This huge vessel, which at the time of its building was meant to eclipse all other vessels, was beached recently near Liverpool, where she is to be broken up. The ship was originally intended for the Indian and Australian route by the Cape of Good Hope; but except for the laying of the Atlantic cable she has practically been of no service to her owners. Just now it is in order to remark that when Cyrus W. Field first started the idea that it was feasible to lay a telegraph cable across the Atlantic and got capitalists to invest with himself in the enterprise—accounts of which we had perused at the time in the newspapers—we paid a visit to Mrs. Munson, an excellent trance medium, who was located in Lagrange Place, Boston. After having had some conversation with her upon the subject of laying the cable, in which she gave it as her opinion that such an enterprise would never prove a success, she was entranced by a spirit giving the name of FRANKLIN, who said he was with other intelligences deeply interested in the matter, and declared—contrary to the medium's opinion—that although the first attempt would prove a failure, success would eventually be attained, as those in spirit-life who had inaugurated the project a long time ago, had fully prepared for all earthly contingencies—the building of the steamship Great Eastern herself having been brought about expressly for the purpose of laying the cable at last. The result is before the world to-day. The mammoth ship was launched Sept. 7th, 1859, and the cable was successfully laid by her. And this was not all her good work in that direction: Between 1869 and 1874 the Great Eastern successfully laid some of the most important of the other telegraphic cables across the Atlantic; also cables in the Mediterranean, in the Red Sea, across the Indian Ocean, across the equator from Europe to Brazil, etc.

Mesmerizing Insects.

A Florentine correspondent of the London Medium writes that he has been experimenting with butterflies as subjects of his mesmeric aura. Selecting one who was at the moment going rapidly from flower to flower, he extended his hand toward it. The effect was to retain the butterfly in close proximity to himself, manifesting no inclination to retreat. After a time, feeling as he thought that some effect had been produced, he arose from his seat and approached it, when, to his astonishment, the butterfly actually allowed him to touch it, and only flew away to another flower when he removed his hand. He tried the experiment three times, and always with the same success.

This experiment is easily tried with the common house-fly. If a fly alights on a window glass, place your hand on the glass, with the back of the hand resting against it, and the fingers pointing directly toward the fly; then move them rapidly downward several times without touching the fly, and the effect will soon show itself in its benumbed and almost helpless condition. We once tried the same experiment on a large gray squirrel, put him to sleep, lifted him out of the cage, and kept him in that condition for several minutes.

☞ A great many professed Christians, says a correspondent, are evidently stealing into Spiritualism—knowing it to be true—by endorsing the "Christian Scientists" doctrine, as they are afraid to let it be known that they believe in Spiritualism. We are glad they are seeking the truth, even if they are doing it under a mask. But "faith without works is dead," the good book says; and that sort of faith—alleged cures made by simply looking at a patient—has caused several premature deaths already; that is, if the daily newspapers tell the truth, and no doubt they do, sometimes.

Death Painless, Because Natural.

One by one scientific writers are coming to endorse—without knowing it, frequently—the statements made by Spiritualist mediums, at the prompting of their guides. One would naturally suppose that testimony, as to the painlessness or its opposite of the act of leaving the mortal form, which comes directly from those who have personally experienced the final transition, and are now excarnated intelligences, would be received without question, especially by the church—science having a leaning toward agnosticism in matters "supramundane." But this evidence of returning spirits is always to the effect that the act of death is as natural as that of falling asleep, and thus materially detracts from the awe and painful solemnity with which the ministry, for their own private ends, have endeavored in the past to surround what they prefer to call: "The Last Great Change." They therefore will have none of it.

Science, however, comes frequently to the rescue, in this modern day, and all unconsciously it may be, seconds this declaration of manifesting spirits that the act of dying is absolutely free from suffering—insensibility to mortal pain always preceding it.

A writer in The Forum for October says—and beyond power of contravention—that "any anguish that may attend mortal illness ceases before the close, as thousands who have recovered, after hope had been surrendered, have borne witness. Sudden and violent death, shocking to the senses, may not be, probably is not, painful to the victim. Drowning, hanging, freezing, shooting, falling from a height, poisoning of many kinds, beget stupor or numbness of the nerves, which is incompatible with sensation. Persons who have met with such accidents, and survived them, testify to this. Records to the effect are numberless."

It Still Lives!

We spoke last week of the Spiritualist Convention held in Barcelona, Spain, in September. There is a peculiar significance in the fact of that city being the scene of this convocation, since but little over a quarter of a century ago its inhabitants were called upon to witness a gathering on its Esplanade of an entirely different character. Our Paris correspondent, Henry Lacroix (an interesting letter from whose pen will be found on our second page), forwards us a photograph bearing on the particular episode to which we refer. It represents the public square, with a small grove of trees in the left, and several church spires in the right and centre distance. The front of the picture is devoted to a tumultuous crowd of people surrounding a Roman Catholic prelate, who, dressed in full canonicals, holds with his left hand high aloft the crucifix, while his right applies a lighted torch to a pile of condemned literature. Readers of THE BANNER will be interested to know that this literature is Spiritualistic—since the inscription accompanying the picture runs as follows:

"This day, 9th October, 1861, at 10:30 A. M., on the Esplanade of the City of Barcelona, on the spot where criminals are executed, by the order of the Bishop of the city 300 spiritual volumes and pamphlets were burned, including the Book of Spirits by Allan Kardec."

Here we have again the old story of earthly power put forth in the interest of a creedal hierarchy to stop the Dawning Light—but put forth, as ever, fruitlessly, for the world moves, and a largely attended Convention of Spiritualists has just been held in Barcelona!

A Protestant "Indulgence."

A story is current in Unitarian circles that a lady of Orthodox belief recently went to a distinguished college President of the same creed with herself, and inquired of him if he thought Rev. Dr. Peabody, who is a well-known Unitarian, could be finally "saved." The college President is a high authority on the difficult doctrine of election, and did not hesitate to answer his questioner that the Doctor was certain to be saved. The point of the story is alleged to be this: some years before, Dr. Peabody had by his personal influence procured an honorary degree from Harvard College for his Orthodox judge and certifier, and the verdict of the latter is more than open to the suspicion of being inspired by gratitude for favors conferred!

They have their jokes inside the churches as well as outside. They are apt to be dry rather than otherwise, but this one contains juice enough to keep up its circulation. Its dispenser certainly indulged in the largest charity to allow a Unitarian to go through the high bars of Calvinism to heaven, even though moved thereto by a self-satisfying "consideration." But Orthodox humanity will sometimes prove to be more human than it is Orthodox, as in the present case.

Our Serial.

Letters commendatory of the Original Story, thus far published in THE BANNER, are being received. It is a grand production, as our patrons will more fully know after it is all in print. Those who have not seen the papers containing it are informed that we have printed extra editions to supply the demand. The story was commenced with No. 1 of the present volume.

☞ We are informed that on Tuesday evening, Sept. 25th, Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings gave an elocutionary entertainment in Flemingsburg, Ky., for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers in Jacksonville, the entire receipts being handed over to the Mayor, who forwarded them to the Chairman of the Relief Committee in that stricken city. The sum realized was $71.00.

☞ That brave and intelligent apostle of progressive thought among the Jews, Rabbi Solomon Schindler, introduced a new feature into his valuable work in Boston, by opening Temple Adath Israel, on Oct. 7th, for a Sunday lecture at the usual hour of other religious worship. We trust the experiment thus made may prove a success—it certainly deserves to be such.

☞ The individual spirit messages which were given at this office through the trance-mediumship of Mrs. Smith, Sept. 14th—on the occasion of the reöpening of the séance-room for the season, and are printed on the sixth page of this issue—will, we feel to say, be of great consolation to those in mortal-life to whom they are severally addressed.

☞ A correspondent asks: "When will sensational Spiritualism play out?" We don't know; but we suppose it will cease when selfish people become less selfish and more spiritual. The true is unquestionably being sifted from the false, and in good time it is to be hoped all will go well.

Decease of a Spiritualist Pioneer.

DR. J. L. NEWMAN, one of the most successful among the many practitioners of magnetic healing which the Modern Dispensation has called out from among the ranks of the people, passed to spirit-life on Sunday morning last, at his office and residence, 8½ Bosworth street, Boston.

He had been suffering from an indisposition (pronounced rheumatism of the heart by his attending physician) since Thursday, Oct. 4th, but was able to go out, and see friends on that day. He grew worse on Friday, so that it was thought necessary to call in assistance in caring for him; and Mrs. Mercie L. Godfrey, of Boston, (notice of the remarkable cure of whose daughter by Dr. Newman, of a serious spinal difficulty, appeared in THE BANNER some years since) attended as a kindly nurse, filled with feelings of gratitude, to the needs of the sick man till he passed away. At 4 o'clock A. M. on Sunday he received a shock which seemed to deprive him of consciousness, so that he exhibited no signs of recognition of those around him, and at 7 o'clock he ceased to breathe.

Dr. Newman was one of the very earliest investigators of the spiritual phenomena in this part of the country, and afterward witnessed the manifestations in presence of some of the most gifted mediums in the world. He was a firm and consistent Spiritualist, and has accomplished much good for humanity during his long and useful life. In his business relations we have for the many years he has resided in our building ever found him a genial companion and a reliable man.

He was born in Washington, N. H., March 12th, 1826, and was consequently, at the time of his decease upward of 62 years of age. He received his early education in the common schools, Marlow Academy, and by a private tutor. He made Boston his home since 1857, with the exception of two years spent in California. His remains were taken to Washington, N. H., on Monday last for interment.

Thus closes the mortal experience of another of the earnest and fast lessening band who have from the earliest days of the movement lent their energies to its advancement among men.

Works that Should Be Bought and Read.

The fact is well known to our readers that the veteran Spiritualist, Mr. A. E. NEWTON of Arlington, Mass., wields a trenchant pen; that he has had a vast amount of experience in regard to MODERN SPIRITUALISM in every phase; that he is an honest man, and hence reliable; therefore what he says should have full weight with all good people. THE BANNER advertises several of his works, viz.:

"THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS REALIZED," giving an account of the author's conversion to Spiritualism, etc., etc.

"ANSWERS TO CHARGES PREFERRED BY THE CHURCH," with an account of the trial, etc.

"LESSONS FOR CHILDREN," [this our Lyceums should use] on Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene.

"THE BETTER WAY," an appeal to men in behalf of Human Culture through a Wiser Parentage.

"THE MODERN BETHESDA, or The Gift of Healing Restored"—a work of three hundred and twenty-two pages—being an account of the life and labors of the great healer, Dr. J. R. NEWTON, who was as much superior to the (so-called) "Christian Scientists" as it is possible for a human being to conceive of. This important work should be in the hands of every intelligent person in the land, as it contains potent observations on the nature and source of the healing power, the history and conditions of its exercise, etc. Any one at all affected with the present "craze" that is prevailing in the land under various "metaphysical" aliases, will, on reading this book carefully, we venture to say, soon be cured.... of that sort of thing.

Hon. Warren Chase.

Most of the toilers in the Spiritualistic field have had to undergo severe experiences, as have all pioneers in efforts for the uplifting of humanity during the many years that have elapsed. One by one the veterans in our cause are passing away to a more congenial state of being, but some remain with but a small moiety of this world's goods to cheer them in their old age. Our worthy brother, Warren Chase, who is over seventy-five years of age, may be classed in this category, and it is pleasant to know that friends are coming to the rescue, as will be seen by his letter in another column. Those who may feel disposed to aid him still further, should remit to his address, which is Cobden, Ill. All funds so received he will duly acknowledge.

ADA H. FOYE.—By reference to the announcement of the Spiritualistic Phenomena Association on our eighth page, it will be seen that this gifted medium from the Pacific slope will demonstrate her powers before that useful organization next Sunday.

☞ THE BANNER OF LIGHT will be found on sale at the store of Frank B. Woodbury, Pharmacist and News Dealer, 189 Center street, corner Old Heath, Roxbury, Mass.

☞ Read the call on our third page for the Vermont Convention of Spiritualists at Waterbury, Oct. 19th–21st.

To Inquirers.

☞ As numerous letters are often directed to this office from distant points inquiring as to who are the best mediums to apply to for spiritual information, we take this method of replying to all such that, while we believe the mediums advertising in our columns are reliable, yet we cannot recommend any special medium to any particular person, as the medium who may satisfy one investigator may not be able to meet the requirements of another. It is best, therefore, for each investigator to visit such mediums as he may believe possess the power of bringing him into communication with the spirit-world, and thus judge of their claims for himself.

List of Lecturers.

THE BANNER publishes from time to time a list of Spiritualist Lecturers with their post-office addresses attached without charge, and in consideration of our so doing it seems to us they should be more particular than many of them are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Attention to this request is earnestly desired, and should be attended to at once.

CHARLES E. WATKINS.—We received on Monday last a pleasant call from this justly celebrated medium for independent slate-writing. He informed us that, in recognition of the work accomplished by the ladies for the advancement of the cause in this city and elsewhere, he has arranged to hold parlor séances at 3 P. M. on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons of each week, at his residence, 107 Falmouth street, Boston, whereto ladies will be admitted at reduced rates. These séances are not, of course, intended to include gentlemen. Developing Circles are held at the same place at 5 P. M. on Mondays.

A Card.

We are requested to state that individuals now engaged in opposing any new and sumptuary medical enactment in favor of the "Regulars" in the State of Massachusetts, earnestly desire that all persons interested in retaining equal rights before the law—medically considered—also that constitutional right which now allows all citizens of the State to employ any practitioner or mode of treatment in eradicating disease which their better judgment dictates—will collate cases of a marked and positive nature, where the sick have been under the treatment of the so-called regular medical practitioners, and have been pronounced incurable by them in their mode of treatment, and have been subsequently restored to health by an independent practitioner.

These accounts are to be made use of by placing them before the next Legislature to show that there is no necessity of any new enactment that will exclude practitioners and modes of treatment that the regulars cannot compete with.

Remarkable cases of cure that have not been pronounced incurable, or that have not been under the regular mode of treatment by such practitioners, need not be cited—but only cases that will bear the closest investigation from the Legislature are required. The name of the attending physician and the time under his charge are essential for positive evidence; but there is no need of going into particulars as to non-essentials in the cases contributed—brevity being an important element when the examination of documentary evidence by a legislative committee is proposed.

The Tenth Edition

Of "The Life-Line of the Lone One; An Autobiography of Hon. Warren Chase," has just been brought out by the publishers, Colby & Rich. It is a thrillingly interesting and instructive narrative of a remarkable life, interspersed with select and choice poems. Many persons after reading it procure other copies for presents, but no one parts with it after reading. It can only be procured at the Banner of Light Bookstore, and of the author at Cobden, Ill. Price one dollar per copy; postage ten cents.

A sequel to this work has also been issued by Colby & Rich in "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," of which see notice elsewhere. The work contains three hundred and twenty-four pages, is substantially bound, and has an elegant portrait of the author. Price one dollar; postage ten cents. This work is also for sale only at the Banner Bookstore, and by the author as above.

Too Literal, by Half.

The following amusing account of a Medford, Mass., youngster who had too much faith in his Sunday school teacher, and not enough in himself (a la Peter, see Matt. xiv: 30) is given by the Boston Sunday Herald for Oct. 7th:

"A little fellow of four years of age came home from the session of Sunday school (Sept. 30th) swelling with the information that Jesus had walked upon the water. It made such an impression upon his imagination that he could not be content till he had tried to do the same thing. Secretly he went to the bathroom of the family, filled the bathtub with water, and attempted the feat that was agitating his little mind. The result was that he was nearly drowned. Taken out of the water, his first spluttering effort at articulation appeared in the sentence: 'I aint no kind of a Jesus!'"

THE PHOTO-ENGRAVING CO., of 67 Park Place, New York, has issued a large folio containing a dozen specimens of work accomplished by their new method of engraving, by what is termed the "half-tone process," by which are produced plates for printing with photographic accuracy, from photographs, wash drawings, pencil sketches, mezzo-tint prints, etc., without the aid of artist or engraver. Those who have occasion to use such productions will find it desirable to examine these specimens.

☞ Mrs. Jennie Lord Webb, who was well and favorably known to the public in the past as a musical medium, has for the last eighteen years given private séances to a few individuals, mainly in New York City. She has now returned to Boston and taken rooms at 283 Columbus Avenue, where she would be pleased to give a few private séances to those appreciating her spiritual gifts as a test medium, etc.

☞ Helen A. Sloan has returned to this city, and can be found at 171 Tremont street. See card, seventh page.

☞ Read the card of Mrs. A. E. Cunningham, on our seventh page.

The richest mine in Australia, if not in the world, is the Mount Morgan of Queensland. One of the Rothschilds once offered £19,000,000 for it, and the offer was refused. Its value is variously estimated at from $60,000,000 to $500,000,000.

A retired plumber says that clogged water pipes can be cleared by pouring enough liquid soda lye into the pipe at night, and not allowing any water to run till the next morning. During the night the lye will convert all the offal into soft soap, and the first current of water will wash it all away.

WHY DON'T THEY?—That sapient observer of events, The Baptist Examiner of New York, quite truly as well as pithily remarks that the yellow fever at Jacksonville just now affords the teachers of Christian science an unusually good opportunity to demonstrate the truth of their claims to healing powers in a manner that shall silence cavilling. Let a few of those who practice this kind of cure go down to Jacksonville and stop the progress of the disease! A half-dozen clear cases of undoubted cure would do more to prove their claims than all the newspaper articles of a century.

The writer of the subjoined not only states historic facts correctly in the main up to date, but makes a profound thrust at the vagaries of modern English "as she is wrote":

A minister who was aware of his unpopularity was accosted by an old woman: "Oh! sir, well do I like the day that you preach!" Said the minister: "My good woman, I am glad to hear it. In a lecture "To Young Men," delivered in Investigator Hall, Boston, by Mr. L. K. Washburn, he requested them to beware especially of "purring" people. "They are like cats," said he; "unless you stroke them the right away, they will strike their claws into you." All which is very true. There are too many young men of this particular ilk abroad in the land. Further on, he said: "We do not want men who will say one thing and do another." . . . "We ought to drive out of circulation the counterfeit." That 's a fact. But how can it be done? That 's the question.

The Boston Globe truthfully remarks anent the Whitechapel murders in London, that the failure of the police to locate the murderer is to be laid to the humble character of the women thus far killed:

"If this ferocious woman-slayer [it says] should ply his knife upon the body of some aristocratic West End lady, Scotland Yard would soon find a way to capture him. London would be placarded with heavy rewards, spies and informers would be tempted with big prize money, and the whole city would be raked, as with a fine-tooth comb, to hunt the murderer down. As it is, there are no big rewards, the police are in a state of daze, and fashionable London just yawns and says, 'it is weally quite wemarkable, do n'tcherknow!'"

Quebec dispatches assert that the state of affairs at Moisic, two hundred and two miles east of Saguenay, is of the most appalling description. A BLESSING.

How can I cease to pray for thee? Somewhere
In God's great universe thou art to-day.
Can He not reach thee with His tender care?
Can He not hear me, when for thee I pray?
What matters it to Him who holds within
The hollow of His hand all worlds, all space,
That thou art done with earthly pain and sin?
Somewhere within His ken thou hast a place,
Somewhere thou livest and hast need of Him,
Somewhere thy soul sees higher heights to climb,
And somewhere still there may be valleys dim
That thou must pass to reach the hills sublime;
Then all the more, because thou canst not hear,
Poor human words of blessing will I pray,
Oh, true, brave heart! God bless thee! wheresoe'r

Southern and Western New Brunswick are being visited with autumnal floods, the most violent for twenty years. Great damage is reported.

"I 'm very glad to have been of any comfort to your poor husband, my good woman. But what made you send for me instead of your own minister?" "Weel, sir, it 's typhus my poor husband 's got, and we dinna think it just reet for our ain minister to run the risk."—Punch.

While nearly eight hundred people were on a platform at the laying of the corner-stone of St. Mary's Church, Reading, Pa., it gave way, and nearly two hundred persons were piled up in a struggling mass fifteen feet below. Very many were terribly injured, and several will die.

"Eternal hope! when life's last embers burn,
When soul to soul and dust to dust return!
Heaven to thy charge resigns the awful hour!

