critic, and such as he—and they are numerous—is, that he criticises the Spiritualist as a religionist, rather than as a Spiritist, i. e., an accepter of certain facts, as he might accept facts from geology, astronomy, physiology or psychology, without regard to his social or moral standing.

Still there is a thought here, and I would give it attention in closing. I would, because of the great lack of spirituality among Spiritualists, who are merely phenomenalists, put in a plea for manhood and womanhood—a plea for character, a plea for love; for I do certainly wish for all a greater appreciation of the possibilities of life—life which can be indeed heavenly when better conditions can be. The trouble in our swift age is that the conditions of society are such to-day that a golden God is the great object of worship—the almighty dollar, rather than the Almighty God. I do not say wealth is undesirable, but I do say if character is to be sacrificed in the getting, then money is or will be your curse. Remember, Spiritualism does not teach salvation by faith, but every time

SALVATION BY CHARACTER.

In the threescore years and ten, more or less, of this life, we may not have money, but we can have manhood, and if we really understand the grand truth that manhood precedes, is better than, and will outlive money, then we will not sell it for money, nor make it cringe to money.

Man has entertained a vague belief in a future, but with little thought of the effect the earth-life's course would bring to bear. Gouge, cheat, steal and lie, then leave the rest to the priest and a death-bed repentance, has been the extent of his consideration. He has failed to learn of compensation's law. Why? Because his horoscope is cast only as far as the grave. Man's destiny is eternal, and to him who believes in immortal life, and him only, can the law of compensation be felt to work; but to him who knows that "Life is real; life is earnest;

And the grave is not its goal"— to that same, the law of compensation is more fully comprehended—not merely believed to be complete in its work, but known to be, and just in its working as it is sure in its existence. Death seems to pass an eraser over all that has gone before. It seems a total breaking off from all that life has hitherto consisted in. Friends, home and its associations, wealth and pleasure, all at an end. That is what makes death so terrible to the many.

But does not man take anything with him when from the verge of earthly life he goes into the great beyond? Verily, verily, his past life is just the one thing that he takes along. Yes, friends, he takes himself, and that self is the product of all his past experience and actions. He takes into the other world his own character. The life to come and the life that now is are parts of one another. They are related. The man is not the same that the boy was, but what the boy was, entered into the man as a part of him; and in the same sense the spirit-man is not the same as the earth-man, but what the mortal man was and is, enters the immortal man—the spirit—as a part of him in the future, just as the strength we gain by our victories this year, and the weaknesses into which we come by defeat, will be a part of us next year. So there is not an act, not a word or thought, but casts its influence forward into the to-morrow that lies beyond the tomb.

Oh, then, dear friends, Spiritualists! Do you desire success for Modern Spiritualism? Would you be happy in its teachings, enjoy its religion, have it felt as a power? Then resolve that you will make it this success by your liberal contributions, in proportion to your ability. We do not alone mean money. We mean that so far as you have that to spare; but all can contribute one thing, as often we have said, money or not your possession, and that is, manhood. Oh, that every man and woman who is a Spiritualist could be true! Let us resolve and try. With such a contribution what a power would Spiritualism be.

Make the best of life you can, and allow, also, life—wherever or however you may be placed, singly or associatively—to make the best of you and yours.

For then you 'd noblest be of earth,
Your work of highest plan—
Though not in fortune so, or birth,
Yet in your real intrinsic worth
You 'd be the noblest man.

I plead for one of cheerful face,
All sorrow to beguile;
Not of a sad and sober pace,
But one to cheer and bless his race
With bright and sunny smile.

I plead for one of honest heart,
Who keeps life's aim in view—
Not with a selfish, slavish art,
But one to choose the noblest part,
Then prove his promise true.

I plead for one of active mind,
Of living thought a store;
Not one to sense and reason blind,
But of the more progressive kind,
To learn and thirst for more.

I plead for one as firm to right
As the everlasting hills;
Not on the popular side of might,
But one who makes it his delight
To live as conscience wills.

I plead for one of character
Such as is good to find;
Not as a changeling loves to play,
But who in modest, manly way,
Just dares to speak his mind.

I plead for one whose life will tell
His faith and hope the same;
Not to do right from fear of hell,
Of being called an infidel,
Or any other name.

Plead I in vain? My plea is done.
Judge ye the noblest plan.
Won't you come out of darkness—strife—
Enter the light—the light of life—
And be that noblest man?

For in the future you would be
A mightier one than now;
With strength attained—your spirit free—
Then the award of victory
Must rest upon your brow.

The Women's National Convention,

Which was recently in session a week or more at Washington, D. C., was the largest and most important meeting of this character ever held on the American continent. Its proceedings were of marked interest throughout, were given wide publicty through the press, and must exert a grand influence for good everywhere.

At the session on March 31st Delegates adopted a Constitution and elected the following named as officers for the permanent organization of a National Council of Women: President, Frances E. Willard, Illinois; Vice President, Susan B. Anthony, New York; Corresponding Secretary, May Wright Sewall, Indiana; Recording Secretary, Mary E. Eastman, Massachusetts; Treasurer, M. Louise Thomas, New York.

The preamble of the Constitution declares that an organized movement of women will best conserve the highest good of the Family and the State, and that the proposed Confederation will be committed to the overthrow of all forms of ignorance and injustice.

MENTAL TELEGRAPHING BY RED MEN.—It is said that the Indians on the plains have always practiced a system of mental telegraphing among themselves, by means of which they communicate with each other almost instantaneously, and without messengers or signals. This mental telegraphing is by no means peculiar to the Indians on the plains of the United States. The same thing has been done by many people on the plains and among the mountains, both of America and other countries, and is to-day, and always has been, one method of manifesting knowledge known to and practiced by many persons.

The manner in which such communications are made seems to be, and is, a great mystery. Many theories about it have been suggested, all of which fall short of satisfying the minds of people as to how it is done. The fact that such communications are sent and received, and that they are often genuine and true, and that such is one mode of manifesting knowledge, is now almost universally conceded.—The Missouri Republican.

The Fortieth Anniversary.

Interesting Exercises in Commemoration of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism held in Cleveland, O.; New Orleans, La.; St. Louis, Mo.; Buffalo and Rochester, N. Y.; Hartford, Ct.; Newburyport, Springfield and Lowell, Mass.; Baltimore, Md.; Milwaukee, Wis., and Newark, N. J.

Cleveland, O.

[Reported for the Banner of Light.]

The celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, which commenced Saturday morning (31st ult.) at Memorial Hall, No. 170 Superior street, opened with a good attendance. Prominent among well-known Spiritualists from abroad were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thompson, Nottingham, O.; Mr. Jas. Flounce, Painesville, O.; Mr. Belden, Garretsville, O.; Mrs. Fox, Lorain, O.; Mrs. Herman Cushman, Euclid, O.; Mr. and Mrs. Nick, late of Erie, Pa.

Session was opened at 11 A. M., Mr. Richard Carleton presiding, who in an exceedingly happy and cordial manner, delivered his address of welcome as follows:

"Friends—The fortieth birthday of that irrepressible infant commonly called 'Modern Spiritualism' has dawned on us, and we are convened to celebrate so important—and I may say, by many, so unlooked for—an event in a becoming manner. We have much to be thankful for to-day—thankful that the child still lives. Yes, notwithstanding the dire prophecies of its Orthodox relatives, and their frantic efforts to end the life of what they term a moral monstrosity; notwithstanding their copious doses of brimstone, without the molasses, the child still lives.

We ought also, I suppose, to rejoice in the fact that the child has lately appeared in a new dress. Yes, indeed; and a present too, from some of his quondam godmothers. Therefore he has, on account of his being such an ungainly infant, been kept mostly in the nursery, only to be exhibited to a chosen few whose silence could be relied on. But now, with that beautiful 'Christian Science' suit, the child can be trotted out in the drawing-room to the admiring gaze of everybody. Through it all the child still grows and thrives, and if he keeps on as he has done the past year, he will soon be old enough to vote, and the sooner the better.

Altogether we have much cause for making this a glorious jubilee day, and celebrating it in the most joyful manner possible. It is my most agreeable duty, as presiding officer of the Cleveland Lyceum, to extend, in the name of that Lyceum, the brotherly hand of welcome to you who have come to celebrate with us this jubilee, and you are most heartily welcome. You, my friends, who have come from afar, we welcome you. It is pleasant to see your faces beaming with kindly feeling, and to know that although circumstances make it almost impossible for you to be with us more than once a year, you are present often in spirit. Many of you are not sufficiently fortunate to have a Spiritualist Society, Lyceum, or even an occasional speaker in your own towns, and have accordingly only this one meeting in the year to look forward to. For you thus spiritually hungered we have a grand feast spread. It is selected to suit the tastes of all; none need go hungry away. Sit down and enjoy it with us. You, our city friends, not members of our Lyceum, are also most cordially welcome. Many of you I see present come weekly to hear the words of truth and consolation spoken by our lecturers and mediums, and many of your hearts have been gladdened by hearing that tiny rap rapping out messages of love and advice from your dear ones no longer visible; that blessed rap which four decades ago to-day heralded a new era to the sons and daughters of earth. We take this opportunity of thanking you for your hearty support and coöperation.

Last but not least, you, my dear friends and coworkers in this our Lyceum, to you this day my heart goes out in joy, and I bid you welcome, a thousand times welcome. Yours has been the toil and trouble. Now enjoy the result of your labors, and no truer enjoyment can you have than that of making others happy.

Especially let me congratulate you, the elder members of this Lyceum—you whose hairs have become silvered while standing at your posts on the Lyceum ship. Through the storms of two and twenty years you have stood, your hands on the tiller, bravely holding her head against the waves of superstition, prejudice and ignorance. At times the good ship would almost stand still, becalmed, apathy prevailing, part of her crew growing faint-hearted and deserting her in her hour of need. Even then, with a short handed crew, you have still held your places and guided her through it all. To you belongs the credit for what the Lyceum is to-day, and may the few young recruits who have stepped forward to relieve you in a measure emulate your patient perseverance in the path of duty.

But, friends, I am anxious to hear from you, and will not weary you longer. Enjoy to the utmost this reunion. Think pleasant thoughts; let harmony reign supreme; help us to make this the most glorious celebration we have ever had; and if, in the future, looking back, this day shall appear as a green spot in your life, an oasis in the desert of trouble, the Cleveland Lyceum will be more than repaid for any exertions on its part in helping make it so."

Mr. Thos. Lees was then introduced, and said:

"On this day the fortieth anniversary of two very important events are being celebrated. In Washington the women, in honor of the first Woman's Rights Convention—and all over the country, and many other parts of the world, by men, women and children, in honor of the first authentic rap of Modern Spiritualism. It is with the latter that we have to do, although I might truthfully say that the noble efforts of the pioneer women who have struggled for the rights of their sex the past forty years have always met with the hearty coöperation of Spiritualism.

To-day is the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, an event celebrated all over the civilized world. My mind reverts on this occasion to the first celebration of this kind held in this city in old Garrett's Hall. It was the Twentieth Anniversary, held in 1868. Many here will remember that occasion. It seems to me a fitting occasion to briefly rehearse the object of this celebration. Anniversary day is of spirit origin. It was inaugurated through the mediumship of James Lawrence, of this city. It was formally brought before the Fourth National Convention of Spiritualists, held here in 1867, and thus the 31st of March (the day of the first reported spirit raps at Hydesville, N. Y.) was voted worthy of annual celebration, and has been celebrated ever since. We may be pardoned for taking an optimistic view when we consider the great advance of Spiritualism. Those who think Spiritualism is not making any advance can easily disabuse themselves of this error by contrasting the religious thought of 1848 with that of 1888. The constructive work of Spiritualism has not been very great. It has been more iconoclastic. The work of reconstruction has hardly yet begun. The great change is in public sentiment, and the pervading of the great mass of the people with Spiritualistic ideas. The breaking away of the people from the old creeds is largely due to the influence of Spiritualism. Ministers are now intent upon finding out how best to modernize the old creeds, and bring them into harmony with modern thought.

In meeting here to-day we naturally inquire what our progress has been since we last met. We in Cleveland feel that by hard work we have made actual gain during the year. Many who were here last year as listeners and investigators, have come boldly over the threshold of doubt and are among our best workers, proving their fealty by their deeds. In summing up our work for the year, we feel that great good was accomplished through the course of Sunday evening lectures. The public of Cleveland, while perhaps not fully appreciating the beautiful truths of Spiritualism, is as well informed as any public in the United States. While we have here good speakers and test mediums, we have not had the startling physical phenomena that some other cities have had. Many have worked patiently, some impatiently, for some development in this line, and something of that sort of phenomena we have had in the way of spirit-telegraphy, which has had a scientific investigation and stood every test. Science will yet awake to the importance of recognizing and investigating these phenomena. Scientists who once scoffed at mesmerism, hypnotism and other phases of occultism, now largely take them up and try to make people believe they have discovered some new thing. [Mr. Lees reviewed the report of the Seybert Commission and the replies made thereto by Henry Kiddle, Hon. A. B. Richmond and others, and concluded that Spiritualism had gained rather than lost in that controversy.] The question is often asked, why, if Spiritualism is true, it does not draw more people of influence and wealth. Possibly it may be because Spiritualism is too revolutionary in its aims and purposes to win the influence of the present-day men of wealth and capitalists. A brief mention of the cardinal features of Modern Spiritualism may not be out of place, and may partially answer the question so often asked as to what good Spiritualism is, supposing it to be true.

Spiritualism means the proof positive of continued life beyond the grave, and, under certain conditions, possible communication with departed friends. It means a religion based on science. It means a practical application of the principles taught by Christ instead of the theoretical Christianity of the churches. It means forgiveness of sins only through growth out of and away from them. It means that character, not creed, is the essential to present and future happiness. It means a purely secular government and taxation of all church property. It means equality of the two sexes. It means the nobility of labor. It means death to all monopoly, honesty in trade and commerce. Those who cannot see any good in Spiritualism would not accept the proofs if they had them.

Before concluding I wish to say a word in remembrance of those who have met with us in the past and whose familiar faces are not seen with us to day. Some are at home in other cities and some are in spirit-life, but we feel their influence on a day like this, and are inspired with our beautiful philosophy, and have the hope of a reunion at some time with all our co workers and friends, either here or in the world beyond."

Mr. Carleton then extended an invitation to mediums from other cities to make brief addresses. Aunty Camp of Cuyahoga Falls, Mrs. Myra Paine of Painesville, and Mrs. C. C. Bacon of Elyria were specially mentioned, and responded by going forward and taking seats upon the platform. Mrs. Camp recounted the important events and the tenor of thought in 1848, and said, among other things, that the press of the day was handcuffed, and that newspapers then would not have dared to print what Spiritualists said. A number of other ladies also spoke, Miss Tillie H. Lees drew attention to a beautiful floral design, the gift of Mrs. Helen O. Richmond of Euclid Avenue, which decorated the speakers' stand.

Mr. Carleton introduced Mr. J. Clegg Wright, of London, Eng., who said:

"Among other things Spiritualism is a great study. It is the work of Spiritualism to demonstrate mental action outside of brain organization. We are trying in 1888 to demonstrate that spirits exist, for this is the only hypothesis on which the phenomena which we have demonstrated may be based. Once we did not know that spirit-rapping was influenced somewhat by the mental condition of the sitter—we know it now. In this world there is matter as well as spirit. The body influences the mind, as does the mind the body. Slowly, however, we are raising our mental conceptions to a higher spiritual plane. There is a power in mind to make certain forces in nature obey thought. There is no wonder men disbelieve the truths of Spiritualism because they are so wonderful.

There are no miracles; there never were any. Everything is natural. Clairvoyance, which is French for clear-seeing, is a word we use to disguise our ignorance. There is probably not a man or a spirit present who can explain clairvoyance, which is the seeing of phenomena outside the reach of the senses. Still we have the science. Clairvoyance is not hallucination. The visions of delirium tremens are hallucinations; clairvoyance is something vastly different. It is merely a finer perception of things about us than the perception of things, no more real, by means of the senses. There are thousands of things about us outside the realm of the senses.

Medicine is a great study. The last forty years have not, however, made it a science. In London forty years ago an attempt was made to heal by mesmerism, and many wonderful things were done. More remarkable things would have been done but for the conservatism of physicians. There are certain doctors even now who term a magnetic doctor a quack. If it be true that mesmerism may be successfully exercised, every man possesses illimitable power over every other man in the world if he but knew it. Invention is mental force. All progress is the arising of the spiritual mind—the arising of the lower to the higher.

Spiritualism is anti-Christian in the sense of opposing the Christianity of churches, which shifts the responsibility of sin to the Saviour. It is not opposed to Christ. Christ was a medium. Do not be in a hurry to promote the slow and steady growth of Spiritualism. We have too many half-converts already. There are kid-glove Spiritualists who do n't want to touch their own belief. It will hurt their profession, they say. Of course it will. Heroes always suffer. Cowards never promote the work." [Mr. Wright concluded his remarks by saying: You can get the highest good from the spiritual life by living in harmony with physical laws.]

[Concluded next week.]

New Orleans, La.

We are in receipt of The Daily Picayune for April 2d, which, under the heading, "Forty Years of Spiritualism," presents the following report of the celebration held in the Crescent City on the 1st inst.:

"Last Saturday was the Fortieth Anniversary of the appearance of spiritual manifestations at Hydesville, in New York, and the Anniversary was celebrated yesterday in a fitting manner by the New Orleans Spiritualists' Association. The exercises were held in Minerva Hall, on Clio street, at 11:30 o'clock in the forenoon, and 7:30 in the evening. The attendance was quite large, and the services were very instructive and entertaining.

An excellent choir, consisting of three female and two male voices, accompanied by an organ, opened the ceremonies, both in the forenoon and evening.

After the singing in the forenoon, an able address was delivered by Dr. J. W. Allen, who is one of the oldest members of the Association in the city.

Mr. George Benson then delivered a lecture on the subject of Spiritualism, under alleged control of the spirits. He then, while under the same inspiration, discussed various subjects with the audience.

After the lecture two ministers, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. D. V. Clarke, were ordained. Mr. Benson presented each of the two new ministers with the letter of fellowship, and in a brief though fervent address pronounced them duly ordained ministers of Spiritualism. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Clarke are mediums. The services closed with prayer.

The attendance was equally large at the evening services. The rostrum was bedecked with beautiful flowers, the offerings of the ladies.

At 7:30 o'clock Capt. John Abbott, who officiated as master of ceremonies, opened the service, and the choir sang a hymn. Dr. Allen offered up a fervent prayer for the future welfare and happiness of all present, and also of gratitude for permitting those assembled to meet once more.

The Secretary then read his annual report, in which he gave a brief history of Spiritualism in this city. The roster showed eighty-six names in his books, of whom thirteen had crossed the Shining River, and had entered into the new life.

Mr. George P. Benson then lectured under control, or inspiration, after which several persons in the audience ascended the rostrum, and made brief speeches.

After the service the audience was invited into the room in the rear of the hall, where a delicious cold lunch, with fruit, cake and lemonade accompaniments, was served.

The Association give a public soirée every Monday, and services are held every Sunday during the year at the residence of Mr. Benson.

The Anniversary of Spiritualism was celebrated in all the principal cities in the United States yesterday."

St. Louis, Mo.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

An interested assembly convened at the palatial residence of Mr. Charles Mantz, 2121 Walnut street, this city, on Sunday, April 1st. After a congenial time and a social exchange of ideas, the meeting was called to order. An invocation by the President, Mr. Mantz, was followed by a song by the choir; then the President introduced Mrs. S. C. Scoville, the well-known trance speaker and psychometric reader.

Mrs. Scoville read a beautiful poem called "The Day We Celebrate;" then followed selections on the piano by Prof. W. H. Russell. Dr. Lowe, the control of Mrs. Scoville, then made the following remarks:

The Day we celebrate! yea, a grand and glorious day! Ancient and Modern Spiritualism are the same, but we use the term Modern, because forty years ago the tiny rap was first intelligently heard at the home of the Fox Sisters. When those children were hearing those raps, little did they think that they were listening to the signal of a new religion, a new system of thought, that was destined to revolutionize the entire character of the age.

At first, Spiritualism had to grope in the dark, but as time wore on, and the hours and days passed, it grew stronger, and at last it burst upon the world through the cloud, and now we can hardly endure its brilliant rays. All who have seen those rays are happier for having been extricated from the darkness of unbelief. It is a statistical fact that during the forty years since the advent of Modern Spiritualism, it has gained more proselytes than did Christianity in the first three hundred years of its existence.

There were many grand thoughts brought out by this control, one important point being that the angel world comes and makes known in a scientific manner that those whom the past looked upon as dead are not so, but are alive and conscious; the tiny rap is a signal for men to lead better lives—that is what it comes to teach, not simply to gratify curiosity. In the forty years just past, Spiritualism has accomplished much good; and now as we start upon another year, let us redouble our energies for the achievement of yet grander things in its all-conquering name.

After several psychometric readings by Mrs. Scoville's controls, and a few remarks by the President, the meeting closed with the singing of "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

MILTON LYLE.

Buffalo, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Under the auspices of the First Society of Spiritualists, and through well-directed effort on the part of those having the matter in charge, the arrangements and programme for the observance of the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism in this city were successfully carried out. Though no elaboration in the way of variety as regards speakers was attempted, it is safe to say that a genuine spirit of good fellowship has been manifested, which augurs well for the future. This has been the only attempt for several years past to celebrate in this city the Anniversary of what is called Modern Spiritualism; and it is our highest hope that the observance thus auspiciously inaugurated may be continued hereafter with equal success from year to year.

On Friday evening, March 30th, a delightful programme, consisting of music and recitations, was presented before an appreciative audience which filled the hall. Those participating seemed to catch the spirit of enthusiasm which prevailed, and lent their best energies to the occasion. Recitations were given by Prof. Britton, Miss Zellie Davenport, W. H. Davenport, J. P. Riley and Harry Bradley; piano solos by Miss Keating, Miss Freeman, Mr. Leander Fisher; songs by Mrs. Boltz and Mr. James Ried; musical selection by Mr. and Mrs. Crane; instrumental duet by Miss Wells and Mr. Taylor.

On Sunday, April 1st, two grand commemorative services were held, the speaker, Mr. Walter Howell—whose name is synonymous with all that is noble and powerful in the field of public speakers—taking for his subject of the morning discourse: "The Resurrection of Christ." It was a clear and concise exposition of that much mooted question as viewed from the standpoint of Spiritual Philosophy, and was well received. The subject for the evening, "Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern," was handled in a masterly manner, and proved by far the best lecture this gifted speaker has delivered in Buffalo—the audience which gathered to hear him being as intelligent a one as ever faced a speaker. Many strangers were present, and if they did not, at that hour, learn something of the principles of Spiritualism, they never will.

This report would be incomplete without due mention of the floral display, which was a great feature of the occasion, and made it indeed a fitting place for angels and men alike to be. The rostrum was almost hidden from view by beautiful banks of flowers, plants and evergreens; many tasteful and appropriate mottoes were displayed—the whole forming a beautiful embodiment of the thought and taste of the ladies whose labors made it what it was.

A correspondent informs us that the birthday of Modern Spiritualism was duly celebrated in its birth-place on Sunday, April 1st, by meetings held under the auspices of the Society, whereat several addresses on the history of the movement were delivered. The event was also borne in mind by the various circles convening in the city on that date.

Hartford, Ct.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Anniversary exercises in Hartford, March 30th and 31st, could not fail to be a success with such talent as J. Frank Baxter and Charles Dawbarn as speakers.

Both reviewed Spiritualism, each in his individual way imparting wholesome truths.

Mr. Baxter's séance, following the evening lecture, was fine, some very pointed tests being given.

Saturday morning the following Resolutions, presented by President G. W. Burnham, were discussed with much interest, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Bible, as a text-book, should be removed from the public schools, and all religious teachings in such schools should be entirely abstained from—including the ordinary forms of oral prayer.

Resolved, That the parochial school is an innovation on the free public school system of the State, with an undermining tendency—being fostered by sectarianism and religious intolerance, and antagonistic to the genius of our institutions.

Resolved, That we adhere to the important fact of mediumship, a gift possessed by Jesus and his Apostles and by all the seers of old, and now more generally developed than in ancient days: a God-given faculty which dwells in the occult forces of man's being, reaching out through the veil into that realm where bright spirits await the coming of mortals.

The afternoon lecture by Mr. Dawbarn, subject, "Universal Law," was highly complimented, and justly, too. Altogether, the celebration proved a decided success in every way.

The old officers were retained, and the Forty-First Anniversary will be celebrated in Willimantic.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The First Spiritualist Association celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary at Fraternity Hall on Sunday, April 1st.

The afternoon services were opened with singing by the choir, followed by a stirring lecture by Dr. Dean Clarke.

The evening exercises commenced with selections by the choir, which were finely rendered; after which Dr. Dean Clarke, under inspiration, gave a very able and instructive address, which was listened to with close attention by an appreciative audience.

The closing Anniversary exercises were given on Monday, April 2d, at the same hall, and consisted of a dance and supper. The hall was very tastily decorated with red, white and blue bunting, interspersed with American flags. Around the hall and about the stage were grouped our Lyceum flags, which presented a most pleasing sight to the older workers in our society.

Dancing commenced at 8:30; supper was announced at 10:30, to which ample justice was done. After an intermission of thirty minutes dancing was resumed and continued till one o'clock, to the evident pleasure of all who participated. The floor was under the management of our President, E. P. Pride, assisted by Otis Junkins, A. Knight and Frank Runlett.

Thus closed the Anniversary exercises.

The sight of our Lyceum flags at the Anniversary has revived the subject of reörganizing our Lyceum.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

March 31st, 1888, will long be remembered by the large audiences which gathered at Grand Army Hall in this city on that day. The exercises opened at 2 P. M., by music, after which Rev. H. H. Brown, of the Petersham Unitarian church, gave us one of the finest lectures it has ever been our good fortune to hear.

A bountiful collation was then served in the dining hall adjoining, and then came the "Fact Meeting."

Mrs. Clara Banks, of Haydenville, spoke at 7:30 P. M., giving us an exceedingly interesting lecture, in her spirited, soul-inspiring way. [It is to be regretted that this noble woman cannot oftener be heard upon the spiritual rostrum, but the care of aged parents renders it necessary for her to be at home every night.]

Thus closed one of the best Anniversary celebrations we have ever had. I should not forget to mention the music, both vocal and instrumental, which was a leading feature throughout, and was duly appreciated.

[Dr. Dean Clarke has given us some fine lectures in the last month.]

Lowell, Mass.

The Morning Times, of April 2d, so writes a correspondent, made good reference to the Anniversary meetings in that city—in the course of which occurred the following:

"Last Saturday was the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism. The event was observed by the Spiritualist Society of this city in Post 185 G. A. R. Hall, in Wyman's Exchange, Sunday morning. Albert B. Plimpton, Chairman of the Spiritualist meetings, presided. The exercises opened with the song, 'The Sweet By-and-Bye,' by Miss Anna Ware, who was followed by Edward S. Varney in an essay, having for its theme 'Easter Thoughts.' Mr. Varney dwelt upon the necessity of the phenomena of proving the immortality of the soul, and as stepping-stones to the noble system of ethics evolved by Spiritualism.

J. S. Whitney referred to his experiences of the last quarter of a century. Twenty-five years ago he knew nothing of this doctrine, but the death of his little boy made him an investigator, and through the facts presented by Spiritualism he became convinced of life beyond the grave. He referred to the presence and beautiful influence of angel loved ones, at the fireside and in the workshop. L. A. Hulse spoke briefly in a physiological and psychological vein. A. B. Plimpton opposed the unjust dogmas and theories of the evangelical churches, alluded to the breadth and universality of the spiritualistic religion, and eulogized its wonderful spread and adaptability to the needs of humanity.

In the afternoon and evening A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium, lectured, delivering in the evening one of the grandest spiritualistic discourses ever given in Lowell."

Milwaukee, Wis.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Our meeting in honor of the Fortieth Anniversary was called to order by Prof. Lockwood, (from Ripon, Wis.,) on Saturday evening, March 31st; in a short speech he explained the objects of the convocation, and spoke of the marked progress which Spiritualism had made since its advent. He announced that the exercises for the evening would be vocal and instrumental music, and recitations—to close with a séance.

The entertainment was "first-class" in all respects, and when the floor was cleared for dancing, a large share of the company took part, and entered into the enjoyment of the occasion with hearty zest. There was a large attendance during the early part of the evening, and many more came later.

Sunday morning we met again, and after singing, Prof. Lockwood gave the lecture of the forenoon—subject, "Savagery of our Present Civilization"—in which he severely criticised our present state and condition of national and societary life, and urged the necessity of a higher evolution. The discourse proved to be very earnest and logical, and all present seemed interested in listening to catch every word.

In the afternoon a general conference was held, remarks being in order in regard to the past, present and future of Spiritualism. Those who spoke at some length were Dr. H. S. Brown, Prof. A. B. Severance, Mrs. De Wolf, Prof. Butts, and others. This proved to be a very interesting session.

In the evening we had a packed hall at an early hour.

After the singing, Mrs. De Wolf (from Chicago) was introduced as the speaker for the evening: subject, "The Harvest and the Gleaning."

Prof. Lockwood followed with a short speech, claiming that Spiritualism could be proved to stand on a scientific basis.

The audience was then dismissed—all feeling that it was "good for them to be there;" and thus closed one of the best and most interesting meetings the Spiritualists have ever held in our city.

Prof. Lockwood presided with his usual dignity. The singing was furnished by Lockwood Green, Mrs. Leist, and was very fine indeed. Miss Collins and her little brother sang a charming duet at close of the meeting Sunday night.

Dr. Juliet Severance was engaged in Moliere, Ill., at the Anniversary meeting there, and so was out of the city.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Spiritualists here assembled on the evening of April 1st, and listened to a discourse delivered through the mediumship of the estimable Mrs. Walcott, on the Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism; her guides deviating on this occasion from the usual manner of the discussion of subjects read to her by the venerable President, Mr. Levi Weaver, who collects them from the audience.

After the lecture Miss Maggie Gaule gave names and descriptions of spirits to quite a number of people in the audience, and, with the exception of one or two, all were recognized. Our Anniversary memorial was a pleasant occasion to all present.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary was celebrated in the parlors of H. C. Dorn, 139 Congress street, with a full attendance and an awakened interest in the cause. Beautiful lilies and other flowers were brought in profusion, and for the first time we sang from the "Melodies of Life," selecting for the purpose: "The Angels are Coming," although we scarcely know which piece in that book is the best.

May the good work go on until the angels welcome us to our homes in the better land.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY opens its table of contents with another installment of the piquant and touching story: "Yone Santo, a Child of Japan," which E. H. House is now writing for its pages; the same number contains the second part of Henry James's entertaining "Aspern Papers"; another charming article is that on "English Faith in Art"; "The First Crisis of the American Revolution," is the title of a most readable and valuable article by that virile student of history, Prof. John Fiske; Frank Gaylord Cook has an account of "The Marriage Celebration in the United States," and chapters of "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove," by Charles Egbert Craddock, are furnished; among other prose articles may be enumerated an elaborate review of the new book of poems by James Russell Lowell, a review of the new "Life of Darwin," the usual book notices of the month, and short essays in the "Contributor's Club." James Russell Lowell's poem on "Turner's Old Téméraire," under a figure symbolizing the Church, is all aflame with a spirit of the hope for better things in that direction for which "the stars of God long even as we." THE QUIVER.—"The United Kingdom Alliance," an organization for procuring the legislative suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, instituted in 1853, is briefly sketched, accompanied by portraits of several of its leading supporters. "The Friends' Colony in the Far North," is an interesting sketch of Quakerism in Norway. New chapters are given of two serials, also a few short stories, and of other articles that will interest all are, "Who was Seneca?" with portrait; "The Old Lady's Leading Strings," and "Milton's House at Chalfont St. Giles," illustrated. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—A brief biography is given of William of Germany, with portrait. In "Notable People of the Day," Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Ed. Weston are the subjects, with a portrait of each. No. 3 of "Observations of a Woman in Public Life," "Criminal Anthropology," "How They Lived Five Hundred Years Ago," etc., constitute the remaining contents. New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

MEADVILLE.—Mrs. L. L. Haverty writes: "Seeing in the BANNER OF LIGHT an advertisement of Mrs. Eliza A. Martin, of Boston, that she would answer sealed letters at a very moderate price, and anxious to know more of spirit phenomena, I wrote a letter, secured it from being opened by means of a sewing-machine, and sent it to her, she being a perfect stranger to me and I to her. The result was very satisfactory. I received a reply that in its character would startle the most skeptical into an inquiring state of mind, that, if followed, would convince them of the truth of spirit communion. This is an easy and sure means of proving the truth—one that can be employed at a small cost and with good results."

PITTSBURGH.—Helen Stuart-Richings writes: "Coming from the Fortieth Anniversary meeting in Cincinnati, your correspondent stopped over for a few days' visit in Pittsburgh, as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Meskimen, whose hospitable roof also shelters just now that noble worker, so well known and beloved throughout the Spiritualist ranks, Mrs. A. M. Glading. The Pittsburgh Society is to be congratulated on having secured the services of Mrs. Glading for the five Sundays of April, and seems to appreciate its good fortune, as crowded houses and attentive audiences testify. It is also to be congratulated on its almost phenomenal success. As the outcome of any project depends much on the start it receives, so the prosperity of the Pittsburgh Society of Spiritualists is largely due to the indefatigable efforts of 'mine host.' He it was who first published a call to all in Pittsburgh interested in the spread of the truths embodied in Spiritualism, to come forward for the purpose of local organization; and who, when responses came slowly, himself penned scores of personal letters, addressed to Spiritualists, and such others as were known to entertain liberal ideas.

The result was the organization of a Society, the engagement of speakers, and, within a few weeks, the renting of a hall for the exclusive use of the Society; a hall which now, at the close of the first year, is too small to accommodate the eager crowds that throng it morning and evening.

During the year Mr. Meskimen has served as Secretary, and it is to be regretted that a change in business, which calls Mr. M. from the city, will soon deprive the Society of his valuable services.

A Lyceum has also been organized, its opening session being held on the first Sunday of February. The Society has one hundred and thirty-eight members, and the Lyceum from twenty five to thirty. The platform has been occupied every Sunday during the year, and the report shows a creditable balance in the Treasury. So much for earnest effort and coöperation!

What has been done, may be done. Spiritualists everywhere should take courage, and in the success of the Pittsburgh Society find a promise of possibilities which that courage may transform into realizations."

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—A correspondent writes us as follows: "A retired merchant, who is also a veteran Spiritualist, in his daily walks and associations comes in contact with many ministers who claim to fully believe the Bible, and quite heated discussions upon the infallibility or infallibility of that book have resulted therefrom. He was conversing with one of them on one occasion upon the Bible, and the minister said, 'Where can you find better precepts than in that book?' The Spiritualist replied, 'I give you a new commandment, which, if obeyed, will insure a passport to celestial regions: "Do nothing and say nothing that will not be pleasant to remember."' The minister seemed to be delighted with the sentiment, and placed it in his memorandum book for future reference. At another meeting he said he had often quoted it as coming from a prominent Spiritualist."

LYNN.—Mrs. E. B. Merrill, Secretary, writes: "At the session of the Children's Progressive Lyceum Sunday, April 8th, we had quite a good attendance. After the opening exercises answers were given by a number to the question, 'What do you understand by the word conscience?' Recitations were given by Jessie Hutchins, Willie Keeny, Winnie Atherton, Celia Goodwin, Lilla Hurd, Stanley Balcom and Ethel Herrick. Readings by Mabel Cheever, Mrs. Atherton, Mr. Bartlett, Mr. Emerson and Mrs. Carlton. Remarks were made by Mrs. Julia Dickinson. Most of the spectators' seats were filled by an attentive audience."

SALEM.—A correspondent writes that about fifty assembled on Fast Day at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, on Church street, the ladies having decorated the rooms with plants and flowers in anticipation of giving glad welcome to their friends, both the seen and the unseen. "The exercises of the evening consisted of an invocation by Mrs. Saunders, singing by all, poem by Mrs. Sanger of Peabody, remarks by Miss Simpson of Salem and Mrs. Kimball of Peabody, singing by Mrs. Perkins and Mrs. Sanger, and a poem by Mrs. Sanger. Mrs. Tullock presided at the organ, and of her merits I cannot say too much. Of the mediums, Miss Simpson of Salem gave readings and described spirit friends; Mrs. Kimball of Peabody gave readings and tests of spirit presence, all of which were correct; Mr. Brown of Peabody gave correct delineations and names. The exercises closed with singing by all, and a benediction by Mrs. Saunders. The occasion was a very enjoyable and profitable one."

New Hampshire.

PORTSMOUTH.—Dr. William Critchley writes: "We have had other evidences of spirit presence and power through the instrumentality of Mrs. E. Clark-Kimball, who gave us two fine lectures and tests that were truly wonderful, all of them being recognized. She has gained many friends outside of the spiritual ranks, and we are very anxious for her to come again and often. Her meetings are always a success, financially and otherwise. She needs no other recommendation. Sunday, April 1st, Miss S. Lizzie Ewer addressed the friends here. All were well pleased with her addresses and tests, and hope she may be kept employed."

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—E. P. Goodsell writes: "Ministers of the gospel are not very consistent in their definition of the divine right of liberty, when they avail themselves of it to deprive others of what they profess to consider the inalienable right of every individual. Hitherto the deprivation women have been subject to, as regards their rights as co-equals with men, has had its greatest support from these very ministers who prate so much of the liberty of the gospel, they at the same time, by their acts, showing to them that the liberty they extol is, in reality, to women, only slavery. What sensible, truth-loving man can for a moment believe that the words so often quoted as a scriptural injunction against the natural, inborn rights of women: 'As Christ is the head of the Church so is man the head of woman,' have not been interpolated in the gospel, and changed the liberty of which it speaks into the slavery which more than one-half of mankind has for centuries endured under the pretense that it is in accordance with the will of God."

California.

SAN DIEGO.—Mary A. White, Librarian and Corresponding Secretary, writes: "A little band of spiritualistic workers have had the courage to start a scientific, liberal and spiritual library in the city of San Diego. Though our Society, 'The Pacific Co-operative Spiritual Union,' is, as an organized body, only three weeks old, and our library movement of the same age, we are meeting with success beyond our most sanguine expectations. The good angels, who inaugurated the work, are helping us, but we need help from progressive souls in the enlightened East to give the movement a solidity that shall enable it to endure for all coming time.

We are planting for futurity; and if any of the many readers of the BANNER OF LIGHT have books which they feel may help the cause of truth and humanity in this peculiar endeavor, and are willing to donate the same to us, we will be most thankful for them."

Iowa.

CEDAR FALLS.—"J. C. N. A." writes: "This is a very pleasant town on the Cedar River, one hundred miles west of Dubuque, on the Mississippi River; it has a population of three thousand five hundred, and contains twelve organized churches, with the other paraphernalia known as 'the machinery of the church.' Less than one-fourth of the population, however, are church members. There are a few Spiritualists here, and many Liberals.

We need a genuine writing or good test medium. I think such would be well supported."

Rhode Island.

NEWPORT.—John C. Peckham writes: "All mankind appear to be seeking for happiness, but very few know in what happiness consists, which to my apprehension is in doing the best we can under the circumstances in which we are placed, and being reconciled to conditions in which we are for the time being, and which we cannot by any possibility avoid. To make the best of this world prepares us for the best in the world to which we are going."

Original Essay.

PRACTICAL APPLICATION OF TRIANGULAR ANALYSIS IN EDUCATION.

BY "FRANKLIN."

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of June 4th, 1887, it was shown that man's intellect analyzes man, and is thereby subjectively an element of separation; that by the intellect we separate the body, which occupies space (the intellect does not occupy space), from a third element of man's being, which element is neither intellectual nor material. For the body is perceptible to the senses, and has, under ordinary conditions, distinct recognition as material substance. The intellect (often termed mind) has cognizance of truth and knowledge, and does not, as far as we perceive, have any claim to being material. But these two elements of man's being are supplemented by what may be termed the remaining element or spirit.

Men are aware of bodily pain, of intellectual thought, and when not realizing sensation or thought are at times conscious of emotions of joy, hope, love, etc. That element of man's being which is emotional, and determines of what spirit man is, whether a hopeful spirit or a brave spirit, etc., we call the spirit of man.

Without attempting exhaustive proofs of this analysis, merely repeating that the simplest separation requires three elements subjectively, namely, a separator and two elements separated, let us see some important consequences of this idea. In the civilized world to-day, philosophy, education and religion are potent, and much depends on them.

Because man has not been able to show any possible way by which consciousness can be imagined to evolve from matter, he is forced to consider intellect as something different from body; and hence culture of the body and of the intellect are distinct in the most materialistic schools. But spiritual culture has vast relations and consequences, and is necessarily disregarded by all those who do not recognize that man has a spirit. The churches recognize a spirit in man, it is true, but they base their belief in it on revelation, a foundation which is not acceptable to a large class of minds that appear gaining in power and number according to the testimony of the churches themselves. Furthermore those who believe man has a spirit seem to have very divergent views as to the nature and development of it, and make spiritual culture occupy small space in the curriculum.

To confirm the belief in spirit, and base it on intellectual analysis, does not necessarily prevent revelation, whether of ancient or modern times, from having due influence; but must be useful in reaching the more materialistic class of scholars. In our institutions of learning belief in revelation does not prevent a strong tendency to ignore the spiritual harmonies in such a way as to allow of serious results. "Ministers' sons" are proverbial for tendencies that do not mark them as having highly developed reverence for the spiritual in education. The work of promoting a knowledge of immortality necessarily implies a spirit as existing, and this must be accepted before the spirit's immortality can be admitted. The influence, on individuals and on the community, of a recognition of a spirit in man, is fundamentally important in law, education, social customs and private actions. No one will attempt to develop a spirit till he believes it exists. Suicides, wars, crimes, and injustice of every kind are not under the control that knowledge of spiritual harmonies and relations would give. The study of harmonious educational development in a mathematical way demands attention and awaits the spiritually-minded investigator. For mathematics is the basis of all science; there being no order, no relation, no proportion, no division or analysis, except as found in this science, necessarily the first in history, since till these essentials of scientific procedure had been conceived no scientific knowledge could exist.

As any entity or thing necessarily reduces to three subjective elements in the simplest analysis (for explanation of Triangular Analysis see BANNER OF LIGHT of June 4th, 1887), we may with propriety use a plane triangle as illustrating the threefold nature of any entity thus analyzed; the three sides representing the three elements of its analysis and either one of the sides may represent the separator as coming between the other two elements without destroying the continuity or existence of the thing thus analyzed. The lengths of the sides may be taken respectively, proportional to the amount of development of each of the three elements of the thing, and these are, as in trigonometry, fixed in relation by the amount of angle at the several vertices. On studying the proprieties of equilateral triangles and comparing results with their analogues in the development of man, as suggested by this representation of threefold entities by triangles, many remarkable harmonies are observed, suggesting important ideas in harmonious education.

MOTHERHOOD.

BY LIDA LEWIS WATSON.

A blossom blown against her bosom's snow;
A bud of velvet whiteness cast below
From out heaven's height to teach her how to go;

To mark the way through depths of sweetest pain
Where flowers unfold their leaves that have no stain.

A little prayer and song of psalm beside—
A little chanting at day's eventide,
When heaven's gracious gates are open wide;

A little rift of music sung below—
A little note of pleading breathed so low
That God could hear, what human heart could know?

A meaning far beyond all mortal ken,
A little thrill beneath the heart—and then,
To love's sweet, sacred deed, God's grand Amen!

What loving word from praiseful lips may fall,
To break such hush that lingers over all,
And calmly falls when soft His voice doth call?

She standeth now within His holy sight;
About her head a halo of the light
That breaks beyond the shade of earthly night;

Within her heart the knowledge of all good;
The dust of golden lilies where she stood—
And on her brow the crown of womanhood.

Within her hands lay life's most precious things,
Upon her lips love's praiseful song still sings,
And to her heart the dove of peace she brings.

She hath them all—the gifts that can be given:
Life, Love and Motherhood, God, Rest and Heaven.

Something for the Psychical Societies to Ponder Upon.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

We are reminded in the Bible to try the spirits and not to believe every spirit, and I often heed the injunction, and sometimes am blamed for so doing.

April 1st, (in the evening) I attended Mrs. R. S. Lillie's lecture at Berkeley Hall, Boston. Frank T. Ripley gave tests after the lecture, and the first spirit that came purported to be the late Rev. Dr. Quinby of Augusta, Me. Mr. Ripley said that the spirit walked down the middle aisle to the centre of the hall, and recognized some one. I was sitting in the direction named, but did not recognize the spirit, because I did not desire to render myself unduly conspicuous by acknowledging what was not—under the circumstances, which are best known to myself—specially a test to me in particular. Some one else, however, recognized the fact of Rev. Dr. Geo. W. Quinby's having been a resident of Augusta, as stated; and in a subsequent conversation Mr. Ripley informed me that he was himself, ignorant of what he said about that gentleman, so that some intelligence outside himself must have informed him.

The mention of Mr. Quinby's name and residence, etc., under the circumstances awakened regret in my mind that he did not make to me some more definite appeal for recognition, as I knew him well in earth-life, and knew also many things concerning him which Mr. Ripley could not have known; but I recognize, of course, that limitations must necessarily exist in this matter of spirit communion.

My acquaintance with the Reverend gentleman spoken of was, while he inhabited the material form, a close and pleasant one. Some fifteen years ago I saw a fine notice in his paper concerning healing by invisible forces, and a plea for medical freedom; and while in Augusta I called upon him at his office. He at that time was proprietor and editor of the Gospel Banner, a paper devoted to the Universalist denomination.

I had a pleasant conversation with him, and he related to me his experience with magnetism—he having himself a large surplus of it in his organism, which he had at times exercised with friends. I worked over him with manipulations at that time, and whenever I was in Augusta afterwards I called upon him; some years later, while stopping at Hotel North, he sent his carriage for me to take me to his home to give him a magnetic treatment. I complied, and subsequently he came to Boston and had a few more treatments.

While at Augusta he gave me a book entitled: "Heaven our Home," which is practically full of Spiritualism and spiritual thoughts. I quote from this volume the following sentences from Chapter VIII., entitled "The Soul's Triumph Over the Body":

In opening this chapter Mr. Quinby considers the point raised by those who doubt a continued life for man, i. e., that the soul is entirely dependent upon the body for its existence; that the brain is not only essential, but indispensable to all mental operations—that the mental powers become debilitated by disease, and all consciousness perishes totally on the death of the body; and says, in rejoinder, that while the materialist cannot positively prove that the human soul at death becomes a nonentity, since it is impossible to see, feel or discover what does not exist—on the contrary, "hundreds of thousands of people have testified, in words most sincere and earnest, that they KNOW disembodied [excarnated] spirits exist, for they have often seen them and conversed with them." "It is," he says, "no uncommon thing for persons dying to describe in the most glowing terms what they see as they look into the glorious vista that opens before them." He mentions several such cases known to him personally as a minister, and by his editorial labors during sixteen years, and desires to know if "the thousands since the beginning of the world, who rejoiced in the happy belief that they had seen and conversed with the disembodied [excarnated] spirits of kindred and friends" have been utterly mistaken. Of one case to the contrary he is sure, that of his own dear wife, who, on passing to spirit-life, left him a testimony of the truth of which nothing could shake his conviction.

"It was in the year 1860," he says, "that one with whom I had lived for more than twenty years in closest conjugal intimacy, passed into the better life, leaving an infant child but seven days old, besides three other dear children.* The last days of her life were attended with intense suffering, and yet nothing could exceed the calmness of her soul. She had been called to part, from time to time, with children, till five had preceded her to their heavenly home, one of whom—'Charlie,' the older, nearly four years old when he died—was a very beautiful and promising child. Now the mother was to follow. On the night preceding her death, as she obtained no rest, she requested me to lie down by her side, and said if all were quiet she might fall into a drowse. It was probably twelve o'clock. The room was above stairs. It was in the month of February, and a moderate wood fire burned in the open fire place. Just beyond the foot of the bed the door opened into a hall, which was lighted by a lamp upon a stand, placed but a short distance from the door, which, at the hour to which I refer, stood ajar perhaps six or eight inches, for the purpose of ventilation. As one reposed upon the bed, he could look directly through the aperture formed by the door partially opened, into the hall beyond, and see very distinctly what was there. I had lain there perhaps ten minutes, during which I had whispered some words of encouragement to her, when she requested the nurse, who was sitting by the fire-side, to open the door. The nurse complied with her request, and the light in the hall shone into the room. In a short time she requested her to place the door as before. Then, after a few minutes, she asked her to open it again; then, soon she again requested her to close it. This she did three times, which somewhat alarmed both the nurse and myself, for it indicated, as I thought, mental aberration; after which she lay a few minutes as if in deep thought, when she said, 'I now know I am going to leave you and the dear children. I shall go to morrow.'

I was in great distress, and begged of her not to talk in this way—she would 'be better in the morning.' 'No, not in the morning, but in the evening of to-morrow I shall be better,' she replied. 'Charlie has come for me, and I know that I am going. But don't let it grieve or distress you, my husband, for it is the will of God, and whatever is His will must be for the best.'

She seemed so calm and self-possessed, and so positive in her convictions—as if she had certain knowledge of what would transpire—that I was filled with alarm and grief, and asked her what had occurred to inspire her with such dreadful forebodings?

She said she saw nothing 'dreadful' in what was before her. With the exception of the separation from those on earth so dear to her, all was bright and beautiful. 'Charlie has come for me.'...

She went on to say, in touching tones, that as soon as I had lain down beside her, Charlie appeared in the hall, and looked in upon her through the aperture formed by the door standing a little ajar, as described above. She saw him by the full light of the hall lamp. He was nearly as high as the ceiling, and seemed clad in celestial light, with his face radiant with beauty—the shining curls, glowing cheeks and large expressive eyes, she saw just as vividly as when he was in the flesh. 'He looked charmingly attractive,' she said, 'and putting up his little hand in this way'—and she described how with her own hand, already as white as alabaster—'and with his finger so ethereal, he beckoned me in this way'—beckoning herself—'to come with him, and smiled so sweetly! The scene was so enchanting I could not speak, but could only gaze upon it! At length I asked to have the door fully opened, to see if the vision would remain; but as the door opened it departed. Then I asked to have the door closed as before, and to my joy the vision returned as before, with the same celestial radiance, the same angelic sweetness. When the door was opened again, again it vanished, and after the third time it came no more. It will not come again. Ah, no! but I shall go to the bright world radiant with spiritual beauty, and join the glad throng among whom are all the dear ones gone. Who knows but I am needed there? Our family above is larger than our family here, you know.'

From this time till the moment of her death, which transpired at seven o'clock the next evening, she seemed to rise entirely out of and above the conditions which surrounded her. Her body was dying, and yet to her there was no death.... She slept a little that night, but in the morning her soul was all alive to the interests and happiness of those she was so soon to leave. When her physicians came, at her request, to tell her the plain truth, they said they could afford no hope, and when they listened to her calm, loving words, so full of resignation and trust, they were affected to tears. She had her person and room put in condition to afford the most cheerful aspect, as if there was to be no death there, but only a resurrection; that she was to put off her mortal garment for her ascension robe. She had the children brought to her bed-side, and sing the charming hymns she had taught them, about heaven and the angels, and gave them wise and loving counsel; talked to them of the sweet home in heaven, to which she was going, where she would meet their little brothers,* and where she would again live with them. All present, with the exception of herself, were melted to tears. To her all was serenity and holy reconciliation and joy....

She grew weaker and weaker in body, but in her soul stronger and stronger. She closed her eyes, but whispered that when she was going she would press my hand. For a half hour there was no motion of a limb or muscle, and no one knew or could tell whether she was 'in the body or out.' Suddenly a slight pressure of the hand was felt, she relaxed her hold, brought a little sigh, and was gone.

Could this be death to that soul? It was impossible for me to feel it so. From such a scene 'into annihilation how vast the leap.' 'Between them how immeasurable the contrast?' while there appeared 'not a step, not even a filmy cloud between her exalted soul and heaven.' All present, whatever their religious views, testified as one person that to her there was no death. From that day to the present I can never think of her in connection with the corruption of the grave, but only as being in heaven, incorruptible, spiritual and glorious. And, I repeat, this strength and exaltation of the soul, and other wonderful phenomena, manifested when the bodily form is attenuated by disease, is more prophetic of immortality, and more convincing proof, to my mind, of another existence for the soul, than all other considerations."

Here are words with no uncertain sound from one who while in the mortal was an able editor, a talented divine, and a worthy member of society in every respect. He testifies to the assurances given him at the hour of her transition by his cherished companion that life on earth is but the "suburb of the life elysian." Since the book from which these extracts are taken was published, this grand soul has passed on, to meet once more in the Better Land she whose earlier departure he has so feelingly but triumphantly depicted. Do any of those Christian ministers or believers, who in their efforts to discredit and break down the Spiritual Dispensation, are so wont to ally themselves with Psychical Research Societies and work into the very hands of ultra-materialistic scientists, feel happy at the thought that the company they are in obliges them logically to answer to the words of this brave Universalist pastor that his wife was in a delirium, or was instinct with an educated "expectancy," or was a victim of "unconscious cerebration"? I hardly think they do, on reflection.

Some time previous to 1876, Mr. Quinby had a most remarkable spiritual experience by and through his own organism, which I learned concerning from Rev. Zenith Thompson, who related it to me while I was giving him magnetic treatment. I doubt if there has been anything that has occurred which is any more remarkable in this regard since the experience of St. Paul, where he describes himself as not knowing whether he was in or out of the body, etc.

In the summer of 1876 I wrote out the statement, as given to me by the Rev. Mr. Thompson, and sent it to the Vineland (N. J.) Independent, the same being printed at that time, and reading as follows:

"A. S. Hayward, Magnetic Physician, speaks of an event related to him by a clergyman who was formerly one of his patients. The reverend said that an exminister, who is also an editor of a religious newspaper in the Eastern States, was called upon by one of the resident clergy to occupy the pulpit during his temporary absence. This the ministerial editor very kindly consented to do, and on the following Sunday he proceeded as usual to open the meeting with prayer, during the delivery of which he became unconscious, but it did not injure his vocal organs or his intellect, for he finished his prayer and preached a sermon of unusual eloquence and power, and of over an hour's length. At the conclusion of the sermon he took his seat, acting like one in a trance, and was very much amazed when the leader of the choir told him he had actually preached a sermon, and asked him to give out the closing hymn. He was so much agitated that he could not comply with this request, and it had to be done by one of the laymen. The unconscious preacher, having once been a pupil of the narrating clergyman, he, upon hearing of this strange experience of his former student, wrote him a letter asking an explanation of the occurrence. The response of the singularly endowed man was that he knew of no cause for his peculiar actions, except that he had eaten clams the Saturday night previous. The minister replied immediately, to the effect that if clams would inspire men to preach the gospel with such extraordinary ability he had better advise all ministers, through the columns of his paper, to see to it that on every Saturday night their stomachs were full to overflowing with these luscious bivalves."

Will some Psychical Research Society account for this occurrence and the possibility of its taking place outside of and beyond the revelations of the Spiritualistic Philosophy?

Passed to Spirit-Life,

April 6th, Mrs. Rosa Kurtz, aged 44 years.

She was a member of the Second Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, and wife of Mr. John Kurtz, who is one of the Trustees of the Association. The family are all ardent Spiritualists, and though the husband and children deeply mourn and deplore their loss, they are consoled by the knowledge that she is still with them, and has the same kind and watchful care for their welfare that she had while in earthly form. In accordance with their convictions, the last services were conducted in the true spiritual form. Mrs. H. S. Lake, who is lecturing for the First Association for the month of April, officiated at the funeral ceremonies, and through her organism the wife and mother was enabled to give to her bereaved family the knowledge that she still lived, and that her time would be employed in helping to prepare a home for them on the brighter shore, where she would be enabled to meet them one by one as they pass over, till the family are again united in a brighter and happier sphere of life, freed from earthly cares and trouble, and hand in hand enjoy that progress and development they had been seeking a knowledge of while in the earthly form. The family have the heartfelt sympathy and encouragement of the friends, and also of the members of the Second Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia.

T. J. AMBROSIA, President.
LEONARD I. ABBOTT, Sec'y.

Mrs. Dinsmore, widow of the late James Dinsmore.

This lady was an old resident of Boston (Waltham street), and a veteran Spiritualist and medium. She left this city some months since to reside with her daughter on the Pacific Coast, where she soon afterward passed away at a ripe age, in the full knowledge of spiritualism.

For many years the deceased gave much of her time as a medium as a free-will offering to those who desired to know the truth of spirit communion; and thereby wrought much good in this community. Herself and husband were among the supporters of the Music Hall Spiritualist meetings, which were presided over for so long a period by Lewis B. Wilson. She grew constantly weaker after the decease of her husband; and finally undertook a journey to the Pacific Coast for the benefit of her health, which proved preparatory to a removal from the mortal toward an eternal reunion with her loved in spirit-life. From the Avenue House, Springfield, Ill., April 5th, at 4:30 A.M., Col. James White, aged 92 years and 8 days.

Col. White was a native of Gettysburg, Penn. He came to this city in 1830 and engaged in the cattle business, driving to Eastern markets in early days, long years before railroads were constructed. He was a true, good man, charitable and kind to his fellow-man, and was highly respected by all who knew him. He was a veteran Spiritualist, being among the first to espouse the cause in the Western country forty years ago, and lived firm in his faith. He received many cheering messages from beyond the mystic river to cheer him on his way. The spirit has gone to its reward on the sunny shores of the eternal home of the blessed. COM.

CHRISTIAN SYMBOLISM.

BY THOMAS INMAN, M. D.,

Author of "Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names," etc.

Revised and enlarged, with an Essay on Baal Worship, on "The Assyrian Sacred Grove," and other allied symbols. By JOHN NEWTON, M. R. C. S. E., etc.

This book contains in a nutshell the essence of Dr. Inman's other publications, and for the reader of limited means is just what he requires. The subject of Symbolism is as deep as human thought and as broad in its scope as humanity itself. The erudite thinker finds it not only worthy of his best energies, but capable of taxing them to the utmost. Many pens have been employed upon it, and it has never grown old. Dr. Inman's views are somewhat peculiar: he has concentrated his attention to the ideas which he believes to underlie the symbolism of the most ancient periods, and can be traced through the autonomy of the Christian Church. He finds the relation which exists, and the antiquarian likewise, between Asshur and Jehovah, the Baal of Syria and the God whom Christians worship; and the mysteries of the Sacred Grove, of which the Old Testament says so much, are unfolded and made sensible to the common intellect. Scholars will welcome this volume, and the religious reader will peruse its pages with the profoundest interest. The symbols which characterize worship constitute a study which will never lose its interest so long as learning and art have admirers.

Third edition, with two hundred illustrations. One vol. 8vo, cloth, $4.50; former price, $3.00.

ANCIENT ART AND MYTHOLOGY.

The Symbolical Language of Ancient Art and Mythology.

AN INQUIRY.

BY RICHARD PAYNE KNIGHT,

Author of "Worship of Priapus."

A new edition, with Introduction, Notes translated into English, and a new and complete Index. By ALEXANDER WILDER, M. D.

"Not only do these explanations afford a key to the religion and mythology of the ancients, but they also impart a more thorough understanding of the canons and principles of art. It is well known that the latter were closely allied to the other; so that the symbolism of which the religious emblems and furniture consisted likewise constituted the essentials of architectural style and decoration, textile embellishments, as well as the arts of sculpture, painting and engraving. Mr. Knight has treated the subject with rare erudition and ingenuity, and with such success that the labors of those who come after him rather add to the results of his investigations than replace them in important particulars. The labors of Champollion, Bunsen, Layard, Bonomi, the Rawlinsons and others, comprise his deductions so remarkably as to dissipate whatever of his assertions that appeared fanciful. Not only are the writings of Greek and Roman authors now more easy to comprehend, but additional light has been afforded to a correct understanding of the canon of the Holy Scripture."—Extract from Editor's Preface.

One vol. 8vo, cloth, handsomely printed, $4.50; postage 15 cents; former price, $3.00.

ANCIENT FAITHS AND MODERN.

A Dissertation upon Worships, Legends, and Divinities in Central and Western Asia, Europe and Elsewhere, before the Christian Era. Showing their Relations to Religious Customs as they now exist.

BY THOMAS INMAN, M. D.,

Author of "Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names," etc., etc.

This work is most aptly expressed by the title, and the author, who is one of our most learned and accomplished modern writers, has done ample justice to his subject. He pries boldly into Bluebeard's closet, little recking whether he shall find a ghost, skeleton, or a living being; and he tells us very bluntly and explicitly what he has witnessed. Several years since he gave to the learned world his treatise on Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names, in which were disclosed the ideas underlying the old-world religions, and the nature of hieroglyphical symbols employed in the East. The present volume complements that work, elaborates more perfectly the ideas there set forth, and traces their relations to the faiths, worship, and religious dogmas of modern time.

One vol. 8vo, cloth, $2.00; postage 20 cents; former price, $5.00.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF EXISTENCE.

THE REALITY AND ROMANCE OF HISTORIES. IN FOUR BOOKS:

I. History of Deities, or Theism and Mythism. II. History of Heaven, or the Celestial Regions. III. History of Demons, or Demonism. IV. History of Hades, or the Infernal Regions.

INCLUDING A HISTORY OF ANGELS AND PURGATORY.

BY E. O. KELLEY, M.D.

The work, as a whole, is particularly adapted to the general reader, not only because of the special interest that the subject has, but from the variety of its characters and incidents, its visions and revelations, its narratives and its marvels. The sentimental charm of the most admired poets, the highly-wrought romance of the novelist, find at least their counterpart here. The objects embraced have inspired the greatest of ancient poets—Homer and Virgil; and Milton and Dante have not been less devoted to the themes of the histories.

One vol. 8vo, $1.50; former price, $5.00.

BIBLE OF HUMANITY.

BY JULES MICHELET,

Author of "The History of France," "Priests, Women, and Families," "L'Amour," etc.

Translated from the French by V. CALFA.

"His Bible of Humanity is a large epic in prose. The artist-historian, in the manner of inspired men and prophets, sings the evolution of mankind. There is no doubt that he throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds; but at the same time he carries away the reader with such rapid flight of imagination as almost to make him giddy."—Larousse's Universal Dictionary.

"I Know of the Truth of Immortality by the Evidence of Spiritualism."

The Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism has passed, and its lessons as rehearsed in various portions of this country have been briefly stated in the columns of THE BANNER. Special attention is called to what speakers and writers have been led to say and to indite regarding the importance—nay, the absolute necessity of the mediumistic phenomena in the work of sustaining the New Dispensation in the position to which it has at present attained, or of advancing a knowledge of its beneficent revealments and extending its uplifting influence among mankind.

It is too much the fashion of the present time and among a certain class of minds identified with the spiritual movement to deny the mediums, belittle the phenomena, and put stress only upon that side of the New Revelation which borders upon the theoretic, the philosophical and the liberally theologic.

No doubt exists that "Spiritualism came"—as was once said through the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant—"to spiritualize existing conditions, not to destroy them," and therefore reason exists why there should be a side of the movement fitted for the transmission of what is gained in light and knowledge, in such form as can be met and appreciated by people not within the Spiritualist ranks; but the best work for the cause cannot be accomplished by habitually turning the face churchward, and abusing either the mediums for doing the peculiar service to which they are called, or the Spiritualists who prefer to countenance them, rather than abandon themselves to mere abstractions. "The mediums, first, last and always," is the true motto for the well-wisher of the cause. Truly does J. Frank Baxter (himself a grand instrument in the hands of the invisible intelligences) say, on our first page: "Without mediums there were no Spiritualism," for if the mediums were taken away the position of the Spiritualist would not materially differ from that occupied by the liberal wing of the Unitarian Church, and Spiritualism would be a matter of philosophic speculation rather than, as now, one of positive knowledge.

We are pleased indeed to note that the bold and outspoken guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond took occasion to emphasize the point we are now making in their Anniversary discourse, delivered to the First Society of Spiritualists in Chicago, through her organism, on Sunday, April 1st, and which bore the significant title of "The Import of the Day." She began her remarks with the recounting of a poetic tradition in the mystic religion of the Orient, to the effect that at such time as the sun has crossed the barrier that separates the light from the shadow, God sends forth from the celestial region Azereth, the Awakener; that he not only touches the earth with the wonders of his wand, bringing forth the buds and blossoms that shall yield their fruition, but all living things are renewed each spring-tide with the wand of the Awakening Angel; that human lives are also touched with the wand of this angel, and, with the awakening of birds and flowers, hatred, darkness and terror depart, and love is renewed; friendship, long severed, is restored; to such as were in sorrow and mourning for the death of loved ones there comes the knowledge of a future eternal reünion.

She then spoke of the forty years which have passed since the advent of the Modern Dispensation, and declared that the new life in man that was brooding over the world has, under the powerful touch of the spiritual Azereth, entered into and forms a part of the existing life of hundreds, of thousands and millions of people to-day: Truly does she remark of the import of the Anniversary hour: "Spiritualism summons you to the testimony of thanksgiving to-day, for the awakening knowledge of immortal life. It demands of you this tribute, it asks you to give it as the voluntary expression of your thankfulness for what it has done" in giving to the world a perpetual and living fountain of inspiration; a truth that is not sealed up; a river of knowledge that flows forever.

"TO-DAY SHOULD BE A DAY OF THANKSGIVING AND TRIBUTE FROM EVERY HEART THAT HAS KNOWLEDGE OF IMMORTAL LIFE THROUGH THE LIVING REVELATION OF SPIRITUALISM, AND THE NAME SHOULD BE SO DISTINCTLY PRONOUNCED THAT NO ONE IN ALL THE WORLD WHO SPEAKS OR READS THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE CAN MISTAKE IT: I KNOW OF THE TRUTH OF IMMORTALITY BY THE EVIDENCE OF SPIRITUALISM."

She bids her hearers look back forty years, and see where the mind of man stood, halting between heavenly hope and hellish despair, and swept strongly away from both by the rising tide of a rapidly deepening materialism that set toward the shores of utter negation and everlasting night, and then sums up the grand work of the phenomena since 1848:

"One by one the evidences came, appealing to the senses in the simple rap that, like the telephonic signal, signifies that some one wishes to communicate, then the message, afterward the vision, then the evidence in stronger voice and testimony, then in written, then in spoken words, then in the forms that might appear, in the various objects that moved without contact of human hands—pile upon pile of evidence; one by one the barriers were removed until at last came the open message from the dearly beloved ones, the recognition of the hand-writing, the testimony of intelligence which was only known to you and to them, and this crowned the whole line of conviction; all the barriers gave way, and the full flood-tide came in upon your spirit; fear and terror departed; your loved ones stood before you in spirit, face to face; sometimes were even able to descend to your mortal vision; and the light of this immortal truth pierced in and through the external dwelling, and made you aware of the life beyond death.

"Could there be a greater resurrection than this? Could there come into the night of earthly darkness any greater light than this: between doubt, and fear, and hope, and faith, and uncertainty the in-sweeping tide of absolute knowledge, the evidences that, one by one, tore away the barriers of outward conviction, of intellectual dogmatism, and placed instead the sweet blossoms of immortal life?"

That glorious victory she would have all remember; whatever may be said in the world by a flippant and mendacious press, and a still more flippant clergy, whatever may be said by those who have not this message from the skies, she demands that those who have had that message, who in season and out of season have been recognizedly ministered to by spirits, are reprehensible from the hour that knowledge was attained if they fail to give their testimony gladly, consciously and fully on every suitable occasion to the certainty that Spiritualism has brought.

"Its name is Spiritualism [she says]; no other word means the same in the world to-day. People may try to add to it, or take from it; place adjectives before it, but nothing can add to its value; the term 'rational Spiritualism,' 'Christian Spiritualism,' 'philosophic Spiritualism' will not change the meaning of the word. The meaning that belongs to Spiritualism is everything that pertains to the present knowledge of man's spirit in the human state, and in the state that follows the separation from the mortal body by the change called death. This knowledge, this intercommunion, leads to such wonders, through such avenues of thought, that they cannot be spoken now, but the open gateway is Spiritualism.... The only open doorway between the other world and this world to-day is under the name of Spiritualism, and that name, therefore, is the name under which you express your joy at this hour."

Why should not the race of humanity be grateful for that which has come through this open portal to bless this day and age? Spiritualism has demonstrated that the power of communion with loved ones and a knowledge of continued, conscious identity after death, is not a something necessarily to be won as in the past by long and painful initiatory service, it is not a matter of mythric caves of Judaic, of Meccan or of Oriental lore, but a something which takes hold upon the people through innate fitness; "to the child, to the little fellow playing upon the street, to the young maiden and young man the voice of the spirit comes—it is not denied to the middle-aged, and the gray-haired sire and matron hold converse with the skies"; the gifts once held in fear by the initiated and experts are now in the possession of such as receive them from the spirit-intelligences, without other preparation than that which the invisibles may give in their daily injunctions.

Why should not all be grateful for this sublime gift; for the divine life-current of spiritual truth which pours through the daily life of the race, a sublime solvent, melting narrow creeds into kindly deeds, giving spiritual knowledge for agnostic doubt, and teaching that every child of earth is one of the children of God?

May the day never come when a hunger for popularity, an undue reverence for scholastic achievements, or a fear of the world's condemnation, shall lead the followers of the New Dispensation to a craven disavowal of MEDIUMSHIP, which is alike its glittering keystone and its immovable foundation!

☞ Rev. Dr. Swarts, an ex-Methodist minister who edits The Mental Magazine in Chicago, was recently summoned before the judge of the Police Court at Albany, as one whose case came under the provisions of the New York Doctors' Plot Law. He was subsequently "bowed out" by the courteous magistrate, who held that the law regulating surgery and physics did not apply to the system of mental healing as practiced by Dr. Swarts, "who uses mind only." We are informed that this is not, however, regarded as a test precedent of the status of mental healing by the New York medicos.

☞ We had a pleasant interview last Saturday with Mr. Henry Lacroix of Montreal, who informed us that he should leave New York for France on the French steamer Bourgogne the 21st inst. Darwin and Religion.

The recently published "Life and Letters" of Charles Darwin, who wrote the book on the "Origin of Species" which suddenly revolutionized biological science, and swept all previous theories out of the door, imparts to the reader an interesting story of his great theory as it took shape in his mind for its triumphant statement to the world, and reveals some of the methods by which men work in reaching conclusions which turn the current of accumulated knowledge in wholly new directions. Mr. Darwin says he opened the first book in which he noted down his observations, in July, 1837. His epoch-marking book was not published until 1859, an interval of twenty-two years. He says he worked on true Baconian principles, collecting facts without any preconceived theory, and doing it on a wholesale scale. He sent around printed inquiries, held personal conversations with skillful breeders and gardeners, and pursued a course of extensive and tireless reading. He expressed himself as surprised at his own industry when he reviewed the list of books of all kinds which he read and from which he had made abstracts.

It was not long before it became revealed to him that selection was the keystone of man's success in making useful races of animals and plants. The mystery to him for a long time was, how selection could be applied to organisms living in a state of nature. After reading "Malthus on Population," and being already prepared in his mind to appreciate the struggle for existence which everywhere goes on in consequence of long-continued observation of the habits of animals and plants, it at once struck him that under these circumstances favorable variations would tend to be preserved, and unfavorable ones to be destroyed. The result of this would be the formation of new species. Here, then, he had at last got a theory by which to work. But so eager was he to steer clear of all prejudicial tendencies of mind, he determined not to commit to paper even the briefest sketch of it. In June, 1842, he first wrote down a very brief abstract of it, making thirty-five pages. This was enlarged in the summer of 1844 to one of two hundred and thirty pages, which he had fairly copied out and preserved.

What afterward astonished him was that he had, up to that time, overlooked the tendency in organic beings, descended from the same stock, to diverge in character as they become modified. Of the fact of such divergence there is no question when it is considered that species of all kinds can be classed under genera, and genera under families. But from the beginning to the end he spared no effort to justify his theory in a larger application of fact. As long as he lived he was only engaged in its further elucidation. His subsequent writings were but further studies in biology or natural history, to enlarge what he had already announced as theory. Natural selection, the principle which underlies the "Origin of Species," had its germ statement in the amplified sketch which he wrote in 1844. In conformity to this theory, the survival of the fittest among countless variations, from one or more parent stocks, is the satisfactory explanation of organic development. It can take place in no other way.

A fact that is of special interest to Spiritualists the world over in connection with Darwin's first published statement of his theory of natural selection, is that he would have waited even longer than he did to give it to the world, but for Prof. Alfred Russel Wallace, then a young and ardent biologist, having likewise thought out this same principle of natural selection while pursuing the study of tropical life in the most prolific region of equatorial America. Wallace communicated his discovery to Darwin, not knowing that the latter had been pursuing a similar line of thought. Previous to Wallace's announcement, Darwin had fully communicated his theory to the late Prof. Asa Gray, of Cambridge, which occurred in the year 1857. Wallace's letter was written to Darwin in 1858. This single circumstance forced Darwin to publish the abstract of his prolonged and extensive studies in the "Origin of Species." Prof. Wallace did not hesitate to concede Mr. Darwin's prior claim to the merit of making the induction which gave him the leadership among those who thought the doctrine of evolution into a form in which it could be accepted by the intelligence of the current world of civilization. There has never been any rivalry between the two men. Prof. Wallace was always the steadfast friend of Mr. Darwin, and freely testified to the greatness of his inductions.

Darwin's life-work was not in combating traditional theology, about which he habitually said but little. He wrote to Dr. Abbot, the editor of the Index, published in Boston: "I feel in some degree unwilling to express myself publicly on religious subjects, as I do not feel that I have thought deeply enough to justify any such publicity." And he was quite as unwilling, likewise, to wound the sensibilities of others. While making his famous far voyage on the "Beagle," which furnished him the occasion for writing the most charmingly instructive of his books, he came to the conclusion that the Old Testament was no more to be trusted than the sacred books of the Hindus. And in his autobiography he expresses himself on the subject of religion in this manner: "The question continually rose before my mind and would not be banished: is it credible that if God were now to make a revelation to the Hindus, he would permit it to be connected with the belief in Vishnu, Siva, etc., as Christianity is connected with the Old Testament. This appeared to me utterly incredible.

"By further reflecting that the clearest evidence would be requisite to make any sane man believe in the miracles by which Christianity is supported, and that the more we know of the fixed laws of nature the more incredible do miracles become, that the men at that time were ignorant and credulous to a degree almost incomprehensible by us, that the gospels cannot be proved to have been written simultaneously with the events, that they differ in many important details, far too important, as it seemed to me, to be admitted as the usual inaccuracies of eye-witnesses—by such reflections as these, which I give, not as having the least novelty or value, but as they influenced me, I gradually came to disbelieve in Christianity as a divine revelation. The fact that many false religions have spread over large portions of the earth like wild-fire had some weight with me."

Yet he was very unwilling to give up his belief. While he invented Roman manuscripts which would confirm in the most striking manner all that was written in the gospels, he yet found it more and more difficult to invent evidence which would suffice to convince him. Thus disbelief slowly crept over him, and was at last complete. He did not think much about a personal God until a much later period in his life. The old argument from design in nature, invented by Paley, which once seemed to him so conclusive, is utterly vanquished by the newly discovered law of natural selection. We can no longer argue that the beautiful hinge of a bivalve shell must have been made by an intelligent being, like the hinge of a door by man. There seems, says Mr. Darwin, to be no more design in the variability of organic beings, and in the action of natural selection, than in the course which the wind blows.

While, in his judgment, happiness decidedly prevails, it would be very difficult to prove it. If all the individuals of any species were habitually to suffer to an extreme degree, they would neglect to propagate their kind. This we have no reason to believe ever occurred. Most or all sentient beings have been developed in such a manner, through natural selection, that pleasurable sensations serve as their habitual guides. This is to be seen in the pleasure from exertion, even from occasionally great exertion of the body or mind; in the pleasure of our daily meals; and especially in the pleasure derived from sociability, and from the love which rules the family. No one disputes that there is much suffering in the world. Some regard it as a means of moral improvement; but the number of men in the world is as nothing compared with that of all other sentient beings, and they often suffer greatly without any moral improvement. The argument from the existence of suffering against the existence of an intelligent first cause, seems to Mr. Darwin a strong one; and on the other hand, the presence of much suffering agrees well with the view that all organic beings have been developed through variation and natural selection.

At the present day, says Mr. Darwin, the most usual argument for the existence of an intelligent God is drawn from the deep inward conviction and feelings which most persons experience. He confesses that he was himself formerly led by feelings such as those just referred to—though he disclaims the possession at any time in his life of any very great religious sentiment—to the firm conviction of the existence of God and of the immortality of the soul. But now, he says, the grandest scenes in nature would not cause any such convictions and feelings to rise in his mind. The state of mind which grand scenes formerly excited in him, and which was intimately connected with a belief in God, did not essentially differ from that which is often called the sense of sublimity; and however difficult it may be to explain the genesis of this sense, it can hardly be advanced as an argument for the existence of God, any more than the powerful, though vague and similar feelings excited by music.

Nothing shows him how strong and almost instinctive is the belief in immortality so clearly as the consideration of the view now held by most physicists, namely, that the sun, with all the planets, will in time grow too cold for life, unless indeed some great body dashes into the sun, and thus gives it fresh life. "Believing as I do," he adds, "that man in the distant future will be a far more perfect creature than he now is, it is an intolerable thought that he and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation after such long-continued slow progress. To those who fully admit the immortality of the human soul, the destruction of our world will not appear so dreadful." The exercise of his reason assures him of the impossibility of conceiving this immense and wonderful universe, including man with his capacity of looking far backward and far into futurity, as the result of blind chance or necessity. He feels compelled to look to a first cause, having an intelligent mind in some degree analogous to that of man. Hence he thinks he deserves to be called a theist.

But since writing the "Origin of Species" he confesses that this conclusion gradually became weaker. And then arises the doubt, can the mind of man, which has, as he fully believes, been developed from a mind as low as that possessed by the lowest animals, be trusted when it draws such grand conclusions? He can give no answer that would throw the least light on such abstruse problems. The mystery of the beginning of all things is insoluble by us, and, for one, he is content to remain an agnostic.

And he did die without any public declaration of religious belief. He wrote to a German student in 1873, "Science has nothing to do with Christ, except in so far as the habit of scientific research makes a man cautious in admitting evidence. For myself, I do not believe that there has ever been any revelation. As for a future life, every man must judge for himself between conflicting probabilities." Thus it appears that his scientific studies and discoveries divorced him from all serious and prolonged consideration of religious topics, and especially of traditional theology, and continued to weaken his inherited religious convictions until they disappeared altogether. He brought, however, a great natural truth to light, whose work on the minds of the human race to impart a still greater impulse to their growth and expansion will be noted for a long succession of generations in the unknown future.

Mr. Matthew Arnold, the noted poet, scholar, critic and theologian, died suddenly April 16th in Liverpool from heart disease. He was born at Laleham, near Staines, in Middlesex, Eng., Dec. 24th, 1822.

The divorce between Church and State ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere, in any State or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation; for, if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a church-tax upon the whole community.—President Garfield.

The Case of Rev. C. P. Mills.

On Sunday evening last, Rev. C. P. Mills, pastor of the North Church in Newburyport, preached a sermon against Spiritualism, which was fully reported in the local press. By way of response Charles W. Hidden, who is well known by reputation to the readers of THE BANNER as a firm Spiritualist and medium, issued an open letter to the reverend gentleman the next morning, sharply arraigning his utterances, and challenging him to a public debate. The letter follows:

AN OPEN LETTER TO REV. C. P. MILLS.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., April 16th, 1888.

Rev. C. P. Mills, Pastor of the North Church:

My Dear Sir: I was present at the meeting on Sunday evening when you took for a subject: "Female Spiritualists; or, Do the Dead Communicate with the Living?" and took lengthy notes of the Bible reading and address, and I herewith openly and publicly declare that your comments upon the Scriptures were misleading and uncalled for; that your statement in relation to the usual methods of communicating with the spirits of the departed was without foundation in fact; that your wholesale denunciation of mediums was cruel and unjust; that your statement in relation to the fundamental principles and teachings of Spiritualism was unreliable, and not borne out by the facts; that your arraignment of the BANNER OF LIGHT was wholly unwarranted; that your statement that spiritualistic phenomena never yet stood a single test of scientific investigation is not only untrue, but is ridiculous in the extreme; that your statement that all spiritualistic phenomena can be easily duplicated by the average sleight-of hand performer is extremely ludicrous, and will be so regarded by thousands of the most intelligent people of this city and vicinity; in fact, my dear sir, I affirm and declare your discourse to have been misleading and unjust throughout, and I feel that I am abundantly able to prove it such if you will but give me an opportunity to meet you in public debate. If I am in the wrong, you owe it a duty as a "man of God" to try and convince me of my error; and if you are in the wrong, as I feel I can easily and satisfactorily prove, then you owe it a duty to yourself and to the people of this community to face the music like a man, and be brought out from the theological miasma, doubt and darkness with which you are enveloped into the more glorious, invigorating, truth-loving and liberalizing atmosphere of Modern Spiritualism. Yours truly, CHAS. W. HIDDEN.

1808—1888.

A MEMORABLE ANNIVERSARY.

An unusually interesting family gathering was held on Wednesday evening, April 11th, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. King, in Boston, to celebrate the eightieth anniversary of Mrs. Hannah Bacon, the venerable mother of one of our old contributors, Mr. George A. Bacon, of Washington, D. C.

"Mother Bacon" is the only living member of the family of Capt. Eleazer and Lurania (Gross) Higgins, of Wellfleet, Mass., and the sole surviving child of the eldest of the daughters of Capt. Thomas and Abigail (Young) Gross, popularly known as "the Royal Family of the Cape," which consisted of four sons and ten daughters.

All five of Mother Bacon's children were present, with innumerable grandchildren and great-grandchildren, relatives and connections, to the overflowing of the parlors.

Appropriate songs were sung, affectionate gifts were bestowed, an original poem was recited, interesting letters were read, and pertinent remarks were offered by a number of the older ones. Relatives were present from half a dozen States.

Among other interesting articles exhibited was the engagement ring of Mrs. Bacon's grandmother, who, in her fifteenth year, was married in 1765.

A generous collation closed an evening of great pleasure and interest to all concerned—the dear old lady in whose honor the gathering was assembled appearing at her best, and apparently good for another decade.

"Visions."

In a pamphlet of twenty-six pages bearing the above title, W. Stainton-Moses has reprinted from the columns of Light a series of teachings imparted to him in a manner which he considers to be seldom employed by spirit intelligences for the transmission of information, remarking that they represent vividly what at the time seemed to him to be a "very real series of experiences," which experiences illustrate the difficulty that may be and is felt by beings not of our sphere in communicating knowledge to us. The visions were received by him on three consecutive days of September, 1877. The accounts of them here given were written immediately following his return to normal consciousness, and are exceedingly entertaining and instructive.

☞ Mrs. J. F. Rogers is now at her cottage at Onset for the season. Her residence has been put in good order, and she is prepared to make arrangements with any wishing rooms at this fine resort.

THE Two Worlds gives a list of one hundred and four places in England, chiefly London and vicinity, where Spiritualist services are held each Sunday.

☞ The advertisement of the Chicago Magnetic Shield Co., in our columns, makes strong claims, and is worthy of careful investigation.

☞ Spirit Prof. S. B. Brittan has some kindly and earnest words on our sixth page, to which the reader's attention is called.

Los Angeles and San Diego, Cal.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On Easter Sunday, April 1st, the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated in Odd Fellows Hall, Los Angeles, Cal. The floral offerings were so magnificent that photographs of the handsome hall in its festive array were taken the day following, and are now on sale by Mr. Alfred Street, 32½ S. Spring street. The proceeds are to be devoted to the more efficient carrying out of spiritual work in Los Angeles by means of a permanent institution devoted entirely to the work.

The audiences on April 1st were limited only by the capacity of the hall; extra seats filled every possible inch of room not absolutely required for passage-way, and a crowd filled the anterooms and lobby. The music was exceptionally fine. Signora Paulina Vicenti was the soprano soloist and Mrs. Stratton the organist. A full choir assisted at both services.

W. J. Colville delivered inspirational invocations, orations and poems which held the large audiences literally spellbound throughout the protracted exercises.

It is admitted on all hands that Spiritualism has taken of late so deep a hold upon the minds of many of the best people in Los Angeles, that it only needs wise and efficient watering of the seed sown to insure a most abundant harvest of good results in that truly beautiful and prosperous city of Southern California.

Mr. Colville declares he never spent five weeks anywhere more enjoyably than in Los Angeles. His work was not wholly confined to the city proper, as he did some good service both in Passadena and at Long Beach; he is now in San Diego, but is eagerly expected to return to Los Angeles May 7th, on which day he will resume his lectures in Bartlett's Hall, First street, at 8 P. M. Mrs. Cornelia Harper, 640 South Mill street, is devoting the spacious parlors of her charming home to spiritual and literary work. Mr. Colville will open a class there on Tuesday, May 8th, at 2:30 P. M.

Mr. Colville's work in San Diego commenced in Louis Opera House, Sunday, April 8th, under the able management of that whole-souled philanthropist, Mrs. E. W. Bushyhead. Very large audiences were present and intense interest was manifested; excellent music and lovely flowers lent their charms to a very handsome interior, and furnished appropriate accompaniments to the eloquent oratory and fine poetry of the inspired speaker.

On the following days, April 9th and 10th, classes were opened in Southwest Institute, a building devoted entirely to the purposes of liberal education. In that pleasant edifice W. J. Colville is imparting much instruction in spiritual topics to earnest and inquiring minds. He speaks in Louis Opera House at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M., every Sunday till May 6th inclusive.

Los Angeles, Cal. VINDEX.

Mr. Baxter in Providence.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sunday last, the 15th inst., the Spiritualists of Providence were ministered to by J. Frank Baxter, by no means a stranger here, although over a year had passed since he was last in the city. The "regular reliables" were out in the morning and many strangers, but in the evening the house contained between three and four hundred people. The usual choir gave way to afford an opportunity for Mr. Baxter to be heard in song, and he rendered some of his heartfelt and appropriate selections to the gratification of all.

The evening lecture on "The Persistence, Permanence and Purpose of Spiritualism," was a rousing and worthy effort, and thoroughly enthused the large audience present.

The lecture of the morning was none the less worthy, and must have left lessons among Spiritualists themselves. The theme was: "What Spiritualism Demands as Imperative from Spiritualists?"

Mr. Baxter's séance following the evening lecture was an interesting one. Several marked manifestations were given, and recognitions of identity freely expressed. During these séances Mr. Baxter is a study himself, and any student or honest inquirer can but be lost in study, while any "psychic researcher" would after investigation find himself a wiser man. Mr. Baxter's worth and work are immeasurably great, and it is no wonder his time is so fully secured, even a year or more in advance.

Mr. Baxter will continue in Blackstone Hall, Providence, the remaining Sundays of the month.

"ROGER WILLIAMS."

Greenwich, Mass.—The unfavorable weather and state of the roads has somewhat lessened the number of our out-of-town hearers during the past season, yet we have had good audiences and undiminished interest.

Last Sunday Mr. H. W. Smith presented to the Lyceum, as a gift from Photius Fiske, Esq., of Boston, a large and elegant stereopticon with accompanying views, souvenirs of foreign travel. The gift will open to us a wide field of valuable instruction. Each Sunday some scene will be presented to the Lyceum, after which a description of the place will be given by Mr. Smith or some one. Sunday last the subject was "The Temple of Vesta," an account of which was read by Mr. Smith, who also gave some personal reminiscences.

Next Sunday the subject will be "The Coliseum." We hope thus to induce reading and research in relation to places of historic interest.

Our children are as ready in recitation as they have been in the past, and do themselves and parents much credit in their selections.

A happier, more harmonious and appreciative society than that of the Independent Liberal Church of Greenwich is seldom found; and though bigots frown, and Orthodoxy says, "Let us drive this man from our midst who thus endangers our craft," we still live and thrive. JULIETTE YEAW.

Lynn, Mass.—On April 15th the attendance at the session of the Children's Progressive Lyceum, at Cadet Hall, was good, and we had an interesting meeting. Recitations were given by Masters Earl Watson and Stanley Balcom, Misses Celia Goodwin, Jessie Hutchins and Ethel Herrick; readings by Misses Mabel Cheever, Sarah Collyer and Nina Bradbury, Mrs. Atherton, Mr. Emerson and Mrs. Williams; Mr. Ashton, a member of our orchestra, rendered a fine cornet solo.——In the evening a special horse-car was chartered, and the Lyceum visited the Massachusetts Temperance Home near Swampscott, and gave a fine programme of readings and music. PER SEC'Y.

Norwich, Conn.—Mr. Edgar W. Emerson has occupied our platform two Sundays, April 8th and 15th, very acceptably, giving many convincing proofs of the communion of spirits with mortals; fine audiences greeted him on both Sundays.

Thursday evening, April 12th, he held a public séance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Hinckley, the parlors being crowded with people eager for messages from their loved ones. We have also been specially favored with an evening address by Mrs. Colby-Luther, who has many true friends here. The remaining Sundays of April Mrs. Helen Stuart Richings will be our speaker. MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Fitchburg, Mass.—On the evening of April 8th Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant gave nineteen psychometric readings, all of which were satisfactory save one. On Friday, the 13th, she gave a benefit to our Society, for which we wish to express our thanks, and wish her prosperity in her good work.——Sunday, April 15th, Dr. J. L. Paxson occupied our platform, giving us many truths; after his remarks he gave readings of individuals, which was a new feature to many. His whole soul seems to be in the work.——April 29th Prof. W. F. Peck will lecture for our Society.

E. S. LORING,
Sec'y First Spiritualist Society.

Lowell, Mass.—Our Society had the pleasure of again listening to the well-known speaker, Mrs. N. J. Willis, on the 15th inst. Her inspiration was able and eloquent, and the subjects that were given from the audience for the lecture were interesting. Many strangers were present, both afternoon and evening. The desire seems to be increasing here for a knowledge of spirit power.——Next Sunday we have with us Mrs. C. Kimball, who has in the past created quite an interest by giving wonderful tests upon our platform. B. S. FREEMAN.

Chicago, Ill.—The C. S. S. Lyceum was called to order by the Conductor at the usual hour with sixty-seven members on Sunday, April 8th. After the usual exercises, recitations were given by the following: Alfred Worger, Grace Garnier, Lucinda Walker, Edith Worger; songs by Muriel Smith and Florence Page, Joseph Smith, Willie Pinkham and Eidora Parsons. The Lyceum Journal was edited by M. B. Sinn. The session closed with the Banner March and a song.—— The entertainment given by the Lyceum on the 31st of March was a success in every way.

C. A. PARSONS, Sec'y.

Haverhill and Bradford.—The Spiritualists were addressed at Brittan Hall last Sunday by Mrs. S. R. Stevens of Boston, in a very entertaining and profitable manner. At each service an opportunity was given for members of the audience to ask questions to be answered by the controlling spirit, which was a very interesting part of the services. Mrs. Stevens will speak here again before the close of the present lecture course.——Next Sunday the platform will be occupied by Edgar W. Emerson of Manchester, N. H., which will be the last time he will speak in this city during the present lecture course. E. P. H.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. Hattie C. Mason gave, April 15th, an interesting lecture, followed by tests and poems, which were well received.——Next Sunday, which will mark the close of our meetings for the season, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther will lecture afternoon and evening, and a large audience is expected to be present to hear her. F. H. F.

Glens Falls, N. Y.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon in Sons of Temperance Hall, at 2:30, and is doing a good work for the cause. MRS. M. G. ROSA, Pres.

P. J. SAVAGE, Sec'y.

The great advantage of selecting these two lines of goods together cannot be overestimated. It is not only a great convenience, but insures perfect harmony in colorings.

The Sunday services at G. A. R. Hall were introduced with music by the orchestra; congregational singing, an invocation by Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings, an improvised poem by Mrs. Brigham, and an address by Miss Jennie B. To the Spiritualists of the World!

YOU have been calling for more magnetic life for nearly forty years. The invention of Magnetic Shields places within your reach the most powerful Magnetic Batteries ever constructed, and exactly adapted to all the needs and wants of your physical and spiritual well-being. To magnetize and polarize the body is to intensify and increase all the intellectual and spiritual faculties. All mediums and sensitives should wear Magnetic Shields. The vitalizing and energizing power radiated from these Magnetic Reservoirs of Life will redouble the life potencies and quadruple the spiritualizing entities for every one who wears them. Dr. Thacher's Magnetic Shields excel and transcend all known healing powers and forces except that coming direct from the world of spirit. If the Spiritualists of the world will read our logic and consult with the Highest Intelligence, they will get assurance which will convince every intelligent investigator. All the knowledge which led up to the perfecting of these Shields came from the world of invisible spirit. We are warranted in saying Magnetism is all spirit and an immaterial substance. Spirit is the only substance in the true sense of the word. Spiritualists are too well informed to be misled on this subject. Why not send for our book and read what we have to say of genuine spiritual substance? If you want further proof that we state truth, send $1,00 for a pair of Insoles, or $2,00 for THREE PAIRS.

Please be sensible and investigate. Magnetism will infuse new life into broken-down physical bodies. Try it, and be convinced. Our book sent free.

A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE," AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS

The World's Child,

WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon Mrs. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of Inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Feb. 21st, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Omnipotent and Eternal Spirit, thou who art the soul of all truth and righteousness, we bow down before thee at this hour in acknowledgment of thy power, in recognition of thy wondrous skill. Oh! our Father God, we draw near into close communion with thee; we uplift our souls in thankful praise for the bounties which thou hast bestowed upon human life. We would, through the grand majesty of thy law, come into holy communion with thy angel hosts and ask their protection and guidance, for we realize that they receive from thee such power and strength as are needed in their blessed mission to mankind. May we develop in beauty and in strength as the years roll on, proving to thee and thy angel ones that we are profiting by experience, gaining wisdom through discipline, and constantly unfolding in effort and in achievement from age to age. We ask thy blessing to rest upon all mankind, especially the lowly and sad who have so much need of thy love and tenderness; may they feel the balm of healing poured into their wounds from the angel ones, and looking up to thee, smile and rejoice because of the great benediction of peace and tenderness which thou dost bestow. Amen.

S. B. Brittan.

I give you greeting, Mr. Chairman. I have been invited to speak before you this day, and I will say in advance of the questions which you have to present, that I feel not only the thought of one mind on earth coming out toward me, in personal remembrance and in query, but that I have, within the last few months, sensed and perceived the thought of a number of minds reaching out to me in my spiritual life. To each one of those I would give practical response, if possible; but though that may not be, yet I would assure all friends and questioners that I am seeking to understand more of the laws of life and our relationships to the universe; that I am, in the spirit-world, stepping as deeply as possible into the soil of research, in order to arrive at the very root of power of these great questions and reformatory measures which appeal to human life in this day; and not only thus, but in scientific departments my mind is drawn, hoping to attain knowledge and understanding of those great fundamental truths and principles which will extend to my mind, as to others, the information and the truth for which I seek.

This beautiful day, when I approach you, Mr. Chairman, I feel as if permeated with new power; my very soul expands to take in the glory of the sunlight of the universe; and I more truly than ever before realize the loving power and grand supernal wisdom of the Father of all. The fool in his heart hath said, "There is no God," but the wise man seeks to scan the universe and read its lessons correctly, and comprehend the wondrous law and the manifestations of design and skill displayed on every hand, and humbly bow within himself and say, in modest terms, "I know not what there may be in this vast universe superior to myself and to my understanding, but whatever force or majestic power there be that sets the worlds in motion and keeps this stupendous universe in order, is, to my mind, a supreme intelligence, a most wonderful soul, or spirit of life." And so, my friend, he bows himself in humility, ready to learn and to aspire, but he sayeth not "there is no God," lest he should be cast down for his presumption.

Mr. Chairman, I shall do the best I can in the consideration of your queries, trusting that the friends who present them to you will bear with me until I shall gain greater power of mediumistic control, as well as dive into grander depths of spiritual knowledge, at which time I hope I may be able to afford more of instruction and information than I can possibly do to-day.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By V. C. T., Des Moines, Iowa.] Will Spirit Prof. S. B. Brittan please respond to these questions? Is the spirit-world, as seen by spirits, simply subjective—thought taking form—or is it both subjective and objective? If subjective, in part or in whole, can two spirits see the same things, as two mortals see alike a given object; or does what one spirit sees subjectively become cognizable to another spirit only by seeing the thought-object, as projected by the spirit evolving that thought?

ANS.—The spirit-world, as far as I have come in contact with it, and from the experiences of others which have been imparted to me by those souls, is not only the subjective manifestation to each soul of its own interior thought, but also largely objective, containing within its borders objective forms which may be seen, handled and analyzed by many spirits, at one and the same time. Let us not forget that this entire objective life of yours is but the externalization of thought. You may question my statement, and may say: "How do we know that these trees and rocks in the physical universe, and these starry heavens and the ocean waves beneath, are but the externalization of interior thought? We do not see the mind that has projected them; we know nothing of the intelligence, the wisdom that gave them birth." Very true; but we may reason from well-known principles. As we gaze around in human life what do we behold? Men erecting their temples and other structures for practical use; artists projecting their thought, the idealization of their minds, into outward life, creating the beautiful landscape painting or the sculptured form. What is this but the externalization of thought from the mind of the architect or the carpenter, when we gaze upon the temple they have erected, or the materialization of thought and ideality from the mind of the artist; when we perceive the beautiful landscape picture, or the marble statue form? If this be so, if man has the power to project his thought into outward life, and through the workings of that thought in connection with the mechanical skill of his hand he may erect a temple or prepare an artistic production, then may not supreme intelligence, superior skill and wisdom, project from within its central heart that external form and manifestation of power which becomes objective to your sight, which presents itself in a lofty mountain or a grand forest tree? in the ocean waves that beat from shore to shore, and even in the starry worlds themselves that march in ceaseless regularity through space?