Bright to the soul thy seraph hands convey
The morning dream of life's eternal day."

Prince Bismarck has never, since his rise to power, received so potent a blow as that conveyed by the published extracts of the late Emperor Frederick's diary, which prove alike that Germany lost in him a ruler of constitutional rather than arbitrary tendencies, who yet felt the importance of his position; and who did more than the Great Chancellor himself in the work of establishing the empire in place of the old North German Confederation.

The fortieth anniversary of Rev. Dr. Houghton's "Little Church Around the Corner," New York City, was duly celebrated with significant and touching services, Oct. 7th. Many actors were present from within and outside that city.

[EVIDENTLY A REGULAR!]—Alexis, a physician, gave a prescription to five patients; five he bled; five he visited in bad health; on five again he put an ointment. And for all there has been one night, one medicine, one coffin-maker, one grave, one Hades, one lamentation.—Nicarchus, A. D. 100.

Brawn and Brain!

The powerful engine, with its wonderful propelling power, coupled to the long train full freighted with the richest fabrics of the intellectual looms of the centuries—what obstacles can stay the progress of this mighty force, when once under full steam along life's highway?

The American with brawn and brain does not see the necessity for titles of nobility, does not care for elevation by descent; he can reach out and pluck the stars.

But with brawn or brain impaired, a man is badly handicapped in the mad race for success which is the marked characteristic of the present age.

The physical system is a most intricate piece of machinery. It ought to be kept well regulated, so that it will work harmoniously in all its parts, then it is capable of an immense amount of work.

It is said that a watch, if expected to keep perfect time, must be wound daily. It will not keep good time unless it "runs regular." More men break down because they do n't "run regular" than for any other reason.

It is claimed by physicians that few men are killed by hard work. It is to the irregularities of modern social life that the high death rate is due. Men burn their candle at both ends, then wonder why it burns out so quickly.

The main thing in keeping the human machine in good working order is to keep the regulator all right. "The blood is the life," and sound health is assured so long as the blood flows through the veins a limpid stream of purity.

Regulate the regulator with Warner's Log Cabin sarsaparilla, the old-fashioned blood purifier, prepared after the best formula in use by our ancestors in good old Log Cabin days, and with the vigor of brawn and brain which must ensue, in your life's lexicon you will find no such word as fail.

Message Department.

Regular Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY AND FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Sept. 25th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Great Spirit whom man calls God, to whom we send forth the influence of our souls in aspiration and praise, and from whom we receive every impulse of life and activity which moves our being; thou who art all intelligence, we approach thy shrine of knowledge at this hour, seeking for light and understanding concerning the things of time, the mysteries of the universe, and the laws of thy great stupendous plan. Oh! may we become quickened in spirit that we may receive some new inspiration of truth, some gleam of wisdom to bring to our souls new comprehension. May we come under a divine influence of peace and of harmony, that our lives may expand in its glorious sunshine and be filled with love, sympathy and kindly feeling. May we send forth that spirit of brotherly affection which should bind all souls together, and may we all be uplifted to a sphere of concord, purity and peace that will not only inspire and inform our minds, but will purify and bless our souls.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We are now prepared to listen to your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By W. J. Crittenden.] What is the mode of locomotion of decarnated spirits who travel from place to place?

ANS.—The locomotion of spirits in the spirit-world may be varied. There are spirits who make use of no other way of locomotion save that which proceeds from the movements of their limbs, under the volition of the will, just as you walk from place to place; these spirits do the same, and so they investigate the various localities of their world through this method of locomotion.

There are vehicles which are used by spirits in transporting themselves from locality to locality. This may seem very strange to some of you who look upon the spirit-world as merely a subjective condition, and having no objective existence, localities or surroundings for its inhabitants; but those of you who believe that there are worlds in space, not visible to mortal eyes upon this terrestrial globe, yet as real and substantial as is this planet to you, will perhaps admit that there may be appliances, vehicles and various forms of apparatus for the external comfort and convenience of those who dwell therein.

This we affirm is true. But there are spirits, and many of them, who have in a degree overcome the limitations of ignorance which belong to the lower planes of physical existence, and have so far subjected the laws of their own being and of the atmosphere around them to the superior knowledge they have gained through research, study and experimentation, as to be able to transport themselves from point to point in space by the pure exercise of their thought or will. They are not obliged to travel slowly, or even to make use of a mechanical vehicle; they have simply to exert their minds upon a certain locality, and if they desire to visit it they are there. If they do not wish to visit a certain locality, but only desire to know what is passing in it, immediately, through the exercise of their will, they may perceive what is taking place on that spot. Many spirits having studied the electrical forces of the universe and the laws of human existence, have come into a knowledge of their own innate powers, and have learned to exercise them to a large extent.

Q.—How do highly advanced spirits go from one planet to another.

A.—There are highly advanced spirits who have given attention to the laws of the universe, of the planets and of space, but these who have done this do not comprise the sum total of highly advanced spirits, for we have many who are exalted in thought, in character and beneficent works who have not given their strict attention to these studies, who have undoubtedly never visited any other planet in space but that to which they are attracted through the laws and elements of their own individual beings. But of those advanced and learned spirits of whom your correspondent speaks, we may briefly say that they assure us they have traveled, and may travel, at will, from point to point in space, and visit various planets to which their bent of mind attracts them, purely through the exercise of their mental powers, that by concentrating their thought upon any object in view they can traverse space without difficulty, overcoming the electrical laws of the universe which might retard the progress of spirits less informed and with less knowledge, simply by the exertion of their positive mental power.

We have been told by spirits of their visiting certain planets, and of their coming into a knowledge of the life and character of the inhabitants of those planets; but they have informed us that it was impossible for them to come into direct and personal communication with those inhabitants, because it was with them as it would be with a spirit who had approached the earth from a long distance, but who had not the power to use, or did not find the avenue through which he might intelligently communicate with the denizens of earth. We do not give this from our personal knowledge and experience, as we have had nothing of the kind, but merely as the word of certain spirits who seem honorable and intelligent, and of whose veracity we are assured.

Q.—Suppose a person passed to spirit-life has duties assigned him to perform on this earth before he can progress beyond its attraction, must he stay on earth constantly until those duties are done; or may he leave this earth and come back periodically to do his work?

A.—It is not necessary, perhaps, for a spirit to remain in vital contact with the physical life constantly, because he feels that he has duties here which must be fulfilled; it depends altogether upon the mind of the spirit. If he feels a sense of duty pressing upon him so strongly that he must direct all his energies to the fulfillment of that duty, and if he feels that by turning aside from the physical life and its environments for even an hour he may waste time or lose opportunity in the performance of his work, then that spirit will be bound to the physical life, fettered here until he has accomplished his labor and discharged his duty; but on the other hand, if the spirit believes that it will do him no harm and will not retard his work to occasionally or even frequently turn away from the physical life and its surroundings, and enter into the spiritual department of existence, explore its realms, and learn of its lessons, then that spirit may at will step away from the external of earth, and enter into communication with the spirit-world and its inhabitants; he may therefore gain a double experience, and lead a double life, reaping a certain degree of discipline in contact with earth, in the desire and endeavor to outwork his mission as it presses upon him, and also gaining a certain degree of experience and of spiritual unfoldment in connection with the spirit-world and its inhabitants, at such times as he is not in direct contact or communication with external life.

It is sometimes the case, however, that a spirit who has passed from earth unwillingly—who has clung tenaciously to the external or physical surroundings of his life, whose whole mind, energies, interests and attractions were centred in the physical, and in his friends on earth—has felt that he has a mission to perform here, a duty to discharge, a work to accomplish; and for a long time such a spirit has dwelt in direct contact with the earth, and with his mortal relations and interests; he has learned nothing of the spirit-world, and has cared nothing for it, has not wished to enter it, because his attractions were all here, and here he finds the happiness of his life; and not until he rises above the things of earth, above the interests and the tendencies which attract him to the physical department of existence, will he be able to learn anything by vital contact, by personal experience, of the spirit-world.

There may be spirit-friends and attendants watching his career who desire to give him practical information concerning the life of the future; but if he does not desire this information and turns away from it, then it will not be of any service to him. Not until the mind expands and becomes receptive, not until the spirit is brought into a state of acceptance, will he be able to learn and to know personally and vitally concerning the localities, surroundings, employments and other conditions of the spirit-world.

Q.—[By H. G. T. Aldrich.] What is the cause of cataract of the eyes? Is there any way of preventing the growth and development of the disease?

A.—We are informed by a physician of the spirit-world that this formation over the sight of the eye is induced by an abnormal condition of the nervous system; that there is a waste of nervous force going on in that system, the accretions of which are not sloughed off as they should be, and that it causes a disease of the nerves of the eye; consequently the sight is affected, and this growth obtained. It seems to us that an effusion of blood to the brain sometimes produces this form of disease, and that it would be necessary to equalize the circulation of the system, that no part of the body be overcharged or depleted of nervous force. It would therefore seem necessary to treat the circulation magnetically; we should judge it to be proper for the blood to be drawn to the extremities, and the optic nerve should especially be attended to, that it might not gather these accretions of waste matter which are detrimental not only to the eye but to the entire organic frame. This is a matter for a medical expert to consider—one which we do not feel competent to give special advice upon.

Q.—[By E. Cheney.] Do all kingdoms, material and spiritual, embody but one world?

A.—That depends upon what your correspondent considers to be the meaning of the word world. All kingdoms, material or spiritual, belong to the one universe, and are undoubtedly under the operation of one infinite law, although this infinite law may have a varied expression, and may indeed exercise itself in a number of ways. The material and the spiritual, as related to man, we suppose your correspondent wishes to imply, may be brought under the dominion, and undoubtedly is, of one grand power, the material being the objective, or external manifestation, the spiritual being the interior workings and operations of this great infinite law.

Man is a dual being, possessed of an organic body, possessed of a mental knowledge, a spiritual character which operates upon the organic system and brings it into subjection.

Now, the material and the spiritual may perhaps be traced as belonging to one department of existence, the material vitalized and set into operation by the spiritual, and the spirit or spiritual clothed upon by the material or by matter, so that it may be afforded opportunities for expression and even for the attainment of growth and knowledge, which perhaps otherwise could not have been attained.

Do we recognize the spiritual as independent of the material? In one sense, yes; in another, no. We do not recognize the spirit as independent of matter in the sense of its being an abstract form, because, so far as we can gain any information, intelligent spirit is always clothed upon through every department of existence with some kind of a body, partaking essentially of the material nature, that is: in its own special domain this body may be seen, handled and impinged upon. We do not recognize matter as existing without and independent of spirit, because to our mind every particle or atom of matter, in any portion of space in the universe, is vitalized and made alive by the operation of spirit or spiritual force.

Do these belong to one world? If the universe is claimed to be a world, then may we answer yes. But the universe is a system (or systems) of worlds upon worlds, each acting under the operation of infinite law, each moving in its own orbit, true to itself, and sending out its own forces and powers, as is consistent with the great plan and purpose of life.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Sept. 14th, 1888.

Nathan C. Davis.

Eighty-seven years is a long while to stay on earth, but how quick the time flits away. As I enter this circle-room to-day it is very pleasant to me to be able to speak for myself. I come with a thankful spirit because I am permitted to give a few words, which a long time ago I thought I should get power enough to do, but failed.

Be patient and careful what statements you make, for little do you understand on this side the spirit law that governs us.

I desire that these few words should reach my old home in Mechanicsburg, Ohio. As I know your paper goes all over the land, I trust they will be seen and read. I hope the messages may be of some benefit to those yet left in the mortal.

No one enjoyed mortal life more than I did, and no one had greater, stronger, grander hope than Nathan C. Davis.

Sarah E. Basford.

It is quite a number of years since I laid off the mantle of the flesh and was clothed upon with immortality, and I feel that I have made some little progress, for I have been able to materialize to the satisfaction of those who beheld the form.

I would like John F. to know that when he looked upon the form it was a reality, as he has always felt it must have been, when he so kindly said to me, "I will bring you a present," which he did, and I was able to wear it, and to hold the form until he adjusted it around my neck.

I am happy. I found many loved ones waiting to clasp my hand on the other side of the beautiful crystal river. How sweet to think we shall all know our own, and enjoy the society of each one more fully, more really than we can in mortal life.

My name is Sarah E. Basford, and I lived in New York.

Sarah Johnson.

I desire to send a few words of love to my friends. I passed away, as near as I can reckon mortal time, eight or nine years ago. I fully understand now what looked so dark to me before. Many times before the spirit took its flight, ministering angels were permitted to come to my bedside in the quiet hours of night, and I felt there was company with me, but did not realize it was from those in the life beyond.

On entering the spirit-home Aunt Lucy said to me: "Dear child, how anxiously have we awaited your coming, and we tried to bring a reconciled feeling to you, that you might be willing to leave your earthly friends, and come up higher." I will acknowledge that I clung to earth, and would much rather have staid awhile longer, but now the change has come, and I would not return to stay. But I would love to come into communication with the dear mortals, and prove the immortality of the soul to them, for I now know that church creeds gave no real satisfaction. We reach after something, we know not what, for the spirit needs feeding, and I understand now those feelings that came to me when I knew I must leave the mortal; but dear ones were waiting to clasp my hand, and before the spirit took its flight it seemed that heaven opened, and the most beautiful visions were revealed to me. I am Sarah Johnson, of Denver, Col.

Lyman Smith.

Many thanks, Mr. Chairman, for this privilege. I have never attempted to speak before, although I have been a listener in your meetings, for we love to come here and hear what others have to say, just the same as you mortals love to come and listen to what spirits may give concerning the country beyond. We are as much interested as you would be to attend a lecture.

I feel satisfied in the knowledge that channels of this sort are becoming more numerous than in years past. You know very well that this is done partly for the benefit of mortals. Then I would advise you to grasp every opportunity that is placed before you, for in spirit-life many look back and exclaim that they wish they had learned a little more.

Over seventy-five years did I spend in the mortal life. I will acknowledge I did not learn as much as it was my privilege to learn, but what I did gain was of great help to me. I understand now what is impossible for you in the mortal to know. Not that I wish it to appear that in the few years that have passed since I crossed over I have made great headway, but I feel that I have progressed a little on the spirit-side.

I have many friends in Brunswick, Maine, and some in New York State; also some have drifted away into the wilds of the West. My name is Lyman Smith, and I lived in Aurelius, N. Y.

Mabel Alda Powell.

[To the Chairman:] The gentleman that stands here said children could come as well as grown people. I have been here a long time, and I should like to tell a short story. I want to say to you it is almost four years—grandma says a little more than four years since they laid my little body away. I was six years old then. That will make me ten, won't it?

It is so beautiful where we live! we have the birds, we have the flowers, and the music so sweet. I knew that gentleman [Mr. Longley] would ask me if we have such instruments as that [the organ]. Not just like it; but we have just as good music out of them.

Mamma and papa thought they could not let me go, but grandma came, and she said she wanted me so much, and was so glad her little Mabel could come. I didn't want to leave mamma, she cried so hard, but when I saw the pretty angels, the flowers and the children that came around me, and said they were so happy to have me for another little playmate, it took away all the feeling that came over me from papa's and mamma's grief.

I am happy and growing on in spirit, as grandma says. I am a little angel now, but I know I am their own darling yet, and the earth-friends I never can forget. I was so glad the gentleman said that little children were as welcome as grown people, for so many children come into this room. There's a little girl going up and down the aisle, and she stops by a gentleman in the fourth seat. She is glad even of the privilege of walking in the aisle. It is a greater one to talk in your meetings. I did love to talk a great deal when I was here, a little girl; but I am growing older, and it is the spiritual education they are giving me now. I know it will make those I love happy to feel that they will see me again.

Grandma, auntie and all send love and greetings to the dear ones. As the gentleman said, there are many others who have a little story to tell, so I must not talk very long. Will you send this letter, please, to Urbana, O.? My name is Mabel Alda Powell.

John H. Fuller.

We read that "a little child shall lead them," and if little children have the power and also the courage to come into a meeting and speak to you mortals of the bright and beautiful beyond, why should we not accept of every privilege that is given us. I feel like asking you to open the doors of every one of your spirits and allow us to come in and commune with you. Spirit return was familiar to me in the mortal, therefore it did not look dark to me when the pale boatman welcomed and rowed me safely across the shining river. How delightful it is to feel that the loved ones are waiting on the other shore, beckoning you on, and are to be with you not for a day, but forever; that no more changes are to come except through progression, and no more partings or tears. I feel thankful that the angel world came so near to me.

My children to-day still hold to their early teachings, but yet have learned a great deal of spirit return; they also possess much mediumistic power, so that this truth is given to them clearly. I am satisfied with what they did the evening they commemorated the birth of my spirit into the immortal life, and more than all with what they did in remembrance of the ascended father, for the old chair that I had sat in for so many hours was not forgotten. As friends and relatives gathered together the circle on our side far outnumbered that on yours.

I feel to-day it is just and right that we should give thanks to each one in the mortal who was present upon that occasion, and when the last words were sung, "The Sweet By-and-Bye," also "How Cheering the Thought," how sweet the music rang out as we in the spirit joined with the mortals; we received the full benefit, notwithstanding in the mortal they could not hear our spirit voices. It was grand and beautiful to feel that spirits and mortals could meet together and enjoy such an occasion.

My home, Mr. Chairman, was in San Francisco, Cal. John H. Fuller.

Jeremiah Witham.

As the channel is open to-day I feel like saying a few words, hoping to reach some loved ones of ours, for the better half have crossed the boundary since they said, "Father was dead." That is a natural way of speaking, yet the old covering amounts to little; the spirit went on to the angel world.

Oh! so different did I find things from what I expected while dwelling in the form. Like so many others, the teachings of years back I could not get away from. I find that I should have tried to learn something of spirit-return. To be sure, years ago we did not have the privileges that you enjoy to-day, yet I feel that is but a poor excuse for me.

I would not return to earth to stay, but I would like my children and dear friends to know that Jeremiah Witham lives. Some friends in Garland, Me., would like to know if I have found the spirit-life different from what I expected. Yes, dear mortals, it is impossible for one to even conceive of the beauties of spirit-life, where I have long been a dweller.

I would say to Sarah that Isaac is all right; he has now a good brain and a perfect body. Many times have I come as a visitor to the homes of the children, and also have been around the grandchildren, and often have I tried, through the spirit forces, to make you understand I was there. Sarah, at one period, you know very well what I would speak of; when channels were opened in your own home, then did quite a number of us congregate there, trying to make ourselves known. I well understand the changes that have come to you. Half of your children have been transplanted to bloom in heaven, but still they are frequent visitors in your home.

Joseph asks me to say he is present, to-day. How many times have we tried through these channels to speak, but this is the first opportunity I have been able to grasp.

Emma Edgecomb.

I come as a stranger in a strange land, yet how easily do I come into the homes here. I have no relative present, but I feel that through this channel my message will reach those dear to me.

I was a tiny child when laid away so tenderly, after which another came into the home and was given the same name.

I have been able to visit dear sister Emma in Fall River, and have also visited many times my friends across the water.

How pleasant it is to know that you welcome strangers so cordially.

Mr. Chairman, we come for two purposes; one is to let mortals know that we live, and that we are not idle, that we have a work which we are only too glad to do in spirit-life, and also to convince the dear ones that we hold an interest in them still.

I knew very little of mortal life, for I was young when I was laid away; but many times it has been my privilege to be in your meetings and hear what has been spoken, although I never made the attempt to speak here before.

I wish to state also, that in my sister's home we are not permitted to hold little meetings such as have been held outside.

Sister Emma, go into the meetings when it is possible, for your spirit is fed in so doing. Mother is present to-day, also Uncle William. My home was in Plymouth, Eng.; my name, Emma Edgecomb.

Graham Thayer.

I have some dear ones yet left in mortal life, although nearly all have crossed the boundary called death. Over forty years have elapsed since I put on the robes of immortality, and I should have been a poor scholar if I had not learned something on the spirit-side.

I was only a child when I passed away. I have been a frequent visitor in the homes of some loved ones in Portage City, Wis., also with the few in Vermont who yet remain. My father, mother and sister are with me, and join in sending greeting to those that are left.

Grandma Graham sends love to the brother and the sister that yet dwell in the mortal form.

How strange it seems to us, as we walk with you mortals daily, so near we can lay our hands upon you! How little do you understand or know of the law that governs us on the spirit-side, and how strange it will seem to you when you throw off the old form and put on the new to walk with friends and relatives, and have no word spoken, no notice taken of you, because of the veil before mortal sight. The Great Father has ordered that mortals should not see spirits with what we call the natural eye, yet with the spiritual eye you do sometimes behold us.

My home, Mr. Chairman, was in Chittenden, Vt., and my name is Graham Thayer.

Maggie Skillings.

This gentleman over here said I could come. I want you to find my mamma. I want you to go find her now, 'cause she don't know I'm here. If she knew it she'd come right quick. I got a lovely mamma.

I want to tell you I got doggies and birdies, and all the pretty flowers. I got white ones, prettier than yours.

I want to tell you when I went away—away to the palace. You know where that be? It was all shiny, an' there was pretty things there. I went with my auntie, but I com'd right back again. I com'd here one day, an' there did be no peoples here. Grandma said then I'd have to come again, and when you put the key in the door to unlock it I com'd right in behind you. You didn't see me, did you?

There's a lady outside that can't get in, 'cause you fastened the door. Well, she'd ought to been in a hurry, had n't she?

She 'll have to come quicker next time. Will I tell her that when I see her? If she be to the store, I'll tell her that.

My grandpa's here. He's a great, big man. I was just a little girl when I went away. I lived up in Toronto. I was Maggie Stillings. I went away with a pretty lady. She bring me the pretty flowers, then she say "Come, darling, with me, an' I 'll find you some nice children to play with."

I guess I 'll go, 'cause aunt Jeanie is calling me. Can I come again to-morrow? The children want me, 'cause they 're going to have a play. Good-bye, an' thank you.

Harriet Langdon.

How pleasant it is to know that we are all permitted to speak for ourselves. The little innocent child has done the best she could—only three years old when she passed away, and but little over four now—as she comes in her prattling way trying to make herself known.

The children make up a part of heaven. Oh! love them ever, and speak gently, kindly to them, for you know not how harsh words grate upon their spirits. How sweet it is to know that we shall find all those little treasures that are laid away, again, that they will be given back in the spirit-life, where we see them in groups so happy together. I would say to each one, be charitable, be patient; give out your sympathy to each one as they come here trying to make themselves known—trying to identify themselves to mortals—and many times failing in the attempt, yet through perseverance conquering at last with the help of the guides. Even the red men come to help you; in your council-room, to-day, I find many red men and little Indian maidens, guides to many of you mortals, who are anxiously waiting to do their work.

Many times, it is true, it is done imperfectly, but be patient, be sympathetic, bear with us, for as you give out your magnetism to us we gather more strength, more courage to make the attempt to speak, hoping through this channel to reach some loved ones, even though miles intervene.

My name is Harriet Langdon. I lived in Wilbraham, Mass. I have spoken before in a hall, but never have been able to give a message to my dear ones, who are in Springfield, in Chicopee, and in Plymouth. I feel they will understand my message when it reaches them.

Frank H. Richardson.

I have taken a great interest in hearing spirits speak in your meetings, Mr. Chairman, and have many times tried to speak, but without success, because I felt that some loved ones would be glad to hear a word from the other side of life.

I well know that materialization is true, and that Isa and myself have been fully recognized, as we came together. I know also that many will be glad to know we are together and are happy; also that our life is one of usefulness, and we all find something to do; but still our work is as varied as yours in mortal life, therefore when the question is often asked: "What do you do in spirit-life?" the answer coming from one spirit would give you no idea of what another's work might be; but we all feel anxious to do whatever there is for us to do; and one part of our work is to help each other, which I know ought to be done in mortal life.

I hope you will bear with me for the assertion; but I know it is true, and the scenes that I have passed through cause me to make the statement. It is but a very few years since I threw off the mortal form and put on the new garment, which I felt glad to accept of, although loved ones held me here by strong ties.

I went to Bridgton Centre, Me., thinking perhaps it might prolong my mortal life, but they came to call me up higher.

I am satisfied with my home. In a few months, after the death angel came for me, beckoning me up higher, did the summons come to Isa, and she soon stepped into the boat and was rowed safely across. Frank H. Richardson. I have friends in Bridgton and in Somerville. Isa sends greetings to-day, as well as myself, and also dear old Grandma Barrett. Many dear ones that are not relatives have come, and send love to them all. I hope John Morrison, of Bridgton Centre, Me., will see my message.

Sarah E. Parker.

Something like twenty-nine years ago, as near as I can reckon it, I laid aside the mortal form. I was only thirty-seven years of age at that time. My dear angel mother, who had passed on, was waiting to clasp the hands of her child, and to lead me to a beautiful home.

As she came into view, before the breath had ceased, or the spirit taken its flight, I found it was no myth that the loved ones do return to comfort us and to help us through life's battle, which is hard, as many trials overtake us here. Then give credit to the dear ones on the other side for what they do and try to do, and do not come with a distrustful feeling, with your doubts built up high, but throw them aside, and welcome every spirit, whether a relative or no, that comes for a good purpose.

You know not how much consolation you may give, or how much help to a spirit who approaches you, even though a stranger. Often have I heard words such as these spoken to spirits, "Why did you come to me, a stranger? you are none of mine." Yet we are all God's children, and I beg you to consider my words, for many times these spirits cannot reach their own, therefore they seek whatever channel they find open. Bear with me in what I have said to you, and I know if you heed it it will be of some benefit. Sarah E. Parker, of Thetford, Vt.

Michael Swazey.

I want you to understand, Mr. Chairman, that I had a pretty hard time in life, for I was a soldier. Don't think I got shot in the back, either. I want you to know, sir, I was at my post, and I did, I guess, about as well as the others did. I thought so.

I want to say a few words to some of the boys: if this paper goes all over the world I know it will hit some of 'em.

I was n't just reconciled to going out, and when a ball hit me in the side, I placed my hand over it, with the blood streaming, and crawled up to the side of an old stone wall, and I said to the boys: "I 'm done for." But I did n't really think I was going, then. Now, let me tell you the best part of it: when I could n't hold out any longer, I looked up and my angel-mother stood over me, and said, "Mikey, it is well." Then I realized I was going to get out of the old shell I had lived in.

I went out in the battle of Antietam. I thought if my mother had been in the body I would n't have gone to war, but I suppose I should, if the boys went. I wanted to go, and as I 've landed in a better country, I think it was a good turn that was done me, after all, for I got out pretty easy. I did n't suffer any. The first thing I knew, I saw her, and then I saw a good many others; if you 'll believe it, I saw some of the boys coming—not the rebs.

My name is Michael Swazey. I 'm very glad there is no reason to hold any of us back. That first gentleman is a gentleman in every sense of the word, [the Spirit Chairman.] He bid me come right along and not be standing here waiting, but tell what I had got to say and give room for somebody else.

Annie Mitchell.

Oh! how many times have I wished, as I have seen others speaking, that I might send a few words of comfort to my dear friends, and I am so happy to improve this opportunity. Willie, oh! how I wish you could understood a little more of spirit-return, or, in other words, that you were a little more spiritually-minded. This life is but a shadow which soon vanishes, and then you cross the channel which separates us from you. I gained permission and tried to control once before, but failed.

I have many friends whom I would like to reach, some in Bethel and in Royalton, Vt.; also some have drifted away into New York State. I know your paper goes into some of the families, and they will see my message. They will say: "Why did you dare to come and speak in public?" Because you did not open a channel privately for me. When a private channel is afforded we are only too glad to avail ourselves of it; but when these channels are closed to us we seek others. We prefer to speak privately, because there are many things we have to hold back in public.

Jerry is here, and Sarah, also John Metcalf, from the Green Isle. They will understand the meaning of these words. I am anxious for them to know I am not unmindful of them, that I come to their homes in the still hours of the night. I know of all the trouble that came with one of the family that was taken away. In spirit-life the brain is all right.

My name is Annie Mitchell, and my home was in St. Johnsbury, Vt.

Maria Nutting.

Think not, mortals, those who have spoken are all the invisibles present. If the veil could be lifted you would be astonished at the throng you would behold, and say: "Is it possible so many spirits can enter this room?" We do not require space as you do.

I have not a great deal to say, for most of my dear ones are with me. I am happy to be able to testify to the truth of immortality, and to the fact that the ties of love and friendship draw us back to earth. Warren is here, and Louisa. They have tried to communicate before, but have failed even to give their names. My home was in Montreal, and I am Maria Nutting.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

GRACIE MARIA GEORGE.

THE BANNER of Aug. 25th contains a message from GRACIE MARIA GEORGE, which I recognized as coming from my darling little daughter.

Not only are the names and incidents correct, but she spoke of that which was known to no other mortal than myself, making it a most perfect test. I would thank both spirits and mortals who have opened this way for our loved ones to return and prove their identity. S. E. GEORGE.

Groveland, Mass., Oct. 1st.

ANN S. GROUT.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Sept. 22d I see a communication from ANN S. GROUT, of Wolcott, Vt., given through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, June 22d, which I recognize as from a sister of mine. She speaks of hearing beautiful music, and seeing flowers brought to her as she lay on her bed; it was my pleasure to be with her at the time of her spirit passing out, and she asked me if I did not hear and see them too; she said she was not afraid to go, for she had seen beyond the gates, but was anxiously waiting for the change. Yours for the truth,

MRS. A. W. WILCOX, (Boston, Mass.)

Onset, Mass., Sept. 28th, 1888.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT, Sept. 22d, was a message from ANN S. GROUT, of Wolcott, Vt. I recognize it as from a former acquaintance—name at that time, Ann S. Camp, of Elmore, Vt.; as her relatives are Methodists I do not think they will recognize the message as coming from their sister Ann.

Fredonia, N. Y. MRS. F. S. ALLEN.

Be discreet in all things, and so render it unnecessary to be mysterious about any. There is nothing mysterious about the action of Warner's Log Cabin Hops and Buchu Remedy. It puts the stomach in healthy action. Good digestion and health naturally follow. Be discreet and use this, the best remedy.

To the Liberal-Minded.

As the "BANNER OF LIGHT Establishment" is not an incorporated institution, and as we could not therefore legally hold bequests made to us in that name, we give below the form in which such a bequest should be worded in order to stand the test of law:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto Luther Colby and Isaac B. Rich, of Boston, Massachusetts, Publishers, [here insert the description of the property to be willed] strictly upon trust, that they shall appropriate and expend the same in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient and proper for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression."

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Palmyra, N. Y., Sept. 23d, 1888, Dr. Henry M. North, aged 64 years.

The funeral services were conducted by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, of Boston. For the past fifteen years Dr. North has been an earnest advocate of Spiritualism, and a zealous worker for the cause. During that time he was a subscriber to the BANNER OF LIGHT for himself and family, and for several years past subscribed for it as a year's gift for friends, hoping to spread the truth in that way. N.

On the morning of Sept. 10th, Mrs. Adie Waters, wife of Dr. Z. Waters, of Bloomington, Ill.

The change came suddenly and unheralded, snatching our loved one from our midst; but the dear angels bore her pure spirit away to her home in the "Father's house of many mansions," and our stricken hearts find solace in the assurance that our loss is her eternal gain. J. H. COOK.

October Magazines.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.—The opening pages contain a new installment of "Passe Rose," followed by "The Tutor of a Great Prince," narrating an incident of Roman history in the times of Marcus Aurelius. A story of war times, "In a Border State," by Patty Blackburn Semple, depicts with thrilling interest incidents of the times and the peculiar locality in which its scenes are laid. Under the caption, "Garibaldi's Early Years," is given many of the salient points in the life of that extraordinary man, gleaned from his autobiography recently published. In the fourth part of "Boston Painters and Painting" W. H. Downes treats of French works in the Museum of Fine Arts, incidentally mentioning that there is many a picture-gallery in Europe not half so rich as that which our city possesses in this collection. Lovers of Nature will read appreciatively Sophia Kirk's contribution, "Pasture Herb and Meadow Swath," and in "Iceland, Summer and Winter," a place and a people seldom visited and described, are interestingly set forth. Of the other contents are "Esoteric Economy," "The Pioneers of Ohio," a review of Henry James's "Partial Portraits," new chapters of Miss Murfree's serial story, and treatments of various topics in "The Contributor's Club." Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

THE CENTURY.—As a frontispiece is given a portrait of the Jewish poet of New York, Emma Lazarus, who entered upon this life in 1849, and left it in November of last year, a sympathetic study of whose genius and personality is given on subsequent pages. "An English Deer Park" is the subject of an interesting illustrated article occupying the leading position, following which is the third and concluding part of "A Mexican Campaign," by the author of the "Ivory Black" stories, Thomas A. Janvier. The Ranch papers by Theodore Roosevelt close with one on "Frontier Types," describing classes of men far from creditable to civilization, or a so-called Christian nation. Walt Whitman contributes memoranda made by him, 1863-66, of "Army and Hospital Cases," in which revelations are made that will prove new and startling to the general reader. The most attractive feature of this number is the continuation of George Kennan's Siberian articles, in which "The Tomsk Forwarding Prison" is described, with several illustrations from sketches made on the spot. The "Lincoln" paper has for its special topic, "Plans of the Campaign." Two short stories are "A Strike," by Maud Howe, and "An Idyl of Sinkin' Mountain," by H. S. Edwards. Five authors contribute to an elucidation of "Our National Military System." The three supplementary departments are interestingly and instructively filled. The Century Company, New York. Damrell & Upham, Boston.

ST. NICHOLAS.—The concluding chapters of "Two Little Confederates" will be read with some feeling of regret that there is to be no more of it. This number unusually abounds with completed stories, of which are "The Boy Bears," "From House to House," "The Civilized King and Semi-Barbarous Giant," "The Bilged Midshipman," and, though not strictly a story, of the same nature, "The Great Man of the Family," pages from the diary of a boy. A fine study in natural history is given in Louie Lyndon's "Sea-Gulls—From the Light-House," a very interesting report from an observer of the habits of those birds, as also in Edmond Wilson's article upon "A Floating Home," an account of what he found in the way of animal life on a piece of sea-weed. A tradition of the Illinois Indians by John Dimitry relates the daring act of a young Indian girl, "Watseka," that gave her a place in their history as the most beautiful and bravest girl of the tribe. All the contents are finely illustrated. Several fine poems are among the remaining contents, and as this is the closing number of the volume, a title page and index. New York: The Century Co. Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street, Boston.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—A romantic chapter in Texas history is given by Lee C. Harby in "The City of a Prince," the first chapter of which (with numerous illustrations) occupies the opening pages. "The Site of Old Fort Massachusetts," the most noted of what were known as Province forts, and the thrilling events that ended in its destruction, in August 1746, are described by D. D. Slade, M. D. In a sketch of a copy of a Boston paper of June 11th, 1778, selections from its contents are given, among them a notice of the execution of a woman on Boston Common, dressed in white satin, with three men she had hired to murder her husband. A Mrs. Stebbins who relates this says: "In those days parents used to send their children 'to see the men hung,' and my grandmother sent all her children to witness the impressing ceremony." We can congratulate ourselves on having made some advance from the customs of those days. Many interesting historical facts are given in "Minor Topics," "Notes," "Queries," "Replies," and "Historic and Social Jottings." New York: 743 Broadway.

THE QUIVER.—"Angels Unawares" is the subject of a poem by J. F. Waller, illustrated with a marginal engraving of much beauty, the only defect being the cumbersome and senseless display of wings. In an article upon "Sentimental Christians," Rev. R. H. Lovell rebukes the thoughtlessness and inaction of those who profess to be very thoughtful and active. "The Day of Atonement as Observed by the Modern Jews," is described in an illustrated paper by Rev. William Burnet. Of the remaining contents are "Short Saws with Long Teeth," "The Natural Poetry of Footpaths," "What Mrs. Thwaites Did," and "A Box of Ointment," with continuations of two serial stories. New York: Cassell & Co.

☞ What a blessed thing is death, when it comes in the fullness of time to relieve the spirit of its worn-out body. With the old house falling into decay with age, the roof leaky, and the walls mouldy and cheerless, how gladly the tenant—if he has lived wisely and well—goes forth to occupy his beautiful mansion builded for him in the Summer-Land. There should be no sorrow in old age, for it is then "we are almost there," and the glad thought should fill the soul with delight. The haven lies just beyond that bank of clouds we call death. See ye not the harbor lights, oh Sire, and thrills not your spirit with the joys of the home-gathering so near at hand?—Golden Gate.

The Writing Planchette.
SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.
DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.
The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.
PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.
NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

TOOTH-LIFE.
A Delightful Tooth-Powder.
THIS Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.
Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."
The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught herein are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."
FINELY executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and executed ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.
Price 50 cents.

FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM.
BY WARREN CHASE.
A SEQUEL TO "THE LIFE-LINE OF THE LONE ONE."
AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE AUTHOR, AS The World's Child,
WHO GAVE THE FIRST PUBLIC LECTURES IN THIS COUNTRY IN DEFENSE OF MODERN SPIRIT-INTERCOURSE, AND WHOSE NAME IS FIRST ON THE LIST OF CALLS FOR COPIES OF "NATURE'S DIVINE REVELATIONS," WHEN IN PRESS IN 1847.
No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

CONTENTS.
CHAPTER I. Internal and External Forebodings of Social, Political and Religious Convulsions, Personal and General, resulting in a Social Effort by the Author.
II. Birth of Spiritualism—Failure of Fourierism—Political Career Opened, and Sketches on the Path of Life by the Crooked and Tangled Line—The First Spiritual Paper, The Univercælum, and its Objects Explained.
III. Early Work—Boston Investigator—Univercælum, Spirit Messenger, and Early Workers, etc.
IV. Catalogue of Names and Short Biographical Notices of Early Workers and Persecutions.
V. A Brief and Brilliant Political Career.
VI. Threading My Way along the "Hard Road to Travel On"—Incidents and Events in the Path of Life.
VII. What I have Learned from Forty Years' Intercourse with Spirits—Sexual Life in the Spirit-World—My Social, Political and Religious Creed, etc.
VIII. Extracts and Scraps of Correspondence running through Many Years, with Various and Progressive Ideas on Spirit-Life and Intercourse; with Scraps from my Scrap-Book worth keeping and largely variegated.
IX. Poetical Selections from Various Sources, Personal and General—Good and Poor, but not Bad, greatly mixed, in Published and Unpublished Scraps.

The volume is embellished with a portrait of the author.

SPIRIT WORKS: Real but not Miraculous. A Lecture read at the City Hall in Roxbury, Mass., on the evening of Sept. 21st, 1853, by ALLEN PUTNAM.
This lecture, delivered in Roxbury, Sept. 21st, 1853, and repeated at the Melodeon, in Boston, Nov. 1st, same year, though preceded by several addresses by Lacy Sunderland, A. E. Newton, J. M. Spear and others, in smaller rooms, and on more private notice, was the first Lecture on Spiritualism in this vicinity to which the public was invited through the press and by posters, and the first to be printed and issued in pamphlet form. Though the author says that it seems crude now, and contains some allusions to local and transient events, it is interesting and valuable because of its connection with the introduction of Spiritualism.
Paper, pp. 62. Price 25 cents, postage free.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter streets.—Last Sunday, Oct. 7th, public services were resumed, the guide of Mrs. H. S. Lake speaking upon the subject, "The Ways of the Spirit." He said:

It is common for mankind to judge by outward appearances, because, as yet, the spirit has so limited a control of its material expression. The deductions of the reason are relied upon too largely, since reason is only the result of the activity of the physical senses; that other faculty, which is called intuition, and which we would define as the sense of the soul, is a more unerring guide, simply because it deals with superior conditions.

The ways of the spirit seem dark and mysterious to persons immersed in material environment, and they cannot be understood until the individual soul by effort, by culture of the interior senses, places himself at such an altitude of observation as to view that which is otherwise unseen: the springs moving events individual and national.

No reform or reformer has yet been understood at the outset, because the forces moving were concealed, and the ways of the spirit are not the ways of the material. Success is not always that which to the external perception appears as such; for there are ends and aims known to the spirit, hidden from the physical.

It is because of this fact that you are perplexed with the problem of your individual destiny. You are looking for those outward states which indicate material prosperity, while the ways of the spirit are unrevealed.