Reasoning, then, from what we perceive in this mundane world of yours, and realizing that the spirit is entirely the man, and that from within these forms of mechanical life are presented to your view, whether they be the work of the carpenter, the architect, the cabinet-maker, or the artist mind, may we not suppose that the same intelligence that designs and constructs here on earth, may, under other circumstances, in other worlds, still have the power to devise or design, and even construct, so as to externalize the inner thought, the conscious idea, into outward life, and to so clothe upon it with the elements at command in the universe as to make it presentable to the sight of many others? This is so in the spiritual world, for I have seen it time and time again.

In our world, which is somewhat the counterpart of this planet, but superior in construction and in development, we have our forms of vegetable and floral growth; we have objects of nature displayed on every hand in most delicate loveliness. And why should not this be so, since there is ever evolved a spiritual power and grandeur that manifests itself in these glorious creations to delight the eye and instruct the sense of man?

The spirit-world affords to man the power and the facility for developing that which is within his own nature. One of the great demands of the spiritual nature is that it shall outwork the powers it feels pent up within; throw off its surplus energy, and display its wondrous vital force in some useful work; and so the spirit finds opportunity and is given power to express itself in creating and developing something practical in objective life for its own use, or for the pleasure of its fellows; therefore we have beautiful buildings, works of art, grand objects to appeal to the eye and to the ear, which impart pleasure to every department of life.

We will affirm—myself and other spirits—that the spiritual world is largely subjective, inasmuch as a thoughtful mind in full operation may project from within itself such forms and fancies as appear externalized to itself alone, or only to those minds that come into direct sympathy with the mind that thus creates, and who can mingle with the elements of his magnetic atmosphere. Such subjective forms, however, are not seen by the world at large; they afford means of instruction to the soul who can perceive them, who can indeed project them into his atmosphere; they afford, perhaps, means of enlightenment, of gaining knowledge, to such sympathetic spirits as can mingle with his atmosphere and see with his vision. It is not possible for me to delineate to you on earth the modes and methods of such projection, nor their purposes, because they are not analogous to anything in the physical universe.

The mind of man is expansive, and when properly directed it becomes receptive to truth and to information in whatever field these may be found; and so the intelligently working mind and heart that creates for itself and sends out its thoughts and ideas, may people its own atmosphere with living forms, so, to speak, unseen by the world, but plainly visible to its own senses; thus he learns and perhaps gains experience how and where he may externalize these forces and thoughts into objective forms and bring them within the gaze and before the minds of those whom he desires to uplift and to instruct.

Q.—[By Inquirer.] What benefit or advantage is earth-life to a spirit?

A.—Well, we might ask, of what benefit are education, experience, and a large and varied discipline, to a human being on earth? The child is placed here, and surrounded by varying conditions. Suppose that child was deprived of the first elements of an education, and kept in total ignorance of the Alpha of life, do you imagine that it would ever come to understand the Omega? I should say decidedly not. The child that does not learn the alphabet, and begin to study the first principles of instruction, cannot read and spell and write when it arrives at the age of youth, is essentially an ignorant child, and certainly not qualified to step into the higher grades and departments of school life, such as our public grammar schools afford; then most certainly the child who cannot spell his own name, nor write it on a slip of paper, will not be qualified to step into still higher departments of learning, such as your academies or colleges may provide, but will be obliged to pass on from day to day, missing many of the beauties of life, knowing nothing of the realms of knowledge, and the enjoyment of the study of literature, or the investigations in the world of intellect, which open before the inquiring mind.

And so we may compare the spirit of man. To my understanding, man is placed on this planet in order to obtain accession to his information, and to experience. He may be like the child who enters the primary grade of school, totally uninformed and ignorant of even the Alpha of instruction. He may have been placed here to gain his first experiences in active practical life, to become stimulated in mind and in his spiritual nature, to reach out for something higher and grander than he has possessed. Rubbing against the experiences of this earthly life, struggling hard with its adverse conditions, wresting what information he attains from the world by hard labor, his mind becomes strengthened, his inner faculties are deepened and intensified, and he is thus enabled to take a keener hold of the things and principles that have appeared before his mind. Or it may be that the spirit has a smattering of knowledge, is not altogether uninformed, but desires to acquire more, and must do so in connection with this life of earth before he is prepared to enter the higher departments of learning and of experience in the worlds beyond.

The earthly life may be, to his spirit, what the grammar school is to the youth, an intermediary between the primary departments of learning and the higher collegiate school life; he must receive of its knowledge and its experience, before he can be qualified to pass onward, to grasp keener studies and pursue grander investigations, even though he may have received those first primary lessons which belong to the earliest stage of existence. To my mind, mortal life is of practical importance to the spirit; it assists the soul to expand itself, to send forth greater energy and power that may vitalize the spiritual man, and cause him not only to receive and study, but also to create, to mark out a pathway for himself that shall be so useful to him and to his fellows as to cause them to rejoice that he has lived and been known.

Q.—[By J. G. Fosgate, Hudson, Mass.] Is all life of divine origin? If so, where originated the first cause of wrong?

A.—I cannot understand any life, or any projection of life, that has not been of divine origin, for I do not recognize in the universe any power or creator that is the opposite of divinity. True, we see around us on every hand evidences of great wrong manifested through life; we behold individuals living a vicious life, starting out with evil in their hearts and continuing in the ways of iniquity, and we may be pardoned if sometimes we grow puzzled over this strange state of affairs and question whether such spirits as are constantly doing wrong on earth or in other worlds, have been started out by a divine creator or progenitor; and yet it seems to me this must be so, that the end will prove that in all things right and honor and goodness have maintained throughout the world their undivided sway.

We must remember that humanity is young, the world itself is not old, the planet has developed to its present condition through great struggle and trial, it has grown upward and outward, its lowest stages of life afford a very gross, crude, tangled appearance; forms of life existed upon this planet corresponding with the wild growth of the world itself, and the earliest stages of human life present a most unlovely appearance; yet beauty, uniformity, order and law have developed from seeming chaos and strife.

What is true of the planet, and true of animal life, is also true of humanity. There is constantly developing from even these lower forms of human existence those unlovely, unsightly conditions of human character, a higher type, a grander manifestation of human life. It may not seem so to you who gaze upon humanity struggling, striving, warring with each other; but none the less is it true of the race, and I hold that the manifestations of viciousness, of lawlessness, that you behold among your kind, in these years, and in the years past, are only evidences of the great struggle and turmoil through which the race has passed, and is still passing, in order to reach a higher ground, a grander development.

I also hold that in the ages to come every human spirit will throw off that which is vile and unlovely; it must work out of that condition for itself; it will eventually do so, and develop from within those germs of beauty and of goodness which evidence the existence of the divine spark of life, and which will by-and-bye blossom out in beauty of expression, in holiness and good works, revealing their relationship to the divine author of all life and love.

Q.—[By Inquirer.] If spirits have the power to suspend human bodies in the air, why can they not hold and protect the materializing mediums from those who attempt to seize them?

A.—This question of the materialization of spirit-forms is one that cannot be settled to-day, nor in a year; it is one that the mediums who are used for this department of spiritual labor do not understand themselves, nor in many cases do the guides or the spirit attendants who gather around these mediums comprehend the laws and forces at work to such an extent as they should desire; but we are all gaining truth and knowledge through experience, and undoubtedly those spirits attendant upon their mediums will by-and-bye gain such information as to understand the powers within their own grasp, and be able to govern according to their needs and their desires.

It is true that under certain conditions spirits strong in vital force, and also in a knowledge of certain of the laws which govern the physical universe, have the power of holding in suspension certain objects under their control, and such spirits, if attracted to a materializing medium, and gaining full possession of his powers and his forces, might undoubtedly protect their medium from the assaults of those who would be investigators, or those skeptical parties who enter their presence. But all spirits have not this power, and indeed very few of them have ever exercised such power in connection with material things. That a few have studied these physical laws, and gained a certain knowledge concerning them, I will concede, and that these few scientific minds have on certain occasions, and under especial conditions, succeeded in demonstrating their power over material objects in the way mentioned by the questioner, I will admit, but that this thing is universal, or of frequent occurrence, I must deny, for I am satisfied that it is not.

If the spirit guides of the materializing mediums will come into council with a few direct personal friends of the mediums, those on earth who desire only the manifestation of truth, and are willing to give time to the investigation of these laws—if they will retire from the world for a time, or from the public view and criticism, and will devote a certain portion of time and attention to the development of their powers and to the elucidation of these laws—then undoubtedly a system for the protection of their mediums may be devised by spirits and mortals which will be of great benefit in the public labor of their mediumistic instruments; but until this is done, in a wise, searching, honorable spirit, and until mediums and their earthly friends, together with their spiritual attendants, will meet together for the discussion of these questions, the examination of these laws, and the development of their own physical and mental powers in connection with spiritual labor, we may not hope to find a better condition of things in the department of mediumistic life than we do to-day.

Q.—[By H. M. C.] The Boston Herald asked the question, "What are the strongest proofs and arguments in support of the belief in a life hereafter?" and twenty-three replies were made by clergymen of different denominations; but they do not satisfy many. Please give a spirit's view on the subject.

A.—The world of humanity is so intensely practical at this date that it cries out for undoubted evidence concerning the immortality of man and a future state, testimony that may be based not only upon subjective principles but also upon physical grounds, such as will not only appeal to the innate sense of the spiritual man, but also to the external senses of the material man. Here and there we find a soul so sensitive as to be able to grasp, to understand, and to incorporate into its life those spiritual evidences, so called, of a future life, that come to that spirit through the finely breathed utterances of the universe around. Such a spirit gazes from side to side, and he holds manifestations of life and activity on every hand, and he feels within himself powers and possibilities springing up that he knows can never be fully expressed during his sojourn in the mortal body. To him the very existence of these powers, aspirations and possibilities, reveals the necessity of a future life for their expansion and their manifestation. To his mind, life must be continuous, intelligence must remain and exist after the decease of the mortal form, affection and memory must maintain; and if so, there must be provided means and ways for their development and further expansion. But to the great mass of mankind this is no evidence of a future life; they want something that will appeal practically to the external senses as well as to the interior hopes, aspirations and desires of their minds, and so they demand testimony from those who have experienced another life, and who are strong witnesses in its favor.

Therefore, we say that Spiritualism alone can afford this practical demonstration, and present to the thinking mind—the practical, materialistic mind, if you will—that great weight of testimony or of corroborative evidence, brought not by one or two returning intelligent minds from beyond the grave, but by a host of witnesses that must shake the very foundations of skepticism, and uproot those errors and misconceptions concerning life and its destiny which have taken growth in the human heart, and bring a tremendous battery of truth to bear upon humanity, individually and collectively, that it may gaze, feel, breathe it in, and grow stronger beneath its power. This, however, must be sought for and investigated by every individual for himself.

Neither your heart nor mine, Mr. Chairman, will bear the weight of testimony; it must be experienced, breathed in and entertained by every human heart before such heart can be fully satisfied concerning the continuity of life and the realities of a future existence. But I am glad to say the nineteenth century has opened the doorways of immortal life to man, and it is his province and privilege to so gaze into the other life and come into such communication with its denizens, if he only seeks honestly and earnestly, knowing neither failure nor disheartenment. He may not at first receive that for which he seeks, yet by-and-bye he will know and understand that life is eternal, and that man only begins his destiny upon the planet earth.

S. B. Brittan.

I have a few words to say, Mr. Chairman, before I take my departure. Thanking you for your kindly invitation, and also for the courtesy with which I have been received, I also desire to send out my thanks, through mortal expression, to the spiritual band that gathers here in earnest work for mankind, not only for the invitation which has opened the door for me to-day, but for the kindly reception ever given to me in returning to your platform by those spiritual hosts.

With so many personal friends as I have on earth, it may seem invidious for me to select any individual one for the expression of my regard and my interest in his welfare, and yet it is impossible, Mr. Chairman, for me to name each one that presents itself to my mind to-day, as I go over in thought the list of friends I have on earth—of dear, congenial spirits, whose aspirations sometimes reach me in spirit-life, and whose kindly memories are like dew-drops to refresh my soul, whose gentle sympathies burst out into my life like the bloom of flowers. I would have all my friends know that I forget none, that I send them my hearty greeting, my loving expression of good fellowship and cheer, and that some time in the great future I anticipate meeting with them all, standing face to face with each one, and with hearty, genial hand-clasp, finding reunion and strength of spirit through the meeting with those so dear.

I would, however, Mr. Chairman, speak in kindly terms of my friend A. E. Newton, and send him my especial regards at this time. He knows more truly than tongue can tell that I am sometimes by his side, bringing what I can of spiritual influence to inspire his life and give new encouragement to his heart. He understands that I am with him in sympathy of spirit in every noble thought that animates, and in every good word expressed by pen or tongue, which he sends forth in instruction or blessing to his kind. To him and his dear companion I send my greetings of love, and my assurances that as I have stood by them in the past so shall I continue to in the future, so far as I possibly can, for I believe that greater influence may go forth in beneficial ways to those who are in need.

I would like also to say a few words to a particular friend of mine, whom I see before me to-day. As that friend has been told, I am one who is privileged at times to stand by his side and mark the movements of his spirit as they reach out aspirationally to the higher influences and grander harmonies of the spheres. I am interested in the outworking of his thoughts and his labor, for I believe it is of the utmost benefit to his kind in such ways as it may flow forth unto all humanity; and I say to my friend to day, as I have said in the past, Be of good cheer; there is no time like the present for feeling the inspirations and the harmonies of life; but as you pass on, from day to day, not satisfied with your productions and with that which reaches you, remember that life is progressive, that the years are unfolding before you more of opportunity and of power for the expression of that which lies within.

Be of good cheer, my friend, and reach out to the future, for it holds in store for you that which may be received and sent forth again in grander power and with greater strength. Even now I realize that the echoes from an angel's lyre may fall more sweetly and beautifully into your life, and as they echo and reëcho into external spheres, and make their harmonies felt and understood in human life, they will not only roll forth, but will gain response from other souls that have been cast down and depressed, and so may the melody roll on and on, until it is caught up again by the angel world, and made to sound forth in sweetest praise.

I would have you adopt the motto that was given you not long since by the little woman that stands by your side in spirit form, still strong, and beautiful, and aspirational, guiding you onward, step by step, toward the better land:

Fear not, but trust in God, oh! child of earth,
Night's darkest shades precede the dawning light.
Thy morning hour, though late, shall have its birth,
And flood thy pathway with its radiance bright.
Fear not, but trust in God; his ways are grand,
He holds thee in the hollow of his hand.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held March 9th, 1888.

Jonathan P. Barker.

My home, when in the mortal, was in Vineland, N. J. My name is Jonathan P. Barker. I have felt a great many times, as I have entered the earth-life, how hard it is! I walk among the loved ones, and still the doors are closed so tightly we can hardly look in upon them. I have often said: "Harriet, if others can come and report where there's a paper printed, why not we?" She replied: "Did you not know Clara had been here?" I knew there was something, but I did not understand that she had spoken or even sent a message. My relatives are scattered. I have some in Vineland, some in New York, some in Philadelphia, some in Springfield, Vt.; so you will readily understand I do not forget where the dear ones yet reside.

I felt, while dwelling in the mortal, I could make my voice heard among the people; but since passing over I have failed every time in making myself known. Mother and William are with me. Clara is not here to day. I have felt so pleased when I have come among them, but disappointment followed when I could not make them hear what I would say. My business was at the pier.

Ianthus Turner.

You may place me at Lincoln, Me. Ianthus Turner. I have a mother and also other relatives scattered in different surroundings. I would like to speak a little direct to sister Hannah: Now, Hannah, you have often said that if father and Ianthus and Joseph live and can come and speak to Ella, why do they not speak to me? I will explain a little: You come to us with the fence up and don't open the door as you should do. For instance: suppose we were in the mortal—which I am very glad we are not—and we should come into the room with you and sit down and commence to talk, and you should simply say yes or no, and nothing more; do you think, for a moment, we could get into much conversation with you? Let me give you a little kind advice, dear sister, for I love you as dearly as Ella, but a little advice will help you here.

Father is here, and says that sometime he will send a message also. Little Viola is by my side, anxious to have her presence made known. Joseph is here, also Minnie and Allie. We can't all speak at once; but as father advised me to take control I speak. Many times I have tried before, but have failed every time.

I have visited Mellen and Hittie, and each one of the dear ones—we do n't forget one. Jose, the little one who has passed out, has grown to manhood. I had not attained to the nineteenth year on earth. Mother will remember that many times I said I never should get to be nineteen. I could not tell why, but it was impressed upon my spirit that I should not stay long in the mortal, and so it proved.

Mother, I know you often say in your soul that you will be glad when you come to meet us all. Father says that he thought he understood a great deal of spirit return, but on entering the spirit-life he was like a child just beginning to learn his A B Cs; and yet what he did learn here was a great deal of help to him. Often he speaks of John, (Ella will understand,) whom I did not know in the flesh, but who I am glad to claim as a good brother—I won't put on the law, it is all the same.

Now, Hannah, one word more. I want you to try and not say to Ella that you do n't believe father comes, Ianthus, or Jose, or any of them. Try again. If we lost our courage in coming to earth, I fear very few of us would come into communication with you mortals. Here I am happy, dear mother. We are waiting to take your hand just across the river—only a step, only a thin veil comes between you and us. Uncle Henry understands a good deal of spirit return, but will say, as father has said, he knew comparatively very little.

Addison Gage.

If the young can come, so can the aged, as they are termed in the mortal; but, thank God, the spirit never grows old. You may place me just out here in Arlington, Mass. Addison Gage. I think some of the old townspeople will remember me; also some in Boston I hope have not forgotten Addison Gage.

Annie is with me to-day, and Darius also. I feel many times, as I look around among those I was so familiar with in the flesh, that they must know me, forgetting at the moment there is a veil over their eyes—not over ours, by any means. I have tried many times before to control one and another organism that they have had here, and also I have tried this instrument, but I think either the channel was not open quite wide enough or I was too slow. Now I would like them, each and every one, to know that this life is but a shadow, ours is the real; you just commence to live when you throw off the old mortal.

How many times have I said to Darius: "How beautiful it is to know we shall all come together again." The answer came back: "We often are disappointed as we come to earth, when we think we are going to come directly to some one, and make them hear our voice, and we fail." Mortals, remember, as has been asked many times, to open the door for us, and we will gladly come in and visit you. Here, although I have never been able to control an instrument, I have been in your midst a great many times, and I always find a seat, which many of you in the mortal do not. I do n't come in the forenoon, either. I am glad there is a channel opened for all. I thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift that in his wisdom he so ordered it that we should never die, but visit the dear ones yet left on earth.

Imogene, to Ike and Ada.

Will you please to say that Imogene is here? I will give a little message to Ike, as I always called him, and to Ada. My home was in New York, and they will readily understand that I am no relative, and may I say I never knew a relative? I am a guardian spirit, or have tried to be, of Ike and Ada.

I know, Ada, when Ike talks to you many times, beside one instrument and another, as he has been up where we materialize, as I have been able to do many times when he has left me, or thought he did, he has said, "Imogene, I feel I can be a better man. I will live a better life because of the influence you have been able to throw around me."

Ada, darling, let me say sister—since by Adam we are all brothers and sisters—for many years I have been a dweller in spirit-life. Little did I know of the earth-life, but I felt, having been given the power from the angel world, that I might stand by these loving ones of earth; and to-day they feel an interest in Imogene, as they journey along through the dark clouds which come over them, and sometimes they have been very dark, but in a little while have lightened, and they have felt lighter in their spirits, for knowing I have been by their side. Sister Mary is here, and Gussie. Ada, you knew very little of her passing out of this life so young, but still you know by what has been said to you that she still lives, and will be one of the guides with you from day to day.

Ike, your father is here to-day, and says that as soon as he can get the power he will send a message to you, and not only to you, but that the others may know he can come into communication with them. He speaks also of Alice, and says: "I know you have been thrown into surroundings where you have been able to learn more than the others; but in time will send a message to you all, and mother also." "But a few more rising and setting suns," are the words he uses, "and we will all be together."

Ike and Ada, we are awaiting your coming, and through life's journey will I be around you, and with the help of the blessed angels will I work for you. I will try, in every way, to hold you from earthly wrongs. I will guide and guard you, as I feel I have been instrumental in doing. Imogene, to Ike and Ada.

Hector Coffin.

I must say that was a beautiful spirit, for I have met her in spirit before.

My home was in Newburyport, Mass., and I am Hector Coffin. I have a great deal of anxiety, as I come to earth to-day. I feel troubled and sad, when I see how much suffering the dear ones are thrown into by mismanagement here. I have been cognizant of what has been transpiring within the last few months especially.

Oscar is with me and the darling daughter; also mother is here to-day. I wish this letter to reach Mary Jane Dresser, in Chelsea, Mass. I do not feel satisfied with the way things have been going on, for I know there has been a great deal of suffering that need n't have been. I hardly know whether to say it or not, but I guess I will. It used to be said it was as bad to think it as it was to say it. They did n't understand their business. It would be my wish that some other one should take hold of the matter. Readily will they understand my meaning. I have come to earth many times, yet have been unable to speak in your meeting, although a silent listener as others have spoken. I know very little of spirit-return, but as others have acknowledged, I always did feel that spirits were around us, not understanding they could control another to give out their thoughts

Larnard Jackson, Jr.

I am Larnard Jackson, jr., of Great Falls, N. H. If this letter gets to my father and mother I hardly know what they will say. They need n't think they 're going down to the grave to sleep, I do n't know how many thousand years. I take it some of them will have a good nap. It seems very foolish to me, if it is my father and mother, that they can—with the reason they have, because they have got good reason—think they are going to sleep till Gabriel blows his horn. And he won't be in any hurry about it.

I told Ira that just as sure as I get a chance I'll write a letter, and I'll do it, for I guess I 've got started pretty strong. But grandmother says: "Do n't be in a hurry, Larnard; there 's time enough." I think they called her an Adventist. I do n't know, but it do n't make any difference. I never believed it, and Ira did n't; but he says it weakened him, and he did n't believe in any such thing. Ira, when I tell you of things that used to be before I went away, you must know there must be a power back of mortals. I would like to speak to George and Carrie, and all the others.

Ira, that business you are so interested in I can't see any reason why it won't go on all right, but Schofield knows more about it than I do. If you were going to ask me about making shoes I could tell you better. If Ira gets THE BANNER, father will be sure to see this letter. I am glad I was able to say a few words.

Frederick Kimball.

I have been here a great many times, but could not manage to make my voice heard. You may place me in Methuen, Mass. Frederick Kimball. Mother is with me; also Francis, Frederick and Lily—a child more beautiful than the lilies of the valley—and Seymour, not as a little infant, but grown to manhood. I am thankful, Moses, that I am able to even give my name. I know I cannot reach all of them, but I can reach you if you will only open the door for me. Moses, your own dear mother is here with me. There were two mothers you loved, and both are here. Often I have tried to come into communication with each one of you, but have failed sometimes.

We are happy together in our spirit-home, which is more beautiful than we can find words to express. And not only would we speak to you, Moses, but to Lizzie, and ask you to listen for some manifestations in the home. We all love Lillie, for she is a lovable child.

I expect you will say: "Father did n't understand anything of this when he went away." No, neither did I have the privileges you are granted to-day. I am thankful there is an instrument connected with the families. Lily says: "Grandpa says we will care for the newborn spirit that has just entered here, the little babe. And Grandsire Gross is but a step from me."

Verification of a Spirit-Message.

HANNAH BROWN—ZEBEDEE JACKSON.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Feb. 25th, through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, I saw a message from HANNAH BROWN, and I recognize it as coming from a very dear friend of mine who passed away in Portland, Me., nearly eighteen years ago, as she says in her message.

Also, in the BANNER of March 10th, from the same source, is a message from my uncle ZEBEDEE JACKSON. He says: "I used to carry the keys when here." He was sexton of Dr. Miner's church for a number of years before he passed away. C. E. LANE.

The Reviewer.

SWEDENBORG THE BUDDHIST; or, The Higher Swedenborgianism; its Secrets and Thibetan Origin. By Philangi Dasa. 8vo, paper, pp. 322. Los Angeles, Cal.: The Buddhistic Swedenborgian Brotherhood.

The quaintness of the phraseology in which the author of this volume greets his readers in what is usually termed an introduction, but which he designates "Foreword"; his reference to himself as "only a Pagan; one whose soul was born in darkness, and continues in it"; and to Swedenborg as one who, when a child "could stop his breathing," that being a sure sign that he, also, was a Pagan; praying the reader to "employ some time in thinking of this; for it is behoveful," will attract the attention of any one into whose hands the book may fall, and lead him to a full perusal of its fair, broad-margined pages, whether to find satisfaction in having done so, or not, when the last leaf is turned, is a matter of question.

In this prefatory chapter is outlined the life of Swedenborg, beginning, as we have intimated, with his earliest days, when, as this writer affirms, he could "stop his outside breathing," in which act the mind of the individual "centers itself upon living realities, and loses all-to Sight of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; the Judaic Christian Scriptures; the Apostles and the Saints; and the Church with its sacraments, priests and liturgies... Wherefore, no one can make a true Christian out of a soul that stops its breathing."

After remarking, "The Christianity of little Emanuel is an unconscious masque of the flimsiest warp and woof," the author says:

"Emanuel is past a child, and is at the University of Upsala. He does not seem to differ from his schoolfellows; he does not wear a long face; does not join the Young Men's Christian Association; does not go to prayer-meetings to whine impotently over his sins (for it is not in a Pagan to whine). And so, he is not a 'nice' young man. Is he given to the world? I do not know. But set your heart at rest, I know one fact, this, to wit: he is a thoughtful young man. Now a thoughtful young man is, from whichever point of view you please, worth a hundred soft, goody-goody, whining, young hypocrites. For thought can carry him, must carry him to the Mysterious Centre from which he has been cast out on the Sea of Life. So teaches Buddhism."

Swedenborg's literary labors are briefly sketched, and astonishment expressed at the number of ponderous quartos on scientific subjects, in Latin, English, French and German, which he read during his travels immediately after leaving the University; at the number of thinkers and workers he managed to see and converse with; at the number of artistic and scientific objects that interested him. His herculean efforts to obtain information left him no time and gave him no inclination to seek earthly honors. Of this our author says:

"Had I space, would I, think you, tell that he dined with kings and counts? or would I leave this to barren-spirited biographers, wherewith to kittle weak-minded readers? I wis I would. Reader, when a man has to be bolstered with kings, counts, ancestors, wealth, and diplomas of academical and other supposed and accepted learned societies, he does not interest you nor me. And when we hear any one bolster himself, or any one else, with such-like means, we feel strongly tempted, do n't we, to percuss his pate to learn how much brain it contains? And, be it known, that when a man feels in himself that he is a sapbead, he falls back upon kings, counts, ancestors, wealth, and diplomas for bolstering. Swedenborg needs no bolstering; his brain bolsters him."

It is urged upon the readers of this book that they do not imagine the works of Swedenborg embody only speculation, theory, and the result of all this reading and hearsay, for Swedenborg gained his intellectual possessions by diligent labors in laboratories, observatories, dissecting rooms, mines, fields and the unseen world. Its author looks upon the writings of the Swedish seer from an altogether different point of view than those who profess to be his disciples, to follow his teachings, and to fully understand his mission upon earth. That which Swedenborgians claim to be proofs of his divine kinship and ability to enlighten mankind upon the true, inward meaning of the Christian Scriptures he totally ignores. "Come," he says, "I will tell you a secret: Swedenborg's six thick octavos, 'The Apocalypse Explained,' and one thick octavo, 'The Apocalypse Revealed,' explain and reveal—nothing. I challenge the students of Swedenborg to show that he has explained the Apocalypsis. Swedenborg never explains nor reveals; he only assumes and assents. He 'proves' one verse of the Judaic-Christian Scriptures to be true, by ten other verses that he has not proved to be true; or, he 'proves' one assertion to be true by ten other assertions that he has not proved to be true."

So much for Philangi Dasa's estimate of Swedenborg's writings; but there is a point from which he looks at them in an appreciative sense, and this is seen in the following paragraph:

"Read, if you have time, patience and courage, and in the light of Buddhism, esoteric and exoteric, the theological writings of Swedenborg, and you will learn a few facts worth knowing, namely: First, that he has not given the mystic sense of the Judaic-Christian Scriptures, that he has not proved anything, and that he only dogmatizes. Second, that hidden under Judaic-Christian names, phrases and symbols, and scattered throughout dreary, dogmatic and soporific octavos, are pure, precious, blessed truths of Buddhism; a few of which you will find in the following pages."

The above shows the position of the writer of this volume and its purpose. He claims that, as in Swedenborg's day, so now, his writings are received by those to whom they are presented, thanked for and shelved; and that until they are read intelligently in the light which Buddhism throws upon their pages, the number of their readers will remain small. "Let," he says, "the harlequin garb be stripped off, and the wisdom of the Pagan world will in them stand forth in all its glory"; this he has endeavored to do, and the three hundred pages that follow the introduction give the result of his effort.

Experiences in a series of dreams and dreams within dreams are narrated, which, as they become developed, merge into abstruse and learned discussions engaged in by various persons of Buddhistic orders; a Monk, a Chinese, a Parsee, an American woman, an Icelander, an Aztec Indian, and Swedenborg, who is denominated a Swedish Buddhist. Chapter V. opens with these words:

"In my dream I saw the company seated; and after an exchange of silent courtesies the Monk began in a fluty, silvery voice: 'My good friends, we agreed at the close of our last meeting to take up for consideration the Seven Principles of Man. Is it your pleasure that we now do so?' The company becked 'Yea.' Then he turned to the woman and said, 'Sishya, my sister, will you begin?' She answered, 'My brother, I thank you; but, meseems, it befits you, the representative of the ancient world, to begin this highly interesting subject; fail to, I pray you.' Then the silver-tongued celibate answered, 'Pray let us first hear you.'"

The woman then began by saying that the Masters that inhabit the Himalayan Mountains have in all ages known that the universe works by sevens, and hence have called it a holy number. She then cites instances in which this is recognized, specifying the seven divisions in each; the seven classes of Egyptians mentioned by Herodotus; the seven degrees of initiates in their temples; the seven principles taught in these temples as constituting man; the seven steps of spiritual growth reckoned by the Sufis; the seven different colors seen by the mystic during that growth; the seven principles taught by the Neoplatonists as forming the universe; the seven metals and seven cosmical angels of the alchemists; the seven balanced powers of Nature spoken of by Jacob Bœhme, and the seven principles of man enumerated by Paracelsus. Reference is also made to the very frequent occurrence of the number seven in the Jewish Scriptures, to the seven colors of the solar spectrum and the seven tones of the octave.

As the discussion, or rather conversation, proceeds, Swedenborg takes part; and the aim of the writer of this volume is to show by introducing passages from Swedenborg's works, references being given to enable the reader to test the accuracy of the quotations, that during his stay on earth he was under the immediate guidance, wrote under the direct influence, and inculcated in all his writings the doctrines of life here and beyond of Buddha. How far he has failed or succeeded in doing this, our limited space forbids an attempt to show, as it would require longer study than we are able to give, with other duties demanding our time and attention. We have placed before our readers what we think will enable them to form some idea of the book, and leave it to them to form their own estimate of its worth. The author states the motive that underlies the book is to lead to truth and to goodness, and invokes upon all to whom it may come, "the blessings of the Guardians of the Lost Word."

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 50 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism; Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Singing by Mr. J. T. Lillie, Miss Mintie Eakins, accompanist, and an invocation by Mrs. Lillie, introduced the morning service of last Sunday, following which Mrs. Lillie's guides embodied the sentiments of several questions in one subject, and announced as the theme of discourse "Spiritualism on Trial": "Spiritualism," it was said, "has passed through many severe trials during the past forty years, yet is an established fact. Spirit-communion is true, and the power of truth is taking hold of the people. It has brought a better understanding of life; it will stand derision, falsehood and crucifixion. The imperishable truth cannot die; it is emblazoned on the living pages of light, and God will never disown his own work. You say Spiritualists are unorganized, therefore unacknowledged, and you bid them organize, premising that were they to do so they would be the strongest organization in the world. We answer: We are not ready; we will wait until man is ripened to receive, and ready to throw off bigotry and superstition, self-glorification and a desire to control the thoughts and acts of others. There has ever been acknowledged the existence of a power outside this sphere and from beyond the death-line; and that power has aided, instructed and given light to man on earth; history testifies to this, and is repeating itself to day in modern manifestations. Again, you ask, why does false accusation exist to-day? Did not Christ say to his twelve Apostles: One of you will betray me? So, in modern times, Spiritualism is betrayed in the house of its friends. As of Christ they cried: Crucify him! crucify him! so of Spiritualism, now on trial, the same cry is heard, but God and the angel-host are with it." An improvised poem by Mrs. Lillie and a hymn by the audience closed the service.

Evening.—After a vocal duet by Mr. J. T. Lillie and Miss Mintie Eakins, an invocation and song, "What are the Signs of the Times with respect to the Triumph of Spiritual Truth?" was the question considered, in remarking upon which it was said: Spiritualism is here as a necessity of the nineteenth century; it brings intelligence from the spirit-side of life; it points to reforms; it is felt by all the nations of the earth; the light is abroad, the windows of our souls are opened and the truth is recognized; for thousands of spirits have returned and made known their identity. Memory is the most important factor of the soul. Man is upon the earth as an embodiment and fulfillment of an infinite law. Life's discipline is a teacher which bears you to a higher ground. The signs of the times point to a creedless religion. Mrs. Lillie improvised a poem, and the audience joined in a closing hymn. She will occupy the platform next Sunday forenoon and evening at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society held a social meeting April 10th at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. After a half hour's social converse Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Stafford opened the exercises with a vocal duet. Dr. J. L. Paxson made an address upon "The Unfoldment of the Divinity of God Within Man." After a song by Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Stafford, the former, under control of "Sunshine," made a pleasing address. Singing by Mrs. Lovering. Remarks by Jacob Edson, Dr. J. D. Moore, William H. Banks, Albert F. Ring, Alfred Holton, George T. Albro, Hebron Libby, Richard Holmes, John T. Ashdown and Mr. E. Ricker, all of which were interesting and instructive. Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Stafford closed the exercises with singing.

The next, and the last social meeting of the season, will be held April 24th. A full attendance is requested.

MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

81 White street, East Boston.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington Street.—This hall was crowded at last Sunday's services. At the afternoon session the Chairman, Mr. J. H. Lewis, said, in opening: "We come here to give you some of the mysteries of the life here and hereafter. Mediums in ancient times foretold events that were considered very miraculous, and they were protected; large temples were erected to their honor, and their lives held sacred; but mediums now stand more alone, and have to fight the great battle of life unprotected. This is wrong; we should see to the personal welfare of those who stand between us and the life beyond."

After listening to excellent music by Mrs. Nickerson and Miss Guardenier, accompanied by Prof. Milligan, the Chairman introduced Jacob Edson, Esq., who gave a brief address upon the "Value of the Spiritual Philosophy." "Modern Spiritualism," he said, "is based upon phenomena. It goes into the subsoil of the soul and develops what is contained within its hidden recess. If we seek only its commercial value we shall often be led astray, and it will do us very little good. The spiritual value is of the utmost importance, opening to us the beauties of the life beyond and raising us to a higher and better condition."

Mrs. W. A. Rich, under control of the late George D. Foster, said that when the time comes that the people of earth-life make the conditions better, they will obtain more valuable manifestations. Instead of seeking through a medium to find some way by which we can overreach some one in the great struggle of life and make money, we should try to develop our spiritual gifts, and then we shall most surely receive benefit. Mrs. Rich gave some very remarkable tests of spirit presence, giving, among others, the names of Frank Mayo, Aggie Hall and George Smith, all of whom were recognized by persons in the audience.

A fine duet was then given by Mrs. Nickerson and Miss Guardenier, which was heartily encored. "Sunlight," the interesting spirit guide of Mrs. B. F. Willard, gave tests that were well received, and fully recognized. Mrs. J. D. Bruce gave tests and readings, and the meeting closed by singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

At the evening session that veteran worker, Dr. Sutton Clark, of California, gave an interesting account of his travels and experiences in different parts of the world, which was listened to with deep interest. He has organized spiritual societies all over the world, and makes Spiritualism his religion. Mrs. C. H. Loomis-Hall gave psychometric readings that were recognized. One person called to the platform gave what the control was pleased to call a "good Methodist shake of the hand," the control remarking also that Methodists when converted to this faith make good Spiritualists.

Mrs. Inez A. Kimball, of Onset, gave a fine invocation and poem.

Mrs. Leveret Boyden gave tests that were kindly received and recognized, giving, among others, the name of Charles Richards, who passed out by a railroad accident recently, and wished to communicate with his mother.

Excellent music was furnished by Mrs. Nickerson, and all seemed highly pleased. HEATH.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall.—Although the clouds hung low last Sunday morning and threatened April showers, a large audience filled the hall, and every Group was full. After the opening exercises of orchestral music, readings and Banner March, we were favored with recitations by Marks Abrams, Bertha Judkins, Alice Cummings, Flossie Sargent, Lillie and Eloise Wendemuth, and a song by Miss Jessie Judkins. Dr. Dean Clarke was present, and, when called upon, made a few remarks in which he alluded to a great improvement since he was last called upon to speak at the Lyceum, both in the number of scholars in attendance and their deportment.

Wednesday evening last the Lyceum tendered a reception to Mrs. W. S. Butler, at 1031 Washington street, at which she was congratulated on her safe return and received many large and beautiful floral offerings. BENJ. P. WEAVER, Conductor C. P. L.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Mr. A. E. Tisdale's guides gave an interesting discourse, last Sunday, upon the subject announced, viz: "Moral Evolution through Soul-Involution." They claimed that this was a period fraught with unusual change. All the elements of social and political life were seething and warring one with another, but out of this would come a better and diviner state and condition. The past had dealt in miracle and authority, but in the new order of things these would be outgrown and cast aside. Soul-involution produced moral responsibility, and moral responsibility taught man to become a law unto himself and lifted him above external statutes into the region of spiritual freedom. There is no immortality unless an immortality of consciousness. If all of life is but the physical expression of man upon this plane, as some materialists believe, it was a cheat and a fraud, but if an expression in the outward, through one or many embodiments, was for the education and development of the eternal ego or self-consciousness, which, while having all qualities, yet lacked the unfoldment which this expression through matter afforded, then it was not purposeless but had a grand and significant meaning.

Mr. Tisdale's guides will again speak at the Temple next Sunday, at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M.

The hour of meeting of the Temple Fraternity School has been changed from half-past ten to half-past twelve o'clock, and it is hoped the number of little ones will continue to increase.

The usual sociable will be held at 7:30 P. M., on Wednesday evening. W. H. R.

The First Independent Club.—Monday evening was especially a gala night, the programme containing much of unusual interest—and the hall was overfilled with listeners. The varied musical selections by Miss Anna Muriel Dunlap were received with much favor, which indeed only did justice to her brilliant execution of the intricate and difficult pieces chosen. Miss Dunlap presided at the piano during all the musical part of the programme. Gracie Scales caricatured a newsboy in costume, charming all. Miss Maria Falls feelingly rendered the "Potion Scene" from "Romeo and Juliet" in costume, and was recalled several times and presented with a bouquet. Miss S. L. Austin sang: "The Message" and "The Three Wishes" in pleasing style and was received with much applause.

Mrs. Fletcher after a few remarks presented, in her graceful manner, an album containing the signatures of the officers of the Club, to Mrs. M. F. Butler. On the opening page was printed: "To Mrs. M. F. Butler, from the officers of The First Independent Club, on the occasion of her return from San Francisco." Mrs. Butler accepted this offering in fitting terms, and related some portions of her Western experience. Her presence among us at this period of our larger growth is especially fit.

Mrs. H. P. Griffin recited with much effect: "Curfew Must not Ring To-night," and on being recalled, read another selection and was the recipient of a bouquet.

The exercises were closed by Mrs. Scales, who sang a song of much merit. For this enjoyable evening, the hearty thanks of the Club are extended to all who participated. F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

The Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society.—Friday evening, March 30th, a large audience gathered in the Parlors of the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society for the purpose of listening to the wonderful manifestations of spirit presence given through the mediumship of Jos. D. Stiles. Short addresses were made by Dr. H. B. Storer and Dr. A. H. Richardson. Singing by Miss Bailey and Miss Wakefield.

On Friday evening, April 6th, Chas. Dawbarn delivered an anniversary address; on this evening the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. At the close of the lecture, which was listened to with the closest attention, Jacob Edson moved that a vote of thanks from the audience be extended to Mr. Dawbarn for his fearless manner in speaking his highest convictions. The motion was unanimously adopted.

Last Friday Miss Lucette Webster, assisted by her pupils, tendered the Ladies' Aid her thirteenth annual complimentary benefit. The hall was well filled and the programme excellent. Miss Webster is too well known for me to attempt to render any conception of her talents, as well as her pupils. The singing was by Miss Bailey; also Mrs. M. E. Whittemore, the charming inspirational vocalist.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the coming week the ladies hold a Fair in their Parlors, and all are earnestly and cordially invited to be present. Contributions of fancy articles for sale also gratefully received. ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

The Facts Social for the consideration of Mental and Spiritual Phenomena and Theories was well attended on the evening of April 11th at Paine Memorial Hall. This was the first of a series to be held every Wednesday evening, until further notice; the object being to more thoroughly discuss the principles which underlie psychic forces from the broadest and most comprehensive standpoint, irrespective of isms, creeds or dogmatic ideas.

Mr. L. L. Whitlock, the Chairman, made the opening address, and the exercises thereafter were participated in by Dr. H. B. Storer, Dr. J. D. Moore, Dr. Dean Clarke, Dr. Street, Frank T. Ripley, Mrs. J. Francina Dillingham, Mrs. Burnham, Mrs. S. Dick, Mrs. W. A. Rich, Mr. W. A. Mansfield, Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock and others.

The entertainment commenced with a piano solo of much merit by Mr. Bertram Shapleigh, which was finely rendered. Mrs. L.C. Clapp favored the company with two beautiful vocal selections, which were appreciated by the audience. •••

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The meetings at this place on Sunday last were well attended, and an unusual degree of interest was manifested. The afternoon exercises were opened by Dr. Sutton Clark, of San Francisco, with interesting remarks, followed with tests and spirit-descriptions. He was followed by David Brown, Mrs. S. E. Buck, Mrs. H. W. Cushman, Dr. M. V. Thomas and Prof. M. Milleson with appropriate and entertaining remarks, accompanied by recognized tests.

In the evening the exercises were varied, and consisted of well-chosen and highly interesting remarks and satisfactory tests, spirit delineations and psychometric readings, by Mrs. M. W. Leslie, Mr. McKenzie and Mr. F. W. Matthews.

Miss Hattie Dodge, the young and talented reader, gave several appropriate recitations, which were rendered in a highly artistic manner, eliciting enthusiastic applause.

Little Miss Neal also gave a beautiful recitation, which was prettily given and well received and applauded by the audience. ••

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualist meetings were held at this place last Sunday with unusual interest—W. A. Hale, Chairman. During the day and evening Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Mrs. Shackley, Mrs. J. E. Davis, Miss Nettie M. Holt, the Chairman, Prof. Milleson, Mrs. J. E. Hurd, and Dr. F. S. Bigelow of Skowhegan, Me., participated. W. A. HALE.

Reception to Mrs. Butler.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At 1031 Washington street, Boston, last Wednesday evening, was assembled a large and happy party, from the Children's Progressive Lyceum and Ladies' Aid Society—the purpose of the meeting being to tender to Mrs. Wm. S. Butler a reception upon her return from the West, where she has been for some time with her family, seeking a much-needed rest.

The exercises consisted of songs and readings by the children. Lucette Webster added much to the occasion by her fine readings. Singing by Mr. Thayer.

The Ladies' Aid presented a bouquet; the children of the Lyceum a handsome basket of flowers; the leaders of the Groups a beautiful fan; the Adonis Club a bouquet; fan from Mrs. Simmons.

All praise for the noble woman who has done so much for the children that they may better understand spiritual truths and grow to be better men and women; many a child in years to come will bless the kind deeds of Mrs. Wm. S. Butler. May she enjoy every blessing in this life, and still more and greater blessings in the life beyond, is the earnest wish of her many friends of the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society and Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1.

John Slater to be in Chicago.

Beginning the first Sunday in May, Mr. John Slater, the test medium of New York, will begin a course of séances before the Young People's Progressive Society of this city. Mr. Slater's engagement last November won for him many friends, and this announcement will arouse a deep interest in his coming visit. Spiritualists are especially called upon to come, and give all possible aid to a successful representation of our proofs of immortality. Mr. Slater is a medium upheld by the greatest critics, and his wonderful powers so perfectly presented, that none can doubt the genuineness of his manifestations.

Mr. Slater will give séances under the auspices of this Society every Sunday in May, afternoon at 3 P. M. and evening at 7:45, at Martine's South Side Hall, corner Indiana Avenue and 22d street.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P.M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Last Sunday Mrs. Fannie Davis Smith spoke in the morning upon the "Personalities of Truth." Her discourse was able and logical, and delivered with that power and vigor that has given her such a well-earned reputation for the past thirty years as a teacher of Spiritualism. Mrs. Smith enunciated thoughts in the evening suggested by the passage, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Mrs. Smith gave a sympathetic and beautiful appeal in behalf of mediums.

The meeting for spiritual manifestations in the afternoon was one of the most interesting since these meetings were organized by Mrs. E. A. Wells last October. The audience was large and intelligent, and composed of some of the best people of New York.

The meeting was opened by G. W. Kates of Atlanta, Ga., who spoke of the value and labor of Spiritualism, giving the scope of its utility a wide range in the realms of the physical, mental, moral and spiritual. He said Spiritualists are developed, not converted; that Spiritualism is unfolding in each the spirit and moral side of life; it is not perfected nor its influence achieved. Give it a century—give it eighteen centuries, and it will develop a better civilization, purer ethics and religion, and a salvation in this world that will cause the inheritance of spirituality in the next life as a natural sequence instead of a mere reward. Mr. Kates was frequently applauded during his remarks. Mrs. Zalda Brown Kates improvised and sung a song upon a subject given by Henry J. Newton, Esq., "Truths of Forty Years of Spiritualism," after which she gave several delineations of character and psychometric readings, that received much applause. Mr. and Mrs. Kates are winning hosts of friends in New York and Brooklyn. They will take part in the exercises of the meeting for manifestations the last Sunday in the month.

Dr. E. A. Smith, of Brandon, Vt., gave some very interesting experiences as to how he became a Spiritualist, and also gave a description of the camp ground at Burlington, Vt., and its advantages as a pleasant sojourn for Spiritualists during the summer months. Henry J. Newton, Esq., said that he thought there should be a little notice taken of the absurd and ridiculous position that Herman and Gilmore (Guy Carlton) had taken in their feeble efforts to expose Spiritualism, and that should his health be such that he was able to speak next Sunday afternoon, he should have something to say upon this subject. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave an unusually large number of tests, many of which were remarkable; she was frequently applauded. Mrs. Wells will speak and give tests under an engagement of the First Society of Spiritualists of Paterson, N. J., Sunday evening, the 22d inst. Miss Jennie B. Hagan will occupy the platform of the First Society in New York the last two Sundays in April.

There was held a test-séance last Thursday evening at the residence of Mrs. E. A. Wells, 822 6th Avenue, New York. It was one of the most interesting that it has been our good fortune to attend. Mrs. Zalda Brown Kates joined Mrs. Wells in giving this séance, and Mr. G. W. Kates made appropriate remarks at the opening. Some forty persons attended the séance, and each person received wonderful evidence of the life beyond that was satisfactory. The séance will be repeated on Thursday evening of this week, and also Thursday evening, April 26th, which will present a rare opportunity for the friends of spiritual phenomena to witness the interesting and intelligent medial powers of these two noted mediums. S.

People's Spiritual Meeting.—The sessions of the People's Meeting on the 8th and 15th of this month at Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, were seasons of more than ordinary interest. Mrs. Whittier, of Onset, Mass., gave the opening address on the afternoon of the 8th, and was followed by Mr. S. A. F. Goodspeed and Mrs. T. J. Lewis with remarks and spirit descriptions. Remarks by Mrs. M. C. Morrell and others filled the remaining time profitably.

In the evening Mrs. Morrell opened the exercises by reading a poem; she also gave a large number of descriptions of spirit friends of some of the audience which were readily recognized and acknowledged. Mrs. T. J. Lewis followed with remarks and tests. Messrs. Wilson McDonald, of this city, George S. Bowen, of Chicago, and others, filled up the time to the acceptance of all.

Sunday afternoon, 15th inst., invocation by Mr. Goodspeed, followed by remarks of a practical nature by Mrs. Whittier, of Onset, under control; short inspirational address by Mrs. Morrell, and tests by Mrs. Fox, all of which gave great pleasure to an interested audience. The services in the evening consisted of a poem by Mrs. Morrell, tests and communications by Mrs. Fox, and others, and addresses by Mr. Wilson McDonald, T. Buner, G. S. Bowen, of Chicago, and others. F. W. JONES.

METROPOLITAN CHURCH FOR HUMANITY.—The Anniversary services of this Society were held in Macgregor Hall, Madison Avenue and 59th street, on Sunday, April 8th, on which occasion the following programme was presented: Address by Prof. Henry Kiddle, subject, "The Spiritual Renaissance of the Nineteenth Century"; address by Hon. A. H. Dailey; remarks (under spirit control) by Mrs. T. B. Stryker; recitations by various artists; songs by Miss L. L. Middleton; vocal selections by Prof. Julian Jordan's Quartette, to wit: "God is a Spirit," Quartette (Sterndale Bennett); "Annie Laurie," Harmonized (Dudley Buck); song, "Under the Jasmine and Rose," Mr. Harry Roe (Jordan); "Absence," Quartette (Hallon); song, "The Song that Reached my Heart," Mr. Julian Jordan (Jordan); ending with recitation, "The Little Hero," by request, Mr. T. Leslie Gossin.

Spirits by the Score.

Mrs. Williams Astonishes Brooklyn with Her "Materialization" Marvels.

Mrs. M. E. Williams, the materializing medium, of 46th street, invaded Brooklyn with her band of spirits last Wednesday evening, and received a very flattering welcome. It was the first public séance that had ever been given in the sister city beyond the big bridge, and the cozy theatre of the Columbia Conservatory of Music, at Bedford and Fulton Avenues, was packed with a very intelligent, refined and well-dressed audience. Mrs. Williams seemed in excellent spirits herself, and so far as the building up and turning out of spirits from the laboratory of Spirit Chemist Arthur Mortinez went, the experiment was a success. Professor Jeaneret acted as master of ceremonies. Mrs. Williams was dressed in black silk, and had a bunch of big nodding red roses pinned on her bosom. She made a short speech, giving the benighted Brooklynites an idea of the philosophy of Spiritualism and spirit phenomena and manifestation.

THE SPIRITS THAT GENERALLY ATTEND

Mrs. Williams's cabinet were all there, including Dr Holland, the joyous Little Bright Eyes, Frank Cushman, Lucille the Beautiful, Chemist Mortinez, E. V. Wilson, Lucille Western, Alice Cary, etc. The séance was marked by a large number of spirits who took on tangible form and came out to perform the social politeness of making calls on their friends still detained in the cumbersome flesh. It was a most sociable, harmonious, lively and agreeable reception or levee and conversazione between the mortal and immortal. The largeness of the audience was surprising. When every seat on the floor was filled the late comers had to seek the galleries. Two and three spirits came out at a time, and quite a number of them not only dematerialized out on the open stage, but rematerialized, as if

COMING UP THROUGH THE FLOOR,

in open view of the audience. Among the spirits who came out to friends were Montague Berg, Thomas Combs, Amanda Bowman, Lillie Reed, George Harkness, Carrie Miller, Annie Maguire, Tillie Roberts, Charles Cunningham, Miss Floyd, Dr. Slocum, Mr. Nichols, Fanny Hazard and a friend, Mrs. Charles Fox, Mr. Ostrander, and several young ladies with their escorts or company. Brother Tice, of Brooklyn, was present to see that all things were right. A committee that volunteered from the audience examined the cabinet and declared that there was nothing that could contribute to the practice of deception.

Rockland, Me.—Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant of Scotland, after closing her office in Boston, Mass., opened Spiritualist meetings in Armory Hall, Rockland, Me., during the month of March, lecturing and giving spiritual readings before large audiences composed of people from all denominations. Mrs. Conant and her controls labored hard with us five weeks, teaching her hearers how to investigate in their own families, and develop at the fireside the wonderful truths of spiritual phenomena. Many families in this city and surroundings having taken Mrs. Conant's instructions in consideration, have formed home-circles to further their interest in the investigation of Spiritualism. Mrs. Conant has now left us to fill engagements in Fitchburg and other places; our kindest wishes go with her in her efforts for the spreading of the glad tidings of spiritual truth.

OUR STATE TO THE FRONT.

A Matter which Concerns You.

The following unsolicited opinions from your friends and neighbors, men and women whom you know and respect, ought to carry conviction to any doubting mind. These words of gratitude are from those who have been afflicted but are now well, and the persons giving them are naturally solicitous that others, troubled as were they, may know the means of cure. There is no reason why you should longer be ill from kidney, liver or stomach troubles. You can be cured as well as others; do not longer delay treatment, but to-day obtain that which will restore you to permanent health and strength.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Dec. 11, 1887.—Some four years ago I was seriously afflicted with Kidney troubles. I suffered intense pains in my kidneys, so severe at times it seemed as if my back would break. My urine was very highly colored and scant, and it would contain considerable sediment and mucus. I had dull pains in my head, restless at night, and no appetite at all. My business necessitated my riding considerably. I got so bad that I could not sit and ride in a buggy, and began to fear that I would never recover, until finally I was induced to try "Warner's Safe Cure." I took a number of bottles, and I am happy to say was completely cured. My father-in-law was almost at death's door with diseased kidneys, and was cured by "Warner's Safe Cure." I consider it the greatest remedy in the world.

HYANNIS, Mass. (Cape Cod), June 17, 1886.—I fell from a step-ladder backwards in my stable on to the floor, about six feet. The shock was dreadful, which caused me to have the doctor to draw my water. He had great difficulty because of the clots of blood that kept filling his instrument, which he inserted six or seven times before he could relieve me from pain, which was severe. A lady eighty-one years of age, who had taken only one bottle, which relieved her immediately, wished me to try "Warner's Safe Cure." I took about two doses, and never have had any trouble since. I wish to say furthermore, that I belong to a family that have always been subject to gravel, etc.

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA, Mass., Nov. 15, 1887.—I have taken a great deal of "Warner's Safe Cure" with good results. It has done me more good than all the doctors or medicines that I ever had or taken. For any one to take "Warner's Safe Cure" according to directions, it must lead to a speedy cure.

ONSET BAY, MASS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Onset Bay is assuming activity; the carpenters can be heard in all portions of the grounds, and preparations are being made to have a Camp-Meeting this season that will excel in numbers those that have preceded it. The Camp-Meeting of this Association for 1888 will commence July 15th, and close Aug. 12th. Col. W. D. Crockett, President of the Association, was recently upon the grounds prospecting; he has every faith in Onset's future, as the grounds cannot be excelled for a health resort, and this fact—combined with meetings for those who take an interest in them—makes it a double attraction.

Mediums are securing cottages. One who is a resident of New York has leased the Thayer cottage.

Miss Helen Berry is improving the Hare cottage, which was donated to her by the late Prof. Hare.

Quite a number of cottage owners have been looking after their cottages and preparing them for occupancy later in the season.

I learn that able speaking talent, also for singing, and a band of musicians have been secured for Sundays, and the prospects never seemed better for a profitable season, both intellectually and socially, than at the present time.

The Association has made arrangements for five Sunday meetings, the usual number that is allowed in the State laws to come under the provisions of the Camp-Meeting statutes.

The "Motor" has been doing a good work in transporting lumber from the Old Colony Railroad, and the intention now is that it will be run to transfer passengers about the first of May.

The Association is in full anticipation that harmony will prevail, and that all the property owners, and leasers of the same, will act in concert, uniting toward a grand success in the coming camp-meeting.

Nature has done much for Onset, and yearly it is becoming more and more attractive. OBSERVER.

PARKLAND, PA.

This is one of the largest and most beautiful summer resorts in the State of Pennsylvania; and the camp-meeting to be held at this place, as in former seasons, already gives good promise of success. The grounds comprise one hundred and fifty acres of woods, groves, lawns and placid streams; are easy of access, and have all the facilities for pleasure and comfort that can be desired. Here are to be found beautiful shaded groves and walks, picturesque scenery, rustic bridges spanning purling streams, cozy nooks and broad meadows. A frontage on the romantic Neshaminy Creek of three-fourths of a mile, affords over two miles of grand water for boating, for which a large number of new and beautiful boats and gondolas are provided.

Parkland provides for excursionists seventy-five tents; a large auditorium for open-air meetings or services, concerts, etc.; the largest Dancing Pavilion in the State, affording shelter for five thousand people; ample tables and benches scattered under the trees to accommodate the largest excursions, and a Dining-Room unsurpassed for appointment anywhere.

For further information the following gentlemen may be addressed: Benj. P. Benner, 940 Warnock street, Philadelphia; Robert A. Thompson, 614 Venango street, Philadelphia; or Henry Bronson, 226 East Chelton Avenue, Germantown.

VERONA PARK, ME.

Dr. C. F. Ware, President Verona Park Camp-Meeting Association, writes us as follows from Tacoma, W. T., under a recent date:

"Arrangements are going on for one of the most successful meetings that we have ever had. It is to be held in August, lasting about two weeks. Some changes have been made during the winter, and more will be effected before our camp opens this, its sixth session. A wealthy and influential party has purchased a cottage at the Park, and will be the means of influencing others to come. These parties are from Augusta, our State Capitol.

We have the most of our speakers engaged, among them being our beloved Bro. George A. Fuller; we have engaged for eight days Mrs. A. M. Glading, this making the third year Mrs. G. has been with us; we feel that she is indeed one of the best workers and one of the finest women in the spiritual ranks. Every one loves her, and in our few years' acquaintance with her we never have heard her spoken of save in praise.

Verona Park Camp is one of the most delightful in New England.

The death angel has taken from our ranks recently two of our best members. Who will fill the ranks again? Do not stand back—the work must be done! Let every Spiritualist make up his or her mind to be like Bro. Farmer and Sister Cora Abbott, doing what they may to demolish superstition, and advance the cause of free thought.

Thank heaven THE BANNER waves from Atlantic to Pacific, and is doing a mighty work for humanity."

CASSADAGA, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Cassadaga Camp is already showing signs of activity, in preparation for the coming season. There has been a large amount of building since last summer, and more will be done this spring. A hall for the purpose of supplying a lecture and séance room, with library and reading-room, is to be built. The furnishing of the hotel will be completed, and it will be put in the best of shape for the care of guests.

The grounds of the Association were last fall extended by the addition of

[Reported for the Banner of Light.]

[Concluded.]

The Saturday afternoon session, March 31st, was opened with music, after which Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of Westfield, N. Y., a medium of note, was introduced, and read a poem entitled "The Epoch of the Ages," by a medium poetess, Mrs. Emma Train, of North Collins, N. Y.

Mrs. Lizzie Emerson then sang a vocal solo entitled "Memory's Golden Shore," after which Mrs. Twing said that she believed it to be the mission of Spiritualism to let down the bars of progress for women: "I well remember where I heard my first rappings—down in Chautauqua County. Even in that Mecca the raps came. My brother has been for years a rapping medium, and I have been a medium also, but of a different kind. For years my hand has been able to write communications from departed spirits in languages I never have and never shall understand, but those for whom the communications are intended understand the messages. There is a right and a wrong kind of Spiritualism. If there is anything I love it is strong common-sense. There are some people who make hobbies of certain features of Spiritualism, but such people do not, cannot understand the faith. They must know the whole truth. I know materialization to be a fact, and when I say I know a thing I know it just as well as any one, but I also know some materialization to be the result of simulation. The Bible tells of materialization. Every Spiritualist has something in his life to make him think that heaven is near and that God's hand has not weakened. I wish that you would all tell your experiences."

In the course of her remarks Mrs. Twing told of how her dead child had been placed in her arms by a medium. At the close of her address local mediums were invited to the platform, when Mrs. Beardmore of Akron, Mrs. Tillie V. Cooke, Mrs. Mary Moss and Mrs. Mary Combs of Cleveland, responded with short speeches; Mr. J. Clegg Wright closing the session with one of his stirring addresses.

Just before the closing song the following telegram was read:

BOSTON, March 31st, 1888.

"The BANNER OF LIGHT sends greeting to the Spiritualists of the West. Our halls are crowded, and much enthusiasm is manifested on this the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism.

COLBY & RICH."

To which the presiding officer, Mr. Carleton, sent the fitting reply:

CLEVELAND, O., March 31st, 1888.

To Colby & Rich, Boston:

Spiritualists return greeting. Glorious time here. Long may THE BANNER wave. R. CARLETON,
Chairman of Committee.

Evening Session.—The hall was crowded. Mr. Wright led off with a few preliminary remarks, following with an exhibition of character reading, based on the study of psychometry, which the subjects affirmed at the close to be correct. Mr. Thomas Lees then recited "The Ghost," a poem in the metre of "Poe's Raven."

Then followed one of Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing's unique séances. This being the lady's first appearance in this city, everybody was on the qui vive to witness her mediumship. Her quaint control, "Ikabod," kept the large audience convulsed with laughter, and some of the tests given brought grateful tears to the eyes of many who went forward. All voted Mrs. Twing a charming woman and a good medium.

Sunday, April 1st.—The morning session was devoted entirely to J. Clegg Wright, who delivered the regular anniversary address. It was a masterpiece of intellectual and spiritual scholarship, eloquently delivered, and fairly aroused the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

The Afternoon Session was made particularly interesting by Thomas Lees introducing the Rev. ——, a gentleman who had been sufficiently liberal to open his church to Mr. O. P. Kellogg and himself, for the funeral services of Mrs. Lucia H. Cowles, a trance medium, in 1883. This gentleman said that he had been for years trying to discover what there was in Spiritualism. He had always been anxious for a demonstration of the assertion that spirits communicated with mortals. He said he had been much disappointed in the "controls" that were shown the day before. He made a strong plea for Christianity, pointing out the fact that even if Christ was a myth, the repetition of the myth had done much to elevate and improve the condition of mankind. The remarks of the minister did not seem to please many of his listeners, although some applause greeted him. He requested of the reporter that his name be not given to the public.

Of course this was a perfect plum for the large audience present, and Mrs. Twing, who followed, in a very tender strain touched the hearts of all present, saying in conclusion, as she addressed the clergyman: "I ask you to show me, if you can, something better than Spiritualism. I am ready to receive anything that will make my life bright and happy, and bring me nearer to God and the angels. I would not tear one brick from any church, but I would throw open the shutters and let the light in. I would have the preachers say just what they think, and not preach from motives of policy. Many ministers secretly believe in the doctrine of probation after death, but dare not preach it from their pulpits."

Mr. Wright was then introduced. In his usual style, he said that he thought the good attendance an evidence of interest in the extraordinary phenomena of Spiritualism. He replied to the minister, saying that Christianity was a superstition, and that superstition was an attempt at teaching without demonstration. "We have," he said, "the opposition of Christianity. This gentleman here," referring to the minister present, "is a Christian, because he has been brought up in a Christian land. If he had been born in Turkey, he would have been a Mohammedan." After inveighing against Christianity, Mr. Wright said that Modern Spiritualism had, however, had a greater enemy in supernaturalism, but he did not enlarge on this subject. He denied most emphatically the divine origin of the Bible, and called for proof; he also denied that Spiritualism was Christianity. Spiritualism was rationalism, pure and simple. Mr. Wright looked for the time when materialization would demonstrate that Spiritualism was true, and that man lived after death, regardless of his belief in God and the Bible.

At the close of Mr. Wright's address the minister was given the privilege of making an answer. The latter said he was seeking an explanation of the mysteries of Spiritualism, and would willingly live the rest of his life on a crust if he could be convinced of its truth. He in a few words made answer to the arguments of Mr. Wright. He accounted for Mr. Wright's opinion of Christianity by his nationality. He employed the deductive argument to show the existence of God and heaven. After thanking the audience for their attention he took his seat.

At the close of this theological tilt, which interested all present, many went forward to congratulate the participants, in which the minister was not forgotten; although they thought the clergyman was on the wrong side probably, they all admired his courage in daring to "beard the lion in his den," and he was warmly greeted.

At the sixth and last session (at 7:30 P. M.) of the two days' meeting the hall was filled to overflowing, many being unable to gain admittance to the Lyceum Anniversary Entertainment.

This Lyceum has in Richard Carleton as Conductor a fine officer, the same being true of Nellie Ingersoll, Guardian, and their able corps of assistants. The Lyceum programme bore prominently upon its introductory page this golden sentence, the lesson of which ought to be heeded by every lover of the New Dispensation throughout the world:

"THE CHILDREN'S PROGRESSIVE LYCEUMS ARE THE HOPE OF SPIRITUALISM, AND SHOULD BE THE PRIDE OF SPIRITUALISTS."

The following was the official order of exercises on this interesting occasion:

PROGRAMME—PART I.

Instrumental Music, Brice and Pae's Orchestra; Address, R. Carleton; Anniversary Glee, Lyceum Choir and Children, (written by S. Russell, Senior;) Remarks, Carrie E. S. Twing; Dialogue, "Sunday School versus Lyceum," (written by Charles Collier,) Charles Collier, Florrie Collier, George Collier; Calisthenics, Eight Lyceum Scholars (under the direction of Tillie H. Lees); Recitation, Laura Lemmers; Recitations, Eva and Arthur Davies; Ballad, Zadie Turner; Violin Solo, Willie Kritch (Mabel Chase, accompanist).

The entertainment concluded with an Original Sketch, by Thomas Lees, entitled, "Modern Spiritualism; Its Past, Present and Future!" Synopsis:

Part I, 1848.—Cottage at Hydesville, N. Y., the home of the Fox family—Origin of the Spirit Raps—Excitement in Rochester—The Manifestations denounced by the Clergy. Tableau—Modern Spiritualism in the Past!

Part II, 1888.—Tableau—Modern Spiritualism in the Present! Voices from the Clergy—Conversation between two Church-members—Voices from upper-ten-dom—Spiritualism's quondam friends within and without its ranks—Fault-finders. Tableau—Our Lyceum!

Part III, 1928.—The attitude of the Churches, and how they always believed in Spiritualism! Tableau—Modern Spiritualism in the Future!

It was a grand success.

The whole programme was capitally rendered. The "Anniversary Glee" by the choir and children was enthusiastically sung. The "calisthenics" by eight of the most proficient scholars, led by Tillie H. Lees, were heartily applauded. The dialogue, by Mr. Collier and family, contained some good hits, showing up the inconsistency of Spiritualists in sending their children to the Sunday schools. The ballad by Zadie Turner displayed her pure contralto voice, and the violin playing of Master Willie Kritch, accompanied by Miss Mabel Chase, the pianist, was thoroughly appreciated.

The original sketch, "Modern Spiritualism—Its Past, Present and Future," by Thomas Lees, proved to be something entirely original in construction and novel in its effects and situations—over twenty-five characters being introduced. The tableaux (with calcium light) were particularly effective, evincing considerable artistic taste in their composition, and displaying many beauties of form and feature of the ladies and gentlemen who posed for the principal characters, especially so, "Modern Spiritualism," "The Spirit of Progress," "Religion," "Science," and even the "Devil."

The singing of the Russell Family, assisted by George V. Burgess of Lorain, O., added as usual much to the enjoyment of the meetings. Mr. Carleton proved an excellent presiding officer, and all voted the Fortieth Anniversary a grand success.

[The Twentieth Anniversary Ball occurred at Weisgerber's Hall, Monday evening, April 2d, at 8 P. M. Music by Brice & Pae's Orchestra, with supper served by the ladies of the Good Samaritan Relief Society, Mrs. Tillie V. Cooke, President, in room adjoining hall.]

Toledo, O.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The First Spiritualist Society of Toledo celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary in Clark's Hall, on Saturday evening, March 31st, the programme consisting of music, literary exercises, and an address by Mrs. Mary C. Knight.

On Sunday, at 10:30 A. M., occurred the annual election of officers, when Mr. A. H. Newcomb was unanimously reëlected President, and J. B. Johnson reëlected Vice-President; W. C. Russell, Treasurer; and A. W. Cole, Secretary.

Immediately following the election, the President called the meeting to order, when Mrs. Knight opened the services by reading a poem on the Fortieth Anniversary of Spiritualism by Dr. Dean Clarke.

At the close of the service a dinner was served in the hall for all who wished to partake.

In the evening Mrs. Knight again addressed the audience for about twenty minutes, closing with a beautiful inspirational poem, after which was passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to Mrs. Mary C. Knight for her valuable services during the time she has been with us, and that we recommend her to all societies as one of the ablest speakers in the field.

The President, in behalf of the members and friends of the Society, in fitting terms thanked her for the great work she had wrought while in Toledo. He then presented her with a purse of $57,75 from her special friends.

Mrs. Knight replied in a very feeling manner, thanking all for the many kindnesses shown her, and expressing pleasure at the many friends and acquaintances made by her while here. A. W. COLE, Sec'y.

Boston, Mass.—Berkeley Hall.

The Anniversary exercises of the Boston Spiritual Temple, at Berkeley Hall, were continued Sunday, morning, afternoon and evening, April 1st. The exercises of the morning were begun with music, vocal and instrumental. The President, Capt. Holmes, then read the following original poem by Mr. John W. Day of the BANNER OF LIGHT:

TO MODERN SPIRITUALISM
On the Fortieth Anniversary of its Advent.
BY JOHN W. DAY.

Holiest revealment to mourners outshining—
Born in the home of the lowly and true—
How shall we hail thee, thou bright silv'ry lining
Spread where the death cloud veils loved ones from view?
Pure as the Eden springs
Where their translucent wings
Lave the bright birds in the Summer-Land morn!
True as the violet queen,
Glist'ning with sapphire sheen,
Bright streams thy radiance to mortals forlorn.

Rich plenum gift from the Father Supernal,
Dight with his signet of glory and power,
Stern is earth's conflict with passions infernal,
Long still delayed the millennial hour!
Honest hearts faint and die,
Lo! up the lurid sky
Mount they as drops by the sun drawn afar,
Yet thou with guileless soul,
Bucklered from Fear's control,
Surely shalt win though the continents jar!

Mighty Evangel! through death-guerdoned ages
Minds have toil'd upward 'mid travail and pain;
Blood-dust the ink of their sorrowful pages,
Sad and funeral their marching refrain!
Slowly the chains were riven,
Yet hath each future given
Thunder of glory for chariot of flame!
Such be thy destiny,
Crown of the brave and free—
Right's wid'ning scroll shall emblazon thy name!

Thou art eternal, no measure can mete thee;
Traced in weird silver by time's early rime,
Sphered in man's dearest traditions we greet thee,
God's morning star on the fore-front of Time!
Thine was the power that will'd,
Thine was the strength that fill'd
Life's keenest strugglings from monad to zone,
Yet is thy modern way
Lit by a clearer ray,
Shot from the nimbus of Truth's rising throne!

Souls 'neath thy tutelage seek life's demanding—
Gone are the myth-tales so hoary and old;
Lo! the dark hair-coils of creedism unstranding
Show hidden truths bright as African gold!*
Hope looks alone to thee,
Outcome of Liberty!
Thou art resistless, thy triumph is nigh!
Reason her story tells,
Sweet Love the chorus swells!
Thine is the torrent that bears earth on high!

Spectrum-wing'd Science, through heaven regal soaring,
Scorns thee, thou helper benignant and wise;
Chemistry gray, o'er alembic flames poring,
Marks not from substance a spirit arise;
Yet art thou king of all—
Lo! how their theses fall!
Analyst stern, at thy Prospero wand!
Stilted Pretension dies,
Low-browed Assurance flies;
Naught may the power of thy logic withstand.

Knowledge for Faith, joy for terror thou bringest;
Vainly pours Chaos its Lethean wine;
Man, at thy call, from the cypress shade springest,
Armed for Eternity's labor divine!
While in thy presence now
Rev'rent our spirits bow,
Fill us with charity, union and love;
Teach us—whoe'er may reap
While we but gleanings keep—
Sure is our freehold in regions above!

The speaker of the morning, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, was then introduced and gave a grand discourse on "Our Place among the Religions of the World."

Sunday Afternoon.—The Anniversary exercises of the afternoon were opened by a song from Charles W. Sullivan. The Chairman then introduced Mrs. Susie Willis Fletcher, who spoke substantially as follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—It has not been my fortune to be with you much during the last two days, but I know that multitudinous good things have been given from this platform, and that the givers in return have received the most kindly appreciation.

I wish I could bring to you this afternoon all the hope and trust and encouragement that the last year has brought into my life—brought down from the spirit-world! And the message from that bright sphere this afternoon is one of almost ineffable peace and gladness. And now I see, as if suspended above your heads, some of the ascended souls who have passed out from your midst since your last Anniversary.

When our loved ones pass away, the world says to us, 'How can you, as Spiritualists, sorrow for them? If I believed my dead could return, I should feel no occasion for mourning.' There is some reason in this. We have no need to mourn as they mourn; yet it seems to me that none but Spiritualists really know how to love their friends; at least others cannot understand them as we can. So to-day I want to say that we are here to celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism, not alone in company with our earthly friends, but in association with those who have gone just beyond the visible line of life. They are gone, and yet they are with you."

Mrs. Fletcher then spoke of the progress of Spiritualism, predicting the rapid approach of the time when there would be a universal understanding and acceptance of its truths; and closed with an exhortation to all Spiritualists to be true to their highest ideal of noble, unselfish, charitable living.

John Wetherbee then made a few remarks, in the course of which he said that he looked upon Modern Spiritualism as a Declaration of Independence. He had been a Spiritualist thirty-one years. He had seen the new light constantly growing broader and brighter, until at last its beams illume the whole earth. The constant increase of the believers in Spiritualism is wonderful. Mr. Wetherbee closed with a touching account of a visit to a friend who had just lost his son, and of the consolation that the timely presentation of the truths of Spiritualism was able to impart.

Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock then spoke of the comparative significance of Easter Sunday, and the Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism, emphasizing the thought of the abundant proof of continued existence which Spiritualism furnishes, and of its silent, progressive work among all classes, church-members not excepted.

Dr. Havens was the next speaker. He spoke earnestly and forcibly, urging upon all believers in Spiritualism the necessity of applying the principles of their philosophy in a manner that will purify and elevate the heart and life.

Dr. Havens was succeeded by Mr. Whitlock, editor of The Soul magazine, who spoke of the truth and importance of the phenomena of Spiritualism and the vital necessity of presenting them in such a way, "under such conditions, as to absolutely prevent the possibility of anything like fraud, or the appearance of it, thus compelling the world of investigators to acknowledge the genuineness of the manifestations. Such manifestations, given in this way, would bring thousands into the ranks of Spiritualism, who otherwise will be a long time in finding their way into its light and freedom."

Mrs. S. Dick then took the platform. She spoke of the great significance of such an event as the advent of Modern Spiritualism, calling it the most stupendous historical event of the age. In the course of her remarks she referred to the statement which is often made, namely, that mediums lose their individuality, and said "mediums do not lose their individuality, they only come under the dominion of spiritual law. Their condition, which may seem abnormal, is not abnormal; it is perfectly natural to the higher law." Mrs. Dick concluded her remarks by expressing the belief that by-and-bye the celebration of the advent of Modern Spiritualism would become a world's jubilee.

The exercises of the afternoon closed with appropriate musical exercises.

The Sunday Evening services were very pleasantly begun with a song by Mrs. L. C. Clapp, after which Mrs. R. S. Lillie gave a fine lecture upon "The Work of Spiritualism in the World."

At the close of Mrs. Lillie's address a very satisfactory test-séance was given by Mr. F. T. Ripley. The exercises closed with an improvised poem by Mrs. Lillie, subject given from the audience.

Thus concluded the highly successful services held by the Temple Society on the 31st ult. and 1st inst., in honor of the Fortieth Anniversary.

* It is related that a certain African chief, who was made prisoner, took from the plaited braids of his hair a considerable sum of gold, kept there for the hour of need, and offered it to his captors as a ransom. Theology, made prisoner by the modern demand for free thought in matters of religion, is fain to bring forward, as a reason for its further existence, the few truths or points of value around which its extraneous system has crystallized—said truths, however, proving to be, after all, but the fundamental principles of that Spiritualism which it professes so much to despise!

Haverhill and Bradford, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism, by the Spiritualists of Haverhill and Bradford, in Brittan Hall, was a most interesting and important commemorative occasion, and constitutes "something sweet to think of," in the history and practical work of the Association.

The hall was beautifully and appropriately decorated for the Anniversary evening, with flags bearing various mottoes, together with streamers festooning the walls, intermingled with pictures illustrative of spiritualistic events, and also with photographs of some of its departed but fondly remembered advocates of the spiritualistic cause.

The Anniversary exercises were of a varied nature, extending from Friday evening, March 30th, to Sunday evening, April 1st, and brought out large gatherings to participate in the commemorative festivities, and to listen to the distinguished mediums, whose remarks were of great interest, and whose peculiar gifts, variously exercised, gave most convincing evidence of spirit-power expressed in the communion of the invisible with the visible, and by the gifts of inspiration made visible through the addresses given alike inspirationally and in full trance.

The excellent exercises in mediumship, on Friday evening, by Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball of Lawrence, deeply impressed those who listened to them, and constituted a leading factor in the proceedings of the evening, which consisted of the following, in connection with a bountiful supper which preceded it:

PROGRAMME.

1, Opening Prelude, the Benden Orchestra; 2, selection, Alpine Quartette; 3, "Sounds from the Woods," (Franke,) Henry, Frank and Louise Steele; 5, Exercises in Mediumship, Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball of Lawrence; 5, staff bells, Mrs. Benden; 6, selection, Alpine Quartette; 7, solo, "Souvenir des Alps," (A. Herman,) Henry Steele; 8, musical glasses, Mrs. Benden; 9, Quaker duet, in costume, George and Esther Hunt; 10, piano duet, Ina Page, Bessie Alexander; 11, Xylophone solo, Mrs. Benden; 12, piano duet, Bessie and Ida Alexander; 13, Romance, Fra Diavolo, (Auber,) Henry, Frank and Louisa Steele; 14, selection, Alpine Quartette.

On Saturday evening and on Sunday forenoon highly interesting and instructive inspirational addresses were made by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester of West Randolph, Vt., who had never before spoken to a Haverhill audience. She was most cordially received, and the exercise of her gifts of eloquence, assisted by superior controls, produced a lasting impression upon her auditors.

On Sunday afternoon and evening the regular services, which were a prolongation of the Anniversary exercises, were by Mr. J. Frank Baxter, assisted by Mrs. Manchester in devotional expression, in improvisation and song. "The Spiritualistic Creed" and "The Position and Tendency of Spiritualistic Thought" were Mr. Baxter's themes, and their discussion connected the present directly with the event of forty years ago which was being celebrated.

The exercises of Saturday evening and Sunday were of marked interest, and, withal, highly instructive. Mrs. M. F. Cross of Hampstead, N. H., who was the speaker March 25th, was present to enjoy the Anniversary festivities. Mrs. Manchester was also with us from the opening to the close, and was the speaker on Saturday evening and Sunday morning.

Altogether, the exercises, varied in character and more extensive than on any previous occasion, gave the fullest satisfaction to the highly intelligent audiences they attracted, and will long be remembered. E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass.—Lincoln Hall.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On Saturday, March 31st, the First Spiritualist Society of this city, in connection with the Ladies' Aid, gave a supper and entertainment in honor of the fortieth birthday of Modern Spiritualism.

One of the most elaborate suppers ever set before our Society and its friends was served in the banquet-room from 6:30 until 9 P. M.—the large tables being filled three times, and upward of two hundred people participating. The ménu was all that could be desired.

At 8 o'clock President C. E. Sturgis called the meeting to order in the large hall, and in a short but appropriate address stated the object of the Anniversary exercises.

Every seat in the hall was taken, while scores were compelled to stand. Without speaking of the exercises in detail, suffice it to say that every number on the following programme was beautifully rendered, and rapturously applauded.

The readings by Mrs. Tilton and the song by Mrs. Center were so earnestly encored that they were allowed to respond.

The Home Orchestra, Miss J. M. Little, precentor, never played better; much praise is due for their gratuitous effort, the fine talent secured for the occasion, and the grand music performed.

Before the entertainment commenced, the writer, having received extra copies of the BANNER OF LIGHT, The Religio-Philosophical Journal, The Better Way and the Wildwood Messenger for free distribution, honorable mention was made of them all, and they were eagerly sought for.

PROGRAMME.

1, Overture, "Home Circle" (Schlepgrelle), Home Orchestra, eleven pieces; 2, Quintette, "Skylark," choir; 3, reading, selected, Mrs. Emily O. Tilton; 4, song, "A Jolly Good Laugh" (Thomas), Mr G. L. Darling; 5, waltz, "Light and Shade" (Strauss), Home Orchestra, eleven pieces; 6, "The Song That Reaches My Heart" (Jordan), Miss D. F. Pray; 7, address, Mrs. S. R. Stevens, of Boston; 8, song, "Joan of Arc" (Bordese), Mrs. Florence N. Center; 9, violin solo, "Carnival de Venice" (Dancla), Miss M. A. W. Prescott; 10, duet, "What Are the Wild Waves Saying" (Glover), Mr. G. L. Darling and Mrs. F. N. Center; 11, quartette, "When I Go," Mrs. Sarah A. Von Blascom; 12, "Galaxy of Song" (Prendiville), Home Orchestra; 13, reading, selected, Mrs. Emily O. Tilton; 14, song, "Lullaby, from Erminie," Mrs. L. V. Wescott; 15, piano solo, selected, Miss M. A. W. Prescott; 16, song, "Friar of Order Grey" (Shield), Mr. G. L. Darling; 17, schottische, "Old Homestead" (Zimmerman), Home Orchestra.

SUNDAY.

Services were continued in Music Hall, Sunday, at 10:30 A. M., Mrs. S. R. Stevens speaking upon "The Outlook of Spiritualism," and Mr. E. W. Emerson following with a platform séance, reporting many of the spirit friends.

The services were enlivened by congregational singing with good effect.

The two P. M. session was opened by the Home Orchestra rendering selections of their fine music. Edgar W. Emerson then spoke upon the growth of Spiritualism, concluding with a séance.

The closing service, at 7 P. M., was devoted to the demonstration of spirit-return, interspersed with singing by the choir and selections by the Home Orchestra. Mr. Emerson's control never did better. Many of the "loved ones" then reported, and were fully recognized by the large audience present. W. W. CURRIER.

Titusville, Pa.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Our celebration of the Anniversary commenced on Friday evening, March 30th, by a sociable at Barnsdall Hall, which was a success in every particular.

Saturday evening, March 31st, David M. King of Mantua, O., delivered a fine address, followed by some excellent psychometric readings.

Sunday, April 1st—afternoon and evening—was devoted to services appropriate to the Anniversary. The hall was beautifully decorated for the occasion, the plants and pictures being supplied by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Barnsdall.

Prof. King spoke, on all occasions, from questions chosen by the large audiences present, and followed his remarks with readings very instructive and truthful, as showing spirit-presence, power and intelligence with clear and cheering proof of continued existence.

Sunday evening, April 9th, he crowned his efforts with a fine lecture for the Spiritual Conference Society, at Barnsdall Hall, on "The Scientific Origin and Basis of Phrenology and Psychology," holding the closest attention of his hearers for one and one-half hours. [Mr. King will return here next month to instruct a class of fifty students, and lecture for the friends and seekers of truth and progress.]

That our gospel of light may rapidly spread and prosper, is the earnest prayer of

The Daily Times of this place for March 31st announces that the Fortieth Anniversary was celebrated in Harmony Hall, Thursday evening, by a social reünion under the auspices of the Society for the Investigation of Spiritualism.

About two hundred persons were present. The room was neatly decorated for the occasion. The evening's programme opened with an address from the President of the Society, ex-Mayor Fell, who took a review of the rise and progress of Modern Spiritualism during the last forty years. A brief history of the Fox girls was given; and it was stated that at their advent the phenomena were received with acclamation by the Christian community, but as soon as it was found that the teachings from the spirit-world clashed with the dogmas and creeds of their churches, a system of persecution equal to that existing in the days of the martyred Hypatia (year 414) was commenced, only of a more refined order and in keeping with the days in which we live. He then pointed out that Spiritualism was of no modern date, but had existed in all ages of the world, and among all races and tribes of the human family; that its teachings were in harmony with the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, and especially in conformity with his "Sermon on the Mount." Those who wished to get a true insight into what Spiritualism consists of, should possess themselves of a book, recently published, entitled "Outside the Gates." He said Spiritualism was neither dead nor exposed, but that it was permeating all conditions of society and all classes of people throughout the world, and that men who imagined that they exposed Spiritualism only exposed themselves.

The remaining portion of the programme, which consisted as follows, was finely rendered: Piano solo, Prof. Sharp; song, Mr. Ed. Rendell; piano solo, Miss Peters; piano solo (encored), Prof. F. Bourne; song, Miss Russell; recitation, Miss Kettle; music (encored), Miss and Masters North; recitation, Miss Shaw; piano solo (encored), Prof. Bourne; Highland Fling (in costume), Miss Maude Underhill.

"At conclusion of the first part of the programme," says The Times, "the floor was cleared for dancing, which was kept up till about 2 A. M., about which time the company was joined by several gentlemen from the civic banquet. The ladies who had charge of the refreshments deserve every credit for the manner in which they catered to the tastes of their guests."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

As a member of the Pacific Coöperative Spiritual Union, I desire herewith to send Anniversary greetings and congratulations to the Spiritual societies of the East.

We have here a flourishing Society of over one hundred members. March 31st was our annual election of officers. Paul A. Smith was our able speaker on that day. April 1st was devoted entirely to Anniversary services, and proved a remarkable occasion—great in the interest manifested in the cause of Spiritualism.

Our services were held in the old Methodist Episcopal church, 3d street, between B and C. On Saturday, March 31st, the exercises began at 10:30 A. M., and comprised: Music by the Orchestra; reading, poem, "More, Ever More," Mrs. Mantle; song, "Joy to the World," by the audience; a Facts Meeting (Personal Experience), by different members; and a song, "Where the Roses Ne'er Shall Wither," by the audience.

In the afternoon music by the Orchestra; recitation, "Not Before Pa," Miss Minnie Parkinson; duet, a song, Misses Stella Case, Ida Johnson; Mediums' Meeting, and a closing song, "When Shall We All Meet Again?" by the audience, constituted the order of procedure.

In the evening from 7:30 to 11:30 a "social hop" was participated in.

Sunday, April 1st, 10:30 A. M., the meeting commenced with music by the Orchestra; followed by remarks and poem, "What of It?" Mrs. M. A. White; piano duet, Misses Hoffman and Nichols; address, Rev. N. F. Ravlin; and closing song and chorus, "The Song of a Thousand Years."

At 2 P. M., piano solo, "Bird's Call," original, by Mrs. Melville; poem, "Spiritualism 1848–1888," Mrs. Dr. Taylor; song, "Where Is Heaven?" Mr. Melville, by Felix Martin; the regular Anniversary Address, by Dr. T. B. Taylor, A. M.; Mrs. M. H. Johnson, (elocutionist) in "Questions and Answers," a poem; and song, trio, occupied the time.

At 7:30 P. M., we had music by the Orchestra; recitation, "Anniversary Poem," Mrs. Julia Tate; recitation, "Look at Home," a poem, Master Freddie Schroder; "Judge Not," a song, Mrs. Mantle; short addresses by different ladies and gentleman; song, "Rap, Rap, Rap"; and closing remarks by Paul A. Smith.

In the evening a concert occupied the time, the following programme being carried out to the satisfaction of all present: Music, Reform School Band; Song, "Welcome," Mrs. Ayers; Recitation, Harry Swan; Jubilee Song, Reform School Band; Reading, Mr. Thompson; "Dream of Heaven," Solo and Chorus; Reading, Miss Shipp; Music, Reform School Band; Recitation, Miss Stephens; Music (violin solo), Master Cornell; Poem (written inspirationally), Mrs. Ayers; Jubilee Song, Reform School Band; Recitation, Miss Buck; Reading; Music, Reform School Band; Benediction, Mrs. Walton.

Sunday morning, lecture and tests by Mrs. Lunt Parker. 2 P. M., address by Mrs. Ferth of Coldwater, who gave a fine discourse, and was fully appreciated by all present.

3 P. M., conference meeting and tests.

4 P. M., address by Mrs. Dr. Walton of Williamson, which was full of good logic and sound reasoning.

7:30 P. M., lecture by Mrs. Lunt Parker. Lily May Lunt gave a number of psychometric readings and tests that were highly appreciated by the audience.

The hall was filled to its utmost capacity at all of the meetings. The genial presence of Dr. A. W. Edson and wife was missed here on account of sickness—he not being able to attend; now that they have gone to Ohio and the South to regain his health, may they return to us again in a short time fully restored, to take up the work as in the past.

W. T. PARKER.

Albany, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary by the First Spiritual Society of this city was a grand success in every way, socially, financially and otherwise.

We had a very fine programme arranged for the literary and musical entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, etc. Our President, Mr. Fero, made the address of welcome, and Mr. Bishop A. Beals gave brief remarks, relating to the birth and aims of Modern Spiritualism, which were very appropriate for the occasion.

Our hall was well filled by a very attentive and intelligent audience, among which were an unusually large number of young people who were almost entire strangers to a gathering of this kind. They were attracted by the announcement that after the literary exercises were concluded an orchestra would be in attendance and dancing indulged in until 1 A. M. At 9:30 the chairs were removed and the grand march began with over seventy-five couples.

One and all were highly pleased with the entire entertainment, which was gotten up and managed by that most valuable auxiliary to our society, the "Ladies' Aid."

This was the second occasion upon which our society had celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary, and as our condition and prospects are far better than at any time since our organization, we are confident that we, as a society, will celebrate many of the Anniversaries to come with ever-increasing interest and enthusiasm.

J. D. CHISM, JR., Sec'y.

The Anniversary in England.

In the issue of The Two Worlds on the eve of the late anniversary, Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten gave the following eloquent review of the origin, rise and progress of Modern Spiritualism, and clear and comprehensive statement of what it has taught and still teaches, and of the benefits it has conferred and continues to confer on humanity:

THE THIRTY-FIRST OF MARCH, 1848–1888.

On Saturday night, the thirty-first of this present month, will be commemorated one of the most striking and unprecedented evidences of Divine influence exercised upon and through the human race that has ever yet been recorded on the page of history.

On that night will be felt a thrill of universal sympathy, a wave of coincident thought—in a word, one common sentiment of remembrance will stir the hearts and fire the brains of millions of human beings scattered all over the civilized world. Though removed from each other by vast distances, and separated by differing forms of language, class, caste, custom and external circumstances, tens of thousands in North and South America, the East and West Indies, many countries of Asia and Africa, China, Japan, Australasia and the Isles of the seas; Hindostan, Egypt, Rome, Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Germany, France, all the Colonies, and throughout the British Kingdom will unite, either in public or private celebrations, or at least in acts, words, or thoughts of thankfulness and interest for one common object, that object being the memory of March 31st, 1848. The event thus throbbing like a mighty pulse-beat throughout the earth, was an occurrence that took place in a very remote village, in a small and lonely cottage, and through the instrumentality of an obscure couple and two little children. The story of the little haunted dwelling at Hydesville, in the State of New York, America, is now an old, old tale, although only forty years of age; and it has been said, and sung, and written of so often that it would be wearisome as a nursery rhyme to reiterate it. And yet, to comprehend why the links of a common and world-wide sympathy have gone out from that tiny cottage at Hydesville, and why the woof spun that night by the hands of a group of humble children of the people should now form a cable that anchors millions upon millions of far removed nationalities with each other, it is necessary to recall briefly the first act of the wondrous drama—simple and all too familiar as it has become. In a neat, but very small cottage sleeping-room, two little sisters are sitting up in their bed, and playfully calling to an invisible knocker, with whose presence—palpable only to the ear, but never to the eye—they have grown familiar. "Now, Mr. Splitfoot, do as I do," cries the youngest. The child counts five. Swift, as a flash, the knocker imitates, and knocks five times. She then makes noiseless motions in the air—answered still, each motion, by the viewless knocker. To that little one's common sense a conclusion was arrived at, that it may yet take forty years more to beat into the heads of as many University Professors; but the child had no learning, nothing but common sense to guide her, and so she cried aloud, "Oh, mother! it can see, and it can hear."

From that text comes the first spirit circle. The mother, father, and then all the neighbors called in one after another, to the number of over a hundred, spending the live-long night asking questions, and, by signal knocks, receiving in every instance correct answers. Ay, and after! What then? Scenes of violence, tumult, inquiry, amazement! The poor mother's hair turning from jet black to snowy white in a week; the little children growing into careworn, terrified, persecuted women in a few months. Their names sounded from land to land—sometimes in worship, sometimes in fierce anathema. Thousands going forth to persecute, and returning to their homes to find their own hearth firesides the scenes of similar phenomena. The power now grows from simple knockings to voices; forms of the dead in the panoply of life—some in glory, some in Cimmerian darkness. Anon ponderable bodies begin to act like things of life. Tables, chairs and household furniture become endowed with motion, and spell out the names of the dead—ever of the dead—but all in life again now. Messages are signalled forth. Calm, wise, orderly directions are given for the working of the telegraph, the formation of circles, the conduct and management of public gatherings for inquiry and discussion. And now, Science puts on her authoritative cap and gown, and says, "This must not be, shall not be; it is contrary to my dictum, and, therefore, cannot be." Theories, the wildest and strangest, are invented, only to be crushed out or laughed to scorn by the new phenomena which spring up spontaneously on every side, whilst thousands of mediums of every class and grade arise under the resistless force of the power that is on them to fill up the ranks of the forming legions. And now the power has expanded from mere rappings to tiltings, flight of ponderable bodies through the air, motions of all manner of inanimate objects—music, drawings, writings and paintings are made by invisible agency. Trance, with all its wonders of seership, speaking with new tongues, writings, pantomimic action, impressional and inspirational speaking, clairvoyance, clairaudience, and influence in every form seizes upon all varieties of mind. Healings are performed by the multitude. Each Sabbath vast crowds assemble—some to mock, some to listen, all to wonder at the bursts of oratory poured from untrained tongues, and burning eloquence sounding in tones of high command, messages of power from the realms of the living, the immortal, once called "dead." The tongue fails, and the pen drops from the palsied hand in the vain attempt to depict the mighty, swift, but irresistible spirit of change that went out from that haunted cottage on the night of the 31st of March, and after traversing a hundred thousand miles of iron road throughout the length and breadth of the thirty-six States of America, stretched away across the white-crested waves of the Atlantic, Pacific, Northern and Southern seas; lighted its beacon fires on every high hill; set up its standards of immortality in every land of civilization; and, in the name of Spiritualism, has commenced to lay the foundations of a new earth and a new heaven. The 31st of March, 1848-1888! Only forty years between these epochs, but who can number the wonders that have been achieved, the terrific momentum with which the spirit of the age has mounted the supreme heights of mental and spiritual progress?

"Shall I tell you what I have gained?" cries the voice of one from the midst of life's mighty battle-field, standing in the centre of an immense crowd, all singing a hymn to God the Spirit—a dedication hymn, for she who speaks stands, trowel in hand, ready to lay the foundation-stone of a new spiritual temple.* There are many gentlemen and some dainty ladies there; crowds of brave, bold, resolute Lancashire men; also operatives and mechanics—for the place is Oldham, and the time less than one year ago. There are groups of sad-eyed "mill-hands," bright and happy now, all turning kind eyes and eager looks on the speaker. The solemn, thunderous choral tones of the hymn are hushed, and thus does the voice "cry aloud." You would know something of what I owe to the cause we are met here this hour to honor. Listen, I will tell you what Spiritualism has taught, and what good it has done for humanity:

"1st. It proves man's immortality, and the existence of a Spiritual Universe.

2d. It destroys all fear of death, annihilates the doctrine of eternal punishment, and substitutes the cheering assurance of eternal progress.

3d. It sweeps away the idea of a personal devil, and locates the sources of evil in man's own imperfections.

4th. It denies the immoral and soul-corrupting doctrine of vicarious atonements for sin, and on the testimony of millions of immortal spirits, solemnly affirms that every guilty soul must arise and become its own saviour.

5th. It ignores the degrading conception of a partial and vindictive God, and substitutes the worship of an Infinite, Eternal, and all-perfect Spirit, an Alpha and Omega, all Love, Wisdom and Law.

6th. It demolishes the absurd and materialistic conception of the theological heaven and hell, making each a state of happiness or misery, dependent on the good or evil within the soul itself.

7th. It is the death-blow to superstition, sectarianism and religious persecution; but the friend and promoter of all reforms that tend to elevate and benefit humanity.

8th. Whilst Spiritualism proclaims that there is a standard of truth in everything, it acknowledges man's incapacity to discover all truth, and therefore it fetters no one's opinion, and teaches, but never forces its beliefs on any one.

9th. Concerning all spiritual life, state and being, Spiritualism accepts no theories that are not sustained by proven facts and corroborative testimony.

10th. Its phenomena—being all based upon immutable principles of law—open up endless arenas of new research for science, and its consensus of revelations being founded upon facts, tends to place true religion on the basis of science, and vitalize science with all that is true and practical in religion.