We have no concern in placing before you the basis upon which the structure of your Spiritual Philosophy is reared, except as that basis and that structure shall tend to a development of character; except as it is made a means whereby the ways of the spirit become more clear, assisting you to disentangle the knotty problem of human progression.

We do not come in a spirit of despotism or authority, but only as coöperators and comrades, who, having received some added light upon the ways of the spirit, are desirous that you shall share in our discovery.

At the close of the discourse, Dr. D. E. Caswell, under control, said: "We are gratified with this assembly upon this occasion. The speaker of the afternoon is one whose work we approve and commend, who came to us in the natural order of our growth as a Society. This material Temple, constructed by unselfishness, was called into being because it was deemed wise by us, as a band, to have some place in which all subjects, pertinent to the welfare of the race, might be expressed without fear or favor. The speaker to whom you have listened, and her inspirers, are in harmony with us in this desire, and we bespeak for them and for her your fraternal consideration and mental hospitality, not only upon Sunday, but upon every day, that through this friendly atmosphere we may work more effectively."

Several fine selections were rendered by George J. Parker and Miss Etta Parker, which were very much appreciated. E. E. Truette presided at the organ with his usual skill and effectiveness.

Next Sunday Mrs. Lake's guide will speak upon: "The Spirit and the Letter of the Law." The Children's School assembles at 10:30 A. M., and it is desired that all who are interested in having their children instructed in the realities of the spirit should bring them and take part in the exercises.

Wednesday Evening Social at 7:30, to which all are most cordially invited. ••••

The Boston Spiritual Temple commenced its series of Sunday services in Berkeley Hall, Oct. 7th, at 10:30 A. M. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather the hall was well filled with an attentive and interested audience. After singing by Mr. Lillie, and an earnest, soulful invocation by Mrs. Lillie, the President, Capt. Richard Holmes, gave a cordial address of welcome.

In answer to the question: "What is to be the Outgrowth of the Differences and Bickerings among Christians, and the Wranglings among Spiritualists?" the guides of Mrs. Lillie said "bickerings" belong to mankind—not to the principles they profess. Man's religious belief is of slow growth. We should not expect to find perfect harmony among Spiritualists; conditions will effervesce and be agitated until the natural laws of progression are brought about.

In our investigations we should accord to the opinions of others the same deference we require for our own. We live in an age of thought. All of the teachings of Luther were torchlights of eternal truth in his day, but in the nineteenth century they are pronounced narrow and bigoted. Agitation in all conditions is necessary to growth. The return of spirits is the fundamental principle upon which our belief rests. We all need to look at ourselves, and see if we have the spirit of truth within. Wait patiently, and nature's grand old laws will in time settle all differences. Truth and error must be contrasted. Spiritualism is a science, religion a philosophy. We shall after a time take all of these with us; out of the broad truths of Spiritualism will come humanitarianism.

In the evening Mrs. Lillie gave an interesting account of her visit to the Pacific coast; she spoke in glowing terms of her warm and cordial reception by the Spiritualists of California, and of the rapid growth of Spiritualism throughout the West; she regretted that so large a number of its believers still lingered within the shadows of the evangelical churches, and strenuously advocated the importance of Spiritualists' organizing and establishing a platform upon a basis where all adherents could stand and claim recognition, not for a creed, but to solidify and make a compact body for the advancement of truth.

At the close of the evening's address, Dr. A. H. Richardson moved that the congratulations of the Society be extended to Mrs. Lillie on her safe return, assuring her of the gratification it affords us to again enjoy the privilege of her genial presence, and of listening to the soul-inspiring thoughts expressed through her organism.

A vote being called by the Chairman, the motion was unanimously adopted.

Both morning and evening services closed with improvised poems upon subjects furnished by the audience.

Mrs. Lillie will speak from the same platform on Sunday, Oct. 14th, both morning and evening. O. L. R.

Berkeley Hall.—W. J. Colville, on his return to Boston after fifteen months' absence in the West, was greeted, on Sunday last, Oct. 7th, with two large and very appreciative audiences. As previously announced in these columns, he lectured in Berkeley Hall at 3 P. M., and in Chelsea at 7:30 P. M. Though the two lectures were not alike the general line of thought was similar, as the main drift of both discourses was a comparison between past and present methods of spiritual activity and an explanation of the meaning of the three words most prominently displayed on the sign-boards announcing the afternoon meeting, which were independent (referring to the Club under whose auspices the lecture was given), "Occultism and Spiritualism."

Speaking of the first, the lecturer (who was evidently thoroughly under inspiration) said: "To be independent is not to be egotistic or isolated, nor is it to be anything other than interdependent, which is a broader and fuller word than independent, as it recognizes mutual human relations indefinitely extended; but independence is a grand old word associated with the most thrilling epochs in the history of liberty, and what true man or woman among us is there who does not desire to be free from all the shackles of mental tyranny, and enjoy freedom to live out to the full his or her highest convictions? To search for truth and apply it when discovered to the present advancement of the highest interests of the race, coupled with a determination to stamp out scandal, with all that gives rise to it, must ever constitute the lofty and precious purpose of an organization whose intent is spiritual in something more than name.

Occultism does not mean a system which aims at promoting secrecy and hiding knowledge, but exactly the reverse, the aim of every true student of hidden wisdom being to reveal and disclose what has long lain hidden. Truth of the utmost importance to mankind lies buried in the inmost depths of our spiritual being, there to remain unmanifested, as are the jewels and precious metals in the depths of the sea and the bowels of the earth, till found and brought to the surface and subsequently applied to practical uses by those who make it their business to search for and obtain these hidden treasures. Miners to-day are unearthing the wealth deposited by nature in her secret chambers in ages distant almost beyond computation; so are students of spiritual knowledge unveiling the divine powers latent in the human soul and helping to flood the world with the only light which can effectually chase away the darkness of error and the yet deeper gloom of crime.

Spiritualism, said the speaker with great fervor, is both what Dr. Willis and what A. E. Newton have described it as being in recent issues of the BANNER OF LIGHT. It is a knowledge of immortality united with conscious communion with loved ones passed from mortal vision; and more than this, it is spirituality, and this signifies both justice and charity.

The music in both places was excellent. A fine choir was in attendance at Berkeley Hall, and Fred Heath, the blind musician, played and sang very sweetly in Chelsea.

On Sunday next, Oct. 14th, Mr. Colville's subject will be "Practical Benefits Accruing from Occult Development and Theosophical Research," in Berkeley Hall. Service commences precisely at 3 P. M.; in Chelsea at 7:30 P. M. He will lecture in Fraternity Hall, Odd Fellows Building, close to Bellingham car station.

His classes in Spiritual Science opened very auspiciously in Berkeley Hall Monday, Oct. 8th, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M., under the able and efficient business supervision of Miss H. M. Young. Eighty-one tickets for the course were sold before the first lecture was delivered, and many visitors attend each session. Until Nov. 2d (inclusive) the meetings will convene Friday, Monday and Wednesday at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. Single admissions are granted at the moderate price of twenty-five cents. The BANNER OF LIGHT and W. J. Colville's works on sale at the door.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—The reopening of the Spiritual Phenomena meetings last Sunday afternoon was attended by a large audience. The music was conducted by Prof. Willis Milligan, assisted by S. A. Dennet, cornetist, George Casmar violinist, and Mrs. Mary Nickerson, soprano, and was finely rendered throughout.

The President, J. H. Lewis, who welcomed the people, remarked that the most important question of the hour was, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Most of us have our theory in regard to it growing out of our experience in the churches, but we learn more clearly and intelligently in regard to the future life by the phenomena we see upon this and other platforms and in private circles. Mrs. Nickerson sang the song, "Something Sweet to Think Of," and the speaker of the day, Mrs. E. Clark Kimball of Lawrence, was entranced by her Indian control, who welcomed all and expressed the wish that the pipe of peace might be used by every one present; also that the children might be made welcome and taught the beautiful truth that those called dead are living in a glorious world beyond, and that around our council-fire we may hear voices from the spirit-world. Mrs. Kimball then gave, in a rapid manner, names, and in many cases the former residences of persons who have lived in and around Boston, nearly all of whom were recognized.

At the evening session Mrs. Kimball read a fine poem entitled "The Good, Great Man." Mrs. Nickerson rendered finely "When We Hear Sweet Voices Singing," and Mrs. Kimball, in opening, eloquently alluded to the changes that are taking place in Nature: "Soon will come the cold winds of winter; the streamlet will be clothed in its icy covering, the leaf of the maple put on its variegated hue; yet nature does not dread these changes; all is for the benefit of the human race. So change is going on with us continually, from our birth to our entrance into life immortal—that beautiful land where changes are unknown. They whom we mourn as lost are with us daily, ready to give us a word of consolation and lead us up to the life beyond."

Some remarkable tests were also given at this session. The President announced that Mrs. Ada Foye, of California, will occupy the platform next Sunday. This hall has been remodelled and enlarged during the vacation season, and is now well adapted for public meetings. The usual test-circles will be held every Thursday evening, to which all interested in Spiritualism are most cordially invited. HEATH.

First Spiritual Temple Fraternity School.—This educational school gave its first session last Sunday. The weather was stormy, the rain falling in torrents, but a goodly number was present. The session opened with singing, and an invocation followed by short addresses from members of the school. Miss Grace Dyar recited "The Children's Welcoming." The order of exercises each Sunday will consist of singing, invocation, readings and questions and answers on subjects pertaining to Spiritualism. It is proposed that children coming to this school shall be taught the uses and principles of Spiritualism, so that when asked what they learn they will be able to give an intelligent reply. Object lessons will be a feature in this school, and if Spiritualists choose to send their children here to gain an insight into our mode of working they will fully appreciate it. Parents and guardians should not fail to fully recognize the generosity with which Mr. M. C. Ayer has opened his beautiful Temple to educate the children into the more lasting Spiritual Temple which will endure when mortal time shall be no more.

With these thoughts and suggestions of the first session of the season let us prepare ourselves to carry forward the work, and with faithful helpers with us we can do it. ALONZO DANFORTH.

No. 2 Fountain Square, Roxbury.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The services at College Hall last Sunday were quite interesting. Mr. Eben Cobb being engaged to speak at Duxbury, Mass., Mrs. Cobb officiated as Chairman with dignity and ability, making a few pertinent remarks, afterward introducing Mrs. Forrester, who also made remarks, and gave psychometric readings from articles belonging to those in the audience, after which Miss Peabody was introduced, and gave some marked tests and readings which were recognized. Mr. Ridel followed with remarks. Arthur McKenna gave readings, which were correct. The afternoon and evening services were also of much interest.

All of the Spiritual Meetings in Boston commenced Sunday, Oct. 7th. There were advertised in the secular papers seven regular meetings for the advocacy of the Spiritualistic Philosophy, and several public séances, besides two Children's Lyceums held in the morning. This clearly shows that Spiritualism is in full sympathy with the people, or that there are more meetings in Boston than can be sustained as they should be. COM.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall.—Despite the inclemency of the weather the members of the Lyceum gathered at this hall last Sunday in goodly numbers.

It was intended to have the exercises unusually interesting, as the Brockton Lyceum was expected to be present; but, owing to the death of one of their number, the visit has been postponed until next Sunday, Oct. 14th.

In the absence of Conductor Weaver Vice President Sydney Whitney presided in a most admirable manner.

The exercises consisted of readings by Flossie Butler, Lillie Wendemuth, Maggie McNevin and Allie Cummings; singing by Jessie Judkins and Gracie Scales, Master Newton presiding at the piano; dialogue by Freddie Stevens, Mark Abrams and Addie Hazeltine; piano solo by Master Bear; remarks by Mrs. W. S. Butler and Col. Bancroft. Number in March one hundred and six.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to visit us.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

59 Hudson street, Boston.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The afternoon services were opened by a new test medium, who gave good satisfaction. He was followed by Mr. Milleson, in his usual philosophic style. David Brown and Dr. Thomas gave personal experiences, showing the trials and persecutions of mediums. Mrs. Loring gave fine tests, and Dr. Dean Clarke made some very pithy and pertinent remarks. In the evening Dr. Thomas opened with invocation and tests, and Dr. Dean Clarke gave a highly entertaining and instructive lecture, which was frequently applauded, on "The Practical Uses of Spiritualism." As a general desire was expressed to hear Dr. Clarke again, his services have been secured for next Sunday evening. Mrs. Loring followed Dr. Clarke with several excellent tests, every one being recognized. F. W. MATHEWS.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society.—The initial meeting for the season was held in the hall of this organization, 1031 Washington street, on Friday, Oct. 5th. Many friends and members were present, and the afternoon and evening passed very pleasantly in social greeting, after the long vacation of four months. The season is now opened for work, and we earnestly hope to see our many friends from week to week. ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

The Cambridge Spiritual Society inaugurated its course of lectures on the evening of Oct. 7th by a well received address by Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock. Subject, "Mediumship." Sunday next Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes will be our speaker. These meetings are held in the Odd Fellows Hall, 548 Main street, Cambridgeport. H. D. SIMONS, Sec'y.

Chelsea.—The Spiritualists meet in Pilgrim Hall, Odd Fellows Building, opposite Bellingham car station, each Sunday at 3 and 7:30 P. M. Next Sunday, W. J. Colville will occupy the rostrum in the evening. Dodge and Logan, Directors.

Last Monday fifteen thousand persons attended the Bay State Fair at Worcester.

Sincere Thanks.

Last spring when myself and wife were visiting the elegant, quiet, and well-deserved home of Brother C. N. and Sister M. S. Wood in Stoneham, Mass., and when I was closing up my book of forty years' labors on the spiritual rostrum, which I could not publish without the help of Colby & Rich and THE BANNER, not having saved money enough from my forty years' service in this field, I told them that I felt that I must soon retire from the field of active labor, as Sister Wood had done after her many years of faithful work, and told them how much we wished we had about $500 to build a little cottage among the fruit trees on the little farm at Cobden, Ill., which is a common home of myself and my son-in-law and daughter and family, where myself and wife could close out the remainder of our earthly lives, and where the other comforts would be in our reach, but that I had not saved (whether earned or not) the means to do it. They often expressed themselves, as many others have, as satisfied that I had earned and deserved it, but I did not then expect any effort made to raise it from my friends or the friends and supporters of the cause of Spiritualism, to which the last forty years and the last part of my life have been devoted, and I could not and would not knowingly receive a dollar from any one who would, by giving it, be deprived of the comforts of life.

Sister Wood while at Onset, feeling an impulse from some source stirring her generous soul, proposed to friends there that a testimonial be made to me. Assisted by Sister Carrie Grimes-Forster, the wife of our dear arisen brother and fellow-laborer, Thomas Gales Forster, (Mrs. F. contributing $25.00), she collected and forwarded to me $77.00, which is gratefully received, and will be sacredly applied as above if the object can be reached, and the contributors, so far as known, will hold sacred places in our memories. If any others feel able and willing, and in accordance with the above conditions, and feel that I deserve it, should wish to aid me, they can send funds direct to me at Cobden, Ill., and their names will be held sacred, and the amounts duly acknowledged. I do not feel that I can much longer travel and lecture as I have done so many years, and it is not probable that I shall ever receive more than my expenses for what little more I can do in the cause, as it will be mostly with my pen, which has been as active as my tongue, and probably done as much for the cause, and that is not pecuniarily profitable.

It has long been and still is my earnest desire (which is my prayer) that I may be allowed, after getting out of this body, to continue my labors in the cause of Spiritualism and other great reforms.

Cobden, Ill. WARREN CHASE.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Contrary to previous announcement, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham remained in New York city last Sunday, to fulfil a promise made years ago to James L. Jackson that she would officiate at his funeral when he passed to the higher life—his obsequies occurring at 4 P. M. on that day at Yonkers, N. Y.

She spoke before our society in the morning upon subjects selected by the audience, and improvised four poems. Before the lecture Mr. H. J. Newton, President, called attention to the financial condition of the society, and urged the necessity of prompt action to replenish the treasury. Mrs. Newton also made some fitting remarks in the same direction. At the close of the service a subscription was opened and responses followed indicating that the society would not want for funds.

In the Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon, Mr. Henry J. Newton read a poem, and extracts from the North American Review. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave some eighteen or twenty tests, and all but one was recognized. In the evening Mrs. Wells delivered a lecture in Newark, N. J. She will speak in Newark next Sunday evening, upon "What is Spiritualism?"

Lyman C. Howe will speak for the First Society next Sunday morning and evening, and tell some of his experiences at the Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon.

Mrs. Brigham will speak in Paterson, N. J., next Sunday. S.

Bridgeport, Ct.

At 2 o'clock on the afternoon of Oct. 7th, a goodly number assembled in Recreation Building to hear J. Frank Baxter. As he stepped upon the rostrum the sun shone suddenly out in effulgence, and sitting at the organ he played and sang "Catch the Sunshine," thoroughly inspiriting his audience. President Lilac then introduced him, when he sang, read and sang again, by which time a large audience had assembled.

A well-needed and masterly lecture was given on "Spiritualism's Important Demands on Spiritualists."

The course of the evening was peculiar, and foreign to Mr. Baxter's custom. Instead of a lecture by itself and séance following, tests, descriptions and delineations of spirits were freely and numerously given, intermixed with his relations of experiences and comments. It was like reading an interesting book which is illustrated plentifully with pictures. When the lecture closed, still the descriptions of spirits continued till very many highly satisfactory ones were given.

Mr. Baxter will speak here again next Sunday and the succeeding Sundays of the month. COM.

Haverhill, Mass.—The First Spiritualist Association of Haverhill and Bradford entered upon its autumn and winter lecture course last Sunday, which was opened by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester of West Randolph, Vt., who was warmly welcomed by many who remembered listening last year to her interesting inspirational addresses.

In the afternoon the controlling spirit purported to be, when in the flesh, Rev. Jonathan Sargent, an army chaplain in the late war. His theme was Immortality, and the knowledge of it which has come to the world through the light of Spiritualism.

In the evening the control purported to be that of Spirit Henry C. Wright, speaking with a flow of eloquence and earnestness which was his distinguishing characteristic when in earth-life. His theme was "The Present Advancing Age as Contrasted with that of the Past," as illustrated by the fact that the average intelligence of childhood exceeds that of adult possession in the past. The present unfoldment of the higher and nobler elements of being was shown to be through the lead of the Spiritualistic Philosophy, and a searching after God in nature rather than in miraculous manifestations.

The congregational singing, led by Mrs. Benden, was fine, and in the evening it was supplemented by orchestral music by the Steele family.

Mrs. Manchester will occupy the platform next Sunday. E. P. H.

[The memorial to Mrs. Haseltine will appear next week.]

Pittsburgh, Pa.—W. J. Colville's visit to this place proved very successful. The hall used by the Spiritualist Society was crowded both evenings, Oct. 4th and 5th, with highly appreciative audiences. The first lecture was on "The True Relation of Modern Spiritualism to Christianity and Oriental Religions"; the second on topics selected by the audience. The speaker received a perfect ovation, and was presented with exquisite floral tributes, by Mrs. Helen S. Richings, and others.

Frank T. Ripley is speaking and giving tests during October at the regular meetings.

Fitchburg, Mass.—Mrs. E. S. Loring, Secretary First Spiritualist Society, informs us that Dr. H. P. Fairfield spoke for that organization to good acceptance on the last two Sundays of September. Prof. Peck, she writes, is the engaged speaker for the 7th and 14th inst.

Before It Is Born.

SOME STARTLING STATEMENTS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, on being asked when the training of a child should begin, replied, "A hundred years before it is born."

Are we to infer from this that this generation is responsible for the condition of the race a hundred years from now?

Is this wonderful generation the natural result of the proper diet and medicines of a hundred years ago?

It is conceded in other lands that most of the wonderful discoveries of the world in this century have come from this country. Our ancestors were reared in log cabins, and suffered hardships and trials.

But they lived and enjoyed health to a ripe old age. The women of those days would endure hardships without apparent fatigue that would startle those of the present age.

Why was it?

One of the proprietors of the popular remedy known as Warner's safe cure has been faithfully investigating the cause, and has called to his aid scientists as well as medical men, impressing upon them the fact that there cannot be an effect without a cause. This investigation disclosed the fact that in the olden times simple remedies were administered, compounded of herbs and roots, which were gathered and stored in the lofts of the log cabins, and when sickness came on, these remedies from nature's laboratory were used with the best effects.

What were these remedies? What were they used for? After untiring and diligent search they have obtained the formulas so generally used for various disorders.

Now the question is, how will the olden time preparations affect the people of this age, who have been treated, under modern medical schools and codes, with poisonous and injurious drugs. This test has been carefully pursued, until they are convinced that the preparations they now call Warner's Log Cabin remedies are what our much abused systems require.

Among them is what is known as Warner's Log Cabin sarsaparilla, and they frankly announce that they do not consider the sarsaparilla of so much value in itself as it is in the combination of the various ingredients which together work marvelously upon the system. They also have preparations for other diseases, such as "Warner's Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy," "Log Cabin hops and buchu remedy," "Warner's Log Cabin hair tonic." They have great confidence that they have a cure for the common disease of catarrh, which they give the name of "Log Cabin rose cream." Also a "Log Cabin plaster," which they are confident will supplant all others, and a liver pill to be used separately or in connection with the other remedies.

We hope that the public will not be disappointed in these remedies, but will reap a benefit from the investigations, and that the proprietors will not be embarrassed in their introduction by dealers trying to substitute remedies that have been so familiar to the shelves of our druggists. This line of remedies will be used instead of others. Insist upon your druggist getting them for you if he has n't them yet in stock, and we feel confident that these new remedies will receive approbation at our readers' hands, as the founders have used every care in their preparation.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Johnston Building, Flatbush Avenue, corner of Nevins Street.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—There has been a society organized in Brooklyn, called "The Psychical Research Society." The officers are Fred Haslam, President, A. E. Laurene, Vice President, Joseph La Fumee, Secretary, and Mrs. Fred Haslam, Treasurer. The object of the society will be to investigate Mesmerism, Psychology, Spiritualism and Occult Forces.

The second meeting was held at the residence of Fred Haslam, 470 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn, on the 3d of October. Remarks were made by the President as to the object of the society, and circulars, kindly sent us by the Secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research, of which we intend to make ourselves a branch, read. An interesting paper was read by A. E. Laurene on Scientific Mediumship, after which ten members were added to our numbers. We are desirous of having mediums who wish to have the endorsement of our society come and be one with us. We hope to accomplish something this winter in this line of thought. We have several mesmerists among us, besides some good mediums who will do all they can toward satisfying investigators. The meeting closed at 10 P. M., all expressing themselves satisfied with the progress made.

JOSEPH LA FUMEE, Sec'y.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—The First Spiritualist Society of Haverhill and Bradford commenced its meetings in this hall, Sunday, Oct. 7th, for the season of 1888-89, J. Clegg Wright occupying the platform during the month.

Mr. Wright's subject for the 2 P. M. lecture was: "Spiritualism, What it Means—A Science and a Religion." The subject for the evening lecture was "Body and Mind." Both themes were handled in Mr. Wright's best vein of thought, and commanded the profoundest attention until the close.

The selections by the Home Orchestra were given in splendid style, and added greatly to the evening service.

Mr. Wright will occupy the same platform next Sunday, Oct. 14th. W. W. CURRIER.

Troy, N. Y.—Progressive Spiritual Association No. 2, convening in Star Hall, corner of Third and Fulton streets, (entrance on Fulton) commenced its regular course of lectures Sunday, Oct. 7th. Edgar W. Emerson occupies the platform through the month; following him through the season the people will have the pleasure of listening to Miss Hagan, A. E. Tisdale, J. Clegg Wright, Mrs. Glading and Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn. We had a very pleasant visit from Mrs. Hattie C. Mason. She met the friends in one of our recent conference meetings, and very ably and acceptably entertained the audience. We have been pained to learn that Dr. Waldo Mason, her husband, was taken seriously ill, which was the cause of her short stay among us. We hope he may regain his usual health, and be able to pursue his work. W. H. VOSBURGH.

Detroit, Mich.—Prof. A. E. Carpenter commenced a series of mesmeric lectures and experiments in Fraternity Hall, Saturday evening, Oct. 6th, and on Sunday evening, Oct. 7th, lectured on "Mesmerism, Spiritualism," etc., possibly continuing during the month.

Mrs. Hyzer, formerly of Baltimore, commences an engagement of one month, with a prospect of remaining here until June 1889.

My Sale and Circulating Library is now fully established in Fraternity Hall; office adjoining stairway to hall. I am also prepared to receive any spiritual papers that may be sent free.

Everything indicates a revival of interest in our cause in this city. Yours, AUGUSTUS DAY.

Norwich, Conn.—The Spiritual Union of this city resumed its meetings Sunday, Oct. 7th, in Grand Army Hall. Dr. F. L. H. Willis, of Rochester, N. Y., is speaker for the month. His subjects on the 7th were: Afternoon, "Why am I a Spiritualist?" evening, "My Experience with Harvard College." Fine audiences greeted him at both sessions, and were deeply impressed by the eloquent utterances of this talented gentleman. Monday evening we were favored with the presence of Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, who gave many names and descriptions of spirit friends, many of them being recognized. MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Cleveland, O.—W. J. Colville's lectures in Weisgerber's Hall, Cleveland, drew out large and representative audiences. The subjects on both evenings (Oct. 2d and 3d) were chosen by the audience, and covered a wide field of spiritual and reformatory research. The local press gave excellent reports.

Mr. Thomas Lees and other friends made excellent arrangements.

Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings is speaking on Sundays. •••

Mr. Oscar Edgerly is meeting with great success in Maine. He is lecturing to large audiences, and his tests give perfect satisfaction. His sister, Mrs. Grace Patten, is being rapidly developed as a medium for producing portraits, etc.

Mr. Wm. P. Holt, of Market street, is a fine test medium, his power increasing of late.

The Independent Spiritualist Club holds two business meetings and two circles each month. The circles are well attended, great interest has been awakened by them, and new mediums are being developed.

One evening of each month is assigned by the ladies for a social gathering; that of Oct. 2d was of a nature that called forth expressions of much satisfaction, and will, by request, be repeated at an early date.

THOUGHTS FROM THE INNER LIFE.

The contents of this book consist of nearly one hundred communications on an equal number of subjects relating to life in the spirit-world, selected from those received during eight years at private circles held at the residence of Mr. D. E. Bailey, Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Swain of that city being the medium. They were given by what is termed the "independent," or direct voice of the spirits. At the sittings the medium was not unconscious; when the spirit friends began to speak, the company, including the medium, conversed with them the same as with another. A volume might be filled with accounts of Mr. Bailey's wonderful experiences at these sittings; but he chooses to place the communications before the public with as little comment as possible, in the hope that their readers may find in them strength for the weak, consolation for the sorrowing, and unquestionable assur

The Spiritual Rostrum.

Modern Spiritualism: Its Advent, Plan and Purpose.

A Discourse delivered before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society—Meeting in Berkeley Hall—through the Trance Mediumship of

MRS. R. S. LILLIE.

[Reported for the Banner of Light by Mrs. M. C. Talmage.]

We have said that Spiritualism has a place among the religions of the earth. Now we ask, What is the labor it has come to perform?—believing that man needs assistance and direction; that there are many errors to be corrected; that there are many pitfalls in the pathway of life that have proven to be stumbling-blocks in the pathway of progress. Many of these stumbling-blocks have been held as idols. It is hard for mankind to cut loose from these idols of the past, surrounded, as many of them are, by tender memories and associations. The man looks back to his childhood, and he sees his father and mother taking a book, which, in all the sincerity and devotion of their hearts, they told him was the word of the living God; putting this book into his hands and sending him forth into the world, believing they had given him the only infallible guide to salvation that the world contained. He says, "That book was good enough for my good old father and mother—it is good enough for me." It is hard to break away the shell of conservatism in which he wraps himself like a mantle. But it was in the home of such that Modern Spiritualism first made its appearance, working through the child mediums of that home. You know how those parents knelt in prayer and besought God to remove the curse (as they felt it to be) from them. This work, then, was carried on in the home of prayerful believers in a religious system, to which they clung as earnestly as any among you to-day cling to the old-time theology that your parents taught you. Still that mighty power kept on as persistently as though it had work to do; as though it knew that the old-time associations, tender as they were, must be set aside that greater blessings might come to man—the blessings which the powers around and about him felt that he most needed. The world of spirit came in mighty power to that humble home, bringing the manifestations of their presence that we have since witnessed.

Fancy, for a moment, what must be the happiness of the human spirit emancipated from the bondage of the flesh. Can you think what that form of life is of which one of old said, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive" of its glories? Yet these emancipated beings in their heavenly homes saw the needs of mankind, and they willingly left their mansions of light and journeyed earthward for the purpose of blessing humanity, and they began their work in earnest. Matter was handled in such a way that scientists were compelled to acknowledge that the law of gravitation was suspended or overcome by the action of a power of which they were entirely ignorant. Matter, no longer subject to the law of gravitation, seemed itself possessed of life and spirit, so perfectly did it respond to demands of the unseen intelligences who controlled it. Scientists saw this power and knew not what to name it.

Theologians, even of to-day, say: "It is foolish to talk of spirits moving tables, making sounds, operating upon matter, entering a home and turning over things generally, belittling themselves to such an extent." Why, friends, do you never think that God is constantly expressing himself through matter? What are all the sights and sounds of the physical universe but the operation of spirit upon matter?

Now we ask, "What did the spirits come to Hydesville for?" Did they come simply to arouse the idle curiosity of the denizens of earth? Not at all. They came because there was need of their coming; because there were lessons to be taught that would enable men to live their lives aright. Their first work was to make humanity understand the possibility of intelligent intercourse between the two worlds; and then, with knowledge, would come a realization that they could tell of the life beyond, so little known to dwellers in this material body. Not only did they bring a knowledge of immortality to the soul of man, but they brought healing to his body, healing diseases as no mortal physicians have ever been able to do. Jesus was a healer. Through the advent of Modern Spiritualism there has been a quickening of this old-time power; and not only does it remove disease, but it tells you what to eat, what to drink, how to order your lives in a way to promote the highest health of body and mind, and thus make it possible for future generations to be born in a more perfected stage of being. It teaches the science of life physical, as well as spiritual, and you learn to know that, unless the body, which is the temple of the living God, is kept pure and undefiled, the spirit imprisoned therein cannot rise above the low level of gross habits and desires that bind it. You know that until you can regulate your own lives in a way to express only your higher, better selves, you cannot give your children the birthright that belongs to them. How is this work to be accomplished? We answer: largely through the school of mediumship. Mediumship is an educational institution for the transmission of knowledge from the higher spheres; it is the open door between those realms and your own, through which wisdom may descend to you. As a class, the mediums themselves are elevated by their mediumship. There may be some weak vessels among them, some whose naturally unbalanced condition partially unfits them for their work—wholly unfits them, as individuals, to be models for you to follow—yet, even through them, a work is done; if not for man, then for undeveloped spirits out of the body; and such mediumship as that, even, is a part of the universal plan of life.

These weak vessels are they who have not received from their ancestors the birthright of which we have spoken. By-and-bye men are going to be born with brains fitted to grasp any problem, with an organism that seeks right methods of life as naturally as the plant seeks the light.

The time is not far distant when what is now known as public mediumship will, in a great measure, be done away with. Why? Because of the unfoldment of spiritual power in your own homes, your own lives. Children will be born clairvoyant, clairaudient. There will be child-mediums in every home, coming more and more as humanity advances. Thus will this world of yours be brought into full communion with the spirit-world. I would not speak in terms that seem lacking in respect for public mediums, but when every soul is an altar for the fire of the spirit, when every home is a church, every father, mother and child a member thereof, where will be the necessity for the public address which to-day forms a vital part of the work.

The work of Spiritualism is without limit. We have crime to deal with, and the world has had it to deal with always. Our religion teaches that every soul must pay the penalty of his own transgressions—nobody is going to do it for him. If he sin he must bear the consequences—there is no shirking them; and it is also true that the sins and mistakes of the parents leave their impress upon the children. Why, all of you can look back and say, "I inherited this form of body, this habit of thought, from my mother, my father, or some more remote ancestors." You can see that you are more what you were born than what you were educated to be; and so we say the way to remove crime is to cease to bring into the world children so imperfectly organized that they can hardly fail to fall before the first strong temptation. I believe that crime is going to be banished from the earth, because I believe—I know—there is coming to man an understanding of what the soul is, what the spirit is, what eternal life means. Then he will live wisely, as one who lives for eternity instead of the sensuous pleasures of a few brief years. Spiritualism teaches you that the consequences of all your sins follow you into the life beyond. They are not washed away nor forgiven. You will have to stand face to face with your conscience, your higher self, and meet the condemnation of your own soul. What is the remedy? Why, this condition can be outlived and overcome by a life of integrity and purity, and conditions for such a life are going to be given you. When, under those conditions, you have earned rest and peace and joy, they will all be yours. Will not a full understanding, a thorough realization of this truth, stimulate men to put away evil from their earthly life, and to strive to rise to a nobler plane of thought and action?

It is the work of Spiritualism to overcome mental as well as physical diseases. It brings a power that will penetrate even the brick walls of the great lunatic asylums all over the land, filled with thousands of poor sufferers whose misery only the pitying hearts of angels can fully understand. What affliction more terrible than insanity! A human being whose soul is held in bondage by its attachment to the body from which it cannot break away, the body whose nervous system all unstrung, like the strings of a piano if they were hopelessly broken and tangled, can express the soul within only by discordant and agonizing sounds, is the saddest sight in the universe; and to this class, Spiritualism, and that alone, can bring a perfect cure, for it comes to enlighten and uplift the insane world of spirits, as well as mortals, to help the undeveloped souls who, having dropped their own material form, yet linger here, bringing their burdens to add to those, already too heavy, of sufferers in the mortal form.

All the years of his public mediumship, Jesus was busy in dealing with undeveloped spirits that came too near the earthy plane, and so afflicted mortal sensitives. Somebody says: "This doctrine of the evil influence of undeveloped spirits is a terrible doctrine." Well, it is true. As we have said before, what a soul does not accomplish in one earthly pilgrimage it must in another, and that soul must begin where it left off, no matter how low down in the scale of life that may be. Such being the fact, such results as we see must follow.

Let Spiritualists have an understanding of this, and be willing to work even for the spirits in prison, and much of the cause of insanity and crime will be removed from earth. This work of removing crime and disease from the earth will take time. There are lessons to be taught; there are systems of labor to be evolved; but it will be done. Spiritualism has also come to do a work for woman, which no system of religion has yet done. Christianity has done more than any that preceded it, but it says, "If a woman wants knowledge, let her ask her husband," and it also says, "Wives, be obedient to your husbands." Spiritualism has come to place woman in her proper position as the companion and equal of man. Its first chosen instruments were little girls. The larger part of its mediums are women. What does this mean? It not only means that the fineness of her nature makes her responsive to the touch of the higher powers, but it also means that she is more in need of a helping hand than are you, my brother man. The time is approaching in which the wrongs of centuries are to be righted. Women of all classes are feeling this. The Woman Suffrage movement, grand and glorious in the idea of equality that it embodies, is one expression of this feeling.

It is the work of Spiritualism to place woman on a plane of equality with man in every respect. When this is done, the foundation of true marriage will be laid in equality and fraternity, as well as love, and future generations will be born with capacities and tendencies for true spiritual growth far beyond what is possible under the present condition of things.

I want the mothers of the world uplifted. I want them to be free and independent citizens of the country they inhabit, and they are going to be by-and-bye. Woman is going to be permitted to vote; she is going to have a voice in the affairs of the nation; she is going to help to manage its business not because she thinks she can do it better than her brother man, but because he ought not to do it alone. It is as true now as it was in the days of Adam, that "it is not good for man to be alone." Men readily comprehend this in some respects, but only partially. Women, looking upon this nation, this republic, upon the work that man has done, have seen that it is not good for man to be alone, and they say, "We are coming to help do this work; make way for us." All over the earth the women are crying, "Give us our rightful position as equal companions and co-workers with man in public and in private life; give us the rights to which, as mothers of the race, nature entitles us." This position Spiritualism has come to give them; nor does its work of establishing equal rights cease with securing them for woman—it demands them for the downtrodden and oppressed of both sexes.

What is the meaning of all the agitation in the world of labor? It is Justice calling in thunder tones for the recognition of the equal rights of humanity. It is not woman's rights, but equal rights, that are demanded. To inaugurate the reign of equal rights to extend the empire of Justice, Knowledge and Truth upon earth—is the work of Spiritualism to-day.

A German "Bad Boy."

A rich man was taking a walk in his brickyard with his little boy one morning, when the following conversation took place:

Tommy—What sort of a place is this, pa?

"This, my boy, is a brickyard."

"Who does it belong to?"

"It belongs to me, my son."

"Does that big pile of bricks belong to you, too, pa?"

"Yes, Tommy, it belongs to me."

"Do those dirty looking men belong to you, too, pa?"

"No, my son, in this glorious land of liberty there can be no slavery. They are free men."

"Why do they work so hard?"

"I don't know, my son."

"Does anybody steal what they make?"

"Of course not, Tommy. How do you come to ask such questions?"

"But, pa, don't the bricks belong to those men who make them?"

"No, my son, they belong to me."

"What are the bricks made of, pa?"

"Of clay, Tommy."

"What! out of that dirt?"

"Yes, Tommy."

"And nothing else?"

"No, Tommy."

"Who does the clay belong to?"

"To me."

"Did you make it?"

"No, my son, God made it."

"Did God make the clay specially for you?"

"No, I bought it."

"Well, pa, did you buy the clay from God?"

"No; I bought it just as I buy anything else."

"Did God sell the clay to the man you bought it from?"

"I don't know, Tommy. You ask more silly questions than I can answer."

"It's a good thing you own this clay, aint it, pa?"

"Why, Tommy?"

"Because, if you did n't you would have to work like those dirty men. Will I have to work when I get to be a man?"

"No; I will leave you all my property when I die."

"When these men die, won't they all turn to clay?"

"Yes; we all return to clay when we die."

"When are you going to die, pa—pretty soon?"

"I do n't know, my son. Why do you ask?"

"I was just thinking what a nice lot of bricks you would make after you are dead."—From the German.

BARS AND THRESHOLDS.

Written Especially for the Banner of Light,

BY MRS. EMMA MINER.

CHAPTER VII—CONTINUED.

Mrs. Carroll, left alone with Miss Parker, discussed ways and means of an income. She was promised a share of Mrs. Carroll's patronage; "though, at the same time, I can't bear to think of it having come to this with you," she said.

"I shall not find a word of fault, if I can only manage to live," replied Miss Parker.

It was necessary that the tenant of the cottage should have a month's warning about vacating the premises, and Miss Parker went the next day to give it.

It was a bitterly cold, disagreeable day; but, in spite of the gloom upon roof, tree and shrub, pleasant and tender memories were awakened as she passed up the little lawn. It was a small cottage of eight rooms, with piazza and bay-windows. At present the Raymonds were living there. Miss Parker made known her errand.

"Of course, we must go the first of May if you say so, but we were intending to go West the first of June. It will be exceedingly inconvenient for us to move before then. Cannot you possibly make some arrangement by which it can be deferred?"

"It does not rest with me entirely. I will see what can be done, and send you word in a day or two."

Miss Parker returned home a little discomposed by the delay, for now that she knew she must go, she felt impatient to make the change.

There was no opportunity to confer with Mrs. Mason until the next morning. After the breakfast was over, she said:

"I went out to call on Mrs. Raymond yesterday, to give them proper notice. It is now the 20th of March, and I told them I should want the house the first of May. She informed me they were going West in June. She is very anxious to remain until that time. I told her I would try to arrange matters to suit her."

Mrs. Mason looked disappointed. Miss Parker observed it, and continued:

"Of course, I can go to some quiet place to board until then, if you prefer I should not stay so long here."

It was hard for her to utter this last speech, but she did it for Doris's sake, whose face wore a look of distress that touched her sadly. She could do anything, bear anything, for Doris's sake.

"It seems to me it would not be at all proper for you to do so," said Mrs. Mason, her judgment getting the better of her feeling. "It can be much more satisfactorily arranged if you remain here. It would occasion some remark, and I do not care to have the subject discussed by people outside the family."