11th. Spiritualism is a ceaseless incentive to practice good; it reunites the friends separated by death; strengthens the weak and desolate by the presence of angel guidance and protection; cheers the afflicted with the certainty of another and better world, where justice will be done and every wrong will be righted. It is terrible only to the guilty, proving that spirit eyes can and do read every secret crime, and that all crimes must be abandoned and atoned for by personal suffering and personal compensation, before any guilty soul can attain happiness hereafter.

12th. Spiritualists have no creed, but may all unite in the following simple summary:

I believe in the Fatherhood of God,
The Brotherhood of Man,
The Immortality of the Soul,
Personal Responsibility,
Compensation and Retribution hereafter for all the good or evil deeds done here,
And a path of eternal progress open to every human soul that wills to tread the path of eternal good."

And all these noble teachings have grown out of the grand work THE SPIRITS have effected since the year 1848!

FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM. By Warren Chase. A Sequel to "The Life-Line of the Lone One," an Autobiography of the Author as the World's Child, who gave the First Public Lectures in this Country in Defense of Modern Spirit Intercourse, and whose Name is First on the List of Calls for Copies of "Nature's Divine Revelations," when in press in 1847. 12mo, cloth, pp. 324. Boston: Colby & Rich, Publishers, 9 Bosworth street.

Experiments in mesmerism, which in 1843 and thereabouts attracted much public attention, included among the liberal and progressive minds who were drawn to it, the author of this volume. He had been laboring for some time in an effort to furnish better homes for the masses than they were at that time, and for an unlimited period before, forced to accept, as all the comforts and conveniences of life the broad earth, controlled by greedy monopolists, though assumed to belong to God and all his children, could allot them. The Socialism of Fourier occupied all his time, and preëmpted all his thought. In 1844 his labors in this direction culminated in the institution of the Wisconsin Phalanx, though twenty or more similar associations existed, including the Brook Farm at West Roxbury, all of which, with the exception of the Wisconsin, proved financial failures.

But Mr. Chase through all this period did not entirely lose sight of mesmerism, and its revelations of occult powers, and of laws and operations of nature he had not before known to exist. To him these revelations were of the highest import. They foreshadowed an existence beyond the present, and through the rifts in the dark cloud of agnosticism that hung over his path, he caught glimpses of a new world, of the reality of which he had not to that time entertained the remotest conception, and of which he now says: "I am partially as familiar as with this; for there lives the companion who struggled with me; there also are the other two members of my family who passed over when we did not know where they had gone, but supposed, and it seemed most likely to us, as we put their bodies in the little grave, that it was the last we should ever see or hear of them."

There were many premonitions, remarks Mr. Chase, in the early part of this century, that some great event would mark the history of mankind within a score or so of years. Some predicted the end of the world, others a great social change, others the long-looked for millennium when Satan should be bound for a thousand years. None of these speculations of the nature of the expected great event proved true; still the event came, and had its birth, not in a manger as a similar influx of spiritual light dawned a century less than two thousand years ago, but in a humble home in a secluded village, where it was least expected to have its rise.

The Universalist Church is spoken of as being first affected by the New Revelation; from it came T. L. Harris, S. B. Brittan, R. P. Ambler, William Fishbough and John M. Spear as its advocates. A year before its advent at Hydesville, the book of A. J. Davis, "Nature's Divine Revelations," of which Mr. Chase speaks in the highest terms of praise, was published. Knowing the conditions under which this volume was produced, it established in Mr. Chase's mind a conviction of the origin of the intelligence received through persons under the mesmeric influence, and from that day to this, that belief has never been disturbed by a single doubt, because the conviction in his mind was not simply one of belief, but one of knowledge.

Of S. B. Brittan, mentioned as one of the early advocates and defenders of Modern Spiritualism, Mr. Chase remarks that he "passed over too early to do all the good he could have done here with his masterly eloquence and trenchant pen," both of which were effectively "active in the cause to the day of his death."

The Univercœlum, edited by Mr. Brittan, was published four months prior to the recognition of the raps at Hydesville as a means of communication with the spirit-world. It was a high toned, literary, philosophical journal, making no allusion to the "Rochester Knockings"; but to its columns Mr. Chase was a contributor, and in it he published an article dated March 20th, 1848, ten days before the occurrences at Hydesville, which contained the following passage—a prediction that was soon to find its fulfillment:

"The evident signs which this age bears of a transition, show plainly that they (the current theology and philosophy) must now give way to a new system, containing—as the greater circle contains the less—all truth and light which is within its sphere; thus rendering useful the little truth which past ages have discovered, and embracing in its wider range all knowledge contained in former systems."

Up to 1850, says Mr. Chase, the want of a spiritual press was greatly felt by him. Singular as it may seem, the only paper in which he could freely express his convictions of the truth of Spiritualism was the Boston Investigator, in the columns of which he in September of that year published an article on the immortality of the soul, advocating its plausibility and reasonableness and stating his faith in its reality, though up to this time he had seen very few of the physical manifestations, basing his convictions upon what he had received as evidence of spirit-life in communications given him through mesmerized subjects. He mentions one interesting experience of this nature happening to him.

Mr. Chase did not have to wait long for a paper in which to place his views before the public. The Spirit Messenger was started about this time by Apollos Munn and R. P. Ambler, and therein many articles from his pen appeared. Those articles, a few of which are given, show the great caution he exercised in his advocacy of the new philosophy. This course appears to have been adopted more as one of policy than of desire, evidently with the belief that a more lasting good can be done a dry and dusty soil by a few drops frequently applied than by dashing upon it a flood of water. They also show, as he remarks, "how strenuously I then tried, as I ever since have, to keep Spiritualism out of Christianity, and Christianity out of Spiritualism, having ever looked upon the dogmas of Christianity as the only poison Spiritualism is likely to take that will destroy its usefulness, if not its life." In this view, he says, many of the ablest defenders of Spiritualism have agreed with him: Prof. Hare, William Denton, H. C. Wright, Dr. Hallock, A. J. Davis, Dr. Henry F. Gardner, and others.

The reminiscences of early days of Spiritualism Mr. Chase relates are exceedingly interesting, and serve to bring to the minds of those whose connection with it dates from that period, recollections of places, persons and events that had faded from their memory. They were days when contentions arose between believers and non-believers, but seldom among believers themselves. The revelations were too grand, the channels of communication with the spirit-world too sacred and precious to be made subjects of suspicion and doubt; the days of materialistic Spiritism had not arrived.

In chapter fourth names and brief memoranda are given of those who volunteered and enlisted in the cause during the first five years of its existence as distinctive Spiritualism. Mention is made of the liberal attitude of the New York Tribune, at that time owned and conducted by Horace Greeley, and the chapter closes with a notice of the sudden demise of William White, formerly one of the publishers of the BANNER OF LIGHT, who is alluded to as "among the best and noblest workers in spreading the new gospel, and one who lived up to its purest teachings"; an opinion that all who knew him will cheerfully endorse.

A chapter devoted to giving some account of the author's political life notes that in 1846 he was elected by the County of Fond du Lac, Wis., to the Constitutional Convention of the State. His first speech in that body was against capital punishment, and on the rights of married women to property which came to them from others than their husbands. The constitution framed by this Convention was not accepted by the popular vote, and a second was called, to which Mr. Chase was also elected. The work of this Convention was accepted. Subsequently Mr. Chase was elected to the State Senate. Upon his induction he seems to have been the prototype of Bradlaugh, for he refused to be sworn into office, but affirmed, as the Society of Friends do, believing the oath to be a farce. He took an active and leading part in the organization of the Free Soil Party, and received in 1849 its nomination for Governor, but failed of election, the State being strongly Democratic. Other trials and triumphs in the political arena are reported, which we have not space to enumerate. During his travels and labors therein he was invariably the champion of human rights and reformatory measures, never forgetting the cause of Spiritualism, but advocating it wherever and whenever in public and private he could do so.

Following the life-line of his domestic life, Mr. Chase quotes largely from his diaries, showing the wide extent and scope of his labors in the spiritual field, accompanying them during the war of the rebellion with an active tongue and pen in defense of the Union. Of this time he says: "Until near the close of the war, there was seldom a week, and in some periods not a day in many consecutive weeks, that I did not make one or more public speeches in favor of sustaining the national union at all hazards; but on Sundays I almost invariably spoke on Spiritualism." Items like the following frequently occur in this chapter:

"Delivered one hundred and thirty-six lectures this year, and in eleven of the States—thirty-one on the war and one hundred and five on Spiritualism—for all of which I received $449, which would not much more than pay my traveling expenses."

"May 7th, 1865. Gave two Sunday lectures at Hastings, and got $1.75, and rode six miles to deliver them; even this was better than I was many times paid; and yet I never faltered or neglected an opportunity to tell the few that would come to hear me what I could about our philosophy and facts."

Of a camp-meeting at Silver Lake, Mass., in August, 1873, under the management of Drs. Gardner and Richardson, he says: "It was a camp-meeting never to this day excelled by any of the hundreds held since, and none was ever better managed. Reporters estimated fifteen thousand people there at one time." It was very appropriate for Mr. Chase on one occasion when, we are told, placing his name on a hotel register he gave as his place of residence "United States," for he seems to have lived in every portion of the Union, and to have been as migratory as a Tartar. The pages of the BANNER testify to this, and the audiences he has addressed, the individuals with whom he has formed a personal acquaintance, are more in number than we will venture to estimate; while the number of those who have been led to light and mental freedom through the influence of his voice and pen is much larger.

Chapter seven relates what he has learned from his forty years' intercourse with spirits, and imparts valuable truths. In chapter eight selections are given of articles contributed by Mr. Chase to various spiritualistic journals, with the general style and character of which our readers are familiar. The closing chapter consists of selections of poetry of various degrees of merit, some of them without merit other than, as is intimated, suggestive of thought, the thought in our case being that what is said might have appeared to better advantage in plain prose without the "jingle." An excellent portrait of Mr. Chase is given as a frontispiece. The book will be valued more for the truths it contains, and the active, useful life it describes, than for its literary merit; and is deserving of a place in the library of every Spiritualist, as a work of reference for all who would familiarize themselves with the history of Modern Spiritualism.

WILLIMANTIC.—A correspondent writes April 16th: "At the annual meeting of the Spiritual Society, holden the 12th inst., the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Mr. J. C. Bill; Vice-President, Mrs. J. C. Robinson; Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. W. D. Clark; Trustees, Mr. Dumont Kingsley, Mr. H. N. Bill, Miss Eunice Ripley.

These constitute an entirely new Board of Officers, and like the traditional 'new broom' it is expected they will infuse new life into our Society—in which good work on their part they need the assistance and coöperation of each and every member.

We had the test medium, Edgar W. Emerson, with us on the 10th and 16th instants. The first evening he gave us the names of thirty-nine spirits who were present, and who were recognized by the audience; on the last evening he gave the names of thirty, and many characteristics of them while in earth-life, besides messages to friends. Mr. Emerson created a very favorable impression during his short stay among us, and we hope to have him here again after he returns from the Pacific coast.

April 29th and May 6th we have Dr. J. C. Street of Boston, Mass.; May 13th, George A. Fuller, M. D., of Dover, Mass.; last two Sundays of May no one is yet engaged; the four Sundays of June we have Prof. W. F. Peck, who placed us in the right road when he was with us in February and March last.

Our Lyceum meets every Sabbath, the order of exercises being generally as follows: Singing, Reading, Singing by the Lyceum; Calisthenics; Conversation on lessons; Marching; Mottoes and recitations; speeches by the Lyceum and visitors, closing with songs. It is a very pleasing sight to see the five-year-olds and fifties marching and going through the wing movements together.

Our Lyceum is increasing all the time, and is evidently on a firmer basis than it has been in the past few years."

GRAND RAPIDS.—Charles M. Potter, Secretary Michigan State Spiritualists' Association, 15 Spring street, writes: "Dr. W. E. Reid, a wonderful test medium and magnetic healer, who has lately become a resident of Grand Rapids, and who has been giving free half-hour tests in slate-writing, independent writing and clairaudience, by answering sealed letters in the pockets of persons in the audience at the Sunday evening meetings of the Spiritualists held in Royal Arcanum Hall, celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism by giving a public séance in Power's Opera House on Thursday evening, March 29th.

The Hon. L. V. Moulton spoke for an hour, giving an outline of the advancement of Spiritualism from the 'knockings' at Hydesville to the present time, when it is being honored by anniversary celebrations over the entire civilized world. He then showed the difference between slate-writing as done by so-called exposers of Spiritualism and the genuine manifestations of spirit power.

Dr. Ross sang solos before and after the lecture, and was warmly applauded.

Dr. Reid then answered a few questions by independent writing.

When Dr. Reid called for slates at least half of the audience arose, and started for the stage. There was no cabinet, no darkness, but each person held his or her own slate right on the front of the stage, in full view of the audience, with electric lights above and the footlights below."

From sixty to seventy communications were written during the evening—some of the frames of the slates being secured against opening by unique contrivances on the part of those who brought them: "Nearly all were recognized. We look upon the occasion as a great success. Good notices of the meeting appeared in all the daily papers."

MARCHE.—T. Cholnski writes: "The dream of the world of its ultimate peaceful federation, and 'a Parliament of Peace,' will to my mind prove nothing but Utopian, so long as there are emperors and kings, and nations like Poland and Ireland are tyrannized, whose best children are being martyred or rot in dungeons.

Germany, and probably all Europe, to-day, would be Mahommetan, and ruled by a Sultan, if Poland had not driven the Turks from Vienna—had not so many times prohibited them and the ferocious Tartars from further invasions. And what has Europe done with this land? All the murderous wars of late are the consequences of the crime done to Poland, and never can the world think of a peaceful federation till there is justice done to her outraged people. Never will tyrants willingly restore their prey, and free America, it seems to me, can never participate in federation to suppress the freedom of other nations—which it would be liable to do if Poland or Ireland should revolt against their oppressors. Take political crimes out of the world first, and then think about peaceful federation."

April Magazines.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—The first part of an interesting account of Maximilian and his relations to the government of Mexico, leads the contents. The purpose of the author, Arthur Howard Noll, is to correct misstatements, and to show that Maximilian was a prince of pure character and excellent motives, and that his course was not the crime it is assumed to have been. Portraits of Juarez, Maximilian and Carlota, with other engravings, are given in illustration. "The First Owner of Boston" is a narrative of William Blackstone's participation in the affairs of Boston in 1630, and later in those of Rhode Island—his name being then spelled Blaxton. In "My Converts," Rose Eytinge pleasantly describes how she has led a number of people to a better understanding of the theatre, through "a path that led them out of the dull, cold atmosphere of everyday selfishness, into the clear, sweet air of harmless amusement, where thoughts were turned toward kindliness and charity." "The Belles of Old Philadelphia" is a descriptive sketch, accompanied by portraits of notable society ladies in the early days of that city. Among the remaining contents are "The Moravian Easter," "The Man I Was Looking For," excellent short stories, sketches, poems, etc. The American Magazine Company, New York.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.—A consideration of the question propounded by many to whom it is proposed to supplant popular religion, "What Will You Give in Its Place?" by B. F. Underwood, leads the contents of this month's issue, closing with the following paragraph: "The untrammeled exercise of reason we regard not simply as a right, but a duty. Beliefs we account neither moral nor immoral in themselves, although they may be good or evil in their effects. We judge men by character and conduct, and not by their creeds; by their standing as citizens, not by the frequency of their prayers, or their professions of faith. We would substitute anthropology for theology, science for superstition, courage and independence of thought for servility to creeds." A large variety of subjects are treated upon from a liberal point of view by the editor, and other able writers. Waco, Tex.: J D. Shaw.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—An attractive feature of this month's issue is "A Revival of Shakspeare's Midsummer Night's Dream," by Geo. E. Montgomery, profusely illustrated, partly in color. New chapters are given of E. P. Roe's Southern story, "Miss Lou." Max O'Rell writes of "Home Life in France," and a spirited sketch of life "Among the Circassian Mountaineers" is from the pen of David Ker. Two interesting biographical sketches are given: "Reminiscences of Kaiser Wilhelm," by M. D. Conway, with portrait and other illustrations, and "Louisa May Alcott," by Lucy C. Lillie. Several poems of much merit are in this number, among them "Inborn," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and a very just and worthy tribute to Henry Bergh by Herman L. Ensign. The Cosmopolitan Magazine Co., New York.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD, allusion to which we have already made editorially, has for its chief illustrations an engraving of the Foyer of the Theatre Francais, in Paris, on a "First Night," and one of the Green Room, the paper to which they are related, "Les Prémieres," being further illustrated with portraits of the leading dramatic critics of Paris. An interesting illustrated article upon "Lace-making in Ireland" will attract the special attention of readers. Among the contributors to this number are Ouida, Lady Lindsay, the Countess Martinengo-Cesaresco, and the editor, Oscar Wilde. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE BIZARRE. NOTES AND QUERIES.—"Speculations Concerning Matter," "Terms Used in Talking to Domestic Animals," "Periodicity—Immortality," and "Notes on the History of the Magic Lantern," with several pages of questions and answers, form the contents. Manchester, N. H.: S. C. & L. M. Gould. For sale by Colby & Rich, Boston.

THE SIDEREAL MESSENGER reprints from the Edinburg Review an instructive article upon "Astronomical Photography," and supplies an interesting miscellany for students. Northfield, Minn.: W. W. Payne.

Slate-Writing in Dayton, Ohio.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Myself and wife recently were present at a séance held at the residence of one of the most respected business men of this city, Mrs. Seery of Cincinnati being the medium for independent slate-writing and trumpet-speaking. As a test-medium Mrs. Seery has but few equals in this section, and no superior. She should be kept constantly employed in the work to which she has been summoned by the spirit-world.

The company in attendance numbered about twenty. A double slate, that had been thoroughly examined, was, with a grain of pencil enclosed within it, handed to Mrs. Seery. In a few moments the sound of writing upon the inner surface was heard, and shortly after three raps, clearly heard by all in the room, indicating that the message was completed. The slate was handed to my wife, who, upon opening it, found a communication from her sister, who passed to spirit-life about five years ago, signed Belle, expressing her joy at being able to thus make her presence known. My wife recognized the writing as identical with her sister's when in this life.

A dark séance was next held. The company was arranged in a circle, two ordinary tin trumpets being placed on the floor in the centre. After singing the manifestations began, and my wife's sister communicated with her by means of one of the trumpets. Addressing her, Belle said: "My dearest sister, I am so glad you came here to-night, for I want to tell you that I am with you all the time, and how glad I am to have the chance to talk to you. Don't be ashamed to tell all you hear and see here to-night, for these are the most glorious gifts of God."

Turning to me, she thanked me for bringing her sister. She then kissed her sister and returned the trumpet to the floor. We were next favored with a beautiful song by the spirit sister of our hostess. Other beautiful songs were sung and communications given, each one present receiving a message.

I am happy to say in conclusion that my wife, who has been from her youth a strict Presbyterian, is now an enthusiastic Spiritualist. Thus the good work goes on.

Respectfully yours, W. A. LEWIS.

THE INVISIBLE.

If there is naught but what we see,
What is the wide world worth to me?
But is there naught save what we see?

. . . . . .

If there is naught but what we see,
The friend I loved is lost to me;
He fell asleep; who dares to say
His spirit is so far away?
Who knows what wings are round about?
These thoughts—who proves but from without
They still are whispered? Who can think
They rise from morning's food and drink?
These thoughts that stream on like the sea
And darkly beat incessantly
The feet of some great hope. . . .

. . . . . .

Because he never comes, and stands
And stretches out to me both hands,
Because he never leans before
The gate, when I set wide the door
At morning, nor is ever found
Just at my side when I turn round,
Half thinking I shall meet his eyes,
From watching the broad moon-globe rise—
For all this shall I homage pay
To Death, grow cold of heart, and say:
"He perished, and has ceased to be;
Another comes, but never he"?
Nay, by our wondrous being, nay!
Although his face I never see
Through all the infinite To Be,
I know he lives and cares for me.

Churches Confessing their Decline; Decrease of Church Attendance; Currents of Modern Thought, etc.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A circular signed by bishops, clergy and pastors of all Protestant denominations has been issued calling upon pastors of the churches to join the National Reform Association. The circular gives as a reason and motive for such an association the increase of vice and crime, decadence of church attendance, growth of the liquor power, and a general demoralization of society from specified causes.

What a confession! and by the leaders in the Church. Whose the fault? In commenting upon the subject matter of the circular, I observe, as my first point, the declension of church attendance. A census, by actual and repeated count, has been made in prominent cities and towns, and the results given to the public. The Philadelphia Times sent out responsible parties for many Sundays, and simultaneous count was made in all the churches. The tables are published. So in Chicago, Cincinnati and other places. A small minority of men was found in all the churches. About a year since the St. Louis Globe-Democrat gave a sample of the city Sunday. The item was copied extensively in the Eastern papers. The substance of it was that on a given Sunday there were at the different places of out-door amusements 85,000 males. At the same time in the churches, all told, there were in the aggregate of men, women and children, 10,000. I cannot ask space for lengthy but authentic tables, showing the growing breach between the Church and all grades of society. Nor perhaps is it necessary, since the astonishing fact is conceded. The Evangelical Alliance has shown it among all the civilized nations. Its statistics and statements are published by its own sanction and direction in a volume called "Infidelity."

The religious press even informs its readers that "Mohammedism is increasing faster than all combined Christendom." It has gained forty-six millions since the Reformation, by peaceful missionary conquests. Said Canon Taylor, in the English Church Congress: "Christianity gains thousands; Mohammedanism millions." In our own country we have, as in this official circular representing the leaders of all Protestant bodies, the unqualified statement that there is an alarming "increase of vice and crime," and the devotion of Sundays to other purposes than the attendance at churches. Now in this problem of Churchianity what are the factors and the facts?

First: According to the recognized tables of Böhme, Wager and Schem, the natural increase of the population of the globe is annually about eight millions; so that the increase of churches does not keep pace with the increase of the world's population. Then, at the present time, the Christian population is barely one-fourth of all the nations of the earth, and is not even holding, numerically, its own territory; and to this we must add confessions, such as those expressed in the circular, that forces hostile to Churchianity are upon the increase on every side.

What does all this mean? and the clerical complaint that not only the masses but the literary and scientific classes are turning their backs on the churches?

Why are not the Whittiers, Emersons, Lowells, Holmeses, Drapers, Proctors, Froudes, et al., within ecclesiastical limits? How strange to read in the essays of Macaulay, Martinet, and Froude the historian, of "The Decay of Protestanism as a Religious Factor." Is it so, as stated in a daily paper, that the Buddhists have converted five thousand in New York and Brooklyn?

Almost numberless citations can be given, showing a general admission as to the decadence of Churchianity. What then is the first need? The restoration of the Christian idea—spirit and life. The Church now, with many notable and glorious exceptions, is, in the main, but a formality, visible on Sundays. But how with the rest of the week? The apostolic, primitive Church was, as all admit, Christian. The opposite of their ideal and actual cannot be Christian.

Well, how with the primitive Church? The Sermon on the Mount, jeweled with the Golden Rule, was the law of every-day life. Is it so now?

No one lacked; is it so now?

They reached out to all classes—"every creature." How now?

They were not in bondage to the world's love of show, fashion, glitter and idolatry to Mammon. How now?

They communed with the invisible world, and conversed with the higher brotherhood of Life. As with Phillip in Samaria, Paul at Athens and everywhere, they preached and lived the Christ Spirit. That was all. That was enough. Everything else would take care of itself.

Give the acorn its divinely designed place and environments, and the manifold parts of its future will appear formulated in the giant oak. So with the primitive germinal Church; soon its boughs were to the sea and its branches to the river—from the Euphrates to the Thames. Presently, as Gibbon says, sixty millions of slaves were set free. Soon, as Osanam and others have shown, they controlled the literature and scholarship of the civilized world. Paul in the school of Tyrannus shows how they sought and leavened current thought and its leaders; quite unlike the bishop of Western New York, who said, "Keep away from Mr. Huxley." Truth fears no error; the lamp no darkness. The bishop and his followers retreated, trailing their banner in the dust. Not so Paul; he sought even the Epicurean and the Stoic.

Now, is not the popular Churchianity of the day a contrast to the Christianity of the past? Wherein is there a similarity?

Then, too, failure; as confessed in the very statements of the Evangelical Alliance, Pan Anglican Conventions, the National Reform Association and the religious press. They look over the field and say: "Increase of vice and crime." Then comes the cry for more "Societies," "Associations." With a shrinking kernel the nut always runs to shell.

Of the many names of bishops and clergy in the circular of the National Reform Association, I would be glad to learn of the name of one who has begun in his own pews, or in the shadow of his own church, to put out the volcanic craters of vice and crime, if the suppression would lessen church revenues. I have often sought such coöperation, and with proofs ready to indict the den, gambling, drinking saloons, but never succeeded; the owners and sometimes frequenters were in the pews, and not infrequently, strangest of all paradoxes, the reputedly and proven disreputable man in the place a leading church officer—a cherished financial vine—for he carried the bag and bare what was put therein. The complaint of the outside world is that character, even ordinary morality, has ceased to be a requisite for parish leadership if the man is rich.

Then the complaint that the pulpit, ceasing to be scholarly and instructive, is losing its place, and justly so. Thoughtful people are not content with ecclesiastical millinery, novel and changeful postures, costumes, and then a homily of platitudes. The spectacular entertainments take for a time with children and some women, but who can blame the absentees? Asking for bread, must they return for a second stone?

The apostles gained rapidly upon the heart and brain of the world. It is never otherwise with the like spirit and manner. There was no higgling for "ten thousand a year." I heard a bishop urge his missionaries to be content with seven hundred dollars, and the same day told the Convention he could not live on seven thousand. His salary must be increased.

Dr. Livingstone, the traveler and missionary, said: "There is no people not hitherto wronged by the Church, directly or indirectly, but can be reached."

Just so with the masses at home everywhere. No one has failed now who so does, if he begins beyond the hindering, chilling shadows. But not so if he starts "a chapel for the poor," a church for the rich. Not so, if behind him is some moneyed Judas in Moses' seat; or the money-changers enriched by dens and gambling saloons.

There is one certain way, only one, and humanity is blessed: "Men will see your good works, and glorify your Father." The world has but one test, Jesus gave only one, "by their fruits shall ye know them." Will the Church raise the standard of its professed Master, and follow it? or still issue its wailing and desponding bulletins: "Increase of Vice and Crime." G. E. O.

How One May Decide.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It is difficult for those who have given the subject but little attention, to draw the line between personating by spirits and the spirit-form materialization phase; and it is no doubt the duty of the mediums, as well as the spirits, to separate and distinctly state which phase the sitter is to expect to witness—thus avoiding the danger of allowing the personating of a spirit to pass current as a genuine spirit-form manifestation.

Recently a stranger informed the writer that he attended a séance with one of the most renowned mediums for the materializing phase; the medium was an entire stranger to himself and wife. He was a member of a prominent Congregational Church in Boston. He said that in the early days of Spiritualism he was used as an instrument to write, but that of late years the power had not been made manifest. He recently felt impressed to go to the séance alluded to. The room was quite dark, but he could discover forms moving about, and one came up by his side and said: "I am Cousin Hattie. Your two children and sister are here. My husband is present, and wishes to see you very much, and if he can 'build up' he will come out and speak to you."

The two children purported to materialize, and spoke to him; but when I asked the man if he actually saw a form that he recognized he admitted he did not, and that all the test involved in this transaction lay in what was spoken by these forms, which might or might not have been his spirit friends and relatives. "But," said he, "what was said by the forms was true in fact and in every detail."

He said he was led to the cabinet by a form having a hand which felt precisely like that of an individual in the mortal body. Is it not possible that spirits often control mediums to give undoubted tests—like the above named—and control the medium to personate, and to take steps to aid in "the building up" of the form sought to be presented, that its appeal to the recognition of friends present may be the more complete?

Where can the line be drawn between that of full-form manifestation, independent of the medium, and spirit-impersonation by the medium under spirit-control? Long experience with and investigation of any particular medium for this phase, it seems to me, is the only way out of the difficulty. JUSTICE.

She was a devoted Spiritualist. The funeral was attended by a large circle of friends, and appropriate remarks were made by Mrs. R. S. Lillie and Mr. A. E. Tisdale. "Over There," and "We Shall Meet Beyond the River," were tenderly and sweetly sung by Mr. Lillie, and others joining therein. The remains of Mrs. Mathews were entombed at Natick. COM.

From the residence of her sister, Mrs. E. A. Hanvey, 1427 Wolfram street, Lake View, Ill., April 14th, Mrs. Miranda E. Bean, aged 72 years.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reünion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

Another Reverend Raver.

It must be that Rev. Mr. Mills, of Newburyport, feels relieved since the acute bilious attack from which he suffered in the pulpit of the North Church on Sunday evening, the 14th inst., when he underwent a process of public mental purgation of the stuff that had been accumulating on his liver in consequence of his hatred of Modern Spiritualism. A man who, in this age of illumination, spiritual and mental, can discern no incongruity in voluntarily making a public spectacle of his dense ignorance, his triple-plated prejudice, his impenetrable bigotry, and his total disregard of the convictions and belief of people who are at least his own equals in intelligence, in sincerity, and in a desire to know the truth—a man of such a stamp is not likely to be benefited by either reply or rebuke, and therefore it would be practically profitless to address either one to him with that well-meant end in view. His very language insults those from whom he would insist on receiving respectful treatment.

When a mere mortal assumes to possess such intimate knowledge of the ways of God with men as this Newburyport minister does, it does appear to be logical that other mortals may perhaps be as highly favored as himself, and he may be wrong in denying that they may be even more so. How he comes to know so much more of the divine purposes than tens of thousands of worthy men and women whom he thus publicly abuses, he has not thought proper to try to explain. And most likely he does not regard it as at all necessary. The very last thing that a man who thinks that he speaks by authority troubles himself about is the facts on which that authority is supposed to rest. If there is such a thing as a gospel of hate—Paul himself admits that there is "a Christ of Contention"—Mr. Mills undeniably preaches it and takes a pride in doing so. As for spiritual perception, there is not the faintest trace of it discoverable in his puerile diatribe against Spiritualism. Reasoning there is none of, either, while the substance of his effort is bald and bare assertion. And the temper of the whole is that of anger, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness.

We are not going, as we said before, to follow this Newburyport preacher through the length (it has no breadth) of his violent discourse. What he thinks of Saul and Samuel and "the Witch" of Endor is of no possible importance, that we can see, to anybody but himself. But when he speaks with such ostentatious positiveness about clairvoyance for the purpose of discrediting the undisputed phenomena of Spiritualism, and patronizes the mysteries of mind-reading as if they were something with which he has all his life been familiar, he forces his hearers to ask him to tell them how long ago it was when just such men as he were denouncing clairvoyance and mesmerism as the devices of the same devil to whom he gives credit for all the accepted phenomena on which Modern Spiritualism firmly builds its structure of belief. "God condemns consulting them" (wizards), he says, "in relation to death, and the man who becomes a Spiritualist is under the condemnation of God and all the penalties of his righteous indignation." One can readily see that his conception of God is of a being no larger than himself; and, therefore, he wants his God to get mad in the same way that he does.

God forbids, he asserts, that any communication should be made from the dead to the living. How does he know that? Because, he says, the Bible contains no record of any such. This position we will allow to him for the nonce, and for the sake of argument: There are a good many things that the Bible says nothing about. His is one of those yet childish minds that superstitiously hold that the Bible should and does contain everything that is in the twenty-three volumes of the Encyclopedia Brittanica, with Lord Bacon's Novum Organum and Newton's Principia thrown in. Yet his idolized Bible tells us nothing of the vast geologic æons during which the slow evolution of our single little speck of a world was proceeding. The Old Testament does not even teach a continuous life hereafter. And preachers of the gospel are cornered to satisfy themselves or any one else that the doctrine of immortality is positively taught in the New Testament. Our Newburyport minister is in this, as in other respects, a public example of what Paul feelicitously calls: "Zeal without knowledge." To know is not what he is chiefly concerned about; he would much rather assail, and frighten, and hate. And of such is his kingdom of heaven.

But for all that, and although he is by no means a seeker above all things after truth, we shall not let him pass unchallenged when he publicly states what is not the truth. He is unveracious, and we openly and candidly charge him with so grave a fault. He asserts that table-tipping, writing, and all the other phenomena have been brought to the test of science, and have utterly failed. They have not, and he knows it. That is precisely what Spiritualism is waiting for and will cordially welcome. He is just the kind of perfectly uninformed men who would gape and swallow the Seybert Commission report as the result of a scientific, as well as a psychical, investigation; when the obvious truth about it is that it was neither. If shallow persons like this preacher can find time to denounce Spiritualism as a wicked fraud, it is his plain duty to go to work and prove it to be such. The day for swamping newly appearing truth by abusing those who are studying to understand it has gone by for good. The church will thrust no more astronomers into dungeons for showing that the sun, and not the earth, is the centre of our system.

None of the foregoing remarks respecting this grossly disreputable performance of Rev. Mr. Mills have been made in anger, neither would we appear to assume the attitude of administering reproof; neither the one nor the other would serve any worthy purpose. But it is now and then the fit thing to do to hold up to himself the man who, at this day, thinks he is doing the religious sentiment in the human heart any proper service whatever by choosing his opportunity to assail, denounce and abuse others as wanting in common morality because of their belief. If the man who deliberately errs in this way can only be made to see himself as others see him, there is hope that it may be a benefit to him which he might receive in no other way. We have not a syllable of expostulation to offer to Mr. Mills's religious rub-a-dub about studying the Bible and coming to Jesus, and the rest of that sort of "rot" to which theology is still addicted; for so long as that satisfies the soul, it may be kept at its old service; but that the rapidly increasing host who cry for bread instead of stones should be denounced from the pulpits because of nothing but their hunger, is an outrage, social as well as religious, for which its perpetrators ought henceforward to be held to a strict account.

Notwithstanding, however, the reckless assertion of this presumedly Gospel student, made for the express purpose of placing Spiritualism in a false light before his hearers, that there is nothing about it in the Bible, there is scarce a single fact related to it that has not its counterpart or foreshadowing in that venerable object of Christian idolatry and worship; and so palpable is this truth that it has been thousands of times declared, if we take Spiritualism from the Bible nothing is left but a useless scaffolding. If our reverend maligner had informed himself of the facts in the case before making himself the laughing-stock and butt of ridicule of every one who has, he would never have disgraced the pulpit in the manner he has, and for which act he will at no distant time, either in this life or the next, "repent in dust and ashes." Had he read a dozen pages of Forster's "Unanswerable Logic," he would have learned—his study of the Bible evidently not being sufficient to give him the information—that in the sixteenth chapter of Genesis an angel appeared to Hagar in the wilderness, and comforted her, the one word comfort comprehensively defining the spirit visitations of to-day; that in the eighteenth chapter of Genesis it is recorded that three angels, in the form of men—that is, materialized—appeared to Abraham and partook of food with him; that in the nineteenth chapter two angels, also in the form of men, appeared to Lot. It is stated in the twenty-first chapter that an angel again appeared to Hagar; in the twenty-second that an angel arrested the arm of Abraham, preventing him from committing murder, and in the thirty-second chapter that Jacob met angels on his way home from his uncle Laban. An angel held an interview with Moses (Exodus iii.); one led the host of Israel out of Egypt (Exodus xiv.) In the sixth chapter of Judges is given an account of a manifestation of spirit presence, during which "the recipient gave indications of precisely just such conditions as too frequently prevail to-day among Spiritualists as well as investigators—that is, a disposition to doubt the manifestation, no matter how convincing a previous one had been." Other marked instances of the appearance of spirits are given in Numbers xxii., Judges ii. and xiii., Joshua v., 1 Kings xix. and xxii., etc. The handling of fire by mediums of to-day finds its counterpart in the account of an angel seen walking with the three men in a fiery furnace, they not being injured by the ordeal; independent writing, in the inscription made without human hands on the walls of Belshazzar's palace. Daniel and Peter were "entranced," and many had visions when "deep sleep" fell upon them. When Peter had been freed from prison by an angel, he went to the house of Mary, and knocked. A damsel went to the door, and on returning to those within, and announcing Peter's presence, they would not believe her, but said "it is his angel"—proving that spirit-rapping was no uncommon thing in those days.

The moving of material objects is matched by the removal of the stone from the door of the sepulchre by an angel who appeared to the two Marys in the dark. Moses and Elias came in spirit form on the Mount, and after his crucifixion Jesus fulfilled his promise, that if he went away he would come again to his disciples, by appearing to them in a room, the doors of which were shut; he having previously said to them that not only should those who believed in him (his mediumship) do what he had done, "but still greater things."

We cannot extend this article to greater length, even though tempted to do so by the vast amount of proof we find, as we look over the Bible, of the truth of Spiritualism and the identity of its phenomena with events recorded in the Old and New Testament, and held to be evidence of its divine origin and infallibility. When a Spiritualist is, as was Paul, arraigned before a council of priests, we advise its judgment to be as in his case, "We find no evil in this man; but if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God." Acts xxiii.: 9.

We leave the Rev. C. P. Mills of Newburyport with the truth and his conscience.

Jesus and Spirit-Materialization.

The proofs accumulate that the phenomena of Spiritualism are being steadily accepted, and are doing their work in the churches. The priesthood testify to it themselves when they come forward, now in one locality, and now in another, and openly employ the phenomena to harmonize theological theory with modern belief. One of the latest illustrations of this statement occurs in a recent sermon of Bishop Jenner, preached in the Anglican Free Church at Detroit. Speaking of the form in which Jesus is recorded as appearing to his disciples after his death and burial, the Bishop declared that "the prevalent notions of it are not only radically wrong, but that they also subvert the very idea which they are intended to convey." He admitted the material inconsistency of the several records of this event by the evangelists, which he candidly asserted to be so great as "to preclude their acceptance as positive evidence."

The Bishop allows that a candid review of the several appearances recorded in the gospels most clearly proves that the body in which Christ was raised from the dead was "a spiritual body in the fullest sense of that term." It is equally clear, he adds, that Jesus not only had the power to make himself visible and tangible, but to make it appear that he partook of ordinary food. That he actually did so, the Bishop thinks highly improbable, because eating and drinking imply physical materialism and mortality; whereas, the resurrection is intended to prove spiritual immortality. "The so-called Orthodox idea that Christ arose in a body with flesh and bones," says the Bishop, "and with all things pertaining to natural manhood, is absurd in the extreme. That flesh and blood should vanish and pass through closed doors is bad enough, but when it is asserted that he ascended into heaven with such a body the absurdity becomes self-evident."

The Bishop considers that such an occurrence would be subversive of universal law and a more stupendous miracle than the resurrection itself. It would, in short, be utterly impossible. His idea of it is, "that before Christ arose his body underwent the change necessary to convert into a spiritual body; which was intended to teach us that when we shuffle off this mortal coil we leave it behind us forever, and the body with which we shall be clothed hereafter will be such that in it we shall be totally unrecognizable. And that, as Christ himself was compelled to assume some old and characteristic phase, in order to identify himself to his most intimate acquaintance, even so shall we be obliged to exhibit some well-known trait before we can make ourselves known, even to our own relations."

In this final statement we have the real and true one of the much-derided phenomenon of spirit-materialization. Unless returning spirits were in some way able to identify themselves to those who knew them in mortal garb, it is perfectly evident that the great object which they cherish in returning at all would be practically lost. Whether spirit forms resemble mortal forms is not the question now, but whether it is possible for spirits to employ such means and methods as will enable those who once knew them to recognize them, and thus receive beyond all power of effacement the priceless truth of the continuous life of the human spirit. The light is steadily streaming through the bars of prejudice.

"Prof. Starr" Once More.

During several years past we have been repeatedly called upon to caution our readers against being imposed upon by an itinerant lecturer, whose name is generally given as "Prof. Starr," though he at various times and places has assumed various aliases. Occasionally we have acceded to the persistent demand to publish what we know of him and his "ways that are dark," and given some facts, holding some in reserve for future use should occasion require. Notwithstanding this, the "Starr" has continued to shine with various degrees of luminosity, the most intense being among churches and in neighborhoods where very little is known of the facts that are the foundation of every Spiritualist's belief.

Correspondents now write from Corry, Pa., and send copies of a paper published in that place, The Flyer, containing lengthy articles recounting the exploits of the aforesaid Professor and his wife, which are simply the same chestnutty-flavored things that have reached this office in past times from every point of the compass. The old "cabinet trick" which every third-rate conjurer can perform, and which is so puerile that no one with any pretensions to skill presents to an audience, was, as it ever has been, his trump card; but it no more resembled that of the Davenports than light does darkness. He professed to do independent slate-writing and to explain how it was done; but it was not made public, "because," says The Flyer, "that would interfere with Prof. Starr's business. Let him expose it to his audiences and get his pay for his work," thus showing that the editor's regard for the Professor's pocket-book is of more account to him than the conduct of his paper as a vehicle of information to his readers. It is a singular fact that of all the explanations made by these pretended exposers of the modus operandi of mediums, not a single one, so far as we are aware, has been made public; shall we infer from this that their weakness would be shown by bringing them to light?

While at Corry it was reported that an offer of one hundred dollars was made Starr, if he would produce the writing under the same conditions that Watkins did for the gentleman who made the offer. To the Flyer Starr admitted that the report was true, and said, "I would be a fool to accept such an offer, for the reason that I know nothing of what Prof. Watkins did do for the gentleman, and must accept his version of it"; a very flimsy reason for avoiding the issue, especially so since it had been reported in the Flyer that he had "explained slate-writing by half-a-dozen different methods." Perhaps he remembered that at Lee Centre, N. Y., in 1882, he announced that he would meet any medium, and either duplicate or explain any spiritual phenomena under a forfeiture of five hundred dollars if he failed, but when an opportunity to do so was given him, he declined to appear, unless the sum of one hundred dollars was sent him. And even when this condition was accepted, and Mr. A. A. Wheelock appeared with a medium, Starr ignobly fled, leaving the field to Mr. W. and his medium, who gave séances that resulted in convincing hundreds of the truth of the phenomena, and of the credulity of those who had been misled by Starr's pretended exposures and explanations. Perhaps he also remembered a certain experience he had with J. V. Mansfield at a New Hampshire Convention, during an interview with whom he made, if we remember correctly, confessions he would prefer not to have recited to his audiences, for fear that after they were made known he might not "get his pay for his work."

In 1882, a few months after the above, this boastful pretender, known in Corry, Pa., as Prof. Starr, previously in Michigan as "Dr. Clark," in another place as "Dr. Thomas," appeared in Binghamton, N. Y., as "Mr. Sessions," under which alias he attended a séance held at the house of Mr. T. W. Waterman, at the close of which, upon being questioned as to his opinion of the phenomena he had witnessed, he said to Mr. W.: "I COULD NOT FATHOM THEM; THEY WERE TOO DEEP FOR ME. I AM SURE THERE WAS NO DECEPTION."

In March, 1884, "Prof. Starr and his wife" distributed a circular in this city, a copy of which will be found in THE BANNER of Nov. 26th, last year, announcing themselves as "Wonderful mental and physical test and full-form materializing mediums," claiming to hold "circles in the dark, circles in dim light, circles in full gaslight, and circles in broad daylight," and to "give unbounded satisfaction"; the whole being characterized with the same display of bombast and self-adulation that distinguishes their advent in every place they visit in the rôle of exposers. We commend these few facts to the consideration of our friends in Corry, Pa., especially to William C. Plumb, editor of The Flyer, and to Spiritualists and the public generally. A man who claims to be a medium in one place, and the opponent of mediumship in another, is not worthy of the confidence of any one. Spiritualists on his line of travel should make special effort to have these truths concerning him known in every place he designs visiting, so that he may on his arrival be given the style of welcome justly due one of his class.

The Ministers on the Move!

Evidence continues to come in that in all parts of the country the ministerial machine is being concentratedly set in motion with the hope of breaking down the Spiritual Dispensation. In another column will be found a report (abstract) of Mrs. Amelia H. Colby-Luther's remarks in reply to Rev. Mr. Mills, of Newburyport; we have also an editorial word in the same direction.

On the eighth page of the present issue will be found a sketch of the views expressed by Dr. H. B. Storer regarding the animus of the lecture at the same time being delivered in the Bowdoin Square Baptist Tabernacle, Boston, by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of the Clarendon-street church. THE BANNER had a representative present to listen to Mr. Gordon's remarks, and found him very courteous in language and bearing, and firmly anchored in a belief of spirit intercourse, a conviction that spirit materialization is true, and a certainty that a vast multitude of invisible intelligences were hovering over this world seeking to enter into open communion with mankind. He acknowledged the truth of all that Spiritualism claims, phenomenally, but of course, following in the wake of the late Elder Knapp, of Revivalist fame, he ascribed the wonderful occurrences in these latter days to the operation of demons, or "angels which kept not their first estate," but were fallen, and consequently evil. He sought to clinch his argument by an attack on the Spiritual Philosophy, declaring that these returning spirits must be evil because they antagonized all the fundamental positions of Orthodox evangelical belief—such as the existence of hell, the value of vicarious atonement, the divinity (in a Trinitarian sense) of Christ, the existence of an anthropomorphous deity, etc. We are certainly willing to leave the matter where Rev. Mr. Gordon puts it: the philosophical statements he so fiercely attacks are (minus, perhaps, the name Spiritualism) permeating the thoughtfully inclined all over the world—in the churches as well as outside—and the fact of spirit return being admitted by this gentleman, the character of the revenant ones must be judged by their fruits; for "men do not gather grapes of thorns," and those who carefully investigate ought certainly to be able to distinguish their friends who once lived on earth and enjoyed their companionship, from the pre-Noachic "fallen angels," who were never mortal, if we understand the Church idea.

Another bigot is astir in the pages of the Baptist Quarterly Review (for April), and is sure he has demolished the whole modern movement. We shall hold up to view the quarter(ly) ideas of this latter personage in another issue of THE BANNER.

The Spiritual Dispensation has—notwithstanding the shouts of a salaried ministry—nothing to fear by an open and candid comparison with decadent modern Christianity as known to the world in the afternoon of the nineteenth century.

J. J. Morse's Last Season.

Bro. J. J. Morse writes us that he will return to the Eastern States in due time for work during the ensuing fall and winter months. He has had a most successful season in San Francisco. Going there originally for but three months, he was quickly secured to remain a full year, which he will complete in July next.

He desires Eastern societies wishing to secure his services to address him without delay, as a portion of his time is already engaged. This is positively his last season in the United States, he returning to England in September of 1889. His tour, of three years' length now, has been quite a success. He can be addressed at 331 Turk street, San Francisco, Cal.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From Amesbury, Mass., a few days since, Mr. George W. Bartlett, aged sixty-six years. He was a very intelligent man, and a firm Spiritualist. He leaves a widow and a married daughter. His disease was consumption, and he was a great sufferer.

☞ Ex-Mayor Fell, of Victoria, British Columbia, is reported on our first page as having made special commendatory mention (during the recent Anniversary meeting there) of Miss M. T. Shelhamer's latest book, "Outside the Gates." Colby & Rich have this work on sale; and inquirers and believers alike will do themselves a kindly and valuable service by following Mr. Fell's advice.

☞ Mrs. B. F. Smith (the excellent trance-medium of the Banner of Light Free Circle on Friday afternoons) has located with her husband at Vernon Cottage, Crescent Beach, Revere, Mass., where they intend to remain during the summer. In the fall they will return again to Lawrence or locate in Boston.

☞ J. J. Morse sends to THE BANNER an account (which will appear next week) of the four meetings held in San Francisco, Cal., in honor of the Fortieth Anniversary.

Progress at Onset Bay.

Some idea of the advance and growth which has characterized Onset Bay Camp since its inauguration, may be gained from the following extract from an official document recently placed by its managers before the General Court of Massachusetts:

"The Onset Bay Grove Association was incorporated by special act of March 31st, 1877. It purchased about one hundred acres of woodland, on the shores of East Wareham, in that year, and named it Onset. The territory, at that time, was assessed for $690, and had no buildings upon it. Since then some six hundred lots have been sold and over four hundred cottages erected by different individuals, and the property is now assessed by the town of Wareham at about $280,000. The Association has developed this property, on a capital stock of $5000. In the ten years of its existence it has declared only two small dividends. The money received has been expended upon the streets—of which there are nearly seven miles—and on concrete and plank walks, and wharf, bridge, etc. Each year it has maintained, free to everybody, meetings, band concerts, etc., lasting about four or five weeks in the summer season. The popularity of the place attracted a large attendance which has increased each year."

"They 're Taking Baby."

A correspondent of Light relates the following as described to her by Miss H., the daughter of a clergyman in England—"a very truthful, not very imaginative woman," and not a Spiritualist—as an experience of hers while sitting up with a poor woman in her father's parish, whose babe was dying:

There were two beds in the cottage chamber, one, a crib, in which a child of three or four, the baby's brother, had been asleep for several hours. Miss H. and the mother stood beside the other larger bed, on which the infant lay at its last gasp. Suddenly an eager little voice called from the crib, and they saw the small brother sitting up, wide awake, and pointing with a kind of rapture in his face. He cried out: "Oh! mammy, mammy, beautiful ladies all round baby! Beautiful ladies! Oh! mammy, mammy, they 're taking baby!" The watchers turned their eyes on the bed again—the infant had expired.

The New York College of Magnetics.

Dr. Babbitt writes us that he has moved his college and sun-healing instruments to No. 30 East Fourteenth street, New York, near Union Square, where he has a fine lecture hall, forty feet deep. He states that his new work, "Human Culture and Cure," has been received with increasing favor in Europe, Asia, Australia and our own country. A considerable number of physicians and others on the Pacific Coast have agreed to take his course of lectures proposed to be given at Los Angeles, with a view to securing the diploma of the New York College, but a few more names are required before such an expensive journey can be undertaken. The Doctor says that the sun-healing movement is spreading over various nations and is achieving remarkable results.

FAITH CURE UNDER A CLOUD.—According to the press reports, Mrs. Lottie A. James, of West Medford, Mass., passed to spirit-life on the evening of April 20th, giving birth to a child, who also died. Mrs. Corner, Mrs. James's mother, who lived with her, was a believer in and practitioner of the Faith Cure, or Christian Science system, and no midwife or physician other than herself and a Christian Scientist was called in till both mother and child deceased. Great indignation was produced in the neighborhood against the "Cure" system, by the report of the town physician that proper precautions had not been observed in the case—faith being expected "to do it all." By virtue, we understand, of the report of Medical Examiner Durell, the First District Court of Eastern Middlesex County has granted a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Corner on the charge of manslaughter.

MEDICAL LAW IN MARYLAND.—By the Baltimore Sun, of April 16th, it would seem that the law-makers of this State have been led into the passage of a Doctors' Plot Law. It is of the true Orthodox stripe, and says to the people of the State: "You shall have no other doctor before me," and to the practitioners: You must have a diploma in order to practice; you must have it registered with and endorsed (through its certificate) by the State Board of Health—which Board can revoke your diploma if it do n't like the college where you obtained it; or you must be examined, for a fee; and will be fined or imprisoned if you try to practice without the stamp of the "Regulars" and their allies upon you. Glorious times are supposed to be now in store for the Medical Trusts of old Maryland!

☞ The demise has recently occurred of Mrs. Mary Stephen, wife of the well-known and remarkably successful healing medium, George Milner Stephen. Mrs. Stephen, who was a daughter of the first Governor of South Australia, Sir John Hindmarsh, was a sympathizing and cordial co-worker with her husband in his beneficent work, and the absence of her visible presence will be felt by him, though a knowledge of her presence in spirit and assistance in more efficient ways than formerly will assuage the grief naturally attendant on a material separation.

☞ With its issue for April 11th The Boston Investigator commenced Volume 58th. In an article stating the fact, its veteran editor, Horace Seaver, announces his aim for the future to be—as it has been in the past—to work for the interests of "everything which can be of any benefit to men and women as individuals, and to society, or to Government, or to the welfare and perpetuity of the American Republic." The Investigator has done some stalwart work in these directions in the past, and we wish a like success to its efforts in coming time.

THE GNOSTIC.—The March number of this monthly, just received, contains No. 3 of F. B. Dowd's "Rosy Cross Sermons," treating upon "The Night." A short biography "In Memoriam" of Anna Kingsford, M. D., is given, and several subjects relating to the aim of the work—announced to be "the culture of all that is divine"—are treated upon by editors and contributors. San Francisco, Cal.

☞ J. H. Bates, successor to S. M. Pettengill & Co., will May 1st remove his Newspaper Advertising Agency into spacious and commodious premises in the Potter Building, 38 Park Row, corner of Beekman street, New York City. He has been successfully and honorably identified with this line of business for upward of twenty-five years.

ANOTHER "FATHER" OF SPIRITUALISM!—The Boston Globe has just added an additional feather to its cap of correctness (?) and reliability (!) by referring April 19th to "Dr. Arns, popularly known as the father of Spiritualism." Will the Globe please enlighten us as to whom it means?

☞ The German Workingmen's Aid Society of New York has voted to take stock in the United States Cremation Company, which has its retort at Fresh Pond, L. I.; and hereafter its members will be cremated instead of following the former custom of earth-burial.

Queen Victoria has ere this reached Berlin. Most of the papers there welcomed her in advance—The Post saying: "The nation offers mute, yet respectful homage to the sovereign of a great and friendly state who has come to visit the sick bed of our suffering Emperor."

APRIL.

April is here!
There's a song in the maple, thrilling and new;
There's a flash of wings of the heavens' own hue;
There's a veil of green on the nearer hills;
There's a burst of rapture in woodland rills;
There are stars in the meadow dropped here and there;
There's a breath of arbutus in the air;
There's a dash of rain, as if flung in jest;
There's an arch of color spanning the west;
April is here!

WHERE ARE THE POLICE?—The Lewiston (Me.) Journal is said to have given recent publication to the following statement—either a surprising confession of crime or a somewhat reckless use of the "editorial we": "We burn nearly two hotels every day in the United States. We destroy one hospital, asylum or almshouse by fire every two weeks, usually with the loss of one or more lives."

The Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese of Newark has approved a rule of the priests that before any children shall be "confirmed" they must attend a parochial school for two years preceding such confirmation. The reason given for the adoption of this rule is that the parents in the church preferred that their children should attend the public rather than the parochial schools, and it was felt necessary by the church authorities to adopt stringent disciplinary measures to subdue this rebellious spirit.—The Truth Seeker, New York.

The names for money in the language of the Ogallalla Sioux are interesting. Gold is mases-ska-zi, literally, "yellow white iron"; silver is mases-ska-ska, or white iron; greenbacks are minne-huapi-mases ska, or "paper that talks white iron."

The BANNER OF LIGHT recently gave an exposition of the enlightened and advanced views of Rabbi Solomon Schindler, of Boston, on the Old Testament, which would be profitable for Protestant Christians carefully and seriously to consider; the gist of this discourse was, that "modern researches and Bible criticisms had undermined the infallibility of the Bible. ["TRUE FOR YOU, NEIGHBOR!"]—As a rule, an editor gets about one thousand kicks to one caress. Once in a while he gets a kind word, and it warms and cheers his weather-beaten, storm-racked heart to the innermost core. Most people are afraid to tell an editor when he writes an article that particularly pleases them, for fear of making him proud, we suppose, but if they find anything that does not accord precisely with their views, they will neglect their business to hunt him up and tell him of it. Pshaw! dear friends; do n't think you will spoil the editor by giving him an occasional word of cheer, any more than you will spoil your child by complimenting it upon a piece of patchwork it has finished. Of course you could beat the job yourself, but that does n't deter you from heaping words of encouragement on the child. It has done its best. So you could doubtless beat the average editor running a paper. Of course you could. The man does not live who can't beat an editor running a paper. The editor is willing to acknowledge that you can. He only runs it because you have not time to; but this fact need not deter you from giving him a word of encouragement occasionally.—Danville (N. Y.) Breeze.

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

☞ All Spiritualists are cordially invited to become connected with THE ALLIANCE—either as resident or non-resident members—and to take an active part in its work.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead," and all such are invited to become members. NELSON CROSS, President.
J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

American Spiritualist Alliance.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At the regular meeting of the American Spiritualist Alliance, held April 18th, at No. 219 West 42d street, New York, the Committee of the Whole adopted a report on "The Proper Methods of Scientifically Investigating the Phenomena of Spiritualism," and recommend its adoption by the Alliance. The question being put, it was declared adopted. [The Report will appear next week.—ED. B. OF L.]

At 9:30 o'clock the Alliance adjourned, and the usual circle for the phenomena and receiving spirit-communications was formed, and continued for an hour, during which time many spirits were seen and described, and some spoke to those present, using the independent voice, and others controlled and used their mediums to address us.

JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

Prof. Brittan's Message.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It is due to my old friend, Prof. S. B. Brittan, as well as to the medium of your Message Department, that I should publicly express my appreciation of the kind and encouraging message sent me by him, as printed in your issue of April 21st.

To be thus singled out for personal mention, among the Professor's many friends on earth, is as gratifying as it was unexpected on my part; but doubtless there were reasons for it which may not be so apparent to others as to myself. Not only were Prof. Brittan and myself at one time intimately associated as joint editors of The Spiritual Age, but since his transition to the higher life our intimacy has been greatly increased; and, as he intimates, I have been made frequently aware of his presence in my own home, and have enjoyed many an interview with him of the highest interest. To him have I been indebted for many words of personal encouragement in times of trial and difficulty, and also for valuable suggestions of spiritual truth which have been incorporated into my writings for the public.

There are also special reasons for this kind remembrance on his part, at the present time, of which I cannot speak, but which are deeply appreciated.

Many thanks from myself and my companion to all concerned. It is a fresh instance of "The Ministry of Angels Realized," for which we are devoutly grateful.

Yours truly, A. E. NEWTON.
Arlington, Mass., April 22d.

Mr. Baxter and the Providence Association.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On Sunday, 22d inst., another success was scored for Spiritualism in the city of Providence. That J. Frank Baxter, in his combination of song, reading, lecture and mediumship, is "a host in himself," good in every part, is the verdict of numbers in this city, and it was well attested by the interest of the Spiritualists in the morning, and the large and enthusiastic gathering in the evening.

Mr. Baxter, within a half-dozen years, has given well nigh to a hundred lectures with séances in Providence, and it does seem as if each effort additional surpassed all his others. His searching analysis of spiritualistic tenets and advice to investigators, given in the morning, was masterly; and the lecture in the evening, on "Spiritualism Factual and Fanciful," timely, caustic, instructive and, as well, entertaining.

In the latter he showed preacher Talmage as often, apparently under inspiration, preaching wiser than he knew, and fairly convulsed his audience as he tellingly exhibited the eccentricities and inconsistencies of this pulpit orator.

Mr. Baxter concluded his exercises with an hour's séance, as usual, brimful of interesting features, and then dismissed the congregation until another Sunday, the 29th inst., when he will serve the Association again.

He gave notice that Mr. A. E. Tisdale would be the speaker through May, and that May night the Association would have a festival, when supper, games and dancing would be the order.

"ROGER WILLIAMS."

[Mary E. A. Whitney writes in addition: "We hope the friends of the Association will remember the dance and social party to be given at Blackstone Hall May 1st."]

Warren Chase to His Friends.

My "Forty Years' Experience on the Spiritual Rostrum," as a sequel to my Autobiography, is now for sale at the BANNER OF LIGHT office, and by myself. It is a book of three hundred and twenty-four pages, substantially gotten up on extra paper, and with a perfect likeness of my face; price per copy $1, and postage 10 cents when sent by mail.

I trust my friends will help me out with this work, which I am sure will give satisfaction. The sale of the first thousand copies will not return me its cost, and I must depend on the second edition, and until that is partly sold I must be in debt to the publishers, as I have not saved enough from my forty years' labor in this cause—nor from all other sources of profit—to pay for publishing this book. Address me at Cobden, Ill., after May 1st. WARREN CHASE.

THE SECRET SYMBOLS OF THE ROSICRUCIANS OF THE Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries,

WITH A TREATISE ON THE Philosopher's Stone.

Translated from the German by

FRANZ HARTMANN, M. D.

The plates of the Secret Symbols, twenty-seven in number, have been colored by hand, exactly duplicating the originals which Dr. Hartmann secured during his researches among ancient MSS. and occult works in Germany.

Prof. Elliot Coues, F. T. S., writes in reference to the work as follows: "The publication is timely, and cannot fail to attract and entertain many persons who seek the symbols of eternal verities in these mysterious paths. Whether or not the Rosicrucians ever existed as an actual secret confraternity, is, as you know, an open question with the public; and those who are best entitled to speak with authority are significantly silent in this particular. But no competent occultist or mystic has any doubts, or will ever fully divulge the esoteric facts in the case. The volume before me is handsomely gotten up, showing both taste and enterprise on the part of the publishers; and Dr. Hartmann has already won enviable spurs in the literature of occultism, which he is, from his connection with the Indian Branch of the Theosophical Society, well fitted to adorn."

Finely printed on heavy paper, pages 12 by 16 inches, and handsomely bound in cloth. Price $6,00.

FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM.

BY WARREN CHASE.

A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE," AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS

The World's Child,

WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known: scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work.

Materialized Apparitions:

If Not Beings from Another Life, What Are They?

BY E. A. BRACKETT.

This work is in two Parts; the first containing carefully-prepared narratives of the author's interesting observations and experiences in the investigation of the phenomena of Materialization; the second, opinions and theories concerning the same. The investigation appears to have been pursued in a truly scientific spirit, by one possessing more than ordinary qualifications for the purpose, and with unusual facilities—the results being correspondingly positive and overwhelmingly conclusive regarding the reality of the phenomena in question. Aside from its positive testimony, the work affords many valuable suggestions to investigators as to the proper manner of proceeding in order to attain the best results. NERVOUS DISEASES AND MAGNETIC THERAPEUTICS. By J. E. BRIGGS, M. D

This little work gives the reader a clear insight into the nature of these maladies, and the accurate principles on which treatment should be based. Nor are the views here set forth mere hypothetical dogmas or speculative theories, but the result of careful observation, broad experience and familiarity with the best writers. Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week,

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Feb 28th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! Thou Infinite Spirit of Love, we bow down in acknowledgment of thy great wisdom and supernal presence. We breathe in the atmosphere of existence and realize that we are living souls. May we come near unto each other in brotherly sympathy and tenderest love, feeling the cords of union binding heart to heart and soul to soul, uplifting our lives unto diviner planes than they can know through purely material experience.

Oh! may bright spirits throng around us singing their sweet songs in our ears, bringing light, knowledge and understanding to our minds, creating an atmosphere of peace and harmony around each one, and above all bringing such influences of good cheer as will cast away the gloom from the weary heart and inspire it only with happiness with courage and renewed life. Oh! ye bright spirits, we give you welcome and extend our greeting. We reach out to you for assistance in our daily lives. May all sorrow be swept away from human hearts under your tender ministrations. And oh! may we be worthy your kind influence, and aspire to walk and talk truly, lovingly, and with such effort that we may be fitted to be your companions now and in the world to come.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By A. L.] Do spirits ever cause a mortal possessing mediumistic qualities (not realized by the individual) to pass through trials and afflictions in order to place him in a condition that will enable them to develop his powers?

ANS.—Such experiences have been brought to individuals through the instigation of spirit attendants. You may perhaps ask why good spirits will bring a mortal into conditions of perplexity or unhappiness. And yet it may be seen by these very spirits that the mortal requires to pass under just such a discipline in order to soften his nature and bring it into more direct harmony with the spiritual forces of life. It is indeed true that in many cases mediumship has been developed through the severest of trials, of sorrow and of pain. In some instances the person possessing mediumistic faculties, although perhaps unconscious of their existence, has lived too purely a material life, placed all his thoughts and aspirations in the realm of physics or of materiality, not understanding the spiritual side of his nature, and having no craving to comprehend it. Realizing what hidden powers lay within, the spirit-world has undertaken undoubtedly the very best course for unfolding those powers and bringing them into useful expression, and so the mediumistic person was directed through a strange course of events, each one, it may be, resulting almost disastrously to his welfare, or at least one would suppose so on looking at the case from the mortal standpoint; yet the experiences only proved of blessing in the end, because they softened the nature of the individual and had an effect upon his spiritual powers and drew his attention, at least to a degree, from material things alone to other and diviner things of life, and so opened the way through which his attendant spirits could reach his life and exercise upon his powers their magnetism for useful work.

Mediumship is undoubtedly strengthened, and perhaps best utilized in many cases, with individuals who have passed through trials, sorrows and even temptations, because then, as we have said, the spiritual side of the medium becomes open to the reception of truths from above, and his atmosphere becomes magnetically assimilated with that of returning spirits who desire to make use of his power in benevolent ways for man.

Q.—[By the same.] Spirit friends do not allow me to sit in circles or to hold the hand of another. Thus in developing I am obliged to sit alone. Is this not unusual?

A.—It is more unusual than perhaps it ought to be, for there are many cases of mediumship that might be more fully unfolded were those who possess these powers to sit quietly alone, at stated intervals, creating an atmosphere of harmony for the spirits who attend them, and affording conditions for their approach. It is sometimes well for those seeking the development of mediumship to sit in company with friends who are congenial, or in entire sympathy with the medium and his projected work. Such friends may afford assistance to the operating spirits, giving magnetism and material support by their presence; yet one should experiment in this line for himself, and if he discovers that he cannot receive any benefit from the presence of others, then it is wise for him to continue his investigations and experiments alone, always sitting in a calm and tranquil mood, free from anxiety of any kind, earnestly requesting the presence of the pure and good of spiritual life, and affording just as much of harmony from his own nature as he possibly can by way of assistance to those spirits who seek his presence.

It is also wise to hold sittings at a regular hour, in a dimly lighted but well ventilated apartment, and, if possible, afford sweet sounds by musical strains as greeting to the unseen friends who approach. Many who have found only adverse conditions, arising from sitting for development in a promiscuous assembly, or even with friends who did not thoroughly understand their motives, or harmonize with the work, might, and undoubtedly would, have found more of helpfulness in their investigations had they quietly seated themselves alone, asking earnestly for the assistance and manifestation of good and trustworthy spirits.

Q.—[By E. P. G.] Is it not a grievous moral wrong, committed by mortals against themselves, in the face of such overwhelming testimony to the contrary, to believe that the Roman Governor of Judea, Pontius Pilate, did condemn one Jesus to be crucified for the alleged crime of attempting to found a new religion?

A.—We do not consider that a grievous moral wrong has been perpetrated in this respect. We look upon the record of the life of Jesus, so-called, as merely a partial historic record of events and circumstances which transpired in the days spoken of. True, great stress has been placed upon this record, and it has been adopted and almost slavishly bowed down to by various Christian sects; but nevertheless we do not acknowledge that the acceptance of this as history has proven a grievous moral wrong to humanity, although it may have retarded the advancement in spiritual knowledge of many who have accepted it as a guide for their own lives. Let us remember that humanity is young; the world is growing, mankind is advancing, and just as rapidly as it can receive and appropriate the truth for itself, just so rapidly will it cast out whatever erroneous ideas it has adopted in the past; and so, while the race has been struggling onward against the overwhelming ignorance and bigoted assumption which it has felt pressing upon it, yet, as a whole, we can see that humanity is growing, expanding in liberal thought, entertaining larger ideas than it ever did before. Those who have passed on have been making the way for those who are now to follow, with higher truth and grander revealments.

Undoubtedly the system known to the world as Christianity, but which we should term Ecclesiasticism, has bound countless numbers of souls in the chains of bigotry and superstition; yet we believe that this was a necessary evil in accordance with the times and the development of the age, and that as the planet itself unfolds to greater harmony and grander beauty, so man advances and expands in his spiritual and moral nature, and is able to take in more of light, of knowledge and of truth than his predecessors. So the world moves on.

The races that have gone may look back from their ascended plane, realizing how they have been cramped by superstition and by error, and be ready to exercise their power and influence in emancipating their followers from the same shackles and bonds, and in spreading before them a grander revelation of truth and of superior wisdom.

We have yet to be convinced that Pontius Pilate did not condemn the Nazarene to death because of his fidelity to truth, and of his promulgation of what the man believed to be high moral precepts and spiritual ideas; therefore we do not concede that a moral wrong has been committed against humanity by the popular acceptance of belief in the Roman Governor's crime.

Q.—[By Inquirer.] Charles F. Blackburn (an Atheist) says in the Boston Investigator: "Christians and Deists all say and hold there is a God, but I am sorry to say that I have never found even one who could prove it. I regret to say that I have even been sneered at, traduced and slandered for being an Atheist, and that, too, by so-called 'good' Christians." Some Spiritualists, too, I learn, believe in a God; otherwise they would not pray to him—taking it for granted there is such a being. Please enlighten us?

A.—We have yet to come in contact with a thorough Spiritualist, one who understands something of spiritual life and the revelations made by returning spirits, who directly believes in a personal God. True, many Spiritualists and many returning spirits offer their invocations to the "Great Supreme Spirit of all life and intelligence," not because they expect to change the order of law, or to come into direct communication with or nearness to a Great Supreme Being, clothed in the image of man, but because they desire to enter an atmosphere of harmony, to uplift their own souls to a plane of thought which will bring spiritual inspirations to their minds.

We make a distinction between that Great Supreme Overruling Force which we may call the Superior Spirit of Intelligence, Wisdom and Love, and the personal Deity, clothed in the image of man, gigantic in stature, jealous and revengeful by nature, which has been set up and worshiped as the Christian Jehovah. We know of no Spiritualist—let us repeat it—who believes in such a personal God, but we can believe and accept the idea, though it may pass beyond almost our finite comprehension, that there is a grand, universal Spirit permeating all forms of existence; that this great source of light, of activity and vitality vibrates with intelligence, and that it is superior to all organic forms, however grand they may prove to be.

That this divine intelligence surpasses the comprehension of man is true, and yet he may gain comfort in the thought of its existence, realizing that it moves and breathes within his own soul, just as truly as it animates and governs the universe which he beholds around him. No intelligent, honest, liberal mind will traduce, scoff at, or make game of an equally intelligent, sincere mind, even though the latter may discard the idea of any God in the universe, any supreme, superior intelligence, animating and controlling all things. Minds are not constituted alike. One may gaze abroad and behold what to him are evidences of the existence of a supreme, overruling intelligence; he looks upon the flowery fields, and marks their bloom and perfume, realizing that here is the evidence of design and of adaptation; he beholds the starry heavens with their brilliant bodies moving in space, each one in regular order, true to its orbit, and performing its own work; and again he perceives evidence of skill, of design, which has set these worlds in motion, which has intended each one for a special purpose and place. Another mind, gazing out into the same atmosphere, looking abroad upon the same universe, beholds no such testimony as has appealed to the mind of the first.

True, he perceives the changing seasons, rolling on with their accustomed regularity, producing their especial phenomena, but to him there is only evidence of natural law, and this he does not believe contains any potency, or power of divine intelligence. Yet one mind has just the same right to his opinion as has the other. Every thinking soul must settle this question for itself, because it is something that surpasses the finite understanding of man. We do not object to our friend and neighbor declaring there is no God, because he cannot behold in the universe any evidence of such a being or power, but we do object to that neighbor's denying our right to accept and believe in an infinite intelligent spirit, brooding over all space, permeating all life with vitality and energy, if to our mind there is evidence of such a being and of such a law.

Q.—[By F. H. Morse, East Claridon, O.] Do birds and animals in this life possess a degree of clairvoyance by which they see those of their kind in the world of spiritual existence?

A.—We do not know that all birds, or all classes of birds, or of animals, are so thoroughly clairvoyant as to be able to perceive forms and objects around them, having an existence in the spirit-spheres, but invisible to the normal sight of man on earth. Indeed, we do not think that all birds or animals possess this vision, but we do know that it is unfolded in many, both of the animal kingdom and of bird life. We have come in contact with animals on earth that we know have seen distinctly ourself, in our spirit-form, and these have manifested their sight, to the best of their ability, by signs and movements, to mortals who were present with them.

We know that birds sometimes have seen invisible spirits—not only forms corresponding to their own life, but also human spirits who have returned from the other world on some errand; therefore we do know that these lower forms of life, so called, possess clairvoyant vision, and not only this, but clairaudient hearing, also, in fact, spiritual perceptions which are at times unfolded and exercised to such a degree as to enable their possessors to see and hear objects, forms and events which are not visible or distinct to the outward senses of material life.

Q.—[By John F. Bassett, Wilmington, Vt.] If a person lives seventy-five years on earth, has possessed a brilliant mind, but in stature has not exceeded four feet, will his form in spirit-life be limited to that, or rise above it?

A.—Well, it does not matter. In spirit-life we do not pay so much attention to the form as you do on earth. A very brilliant mind may be expressed through what appears to be a small compass, and perhaps you may receive manifestations of great beauty and intelligence from a spirit who, if you beheld him as he is in the other life, would seem to be quite a pigmy to your outward sense. A spirit, or a mind, rather, that is keen, brilliant and expansive, will continue to advance in knowledge as well as in power of expression, and it may be that the mind will attract to itself, in the other life, such elements and magnetisms as will build up around it a large and stately form. This is sometimes the case, but by no means the general law, for we have, in the other life, individuals varying in stature, and those who are keen and brilliant in expression may perhaps be small and almost insignificant in appearance. We have met with that.

We have also beheld spirits whose outward bodies were large and massive, but whose intellects seemed to be upon a very low scale indeed. Such spirits require to pass through ages of unfoldment and experience before they will be qualified to express themselves in a clearly intelligent, attractive manner. We repeat, that while in the spirit-world the outward expression corresponds in degree and appearance to the qualities of the mind, it does not follow that this appearance will be large and diffusive. The man of brilliant intellect, who is truly beautiful in character, lovely in disposition and genial to his fellows, whether he possesses a large and massive frame in spirit-life or a small, compact one, will express in his external appearance the qualities of his mind, for his countenance may even shine as the sun, because of the light and brilliancy within; there will be a beauty of countenance which will be extremely attractive to his kind, and through this will be manifest that degree of advancement in spiritual life which is his.

Q.—[By Mrs. L. J. Brown, South Whitley, Ind.] Has every person a soul-mate? If so, after one passes from earth, does any length of time elapse, even though they have never met in this life, before they join in spirit-life? Would such union dépend on their physical organizations or spiritual affiliations?

A.—We have been taught that all persons have a counterpart, or spiritual mate, and that it calls for the union of the two individuals to make up a complete oneness or whole, in the highest department of humanitarian life. The questioner wishes to know if a long period of time will elapse before this union takes place, after the physical decease of the body. Sometimes two spirits are drawn into close and perfect union very soon after the latest one makes an appearance from earth. Perhaps they have never met on the mortal plane, it matters not, they are attracted together by the law of spiritual affiliation or affinity, and seem to gravitate to each other with strictest fidelity. But in another case, many years, even centuries, may elapse, before the two mates in spirit-life are united. There may be a strong attraction drawing one or the other to other localities and experiences; it may be necessary for one to gain an extended experience, or to pass through a special discipline in connection with another planet, or in various places to which the counterpart or soul mate is not strongly inclined, and therefore years of time may elapse before the perfect union spoken of by the questioner may take place.

It matters not; eternity lies before them in which to grow, to expand, and to understand each other, and whatever experience or discipline may be necessary for one or the other separate from the mate, will only prove of advantage to that soul when in the time to come they are joined together. We have seen spirits passing through one grade of unfoldment after another, seemingly alone, as far as vital companionship is concerned, but with friends and associates, doing their work, year after year, and yet knowing nothing of the existence of their soul companions. We have learned that such a spirit is only rounding out in spiritual perceptions, gaining in character, and indeed fitting himself to become a perfect complement of the soul-mate who will reach him in the time to come. We must remember that a human being is not limited to one stage of progress or of life; there are worlds upon worlds of advancement for the human soul to reach and to understand, and as he passes on age after age he will only draw more nearly to the fulfillment of his perfect life, when he shall be joined for eternity with his other half, or the complement of himself.

John Pierpont, to Warren Chase.

Before I withdraw I wish to speak a few words of greeting to my friend, Warren Chase, for it seems to me fitting that one old worker in the vineyard of truth, even though he has stepped onward to other planes of existence, should extend his greeting to another in this mighty vineyard in the evening of his mortal life.

I recognize my friend, as I have in years past, as an apostle of the truth, who has dared to step forth in the face of opposition and of censure, declaring that which pressed on his soul, and which was determined to be heard. I have recognized him as one who is always ready to defend the weak, to stand by the masses who are struggling and suffering along the ways of life and to bear the torch of progress over the highways and mountain-tops which his weary feet have climbed. Be of good cheer, friend; though you go out from this city into other places, yet shall the spirit of love and of good will follow you. It flows from many hearts on earth and in the angel-world; those who have been cheered by your words of instruction and of enlightenment, and been uplifted by the songs you have dared to sing, even when adversity pressed its heavy cloud upon your life—they do not forget, and in sending out this spirit of good will and love, this influence of peace to your heart, they give you the very best which their souls contain.

My friend, be of good cheer! Though the evening of life is closing around you, may its useful hours extend far into the night, and may it cast over your pathway the light of the brilliant stars that fade not, and may it point you onward to a brighter day, a glorious morning, when the spirit, enfranchished from its body of clay, shall rejoice that it has at last found its own. As I speak, one of your companions in years gone by, but now a spirit, who suffered and toiled with you, and who has gained her crown of rejoicing in the spirit-world where true hearts are understood, places her hand upon your head in loving greeting.

John Pierpont, to his friend, Warren Chase.

Lotela.

How do, Wilson brave? Lotela thought she'd come in and let you know she is n't dead. Some people think Lotela has gone up higher. How do, pale-faces? Now I shall talk for others that want to come.

Thomas Harrison.

A brave has been here all the afternoon; he kind o' bothered Pierpont chief two or three times when he was trying to answer questions, he sent out his positive magnetism so on the medy's brain—did n't mean to do it—it kind o' tripped up Pierpont chief's work a little bit. This man has been wanting to come to his people. He knows somebody here in the audience, and that made him more anxious than ever, brought his positive influence out, you know. He could n't somehow get hold of the medy's organism at all.

He wants to send his regards to his people, and tell them he has been doing well in the spirit-world, and has no desire to come back to take up the old conditions, but he would like very much to come into private communication with George; he has some affairs to talk over with him if it can be arranged for him to come. He do n't understand very well about talking either this way, but is just full of anxiety. Lotela told him he 'd better come on one of the other days if he wanted to talk, but he thought he 'd got here now and he 'd just hold on; so I said I 'd speak for him. He gives the name of Thomas Harrison.

Geraldine D. Keene.

I want to tell the lady up in Fitchburg that I have tried to help her daughter to come and speak, but she can't seem yet to get control of either of the mediums. She tried to come the other day, but was disappointed. She sends her love to her children and mother, and to all her family, and wishes them to know she is satisfied with the change that came over her life. True, if she had been given the choice, she would have remained on earth, because of its ties and its duties, and especially for her little darling's sake, but having been sent out into the spirit-world she finds it so beautiful and full of rest to her spirit that she feels it would only be ingratitude for her to be other than satisfied. She especially wishes her mother to feel resigned, because it will give her more of peace and happiness than to feel rebellious at the inevitable. The spirit says she sees a change before her brave. She feels that it will be best for him and best for others, and will be perfectly satisfied when the time comes for it to take place. She hopes sometime to communicate for herself and to give many things that her friends would like to know which she has in mind. Her name is Geraldine D. Keene.

Cora Belle Single.

A spirit is here who passed away when she was a little bit of a child. She is now a young girl in spirit-life. She comes back in that way, a young lady, and sends her love to her mother, and to all the dear ones in her father's house. This spirit says that the dear ones in spirit-life would be very glad to have her loved ones on earth sit by themselves, and try to receive manifestations from the other world. "We will do all that we can to make ourselves known. We promise not to harass or to annoy them in any way; we only come with loving influences and tender thoughts for those dear ones on earth, wishing to brighten their way, and assist them over the pathway of life. There is nothing to fear, no harm can befall any one who desires to commune with good spirits only for benevolent and practical work. I do not know whether we shall be able to do much or not, but there are certainly mediumistic elements in the family that we think can be utilized if time and patience are given to us by our dear ones on the mortal side." She calls herself Cora Belle Single. She comes from Wausau, Wis.

Another spirit comes with her, a young lady called Katie, not her sister, but a bright spirit who wished to reach some friends near by, and is going to try all she can until she accomplishes her desire.

To Mr. Lee.

I want to tell the Lee brave that Lotela has seen ever so many spirits around him this afternoon, first one and then another trying to impress his mind about some matters he has in view. I can't tell just what it is they want to outline before him. It looks to Lotela as though in a little while he was going to make an important change, and spirits are trying to impress him of it, in advance, so as to prepare him to meet it when it comes. It is on the material side, and it is going to be better than it will at first seem.

While Pierpont chief was talking to Warren Chase, Spirit Susie, who used to be a medium, came up and said she would like to bring her love to her friend. She remembers his many kindnesses to her, and how more than once his coming in brought cheer and sunshine to her heart when she felt somewhat depressed and dissatisfied. She felt herself uplifted and strengthened for the time by his presence and by his spirit-friends. She brings her spirit-love and sympathy. She is in harmony with him, takes an interest in his welfare, and will do all she can to help him along over the rough places and make his pathway clear and straight. It seems to Lotela as though she had some ideas in her mind concerning what the brave is going to do. She will manifest to him in a private way through some medium at a distance, and will give him information that she does not care to give in a public way.

John Marsh.

A spirit comes as though he meant to make himself known to some one present. He gives his name as John Marsh. He was a big man, broad-shouldered—not fleshy, but rather tall. He has had some business connections in this city. He would like to reach his friends and tell them he has escaped the evils of death and found a very good reception on the other side of life. He did n't believe in spirits coming back—thought it was all nonsense—but he has found that there is an open doorway which he would like to take advantage of in returning to the homes of his friends. He is a pretty positive kind of a man; when he sets out to do a thing he keeps right at it. I think that's the way he is going to do now, until he makes something known.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held March 9th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Watson Hastings.

I can't say very much, but I do want to send a few lines, thinking they may reach my people in Cambridge, and also my son Frank in Boston. Somewhere near the Evans House I went down, but I do n't remember anything more. I have spoken to one good friend since being freed from the mortal. Father do n't leave you, Frank. When you feel a little troubled about the business affairs and over the papers, try to sit by yourself passive, and I may impress your mind or spirit, they tell me, so that you will feel that father may be of some help to you.

I know some will say: "Watson Hastings did n't believe that the spirit could return to earth." What did others know of what I believed? I did n't express all my feelings in regard to beliefs. Now I know. It is a knowledge with me, and a thought with you in the mortal.

I would thank Mr. Chapin for his kind intentions, although I cannot have any voice in the matter to-day; but I do know my son finds the burden much heavier than he may have thought, while his father was able to take the brunt of the business.

This letter is imperfect, because I hardly know how to get control of the organism and because of the feeling I passed out with—some trouble with the brain. I am happy in the spirit-life. I have met many friends and relatives, also many I did not know here, and am forming acquaintances. It is the same, I find, with others as myself; if you do not learn anything of spirit-life while in the mortal, you must learn the other side.

I had some documents when I fell. I do n't hardly think they were lost. I know some one spoke, but I could not see. I think I shall lose a part of the feeling I went out with, by just making myself known.

Rachel Burns Martin.

I feel as if I had a great deal I would like to say before this assembly, which is very small compared with the invisible one on our side, each one eager to say a few words. Oh! how many times I have thanked the Great Father that he made these wise provisions so that his children should never die, but have everlasting life.

My home was in Haverhill, Mass., West Parish. Rachel Burns Martin.

Calvin and myself have talked this matter over many times, while I dwelt in the mortal, but always laid it aside as something wrong, as fraud, as evil. To-day I am ready and willing to say, Calvin, that it is true. I live, and am able, through this channel, to give you and the children a message that I know you will only be too glad to read, and feel in your soul that you will find Rachel again. We were closely connected in the church; I felt it would be wrong even to talk of the matter of spirits coming to earth. Moses and cousin Lizzie were firm in the faith, and are to-day. Calvin will remember we often prayed earnestly that they need not be lost. I find now the life we live here is building the home there every day.

Oh! how many times I have tried to make some little sound in the room at home, that they might know Rachel was there! Calvin, always teach the children that mother lives in heaven, and watches over each one—Lucy and Etta, George and Eddie, Lily and darling little Juddie. I thank God for such good children.

As I look at the earthly flowers, I can but say beautiful flowers, but not to be compared with ours in heaven, which are as real and tangible to us as yours are to you.

Calvin, tell Sarah not to be afraid of doing wrong in coming into communication with us. Her angel mother says: "Sarah, look a little higher, and know we come to bless thee every day." I trust this letter may reach the loved ones.

Charles Armitage.

My home on earth was in Saugus, Mass. My name is Charles Armitage. Uncle George is here, and Charlie Newhall and little Willie. Mother, open the door oftener and let Willie come in and control; for mother has been appointed as an instrument for the higher life, that she might give out some good things to mortals.

Father, do n't trouble about uncle John. If he do n't open the door here, he will find it swinging open pretty freely one of these days. I know that sister Addie, cousin Mollie, and Madeline and Josie, feel that we come, but do n't all understand it clearly. Uncle Joseph will send a line sometime. It is n't because he can't see now, for he 's got good eyes. I would say to each and every one—for there are many relatives yet left—Aunt Margie, Aunt Hattie and Aunt Mary—that I am one of their frequent visitors. They think they know a little something of our coming to them, but many times we turn away disappointed.

Mother and father, remember I come often; sometimes you seem to know it, but sometimes you fail to do so. I was in the home a few nights ago, and I well realized that mother knew I stood between her and father, and it was a source of comfort not only to them but to me. Charlie says that as soon as he is able he will send a communication to his father and mother, but his going out so suddenly rather keeps him back a little. But he says his father and mother do not believe he could get the power to come to earth. It shows how little they try to know of his coming; but I will help him all I can to send a message to them.

Sarah E. Davis.

My home was in Hancock, N. H. Sarah E. Davis. I have tried many times before to give a communication to the loved ones. I have some still there, and in Antrim, and in Stoddard, and some in connecting towns around; they seem to be scattered a great deal, but it does not prevent our finding them. I have often felt I would like to send a few words, if only to let them know we live and are able to send greetings to them.

Mother is with me and Alfred; and dear little Gracie and her loving friend Gracie, both are here to-day. I feel like saying that I thank God there is no death. Mother has said so many times since Alfred passed out: "Why, Alfred, have you not given some word of remembrance, or even tried to speak through the medium and the paper?" He responds: "Mother, I have done all I have been able to do."

Alfred asked me to say to Sarah and the children that he does not forget them nor the friends that have stood by them since he left the mortal form. The days have been sometimes dark to you, Sarah, but they will become lighter, and in heaven there will be reünion, where no parting is ever known.

Old Dr. Brown.

You may put me down as from Derry, N. H., that good old Granite State. They called me "Old Dr. Brown." I was n't so very old, but was considered a little eccentric. Well, if I do say it, I think there 's been quite a number glad to call for my services since I left the mortal, and that proves to me, and ought to prove to you in the mortal, that I knew a little something, and I did n't lose it by coming out of the old form.

I 'm not going to talk long, because there 's too many here.

I would like Mr. Adams, if possible, to know I have sent this letter, and also Mr. Alexander. John is here, and Sally, but won't speak to-day. Everybody knew me.

Henry Lovejoy.

I came from Lowell—not to-day—but when I dwelt in the mortal that was my home. My name is Henry Lovejoy. I know there has been many an anxious look into your good BANNER OF LIGHT, to see if some one of the family was not able to register a name. Often Albert and Sarah and Elizabeth have said: "Why so many communications, and still from none of our people?" Let me explain a little. Brother Albert, you know full well you have been blessed with privileges of coming into communication with us, while many of the dear spirits here have never found a door open; therefore we held back and let others take the place who are not privileged to come and talk directly through an instrument; but finding with each one of you this anxious feeling going out, I said to mother and father, to-day, that I would try again, and that would quiet them; they will more readily understand why we have not sent out a message. Sister Lizzie, John is here to-day, beside me, and Addison and Hattie, each one anxious to have a word spoken.

I know Mary will say that if Henry was coming he would not have what he would say printed, but would come to her. Mary, you will learn a good deal more when you come to our side than you know to-day. The advice from a dear loving brother is that you open the spirit-door, and learn a little here. I know that Albert and Lizzie have spoken to you many times in regard to our coming to earth, but always you have closed the door. I know Lizzie has said that she is determined to broach the subject, and will turn it over and over when alone. That is true; but continue to do it, for we are close beside you.

I love you all; and each one sends greetings to-day, who is not able to speak to you although present. There are many old associations that draw me back to earth; some are very pleasant, and it makes me feel that I have dear ones here on earth. I will add that Sarah is with me.

Bernice Hunt.

Can I send a letter to my mamma? The gentleman over here says, "Yes, dear." My home was in Haverhill, and my name is Bernice Hunt. Mamma cries so many, many times for me; but grandpa Bartie says that she do n't understand how near I am to her. Grandma Bartie (that means Bartlett) says sometimes, "Dora, (that is my mamma's name,) do n't cry for the child; she is better off than you could make her."

Poor mamma! I know there have been dark clouds, as grandpa says, and grandpa Hunt says so too; but as he talks of papa—for his name is Willie—I feel sometimes that when I get a little older I may have an influence over papa so he will know his little Bernie is n't dead. He loves me dearly, but he can't understand if Bernie comes to earth why she do n't make a loud noise and make him know it. I can't get power enough. Auntie Carrie is here, and cousin Lizzie Hunt.

Willie Tilley.

A gentleman here said if that girl could speak I could. I lived in Hyde Park.

The water is cold. Oh! how high that water is. I suppose I ought not to have tried to go in that boat. Somehow or other it went the other side up. I am feeling warmer now.

Will you just say that it is Willie Tilley, of Hyde Park—for my folks think I was drowned? I was n't. I want 'em to know I was n't drowned, any more than anybody that goes where we are, through the water. I felt pretty cold when I first spoke to you.

I want them to know that grandma is with me. I saw John Frame when he was giving a message, but I had to keep still.

I come down to the dépôt with Harry Crummet, because his father is there. He shuts up his eyes sometimes and says: "Oh, I do n't know about that thing." Well, if you do n't, you 'll have to know when you get where we are.

More than that, I have been to Mr. Lang's, where I 've seen Charlie. I wonder if he thinks I got drowned that time, or any of the other folks. I go into the old shoddy mill sometimes, but aint got to work there. I 'm glad of that. And I want to say just this, that I am happy, and I feel pretty good to-day, because I 'm going to make the people know I 'm not dead.

Daniel Knapp.

You may put me down as Daniel Knapp. I hardly know whether to call my home in Lowell or Boston. I guess you may call it Lowell. I was there most of the time. I have some friends here in Boston. I want to say to Mary Jane that her mother thinks she has made quite a mistake in taking all that business on her shoulders. She says if you had done a little different with the money, perhaps you would not have had so much worriment; you 'd have lived easier, and you 'd had enough to get through. None of my business—your mother just tells me to say that "it can't be helped now; so make the best of it." As soon as she gets power she will speak direct to you herself.

I think Clark had better look after his toolchest. I do n't believe he 'll find many things in it.

Much obliged to you. I thought the door was shut, but I squeezed in. I was n't a very big man.

The Dawn, Progress and Status of Modern Spiritualism.

An Address to the Spiritualists of America on the Fortieth Anniversary,

BY DR. DEAN CLARKE.

Future historians will doubtless record the opening of intercourse with the spirit-world as the great event of the nineteenth century. Without undue enthusiasm we may regard it as of unparalleled importance, because fraught with results affecting human weal more than any other in human experience.

The tiny raps at Hydesville had a meaning which only future ages can fully evolve. They were tokens of a new era in which "old things shall pass away," and a new social, political and religious regime shall gradually take their place. They announced the advent upon earth of a revolutionary and reformatory power that has come to stay and work till Truth, Justice, Liberty and Love shall prevail among the human race.

Those first audible vibrations of a mighty Celestial Telegraph bore a greater import to mankind than the first shot at Lexington that was "heard around the world." Yea, they had a significance more important in the trend of human destiny than the Star of Bethlehem! A celestial light appeared at Hydesville on the eve of March 31st, 1848, before which all the "Light of Asia" shall grow dim with years, while its increasing glory shall at length fill the heavens and cover the earth till time shall be no more! No words of panegyric can exaggerate the significance of that marvelous event, and it is well, yea, it is incumbent upon all who have felt the quickening rays of this celestial luminary to scan, on each anniversary of its dawning, the pathway of its progress, to note the results it has produced in human affairs, and to study the part each should perform in removing the scales of ignorance and prejudice which blind the eyes of the masses to its glorious illumination.

It is not our purpose, nor is it necessary on this occasion, to trace the history of the development of this great Spiritual Dispensation during the forty years that have elapsed since its dawn. Suffice it to say that from the first tiny rap it has evolved a great variety of physical and mental phenomena, closely analogous in kind and character with those recorded in the sacred books of all ages and countries. These phenomena have spread, or, rather, have sporadically appeared in every quarter of the globe, puzzling alike the peasant and the sage who have tried to explain them on any other than the spiritual hypothesis. With only such human assistance as the Divine Power has coerced, this great spiritual movement has compassed the earth and planted the banner of its progress on every continent and isle of the ocean, against an opposition that would have crushed and obliterated any scheme of human aggression. The Christian world had long been taught that the age of miracles closed centuries ago. Materialistic science, making unparalleled strides in the last half century, had catalogued even the idea of spirit among the myths of antiquity. Hence at no period of human history has there been so wide-spread and deep rooted a skepticism to overcome; yet Spiritualism has gone on "from conquering to conquer," till its believers outnumber those of any sect in Christendom, and to a large extent has entered even that forbidden enclosure.

Not only has Spiritualism won its way against the greatest of external odds, but it has borne burdens piled on by its would-be friends, and sustained a weight of reproach accumulated in the household of faith that would have crushed any cause not upheld by more than human power. Barnacles of olden superstition have weighed it down. Parasites of false doctrine and spurious reform have attached themselves to it to sap its vitality. Magicians and tricksters have counterfeited its phenomena. Cranks and ignoramuses have crowded themselves to the front, essayed to be leaders and managers. Ambitious and unscrupulous usurpers have attempted to become generalissimos of the movement. Fanatics and mystagogues have foisted upon it the incubus of Oriental speculations. Time-servers have turned traitors, deserted our ranks, and gone over to the enemy. Renegade mediums have turned "exposers," and strengthened the prejudices of our opponents. Cowardly believers have denied or concealed their faith, consented to the slanders of its enemies, and done nothing for its support. Disloyal friends (?) hungering for church patronage and "respectability," have refused support to its faithful workers, and given "aid and comfort" to the foes of our facts and philosophy.

All these impediments, and more, that have retarded its progress somewhat, have signally failed to stop the victorious march of this gigantic movement, which has, despite every obstacle, gone to the verge of civilization, and is now fast making this world its own. That our cause has withstood the assaults of its powerful enemies and the more destructive forces within its undisciplined ranks, is, we repeat, a most positive proof not only of its intrinsic truth, but also shows that "there is a Divinity that shapes" its "ends, rough hew them as we may."

It is gratifying to know that Spiritualism has won the belief of not only "the common people," such as were the early converts of Christianity, but also that of hundreds of the leading scholars, statesmen, jurists, philosophers and scientists of both the New and Old World. The press has largely come to respect its truth, and the American pulpit, at least, has nearly ceased its open hostility, and is even appropriating many of its teachings. This shows the power it has attained.

While this is properly a day of jubilee for those who "have fought the good fight and kept the faith," who have won victory on fields of honor and truth; while it is eminently proper to stop on our march to rejoice over the achievements of the last two score years, it is not the time to "stack arms" and disband the Grand Army of Progress, which the reveille at Hydesville summoned to a campaign that must continue till the last armed foe of truth expires. The battle of Spiritualism against materialistic skepticism and scientific contumacy; its strife with ecclesiastic despotism, bigotry and intolerance; its struggle against superstition, ignorance and idolatry; its warfare with creeds and dogmas contrary to reason and nature; its conflict with injustice, inequality and iniquity; its fight against "the powers of darkness" which hold body, mind or spirit in any form of vassalage, is but just begun, though already waged for forty years without cessation against the enemies of human progress and improvement.

That the spiritual movement was begun for something more than a demonstration of a spiritual existence for decarnated man, is evident to every philosophical observer or prescient seer. That the phenomena, which have almost wholly engrossed the attention and interest of the unreflecting multitude, were designed by the wise inaugurators of the movement only as a means to higher ends, to ulterior intellectual, moral and spiritual development, it is most important at this period of its career to understand. On this auspicious occasion, while appropriately rejoicing over the past triumphs of our cause; while recounting with great pleasure the wonderful phenomenal developments which have been the sine qua non of its progress; while congratulating one another that untold spiritual blessings have been vouchsafed us by personal communication with our loved ones in spirit-life, it seems to us equally opportune, and perhaps more profitable, that we scan the horoscope of the future, and study the needs of the hour, that we may efficiently coöperate with the higher powers to make their divine gifts available to all the world. We, who by virtue of adapted organisms and favoring circumstances have gained this priceless knowledge and these invaluable gifts of the spirit, are but trustees, and it is our imperative duty to be almoners of these blessings to others less fortunate. We cannot, without great personal loss, escape the claims of the great law of distributive justice expressed in the Scripture language: "Unto whom much has been given, of them shall much be required."

It seems to us the question ought to come prominently before the Spiritualists of America and of the world to-day: Are we doing our part of the great work of human enlightenment and spiritualization, begun by the angels of the New Dispensation on the glorious day we now celebrate? Are we doing all we can to spread the truth, the light and the exalting power of this grand spiritual era? Are we letting our light shine? or are we "hiding it under the bushel" of self-interest, or concealing it under some false name that may be less odious and more popular with other cowards and hypocrites? Are we standing by our cause when its instruments are reviled and persecuted, and it and they "are spoken all manner of evil of"? or are we acting the part of Judas and Peter, betraying, denying and sneaking away from duty in "the hour that tries men's souls"?

The hour has come when we are all being weighed in the balance by the Higher Powers. Shall we be "found wanting" in fidelity to our duties as agents of those who have conferred great gifts upon us for use? It is pertinent that we ask to-day what justification have church-going, church-supporting Spiritualists for deserting their own cause and sustaining those who close their doors against "ministering spirits"? Spirits cannot work without human agents and material means. Whose duty is it to furnish these, if it be not theirs who have received the benefits and blessings of spirit-intercourse? Shame on those craven souls who forsake the cause of truth and progress, and seek "the loaves and fishes" of popular churches that are wedded to errors and superstitions which wise and good spirits have come to overthrow! "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon," nor truth and humanity, while turning your backs upon Spiritualism, which has come as the world's saviour at this hour.

MAGNETIC INSOLES

To the Spiritualists of the World!

YOU have been calling for more magnetic life for nearly forty years. The invention of Magnetic Shields places within your reach the most powerful Magnetic Batteries ever constructed, and exactly adapted to all the needs and wants of your physical and spiritual well-being. To magnetize and polarize the body is to intensify and increase all the intellectual and spiritual faculties. All mediums and sensitives should wear Magnetic Shields. The vitalizing and energizing power radiated from these Magnetic Reservoirs of Life will redouble the life potencies and quadruple the spiritualizing entities for every one who wears them. Dr. Thacher's Magnetic Shields excel and transcend all known healing powers and forces except that coming direct from the world of spirit. If the Spiritualists of the world will read our logic and consult with the Highest Intelligences, they will get assurance which will convince every intelligent investigator. All the knowledge which led up to the perfecting of these Shields came from the world of invisible spirit. We are warranted in saying Magnetism is all spirit and an immaterial substance. Spirit is the only substance in the true sense of the word. Spiritualists are too well informed to be misled on this subject. Why not send for our book and read what we have to say of genuine spiritual substance? If you want further proof that we state truth, send $1,00 for a pair of Insoles, or $2,00 for THREE PAIRS.

Please be sensible and investigate. Magnetism will infuse new life into broken-down physical bodies. Try it, and be convinced. Our book sent free.

COCINISM,

The Science of Practical Will-Ability and Psychological Hygiene.

THIS wonderful science teaches man how to obtain control over the greater part of his nervous system, and to such an extent that, by the exercise of his will, he can direct currents of vital force through any part of the body. When the exercise of this power is once learned, the brain and the whole nervous system can be cleansed, more or less, according to the amount of force exerted by the will.

If pain is experienced in any part of the body, when not the effects of physiological changes, it can be removed simply by removing the cause thereof; and even where such changes have taken place, if powerful currents of vital force can be forced through the parts affected, much foreign matter can be removed, thus giving Nature a chance to repair damages, especially in affections of the Liver. Failing Sight and Memory have been restored in many cases, whilst chest diseases are always amenable to this power.

There is another Phase of the Science: The Psychology of Mediumship.

This branch deals directly with the development of Sensitives. Hundreds of persons have been developed as seers who never dreamed that they were mediumistic; whilst, when making experiments, many persons where invited to sit, without knowing anything about what they were sitting for, yet the results were the same; proving, beyond doubt, that to become a medium, all that is required is the proper organism and a fair stock of common honesty.

Sensitives developed by this process never lose their consciousness whilst traveling through the Realm of Spirit; therefore, all descriptions of places seen and information given, whilst journeying through space, are indelibly impressed upon the memory, and to such an extent that, where there is sufficient ability, maps of the country and plans of buildings are readily obtained, whilst the identity of spirits seen and spoken to are placed beyond all doubt.

In the event of the world saying that I claim too much for the Psychology of Mediumship, I would refer to an account of a portion of my work in South Africa written by the Spiritualists of Cape Town, together with the address that I received on the eve of my departure for South America, both of which were printed in the Medium and Daybreak, April 24th, 1885.

I feel impressed to give these facts to the world at large, with the view of demonstrating them, wherever I am called upon to do so. Business matters will detain me here in Rosario until next June, after which time, if the people of the United States think sufficient of my Science to invite me to their shores, I can readily prove all that is herein stated. If societies or communities wish to write to me, my address is C. M. COGIN, F. C. C. A.,

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission";

Banner of Light.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1888.

Medical Matters in New York.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I notice in THE BANNER a paragraph in regard to Dr. Swarts in the Police Court at Albany, and the action of the magistrate. It ought to be known that when the infamous New-York Statute was under consideration in the Senate, the fact that it did not reach "Faith-Healers" and "Metaphysical Medicine" was distinctly understood. One Senator declared that he had received benefit from such treatment, and threatened, if the bill interfered with them, to defeat it. Hence the managers of the unrighteous movement were compelled to consent to the exception.

We have a good deal of judge-made law in the State of New York—more than is wholesome to free government—but it will require some more to make the statute of 1887 affect Dr. Swarts. Indeed, I have my doubts concerning its operation in regard to Magnetists, Masseurs, etc. Meanwhile, I believe that a good honest court would rule the entire statute unconstitutional.

I have some hope that the tide is setting in against this kind of legislation. Medical Trusts are hardly the thing in a Republic, any more than a Chicago Corner, or any other "Pool." A bill was introduced into the Assembly of New Jersey, which passed at the blizzard period; but as soon as the weather cleared up, the Senate squelched it. The measure was a curious affair—like necessity, it "knew no law."

You are aware that the State statute was found leaky. Two young physicians resolved to disregard it, and were indicted. One was acquitted; in the other case the indictment was quashed. All, therefore, that remains of the iniquitous measure is the money paid the officials under it, and what power it retains as a scarecrow to young physicians.

There is an epidemic of exanthematous disease in New York and Brooklyn. The usual course is taken: to exaggerate the matter of smallpox and keep scarlatina, measles and diphtheria in the background. Yet the dishonesty of this proceeding is flagrant. I will give you a summary of cases in New York for two weeks:

For the week ending April 7th—Diphtheria, 125 cases and 28 deaths; scarlet fever, 145 cases and 21 deaths; measles, 57 cases and 4 deaths; SMALLPOX, 25 cases and 4 deaths.

For the week ending April 14th—Diphtheria, 158 cases and 31 deaths; scarlatina, 103 cases and 30 deaths; measles, 59 cases and 4 deaths; SMALLPOX, 21 cases and 3 deaths.

It would probably be considered as "against public policy" to make the fact known that New York was having a deadly visitation of scarlet fever and its cognate, diphtheria, with a mortality of one-fifth or one-fourth of all persons attacked; but smallpox, having but 21 and 25 cases and a minor rate of mortality, is chronicled diligently.

To be sure, there is money in that. The statements of the disease-peddling vaccination corps suffice to amuse the public, who would be seriously alarmed if made aware that three other epidemics, each of them several-fold more mortal and insidious, were now raging in the metropolis.

The Vaccination Inquirer for April has an article on "Enforced Vaccination under the American Constitution." It quotes Minister Phelps, one of our ablest jurists, in regard to the provision that "citizens shall be secure in their persons"; and then cites a paragraph from the London Globe, showing up to emulation the recent atrocious procedures in the city of New York: "Unvaccinated persons are vaccinated by a surgeon backed by policemen."

To this the Inquirer quotes from an American: . . . "If I were in New York, and did not want to be vaccinated, I do not think Dr. Edson, even with the support of the police, would try it on. If he did, it might fare badly with Dr. Edson."

There is no doubt of all this. The Constitution is all right; but in many of the Courts it seems to be approximating the value of waste paper. Besides, the difficulties are these: the sufferers are the poor, the weak and the timid; and such have little chance in a "court of justice." They are easily cowed down.

Mr. Bergh, when alive, attempted to get up a case; but there was a general backing down. When an anti-vaccinator is able and ready to take care of himself, the vaccination peddlers give him a wide berth—they are brave against the helpless only.

Prof. Francis W. Newman, of Oxford, takes the stand that resistance to vaccination should be based on moral grounds:

"Prepare a petition, plainly telling Parliament that to command the infusing of disease into healthy children (or adults) is beyond the function of any legislation, and is a crime, and murders the innocent. This will be signed by a million, and will prevail."

This utterance, by one of the first scholars of Great Britain, is worthy of being written in letters of gold. It is true beyond much that is called Holy Writ. Yet if we had Prof. Newman here we could show him small doctors and smaller lawyers who would face him down, as though they understood the matter better than the Omniscient himself. A. WILDER.

The So-Called Christian Science Problem Solved.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I have solved in my own mind the so-called Christian Science doctrine, and it is perfectly rational and in harmony with the Spiritualistic Philosophy as has been taught in ancient days, also in the present age—the only difference being that the latter is as free as the air and sunshine, while the former is shrouded in mystery and held by copyright or as a secret. The former is sold at a price under various names, all meaning the same thing, and is confined to the earth-sphere, whereas the latter is a spiritual condition of the spirit-spheres that the Christian scientists have not yet grown into or publicly embraced—it not being popular, neither money-making.

I will describe the condition of the spirit-spheres as embraced in nearly all the spiritualistic literature before the public to-day, and which is demonstrated by excarnated spirits themselves.

When the change known as death takes place with the human family, the spirit—all there is of man that retains its identity for eternity—goes to a spirit-world where everything spiritual exists, and diseases and pains are not known, except in the mind as far as recollection is retained concerning what was suffered from disease and pain while in the material body.

Doubtless it is easy to change the mode of thinking with excarnated spirits, after they reach the spirit-world, and are dissevered from the diseased material body; but to attempt to make an individual believe in the "no-disease" theory, with the material body diseased from head to foot, would seem to show an unbalanced mind; and if individuals kept on speculating in this way they would soon argue themselves out of existence in the earth-sphere, and imagine themselves in the spirit-world, where such teachings belong, if anywhere, instead of the mundane sphere, where the people have to be fed and clothed with material things.

I can readily see how some minds can be psychologized into the belief that all that exists is spirit, and there is nothing that exists in the material which cannot be chemically dissolved into fluids and gases, and nothing will be left but spirit (in the way of identity). But this is not new in thought, neither is it practical any further than being a scientific fact. I am satisfied that the Christian Science teachings would do far more harm than they now do if they were not associated with large fees for the secret or so-called science; but as it is, the material dollars gathered from unsuspecting innocents hold the fort with the teachers, and without question these things of themselves are the brakes on the wheel that will cause a reaction and turn the tide of thought into a correct and practical way.

The material and the spiritual should be harmonized and blended, both in thought and action, in order to obtain the best results.

The facts indicate that there is what is known as matter, and it is in abundance on the earth-sphere where we live to-day in the material body, and it is sheer nonsense to play upon words with the view of overawing the credulous. The so-called Christian Science adherents, as far as I can discern, seem to possess about as much of the material as the human family average in their composition.

I will say in conclusion that I fully agree with the sentiments of the veteran Prof. Alonzo Phelps, in his allusion to the Christian Science system, when he said: "Whatever is TRUE in it is not new, and whatever is new in it is not true." This seems to embrace the whole thing as far as I can fathom it.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning, after singing and an invocation, Mrs. Lillie considered, at the request of the audience, whether we are not spirits here, governed by spiritual laws, as much as we shall be when we have passed on to the other life, and should we not concern ourselves more about the future of this life, and less about the other. It is impossible, said Mrs. L's guide, for us to unravel life's mysteries. As a spirit it is impossible for me not to look forward to the future. I stand upon the island of a single day, as you do; I speculate in a measure, and must calculate; I look toward to-morrow, to see what preparation to make for it; I hold as a spiritual being it is necessary. Life is continuous, death is one of its changes, and a right understanding of life will cause one to act and do the best he can on this sphere. As spiritual beings we can commune with spirits in other spheres; far beyond us are intelligences who have arisen from earth. As the clouds gather moisture and return to earth in plentiful showers, so there is a law of spirit attraction connecting the two worlds, and causing them to blend as one.

Other subjects, suggested by questions from the audience, were considered in a manner very satisfactory; in regard to one concerning materialization, it was said: "In the rose there is a soul life; its spirit is the essence and substance of it; it requires night and day, light and darkness to materialize it into beauty; the quickening power of intelligent man has sheltered it and produced it three months before Nature could.

Moses and Elias were materialized upon the Mount, and Christ stood transfigured before his disciples. The same law exists, and can be called into exercise to day and produce materialized forms; as children you have many lessons to learn. When you stand upon the summit you will see that a tiny shell has a volume in it of the story of creation. Use your own judgment and reason in the séance-room and decide for yourself what is truth." A poem by Mrs. Lillie, and the singing of "Cast thy Bread upon the Waters," by Mr. Lillie, closed the service.

Evening.—After the usual opening exercises Mrs. Lillie spoke upon the value of the knowledge of Spiritualism, when called upon to lay away the forms of loved ones, compared to what Orthodoxy can give. Spiritualism as a philosophy touches upon important forms of thought in reference to a future state. In the breaking of natural ties, it teaches that we separate to meet again, and hence the separation is not so keenly felt; while Orthodoxy holds one in bondage, teaching you to believe your departed have entered a state of eternal happiness or misery. To the question, If children grow to be adults in the spirit-world, what do the very old who pass away become? it was said, Children grow into maturity and become what nature designed. The old grow older and bear the marks of age in wisdom and progress. Age with you shows decay; with us improvement. Spirit is the eternal substance, the body a perishing one. Spiritualism gives truths no other form of belief offers, and all are destined to rise out of darkness and skepticism into the strong light of eternal day; right is uttermost and justice will be done. Mrs. Lillie improvised a poem upon "Eternal Truth." Mr. Lillie closed the exercises with a song. Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening at 10:30 and 7:30. MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—A good audience listened most attentively to the address given through A. E. Tisdale at the Temple last Sunday. The subject: "Truth the Essential Christ," was most ably and eloquently handled. He said Truth was as old as God, and when souls understood and realized it in themselves, then was the true Christ found. Every age had its divine revelations. Each spring-time brings anew the wealth of blossom and verdure; though a new manifestation of nature, it was the same everlasting principle of life blossoming in beauty and fragrance. So truth in every age has come to the world in response to man's needs. It may have been through Moses or Plato or Buddha or Jesus, yet the same divine principle was presented in such guise as men's minds were fitted to receive, and it would continue to come under whatsoever name it might be known.

It might be called Christianity, and if men believed and lived the teachings of the Nazarene—if they practiced the Golden Rule and lived the sweet precepts of the Sermon on the Mount—no higher religion could be found; but truth was conceived of and limited by man's ignorance, and if in his narrow conception it became a dogmatic theology, its virtue was gone out, and a new name was needed to express it, and this may be Spiritualism.

If this new name expressed the sum of all the virtues, if it taught the Golden Rule, and bringing our loved ones from that other shore, showed the grandeur and beauty and continuity of life, then Spiritualism would be for the healing of the nations. He believed it had this high destiny; but alas! too many, wrapped in their narrow conceptions, saw in it but some small fragment of the reality, and not incorporating its grand truth into their lives, lost some portion of the rich legacy which it brought to mankind. Let us look to the guardian spirits of our households for sustenance and strength for our daily duties, and realize that truth is not limited by church or sect, but is as broad as the universe, and holds the sum of all perfections for the human soul.

Next Sunday the guides of J. Wm. Fletcher will speak upon "Materialization—its Ultimate," at the usual hour, 2:45 P. M., and an interesting and instructive discourse is expected, to which all friends are invited.

The regular session of the Temple Fraternity School will be held at 12:30 P. M.—the time being changed from 10:30 A. M., in order that those who come from a distance may stop over for the afternoon lecture. All friends invited to come and bring children with them.

On Wednesday evening, at 7:30, there will be the usual Sociable in the lower audience-room. All cordially invited. W. H. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington Street.—The meetings in this hall last Sunday were very interesting, and were opened by a duet finely rendered by Mrs. Nickerson, alto, Miss Guardenier, soprano, accompanied by Prof. Willis Milligan.

Chairman Lewis introduced Dr. H. B. Storer, who prefaced his lecture with the remark that a congregation had assembled to-day in one of our churches to listen to a sermon against Modern Spiritualism, founded upon the following text, taken from the book of Revelation—a book that had puzzled the divines of the past eighteen centuries—namely: "I saw three unclean spirits, like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon—for they are the spirits of devils working miracles," etc.; and the preacher would attribute the whole thing to devils or fallen spirits; adding that at a time when many are really deluding the people it became us to inquire in what the moral value of spiritual phenomena consists.

Spiritual manifestations are of infinite variety, and we determine their real value by the moral influence upon the general well-being of humanity. People see phenomena that they can account for in no other way than through spirit influence; and, while these spirit gifts may be prostituted to a selfish purpose, yet beneath and above all there is a sublime reality which commends it to the judgment and reason, and we know that our friends live and that they do return with messages of love and the assurance of a life beyond.

The Doctor then gave a description of certain tests of materialization which he made some fourteen years ago in connection with Dr. Willis, and which were published in THE BANNER at that time—closing with an earnest defense of the truth of materialization, which was listened to with deep interest.

After a solo from Miss Guardenier, the Chairman introduced Mrs. J. F. Dillingham, whose Indian girl, "Sunshine," gave very good tests of spirit-presence, followed by Mrs. C. H. Loomis-Hall with psychometric readings of remarkable value. Mrs. Hall said that "people look for too much from our mediums. They must remember that they are not perfect, and while they mean to do right they sometimes make mistakes."

At the evening session A. E. Tisdale gave a very eloquent address upon the "Theory of Mind and Matter in Connection with the Spiritual." Mr. Tisdale is a wonderful proof in himself of spirit-control. Stricken with blindness when only fourteen years of age, and of course able to obtain only a limited education, he holds the audience with a power of eloquence and reasoning not excelled by any collegiate or orator of the past or present.

Frank T. Ripley, so well known to Boston Spiritualists, took the platform and in his clear and earnest manner gave tests and names of spirit-friends, giving thirty-five names in thirty minutes, every one of which was recognized by persons present. We have room for only one: The late Mrs. Abbie M. Tyler sent out her love to all her friends, and was thankful for the love sent her in her spirit home. Mr. Ripley's tests are convincing and were well received.

This Association holds a test and developing circle Thursday evening of each week, which is largely attended and of unusual interest. All are made welcome. HEATH.

The First Independent Club.—At our business meeting on Thursday last, twenty-eight new members were admitted, increasing the membership to nearly three hundred. The present quarters proving inadequate to this constant gain in numbers, a committee has been appointed to secure more commodious rooms.

Monday evening proved to be of exceeding interest, and many pleasing comments were heard upon the programme, which included many faces new to our platform. After our period of silent concentration, Mrs. Case rendered two very sweet vocal selections—one, "The Brook," was especially captivating to the audience.

Mrs. Stiles, Dr. Sutton Clark, Dr. Morris, Mrs. Chandler, Dr. Drisko and Dr. Wilder all made timely and interesting remarks, and were welcomed with hearty applause. A number of instances were cited to prove that many horses, dogs and other animals possess clairvoyant vision, and that that alone accounts logically for numerous strange actions which they at times go through with.

On Sunday the Club visits the First Spiritual Temple in a body, in time for the exercises at 2:45 P. M.

On Monday evening next occurs our union meeting, and the Boston Spiritual Temple, the Ladies' Aid Society connected therewith, the Children's Lyceum No. 1, the First Spiritual Temple, the Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, the College Hall Society, the Eagle Hall Society, the First Ladies' Aid Society and the Mishawum Hall Society of Charlestown, have all been cordially invited to join with us on that occasion, and commence a series of meetings which will be held once in every three months. The Clinton male quartette (colored) will furnish the music for the union meeting. Peace be unto all. F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society of the Boston Spiritual Temple held its last regular meeting for the season, April 17th, in Lyceum Hall. In the evening, Capt. Richard Holmes presiding, Master Willie Boyce and Maudie G. Banks opened the exercises with a piano duet. Dr. H. F. Merrill of Bucksport, Me., gave the names of spirits present, who were recognized; vocal duet by Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Stafford; inspirational addresses by Mrs. A. H. Colby Luther, Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock and Mrs. R. S. Lillie, who closed with an improvised poem; following was a song by Mrs. Lizzie C. Clapp, Master Bertram L. Shapleigh, accompanist; remarks by Mrs. Mary E. Wellington and Mr. Abbot Walker; and songs by Mrs. Hebberton; Mrs. Josephine Webster of Chelsea made appropriate closing remarks. The large audience joined in singing "Auld Lang Syne." This closed a successful series of entertainments, to be resumed the first of November. MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualist meetings were held Sunday, April 22d, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. During the afternoon speaking and tests constituted the order of exercises, a large audience being in attendance. At 7:30 the hall was filled to overflowing; this being the last meeting of the season, the services were very impressive. Appropriate remarks were made by able speakers, and clearly recognized tests were presented. During the exercises fine music was rendered by Miss Small and Mrs. Poore; recitations by the children added much to the occasion. At a late hour the services closed, each medium being presented with a floral offering. In addition to this the Chairman, in behalf of the Society, through THE BANNER wishes to tender thanks and kind regards to the many mediums who through the past season have so kindly rendered their services, also to the many friends in Boston and vicinity. The Society reports unusually good success during the season just closed.

DR. W. A. HALE, Chairman.

The Facts Socials Wednesday evenings are very interesting convocations devoted to the discussions and phenomena of the mind. Some of the best mediums give psychometric readings and descriptions of spirit friends, diagnoses of disease, etc.—On Wednesday next, May 2d, two very interesting meetings will be held, afternoon and evening (small entrance fee), at Paine Hall, at which time several of the best mediums for different classes of phenomena will give séances. ☞

The First Society of Spiritualists.—One of the great attractions to the meetings of the First Society that should not be overlooked is the sweet and perfect music sung and played in such harmony by Miss Jennie Pierce, soprano, and Miss Ella F. Porter, accompanist, which will compare favorably with that in any of our most expensive and popular churches, and is always listened to with profound attention.

After the rendering in the morning of that beautiful song, "The New Kingdom," by these accomplished musicians, Miss Jennie B. Hagan made an invocation that was in keeping with the harmony of the occasion, and then, as an introduction to her remarks, gave a beautiful tribute of praise to her friend, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, whose place she would humbly attempt to fill while Mrs. Brigham was speaking with such commendation to the people of Cincinnati. Miss Hagan is more like Mrs. Brigham in her manner than any other speaker we have ever chanced to meet.

The subject for her lecture was: "If the light within thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" She also improvised several poems—both subjects and poems being selected by the large audience in attendance.

Miss Hagan spoke interestingly in the evening upon subjects selected by her hearers and was frequently applauded.

The afternoon meeting for manifestations was held as usual. Miss Jennie B. Hagan opened the service with an invocation; Mrs. Henry J. Newton effectively read the choice poem entitled "Tauler," by Whittier; Henry G. Newton, Esq., delivered an able and forcible address upon the methods of some noted prestidigitators in their puerile efforts to ridicule Spiritualists and Spiritualism.

The President, seeing Mr. John Slater in the hall, called him to the platform, and he made some pertinent remarks that were not very complimentary to newspaper reporters and those who purposely misrepresent Spiritualism. He further gave some interesting experiences of his mediumship, and noted the intellectual influence Spiritualism was having upon the church and church-goers.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan gave a history of her experiences with Prof. Starr, alias Prof. Cecil, that put him in a light that will not make life happy to him here. She also gave several impromptu inspirational poems upon subjects selected by the audience, that fully sustained her high and well-earned reputation.

Mrs. E. A. Wells has been suffering from a severe cold all the week, so that she nearly lost her voice, consequently was not in a condition to give tests.

Next Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, Miss Jennie B. Hagan, Mr. John Slater and Mrs. E. A. Wells will all take part in the meeting for manifestations at 2:45 P. M., and a very interesting programme will be presented. S.

New York, April 22d, 1888.

Newburyport, Mass.—Charles W. Hidden writes April 22d: "I herewith append the report, taken for the Herald, of Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther's reply this afternoon to Rev. Mr. Mills's attack on Spiritualism last Sunday. The report necessarily gives only the merest outline of an address which, all things considered, was the grandest I ever listened to. It covered every department and phase of the spiritualistic question, was keen, logical and witty throughout, and must have convinced the large audience that the reverend bigot had but a flimsy foundation upon which to base his remarks of a week ago:

MRS. COLBY-LUTHER REPLIES TO REV. MR. MILLS'S ADDRESS ON "FEMALE SPIRITUALISTS."

Fraternity Hall was never more crowded than Sunday afternoon to listen to Mrs. Colby-Luther in reply to Rev. O. P. Mills. The membership of the different churches was well represented, while the members of the society were probably all present. Mrs. Luther, a tall, well-kept, white-haired lady of apparently about fifty years, in a clear tone and with much fervor and animation held the audience, without manuscript, for over an hour.

The exercises were opened by a quartette singing "Take Me, Father." Mrs. Luther commenced: "A strangeness permeates my vision; clouds and darkness in view of the subject to be presented to-day. It seems a reverend, one of your popular ministers, selected Spiritualism for his sermon last Sabbath night. This was all right; he had a perfect right to express an opinion. You never know a man—what he is—so well as when he expresses his opinions and reveals himself. I am not here to instruct Mr. Mills; I am here to express my own views; but you must not destroy my opportunities to reason. It is an established fact that the ministers of all ages have been, are to-day, an hierarchy. This is a great power all over the world. I speak of Christians, and I use the word as I do that of Spiritualists. We may differ in our opinions, but this does not change facts. No matter whether you accept or deny it has nothing to do with the facts or truth.

As the church teaches, the less we know the more we believe, and the more we believe the less we know. If your Rev. Mills has facts, all I say cannot change them; they may be against my ideas, but all heaven or hell cannot change them. Spiritualism is a great principle, and as God is said to wink at ignorance, allow me to do the same with the reverend gentleman's. It is a pity that a man should so debase himself as to deny and talk about that which he knows nothing of. I do not ask you to accept what I say, but if the newspaper reports are true he debases himself. In his address he brings up what he calls a witch; the Bible nowhere calls her a witch or hag, but somebody heads the chapter 'a witch'—some clergyman probably. She is called 'a woman'.

The lady reviewed the story of Saul and Samuel, and questioned how the reverend knew that Saul knew before what would happen. Did God tell him? Who told him she was an "old hag"? Instead of ridiculing women mediums as base, vile, let the pure mothers, wives and daughters answer. Instead of ridiculing Spiritualism, the Bible is full of it from Genesis to Revelations. The lecturer instanced Moses and Elijah on the Mount. How did Jesus know it was them? One had died thirteen hundred years before, and the other ten hundred; their history had not been written; how could Jesus know who they were? Were they really there at all? I don't know; your church and clergy say they were; what will he do with the story if it is true? Spiritualism answers.

The lecturer here related the Bible account of the Conception, which she held has never been investigated, but your clergy and priests accept it. To-day the reverends all talk about the misfortunes of Spiritualists. If I put on green goggles everything is green; if I put on blue or white glasses all is blue or white. If I use the eyes of those who are decrying this doctrine, does not all look to me as through their own medium? I can prove that he had false eyes upon the rostrum, and could not know anything about Spiritualism for want of mental calibre.

One cannot be a wise man in the true sense of the term and be a minister. I know they have much knowledge, but are deceivers. Is this reverend ready to stand the test Jesus puts in a text like this: Go into the world and preach the gospel to every living creature? He called the poor fishermen to him, (so the Bible says, I don't know,) and told them to do this. Jesus was infallible, they say.

The lady here referred to the Apocalypse account of Saul, to the fiery furnace, "the writing on the wall," and other Bible accounts as duplicated by Spiritualism, not understood by the clergy, but clear to mediums. She paid her respects in unmistakable terms to the clergy of all denominations; spoke of the great men of the world, Lincoln, Denton, Jefferson, Phillips and others as in hell, by modern theology, though she thought that some of the scientific men there would make it a paradise; that the church and the Bible remain the same, while Spiritualism moves on and has fostered the arts, sciences, literature, poetry. It came to redeem the world from ignorance and sin, from priestcraft and superstition. Spiritualism is not of to day or forty years only, but is as ancient as the Pyramids, and its records are imperishable.

In the evening the speaker delivered an address on "The Origin of the Bible," and was presented with an elegant basket of flowers, bearing a card marked "From lovers of truth."

The Daily News also gave a lengthy report of the same discourse, from which the appended extracts are selected:

"Where does the reverend gentleman get his authority for referring to her [the woman of Endor] as a "hag"? In his creed? In his articles of faith? In his love of Jesus Christ? No, the word comes from the lowest slang and the vilest people: Does Newburyport support such a preacher and does a popular church hear him?

The Apocrypha was cited as verification of the spirituality of the communication from Samuel to Saul, since it substantiates the prophecy of the former regarding the end of Saul. What sustains the Bible? Spiritualism from Genesis to Revelation. Take it away and there is nothing left. The speaker was willing the ministry should have its own way within its own borders, but when it goes outside it must stand the test. She challenged the reverend gentleman to appear on the rostrum with her, when she would prove him a falsifier or she would leave the platform forever.

. . . "By these signs ye shall know them" [those who believe]. . . Does the reverend gentleman apply any of these tests? Yet they were given by Jesus Christ himself so as to know who were believers. I simply use one. I ask the ministers to lay their hands on the sick and heal them—the simplest test used by Christ. Hundreds of mediums are used for that purpose, and thousands of human beings in the United States are healed of diseases which had been pronounced incurable by the medical fraternity.

Spiritualism came to redeem the world from ignorance. Briefly stated, Spiritualism is the condensed chemistry of life. It covers up the good and the bad. It is but forty years old, while the Christian religion is nearly nineteen hundred years old and has had the teaching of the people for centuries. . . .

Spiritualism came to protect human life and reason, and that grandest of all things human, woman, the mother of nations. It is an established fact. It demands investigation. Dare anybody say it has not stood the test of the greatest scientific minds? This is not the only age when these great truths were known. Let mediums live and there will be produced some of the most remarkable phenomena ever known. The reverend gentleman knows that as Spiritualism marches on his business is gone."

Pigeon Cove, Mass.—The Children's Lyceum at the above place meets regularly each Sunday, through the unfailing energy and indefatigable interest in the cause of Mrs. Henry L. Story, who has opened her house to the school, and who weekly gives her time and thought to its management.

On Sunday, April 22d, the Lyceum exercises were held in Good Templars' Hall—the attendance being too large to meet in Mrs. Story's home—and consisted of the reading of an invocation from the BANNER OF LIGHT by the Conductor; singing by the school; answering of questions from the Lyceum manual by the scholars; recitations, etc., by several children, and other interesting matter.

Mrs. Story makes the session especially instructive and entertaining by her talks to the pupils, and by her method of asking questions concerning the poems and tales that are read—the lady herself reading each Sunday some story or verse which she makes educational in this line.

On the 22d, Miss M. T. Shelhamer of Boston, who was present, addressed the children in an appropriate manner, concluding her remarks by reading a story of "A Little Black Angel."

A small library is connected with this Lyceum, which will be added to from time to time as funds are collected. Any friend of the Cause who has a few cast-aside books that might entertain or instruct juvenile or youthful minds, cannot do better than to send them to Mrs. Henry L. Story, of Pigeon Cove, Mass., who will gratefully receive them for her Lyceum.

By the kindness and energy of this same noble woman, the residents of the place are occasionally benefited by a spiritual lecture from some one of our well-known platform speakers. On the evening of April 22d, the guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer delivered a thoughtful discourse, choosing for their subject: "Which Road shall we take in our Search for Heaven?"

The speaker affirmed that there are many pathways to eternal life, and however narrow and rugged any one may seem, it leads upward to immortality—since no man can be swept away from his heritage of existence. It only remained to determine which road should be taken to insure happiness at the end—as one might find the other life and not necessarily be in heaven. Heaven is a condition of the soul, a state of self-respect and of peace of mind, and to find this, one must choose the path of right doing—that in which he would be always faithful to duty, and one which followed the golden rule of love. This path, when illuminated by the light of conscious spirit-communion, might become sweet and glorious to the progressive soul who treads its way and who remains faithful to the end. ***

Newark, N. J.—H. C. Dorn writes: "Mrs. A. S. Cochrane will be at 139 Congress street on April 29th, at 7:30 o'clock. She is an inspirational medium."

MASSACHUSETTS' VERDICT.

The Outspoken Views of Well-Known People.

Truth alone cannot be doubted. Herewith are published some interesting truths spoken by your neighbors and personal friends. You know their good characters and that they would not willingly be parties to fraud. Living in your own community, some of them are accessible. If there exists any lingering doubt in your mind, ask them personally what "Warner's Safe Cure," the giant of medicines, has done for them. Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co. offer $5,000 for proof that, so far as they know, the testimonials published by them are not strict truths. The following are samples of testimonials daily received from this section of the State:

HAVERHILL, Mass., (Attorney at Law,) Oct. 25th, 1887.—I can endorse "Warner's Safe Cure" as being a valuable remedy for Kidney and Liver diseases. I have taken it with beneficial results.

Benjamin F. Bickett

SOMERVILLE, Mass., Dec. 20th, 1887.—I have used "Warner's Safe Cure" since last summer, and it has put me in shape to work once more, which I was not able to do. There were strangers to Spiritualism, and to that place of worship, who went away with such evidence of spirit return and spirit-communion as was to them startling and attractive; what was given will stimulate to much investigation. The Proper Methods of Scientifically Investigating the Phenomena of Spiritualism.

A Report Made to the

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE,

And Officially Adopted by that Body at its Regular Session, held April 18th, at 219 West 42d Street, New York City.

The undersigned, appointed at a regular meeting of the Alliance, held on the 11th of January, 1888, to report on the "Proper Methods of Scientifically Investigating the Phenomena of Spiritualism," respectfully submit the following report:

Spiritual phenomena, like those of physical nature, can, of course, be properly investigated only by scientific methods, which must be based on principles obtained by an accurate induction of carefully observed facts. Such facts constitute the basis of the science of Spiritualism, as of that of every other department of nature, whether spiritual or physical. Every branch of knowledge, in order to constitute properly a science, must comprehend (1) an adequate basis of ascertained facts accurately determined or attested by competent and trustworthy observers; (2) a logical induction of principles from those facts; and (3) proper methods of investigation, deduced from them.

The facts of Spiritualism to be investigated and ascertained in this manner are (1) spirit-manifestations, either physical or mental; and (2) the influences by which they may be affected or controlled, as dependent (1) upon the medium, (2) upon the person, or persons, present at the séance, and (3) upon concomitant circumstances.

No investigation can have any claim to be scientific that does not, as far as possible, provide for these various influences, and does not fully recognize them in the results of experimental séances.

Spiritual investigation is differentiated from an inquiry into the facts and laws of physical nature chiefly by the circumstance that in the former we are dealing with ordinarily invisible entities that possess will, intelligence, and all the other elements of human personality; while in the latter we simply have to do with inanimate, material objects, or, as in zoölogical researches, with the visible possessors of instinct and intelligence devoid of self-consciousness, the basic element of personality.

All science that deals, in any way, with human nature as exhibited in our present state of being—such, for example, as ethical or social science—is found to be peculiarly intricate and difficult; but that science must be far more so that concerns the same human nature operated upon, and modified by, the conditions of another state of being, of which we know so much less than our own. However, we have a clew to unravel, in part at least, this intricacy; and that is the law of spirit-affinity, which, with scarcely any possibility of doubt or question, we may allege to operate universally in the spirit-world—in every grade or sphere of spirit-life. Therefore, just as the astronomer is able to carry his researches even beyond the confines of the visible (as, for example, in the discovery of the planet Neptune), guided by the law of the attraction of gravitation; and as the chemist may transcend the limit of optical visibility, in applying the law of molecular attraction, so the spiritual scientist, in his far more difficult investigations, may explore the realm of the spirit with equal confidence and success by keeping constantly in view the law of spirit-affinity, and spirit-attraction consequent upon it.

It must also be assumed as a postulate that both medium and investigator are spirits, though embodied, and, of course, subject to this law equally with spirits disembodied, every person in this life, as a spirit, being the center of an environment of spirits attracted to him or her by affinity; and also that this affinity is purely and exclusively spiritual, depending not at all upon physical, intellectual, or social conditions, except as these may affect the spiritual status, or be related to spiritual progress or unfoldment.

To know, therefore, the ordinary or normal spiritual environment of a medium, as an individual, we must know, as fully as possible, the spiritual condition, or degree of spiritual unfoldment, of that medium; and, in like manner, to ascertain the kind of influences drawn to a particular circle, holding a séance with a medium, we must know the spiritual condition of the persons comprising the circle, and not only that but their spiritual attitude in regard to the particular séance in which they are to take part. In this relation, the medium's own personal condition and environment become secondary to the united influences exerted by the members of the circle, particularly if those influences belong to a low spiritual plane, and most especially if that sphere, or plane, be one of deceit, animosity, treachery, willful opposition to, or even indifference toward, spiritual things. If the desire to apply materialistic tests to the investigation emanate from, or serve to engender, any of these unspiritual conditions, they must tend to create the very incidents, as spirit manifestations, which they are designed to prevent; since they draw to the circle spirit operators belonging to that lower sphere, against whose consolidated potency the tests used are neither barrier nor protection; and to circumvent whom the spirit band of the medium, unless belonging to a very exalted sphere, may be quite powerless. Hence the great importance in all our investigations of spiritual phenomena of studying these influences, constituting, as they inevitably must, so great an element in spiritual science, both as to the facts, or manifestations themselves, and to the proper inferences to be drawn from them.

Most of the dangers of mediumship, both to those who exercise it, and to those who resort to it, for any of the ordinary purposes, arise from an ignorance or disregard of this principle, leading, as it so often has led, to the ruin, both physical and moral, of many mediums, to the degradation of mediumship in general, and to the disgrace of Spiritualism before the public. Analogous disasters would certainly be the consequence of permitting ignorant persons to tamper with, or experiment upon, the dangerous elements of physical nature—in chemical or electrical science, for example. Actual occurrences have illustrated this fact; but the rashness and folly of ignorant experimentalists in the physical domain do not, as too often in that of the spirit, lead to a senseless condemnation of the science which comprehends the discussion and elucidation of those dangerous elements.

We pass from these preliminary considerations to a necessarily brief discussion of the methods of investigation which are the special subject of this report. Here important discriminations must be made in order to attain success, or to entitle our investigations to be considered scientific. The methods should always be adjusted to our special design in the experiment—for experiment it certainly is, since, as must be quite obvious from what has already been set forth, we can scarcely ever be perfectly sure that there is no subtle and insidious element present that will interefere with, or totally frustrate, our design and desire. If tying up the medium, or using a fraud-proof cabinet, were all that constituted the science of Spiritualism, to be an accomplished adept in it would not entitle any one to much credit; for certainly every desideratum of that kind is within the reach of quite ordinary intellectual training or endowment; but, assuredly, scientific methods comprehend a vast deal more than, and something very different from, this exceedingly vulgar, materialistic, and wholly unspiritual performance.

As a basis for the discrimination in methods to which we have referred, we submit the following as a probably exhaustive enumeration of the special objects for the attainment of which séances are held:

1. To convince unbelievers of the reality of the phenomena, and their spiritual origin.

2. To extend the knowledge of spiritual facts and principles, that is, to enlarge the boundaries of spiritual science.

3. To afford an opportunity to Spiritualists to hold intercourse with relatives or friends in the spirit-world.

4. To obtain trustworthy information from spirits as to the spirit-life, its conditions, laws, etc., as well as other topics connected with the philosophy of Spiritualism.

5. To cultivate spirituality, that is, to promote the spiritual advancement of the members of the circle.

6. To ameliorate the condition, or aid in the spiritual progress, of the manifesting spirits, when such amelioration or aid is possible, necessary, or solicited.

7. Specially and primarily to establish the personal identity of the manifesting spirits.

Besides the adaptations required by diversity of purpose in the holding of séances, there are others dependent upon the character of the circle, particularly as to its homogeneity and consequent harmony, or the want of it, the latter, unfortunately, being the usual condition of public circles, bringing in antagonistic and mischievous influences, with disastrous consequences, especially to the medium, as well as to the credit and reputability of mediumship in general.

The methods to be adopted should also have reference to the medium, as (1) of well-established genuineness, or (2) of unknown or doubtful genuineness, or (3) of well-proved integrity, or (4) of doubtful integrity.

Moreover, the grade of development of the medium is also an important consideration in the adjustment of methods to circumstances, as well as in the estimation of results; for mediums very often, in the early stages of their development—that is, previous to the complete establishment of their spiritual environment for practical work—are unable to afford as reliable manifestations as at a later stage.

Moreover, the different phases of mediumship necessitate the employment of methods to some extent peculiar to each. Thus there are circumstances and principles that specially pertain to trance mediumship, which require careful consideration both as to methods and results; and so in writing mediumship, whether impressional or automatic; in physical, psychographic, and photographic mediumship; and especially in cabinet séances for materialization; though, indeed, all these various branches of investigation have the same guiding principles, while the circumstances and conditions that affect the manifestations in each are special and diverse.

To describe in detail all the various methods dictated by this discriminative classification, with appropriate illustrations, would require far more space than is afforded within the proper limits of this report. We can, therefore, refer to only a few, for the purpose of suggesting the principles to be kept in view, and of indicating a way for further research, and more minute specification when requisite.

When the object of the séance is to convince unbelievers, who are really interested in the subject, and desire information, we need particularly a medium of whose genuineness and integrity we are quite sure, and we need also to establish and maintain good spiritual conditions; because, the circle battery being comparatively negative, the barrier against extraneous, disturbing influences is correspondingly feeble. We do not include in this consideration the silencing of determined skeptics, or other positive opponents of the spiritual cause; because to attempt this, even under the most favorable conditions, is always fraught with peril.

As persons to whom the phenomena are entirely new, and who are, partly at least, unfamiliar with spiritual principles, always have more or less suspicion of fraudulent contrivance on the part of the medium, it is desirable that such conditions of test should be employed as will serve to eliminate this suspicion from the mind. But while the arrangements should always be such as to disarm any such suspicion, it is never desirable or proper to insist upon such tests as, of themselves, are tantamount to a charge of dishonest intention against the medium, since this always tends to change, to a greater or less extent, the spiritual environment, and introduce a lower, antagonistic or obstructive element into the experiment.

Everything that is liable to suggest deceptive contrivance having been carefully eliminated, it is always best to leave the evidential manifestations to the spirit-operators, who, with an harmonious, right-minded circle, reading the minds of the sitters, will seldom, if ever, fail to introduce such elements of proof as will fully suffice to demonstrate the genuineness of the manifestations.

When the special object of the séance is to enjoy spirit-intercourse with relatives, friends, or others, or to obtain evidence of the personal identity of the communicating spirits, the suggestions already offered are particularly applicable. In this case the mind of the sitter is intent not on the manifestations as proving spirit-intercourse, since, having graduated from that stage, it recognizes the possibility of spirit-intervention; but on the evidences of individual character, traits of personality, etc., presented by the communicating or manifesting spirits; and the indications of these constitute the chief or the only required conditions of test.

When, however, the séance is held for the special purpose of extending the knowledge of spiritual facts and principles, without regard to personal considerations, there exists a greater need of leaving the operations of the spirit-workers free from dictation or interference, permitting them to present whatever the conditions may render practicable, the sitters exercising their own judgment as to the value and importance of what is offered.

It is always to be borne in mind that in the search for spiritual knowledge the divesting of the mind of the inquirer from all selfish interests and desires invariably exalts the plane on which the inquiry is conducted, and attracts to it a sphere of intelligences at once wise and powerful as well as truthful and trustworthy.

This principle, therefore, is especially applicable when the object of the investigation is to obtain information in regard to the spiritual world, its special conditions, laws, and relations to our own, as well as the philosophical principles that underlie these various facts. It is, of course, of the utmost importance, when we ask for a revelation of things entirely new and strange, and of which we can learn nothing from the ordinary sources of knowledge—and especially of things beyond the realm of space, time, and mortality—that we should be particularly sure of our revelators, both as to their veracity and competency to instruct us. Hence, we should, as far as is possible, bring ourselves into relation with that spiritual society from which may be expected only wisdom and truth. We should remember, also, that we possess spiritual as well as material senses, and that in dealing with these advanced spiritual things we should endeavor to bring the former into play to the furthest limit of their cultivation, adding by means of this exercise of them to that culture, and in that way sharpening our spiritual intuitions and enlarging our horizon of spiritual truth.

With the culture here referred to, which those who do not possess it cannot appreciate or even apprehend, every one has an inner light—a standard of truth—within his own soul, which is to him or her the best and surest guide, and is ever to be followed. It has been the prostitution of Spiritualism that this sacred light has been neglected or ignored in order to pursue the ignis fatuus of materialistic tests, or to engage in the miserably degrading employment of fraud-hunting and its consequent abuse, denunciation, and condemnation. This has been carried on systematically, with the design, real or ostensible, of purifying Spiritualism; while the actual and inevitable result has been to sink it to the lowest spiritual plane, to despoil it of its purity, and to cover it with almost irredeemable infamy—entirely irredeemable, indeed, unless its supporters and exponents can demonstrate, widely and forcibly, the principles which govern its phenomena, and, by securing their general recognition, establish better methods of investigation, thus avoiding those evils and abuses, an exclusive regard to which by the public has brought upon spirit-intercourse so much reproach.

Certainly, if spirit-communion is to be made ancillary to the cultivation of true spirituality—a means for the spiritual elevation of mankind and for the basis of a pure, rational religion—which, unquestionably, is its proper aim and office, the practice of it must be guided by the principles which we have here set forth; and for the attainment of this, as a special object, such methods should be applied as are best calculated to bring about this most desirable result. We cannot, consistently with any such object, enter the séance-chamber in a suspicious, dogmatic, or arrogant spirit, but with that reverence, docility, and humility which, while quickening the spiritual senses, will make us recipient of the higher influx, and attract to us those divine instrumentalities whose function it is to dispense that influx, wherever there is an earnest and sincere aspiration for the good that it bestows. In this manner we bring the religious element into a rational relation with spiritual science, each mutually coöperative, since the principles of this science, and only these, can afford the necessary rules and methods for spiritual culture, which is the end and aim of all that is of any value in religion.

Thus it will be seen, without further elaboration of this topic, how, in connection with, and in addition to, the investigation of the external manifestations of the spirit, we may pass to the inner soul-realm, where the objects of our scrutiny entirely transcend the physical senses, being cognized only by the inner light of spiritual intuition.

When we have reached this plane of investigation and study we have left a long way behind and beneath us those gross conditions and those low, earthly, selfish aims which now almost exclusively occupy the minds of so many who engage in spiritualistic study and research.

As bearing on one of the most important principles of this Report, we conclude at this time by citing the impressive words of Dr. Willis, uttered about ten years ago, as a protest against that erroneous view of scientific conditions which, since then, has proved so fertile a source of injury to the spiritual movement:

"I do not believe we have any right to approach mediums in an arrogant or dictatorial spirit, assuming them to be impostors, nor do I believe that we have a right to dictate to the spiritual world the terms and conditions upon which we will consent to receive its revelations, as if we were conferring upon it an infinite condescension in deigning to receive the most inestimable boon that can be vouchsafed to humanity."

To this we may add a similar expression uttered about the same time by Mrs. Richmond, under spirit-control:

"We protest earnestly and emphatically against any class or body of people declaring that party a fraud beforehand, who will not submit to their particular dictation. Spiritualism is not a man-made movement. The manifestations do not come at the dictation of any human being; and no human being can justly declare under what circumstances manifestations shall take place. This is our word of protest, and we warn investigators as well as Spiritualists that the conditions for manifestations must be controlled by the spirit-world; and that, if you place yourselves in accord with them, ample satisfaction will undoubtedly be given."

The same principle was enunciated by spirit Fanny A. Conant, communicating at one of the circles of the Banner of Light a few years ago:

"Go on, dear friends, and strive as far as possible to place the testing power in our hands; for by so doing we will give to you and others more than they could even ask of us."

These utterances are not cited as of authority, and we should not commend the principle they enjoin as a guide in scientific investigation, did it necessitate the abrogation or suspension, in the slightest degree, of the exercise of vigilance, critical judgment, or independent opinion on the part of the investigators, who must, of course, be always entitled to accept or reject results, requiring from the operating spirit intelligences the fullest elucidation of whatever may be doubtful or obscure, and asking that every rightful ground for suspicion or disbelief, either in the medium or in the manifestations, shall be removed, without the intervention of the investigators, or the dictation by them of the means of accomplishing this. We commend it because it is the only safe and rational principle upon which to act in order to solve the spiritual problems that confront us, and to acquire a reliable knowledge of spiritual facts, as well as to do justice to mediums, and conserve their purity, integrity, and reputation before the public. At the same time, however, we should keep careful watch over the character of the medium, as being an important element in our investigations, and condemn, as tending to prevent the attainment of truth, all excessive cupidity on his or her part, and especially a mere mercantile spirit, prompting to the prostitution of the sacred gift of mediumship to the mere purpose of money-making, or other forms of personal aggrandizement.

Respectfully submitted,

HENRY KIDDLE,

The Fortieth Anniversary.

THE ANNIVERSARY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

BY J. J. MORSE.

The celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism was duly heeded on the Pacific coast by a noteworthy series of meetings in San Francisco, the commercial capital of the Golden State.

A series of four distinct assemblies was arranged in honor of the occasion, and while each was independent in conception and conduct of the other, all were uniformly successful and harmonious.

The first meeting was held at Odd Fellows Hall, under the direction of Mr. John Slater, the celebrated Eastern test medium, on Saturday evening, March 31st. The large hall of the Odd Fellows building was completely filled, upward of sixteen hundred persons being present, and that in spite of the fact that "two bits," i. e., twenty-five cents, was charged for admission. Mr. Slater, who has lately had a most successful season of four months in this city, made the meeting in question the occasion of the close of his present labors, so the gathering partook of a testimonial to himself on the part of his many friends, as well as the celebrationary character adverted to.

The proceedings included the following programme: Piano solo (Inspirational), Miss Lina Crews; vocal solo, "When the Tide Comes In" (Millard), Miss E. Beresford-Joy; Imitations, John Slater; vocal solo, "In the Gloaming," Miss Florence Morse; piano solo (Inspirational), Miss Lina Crews; recitation, "Woman's Mission," Miss Valerie Hickethier; vocal solo aria from "Dinorah" (Meyerbeer), Miss E. Beresford-Joy; test séance by John Slater; vocal solo, "Thy Face," Miss Florence Morse; which was excellently accomplished by all concerned. The writer of these lines was appointed Chairman of the evening, opening the proceedings with a speech apropos to the spirit of the occasion. The event was a gratifying success in every respect, and will be long and pleasantly remembered by all who were fortunate enough to participate therein.

The next, in point of time, was the celebration at Metropolitan Temple by the Golden Gate Religious and Philosophical Society, with which body the present scribe is filling one of the most pleasant engagements it has ever been his lot to experience. The celebration, in this case, commenced on Sunday morning, April 1st, at 11 o'clock, and was resumed at 8 o'clock in the evening. The facts have already been recited in the BANNER, so but little more needs be said herein. That little, however, in justice, must make honorable mention of the excellent morning Anniversary address: "The Needs of the Hour," by the Society's President, William Emmette Coleman, and the address by Mrs. E. L. Watson, "The Fact We Celebrate," at the evening session. Both were full of good things, ably delivered, and fully appreciated by the immense audiences present at each meeting. The writer, as Chairman in the morning, and as speaker at night, bore his share in the day's duties with apparent satisfaction to all present. Mr. M. B. Dodge, the ever efficient manager, exerted himself untiringly to ensure success, and the results more than vindicated all his labor to attain them.

The next meeting, in point of time, was the celebration by the Society of Progressive Spiritualists, at Washington Hall, held also on Sunday at 1 P. M., under the Chairmanship of Mr. S. B. Clark. Among the speakers were Hon. J. A. Collins, Dr. W. W. Mackaig, J. J. Owen, editor Golden Gate, W. E. Coleman, Mrs. Hendee, Mrs. J. Schlesinger, editor Carrier Dove, the writer, and quite a number of other friends, good and true. Mr. John Slater also participated, giving tests during the session. The hall was crowded to excess, and the meeting was most enthusiastic throughout.

The final celebration was that, in the above-named hall, held by Mrs. Ada Foye, than whom there is not a more remarkable medium this side of the Rocky Mountains. Mrs. Foye gave one of her inimitable public test séances, being assisted by Mrs. Hendee and other mediums. The hall was again crowded to overflowing, and upon the writer and his family looking in, about 10 P. M., after the Temple meeting had closed, it was only possible to squeeze into a corner and "peek" above a veritable sea of heads. So much has been written about Sister Foye's tests that one can only say that they continue as convincing and as astounding as ever.

Very noticeable was the spirit of harmony and good-will pervading all the above noted gatherings. Equally prominent was the desire for unity and fraternity on the days in question; very pleasant was it to see animosities and divergencies for once laid aside, and something of the spirit of our beautiful philosophy brought into practical operation. Some day our brethren here will surely hold a union celebration, where, under one roof, all can congregate in peace and unity. May that 31st of March be not far distant.

There were liberal and beautiful floral displays at each meeting, contributing much to the beauty of the different platforms. The day was one of California's finest, and the respectful attention of the leading city dailies was not the least among the many causes for congratulations concerning the celebration of our Fortieth Anniversary in the good city of San Francisco.

This but brief synopsis of the occasion is not presented as a "report," but is merely offered as a running comment, which may afford the readers of THE BANNER some slight idea of "how it was" out here, and give a wider circulation to the fact that the 'Friscoeans were as mindful of the day as the good souls "back East there" were.

Albany, Wis.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary was celebrated by the Spiritualists of Albany on Saturday evening, March 31st. The meeting was a pronounced success.

We commenced our meetings here in January, 1887, and with no outside assistance have continued them until the present time. That we have succeeded in making our influence felt is evidenced by the fact that our good Christian brethren, evidently feeling "hurt," have something to say nearly every Sunday against us and our work.

Our Anniversary meeting (as are our regular sessions) was held in Grange Hall, which for this occasion was provided with seats for two hundred, which were occupied with attentive, and, if we may judge by the applause, highly appreciative listeners. The following programme, under the direction of our efficient President,

Mrs. L. H. Warren, was offered for the occasion:

Music, F. L. Warren's orchestra of five pieces; song, by the Glee Club, composed of the following members: Mrs. Humes, Mrs. Sutherland, Mrs. Mathews, Mr. Bartlett and Mr. Haselton; paper, by Will C. Hodge, on the "History and Growth of Modern Spiritualism"; music, duet, banjo and guitar, by Emmet Bartlett and Elmer Hills; song, Glee Club; music, guitar, banjo and harmonica, Messrs. Bartlett, Hills and Hayden. These young gentlemen are performers of more than ordinary ability, and added much to the interest and harmony of the occasion.

The following persons gave recitations: Lucy Mathews, Master Willie Bartlett, Harry Mathews, Eva Warren, Mrs. Kate Mathews, Little Emma Whinery and Dot Hayden; select readings were participated in by Mrs. L. H. Warren, Mrs. C. E. Bartlett and Etta Mills; well rendered songs were presented by Bessie Vanevart, Louie Whitcomb, Doda Hicks, Guy Humes, Prof. "Mart" Whitcomb and Uriel Haselton. Prof. Whitcomb "brought down the house" with the comic song, "Mr. Mulchahy, Esquire." There were also several selections by the Glee Club, as well as by Warren's Orchestra, which is composed of as fine musicians as can be found in many larger cities.

The entertainment concluded with pertinent remarks by Hon. D. H. Morgan and L. H. Warren.

The hall was decorated with spirit paintings, the work of Wella Anderson, John Shobe, Joseph John, and Mrs. Murdock, formerly Mrs. Blair. On the east end of the hall, over the platform, was the motto: "No Creed"; on the north side, "To Do Good our Religion"; and on the south side, "Our Salvation Individual Development." These were in large letters on white muslin, with framework of evergreen, and were suggested by, and the work of, Mrs. Will C. Hodge.

Quite a number were present who had never before attended a spiritualistic meeting of any kind, and who expressed themselves as well pleased, and doubtless will in the future have a somewhat different opinion of Spiritualism than they entertained before.

Nothing whatever occurred to mar the harmony and happiness of the occasion, and when we contrast our Anniversary with that of one year ago, where only about thirty people assembled in a private house, we feel encouraged to press on to still greater achievements.

The Methodist clergyman took occasion on Sunday evening to give vent to his surplus theological bile by assuring his congregation that Spiritualism is a very bad and dangerous thing—as well as indulging in various misrepresentations which seem to constitute the stock in trade of men of his class: which is only another proof that the world moves, and that the clergy know that the day is not far distant when they will be compelled to preach truth and common-sense, or they will fall to get a hearing.

WILL C. HODGE.

Cincinnati, O.

The Fortieth Anniversary was duly remembered by the First New Spiritual Church at its headquarters, Murch's Hall, 278 West Sixth street, Cincinnati—the meetings throughout proving highly successful. Space will not admit other than a synopsis of events as they occurred during the three days' celebration. Great credit is due the efficient Committee, Messrs. Riedel, Metzger and Warden, for the manner in which they attended to their duties—in the discharge of which they were ably seconded by the members of the Society.

The programme issued by the Committee was successfully carried out in every particular.

Saturday, March 31st, was cloudless, and the evening was one of the brightest. The Ladies' Aid Society commenced early in the afternoon to decorate the hall. The altar was artistically covered with various emblems and symbols, among them "The True Key-Stone," partly buried in the earth, and the "Anchor of Hope" with one of its flukes buried under the Key Stone (the chain attached to the anchor was formed of red, yellow and blue ribbons, which were beautifully twined in and around the "church mark"). Notable among the emblems was "The Battle Axe," intended to symbolize the work the N. D. C. Axe and True Key-Stone has done in clearing the way for the ushering in of The New Spiritual Church. Above these emblems hung the American flag, flanked upon either side by beautiful banners presented to the Church, of which notice will be taken further on.

The artist who designed these emblems was the indefatigable and faithful member, Mr. C. S. Baldwin.

Upon the right of the altar was found a life-size crayon drawing of Rev. James A. Bliss, the work of Mr. A. L. Stanford.

The potted plants and floral decorations were in profusion, and gave entire satisfaction.

That "Mother in Israel," Mrs. Roegge, sent in large quantities of cedar, which the ladies twined with smilax and formed a beautiful archway over the heads of the audience.

At 8 P. M. Fred K. Wahl, the organist of the church, opened with a voluntary, while the pastor and assistant pastor took their respective seats. After singing the opening hymn, Rev. James A. Bliss (entranced) offered a fervent prayer for the success of the New Church. At the conclusion of the prayer and after singing another hymn, Mr. Bliss, in a characteristic, pleasant manner, welcomed the large audience to the celebration. He said:

"I know that there are many people whose whole soul-interest is in this Church and its work, who would if it was possible be present with us to-night. These people are 'true blue' New Church Spiritualists, who are scattered from Canada to Mexico, and the great distance between us is the only barrier to prevent their being present.

Among these noble people can be found that faithful convert, Mrs. Wm. H. Churchill of Somerville, Mass. She is thoroughly posted in the work of the N. D. C. Movement and of this Church, which we all recognize as the legitimate child of the N. D. C. She has been a faithful student, and has sat under the teachings of our loved 'German Doctor' for the last four or five years, and her writings fully prove that she has been grandly instructed by that noble spirit. Of all persons in this world Sister Churchill would, if it was possible, be present to-night. To prove to you that I speak the truth I will read the following letters, which explain themselves."

He then read two letters from the lady, setting forth a high appreciation of the work in which the Church was engaged, and donating "a banner to hang on the walls of our New Zion," also a Greek flag which one of her guides desired to donate to the New Church Sunday School. At the conclusion of the reading and at a given signal from the pastor, the assistant pastor, Rev. Augusta Riedel, took the banner and removed the veil that had been placed over it, much admiration being exhibited by the audience on beholding the beautiful emblems upon its spotless, white surface. It was a masterpiece of embroidery and art. Rev. James A. Bliss then read a "Banner Poem," written by Mrs. Wm. H. Churchill, and dedicated by her, together with the banner itself, "To the First New Spiritual Church of Cincinnati."

Accompanying these letters was a donation of money to aid the New Church, which was received with an enthusiastic vote of thanks for the same, also the beautiful banner, and the Secretary was instructed to make a record of the vote and send a copy in writing to Mrs. Churchill.

After singing another hymn Rev. Augusta Riedel, the assistant pastor of the New Church, was controlled by her guide, "Jewel." She delivered a masterly address, taking for her subject "Matter and Spirit." It was received with marked attention by the audience.

At the close of her discourse all the newly-developed mediums were invited forward, and some of them were controlled; Rev. Augusta Riedel, under control, gave many individuals personal tests, all of which are acknowledged as being correct by those who received them. Wm. L. Reichenbach gave fine psychometric readings; Mrs. Maggie Baldwin was controlled by Wm. Baldwin, who gave a fine test to Dr. Bliss; Mrs. Kresser, under control of "Sunshine," (a little Indian girl,) surprised all by controlling her medium for the first time in a public hall. Mrs. Kate M. Warden, under the control of Rev. Mr. Bascon, delivered a fine address encouraging the good work already begun.

The last on the programme for the evening was Mr. Andrew Riedel, who gave an earnest inspirational address, which reflected great credit upon his development as a speaker.

Mr. Bliss then read a letter of congratulation from Mrs. Cora A. Bliss, who as a means of improving the church finances recommended the establishment of a Tract Fund—said fund to be raised by means of donations, benefit circles and séances, entertainments, and by legal bequests, and that all the money thus raised shall be expended judiciously by the vote of our church, in placing in the hands of interested people, tracts, pamphlets, books, and especially verbatim reports of the "German Doctor's" instructive lectures, and last but not least to compile and publish suitable New Spiritual Church Hymns, to be used in the service of our church.

"If this fund should increase [wrote Mrs. Bliss] (as I pray that it may,) the money may be used to send forth our missionary mediums into fields of labor for our glorious church, thus extending our borders of usefulness.

I propose that this church shall duly authorize me to raise this fund, and I will make semi-monthly reports of all receipts and expenditures in the accepted organ of this church—The N. D. C. Axe and True Key-Stone."

The letter was accepted, and on motion, its suggestions were adopted, and Mrs. Bliss was allowed to raise the funds as proposed.

The services of the evening then closed by singing the Doxology.

Sunday, April 1st, was a fine day, and at 1 o'clock P. M., the happy little children connected with the New Church Sunday-School sought out their accustomed places to take part in their first grand concert. The parents and friends of the children occupied every available chair, and promptly at 1:30 P. M., Rev. Augusta Riedel, taking her place, sounded the bell and instantly all was perfectly silent. A familiar hymn was sung by the scholars, and the Rev. James A. Bliss was called upon to offer an invocation. His controlling spirit breathed an earnest prayer for the welfare of the school, and called upon the angels to aid the teachers in their efforts to uproot error from the minds of the little ones, and that they would impress them to plant instead the seeds of truth.

After the prayer, Rev. Augusta Riedel delivered an address of "Welcome" to all who were present, and urged that the "older children" (as she termed the adults present) would try and make it convenient to attend the Sunday-school. She said she was surprised to see how interested the little ones were in their lessons, and thought the regular attendance was remarkable. She stated that hereafter the first Sunday of each month would be a "change of exercises," or, in other words, the lessons would be omitted and the children would hold a concert for the benefit of their parents. She thought that such a course would aid the children to overcome their natural timidity and fit them to become public speakers.

The following programme was carried out in a very acceptable manner:

Temperance Address, Master Emil Riedel; "The Little Harebell," Miss Stella Hasenohr; Song, "What Shall the Little Warblers Say?" Misses Annie Riedel and Mabel Thornton; "Boys Make Men," Master Reinhart; Recitation, Albert Metzger; "Be Kind and Gentle," Miss Clara Naish; "Seven Times One," Miss Emma Naish; "The American Flag," William Stone; Duet, C. S. Baldwin and Rev. Augusta Riedell; Recitation, Master Alfred Metzger; Address, Little Dora Metzger; "Very Small," Tillie Kresser; "May I Eat It All Myself?" Miss Emma Metzger; "The Dead Student," Mr. Andrew Riedel; "What I Live For," Miss May Nash; Dialogue, Stella Hassenohr and Emil Riedel; "The Tempest," Miss Lena Hill.

Other pieces were spoken by Miss Maggie Metzger and Master Frankie Baldwin.

The exercises were closed with able addresses from Messrs. Martin Metzger, Andrew Riedel and Rev. James A. Bliss.

The children were presented with Easter Cards by their Superintendent, and all were invited to be present at the supper to be provided for their benefit on the following Tuesday afternoon.

The New Church Sunday School is a marked success in every particular, and under the efficient management of Rev. Augusta Riedel is doing a good work.

New York City.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The People's Meeting of this city was not lacking in enthusiasm in its observance of the Fortieth Anniversary, on Sunday, April 1st, at Columbia Hall, 878 Sixth Avenue.

Pioneer mediums had been invited to contribute the intellectual exercises for the afternoon; and in response we were favored with the presence of Mrs. Leah Fox Underhill, for over forty years a medium; Mrs. H. M. Walton of Brooklyn, medium over thirty years; Mrs. Mary C. Morrell, medium about thirty-five years; Mr. R. P. Wilson, who claims to have delivered the first spiritualistic lectures in New York City, thirty-eight years ago; Mrs. Margaret Austin, and Dr. Isaac Hand Gibbs, in his eighty-ninth year: truly a grand array of those who have borne the burden when it was not as light to bear as it is at the present.

Mrs. Walton read as an opening an able original poem entitled: "The New Continent," following the same with an inspirational essay on "The Birth of Spiritism." Both were able papers, and reflected credit upon the instrument through whom they came.

Mrs. Underhill followed with remarks of an exceedingly practical bearing and was warmly applauded.

Next came a short address by R. P. Wilson; he being followed by Dr. Gibbs, Mrs. Austin and Mrs. Slocum.

Mrs. Morrell in the course of her remarks announced the presence in spirit of L. Judd Pardee, A. B. Whiting, Judge J. W. Edmonds, Ex-Gov. Tallmadge and others who had come in to bid us "Good Cheer." Mr. Theodore Bunce, J. F. Jeaneret and Mrs. F. Morris Clarke also added words of counsel and encouragement.

Singing entirely by the audience enlivened the exercises, and rendered the harmony of the occasion perfect.

The evening session was opened by an invocation and address by Mrs. A. M. Stringham of Brooklyn, followed by an original poem by Mrs. Cochrane of this city.

Mr. S. A. F. Goodspeed after remarks gave several tests, most of which were recognized. Wilson MacDonald being discovered in the audience, was called out and made an exceedingly felicitious address which cheered the audience wonderfully.

The meeting was instinct with a spirit of devotion to the cause and a willingness to go on for the next forty years (all who are spared on this side) with renewed energy.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary was duly observed on the evening of April 2d at the weekly Monday evening meetings which are presided over by Mrs. M. C. Morrell at her parlors, 30 W. 36th street, this city. Dr. E. V. Wright of Newark, N. J., made the opening address. Mrs. Leah Fox Underhill, Mr. T. Bunce, Mrs. Morrell and others participated, awakening great interest, and bringing spiritual profit to all.

Monday evening, 9th inst., Mrs. H. M. Walton of Brooklyn made the opening address. Mr. Horn of Saratoga read instructive essays. Mr. C. J. Purcell of New York City, Dr. C. S. Weeks and others filled out the time pleasantly for all interested. These Monday evening gatherings are fast becoming a popular resort for spiritual improvement, exchange of thought and sociability. ***.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The First Society of Spiritualists celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary, April 8th, with services appropriate to the occasion.

The Sons of Temperance hall was tastefully decorated with evergreen mottoes, and floral offerings in the way of potted plants, bouquets, and a large standing flower-piece in the shape of a star, composed of white carnations and roses, typical in every sense of the light revealed by our beautiful philosophy.

Bishop A. Beals addressed the meetings afternoon and evening, giving us two eloquent lectures that were listened to with rapt attention by good audiences. The music (vocal and instrumental) with which he favored us was fine, and his psychometric readings and tests were very interesting — being acknowledged correct in every case. MRS. M. G. ROSA.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was not allowed to pass unnoticed here. A commemorative séance was held at the house of Mrs. J. J. Clark, 228 Crown street, and, as usual, proved a most enjoyable and instructive meeting.

At the close of the lecture tests and psychometric readings were given, and gratitude was expressed to Mrs. Clark from her audience, in acknowledgment of the great light she gave upon immortality. MRS. I. L. SEARLES.

The Dawn, Progress and Status of Modern Spiritualism.

An Address to the Spiritualists of America on the Fortieth Anniversary.

BY DR. DEAN CLARKE.

[Concluded.]

It is a lamentable fact that, though there are many millions of nominal Spiritualists in America, the active, faithful workers number but a few thousand. Why is this? If the cause is disgraced and demoralized by impostors, cranks and "people of low degree," as traitors tell us as an excuse for their recreancy, would it not be better for those who deem themselves "more respectable" to come to the front and do honor to a cause which they, but not God and angels, have deserted? "'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis 'tis true," that our heaven-honored cause has too often been mismanaged, brought into disrepute, and for the time being been almost "crucified, dead and buried" by unworthy attachés who have usurped prominent positions, and stolen its livery to serve "the world, the flesh and the devil," rather than the sacred cause of truth and progress!

But all the more is it the imperative duty of its true, rational and high-minded friends to come to the rescue, take upon themselves the mantle of its purity and power, and raise its standard upon the Mount of Science, Philosophy and Spirituality, from which it shall enlighten, purify and uplift the human race!

Hitherto the onus of sustaining and advancing Spiritualism as a public movement has been borne almost wholly by its exponents, and the few co-workers whom the spirits have brought to their aid. Several of our ablest teachers have been driven by want from the work to which the spirit-world had called them, and those who have stuck to their high calling, unless they could minister to other than the intellectual, moral and spiritual needs of their patrons, have been compelled physically to "live at a poor dying rate." The Rostrum and the Séance, next to the Press, are the most powerful factors in the advancement of Spiritualism. They are coördinate propaganda—the one teaching and the other demonstrating spiritual truth. Both are indispensable. Neither should displace the other, nor conflict in operation. No doubt it is well, occasionally, to blend the work of each in the public presentation of our cause. While we should give due place and importance to every gift and every form of manifestation, we need to heed St. Paul's injunction to "covet earnestly the best gifts"—those which appeal to and help to unfold our higher faculties.

Spiritualism can never take the position designed for it as the Great Religion of Humanity, till its votaries and propagandists heed the call of the angels to "Come up higher," and utilize the mighty power that will descend upon them from the supernal spheres when they prepare the way by self-purification, and seek the highest gifts to use for the good of humanity, and not for self-aggrandizement.

We opine that the time is at hand, or not far distant, for the beneficiaries of this grand Spiritual Dispensation to make a NEW DEPARTURE toward a better use of their gifts, a higher aspiration for spiritual growth, and a stronger fellowship in the application of their powers to benefit and bless the common humanity.

On this grand Anniversary occasion, while contemplating the wonderful achievements of forty years of spirit manifestation in changing the ideas and beliefs of mankind; while expatiating o'er the pathway of our progress, rejoicing at our triumphs, and taking counsel from our mistakes and failures, let us resolve from this hour to profit by the experiences of the past, and to be more earnest, more faithful, more discreet in the use of our wondrous gifts, and to do all in our power as its earthly agents to put Spiritualism before the world on its true merits, as the Great Comforter, Teacher and Reformer of the human race.

We conclude with a rhythmic tribute to our cause, and

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

All hail again the joyful day
We oft have hailed before!
We bring another tuneful lay
To sing its praise once more.

Just forty years ago to-night
A voice from Heaven came,
Which said again: "Let there be light!"
And light began to flame.

At Hydesville, in New York, occurred
Some strange, peculiar "Knocks,"
Whose weird-like sound at first was heard
By Kate and Maggie Fox.

'T is that event we meet to-day
To celebrate again;
'T is that for which we pour our lay
With joyous tongue or pen.

"How strange," you say, "so small a thing Should cause so much display!"
But list, my friend, those raps did bring
Good news from far away.

Those startling raps, however small,
A mighty truth revealed;
A secret, long concealed from all,
Was then by them unsealed.

Glad tidings were by them rapped out
From those we thought were dead,
Which proved the fact, beyond a doubt,
They are alive instead.

The day of small things, we have heard,
No one should treat with scorn;
'T was from it came the ancient "Word"
Whose truths are now reborn.

"Through babes and sucklings," we are told,
"Did God perfect his praise";
Revealing truth to men of old
By humble means and ways.

"The weak and foolish" he did choose
To then confound the wise.
If tiny raps he now doth use,
Why should the world despise?

Across a dark and dread abyss
Which has for ages yawned,
Another world has come to this,
From which great light has dawned.

From Heaven to earth a bridge doth span
The flowing tide between,
And spirits cross it when they can,
And oft they now are seen.

Is not this fact enough to make
Mankind rejoice alway?
And should we not all else forsake
To glorify this day?

Just think how great the boon we hold,
What truths of priceless worth—
Our spirit-gifts are manifold,
Bestowed from Heaven to earth.

The sick are healed, the blind restored,
The dumb can use the tongue;
The Spirit on all flesh is poured,
As when the prophet sung.

The gift in divers tongues to speak,
In trance or as inspired,
Is heard in Sanscrit, Hebrew, Greek,
Or any tongue required.

Again we have the "Living Word"
Through seer and prophet giv'n;
Once more are angel-voices heard
As erst they came from Heav'n.

The psalmist strikes again his lyre,
And sings his sacred song,
As angel-bards his soul inspire,
While spirits round him throng.

As angels came in raiment white,
Appearing as young men,
So spirits come to us "by night,"
Oft clad as they were then.

As Samuel came to Saul of old,
When filled with doubt and fear,
So spirits now a converse hold
Through many a modern seer.

As Moses and Elias came,
And one on Patmos, too,
So spirits visit us the same,
God's will on earth to do.

Yea, ev'ry "sign," and "spirit-gift,"
By Paul or Jesus named,
Is now in use our souls to lift,
As was by them proclaimed.

We need not go to fountains dry,
Nor live on mouldy bread;
We've new baptisms from the sky,
And manna fresh instead.

The olden "faith" is changed to SIGHT;
Belief we need no more;
We know we talk with spirits bright
More oft than those of yore.

We hold "communion with the saints"
In fact and not "by faith,"
And when a seer a "Vision" paints
We know 't is not a wraith.

The proof is found all o'er the earth,
To demonstrate our claims;
He'll find who calls our witness forth
An hundred million names!

Then who shall say we are deceived
By fancy running wild?
No truth in science is believed
From better proof compiled.

For two score years our cause has stood
'Gainst foes on ev'ry hand,
Who can't destroy it if they should
Combine throughout the land!

It stands on Nature, firm and strong,
With Science for support;
Though all the world against it throng,
'T will bravely "HOLD THE FORT."

In faith made strong by knowledge giv'n,
Why should we not be glad?
Our souls are filled with Truth's new leaven,
And naught should make us sad.

We've ev'ry reason to rejoice
At this auspicious hour,
If half our blessings we invoice
Or count but half our dower.

Our minds, from superstition free,
No more have fear and doubt,
For truth has won her victory,
And cast those demons out.

The fear of God by us is spurned,
The Devil now is dead,
And Hell to Sheol has been turned,
And that we do not dread.

"The monster Death" no terror brings
When now we hear his call;
We know the soul hath phœnix-wings
To rise from matter's thrall.

The grave is but the door to life
Immortal in the spheres;
We yield our bodies without strife,
And enter without fears.

Beginning there as we leave here,
We on and upward press;
By mental toil, from sphere to sphere,
Forever we progress.

How glad are we these truths to know!
How grateful should we be!
Oh! let us ever thanks bestow
For truth that makes us free!

Come, let us join with spirits brave,
Who come for truth to fight;
'T is truth alone the world can save,
And change the wrong to right.

Her standard let us raise on high,
And challenge all the world;
The hosts of error we defy—
Our flag shall ne'er be furled!

With God and angels on our side,
With truth for sword and shield,
We'll wage her warfare far and wide,
And win the battle-field!

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

BY A. S. HAYWARD.

The writer of these lines has just been put in possession of some facts which occurred in the town of Alstead, N. H., some twenty years ago, and relates them at this late day on account of the increasing interest taken by scientists and many prominent individuals who are searching for similar cases which are now coming into view in all portions of the world.

The narrative, as related to me by reliable individuals who made the town their summer resort during the heated season, is as follows: I do not give the names, but any one interested, and who doubts the statement, can look it up individually, in the place where it occurred:

A boy, about fourteen years of age, residing with his parents on a farm, complained of an apparition following him for some time; it was that of the form of a tall lady. She would come to him at all times of the day and night; but generally, on reaching the door of his home, she would vanish out of sight. She would talk with him as audibly as though she were an inhabitant of earth. The constant appearance of this lady became the bane of his life, although she did no harm to him personally.

His parents were Baptist church-members in good repute, and honest in their views—and not recognizing or understanding the Spiritualistic Philosophy, did all in their power to give the boy release from the affliction, as they looked upon it. They called upon their minister for advice in the matter, and related the circumstances. He called upon the family, and prayed with them and read the Bible, and often remained with them several days at a time; but his prayers had no effect to relieve the young man, and the lady spirit was at last designated "the devil" by the minister.

A family residing in the neighborhood, of the Roman Catholic faith, desired them to send for their priest, to see if he could give relief, and he attempted to exorcise the "presence," whatever it was. He talked with the parents and the boy, and gave the boy something to wear about him, and it was reported that he was not as badly afflicted with the apparition afterward. The boy grew up to a young man, and felt a great desire to go to sea, hoping thereby to obtain full relief from the "trouble," as he regarded it. He obtained a situation on a vessel, and one night while he was on watch the form appeared, as usual, and asked him what he was there for. He was greatly frightened at this time, being away from home, on the ocean, with no one he dared to speak to of the occurrence; but this was the last time the form appeared to him. He returned home, and soon afterward obtained an official position on a naval vessel; the ship sailed, but has never been heard from since, and it is thought all on board of her were lost at sea.

I have omitted to relate an experience met with previously by himself and father: they missed the train, and had to walk several miles to their home, and the young man declared that preceding them was a very large globe of light which illuminated the way, and he could not understand why it was that his father did not see the light as he did.

The same parties who gave me the above information also spoke of several other singular manifestations which occurred at their winter home in Savannah, Ga.—the following among them: A gentleman lost his wife by so-called death, and a relative acted as nurse for the motherless children. One night members of this family, on looking out of the window, saw what was supposed to be the house where these children resided all on fire, and also heard the screams of the little ones, and the voice of the lady calling for help, as distinctly as would have been the case had such been a reality. There were eight persons in the family who saw the fire scene, and heard the screams; and two students started for the house (which was some one-fourth of a mile distant) to render assistance. On nearing the house they discovered that there was no fire, neither had there been one; and all was total darkness. This singular phenomenon they have not to this day solved, as to its cause; it did not prove to be a presentiment or prophecy of a fire in the future, as nothing of the kind has taken place, and still the eight persons who witnessed it to this day declare it seemed to them a reality at the time.

At another time one of the family had a sick child, and her husband being away, she looked out of the window to see if he was coming, and to her astonishment a child dressed in white clothes looked into the window; in this case the phenomenon proved prophetically correct, as the sick child soon afterward passed on to higher life. The lady called her nurse to see the child she saw looking into the window, but she could see no child, thus showing that there is a spiritual sight that all do not possess.

This family is connected with the Episcopalian Church, and its members do not recognize Modern Spiritualism as a fact, but think that there is something in it they cannot account for. A lady member among them has quite remarkable physical manifestations without contact; these only come in her case when least expected, but are as real to her as anything in life.

These and similar manifestations are constantly occurring at the present time in the families of church-members of all the various denominations, and in widely dissevered localities, and the great body of the "unchurched" know them to be realities as well. There is to my mind no way of accounting for them successfully except by and through the philosophy of Modern Spiritualism, whatever the Psychic Research Societies or their ministerial allies may have to say to the contrary.

As cumulative proof of the verity of this order of occurrences, and an additional demonstration that these modern manifestations are but an extension to a wider plane and a more intelligent recognition of what all the past has known, I subjoin the following authentic narration of what occurred years ago, wherein sectarian ministers were closely concerned—the account being still to be found in the files of Zion's Herald, Boston, (a paper devoted to the advocacy of the Methodist system of belief) under date of June 24th, 1880, and running as follows:

AN EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE.

[Reprinted by Request.]

[The following communication has been handed us for publication, by a gentleman of this city, who received it, as here stated, from the late eloquent and pious Summerfield, a short time before his death. We know the writer; he is a man who is distinguished alike for excellence of character, credibility, piety and moral worth. His name would at once remove every possible doubt as to the faithfulness and correctness with which the narrative has been furnished, and as to the certainty that the account we now give was communicated to him by the above-mentioned.—Ed. Zion's Herald, Feb. 15th, 1826.]

The following account I received from the late Rev. John Summerfield soon after his return from England. Mr. Summerfield informed me that he obtained the narrative from Rev. Richard Watson, the gentleman who is now writing the excellent work entitled, "Theological Institutes," one volume of which has reached this country. Mr. Watson received the account from Rev. Mr. Mills, a minister of talent, integrity and high standing in the Methodist Church in England, and who was the actor in the extraordinary scene. Mr. Watson further informed Mr. Summerfield that he was intimately acquainted with Mr. Mills, and knew him to be a man of the greatest moral worth and by no means credulous.

Mr. Mills had traveled a circuit in England, in which lived a man by the name of James, with whom, his wife and children, he had been intimately acquainted, and at whose house he lodged in passing around the circuit. He left the circuit, after having traveled it one year, to attend to the Conference, and was again returned to it a second time. But in the interim an epidemic disease had prevailed in the place where James resided, and both himself and his wife were carried off by it suddenly, and within a short time of each other. Mr. Mills, however, as usual, went to his old lodging, which was then occupied by the children; but he felt gloomy and distressed at finding the abode no longer enlivened by the presence of its former pious heads, who had been his intimate friends, and in this state of mind retired to rest in the same room in which, on former occasions, he had been in the habit of sleeping.

Soon after lying down, however, Mr. Mills, with considerable astonishment, heard, as he supposed, some persons whispering in an adjoining room, into which he immediately repaired, to ascertain who they were, but found no one. He again lay down, and concluded that he must have been mistaken; but the circumstance brought to his recollection a rumor which he had heard, at a place not very distant, and to which he had paid but little attention, that James and his wife had been several times seen since their death. While thinking on this rumor, he again heard the whispering renewed. This increased his surprise; and a second time he arose and searched the room, but with the same result. He arose the third time from the same cause, but after a strict search, could find no one. After this he resolved to disregard it, and fell into a sleep, and heard nothing more.

The next morning he left the house without mentioning the circumstance to the children, to attend an appointment about three miles distant; and, as usual, dined at the house of a pious old lady in the neighborhood of the place. The woman, though poor and aged, had always insisted on the preachers staying with her; and through respect for her age and excellent character they indulged her wishes. She had provided for Mr. Mills a frugal repast, but declined eating with him, stating that she preferred waiting on him. The old lady was generally known by the familiar name of Nanny; and by this name she was called by the preachers. While Mr. Mills was eating his morsel, Nanny, who was seated some distance from him, said, "Mr. Mills, I have a request to make of you." "Well, Nanny," he replied, "what is it?" "Why," said she, "that you preach my funeral sermon next Sabbath." The request astonished Mr. Mills, who, looking at her with surprise, said, "Nanny, what is the matter with you? Have you lost your senses?" "Oh! no, sir," she replied, "I know perfectly well what I am talking about; for I shall die on Friday at three o'clock in the afternoon; and though you will be some miles from this place, I want you to comply with my request; and if you have ever known anything good of me that may be serviceable to others, you can tell it."

"But," said Mr. M., "before I promise to comply with your request, I should be much gratified if you would inform me how you know that you will die on Friday, this being on Tuesday?" "Then, sir, I will inform you. You know that reports have been in circulation that James and his wife have been seen in different places by various persons since their death." "True," said Mr. M., "but I regarded it as a mere rumor." "But, sir," she replied, "I saw them this morning!" "You saw them!" "Indeed I did, sir. Early this morning, while sweeping my entry, I looked up toward the road, and I saw two persons, a man and a woman, coming toward the house, who appeared to me to resemble James and his wife. I ceased to sweep, and looked steadily at them until they came near to me, when I found it really was them." Said Mr. Mills, "Why, Nanny, were you not afraid?" "Me afraid, Mr. Mills?" she replied; "what had I to fear? Indeed, I was not afraid, for I knew James and his wife in this world, and I am sure they were good people, and I was quite certain they had not become bad since they left it. Well, sir, as I was saying, they came up to me, and I said, 'James, is that you?' and he said, 'Yes, Nanny, it is me; you are not deceived, and this is my wife.' And I said, 'James, are you happy?' And he replied, 'I am, and so is my wife; and our happiness far exceeds anything we ever conceived of in this world!' 'But,' said I, 'James, if you are so happy, why have you returned?' To which he replied, strange as it may appear to you, 'There is still a mysterious tie existing between us and our friends in this world, which will not be dissolved until the resurrection; and also, Nanny, you know that I and my wife died suddenly, in consequence of which it has been supposed that I left no will; and in order to prevent some uneasiness which is likely to exist among the children respecting my property, we have been permitted to return to the world and inform some person that I did make a will, and where it may be found. We went,' he continued, 'last night to our former mansion, to inform Mr. Mills respecting the will, but found he was somewhat frightened, and therefore concluded not to tell him, but to see you this morning and request you to inform him, as he will dine with you to-day, for we passed him on the road; and we knew, Nanny, that you would not be frightened.' 'No, indeed, James, I am not alarmed,' I replied, 'for I am vast glad to see you, especially since you are happy!' 'The will,' he said, 'is in a private drawer in the desk, which opens by a secret spring [here giving a full description of it], which the children do not know of, and the executors live in the neighborhood. Request Mr. Mills to return to the house after dinner, and he will find the will, and can see the executors and can have things satisfactorily settled in the family. And,' said he, 'Nanny, we are permitted to inform you that on Friday next, at three o'clock in the afternoon, you will die, and be with us!' 'Oh! James,' I replied, 'I am vast glad to hear it. I wish it was Friday now.' 'Well,' said he, 'be ready, for the messenger will certainly call for you at that hour!' I replied, 'Do n't fear James. By the grace of God I will be ready;' and they left me."

Mr. Mills heard the account with no small degree of astonishment; and concluded to return to the house from whence he came in the morning. Without the least difficulty he found the drawer and will. He also saw the executors, and was pleased to find that the will gave full satisfaction to all concerned. On the following Friday, at three o'clock, pious Nanny died; and Mr. Mills informed Mr. Watson that he preached the funeral sermon on the succeeding Sabbath. Mr. Watson remarked to Mr. Summerfield that he had always before been an unbeliever on the subject of apparitions, but that he did most fully credit this account.

May Magazines.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—The manufacture of lace is a leading subject in the contents, treatment of it being made in "The Irish Papal Jubilee Lace," by Mrs. Power Lalor, with four illustrations, and "A Word on the Outlook of Lace-Making in Ireland," by Alan S. Cole, two illustrations, the half-a-dozen engravings representing exquisite productions. In "A Personal View of Japanese Art: A Lesson from Khiosi," with nine illustrations, one of them a finely engraved full-page copy of a painting by the author, representing a method of disseminating news in Japan, is given an interesting sketch of Khiosi, one of the most celebrated painters of that nation, and his mode of working. Some account is given in another article of the recent exhibition of Japanese art—lacquer, keramics, metal-work, and carvings in wood and ivory, in London. John Forbes Robertson describes the City Art Gallery of Manchester, Eng., illustrating his text with copies of five of the paintings contained therein. Of the remaining contents are "The Barbizon School," a sketch of Père Corot, with a portrait of the artist-poet at work, and six illustrations; "Crazes in Art," "Chronicles" and "Notes." New York: Cassell & Co.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY opens its table of contents with the concluding part (III.) of "The Aspern Papers," by Henry James; "The Cavalier" is treated in a novel and breezy manner by Agnes Repplier; Annie H. Wharton discusses "The American Philosophical Society," setting forth added grounds as to why Benjamin Franklin should be revered by his countrymen and descendants; that sterling tale, "Yone Santo," by E. H. House, continues to be vivid in its picturings and uplifting in its sentiments; "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove" still rules in the minds of Miss Murfree's admirers; Harriet Waters Preston's "Cicero in the Senate" is in itself a classic prose-poem; Frank Gaylord Cook has a thoughtful paper on "Reform in the Celebration of Marriage." Other articles, together with the usual Book Reviews and Contributors' Club, are to be found in this excellent number. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston, publishers.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—In addition to new chapters of the two serial stories, "Monica," and "By Misadventure," are given two short ones, "Wild Grapes," by Jean Middlemass, and "John Smith's Allotment." Instructions in household matters are pleasantly imparted in "Our New House and Its Plenishings," "Hours in My Laundry," and "Upon a Rainy Day," while "What to Wear," "Flowers of the Month," etc., are of equal practical interest and value. New York: Cassell & Co.

OUR LITTLE ONES.—The usual variety is given this month of entertainment, instruction and amusement in short stories, musical rhymes and attractive pictures. They include "The Bird's Baby Show," "Hawks and Hollyhocks," and "How Noah's Ark Went to School." Russell Pub. Co., Boston.

BROCKTON.—Mrs. B. F. Boomer writes: "I had the pleasure of attending the Children's Progressive Lyceum of Brockton, Sunday, April 22d, and was much pleased with the exercises and the manner they were conducted. The officers seem to spare no effort to make the Lyceum hour a season of mutual benefit and interest to all. I felt it was good for me to be there, and I also felt that the higher intelligences were with this noble band of workers, and doing all in their power to assist them in their work for truth. Our hope for the future of our glorious cause is in the training of the young minds. May angels speed the day when these Progressive Lyceums shall be established in every town and city throughout our land."

FITCHBURG.—"Truth" writes: "Light has been reflected on some of the dark minds by which we are surrounded since Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant came to fill her last engagement here, the closing lecture of which, Sunday evening, April 22d, was attended by believers and members of the different churches, who seldom, if ever, attend Spiritualist meetings. The accuracy of her psychometric readings convinced them that some power beyond her own was at work, though they would not admit of any spirit power, but ask, 'Where does she get the information from?' 'How does she find out so quick?' One young man, for whom she read from his ring, accused one of the audience of telling her all about him, so correct was the reading. Similar expressions were heard on every hand, reminding us of the Scripture, 'Come see a man who told me all things,' etc. A deep interest has been awakened by Mrs. Conant's visit. She had several invitations to attend private circles, but owing to her numerous calls through the day for private sittings had to decline.

Her audience Sunday was in close sympathy with her. After the invocation, by one of the controls, she noticed a very handsome bouquet of flowers which had been placed on the table. She took it, and recited a beautiful poem, so that her audience was in rapport with her from the commencement. After the audience singing the hymn, 'Oh! think of a home over there,' tests and readings were given upon some thirty-five articles, consisting of watches, chains, rings, pins, wallets, photographs, etc., twenty-five of which she read very correctly and satisfactorily. I met a lady today who said, 'We got the letter.' I asked 'What letter?' 'Why, the letter Mrs. Conant said was coming from St. John.'

Should Mrs. Conant be able to fill engagements next season the people of Fitchburg will be pleased to greet her, and hear more from her spirit guides. I met a friend last evening in earnest conversation with one who said he was an out-and-out Methodist, but the meeting Sunday evening was worth ten dollars to him, for he got the best test of the evening. He said it proved to him most conclusively that the spirits of our departed ones are with us more than we think they are."

WASHINGTON.—"J. A. R." writes: "The Association of Spiritualists of this city has been holding very successful and largely-attended meetings during the present lecture season, and the Children's Progressive Lyceum, recently inaugurated in connection with the Association, is working satisfactorily under the leadership of our earnest and energetic young Spiritualist, Charles Pierson, telegrapher in the War Department, seconded by the efficient coöperation of a number of young ladies and gentlemen who have united earnestly in the work.

Samuel Wheeler, of Philadelphia, an inspirational speaker, has been occupying the rostrum of the Association during the month of April very satisfactorily to his audiences. Mr. W., though well known in Philadelphia as an active and efficient worker in the cause of Spiritualism, has not until recently entered the field as a lecturer; but his mission evidently lies in that direction. He is a natural orator, well equipped with personal magnetism; and his earnestness, sincerity and unselfish devotion to the cause, together with his inspirational gifts, constitute him a very effective worker in this prolific field of usefulness. Now that he proposes to devote himself to the work, Spiritualists throughout the country should see to it that he is kept constantly employed in the field for which his gifts so well qualify him. He is not only an inspirational speaker, but also a developing medium, and has been instructing and developing with satisfactory results a class of spiritually susceptible mediumistic subjects here, who meet regularly for the purpose of receiving such aid as his developing gifts enable him to render them.

Among his other effective work for the cause in Washington, Mr. W. has reïnaugurated and is personally pushing forward successfully an effort in the direction of raising funds for the erection of a Spiritual Temple, so that the Association may have a suitable place of its own, and not, as heretofore and now, be dependent upon the precarious and uncertain tenure of a hired hall in which to hold its meetings. And, indeed, there now seems to be a good prospect that the enterprise, which has been started anew and reïnforced by the earnest appeals of Mr. W., will, in the not-far-off future, result in the realization of the long-hoped-for and much-talked-of time when the Association will have a suitable building for its purposes, and to which it will be proud to invite and welcome Spiritualists, liberalists and investigators from all parts of the country who may visit the national capital on business or pleasure."

Colorado.

DENVER.—Mrs. F. A. Logan writes, April 22d: "Since my last letter I have visited Colorado Springs, where I gave three lectures. No regular meetings are held there except in private houses. In Pueblo I found some Spiritualists among the leading citizens. I reached Leadville, ten thousand feet above the level of the sea, five weeks ago; a city of twenty thousand inhabitants, famous for its lead, silver and gold mines. Brother Moses and Sister Mattie Hull had just closed a two months' engagement there. Our meetings were quite well attended. A learned physician, an agnostic, challenged me to discuss with him the subject, 'Does man retain a conscious existence at death?' I taking the affirmative and he the negative. The result was an interesting time last Sunday evening. Several desired to testify to the phenomena they had witnessed, although not claiming to be Spiritualists. Even the doctor related an interesting experience of a spirit visitation of one of his deceased patients. So for the time being I gained the victory. Some desired a repetition or continuation of the discussion, which transpired last Friday evening, in the presence of a large and enthusiastic audience, the doctor closing his famous speech with quotations from Scripture of the appearance of Jesus among his disciples after the resurrection, thus proving a conscious existence after death. Again his theories were vanquished, and in a private conversation he expressed a desire to take his wife and travel with me; but the lone pilgrim desires no influence to intervene between herself and angel-guides, that her remaining days may be spent in usefulness to the masses.

The gentlemanly agents of the Union Pacific Railroad have granted me an unlimited half-fare pass to California, on account of the credentials, giving me authority to solemnize marriage and preach the gospel of glad tidings, granted me by the State Association of Spiritualists of Minnesota in 1868, as their missionary. Thus, you see, sometimes the right comes uppermost and sometimes is justice done.

I intend to speak, heal and distribute spiritual literature in the various towns on the line of the Central Pacific as well as on the Union Pacific Railroad, reaching California before another winter."

Missouri.

HANNIBAL.—J. B. Chesley writes, April 22d: "We are having lectures from Miss Cora M. Carpenter, who is only fourteen years old and almost entirely uneducated. She delivers impromptu lectures in the trance condition with her eyes closed. Up to last October she possessed a particular aversion to Spiritualism, and had become a church-member. One day, without any previous warning, she was controlled, and commenced speaking at circles, and subsequently was impelled by her guides to give public lectures, in which great depth of thought is exhibited; this, together with a perfect style of delivery, has led the most bigoted Orthodox Christians to declare that it is the 'power of Godliness' acting upon and through her. Her first lecture having attracted an audience that completely filled the hall, a larger one had to be procured."

Iowa.

COUNCIL BLUFFS.—J. M. Holaday writes: "The BANNER OF LIGHT is exerting a widespread influence on American minds. The press and the preachers are drawing from the fountain of Spiritualism. I hear nothing against our philosophy from the ministers of this city, nor from the press, but at times much in its favor. The editor of the Omaha Bee (opposite this city) gives his readers to understand, however, that nothing is known in this life by any one about the next, and that spirits purporting to be seen are nothing but objects of the imagination. But a minister has a communication in a recent number of the Christian Union, of New York City, in which he declares that all children who die are taken in charge by guardian spirits commissioned by some high power for the task, and that hell is a malicious myth, originally impressed on the Jews by the surrounding heathen nations. There is a Catholic dictionary in the free reading-room in this city which says 'God may permit departed souls to appear on earth for many wise reasons'; that 'St. Thomas even thinks God has communicated to the saints a permanent power of appearing on earth when they please.'

The philosophy of Spiritualism is represented in Council Bluffs by a few mediums, but there is room for more. First-class mediums always do well here, and I wonder more of them do not come. If any such would come, and remain here several months, he (or she) would doubtless receive excellent patronage. But it would be necessary for one to stay long enough to get acquainted. Short visits of mediums suggest the idea that they have good reasons for not wishing to linger. We have no public society at present, and there is no particular disposition to start one, but doubtless it will come in due time."

Ohio.

LORAIN.—Geo. A. Burgess writes: "We have had Mrs. Mary C. Knight, of Fulton, N. Y., with us for two lectures; all who heard her were highly entertained and pleased. Her inspiration is of a very high order; subjects presented by the audience were handled in a logical and eloquent manner, rarely excelled, and, when considering the abstruseness of some of them, seldom equalled. We think this lady should be brought more prominently before the public, and can sincerely recommend her services, believing they will give entire satisfaction."