Miss Parker was thankful that Mrs. Mason had so much regard for appearances. Doris's face brightened a little, while Miss Shallot could not conceal her vexation.

Miss Parker returned to her room to write her note to Mrs. Raymond, and then, taking her sewing, sat down to ponder over her message, and wonder what the "change" could be that was "coming to Sarah."

The disagreeable days of March gave place to April, and in turn to May.

When Doris awoke the first day of June she had a presentiment that something was going to happen, for Miss Shallot crept about with an air of unusual satisfaction.

She also remembered it was her birthday. To-day she was eighteen. It could not be that fact which lighted up Miss Shallot's face, however. She generally thought of Doris's birthday anniversaries as milestones on "the broad road that leads to death." Evidently something besides the birthday was occupying her mind.

"It is of no use for me to question her," thought Doris. "If it is something disagreeable she will speak of it as soon as possible."

Eager to catch the first expression of her aunt's face, she observed it was rather graver than usual. After breakfast Miss Shallot said:

"You are to have a half-holiday to-day, Doris."

Somehow the words did not bring pleasure to her. She felt an inexpressible something behind it all, and resigned herself to await its development.

The morning passed quickly in spite of her forebodings, and at two in the afternoon she was called down to the parlor.

As she passed through the hall she noticed two large trunks. They were strapped, and James was sitting on one, as if on guard.

Entering the parlor, she saw Mrs. Mason sitting erect as usual, and smoothing her black silk apron nervously. She seemed very much discomposed.

Not so Miss Shallot. Doris had never seen her look so happy. She seemed a mixture of emotions. The cruelty that could pull at sensitive heart-strings without a conscious inward response to pain, the harshness which could not for one moment conceive tenderness, the malice which delighted to strip the roses from the pathway and smile as bleeding feet pressed the thorns, the bigotry which wraps and darkens every small soul—were reflected in every feature.

Oh! souls, born in ignorance and darkened by false education! who may break the chains ye have forged, and to which ye cling?

Doris, turning a little, slowly, saw her aunt sitting with her bonnet on. Then she knew.

With a cry of agony, such as never had echoed in that house before, she knelt at her feet. She could not speak; she could only moan.

At that moment James saw a gentleman coming up the steps. He opened the door quietly, and Mr. Brooks entered unannounced. The parlor door was open, and he stood a silent observer of the scene. Mrs. Mason saw him, and motioned toward a chair, but he remained standing. Mrs. Mason was the first to speak.

"Doris, it is of no use for you to make such a scene. It is proper that your aunt should go, and it is your duty to be resigned."

Doris rose swiftly to her feet. Her livid paleness had disappeared. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes blazed. She turned toward Mrs. Mason.

"Grandma, you are wrong! You are cruel! You are wicked! God never will forgive you—never! If He could, I do n't want anything to do with Him!"

The words were hurled at Mrs. Mason with a fury of which no one would have supposed Doris capable. They filled Mrs. Mason with anger and amazement. She turned to Mr. Brooks, and with her voice shaking with excitement, exclaimed:

"Mr. Brooks, you perceive now what a sinful disposition Doris has!"

Mr. Brooks did not appear to notice Mrs. Mason's words. His face was pale, and tears were rolling down his cheeks.

"Mrs. Mason, can nothing be done to avert this?" He spoke entreatingly.

Mrs. Mason hesitated. "Yes, there is one way open." She turned to Doris.

"Doris, if you will promise me that you will never again in your life have anything to do with that wicked spirits' work, I will let it all pass. Your aunt shall stay, and I will not forbid your intercourse, so long as that subject is let alone."

Doris's heart seemed to stop beating. Her face turned as white as the lace at her throat. Then she spoke.

"What! To stop saying I believe it, when I do believe it? Never to hear from my own dear mother again as long as I live? I can't do it! I should be as bad as Judas! I shall never promise it!"

She stood white and still as a marble statue. Mrs. Mason turned to Mr. Brooks.

"Cannot you say something to influence her?"

He crossed the room to Doris's side immediately. He took her hands in his.

"Doris, you are right. I honor you for the position you have taken. May the angels whom you love and trust continue to sustain you."

Nothing could have astonished Mrs. Mason more than this. She was speechless.

Doris could not bear this intense mood much longer. She seemed about to faint. Mr. Brooks led her to an arm-chair and placed her in it. Bending over her, he said—so distinctly that every word was heard by all in the room—

"Doris, I love you. Say that you will marry me, and let me take you away from all this misery?"

Doris's pale face flushed again.

"Oh, I cannot! I never thought of such a thing! I can't do it, even to get away from grandma!" She sobbed convulsively.

"Dear child! Do n't let it distress you so! Remember I will be your friend and brother forever!"

No words could express Mrs. Mason's amazement. Mr. Brooks taking Doris's part right before her very eyes! And to propose marriage to her—a mere child! (Mrs. Mason forgot that she was only eighteen when she married.) And he a minister, and allowing her wicked actions to go unreproved! She felt she must end this scene some way. She waved her hand toward the open door, and Miss Parker walked out of it, and as Doris heard it close behind her, she fainted in Mr. Brooks's arms. He laid her on the sofa, and followed Miss Parker.

Mr. Brooks walked quickly to his home. If he met any of his parishioners he did not see them. He was oblivious to all street scenes.

He opened the door of his study to find Dr. Carroll awaiting him. With a few words he told him of the scene at Mrs. Mason's, not even omitting his proposal to Doris. Why should he refrain from mentioning that fact? Had n't Miss Shallot's virgin ears heard it themselves, and would n't the story be told at the next sewing-circle? And Doris preferred Mrs. Mason to him! The remembrance of her words cut like a lash.

"Brooks! Do n't look so! Do n't talk so! Doris did n't mean just that. Remember she is young. Very likely she has never thought of marriage at all. Do be reasonable."

Dr. Carroll was pale as Mr. Brooks himself. Mr. Brooks turned toward the doctor. A new thought entered his mind. He read the answer to his questioning glance in Dr. Carroll's eyes. They faced each other steadily for a few moments, and then the doctor laid his hand on Mr. Brooks's shoulder and said:

"Do not let this part us, Brooks. We have need of sympathy for each other." They clasped hands firmly, and the clasp conveyed an assurance of continued friendship, and the doctor went out.

CHAPTER VIII.

MISS SHALLOT'S VISITOR.

The bright June sun shone on. It sparkled through the window upon Mr. Brooks, as he sat trying to gather his thoughts into quietness; trying to forget his own sorrow and to devise ways to help Doris. It followed Dr. Carroll as he stepped into his carriage, musing upon the uncertainty of his future happiness, which he felt could not be complete without Doris; followed him to the very door of a dark basement, where it and his thought of himself were lost in efforts to soothe the suffering of a poor lad, tossing and moaning in fever. It flashed through the carriage windows upon Miss Parker, as she was whirled swiftly away to her old home in Roseville. It crept softly through a little space in the shutter of the window in Doris's room, where James had laid her, pale and fainting, upon her own bed.

Doris lay there two weeks. She seemed to have lost will-power to make an effort to help herself. There was only Morris to live for, and he so far away! Her weak and trembling fingers could scarcely wipe away the tears that slowly coursed down her pale cheeks.

Mrs. Mason and Miss Shallot were untiring in their care of her. Medicines were administered with unfailing punctuality. The broths and jellies were truly delicious, and, although Doris cared very little for them, she forced herself to eat, to please them as far as she might.

She was glad of the quiet of her own room, and rejoiced for the first time over Miss Shallot's creeping ways, which never permitted a footfall to be heard.

She was lying there quietly one day. Miss Shallot, sitting by the darkened window, was apparently lost in meditation. Suddenly there came upon the table by the bedside a familiar tap -tap—tap. Doris's heart gave a great, glad bound. She did not speak aloud, but she asked mentally, "Is it you, dear mother?" The answer came directly; there were three loud raps. Then the little table shook violently, and the Bible, lying upon it, fell on the floor.

Miss Shallot sprang to her feet only to find Doris lying quietly on her bed, with her hands lying feebly by her side.

"Did you do that, Doris?" she asked.

"No."

She could not doubt Doris's word. She picked up the Bible, replaced it, drew the curtain a little one side to admit more light, and sat down facing the table, watching it as if it were something uncanny.

Again those mysterious sounds, and again the table rocked backward and forward with a sound which struck terror to Miss Shallot's soul. The Bible fell to the floor again. This time she placed it in her lap. She could not bear to see that sacred book thrown around in that irreverent manner.

The table moved toward her like a thing of life. She hastily retreated, as fast as she could push her chair, until she found herself in the furthest corner of the room, too thoroughly frightened to leave her seat.

And then this heretofore inanimate piece of furniture seemed to have suddenly developed a great fondness for her. It pressed against her arms; it sat in her lap; it thumped her unmercifully, while she screamed like a frightened child. At this moment Mrs. Mason entered.

Suddenly retreating from the side of the horrified Miss Shallot, the table advanced toward Mrs. Mason, and pausing before her, sounded such distinct raps that she could have supposed they were produced by mortal agency. She stood still, watching and listening. Suddenly there was a cessation of sounds—a perfect silence in the room.

Mrs. Mason's eyes were attracted to a strange-looking place on the carpet. It was a thin, luminous vapor. It increased in size. It rose like a pillar of cloud, until it stood as high as Mrs. Mason.

Then from its midst stepped a lovely form, clad in flowing white garments. Fair, golden hair waved upon graceful shoulders. Blue eyes, in whose depths shone love and pity, beamed upon them all, and rested upon Mrs. Mason with an entreating look.

Slowly it disappeared before their watchful eyes, until only the remembrance of the strange, beautiful vision was left them.

But Mrs. Mason knew it was her dead daughter Mary.

"We will not discuss this, Doris," said Mrs. Mason, and she left the room.

Mrs. Mason's and Miss Shallot's nerves were somewhat shaken by the occurrence, but, strangely enough, Doris began to gain from that hour.

Sitting in an easy-chair one morning for the first time after her illness, Doris saw that some unusual preparations were being made for something. Miss Shallot began to remove some of the books, and also some of the particular belongings to Doris's toilet. Finally her bed disappeared, with James's help. Her curiosity was so much aroused that she ventured to ask Miss Shallot what they were doing.

"You are to use one of the large front rooms henceforth—the west room."

Doris thought of the west room with a particular dislike. It was a very large apartment. The furniture was dark and gloomy. She could scarcely bear to enter the room. How could she endure to make it her own? She wondered greatly at the cause of removal.

Later in the day Mrs. Mason thought it best for her to retire. She crossed the wide hall feebly, and entered the spacious room. There stood her own bed, and another also. She turned her questioning eyes upon Miss Shallot. Mrs. Mason entered at that moment and said:

"I prefer you should use this room with Miss Shallot. It is my duty to put a check on any attempt on your part to have anything to do with such a delusion; and as it seems necessary to protect you by night, as well as by day, I have decided that Miss Shallot must sleep here. I trust I shall have no more trouble on that score;" and she smoothed her apron complacently.

It was useless for Doris to protest. She sank wearily into a chair. She covered her face with her hands.

"Oh! mother! mother! Send me a little comfort in some way!" Suddenly she felt an assurance of hope. It came like a new inspiration of life. She felt that she was not alone; her blessed mother stood near her, though unseen and unheard.

At that moment Katy appeared with a lovely bouquet. Doris took her flowers gratefully. She did not know who sent them, but she was glad of their pure, satisfying companionship. She could not bear to part with them, even to have them placed in water, but fell asleep clasping them closely.

SPIRITUALIZING SCIENCES.

A GENEROUS TRIBUTE TO RICHARD A. PROCTOR, BY THE AUTHOR OF "FROM HERE TO HEAVEN BY TELEGRAPH."

While Proctor's praise appears in public prints, allow me to add my mite to his memory. In his work of popularizing astronomy he has led men's thoughts away from self, and so away from selfish considerations into the higher channels of contemplating "Our Place Among Infinities." This elevation of the intellectual nature cannot fail to bear its legitimate spiritual fruit. The study of the growth and development of worlds impresses the student with an adequate sense of the comparative littleness of our ephemeral stage of existence on this atom called Earth. Sufficient attention to such thoughts begets that perfect humility and simplicity of character possessed by every great man — without which no man can be truly great, and with which no man can fail to rise in his spiritual development.

But the infinity of matter and force in the physical world leads us to consider the corresponding infinity of the intelligence which can comprehend that these things are infinite; namely, its immortality, its capacity for eternal progress, its susceptibility of everlasting improvement. The contemplation of "Other Worlds than Ours" leads us to recognize the vastness of the brotherhood to which we belong, and all the narrow and contracted views of effete Orthodoxy are dispelled at once, because of their manifest unfitness for general application to even the advancing intelligence of this one little infant world, to say nothing of the giants of the moral universe.

All principles are eternal. Principles of ethics are as much so as principles of mathematics or physics. If the principle of gravitation and the laws of optics, as understood by their limited manifestations on this planet, were negatived instead of verified by their actions and reactions on other worlds and systems of worlds, we should very naturally reject them as erroneous hypotheses, and seek on until we discovered that which was of universal application, before admitting it to be a law or a principle. If the spectroscope did not give the same report of the character of solids and gases in the laboratory as of the otherwise known character of the solids and gases on certain planets, we could not rely upon it to test the previously unknown character of nebulous and cometary matter. Now, without following this thought through all its legitimate details, let me barely suggest that if vicarious atonement were a true (and hence eternal) principle of ethics, since the evolution of the universe is an indisputable fact, the infinity of worlds would require the sacrifice of an infinite number of redeemers, each one of them to be the only begotten Son of God. It would be manifestly impracticable for one Christ to spend even thirty-three years in the flesh on each habitable orb before going to the next to begin the work of redemption there, for millions of worlds would run their cosmic course without receiving any such gracious evidence of divine care. There is nothing impracticable in the thought that in the due course of development of each world a leader may be raised up who shall inaugurate a truer, purer and more unselfish system of ethics than had been introduced by any previous leader; but it is impracticable to suppose that said leader shall, by virtue of his mission, be a (the) Son of God in any other sense than that we are all the children of one Father, and our prophets are our brethren.

And oh! what a brotherhood is ours! Spiritually, we are brethren with the most progressed intelligences of time or space; physically, we are brethren with the humblest animated beings—mere worms of the dust. The dumb brutes share our reasoning powers; even the plants claim kinship to our vegetative or vascular system, and the stones of the field are our framework.

Proctor led us up to the contemplation of world-evolution at the same time that he linked the physical with the mental in his biological views. Let us pursue a parallel course in the cosmogony of the moral universe, and we readily find that the same considerations which give rise to the theological idea of a trinity of persons will give rise to an infinity of persons in the Godhead; for the links in the biological chain are the same in kind (though they may differ in degree) in other worlds as well as ours. Moral considerations make life in the flesh a progressive as well as a disciplinary stage. Life, to be either progressive or disciplinary in other worlds, must fall under essentially the same moral conditions as in our own, since nothing can progress that is perfect, nor can perfect beings be subject to disciplinary measures. A scheme, then, such as the vicarious atonement, is found to lead to the absurdity above noted. To me, it is no more absurd to say that three times one is one, than to say a thousand times one is one. The latter is no more unreasonable; it only takes a little larger gulp to swallow it.

But all this only serves to emphasize the difference between a blind faith and an intelligent faith. To quote from Proctor: "We may be perfectly satisfied that the works of God will teach us aright, if rightly studied. Repeatedly it has been shown that ideas respecting creation which had come to be regarded as sacred because they were ancient, were altogether erroneous, and it may well be so in this matter of the creation of life." And again: "In any case we need not feel hampered by religious scruples in considering the possibility of the spontaneous generation of life upon the earth. It would be straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel, if we found a difficulty of that sort here, after admitting, as we are compelled by clearest evidence to admit, the evolution of the earth itself and of the system to which the earth belongs, by purely natural processes." And again, speaking of the alarm with which theologians view the successive overthrow of their pet doctrines: "We need not suppose for a moment that science is irreconcilable, I will not say with religion, but with ideas—even such as we might conceive—of the wisdom and benevolence of God; we need not doubt that if we could understand the whole scheme of the Almighty, it would appear most beautiful and all its parts perfectly adapted to His purposes; the believer may still say to the unbeliever:

'All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction, which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil universal good.'

But we must remember that the believer also cannot expect to be able to interpret all that science reveals."

This has the true ring. Actions speak louder than words, and so God's works are more to be trusted as indicative of His will than any alleged revelation, however highly inspired, so long as there be any discrepancy between the works and the word. The word, whatever its origin, we know has come to us through the weak instrumentality of erring humanity. The works (nature) are not subject to alteration and degeneration through such interference. We know that we have the lessons of the stars first-handed. The firmament speaks to us in tongues of fire, a universal language, free from errors of translation, and too lucid and perspicuous to permit of misinterpretation. Granting, then, all that may be claimed for alleged inspired writings (and that is very much more than need be granted), we have the balance overwhelmingly in favor of a rational religion based on the Fatherhood of God (=Good), and the Brotherhood of Man. With that superstition-killing watchword, "Reason," we go forward conquering and to conquer, and by trusting implicitly in our God-implanted faculties of mind and heart, we shall at the same time exercise a much higher "Faith" than do those "on whose lips it doth continually hang."

Now to blend the retrospective with the prospective, let us remark how sadly the world needs more Proctors to bring within the comprehension of the masses the grand scheme of the evolution of worlds, and the sublime unity of purpose and plan, and the all-pervading oneness of the Uncreate Intelligence. Astronomy and geology should be so wedded in the scientist's mind that the astronomer would study the geology of the stars and the geologist would study the astronomy of the earth. By such astro-geological methods the leading truths of both sciences unite into a truly philosophical system of cosmogenesis; and with our present instruments, to say nothing of what may be expected in the near future, we can read from the cerulean page the history of the formation, growth and decay of worlds, with as much ease and certainty as we now do the flora and fauna of the present age. We go into the forest, and by intelligent observation we may in one hour read the history of the oak from its embryonic existence in the acorn up to its majestic sway as the "father of the forest," and on to the stage when, prostrate upon the ground, its decaying form furnishes food for vegetable regeneration. So in the forest of the firmament, the geologist sees the history of our world illustrated by the appearance of thousands of others in all stages of existence, from the slightest collocation of the interplanetary meteoric world-stuff, just beginning to be heated by aggregation and consequent condensation, and to show itself as a faint nebulous light, diffused through a space equal to or greater than that occupied by our solar system, up through its successive stages of annulation, spheration, pulsation, tidal fluctuation and deformation, incrustation, stratification, magnetic polarization, retarded rotation, orbital inclination, and other perturbation caused by planetation and stellation, and so on and on through stages too numerous to mention, until radiation has reached congealation and eventually utter refrigeration and synchronous axial rotation, after which, through spiral orbital degeneration, many of them suffer precipitation, and thus renew the central fires of solar energy which stay for a time the progress of decay and desolation. Finally comes the crisis, when dead systems crash upon systems, and out of the collisions of skeletons of fossil worlds come the glorious harmonies of revivification.

Thus world-making is in constant progress throughout the infinitude of the star depths, and the final dissolution of a universe is of daily occurrence for the upbuilding of greater universes in the universœlum.

It is a daring conception, but none the less true, as verified by observation and ratiocination; and as a man does not need to live as long as an oak in order to read its entire history of growth and decay, neither does he need to live as long as the world lasts in order to learn how a world is created, through what stages of existence it passes, and how it is finally dissolved and resurrected.

Now, in view of the infinitely higher glories of the spiritual resurrection, who can afford to demean his soul by an unjust act, to pollute his spirit by a selfish thought, or in any way to stultify his immortal powers? Let us rather, by our intense aspirations after all that is noble and elevating, draw down to ourselves such influences as will purify us, so far as may be in the flesh, so that when it becomes our privilege (though like Proctor's it come suddenly,) to cast off these rags and be delivered from the earthly chrysalis that now enshackles us, we may leap with one exultant bound into the higher spheres of spiritual development, and take up our celestial labors in company with those who are both wise and good. In Memoriam.

MRS. FANNIE C. HASELTINE.

The funeral of this estimable lady, whose death occurred in this city on Sunday, Sept. 30th, took place last Wednesday, from the residence of Dr. Kendal Flint, and was largely attended by relatives from Boston and other localities.