PIQUA.—Mrs. Maggie Stewart writes: "April 12th and 13th Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, of New York, lectured in our city to very appreciative audiences. Her subjects were handled in a masterly way, and carried conviction to the hearts of her hearers.

Her invocations touch the hidden cords of man's spiritual nature, awakening strong resolves to live a better, purer, and more useful life. All who heard this gifted lady were more than pleased, they were delighted. The Spiritualists of this place are few, but hope to grow in numbers so that we may be able to have Sister Brigham and other good speakers preach to us the gospel of truth."

Maine.

ROCKLAND.—Wm. T. Conant writes: "Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly, of Newburyport, Mass., having labored with the Rockland, Me., Spiritualists three weeks, closed his engagements Sunday, April 22d, before good audiences both afternoon and evening; subjects received from his hearers, spiritual communications being given at the close of each lecture. Mr. Edgerly during his stay with us has labored zealously, holding evening meetings with private families and their friends who wish to gain a knowledge of the cause of spirit communion. Mr. Edgerly has received calls from Belfast, Morrill, and other places in Maine. His friends extend thanks, and wish him good success wherever he may be called."

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—A. L. Coverdale writes: "During the month of May, John Slater of New York, whose reputation as a medium is unexcelled, will give a séance, under the auspices of the Young People's Progressive Society, every Sunday afternoon at 3 P. M., and evening at 7:45, at its hall, 'Martine's,' corner of Indiana Avenue and 22d street. Friends are most especially requested to secure the attendance of skeptics. The severe comments of the daily press upon Spiritualism should lead us to offer our best proofs of its truth. If we all work arduously and zealously, we cannot fail to win the respect of the press, and a hearing, at least, from our skeptical friends."

Minnesota.

FERGUS FALLS.—A correspondent writes, April 20th: "I have just noted the (elsewhere) published views of S. G. Smith on 'Religious Investigation,' and have reached the conclusion that if a Convention is to be appointed to inquire into the religions of the day and the validity of their claims to the acceptation of mankind, it would be well, by way of offset to the modern methods, to choose as its members Robert G. Ingersoll and those who follow his thought: This course would be on a par, and in equal consonance with justice, with the forming of the Seybert Commission—that 'settled' Spiritualism for itself, but not for the world in general."

"The Ideal Republic,

Or the Spiritual Genius of True Government."

We shall print next week a verbatim report, specially prepared for our columns, of an eloquent and thoughtful discourse on the above topic, delivered by W. J. COLVILLE, in San Francisco, Cal.

The Prophecy for Spiritualism.

What Spiritualism promises to accomplish in the next ten years, or by the close of this nineteenth century, is a most interesting subject of speculation. Considering what has been accomplished in the past forty years, it is no exaggeration to expect that what it will accomplish in the remaining ten years of the half century will prove to be a consummation of hopes cherished in the hearts of millions of believers.

In a recent discourse whose outlook was wholly in that direction, Mrs. Richmond expressed the opinions as well as the hopes of these believers in a truly noble manner, and verified to each individual the convictions which have become the fruit of his experience. Passing in masterly review the marked changes in thought which have taken place since the advent of Modern Spiritualism, she proceeded to consider the attitude of theology to science in consequence, and to show that while the latter has forced theology to abandon its old dogmas of faith one by one, nothing has yet been offered by theology as a substitute for them, and the followers of the creeds are all afloat in regard to the grounds and even the character of their belief.

The theories of scientific men, said Mrs. Richmond, work a change in the world, whether for better or worse; and change prevents chronic fallacies, so that the world does not move in a groove of error as in past times. This change is going on not only in the realm of social science, in the sense of its direct application to human life, but in the still higher realm of the spiritual atmosphere; by which is meant not merely in the demonstrated facts of Spiritualism, nor the belief in spiritual communion, but the general acceptance and contemplation of the possibilities of knowing something about man's spirit here and hereafter. That which was formerly confined to metaphysical speculation has become the theme of almost general enlightened contemplation. Subjects that were forbidden to the human mind, either from theological prejudice, or from ignorance, or from the tendency to materialism, are now themes of daily contemplation and of possible knowledge. It is shown by the tide of thought which is flowing from the Orient toward the Occident in the forms of Oriental religions. Thirty years ago, Puritan Boston was shocked to hear an open defense of the religious belief of the Brahmins. It was thought that we were in danger of going back into heathenism and paganism. There has been a change within ten years. There is no religion upon earth that may not be considered in almost any intellectual, social, or even religious society in the country.

It is even possible now in London, Paris, New York and Boston to be en rapport with the worship of the Buddhist, of the Indian, of the Brahmin, of all the countries of the Orient, without in any way compromising one's fidelity to the Christian religion in its most enlightened form. And this is due solely to the advent of Modern Spiritualism some forty years ago. From the very first it has had a broadening and enlightening effect upon the minds that contemplated it or were brought in contact with its literature or teachings, by not only denying that inspiration began with the Pentateuch and closed with Revelation, but by declaring that it is coëqual with man. Spiritualism likewise has taught that religious belief in and of itself does not constitute the one and only passport to the kingdom of heaven. While theology and materialism have combined to decry Spiritualism, it has been the open solvent for both. Only the Spiritualist knows that the scientific basis of life may be true and the phenomena recorded in the Bible may also be true. The Brahmin knows that the spiritual manifestations form the basis of his religion, and that the light of the spirit never has been quenched. Perhaps Spiritualism, as understood in the world, is not responsible for all this, but what has transpired in the world under the name of Spiritualism is responsible for it. Even the secular press, without intending it, is familiarizing the public with the fact that Spiritualism is here.

Scientific men may deny all knowledge of the facts which Spiritualism reveals, but let one such boldly declare to be untrue what so many people believe to be true, and thousands of silent defenders of the truth will rise up to declare the reality of their inward convictions. If an edict were to be issued to put to death all the Spiritualists in every Roman Catholic country, or if laws were to be passed against Spiritualism in our own country, the strength of conviction in the public mind would soon become visible. Although cowardice is common in regard to that which is not popular, the public mind is nevertheless so deeply imbued with the fact that there is something real in this realm which is not seen, something which is about them in the manifestation of spirit-power as recorded in the world's life, that public sentiment would rise up instantly to resist any open and cruel persecution. People who thus believe do not mind social persecution, or personal contempt, but when it comes to actual persecution it would be found that thousands upon thousands put their trust in Spiritualism who dare not now avow it. Say what you will of the enlightenment of science and the laws of society, or of what can be brought into the mere intellect of man from the outer world, human ingenuity is able to devise nothing, nor human thought able to invent anything that will take the place of the open communion of man's soul with the realm of spirit for his moral uplifting.

Shut that door, and the realm is closed in the direction of moral progress. As the Church has closed it in past time by denying the possibility of open communion, and feeding the people on husks instead of bread, the world morally descended to the level of that on which it was morally fed. And as materialism, deluded by the outer intellect, has tried to feed man on the scientific truths and the utilitarian philosophy of to-day, so would morality sink to the level of the dust of which this philosophy is composed. He who rises to the dignity of moral excellence does so, even though he may be unaware of it, on the strength of the spirit and its possibilities. The spiritual part of man rises to the surface of human life as it is fed from these unseen springs. To-day the outpouring for the spiritual harvest gives promise for a greater and more wonderful victory. The seed has been sown, and thousands of human lives have been fed by it that we know not of. By-and-bye the testimony which has already been given will be taught, and the world will read and understand it. Within the coming ten years, said Mrs. Richmond, the harvest of the past quarter of a century will be found to ripen, and it will be gathered. It will be found in the realm of that inspired book of life, in that realm of theology whose controversies have taken up so large a share of history.

The vitalizing power of spiritual truth will enter, and priestly hands will be turned toward this light as the only salvation. The power of the Church will not then consist of a material theology, but a theology vivified by the spiritual truth of to-day, which recognizes the truth of past time. Spiritualism among the Spiritualists, said the speaker, has also passed through a revolutionary stage, and will continue to do so for the next ten years. That which was purely phenomena becomes philosophy, and that which was philosophy becomes an ennobling religion and moral purpose. The spirit-world will incorporate in the minds of men and women a knowledge of the presence of their spirit-friends and of their constant communion, and of the value of that communion as it affects the daily thought and life. It is very much to know positively of another life; but to know it as it affects this one of ours, in exalting human purpose, in giving to human life a far greater value, in imparting to human thought an uplifting tendency for all, is the divinest message which such knowledge could bring. The next ten years, said the speaker, will bring a much greater change than the past ten have wrought. The dreary dogmas of the Church will be very generally abandoned for the recognition of a religion which teaches a God of love, ministrations of charity, and open communion between the two worlds for the exaltation of mankind.

The only religion that is adequate to the salvation of mankind is based in the saving power of the universe. That is the power of undying love. When from ministering spirits, from the highest angels that can communicate with mortals, and from the interior of one's own soul the voice is one and the same, declaring that the highest law is the law of perfect love, and that God is love, there is no more revolt. There may continue to be darkness, shadow, weakness and error, but there is to be heard no crying out against the injustice of an angry God and the terrors of a revengeful creed. It is thus that the religion of the world is to be planted, and all that is best and highest in the nature of mankind is to be proven by every attribute and faculty that the human mind is possessed of. Not only will the manifestations of spirit-presence and power be increased and multiplied where they are needed and required; not only will they occur in unexpected seasons, times and places; but it will become a duty to emphasize the testimony of both science and religion, and the miscalled courts of justice may be converted into places of more real justice by Spiritualism's aid in proving the irresponsibility of those who are diseased by crime; and jurisprudence may undergo modifications of great moment in consequence of this pervading presence, the real purpose and intent of the human heart being known and revealed.

May it not also be expected, queried the speaker, that society itself, fluttering and fictitious and dazzling as it has been on the surface, will be more and more pervaded by a knowledge of this presence, until there never will be a forgetfulness of the departed, whatever the position in life or the duty that one is called to follow? The warning will be everywhere heard, that we cannot sin with impunity; that this voice of the spirit that is within cannot be disregarded. People will be continually told that immortal nature will not stand by and be all the time outraged by the individual in human life. They will declare themselves unto themselves. This will be brought about by the knowledge of spiritual presences, by the tender ministrations of spirit children, by the watchfulness of sister or brother or friend, by the mother's voice that has led and guided them for many years, and by the ever winning consciousness that the immortal spirit has a right to be known and heard and expressed in human life. All this may not come, added the speaker, within the time named, but it will more manifestly come than at any other similar period of human history. It will so much more come that Spiritualism, by the end of that time, will as a general subject be more talked of and thought of, and permeate human thought more, and have more to do as an acknowledged power in human life than all of science and theology put together.

The Awful Hunger of Culture.

The Boston Advertiser confesses its tendency to be incredulous by publishing its thoughts on incredulity. On the subject of mediums it admits, of course for the sake of argument only, that their claims do not at first glance appear to be incredible, but that, on the contrary, the account which the spirits give of themselves "seems to confirm and harmonize with the loftiest longings and deepest convictions of the human soul." Then it proceeds to inquire how it is that "in certainly the immense majority of instances, those who investigate the alleged phenomena—though often, as for instance was the case with the most active members of the Seybert Commission—strongly inclined at the outset to belief, become disillusioned and disgusted when they have probed the thing to the bottom."

If it is the simple truth and nothing more that the Advertiser is desirous of getting at, it must first divest itself of its prejudices. And a little undiluted information is as good a help to that end as anything. Before uttering itself in such a positive way on the Seybert Commission's so-called report, it ought to know, and doubtless does know, that the professed investigators, instead of being "strongly inclined at the outset to belief," were strongly determined just the other way. It was not an investigation in any thorough and practical sense, and it would seem that any person wishing to understand the matter could have gained proof of this in the articles showing up the composition and prejudices of the Commission which Hon. Thomas R. Hazard, Prof. Henry Kiddle, A. E. Newton and others contributed to the columns of THE BANNER, and the Spiritualist press generally, during the progress of the alleged inquiries (?) on the part of these Philadelphia savants. The purpose seemed rather to be to divert the fund into doing precisely what its creator never thought it would be used for. The whole matter has been so thoroughly exposed that it would seem to be an imputation on any one's ordinary intelligence to go over a statement of the matter again. A newspaper especially ought to hold itself, as a vehicle of common information, above the arts which are expected to be practiced by those who think to face down intelligent people by disregarding altogether what is known to everybody as the truth. It is matter of common notoriety that the Seybert Commission was really no commission, in any such sense as Mr. Seybert intended. But the Advertiser has no fling of criticism or slur of contempt for this body and its practically preärranged work, though it is ready enough to assert—which is as far from the truth as the poles are wide apart—that "in certainly the immense majority of instances" those who investigate the phenomena only become confirmed in unbelief.

The truth is, on the other hand, that in the immense majority of instances the investigators become believers. Else why these periodical attacks on the rapidly increasing numbers of the "self-deluded" ones who are convinced? These phenomena must of course be manifested through human and familiar agencies, in order to arrest attention and secure the testimony of the human senses. Is it at all unreasonable to suppose, on the one hand, that communications of whatever nature from the invisible world will and must be modified, measured, and more or less deflected in consequence of the character, the culture, and the entire composition of those who render this service? or, on the other hand, that spirits themselves are much addicted to the causes of action pursued by them when in the form on earth, and therefore that they are at all times to be tried instead of being trusted without further search? More than this, too, the investigator himself is quite as liable to delude himself as to be misled. Even the Advertiser lets it out when it refers to "those faiths and feelings which before had predisposed mankind to the acceptance of spirit-manifestations," and to "the human heart swelling high with intimations of immortality," and dreams of progress which it would not shatter for anything less than a state of non-existence.

Such investigators clamor for facts as rude as any of which the senses take cognizance, yet talk up the ideal as if it were a state or a something clear out of the reach of all reality. Now which will they choose to have, or will they insist on both? If the latter, then let them quietly accept what is given them just as it is given, and not begin to find fault in a lofty way because they thought and expected that they were going to have something wholly different. The spirit-world certainly is not bound to accommodate itself to their preconceptions, to the largeness or littleness of their culture, or to their special idiosyncrasies or temperaments. It will go on and do its predetermined work in such way as it can, taking hold where it can get hold, choosing the humble and even the ignorant to confound the wise, and putting aside all sort of regard for the distinctions of society, creed and learning which such as the Boston Advertiser presume to think of real importance.

"The world is incredulous," says that journal, "not because it is unwilling to believe, but because it is unable to believe. The claims are self-contradictory." And then it buttons its coat across its breast, and takes down its shining tile from the peg with thoughts intent on dining. And in this way it supposes it has extinguished Spiritualism. Kindly ask it what it would have in order to satisfy its exacting wants, and it pompously answers that it will have some more "Paradise Lost" from John Milton, something real nice from Julius Cæsar, and Napoleon Bonaparte, and George Washington, and good stiff oratory from Demosthenes and Wendell Phillips. It cries out in its paroxysm of intellectual hunger for "profound thought," "brilliant epigram," "poetic imagery," "character creation," and "additions to the world's stock of useful knowledge." In short, like the child, it wants the moon. Then dropping into the patronizing habit, it admits its willingness to believe that all mediums are not consciously fraudulent. Thanks for nothing. It is even willing to allow that "not a few eminent scholars" think that "some hitherto undiscovered natural forces exist, and cause a portion of the strange things which undoubtedly do really happen in connection with those who claim mediumistic powers." Then these phenomena are "strange things," are they? Aha! But how much longer would the world have had to wait for them if it had depended on these "eminent scholars" to bring them about? Here is where the bottom falls entirely out of the Advertiser's tub, and we suggest that it suspend publication until it has attended to its coopering.

Dr. Talmage Denies.

The woes of Rev. Dr. T. Dewitt Talmage have become unbearable: Previous to his sermon last Sunday in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, he took occasion to complain that certain parties who had not the light of truth for their guiding star, were accusing him of having set a snare in the shape of "the flowing bowl," for the feet of the officers of the 13th Regiment—which story he vigorously denied.

He then proceeded to do some more denying, to wit: "I have recently become a Spiritualist. At least so some of the journals of that belief declare"—but for fear lest some of his hearers might be unduly inflated with a sense of their own peculiar sanctity, he added further on: "a doctrine with which many of you are already tinged," and which brings "death and doom to its disciples." Then he proceeded to deny that he was a Spiritualist, his congregation, by church usages, being obliged to keep quiet under the aspersion, and do their own denying at home.

It is a sad spectacle, when one who professes to teach the doctrine of immortal life on ancient authority, is thrown into such spasms of horror and rage at being told that he is suspected of cherishing a belief sub rosa that the fact of immortality can be demonstrated to this modern day. We are very sorry for Dr. Talmage, indeed; but we submit that he has laid himself liable to the charge, in several instances in the course of his sermons concerning the after-life, and the bearing of the present upon it: The BANNER OF LIGHT (to which mayhap he refers) has not failed to note the habit he has of giving free rein to his inspirations in the pulpit; and we have had occasion in more than one instance to declare that the doctrine he has thus given expression to in this regard was good Spiritualism, as judged by the spoken revelations and published tenets of the Spiritual Philosophy. Those of whom he complains, therefore, are not to be blamed for judging the Talmagean tree by its fruits.

The Doctor must really be more careful hereafter, and, when speaking of present and after-life concerns, stick to the four-square-high-walled-psalm-singing-Jerusalem portrayed by his creed, and not give his flock any more tempting pictures of a future existence which is the logical and progressive outcome of the present state, otherwise bad people will be asking him from whence he obtained the information he proffers, and the authority (as to truth) for his promulgation of it.

☞ It is nothing new to believe in the existence of a personal devil, or to believe that the world is flat; both, and other myths and delusions, were believed in and endorsed by the clergy ages ago. Neither is it new that one who has made such a display of ignorance as did Rev. C. P. Mills in his pulpit at Newburyport a short time since, on one subject, should make further display of it respecting another, as he did last Sunday, when in a discourse upon "Diabolism and Demonology" he boldly announced his belief in the personal existence of a devil and of evil spirits; in doing this he imagines he has found "hard pan" on which to rest his accusations against Spiritualism. But he should bear in mind that every discovery, every invention—everything, in fact, that is of preëminent value to mankind to-day—has been attributed by men in his position to the same source to which he ascribes spirit manifestations; even the "wonderful works" that Christ and his disciples wrought were charged to the devil, and "he hath a devil, why hear he him?" uttered in their day, are identically the same words of warning and advice he enunciates to his auditors.

Mr. Mills, in closing, advised his hearers "in view of their ignorance of the subject (devil and demons), to be very humble." In like manner, in view of his ignorance of Spiritualism, we advise him to assume the same commendable course of faith and practice.

HON. A. B. RICHMOND has received the following appreciative letter from a prominent brother lawyer, which we think worthy of publication:

BRADFORD, PA., April 22d, 1888.

A. B. RICHMOND, ESQ., MEADVILLE, PENN.:

Dear Sir: I have just finished reading your REVIEW OF THE SEYBERT COMMISSIONERS' REPORT, and I have to say that I am pleased with its tenor; and why? It antagonizes no faith, no hope, no creed. Its search is for truth. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The wailing cry of Job and humanity coming down through all the centuries is: "If a man die, shall he live again?" That is simply a question of fact. If the beautiful faith of the Christian is founded on fact, if the belief of the savage in a future life is founded on fact, Spiritualism is true, and only proves and demonstrates that fact. But "let us," in the beautiful language of Ingersoll, "believe, in spite of doubts and dogmas, and tears and fears," that "in the night of death hope sees a star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

The Creator made no edict against knowledge to his children. Indeed, the converse is true. Let us, then, if it be possible under the laws of God, demonstrate and prove what many preach, and most hope for. There should be no antagonism here.

☞ In a review of foreign Spiritualist journals, the Harbinger, Melbourne, after quoting passages showing that animals possess clairvoyant powers, says: "This corroboration of the spiritual facts, coming even from the lower animal plane of creation, is very valuable when added to the testimony of human witnesses, for animals, such as dogs and horses, cannot be suspected to show feelings which they do not feel, and the testimony of their unsophisticated mental nature is in this respect of immense value as evidence tending to show that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in Horatio's philosophy."

Will Settle a Speaker.

We are informed that the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, meeting in Berkeley Hall, has, through its managers, taken steps toward the securing of a settled speaker for the larger portion of the forthcoming season—'88, '89. On Mrs. R. S. Lillie the choice has fallen, and she will address this society on the Sundays of six months out of the eight composing the regular term. Mr. J. T. Lillie will also serve the Society during the same period as a vocalist, his gifts in that direction being highly appreciated.

During the two months remaining the platform of this enterprising organization will be occupied by other talented advocates of the spiritual cause.

Mr. and Mrs. Lillie will not be present at Berkeley Hall the last Sunday of May, but on their way to fill an engagement at the California Camp-Meeting.

Mrs. Lillie, while on the Pacific slope, cannot fail of appreciation as a noble woman and an eloquent exponent of the Spiritual Philosophy. She will, no doubt, give a few lectures on her way to California or on her return homeward, at places where arrangements can be agreed upon.

It is reported that J. V. Mansfield, Edgar W. Emerson, the widow of the late W. A. Dunklee, and Mrs. Mary F. Lovering and others, have it in mind to visit the Pacific slope the present season.

Melbourne Progressive Lyceum.

The election of officers for a new season of the Melbourne (Australia) Progressive Lyceum resulted in the choice of Mr. W. H. Terry as Conductor, Mr. A. J. Hall having agreed to act as Vice-Conductor, and take charge of the Lyceum during Mr. Terry's occasional absence. Mr. Terry will also continue to act as Treasurer to the Lyceum. Secretary, Mr. J. Borrowman; Librarian, Mr. B. O'Dowd; Watchman, Mr. Neilson; Guardians, Messrs. Warne, Elliott and Debney; Pianist, Miss Dwight; Musical Conductor, Mr. Clay; Leaders—Messrs. Veevers, Rice, Veness, Thompson, Kear, Cunningham, Dickens, Mrs. Rice, Misses L. Stewart, A. Kennedy, Mrs. Burbank; Guard, Mr. Pailthorpe.

The Harbinger of Light says that the new board of officers hope, by energetic and united action, to improve the tone and extend the usefulness of this excellent and very important auxiliary for disseminating the truths of Spiritualism and establishing a firm foundation for its future growth and permanence.

☞ We have elsewhere alluded to the benighted remarks of the "cultured" Boston Advertiser regarding Spiritualism and the Seybert Commission. We have yet to find one person possessing any practical knowledge of the subject under consideration who is not indignantly in sympathy with the position we occupy regarding the course of that body. The latest issue of The Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia, contains a case in point, wherein its editor, instinct with the same feeling of reprobation regarding the Advertiser's pets, inveighs with vigor against "the unfitness and prejudice of the members of the Commission," of whose ill-digested report "the press has been making so much capital for some time past."

☞ A lady correspondent in New Hampshire writes: "I miss being where I can see the Spiritualists in their meetings and socially. I have the dear BANNER OF LIGHT every week, or I should feel lost among the non-progressives now around me. It does not seem possible to me, when I reflect, that I ever did believe such doctrines as I once subscribed to as a member of the Methodist Church, and which are still held by that denomination. Thank God for Spiritualism with all its glorious teachings."

☞ Dr. Dean Clarke — the conclusion of whose Anniversary address will be found on our second page — contributes to THE BANNER'S columns a reply to the Rev. A. J. Gordon's recent letures on Spiritualism, which will appear next week.

A Breath of Fresh Air for Working-Women.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Allow me to acquaint your readers with the nature of a correspondence recently opened with me by Geo. F. Simpson and wife of Hanson, Mass., with the hope that it will not only open the way to reach the very lives into which this excellent couple and others desire to bring a breath of fresh air and a gleam of sunshine, but that it may also induce other people living outside the city to follow in the same beneficent line which they have mapped out. Under date of April 12th Mr. Simpson writes:

"I often read in the daily papers of the destitution in the city, and of the hardships the poor have to endure; and have thought how much better for them if they could live in the country. I cannot contribute money to assist the deserving poor, but I have a pleasant home, and enough to eat, and Mrs. S. and I have thought it might help some tired shop-girl or factory operative to come out here and spend a week with us, and at the end of the year we should never miss what they had had from us. Knowing that your guides are interested in charitable work, I take the liberty to write and ask if you know of any poor women who would like a week of pleasant country life? If so, send them to us, and we will do what we can for them. I do not mean those who are able to spend a week at the Camp-Meetings, but such as are hardly able to buy a ticket to get there. I would like two who are acquainted, and it might be well to send some one who would be agreeable, not for our pleasure, but it might induce others of our Society to follow during the season. We could take two in May, and others later in the spring or summer months."

This letter from Mr. Simpson called out a reply from me, to which I received the following response, dated April 22d:

"I received your kind letter and was pleased at your approbation of my offer. I had previously mentioned my plan to Mrs. H., the President of the Hanson Spiritual Society, and she had thought favorably of it; and having shown your letter privately to her, the lady called upon me in our conference meeting to relate the substance of our correspondence, after which the President and Miss Helen K——, of Hanover, requested me to secure them two such visitors for a week, and I have no doubt more will follow.

In the meantime I shall try to procure contributions of money to help pay the railway fare of the poor women we take; as it now stands it will cost but one dollar and eight cents from Boston to Whitman and return; fifty-four cents each way, as I can take them in my team to and from the cars.

You may use such means of finding us the visitors as you think best, only don't bring my name into too much prominence, unless you think it will interest others in the scheme."

The above, Mr. Editor, is the substance of the gentleman's letters to me, and I lay it before your readers hoping to attract the attention of those who are acquainted with some poor, hard-working, deserving girl who would be benefited by a week in the country, but who is unable to bear the expense of securing it.

Having personally been entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Simpson, I know their home will provide not only comfort but also pleasant companionship to those who seek its walls, and I can speak with equal confidence of the other homes that promise to open thus hospitably in Hanson and vicinity. A girl brought into them will not feel herself a dependent or an object of charity, but will be made to feel at home in every sense of the word, and as one of the family in which she mingles for her vacation. Any one knowing of worthy cases such as are cited above, will please address, with particulars, either Geo. F. Simpson, at Hanson, Mass., or myself, at the BANNER OF LIGHT office, Boston.

Very respectfully, M. T. SHELHAMER.

Victorien Sardou as a Spiritualist.

The history of the production of a remarkable drawing by the eminent French artist and author, Sardou, is gleaned from an article in the Whitehall (Eng.) Review to have been wholly spiritual. The artist, as is well known, held intimate relations with denizens of the spirit-world, and felt indebted to them in a great measure for his renown. His familiar spirit attendant was Beaumarchais. On one occasion he asked his invisible friend in what part of infinite space dwelt the spirit of the great Mozart, Sardou's favorite composer. "Take a pencil," replied Beaumarchais. Sardou obeyed, and began to draw shapes and lines on the paper before him. Suddenly he came to the end of his paper. What was to be done? "Go to the Boulevard St. Michel," rapped Beaumarchais, giving a number; "you will there find the paper you need." Sardou jumped into a cab, and was at the given address in the twinkling of an eye, but alas! to his disappointment there was nothing like a stationer's shop to be found in the house indicated by Beaumarchais. On his return home he again put himself in communication with the spirit. "Return," was the response to his questioning. Back went Sardou, and after making many inquiries he found that there did live a wholesale paper merchant in the house indicated. To buy the necessary quantity of paper, return home and seat himself once more, pencil in hand, was but the work of a few minutes, and then he began involuntarily, and without any impulse of his own, to draw the most extraordinary and fantastic palaces, without doors, and of an unknown style of architecture, as the spirit-home of Mozart. The drawing was so extraordinary and so marvelously well done, that Sardou was anxious to have it engraved, but no engraver could be found in Paris who would undertake it, so complex and subtle were the lines, and in such a grand chaos of confusion, although forming an artistic unity. The spirit of Beaumarchais rapped Sardou out of his dilemma by instructing him to begin the sketch over again, but this time on lithographic paper. Sardou did the work within the space of a few minutes, and it is this marvelous lithograph known as "La Maison de Mozart," which the brother of the author of Dora, the well-known bookseller of Brussels, sells to a few privileged amateurs.

Cremation.

The practice of cremation steadily continues to gain ground in the eastern as well as the western continent. Already it is common in Italy, France, Spain and the majority of the smaller foreign countries as well as the larger. A dozen or so crematories have been opened within the last year, and at least double that number are in process of construction.

In some European countries, Italy, for instance, there is scarcely a city without one of these societies. When a society is once formed it is only a matter of time before a crematory is built.

When the New York Crematory Society was organized in 1881, there only were four crematories in existence, one at Washington, Pa., and three in Europe. In different parts of Europe to-day there are over twenty-two crematories. London, Paris, Copenhagen, Florence, Venice, Dresden, Brussels, Rome and many other smaller towns all boast of their crematories. Another country in which the form finds favor is Germany. During the last year over twenty-five thousand signatures appeared on a petition laid before the Reichstag.

Public interest has long been awakened in France and England. There is about to be erected in France a handsome and commodious crematory, and an eminent physician in his lecture estimates that it will be able to consume about five thousand bodies annually. This is about the average number of deaths in the hospitals of Paris during the year. The bill which provides for the cremation of the dead has already passed the Chamber of Deputies and is now before the Senate, and there is no doubt but what it will become a law.

A favorable change toward this method has taken place lately in England, and the leaders of the reform, like Sir Henry Thompson and several other well-known Englishmen, who are strong and enthusiastic supporters of cremation, think that it is only a matter of time when the reform will be generally adopted.

At the present time there are about twenty societies in the United States, and all of them have put their principle into practice, and have erected large and spacious crematories. There are institutions at Pittsburgh, Washington, Pa.; Buffalo, Cincinnati, Detroit and Lancaster. Others are being erected at Davenport, Ia.; Philadelphia, Baltimore and San Antonio. The Fresh Pond institution was opened for the public about two years ago. In that time there have been cremated over one hundred and fifty bodies, and there are about a dozen applications on hand at the present time.—New York Press.

A Card to Spiritual Societies.

Realizing that the public mind is filled with earnest inquiry concerning the spirit-world and its inhabitants, the guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer have decided to lecture upon subjects pertaining to the "Other Life" during their course of public instruction next season.

Questions from the audience upon the above and humanitarian themes will also be considered.

Societies wishing to engage the services of Miss Shelhamer for their platforms during the season of '88 and '89 will do well to address her at an early date, in care BANNER OF LIGHT office.

MANUAL OF PSYCHOMETRY:

BY JOSEPH RODES BUCHANAN, M. D.

Author of "Anthropology," "Therapeutic Sarcognomy" and "Moral Education"—Professor of Physiology at Institutes of Medicine in four Medical Colleges successively, from 1845 to 1881—and for five years Dean of the Eclectic Medical Institute, the parent school of American Medical Eclecticism—Discoverer of the Impressibility of the brain—of Psychometry and of Sarcognomy.

APPENDIX.

Prophecy of Cazotte—Frequency of Prevision—Destiny of the Young.

The author, in his preface and introduction, says: "This volume has been prepared to fulfill the promise recently made to the public of a MANUAL OF PSYCHOMETRY—a work to introduce the subject to the general reader—not an elaborate memoir for scientists, which need not be offered until it is called for. As a science and philosophy, Psychometry shows the nature, the scope, and the modus operandi of those divine powers in man, and the anatomical mechanism through which they are manifested, while as an art it shows the method of utilizing these psychic faculties in the investigation of character, disease, physiology, biography, history, paleontology, philosophy, anthropology, medicine, geology, astronomy, theology and supernal life and destiny. Granting, as this volume will show, that Psychometry gives us the command of all these sciences, it is apparent that the introduction of Psychometry must prove the dawn of a new era in science, philosophy and social progress, more important as to human enlightenment and elevation than all the arts and sciences heretofore known to the skillful and learned."

FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM.

BY WARREN CHASE.

A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE," AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS

The World's Child,

WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work.

Translated from the German by

FRANZ HARTMANN, M. D.

The plates of the Secret Symbols, twenty-seven in number, have been colored by hand, exactly duplicating the originals with Dr. Hartmann secured during his researches an ong ancient MSS. and occult works in Germany.

Prof. Elliot Coues, F. T. S., writes in reference to the work as follows: "The publication is timely, and cannot fail to attract and entertain many persons who seek the symbols of eternal verities in these mysterious paths. Whether or not the Rosicrucians ever existed as an actual secret confraternity, is, as you know, an open question with the public; and those who are best entitled to speak with authority are significantly silent in this particular. But no competent occultist or mystic has any doubts, or will ever fully divulge the esoteric facts in the case. The volume before me is handsomely gotten up, showing both taste and enterprise on the part of the publishers; and Dr. Hartmann has already won enviable spurs in the literature of occultism, which he is, from his connection with the Indian Branch of the Theosophical Society, well fitted to adorn."

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held March 6th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! our dear Father of Love and Light, we pray that the day be not long distant when every heart will be illuminated by thy grand refulgence, and every soul be uplifted with the knowledge of immortal life. We behold the shadows that press upon humanity, and realize the carking care and the bitter experiences that will come to the heart; and oh! we pray that the time be soon at hand when each soul shall be strengthened and made to feel that these experiences are only sent for the ripening out of the inner powers of existence. May all those who are weary and sad be comforted by thy eternal word; may our fellow-beings be uplifted, strengthened and made to endure; may thy blessed spiritual light be showered upon mankind through thy ministering angels until every heart shall rejoice and sing a song of praise to thee who doeth all things well. We ask the benediction and the assisting love of the angel world.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By J. R. Ames.] Are the spiritual and natural worlds in mutual contact, or interblended with each other, as taught by Swedenborg? or is the spiritual world afar off, as taught by Andrew Jackson Davis?

ANS.—Although there may be a discrepancy between the statements made concerning the spiritual world, on the part of these two seers, yet one who understands the matter will perceive that both are correct. The spirit-world blends and interblends with this physical universe of yours, inasmuch as the physical universe is constantly throwing off emanations and attenuated particles, which are utilized by the great forces of nature in providing material or substance, so to speak, for the counterpart or spiritual world, which belongs to this planet.

Every planet, we understand, has its spiritual counterpart, just as every human being in the physical world has its spiritual or other self, or double. In this sense, therefore, the spirit-world blends and interblends with the physical atmosphere, and it is peopled by human beings who, having cast off the material flesh, still have found themselves endowed with all the faculty, all the mental ability, all the form and the power of expression, which belonged to them in their previous state, and who perceive that they are still men and women, placed in this spiritual atmosphere to reap an experience and to lead a life. In the spirit-world there are countries, states and localities, just as you have them here on the physical planet, corresponding somewhat to the same states, localities and countries with which you are familiar, yet presenting a more spiritualized, perfect appearance than do those of the mundane sphere.

Those states of spirit-life have their advantages and their uses for the human beings who come in contact with them, and these intelligent individuals find all that is necessary for their unfoldment and growth, provided they are far-seeing enough to take advantage of what is provided for them. If they are of the earth earthy, thinking and caring more for the physical, such as is possessed and experienced by the lower grades of undeveloped mortals, then they will not realize, see, or understand the higher advantages for their unfoldment and progression which this spirit-world affords, nor can they do so until they cast off the cramping chains and shackles that, through the law of association and of psychology, hold them down to the mortal sphere of existence.

So far, then, we are safe in assuming that Swedenborg, the seer, was very correct in his ideas concerning the nearness and the interblending of the spirit-spheres with those of earth, although it was not possible for the man, with his limited understanding, as far as physical life is concerned, and with his preconceived opinions and ideas, to give a full and perfect description and expression of these spirit conditions and localities. But we consider that he did very well—remarkably so for his times—and you may find a great deal of truth and correct knowledge concerning the immortal states from the writings of that seer.

Again, our more modern seers have told you of spiritual worlds and realms in space, peopled by intelligences who have passed through the experiences and contacts of mortal life, and that these worlds and realms are far from this planet earth. And this is also true; for we find that space is filled with spiritual worlds, even as it is with physical planets, and that the spirit of man, advancing as it ever must do, expansive as it is by nature, linked with the divine as it is through its soul-force and power, must be afforded other conditions, other localities and other grades of advancement than it can possibly be, if forever, through eternity, it be confined to one world or one position in space; consequently, we say, there are worlds upon worlds peopled by spirit-intelligences, each world affording such opportunities for the progression and expansion of the human spirit, that it may, in time, reap all the experiences necessary to it through that world, all that it can possibly find in connection with that sphere, and be able to pass on to higher worlds and other grades of unfoldment or experience in the great universe of spiritual space.

Q.—[By same.] What is the atmosphere of the spirit-world? Is it ether, or pure hydrogen?

A.—The atmosphere of the spirit-world corresponds in a measure to the atmosphere of this world—that is, the spirit-world of which Swedenborg has spoken as blending and interblending with this physical life of the planet earth. The elements that are found in this atmosphere may be found in the atmosphere of that other world, only perhaps in a more refined state than you can understand with your present experience in scientific law. As the spirit advances through the various gradations of life to the higher conditions of spirit-existence, coming in contact with other worlds beyond this of earth and its spirit-counterpart, he finds the atmosphere becoming more ethereal-ized, less dense in character, composed of a smaller number of elements, so to speak, than have been those atmospheres with which he has been familiar in the past.

True, some of your scientists affirm that all things in the universe can eventually be reduced into one great primal element. This we also believe, but that this cannot be so reduced as to be understandable to the mortal nature of man, in contact with this physical universe; yet, in the planets beyond, and in those spirit-worlds that are more perfected than this with which you are familiar at the present time, we may perhaps find that the elements have been reduced, and that only one grand primal element remains, which not only affords a rarefied atmosphere, lighter than the ether of which you have known and which your scientists have tried to explain and to understand, but also affords that great supernal light which, while it illuminates a world and illuminates humanity at the same time, uplifts, strengthens and vitalizes all forms of existence.

Q.—[By same.] What is the nature of classification of people in spirit-life? That is, do spirits who lived on the earth at different times or centuries, such as Alcibiades, Homer, Washington, Bacon, William of Normandy, Abraham Lincoln, Gen. Grant and others have easy access to each other?

A.—The celebrities of whom the question speaks, as well as thousands of others known to history, have, we believe, all been brought forward upon the plane of human life on earth for a special work and a special experience. The times of each one demanded just such a character as that one expressed in his contact, at that age, with the living, breathing world of physical life. Having reaped his experience, sung his songs, or fought his battles, read his moral essays, or given to the world just that degree of knowledge and inspiration which he felt burning within him, having gained all the discipline that was possible from such a career, and having left the world and humanity vitally impressed by his presence and his labor, the poet, the soldier, the sage or the conqueror has passed on to higher grades of unfoldment, to grander locations in space, to more lofty endeavors and achievements than he possessed or experienced on earth.

Do we believe, friends, that any one of these noted characters is confined to a limited position in space, unable to send out his thought and his grand concentrative will toward any other portion in space or any other human being? Certainly not. As the spirit of man advances age after age it gains in power and increases in knowledge, or else it would not advance, but would stand still, remain tethered to old conditions. Believing, then, that such celebrities as those spoken of by the questioner are advancing spirits, they must be increasing in knowledge year after year, gaining in power and expanding in will-force. If this be so, they must utilize their will-force in good works, in grand endeavors, and they may send forth that will in diverse ways. If it be necessary for one of these minds to come in contact with any other of those mentioned, he may do so by the exercise of his will, and come into intelligent communication with that other mind. Then the questioner may ask: "You speak of other worlds, and yet tell us that spirits pass on from one world to another in the great spiritual universe of space; if this be so, may not Homer, the poet, have advanced into one spirit-world in space, and may not Grant, the soldier, still live within the limits of that spirit-world which is the counterpart of this planet? If this be a fact, how is it possible for Grant to come into communication or en rapport with Homer in his far-off world if he desires so to do?" This would be a question naturally growing out of our considerations this afternoon. So far as the external condition remains, undoubtedly Grant, who has his family ties on earth, is attracted to this mundane plane of existence by many associations, and through the laws of psychological effect will not be able to project himself personally to that other world in space, if it be there that Homer resides; yet if Grant in his celestial life can possiby come into such direct sympathy with Homer, the poetical and valorous soul, as to demand his presence and require his influence, then the great law of spiritual affinity will come into operation, and in soul-life—in spirit-power—the two will be drawn near to each other. Homer himself may return from his far-off world and enter into close communication with the spirit of Grant, who is even yet, perhaps, in your midst, using his influence and exercising his magnetism upon this nation in such ways as he feels may be beneficial for its people; just as the spirit who has passed out of your homes and out of the physical limitations of matter may return to your firesides, bringing you sweet consolations and uplifting influences, though his home is not visible to your mortal sight.

What we wish to convey is this: that the advancing spirit of man is not tethered to positive limitations; it is forever growing, ever stepping onward, reaching out, gaining power and exercising wisdom; consequently two souls that are in sympathy may be drawn together, and by-and-bye, through the evolutions of time and experience, even the soul that is confined to one condition of spirit-life may reach out, arise, and pass onward to higher and grander states, there to meet with those whom he admires, loves, and seeks to understand.

Q.—[By C. A. Whitaker.] Of what is the spirit body composed?

A.—The spirit body is composed of elements and combinations similar, in a degree, to the composition of your material bodies, only these elements are more refined, less weighted by material substances, not as crude as are the particles and the various organic elements which are confined within your physical frames. These bodies of yours are sending out emanations of a refined character. We do not mean emanations of effete matter, or refer to the processes of waste that are constantly going on in physical structures; those belong to the earth earthy, and have no part in the spiritual atmosphere of inner beings. But alongside of these there are emanations of a more refined nature, imperceptible to the external sense of man, yet made plainly visible to the spiritual perception.

By-and-bye science may discover some means by which these may be clearly exposed to your external gaze, and may perhaps construct some apparatus so delicate that it will reveal to you not only these emanations of a spiritual character from your own lives, but also the great, moving, teeming world of spirit that is playing its part and doing its work right in your midst. These emanations, magnetic in quality, refined in character, are yet substantial by nature, containing within themselves the various elements which belong to the atmosphere and to the operations of life, and of these are formed your spirit bodies. If the man is gross and crude on earth, the emanations from his life will be of a coarse, dark character, more dense and opaque than are those which arise from a more spiritualized, sensitive, delicate human being, whose aspirations are pure and good, and whose habits of life correspond; but whatever they prove to be, they will enter into the composition of the spirit body by-and-bye, to be taken up by the spirit parting from physical life, and it remains with that individual himself whether his body becomes refined, or whether it presents a reverse appearance.

Q.—[By T. Choinski, Marche, Ark.] Can one who has knowingly destroyed the happiness of another in this life, rise to a high state of peace and joy in spirit-life while his victim in this life continues to suffer from his acts?

A.—Certainly not. One who has knowingly destroyed the happiness and peace of mind of a human being must be very unlovely in character, and will need to pass through a long series of unfoldments or processes of refinement before he can arise to a condition of peace and happiness. He may pretend that he is satisfied with himself, assume a defiant appearance, and make the world believe that he is contented in his mind, but such cannot possibly be the case. If one is so morally obtuse, so imperfectly developed as to rejoice in his sin, in the injury that he has inflicted, then must his spirit be one of turbulence and restlessness, unhappy in the extreme, although he may not understand the source of his uneasiness.

Such a spirit will remain in contact with physical life and its more gross conditions until he has thrown off, at least to a degree, his moral obtuseness and spiritual ignorance. When he begins to perceive his real condition, then will he begin to realize pain and suffering because of the wrong he has committed; and while a victim of his remains unhappy and disturbed through his acts, will that spirit also continue in an unhappy state.

Naturally he will be attracted to the vicinity of his victim, through the law of cause and effect, even though he desires to place the poles between them. And why is this? Because the suffering will induce in the mind of the victim the thought of him who has destroyed his peace. This thought will attract the wrong-doer; it will bring his thought out toward the one he has injured, and consequently he will find himself irresistibly drawn into that atmosphere as into a vortex. Perceiving the unhappiness of his fellow-being, realizing how it has been produced by his own agency, this spirit cannot but suffer; and as he advances in moral sight and energy, his suffering will become more keen, because his sensibilities are refining, and he will realize more fully the wrong he has done; therefore, in order to gain peace of mind for himself, the spirit must go to work and do his best to overcome the evil he has committed; he must try to assist the man he has wronged, and do all in his power to atone for his sin; and perhaps in this way he will in a measure forget self, and in forgetting self in work for others, begin to first find a gleam of happiness and peace; but never until his victim has outgrown the conditions of misery and has arisen to a state of perfect happiness and forgiveness will the wrong-doer find the happiness which produces perfect satisfaction in the mind and a consciousness of peace and tranquility.

Q.—[By Dr. H. J. Sweny.] What is the law of heredity in the spirit-world?

A.—The law of heredity belongs essentially, perhaps, as understood, to external life, and yet it exists and operates in every world and condition of life. The law of heredity is true to itself, on earth or in the spirit, and if a human being is started right in its first pilgrimage in the world of external life, then may that human being transmit to its offspring such high and noble qualities as will round them out in spiritual culture, mental power and physical beauty. But you ask: "Is the law of heredity to follow one through all the gradations of existence, and make its power felt?" To an extent, yes; although closely belonging, in its operations, most essentially to physical life, it may be so far overcome by the operations of higher laws as to at last loosen its hold upon human life in the far-off ages of progression and unfoldment. A person who, through the law of heredity and by adverse conditions on earth, may have developed a very unlovely character, will have to suffer in the spirit-world because of this; he will have to pass through many experiences and come under the operation of higher laws belonging to the spirit-life before he can work out from those cramping, confining conditions which may have come to him in a measure, not altogether, through the chains transmitted to him by those who preceded him in existence.

This law of heredity is one that might challenge our thought for hours; it is far-reaching in its results, affecting mortals and spirits also; but when we come to realize the spiritual nature of man, and understand how the will-power belonging to each individual may be set in operation, not only to devise ways and means for personal improvement, but to subject other laws to its own force, then may we understand how an unfolding spirit may crush the effects of this outward law under his will, and rise superior to them, to such an extent as to grow out in thought, in knowledge, in aspiration and power, and eventually become a perfected soul.

Q.—[By M. A. P.] Is the world better to-day than it was a hundred years ago?

A.—We think so. It may not seem so to our friends on earth, because to-day humanity learns much of the evil, the sorrow, the pain, the injustice, the oppression and the wrongs that are pressing upon humanity. One hundred years ago this was not understood and known; you had not the facilities for transmitting intelligence from country to country, or even from town to town, that you have in the present generation; those who lived a score of miles from each other knew nothing of their neighbors' whereabouts, while to-day those who live across the ocean can understand, within a few hours, what is passing in the midst of their neighbors or on a far-off shore; consequently news travels rapidly; there are no secrets, or very few of them, from humanity at the present time.

In this respect, it seems as though the world was becoming degenerate, as though mankind was growing backward instead of developing in moral and spiritual beauty of character. We affirm that the world is better; it is wiser; it understands more of itself and of the possibilities of humanity than it ever did before. Human ingenuity is taxed to the utmost to provide for the unfolding wants of the people; human invention is constantly at work devising new schemes and new appliances for promoting the elevation and ministering to the comfort of mankind. To-day the poor man is not contented with a crust, nor should he be, nor is he willing that his family should dwell in a hovel, with bare floors and the discomforts that have been known in past ages; and yet what to-day are called the barest necessities of life for the human race, were a century or two ago looked upon as luxuries by those who were influential, high in power and possessed of means.

Then, we say, the world is growing, humanity is better provided for, and is wiser and happier than it could have been in the past. It does not yet realize its advantages, because it feels pressing within it so many more needs and demands than its forefathers knew; but the time is coming when you will realize and understand just how the world has grown, how humanity has advanced, and be ready and willing to believe that as we have progressed, so may we take heart of grace and courage for the future, to believe we shall advance still further, to an immeasurable extent; we know not what we may be in time to come.

Explanatory Remarks by Spirit Chairman.

We wish to thank the kind friend who brought the flowers to our Circle-Room, and to voice the gratitude of the spirits who scent the fragrance, and accept it into their lives. Whatever is sweet and beautiful in life, be it the color of a rose or the fragrance of a flower, appeals to the love of the beautiful in human hearts, and thus far becomes an educational process, instructing and benefiting such lives. Spirits realize this, and are grateful for the floral expressions of love and sympathy which their mortal friends send out to them.

We would also say to that friend that the bright spirits who have undertaken a work intend to pursue their efforts, and to outwork the best results they possibly can during the coming time. There may, now and then, seem to be shadows falling around and discouragements arising, but such are expected on the spirit-side. Those who have it in charge will do their best, asking only that the highest aspirations and the strongest desires for spiritual helpfulness will go out in the future as they have done in the past from the friends on earth.

We would also add, before we close, that there is a spirit present much exercised over the material affairs of a lady in the audience. This lady hardly realized why she came here this afternoon, but we are persuaded she was led here by spirit-influences. There are matters connected with her home-life which seem to be unsettled, and being sensitive by nature, the lady absorbs their conditions and is rendered uneasy, uncertain in her movements. The spirit who approaches is a male, rather below middle age, tall of stature and of dark complexion. He holds a very strong attachment for the friend present, and desires her to know he is doing his best to help her out of her difficulties and to brighten her daily life. He brings encouragement and the promise of future help, and also adds that he is satisfied the time is not far distant when those entanglements which seem now so severe will in a measure be removed sufficiently to enable the friends on earth to accomplish something of their desire; also to find more of happiness and peace than they have in the last six months. We think this will be understood; it certainly relieves the spirit, who desires to send an influence of love and good cheer.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held March 16th, 1888.

William Burgess.

My home, when in the earth-life, was in South Boston. My name is William Burgess. My darling sister Hattie, whose home was also there, is with me to-day. Father, mother and Sarah are with us, but not all present at this hour. This is a privilege that we well appreciate. It is not the first nor the twentieth time I have tried to manifest here.

I have many friends yet left in the mortal; some in East Boston, some in Braintree, some in Worcester. They are scattered, you see, in one place and another. I often meet with the loved ones in spirit. It is not because we lack companionship there that we wish to return to earth and come into communication with some one. How many times one and another will say, "Why is it others are able to communicate, and you fail in the attempt?" And the reply comes, "Try, try again."

But a little time since I was conversing with a gentleman who formerly lived in South Boston, and he well remembered me and father also. Morrison was his name.

Oh! mortals, how little you understand the laws of spirit-life! We are governed, and held, and led by spiritual laws, as much as you mortals are by earthly laws, only ours are more perfect than yours can be, for we find imperfection in all the laws of earth.

George Ashworth.

I have tried a number of times to get control here of some one of your instruments, but did n't just know how, I suppose. You may place me in Lowell, Mass. George Ashworth. I have many friends there, and some in your city.

Sarah, I know you have been disappointed when you have looked from time to time so eagerly, and asked why your father did n't write a few lines. And not only you, but others in Worcester, have asked for me, and so have Nellie, Frank and Elizabeth, and also in Methuen, Mary and Osgood. I suppose I can't call all the names, or I should have to be up all night with you. I also drift across the water, as there was my home formerly.

Sarah, you can't know in this life how much happiness it gave me when you came to the hospital.

Oh! no. I did n't suffer any in passing over. Mother is here with me, and Zachariah, and James, and Mary too, but we can't all talk. You know, children, it was n't father's way to talk very much when in the mortal, but we find we feel a bit different when we are in the other body. I am happy. I would not come back to stay if I could by turning my hand.

I hope this will reach Worcester, and the rest of the children. I want them to know, and Sagar to know that I can talk a little more than I could when in the body. Elizabeth has said, a good many times, "Well, father, you find now you have a desire to talk." I would like Elizabeth to know that I went to see Polly and Charles. They do n't remember all that was said to them there—but it 's all right.

Sarah, your uncle James is here with me. He says, "Well, well, George, you write, and it 'll do just as well as if we said anything." Zachariah, when he can get time, is going to write quite a long letter to the girls, and the boys too. I would like to ask Frank if he 's seen Florida yet. I hardly think he has; but there 's time enough.

Enos Wheeler.

You may place me in Lowell. My name is Enos Wheeler. Annie Eliza, I want you to know, in your own soul, that the darling child Nellie is with me. I have a perfect body now, and, more than that, the soldier boys in blue and those in gray shake hands together. George Hulse and Seward ask me to say that they will in time send a message to Lester. I am happy, Annie, only waiting for one more to join the happy number. The home is building every day for you, dear one, and I fully realize, when I come to earth, all the trials you have had and the wrongs that have been heaped upon your poor shoulders; but, thank God, you have n't been without friends, and to-day I speak with all the interest possible I can bring to you, that you are not alone. Long weary days and nights have come to you since they said, "Enos is dead!" No, thank God, I am not dead, neither have I seen a dead person yet. We are more alive to every sense and touch and look than we could be when we dwelt in the mortal.

The dark cloud that came to you the angels had somewhat to do to help it disappear, and to the one that helped to bring it into your pathway it is coming back tenfold to-day, and the angel-workers are working for you, dear wife. Let me say it again—dear wife—for such you are to me. Nellie, the angel-child, is with me, growing on beautifully in spirit-life, taken from all earthly wrongs and temptations. She will be given back to you in heaven, and not one link will be left out of the chain, as mother—God bless her!—often says.

I come to you many times in the stilly hours of the night. Many times have I placed my hand gently upon your forehead; and when troubles came through another, and the sufferings were great, I was there. You remember why I placed two fingers on you. You will understand, Annie Eliza, for I am with you often, and there will something come to you that will bring brighter spots, even while you dwell in the mortal. Study with the doctor, for it is all right so far, and think that I am not far from you, nor little Nellie, the darling child.

Uncle John Tarbox.

I lived in Worcester, Mass. My name is John Tarbox—or "Uncle John," as they called me more familiarly. I want them to know they do n't get up any kind of a meeting but what uncle John is there. I want to thank brother Hildreth first, then I want to thank the sister who said so many kind words over the old form that had walked in the mortal four-score years. The loved wife and children were taken away in early life, but I always felt it was right, for they were helping me to build the home in spirit-life.

Now this is no new thing to me to come into your meeting, for I have been here a good many times in spirit, and before I left the mortal I used to think a great many times I was learning a good deal on this side; but oh! I had only got so I could spell in two syllables; still it helped me so much that I did n't have to begin at the a b abs.

I am happy; and I do say, Mr. Chairman, that I feel at home here. I used to try in every way I could to help the cause along. THE BANNER! long may it wave, and in every sense of the word be a light to the ignorant and lift them above the clouds of error.

I know that old Worcester won't forget uncle John. I have many friends there, dear friends that would warmly clasp hold of my hand—not just touch the fingers. When I shook hands I wanted a good hold.

I have relatives in Springfield—some very few close relatives are left. William often wonders why it is they have not heard from me, when, as he says, "he was such a rigid Spiritualist." Well, there aint much need of that adjective. I find that what I did learn here has helped me very much indeed.

Brother Fred Hildreth, I am with you in every good work you undertake. When you gather together in the old hall, just think that uncle John is there too. Sarah is with me, and many friends that were not relatives. Bright angel forms I saw around me, and friends I used to know came with happy smiles to greet me as in the long ago.

Adam Cogswell.

You may place me as Adam Cogswell, of Methuen, Mass. I feel, as I start out, that I have a great deal to say, but presume I may do it up pretty quick. I have never been able to control in this way, yet there must be a first time for everything. I would like to say to Clara, to Edmond, and also to William Wentworth, that I was present and heard the very words expressed when it was said to Clara: "Ed had heard from those angel children." I hardly think he 'd like me to put it down on paper that I said, "If you 'd rather hear from the devil than from me, it is all right, just as you choose." I know, for I have tested it now, and if we bring you evil, you may place it to the credit of the devil; for devil, as I understand it, means evil.

You 'll excuse me, Mr. Chairman, but when I was in the flesh I had to speak just what came along. I find, now, it is the life you live here that builds the home there, so I have come to the conclusion, better do right. I would say to Bert, do n't always express your thoughts. Now if Clara wishes to come into communication with me, do n't say one word, but let her act her own free will.

[Aside to Georgie the spirit said:] Wait a minute, and Uncle Adam will tell 'em, darling, that you and Mamie are here beside me—but little children.

I knew, Clara, when Augustus was there. I understand fully what was the business, and more than that, I am glad you have changed a little, and placed the papers into another one's hands, thinking perhaps they will push the matter a little stronger.

Augustus Smith.

I, too, come from the spirit-world to-day over-anxious to make my voice heard. My home was in Lynn, Mass., and I am Augustus Smith. I would like Dora to know I have gained power enough to send a few lines, and father will be happier when he learns that his boy can send a cheering word to him. Mother is here, and also Aunt Sarah. Father often has thought whether I suffered in passing over. No, father, I realized no suffering in passing out.

I well understand, Dora, where you have been visiting recently. You had to keep your lips shut pretty closely, because they 'd have called you rather insane if you had talked of Gussie being able to come into communication with you. It is true, nevertheless, whatever mortals may say to you. Father, learn a little more; it will do you no harm.

Dora, you feel sometimes a little despondent; many thoughts flit into your mind, and often you ask: "Will I find you there when I go?" Yes; before the angel-world we shall meet together. It is like the beautiful crystal river—a group on one side and on the other; we can almost clasp hands together. In a little while we shall be able to clasp hands, not only for a day, week or month, but forever. Thank God, there is a home beyond the veil that knows no parting, dear wife, for in heaven we shall be together. To others I would say that I do live and have power to come into communication with them.

Isabel Matoon.

You may place me in Springfield, Mass. Isabel Matoon. I have loved ones there, some in Holden, Mass., some in Methuen, also in New York, in Clinton and in Marlboro'.

Little Belle, as we usually called her, is with me. She often speaks of cousin Jackson. Jeanette, there is only a veil between you and me. I understand full well in the last few months all the trials that have come to you, and all the worriment; for I find as I have visited you in your little home that you have often said: "Isabel and Margaret, why can you not help us when we need you so much?" Dear sister, how little you understand; how often we come, and how eagerly we send out strength to help you bear life's burdens, which are many.

William is here, also John and Dawson. We are happy in our spirit-home. We sit together, we converse, we go wherever the spirit dictates; and how beautiful it is to feel the freedom! The flowers are beautiful and the music is sweet. Belle says I will often play the music to you, for you know that in her infancy it was music she loved. And now, as the family has been made whole, we enjoy ourselves together.

Sometime, dear ones, we will send a message more direct to the others.

Henrietta, learn a little this side; do n't think for a moment we are so far away that we do n't understand the trials you have to endure, especially through Eleanor's being so sick. We have visited you often, and many times found you a little despondent, but when trials come so thick and fast, look a little higher, for God will bring all things right in his own good time.

I often visit the home, but strangers have come to fill the places we have left. Even the fountain in front of the house needs care. I see, as William often says, "Isabel, things do not look as they did when we were there." No, for they have changed hands. But our home beyond the veil is where no such changing will come. It is the beautiful mansion Father God has given his children, and as I understand now, we are all God's children, and we should love, not fear him.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

IMOGENE, TO IKE AND IDA.

I take great pleasure in verifying the communication in the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 21st, viz., "IMOGENE, TO IKE AND ADA." For fifteen long years have I watched and hoped that the next BANNER might contain a communication from some of my friends. And when, some four weeks ago, I saw that the above had been given (through the mediumship of Mrs. Smith), I felt that my longing had been sensed in the spirit-land at last. "Imogene" has been coming to me through various sources in all parts of the United States for fifteen years. The name "Ada," as given, is my dear wife; "Mary" is my spirit-sister; "Gussie" is my wife's sister, who passed away before her sister Ada was born; "Alice" I cannot recognize at present writing. "Imogene" says my father will try to come also.

This promise of my father has, I see, already been fulfilled; for in week before last's BANNER is a message announced from "ROBERT WITHERS," which is my father's full name, and I think surely must be for me, as I am the only one in our family that has sought for communion with the loved ones on the other side, as all of my father's and mother's family are strictly Orthodox.

It is true, as "Imogene" says, that she has been my guardian spirit for some years, and by her patient endeavors has, I hope, succeeded in changing the course of my life very materially. As to her having materialized many times and appeared to my wife and I, many of my New York City friends will readily testify, and even sent tokens of various kinds to me by friends of mine who were attending circles for the first time, when the medium could not possibly know they were acquainted with me.

But I must not make my letter too long. I only wished to verify the message given, and to thank Mrs. Smith and her controls, and THE BANNER, for the opportunity given "Imogene" and my dear father to speak to me through the Banner Circle.

Yours for truth, I. G. WITHERS.

132 East 29th street, New York.

CAPT. ISAAC HAMILTON.

I noticed in the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 7th a communication from the late CAPT. ISAAC HAMILTON, through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith. He was my husband's brother, and hailed from Portland, Me., and I fully recognize that the message must have been given by the spirit of the Captain, as it is so much like him.

MRS. CAROLINE M. HAMILTON.

Vinal Haven, Me., 1888.

Late April Magazines.

JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN AKADEME.—"Our National Idea" is the subject of an essay that, with a report of a conversation following its reading at the March meeting, occupies the larger part of the April number. The "idea" is defined to consist of liberty and equality. Conflicts arising from a disposition to adopt license instead of liberty, are considered by the author, Miss L. M. Fuller, as means for the education of the people. Personal reminiscences of A. Bronson Alcott are related by Mrs. M. D. Wolcott. Newark, N. J.: Alexander Wilder, editor, 565 Orange street.

THE WOMAN'S MAGAZINE.—A very beautiful engraving, given as a frontispiece, illustrates a poem, "A Cluster of Easter Lilies," by the editor, Mrs. E. T. Housh. The three departments: General Articles, Woman's Work and Home, are well filled with articles the tenor of which is radically reformatory and progressive. Brattleboro', Vt.: F. E. Housh & Co.

HORTICULTURAL ART JOURNAL.—Editorially the subject of "Trusts" is considered. Five pages of lithographs of fruits and flowers are given, showing them in their natural colors and sizes. Rochester, N. Y.: Stecher Lith. Co.

"French Ghosts."

In the April number of Murray's Magazine, London, Eng., Ashton Brand devotes eight pages to an article captioned as above, in which the traditions and "folk lore" of the Gallic land are interestingly treated of.

"Every country [says this writer] has its peculiar stories of supernatural visitations, usually termed superstitions, and ridiculed by the educated classes. Why, however, should we be ashamed of a half-conscious admission that there may be something mysteriously real in the ghostly traditions found everywhere, and believed by all races of men, however different in nature and training?

In France, notwithstanding the national brightness of humor, and the practical, prosaic, common-sense very generally found here in these days amongst the lower classes, tales are yet current, as strange as any of the weird legends of the Scotch Highlanders or Irish peasantry."

After speaking of various orders of beings supposed to infest the landes, to threaten the evening wayfarer, he says such pilgrim, according to belief, "must especially beware of the 'mois noir,' or 'black month'—November—when the spirits of the dead are supposed to be as numerous in the air as the dead leaves in the byways. On the night of the Feast of All Souls (November 2d) the Bretons lay the table and light the fire, that the poor souls who leave the cold churchyard to visit their former homes may be warmed and comforted."

Most of the tales cited by this writer have the religious cast strongly noticeable in Catholic countries, but the following deal entirely with present or recent transactions:

"The strangest mystery of actual present occurrence is that belonging to the presbytère or rectory of St. Symphorien, not far from Avranches. Here, for several generations, strange noises have been heard, to which no amount of careful investigation has ever been able to assign a natural cause. Footsteps run up and down the passages and stairs, and no one is seen. When the present Curé, like his predecessors, is sitting in his private room reading or writing, he hears some one running along the passage, and coming to the door, which then opens, the steps quickly crossing the room to his side, when he has the particularly disagreeable sensation of an invisible being standing near him. Nothing is said or done, the steps recede, and the door closes.

The same strange incidents are noted in the life of the Curé d'Ars, a contemporary humble village priest, whose extraordinary virtues were known far beyond the surrounding country, and finally so celebrated that it became the fashion for the fine gentlemen and fair ladies of the Second Empire to go to Ars in order to seek his counsel in their difficulties. Crowds of visitors from all parts of France besieged the poor presbytère and rude village church to obtain an interview, if only for a few minutes; and all left him wondering at the wisdom and extraordinary spiritual lights possessed by the simplest and humblest of men, who led a life of absolute poverty, denying himself all comforts, and even necessaries, to give to those in need. But here again were strange visitations, known to all around. The windows and doors of the presbytère were violently shaken, strange sounds were heard, and it is even reported that in the morning there were signs of a personal struggle with unknown powers. But of this the Curé never spoke, only answering inquiries by saying:

'Yes, they were very noisy last night.'

Who, no one dared to ask. . . . . .

Before concluding this series we must relate one of an incident which, according to our appreciation, though not the most terrifying, is yet the most extraordinary and inexplicable of all; having occurred in our own time to a gentleman well known in the scientific world of Paris, whom we have ourselves met in society, and whose veracity is unimpeachable; the late M. B——y, one of the editors of the 'Annales Scientifiques,' a man then in the prime of life, constantly engaged in scientific research, and most unlikely, from his pursuits and frame of mind, to give way to undue credulity or freaks of imagination. The story—which he was not willing to relate—was, however, told by himself to a mutual friend, through whom it became known to the writer of these pages.

M. B——y stated that he had another friend, who from boyhood had been dear to him as a brother, and who went to Algeria as a colonist, in the more inland part of the country. M. B——y had been for some time without news of him, but felt no anxiety, and was not particularly thinking of him, when one night, while sitting writing in his private room, to his joyful surprise he saw the traveler come in, wearing a strange dress, which was unfamiliar to him. He started up and hastened to meet the visitor, heartily extending his hands, when to his astonishment he drew back, saying:

'Do not touch me; I am dead' ('Ne me touchez pas—je suis mort'); adding that he had come to ask him to prepare his mother for the news, that the shock might not be too sudden.

The whole was so unlike the conventional 'Ghost' that M. B——y, according to his own statement, felt no more fear than if he had seen his friend under the most ordinary circumstances. The apparition then took its place in an arm-chair, opposite to the one occupied by M. B——y, and the two conversed freely as in former times; the one still belonging to this world, receiving the assurance of the other that he was 'very happy' (très heureux), but that he was not permitted to say more. The strange visitor then told him that he would come again two days later, at the same hour, and disappeared.

When he found himself alone, the awe and terror which had been absent from the interview, came in full force, and overpowered M. B——y, who tried to brace his nerves by seeking every kind of natural explanation of the wonderful sight he had witnessed. Hallucination—a passing fit of delirium—a delusive dream, everything seemed more satisfactory than the reality. Finally he determined not to cause perhaps needless affliction to his friend's mother, and consequently refrained from writing to her, as he had been requested to do.

When the time came for the apparition to return, he prepared a large fire, placed an arm-chair in readiness for his visitor; then distributed lights in the room, so as to give it festive brilliancy. At the exact hour his friend again stood before him—but grave and sad; mildly but earnestly reproaching him for not having written to his mother, and entreating him to do so without loss of time, or she would hear the sad news too suddenly from other sources. M. B——y promised to atone for the omission, and again the friends conversed; M. B——y remaining perfectly calm and without fear. The visitor then bade him farewell, saying that he should be seen no more on this earth; and as M. B——y gazed he saw him gradually disappear. Again he was seized with intense awe and terror; but this time he did not hesitate to write to his friend's mother, saying that circumstances which had come to his knowledge led him to entertain serious fears as to the safety of her son. Scarcely had the poor mother received this first intimation of danger when the official communication reached her announcing the sad event as having taken place on the very day when M. B——y had first seen his mysterious visitor, and enclosing a photograph representing his friend in the strange dress which had surprised him, and which he found was the one adopted by colonists in that distant part of Algeria."

A man is a great bundle of tools. He is born into this life without the knowledge of how to use them. Education is the process of learning their use, and dangers and troubles are whetstones with which to keep them sharp.—Ex.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From her home, in Strafford, Vt., April 17th, 1888, Mrs. Alvira Roberts, aged 69 years.

On her sixty-ninth birth-day our dear mother has left us and gone to join the loved ones in the bright beyond. For the last twenty years of her life she was an earnest Spiritualist. We know it is well with her arisen soul.

The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

To the Spiritualists of the World!

YOU have been calling for more magnetic life for nearly forty years. The invention of Magnetic Shields places within your reach the most powerful Magnetic Batteries ever constructed, and exactly adapted to all the needs and wants of your physical and spiritual well-being. To magnetize and polarize the body is to intensify and increase all the intellectual and spiritual faculties. All mediums and sensitives should wear Magnetic Shields. The vitalizing and energizing power radiated from these Magnetic Reservoirs of Life will redouble the life potencies and quadruple the spiritualizing entities for every one who wears them. Dr. Thacher's Magnetic Shields excel and transcend all known healing powers and forces, except that coming direct from the world of spirit. All the Spiritualists of the world will read our logic and consult with the Highest Intelligence, they will get assurance which will convince every intelligent investigator. All the knowledge which led up to the perfection of these Shields came from the world of invisible spirit. We are warranted in saying Magnetism is all spirit and an immaterial substance. Spirit is the only substance in the true sense of the word. Spiritualists are too well informed to be misled on this subject. Why not send for our book and read what we have to say of genuine spiritual substance? If you want further proof that we state truth, send $1,00 for a pair of Insoles, or $2,00 for THREE PAIRS.

Please be sensible and investigate. Magnetism will infuse new life into broken down physical bodies. Try it, and be convinced. Our book sent free.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

This Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of "Tooth-Life" and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

THE LIFE. The main object of this little volume is to give to suggestive teaching a recognition and a force (in the domain of religion and morals) greater than dictation has. It announces a system of life. It announces a few primal principles which can hardly be denied by any one, and endeavors to show how, from adherence to those principles, every life will grow into symmetry—into harmony with itself in this life and the great hereafter. It is sent forth to the world by its author and his associates, as the preface indicates, without the hope or possibility of pecuniary profit to them—small fruit of some of the principles it aims to inculcate.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Singing by Mr. J. T. Lillie, Miss Mintie Eakins, accompanist, and an invocation by Mrs. Lillie introduced the morning service of last Sunday, following which Mrs. Lillie's guides spoke in reply to several questions, the first, "If it is a fact, as the poet writes, 'Ever the truth comes uppermost, and ever is justice done,' does justice always come to man?" It is a living truth—right will at last prevail and justice be done, although we may not be always able to comprehend what is called good and what evil. Nature is deliberate and patient, and waits for the infinite purpose to be fulfilled; while mortals are in a hurry for results. You may study the formation of worlds, the growth of the system of suns and planets, through the power at your disposal and spiritual comprehension; you may know in part, but you cannot grasp the infinite. Clergymen of to-day dare not express their views as reasoners. They have a superstitious view and interpretation of the Bible commands. I say this in no bitterness of thought.

Question—"Rev. Mr. Gordon (Baptist) said last Sunday that he believed Spiritualism to be a fact; also that spirits communicate and appear in materialized forms, and that the Bible and eminent ministers and millions of Spiritualists also believe the same; but God, through the Bible, warned him not to have anything to do with them, as they were all demons that returned. Are such statements consistent for any religious teacher who believes in immortality and not annihilation of the human soul to make? Do demons originate with God?"

It states in the Bible, laws were given forth by King Saul that whosoever had anything to do with those who had familiar spirits should be put to death. Afterward in disguise he seeks an interview with the woman at Endor, and calls for Samuel and receives a communication. So we have precept and example; which shall we follow? We find thousands of living witnesses to-day who have held communion with their loved ones. Death destroys none; all have power to return; those who were pure in life and those who were unclean have the same privilege. When first entering spirit-life, they are dependent upon guardians, and they are taught the laws which govern the spirit realm; the law of nature holds them in the new birth. In every mind there is an idol or an ideal fitted to its conception and spiritual understanding of God's word. God's Bible is unbound and unclasped, and chapters are being written on its pages every day. Spiritualists enlarge the Bible instead of discarding it; it is seen and read in every stone and blade of grass, as well as in ancient history. Minds are developing through a revolutionary process, and are free to use their own reasoning faculties in regard to a conception of God.

After considering other questions, Mrs. Lillie improvised a poem, at the conclusion of which Mr. E. W. Emerson made a few remarks and gave a number of recognized proofs of the presence of the spirit-friends of several of the audience.

Evening.—Following the usual preliminary exercises of singing and invocation, the spirit-guide of Mrs. Lillie remarked on questions submitted from the audience, in a manner that could not have failed to convince the skeptic of the presence of an intelligence independent of the medium. A poem closed the services.

Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform next Sunday morning and evening at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—One of the largest audiences of the season gathered last Sunday to listen to the guides of Mr. J. William Fletcher upon the subject announced, viz: "Materialization, its Ultimate under the Guidance of Ancient and Modern Spirits." They spoke of the ages of antiquity when a few of the advanced ones gathered together in spiritual séances to learn the great secret that has pressed upon all thoughtful minds since the world began, viz: "If a man die, shall he live again?" These hierophants through their concentration of power, their entire devotion, their secrecy, and hence freedom from annoying skepticism and ignorant criticism, gained an answer and a manifestation of spiritual power, such as our own time has not yet received.

The history of those ancient nations, of Egypt, of Persia, of Greece and of the Jews, abounded in evidences of spiritual knowledge, obtained through their mediums and oracles.

The Bible history was full of Spiritualism, and if that was taken out, nothing but dry husks remained. The scientist says there is no expression of life without the gathering of certain molecules into organized forms, and argues that where there is no visible form there can be no life, but—said the guides—life exists independent of material forms: it is the spirit that builds up the organism for manifestation and expression on this plane of being. We are all spirits and our bodies are simply materializations, through which we gain our needed experiences of earthly things. Everything that has life, even the blade of grass, has its spirit, and through the progress of the ages all shall evolve to higher and more perfect expression.

It is expected in any science or art that a knowledge of the subject is requisite in order to entitle one to give an opinion or produce a just criticism, but in regard to Spiritualism, this subject of all others the most occult, the most profound, ignorance and prejudice seem to be thought to be the chief requirements to make an acceptable article for the press. The pulpit, which should be foremost in the van of progress, which should teach truth united with justice and love, clings steadily to the shell of past superstitions, and closes the doors through which the only true light can come; and the press, pandering to the ignorance and prejudice of the unenlightened, moves forward in this cause only as compelled by public sentiment and self-interest.

The time has come when Spiritualists should stand up manfully for the right. Their religion—for it is a religion—is as dear to them as is Catholicism to the Catholic or Protestantism to the Protestant, and should and must be respected. Our broad flag covers all sects and phases of thought and belief, and Spiritualists should claim and demand the same protection afforded to all others. This Temple was builded for a grand purpose, and the ultimate of materialization will be that spirits shall walk and talk among us, clothed in material forms, and then will be answered for all the question of the ages. But spiritual things are spiritually discerned, and it is for us to cultivate all those graces of character that shall lift us up to the sphere of the angels, and not expect to drag them down to the level of our materiality.

Next Sunday Mrs. H. S. Lake will speak at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M., subject, "Future of Our Country." The Temple Fraternity School will meet at 12:30 P. M. The services are interesting, and little children are welcome as well as those of older growth. On Wednesday, at 7:30 P. M., the usual sociable will be held in the lower audience-room. All friends cordially invited to all above meetings. Seats free.

W. H. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington Street.—The meetings in this hall last Sunday were attended by a large and intelligent audience, and were opened with a duet finely rendered by Mrs. Nickerson and Miss Guardenier. President J. H. Lewis made a brief opening speech and introduced George W. Tisdale, who spoke in his usual earnest manner upon the "Common World View as Applied to Science, Metaphysics, Morals, Religion and Philosophy," remarking that the standards to which we have looked in the past have been removed and are fast passing away, new ones being set up in their places. The opinions of men are continually changing, and ere the commencement of the twentieth century will be changed entirely. The dispensation of the past was by a written law; that of the present is a law unto itself. To the field of morals we must look for the solution of our problems. Metaphysics is first to explore the great realm of thought, and often goes wrong. Science starts in the opposite direction, but neither can tell you how you look at a thing in the mind. The world rests in consciousness, the inner life is called into action by experience, and we look for the real identity in the character of the man. Mr. Tisdale was listened to with deep interest and heartily applauded. Mrs. Nickerson and Miss Guardenier then sang, by request, "Where the Rippling Streamlets Flow," which brought out a hearty encore.

That well-known and wonderful test medium, Mr. Edgar W. Emerson, was introduced and spoke briefly, saying in substance that there are ever coming from the higher life such inspirations as will lead us to a higher and better life. As the angel-world lifts us up, we must put our own energies to work, and prove that we are heirs of immortality. We want to make spirit control as perfect as possible, sitting, as it were, at the doorway of the future life.

Mr. Emerson's control then gave, in a rapid manner, names of over seventy departed friends in the hour he occupied the platform, all of which were recognized and kindly received. Some of the tests were very remarkable, and must have convinced the most skeptical.

At the evening session Dr. J. L. Paxson spoke briefly upon the advance of thought in matters pertaining to religion and spirituality. Mr. Emerson gave many more tests of spirit presence, closing with the hope that we so develop and round out in character that we may bring to ourselves a knowledge of immortality. The President introduced Mrs. C. W. Bagley, well known to this and other platforms, who said, before giving tests, that we may not realize all the good that has been done by these meetings, and how much nearer we have been brought to the spirit-world by the phenomena presented here from time to time. She gave very fine tests, which were well received and recognized.

This closes the public meetings for this season, to commence again early in October. The Association has engaged some of the best talent in the spiritual work, among whom are Edgar W. Emerson, Joseph D. Stiles, and Mrs. E. O. Kimball—four Sundays each—and no pains will be spared to enable them to present the phenomena which it is the special work of the Association to give those who attend these meetings. The Thursday evening circles will be continued through May, and close with a Strawberry Festival on the last Thursday in the month. All are welcome; some very fine tests are given at each. HEATH.

The First Independent Club.—Monday evening was the occasion of our union meeting, and the hall was filled to repletion with the representatives of the different societies. Dr. Mark Smith made the opening address of welcome, extending fraternal fellowship to those present.

The musical selections by our young friends, Gertie Newton, Gracie Scales and Miss Rhinehart, were listened to with enjoyable interest.

Dr. H. B. Storer responded to his name with apposite remarks, saying that in trying to seek the good in everything, he had found one gem even in Mr. Talmage's sermon.

Mrs. Griffin recited "The Organ-Builder" in such excellent style that she was called upon for a second recital.

The Clinton Quartette (colored) sang with great acceptance, and were recalled a number of times, to the pleasure of all.

Capt. Holmes made a few remarks interspersed with his usual vein of humor. Mr. Edgar W. Emerson being present was called upon, responding with his best wishes for the Club's progress and growth. Mr. Tisdale, under inspiration, made a most pertinent address, citing the progress toward a more liberal stand which Spiritualism has forced the churches to take.

Miss Fay recited a laughable selection, and then the exercises were closed by pointed and well directed sentences from the Grand Master.

The Sewing-Circle made a practical exhibit of its industry. F. V. FULLER, Secretary.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Interesting meetings were held at this place on Sunday last, which were participated in by many of our best mediums and speakers.

The afternoon exercises were opened by Dr. M. V. Thomas with highly appropriate remarks. He was followed by David Brown, Mrs. O. A. Robbins, Mrs. J. F. Dillingham and others, with remarks which were both interesting and instructive. Many tests and proofs of spirit-presence were given through the mediumship of Mrs. Dillingham, Mrs. S. E. Buck, David Brown, Mrs. Robbins and Dr. E. H. Mathews—the latter presenting some wonderfully correct psychometric readings.

In the evening Mrs. Robbins made appropriate remarks, and closed with a number of satisfactory psychometric readings Interesting remarks were made and recognized tests were given through the mediumship of Mrs. S. E. Buck, Mrs. Mina Olmstead, Mr. Fuller and Mr. F. W. Mathews.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of April 24th the members and friends of this Society held its last social meeting for the season at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. Dr. J. D. Moore presided. Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Stafford opened the exercises with a song. Mrs. Lovering read a poem composed for the occasion by Mr. George C. Paine, a member of the Society. Dr. Dean Clarke made an address. Miss Addie Haseltine gave recitations, which were highly appreciated, and Master Willie Boyce a piano selection, which elicited applause. Miss E. A. Viel, of Jersey, Channel Islands, England, spoke in regard to her past labor in the Spiritualists' Society of that place. The remaining exercises consisted of remarks by Dr. J. L. Paxson, Dr. J. D. Moore, and Jacob Edson; vocal duet by Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Stafford; recitation by Dr. Clarke, speaking by Mrs. Mason, under spirit control, and a closing hymn by all present.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1.—The sessions are well attended both by adults and children. The return of Mrs. W. S. Butler, her presence in the school, her earnest speeches, all aid us in our progressive work.——At the last session readings were given by Allie Cummings, Sadie Peters, Mabel Waite, Miss Emma Ireland, Florence Waite, Lillie Wendmuth, Isadore Goldsim; all were pleased with the song rendered by Miss Grace Scales.——Mr. Chas. Fearing, a capable young member of our Association, has recently been elected to the Assistant Conductorship. REPORTER.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—Dr. George A. Fuller spoke in this place Sunday, April 22d, in the Court of Appeals Room. The Eagle says of him: "Dr. Fuller is young, handsome and talented, and his oratory and culture are of so high an order that were he a preacher in a popular church he could win for himself wealth and fame. His morning subject was, 'Out of the Depths.'.... In the evening he considered Spiritualism as a science and religion, claiming that it presented the only proof ever given to the world of immortality. He said Jesus answered the questionings concerning a future existence by a grand materialization séance, where Moses and Elias appeared. Spiritualism presented evidence of the same character, thereby fulfilling the prophecy of Jesus, who said that those who came after him would do even greater works than he had performed. God's laws are unchangeable, and if inspiration was possible eighteen centuries ago it is equally so to-day." Dr. Fuller was to speak there again on the 29th ult., morning and evening, giving platform tests at the close of the latter service.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball of Lawrence spoke before the Spiritualist Association last Sunday, giving a large number of convincing tests both afternoon and evening. Spirits purporting to be present were accurately described, and many interesting messages given. At the close of the evening lecture Mrs. Kimball was strongly attracted to a lady in the audience over whom a cloud of sorrow is resting, and imparted to her much consolation, while the peculiar circumstance under which the message came much strengthened her conviction of spirit-communion. Previous to the evening lecture Mrs. Hattie P. Griffin of this city recited a selection entitled "The Organ-Builder," which was responded to with generous applause by the appreciative audience. Mrs. Kimball will speak here again next Sunday. E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass., April 30th, 1888.

Norwich, Conn.—Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings has occupied our platform two Sundays, April 22d and 29th. She came into our midst an entire stranger, but her bright, inspiring thoughts, combined with her charming, ladylike manner, have won much favor with the people in our city.

Wednesday evening, 25th inst., our ever-welcome friend, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, gave us a most excellent lecture in her usual pleasing and eloquent manner, Mrs. Richings following with recitations, displaying superior elocutionary powers.

Thursday evening of this week Mrs. Richings will give an entertainment in G. A. R. Hall.

Next Sunday Miss Emma J. Nickerson of Boston will be our speaker. MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Last Sunday, April 29th, Mrs. H. S. Lake closed a most successful engagement with the First Society of this city. The lectures of her guides have been listened to by large audiences, and have created a profound impression. The topics discussed have been of a most varied and interesting character, and have met with a hearty reception by her listeners. This is Mrs. Lake's second engagement with this Society, and it has been a very gratifying one.

Her psychometry, which is clear and accurate, has added much to the interest of the meetings. We are in good condition, and moving steadily on toward the Parkland Camp-Meeting.

New Haven, Conn.—Mrs. I. L. Searles writes that the séance-meetings of Mrs. J. J. Clark, at 228 Crown street, this city, will be continued until June 1st.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P.M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Miss Jennie B. Hagan spoke in the morning of this the last Sunday of her engagement one hour and fifteen minutes, on twelve subjects selected by the audience, the principal subject being in reference to re-incarnation, in remarking upon which the speaker did not sustain the extreme ideas of re-incarnationists. Miss Hagan improvised a poem upon themes not very poetical, "The World, the Flesh and the Devil," in a manner that demonstrated the inspirational power of this truly wonderful medium. Miss Hagan spoke in the evening to a large and appreciative audience, and has won golden laurels that will ever give her a hearty welcome to New York. This is the last Sunday of Miss Hagan's present engagement with the First Society.

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was large, and one of the best of the season. There is a growing interest in Spiritualism in New York, proving conclusively that the abuse of the daily press has had a different effect than what was intended; all of the meetings of the First Society are more largely attended than ever before, and the audience is made up of the best material in New York, those who will stand for truth though the heavens fall. Mrs. Zalda Brown Kates opened the meeting with an invocation, and improvised and sung a song upon "Justice." Mr. Henry J. Newton made remarks that much interested the audience, as Mr. Newton's always do. Mr. L. Barney, editor of The Better Way, of Cincinnati, made remarks showing the prosperous condition of Spiritualism in that city. Miss Jennie B. Hagan gave poems upon "Man," "Persecution" and "Injustice." Mr. G. W. Kates of Atlanta, Ga., made appropriate remarks, saying that he always stood before the public as a Spiritualist. He spoke upon the importance of organization of Spiritualists, and that we could not make any progress by disintegration. Mr. Kates's remarks were practical and worthy of the earnest attention of mediums and all Spiritualists. Mr. John Slater made some very cutting remarks upon the sermon of Rev. Dr. T. Dewitt Talmage, preached this morning in the Brooklyn Tabernacle against Spiritualism and Spiritualists. Mr. Slater gave some very telling tests, proving conclusively that the evidence through his mediumship gave a knowledge of immortality, while the Reverend Dr. Talmage had only a belief in immortality, without knowledge. Mr. Henry J. Newton followed Mr. Slater upon the same subject. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave numerous tests, all of which were recognized.

Last Thursday evening was the last of the series of the combined séance of Mrs. E. A. Wells and Mrs. Zalda Brown Kates at the parlors of Mrs. Wells. These séances have been very popular and created an interest worthy of the name of these noted mediums. Mr. and Mrs. Kates speak to the First Society of Spiritualists in Paterson, N. J., the first two Sundays of May. Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham will speak for the First Society here next Sunday and during the month of May.

Mrs. E. A. Wells, the test and materializing medium of New York City, has changed her residence to 990 6th Avenue, where she has more commodious apartments to accommodate her increasing patronage. S.

New York, April 29th, 1888.

People's Spiritual Meeting.—The sessions at Columbia Hall, 788 6th Avenue, were more than usually interesting Sunday, April 29th. Mrs. Morrell read as an opening the poem "Dead"; after which J. C. Rowe, Jr., of Utica, N. Y., gave a short address, and was followed by Judge Coit, of Brooklyn, Mrs. F. Morris Clarke, J. F. Jeaneret, Theo. Bunce, Mrs. Morrell, and others.

After singing by the audience in the evening Mr. Bunce led the speaking, and was followed by some very fine exhibitions of psychometric power by Mrs. M. C. Morrell. Wilson MacDonald was called up, and gave an interesting address, closing by reading a fine original poem, composed some years since while visiting the Soldiers' Cemetery at Arlington, and referring to those whose mortal remains were there interred. It was a touching tribute to both the "Blue and the Grey." FRANK W. JONES.

Progressive Spiritual Conference.—A very enjoyable session was held Saturday evening, April 21st, at the new quarters in Preparatory School Hall, Johnston Building, junction Fulton and Flatbush Avenues. Wilson MacDonald of New York made an address which was highly appreciated. Messrs. A. P. Dey, Ellsworth, Elwell, C. L. Harris, Mrs. Stringham, and others filled out the time interestingly to all.

Saturday evening, the 28th, we celebrated the first anniversary of the resumption of the Brooklyn Conference. William C. Bowen made the opening address, which was exceedingly appropriate and gave special interest to the occasion. Then followed remarks by Mrs. M. C. Morrell of New York upon Psychometry, who illustrated her subject with excellent readings acknowledged as accurate by those who received them. Capt. A. P. Dey, Mr. Elwell and Mr. Harris made the closing addresses of the session. Mr. D. Ellsworth of New York will give the opening address, Saturday evening, May 5th. F. W. JONES.

Baxter Concludes in Providence.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Such practical morning lectures as Mr. J. Frank Baxter has given in Providence this month, are rarely enunciated in our city. Last Sunday, the 29th ult., "No Object in Life, then Life no Object," was the prolific theme of the speaker, and he discoursed ably and boldly—ably, because logical and forcible, boldly, because outspoken in lines of ultra-reform. Mr. Baxter has the courage of his convictions, and however radical or iconoclastic he is, seems to make no enemies; indeed, seems to gain the applause of all.

The Spiritualists' Association would hold its day session in the afternoon, but the hall is occupied then by the Free Religious Society, and hence it is obliged to take the forenoon. Liberalists and Spiritualists are the principal attendants at that meeting; but the evening occasion is the people's; at least, large promiscuous conventions obtain.

The evening theme was advertised and considered in the language as submitted: "Will Mr. Baxter give his views of Materialization?" It was trenchant, and, as might be expected, controversial. He believed in materialization, though his views were more like those of Dr. S. B. Brittan when in this life, which all BANNER readers are familiar with. He was disposed to think that organic materialization, save in the sense of growth, was improbable, and that a solid form proclaimed to be a materialized spirit is the transfigured, entranced medium. While he believed in materialization, he thought the term a misnomer for many of the manifestations bearing the name. He pointed out clearly the workings of Nature corroborative of the possibility of materialization in accord with spirit theories as given through mediums, while he criticised as improbable theories advanced by others. He said were he a believer in the Bible as the infallible truth, he could come to no other conclusion than that materialization is true—and a full-form organic materialization at that—and quoted in extenso in support of this idea, to the astonishment of his hearers.

The descriptive séance of the evening was a fine one, but many question whether such exercises are not misplaced on the occasion of lectures, especially Sunday lectures. How Mr. Baxter stands the continuous strain of his varied and earnest work so well, apparently with no fatigue, is a problem.

Mr. Tisdale, the blind medium, is announced for next Sunday, May 6th, and test-séances by Mrs. Humes. The annual meeting of the "Board" is called for that Sunday, also. Mr. Baxter will lecture in Stonington, Ct., and other places during the week.

"ROGER WILLIAMS."

Salem, Mass.—Miss Emma Nickerson of Boston occupied our rostrum Sunday, April 29th, giving two interesting lectures, followed by poems and psychometric readings which were satisfactory in every case. Miss Nickerson is to be with us again the second Sunday in May. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn of Stoneham speaks for us next Sunday, May 6th.

W. H. H. THYNG, Cor. Sec'y.

Keene, N. H.—The Association of Spiritualists of Keene is holding a short series of meetings at Lampson Hall, beginning April 22d with Mrs. Addie M. Stevens of Washington, N. H., as speaker, who gave very instructive discourses to appreciative audiences. Meetings afternoon and evening of each Sunday.

The Spiritualist Camp-Meetings.

ONSET BAY.

Many owners and lessees are preparing their cottages for the coming season.

Shell point has had some improvements added of late.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Torrey (the latter Secretary of the Boston Ladies' Aid Society) have built a neat and unique cottage; it is located opposite the Washburn House, makes a nice appearance, and is a credit to the grounds.

Mrs. Bunker of Boston has had her large house on West Central Avenue painted inside, ready for furnished room letting.

The Greenleaf Cottage and Bay View, under the supervision of Mrs. S. A. King, are ready to let rooms at the present time, and quite a number of others will do so before the camp-meeting commences.

Mrs. Cassell anticipates leaving California the first of May, and will, with her husband and family, occupy their fine cottage on West Boulevard this season. She has been residing on the Pacific Coast for the past year, but thinks, in many things, that Massachusetts has advantages that she did not find there, and is rejoicing to think that she will soon reach home and Onset again. OBSERVER.

Newburyport, Mass.—April 29th Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther again addressed our society. Her subject in the afternoon was: "Spiritualism and Christianity," and she gave a very interesting and instructive discourse to a large and appreciative audience. The following is condensed from the Herald's report of the same:

Mrs. Luther began by reciting the acts of the leading Catholic and Christian rulers from the time of the earliest recorded history—portraying in forcible language the dark deeds of cruelty and bloodshed in the defense and interests of the Christian religion and the Christian church. Thousands upon thousands, she declared, have been put to death in the most horrible manner and forms, to support the religion founded upon the teachings of the Bible—a book which is not supported in its claims by evidence sufficient to satisfy any thinking mind that it had its origin in an almighty, all-wise and loving God.

The crimes committed in the name of the God of the Bible, she held, would find their counterparts in the history of to-day, but for the great advancement and enlightenment which forbids and defies the encroachments of the priestcraft.

The Christian church, she said, from its earliest history had been the uncompromising foe to scientific investigation and advancement, ever the enemy to mental progress in every department of literature, science, art and poesy.

She was specially severe on the Christian doctrines of vicarious atonement and forgiveness of sins. She recited the Bible description of God and heaven, and referring to the narrow confines of the latter declared that it was just about large enough to hold the seventy thousand ministers and priests who are living in luxurious idleness off the earnings, mainly of the wives, mothers and daughters of the land. She spoke at length of the power of the clergy and priests over the women of this country, and declared that the time is nearing when women are beginning to think for themselves—to realize the tyranny of the Church—and they will ere long emancipate themselves from priestcraft, and force the representatives of the latter class of the community to shift for themselves and support themselves, as they should long ago have been forced to do.

The Church has ever been the uncompromising foe to Spiritualism; but, regardless of this, Spiritualism, the science of sciences, has come into the world to stay. The principles of Spiritualism, its aims and objects, were outlined by the speaker, more particularly as related to the uplifting of humanity, the inculcating of purity into our lives and teachings, the education of the masses, free from sectarian bias, the advancement of the cause of temperance, public morals, woman suffrage, etc., and the taking of advanced positions in relation to all the great questions of the hour. [Next Sunday it is expected that J. Clegg Wright will reply to the sermon of Rev. C. P. Mills on "Diabolism and Demonology."]

In the evening she took as her subject: "What Shall Man Do to be Saved?" and a more able address was never delivered in Fraternity Hall; it was complete in logic and sound sense, and was listened to by the largest audience gathered in the hall on an evening this season.

Her reply to Rev. Mr. Mills was regarded one of wonderful depth and power, and the cause of Spiritualism has been ably and successfully defended; and the result will be that Spiritualism will be greatly benefited and strengthened in the beautiful city of Newburyport.

Rev. Mr. Mills preached this evening, having for his subject, "Diabolism and Demonology," and I am told he admitted that spirits do return, but they are evil spirits. He probably followed in the track of Rev. Mr. Gordon's discourse.

Miss Trask, a very fine test medium, has been visiting on Ring's Island, and gave some wonderful tests of spirit return; she was here during the week.—Mrs. Patten holds circles every Thursday evening at her home. F. H. F.

Fitchburg, Mass.—We had the pleasure of listening to two very interesting and instructive lectures, April 29th, by Prof. W. F. Peck; subject for afternoon: "The Science of Immortality"; evening: "The Philosophy of Spirit-Manifestation." Prof. Peck also sang some beautiful songs—one of his own given under inspiration—our quartette joining in the chorus. If rapt attention is a mark of appreciation he must have felt amply repaid for his labors. We hope to have him again in the autumn or winter.——The 13th of May Mrs. Kate R. Stiles will lecture and give tests.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I would like to ask the friends who are awaiting answers to their letters to be patient a little longer. For two months my father and mother have been seriously ill; they are now convalescent, and I will attend to the letters as fast as possible.

Very sincerely, ANNIE LORD CHAMBERLAIN.

AFRAID OF THE ANGELS.—It is said that women must not vote, because they are angels; and in the next breath it is predicted that their votes "would generally be cast for the worst men and the worst measures." This suggests the story of the little boy who was told that he need not be afraid to go to bed in the dark because angels would be there to watch over him. He only sobbed the harder and answered, "It 's the angels themselves that I 'm afraid of!" If women are angels, the influence of their votes could hardly be otherwise than good, and no one need be afraid of them. On the other hand, if they are only ordinary beings, why should they not have ordinary human rights?—Alice Stone Blackwell, in Farm and Home.

What Your Friends and Neighbors Say on a Matter of Vital Importance.

The following unsolicited opinions from your friends and neighbors, men and women whom you know and respect, ought to carry conviction to any doubting mind. These words of gratitude are from those who have been afflicted but are now well, and the persons giving them are naturally solicitous that others, troubled as were they, may know the means of cure. There is no reason why you should longer be ill from kidney, liver or stomach troubles. You can be cured as well as others. Do not longer delay treatment, but to-day obtain that which will restore you to permanent health and strength.

BOSTON, MASS., (1314 Dorchester Avenue,) Nov. 29th, 1887.—Although it is four years ago that I was cured by "Warner's Safe Cure," yet at this late date I do not think that I need hesitate in acknowledging the same, particularly as the cure was permanent. It was in the fall of '83 that I first realized that I was not a well person. It was indicated by frequent spells of languidness, loss of ambition, occasional pains across my back in the region of my kidneys, an unusual flow of urine, and afterward scanty, with sediment in the vessel. I put myself under treatment, and took quantities of medicine, which would relieve me for a short time, but when the effect wore off I would feel worse than ever. The pains across my kidneys increased, and even extending up between my shoulder blades. Also a new pain developed across my right side in the region of my liver. As month after month passed my condition became more and more critical, and my sufferings increasing fourfold. I had arrived at that stage when the prescribed medicines I took failed to have the least effect. My limbs were swollen, particularly my knees, and they pained me so that I could hardly raise them. I also had dizzy spells, and during them I would become almost blind. This would be followed by numbness all over my body, the same feeling as one has when their limbs are asleep. After all this I would be prostrated for several days with a most excruciating headache. I concluded to give "Warner's Safe Cure" a fair trial, and by the time I had taken half of the second bottle, I certainly experienced a marked relief. The pains were gradually leaving, my rest was not disturbed, my appetite was returning, which, by the way, I had lost. Then my faith was assured. I went right ahead until I was completely restored, and, as I said, permanently.

BEDFORD, MASS., Oct. 13th, 1887.—Three years ago I had a serious trouble with my Kidneys, so much so that I thought I had that terrible Bright's Disease. I was in constant pain in my left kidney, as well as in the bladder and groin, with a weakness in my eyes. Having five years before buried my daughter with Bright's Disease, made me more anxious about myself, as I had watched the different symptoms as the disease progressed, which had fastened itself upon her before we were made aware of its approach. I commenced at once the use of "Warner's Safe Cure," and persevered in its use until I found a decided improvement, and kept on until I found my troubles removed. Last fall I had a partial return of the same symptoms, and again had recourse to the same remedy, with the same result.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., (150 Main street, Jan. 16th, 1888.—I am an enthusiastic advocate of "Warner's Safe Remedies." "Warner's Safe Cure" and "Warner's Safe Pills" cured me of kidney and liver difficulties with which I had been troubled for some time, and which caused me no little alarm. My liver was torpid, and for days I would have no movement of the bowels. Pains in my back, across the kidneys—retention of urine—headache and indigestion. I have tried four physicians, but they failed to relieve me. I was considerably worried. I began to take "Warner's Safe Cure," and it made me sick at the stomach, but I kept on, taking also "Warner's Safe Pills," and it was not long until all feeling of nausea passed away and I began to improve rapidly. I faithfully continued the use of "Warner's Safe Cure" until I was entir

The Ideal Republic, or the Spiritual Genius of True Government.

Inspirational Discourse Delivered by

W. J. COLVILLE,

In San Francisco, Cal.

[Reported expressly for the Banner of Light.]

From the very earliest times man has doubtless desired a perfect government. The republican form of government has always commended itself to the best thinkers and legislators as the highest ideal; but as our ideals are continually in advance of our attainments, we frequently see before us looming in the distance a glorious prospect of coming beauty and happiness. Man naturally lives in the future more than in the past; he looks forward to what is to come more than he gazes backward upon what has gone—whatever may be the beauty of the paradise which has been forfeited, whatever may be the splendors of the Edens which are no more, whatever may be the truth concerning a lost Atlantis and all its wondrous heroes, whatever may be true concerning a pre-historic America surpassing in grandeur the America of to-day. We all know that the poet Milton, blind materially, but very far-sighted spiritually, placed a truer estimate upon his own works than was placed upon them by the critics of his time, when he pronounced his later effort superior to his preceding one. Milton's two grand poems, "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained," are both sublime; the public at large have preferred the "Paradise Lost," calling it the finer production, but the poet himself preferred the "Paradise Regained," because the "Paradise Lost" was largely a wail of anguish—it was rather a complaint than a song of praise—while the "Paradise Regained" was a glorious prophetic vision and idyl of the future! The seer beholds more than a restoration of mankind to its former glory: he sees intuitively man's attainment of privileges and heights of glory unknown among the fabled or historic wonders of departed days.

We notice that in all history there is a continual looking forward; that in all religion, science, philosophy and art, the prophetic element is not lacking. Take prophecy out of art, and it has no longer a mission to mankind; take prophecy out of music, and music becomes a mere monotonous repetition of meaningless sounds; take prophecy out of literature, and a book is neither an educator nor a helpful companion to the student; take prophecy out of preaching, and the finest oratory consists in the statement of mere platitudes, which, while they may be abstractly true, are no more interesting and elevating than the coldest utterance of maxims and truisms, which, while they cannot be refuted by any process of logical reasoning, fail to inspire the mind and touch the heart.

In our early days as children we are all flushed with hope, and have many ambitions; we all build castles in the air; and while many persons speak of building castles in the air as though it were a foolish and undesirable occupation, we insist that the child's castle-building in the air is the child's prophecy of his own future appointments and surroundings. We say to the little child who dreams of grandeur, of splendid heroes, of fine estates; to the child who dreams he will some day become a great magnate, who looks forward to the time when he will be a lord and ruler, if before your eyes you always keep burning brightly the polar star of conscience, if you never under any circumstances allow yourself to stoop to trickery and imposition in the acquirement of your coveted treasures, if you never envy your neighbor's possessions and never try to wrest from another by artifice what is his by right, if you act on the square at all times, act with strict integrity in all your business relations, when you become a man, your dreams may be all fulfilled; you may have before you a vision of yourself in the Presidential chair, a vision of the finest estate, of the largest income in the world, and it may perchance be a prophecy of your future condition.

The more you can behold prophetically, the more you expect; the more you believe in, the greater the probability of your rising to eminence and royal distinction. There can be, under no circumstances, a greater error than the error of the one who despairs. Take hope out of life, take the prophetic element of youth away, and life's battles would never be fought nor its victories won. No one can work on and on unceasingly and untiringly, looking for no reward; no one can be a great soldier, always in the front of the battle, unless he believes victory will attend his endeavors. In the days of the fighting in the Soudan the fatalistic Mohammedans were ready to surrender their arms immediately they believed that Allah was fighting against them. Convince the Turks that they are not destined to succeed, and you have paralyzed their arms, but inspire them with the conviction that Allah the Great has ordained victory to their troops, inspire them with the thought that they are foreördained to victory, and no matter what odds may be against them, no matter what the force of the opposing army, they succeed because they believe they are foreördained of heaven to succeed. We find that this very spirit, which may be termed the spirit of fatalism in a certain sense, has inspired all the great rulers and workers of the world. When Calvin at Geneva thundered his protests against the authorities of the Church of Rome, he believed he was God's chosen instrument to reform the theology of his time; he believed that God had singled him out by an act of special appointment to put down the errors of centuries and to lift on high the standard of truth and wave the banners of God's own religion. When Oliver Cromwell, in the days of the English Commonwealth, protested against the established Church and established State, his soldiers as well as himself were strong as lions and fierce as tigers in battle, because they felt that God had commanded them to cleanse the sanctuary of all defilement and build up a new Church and new State to the honor and glory of his name. And when the monk Luther, who ascended the great staircase at Rome upon his knees and struggled by all means known to his order to win peace with Heaven and satisfaction for his sin, and, seeking for rest, found none, was inspired with the vision that the great work of the Protestant Reformation was intrusted largely to him, and felt that he was the chosen instrument to accomplish a divine mission, then no enemies could appal him, no threat of imprisonment and persecution could decoy him from the path which he felt to be the path of duty. And when Jean d'Arc, Maid of Orleans, the humble, illiterate peasant girl, felt that angels from Heaven, yea, Jesus, whom she believed had appeared to her and told her to rescue France, were sustaining her, she made her way to the court of the King and to the residence of the Archbishop, overcame all their opposition, and was blest in her every undertaking; but the time came when she acted without inspiration; then, following the counsel of advisers whom she knew were not guided by the powers divine, disaster overtook her, the cause she had espoused was lost, and she herself condemned to a cruel death.

Where is the secret of true success? We must believe in the coming glory, the coming victory, the coming realization. There is the secret of the world's reformation, the secret of success in every noble undertaking. We do not hesitate to say that the great War of Independence and the great war which resulted in the emancipation of the negro race would both have ended disastrously and ignominiously if it had not been for the courage, the bravery due to the certainty of triumph which animated the breasts of the defenders of their country and of human rights at large.

When to day we are called upon to fight, as we have never fought before, with moral and intellectual weapons; now that we are called upon to employ the all-powerful weapons of the tongue and pen, and to make the pulpit, the platform and the press ring with our declarations of independence, our protests against slavery of every kind; now when we are called upon to deal the severest blows which have ever been dealt at the abuses and vices which threaten to undermine modern American civilization—we can only be guided into the ark of refuge, into the haven of peace, into the arms of victory by an intrepidity born of sincere conviction and a courage born of supreme realization that if we have right on our side we are born to succeed, and that only when our cause is not divine is there a chance of our defeat.

If we look before us and imagine the republic of coming days, what vision floats before our enamored gaze! Is the Republic of the future a democracy or a theocracy, or is it both?

We maintain that the highest republicanism is theocratic and democratic. You know theocracy means the government of the people by God; monarchy means the government of the people by a king or other hereditary governor; democracy means the government of the people by themselves. But the question is, what element shall rule? what people shall govern themselves? what kind of rulers shall we have? what spirit shall animate us? how do we choose our representatives? what qualities do we require in those who fill our Senate halls? what kind of a man do we select for a President? what qualities are they which shall cause us to elect voluntarily and urge men to fill the highest positions in our gift?

You have all heard the strange story in the Bible of the trees choosing a bramble to be their king; in that curious old parable you are told in highly figurative and poetic, yet very plain and simple language the facts concerning much that is occurring every day all over the world on a large as well as on a small scale. The trees gathered themselves together, and held a solemn council. They knew that liberty did not mean lawlessness, and therefore they must have some kind of governor, some must be rulers and executors among them; they knew that they must choose their leader, they being Republicans or Democrats, not having embraced a monarchy; they set to work to choose one of their own number to be their representative or ruler. They saw the cedar tree, tall and stately, and they knew the wood was very precious, beautiful and sweet, and the thought occurred to them: "Let us choose the cedar, tall and stately, beautiful and superior." But the cedar said: "No, thank you; I do not take sufficient interest in your politics; I do not desire the position which you offer me; I have no wish to be your ruler; choose some one else."

Then they selected the olive tree, it being a tree which yielded delicious fruit; but when they called upon the olive to take the position the olive declined. So one after another they appealed to all the stately and useful trees among them, and one by one these trees refused the reins of government; they were either too lazy or too modest, one or the other, and perhaps a little of both. Then there stood by an aggressive bramble who volunteered to be their leader, and was accepted, because the stately, beautiful and useful trees had declined to serve.

So it always has been, so it now is, and ever will be, that if the men and the women who are qualified to take the reins into their hands, who are representatives of honor, probity and righteousness, and who have placed before them the opportunities of promotion, spurn their opportunities, and either do not take sufficient interest in national affairs, or else are so falsely modest that a spurious humility compels them to decline, the bramble, the most unfit person of all, is sure to volunteer, and will be elected because every one suitable has declined.

It is in the affairs of nations as it is in the affairs of congregations and societies: there are many good and honorable people who would be a glory to any position they might be asked to fill; their virtues have made them dear to the hearts of all their fellow-citizens; they are known to be in every way exemplary, their honesty and sterling qualities admit of no question; but, alas! they always feel, when they are called upon to take prominent positions, that the office is for some one else and not for them to fill.

While it is fitting not to think of ourselves more highly than we should, let us remember that when opportunities are offered us, when the call to service comes, it is not a privilege but a duty to serve. Remember that the use of the ballot is not a privilege, but a duty, and that it is not a something we can do as we like about when we are called to an honorable position we are qualified to fill. When society has recognized our fitness and we are called upon to respond, let us beware lest by refusing to serve we open the door to those who are only too ready to advertise themselves gratuitously, and to figure in positions they are utterly unfit to occupy.

We urge upon all young men and boys to be ready when the call comes to fill the highest position this country can offer them. If there is one special excellence in American institutions it is this: that every boy may feel that some day he may be President, and every mother may feel that the boy to whom she gives birth may some day occupy the highest position in the land. Such a feeling is something akin to the feeling which animated the Jewish mothers of the olden time when every Hebrew matron thought it possible she might be the mother of the Messiah who was to come, while every little boy might encourage the thought that he would one day prove to be God's own anointed. If every mother would feel that her son may be as good as President; if every boy would feel he may be as good as President, and must qualify himself for the highest position in the gift of the people, whether he is ever called to it or not; if every mother would feel that she must qualify her own mind and her child's to be worthy of the presidential chair, whether he ever sits in it or not; if we were each one to begin from this moment to put our own houses in order and do our own work efficiently as a task of sovereign importance, we should no longer look for an abstract reform to be brought about by an abstract government; we should no longer lose sight (as many socialists and other would-be reformers do) of the individual man in the collective state; we should no longer speak of the nation as a mere vague aggregation, but we should deal with the individual everywhere we found him as the being to be reformed and as the one to reform others.

True reform, the genuine elevation of society, the inculcation of pure morality, and the means of acquiring knowledge, is not a matter of official undertaking, but of individual growth and work.

What we desire to impress upon every individual is, that in the coming republic, in the state that is yet to be evolved—which is even now in process of evolution—the individual will rise so high that there will be a common high level for all men and women; the equality of the future will be the equality of all with the highest; no leveling down, but a constant process of leveling up until the highest summit is at length attained by all.

Looking carefully at the tendencies of the age we mark that indications are that not much longer will there be a few celebrated men who tower so far above all others that the rest dwindle into insignificance when placed by their side. In the forest of human trees now before us we see very few olives and cedars very much taller than their companions; the saplings are growing up, the young trees are becoming strong and hardy, beautiful and tall, and when the ideal republic has been actualized and the ideal state evolved, we shall not have—as they had in the past—a single Cicero or Demosthenes in oratory, a solitary Raphael in painting, just one Angelo in architecture, or a single Beethoven or Mozart in music, nor an Alexander or a Cæsar for emperor. The Alexanders will be multiplied, and so will be the Angelos and Raphaels, the Beethovens and Mozarts. In the days to come, Cæsar would not be acknowledged as a wonder; eloquence equal to that of Demosthenes will have become the common possession of your speakers; Phidias would no longer be the marvel among sculptors he was in his day, for fine artists shall have become so numerous that they no longer call forth extraordinary admiration. We shall yet behold a complete fulfillment of the sublime democratic prophecy that all shall at length be as one, and all on the highest level.

The opening lines of the Declaration of Independence are a prophecy rather than a history, a prediction rather than a statement of actual facts; nevertheless the principle stated is incontrovertible when regarded spiritually. There are many people, however, who seem to think there must be irregularities and inequalities in order that there may be any diversity, any beautiful variety in society; such are continually quoting all the illustrations of nature to prove there must be a difference amounting to absolute inequality between men. But if one star differs from another in brilliancy and magnitude, if one constellation differs from all others in form and size, are not all the stars and all the systems so beautiful and so bright that you know not how to choose between them? If the flowers are infinitely varied, which is the loveliest, the lily or the rose, the carnation or the pansy? If the trees are equally varied, which is the more beautiful, the cedar or the oak, or the ivy that twines around the oak? If the birds are all beautiful, which is the loveliest in song, the nightingale or the lark? or do you prefer the plumage of the bird of paradise to that of the humming bird?

In all nature beauty manifests itself in an infinite variety of forms, but in this infinite variety of forms there may be a divine equality; when the Apostle Paul so wisely spoke of hands and eyes and ears in his letter to the Corinthians, and said there should be no strife between the different members of the body, but that the body should be a compact organization of perfectly united members, he placed all humanity upon a level in the only but always true and living sense.

In the truly democratic institutions of the future the senator and the congressman, the blacksmith and the carpenter, will take rank side by side. If we could only impress upon all our children the dignity of labor, if we could only point out the equal honor which attaches to all honorable positions, if we could convince them how all working together form one great whole, we should have then dealt a death-blow at all those artificial distinctions which so many people crave, and which, unhappily, are being borrowed by America from the older countries across the sea.

We must realize the true dignity of simple, unaffected manhood and womanhood. We want more women and more men, and fewer ladies and gentlemen. It is a far grander thing to be a working-woman than a lady who is afraid to soil her hands with useful toil; it is a grander thing to be a working-man, even though he earns his bread by the sweat of his brow at the forge, than to be a gentleman of leisure, who does nothing to advance the welfare of humanity.

If we desire to bring society up to its purest and highest condition, if we want a true nobility, then let the honorable and the wise be chosen from any rank, but let the chosen in every instance be the ones who exhibit the greatest nobility of character and the most genuine attainment in all worthy and honorable directions.

Here we have before us a pattern of an ideal republic very briefly and imperfectly drawn—indeed merely hinted at; this sketch is filled in very beautifully in Bulwer Lytton's great work entitled "The Coming Race." When speaking of the future inhabitants of the world he says they dwell together in divine equality; there is no rivalry or schism between them; and all are comfortably well off. They do not aim at great individual distinction, nor crave immense personal wealth, but like those Rosicrucians of whom we are told when they had the power to convert all metals into gold, when they had attained to that degree of spirituality that the world was at their feet, they had outgrown that arrogant ambition which desires earthly distinction, and cares inordinately for the dross which men call gold.

If the time ever comes when you shall have all found out the undiscovered secret of the Alchemist, if the time ever comes when the philosopher's stone and the Elixir of Life are in your hands, if the time ever comes when you can so transmute all baser metals that they become gold, you will never find the fulfillment of your heart's desire in the things that perish with the using, but only in the transformation of all things into divine good; spiritual welfare, moral excellence, will then be the ideal, not physical utility; thus will be discovered a panacea for all errors and vices which create disease and afflict society.

We do not hesitate to say that the time will come when man, by his power of will, can command even the elements; when knowledge of the control which man can exert over the earth and its atmosphere shall make him appear God-like in the eyes of those who have advanced no further than the present race of mortals; the time will assuredly come when man will hold communion with the spiritual denizens of earth and air, and sea and sky, and have power over the hosts of the air, but he can never reach to so high an estate, such power can never be in his hands until he has grown to that exalted condition of soul that all desire for self-glorification has vanished forever from his breast.

A ruler who will be acknowledged by all as indeed a ruler and leader of men in the days to come will not only be the wisest, but also the most merciful; not only the most powerful, but the most lovable adviser of his people.

And here we come to the union of democracy with theocracy; here we come to the government of the people by the people and for the people as linked with the government of the people for God and by God. When we say all future peoples will be governed by God, we do not intend that God will be understood as a localized sovereign, a king of kings seated on a great white throne afar off in the distant heavens; we do not anticipate that God will be regarded as a limited personality, entirely distinct from the life of the universe, one who works outside of all natural law, and apart from all human operations, but we do maintain that God, working through the human soul and human intellect, God manifesting himself through all the highest and noblest powers of human nature, will be acknowledge and worshiped, and placed upon a spiritual throne through the recognition of the divine in humanity.

In this consisted the secret of success in all true theocracy of olden days. There was a long period in the history of Egypt when you are told the country was ruled by the gods; later on by demi-gods; then you are told that Egypt was ruled by the Pharaohs, or native rulers; later still by the Persians, then by the Greeks and Romans, until at length that once most splendid country was made desolate, despoiled of all its ancient majesty, and quarreled over by all the nations of the modern world, most latterly by England, which now in some measure controls it.

You are told again and again in history—in what is termed Jewish sacred history, as well as in the pages of what is called profane literature—that there was ever a theocratic administration before there was a monarchy, and in connection with theocratic administration you have always been told of prophets who spoke the word which was delivered unto them by the Most High. Studying the history of Egypt, you find that the royal personages were spiritually endowed to a marvelous degree; you read that Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, but most of all was great in his spiritual endowments, and exceptional in his willingness to obey the divine call.

When we consider both the theocratic view which acknowledges God as sovereign, and the democratic view which recognizes the equality of all mankind, what conclusion do we come to at length but that true government is the government of all the people by the divine soul in man, which is God's ever-living representative! True government of the people by themselves means that they must be governed by all that is noblest and divinest in themselves; true government of all peoples in freedom and liberty with no recognition of primogeniture, or worldly wealth, with no privileged families into whose hands the reins of government are always given, means no longer any bribery and corruption, no more striving to get one's self into power for the sake of power and authority. The rulers of the future will be singled out by the people who love and admire their virtues; there will be no caucuses or electioneering strife, but the chosen representatives will be borne upon the shoulders of their beloved companions to the highest places of power because the people have discerned their true fitness for the stations within the people's gift.

Is it not a fact that the people of America to-day are fully ready to do homage to those in whom they behold nobility and sterling qualities? Is it not true that the great American republic, instead of being unready, is fully ready to offer hero-worship to those who have conducted themselves honorably and well? Is it not true that you delight in nothing more than in turning your hospitable homes inside out that you may welcome in the finest style the defenders of your country? Is it not true that you rejoice in the erection of triumphal arches and the spreading of banquets for those whom you justly call the brave? And is it not true that in every profession, in science, literature and art—in all industries, great and noble men and women are eulogized and lionized without stint? If a singer like Patti can receive a fortune for a single performance, if people will crowd into places wherever they can gaze upon a beautiful picture or listen to the voice of an instructive and inspired defender of the truth, if a noble work will pass through edition after edition, and be bought at even an extravagant price, it is foolish to say that truth, honor and nobility cannot advertise themselves without meretricious aid, and cannot unaided make their power felt in the world. When the Rev. Thomas Starr King was here in San Francisco there was no stint to the money that was given into his hands to carry out the noble purposes of the sanitary fund; there was no stint of noble men and women ready to go forth at the call of freedom that they might spend and be spent in the service of humanity.

We say to all who are engaged in any righteous cause, we assure any who are consciously possessed of divinely given talents, that it is a spiritual force, a psychical power only, that enables a man or woman to be a true ruler, a caller-forth of the people's affection and respect. The woman who rules in her household is not a scold and never a tyrant; the woman who keeps her own family in perfect order is as near perfection as any one on earth can be, but she is often the most modest, retiring and unassuming of people. Her children love her, her employés love her. If you say to a boy who loves his mother: "You can do what you like; your mother will not punish you; you have so good and kind a mother that if you got into a scrape she will get you out of it!" what does he reply: "Because I have as good a mother as you represent, yea, a better mother than you can portray, I will not disobey her. She never used a rod about my back, never boxed my ears, never locked me up in a dark cupboard, never threatened me with any terrible catastrophy; but when I erred and went astray, my mother cried, and I saw that her heart was well nigh broken; she said no unkind word, but she wept for my sin, and I am too much of a man, boy though I am, to sin against the love of that mother who only shed tears and said: 'Poor fellow! I am so sorry for you,' and then prayed and worked to help me to withstand temptation."

In love alone is the secret of power in government; in it is the secret of all true rulership, the only secret of reign in the days that are to come. It is the divine element in the mother that conquers the unruly boy. You may slap your boys upon the cheek, box their ears, employ the severest corporal punishment; you may throw your prisoners into dungeon cells, you may devise means of torture for criminals, but you will create more thieves and more murderers every time you add to the severity of your chastisements. But when you rise in spiritual greatness, in superior moral power, you will command respect and obedience from all; when the laws you devise and execute are laws of love, they will be willingly obeyed. There is no just reason why an intelligent person should obey a law unless he loves the law and understands it. Human laws should be counterparts of laws divine, and the laws of God are in no sense the arbitrary enactments of an infinite tyrant. We do not believe in the caprice of heaven; we do not tell people they ought to do so-and-so because God commands them, or because the Bible recommends them, with no further explanation than this; but we maintain that every divine law, every good law, every command of God, every word which has ever proceeded from the mouth of an inspired prophet will bear the most searching scrutiny and thorough analysis. We believe fully in all the ten commandments, which are the very foundation of all enlightened jurisprudence; we endorse all the great, ethical teachings of Jesus, all the sublime utterances of all the great heroes and sages of all climes and ages, and we know that they will stand the most inquisitorial research and will eventually endear themselves to utilitarians and political economists as much as to moralists and theologians.

In the transitional age in which we are now living we are steadily working our way toward a point where the laws of the new republic will be the laws of God acknowledged and enforced by the will of the people, enforced because they will know them to be divine through their having manifested their intrinsic divinity. In the future there will be no one saying to the children or to the people: "Do so-and-so because the law commands you to do thus," but a satisfactory reason will be given for every law, and all good laws can stand the severest test which reason can devise, for whenever they are broken they prove their divinity as fully as when they are obeyed, though, by an inverse method, suffering inevitably follows upon disobedience and happiness upon fulfillment.

When the divine republic is evolved, when the time comes that every one is free, self-governing and self-governed, affairs will no longer be in the hands of a lawless mob; nevertheless insurrection and riot, even nihilistic agitation, are weapons which are used to day in bringing about the glorious freedom of the days to come; error must destroy itself, and the present fever of strife is but the crisis of a world-wide disorder.

The ideal republic will be both a theocracy and a democracy; the people will be all governed by conscience, by enlightened moral sense, as well as by the highest evolution of intelligence. When God speaks the people will hear; when the Eternal reveals his laws the people will follow them. The utilitarian may ask: "What do you know about God? what do you know about divine revelation? what do you know about the appointments of heaven?" The answer will at length come from all people: "The witness of the spirit is within us; the testimony of the ages is on our side; we love the law and therefore we obey it, and in obeying it we find our happiness secured."

No people will ever be free and able to do whatever they please, until they are so far developed that they love to do what is right; when they have reached that point in moral and spiritual unfoldment, they will all please themselves, and when they all please themselves by living in peace and order, in sweetest harmony side by side, they will be pleasing God, for they will be pleased with God and with his revelations within their souls.

The Ideal Republic signifies the evolution of a state of society in which all imperfections will be destroyed, where only the beautiful and the symmetrical in all things will remain; in this glorious estate the truth in the doctrine of the survival of the fittest will be fully realized, but in a humane instead of in a cruel manner. But how are we to bring into effect this Ideal Republic? How are we to evolve this glorious state in which there will be no injustice nor error? Not by killing, but by making alive; not by imitating the Cæsars and the Alexanders who have slain their thousands, but by imitating that pure and noble teacher of old, whose praises are sung perhaps best of all in a beautiful Episcopal hymn which says:

> "Conquering kings their titles take
> From the foes they captive make;
> Jesus by a nobler deed,
> Through the thousands he has freed."

As you have no such great political issue at stake as you had twenty years ago, as there is no longer a question as to whether the negro shall be regarded as a citizen or not, you have, however, still to choose this day whom you will serve; all have to choose between policy and conscience, between worldly expediency and divine conviction; and when standing firmly and squarely upon a pure republicanism you maintain you will have a government of the people, for the people and by the people; so long as that government is a government of the unruly by the unruly and for the unruly, so long as a government is in the hands of monopolists and liquor-dealers, so long as it is a government in the hands of wire-pullers and corruptors of public morals, endeavoring to fatten themselves upon the spoil system, so long will the riots which occurred but recently in Chicago be repeated again and again, so long will there be civil earthquakes, storms and tempests of revenge against oppression.

But when the government of the people for the people and by the people is a government of the pure and right-minded by the pure and right-minded, for the pure and right-minded, then and only then will you have grown to that point where you are free indeed.

Republicanism is the child of monarchy; it is a higher evolution; it comes after that hereditary system which is termed the kingly or imperial. But the ruler must ever be the father of the people. When the parental idea of government was regarded by the patriarchs as the highest (we are told that the people of to-day will not tolerate parental government in any form), the idea was in reality that government must be by the fatherly and motherly elements of divine love and wisdom; a perfect parental system is now being slowly evolved.

Now in these brighter and happier days when there are none to wear the blue and none to wear the grey as they wore it when the North and South were in bitter conflict; as there are now neither Northerners nor Southerners; as men have forgotten their disputes, and buried their last hatchet in the tomb of Gen. Grant; as the last prejudice between North and South is now happily abolished, and all unite to rejoice in the outcome of the fray; as all now realize that the abolition of slavery was the triumph of right over wrong, justice over injustice, freedom over tyranny, it would be out of place indeed for us to rake up the hostilities of the past, or recount the ill feeling which added poison and venom to the arrows which were shot into the bodies of the anti-slavery heroes.

Northerners and Southerners fought with equal bravery; Southerners fought for their homes, and Northerners fought for their dear ones, and for the principle they held most dear. Northerners and Southerners, the blue and the grey, no matter how their opinions as well as their uniforms differed, were patriots at heart, lovers of freedom at their hearts' core. If some were so unfortunate as to be on the wrong side, and if some on the right side did not always use the best means for securing the triumph of truth, truth triumphed because it was truth.

And now that it has triumphed we are satisfied to be one. But not till all dislike to the Indian, the Chinaman, or the representative of any nation under heaven is removed; not till through the civilizing influences of an ever-growing cosmopolitanism you make purer and nobler the foreigners who come to these shores; not till our work as a higher nation, which is to elevate and to reform the lower, is recognized; not till we assume the attitude of missionaries to the multitudes who are in darkness; not till we work for the elevation of all mankind, shall we see our Ideal Republic.

But the Ideal Republic will have come just so soon as the common blood of humanity flows perceptibly in all our veins; when to be human is enough, and when we can utter our benediction in the fullness of our hearts: "Blessed art thou, oh! Eternal, who hast made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon the face of the whole earth."

NIX'S MATE.

A LEGEND OF THE BLACK ROCK IN BOSTON HARBOR.

"The tide runs strong, and the sea grows dark,
Hark ye, Pilot! (Cling, clang, cling!)
The night wind freshens and drives the bark;
(Cling!)
The sluggish fog-horns fill the air,
And fitful is the beacon's glare,
And near us lies an island bare,
Hark ye, hark ye!"
(Cling–clang–cling!)

"Quiet, lad, 'tis the bell buoy tolls
As the heavy sea beneath it rolls.
The lights are bright on the long sea-wall,
I know the reefs where the breakers fall,
And I know where there are no rocks at all."

"But the isle is black without shoals or sands,
Hark ye, hark ye! (Cling, clang, cling!)
And black on the rock the beacon stands.
(Cling!)
And the bell buoy's voice has a warning tone,
And flares the light on the pile of stone.
What makes the isle so black and lone!
Hark ye, hark ye!"
(Cling–clang–cling!)

"That island, boy, was once fresh and green,
The fairest isle in the harbor seen,
'Tis the ghost of an isle that you yonder see,
Now the bell strikes one, now the bell strikes three,
And the night shades fall, and the wind blows free.

"The trees are gone, the fields, the shore,
And the heron comes to the reef no more.
No sea-gull's wing to the rock dips down,
No petrel white nor seamew brown,
Nor boat stops there from port or town."

"Do you know the rocks of the reft sea wall?
Hark ye, Pilot! (Cling, clang, cling!)
"I know where there are no rocks at all."
(Cling!)

"Then, Pilot, we 're safe, so tell to me
The tale of this isle on the haunted sea,
While the bell strikes one, and the bell strikes three;
Hark ye, hark ye!"
(Cling–clang–cling!)

"Listen, boy, the tide runs fast
Where the green isle lay in the years long past.
There once a gibbet the moon shone through,
And its iron frame the high winds blew—
There the crimes of the sea received their due.

"Old Nix was a captain, hard and bold,
And he reaped the sea and gathered gold;
He gathered gold, but one windy night
They found him dead 'neath the gunwale light,
And his mate stood near him, dumb and white.

"And his mate they seized—a young sailor he—
And charged him with murder upon the sea.
And they brought him here where the island lay,
Where the gibbet rose o'er the windy bay,
'T was more than an hundred years to-day."

"Oh! Pilot, Pilot! how dark it grows!
Hark ye, hark ye! (Cling, clang, cling!)
Across the bay the fog wind blows,
(Cling!)
The beacon turns in the fog clouds drear,
And my head is dulled with nameless fear;
They did not hang that sailor here?
Hark ye, hark ye!"
(Cling–clang–cling!)

"Here lay the ship, and the island there,
And the sun on the summer oaks shone fair,
And they took him there 'mid the chains to die,
And he gazed on the green shore far and nigh,
Then turned his face to the open sky.

"And he said, 'Great Heaven, receive my prayer;
The shores are green and the isle is fair;
To my guiltless life my witness be;
Let the green isle die 'mid the sobbing sea,
And the sailors see it and pity me.

"'In her old thatched cottage my mother will spin,
And dream of her boy on the coast of Lynn,
Or watch from her door 'neath the linden tree;
Oh! Heaven, just Heaven, my witness be,
Let the island beneath sink into the sea.

"'Let it waste, let it waste in the morning waves,
With its withered oaks and its pirates' graves,
Till it lie on the waters black and bare,
The ghost of an isle 'mid the islands fair,
Where bells shall toll and beacons glare!'

"He died, and the island shrank each year,
The green trees withered, the grass grew sere,
And the rock itself turned black and bare
And lurid beacons rose in air,
And the bell buoy rings forever there.

"The bell buoy rings in the moaning sea,
And it now strikes one, and it now strikes three!"

—Journal of Education.

A young Madras brahmin, who has reached England to obtain the benefits of an English education, went through a sea of sorrows before he was able to start. At the age of twelve he had been married to a girl of five, and as he was then nineteen his family besought him to remain at home and accept this youthful spouse whom he did n't love. But entreaty proving useless, his father-in-law, who had brought the twelve-year-old bride to plead with her husband, finally departed, cursing him, and stating he should regard the child as a widow rather than send her back to one who would be outcast. The prospect of a liberal education, however, was too much for the young brahmin, and he slipped his cable, leaving two furious families, his own and his father-in-law's, to mourn his loss.—Ex.

A Reply to Rev. A. J. Gordon.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I think that all who heard or have read a report of Rev. A. J. Gordon's discourse of Sunday, April 22d, at Bowdoin Square Tabernacle, Boston, upon Modern Spiritualism, must concede it to be a remarkable production in more ways than one; especially remarkable in its candor and fairness of statement, remarkable for its freedom from the denunciation and vituperation with which the clergy have generally treated the subject, and most remarkable in his conclusion as to the source of this world-wide and most wonderful movement.

With an honesty and courage worthy of his calling he admitted the reality and genuineness of the marvelous phenomena, and that their believers are numbered by millions, among whom are crowned heads, men of science and of the highest positions in learning. The most zealous Spiritualist certainly could ask no fairer or more truthful statement of his belief, and of the facts upon which it is founded.

Admitting that spirits produce the phenomena, the Reverend gentleman, however, believes they are not decarnated mortals but are all "fallen angels"—the "familiar spirits" whom Moses or (as he believes) God forbade intercourse with. Can it be that enlightened clergymen in the nineteenth century believe that ancient Pagan doctrine of "fallen angels"—beings created pure and sinless, and dwelling in heaven where there could be no temptation to evil? Even if they can believe in such perfectly pure beings "falling," how can they believe that a just God "whose loving kindness is over all his works," would permit millions of them to constantly surround his dear earthly children to lead them astray and to ruin?

Admitting, for the argument's sake, that Moses found it necessary to forbid to the Israelites intercourse with "familiar spirits," to keep them from the customs and beliefs of the Pagans by whom they were surrounded, by what authority does the reverend gentleman maintain that those statutes are in vogue and authoritative to-day? Does he not know that the New Dispensation set aside the Old with its local and special ordinances? If the clergy of to-day believe those commands against "witches," "wizards," etc., are now authoritative, why, as faithful servants of God, do they not enforce them, and put to death those proscribed characters? If the law is divine and imperative, so must the penalty be! In the same category with the edict against "familiar spirits" the Jews were forbidden to "mix linen and woolen in their garments," to trim their hair and beards. If those statutes are binding now, what sinners are both laity and clergy with smooth-shaven faces and cropped heads to-day!

Exodus xxii: 18, says: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," and Exodus xxiii: 3, says: "Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause"! One of those commands is as just and as binding to-day as the other. Do the clergy of America in Anno Domini 1888 believe in the justice or in their obligation to enforce either of them now? St Paul said in substance: "The law (Mosaic) was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, but after that which is perfect is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." "Wherefore, then, serveth the law?" No doubt it was necessary to prevent the Israelites from adopting one of the idolatrous customs of the surrounding Pagans—the worship of "familiar spirits"—for Moses and other inspired prophets to forbid intercourse with them. And even in the New Dispensation it was necessary to "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits to see whether they are of God," that is whether they are good or evil spirits. This is necessary to-day, and all-wise Spiritualists take this precaution.

The apostle's injunction to "try the spirits," etc., implies that good as well as evil spirits were the "familiar" influences of mediums at that time when he said: "Are they not all ministering spirits?" etc. Paul said: "Concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant," and he enjoins upon us to "follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts," and he enumerates many of those then in vogue which are all duplicated by modern mediums. Jesus also promised that "these signs shall follow them that believe"—precisely the same "signs" that are exhibited by spirit mediums to-day! In the language of Paul, we ask the Rev. Mr. Gordon, "Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid," said he, and so say we!

Even if in Old Testament times it was forbidden to hold intercourse with the spirits of the so-called "dead," Moses himself, together with Elias, repudiated his own edict by coming to Jesus and the three apostles on the Mount of Transfiguration. And so did one of the old prophets by coming and communicating with John on Patmos.

If "God is no respecter of persons" why should he not permit other good spirits besides those mentioned, as well as millions of "fallen angels," to come and communicate to mankind? Does an all-wise, omnipotent and supremely good and loving father permit millions of "fallen angels" and "seducing spirits" to communicate with and tempt to destruction his earthly children while he permits no "ministering spirits" to guard them from evil? If so, does God or do the demons rule the earth?

The experience of millions of intelligent and cultured people of this age, many of whom are Christians in faith, proves that, as in New Testament times, both good and evil spirits from the spirit-world, as in this, communicate with those whom they love or to whom they may be attracted, and we may test them "by their fruits"—by their conduct and their teachings—as we do mortals. Simply because spirits repudiate some of the Orthodox dogmas, such as the vicarious atonement, etc., is no more proof that they are "fallen angels" than that Unitarians and other liberal Christians are. It yet remains for Orthodox theologians to prove this Paganistic Pauline doctrine ever to have been taught by Jesus himself; and even could they do this, it remains to reconcile it with reason, justice and nature's (God's) laws of cause and effect, of compensation and retribution. To punish the innocent for the guilty, wrongs both of them, and is inconsistent with either human or divine justice! Spirits find that they have to "be judged according to the deeds done in the body," and as Jesus commanded, have to "work out their own salvation" from ignorance and sin as they should have done here.

It requires something more than the ipse dixit of the modern clergy, or than annulled edicts against "witches," to convince intelligent Spiritualists, who have been trying and testing the spirits for forty years, that they hold intercourse solely with "fallen angels," or "seducing spirits," and not with "loved ones gone before" who return to comfort, instruct and bless them.

For truth and right, DEAN CLARKE.

Christian Science a Misnomer.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Science consists of demonstrated facts, and as there are no demonstrated facts in Christianity there can be no Christian Science, and the name must have been adopted by those who were ignorant of the relation of Christianity to science, or else for a purpose to deceive the ignorant and draw them into the support of something that would not arouse their Christian belief and feelings of prejudice.

Christianity is made up entirely of faith, hope and belief, without one demonstrated fact on which to base them. True or false, they are not capable of proof. Evangelical soul-savers have never yet proved that one of the souls converted was saved, as they never hear from them after they pass to the world where salvation is needed and to take effect. There is no evidence such as a court would accept that Jesus was crucified by the Jews, as that was not a mode of putting criminals to death ever used by them, and without that event as a fact there is but little left, and certainly no science in it. By attaching this name of Christian to the system of Mind Cure, which may be a proper name for a system of healing if it is successful, many superstitious and ignorant dupes are drawn into the trial of what they would not accept without it, and may be thereby induced to try a new system of remedies for disease in which the Christian part of the system has no more to do with the cures than the stone had in the tramp's soup or the chips in the porridge.

That the concentration of mind, or the minds of patient and the magnetizer, has an effect in removing disease, and that such concentration may bring aid from guardian spirits by thus fixing a condition, has long been known as a fact, although it is by no means an infallible remedy for all diseases, nor of all of one kind, as conditions are different in different persons with the same disease. That faith, hope and belief belong to the mind is certain, and it is also certain that the mind has not absolute control of the body; if it had it could take it up into the air, or anywhere at will, and it would never let it get diseased, and need a cure. The laws that govern the mind are different from those that govern the body. The body has length, breadth and thickness, being in the third dimension of space, and has also gravity—the mind has neither of these, as it belongs to the fourth dimension of space, and has identity without them. The foolish theory of Berkeley cannot be sustained in our day of science, and if the mind-cure theory rests on that it will soon prove a failure, and hardly prove to be a "nine-days' wonder"; but if it is rested on a rational basis of the relationship between mind and body in united action and effect much good may come from it.

The age of fanaticism is fast passing away with intelligent minds, and yet some Spiritualists are drifting into it (regarding this "science" idea), owing largely, if not wholly, to an early Christian education and training. Spiritualism proper is rationalism, and having no supernaturalism has no use for marvels, of which Christianity is mostly made up. Science ignores creedal Christianity entirely, and ever has and ever will. WARREN CHASE.

Spiritualism and the Clergy.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Within a few months, at the instigation of a secular paper, several preachers discoursed on what to them are the evidences of a future state of existence. Several based their arguments on our intuitive conceptions of a future state. The argument of others was urged on the ground of the death and subsequent resurrection of Jesus Christ. As a matter of inference these arguments may be accepted for what they are worth, still they fall of giving positive proof.

If Jesus reäppeared physically the third day subsequent to his crucifixion, it is possible his physical life did not become extinct. In short, his physical might have been simply apparent, not real, as has been the case in numerous instances. As a class the clergy generally held his resurrection was purely physical.

Prior to the discovery of our Western Continent, Columbus was sanguine such a continent existed; but the fact was a matter of uncertainty until he set sail and discovered said continent; then what had before been an uncertainty became a known fact. Positive knowledge is needful in settling most controversies.

In some way we must be certain in our asseverations in demanding the assent of doubters. From the conservative clerical standpoint we are still in a state of uncertainty as to whether if we die we shall live again. The "believe or be damned argument" has lost its force. Proofs we must have of what is to be believed. Somebody's ipse dixit, unless supported by evidence, has no validity. Any clergyman, at short notice, will give his hearers an elaborate discourse on heaven or hell, going into all the minutiæ. In the dogmatism displayed you would think him as familiar with these localities as a native of Boston is with the street on which he was born and bred.

As the minister steps down from the pulpit where he has discoursed so learnedly, were an ordinary individual to press the following interrogations upon him he would be perfectly non-plussed: "Has it been your privilege to visit the locality described in your discourse?" The reply will be: "I have not." "Do you know its locality?" "I do not." "Has it been your pleasure to greet face to face a denizen of the invisible realm?" "I only know the deathless soul has gone to 'the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns.'"

From the conservative clergyman's standpoint the whole matter is summed up in "I do not know." As it respects any available knowledge on this head, our D. Ds. are an impersonation of the most consummate "knownothingism." Were a public lecturer of note to attempt to lecture on a subject concerning which he was confessedly so ignorant, his audience would at once leave the lecture hall. A lawyer would be laughed out of the court-room who indulged in the baseless assertions so common on the part of clergymen. It is this baseless dogmatism which places the minister at a discount in the estimation of all free and untrammeled thinkers. When we think of the foolish phillipics Dr. Phelps of Andover notoriety has uttered against Spiritualism, we can but commiserate him for his lack of good common sense. If there is any person or object in which he has unbounded faith it is the Devil.

If, as the clergy insist, another life succeeds the present, what can more rationally follow than that the denizens of this other world should make their present existence known to the inhabitants of earth? Have not the recently departed left friends in the mortal as dear to them as life itself? If by some method of transportation they have gone to a distant realm, may they not avail themselves of the same method of travel to return to earthly scenes and revisit the loved that still tabernacle in the flesh? Is it unnatural the mother should be drawn back to earth who has been prematurely removed from her beloved and tender offspring?

As clergymen have so much to say by the way of preparing people for the abode of the departed, why do they array themselves so hostilely against all proofs of the spirit's return? Who knows anything relative to a future state, save those to whom this state has been revealed by returning spirits? To the studious Spiritualist and the careful collator of phenomenal facts, the evidence is overwhelming. Yet the most we can say to opposing clergymen is: "Having eyes see ye not? and having ears hear ye not? If on earth to day, would not he you term Lord and Master repeat: 'Making the word of God of none effect through your traditions, which ye have delivered, and many such like things do ye'?" In the pamphlet somewhat recently published containing sermons in proof of a future existence, it is presumed these clergymen marshaled the strongest arguments they could in favor of a continued existence in the angelic realm. But seriously, I would inquire if these preachers were simply clear-headed men of the world, would these arguments of theirs suffice to convince the honest and serious doubter, if a man die he will surely live again? The quick and ready perceptions of Col. Ingersoll will instantly show the insufficiency of those elaborate but defective arguments.

The platitudes of the pulpit do not meet the demands of our time. Why should not the clergy seize the facts and phenomena Spiritualism is daily and weekly furnishing, and carry conviction to the honest inquirer? Why overlook the present and most convincing arguments, and rely wholly on the theories and opinions that antedate the discovery of the American Continent? Our doubting age is calling for facts. As by an invisible hand it is written upon the walls of your splendid and costly temples: "Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin."

Nothing would sooner drive a clergyman out of the pulpit than to be able to speak with new tongues, to lay hands on the sick successfully, or had he the gift of the seeing or the discerning of spirits. Once these gifts were an evidence of genuine discipleship; to-day these gifts prove nothing save that the possessor is an alien to the kingdom of God. G. S.

THE CENTURY.—The opening article, and the leading one in general interest, is the first paper of a series by George Kennan, illustrated by G. A. Frost and Henry Sandham, in which is to be given the results of The Century expedition into Siberia and examination of the Russian exile system. The frontispiece is a pathetic scene at the Siberian boundary post. Mr. Kennan relates the circumstances that led to his enlistment in the work. The illustrations are many, and together with the text are deeply interesting and replete with much needed information. In "Sheriff's Work on a Ranch," Theo. Roosevelt describes his adventurous and amusing pursuit and capture of three boat-thieves; illustrated. A study of regimental losses in the civil war forms the basis of an article upon "The Chances of Being Hit in Battle," and another article which will interest, describes one of its most thrilling incidents—"A Locomotive Chase in Georgia." Passages in the life of Lincoln of historical interest, will be found in the Nicolay and Hay narrative, which this month relates to efforts made to hold the border States true to the Union, and in Dr. Eggleston's Western Novel, "The Graysons." Henry James gives the first of a two-part story, "The Liars," and Ed. Bellamy, complete, "A Love Story Reversed." Matthew Arnold's address on Milton is printed for the first time. New York: The Century Co. Boston: For sale by Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—Mr. A. S. Barnes, the school-book publisher of New York, under whose auspices this periodical was first published in 1877, is the subject of the opening article by the editor, Mrs. Martha J. Lamb. It is accompanied by a portrait and other illustrations. A lengthy and elaborate paper upon "Ancient Society in Tennessee," is one of far more than ordinary interest in that it traces the origin of mound-building to the Indians, the ancient stone-grave cemeteries of Middle Tennessee furnishing interesting memorials of aboriginal life in America. From them have been taken four or five hundred perfect pieces of ancient pottery, some of them of unique form and fine finish, and "an infinite variety of articles illustrating domestic life." Prof. Putnam of the Peabody Museum has explored more than six thousand of these graves. After adducing evidence that the ancient mounds were the work of Indians, it is stated testimony exists that some of them have been built by Modern Indians since the period of European discovery. The article is by Gen. G. P. Thruston, fills thirty-seven pages, and is one of great value and interest to those who would become informed of the history of remote occupants of this country. "Personal Recollections of Abraham Lincoln," "Are We a Nation without Citizens?" "The Forum," "Original Documents," etc., are the remaining contents. New York: 743 Broadway.

ST. NICHOLAS.—Four chapters of a new serial story, "Two Little Confederates," with numerous illustrations, form an attractive opening of this month's number, preceded by a frontispiece of much beauty, "Violets, Sweet Violets." Harriet Prescott Spofford contributes a pleasing story of "Little Rosalie," and Sophie Swett "A Moving Story," which winds up by leaving it to a cyclone to make the last move. An interesting sketch of Girard College, Philadelphia, with exterior and interior views, illustrations showing the Girard Statue in the vestibule, some of the contents of the relic-room, etc., will be perused with pleasure. A lesson in natural history is taught by Celia Thaxter in "Madame Arachne," the heroine of which is a spider. "Ran Away to Home," is a story by Noah Brooks. A thrilling adventure with a man-eater is described by Walter Campbell. The remarkably mediumistic musical composer and performer, the child Josef Hoffman, is the subject of two articles, in which abundant proof is given, though not intended as such, of his being under the influence of another intelligence than his own. Several poems, and many articles in prose additional to those mentioned, together with a profusion of illustrations, constitute this one of the best issues of this popular young folks' monthly. New York: The Century Company.

WIDE AWAKE.—As a frontispiece is given a copy of a painting, by C. Steffeck, of "Queen Louise and her Sons," Frederick William IV. and the late Emperor of Germany, when boys, a brief sketch of the latter, with a copy of the last life-photograph of him, accompanying it. "My Uncle Florimond" grows of intense interest as it reaches its sixth chapter, and is characterized by the peculiar charm that invests all of Sidney Luska's stories. An experience on shipboard during a typhoon in the Bay of Yeddo is described by Olive Seward, and interesting observations of judgment, skill and industry made during "A Night in Beaver Town" are related by Edmond Collins. In the "Children of the White House" series the "Family of James Madison" is this month's subject—an interesting narrative illustrated with eighteen engravings, including portraits and fac similes of letters. An account of "How the "Jew's-Harp Grew" begins by saying that "a Jew's-harp is no harp at all," and proceeds to describe its origin and progress to its present form and name, with an engraving showing its five states of evolution. Several stories, a number of excellent poems, a collection of children's contributions, etc., all attractively illustrated, complete the contents. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN.—The leading articles have for their titles "Gall and Spurzheim," and "Literature for Oblivion." The various departments that follow contain the usual number of paragraphs. Boston: 6 James street.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

MRS. SARAH E. DAVIS.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 28th, 1888, we read a very remarkable test which purported to have come from the spirit of MRS. SARAH E. DAVIS, late of Hancock, N. H., through Mrs. B. F. Smith. Her father-in-law, Joseph Davis, one of the most prominent men in town, and two of Mrs. D.'s children, affirm that the message is correct in every particular.

Yours for truth here and happiness in the life to come, MRS. S. G. NELSON, OREN NELSON.

Hancock, N. H., May 2d, 1888.

WATSON HASTINGS.

While reading the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 28th, I saw a spirit message from WATSON HASTINGS. I knew him, and my husband was well acquainted with him. He was one of the best of men; in fact, he was a humanitarian. He lived in Cambridge, Mass., and I have seen his son Frank whom he speaks of in his message. ABBIE S. DORR.

Stoneham, Mass.

WM. STEVENS—A. M. CHAMBERLAIN.

The spirit-messages printed in the "Message Department" of the BANNER OF LIGHT as coming from WILLIAM STEVENS and MRS. AMANDA M. CHAMBERLAIN are perfectly correct and recognizable in every particular. The first-named was one of my schoolmates. A. H. BRADFORD.

PLEA FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—Criticise the public schools as we please, we are all obliged to own, after investigation, that they offer to every child who enters them, certain advantages which no private wealth can buy. In our cities and large towns they are, to begin with, as clean as the decks and cabins of a man-of-war. Every child who enters them, learns, as far as the school-room influence goes, habits of neatness, method, decorum and punctuality—points of training hardly to be surpassed in their importance, not only for the mental, but for the moral nature. When I enter such a school-room, and come upon fifty little people marching in procession to or from their seats, obedient to the wave of a finger from the resolute youth or maiden who has them in charge, and when I reflect that all across a continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, this same process is going on, then that modest teacher's work rises into sublimity, and seems one among innumerable shuttles that are together weaving the vast web of a new generation.—T. W. H., in Harper's Bazar.

Banner Correspondence.

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—A correspondent writes: "We are always glad to greet our BANNER OF LIGHT and life as represented by your paper, and to note on its fair and peaceful folds the records of the battles fought and won for our glorious cause. As we note the victories gained and listen to the words of the leaders of our hosts that are traveling over the barren paths of materialism and the thorny plains of churchianity toward the land of immortality, we are cheered and encouraged to renewed efforts in spreading the truths of Spiritualism, and in working for its advancement.

As we note the grand teachings and the splendid philosophy that are taught and practiced by our numerous speakers, we rejoice that the cause is so ably represented, that truth is gaining new converts in every direction, and that mankind is waking up to a realization of the fact that this life and the one toward which we are hastening is and will be what we make it, and not what an arbitrary God has irrevocably ordained it to be, according to the tenets of Christianity. But while we note all of these signs of progress we are forcibly reminded that while truth is gaining and error receding, to the great mass of humanity the light shineth not, for while the harvest is bountiful, the reapers are few.

We have many grand and good men and women who by some means ought to be more widely known in the missionary fields of Spiritualism, spreading the glad tidings of immortality, and if some of our benevolent men and women would send treasures to the Bank of Heaven by spending some of their cash in this world for promulgating the cause of Spiritualism, which they profess to love, we think that we could faithfully promise that when they reach the golden shore they will find every dollar so invested has been carefully placed to their credit by the angel bankers.

Every community has its earnest workers who could do grand service if only an opportunity were afforded them. We have a case in point in our own city of Brotherly Love, in the person of Prof. Haskel, formerly known as the Rev. W. G. Haskel, an ex-Universalist minister, but for several years past an ardent and devoted Spiritualist. With fine talents and a splendid education, he is by the force of circumstances compelled to live a life of comparative inactivity, whilst humanity is constantly asking 'What shall we do to be saved?' He is at present working each week in preaching to fair audiences of Spiritualists in this city, but your correspondent and others who have listened to clear and logical discourses have thought it a duty to bring his name to the notice of spiritual societies and camp-meeting directors, knowing as we do that those who engage his services will not be disappointed in his ability as a speaker. I learn he has been lately engaged for the coming Lake Pleasant Camp Meeting, and trust it may be for him an opening for future usefulness. Prof. Haskel's address is 1734 Sydenham street, Philadelphia. This communication is sent unsolicited."

JULIA R. GALLOWAY, Secretary of Ladies' Aid, No. 632 North 10th street, Philadelphia, writes in highest praise of the work recently accomplished by Mrs. H. S. Lake in that city, and referred to in THE BANNER last week.

Illinois.

STERLING.—A correspondent writes: "On the afternoon of Sundays April 15th and 22d, the people of this place were much interested and edified by Mrs. S. E. W. Bishop in lectures that held the close attention of her audiences. The subject of her lecture on the 15th was Spiritualism, in a notice of which in The Standard, whose editor is to be commended for a free expression of his honest opinions, it was said: 'Without commenting upon the peculiar tenets of the Spiritualists, and the methods to which it is said they resort to expound them, candor compels us to state that if all members of the sect entertain the belief and aspire to the purposes voiced by Mrs. Bishop last Sunday, the world would be the better if we had more of them.'"

CHICAGO.—"Star" writes: "I was glad to see in THE BANNER a notice of a lecture by G. W. Cable on 'Church and Sunday School Methods.' I read the report as printed in the Boston papers, and was very much impressed by his remarks on the churchianic 'cobwebs,' as he calls them; I think, however, he used the wrong term: The idea would have been much better expressed if he had alluded to them as strong walls of error through which no ray of truth can penetrate. I think also he made a mistaken statement when he put the blame on the laity for the errors in Sunday school teaching. To prove my position I merely call attention to the different Sunday school Helps for teachers (to a proper understanding of the lessons); issued by the International Sunday School Lesson Committee (which Helps are edited, issued and circulated by men who stand high in church work, and have D. D. annexed to their names to give tone to their utterances). Frequent 'literalisms,' which Mr. Cable criticises as taught by the laity, can there be found, as given out by the Revs. and D. D.s themselves; and I think the ministry, and not the laity, are to blame, since the men who set themselves up as teachers of Bible truths are preëminently wrong if they give forth such misshapen ideas and unreasonable statements."

New Hampshire.

KEENE.—Addie M. Stevens writes: "April 26th I had a sitting with Mrs. Joslyn, of this city, and it was so very satisfactory that I wish to speak of it to your readers, hoping it may bring that lady more before the people of New Hampshire, for we need all the good and true to help sow the seeds of truth and immortality which shall surely yield a rich harvest of joyful comfort to all who mourn.

The lady who accompanied me introduced me as her 'friend,' without giving my name. I am not acquainted with Mrs. J., do not remember of ever meeting her but once, and that quite a number of years ago at one of her public circles, and she did not now recognize me. Immediately upon being controlled by the pleasant and truthful 'Snowflake,' my condition was beautifully described, and cheer and comfort given. My husband met me just as was his custom when in the mortal, called me by name, gave expression to the love he bore me in manner corresponding to our daily life; talked of the old home, and business transactions, showing he has watched me carefully since leaving the form, spoke many approving words, and gave me advice for future action. He also gave me our pet names by which we daily called each other for nearly twenty years.

Several others gave names and short communications, which were highly pleasing. I consider Mrs. Joslyn worthy our confidence and patronage. May she live long to bear the olive branch of immortal love to the sorrowing ones of earth."

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—A. S. Hayward writes: "Recently a lady residing near Boston went to a store to do shopping. On her way home she missed a pair of scissors. She returned to the store to see if they had been found by the clerk. He had not seen them, and a search was made for them, but they were not found. She returned home feeling sad, as they were a keepsake from her grandmother in spirit-life. That night in a dream her spirit-grandmother came, appearing as tangible as while in the material body, and said the scissors were not lost, but folded in a small bundle of goods in the store where she made her purchases. The next morning she returned to the store and asked to look at the bundle described by the spirit, and to her great surprise and delight the scissors were found in it."

CAMBRIDGEPORT.—Herman Snow writes, May 2d: "Mrs. E. L. Watson, of California, is about to make another hurried visit to the East, during which she hopes to be able for the first time to enjoy a sight of Boston, and to clasp hands with its friendly people, especially the Spiritualists. The reputation of this interesting and able inspirational speaker, who has for so long a time ministered to the wants of the Society of Spiritualists occupying the San Francisco Metropolitan Temple, is doubtless sufficiently known to the BANNER OF LIGHT readers to secure for her a cordial welcome should suitable arrangements be made for her appearance upon some one of our Boston Spiritualist platforms. This, however, could probably be for only one Sunday, as the time allotted to her will be quite limited, the journey being one mainly for rest and recreation.

In her letter of April 22d, in response to my inquiry, Mrs. Watson states that she had thus far made but two positive engagements for lecturing, one at Chicago, and one at Cassadaga, the first and second Sundays in June; and I was left to infer that she could be engaged in Boston for either of the others in June, or possibly one in July before the middle of the month, by which time she would have to be on her way back to her regular work in San Francisco. Letters directed to the care of Mrs. L. C. Smith, No. 30 North Washington street, Rochester, N. Y., will be promptly forwarded to her during her entire absence from home."

LYNN.—Mrs. E. B. Merrill writes: "At our regular session last Sunday we had a goodly number both of members and visitors. Recitations and readings were given by Jessie Hutchins, Maizy Trask, Miss Bradbury, Miss Estes, Mrs. Atherton and Mr. Emerson; songs by Mabel Barker (a little miss of three years), Celia Goodwin, Amy Adams, Jessie Watson and Jessie Barker (in a duet), and Mr. Estes; piano solo by Mr. Bartlett.

As I have received several letters from speakers regarding engagements, I take this occasion to state that Mrs. Lillian Keeny, 19 Elm street, Lynn, is Secretary for the Society. I only hold that office in the Lyceum."

The Fortieth Anniversary.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Fortieth Anniversary Exercises; Three Interesting Services; Addresses by Gen. E. F. Bullard, Mrs. Emma L. Paul, Bishop A. Beals, Mrs. Mary A. Lyman; Original Poems by Peter Thompson and A. S. Pease; W. B. Mills Sees and Describes Spirits.

The First Society of Spiritualists at Saratoga Springs held three services on Sunday, April 1st, wherein its members appropriately observed the anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism. The meeting room in the Town Hall had been handsomely decorated with wreaths of evergreen, plants, flowers, and several of Anderson's pictures—also some engravings—the whole presenting a very tasty appearance.

The morning service was opened at 10:30 by music, led by cornet, with Miss Julia Mills as organist. Introductory remarks were made by the President, Dr. W. B. Mills, which were appropriate to the occasion. He said: "We have assembled here under the colors of our faith to honor and celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary of the birth of Modern Spiritualism, and as presiding officer of the day and society, I welcome all, both in and out of the body." The President then introduced Gen. E. F. Bullard as the first speaker. He responded with some telling remarks, followed by another musical selection. Mrs. Emma L. Paul of Morrisville, Vt., was then presented as the speaker of the morning. The eloquence and beauty of her utterances were unsurpassed, and all agreed that her lecture was one of the finest ever delivered in the hall. Music closed the morning service.

At 2:30 P. M. the second meeting was opened by Peter Thompson, who made a brief address and read an original poem, from which the following lines are excerpted:

We are standing at the portal, the gates are now ajar;
Look up, oh! waking mortal, and behold the morning star.
The angels who are coming, we welcome and we greet,
While we as humble learners are sitting at their feet.
Oh! Thou whose love is with us, and rending now the veil,
May our ears but hear the music that is floating on the gale.
The heavens are bright above us, the mists will clear away,
Death is not sent to harm us, God's love is here to stay.

* * * * * * * *

The dear ones who have loved us, we wish with them to be,
And we hope to meet in gladness where the spirit will be free.
We shall rise above the trammels that bound us in the flesh,
We shall start anew life's journey with courage warm and fresh.

* * * * * * * *

We have everything to cheer us, no angry God to dread,
And all phantom superstitions are dead, forever dead.
No truth from all the ages would we trample in the dust,
No gem from creed or fable would we leave amid the rust,
As diamonds in the ocean, or that slumber in the sand:
We would gather and be grateful, and strew them o'er the land.
In the coming age of splendor, when fear has lost its power,
When affection, pure and tender, like refreshing summer shower,
Will revive the drooping herbage, that it springs to life anew,
And bring all inner being more clearly into view.

* * * * * * * *

Now let our glad hosannas,
Our voices and our banners,
Proclaim that we are free,
Not free to live in leisure
And hope forgiveness free,
Not free to scorn the footprints
Upon the land or sea—
The footprints of time's teaching,
Whatever that may be—
But to heed and govern wisely
As light to us is given,
And know that we are making
Our hell, as well as heaven.

Next in order were remarks from Gen. Bullard. Mrs. Mary A. Lyman gave a statement regarding the Anderson pictures she had contributed for the decoration of the room. A song, "Beckoning Hands," was then rendered. Mrs. A. S Pease then read an Anniversary ode entitled "Forty Years; a Poem of Progress and Participation," which her husband had prepared, but being called to New York to speak for the First Society there, he was prevented from delivering it. We present therefrom the following stanzas:

Forty years of trial!
Triumph comes at length;
Ever self-denial
Compensates in strength.
Forty years of weakness!
What though Error lower?
Blessings follow meekness
Merging into power.

* * * *

Forty years of hope!
Merit comes of doing.
Spirit, give it scope,
Outstrips all pursuing.
Forty years of fears!
What a glad surprise!
Now are hopeless tears
Wiped from weeping eyes.
Forty years of joy!
Confident of heaven,
Death cannot annoy;
Terror's chains are riven.

* * * *

Forty years ago
Many million slaves
'Neath Death's scourging blow
Neared reluctant graves.
Forty years! Truth rolls!
Saved from Error's rod,
Many million souls
Look trustfully to God.

* * * *

Palsied be the tongue
Using words as darts
To canterize the wounds
Of broken human hearts.
With faith in a God that's just
We Death and the Grave defy.
And this is our souls' high trust:
Nothing Divine can die!

Mrs. Paul was called on and responded in her usual eloquent style. The last speaker, Bishop A. Beals, was introduced and made a few eloquent and logical remarks, followed by mental readings for persons in the audience, which proved highly satisfactory to those receiving them. Among those he noticed was Otis Bentley, of Milton, who, at the age of ninety-three years, is active and goes about freely. Mr. Beals told him of his early days—matters which even his own son did not know of. Mr. Bentley's father was a seer and used to tell of those he saw, but was thought to be a dreamer.

The exercises closed with music.

In the evening the hall was filled to its utmost capacity. After a fine selection by Chantz's Orchestra President Mills called upon Mrs. Paul, who gave an invocation followed by remarks. Bishop A. Beals was introduced as the lecturer of the evening; he rendered a vocal selection, and then spoke under inspiration for forty-five minutes, bringing out many logical and fine thoughts.

After another selection from the orchestra Dr. W. B. Mills took the platform and held the audience spell-bound for thirty minutes. A large number of spirits were described, names and circumstances given, which were fully recognized by people in the audience.

The grand old selection, "America," closed the service. This ended the most successful meeting of the kind ever held in Saratoga Springs.

Stratham, N. H.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Fortieth Anniversary of Modern Spiritualism was celebrated in this place on the afternoon and evening of April 26th, at the Town Hall. The event proved a grand success in every particular. The attendance was large, many coming from neighboring towns. The hall was made pleasant and attractive by plants in bloom and cut flowers, which filled the entire front of the platform.

Able addresses were delivered by Miss S. Lizzie Ewer, of Portsmouth, who has labored so successfully with us during the past season, and Mr. Edgar W. Emerson, of Manchester, N. H., who also gave many recognized tests, and whose presence greatly aided in the success of the meetings.

The singing was excellent, and musical selections appropriate to the occasion were rendered in an agreeable manner.

The friends of free thought and progress are cheered over the advancement the cause of truth is making in this town, and we look forward to still grander results. F. H. B.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From her home, in Albion, Mich., Mrs. Adeline Bishop, aged 62 years.

She was born in Dryden, Tompkins Co., N. Y., and married Jan. 12th, 1842, Vincent Bishop, coming to Albion with her husband in 1846, in which vicinity they have lived ever since. Three children survive, while the youngest passed to the higher life in her beautiful childhood, and now welcomes her mother to her spirit-home. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop belonged to a little band of pioneer Spiritualists, the greater portion of whom have passed to the full realization of that which was to them not faith but knowledge. For more than thirty years their home has been open to welcome workers for Spiritualism, whether expounders of its philosophy or exponents of its facts, and many such who may read this notice will remember with pleasure and gratitude the hospitality they there enjoyed. Many, many others, of all phases of religious thought and belief, who have felt the warmth of her kindly sympathy and the strong support of her helping hand in time of need, will also miss her presence and bless her memory. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Mrs. Marion Todd, at the family residence, on Saturday, April 28th, just twelve weeks after she received the severe injury which, through much pain and suffering, caused her earthly release.

AUGUSTA W. ANTHONY.

From Baltimore, Md., April 29th, 1888, Mr. Francis Volk.

He was born in Germany in 1822, and came to this country about fifty-two years ago, taking up his residence in the above city, where he carried on the boot and shoe business until latterly, when he engaged in the leather business. Mr. Volk was a sincere advocate of the spiritualistic faith, using every effort to further the cause of Spiritualism. He was buried May 1st with Masonic rites. COM.

From West Wrentham, Mass., April 25th, 1888, Mrs. Anna Frances, wife of Mr. S. B. Jones. She has suffered a severe illness since last Christmas.

POST-MORTEM CONFESSIONS:

Being Letters Written Through a Mortal's Hand by Spirits Who, When in Mortal, Were

OFFICERS OF HARVARD COLLEGE:

With Comments by

ALLEN PUTNAM, A. M.,

Author of "Natty, a Spirit," "Bible Marvel-Workers," "New England Witchcraft Explained by Modern Spiritualism," "Agassiz and Spiritualism."

This volume contains several letters written by spirits who, while in mortal, were officers of Harvard College, and now freely write out confessions that they were wrong in making that far-famed attack upon Modern Spiritualism in 1857 miscalled The Harvard Investigation. These letters are to be so valuable as history in future times that they merit a place in every family library, deserve to be carefully read now, preserved and handed down to posterity. They came forth in response to letters written by a graduate from that college, who was the personal friend of those officers, and yet their contestant at the time of the sham Investigation. He supplements the correspondence with his views of the timeliness, aims and operations, present and prospective, of Modern Spiritualism itself. It is a unique and instructive work, by one thirty-four years a Spiritualist and eighty-four a mortal.

THE NEW CRISIS.

BY GEO. W. BELL.

In his preface the author says: "We have reached a crisis in our national development. We have rushed to this pinnacle of greatness with a mad impetuosity unparalleled in the annals of the world; ignoring social adjustments, essential to the symmetry and stability of a state.

My purpose being to prove the existence of a class-conspiracy, the design of which is to subvert the principles of our government by a monopoly of all wealth, I have discussed the merits of no measures further than to prove the centralizing tendencies."

ISIS UNVEILED: A Master-Key to the Mysteries of Ancient and Modern Science and Religion. By H. P. BLAVATSKY.

This work is divided into two Volumes, one treating exclusively of the relations of modern sciences to ancient theurgic science, and the other of the ancient world-religions and their offshoots in various ages. The theogonies, myths, symbology, rites, emblems and theologies of past and present generations are all passed in review. The analyses of the myths of India, Babylonia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Phœnicia, Mexico, and the Germanic peoples, are extremely interesting. The origin of modern faiths is patiently traced, and the points of resemblance carefully marked.

In the Second Volume the various views of scientists respecting the universal ether, the imponderable known and unknown forces and their correlations, cosmogony, geology, astrology, chemical action, alchemy, &c., are reviewed, criticised and compared. The relations of man to the universe, including his control over its phenomena, are viewed from the side of the ancient Magians. The philosophy of gestation, life and death, is treated after a novel and vigorous fashion, and the mystical domain of psychology is traversed.

Two volumes, royal 8vo, about 1400 pages, handsomely printed, cloth, extra, $7,50.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

The Proper Methods of Investigation.

The report on "The Proper Methods of Scientifically Investigating the Phenomena of Spiritualism," adopted by the American Spiritualist Alliance, as printed in the last issue of THE BANNER, is a document of great importance to the cause of Spiritualism, and, if not fully exhaustive, is at least a significant and valuable step in the right direction, and shows that the Alliance is worthily, though slowly and cautiously, advancing in the important work for which it was organized. We would call special attention to some of the points set forth, in the hope that they may be carefully considered and studied by all who have at heart the best interests of the Modern Spiritual Movement.

In the first place, it may be noted that some prejudice or dislike appears to exist, on the part of a class of Spiritualists, to the use of the term "scientific" in connection with the investigation of spiritual phenomena. This, no doubt, has grown out of misuse or perversion of the term by others, or the mistaken assumption that it can be applied only to the methods and results of materialistic investigation. On the contrary, science is that which is known, in any department of phenomena or being; and to be "scientific" is merely to know, of a certainty, or to employ such methods as shall lead to certain knowledge. In order to this, all liabilities to mistake or illusion must be understood, and all possibilities of misapprehension guarded against. This is only common sense. If spirit-beings and spirit-phenomena are known to exist, such knowledge is science; and its pursuit by methods which admit of no mistake is "scientific investigation." Surely, all must desire this certainty, and anything short of it is mere conjecture or probability. But it should be remembered that different minds have different aptitudes and abilities for making such researches, and what is satisfactory and seems scientific to one, is by no means so to another. When one is investigating merely for himself, he may take such methods as will satisfy himself; but if he expects or intends to gain evidence for the conviction of others, or the public generally, he should employ such methods and such precautions as are adapted to the mental states of those whom he would reach, or his efforts will be futile. Hence the desirableness of a careful study of what is necessary to insure accuracy of observation and induction—in other words, of true scientific methods of investigation.

The report very properly, at the outset, calls attention to the great law of spiritual affinity—a law doubtless analagous to, and of as universal application as, the laws of gravitation and chemical affinity in the material sphere—and a disregard to which is as fraught with dangers and disasters as is neglect of those physical laws. Yet this law, or its operation, has been largely ignored in their investigations even by experienced Spiritualists—much more by those who are without experience, and especially by such as think to investigate alleged spiritual phenomena with minds full of suspicion, evil-surmisings, and conjectures of fraud.

One natural and necessary result of this law of spiritual affinity is stated to be that both mediums and investigators, being themselves spirits, attract to themselves, and are surrounded by, spirits of their own kind or quality—that is, spirits in sympathy with their various motives, beliefs, purposes, etc., which may be of the most incongruous and antagonistic character. This being the case, it is no wonder that when such diverse elements are brought in proximity, as they are likely to be in unselect séances, most unexpected, untoward, and even disastrous results should occur. A person ignorant of chemical laws, who should go into a chemist's laboratory and proceed to mix, helter-skelter, any elements which came to hand, would be fortunate if he escaped with his life or a whole skin. The formation of poisonous or explosive compounds would be at least quite as likely to result as anything useful or valuable. To proceed in that way surely would not be scientific—it would not be according to knowledge, but according to ignorance. And yet much of the so-called investigation of Spiritualism has proceeded in precisely that unscientific fashion, and results most disastrous to both mediums and experimenters, and to the general reputation of the movement, have followed.

The report very properly points out that, in order to avoid such dangers, and insure results of any value, something must be known of the spiritual quality or status and degree of unfoldment of the medium, and also of every person present as an investigator. The reasons for this seem too obvious to need more than its bare statement—certainly no further argument than that furnished in the report.

Thus far, it is evident, many Spiritualists have been too ready to seek the services, and commend to the skeptical public, any medium in whose presence marked phenomena have been witnessed, without any attempt to "know" anything of the actual spiritual status of such medium—his or her character for integrity, truthfulness, good-will, charitableness, or other spiritual virtues—which character, according to the law of affinity, determines the spiritual environment of a person, and shows whether persistent honest and fair dealing may be reasonably expected. It has been too often forgotten that something more than mere astounding phenomena is requisite to give Spiritualism a creditable and permanent standing in the world—that where these marvels are found to be connected with untruthfulness, sordidness, or any unspiritual trait, they will be more likely to be regarded in the popular mind as tricks of legerdemain than as spiritual verities, worthy of serious attention.

On the other hand, mediums who offer their services to the public for a fee, and obtain their living in that way, have not been, and cannot be expected to be, very discriminate as to their patrons, and often they really "know" very little of the spiritual conditions, motives and aspirations of many whom they admit to their séance-rooms. The consequences are well known, and are such as might have been expected from a knowledge of the laws of spiritual affinity and gravitation. Surely, it is time to put the knowledge of these principles, so far as acquired, to practical account, by the adoption of more "scientific," that is, rational, methods.

The suggestions of the report regarding the discrimination necessary in methods of investigation for different purposes; the careful elimination of everything liable to suggest deceptive contrivance; the need of divesting the mind of the inquirer of all selfish interests and desires, with an endeavor to rise into "relation with that spiritual society from which may be expected only wisdom and truth"; the mistake of attempting to dictate to or interfere with the spirit-workers who may present themselves, always exercising our own judgment on what is presented; the culture and use of the spiritual as well as the physical perceptions; the futility of attempts to apply merely materialistic tests, as is done by the fraud-hunting fraternity, etc., etc.—all are pertinent, judicious, and well worthy the study and regard of those who desire to arrive at the truth in these matters.

But a question will naturally arise with which this report, unfortunately, does not attempt to deal, but which we hope may be made the subject of a future rescript: That question is: Who shall obtain the required knowledge regarding the spiritual status of both medium and applicants for admission, and who shall judge of the fitness of either for safe and useful participation in a séance?

Thus far, with few exceptions, the whole matter has been left to individual action and responsibility. Mediums for materialization and other phenomena have offered their services to the public for a stipulated fee, arranged their own séance-rooms to suit themselves, and managed the séances, either personally or through an employed agent, admitting or rejecting whomsoever they saw fit—in some cases, perhaps, asking the aid of spirit-friends in making a selection of applicants. All this, of course, they have had a right to do, and perhaps it has been the best that, under all the circumstances, could be done. Much is needed to be learned on the subject before a better plan could be devised and put in operation.

But much has been learned, and not a little through painful disaster. This individual method has opened the way for unscrupulous adventurers, some of whom have given proof of remarkable mediumistic powers at times, but on other occasions have manifested such a want of integrity and resorted to such questionable methods as have more than negatived in the general mind any influence for good that may have proceeded from their genuine mediumship. Besides, the natural tendency of this method of individual responsibility is to awaken and stimulate the desire for pecuniary gain, leading, unconsciously, perhaps, but almost surely, to over-taxation of the mediumistic powers, by too frequent sessions and the admission of too large numbers, without careful discrimination as to their character and motives—in the train of which are likely to follow personations, either conscious or unconscious, with the usual sequences of "grabbing," "exposures," and unlimited obloquy upon a holy cause.

It is time that some method should be devised and put in operation for furnishing evidence of spirit-existence to serious inquirers, and for keeping open channels of communication with the higher life, that shall be free from such liabilities, and not open to debasement from that element which has long been known as "the root of all evil;" such a method, undoubtedly, will take the matter out of merely individual hands, and place it where it shall be managed for the general good, under such conditions and arrangements as experience has shown to be requisite for the best results. It surely seems desirable that every Spiritualist society, having the requisite strength, should provide and sustain at least one trustworthy instrument for some department of this work, under such arrangements as its best wisdom can devise. Of course, this implies no interference with the freedom of such as may choose to continue to operate in an individual way and to take the risks involved.

May we not reasonably look to the AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE to suggest and set in operation measures which shall lead to this desirable end?

☞ Colby & Rich have just issued a new edition of S. W. Tucker's "Spiritual Wreath."

Hard Words not Hard Arguments.

The common use of denunciation in argument is a fault against which too plain language cannot well be directed. Even when there are no "parsnips" to be "buttered" with fine words, there is a clear waste of influence in the employment of rough expressions, hard epithets and uncouth phrases. If anything is ever gained by it, it does not appear what it is, or whether it is an advantage that is at all desirable. The one who falls easily into the habit of denouncing an opponent, for no better reason than because he is an opponent, shows himself a partisan by nature and inclination. All his force of thought is concentrated in the act of hostility and hatred, and there is no room left for open thinking and candid statement. The habit has been styled a distinctively Christian habit, and we incline to regard it as being such.

Spiritualists very well know from experience how hard it is to bear in silence the sneers and the downright abuse of those who will not take the pains even to acquaint themselves with the actual position occupied by the New Dispensation. Yet it is none the less the fact that it is by such a rough road that truth travels, and will travel until all men shall have come into the possession of it for their own. This is for the present the penalty, or rather the price, which men have to pay for loving the truth rather than error, for pursuing the better way and abandoning the worse.

We are led to these reflections by the perusal of the report of a recent discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage against Spiritualism, in which this gentleman endeavors to unsay, or to remove the impression created by, certain expressions of his which are held to link him practically with an instinctive belief (even if not apprehended by himself) in the tenets of Spiritualism. As noted by us last week, his denial is vivid and Talmagean in the extreme, and the English language is put to exhaustive use, epithetically speaking, in his efforts to characterize the New Dispensation as a something worthy of the horror alike of gods and men. But we submit that, aside from the personal interest which naturally entered into his sermon, in his endeavor to clear his skirts of the terrible imputation (?) before mentioned, he has only—in obedience to the excitability of his gifted nature, which at one time lifts him to heights of progressive inspiration and then plunges him upon dead levels of crystallized creedalism—exhibited in quite full measure that spirit of opposition to the belief of others which he recently, with mighty force, condemned in his own pulpit.

The intolerance of Christians themselves fitly constituted the subject of a recent discourse, wherein Dr. Talmage spoke of the origin of sectarianism, its evils and its cures, and was compelled to allow that there was something wrong in all the creeds. Hence he directed his reflections at the bigots, of whom it may with perfect truth be said that there is no lack. The different denominations, remarked Dr. Talmage, sometimes magnify a very small difference. The only difference between sceres of denominations to-day is the difference between Shibboleth and Sibboleth, the difference between Gilead and Ephraim. "As I demand liberty of conscience for myself," said he, "I must give that same liberty to every other man, remembering that he no more differs from me than I differ from him. I advocate the largest liberty in all religious belief and form of worship."

[How about his heated denunciation of Spiritualism, which is the conscientious belief (ay, knowledge) and the cherished religion of millions in this country and the old world?]

For twelve centuries, says Dr. Talmage, the church attempted to make people think right by prohibiting discussion, and by rack and gibbet and hot lead poured down the throat tried to make people orthodox. But it was finally discovered that a man's belief cannot be changed by twisting off his head, nor can he be made to see differently by putting an awl through his eyes.

He confessed that he was not at all nervous in regard to the battle that is going on between truth and error, believing fully that truth will conquer in the end; let error run, if only truth run along with it.

[This, we agree, is the exact position occupied by the Spiritualists, who are willing to leave all things to the lapse of time and the sure results of HONEST investigation!]

It is often the case, he said, that bigotry starts in a household, and that the subject of it never recovers: "There are tens of thousands of little bigots ten years old." You seldom find, he remarked, a man with large intellect who is a bigot; while the man who thinks he knows a great deal more than he does is almost always one. The whole tendency of education and civilization is to bring men out of that state of mind and heart. Look out for the man, said Dr. T., who sees only one side of a religious truth: he will be a bigot inevitably: What is wanted is more light, and less sectarianism.

Such was Mr. Talmage's forcible characterization, in the past, of that unreasoning theologic bigotry which refuses to see anything good in whatever may happen to be located outside its own limited circle. And he has been equally severe in his public utterances against those who in daily life, and in a moral and social sense, fail to keep their tongues from defamatory remarks concerning their fellowmen.

We respectfully appeal from Dr. Talmage intoxicated with zealotic fury in his late Brooklyn Tabernable discourse to Dr. Talmage sobered and thoughtful in the presence of truth. Could any one have said more emphatic words against speaking ill of our neighbors than did he in his recent address at Tremont Temple, Boston, wherein he spoke of "The School of Scandal" as being a school with more scholars in it than any other known to him in the United States?

[We fear it has just gained one pupil.]

It is as natural, he remarked, for some people to attack others as it is for the hound to go after the hare.

[The clergy at the present time are illustrious examples of this.]

In every country there are great factories of falsehood that run night and day.

[Spiritualists are forced to believe him, from the treatment visited upon their cause by their Christian brethren.]

The lie, he said, has never yet been anatomized. It is remarkable for its longevity. It can travel a hundred miles at a jump; smell what never existed; hear sounds from all the keyholes. It has a throat to swallow the largest story ever invented. Nothing sticks in its gullet but truth. Lies have a sleek hide, sharp claws, and a sting in their tails.

[Herein Dr. Talmage gives the natural history of the reports so glibly circulated against Spiritualism—the throat of science and Christianity being notably willing to swallow everything but the truth regarding the modern manifestations.]

Liars he proclaimed to be the scavengers of the world, that drive their carts through every community. He recognized this general evil in his Tremont Temple address, and urged that as a cure we must first refuse to listen to the tattler.

[What if his Brooklyn Tabernacle audience had taken his own advice regarding his savage and absonous onslaught upon Spiritualism?]

The one who listens, he said, in Boston, is the only person who is worse than the tattler himself, if he fails to utter a protest. Stop cackling. If we make a right use of our tongues, our reputations will take care of themselves. He plead for the merciful treatment of the character of others.

The true way to do is to refuse to accept what is charged against another until the charges are established.

I hereby declare my determination, said Dr. Talmage in Tremont Temple, never to believe anything against anybody unless it is first proven. Even then I shall hope there is some mistake about it.

[Would, for his own sake, as a consistent public teacher, that Dr. Talmage had persistently applied the precept he thus urged on others in his recent attack upon the Spiritual Dispensation!]

Does Vaccination Protect?

Ninety-five per cent. of the inhabitants of Sheffield (Eng.) were vaccinated prior to the smallpox epidemic that has prevailed there for a year, commencing in March of last year, when there were three cases. In April following there were four, in May twenty. At that time the Medical Officer to the Corporation, Dr. Sinclair White, assured the authorities that it was impossible for the disease to make serious advance because the inhabitants were so well protected. But in June there were forty-three cases; in July, ninety-one; in August, one hundred and forty-six; September, two hundred and seventy-five; October, four hundred and ninety-eight; November, six hundred and four. The total number up to Christmas was two thousand seven hundred and twenty-eight cases, of which two thousand one hundred and ninety-eight were of persons who had been vaccinated and three hundred and eighty-two of those who had not.

In 1868 smallpox ravaged San Francisco and California generally. At the close of the epidemic, Dr. Isaac Rowell, Health Officer of the city and county, made a report of his experience, in which he gave the most positive evidence that vaccination was no protection; that it was comparatively useless, and advised perfect sanitary regulations to take the place of it. As far back as 1820 it was said by the London Gazette of Health: "Cases of smallpox after vaccination have increased to such an extent, that no conscientious practitioner can recommend vaccination as affording security against the contagion of smallpox." And the experience of over half a century since that opinion was promulgated has corroborated its truth. Yet at this very day we are told that because a case of smallpox has occurred in Chelsea, the only way to prevent the disease becoming an epidemic in Boston is to make vaccination general, and that "the authorities are extremely anxious that none shall neglect this matter"; that sometimes people "avoid the officials as long as it is possible to do it, and the result is that the officer who does the vaccinating has to chase them up from one place to another for several days before the object is accomplished."

Were there no other objection to vaccination than its utter worthlessness as a protection against contagious disease, it might be left to take its course as a pecuniary profit to the holders of medical diplomas and a satisfaction to their over-credulous patrons. But there is a far more serious aspect, and that is the implanting of seeds of disease in healthy bodies, often resulting in death or a life of weakness and suffering. We have shown this so many times to our readers that we need not at this time enlarge upon the fact. We have authentic reports of hundreds, and these might easily be increased to thousands, in its support, but a single one given in the Vaccination Inquirer for April will suffice for the present. Mrs. Morgan of Peterstow writes:

"Our dear little one was killed through my allowing him to be vaccinated, an act for which I shall never forgive myself. The awful suffering my child endured, and his transformation from a fine, healthy boy to a poor, worn creature, racked with agony, may enable any one to imagine what a mother's feelings must be. Nothing shall ever again induce me to submit a child to vaccination."

The Anniversary at Saratoga.

On our third page will be found an account of the interesting and pleasing services held in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in honor of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism. For this report we are jointly indebted to the columns of The Eagle, of that place, and the pen of our correspondent, E. J. Huling, Esq. The Eagle, which is so ably conducted by Editor Johnson, never exhibited its well-known liberality of sentiment and fearlessness of feeling to a greater extent than on this occasion. In addition to its report of the Spiritualist Anniversary, it devoted, in the same issue, half a column to a sketch of J. Clegg Wright's lectures in Saratoga, and then copied in full (with its concluding paragraph in "small caps") the Anniversary editorial which appeared in our columns for March 31st, with the subjoined introduction:

"As many do not understand the principles and purposes of Modern Spiritualism, or the work that it is doing, we copy the following article from its leading newspaper exponent, the Boston BANNER OF LIGHT, which affords information in this direction."

Bro. Johnson is an outspoken advocate of woman suffrage, freedom in medicine, justice for the Indian—and does not scruple to tell what he thinks about Spiritualism; he surely deserves the thanks of all, wherever residing, who appreciate self-sacrificing deeds wrought for the cause of free inquiry, political justice and spiritual expansion.

☞ Our public free meetings held every Tuesday and Friday afternoon in the hall over the Banner of Light Bookstore at 9 Bosworth street, are fully attended by an intelligent class of people who take a deep interest in listening to what the returning ones have to impart to friends in the mortal. Many visitors bring choice flowers and place them on the table, which gratifies the invisible intelligences very much. Supplies of the fragrant arbutus flower were also forwarded, at the earliest time of its blossoming, by Mrs. M. Wiggin, Kennebunk, Me., S. M. Pearson, Stratham, N. H., Mrs. S. F. Fisher, South Deerfield, Mass. All will please receive our sincere thanks.

A Manly Protest.

A correspondent of the Boston Daily Globe, in its issue of May 7th, protests against the reckless denunciations of Spiritualism at present indulged in by press and pulpit. We have expressed views in the same line, and made the identical points many times in the course of our editorial labors, but transfer the following extracts from the article to THE BANNER columns that our readers may join with us in commending the liberality of the Globe in putting this demand for fair treatment of Spiritualism before its many patrons:

"The pulpit for a long time thundered against believers in the Spiritual Philosophy as shallow-pated fools or people of vivid imagination and great credulity, who have been duped by shrewd and unscrupulous adventurers. The vast increase in the number of Spiritualists has, however, shown the fallacy of calling them, as a body, fools and lunatics.

Prominent clergymen say that ninety-nine out of every hundred of the so called spiritual phenomena are fraudulent. We Spiritualists say that the one case that is conceded to be genuine should be the one to demand the attention of the people. We claim that if Spiritualism is true it affords one of the most satisfying of comforters for the stricken heart. If the great question of immortality and the fact that people once resident on this earth can and do have the means to communicate with us, can be clearly proven, it should be received with joy by all nations.

The Spiritualists of America undoubtedly outnumber any one of the various sects; and yet we are looked upon as immoral, dishonest and silly by self constituted judges. If this be true, it is a sad commentary on the intelligence of the nineteenth century. No religion that ever occupied the minds of people has made such rapid progress as Modern American Spiritualism, and if the millions who accept its teachings are underwitted or dishonest, the condition of society is, indeed, deplorable. We claim that there is a desire in the hearts of men to know that Spiritualism is true, hence the great number of investigators and new adherents. Not being connected in any way with mediums, and never having taken any prominent part as a leader, I speak as a common member of the faith and a representative of the great mass of adherents.

We deny that we have no system of morality, that our belief leads to sensuality and insanity, and that we are all physical wrecks, as the great sensational preacher, Talmage, said in his periodical harangue last Sunday. We are as strong perhaps in numbers as any religious sect in the city of Boston, and the absurdity of claiming that we are all physical wrecks must be apparent. We claim that for every person made insane by Spiritualism, we can show two made so by religious excitement; and as to the statement that we are immoral, we submit that we ought to receive credit for good lives, well lived, and be held innocent of crime until proven guilty. As to the presence of a greater degree of unhappy marital relations among us than among other people, we deny it and challenge unbiased comparison with others. As with all other sects many barnacles have attached themselves to us, and we receive indiscriminate condemnation for the sins of weak people. If there is one thing more than another that Spiritualism teaches, it is that each individual must suffer the consequences of his own misdeeds. We recognize no possibility of any vicarious atonement, and we consequently strive to cultivate a spirit of charity and kindness, even toward those who grossly misrepresent us, as the best source of happiness here and hereafter. The corner-stone of our system is the fact of spirit-return, and upon this all are united. The peculiar ideas of any faction must be considered for what they are worth, and not be put down as held by the great mass.

Our religious meetings are treated in a flippant and unjust manner by the press generally, and the most absurd arguments are made to controvert phenomena quite inexplicable, except as having been produced by intelligences not seen. We ask as a matter of common justice that our people receive the same consideration bestowed upon the Catholic, Congregationalist, Methodist, or any other church. We are not disposed to disturb other people in their peculiar views. If they are satisfied with theirs, so are we with ours.

The text-books of the Christian churches tell us that religion must be gained experimentally, and a change of heart must take place. We claim that we have an experimental knowledge of spirit communication. We are possessed with the same spirit of zeal for the spreading of the truth that has actuated all people at all times when similarly convinced.

Our conclusions are not based upon nor reached through any mediums or particular class of phenomena, but through the experiences of individuals. Hence any discovery of fraud does not overthrow the knowledge, any more than the discovery of trickery in the performance of some apparent miracle has overthrown the faith of Christians.

Aid for Robert Cooper.

We give below a letter from that friend of humanity, Wm. Tebb, now in Athens, wherein he makes an earnest appeal for aid for Robert Cooper, the (now sorely stricken) pioneer-worker for Spiritualism in England. We trust the words of Mr. Tebb may awaken a generous response to the call we have made. In the language of a Rhode Island gentleman who is himself a donor to the fund, we are "perfectly amazed that so few subscribers' names appear in Mr. Cooper's behalf, especially as Boston is not only a center of intelligence which is unsurpassed upon this vast continent, and also of wealth, but also the center of Spiritualism":

HOTEL DES ÉTRANGERS, Athens, Greece,
April 18th, 1888.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The BANNER OF LIGHT has followed me in my quest for health and repose to this classic region, and you have the thanks of all grateful Spiritualists for the earnest appeal made through its columns in behalf of a most courageous and self-sacrificing apostle of the great spiritual reformation. When I first became acquainted with Mr. Robert Cooper, twenty-five years ago, he was then proprietor of a growing and lucrative business, which promised to realize for his family a comfortable independence. To advance the cause of Spiritualism, to which he became a convert, he relinquished this business to the care of others, and eagerly threw himself into the struggle, with a few others, to advance the cause he had at heart, without counting the cost; and although now overtaken by personal affliction, and serious financial troubles, he has not, in his old age, bated one jot in the faith and earnestness which inspired his early devotion. Such examples of zeal for unpopular truth and self-abnegation are comparatively rare. I venture to hope, therefore, that the BANNER'S earnest appeal for coöperation with the friends in England to obtain a suitable annuity for one whose disinterested labors are the inheritance of both countries, will meet with an early and generous response.

Faithfully yours, WILLIAM TEBB.

The Summer Camp-Meetings.

We are much gratified to learn as we do from our attentive correspondents that the spiritualistic camp-meetings the coming season will open under more auspicious circumstances than ever before.

At Onset Bay preparations for the accommodation of guests have already commenced, and doubtless there will be more visitors there during the heated term than ever before, as many talented speakers have been engaged already.

At Lake Pleasant, also, under the new syndicate, we are assured that everything possible will be done to accommodate the thousands of people who will visit this charming locality. First-class speakers have already been engaged. Our agent, J. M. Young, will keep all the Spiritualist papers for sale; and the books published by Messrs. Colby & Rich, of Boston, can be had of him at any time. This gentleman, who is clerk for the Corporation, will issue periodically a local sheet of interest for the especial benefit of visitors. The nation's holiday (July 4th,) will be duly observed at the Lake, with appropriate oratory and fireworks. Mr. William R. Tice, the Treasurer, will be on hand to attend to all financial matters.

The Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting near Chattanooga, Tenn., will be held during the entire month of July. The following speakers and mediums are engaged: Mrs. A. M. Glading, George A. Fuller, Dr. H. F. Merrill, Mrs. S. A. H. Talbot, G. W. Kates and wife, Dr. Samuel Watson, A. C. Ladd. Excellent hotel facilities are on the Mountain. Tenting space given free. Address, G. W. Kates, Secretary, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Camp-Meeting grounds at Haslett Park, Mich., and other localities are being put in order for the season; all going to show the deep interest manifested among the leading Spiritualists of this country in our glorious Cause.

☞ Mrs. A. L. Warren, after an absence of the winter months, has returned from the Pacific Coast improved in health, and can be found at her old rooms, 90 Waverly House, Charlestown District, where she will continue to exercise her spirit gifts in diagnosing and prescribing for the sick—a work in which she has been engaged for more than twenty-five years past.

Reportorial Education.(?)

The New York Sun is all aglow with the thought of the fine opportunity for a practical and uplifting education which is afforded in the reportorial profession by the modern system of journalism—daily of course. "The proportion," it says, "of reporters who subsequently win distinction and fortune at the bar, in the pulpit, in business or literature, is large. A good reporter has to be an exceedingly bright man, and his calling gives one of the best educations to be had in intellectual alertness, knowledge of men, readiness of resource, patience and industry. It is no wonder that reporters who do well in their business do well in other business when they take it up."

Let us see! Probably the New York press reporters have thought they were doing "their business" well of late, and hence were deserving of the Sun's flattering endorsement, but the following incisive paragraphs, from the columns of the Boston Daily Globe, at one and the same time show the quality of work these Gotham scribes have turned out, and the very excellent (?) chance for "one of the best educations to be had" which the metropolitan newspapers afford a young man who is really anxious to rise in his calling:

CRIMINAL CORPULENCY.

The woman called Diss Debar, who is having a sensational trial in New York on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences, has the misfortune to be fat. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that she is guilty of the crime of being fat.

The New York papers fairly bristle with damaging charges of obesity against the woman. And, although the trial is not yet ended, they seem to have proved the charge. The epithets of "fat female," "corpulent conjurer," "big beauty," "avoirdupois Ann" and "adipose Ann," seem to be founded on fact. And the reporters gleefully tell how she "waddles" into court, and how she was too corpulent to be got through the door of the "pen" with the drunkards and roughs who were imprisoned there, and how, when gentlemanly allusions were made in court to her bulk, her adipose tissue fairly shook with indignation.

If any unsophisticated person has labored under the delusion that there is no such thing as criminal corpulency in this country, he has only to read in the New York papers the reports of this woman's trial. He will there find that adipose tissue stamps its possessor at once, and conclusively, as a criminal of low degree. This will be a painful discovery for those plump people who have hitherto supposed themselves none the worse morally and legally for their plumpness.

Decease of Dr. Bloede.

We learn from the New Yorker Zeitung of May 2d that Dr. Gustav Bloede, a well-known Spiritualist of Brooklyn, N. Y., (and occasional contributor to the BANNER OF LIGHT, of both original articles and translations from the German language) passed to spirit-life, April 30th, from a hospital in Baltimore, Md., to which institution he had been conveyed at his own request, in order to avail himself of the treatment of Dr. Simon.

His last illness was long and severe; suffering for months from insomnia, his nervous system in consequence became very much disturbed.

Dr. Bloede was born in Dresden, Saxony, Sept. 23 1, 1814, and studied law in Leipzig from 1832 to 1835, when he returned to his native place and established himself as an advocate. He was elected to various positions of public trust and responsibility by his fellow-citizens; but being a great lover of freedom, he took an active part in the German revolution of 1848. As a result of this action he was, two years later, sentenced by the Prussian authorities to an imprisonment of ten years for high treason, but fortunately made his escape to Belgium, afterwards coming to America. In Philadelphia he commenced the study of medicine, and received a diploma from a homeopathic college in that city. Later he went to New York and engaged in literary pursuits, being for several years editor-in chief of the New Yorker Demokrat, a prominent Republican journal. After severing his association with that paper he was connected with the New Yorker Staats Zeitung and other German periodicals, and has also written voluminously (in English and German) for other publications, both secular and spiritualistic, in all parts of the world. A long article on Spiritualism by Dr. B., was published in Die Gegenwart of Berlin in 1877.

In 1844 Dr. Bloede married Marie Antoinette Francisca, who preceded him to spirit-life in 1870, from Brooklyn, and who was herself a poetess of considerable celebrity. The doctor leaves behind him four children—Victor G. Bloede, a chemist in Baltimore, and three daughters, Gertrude, Catherina and Indiana, the first named of whom inherits her mother's poetic talents.

Dr. Bloede had a large number of friends in both hemispheres, who will long hold him in kindly remembrance.