Mrs. Haseltine had been from early life a member of the Unitarian Church in this city, and was ever known for her broad views and benevolence of spirit. In the later years of her life she became acquainted with the philosophy of Spiritualism, and by her knowledge of its teachings, united with her personal observation of its phenomenal facts, she became thoroughly convinced of the truth of its utterances, which were to her an added consolation and assurance in the closing days of life.

For several months she had been in constant expectancy of departure; yet she was cheerful in spirit, and contemplated the change only as a brief journey, which would transfer her to new scenes and to the fellowship of friends that had gone before.

The floral tributes by friends were many, and the service by Rev. Thos. E. St. John, of the First Parish Church, were in harmony with her broadest views and deepest assurances. A quartette sang a favorite hymn with the deceased, entitled: "Lead, Kindly Light," and the exercises were in pleasing accord with her deep and assuring conviction that

"Death is another life. We bow our heads
At going out, we think, and enter straight
Another golden chamber of the King's,
Larger than this we leave, and lovelier."

JOSEPH L. NEWMAN.

As a co-worker with the late Mr. Newman in the profession of magnetic healing, allow me, Mr. Editor, to present a few words expressive of my high esteem for him as a man, a healer and a Spiritualist.

I have been personally acquainted with him since he was engaged with or by Dr. H. F. Gardner, in assisting the latter in carrying on Spiritualistic meetings at the Melodeon Hall, and later at the Lyceum Hall. He was ever calm and collected in his bearing, but positive in his nature when doing what he considered right and just in his dealings with humanity, also with himself. While he never acted in an aggressive manner, yet in defense of his own views he was firm and decided in speech and action, and could not be induced to play the part of a dissembler for popularity, fame, or personal pecuniary benefit. He was first and last a well-grounded Spiritualist, and felt proud to be known as such, and while not seeking opportunities for discussion, he was ever ready, at all times and in all places, to defend the cause, if attacked.

He was largely endowed with the gift of healing by and through magnetic forces, and accomplished a great amount of good in this direction; he had a large circle of friends and patrons, who will sadly miss his aid and genial presence, in this regard. He has always been true to his spiritual gift of healing, and never for any motive termed it differently in name to please those not willing to receive the potent element of healing under the name of Spiritualism. He could not, with his nature, call his gift by any other name or title except that which he knew to be the truthful one.

He was beyond double-dealing in this direction; Joseph L. Newman, magnetic healer or physician, was the simple declaration on his sign, and the announcement on his cards.

If he at any time erred in his views, and as to the philosophy of life, the fault, if it were one, was with his head and not his heart. He never claimed perfection in judgment, or in any other manner, but lived up to his conscientious convictions of what he considered just and right in his dealings with those with whom he associated.

He was beloved and respected by all he came in contact with, through his gentlemanly demeanor on all occasions. The world is the better for his having lived in it. A. S. HAYWARD.

Boston, Oct. 9th.

FANNIE C. WILDER.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 3d, after nearly a year of most distressing illness, the spirit of Fannie C., wife of Charles T. Wilder, was gently emancipated from the worn-out body.

Mrs. Wilder was a native of Leominster, and the greater part of her life had been spent among the scenes of earlier days. Father, mother and sisters had preceded her to the unseen, but her life was blessed by the companionship of a devoted husband, a married daughter, a younger son and daughter, all of whom had with tender, anxious solicitude, hoping against hope, watched the slow encroachments of the agonizing disease to which the physical at last succumbed.

In hours of darkness and bitter sorrow, she first learned to know the sweet consolation afforded through the "ministry of angels," and soon after became the recipient of their inspirations. Her natural timidity sometimes led her to distrust her ability to be the instrument of the higher powers, but never the power itself. She was quietly unselfish, and through her desire to comfort others, willingly used her mediumship to bring "hope to the sorrowing." She has been no unimportant factor in the establishment and continuity of meetings in her native town.

All true mediums received her sympathy, and were, with all friends of the cause, made welcome by herself and husband in their home. Her many virtues and her loyalty to Spiritualism endeared her to a large circle of friends.

The far-reaching kindliness of her spirit often prompted her to do beyond her powers of physical endurance; when the "silent messenger" entered the homes of friends, in an unobtrusive manner a tender little poem was often placed in the hands of speaker or afflicted friend, as a heart-offering, expressive of her sympathy. The "correspondence" column of the BANNER OF LIGHT often contained her testimony to the worth of some medium or speaker, or of the progress of the cause in Leominster, while many another thought has been given to other spiritualistic papers.

The cause of temperance and that of woman suffrage were dear to her, and received her aid and coöperation.

She was a devoted wife, tender mother and faithful friend.

Wisely and well as she had tried to build on earth the foundations of her eternal home, with constitutional nervous susceptibility she shrank from the approach of "the Emancipator," until the inroads of suffering uplifted the pall; and when her physician revealed to her the inevitable she calmly submitted thereto; set her earthly house in order, and without fear went forth as a "Pilgrim in the unseen."

The staff upon which she leaned supports her loved ones, and earthly loss is lost sight of in the thought of her release.

The funeral service took place at her home Friday P. M., at 2 o'clock, upon which occasion the writer, assisted by the Rev. Edward M. Payne (Unitarian), officiated.

Three selections were feelingly rendered from the "Spiritual Harp." Many and beautiful floral offerings, arranged upon and near the casket, lent their cheer to the many relatives and friends, who must have felt, upon this most impressive occasion, that "It is better to go to the house of mourning than the house of feasting." The remarks with which Mr. Payne supplemented those of the writer were exceptionally appropriate.

Out into the genial sunshine of the waning October afternoon tender hands bore the frail, deserted tenement of clay, flower-crowned, to rest, while sympathetic thoughts followed husband, children, motherly friend and faithful attendant to the home seemingly desolated, but where they believe she will bless them with her tireless ministry. Decease of the Inventor of the New Universal Language.

PARIS, Oct. 9, 1888.—Fr. John Martin Schleyer, the inventor of Volapuk, is dead.

John Martin Schleyer was a scholar and a linguist of some celebrity. He was born in the grand duchy of Baden in 1831, and was not as old a man as he looked. His invention of Volapuk was a great intellectual feat. This universal language has gained a firm footing in Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Hungary, Italy, France, Sweden, and especially in Austria and in Syria and Arabia, having been introduced also into Russia (south), America, Asia and the north of Africa. It has a vocabulary of seventeen thousand words. These are printed with the grammar. When, a short time ago, the Volapukists held their grand international congress at Munich, and most of the countries of Europe sent representatives, the good repute of America for enlightened curiosity was saved by one gentleman from Cincinnati. Henry Schleyer, the inventor of the language, took the chair in the name of the associations of France. He explained that Volapuk was not meant to suppress other tongues, but only to supply a new one for the common purposes of mankind, and in particular for the promotion of universal brotherhood. The inventor hoped to induce the German government to admit Volapuk to the list of languages transmissible by telegraph within the empire. In Denmark it has been officially recommended to telegraph clerks as a subject of study. The knowledge of it spreads rapidly in France. According to the prospectus of the Volapuk-Almanach for 1888, there are in Germany and Austria alone some twenty thousand amateurs or masters of this eight-year-old "word language."

Volapuk means world's speech, vol meaning world, and puk, speech. The language consists of the best of over twenty tongues, omitting their irregularities. The most is taken from the English language, the other being represented according to their importance. The pronunciation is arranged to be easy for all nations; the letter "R." therefore, is seldom used. If that letter is contained in English words, when brought into Volapuk, it is changed to L. All the letters are English. The consonants are pronounced as in English, and the vowels like Spanish. Every word is spelled phonetically, there being no silent letters. The rules of the Volapuk grammar have no exception. It even goes so far that plurals from the pronoun I (ob) are formed regularly by adding an s (obs), the same way as with every noun. Adjectives and verbs can be formed from every noun by adding the syllables "ik" or "on." Certain syllables are used, to save memorizing a large vocabulary; an instance is the syllable "le," which, when prefixed to any word, expresses the same general idea in a larger degree. House in Volapuk is "dom." The prefix gives the word "ledom," meaning palace. The syllable "lu" prefixed to a word denotes the same idea in a smaller sense. Using the same example, "ludom" is cottage. These two syllables alone save the memorizing of one hundred words. Out of a classification of nine hundred words it is necessary to memorize but three hundred and two syllables. Volapuk is so arranged that in translation all peculiarities of style are retained. The whole grammar is contained in four small pages.

Verification of a Spirit Message.

Some six years ago a spirit came to me through a spirit medium, Mrs. E. A. Lewis, of San Francisco, who claimed to be Amos Adams, my great-grandfather—he who, in the body, was a minister of the gospel in Roxbury, Mass. He gave a very interesting statement of his entrance into spirit-life, and of some of his experiences while there. At my request he repeated it in public, through the same medium, to an audience of some two hundred. A shorthand reporter was engaged, and his lecture was fully reported and published in some of the papers at the time.

Having left home when a boy of less than twelve years of age, I knew nothing of my ancestors, and did not then, nor at the time the communication was given, know the name of my great-grandfather; therefore it could not have been a case of mind-reading.

While sojourning in Boston I concluded to ascertain, if possible, the truth of what the spirit had told me. With that end in view I first went to the Baptist Book Publishing Company. But after a diligent search of the register containing the names of ministers in Boston and Roxbury, the name of Amos Adams could not be found. I then went to the library connected with the Congregational Society, and after a half hour's search the Assistant Librarian handed me a book containing the desired information. In it was found the name of Amos Adams, who was ordained minister of the First Congregational Church in Roxbury, September 12th, 1758. The record states that he was an ardent patriot, outspoken and aggressive in denouncing the tyranny and oppression heaped on the colonists by the home government. This freedom of speech often brought him into a wordy conflict with the tories of the day.

After obtaining this information I went to Roxbury, and there found on a tablet hanging to an iron gate leading to the cemetery, the name of Amos Adams. On entering the cemetery I found a tomb, on the side of which were inscribed the words "Parish Tomb." On the slab covering it were the names of John Eliot, Thomas Walter, Nehemiah Walter, Amos Adams, Oliver Peabody and Eliphalet Porter.

I also found the old parsonage that my great-grandfather lived in, still in a good state of preservation. It was occupied by an old gentleman, member of the same church, aged about ninety, who, when told of my errand, exclaimed, "Are you really a descendant of Grandfather Adams?" After relating to me many reminiscences he presented me with a book, of which he was the author, having many references to the Rev. Amos Adams. To me this is one of the most conclusive confirmations of the truth of spirit communication that can be adduced. It is more than gratifying to have this truth removed from the realm of doubt and firmly placed in the home of truth.

SPIRITUALIST LECTURERS.

[THE BANNER publishes from time to time a List of Spiritualist Lecturers, with their post-office addresses attached, without charge; and in consideration of so doing it seems to us interested parties should be more particular than many of them now are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Immediate attention to this request is earnestly desired.]

Texas.

GALVESTON.—Sue J. Finck writes: "It is a long time since any report has been made of the progress of our cause in this little city. I have received many letters inquiring if we have all forsaken Spiritualism, and here state, no, never. At no previous time has it been so prosperous as now. Home circles are numerous, interesting and instructive; we are free from the disagreeable contentions of which we read as existing elsewhere. These reports and that of the Seybert Commission have not caused a ripple of doubt in the minds of those who know spirit-communion to be true. None here have any disposition to discuss a question that with them is settled. They accept Spiritualism as they do the warmth and light of sunshine, and their hearts rejoice to feel the presence of their exearnated loved ones. The good BANNER is a welcome visitor in many homes; all are confident it will remain steadfast to our grand philosophy; it has been tried many years and never wavered.

Near a year ago we spent two months in San Francisco. We came in contact with what to us was not altogether pleasant, but passed that by and found much we did enjoy, the magnificent scenery among the rest. We formed the acquaintance of many Spiritualists—persons of whom any cause might be proud. We were pleased with the spiritually-minded editor of the Golden Gate, and felt should he err it would not be from the heart. Sister Schlesinger we found full of zeal for the cause. The Doctor is a fine medium; we much enjoyed the benefit of his gifts, and passed some time with him and Mrs. S. in social converse. The Carrier Dove should be a success. We formed a hasty but most happy acquaintance with Dr. Taylor, author of 'Theology Upside Down'; were pleased with Sister Wilson, President of the Union Spiritual Meetings, and much drawn to the hall in which they are held and well attended. We also met Sister Miller of Turk street, whose kindness will not be forgotten. All these are remembered, with many private Spiritualists, with much delight.

After leaving the Pacific coast we returned to our old field of labor, where we found warm hearts to welcome us, and resumed again our medial work. The long confinement by consumption of a dear son, who not long since passed 'up higher,' claimed the attention that was usually given to penning articles for the press. Yes, sometimes we must all go down in the 'vale of tears'—always when the form of one so dear is taken from our mortal sight—yet we know they are but a step beyond. This fact has been the staff upon which I could confidently lean through the painful trial. This was the medium-child, of whom mention is made in 'Lifting the Veil.' He was willing to go; we spoke calmly of the change we both knew must come, and he passed 'over there' most triumphantly, verifying the fact that Spiritualism will do to 'die' by.

The clergy here begin to manifest some concern, and considerable uneasiness and opposition. Their composure is a little disturbed to see their followers preferring the lessons of the séance-room to the chaff which is doled from the pulpits. It is, however, pitiable to see with what fear many enter the séance-room. Not many days since an earnest, good woman, came in. She said: 'Oh! Mrs. Finck, I fear I am doing wrong. I am starving for some tidings of my darlings, but cannot give up my Bible.' I replied: 'Your Bible is full of Spiritualism,' to which she responded: 'I wish I knew what to do. My minister objects to spirit-communion; he says what is not fraud is from the devil.' I asked: 'Do you believe your minister in preference to your Bible?' 'No.' 'Then,' said I, 'test the truth of apostleship by it.' 'How?' she asked. Said I: 'When you are sick, or want tidings of those you call dead, go and ask him to heal you, and give you the information for which your soul hungers, and if he is unable to do so, he is a fraud, according to your Bible test.' We got a Bible, found the passages referred to, then held a séance, and she went away very happy, remarking that it had been the most blessed hour of her life.

It is evident to every observing mind that the ministry will soon be compelled to fall in line, march on with the grand army of progression, or seek other occupations. My opinion is, they will at no distant day be creeping up behind, saying: 'We always knew spirit-communion was a fact.'"

ST. MARY'S.—John H. Allen writes: "Facts being the basis on which all scientific deductions rest, whatever can be logically inferred from them is accepted as truth. In the physical sciences we constantly search for and accumulate facts, in order to satisfy our minds in regard to what we assent to or dissent from. The wonderful psychical phenomena now being presented and witnessed throughout the world, arrest all intelligent minds that have not been warped by bigotry, superstition or prejudice. At Lookout Mountain, Tennessee, during the late spiritual camp-meeting, I had the most convincing evidence, in sittings with different media, of the existence of humanity in another condition after physical death. I will briefly state some of the evidence I received.

I had two séances with Mrs. Cissna of Cincinnati, O., an independent slate-writing medium, both of which were to me of the most intense interest. At the first sitting, Mrs. Cissna placed a shawl over the backs of two chairs, then gave me a clean double slate and a small piece of pencil and requested me to place the pencil between the lids and to close the same. She then placed the slate with her right hand beneath the shawl, holding it by one end, and requested me to hold the other end, which I did. Immediately the writing commenced with sharp, distinct sounds, and jarring of the slate, and it was soon indicated by taps that the writing was completed. On opening the lids of the slate, both interior surfaces were written over in a bold, legible hand, which writing I copied. The slate was passed again beneath the shawl with the same result. It was passed a third time, and the communications ended with the remark, 'The power is exhausted. I will come again,' and signed 'Leona,' the name of a small stream in the western part of Texas on which the party communicating lived, which name I was not thinking of, and which had never been mentioned by me to any one on the mountain. The communication was clear and precise, as much so as if the party was physically present and conversing with me regarding facts familiar to both of us. During the writing I conversed with Mrs. Cissna, and my remarks were assented to or dissented from by loud distinct taps. The remark, 'this is telegraphing,' was followed by three loud taps. At the second séance the communications were equally satisfactory, repeating some of the statements made at the first séance; they displayed the characteristics of the party. The proof that a third intelligence was present at these séances was absolute, and nothing but the visibility of the third party was wanting to show the presence of three persons. I also had very satisfactory sittings with Mrs. Claney of Chattanooga, Tenn. Both of these ladies are held in high estimation by those acquainted with them."

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—Frank W. Jones writes: "The People's Spiritual Meeting of this city has been very prosperous the last three months ending with Sept. 30th. During the last half of that time the Conductor was away recuperating, physically and spiritually, in the health-giving breezes of Onset Bay. The meetings have gone on successfully, however, under the management of Mrs. M. C. Morrell and Mr. C. A. Tibbetts, who have conducted them to the entire satisfaction of the patrons. The hall has been well filled at each session; a large array of talent has volunteered, and the people have been benefited mentally and spiritually.

Sunday, Sept. 30th, Mr. Joseph Noble, of Paterson, N. J., made the opening remarks, upon 'What Good has Spiritualism Done?' Dr. W. H. Vonswortwout, of Jersey City, followed with interesting remarks upon 'Truthology.' Mr. A. A. Wheelock, of Boston, was then introduced, and made a telling speech on 'The Intellectual Forces of Man—their Use, Misuse and Abuse.' Mr. W. claims that the trinity in man is Soul, Spirit and Mind; that the mental forces are the directing powers. In the evening Mr. Stone led the speaking, and instructed us how we are living under 'The Tyranny of the Dead,' inasmuch as we are suffering from the effects of creeds, customs, etc., instituted under the ignorance and superstitions of former generations. Mr. Davis, Mrs. J. B. Hugo (entranced) and Mr. Slayton, of Chicago, filled out the time interestingly.

The exercises of the afternoon session, Oct. 7th, were largely mediumistic, and, according to the announcement, the Indian spirits were granted the first place on the programme, which they filled, to a limited degree, by speaking, but using their forces principally for healing and developing—the power for which was very marked. Mr. J. Bentley, Frank Lambert and Dr. Lawrence took part in the conference exercises, and several instances of very wonderful cases of healing through her own agency were related by Mrs. Mary C. Morrell of 230 West 36th street, who filled up the time very profitably for all.

In the evening Mr. A. E. Laurene of Brooklyn spoke to a large and thoughtful audience upon 'Mesmerism the Forerunner of Spiritualism.' The lecture was a grand success and gave entire satisfaction. A rising vote of thanks was called for, and the whole audience rose in response, and Mr. Laurene was invited to give his lecture on 'Scientific Mediumship' on the Sunday evening following.

We have fairly entered upon the fall and winter campaign of the sixth year of our existence as an independent spiritual meeting, without any organization, and the prospects now are favorable for a successful season. That the millions of Spiritualists throughout the United States may wake from their lethargy (those who are sleeping) and come up to their high privilege by living and teaching rational and practical Spiritualism, is the desire of a large number of Spiritists hereabout beside the writer."

Ohio.

GENEVA.—Mrs. J. Simons writes: "I have thought a few wayside jottings might not be amiss in the dear BANNER OF LIGHT for its many readers, while on my way east in this delightful little city, to spend the Sabbath and visit my highly esteemed friend and sister, Carrie C. Van Duzee. I found her at her quiet country home, one mile from the railroad dépôt, surrounded with home comforts, and was given a hearty welcome. The time of my stay was well occupied, though altogether too short. I found Sister V. very busy in making arrangements to fill a month's engagement in Watertown, N. Y. I enjoyed a circle in the evening, at which many of my dear departed friends gave unmistakable evidence of their presence, some giving their full names and addressing me as in days of yore when in earth-life. I esteem Sister Van Duzee a heavenly inspired instrument; her guides are of a high order; she is one of the best missionary workers I know of, and should be kept in the glorious work of proclaiming the gospel of glad tidings of an immortal life."