THE LECTURE OF ALFRED R. WALLACE on Spiritualism, delivered by that distinguished scientist in San Francisco last June, prefixed to which is a brief biography and portrait of the author, has been issued in a neat pamphlet by Albert Morton, 210 Stockton street, San Francisco, Cal. Copies may be obtained of Colby & Rich. For further particulars see advertisement on fifth page. The appearance of this pamphlet, embodying the bold declarations of Prof. Wallace, the co-discoverer, with Darwin, of the fact of evolution, is particularly opportune at this time, when certain opposers of Spiritualism, in the pulpit and out, are declaring that no scientific man of any note has even given to Spiritualism the endorsement of his name!

☞ The great mistake the managers of our camp-meetings have made in the past is the fact that they have not been particular enough in announcing the movement of trains. We have verbally called attention to this important matter many times; and now it is a gratification to find that our correspondent at Lake Pleasant has been thoughtful enough to give us the figures, which we shall keep standing during the season in these columns. Managers of other Spiritualistic camp-meetings are requested to keep us posted, as it is of especial moment that visitors intending to leave Boston and other places for the camps should know exactly what railroad trains to take, etc., in order to reach the grounds without delay.

BERKELEY HALL.—We attended the meeting of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society on Sunday morning last, and found the place of assembly thronged with a large and representative audience of Spiritualists and inquirers, eager to listen to a reply by the guides of Mrs. R. S. Lillie to the recent attack made on the New Dispensation by Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn. We are promised a synopsis of this eloquent effort—which received warm commendations from all present—and shall print it in a future issue.

☞ We are informed that singular and striking manifestations are taking place in a private family in the vicinity of Boston—an account of which will be furnished our readers next week.

☞ The advertisement of Dr. J. R. Cooke was inadvertently omitted from our issue of May 5th. It will be found this week in its usual place on the seventh page. See also card on fifth page.

☞ Read the card of Mrs. Augusta Dwinels, on the fifth page. She has changed her residence to 20 Bennet street.

☞ The many friends of our fearless Editor-in-Chief will be pleased to learn that he is improving in health, and is meeting with greater success in the interest of The Better Way than his most enthusiastic friends could expect. May the good friends on this and the other shore aid him in his noble work for humanity. His address is: Capt. L. Barney, care Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston, Mass.—The Better Way, Cincinnati, O.

Capt. Barney called at THE BANNER office last week, giving every evidence of being in the fullest enjoyment of his rest from editorial labor.

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

SPRING HAS COME!

The mule was lately happy,
His breast was full of song,
He thought that the millennium
Had put an end to wrong;
Because within a stable
He stood the winter through,
He dreamed he was a nabob,
With not a thing to do.

But now the spring is blooming,
And the Jemima Sal
Is floating, full of brickbats
Upon the thawed canal.
And out upon the towpath
Reluctant walks the mule,
Annexed unto the hawser
And stormed with ridicule.

What cares he for the daisies
That whiten all the dell?
What cares he for the bluebirds
That nature's chorus swell?
He'd rather in bleak winter
Contented whisk his tail,
Than in the songful springtime
Be hammered with a rail.

The Pope having given his official disapproval of the "boycott," and the "plan of the campaign" in Ireland, it is reported that the Nationalist leaders are in deep study as to whether they should obey the call of their country, or the mandate of an Italian pontiff. Prominent League men in America, it is reported, are of the opinion that his Holiness will be obliged to retire from his position; the event, however, remains to be seen.

SHAMOKIN, PENN., May 6th.—Eight persons were killed, thirty seriously injured, and property valued at $75,000 destroyed by a remarkable accident on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad at midnight of the 5th. A fast freight train of seventy-five cars was passing through Locust Gap, when the train became disconnected by the breaking of a coupling—the meeting of the two sections at the bottom of a heavy grade causing a collision, and on an explosion in a car which was, it is said, loaded with dynamite; cars were shattered, their contents strewn along the mountain side; and in the immediate neighborhood seventeen houses were completely wrecked, and their occupants in many cases either killed or injured. The wrecked buildings were fired by overturned stoves or lamps, and thus some of the terror-stricken men, women and children were burned to death.

Frank Cushing, whose researches among the Zuñi Indians of New Mexico have attracted wide attention, has been busily employed in the Salt River Valley since leaving San Francisco a few months ago. He has discovered the ruins of several Zuñi cities, and from what he has found he is led to assert that once the Salt River Valley supported a population of 250,000 people. He has developed traces of canals over 700 miles in length, once used for both irrigation and navigation. One of these canals was seventy miles long.

We once knew a pious job printer who worked every Sunday night, after attending church, to gain time, but at last came to the conclusion that it was losing time instead, as he pi'd more jobs Sunday nights than he did in the whole course of the year (Sundays excepted, as the railroads say). He finally came to the conclusion that his types were altogether too pi'us! and leaving the church and the printing-office, he secured a berth as Conductor on the Metropolitan horse-railroad, where, by "shrewdness and economy," he saved considerable money. But this was before the bell-punch came into use.

Who, after upward of a quarter of a century's work for the spiritual cause in Great Britain and America, now finds himself, in his sixty-seventh year, without pecuniary means, and smitten with blindness and failing health.

Those Spiritualists in this country who may feel to aid our worthy but unfortunate brother pecuniarily, may send funds to our care for him, which will be duly acknowledged, and faithfully remitted.

Lake Pleasant.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

The advent of spring finds matters assuming an air of activity at this great camp-ground of the adherents of the Spiritualistic Philosophy, and the coming season here promises to be another great intellectual congress. Every year adds to the popularity of this place, and each season is longer than the previous one. This is the fifteenth year of the movement here, and the changes since that little gathering of a few earnest men and women in the summer of 1874 have been many.

The "basket picnic," or grove meeting of a few days, has developed to a grand convocation of two months or more, and the audiences are aggregated from every State of our Union, and from lands beyond the sea. What was once a local affair, known only in the immediate vicinity, has grown—has become renowned wherever "printers' ink" has a circulation.

We have been informed by credible authority that at a preliminary meeting for considering the feasibility of inaugurating the movement, the controlling intelligence stated that "the influence of the camp-meeting would extend further than any of the company present had any idea of." Has it not been so? Hundreds of friends many miles from here, when they read this will unite with us in a most emphatic affirmative reply. What of the early pioneers? It can truly be said of them, as has been said of others, "they builded wiser than they knew." Many of them have closed their record here, and have passed "from hope to glad fruition." A few remain, and in life's afternoon contemplate with serenity the events of today.

The first lecture at the auditorium has been set down for July 22d, though the "Fourth" is to be observed with due credit, and there will be many an impromptu conference before the regular session opens. Parties are beginning to arrive, and several have already come for the summer. Improvements are the order of the day, and several new cottages are being erected. The sale of house lots last year was very satisfactory, and the call is still being made. That the coming convocation is to be one of much interest seems to be well assured.

NOTES.

Mr. C. E. Jackson, our genial postmaster, is erecting a handsome cottage on First Avenue.

Mrs. Maud E. Drake, with Mr. Drake, was a recent caller in town.

An entertainment of much interest was held at the Gordon Cottage on Thursday evening. Mrs. Kate M. Adams presided at the organ.

The stopping of the trains thus early is a marked convenience, and they are well utilized.

Our Messenger will endeavor to give the mélange of the camp.

The "Headquarters" will be open soon, and we shall have a big latch-string out. Call and introduce yourself. This means everybody who reads this.

Haslett Park Camp.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It was my good pleasure some few days ago to take a look at Haslett Park to see what was being done, and how the Park looked when deserted. I found all life and animation. The hotel is being thoroughly renovated; guests will find a marked improvement over last year.

Mrs. Potter was busy overseeing a small army of helpers, who were showing to the world what skill and good management can do.

The boats are to be refitted; the fine little steamer that did such gallant service last year looked silent and glum, but soon it will ply the beautiful lake as happily as of yore.

The Park is busy with the ring of the "woodman's axe."

The Pavilion—which our hearts were set upon last summer, through the work of Mrs. Lillie, who started the ball—will be in readiness for the camp, which opens the 26th of July, and continues five Sundays. None need to fear but that the work will be done faithfully and well.

Several new houses are to be put up this summer. Mr. Burgess erects a thousand dollar cottage; other improvements are going on.

Campers will find there very many more conveniences than last summer.

There is to be a fine array of talent during the entire month. The last Sunday of July, and the opening day, Mrs. R. S. Lillie will dedicate the Pavilion; she is to be present two Sundays; A. B. French, of Clyde, O., Mrs. Baade of Capac, Giles B. Stebbins of Detroit, Mrs. Woodruff of South Haven, Col. Fogg of Lansing, and others are to be among the attractions of the place. G. H. Brooks gives the welcoming address.

There is to be this year a new departure here in the way of camp-meetings: a mental philosophy class is to be established, also a reading circle, a school in mediumship and a class in psychometry. Much attention is to be given to the children—a Lyceum to be established and conducted every morning.

To those contemplating going to some of our many camps, I would say I know of no place that offers any greater inducements than Haslett Park. Mr. Haslett, through our ever genial Mr. Potter, is doing all that he possibly can for the benefit of the visitors, and it is hoped there will be a large attendance and much enthusiasm manifested. If one man can do so much for the benefit of the cause, surely all can attend the camp.

Trusting to meet all old faces and many new ones during the season, I am as ever, yours in the cause of truth, G. H. BROOKS.

Onset Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In alluding to the Greenleaf Cottage last week I intended to have said that the cottage had a fine "bay view" outlook—not thinking that the Aplin Cottage, situated next to it, was christened "Bay View." The Aplin Cottage, or "Bay View," is the first residence that was built at Onset, and is the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Aplin and daughter, Mrs. Loring, of Fitchburg, Mass. I make this explanation that people at a distance may understand that the Greenleaf and "Bay View" cottages are separate estates—both equally pleasant as to the water view outlook.

Onset celebrated May Day with an evening entertainment at the Pavilion in benefit of Lula Morse, the promising young lady who gives entertainments at the Children's Lyceums in Boston, and other places, with such good acceptance. The performance was varied, and quite enjoyable—home talent being employed for the occasion. OBSERVER.

"NELSON" writes: "The sun never shone more brightly than it does this morning upon our beautiful bay. The love of the Great Father is in the rays so profusely shed upon us. The warm days of spring are drawing slowly but surely near, and the severity of the past will melt away into the glory of the to be.

One by one the friends will return to us, and we who have 'held the fort' during the winter hours will welcome them with open arms. It has been a severe struggle at times, but, take it all together, we have not suffered more than others who left us a few months ago with their good-byes for the winter.

Many, also, will return to us in spirit, having laid their bodies down as worn-out garments. They will be just as welcome in their new robes, for they will shed upon us a purer love and a brighter smile.

Soon the melodies of camp-meeting will re commence. "Nearer, My God, to Thee" will vibrate upon the air, and angels will hover round as the strains are wafted upward; the glorious truths of Spiritualism will be presented in the magnificent setting of Onset summer days.

The slate-writer will soon be happy; the materializing medium will be in her glory; the hankerchief-reader will be sought after; and the developing medium will receive his share of patronage; but for a phase that will meet all requirements, give us the good old trance-medium, who steps in when least expected, sheds the bright ray straight from heaven and gives comfort and joy when we are enveloped in the cloud."

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

(Notices under this heading must reach this office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.)

Helen Stuart-Richings has just closed her engagement in Norwich, Conn., and goes to Pittsburgh for the month of May. G. W. Kates and wife were to be in Paterson, N. J., May 6th; they speak there the 13th—then go South until August. They will then accept the engagements, North or East, which are now being applied for by their many friends. Their address is Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. Mary A. Charter is now located at 15 Center street, between Grand River Avenue and Gratiot, Detroit, Mich.

Hon. Warren Chase may be addressed at Cobden, Ill., till July 15th. He will attend the Iowa Camp-Meeting at Clinton, and is open for engagements in Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin for September and October. He spoke in St. Louis, Mo., May 5th.

J. W. Fletcher will lecture in Newburyport, Mass., on Sunday, May 13th; in Norwich, Conn., May 20th; in Berkeley Hall, Boston, May 27th, giving his "Illustrated Lecture" in the evening.

W. J. Colville has just completed a very successful season of work in San Diego, Cal., and has now returned to Los Angeles, where he will lecture Sundays, May 13th, 20th and 27th, in I. O. O. F. Hall, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. His week-evening lectures are given in Bartlett's Music Hall; his class in Spiritual Science meets at 640 South Hill street, to which address all communications for him should be sent during this month. He returns to San Francisco June 1st.

Dr. J. K. Bailey is again on a Western trip, having visited and held meetings at various places in the States of New York, Michigan and Indiana during April. He may be addressed during May P. O. General Delivery, Springfield, Ill.; home address, box 123, Scranton, Pa. The Western friends should keep him well employed in the good work.

Dr. Dean Clarke, who spoke in Lowell last Sunday with great acceptance, speaks there again May 20th, and would like immediate applications for June. He has engaged for Lake Pleasant Camp-Meeting Aug. 16th and 19th, and is open for other Camp-Meeting engagements. Address in care this office.

Individuals and societies wishing the services of Mrs. H. S. Lake, will please address her in care of the BANNER OF LIGHT.

After his return from Washington, D. C., G. H. Brooks went to South Haven, Mich., and gave four lectures to full houses; from thence he passed to Kalamazoo, where he spoke in the Unitarian Church to a good house; the second Sunday in May he speaks for the Young People's Society in Newbury, O.; from whence he goes to other places in the State. He returns to Michigan in time for the camp which opens at Haslett Park July 26th. He is engaged there for the entire month.

Oscar A. Edgerly spoke for the Bridgeport, Conn., Spiritualist Association Sunday, May 6th; will speak there again May 13th. Would like to make engagements for the remaining Sundays of May.

J. Frank Baxter spoke on Monday evening, April 30th, in Stonington, Conn.; on Thursday and Friday evenings, May 3d and 4th, to appreciative houses in Milford; on Sunday, May 6th, to over a thousand in the large town hall at Gardner; and on Monday evening, May 7th, in the Opera House at Peterboro', N. H. On Sunday, May 13th, he is expected to lecture in Winchendon, and on Sunday, May 20th, in Fitchburg.

Dr. Mark Smith has filled engagements at Salem, Middleton, Fitchburg and New Bedford. Next Sunday he speaks in Mishawum Hall, Charlestown. Address him for future engagements at 24 Hanson street, Boston.

Dr. H. F. Merrill will fill engagements in Monmouth and Mattawamkeag, Me., during May; the first and second Sundays of June he will speak and give tests in Clinton, Mass.; after which he will leave for Chattanooga, Tenn., to fill an engagement for the Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting Association. He is also engaged to give tests at Temple Heights, Verona Park, Etna and Madison Camps, Me. Address, Bucksport, Me.

Newburyport, Mass.—Owing to his previous engagements it was impossible for J. Clegg Wright to be with us on Sunday—although he was desirous so to be. He remembered us in his remarks at Lynn on the 29th of April, giving a ringing reply to the Rev. Mr. Mills's slurs at the female mediums of Spiritualism. For his noble utterances he has our sincere thanks. In the near future we hope to have the pleasure of grasping him by the hand and listening to his grand and eloquent lectures from our platform.

The genial Dr. H. B. Storer was engaged to speak for us, but owing to his being taken ill, we had to forego the pleasure of listening to him.

Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, of Dorchester District, was the speaker then chosen, and nobly did she perform the service—her lectures afternoon and evening being replete with logic and sound sense; they were listened to with close attention by large audiences.

J. W. Fletcher is to be with us next Sunday.

Mrs. N. A. Easson, a prominent and energetic laborer in our Society, is about to leave us and take up her residence in Auburn, N. Y. She has been one of our most faithful workers, always willing to do her share; may success attend her, is the wish of her numerous friends.

The First Spiritualist Independent Club of this place is increasing in membership; a great interest is manifested by the members, and it appears that the cause we love so well will be benefited and strengthened by the work being done by this organization.

Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Boston, was here Sunday with her relatives—this being her native place.

F. H. F.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pittsburgh Society of Spiritualists has held its annual election of officers. Mr. J. H. McElroy and C. L. Stevens were unanimously re-elected President and first Vice-President. No two gentlemen are better able to fill the offices; they are both very zealous in their efforts to make the Society one of the best in the country, and we all hope with the aid of the spirit-world they will succeed. Dr. N. Schenkel, a very amiable gentleman and a stanch believer in the spiritual truth, was elected second Vice-President, in place of our retiring brother Wm. Dickson. Our very able Treasurer, Mr. W. C. Kroegher, was unanimously re-elected to the same office, and the Society showed its appreciation of his strict honesty and integrity in the past. J. Lohmeyer was elected Secretary. The Advisory Board consists of President, J. H. McElroy; Secretary, J. Lohmeyer; and three members: Wm. Fleming, one of the oldest Spiritualists in the ranks, C. L. Stoner and C. L. Stevens. These gentlemen are entrusted with all the business of the Society.

In reviewing the first year of our existence, we come to the conclusion our work has been crowned with wonderful success. We had some of the best lecturers we could procure. The five Sundays in April we had Mrs. A. M. Glading, the gifted inspirational speaker and psychometric reader, who was so well liked and her work so much appreciated that the Society re-engaged her for a month next season. Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings will be with us during the month of May, and close the season of our Society in Pittsburgh. We look forward for a grand unfoldment of spiritual development in our city at the opening of next season.

THE SECRET SYMBOLS

OF THE

ROSICRUCIANS

OF THE

Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries,

WITH A TREATISE ON THE Philosopher's Stone.

Translated from the German by

FRANZ HARTMANN, M. D.

The plates of the Secret Symbols, twenty-seven in number, have been colored by hand, exactly duplicating the originals which Dr. Hartmann secured during his researches among ancient MSS. and occult works in Germany.

Prof. Elliot Coues, F. T. S., writes in reference to the work as follows: "The publication is timely, and cannot fail to attract and entertain many persons who seek the symbols of eternal verities in these mysterious paths. Whether or not the Rosicrucians ever existed as an actual secret confraternity, is, as you know, an open question with the public; and those who are best entitled to speak with authority are significantly silent in this particular. But no competent occultist or mystic has any doubts, or will ever fully divulge the esoteric facts in the case. The volume before me is handsomely gotten up, showing both taste and enterprise on the part of the publishers; and Dr. Hartmann has already won enviable spurs in the literature of occultism, which he is, from his connection with the Indian Branch of the Theosophical Society, well fitted to adorn."

Finely printed on heavy paper, pages 12 by 16 inches, and handsomely bound in cloth. Price $6,00.

It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case.

LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held March 13th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Our Loving Father, as the heart of the little child goes forth in tender affection and confidence toward its earthly parent, so would we lift up our souls in trusting affection unto thee, who art the divine father and author of all life. We approach thee in spirit, sending forth the aspirations of our lives unto thee, who doeth all things well. We are in need of instruction concerning the laws of life; we desire enlightenment concerning the duties of our own being, and in relationship to our own natures.

Oh! our Father God, may an illumination of truth be sent from thy realms of wisdom and knowledge into the hearts of men. May those who are seeking information be instructed and uplifted in thought and in endeavor. May those who are lowly and sad receive the consolation and the comfort which their souls demand. May the weak and the erring be given strength and light to see the way which they tread, with guidance how to reach to higher paths, to more open fields of effort and of goodness. We ask thy benediction to rest upon each life at this time, and may those who are most in need of thy beneficent care receive the glad tidings of great joy which are brought by returning souls. We ask the blessing of the pure and good of angelic life, and may we be able to co-operate with them in their wide-spread mission of good will unto earthly mortals.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We will now consider your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By an Earnest Inquirer, of N. A.] What is spiritual truth; or what are the leading and foundational truths of Spiritualism?

ANS.—The leading, the fundamental truths of Spiritualism are the demonstrable facts of an immortal life for mankind, of a continuity of the affectional nature belonging to humanity, of the existence beyond the grave of the normal faculties of the mind, such as memory and consciousness; these are the fundamental basis of Spiritualism, composing the great bulwark of an eternal structure.

But we have other truths permeating this grand subject, such as appeal to the spiritual nature of mankind. Spiritualism, coming to earth to present its facts and to array its evidences before the thinking mind, does so for a two-fold purpose: that of banishing the fear of death and of casting aside old superstitions, dogmas and errors, which have long cramped and confined the mind of man, and also that of calling the human race up to a consideration of its true significance and its true destiny—all appealing to the inward life, and bringing into activity those spiritual qualities which belong to the divine nature. Spiritualism comes to earth revealing its story of eternal life to mankind; it comes in the name and whispering with the voices of the loved and lost who have been missed from earthly homes; it comes repeating incidents and events of the past known only to those who have gone before, and to those hearts who listen and understand, and so it bases its claims and statements upon a substantial foundation—that of actual verity—which is the grandest, most fundamental truth connected with this vast subject.

Having established its purpose on earth, made known its claims and its mission to mankind, Spiritualism does not pause here, having convinced the individual man that his loved and lost have only been translated to another world, where they have received higher grades of schooling, grander opportunities for the expression of their mental and moral natures, wider fields of action and more lofty heights of progress; it appeals to that individual mind to think and to study itself, to learn something of its own spiritual nature, and to develop lovelier qualities within, which, perchance, have never yet been touched upon by an influence throughout the earthly life. And so Spiritualism teaches that it is the duty as well as the province of man to live a pure and holy life, in short to live in accordance with the principles of right and justice, thereby developing the more lofty portions of his nature; that it is his duty to understand the possibilities of his mind and his spirit, and to give those possibilities proper conditions for their unfoldment and expression. He can best do this, Spiritualism will say, by following the golden rule, by closely studying his every act and thought before it is manifested in outward life, by measuring his deeds by the rule of exact justice, and by concluding, through the processes of his own mind, just how far he comes into relationship with the law of justice and right, and just how far, through his daily conduct, he falls short of these rules. It may be difficult, at first, for a man to come into this line of life, but if he is persistent in his endeavor, if he is strong in effort, he will soon find himself powerful to accomplish, and will gradually fall into that line through which he may actively realize and express the golden rule, which doeth unto others as one would be done by.

Spiritualism, we claim, comes to teach this grand lesson, to appeal to the life of man, and to call it up from the merely temporal conditions of existence to an understanding of the more active forces in life; it would not discourage the maintenance of a knowledge of the external universe, for rather does it proclaim that by seeking into the laws of physical life, and making research into the secrets of nature, man will gain in knowledge, and thus become more powerful to study and to understand himself and his relations to the divine.

The scope of Spiritualism is far-reaching, and if one will only seek to harmonize himself with the laws and the claims of this philosophy he will indeed come to comprehend that, although he is a child of the natural universe, yet is he also a son of the divine; that it is his privilege to learn, to acquire information, and to come into sympathy with all the laws and forces of this and other systems of worlds.

The grand, primal, basic fact of Spiritualism is the demonstration of immortal life for man, manifested through various agencies and by diverse instrumentalities, but ever one and the same powerful force and activity, which cannot be overcome by opposition or by persecution. From this one grand fact springs the knowledge of not only immortal life and consciousness, but of eternal love, sympathy and soul-tenderness, and also the information that man advances from age to age, from gradation to gradation of unfoldment, ever expanding in nature and unfolding in spiritual force and power. In connection with this come great and beautiful lessons, which are taught by spiritual teachers of every age and clime; that the divine rests within the human, and it is the province and privilege of the individual man to so perfect himself as to unfold and to blossom out into that divinity of loveliness and beauty.

Q.—[By the same.] How can one investigate the claims of Spiritualism who can only conveniently put himself in association with those who are equally ignorant on the subject?

A.—It would seem difficult for one adequately to investigate the claims and statements of Spiritualism, who has no associates understanding the subject and its laws, and yet there are in this land to day hundreds of pronounced Spiritualists who have come into a comprehension of the philosophy and the phenomena of Spiritualism, through their own careful investigations, without association and without company. It has been born in upon them that there are subtle influences in the universe having a direct effect upon mortal life, that these influences display a marked intelligence, which may not be explained through the operations of physical law, and so these thinking minds have come to the conclusion that there must be human beings at work in the universe who are unseen by the mortal eye. These minds, many of them, have questioned deeply within themselves: What of this power, and whence cometh this great influence which enters into contact with life on earth? And they have seated themselves quietly, in sanctum or study, or in the common apartment of their abodes, perhaps, and have placed themselves in a passive frame of mind, asking earnestly for some dispensation of spiritual power to enter into their midst, or for some sign of intelligent presence, which may be unseen but potent around them. They have waited patiently, pursued their investigations persistently, and by and-bye the occult forces of their own beings have been utilized, and have served as instrumentalities for the manifestation of spirit power and spiritual intelligence, and so there have come to these minds the demonstrations and the evidence of immortality for which they sought.

And so we would say to your questioner, Mr. Chairman, while it may be difficult for you to pursue your investigations under the conditions surrounding you, yet it is possible that you, yourself, possess mediumistic qualities which in time may be operated upon and utilized by spiritual intelligences, or perchance some one near and dear to you, of your household, may possess such medial powers as may serve the uses of the spirit-world, and therefore we counsel you to go to work systematically and carefully to examine the subject. Seat yourself in a private apartment, with or without members of your family, come into a quiet, passive frame of mind, free from the turmoil and anxieties of external business life, and ask mentally the presence, and if possible, the manifestation of the presence of spirit friends. Be not easily discouraged, although you may sit in this way a number of times without receiving a response to your queries; continue in this line of investigation, for, as you do so, whatever medial qualities you possess will be more potently acted upon by the unseen but intelligent attendants, and by-and-bye, when they have collected their forces, and have made the most of those instrumentalities at their command, they will undoubtedly give to you some exhibition of spiritual power, mental or physical, that may lead you onward in your examination, and give you evidence of their presence and their interest in your life.

"But," your questioner may observe, "I have tried this, and after a long series of patient sittings I have received not the slightest sign of spirit presence and intelligence." If so, you require some new element brought into your surroundings—possibly the attendance and sympathy of a congenial friend. Are you positive in your organism and mental nature? Then may you require the presence and sympathy of a friend who is of a more passive, negative nature; one more easily susceptible to external conditions. Are you negative in your organization and mental nature? Then possibly the spirit-world may require a more positive element to enter into their operations in coming into direct contact with yourself, and you may need the assistance and presence of some congenial friend, whose will-power is established, and who is decided in his mind upon any subject which may arise for his consideration.

Study these things, friend; experiment with them as far as you can, and by-and-bye you may be able, with the assistance of others, to form a battery, so to speak, of power for the spiritual world, which will be the one thing needful to them in their operations with you and your friends.

It is not always necessary for those who investigate to have a knowledge of Spiritualism and its laws, although this is desirable. We have seen those who have studied Spiritualism, and who think they understand it all, forming themselves into circles for the development of mediumship, and sending out such a strong, positive, authoritative power toward the spirit-world, demanding that only their own conditions shall be complied with and made use of, that wise spiritual intelligences have declined to experiment with that circle, or to attempt the operation of whatever medial qualities it has possessed. And we have seen a circle of investigators, altogether uninformed upon the laws and operations and claims of Spiritualism, yet who were humble in their aspirations, earnest in the desire for truth, seeking only that which might come from the good and pure of a higher life; and these individuals, ignorant though they were, and groping in the dark concerning what might lie before them, yet attracted by their humble, earnest and sympathetic natures, bands of bright spirits, who recognized their qualities, who desired to utilize their mediumship; and through these means has sometimes come a wonderful result of experimentation and investigation on the earthly side—a marvelous manifestation of spiritual power from the world beyond.

Q.—Is Spiritualism to be the future belief of coming ages?

A.—We think so, decidedly, and we are hopeful in the expression of the thought. Spiritualism, in the ages to come, will undoubtedly be adopted and recognized as the universal religion of mankind, and yet it may not bear, in its aspect, all the qualities and the appearances which you find in the Spiritualism of to-day. We do not claim that Spiritualism, as it presents itself in this nineteenth century, is a perfected religion, by any means. We recognize its imperfections, not because these are existent within it, but because of the incomplete instrumentalities and provisions which are afforded its manifestation to man. There is much connected with Spiritualism, not essentially a part of it, not inherent in its nature, but which has been attracted to it from external sources; at this time there seem to be crystallizing around it those which seem to detract by their cloudiness from the brilliancy and grandeur of the movement itself, as extended from the spirit-side of life; but these incongruities, materialities, arising from the imperfect lives and conditions of mortals, must eventually drop away from Spiritualism, for they are of the earth, earthy, and do not belong to the spiritual nature of life. Spiritualism itself is a movement in behalf of man to redeem the race from superstition, error and bigotry; in short, to elevate mankind from a condition of ignorance concerning itself and the world to one of knowledge, of recognized truth; therefore we affirm that truth itself is inherent in Spiritualism, a part of this divine movement, and consequently Spiritualism, which is the revelation of truth to mankind, the revealment of knowledge to the human mind, must be firmly established in the human heart, and it must make its way from shore to shore and land to land, being recognized eventually as the one grand religion of the world, the revelation of truth, we say, unto the human race.

There is more in Spiritualism than the casual observer may believe. We affirm that its nature is to spiritualize, to refine and purify the life of humanity, and when one recognizes this in Spiritualism, knowing that it is the spirit of life, that which is abiding and eternal, fitted to refine the human heart and to cast aside that which is purely physical, belonging to the earth alone, then must we recognize the fact that Spiritualism permeates all the universe, and that it is inherent to every system of worlds; consequently we answer the question in this wise: Spiritualism must in time be the religion of humanity; it must be the philosophy which shall reconcile all seeming inconsistencies, harmonize all discordant forces, be a science in relation to human life, which will demonstrate to man the immortal truths of the universe, from which there can be no appeal; appearing as a religion, a philosophy, and as science for humanity, it must assuredly spiritualize, broaden out and elevate the entire human soul and bring it into relationship and active sympathy with the Divine Mind itself.

Q.—Was Jesus Christ the Infinite God, before he came into this world for redemption of the human family?

A.—Certainly not, nor did Jesus, the Christ, ever make such an assertion. This claim has been set up by others, and perhaps as much for their own purpose as for the worship of the man. But we are satisfied that Jesus, known as the Christ, was but a simple human being, lowly and humble by birth, patient, and filled with humility by nature, loving, sympathetic, and sensitive in every department of his being. What follows? That he was a subject for the operation of spiritual influences, and that he served as an instrument of the higher powers of the spirit-world, for the accomplishment of certain lines of work, and the expression of truth which they desired to establish on the earth. Thus do we look upon Jesus the Nazarene, a man of sorrows, a son of humanity. Belonging to the world he certainly did, as every moral reformer, in every age, and every spiritual teacher in all time, belongs to the world and to humanity.

Did he belong to God? Yes; as each one of you belong to God, and are children of the Divine Intelligence, whose power, whose potency of electrical force is, and ever must be, alive within your own beings. Jesus, the Christ, the message-bearer, the missionary of peace, came to earth, attended by a guard of wise intelligences, unseen by mortal eyes, but active in power, filled with brain-thought, and moved by compassion for ignorant humanity. He was made to serve these intelligences, doing their will, only subservient to them, because he felt their mission and their power were beyond all the things and the temptations of earthly life, and so he denied himself temporal possessions, swept aside those things which might allure him from the path of duty and truth, and so content to fellowship with the lowly and meek, to find his raiment and lodging where best he could, feeling secure in the presence and companionship of the true and good who surrounded him from spiritual life, and did his work, performed his mission, and passed on.

The world did not then recognize the power of moral truth nor the beauty of spiritual fealty, but in time it recognized these attributes in the humble life of the man Jesus, and catching them up for its own use, humanity set them aloft, and called upon its kind to worship the man as a divine being, forgetting that it is principles, moral attributes, that we are to adore, and that individual intelligence should call for the homage of no human heart. So the man was set up, and the entire world came to look upon him as a deity, but we must gaze beneath these superstitions and errors and bigoted assumptions that have clustered around the man and his life, to find the principle and the holy thought emanating from within, and gleaming forth, under spiritual guidance and instruction, to brighten lonely hearts, to soothe sorrow, and give cheer to those in need.

Q.—[By A. S. J.] Does not the ability of mediums to sit for mental or physical spirit manifestations vary? That is, whilst it would be an injury to the health of one to sit more than three times a week, could not another sit a greater number of times without sustaining injury?

A.—Possibly there are those individuals who can sit daily for the manifestation of spirit power in their presence, of a physical nature or for the appearance of mental phenomena, without sustaining any marked injury to their systems or to their mental natures, but we believe such individuals are very few. One may possess a large surplus of physical force, and it may be that this physical force contains within itself certain qualities, which may be collected and utilized by spirit intelligences in their operations upon material things. Through the agency of this conserved force, these spirits may be able to give tangible manifestations of their power, such as will appeal to the sight, the hearing, or other physical senses of mankind; but we should hesitate long before advising any medium possessing these qualities to sit more than three times a week for their utilization and their expression. There may be mediums who possess within themselves such magnetisms as may serve as a connecting link between their own organisms and those of spirit intelligences. These magnetisms may be employed by the spirits in attaching themselves to the medial organism or the brain structure of the mortal, and so they may be able to impress their thought, and whatever they have to express, in a correct and accurate manner upon the brain of their subject, which, in turn, is transmitted to the world; but we should not counsel a medium of this kind to sit daily for development, because by so doing a larger amount of her physical and magnetic force would be used up than the system could possibly supply, and so it would only be a question of time when she should fall into ill health, either of a physical or a mental character.

"But," you will say, "there are mediums who are sitting every day for spirit manifestations who seem to be in perfect health and in strong mental condition." Very true; there are hundreds of mediums who can do this, after their powers are fully developed, and themselves have come under the direct supervision of wise and exalted spirit attendants, for these mediums are, in a measure, supplied with magnetic force by those spirit-guides who surround them, and it is also the duty of their spirit-attendants to extract from those mortals who can harmonize with their subjects, such elements of magnetic strength as may be useful to their medium, and to conduct these elements to her organism; therefore such a medium, well developed, harmoniously situated in her external life, under the direct protection of a wise band of powerful spirits, may move on from year to year, giving her daily sittings and performing her usual labor without detriment to mind or body. But the rules are to be very strictly followed, else the time will come when without warning the subject will break down, find herself debilitated and depleted of vital force and of mental power.

In seeking the development of mediumship, we should advise the sitting in a harmoniously arranged private home circle of kindly natures two or three times a week, following the same rules at each sitting, meeting in a well-ventilated apartment, with quiet minds, free from excitement, in a condition to evoke the presence of the pure and good, asking no especial manifestations, but willing to receive and to examine whatever may be presented from the spirit-side of life.

Q.—[By M. M. B., California.] Does it ever happen that one in this life who is disposed to do right under all circumstances, is led to do wrong, and to suffer the penalty thereof by spiritual influence? If so, does the unwilling transgressor attain a condition in spirit-life as pure and elevated as though he had not thus transgressed?

A.—There are exceptions in the universe to every well-established rule in life, and we have come to look upon these exceptions, because of their rarity, as only proving the verity and regularity of the rule itself. Now we affirm, as we have done in the past, that those who try to live a pure and good life, who are harmonious by nature and unselfish, who do not envy their neighbors nor try to overreach them in any way, however humbly situated they may be in worldly things, will attract to their sides only the pure and good of angelic life, and such souls will become recipients of heavenly ministrations from above and receive the protection and guidance of good spirits, even though those spirits have not the power of outwardly manifesting their presence to those in mortal life.

We have also asserted, and still maintain, that as a general rule those who are afflicted by the machinations and influence of undeveloped, impure spirits, have in some way opened the doorway for those spirits to enter into their lives. They must have transgressed in some manner some rule of right living or of good conduct. Perhaps not in deed, perhaps they have made no movement outwardly to injure a fellow-being, yet they may have had selfish, rebellious thoughts, may be envious of some one more fortunate than themselves, may have exercised and exhibited in spirit a very unlovely disposition, which has thrown out magnetic emanations of a like quality, and attracted some spirit or spirits who are themselves evil-thinkers and wrong-doers, and so the door has been open, the mischievous influence has entered to do its work, and the man or woman who has been led astray, who has fallen under the temptation of these unwise, imperfect spirits, will feel and realize that although it is the work of independent intelligences, yet it is their own doing which has caused this thing.

But there may be exceptions to either of these rules; probably there has been, and may be again, a person perfectly innocent in thought and in action, one who has tried to do his duty by his fellow-men, who has not overreached another, nor has he ever coveted those things which did not belong to him, who may in some moment have come under the influence of an unlovely, crude spirit-intelligence, and perhaps have been made by that spirit to do a deed which has brought some injury upon another. Should this thing be so, there must have been something in the surroundings of the innocent person to attract the unhappy spirit; either the associations which have been his were not up to the high standard which they should ever be, to the right-thinking mind, or perhaps those with whom he has been thrown in contact are themselves out of harmony, unlovely in disposition and character, and so they have brought into their atmosphere spirits such as we have described, which have come in contact with the susceptible being. These things may have been in rare instances, not as a universal rule by any means. Now the questioner asks: "If such a case should be that an innocent person should be brought under the psychological power of a depraved spirit, and be made to do that which is wrong, because of that spirit's power, will he find happiness in the other life?" That depends altogether upon the mental nature of the individual. When he enters the spirit-world, understands this matter in its fullness, gazes upon it, studies it in every detail, and comes to realize that he was only the machine working for another mind when he committed the deed, it may be he will feel he has no responsibility in the matter, that it belongs to the spirit who really operated upon him, and so he may throw off the feeling of sorrow and remorse because of the wrong he was made to commit.

As a general rule, we should suppose such a spirit would not feel himself freed from all responsibility in the matter, until it had been explained in its fullness to those who had suffered wrong because of his deed, and until they should have expressed themselves satisfied with the explanation and willing to look for redress to the spirit who ordained the wrong.

Another spirit, however, than that just mentioned, looking at the matter from all sides, realizing just how far he served as an instrument of another mind, just how he was made to do this wrong by the superior will force of a more positive spirit, may feel he has a certain amount of responsibility that had he been differently situated, and more on the defensive in his spiritual nature, exercising a certain degree of positive mental force to keep off those influences that are depraved, he would not have been thus afflicted, he may feel sorrowful because of his ignorance, and because of his negative condition of mind, and so in a degree the spirit may suffer. It is a law of his own being which shall determine whether he suffers or not, and it will be at the bar of his own judgment where this suffering comes in. If his own soul is satisfied he has been entirely innocent in thought and deed, that his motives were pure, and he did not himself sin or commit wrong, then his sufferings will be light, they will be all swept away in the effort he will make to bless others, to atone for any wrong that may have been done in working for the benefit of all.

Helen Spencer.

I have been asked to come here and say a few words, by a friend who has long looked for a message from me in this circle-room, and I have frequently tried to speak, making myself known to my dear friend, whom I love as a child loves her mother, without that success which I have desired. To-day the kind gentleman who has presided motioned me to enter, taking advantage of that magnetic power which he would not entirely use up for himself in the discussion of the questions, and I am more than thankful, for I cannot express the joy of my heart in coming to-day to my friend.

This date is close to an anniversary near and dear to her, one that she always keeps in her heart, and which calls out the most beautiful expressions of her soul to the spirit-world. It seems fitting I should come to-day to send greeting and remembrances of her dear friends from on high to my loved friend Caroline, in her earthly home.

She has seen trials, and felt as though her life had not been according to the highest dictates of her soul, but I know she has accomplished all that she possibly could under the conditions that have surrounded her. I come to bid her be of good cheer, to encourage her in her work, and to say: While you are faithful to the dear old parent, dependent upon you, while you support his footsteps and make his days more pleasant than they could be without your loving service, you are doing the angels' work, and will certainly find a blessing for each day and hour when you pass to the spirit home.

Flora comes with me, bringing flowers and greetings, beautiful and sweet as they have always been. She wishes me to say, on that anniversary day which soon approaches, that she and other dear friends will scatter your way with flowers, and she will lay the beautiful purple blooms upon your pillow, and perhaps you may gain a glimpse of their sweetness, and realize that the angels are strong around your home.

My friend will understand, because she has asked for my message; she has longed and prayed for a word of cheer from the spirit-world, and I know she looks for it from week to week. I am Helen Spencer.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held March 16th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Robert Withers.

You may place me in Palmyra, N. Y. Robert Withers. I would like to say that Robert lives, and I want the children and mother to learn a little while they are here. Isaac has been trying, by the help of the good spirits, to learn a great deal. Robert, my son, always learn whenever opportunities are placed before you. You know not how much you are losing when you push the plate of spiritual food away from you. Taste and see how much happiness you gain by learning to come into communication with the dear ones. Mother is here, and father, also Mr. Remick, an old-time friend of mine.

I have partially materialized to my son Isaac a number of times. As I came into communication with him but a short time ago, I felt every moment flitting so fast away that he said: "Father, I must get the train." We do n't depend upon trains where we are, and I have never been left yet.

Learn all you can, children, and you will not learn any too much. I have sometimes thought, as I have stood close beside you, how strange, oh! how strange! I am walking right around with you daily, and still you cannot see us. The veil is over your eyes, not ours. Some mortals often think the veil is drawn across our eyes, but we see you nearly as plainly as when in the mortal. When we have an instrument we see you perfectly, but when not provided with one we cannot see the mortal form as plain, but the spirit we see perfectly. I often feel a little regret, and wish I had learned a little more here. I usually did my own thinking, and was a little too set. It might have been of a great deal of benefit to me, but as long as I placed the plate of spiritual food away from me, no one was to blame. Neither was I to blame, because it was through my ignorance. And now I have learned that coming into communication with the loved ones helps us to progress on more and more fully until we shall at last feel that it has been a great benefit to us, even if we could say but a few words.

Enos Foster.

As I look down into the audience here I see some who will remember Enos Foster, of Boston. I have been here in this very room many times—to-day is n't the first time—but it is the first time I have been able to make myself known in this way. The brother down in the fifth seat—as near as I can call it up—has got my seat; but it is all right. I've got the platform, so you are welcome to it.

All I learned here has been a great help to me. Mother has asked if I feel that I have gained by what I learned in the mortal. Oh! most assuredly I have. It is like a school, and if you do n't learn on the earth-side you must on the other.

I have met with one and another of the old people that once walked your streets. Bro. Rich stands a little back of me, and will speak also. We think we learn a great deal here, and when we enter the spirit-life we find it is a great help if we even learn but little. I would say to each one, learn all you can.

I stepped down a little way yonder, into a store, where I used to go sometimes, on Milk street, and I heard them speaking of me. And like an earnest listener I thought I 'd not be in a hurry to get away. The old adage did n't prove true that "listeners hear no good of themselves." I did, for they spoke very well of me, and more than that said I was an "honest, upright man." I aint a going to say anything about it; I did what I thought was right—as is required of us by the good God. We are not accountable for anything further, therefore we should go according to the dictation of the spirit.

Isaac Rich.

Will you please place me in your good old city, too, Mr. Chairman? Isaac Rich—not Isaac B. Rich. I shall be remembered by many people here. I was a wholesale fish dealer, and I accumulated a great deal of what is termed "this world's goods." And after all, they can't get along without having a little fuss when you are gone; somebody always wants the inside slice. I did what I thought was right with what had been gained by me. And I will say further, God knows I worked hard at the start—began down low—and pretty low, too.

Sister Zuba is with me, whom I did something for when here; but she followed me not a great while since.

Norah, the angel child, now stands beside me, as she did when I dwelt in the mortal. Way down on Cape Cod, in Provincetown, yes, and in Wellfleet, have I been so many times, and this child I have played with, as a child with a doll. She does not forget me—the angel child—and the great angel world has given her a work to do.

I think I shall be remembered down by the wharf, and way down by the ferry; I hardly think they have forgotten Isaac Rich, of Boston.

Emory Page.

I hardly know how to get control, but I guess after I get started I 'll go along. Emory Page, of Salem, N. H. I passed out quite a long time since, but do n't think for a minute that I have n't been trying to come into communication with Mary, also with Dora and with Henry, for they have often spoken of me. That is all they knew about me. Too apt to place us too far away.

Now let me say, not only to the dear ones but to each one: When you think of us, oh! do n't place us so far away. Heaven! why, it is only a step. I know I used to hear the Elder say that Heaven was "way off," "a far country," and I used to think it must be pretty near the North Pole. I found when I passed out it was not far, and I soon saw the dear ones, father and grandmother Emory. She bid me "Come up higher," and made me welcome. I felt a little bewildered, for I supposed, according to what had been taught us, that I should have to go through many a street and lane before I fetched up in heaven, if I got there at all. Oh! do n't talk about heaven's being so far away. Why, it is so near, if the veil was pulled aside we could touch you! That certainly can't be the North Pole, nor 't aint up in Canada neither.

Now I'd like them to know that Emory Page aint been asleep all this time, and, as Augustus Smith says (he knows me), we are more alive than you think for. I wish they would try and avail themselves of the opportunities that have been presented to them, for there have been some that might have learned. But no; so afraid they might do something wrong! I'd like to ask 'em this question: If it is wrong for us to come here, was n't it wrong for us to converse together when we dwelt in the mortal? Look at it the same as a visit: I know they like to go a visiting pretty well, and this is the same to us.

Betsey Stone.

I lived in this city. Betsey Stone. I never tried to talk in a meeting like this. But what, in all nature, did they want to carry them bones way down in Maine for? I did n't care what they done with 'em. Need n't have been to so much trouble about it. So long they were getting started with the bones! I did n't stay there after they carried 'em. I came afore they got here. I want Laura to know I do n't forget her. I 've been down there, looking things over. It is in Dennis, Maine.

I guess I might as well say it: I do n't think very much of making 'em all that trouble. However, I did n't make 'em do it, because it did n't matter where they put that handful of bones. I do n't care anything about 'em. I aint attracted there much. I came back to your city because I feel it is home.

When I go out to the Highlands, out Blue Hill way, I find the folks pretty blue sometimes, and I wish they knew Aunt Betsey Stone was round there among 'em. Then I go back again to my old place. But oh! they go right along, just as if they thought they owned the whole city. By-and-bye they 'll clearly come to an understanding.

I did n't know so much about coming back, but Laura knew a good deal. She used to talk sometimes about such things. Well, I thought I 'd rather trust myself, and wait, and so I did. But I do wish, now, I had learned a little something. Won't this help me? [I think it will.] Much obliged to you, and all the rest of the folks.

If they want to hear from me I do n't care anything about going way down in Maine, because I 'm more attracted to this place. I 'll be much obliged if you 'll say it 's Betsey Stone. I hope this will reach Laura. I guess she 'll get the paper; she 's pretty liberal to buy papers, and I think she will get this.

Carrie Winkley.

My home was in Stoneham, Mass., when in the mortal. I am Carrie Winkley. Now I see father and mother, and Sammie and Lottie have made a change. I think they will hardly be contented. I wonder a little that mother should go in that direction. Why did n't she go in the other? I think she would have been better satisfied. Arthur and Charles are here close beside me. He can't keep still, any more than he ever could; he keeps nudging my arm, to say this, that and the other. I think Arthur should wait and let me tell my story first.

Father, do learn a little something here, for I know Aunt Mary and Uncle Alonzo are happier since they feel that we all live. Mother often says: "Oh! if I could only talk with father about you, Carrie, I should be happier." Mother gets a sweet morsel and puts it into her box, and has to lock it up. I know it all. But oh! mother dear, there will be a time when you will not be compelled to look up spiritual food. I often come to you in the stilly hours of night; and sometimes I find grandpa and grandma there, but not always. Sometimes the boys are there, but Arthur says he must help Aunt Louise. It is very kind of him to do it. I 'll promise you he won't forget to come to earth pretty often.

Aunt Mary, I was so happy when I found we all could come into communication, if we only give but a few words. But you know, auntie, we can't always do as we 'd like to.

Grandpa Winkley is here, and grandma says they are not all present at this meeting, but we shall keep trying to come, and, in time, we shall all be able to send a little message.

Mother often wonders why they took Carrie away. Carrie will be given back to mother in heaven. Do n't repine, but look a little higher, and you will know your darling lives, and is able to watch over you every day.

Dear sister, I am often beside you; angels bless the home. My mother's name is Rebecca; my father's is Jefferson.

Helen Bartlett.

My home was in Charlestown, Mass. My name is Helen Bartlett. I have tried, many times, to come to Carrie, Lizzie and Harry. Harry understands a little more than the girls do; but sometime they will be more willing to listen than they are to-day.

Harry, Minnie is close beside me, and also your own dear father is in the surroundings, but not quite close enough to send a message, yet he says: "God bless his boy Harry, and stand by the mother always, for she has had many trials since he passed away." Sammie says, tell Harry he is here close beside father. Minnie says, tell Harry that she was disappointed, a little while ago, for the clouds came and the wind blew furiously, so she did n't get into communication, but she hopes soon to be able to.

It is not very long, it seems to me, since they said that Helen was dead. I desire to send greetings to Abbie, for she would like to commune with us. But Frank says: "No; spirits do n't come to earth." If not, Frank, where are they? We are more perfect in form than you can be on earth. Abbie, learn a little here; and if Frank do n't care to, let it be until he comes the other side, and he will be glad to learn.

Materialization.

In the present restless state of mind in regard to the above phase of spirit phenomena, the following from a spirit communicating to a circle of inquirers in Cardiff, in 1880, and appearing in a recent number of The Two Worlds, may be read with profit:

"Like other spirit sciences, it can only be understood by a spiritual or corresponding person. Let those persons sit around mediums who have a superabundance of the brain aura, those who throw out their sympathy toward their spirit-friends. It is always safer for the medium to be screened from the influence which emanates from the eyes of the sitters, as it is most severe, and detrimental to the building up of a material form. The matter which is drawn from the medium and sitters is condensed into a vapory cloud, then the spirit wishing to show himself plunges into it, after having made himself positive, so that the matter is attracted to him.

"If the spirit has a more powerful and positive mind than the medium, and there is not a sufficient supply of these forces from the sitters, then there is much force drawn from the body of the medium, not that the flesh and blood is drawn away, but the spiritual substance from his surroundings, consequently gravitation is altered. In this case the medium's body would become much lighter, for the weight or gravitation is attracted to the spirit-body. When conditions have been unfavorable, or the force derived from the sitters is deficient, the attraction between the spirit-form and the medium has necessarily been greater.

"Every person admitted to a circle ought to be careful as to his state of mind, owing to the very delicate character of the laws governing the operations of the spirit in these phenomena. The minds of the sitters have great effect on the manifestations, and when persons go to a circle intending to effect an exposure (so called), there are often things which occur to give them the opportunity. But they forget that in materialization it is mind acting on matter, and the minds of the sitters may have more power to influence and determine the result than is generally supposed, and maybe drive away the spirit influence from the medium, and their influence may then govern the actions of the medium and produce the very result they expected. You will understand that these sitters occupy more advantageous ground than the spirits for psychologizing the medium and breaking the influence of the spirit. You must in Nature always provide conditions for the development of her beautiful products. Under unfavorable conditions you never get beautiful flowers; how much more necessary in a spirit-circle where you deal with the subtle influence of mind on mind!

"No person ought to be allowed to witness materializations until they have been made to understand the laws which govern them. You ought to provide schools, and let every investigator commence at the most simple rudiments of manifestation, then let the mind endeavor to grasp the knowledge of the laws that are brought into operation to produce them. Thus a foundation will be laid for the study of other phases of manifestation. A circle organized in this manner, with minds that are spiritual, would get the most successful results.

"When no manifestations take place, it is very often more the fault of the sitters than that of the medium. The medium is merely an instrument for the spirit-friends who use him by their brain-power, but it is possible, when the harmony is not intact, for the minds who are in the circle to control the medium. Purify the circle and you will get higher manifestations; uplift the aspirations, assist the spirit-friends, and they will be able to come and walk and talk with you as when in earth-life. Then the darkened vision will be cleared, and the divine rays from the great source of light will illuminate all; the minds of the mourners will be made glad, and the angels, not in ones and twos, but in numbers, shall appear and manifest themselves to their friends."

MAGNETIC INSOLES

To the Spiritualists of the World!

YOU have been calling for more magnetic life for nearly forty years. The invention of Magnetic Shields places within your reach the most powerful Magnetic Batteries ever constructed, and exactly adapted to all the needs and wants of your physical and spiritual well-being. To magnetize and polarize the body is to intensify and increase all the intellectual and spiritual faculties. All mediums and sensitives should wear Magnetic Shields. The vitalizing and energizing power radiated from these Magnetic Reservoirs of Life will redouble the life potencies and quadruple the spiritualizing entities for every one who wears them. Dr. Thacher's Magnetic Shields excel and transcend all known healing powers and forces except that coming direct from the world of spirit. If the Spiritualists of the world will read our logic and consult with the Highest Intelligence, they will get assurance which will convince every intelligent investigator. All the knowledge which led up to the perfecting of these Shields came from the world of invisible spirit. We are warranted in saying Magnetism is all spirit and an immaterial substance. Spirit is the only substance in the true sense of the word. Spiritualists are too well informed to be misled on this subject. Why not send for our book and read what we have to say of genuine spiritual substance? If you want further proof that we state truth, send $1.00 for a pair of Insoles, or $2.00 for THREE PAIRS.

Please be sensible and investigate. Magnetism will infuse new life into broken-down physical bodies. Try it, and be convinced. Our book sent free.

COCINISM,

The Science of Practical Will-Ability and Psychological Hygiene.

THIS wonderful science teaches man how to obtain control over the greater part of his nervous system, and to such an extent that, by the exercise of his will, he can direct currents of vital force through any part of the body. When the exercise of this power is once learned, the brain and the whole nervous system can be cleansed, more or less, according to the amount of force exerted by the will.

If pain is experienced in any part of the body, when not the effects of physiological changes, it can be removed simply by removing the cause thereof; and even where such changes have taken place, if powerful currents of vital force can be forced through the parts affected, much foreign matter can be removed, thus giving Nature a chance to repair damages, especially in affections of the Liver. Failing Sight and Memory have been restored in many cases, whilst chest diseases are always amenable to this power.

There is another Phase of the Science: The Psychology of Mediumship.

This branch deals directly with the development of Sensitives. Hundreds of persons have been developed as seers who never dreamed that they were mediumistic; whilst, when making experiments, many persons where invited to sit, without knowing anything about what they were sitting for, yet the results were the same; proving, beyond doubt, that to become a medium, all that is required is the proper organism and a fair stock of common honesty.

Sensitives developed by this process never lose their consciousness whilst traveling through the Realm of Spirit; therefore, all descriptions of places seen and information given, whilst journeying through space, are indelibly impressed upon the memory, and to such an extent that, where there is sufficient ability, maps of the country and plans of buildings are readily obtained, whilst the identity of spirits seen and spoken to are placed beyond all doubt.

In the event of the world saying that I claim too much for the Psychology of Mediumship, I would refer to an account of a portion of my work in South Africa written by the Spiritualists of Cape Town, together with the address that I received on the eve of my departure for South America, both of which were printed in the Medium and Daybreak, April 24th, 1885.

I feel impressed to give these facts to the world at large, with the view of demonstrating them, wherever I am called upon to do so. Business matters will detain me here in Rosario until next June, after which time, if the people of the United States think sufficient of my Science to invite me to their shores, I can readily prove all that is herein stated. If societies or communities wish to write to me, my address is C. C. COLLINS, F. C. A.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Prescriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

☞ All Spiritualists are cordially invited to become connected with THE ALLIANCE—either as resident or non-resident members—and to take an active part in its work.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead," and all such are invited to become members. NELSON CROSS, President.

J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

The American Spiritualist Alliance.

At the regular meeting of THE ALLIANCE, held on May 2d, the attention of the members was called to the attack that had been made upon Spiritualism and Spiritualists by the newspapers of this city, aided and abetted by a police justice and certain lawyers—this attack being based upon charges made against a Madam Diss Debar, who states emphatically that she is not a Spiritualist, and never has been one, but claims that she is a medium for spirit phenomena, and produced evidence to support her claims to mediumship. Yet notwithstanding her denial that she is a Spiritualist—her arrest having been made the basis for a most unjust attack upon millions of the citizens of the United States and their religious belief—The Alliance, after a full discussion of the subject, passed the following resolutions:

[The discussion of this matter consumed the entire session, and immediately after adopting the resolutions, The Alliance adjourned, to meet again at its parlors, 219 West 42d street, New York, on Wednesday evening, May 16th.]

JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

New York, May 2d, 1888.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That in the recent proceedings against Mrs. Diss Debar and others before one of the police justices of this city, on a charge of conspiracy, the members of The American Spiritualist Alliance have beheld a display of prejudiced opposition to Spiritualism and Spiritualists, on the part of those concerned in the prosecution, as well as of the journalistic press of the city, that amounts to persecution, and calls for our strongest rebuke and protest; inasmuch as the latter has most obviously interfered with the fair and proper administration of justice, by making a gift of mediumship, by no means unprecedented, the basis for reproach, insult and condemnation, and thus pandering to a false prejudice in the public mind.

Resolved, That, whatever the private character of the chief defendant may be (and we do not here consider her character), and whatever her acts independent of the charge of conspiracy, on which she has undergone a preliminary trial, that charge is all that enters into the case, and all upon which she can be held; and the attempt to make her endowments as a medium and her relation, through those endowments, to Spiritualism the foundation for judicial condemnation, is a species of religious bigotry which, in principle, is a violation of the constitutional rights of all citizens and inimical to American liberty.

Resolved, That the stupid caricatures of spiritual manifestations, by conjuration, sleight-of-hand, and petty mechanical devices, permitted by the presiding magistrate to be presented as evidence in his court, were not only contemptible as pretended duplications of genuine spiritual phenomena, but most reprehensible as obviously an effort to bring Spiritualism and Spiritualists into reproach and derision, and calculated to prejudice public opinion against the defendants in the case, by means of a false issue and an unfair treatment of that issue.

Resolved, That the journalistic press of this city has pursued an unjustifiable course in the publication of biased, incorrect and partial statements of the incidents of the trial, in the derision and lampooning of respectable citizens who have testified in behalf of the principal defendant as a medium, and in the wanton abuse of all persons claiming to take any interest in the cause of Spiritualism, though that cause has its supporters and vindicators among the most respectable, honorable and intelligent of the citizens of this and of many other countries.

Resolved, That we earnestly invite the attention of all Spiritualists to this state of facts, and invoke their coöperation in the taking of such measures as will protect our cause and serve to rebuke and check this flagrant violation of the fundamental principles of law and liberty based thereon. Moreover,

Resolved, That the President of this Organization be appointed a Committee of One to prepare and report, at the next meeting of this body, a statement of the facts of this case in detail, with an appeal to American Spiritualists and all fair minded citizens, whether Spiritualists or not, against this gross injustice and violation of constitutional rights.

Resolved, That these Resolutions be forwarded to the Spiritualist journals for publication.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning, after singing by Mr. and Mrs. Lillie, Miss Eakins accompanist, the guides of Mrs. Lillie offered an invocation, and followed the same with a consideration of questions relative to the substitution of the word witch for woman in the account of the medium at Endor given in the Old Testament; in doing which Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage's tirade against Spiritualism—because he, having advanced as his own the legitimate teachings and conclusions derived from Spiritualism, had been credited by some as being a Spiritualist—was considered. The speaker clearly showed the animus that actuated Mr. Talmage, and the difficulty he experienced, and the singular exhibition he made to all thoughtful people, in his endeavor to stand on both sides of a fence at the same time—to serve two masters, the spiritual and the material. The lecture was listened to with close attention. It was said that truth—notwithstanding the unkind treatment it receives, the opposition it meets, and the strenuous efforts of those whose selfish plans it subverts, to thwart its purpose—will eventually triumph, and rule the whole world.

At the close of the lecture E. W. Emerson made a few remarks, and gave a number of unmistakable proofs of the presence of the spirit friends of several of the audience.

A hymn sung by the congregation closed the services.

Evening.—After a song by Mr. Lillie, and an invocation, Mrs. Lillie's guides spoke upon "Foreordination; or the Foretelling of Events." "We believe in Foreordination," they said, "Nature is governed by law; man is a student of the law; intelligences around mediums, or clairvoyants, often can read a person's life and foretell events. The astronomer reads the planets, and can calculate scientifically according to his ability to do so. The disciples asked Jesus, 'What are the signs of the times?' At present men are thinking, reasoning, studying for themselves. Man, know thyself, be thyself, enter into thy closet, the temple within, and drive out the money-changers, all that is unfit and wrong, and the God-principle of right living and love will dwell therein."

A poem closed the services.

Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform next Sunday, morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7:30.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Mrs. Lake spoke last Sunday to a large audience, under the control of Spirit Lafayette, on the "Future of Our Country." She said in substance: Dangers loom up in the horizon of our future. The large element in our population who have fled from a foreign yoke, must be assimilated and become Americanized. Unaccustomed to our institutions, they have to learn liberty without license. The reaction from the repressive systems of Europe, constituted a danger; the lusts of power and selfishness of men were a constant assault, and it was the duty of each citizen to oppose a firm, free patriotism, to all disintegrating forces. The fathers of our country bequeathed to us a government as perfect as seemed possible for the nation at that time. It is for us to see to it that no backward step is taken. Let us improve upon it, making right and justice the pillars upon which it is based. The preamble of our Declaration of Independence states that all men are born free and equal. All are equal, not in attainments of mind or development, but in the right to happiness and protection before the law—or should be—and it is an injustice that so large a body of our citizens should be disfranchised. Give woman the ballot; her voice is always on the side of right. The time may come when the ballot possessed by woman may save the republic.

The fathers of the nation, they who helped to form these institutions, and who shed their blood to gain and maintain them, look down now with as much interest as they felt of yore upon our growing country. They see that in this fair land is being tried the experiment if man is able to govern himself, and yet preserve liberty. Our success is the success of the whole world; for in every nation the toiling masses are looking to us as an example, and to our shores for a haven of refuge. We shall be sustained; liberty shall not die out, but it is for us, for every citizen to exercise all his rights for its preservation and perpetuation. It is our duty to take an active part in politics, and not leave it to the selfish and the vicious, but by voice and vote to bear on the ark of republican liberty in safety to our children and our children's children.

Next Sunday the guides of Mrs. Lake will speak upon the subject of "Materialization, its Use and Development," at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M. There will also be the Temple Fraternity School at 12:30 P. M., and the usual Sociable on Wednesday at 7:30 P. M. All friends are cordially invited to each or any of the above meetings. Seats free. W. H. R.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Paine Hall. The attendance Sunday, May 6th, was the largest of the season, there being one hundred and thirty-six in the march. A fine programme was offered of recitations, songs, callisthenics, under direction of their efficient Conductor, Benjamin P. Weaver. The names of the children who participated in the exercises were: Recitations, Blanche Meyers, Alice Cummings, Margarette Fuller, Lottie Giles, Flossie Sargent, Ella Wendemuth, Flossie Waite, Alice Ireland, Flossie Butler; Singing, Jessie Judkins, Rebecca Axe, Mabel Waite and Gracie Scales, with Master Bertie Newton as accompanist. Master Carleton James, the child violinist, only five years of age, was present, and favored us with fine selections on the violin, which elicited well merited applause.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend our Lyceum on Sunday mornings and see what a large number of talented children we have there, and also the labor a few earnest workers, who, having the interest of the children at heart, are engaged in.

Last Saturday a large number of the children, attended by Mrs. Wm. S. Butler, visited Horticultural Hall to see a performance of the educated seals. Mrs. Butler leaves nothing undone to promote the happiness of the Lyceum children; may she long continue the good work in which she is engaged.

Every Wednesday afternoon and evening the sewing circle connected with the Lyceum meets at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. All are cordially invited to attend; the entertainments of the evenings are novel and varied. HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

The First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society.—The meetings of this Society on Friday, May 4th, were well attended and an unusual degree of interest was manifested. The afternoon session is the one known to the members of the Ladies' Aid as the "spirits' afternoon," at which time all work is laid aside and the time devoted to communion with the spirit members of the society. The entertainment of the evening was opened with a duet by Miss Bailey and Miss Wakefield, followed by remarks by Mr. Jacob Edson, reading by Allie Cummings, song by Mabel Waite, and an address from Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock. After a song from Miss Bailey, Mrs. M. C. Donnell, Mr. L. L. Whitlock and Mr. Edson held a very interesting discussion upon what relation, if any, Christian Science holds to Modern Spiritualism.——On Friday evening, May 25th, this society will give a "Poverty Party." All are requested to attend, and a good time will be guaranteed.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meetings were well attended Sunday last. Eben Cobb gave an address in the morning upon: "The Other Side, and This." Dr. H. B. Storer never spoke with a more earnest gift of inspiration than was manifested in his afternoon oration. Frank T. Ripley delivered many cogent thoughts, and gave, as is his wont, many spirit-communications. Mrs. A. E. King spoke under control, and was warmly applauded. The discourse given by Dr. Sutton Clark was one that his hearers will long remember. Dr. Leighton was strong in his eloquent portrayal of spirit truth. The diagnoses given by Dr. W. S. Eldridge and Dr. C. H. Harding were marked in their decisive character. Excellent tests and readings were given by Miss A. Peabody, Mrs. A. Forrester, Mrs. Shackley, Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, Arthur McKenna, and Mr. McKenzie. VINDEX.

Norwich, Conn.—This is as pretty a town as one will find in a tour of New England—set in a frame of wooded hills and divided into "Norwich" and "the West Side" by the beautiful Thames River. It is rich in natural scenery and historic interest. It was the home of Benedict Arnold, and the house in which he once lived still stands in that part of Norwich called "the old town."

On Wednesday, the 25th ult., Mrs. R. S. Lillie lectured in Temperance Hall to a highly interested audience: "How Can the Growing Evil of Intemperance Best be Combated and Restrained?" and "What is the Mission of Spiritualism?" were among the questions answered in an eloquent and pointed manner.

Speaking of this inspirational discourse, a correspondent of Cooley's Weekly says: "I wonder, by the way, how many clergymen there are in Norwich who could stand before an audience of every shade of belief, Sunday after Sunday, as those gifted women do, taking whatever questions any one chooses to send up, and speaking upon these in an eloquent, logical and interesting manner. If betting were not sinful I would wager quite a sum that there are not two ministers in town who would do it for a month and keep their audiences awake."

Although but five or six years old, the Norwich Society of Spiritualists is a healthy, vigorous, good-natured child. Its efficient Secretary, Mrs. J. A. Chapman—animated by the real missionary spirit of unselfish love and desire to be truly useful to others—is a host in herself, and practically "the hand at the wheel." Generously and unostentatiously, Sunday after Sunday, the year round, this lady supplies choice flowers for the speaker's stand; and undoubtedly the tenderness of many an invocation, the beauty of many a poem and the grace of many an inspirational lecture has been enhanced by their fragrance and loveliness.

It has been the writer's privilege to minister to this Society the past two Sundays, and although the stay has been brief, it has been a most pleasant one.

May 2d. HELEN STUART-RICHINGS.

New London, Conn.—The Sundays of April 15th and 22d found J. Wm. Fletcher, of Boston, before the Pierpont Lyceum of New London. He spoke both afternoon and evening to large and intelligent audiences. Mr. Fletcher has won many friends during his brief sojourn here, and many have been greatly edified by the new light they received from his controls. Some of the oldest people in the city, never seen inside of a church, were found on the front seats, so great was the interest felt. Mr. Fletcher's coming in the early fall is anxiously looked forward to by the society.

Sunday, April 29th, Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock of Boston occupied the platform. The fine weather robbed Mrs. Whitlock of an audience in the afternoon, but in the evening a fair-sized assemblage greeted her. Though a stranger, Mrs. Whitlock held the close attention of her audience. Her psychometric readings gave satisfaction. It is safe to predict that in the near future Mrs. Whitlock will stand without a peer upon the spiritual rostrum as speaker and psychometric reader. H. P. M.

New London, May 7th, 1888.

New Bedford, Mass.—In Mechanics' Hall, Monday evening, May 7th, Mrs. C. M. Nickerson, medium, formerly of Orleans, answered Talmage's sermon of April 29th against Spiritualism. A meeting was to be held Wednesday evening, 9th, at Mrs. Nickerson's residence, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization of New Bedford Spiritualists.

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The excitement and enthusiasm incident to "Anniversary day" are gradually waning, and as the warm weather approaches a diminished attendance at our meetings is perceptible. The beauties of nature, full of renewed life and promise, are more attractive than the profoundest philosophy from the inspired lips of our most cultured speakers in a hall, be it ever so beautiful. The long winter just passed gives us a keen zest for balmy spring, and the open-air sermons Nature is just now delivering, are more eloquent than the inspired utterances of our mediums. The many beautiful promenades of the Forest City are crowded on Sunday evenings, forcibly hinting that the indoor lecture season will soon close.

Anniversary Reminiscences.—Application was made by your scribe, in behalf of the Lyceum, to raise the City Flag during our two days' Anniversary Meeting, to which Mayor Babcock courteously replied he should be pleased to grant the privilege but for the City Ordinance, which definitely prescribed the occasions it shall be raised. The application and reply were published in the city papers.

A formal vote of thanks was tendered Messrs. Charles E. McCluskey and Frank Ingersoll for their arduous labors behind the scenes at the Lyceum Exhibition. Unseen, but not unappreciated, they worked hard, and to their exertions is due the smooth manner in which the performance passed off, and the success of the sketch, "Modern Spiritualism; Its Past, Present and Future."

Mrs. F. O. Hyzer.—This wonderfully inspired medium (since the departure of J. Clegg Wright) has again resumed her ministrations on our rostrum, and will continue to do so until the close of the season, which is near at hand; this lady has many admirers here and draws out the more spiritual of our Spiritualists.

C. G. Oyston.—Public mention, I believe, has not been made of the departure of our friend and co-worker for other and apparently more profitable fields of labor. Mr. O. is now assistant editor of The Industrial World, a labor reform paper published at Byesville, O., a position he seems eminently qualified to fill, and in which he takes great delight. The Lyceum recognized and appreciated the labors of Mr. O. while in this city, wished him "God speed" in his new enterprise, and passed highly complimentary resolutions to that effect the Sunday he bade farewell to his friends and co-laborers. We understand that Mr. Oyston, with the assistance of his friend, Mr. Simon De Main, is actively laboring to promulgate Spiritualism in and around Byesville. May they both be sustained in their noble efforts by Spiritualists and investigators of that section.

Mental Science.—Miss E. Anne Hinman (a name familiar to all Spiritualists of long standing) gave a lecture Sunday evening, April 29th, at the Columbia Theatre, on "Mind over Matter," illustrating mental cure.

Good Samaritans.—The G. S. R. Society (Spiritualists), organized 1874, incorporated, meeting the first and third Thursday of each month, will consider the adoption of a new constitution at its next meeting, Thursday, May 17th. The organization is designed to foster the cause of Spiritualism and Liberalism. All friendly to its objects are cordially invited to join. The ladies meet for needle-work in the afternoon; the gentlemen join them at supper and for social and literary exercises in the evening.

Spiritual Institute.—Again the idea is taken up of establishing a permanent headquarters for Spiritualism in this city—a place open every day in the week, where Spiritualists, resident and non-resident, can meet and enjoy social intercourse, and the advantages of a reading room and library of spiritual literature. A committee of ten has been appointed to solicit subscriptions and sense the wish of Spiritualists in and out of the city. Mr. Richard Carleton, 97 Seneca street, is Chairman, and would be pleased to hear from all who feel an interest in the establishment of such a place in Cleveland.

Fraternally yours, THOMAS LEES.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, after an absence of one month, spoke on the morning of last Sunday upon "The Nature of the Current Orthodox Conspiracy to Overthrow Spiritualism." The subject was logically treated. Mrs. Brigham also improvised three poems.

In the evening there was a large audience to listen to Mrs. Brigham upon "Talmage vs. Truth." She spoke for one hour and twenty minutes, with much strength and to the manifest satisfaction of all present.

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was opened by Mrs. Henry J. Newton reading a poem. Mrs. A. S. Cochrane read a lecture, evincing inspirational powers rarely manifested in a medium of so short development. Henry J. Newton made remarks upon Rev. T. De Witt Talmage and the secular papers in their tirade against Spiritualism and Spiritualists. Mrs. A. E. Wells gave a large number of tests, several being very remarkable. During the reading of the lecture by Mrs. Cochrane several high notes were played upon the organ, followed by several low notes, with no visible person near the instrument. The organist and several others heard them. Nothing further was thought of this until Mrs. Wells, in giving tests, told a gentleman (a stranger whom she had never seen before) that he had a daughter standing by him, giving a minute description of the daughter, and at the same time saying she was fond of music. In a few moments the low notes of the organ were again heard by a large number of people, and the spirit, through Mrs. Wells, at once said that in life she played the piano, which the father said was correct, and that the personal description given by Mrs. W. was correct. Mrs. Brigham will open the Meeting for Manifestations next Sunday afternoon, and Henry J. Newton will make remarks on "Justice." S.

New York, May 6th, 1888.

People's Spiritual Meeting last Sunday afternoon, in Columbia Hall, New York, was opened with the reading of a poem by Mrs. Morrell. Remarks were made by Dr. B. M. Lawrence, Frank Lambert, Mr. Bunce, and Mrs. Morrell, the latter giving a number of satisfactory psychometric readings.

The evening exercises were opened by the Chairman reading an essay on "Profit and Loss in Associations." Messrs. Bunce, Wilson, Macdonald, Mrs. Morrell, Mr. Ellsworth and the Conductor filled out the allotted time.

Mrs. H. M. Walton, of Brooklyn, will take part in the exercises next Sunday. F. W. JONES.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Sunday, May 6th, was one of much interest at Brittan Hall. It was the last in this lecture course upon which Mrs. Kimball, of Lawrence, expects to be here, and those on each side of life, the visible and invisible, were much interested in the meetings. A large number—over one hundred—of spirit intelligences made their presence known, and in many instances their manner of expression and approach were of the most convincing nature to investigators, and assuring to believers.——Next Sunday Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, an able inspirational speaker and improvisatrice, of West Randolph, Vt., will occupy the platform. She will also be the speaker on the 20th inst. E. P. H.

OUR STATE TO THE FRONT!

A Matter Which Concerns You.

The following unsolicited opinions from your friends and neighbors, men and women whom you know and respect, ought to carry conviction to any doubting mind. These words of gratitude are from those who have been afflicted but are now well, and the persons giving them are naturally solicitous that others, troubled as were they, may know the means of cure. There is no reason why you should longer be ill from kidney, liver or stomach troubles. You can be cured as well as others; do not longer delay treatment, but to-day obtain that which will restore you to permanent health and strength.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Dec. 11th, 1887.—Some four years ago I was seriously afflicted with Kidney troubles. I suffered intense pains in my kidneys, so severe at times it seemed as if my back would break. My urine was very highly colored and scant, and it would contain considerable sediment and mucus. I had dull pains in my head, restless at night, and no appetite at all. My business necessitated my riding considerably. I got so bad that I could not sit and ride in a buggy, and began to fear that I would never recover, until finally I was induced to try "Warner's Safe Cure." I took a number of bottles and I am happy to say was completely cured. My father-in-law was almost at death's door with diseased kidneys, and was cured by "Warner's Safe Cure." I consider it the greatest remedy in the world.

HYANNIS, Mass., (Cape Cod) June 17th, 1886.—I fell from a step-ladder backwards in my stable on to the floor, about six feet. The shock was dreadful, which caused me to have the doctor to draw my water. He had great difficulty because of the clots of blood that kept filling his instrument, which he inserted six or seven times before he could relieve me from pain, which was severe. A lady eighty-one years of age, who had taken only one bottle, which relieved her immediately, wished me to try "Warner's Safe Cure." I took about two doses, and never have had any trouble since. I wish to say furthermore, that I belong to a family that have always been subject to gravel, etc.

Providence, R. I.—A. E. Tisdale lectured here Sunday, May 6th, giving great satisfaction to his hearers. Mr. Tisdale also sang at both meetings in a very pleasing manner. Mrs. Humes of East Providence gave a test séance at the close of each lecture.

The Annual Meeting of the Association (not of the Board, as was announced by "Roger Williams" in last week's BANNER) was held after the morning service, and the following officers were elected: President, Mr. E. H. Whitney; first Vice President, Mr. Frank E. Dunham; second Vice President, Mrs. Whittemore; Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. Mary E. A. Whitney. The meeting adjourned until next Sunday after the forenoon service for the transaction of further business.

Mr. Tisdale's subject for next Sunday morning will be: "Salvation, or How Shall Man be Saved?" He is to remain here during the month.

MARY E. A. WHITNEY.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The good work of the Fourth Association of Spiritualists seems to be advancing. We have been especially favored by the advent of Mrs. Minnie Brown, formerly of Baltimore, and well-known to the readers of the BANNER OF LIGHT. As a platform test medium we regard her above the average, from her clear description of every particular form, as well as conditions. During the last six weeks she has ministered regularly every Sunday night at the hall, 9th and Callowhill streets, giving the most remarkable and convincing proofs of spirit return to crowded audiences. Mrs. Brown, though coming a stranger to our city, is daily gaining the love and affection of all who are brought in contact with her.

H. T. GREENWOOD, Secretary.

810 Lattimer street.

Willimantic, Conn.—For the past two Sundays we have had with us Dr. J. C. Street of Boston. We found the Doctor to be a most agreeable person whose controls gave us many excellent thoughts.——Next Sunday we have George A. Fuller, M. D., of Dover, Mass., editor of Light on the Way. He comes to us as a stranger, yet highly spoken of as a lecturer.——May 27th we have arranged with our old friend, Dr. F. L. H. Willis, who has many friends in this vicinity, on this side of life, and more who have passed over. Bro. W. F. Peck follows in June. Thus the ball is set in motion, and we appeal to you, Spiritualists, who have helped us in days gone by, to assist in our struggle to maintain these lectures which the officers of your society are trying to provide. ***

Worcester, Mass.—Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn has just closed a successful month's engagement with our Association. Her adherence to unpopular truths, and ability to defend them, are fully admitted by all. She gave great satisfaction.——May 6th Prof. W. F. Peck gave two stirring lectures to large and enthusiastic audiences. His evening discourse on "My Path from Methodism to Spiritualism," was listened to by the largest audience we have had since Mr. Baxter was with us, and was greeted with frequent and hearty applause.——E. W. Emerson will serve us next Sabbath, and then Prof. Peck returns to us for the last two Sundays of the month. T. R. J.

Chicago, Ill.—Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Whitney of San Francisco, recently arrived in the city. The lady has obtained an excellent reputation from the press throughout her travels as a platform test medium, and her appearance in Chicago we trust will be the result of much good to Spiritualism. She is engaged by the Young People's Society for the evening of Sundays, May 13th and 20th. The services will consist of a short discourse, after which one of her remarkable séances. A small admission will be taken at the door to defray expenses. Martine's South Side Hall, 22d street and Indiana Avenue. CELIA.

Taunton, Mass.—The Spiritualists of Taunton have had for their speaker the last two months Miss May Scannell of Providence. She has done a noble work here, bringing many out of the old ruts and giving them a practical knowledge of Spiritualism. Her little control, "Bright Eyes," has given many remarkable tests to the public. Our society, though newly formed, is progressing, with excellent prospects for the future. MRS. L. M. CARR.

FORTY YEARS ON THE

SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM.

BY WARREN CHASE.

A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE," AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS

The World's Child,

WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work.

MR. ROBERT COOPER.

A PIONEER'S WORK IN SPIRITUALISM.

For the main facts set forth in the following account we are indebted to The Medium and Daybreak, published by J. Burns, London, who has earnestly and commendably interested himself in Mr. Cooper's behalf:

The subject of this memoir was born on the banks of the Thames, at Rotherhithe, in the year 1821, his father carrying on business there as an apothecary and surgeon. His father's only brother, John Thomas Cooper, was a noted scientist of his day. He was lecturer on Chemistry at Grainger's School of Anatomy, and as a consulting chemist did much to develop arts and manufactures in his day. He was the first to apply the oxy-hydrogen lime-light to the microscope, which has since been so useful for exhibiting in public scenic representations and illustrating lectures. His eldest son, also, was a man of some renown. He held the appointment of chemist at the Polytechnic Institution when it was first established, and when the daguerreotype was discovered went to Paris to acquire the process, and under his supervision three establishments were started in London, which was the commencement of photographic portrait taking. Pepper, of "Pepper's Ghost" fame, was a pupil of John Thomas Cooper, and Mr. Robert Cooper recollects when on a visit to this uncle in the year 1838, the party experimenting in photography, taking portraits direct on the silvered paper.

His parents dying when he was very young, he was placed under the care of his mother's sister, residing at Eastbourne, of which town his mother was a native. In this town he was educated, and after passing two years at Brighton, and the like time at Hastings in being initiated into the mysteries of the business of chemist and druggist, he commenced business on his own account at Eastbourne in 1843, soon after marrying a sister of his old schoolmaster's wife.

Whilst living, as a boy, with his mother's relatives at Eastbourne, he used frequently to hear of strange occurrences happening to a young lady, a cousin, who was evidently a medium. On the occasion of the death of any member of the family she generally had some intimation of the event. Thus on one occasion when an aunt died, as she was about to fill a scuttle with coals in the coal-cellar, a cold white hand came on hers, which alarmed her so much that she threw down the shovel, and came rushing into the sitting-room, and sinking in a chair covered her face with her hands, and did not speak for some time, when she told what had happened. On another occasion she was taken by the shoulders and turned round, when she saw the form of her grandmother, sister of the aunt above alluded to. These two old ladies filled the office of postmistress, and their deaths occurred very soon after each other. Such was the sort of events (tokens they were called) he was familiar with in his boyish days, which used to make him feel nervous, and afraid to be left alone, especially in the dark; and when in after years he read Mrs. Crowe's "Night Side of Nature," he became more "superstitious" than ever. The father of the family was somewhat of a "free-thinker," and the wife and daughters, who were very piously inclined, were very much concerned about him. He had an inveterate hatred of "parsons," and one of his favorite books was Howitt's "History of Priestcraft."

During fourteen years he attended regularly the Episcopal church. Being a lover of music, the musical portion of the service had a charm for him, and for a period of about a year he officiated as organist. After his wife's death, although he could not help thinking of her as still living, his mind, being unable to accept the theological doctrines of the evangelical school, began to assume a materialistic tendency, and he became more skeptical on religion, and wrote an essay embodying his views. But the remedy was at hand—the solvent of the soul's doubts and difficulties came at the critical juncture.

In the year 1862 J. H. Powell came to Eastbourne in the capacity of lecturer on Mesmerism. The lectures were attended by Mr. Cooper, who invited Mr. Powell to his house, when the subject of Spiritualism became the topic of conversation. Mr. Cooper had just been reading the article by Robert Bell in the Cornhill Magazine, "Stranger than Fiction," giving an account of séances with Mr. Home, and the experiences of Mr. Powell with a Madame Besson greatly interested him. A few months after he met Mr. Powell in Holborn, when, after the interchange of a few remarks, Mr. Powell said, "Would you like to go to a medium? There is one lives close by," and Mr. Cooper assenting, they turned into King street (now Southampton Row), and visited Mrs. Marshall. The three sat to a small table; raps promptly came, by which the presence of "John Colman" was intimated. This was an uncle of Mr. Cooper who had died a few weeks before, to whom Mr. Cooper had been appointed executor. Other manifestations occurred, but this was the most striking and important.

Mr. Powell soon after, at the suggestion of Mr. Cooper, took up his residence in Eastbourne, where the subject was followed up, mediums developed, and much interest excited; the matter being taken up by the local newspapers of the town and neighborhood. Several clergymen took part in the discussion; one who lived in some rural district said, "the matter had gone far enough, and should be put a stop to." Mr. Cooper, having seen enough to satisfy himself that Prof. Faraday's theory of "involuntary muscular action" would not account for the movements of tables, wrote to that gentleman, asking him if he still held to that theory, and he received the following letter in reply:

ROYAL INSTITUTION, Jan. 31st, 1863.

Sir: My opinion is in no way changed in character, but greatly strengthened. Nobody has ever been able to show me the effect, therefore I have no occasion to show a cause. I do not believe those who say they have seen it. I doubt their competency to examine facts and evidence of facts, and think their statements are of no value for the cause of science and simple truth. When they can lift a table into the air in the presence of parties adverse to them in opinion, and can subject what they think can be done to strict and cross examination, then it may be worth while to think about the cause. Very truly yours.

Mr. Cooper. M. FARADAY.

After further experience, Mr. Cooper again wrote, giving a detailed account of experiments he had made to satisfy himself that the table was not moved by the muscular action of those sitting around it, either voluntarily or involuntarily exerted, and that he had seen a table move without contact, to which the following was the learned Professor's reply:

THE GREEN, HAMPTON COURT, Sept. 25th, 1863.

Sir: I hasten to acknowledge your letter, for I freely admit my belief that you are perfectly sincere and truthful in your account and experiments; nevertheless, I refer you to my former letter for my answer now.

Your observation that you have the greatest confidence in your colleagues makes me smile, when I call to mind certain investigations that have come to my knowledge in former cases.

I do not doubt your competency to check the facts if you are willing to work with an unbiased mind; but I decline to enter into the matter.

Very truly yours, M. FARADAY.

R. Cooper, Esq.

A lecturing tour was now entered upon, commencing with two lectures given by Mr. Cooper at Eastbourne, at the second of which great astonishment was manifested by an experiment that was made. A medium went on the platform, and placing her hands on a table, loud knocks were made by the legs striking on the floor. Mr. Cooper sat among the audience with an alphabet in hand. "You must all believe in Spiritualism, for the truth will come out," was spelt out. Mr. Cooper next visited the town of Lewes, where he received very rough and ungracious treatment at the hands of a bigoted mob. Hastings and Brighton were afterward visited, and a lecturing-tour, extending to Southampton, including the principal towns in the Isle of Wight, was undertaken. The lectures were not largely attended, but through the reports of them in the newspapers, great publicity was given to the subject, and thousands for the first time heard of Modern Spiritualism.

The Spiritual Times was now started, being the first weekly spiritualistic journal published in London. The first four numbers were ordinary newspaper size, the first page of which only was devoted to spiritual matters, the remaining three consisting of general news. It was then resolved to reduce the size of the paper and to devote its columns wholly to Spiritualism. After a few numbers had been printed in Eastbourne the work was undertaken by Mr. Job Caudwell, 335, Strand, who acted as printer and publisher for several months, Mr. Powell acting as editor. In the meantime premises had been hired in Newman street, Oxford street, at a rental of one hundred and forty pounds per annum, where an institution was opened under the name of "The Spiritual Lyceum," and was used as a publishing office, reading-room, etc., and where lectures were given and meetings held, and where at length The Spiritual Times was printed and published. All this was borne solely by Mr. Cooper, and involved an expenditure of about three hundred and fifty pounds a year. Mr. J. G. Holyoake, Mr. M. D. Conway and the late Mr. Walter Weldon were occasional attendants at the meetings, and the two former generally had something to say in the way of criticism.

Soon after Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten's arrival in England arrangements were made by Mr. Cooper for her to give two lectures in the large hall that formed part of the premises then known as "Cambridge Hall," which were of a most successful character, the building being filled in every part, and the eloquent lecturer listened to with spellbound interest by the enthusiastic audiences. These were considered at the time the best public meetings that had then been held in connection with Spiritualism. Mr. Cooper afterward hired the Polygraphic Hall, King William street, now Toole's Theatre, in which Mrs. E. H. Britten lectured on Sunday evenings for three months, they being the first regular Sunday services in connection with Spiritualism in England. In consequence of the interference of the Lord's Day Observance Society, who tried to prevent the meetings taking place, the hall had to be registered as a place of worship, and was done so as the "Spiritual Church," in the names of Mr. Cooper, Mr. Shorter and Mr. Slater.

At the time the "Spiritual Lyceum" was opened little had been done to popularize Spiritualism. The Spiritual Magazine, under the editorship of W. M. Wilkinson, and containing excellent articles by Mr. Thomas Shorter, Mr. William Howitt, etc., appeared monthly, and Mr. Benjamin Coleman was ever active in communicating by voice and pen the phenomenal facts of Spiritualism to those he could in any way reach. Mr. Home was the most prominent medium of the time, Mrs. Hayden, Mr. Foster, Mr. Squire and Mr. Conklin having come from America and returned again. A few books had also appeared on the subject. Probably the first was one by Mr. Rymer, of Ealing, giving accounts of séances with Mr. Home, and contained a frontispiece representing a séance at Eastbourne, when three or four persons were seated round a table, and hands and arms were coming up from underneath it. Mr. Shorter had also published an excellent little book, entitled "Confessions of a Truth-Seeker," and Mr. Wilkinson his "Spirit-Drawings." A reprint of Adin Ballou's "Spirit-Manifestations," with an elaborate preface by Andrew Leighton, of Liverpool, had also appeared; and whilst residing at Eastbourne Mr. Powell wrote his "Facts and Phases of Spiritualism." These, with the first volume of Mr. Home's "Incidents of My Life" and Mr. Coleman's "Spiritualism in America," to which country he made a special visit to obtain information about Spiritualism, were the only books that had been published at the time in question. Mr. Home and Mrs. Marshall and her niece Mary were the best-known mediums at the time, but the former was only accessible to the select few. Mr. W. Wallace also did good work as a physical medium and trance-speaker, and was useful as a pioneer in the movement.

With a view to increase the facilities for the obtaining of evidence by the public, Mr. Cooper communicated with Dr. H. F. Gardner, of Boston, respecting available and suitable mediums to exhibit phenomena in England. Among others suitable for the purpose the Brothers Davenport were recommended, and Mr. Cooper gave instructions for an engagement to be made with them to visit England; but before his letter arrived they had entered into an engagement with Mr. Palmer to do so, and in due course they arrived, accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Ferguson. Their success at first was very great.... The first séance they gave after the well-known disturbance at Liverpool, was at the Hanover Square Rooms, and the proceeds were given for the benefit of "The Spiritual Lyceum." On this occasion twenty policemen were secreted in a room at the back of the cabinet to be ready in the event of a disturbance, but their services were not required. The manifestations being of a very decisive character, quelled the opposition of the most skeptical. It was admitted on all hands that the Davenports had triumphed, and vindicated their character as true and genuine mediums. Mr. Samuel Guppy, who had taken great interest in the mediums all along, now took them to Paris, where at their public séance a disturbance of a similar character to that at Liverpool took place, and afterward only private séances were given, the Emperor Louis Napoleon having them twice to his palace, and rewarding them most handsomely. Dr. Ferguson, not being able to speak French, remained in London, and afterward left for America.

After this, public interest in the Davenports flagged, and the séances were no longer remunerative. They were for returning to America, but Mr. Cooper, feeling that their work was not done in England, took the responsibility on himself, and after giving a few séances in London and several provincial towns, took them to Ireland, where he remained with them for several weeks, introducing them at their séances, and defending them in the press. After visiting the principal towns in Ireland, a return visit was made to Dublin, and a farewell séance given in the Rotunda.

Mr. Cooper then made an arrangement with the Davenports to visit Germany, and spend a month in Berlin, the Emperor granting the use, free of cost, of his private concert room, adjoining the Shauspielhaus. The séances excited great interest, and produced a very favorable impression, but owing to the war which had just broken out with Austria, were not sufficiently well attended to render them remunerative. A week was next spent in Hamburg; after which, the principal towns in Belgium were visited. A full account of what took place in all these cities Mr. Cooper afterward recorded in his book, "Spiritual Experiences, and Seven Months with the Brothers Davenport," which is now out of print.* This book contains the fullest account of their European career of any published on the subject. The Davenports, after Mr. Cooper left them in Brussels, went to Holland on their own account, Baron Holmfeld taking his place in managing the séances. Russia was the next place visited, and before setting out they wrote a pressing invitation for Mr. Cooper to accompany them; it was "John King's" wish, they said. But Mr. Cooper could not leave England, his own affairs requiring attention. In Russia, the success of the Davenports appears to have been greater than ever, and after visiting Moscow they went to Vienna, and returned to London. The following letter, received from St. Petersburg, will show the kind of reception they met with in that city:

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan.

Dear Cooper—I write you a few lines to inform you of our great and unprecedented success in this city. A press séance—powerful and exciting reports in all the journals. At public séances hundreds of the nobility were unable to obtain admission in consequence of the crowded state of the hall. Tickets, 3 and 2 roubles.

Next, séance with the French Ambassador and forty or fifty of his friends. The next night at the Palace for the Emperor and his family—powerful manifestations and great satisfaction, the Emperor and Empress, Crown Prince and Princess Dagmar thanking us very cordially, and asking many questions. Perhaps go there again. We have more private engagements than we can attend to for some weeks to come..... We go to Moscow after finishing here. Excuse great haste and mistakes. "John" knew what he was about when he compelled us to come here, for we were about to give it up when you said your affairs required your presence in England. Write me, poste restante.

Yours, as ever, I. E. DAVENPORT.

On their return to England, the Davenports proposed going back to America forthwith. Mr. Cooper, however, thought that their work was not done in England, and entered into an engagement with them for six weeks, for which they were to receive £200, taking the responsibility of the séances on himself. During this time the principal suburbs of the Metropolis were visited, finishing with a week at Birmingham. As the receipts only covered the working expenses, Mr. Cooper was £200 out of pocket by this venture. At this juncture, feeling he could no longer sustain single-handed the responsibilities of the public advocacy of Spiritualism, he gave up the Lyceum and The Spiritual Times, and retired from the scene of his activity, to which he had devoted four years of his life.

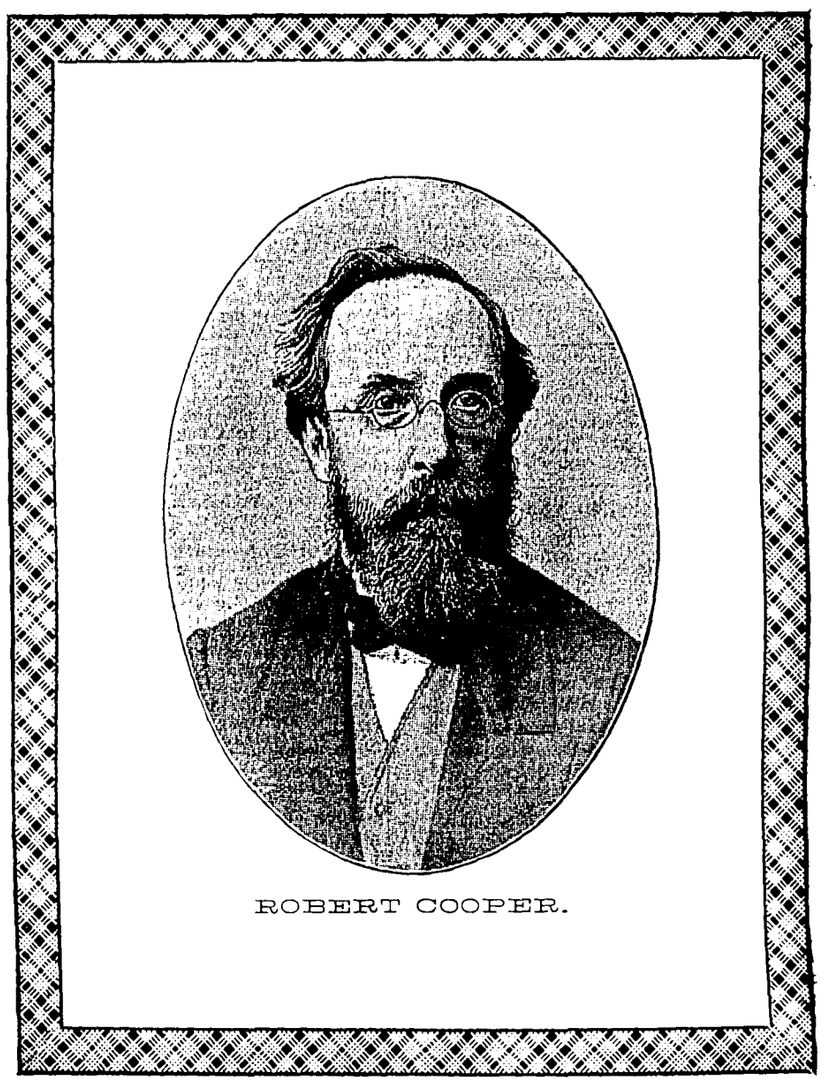
His place was well filled by Mr. James Burns, who had been carrying on a useful work with his Progressive Library at Camberwell. It was then that Mr. Burns's Spiritual Institution was started, and the publication of Rev. Page Hopps's monthly journal, Daybreak, was converted into a weekly, and published under the title of the Medium and Daybreak. Mr. Burns, like his predecessor in the field of spiritual labors, has had an uphill work, as all reformatory work necessarily must be, opposed as it is to the current of popular prejudice, but both have this satisfaction of knowing that their efforts in the cause of human progress are gradually being crowned with success—religious thought becoming liberalized, spiritual truth recognized, and the human mind emancipated from ecclesiastical bondage and theological superstition.

On the publication of "Spiritual Experiences," the author received the following letter from Mr. William Howitt, who had been a frequent contributor to the columns of The Spiritual Times, and who had assisted Mr. Cooper by his counsel and personal influence in many ways, and which letter may be fitly introduced here:

My Dear Sir,—Thank you for your little volume of "Spiritual Experiences." I consider it a very valuable addition to the history and evidences of this great dispensation. Some parts of it read like a narration of the persecutions of days gone by.....

If our press and scientific men could blush, the account of the rational reception of the Davenports in Belgium, Holland and Russia would make them do it; but there is no country on the face of the earth which is so arrogant and so materialized in spirit. They think themselves "the people, and that wisdom will die with them," but in all except what relates to matter and mere material operations and money-getting, they are the stupidest people living. Material science has made great progress among them, but it has been at the expense of everything that marks the truly philosophic mind. The theories of philosophy never were so groveling and degraded. If there be a thing that marks the dignity and glory of human character, that they reject and spurn from them. They desire not to live hereafter, and they prefer believing that they are descendants of monkeys than the directly created children of God. Is it possible to conceive of a more earthly and contemptible generation? Let us bless God that he has wrenched us, by unexampled revelations from the unseen, from the thralldom of such a stupidity. You, indeed, must feel great satisfaction in the services you have been permitted and have had the will to render. You will have your reward. Yours faithfully, WILLIAM HOWITT.

Robert Cooper, Esq., August 1st, 1867.



ROBERT COOPER.

In the year 1874 Mr. J. J. Morse visited America on a lecturing tour, where he spent a year, during which time Mr. Cooper, who followed him a month later, was with him, and remained there five years after his departure. The first person Mr. Cooper shook hands with on American soil was Andrew Jackson Davis. Visiting him on his arrival in New York City, Mr. Davis offered to give him an introduction to certain Spiritualists there. Mr. Cooper said he had a letter of introduction from Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, which Mr. Davis, on reading, remarked: "That will carry you all over America." That lady had also given him special letters of introduction to William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips. Mr. Coleman also had given him letters of introduction to Epes Sargent and others whose acquaintance he had made in America. Mr. Cooper, therefore, found plenty of friends, and soon became personally acquainted with those whose names he had frequently seen in the spiritual papers.

During his six years' residence, principally in Boston, the headquarters of Spiritualism, he did a good work, in a quiet way, in promoting the cause he had so much at heart, but only a few of his services can be alluded to here. He was the first to make known to the world the wonderful mediumistic powers of Mrs. M. B. Thayer. Other mediums were first introduced to public notice through Mr. Cooper's instrumentality; and by giving accounts of séances in the spiritual papers and the Boston Herald, the columns of which were open to him, he rendered essential service in spreading a knowledge of spiritual truth among the people.

When Mr. Cooper arrived in Boston there had just been a dissension among the sustainers of the public meetings in the large "Music Hall," a building capable of holding three thousand people, and Mr. Morse's lectures were the last given under the auspices of the "Music Hall Society." Months passed, and nothing was being done in the way of lectures, and there seemed no likelihood of anything being done in the matter. At this juncture Mr. Cooper consulted Mrs. E. H. Britten on the subject, who consented to give four lectures without a fee, if arrangements were made. The matter was next laid before Mr. Luther Colby, editor of the BANNER OF LIGHT, who agreed to pay the rent of a hall for four Sundays, and then lectures were started, with excellent success. Mr. W. J. Colville, on his arrival, was met by Mr. Cooper at the steamboat wharf, who introduced him to the Chairman of the Lecture Committee, got him an engagement the first Sunday after his arrival, and he has been hard at work ever since. He also was instrumental in giving, through C. E. Watkins, satisfactory evidence of spirit-phenomena to the Rev. Minot J. Savage. This gentleman is one of the most popular and influential clergymen in Boston, and he has not hid his light under a bushel. But space will not allow any extended notice of the work done by Mr. Cooper, and for which he never received a dollar's remuneration. Since his return to England he has lived quietly at Eastbourne, where he still endeavors to keep the subject, whenever an opportunity offers, before the public.

The Eastbourne (Eng.) Review—a secular paper—noting the efforts being made to aid Mr. Cooper, says of him, from a non-spiritual standpoint:

"He appears to have been one of the first to give support and countenance to the movement in England, and however much people may think that Mr. Cooper was mistaken, it is evident that he took up the subject with a single-mindedness of purpose in which there was no thought of gain. On the contrary, he seems to have spent his substance freely in bringing the question before the English public, his great object being to prove the immortality of the soul, by showing that the spirits could communicate with us mortals through the instrumentality of 'mediums.' We must give Mr. Cooper the credit of having been actuated by the highest motives; and of having spared neither time, labor, nor money, in developing what he honestly believed to be a new revelation from spirit-land ... We pronounce no opinion on the subject one way or another, but it is a curious thing that the remarkable phenomena produced have drawn converts from the ranks of philosophy, literature, religion, the judicial bench, and nearly every class of society."

Holborn Town Hall—one of the finest structures available to the public in London—was the scene, on the evening of April 27th, of a gathering assembled in celebration of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism—the exercises at which took the commendable and practical turn of an effort to assist Mr. Cooper in his hour of financial extremity. The Medium and Daybreak of the 4th inst. records that the meeting was a success in every way, and that "perhaps there were never so many mediums and active workers gathered together at one time in the history of the cause" in England. The evening's proceedings comprised a two-part concert, with an interlude during which appropriate speeches were made by Thomas Shorter (who presided), Mr. Cooper, and T. H. Hunt; a letter from Wm. Tebb (absent in Greece) was read by Mr. Burns, endorsing the effort; the occasion terminated with dancing and social entertainment. We hope to revert to the matter again.

It is sad to think that one who has done and sacrificed so much should stand in need, through blindness and worldly troubles, of that help which he was always so ready in his prosperity to extend to others. We here append a report of the various sums already contributed in America to assist the friends of Mr. Cooper in purchasing an annuity for him. We wish the amount was greater, and earnestly hope the Spiritualists of the United States will aid us in the effort to make it so:

A PICTURE FROM N. E. CHURCH HISTORY.—The sermons were very long. To keep them awake the old ladies carried bits of fennel, and caraway seed, and sugared flag-root in their pockets. They nibbled at these dainties now and then, yet still found themselves nodding toward the end; while good Deacon Frost, greatly to the mortification of his daughters, snored audibly, beginning with a gentle wheeze, and ending in a wild snort, and a hurried and determined attitude of attention, gradually falling off again into the puffing and wheezing stage, when the whole process was repeated. Quite undisturbed, the old minister kept steadily on to his "finally, brethren;" the fans moved languidly; the green leaves rustled at the casements; and it was all utterly peaceful, and unlike the work-a-day life of the week.—Ex.

Science has done wonders for meteorology. For instance, it has paraphrased the old saying: "Hills clear, rain near," into: "The presence of a wedge-shaped area of high pressure, accompanied by great atmospheric visibility, is likely to be succeeded by the advance of a disturbance with pluvial accompaniments and southerly winds."

The Seminole Indians in Southern Florida are disturbed over a supposed scheme to take their lands away from them.

*His narrative points out that the Davenports had three Imperial adherents: Napoleon of France, William of Germany, and the Czar. Mr. Cooper was a pioneer in a remarkable sense, for he labored at a time when it was all self-sacrifice. Mr. Spear named him "Disseminator." While at Eastbourne, Mr. Spear gave a trance address on "Peter by the seaside," probably the first public trance address given in this country, unless Keighley can claim priority.—Ed. in Medium and Daybreak, April 13th.

THE BETTER LAND AND LIFE.

BY REV. E. CASE.

"The blessed dead to endless youth shall rise."—Clark.

Not "rise," but risen! Let that great falsehood die;
Too long the soul it holds in its dark sway,
And chains it from its native home on high,
And from its bright inheritance away.

Behold the spirit from its pris'ning clay,
Unbound, angelic, free, hath taken wing,
And soared from earth to higher worlds away,
Wherein eternal youth and beauty spring.

There in the light of rainbow-tinted skies
By day, and starry-vaulted spheres at night,
And flowery fields in glorious array,
It now can vindicate the truth and right.

Life's lingering labors and its sufferings done,
Where waving boughs make music on the air,
Sweet with soft gales and holy melodies,
They live whom we call dead in our despair.

We need not weep for them, nor sorrowing pour
The streaming tears and unavailing sigh:
The loved and lost that walk with us no more—
They live! 't is only we who seem to die.

No funeral dirges rend those flowery airs;
No plumèd hearses there proclaim deep grief;
The battle fought, the victory is theirs;
Ours is the sorrow; theirs the soul's relief.

The low, soft winds of an unbounded spring,
And morning beams, and fragrant-odored gales,
And warbling birds forever on the wing,
And melodies of souls where love prevails;

These shall the good of earth all find at last;
There shall the great and good of earth be found;
When Love its crown obtains, its trials past,
And Death itself receives the eternal wound.

All hail thee, Better Land, in fair array!
We long to catch thy beams of morning bright.
Come quickly, loved ones! Bear us swift away,
That we may share with you the glorious light!

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

Materialization in New York.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I recently attended a séance for materialization in the city of New York, Mrs. Effie Moss being the medium, the circle consisting of Miss Hilda Anderson and her mother, George W. Kidd, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Van Horne, Mr. Sutherland, six ladies, a gentleman whose name I did not learn, the manager, and myself.

In most respects the mediumship of Mrs. Moss strongly resembles that of Mrs. Cadwell; both of them having developed, as far as I can gather, under about the same auspices. In both cabinets the spirits manifest with surprising strength. Lizzie Hatch and Lucille Western come very strongly, but entirely different in face and form. At Mrs. Cadwell's, Lucille is always an almost perfect copy of the medium, who is generally used, transfigured; though I have seen her at times as a genuine materialization, proven to be such by the process of dematerialization. At Mrs. Cadwell's, it is at times only by the difference of air, speech, gesture, and occasionally of dress, that one can tell the difference between Lizzie and Lucille; at Mrs. Moss's cabinet they are totally different. As Lucille came to me at Mrs. Moss's, she was simply the medium transfigured, and in no respect like herself as she comes at Mrs. Cadwell's; while at Mrs. Gray's she comes in a third form, totally dissimilar. And yet—and here comes in one of the peculiar phases of materialization—the spirit manifesting (in the case of Lucille at least) does not appear conscious of the fact that her looks are totally different at these different places. At Mrs. Moss's she came to me in just the same style as at Mrs. Cadwell's, though a totally different woman in shape and figure, at least four inches shorter, and fifty pounds heavier—as far as figure went—yet she actually drew her veil close to her face, for me to note, and did not seem in any way conscious that she was the very picture of the medium. This is a very singuler thing about materializing in cabinets, and used at one time to puzzle me greatly, as strongly suggestive of imposition. I have long got over this, however, and have come to the conclusion that, unless under special circumstances, materializing spirits have not the least idea of how they look, and that when they take possession of the organization of a medium by transfiguration, they know less than when purely materialized.

However, I did not let that interfere with my chat with Lucille, after whom came Lizzie Hatch, a very perfect materialization, much smaller, and more slender, with dark eyes and hair. She called me up, and was kind enough to remove her veil, in order that I might see her face clearly. Of course, not having known the young lady in earth-life, or having seen a portrait, I was unable to judge of the likeness; but the face was exceedingly pretty, and decidedly not that of the medium. It was a genuine materialization.

Not long after, my sister came out of the cabinet, and called me in. On admitting to her that I was surprised to find her coming so strong at her first visit to that cabinet, she told me that they had become so accustomed to entering my atmosphere, that they had no trouble anywhere. She, also, was totally distinct from the other female figures, although her face was not well made up. After her came visitors to most of the members of the circle, and Mr. Kidd found his Annie, who came out leaning on his arm on one side, mine on the other, and showed herself to the circle. She also took off her veil, and showed a dark-eyed aquiline face, distinct from that of Lizzie Hatch. Hilda Anderson received a visit from her Indian guide, Springwater, about the liveliest young lady it has ever been my fortune to meet at a cabinet.

Sailor Ben came soon after, and held an interview much the same as Nelse Seymour at the Cadwell cabinet. He and Jack, the two being the controls of the cabinet, present a strong contrast to each other, in height, figure, face and even voice.

Little Lily came very freely. She always manages to show the medium beside her, to people whom she knows well enough to allow them close approach.

The last spirit to manifest was Granny Brooke, who had to be helped into the circle by Hilda Anderson and young Sunderland. Her materialization was about the most perfect of any, being that of a little withered old lady, with a kindly face, all wrinkled up like a frosted apple, heavily veiled at first for protection, but revealed several times without any veil at all, perfectly clear and life-like. Granny's voice, her Southwestern English accent, her kindly way of moving round among her "children," as she calls them, make her one of the most thoroughly interesting spirits it has ever been my fortune to meet.

The séance did not close till half-past eleven, at which time the medium was, of course, much exhausted.

Mrs. Moss's present address is 52 West 15th street, and she sits Sundays, Thursdays, and on Friday afternoons.

Unique Spirit-Phenomena.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

One of the most promising features connected with the present status of Spiritualism, phenomenally considered, is the increase of private circles, in the households of and participated in frequently by church-members themselves; this fact going to show increasing interest among the people, notwithstanding the combined denunciations which press and pulpit are pouring out upon the Modern Revelation.

Recently I was put in possession of the knowledge of divers remarkable phenomena that were alleged to be occurring in a family whose members knew but little concerning the subject of Spiritualism, its laws, or its advanced philosophy, except what had come to them by and through the mediumship of one of their own household. The family consists of mother, son and daughter—the latter the medium. The son is a member of the Baptist Church; the mother and daughter have generally attended the meetings of that denomination.

A member of the same church to which the son belongs alluded in my presence to some wonderful spirit-manifestations that were taking place in the suburbs of the city of Boston. I made bold to ask the address, and it was given to me with the understanding that I should not make it public without the consent of the family. A few weeks ago I called at the house of the parties, and made myself known; the mother and son told me in brief of the manifestations that were occurring and had occurred; and as I was about leaving, the daughter (medium) arrived home and corroborated what had been told me. She, being a planchette-writing medium, sat down, and it was written that I could be of assistance to the medium in bringing her gifts to the public. A desire was further expressed that I should attend a séance, which I did; but before relating my experience I will give the history of the medium, as given to me by the mother and brother.

The mother said her daughter was taken sick some sixteen years ago, in a manner similar to that which occurs in fits. Two physicians were called to bring her out of her peculiar condition, but she sat with eyes wide open, gazing into vacancy, and could not be made, seemingly, to know anything. She repeated over the names of our departed spirit-friends and relatives, and we could not understand it; she also made a prayer which purported to originate from the spirit of a prominent Baptist minister who preached in Boston some years ago. The family not knowing anything of Spiritualism, considered her dangerously sick. A gentleman residing in the house knowing something of mediumship, informed them that she was a medium, and would come out "all right" if left alone, and that there was no need of alarm—which proved correct.

She did not have another "spell," as they termed it, for nearly two years; then a similar one came upon her, but it did not last long; and from that time she gave spirit tests to the intimate friends of the family who were in sorrow over the loss of dear friends, and who could not be consoled by their previous religious views of life here and hereafter. She did much good in this direction. In her first development she went to a spiritual meeting, but was from previous theological training not at all pleased with what she heard, and could not be induced to go again.

Some two years ago she found that she could write with a planchette, and many facts and truths were written, and in this way it finally leaked out that she was a medium, and on the news reaching the ears of a prominent business man in Boston, who had been convinced of the truthfulness of Spiritualism, he sought her out, and called upon her for a sitting. He then and there felt satisfied, as the family state, that the lady possessed elements for the presentation of the phenomena known as "etherealization" and "materialization," and so informed her, offering to bring for the purposes of experiment his curtain cabinet, which was simply a section of cloth to be strung across the corner of the room.

These experimental sittings he continued for more than three months. The manifestations from the first continued to improve until full forms appeared, some coming into the room those present claimed to recognize. The mother declared that she saw her spirit-husband as distinctly as she ever saw him in earth-life, and the son corroborated her statements. I have also had the same report endorsed by the lady who owns the house where they reside, and who attended the séances with the family.

My own experience is as follows: At the first séance I attended the medium was, as claimed, unconsciously entranced, and opened the service with a prayer such as would quite naturally have been given by a Baptist minister had he been present in the material form; then came lights in abundance; the odor of phosphorus was so dense and crude that it was suffocating. Sheets of light quite three feet wide would be seen starting from a small radiant spot at the top of the room; lights would also come from the floor in the same manner, and extend upward, while some would burst forth like a cloud, part in the center and take form like that of a human body. I noticed within my reach a large spot of what seemed to be phosphorus oil burning, and I thought I would risk my hand in it to discover what it was; to my astonishment I felt nothing like a cloth, but something indescribable; the medium was behind the curtain at the time, under the purported control of "Big Cloud," an Indian brave, and he cried out suddenly that the "white brave" had got one of his spirits. Not another person present knew to what the Indian referred, and I frankly admitted that I had placed my hand upon the white spot, which the control thus claimed to be a spirit in embryo; there certainly was present an invisible, intelligent power that knew of my act while the room was so dark that my hand could not be seen by any one in the mortal.

The whole performance was so new to me, and so mysterious, that I desired the opinion of others in the matter; therefore, at the second séance, by consent of the medium, Col. W. D. Crockett (President of the Onset Bay Camp-Meeting Association) and his daughter accompanied me; I also took with me a very sensitive psychic. The manifestations were of about the same character as before, in quantity and quality.

At the third séance Mrs. Crockett joined our number, and the manifestations continued as at previous sittings, but the odor of phosphorus was so sickening that three of our party did not care to witness the manifestations again.

At the fourth and last séance I attended I desired to have present some one who understood the workings of chemicals, therefore, with the permission of the medium and spirits, I invited Prof. J. R. Buchanan and wife, and two others. I wanted those who had seen the celebrated "illuminated garments," about which so much controversy has arisen in the past at various places and times, to give their judgment as to the possibility of "previous preparation" in this instance. The séance proceeded. There were forms or "things" observable, which had life, and which moved about the room; they neither had speech nor features, but did demonstrate—as it seems to the writer—that it was impossible for the medium to have accomplished herself what was witnessed: Further, that what was witnessed could not have been the result of personation, by means of the medium's body being controlled by a spirit.

Prof. Buchanan in answer to the question: "Are you satisfied?" replied "Yes—and delighted;" his wife also seemed pleased.

There were no crucial tests applied to the medium, the séance being in a private house; no earthly reasons could exist as to an object for deception, as there was no money asked or received—neither has any been taken in all her sixteen years of mediumship in a quiet way, among friends. The medium has been all this time warring against the control, and cares not to continue it longer. The controlling spirit—also the medium—seemed anxious to convince the strangers present that there was no deception practiced on their part, and the mother said regarding the matter that she knew nothing of the subject of Spiritualism, but "Whatever it is, honesty as far as my daughter and ourselves are concerned is in it."

I do not feel to criticise what was witnessed under the circumstances, but as I am writing it out, I should not do justice to myself or the cause, if I failed to give a few thoughts on the situation; hence I will say that I did my best to separate the medium from the things that were passing about the room, as described above. I talked with the purported Indian control about the phosphorus, and asked how he obtained it, and for the secret, etc., etc. I received no satisfaction in this regard; the impression he gave me was that they did not require artificial phosphorus, but it was generated in the medium's system and the organisms of the members of the séance, and that the atmosphere had largely to do with the brightness of the forms or lights appearing, since in damp weather what was seen was entirely different from that witnessed in dry or cold weather.

Prof. Buchanan asked several questions bearing on these points. Lights—similar in appearance to foot-lights at a theatre—would be dropped upon the floor, one after another, until quite an illumination presented itself before us, they lasting several minutes. I placed my hand upon them, but could detect nothing or feel anything, and they would reappear when I took my hand from them. I also rubbed my hands upon the hands of the medium, and they would be covered with the same kind of a light that was upon her hands; her mother said that the form of an anchor appeared in a brilliant light upon her daughter's hand, which lasted many hours. After what I have seen in her presence I cannot well doubt the integrity of the medium or the family, for I fail to see an object for deception on their part.

I could not in sincerity say that I discovered a clear, distinct form of any one save that of the medium when she came out under the control of what purported to be an Indian spirit; and in every one of the séances I attended, she had what looked like a white phosphorescent, smoking cloth, which the spirit represented to be an infant in her arms. The medium would walk about the séance-room and show it to all present. There were no features that I could discern; but when a form as large as the medium walked about the séance-room the outlines of it were clearly defined, and it was gracefully done; in every step the feet were seen in a phosphorescent light, but as the room was in almost total darkness, it was not as satisfactory to me as it would have been had we known for a certainty where the medium was all this time.

The question to me is this: Are the members of the family psychologized, and is the medium in an unconscious trance during the occurrence of these things, knowing nothing of what transpires herself? or is what is seen really what it purports to be, i. e., spirits trying to show themselves? This is quite an important thing to know; I talked this point over with the parties concerned, also with the controlling spirit, and was pleased to find that they were all perfectly willing to have the matter investigated, though the spirit did not wish the forms to be touched without his consent, as it would be likely to injure the medium if any were "grabbed."

I would advise this medium not to attempt to give public séances to skeptics, but to allow a few friends to continue the séances, and when full forms can be seen, and in more light, to allow the public to be admitted.

Similar occurrences have taken place with other individuals in the past. Mrs. David Hill, residing at 40 Russell street, Charlestown District, Mass., informs me that while Rev. John Pierpont (then in the mortal) was lecturing for the Spiritualists at the time they held their meetings in Elm Street Hall, he cited experiences he had had with his own grandchild, in this direction, as follows: he would go into a dark closet with the child, and balls of seeming fire, or odorific (?) light, would pass from the child to him, illuminating the closet in a manner similar to that which takes place when phosphorus oil is used. This lecture, she said, prepared her to receive what soon followed, which would have been a great shock to her had she not been informed in advance by Mr. Pierpont: She had seen many balls of light in the dark séances of Jennie and Annie Lord, at her home, but subsequently a niece of hers, by the name of May Green, came from her home in West Medway to stop for a few weeks, and on retiring, the girl, who was then about seventeen years of age, would find her feet and limbs to all appearance on fire, with a light that would extend some half yard from them. The girl would frequently cry from fear of the fire burning her. This illuminating power also extended to articles of her apparel. This phenomenon had appeared at the girl's home, but not as severely there as at the residence of Mrs. Hill; it continued several years, but was more prominent sometimes than at others, and it was claimed that when she was in company with certain persons of adapted magnetisms, or mediums for that phase, the lights would trouble her much more than at other times. This young lady lived until she was about twenty-four years of age, and then passed on with consumption. It has since been thought that if she could have had the aid of adapted magnetic treatment she would have lived, and made a most wonderful medium—but she know nothing whatever of mediumship, or at least nothing sufficient to induce her to cultivate it, or to investigate Spiritualism and its laws.

These cases are well attested facts. Who can solve the mystery that is involved in what are designated "etherealization" and "materialization"? Are all these persons who have the phosphorus emanations generated in their organisms to be set down as frauds, simply because there are individuals who are so contemptible that they will purchase phosphorus oil or illuminating paint to deceive the general public and even the Spiritualists themselves?

In arriving at decisions in special instances like that to which I have referred at length in this article, one cannot be too careful, as it is much more difficult to find the true significance of spiritual things than of those encountered in daily life around us. I shall therefore simply say, in regard to this case, that it involves the existence of marvelous phenomena which I consider to have been honestly presented to my apprehension, but the nature or prime source of which I do not at present comprehend.

FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM. By Warren Chase. A Sequel to "The Life Line of the Lone One," an Autobiography of the author as the World's Child, who gave the first public lectures in this country in defense of Modern Spirit-Intercourse, and whose name is first on the list of calls for copies of "Nature's Divine Revelations," when in press in 1847. Boston: Colby & Rich, publishers, 9 Bosworth street, 1888.

This is a book of 328 pages, containing a likeness of the author, and what might be expected from reading the above, taken from its title-page. Mr. Chase, who is now nearly eighty years old, is a born reformer; thus he is and always was on the unpopular side of every question. From the first he was anti-tobacco, anti-rum, anti-slavery, and anti-sin of every kinds. He was one of the first and most practical men in Fourierism; was a mesmerizer, and by it convinced of Spiritualism long before the rappings were heard in Hydesville. He has always accepted the most radical views of the most radical in Spiritualism, and hence, of course, has always advocated woman's right to the ballot, and her equality with man in marriage and everywhere else. This book, besides giving all the above and much more, contains about one hundred fine poems, which the author has been a lifetime in gathering. The book can be had for $1,50 of the publishers, or we will supply it if desired.—The New Thought.

One of our correspondents attended a large union meeting a few Sundays ago in which a somewhat flowery young preacher prayed as follows: "Oh! Lord, we ask that thou will bless the Y. M. C. A." This is equal to the colored man's ascription of thanks to the deity for what he had done for the world, "both B. C. and A. D."...—Christian Advocate.

Original Essay.

PRACTICAL RELIGION.

Practical religion is that which controls the lives of people. You may make great professions of belief, but unless you by your every act live and practice what you profess, your belief is of no benefit to yourself or any one else. Every day we see this fact illustrated. The world has at last awakened to the necessity of practical religion in every-day life. Men and women must practice what they preach in order to obtain practical results and practical spiritual benefits. It is supposed that the majority of people now-a-days are seeking for spiritual salvation in some way. We all realize that a material life is short; in some way we feel that we are to have an existence outside of the present body, and we naturally feel as though we should sometime begin to make some preparation for that existence. Now the question arises, what is the best form of preparation? We have so many kinds that it is hard to choose. The great majority desire to shirk all the responsibility they can. We want the easiest preparation attainable. It is a great burden to be all the while on our good behavior. We naturally seek for a religion of the india rubber kind—that will give us the greatest freedom, and at the same time enable us to feel that we are insured against that fire in the other life which, it is said, is never quenched.

Spiritualism says every person must work out his own salvation; that no person, not even the all-wise Creator, can relieve us from the burden of our sins other than by the slow and sure process of education out of our condition of ignorance and sinfulness. Every law of the All-wise says the world must progress, and man, the living, acting, immortal part of an All-Wise Creator, must of necessity possess that germ of growth which shall go on for all eternity, progressing in all the attributes pertaining to everlasting spirit-growth.

We believe in the religion that will be of the greatest benefit to all the people of the earth. We will not denounce the efforts of any class or denomination that is trying to do good in the world; we have no right to do this. We must say to the good brothers and sisters who in their peculiar ways are trying to make people better: Go on; do all the good you can, and we, as Spiritualists, will help you in our way. If a few backslide and do evil, do not denounce them; but, instead, let us show, by our every act toward them and the people of the world, that we will try and help them in every way possible to do better and to be better men and women.

Materialism is the hardest enemy which progressive people have to combat. It is hard to make some people believe that they are spirits inhabiting material bodies only for a short time. They can by no method of reasoning of their own, realize their responsibilities and importance as such spiritual beings, and consequently are bound by the chains of materialism and all its attendant evils, perhaps during their earthly existence. Spiritual progress they cannot attain because of their blindness. In our opinion, the only true practical religion of to day is that which teaches mankind that the All-Wise Creator created every human being, through material conditions, for an everlasting spiritual existence, and has implanted in the souls of all the desire for something higher and better than that which they now have. This desire or principle which each soul possesses may lay dormant for a time, but a period arrives in the life of every human being when it feels it has a higher and better destiny than that of the animal or the mere material. When we can realize that our home, when we pass out of the body, is not a long way off, that we shall be the same individuals, as spirits, we were in the body, and that we, in making the change, have increased our powers of educating and developing ourselves to a condition of greater usefulness, not only to ourselves but to the whole human family, then we will begin to realize the all-wise purpose of our creation.

We must realize in our life upon this earth that, as spiritual beings inhabiting a material condition, we are placed here for a higher purpose than the gratification of material interests and desires only; that as immortal beings we must help each other materially and spiritually. When we do this we are certainly working in the interests of progress. All who have the material and spiritual welfare of the human family at heart, cannot do too much if they devote every moment of their earthly lives to the work of assisting those who are in need. God, in his infinite wisdom, continues the work of creation; there is no such thing as stopping; and as such work continues, the same necessities for relief and help continue.

When all religious denominations agree that the watch-cry shall be: "Spiritual progress to all people!" then there will in reality be but one church and one common brotherhood in all the earth, and finally all evil will be driven from the earth, and God and goodness reign triumphant.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.—"'Carmen Sylva,' the Poet-Queen," is the subject of a paper by Emma B. Mawer, of Bucharest. As an artist of a variety of gifts, and excellent in all, Princess Elisabeth of Wied, the person referred to, furnishes material of a most interesting nature for an appreciative biographer. Her picture is given as a frontispiece, and three fine engravings illustrate the text. In "The Children of a Great City," Part II., accounts are given of destitution and suffering among the waifs of a vast metropolis, allusion being made to one of them upon being taken to the country for the first time saying to his teacher, "Oh! miss, what a big sky they've got 'ere!" as illustrative of the limitations of their daily life. H. R. H. Princess Christian continues her instructive papers on "Nursing as a Profession for Women." Other articles of interest are "Summer Days in Brittany," "The Pictures of Sappho," etc. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER.—Editorially it is remarked that it is unfortunate for the gentleman said to have found in India evidence of the telephone having been in use there two thousand years, that he did not get to this country before the late decision of the Supreme Court in favor of Prof. Bell as its inventor. Some one having inquired whether the use of the electric current for the execution of criminals will debase the science, a correspondent replies that there is no more reason for an electrician than for a cutler, rope-maker or physician objecting to the use of products dealt in by them being employed for that purpose. "Capital punishment," he says, "is right or it is wrong. If right, it cannot lower any means that may be employed to effect it. If wrong, it is degrading not only to all helping to bring it about—sheriff, judge, jury and law-makers—but to all who even approve of it." New York: Elec. Pub. Co.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—In the May number of this popular monthly the labor question is the subject of the opening article, in which it is said that there is something radically wrong when men and women of ability, holding subordinate positions, are forced to labor all day and often a portion of the night in the exercise of integrity, skill and exactitude, for grossly inadequate compensation, whilst the profit of their labor is enriching a few capitalists, and enabling them to live in idleness and dissipation. An instance of "Mysterious Sight" is related in an article bearing that name, describing the remarkably clear clairvoyance of a child ten years of age attending school in Lancaster County, Pa., the exercise of the gift being superinduced by entrancement. It is announced that Mrs. Densmore's "History of Mind Cure," began in Earnest Words, is to be completed in this magazine, the first of the new series to appear in the June number. New York: 206 Broadway.

THE QUIVER.—A fine frontispiece illustrates "Pain and Gain: A New Story with an Old Ending." New portions of Lambert Shield's serial story, "Not All in Vain," and "Wanted, A Governess," are followed by "The Least of These My Brethren," a story of German philanthropy. An interesting account is also given of providing poor children in London with half-penny dinners, it being thought better to have them pay that small amount, than lead to pauperising by supplying gratuitously; yet those who are unable to pay even that are given tickets. Eighteen hundred to two thousand children are fed. One girl said she seldom had anything from dinner to dinner. School teachers find them more teachable. Said one: "It is hard work driving knowledge into their brains when they want food in their mouths." New York: Cassell & Co.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.—"Arbor Day" is the topic of the leading article, in which a plea is made for the protection of forests, especially those of the Adirondack region, the destruction of which is rapidly progressing. The New York Orchid Exhibition of last February is the subject of an illustrated paper, and "My Neighbor's Plants," "Ornamental Vines," "Cultivation of Flowers" and "Garden Queries" are some of the topics treated upon. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—"True Story of a Tame Crow," "Street Scenes in Paris," and "A Glimpse of Child-Life in Labrador," are among the interesting contents of the April No.; in the Supplement, No. VI. of "Little Biographies," "Famous Trials," "Health and Strength Papers," "Anne Maria's House-Keeping," "Through a Microscope," "A Boy's Workshop," etc. The same month's issues of the Primary, Monthly, and Intermediate, are interestingly filled. Interstate Pub. Co., Boston and Chicago.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D., is the subject of the sixth criticism on "Representative Preachers of the Day." The various departments, "Review," "Sermonic," "Miscellaneous" and "Editorial," are contributed to by the best writers in the line of thought and discussion to which this periodical is devoted. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

THE KINDERGARTEN.—A new monthly, the first number of which appears this month, the aim being to simplify and reduce to practice the most advanced stages of Kindergarten work. Elizabeth P. Peabody, the veteran educationalist, responds to the question "What was Froebel's Discovery?" The entire contents are admirably well adapted to the purpose of the work, which promises to be a great help to teachers and parents. Chicago, Ill.: Alice B. Stockham & Co., Publishers.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

CLARA BARTON—ALEXANDE RBAILEY.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of March 31st, through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, is a communication from CLARA BARTON, of East Hampton, Conn., which I recognize as coming from my sister, who passed away many years ago at the age of two years and six months, I have heard my mother say. She gives the names of my brothers, in spirit-life, which are correct, and mentions our angel mother and grandmother, who are with her, also the sister living in Lawrence, Msas. Jason lost his arm in the army, which caused his death, which is referred to.

The message of ALEXANDER BAILEY, in THE BANNER of March 17th, I recognize as coming from him. He was bitterly opposed to Spiritualism, as he says.

Philadelphia, Pa. MRS. F. H. MORRILL.

CAPT. ISAAC HAMILTON.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 7th, is a message from CAPT. ISAAC HAMILTON of Portland, Me., who was an aquaintance of mine, and worked for the same firm that I did in New London, Conn. I am the "Jackson" he referred to, and the "John" he spoke of was my cousin, John Tyler Coulter. Capt. Hamilton was a good, square man, "chock-full" of humanity. He has been in communication with me for the last year or more. ANDREW JACKSON STICKNEY.

Methuen, Mass., May 5th, 1888.

BERNICE HUNT.

The communication from BERNICE HUNT in the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 28th, is correct in every particular, and her mother was very much pleased to receive it. The names she mentions are all recognized. Respectfully yours, R. A. GAGE.

Haverhill, Mass., May 6th.

CHARLES ARMITAGE.

We acknowledge with much pleasure the message in the BANNER OF LIGHT of April 28th, purporting to have come through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, from my son CHARLES ARMITAGE, of Saugus, who passed to the "higher life" some ten years ago. The message which he gave we recognized as correct in every particular, and as he stated, we often realize his presence in the home-circle, which is a source of great comfort to us. Yours truly,

JAMES ARMITAGE.

Warned of his Death in a Dream.

A. F. McNeal, a well known citizen of Rawson, O., says a Columbus special to the Pittsburgh Dispatch, died recently after a short illness, and now comes a weird story connected with this fact, which is as fully authenticated as his death. On the night of the 28th of January, of this year, he, like Joseph, "dreamed a dream" that he died, and went to heaven. In his dream the date of his death, April 26th, was firmly fixed upon his mind. In "the beautiful city, whose maker and builder is God," he dreamed that he met Mr. Mahlon Poveumire, of Ada, an old acquaintance and friend, and asked him when he had died and left the earth. Povenmire replied that he had died and come to the eternal world a week before. There were other striking circumstances in the dream equally as strange, and the next morning when McNeal awoke he reduced the details to writing. He was then in excellent health. His wife found the manuscript a few days after it was written, and it worried the wife a good deal, but she said nothing to her husband concerning it. Yesterday, April 26th, McNeal died, while Povenmire joined the great majority one week ago yesterday. The case is a remarkable one, but it cannot be laughed down, for every word of it is true, and the substance of McNeal's dream is in manuscript, just as he wrote it three months ago.

CHICAGO.—K. G. W. writes: "The cause of Spiritualism is prospering in Chicago, and we have a number of societies and many good mediums. Among those who have many friends here and deserve popularity is Mrs. Belle F. Hamilton. She has been here but a few months, and was for several years one of the best mediums in Cincinnati. Since taking up her residence here she has appeared on the rostrum of several of our societies, giving a great number of satisfactory tests. She has accomplished an especially good work for the Young People's Progressive Society, which is ably managed by Mr. Coverdale. Judging by her peculiarly satisfactory services in this phase of mediumship, it would be a matter of great benefit to the cause if she were constantly employed in this public work.

Two of her controls, 'Little Nannie Keniston' and 'Mingo' the Indian chief, have greatly endeared themselves to many, and have given frequent and remarkable tests. Every Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, Mrs. Hamilton gives a public circle at her home, 109 South Paulina street, when she is controlled by these and other spirits who come to bring the tidings of the life beyond to those who attend. These circles are strictly test circles, and there is no better place for an investigator to study spiritual phenomena. One remarkable phase of Mrs. Hamilton's mediumship is her control by two German spirits, who speak the purest German. In her normal condition she cannot speak a word of that language. She consequently has always had a large German patronage.

One of the finest circles Mrs. H. has yet given, occurred on a recent Thursday evening. About twenty persons were present. The conditions were harmonious, and many excellent tests were presented and fully recognized. Among those receiving tests were two professors in our medical colleges, who testified to the identity of friends who came to them, and gave their names.

A gentleman who had never attended a séance before, went home believing in the reality of a life beyond this mortal breath, and that the loved ones who pass away from us are only just beyond awaiting our coming. His dear wife had closed her eyes to earth about a year before. 'Little Nannie' wrote her name in full on the slate, and addressed him by his first name, begging him not to doubt, but to believe that she still lived and loved him. The gentleman was converted from a skeptic to a profound and joyful believer in eternal life. A little child who had died of scarlet fever took possession of the medium and demonstrated its identity to its mother, who was present.

Every one received one or more conclusive tests; and taken altogether, it was a most remarkable séance. Many present have gladly consented to have their names given as references as to the truthfulness of the tests to any one who may ask Mrs. Hamilton for them. Her Thursday night circles are indeed remarkable; and herein lies a great work, for Mrs. H. is really one of the best test mediums before the public."

ALBANY.—A correspondent writes that at the meeting of the Ladies' Aid, April 20th, Henry J. Pierce presented to the First Spiritualist Society a beautiful water-color, life-size portrait of the Vice President, Mr. J. D. Chism, through whose efforts the society was organized and has attained its present prosperous condition. The presentation was made by Mr. M. Carl, Treasurer of the society, in a few well-chosen words, and was responded to by the President, Mr. D. M. S. Fero, whose remarks were reported in the Telegram as follows:

"I feel my inability to command language to properly express my earnest desire to do justice to the artist or the original of this magnificent expression and appreciation of merit. However, I accept this generous gift in behalf of the First Spiritualist Society, prompted, I trust, by the same motives that actuated the artist who produced this specimen of workmanship. Mr. Pierce, as a token of respect to one to whom we owe a debt of gratitude that we can never pay; whose vigor, whose constancy, whose magnanimity, whose penetration and vigilance are allowed to merit the highest praises, and which appear to have seldom been surpassed. Of course I refer to the original of this portrait, whose force of mind has controlled his more active and stronger qualities and prevented them from running into excess. His heroism has been exempted from all temerity, his frugality from avarice, his friendship from partiality, his enterprise from turbulency and vain ambition. He has guarded himself with equal care and equal success from less infirmities at his ripe age. Endowed with great command over himself, he has attained an age that but few of us will reach. We are, under his guidance, sharing the praise of success as a spiritual organization. Nature, as if desirous that so bright a production of her skill should be set in the fairest light, has bestowed on him bodily accomplishments, vigor of limbs, dignity of shape and air, and a pleasant, engaging and open countenance, which, under the denomination of a sage or wise man, the philosophers have been fond of delineating, rather as a fiction of their imaginations than in hope of ever seeing it reduced to practice, so well are all his virtues tempered, so justly are they blended, and so powerfully does each prevent the other from exceeding its proper bounds. With justifiable pride in his efforts to teach and establish the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, he has forced a favorable opinion from those who differ with him theologically, by his earnestness and sincerity and practicing what he preaches."

Carrie E. S. Twing occupies the platform for this society during May, and Mrs. H. S. Lake in June.

NEW YORK CITY.—E. W. Capron writes: "At the afternoon meeting in Adelphi Hall on Sunday, May 6th, we were treated to what the author called an inspirational address, entitled: 'Truths and Facts of Society in the Nineteenth Century.' It was far above the average of inspirational addresses, and was one of the very best we ever listened to. The speaker had taken the pains to reduce her inspirations to writing, and thereby greatly increased their force and general correctness, while her reading did not prevent her giving effect to those trenchant passages in which she portrayed the errors of society, and the persecutions of one sect toward all others, which had continued from the earliest time to the present. It was an address that will be remembered by all who heard it."

BROOKLYN, E. D.—A correspondent writes: "The meetings held for several months past in Eureka Hall have been discontinued for the summer. With no outside help Mrs. Henderson and her son have, during the past season, managed to maintain services at this hall, whereby many have been greatly benefited spiritually and materially."

Massachusetts.

ATTLEBORO.—W. F. Shattuck, President of the First Spiritualist Society, writes: "On Sunday, April 22d, Sylvester Judd, through his medium, Dr. H. P. Fairfield of Rockland, Me., delivered two lectures. Afternoon subject, 'Soul Communion'; evening subjects, 'Second Coming of Christ,' 'Resurrection of the Dead,' and 'Day of Judgment.' At the close of the evening lecture he gave quite a number of tests, all of which were fully recognized.

Tuesday evening, Dr. Fairfield delivered the first lecture on Spiritualism ever given in North Attleboro. The hall was well filled, and the lecture created a profound sensation, awakening a strong feeling in favor of Spiritualism in that place. On Thursday and Friday evenings he held two public séances in our hall, many of the prominent persons of the place attending. A large number of tests were given and recognized.

On Sunday, April 29th, afternoon and evening, he again occupied our platform, addressing a large and attentive audience. Fully recognized evidences of the presence of spirits were given, awakening much interest.

Dr. F. has gained a large number of friends in this place, and the wish of all is that we shall soon be blessed with his presence again. He is an able expounder of spiritual knowledge one who will make a lasting impression upon all assemblies he addresses."

PIGEON COVE.—Mrs. O. M. Lurvey writes: "The Children's Lyceum here is under obligations to Mr. Alonzo Danforth for a present of fifteen sets of cards of his 'Children's Progressive Lyceum Educator.' This gift supplies a want felt here since the Lyceum was organized, namely, a course of teaching whereby the children may learn the object of the Lyceum and what it is to be a Spiritualist. Card No. 1 was used in the Lyceum exercises, May 7th, and proved both interesting and instructive. Thanks are also due to Miss M. T. Shelhamer for a present of music. Mrs. Ida Whitlock, and Mrs. Cutler of Philadelphia, were with us during the past winter, and gave words of encouragment and substantial help to the Lyceum work here. Mrs. Whitlock gave books and music. Mrs. Cutler left the Spiritualists here better off in a pecuniary way. We feel grateful for these evidences of an interest taken in the work here by these kind friends."

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Joseph Wood writes: "The First Association of Spiritualists of this city was highly favored during the five Sundays of April, with the ministrations of Mrs. H. S. Lake, of Boston. The lectures given by her guides developed a wonderful depth as to the philosophy and the natural religion embodied in Modern Spiritualism.

Mrs. Lake has been all along a great favorite with the people of Philadelphia, and during this engagement she has exceeded her past popularity. The audiences increased in number and in interest from her first appearance until the closing services of her engagement, April 29th. One favorable feature of her ministration was that she made it plain to the sense of her hearers that she was but an instrument in the hands and under the influence of gifted spiritual intelligences. Her psychometric readings were of the highest order, and were fully appreciated.

Mrs. Lake is engaged for the closing of the camp at Parkland in September next, and the opening of the lecture season in Philadelphia in October."

BRADFORD.—S. Well informs us that the Bradford Investigating Club has just been organized at this place, at a late meeting of which a Committee was appointed to make arrangements for the visit of a good test medium.

C. J. Curtis, writing from the same place, says: "We have a Liberal Society in Bradford, consisting of one hundred members, one-half Spiritualists, the other half Liberalists. Meetings are held on Sunday evening, and are very interesting. We have music, speeches, reading, recitations and spiritual manifestations. We are greatly in need of a test medium. Will some one of the many whose route lies through this place give us a call?"

Utah.

OGDEN CITY.—Mrs. F. A. Logan writes: "I address you from the home of our mediumistic sister, Mrs. E. N. Balcom, after six months of perigrination in Colorado and Wyoming, finding in each place some adherents to our philosophy. My audiences have comprised persons from churches, infidels and agnostics, as well as Spiritualists. In Leadville, a learned doctor challenged me to a discussion on Spiritualism versus Agnosticism, which I accepted, and the expression of the large audiences at its close proved that I won. Moses and Mattie Hull had at that time been doing a good work in Leadville. I found Mrs. Emma J. Bullene doing a good work in Cheyenne. Laramie is also an open field for workers who have sufficient spirituality and executive ability to hire their own hall, do their own advertising, and meet all their expenses. The average worker would come out all right, having the consciousness of being approved of heaven.

The California State Camp-Meeting, which opens the third day of June in our beautiful city of Oakland, is drawing me that way, but en route I shall stop in the principal towns on the Central Pacific to lecture and distribute spiritual literature, trusting that at the close of each day I may feel I have not lived in vain, but that some little good has been done, by scattering 'the gems of the beautiful' by the wayside."

Minnesota.

ST. PAUL.—Morris S. Liden writes: "Though this is a place of considerable size and importance, there is no Spiritualist society within its limits. I have endeavored to awaken an interest sufficient to start one; have advertised in the daily papers for that purpose, yet no response comes to my request. The churches seem to have things all their own way, and the Spiritualists nothing in theirs. Why this apathy should exist I do not know, but am sure it cannot long remain so. I am rapidly developing as an impressional speaker, and when sufficiently advanced will continue to work at my trade for support, and give my services as a medium free to the public. In this way I hope to give an impetus to the spiritual cause in St. Paul. My address is 459 Broadway."

Iowa.

NEWTON.—"O. S. B." writes that by reason of a lack of mediums, Spiritualism is not as well known in Newton as could be desired. A liberal sentiment, however, seems to be pervading the people in the churches.

A correspondent of the Herald (of N.) wrote, recently, asking the editor and the ministers to bring forth their "strong reasons," as the apostle in "holy writ" has it, for their belief in a future life. The editor replied on the ground of the inherent and instinctive naturalness of such a faith;—the ministers remained silent.

Missouri.

BONNE TERRE.—Dr. S. J. Suddeck writes: "I wish to acknowledge the receipt of a number of copies of the BANNER OF LIGHT, Better Way, Golden Gate and Carrier Dove for the Free Reading-Room at this place, from unknown friends. I placed some of these papers on the tables at various times, but found those in charge removed them at once. Friends of the cause will please in the future direct their packages to me, and I will distribute them from my store and office."

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From his home, in Hamilton Township, Van Buren Co., Michigan, April 11th, 1888, Robert Nesbitt, aged 78 years and 24 days.

Mr. Nesbitt was born in County Antrim, Ireland, March 18th, 1810; came to America at the age of fourteen years, and to Michigan in 1826. He was three times married, his first wife, Miss Sybil Beadle, living but six months; then he married Miss Maria Comley, who bore him five children, four of whom, with their mother, preceded him to spirit-life; then to Mrs. S. L. Griffin, who bore him three daughters, one of whom is in the Summer-Land. He was a millwright by trade, and built the first saw-mill and also the first grist-mill in Kalamazoo County; he also erected the first frame house in Kalamazoo; sawed the first cargo of lumber (black walnut) that ever went to California by way of Cape Horn. During his residence in Van Buren Co. he built and were out five saw-mills, beside one steam-mill in Allegan County. In business, his word was as good as his bond, and his hand was ever open to aid the deserving and needy. Though born and reared under Orthodox influence, his active and logical mind led him to doubt the popular dogmas of the times, and when the "Rochester rappings" began to attract attention, he early became an earnest investigator of Spiritualism, in which he was ably seconded by Mrs. Nesbitt, who was so fortunate as to possess many fine qualities of mediumship. He was a great reader, and early procured and read A. J. Davis's works, Lardner's works and many periodicals of note, etc. He was widely and favorably known for his fearless advocacy of what he considered the truth, and his contempt for all shams and frauds. There was a profusion of floral offerings at the funeral, among which a pillow of white carnations, rose buds, lilies and immortelles, were especially fine. Before his departure he gave minute directions with regard to his business, and directed every particular of the funeral, selecting the pall-bearers, speakers, etc., and particularly directed that no emblems of mourning should be displayed; instead of crape, white ribbons and flowers should be used. Pursuant to his desire, L. V. Moulton, of Grand Rapids, Mich., delivered the funeral sermon, and Mrs. Wisner, of Benton Harbor, followed with a description of what she saw clairvoyantly, detailing the manner in which his spirit was received and sustained by the loving ministrations of his daughters in spirit-life. Mrs. Sanborn, of Kalamazoo, assisted by two voices, furnished appropriate music.

There has gone from the physical side of life one who was potent for good in the community in which he lived, and whose interest in the welfare of men will not cease, but who will still be active in the good work of elevating man to a higher level of morals and enlightenment. X.

From her home, in Collins, Erie Co., N. Y., April 16th, 1888, Phila A. Wheeler Walden, after an illness of only two days.

She was born May 1st, 1834, in Montpelier, Vt., and lived in that State until nineteen years of age, when she came to this vicinity, which has since been her permanent home. By her devotion to justice and truth, and of a generous and unselfish disposition, she won many warm and earnest friends. In her desire to know the truth, she was led to study the philosophy of spirit communion, and in time became a believer. May 10th, 1880, she became the second wife of Philemon Walden, since which time she has had better opportunity to see and learn of the faith she so much enjoyed. Her duties as wife and step-mother were performed with the same aptness and unselfish solicitude that previously characterized her life. Her father, George Wheeler, and sister, Mrs. Paulina Heath, of Hamburg, are the only survivors of her family. The funeral services were held at the house, conducted by George W. Taylor, and a son and daughter and Ella P. Dillingham assisted in singing. A. B. T.

Camp-Meeting in Minnesota.

The Itice Co. Scientific, Moral and Reformatory Association will hold its first Annual Meeting at Morristown on the third Sunday in June, 1888; and in connection therewith will be held a Spiritual and Liberal CAMP-MEETING, commencing on Wednesday, June 13th, and closing on Monday, June 18th.

Being the first meeting of this nature held in Minnesota, we invite and earnestly solicit the attendance and aid of the Spiritualists and Liberals of this and other States to assist in the inauguration and building up of a permanent Camp-Meeting organization at this or some suitable place in this locality. Ample means for board and shelter will be provided at very reduced rates to all who may come.

We also invite Spiritual and Liberal speakers and mediums. Suitable rooms for holding séances will be furnished gratis.

We wish to employ an independent slate-writing medium who will permit investigators to bring their own closed slates. Such a medium would be of great benefit to the cause, beside reaping a rich harvest for him (or her) self financially, as manifestations of this order have never been witnessed or produced in this locality.

The lowest reductions in railroad fare that can be obtained will be secured.

Conveyance hourly between camp-grounds and séance-rooms; also to all trains for a fare not to exceed five cents per trip. Any further information may be obtained by corresponding with MRS. LAURA A. GRANT, Rec. Sec'y, or D. BIRDSALL, Cor. Sec'y, of Waterville, Le Sueur Co., Minn. BY ORDER OF EX. COM.

(Spiritual and Liberal papers please copy.)

PHILOSOPHY OF IMMORTALITY in Connection with Deity and Worship. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Spiritualism and its Origin.

A writer in the Baptist Quarterly Review has undertaken to describe the origin of Modern Spiritualism with a precision of detail that is clearly intended to furnish the basis for any sort of inference to which he might have been predetermined. In collecting all the minutiæ of information belonging to the beginnings of Spiritualism as a new revelation to the world, he compiles a narrative whose obvious purpose is to disparage the significance of the early phenomena, and in all respects to bring the agencies necessarily employed into unmerited discredit and contempt. Among the other statements made with such an air of ostentatious accuracy by this writer, is one to the effect that, a few days after the first revelation, "a neighbor suddenly seized little Katie Fox, and found her in the act of producing the raps with her hands."[*] Upon which the child is reported to have burst into hysterical screams, and all further communication with spirits that night was ended. Thus early, adds the writer, "was the fraudulent nature of the new religion revealed." This story is a sheer, unmitigated falsehood. The writer in the Baptist Quarterly has picked it up as one of the many stories set afloat in the neighborhood of the Fox residence, and believed that he has discovered something of which no one ever heard before; whereas it is nothing more than one of the manufactured falsehoods of forty years ago, which was long since buried in forgetfulness.

Again he says that many persons, ready at first to testify to the mysterious origin of the raps, became "fully convinced that they were never produced except by the physical and voluntary action of the girls themselves; in short, that the entire work was an imposition and a cheat." The naked falsity of this statement is more than its complete refutation. No such conviction of the physical production of the raps was ever reached in the locality of their origin. It suits the purpose of this writer, a little further on, to speak of the people of the immediate neighborhood as ignorant and credulous, easily duped and addicted to the ready reception of impositions and delusions. That being the case, they would naturally have been much more likely to credit such an imposition as he is determined to have it appear that the raps were, and instead of being inclined to criticise and investigate they would have been eager to swallow without discrimination. But the real animus of the writer appears in the inference he is so ready to draw from this report which he so promptly credits, and it is that "this judgment of the Fox Family is doubtless a correct one." That word "doubtless" is a very convenient one for such a judge of evidence as he assumes to be to employ. Plain facts, attested by scores of reputable people, are to go down before the mere "doubtless" of this high master of testimony. Doubtless he swallows his own church-creed on the strength of the same sort of reasoning.

Another fact is of interest, he goes on to say. It is "that the Fox sisters never seemed to lead the advance of new discoveries along this line. The raps constituted their chief stock-in-trade; others developed the principal part of the manifestations known later." Well, and what of that? How would he have had it? Because things have not proceeded according to the notion of a man who offers them only contempt however they might proceed, therefore they are entitled neither to credence nor respect. He would have one of the little Fox sisters become a John the Baptist, and insist that all the phenomena should develop not only through her organization but by her direction. Not so was it ordained that this latest revelation should be given to the world. The invisibles "doubtless" saw that the time had come for opening communication with mortals without the instrumentality of leaders, and directly, not depending on interpreters, pontiffs, priests, councils or synods. Human assumption of authority to lay down rules for the spiritual sustenance and guidance of others, was at an end. The mysterious little raps were the still, small voice, that prognosticated the close of the old regime. It is nothing that its adherents, who have known no other agency or channel for the reception of divine influences, should demand of the new revelation that it should show its certificate in the form of a leader, but to have done so would have tended to discredit the new revelation.

We need not stop, of course, to call the reader's attention to the fling in which this "better-than-thou" writer indulges, in his characteristic remark that "the raps constituted their chief stock-in-trade." What if we were to say to him in return, that immersion, that is, a full bath, constituted the substance of his religious business. But why it is out of order that the raps should come through one, and in the progress of development the other phenomena through others, he unhappily leaves us to guess. He proceeds to amplify his statements thus far made with a ridiculously absurd story about visitors becoming so numerous at the Fox cottage as to make it necessary for Mr. Hyde, the owner, to order the Fox family to vacate it,[†] after which the raps were no longer heard in the little tenant house. Also, that Mr. Hyde expressed regrets that he did not build a high fence around the tenant house, and collect an admission fee from all visitors, and thus extirpate Spiritualism where it originated, instead of sending his tenants forth, and "placing the seed in such soil that it should germinate a mighty harvest." All that is sheer nonsense, which in no event has anything whatever to do with the impartial investigation of the subject, while it does most clearly reveal the prejudice of the one who nevertheless asks to be listened to with the respect due an investigator. It is this authoritative air, this conceit of superiority, this detestable pharisaism, that provokes the general contempt.

"The Fox Sisters are probably still living," mincingly gives out this would-be local historian. He ought to know not only whether they are probably living, but that they actually are living; else he should have said nothing about it. Reliable historians, one of whom he would like to be considered, do not indulge in these "doubtlesses" and "probablys," as the writer in the Baptist Quarterly does. Now what are his labored deductions from the foregoing statements and perhapses? That Spiritualism "professed to be a revelation from higher powers"; that it "appealed to that morbid sentiment among the credulous which always expects some new revelation from the divine to the human"; that "it demanded the darkness of midnight to make heard its messages from the other world"; that it "sprang from sources illiterate, and without moral or religious ideas or conceptions"; that it was "utterly alien to the thought of the community" from among which it arose; that it was "early a convicted impostor, which owed its existence to imposition and falsehood of the baldest type"; that it was at first "an accident, the work of a child,[‡] the deception of a moment, caught up to be expanded into a system in only a few months"; that "it had nothing of the religious about it at first"; that it is "the negation of law, and is intangible and immaterial."

Furthermore, that "its strongest efforts have been in the direction of materializing its work, and in every instance where full investigation has been accomplished they have proved to be frauds or failures"; that "it is diffusive and not concentrative in its habit"; and that it "has built no Mecca, and hardly has a shelter for its relics." He is likewise troubled at the thought that, while Spiritualism "has scattered itself among the nations," "its effect upon the religious nature of man is as deadly as is carbonic acid gas upon respiration." He says that, while "professing to be spiritual, materialism grows rankest where Spiritualism most abounds"; that if it is law-abiding, "it is because of the utter lack of all law in its system"; that it is "utterly without creed or uniform doctrine," the tendencies of every one being his highest moral motives; and that is "powerless to restrain men"; and with not moral force enough to build up one noble character, or reform one fallen human being; and, lastly, that "it stands united only in its opposition to the revealed religion of Jesus Christ." What, then, is this revealed religion of Jesus Christ over which there have been long centuries of cruel and bloody contention? If revealed, it certainly ought to be perfectly easy to comprehend, and therefore above all dispute. What is truly religious about the teachings of Jesus is no more rejected by Spiritualists than by any class of professing Christians who come short in its practice. It is the theology built over it that Spiritualists reject.

As for a creed, why should the want of one be any evidence against the merits of Spiritualism? Why a creed any more than a leader? What is there in either, we demand to know, that establishes the fact of a revelation? Authority is the sole inspiration of the one, and ambition of the other. It surely is no detriment to any new religion that its only statement of belief is that God is the common Father, in whose love we all live and move and have our being, and that every one's own conduct, and not vicarious atonement, will be his judge in the court of conscience. Spiritualists do not hold, as the writer we are discussing evidently does, that a person may go on in a course of wrong-doing to the end of his earthly life, and then by professing repentance get rid of his punishment by the punishment of some one else, called vicarious atonement. Neither do they believe that Jesus Christ was God, as a great many people who are not Spiritualists refuse to believe; nor in endless punishment, in hell or anywhere else; nor in a God of revengefulness, who gets angry with his erring and imperfect creatures. Nor in any of the rest of what is fast becoming, in the estimation of intelligent people, the sacerdotal gibberish of the centuries. But whether it does or not, that can rightly have no bearing whatever on the question whether the phenomena of Spiritualism do not establish the fact of direct communication between the other world and this. And this is the point on which the Baptist Quarterly writer says and can say nothing.

He says that Spiritualism is the outgrowth of no antecedent causes. How does he know that? Can he know of the existence of all the causes in the universe that are likely to yield precisely this development? Therefore, because he does not happen to comprehend and understand everything, he jumps to the conclusion that the movement is "of Providence, in whose hands rest alike the fall of the sparrow and the changes of the universe." He is only indulging in the cant with which he is clearly familiar, but he has none the less reached the truth about it. It is of Providence, and in its good time and own way. And for that reason he may very properly conclude with the humbler determination that "we may not feel ourselves called upon to read clearly the entire lesson of this movement." He may try to get out of his evident dilemma by asserting, as he does, that "there are not wanting those in high repute as educators and scholars, who interpret them as attempts of Satan to counterfeit the great forces and operations of Christianity." But that does but show again what an essential agent in the scheme of old theology Satan is, without whom the structure of its creeds would tumble to the ground. On the whole this writer is inclined to give the whole matter up as too deep for him. He cries out that, after much study of the subject, the conviction has steadily grown on him that "after centuries of civilization the human heart has not become by the breadth of a line more refined nor holy," and that "no leaders may be so immoral, no imposition so base, and no new faith so gross, that they may not appeal to the weakness and wickedness of millions of men."

He sticks to "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints," although it does not seem, by his own statements, to have done much good, with civilization to help, in making men's hearts more refined and holy. If we found it to be so unproductive of good results as he himself confesses, we hardly think we should set up such a cry against almost any new revelation that promised at least as much as the little that an old professed revelation had accomplished.

[*] The rappings were heard in the house in 1844, when occupied by another family, and in 1847, when occupied by still another, hence could not have originated, as this writer asserts, with the child making them with her fingers in 1848. That they did not depend for their occurrence wholly on the presence of the children is shown by the fact that one night all the family except Mr. Fox left the house, still the sounds were heard equally as distinct, and questions were answered by them.

[†] Upon discovery that Kate was the most effective medium, she was sent to reside with her sister in Rochester, so that the family might avoid a continuance of the annoyance they had been subject to, and not by order of Mr. Hyde, who was himself an interested observer of the phenomena. So far from it being true, as asserted, that efforts were made to spread the "delusion" and sow the seed thereof, "they shrunk," says Mr. Capron, in the fullest and most authentic history of the events, "from notoriety and from having their names connected with such a strange and unpopular affair. Their efforts were rather to get rid of the trouble than to make themselves notorious by it. But in this they did not succeed. The unseen visitors were so entirely beyond their control, that the demonstrations would be made and sounds be heard by all who visited them."

[‡] At a public meeting in November, 1848, at Corinthian Hall, Rochester, a committee of three ladies took the Fox Sisters into a room, and so examined them they were positive no appliances were about them to produce the sounds, then made some experiments, and reported to the audience as follows:

"When they were standing on pillows, with a handkerchief tied around the bottom of their dresses, tight to the ankles, we all heard the rapping on the wall and floor distinctly."

The Trust Serpent.

The following "trusts" have either been coiled, or are in process of so being, about the American people: "Sugar," "Castor Oil," "School Slates," "Steel Rail," "Iron," "Bessemer Steel," "Plow," "Thresher," "Nail," "Steel and Iron Beam," "Wrought Iron," "Iron Nut," "Stone," "Paper Bag," "Honey," "Oil Cloth," "Regular Doctor," "Graduated Pharmacist"——with more to come.

WOMEN WORKERS IN THE CHURCH.—Usually many of the most efficient and persistent workers are to be found among the women. The most timid and hesitating among these may be encouraged by learning more fully of Deborah, the Judge; and Anna, the prophetess; of Mary, in her devoted service to Christ; and of Dorcas, in her ministrations to the needs of the poor. It was the women who were last at the cross, and first at the sepulchre. Priscilla could hospitably entertain Paul, and successfully teach Apollos. Both the Old and the New Testaments abound in instances where woman was honored with divine commissions which she discharged with marked acceptance and success. Nor were they without their place in the early church, laboring as deaconesses (Rom. 16:1), and as indispensable helpers in carrying forward the great work of Christ in the world.—"Methods of Church Work," by Rev. S. Stall.

The modern Methodists have, however, just "officially" declined to give the nineteenth century "women-workers in the church" any other recognition than the stinted one generally accorded by the ministerial Behemoths to the theologic "hewers of wood and drawers of water."

☞ Rev. Dr. Talmage's recent random shot at Spiritualism has "found mark the archer never meant," in that his arrow has reached the sensibilities of many writers all over the continent—who are not Spiritualists recognizedly—and led them to reply to his extraordinary charges. As one instance, a correspondent forwards us a letter signed "Inquirer," which was printed in the Moncton, N. B., Daily Times—its author, we are informed, being a local clergyman! The ground taken is excellent—mostly on a biblical basis, as might naturally be expected. We shall present the main points of this article in our next issue.

☞ Our Free Circle-Room continues to be well filled Tuesday and Friday afternoons, by intelligent people, who appear to be favorably interested, when listening to what the different spirits have to say.——We tender grateful thanks to friends whose names are not known to us for choice flowers placed on the table, and also to J. Q. A. Hill and Mrs. S. S. Chace for beautiful specimens of flowering arbutus.

☞ London (Eng.) has four hundred and forty-four burying-grounds. No wonder that typhoid fevers are so prevalent in that city. Better root out the grave-yards and establish crematories instead. The most important thing is to keep people healthy, or healthier than they are in large cities, by banishing sentiment, or false "respect for the dead," and thus prevent the suffering and premature death of the living.

☞ The St. Augustine (Fla.) Press, for April 21st, copies in full, with due credit, THE BANNER'S recent editorial on a late discourse on Spiritualism in San Francisco, wherein Father Prendergast, the Roman Catholic Vicar-General, made his important admissions as to the verity of the phenomena—the source of them only being his point of attack.

☞ The Two Worlds places before its readers our remarks on the attempt made in the State Legislature to stamp out Spiritualism in Massachusetts, and commends the details therein given "to the attention of Spiritualists in other countries besides America."

AN AFFLICTED MEDIUM.—We learn that the widow of the late John P. Dimond has had another affliction befall her within a few days, by reason of a fall, which fractured her hip. She is now confined to her bed, and is utterly helpless. She is reported to be in very destitute circumstances at No. 12 Kendall street, Boston, where those who feel to render her pecuniary assistance can send their offerings, which will be highly appreciated.

☞ We are informed, through a circular, that C. M. Brown, founder and editor of the Eastern Star, has sold out his interest in that paper, and it will here. after be published by a stock company at Bangor, Me. E. Schuyler Wardwell (who is also editor of the Bucksport Clipper) will have charge of the editorial department under the new arrangement.

☞ Attention is called to the announcement of Miss Viel, on our fifth page, headed "Excelsior." The lady desires to be considered merely as an instrument through which good remedial work is done by invisible but skillful intelligences.

Dr. Bloede on Materialization.

Dr. Gustav Bloede, the scholarly German Spiritualist of Brooklyn, N. Y., of whose decease mention was made in these columns last week, wrote as follows at the conclusion of a lengthy review of the phenomenon of materialization made by him in 1874:

"It is rational to believe that the great end of Providence, in allowing the wonderful spirit manifestation of will-power over matter, which we observe in materialization, is to reëstablish among men the shattered and almost lost belief in the eternal life and destiny of man, by the incontestable testimony of the outer senses common to every human being, whilst the gift of spiritual sight—though the perceptions of this may be quite as real as those of the senses—is a comparatively and exceedingly rare one. We may believe any trustworthy man who asserts that he has seen a spirit, a fact attested since the earliest history of mankind; but a materialized spirit—strict test conditions always supposed—ceases to be an object of belief, becomes a matter of fact, an incontrovertible evidence of our senses, just as well as any other visible, audible or tangible object of the material world."

California Camp-Meeting.

The official circular sets forth that the meeting will occur at LAKE MERRITT PARK, Oakland, Cal., from June 3d to July 1st. The officers of the Association are as follows: J. C. Steele, President; Charles E. Elliott, Vice President; Mrs. S. B. Whitehead, Recording Secretary; G. H. Hawes, Corresponding Secretary. Inquiries may be directed to the Corresponding Secretary, 326 Sansome street, San Francisco. Mrs. R. S. Lillie, J. J. Morse and W. J. Colville will officiate with their well known ability; and Edgar W. Emerson, J. V. Mansfield, Mrs. Foye and other mediums be in attendance. Mr. Colville will hold science classes and Mr. Morse developing circles.

THE THEOSOPHIST.—The April number, just at hand, has for its opening paper one by H. S. Olcott upon "The Physical Portents of an Avatar." "The Trinity of Patriarchs" is the subject of Part VII. of "Travestied Teachings." An article upon "Psychism and the Fourth Dimension," will be read with interest. The experiments and conclusions of Prof. Zöllner are considered at some length, the remark being made that there is but small room to doubt the old philosophers of India were familiar with both the fact and the theory of the fourth dimension, some of their metaphysical conceptions being directly in that line. A correspondent explains the command of Pythagoras, "Abstain from beans," by saying that in the time of Pythagoras beans represented voting-papers, and the order was designed to prevent too much time and attention being given to politics. THE NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION is to hold its annual meeting at San Francisco, Cal., from the 17th to the 20th of July inclusive, and has issued an Official Bulletin in an illustrated pamphlet of 32 pages, in which is given all desirable information as to fares, provisions for the reception of visitors, proposed excursions, etc. The attractions are great, the fares very low—that from Boston and return being only ninety-five dollars and seventy five cents for the round trip, and corresponding low rates for other cities. The opportunity here offered to teachers and those interested in educational institutions, to make a trip across the continent, view the most glorious scenery of the world and recuperate their physical and mental energies, is one that probably will not again occur in a lifetime. Copies of the Bulletin can be obtained by addressing Ira G. Holtt, Sacramento, Cal.

☞ Correspondents in Newburyport, Mass., and elsewhere are writing us to know who "Henry Cummings," "the eminent physical test medium from London, Eng.," etc., etc., may be, who announces his intended advent among them. We can only reply that to our knowledge we have never heard of "his eminency" before. His pale green—not "yellow"—handbill bears the imprint of San Antonio (Tex.?). Perhaps some one there can enlighten the inquiring public in the premises.

GERALD MASSEY commenced, Sunday, May 13th, at the Cavendish Rooms, Mortimer street, London, a series of evening lectures. The subject of the first was "Shakspeare and Bacon; the Facts and Fallacies of the Case." Subsequent lectures are to treat upon literary, evolutionary, gnostic and spiritualistic subjects.

☞ We regret to be informed—as we are by W. W. Currier, Esq.—that Mr. James M. Palmer, one of the old and earnest Spiritualists of Haverhill, Mass., now lies dangerously ill, and patiently awaiting the birth into spirit-life, at his home in that city.

☞ Mrs. T. J. Lewis has located at 217 Harrison Avenue, Boston. She has, we are informed, the reputation of being a remarkable test and prophetic medium.

☞ Dr. Horatio L. Tryon, late of Colorado, has arrived in Boston, and intends to establish himself here as an electrician. He is a veteran Spiritualist and medium.

Spiritual International Congress in Barcelona.

At the same time as the Universal Exposition which will take place this year at Barcelona, the Spiritualists of Spain are preparing an International Spiritual Congress in that city, to be held in the coming month of June. A preparatory congress took place the 26th of February last, when an Executive Commission was appointed, representing Spiritualism in Spain, which was to prepare the basis for the International Congress. This initial step taken in a country suffering from a clerical yoke most intolerant and among a people still borne down by the most abject fanaticism, speaks loudly of what immense progress Spiritualism has made in Spain. We shall hear the appeal which the Executive Commission will make to the Spiritualists of the world. It is very desirable that each nation should be represented in this International Congress.—[Translated for the BANNER OF LIGHT from the French Brussels Moniteur of the 15th of April, 1888, by C. G. Helleberg, of Cincinnati, O.]

CAIN'S WIFE.

Where did he get her? Who was her mother?
Had she a sister? Had she a brother?
Was she pre-Adamite—born before history—
With her identity shrouded in mystery?
Maid of Phœnicia, Egypt, Arabia,
Africa, India, or sun-kissed Suabia?
Who was her father? Was he a viking?
Cruising about just to his liking;
Out of the Whenceness, over the water,
Into the Whereness bringing his daughter;
Native of Norway, Denmark or Sweden?
Lured by the charms of the Garden of Eden?
Blonde or brunette, rounded or slender?
Fiery or frigid, haughty or tender?
Why are her graces unknown to fame?
Where did Cain meet her? What was her name?
Whisper it softly—say, can it be
The lady we seek was R. Haggard's "SHE"?
Tell me, ye sages, students of life,
Answer my query: Who was Cain's wife?

NO ROOM FOR THE WOMEN.—At the session of the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, held in New York City, May 7th, an amendment offered by Dr. Neeley, of Philadelphia, to the report of the Committee, was adopted by a vote of 249 yeas to 173 nays. This amendment excludes women from seats as lay delegates in the present Conference, and submits the question of eligibility to future General Conferences to the Annual Conferences.

"Ah! how do you do, friend Jonas?"
"How do you do, sir?"
"I say, Jonas, how are you getting on in a business way?"

It has been said, and not contradicted, that the inventive genius, Thomas A. Edison, is a spiritual medium, and gets all his wonderful inventions by and through the aid of spirits—and yet the New York press do n't call him a fraud, as it does other mediums. "Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

The world has lost one of its greatest experimental chemists by the death of the Swede, Alfred Nobel, the inventor of dynamite, and the man who made the wide use of nitro-glycerine practicable. The new explosive that Sombrero discovered in Paris forty-one years ago, by treating glycerine with sulphuric and nitric acid, was never practically applied, until after years of experimenting Nobel succeeded in producing nitro-glycerine in a form that admitted of comparatively safe handling.

It is admitted by the New York daily press that there are forty-three thousand Spiritualists residing in that city, and a large number in Brooklyn.

The American Spiritualist Alliance has passed a series of resolutions with respect to the alleged disrespectful treatment of Spiritualism on the part of the press of this city in the matter of the Diss Debar trial. The Spiritualists protest against the mixing up of the character of the accused with the Spiritualistic creed, and assert that her character alone is the issue in question. It is admitted in the resolutions that she is a medium, but insisted that to punish her for acting as such is a "species of religious bigotry" and "a violation of constitutional rights."—*N. Y. EFFECT OF SO-CALLED CHRISTIANITY.—Fall River, Mass., dispatches for May 13th state that there was a lively row in the Baptist Church at Somerset that afternoon. The Sunday School has been divided into two factions for several months. On that date an effort to unite them failed, and the rival factions indulged in a strong debate, which occupied several hours, during which some of the adults came into personal conflict. Fine example for the children.

The paraffine molds of spirit-hands have long been given up, and, if we are not mistaken, they are considered even by Spiritualists to have been only a trick.—Boston Investigator.

Spiritualists who were not prejudiced against Mrs. Hardy, individually, never considered the paraffine molds of spirit-hands "only a trick." The experiment was first suggested by the late Prof. William Denton, with Mrs. Hardy as the medium. We were present on several occasions and witnessed the success of the experiment, and publicly stated so at the time; we have several specimens in our possession, which we shall be most happy to show to any one who may wish to see them.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning the service opened with a duet by Mr. and Mrs. Lillie; an invocation and singing by Mr. Lillie, Miss Mintie Eakins, accompanist; following which, Mrs. Lillie's guides spoke upon "Life and Its Lessons."

It will be a long time before we understand the problem of our being, whence we come and whither we go. We are strangely organized, made up of eternal essences and substances, portions of the infinite whole. The soul has its earthly experiences, passes beyond these limitations into realms unexplored, and returning, gives expression to thoughts through the mortal again. As a spirit, I shall incarnate myself in matter, walk unseen by your side, until I have unfolded all that earth will enable me to do, and thus completing the work in myself, fulfill God's law. I do not understand all the problems of life; I cannot comprehend the human will; it seems to force and impel me onward, ere I hold communion with it; conscious eternal entity is equality with God. Spirit and matter in unison is not the result of an infinite mistake, it has an infinite purpose; we represent this in our being. Spiritualism teaches there is room for every soul in the economy of nature, not one is lost. Spirit-communion is a proof of spirit-return.

In Bibles and books we find men's ideas of God, what he demands and commands them to do. We find the same in ancient mythology. Egypt had its books and wisdom; and now, after eighteen hundred years of Christianity, there has come a great tidal wave of skepticism; men say I cannot and do not accept past teachings. All religious faiths have their skeptics; they are the thinkers and reasoners. Thomas Paine was abused, hated, called an infidel. While we look at the teachings of that brave man, we find he gave reasons and proof of the justice of his conclusions. Washington and Jefferson were liberal men. In all the history of man we see the force of eternal change; it is all God's work. We can wait his time; and the development which has been retarded through earth-conditions will be made up in the beyond.

After a duet by Mr. Lillie and Miss Eakins, Mrs. Lillie gave an improvisation, "The Troubled Waters."

Evening.—After singing by Mr. Lillie and Miss Eakins, Mrs. Lillie considered several questions, one of which, "Is not man by nature a selfish being, and is not selfishness one of the strongest God-given endowments for man's protection, development and happiness?"

Self-preservation, it was remarked, is one of the strongest elements in human nature. If this element of our being is used unwisely, or in extremes, it may cause disaster. If man dwells upon the spiritual too much he becomes unbalanced. Man who lives for self alone becomes a self-destroyer. No man can injure others but he injures himself, because others are affected by our deeds. If selfishness is used wisely for the uplifting of selfhood we shall receive the highest unfoldment and growth, the soul will rise to conditions where self will become illuminated. Every faculty is a part of the divine plan and a fulfillment of the law; there is wisdom underlying all. After a poem Mr. Lillie closed with a song. Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform for the last time this season, next Sunday morning and evening, 10:30 and 7:30. The following Sunday Mr. J. W. Fletcher will be the speaker, and give his illustrated lecture in the evening. MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the members of the Boston Spiritual Temple for the election of officers for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such business as may legally be brought before them, will be held at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street, on Wednesday evening, June 6th, at eight o'clock.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The guides of Mrs. Lake gave an excellent discourse at the Temple on Sunday last on "Materialization; Its Ultimate Development and Use." They spoke of the prevailing skepticism regarding it, even among Spiritualists, but held that every class of phenomena is needed, and comes in answer to a demand. Many persons are so material in all their ideas, that nothing short of a material demonstration will satisfy them of immortality. The mind needs a solid foundation of fact to rest on before it can soar into the intellectual and spiritual realms which Spiritualism opens up to us. There is a further ultimate and use in materialization, in the opportunity which spirits get to come back to our material plane and outwork that which, perchance, a premature death may have prevented them from accomplishing. Life in the flesh is for a purpose, and many sadly realize their needs when parted from the physical, and feel compelled to come back and work out in the atmosphere of mediums such problems as were not properly solved by them when here. This is a much more important fact than we can fully realize. But materialization will not become a universal fact until all are ready for it. It is not given to satisfy morbid curiosity, or the love of the marvelous, but is the legitimate outworking of the great law of demand, an evolution of the need of the soul.

The guides desired to say that they could place no limitation to the possibilities of materialization, but humanity is at least half the factor in this problem. The results flowing from its ultimate perfection will be far-reaching, and change the whole thought and aspect of human life, bringing a greater sense of justice and higher ideas of the responsibilities which attach to each soul, and a diviner expression in all department, of government, of labor and of social life.

Next Sunday, Mrs. Lake's guides will again speak at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M. Subject: "Conflicts of Life." There will also be the usual Fraternity School at 12:30 P. M.

On Wednesday there will be the usual sociable in the lower audience room at 7:30 P. M. All cordially invited, seats free. W. H. R.

The First Independent Club.—The repertoire of our "Literary" evening contained a number of new faces, to which we are indebted for an enjoyable time. After our period of silent meditation, dedicated to those unable to be present, the programme was opened by a recitation by Miss Lily Rich, followed by Miss Scott with two selections: "Bridget McNeil" and "A Kiss in School," both of which were effectively rendered. Miss Jennie Rhind made appropriate remarks, and Capt. Holmes, in humorous vein, evoked much applause by his poetic inspirations. Grand Master Fletcher, in terse and pithy words, called upon all to maintain the dignity of Spiritualism, live in accordance with its teachings, and to demand for it the platform and usage which all other beliefs are privileged to enjoy. To see only the beautiful and true in everything, and let the false pass unnoticed, is an excellent principle to follow out. Mr. A. A. Wheelock, a veteran in the field, delivered an emphatic and vigorous protest against the recent assaults upon Spiritualism from clergymen, and their misrepresenting biblical quotations, which were selected and pruned to fit only their own ideas.

Mr. W. F. Falls demanded that in all alleged exposures the names of the exposers be published with the others, that those familiar with all parties might duly weigh the characters of each and form their conclusions accordingly.

Miss Emma J. Nickerson recited with dramatic effect "The Fisherman's Grave," and upon being heartily encored gave a humorous improvisation entitled "Lines to a Skeptic," both of which were eagerly listened to by the audience present. Mrs. Eudora Case sang several pleasing selections during the evening, and we trust she has many more such for our future enjoyment.

The hearty interest in this new Club is almost phenomenal, and the indications for the autumn growth and outlook are bright indeed.

F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington Street.—The Sunday meetings in this hall are closed for the season, but the Association is holding public circles every Thursday evening. Owing to the illness of the President, J. H. Lewis, the last circle was in charge of Mr. J. E. Hall, and was one of unusual interest—"Marcia," the spirit-control of Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Abby N. Burnham and several other mediums lending value to the session by remarks, tests, etc.—Mr. Hall has hired the Ladies' Aid Parlors from June 1st, and will hold public circles every Thursday evening thereafter, until the meetings of the Association are again resumed, which is announced for the 7th of October, with some of the best talent in the spiritual field, including Joseph D. Stiles, Edgar W. Emerson, Geo. W. Tisdale, Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. J. Clark Kimball and others.—The tickets for the Strawberry Festival the last Thursday evening in May are nearly all sold, the number being limited to the seating capacity of the hall, and a general good time may be expected. HEATH.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—Despite the inclemency of the weather the children came out in goodly numbers, there being seventy-eight in the march. The usual order of exercises was presented, the following children participating: recitations, Gracie Scales, Rosa Wilbor, Hattie Dodge, Sadie Peters, Flora Frazier and Addie Hazeltine.

Wednesday evening, May 9th, thanks to that energetic worker, Mrs. Butler, the members of the Lyceum had the pleasure of attending a Poverty Party, held in Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. Mr. Charles H. Thayer had charge of the dancing. At 8 P. M. the March was formed, led by Walter Hargrove and Lovie Plumb. The music for the evening was furnished by Prof. Milligan's Orchestra. Prizes were given for the most unique costumes and awarded to Mr. Herbert Bradford, Miss Hattie Rugles, Master Bennie Russell, and Miss Mamie Barbier, Master Geo. Wilson, Miss Rosa Isaacs. Special prizes, Lottie Giles and Master Carleton James. The party was a success in every way, and it is the intention of the ladies connected with the Sewing Circle to have something interesting to offer every week. Floral Sunday will be observed by the Lyceum May 27th with appropriate services. HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

The First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society, 1031 Washington street.—Friday evening, May 11th, after a song by Miss Bailey, Jacob Edson presented new ideas for thought upon Spiritual Philosophy. Duet by Miss Bailey and Miss Wakefield; remarks by Mr. L. L. Whitlock. The audience was next favored with inspirational singing by Mrs. M. E. Whittemore, accompanied by her daughter, followed by remarks from Mr. Camp of New Haven, Conn. Dr. Paxson and Dr. Mark Smith related personal experiences in their mediumship.

All will remember the Poverty Party of May 25th. We appeal to all who have helped us in days gone by to assist us in our efforts by their attendance.

The annual memorial service in memory of our departed loved ones will be held Sunday, May 27th. Contributions of flowers are respectfully solicited, and will be very gratefully received.

ALICE P. TORREY, Secretary.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The meetings on Sunday last were interesting and instructive. The exercises were participated in by Mrs. H. L. Macker, Mrs. Lewis, Miss Cullen, Peter McKenzie, Mrs. M. W. Leslie and others, with remarks and clear tests and spirit delineations. Mrs. A. W. Wildes gave several poems which were highly appreciated. Mrs. Leslie and Mr. McKenzie gave many correct psychometric readings, and Miss Cullen a number of facial readings, which were pronounced satisfactory.

Ladies' Aid Parlors.—The meetings for the discussion of Spiritualism in its various forms, and psychical phenomena of all classes, will be continued at the Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington street, Sunday afternoon at 2:30, and evening at 7:30. These Facts Socials are free to all to ask questions and express their views.

Conference meetings will be held Mondays and Wednesdays, at 2:30 P. M.; Fact meetings Thursdays and Fridays, at 2:30 P. M.

Mr. Joseph D. Stiles and Mr. Edgar W. Emerson, two of the best known test mediums in the country, have been engaged, and will give public tests from the platform.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan, the remarkable improvisatrice, will improvise poems during the public exercises upon subjects given by the audience.

Opening Day will be observed June 16th, when railroad tickets can be procured at a reduced price.

The Old Colony Railroad cars will commence stopping at the Onset depôt May 21st. Call for tickets for Onset depôt.

At a recent meeting of the directors of the Association, a resolution was offered, which was carried without a dissenting vote, that a petition be presented to the Selectmen of the town of Wareham, praying that they will not license any individual to sell intoxicating liquor in that portion of the town known as Onset.

The Association had previously taken the precaution of suppressing the sale of liquor upon the grounds by having certain restrictive conditions in their deed-conveyance.

Doubtless the aim of the petition is to induce the town to work in harmony with the Association without the necessity of resorting to the law with persons who sell liquors on leased property, without the knowledge of the owners of the same. Spiritualists should feel proud of the efforts of the officers of this Association to make Onset a temperance village and a beautiful health resort. OBSERVER.

VERONA PARK, ME.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Extensive preparations are being made for the coming meeting at Verona Park, commencing Aug. 12th and ending Aug. 27th. Some of our best speakers and mediums are engaged, among whom are Mrs. A. M. Glading, Geo. A. Fuller of Dover, Mass., and Geo. L. Francis of Manchester, N. H., a fine elocutionist, singer and musician, who gave great satisfaction last season and will receive a warm welcome here in August. Other mediums and lecturers are expected.

Wealthy and influential parties have purchased lots and cottages. Many not belonging to our household of faith are becoming interested in Verona Park, and in the near future it is sure to expand to a beautiful summer resort as well as a most successful Spiritualist camp-ground. The Park is situated on Verona Island, on the banks of the Penobscot River, one and one-half miles from the pretty village of Bucksport. We have upon the ground already twenty fine cottages, a nice auditorium, dining hall and dancing pavilion. A fine view is obtainable of the river with its constantly passing steamers and boats, Fort Knox and the mountains opposite. Wild flowers and berries abound on the island. Good fishing and boating are among the amusements of the Park.

The fine and elegant steamers, Penobscot and Katahdin, leave Boston Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, at five P. M., reaching Bucksport about noon the following day. Carriages are in waiting to convey visitors to the Park. The new steamer, Rockland, is to make daily trips from Rockland to Bangor. During camp meeting season landings will be made at Verona Park each way. Letters of inquiry and for circulars should be addressed to Bucksport, Me. DR. H. F. MERRILL, Sec'y.

PARKLAND (PA.) CAMP.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Our society (the First) is welcoming Charles Dawbarn with large audiences this month (May) at its hall on Spring Garden street, Philadelphia. At every meeting the crowd of intelligent and appreciative thinkers shows the deep interest felt in the lectures.

PARKLAND is the summer home of so many of the Spiritualists of Philadelphia that it is already populous for the season. The sound of the hammer and the saw blends sweetly with the song of the wood-robin, for many new cottages are being built, and improvements that are very costly are being rapidly pushed to completion. A very active syndicate of earnest workers has determined to make Parkland specially attractive for excursions from Philadelphia; and having both talent and abundant means at its command, the season of 1888 will be an assured success.

The first excursion will be on Decoration Day, after which every Sunday will have its special trains. The regular session of the Camp does not commence till July; but the syndicate has engaged Mr. Dawbarn to lecture at Parkland every Sunday in June; he proposes to give a course of his well-known practical lectures on "Unborn Man"; "Boyhood of Human Nature"; "Consequences of Pre-natal Conditions," "The Manufacture of Success," etc., which will prove attractive and instructive to the crowds likely to be present.

Mr. Dawbarn speaks at the Niantic Camp in July; and at Cassadaga and Lake Pleasant in August. H.

J. Frank Baxter, next Sunday, the 20th inst., will lecture for the Spiritualists in Fitchburg; Tuesday evening, the 22d, in Pigeon Cove, Rockport; and Wednesday evening, the 23d, in Manchester. Through the Sundays of June he will lecture in Cincinnati, O.

Mrs. Lunt-Parker goes to Maple Rapids, Mich., for a four-days' engagement from May 17th to lecture, give tests and psychometric readings; would like to make engagements for July, August and September, accompanied, if desired, by her daughter, Lily May Lunt, eight years of age, who is a natural clairvoyant, and also gives psychometric readings.

He will speak in the morning, and in the evening deliver his "Illustrated Spiritualism," assisted by the Clinton (colored) Quartette. He will also lecture and give tests in New London, Monday evening, May 21st.

Mrs. Addie M. Stevens closes a successful five weeks' engagement with the Spiritual Society of Keene, N. H., May 20th; will speak in Hillsboro, May 27th. Would like engagements for June; will, if desired, attend funerals.

Progressive Spiritual Test Meetings are held each Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P.M. at 52 Union Square, by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Boston.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—There was a fine audience in the morning to listen to the divine teachings of Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham. The leading subject of the lecture was "Reincarnation," which was treated with marked ability, and the arguments used in opposition to this theory were to most minds incontrovertible. The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was opened by Mrs. Brigham with an invocation. George H. Jones made thoughtful and interesting remarks, suggested by attending the funeral of a friend, when an Orthodox clergyman defined the relative position of the departed precisely in the same manner as Spiritualists, showing the drift of public opinion in favor of our beautiful religion. Mrs. Brigham followed with remarks in the same train of thought. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave the usual number of tests. In the evening Mrs. Brigham spoke to a large audience, that showed the appreciation the public have of this gifted medium. Mrs. Brigham speaks in Paterson next Sunday, and Mrs. Amanda M. Spence will speak for the First Society. S.

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

☞ All Spiritualists are cordially invited to become connected with THE ALLIANCE—either as resident or non-resident members—and to take an active part in its work.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead," and all such are invited to become members. NELSON CROSS, President.
J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

The Alliance held its Annual Meeting on the 8th inst., for the purpose of electing officers, with the following result:

President, Nelson Cross; first Vice President, Erastus Benn; second Vice President, Dr. B. C. Cetlinski; Treasurer, F. S. Maynard; Corresponding Secretary, J. F. Clark; Recording Secretary, J. F. Jeaneret; Counsellor, Henry Kiddle; Counselor, Dr. G. H. Perine; Counselor, Mrs. M. E. Williams.

J. F. JEANERET, Sec'y.
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

Newburyport, Mass.—J. W. Fletcher lectured for our Society last Sunday. His subject in the afternoon was: "What the Clergy Say." He handled his theme in a very able and convincing manner, and his large audience was so well pleased with his efforts that the people came out in even larger numbers to hear what he would say in the evening on "What does the Bible Teach?" Grandly did he answer this question; his lecture was one of great benefit to his hearers, and will result in good to our Cause in this city, through its awaking, as it has, the spirit of investigation here. It is hoped that Mr. Fletcher will be able to be with us at our next season's meetings.

Last Sunday was our concluding meeting for this season, as we always close about the middle of May. We have had a successful season, the interest being great throughout the course to the very close.

Our Annual Meeting occurs on the first Monday in June, when we elect officers for the next season.

Louis F. Jones, the spirit artist, has been visiting friends here the past week. F. H. F.

Peterboro', N. H.—J. Frank Baxter, of Chelsea, Mass., spoke before the Progressive Liberalists' Association at the Opera House, Monday evening, May 7th. The subject, "The Standing and Tendency of Liberal and Spiritual Thought," was treated in a manner both entertaining and convincing.—Monday and Tuesday evenings, May 8th and 9th, Edgar W. Emerson, of Manchester, N. H., one of our finest inspirational speakers, lectured and gave many tests, all fully and gladly recognized. P. L. A.

["CHESHIRE'S" letter will appear next week.]

Fitchburg, Mass.—Mrs. Kate R. Stiles lectured and gave tests for the First Spiritual Society, May 13th. She is gifted in inspirational speaking, tests and psychometric readings, strong proofs of which she gave us.—Next Sabbath, the 20th, J. Frank Baxter will speak for us, and also use his mediumistic gifts if conditions are favorable. The following evening, the 21st, Mr. Baxter gives our Society a benefit.

MRS. E. S. LORING, Sec'y.

Norwich, Conn.—Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings closed her labors with our Society Thursday evening, May 3d, in a very fine elocutionary entertainment, which received marked attention from the press.

Sunday, May 6th, Miss Emma J. Nickerson occupied our platform, giving two fine discourses, followed by excellent psychometric readings. The audience expressed their appreciation with repeated applause, and many regrets were expressed that her engagement was so short.

May 13th, Mrs. N. J. Willis, of Cambridge, was our speaker, and, although well known in our spiritual ranks, this was the first time we have had the pleasure of listening to her. The afternoon address, upon "The Value of Spiritualism," was a most able effort, and the evening address equally fine.

We hope in future to welcome each of these excellent workers to our platform again.

Next Sunday, May 20th, closes our season. Special Memorial Services will be held, Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, speaker. MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Chicago, Ill.—Mrs. Amelia H. Colby-Luther speaks at 3 P. M. on the Sundays of May, for the First Society of Spiritualists, South Side, meeting in Avenue Hall, 159 Twenty-second street.

Mrs. Humphrey Ward, in her novel of "Robert Elsmere," which has just called out attention and treatment from Ex-Premier Gladstone and Mr. Hutton, makes the same points that the late Matthew Arnold did in his "Literature and Dogma," i. e.: that the supernatural is not a true part of religion, but its gloss; that miracles are impossibilities, and that the claim that Jesus was the incarnation of the divine being, except in a strictly human sense, is entirely without foundation in the nature of things.

Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has been engaged for the first weeks of Lookout Camp-Meeting in July. Other engagements are being made in addition to those published (on our third page), and this popular camp will be made a greater attraction than ever.

The Southern Association of Spiritualists will hold its Annual Convention on Lookout Mountain during the Camp-Meeting in July.

AN HONEST INVESTIGATOR.—The discrepancies and falsities mentioned in your letter prove that the medium through whom they came is not sufficiently developed to be of any service to the cause of Truth. He (or she) should not attend or hold public circles, or in any way seek to express mediumship to the world, until fully developed by a band of wise and truthful spirits.

Experiences in Earth and Spirit

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held March 20th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Spirit of Divine Love, who art indeed the tender shepherd, exercising thy protecting care over each one of thy great flock, whose presence may be felt in every life, whose benign atmosphere surrounds every heart, and will in time uplift every spirit to a plane of peace and purity, we aspire toward thee; we send out our thought and our song of praise to thee, who art the Father of all mankind. We recognize thy power, and would understand more of thy law, and thy beneficent will and wisdom.

May we grow into nearness with thee and thy angel hosts. May we ascend upward in thought and endeavor toward the planes of right doing and holy living. May we come into sympathy with the apostles of truth and freedom, who are pressing forward in earnest thought and noble deeds, seeking to prepare the way of elevation for the lowly and the weak. May we feel inspired by their zeal to press forward in their wake, doing our best to add to the world's work and the world's happiness. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By Jno. R. Ames.] What is the object of human life? We begin, so far as we see, on this earth, and what do we ultimate in, if we ever do ultimate?

ANS.—So far as we may judge, from the past history and experience of humanity, we feel safe in the conclusion that the object of human life (on this planet, I presume your correspondent means, Mr. Chairman,) is self-development, the individual unfoldment of intelligence. We are also safe in concluding that as man profits by experience gained upon any plane of existence or through any grade of unfoldment, gathering up the lessons which are thus supplied to him, and studying them so closely that he may incorporate their results into his life for future guidance, he will be prepared to gain discipline, to profit by experience, and to expand in knowledge upon other planes of life and through other grades of self-development.

So far as we know, man starts into existence as an individualized entity upon this planet earth, and he comes in contact with various experiences, many of which are painful and hard to bear, and every one of which produces an effect upon his life. He comes within the environment of the earth's atmosphere, and for a time must of necessity absorb into his system, mentally and physically, a portion of the elements and conditions which belong to this material planet.

What is the result? He becomes a child of earth, partaker of its destiny, which he must outwork through self-effort and through achievement. The man who feels an energy stirring within him, and seeks to put forth that power to the best of his ability, will find himself expanding in various directions, and enlarging to such an extent, mentally speaking, as to enable him to undertake other work, and to understand higher laws than he has done in the past. But the man who sits down quietly, ignoring the impulses and possibilities of his being, and feeling that he can do but little, may as well not attempt to do anything, for he will find his powers going to waste; therefore when the time comes for him to pass onward to another life, he will discover that he is unfitted to undertake any study or employment of another life, for he has not incorporated into his system and into his code of conduct the lessons of the earthly state, or a knowledge of its laws and experiences; therefore, even though he becomes divested of the physical body, he will be obliged to remain in contact with earthly elements until he has acquired that discipline which he must of necessity reach before he is prepared to undertake other lines of travel in other worlds. We would say to the questioner that the purpose of existence upon this earth is the unfoldment of humanity, of the humane principles within the individuality as applied to each person apart from the race, and that here man may gain an impetus which will enable him to advance in knowledge step by step and age by age through the various avenues of experience.

What he may ultimately become, it is not for us to say. We believe that eternity awaits every soul; it is the immortal heritage of human life; and eternity affords time and opportunity for the advancement and unfoldment of every portion of spiritual nature. Age after age points out new avenues of travel, new stores of knowledge to be gained, new lines of research, new opportunities for mental expansion of the soul that is pressing forward.

Q.—[By the same.] Is life in this world a stepping-stone to a continuation of life beyond?

A.—That is our opinion, which we think we have expressed in the preceding answer. It seems to us that there must be of necessity worlds upon worlds inhabitable by the human spirit existent in this vast universe of ours; that there are grades after grades of unfoldment awaiting the advancing spirit; that a series of life-planes may be encountered by the man that presses forward, each one of which provides its own conditions, its own experiences and discipline, its own grand unfoldments and opportunities to the advancing mind.

Q.—[By the same.] Do you have a language in spirit-life? or how do you communicate thoughts?

A.—That depends upon what the questioner considers spirit-life. You are in spirit-life here on this physical plane, for a spiritual atmosphere surrounds you, and there are constantly going forth from your mental natures those emanations that belong to the spirit-life and to the spiritual structure. These emanations go to build up an atmosphere around you which is really of the spirit; and even in this atmosphere, closely allied as it is to material life, there dwell spirits decarnated of the flesh who have not yet passed beyond the environments of this planet, but who live, labor and gain their experience in contact with physical objects and with mortals. These spirits may not understand each other in every respect, for one may have been a German on earth, knowing nothing of any other language than that of his mother tongue; another may have been an inhabitant of France, and spoken the language of that people, and so on. These men of various nationalities, even though they are divested of the mortal body, may not be able to understand each other in coming together, because they are in contact with earth and its conditions, and are obliged, to a large extent, to live in accordance with those conditions. But a spirit may come to this group of which we speak from beyond this plane of life. Perhaps when in the mortal he understood but one language, yet having passed from the conditions of earth and entered into higher experiences in the spirit-world, he has become proficient in understanding the thought of a human mind, even though it be not expressed in speech. You will say: "The thought of the German, if framed in words, will be clothed upon in the Teutonic dialect, even though it does not manifest itself separate from his mind." Yes, very true; but the spirit who understands spiritual thought, and can follow the ideas in the mind of another spirit, does not gaze upon the drapery of these ideas which you understand by the term language; he knows by the pulsation, the vibrations within the mind of the other spirit, and just what significance rests in the thought, therefore he can read and understand.