WARNER'S Log Cabin Remedies—old-fashioned, simple compounds, used in the days of our hardy forefathers, are "old timers," but "old reliables." They comprise a "Sarsaparilla," "Hops and Buchu Remedy," "Cough and Consumption Remedy," "Hair Tonic," "Extract," for External and Internal Use, "Plasters," "Rose Cream," for Catarrh, and "Liver Pills." They are put up by H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Remedies, and promise to equal the standard value of those great preparations. All druggists keep them.

October Magazines.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—"Notable People of the Day" in its thirteenth section gives brief accounts, with portraits, of Queen Nathalie of Servia, Jean Frederic Portaels, William Taylor and James Reuben, the oldest Seneca Indian. Of the other contents which are many and of much interest, is "A Case of Clairvoyance" related by Kathie Moore, and passages from an article by Dr. Lithgow, entitled "From Generation to Generation," treating upon hereditary diseases, in which he claims that an inheritance of disease does not imply a transmission of a certain specified disease itself, but a condition—receptive to it from other sources. What the subtle nature of this predisposition is, is not known, but it is known to vary in different persons. A tabular list is given of the general morbid conditions considered to be hereditary, and the whole subject as presented is worthy of consideration. New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—Prof. Herrick Johnson, D. D., of Chicago, is the author of the opening article, the third of the series upon whether apologetics in the pulpit are more hurtful than useful at the present time, his conclusion being that their legitimacy in "God's house, on God's day, by God's herald," is beyond question, but good judgment should be exercised in their nature and employment. He argues that "if Christianity is not defensible, let us find a faith that is"; that "a calm death-bed is no proof of" its truth; that "the wide growth and multitudinous adherents of the gospel are not conclusive of its divine origin." He thinks that ministers err in apologetically considering in their pulpits attacks of which their congregations have no knowledge. That, he says, "is helping the devil start a conflagration, that we may throw holy water on the flames." He evidently desires to keep the members of Christian flocks ignorant of what some have found to be a ditch into which they have fallen, and seek to inform them of higher grounds from whence a clearer and better view of this life and the next may be had. The review gives some good thoughts, but our impression upon reading it is that the writer realizes he is tethered to an evangelical stake, and hence cannot go as far as he otherwise would. Two other articles in this issue will be perused with interest and give rise to discussion: "The Public School System and the Ministry," and "Was Adam Created by Process of Evolution?" New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

THE VACCINATION INQUIRER says that it is often reported by physicians that persons attacked by smallpox were not vaccinated when the fact is that they have been, and cites a recent instance wherein a Dr. Tomkins, the medical officer of health for Leicester, stated of a patient in a printed report: "This man was unvaccinated, and suffered most severely, barely escaping with his life." This called out a certified letter from the man, in which he said: "The medical officer (Dr. Tomkins) classified me on my card as unvaccinated, although I had told him in reply to his inquiry that I was vaccinated when I went into the militia." The Inquirer adds, "This exposure does not surprise us. Wherever a list of unvaccinated persons has been subjected to adequate scrutiny similar frauds for the glory of vaccination have come to light." London: E. W. Allen.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER treats editorially the subject of "Subways and Commissioners," notices the demise of Prof. Proctor as a public loss, and, in alluding to the objectors in aristocratic sections of Boston to an overhead wire and electric railway, quotes one of their number as delivering his mind of, not an Irish but a Back Bay bull, to wit: "The centre wire must be insulated its entire length, a new thing on our streets, so that if touched by a man it will pretty near kill him." New York: 11 Wall street.

FREETHINKERS' MAGAZINE.—Lyman C. Howe gives his tenth article on Spiritualism, replying to a writer in the August number. The full text of Ingersoll's remarks on "Marriage and Divorce" are given, an article on "Prohibition," by A. Schell, etc. Buffalo: H. L. Green.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY adorns its October number with a cluster of chrysanthemums in their natural colors, and treats instructively upon "Winter Plants for Greenhouse and Window," and other matters of interest to floriculturists at this season. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE PATH.—Its contents include "Tales of the Ancient Rajputs," by Charles Johnston; "Conversations on Occultism"; "A Plea for the Children," by Aug. Waldersee, and "A German Mystic's Teachings." New York: W. Q. Judge.

GROWING YOUTH gives new portions of its serial stories and itemizes passing events in "Noggs' Nookery." Mt. Vernon, N. Y.: F. B. Hawkins.

LOG CABINS do not appeal strongly to modern notions of social life; they have had their day. But Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and "Tippecanoe" are as effective to-day as when the rugged health of the hardy pioneers was maintained by them.

Vermont State Spiritualist Association.

The Twenty-First Annual Convention of this body will be held at the Waterbury Hotel, Waterbury, Vt., Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 19th, 20th and 21st, 1888.

Speakers Engaged and Expected—Joseph D. Stiles, of Weymouth, Mass.; Hon. A. E. Stanley, of Leicester, Vt.; Mrs. Abbie W. Crossett, of Waterbury, Vt.; Mrs. Fannie Davis Smith, of Brandon, Vt.; Mrs. Emma L. Paul, of Morrisville, Vt.; Mrs. Sarah A. Wiley, of Rockingham, Vt.; Mrs. A. P. Brown, of St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Lucius Colburn, of Bennington, Vt. We expect to say to the many friends of Mrs. Lizzie Manchester that she has an engagement for the month of October, and cannot be present.

Music—The Duxbury Glee Club, noted for its sweet, soul-stirring inspirational songs, has been secured for the entire meeting.

The first session will be opened Friday, at 10:30 A. M., by the President, Mrs. Abbie W. Crossett; poem by J. D. Stiles, followed by conference.

Mediums secured for the occasion are Joseph D. Stiles; Mrs. M. K. Morgan, of Woodstock, Vt.; Dr. Bronson, of St. Albans. Dr. S. Locke, of Newport Center, Vt., clairvoyant and magnetic healer, will be present during the meeting. During the Convention J. D. Stiles will hold two of his wonderfully convincing test séances, giving dates of death, age, occupation, and description of friends passed to spirit-life, so minutely that they will be readily recognized. Mrs. Morgan will also give tests from the platform.

Waterbury is one of the finest places in the State for holding Conventions, it being on the line of the Central Vermont Railroad, and having the best hotel accommodations. As this is the Annual Convention, and the time for election of officers, it is desired that there be a large attendance.

The resolution in regard to amending the Constitution so as to omit the fall or winter Convention will be considered.

Board at Waterbury Hotel $1.00 per day. Single meals, 35 cents. Horsekeeping 75 cents per day. Single feed, 25 cents. Horsekeeping for the whole time of the Convention at reasonable rates.

Round Trip Tickets for fare one way over the Central Vermont, Passumpsic and Montpelier and Wells River Railroads. Those coming over the Passumpsic and Montpelier and Wells River Railroads will purchase tickets to Montpelier, and then at Montpelier procure tickets to attend the Vermont State Spiritualist Convention at Waterbury. Those on the Central Vermont Railroad must call for round trip tickets to attend the Vermont State Spiritualist Convention at Waterbury. Half fare over Woodstock Railroad. All must be sure and observe the above instructions.

The Stage from Morrisville and Stowe will carry passengers for fare one way, and run an extra trip on Sunday from Stowe.

All are cordially invited.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW OF THE
Seybert Commissioners' Report;
OR,
WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

By A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A Member of the Pennsylvania Bar; Author of "Leaves from the Diary of an Old Lawyer," "Court and Prison," "Dr. Crosby's Calm View from a Lawyer's Standpoint," "A Hawk in an Eagle's Nest," Etc.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as a writer, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experience there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism; Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

Essence and Substance:
A TREATISE ON
Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,

Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

"THE RELIGIOUS INSTINCT: ITS ORIGIN, GROWTH AND ULTIMATE PERFECTION."

Whence Comes Speech?

A San Francisco paper, the Chronicle, of a recent date, enters upon a discussion of the above inquiry, and cites some strange cases that find an approach to solution only in the operation of esoteric laws. The article was called forth by an account, to which reference has been made by us, of two brothers living in this city who have grown to man's estate without being able to speak the English language, and who, although born in the United States, of American parents, and hearing English spoken continuously, speak a language of their own, which they perfectly understand, but which, thus far, has been unintelligible to everybody else.

The writer states that this Boston case is not without its parallel, and mentions two children, a brother and sister, living in the State of Nevada, who constantly employed a language of their own in talking with each other. The girl was ten years of age, and the boy a year or two younger. It is said that the circumstances were such that there could be no deception and no mistake about the matter. The children would play together and chatter in this strange speech, and it was perfectly apparent it was a genuine language. There could be detected in it no resemblance to any modern language, no similarity to root forms or stems which may be said to be common to all spoken languages; nor was there any likeness to Latin or Greek, and, consequently, none to the cognate language which is called Sanscrit.

The children were not at all shy about talking in the presence of strangers, but they could not be made to understand what translation from English into their language meant. They understood English, and could and did speak it when spoken to; but they either could not or would not give the equivalents of English words in their own language. The mother of the children said that the first time she heard them, and indeed for many times afterward, she paid no attention, as she supposed they were "only jabbering nonsense," as she expressed it, and so she was unable to say whether the language was evolutionary or whether the children spoke it as well the first time as the last. The writer who first described this strange linguistic "freak," said that they spoke enough of it for him to understand them without any difficulty, though it seemed, from the cursory observations he could make, that the vocabulary was a very limited one.

We are told that these cases, strange as they may be, do not militate against the generally received doctrine of philology; that "they are freaks of nature, nothing more, and no more strange than other cases with which we are familiar." To our way of thinking this is an easy way, and as cheap and unsatisfactory as easy, of disposing of the matter: calling it a freak of nature; but the researchical character which distinguishes the people of our times from those of others, so far as to make nearly every thinker a student of the unknown rather than to label it "a mystery of God which it is a sin to inquire into," and lay it away among other embalmed incomprehensibles, will not be satisfied with any such relegation. The Chronicle writer may have some idea of the possibility of the spirit-world so impinging upon this that its influences may affect this, but he gives no indication of entertaining such thought. Yet to us it is evident that to that source alone can we look with any reasonable hope of obtaining an explanation of this as of many other "freaks," and that the certainty of finding one there is beyond all question.

☞ William Foster, jr., informs us that Mrs. Allen, of Providence, R. I., is unable to hold her séances for form manifestations at present, owing to severe illness: Due notice will be given of their resumption.

The Abolition of War.

"Better ask," said Charles Sumner—in his address on "The Duel Between France and Germany," from which he sought to draw a lesson for civilization—"Better ask how long will be continued that war system by which such a duel is authorized and regulated among nations? When will this legalized, organized crime be abolished? When at last will it be confessed that the Law of Right is the same for nations as for individuals, so that if trial by battle be impious for individuals, it is so for nations, also? Against it are reason and humanity, pleading as never before; economy asking for mighty help; peace with softest voice praying for safeguard; and then the authority of philosophy speaking by some of its greatest masters—all reinforced by the irrepressible, irresistible protest of workingmen in different nations." Instead of trial by battle, the orator pleaded that "there shall be an harmonious people, of different nations but one fellowship, vying together only in works of industry and art, inspired and exalted by a divine beneficence."

The war system is, in any light in which it may be considered, a relic of barbarism only. If any two important nations choose to indulge in it, then no nation whatever is safe. There is no talisman for their protection except universal disarmament. Military citizenship, as it is to-day known in Europe, is military serfdom. Armed soldiers constitute alike the engine of despotism at home and the instrument of war abroad. Under this war system in the state, the entire business of life is subordinated to the military drill. The civilized part of Europe is not much besides a busy camp, "with every citizen for a soldier, and with all sounds swallowed up in the tocsin of war."

Monlistiquien, who possessed the genius as a writer on public affairs to lift the curtain of the future, did not hesitate to declare that the peril to free government proceeds from armies, while it is no removal of the peril to make those armies directly dependent on the legislative power. Among the papers which he left at his death was one in which he made the solemn prediction that "Europe will be lost through her military." Mr. Sumner unhesitatingly asserted that "the true state of Nature is not war"—as the philosopher Hobbes had maintained—"but peace." And he added with all the impressiveness of truth, that "not only every war, but every recognition of war as the mode of determining international differences, is evidence that we are yet barbarians; and so also is every ambition for empire founded on force and not on the consent of the people."

No tongue or pen can celebrate with an exaggerated enthusiasm of sentiment the blessings of peace to the human race. There is no doubt at all that the glare of battle is more and more losing its attractions for modern nations. War is, indeed, losing its ancient renown. The glory of arms is passing from sight. The pretensions of military power, in the silent, unexpressed opinion of the world, are becoming petty and unattractive. The boasted triumphs of war are seen to be vain. With the increasing assurance of peace, nations will gradually lose their sensibilities; and, to quote Mr. Sumner's words: "by ties of constant fellowship will they be interwoven together.... In the sight of God there is one human family without division, where all are equal in rights, and the attempt to set up distinctions, keeping men asunder, or in barbarous groups, is a practical denial of that great truth, religious and political, the Brotherhood of Man."

Mrs. H. B. Fay Vindicated.

For a long time there has been in existence in this city a band of bigots, bound, its members said, to put down vi et armis all physical mediums. They have had it their own way, more or less, for some length of time, and certain of the daily press—the sensational sort only—have printed long articles against the physical mediums.

Mrs. H. B. Fay of this city was attacked by these bigots, and a reporter of the Boston Evening Record "wrote up" their statements. The result was that Mrs. Fay, who is a highly respectable woman, prosecuted that paper for libel. The case had been on the court docket for nearly a year, when she, through her counsel, insisted that it be heard and decided. The facts in the case were such that every moral person in the community could see at once that, if there were any justice in the Massachusetts courts, the verdict would be in her favor. And now it seems the defendants in the case have come to the same conclusion, as they offered the aggrieved party four hundred dollars to withdraw the case, besides paying the costs of court, and printing an apology in their paper.

The following paragraph, in substantiation of our remarks, above made, appeared in The Globe of this city, Saturday evening, Oct. 13th:

A LIBEL SUIT SETTLED.

The Advertiser Company Pays Mrs. Bertha Fay Damages and Costs.

In November, 1887, the Evening Record contained what purported to be an "expose" of Mrs. Bertha Fay, wife of H. B. Fay, who is a Spiritualistic medium at 62 West Newton street. The article also contained an attack on Mrs. Fay's character. Immediately after the publication of the article, Lawyer Asa P. French, in behalf of Mrs. Fay, brought suit against the publishers of the Record for libel, and that suit, after pending in court for about a year, has been settled, the defendant paying $400 damages and costs of suit.

☞ Dr. W. E. Clayton, of Malden, called at this office on the 15th inst., and exhibited an oil portrait of one of his Indian guides ("Big Wolf") which he had obtained at a séance held Oct. 11th, with Dr. Rogers, at his residence 486 Tremont street, Boston. He stated that he himself placed a perfectly clean piece of academy board between the slates, and the slates themselves never left his hands till the whole operation was concluded (in the manner frequently described in THE BANNER). He received, in addition to the picture, three messages personal to himself: the time consumed in the production of all these phenomena being but ten minutes.

"TWILIGHT," the paper projected by Dr. H. F. Merrill as a means of transmitting messages received from spirits, through his mediumship, to their friends on earth, has made its appearance, and fully meets the expectations of those who have looked for its coming. It contains thirteen messages from a like number of excarnated spirits, and gives the names of those from whom messages will appear in the November number. We wish the paper a success commensurate with the great work it has to do, and which this issue gives assurance of its being able to accomplish. It is to be published monthly at 87 Sewall street, Augusta, Me., at fifty cents a year.

Miss Shelhamer's "Outside the Gates."

Those who desire to learn somewhat of the nature of the spirit-world, the daily life and employments of its inhabitants, and of their influence upon individuals in this, will find much satisfaction in a perusal of that admirable volume, the last published of Miss M. T. Shelhamer, titled "OUTSIDE THE GATES." Its sketches and essays embody a vast amount of valuable instruction relative to the interblending of two states of existence, that to many seem so widely apart, and serve to convince the reader that, after all, they are one, when looked upon from the point of view from which these teachings emanate. The story from which the book takes its name, that of "Morna," "Here and Beyond," "Slippery Places," and "The Blind Clairvoyant," are of the deepest interest and equally as instructive as the essays and sketches, many matters not touched upon in them being more fully illustrated by events in earthly life, and the intimate relation existing between the spiritual and material made more apparent.

The book should find place in the home of every Spiritualist, and those who, though they may not be, are willing to accept truth come whence it may. As the holiday season is fast approaching, it is well our readers bear in mind that "Outside the Gates" is a gift that no one will fail to accept with thanks.

Women Coming to the Polls.

Without stopping at this time to engage in the discussion which at the present time has led nearly twenty-five thousand women to legally qualify themselves to become voters on the composition of the next school committee of Boston, at the annual election in December, we merely improve the occasion to observe that this enlistment of women in any cause, pro or con., that tends to familiarize them with voting, and likewise accustoms male voters to sharing public responsibility with them at the polls, is more than likely to result in a speedier enlargement of woman suffrage, to make it apply to more than the single question of the schools, and perhaps finally to woman's complete enfranchisement and political equality.

In this world, one thing is made to lead the way for another. The school question may providentially have been made to take on greatly increased interest and importance for the express purpose of opening the way to the enjoyment of extended rights by woman as a confessed citizen already. The next stage may be permission granted her to vote on the license and prohibition issue, an issue in which it can with mournful truthfulness be asserted that none are so directly and deeply involved as she. Beyond these lies suffrage for all purposes, when political methods may be expected to undergo a process of needed purification.

Caution.

Spiritualists all over the country are warned against deceptive persons who travel from State to State and from town to town posing as spiritual mediums, generally under assumed names, which they change in different localities. There are many such. They can be known by the handbills they scatter over a town they wish to fleece! Put no faith in these handbill-adventurers. Shun them as you would a wild beast. We have warned the public against this class of mountebanks time and again, but still inquiries are made respecting them.

☞ The body of Dr. Joseph L. Newman, the good physician, whose sudden demise was mentioned in THE BANNER of last week, was taken to Hillsboro', N. H., in charge of a brother, and the funeral services were held at the house which he had recently built, and where two of his sisters reside. Dr. Newman was one of a family of thirteen brothers and sisters, seven of whom survive. Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, assisted by an excellent quartette, conducted the services, and a most appropriate and truthful tribute was paid by the speaker to the simplicity, sincerity and benevolence of Dr. Newman's character—his genial, social influence, and the good accomplished by him in curing the sick through the combined agency of his own personal magnetism and that of his spirit guides. He was rich in those qualities that endear human beings to each other. He had undoubting confidence in the beneficent order of the universe, and the spiritual world was to his consciousness a reality, upon the experiences of which he has now entered.

☞ Our Free Circle-Room table has been generously supplied of late with elegant flowers, whose presence gratifies the visible as well as the invisible attendants who fill the hall at each séance. Many ladies have presented at different times elegant bouquets of rare flowers, and have modestly declined thanks. Among those who have furnished floral gifts, we notice the names of Mrs. D. A. Crowell, and Mrs. A. Lee, of "Manchester-by-the-Sea"—to whom, and to others whose names are not in our possession, we extend the thanks of the invisibles, and our own.

OKLAHOMA AGAIN.—Topeka, Kan., dispatches of the 14th inst. state that Capt. L. M. Slaterthwaite, in emulation of the late Capt. Payne, is moving to bring together a large colony to invade the Oklahoma territory after election. They propose to raise two thousand men, enter the disputed section, and make a stand against all comers—except the United States troops. If not properly put down at once by the National authorities, this movement means an Indian war.

☞ MRS. ADA FOYE—formerly of this city, whom we had not seen here for twenty-two years—on Sunday last occupied the platform of the Spiritualistic Phenomena Association in Boston—her services giving unbounded satisfaction. Societies throughout New England should note the presence of this wonderfully gifted medium, and utilize her services as far as possible while she remains among us.

"PRE-NATAL CULTURE."—We printed last week a list of the published works of A. E. NEWTON, Esq., recommending them to the thoughtful perusal of the reading public. From this list was inadvertently omitted the book the title of which is quoted above—a valuable pamphlet in the line of heredity.

In Re "The Spiritualism of 1888."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It seems to me that the full scope of my statement in the essay recently published under the above caption has not been grasped by my esteemed friend and brother, A. E. Newton, and perhaps others, viz: that a belief in spirit-communion is an all-sufficient bond of union among Spiritualists.

Bro. Newton's reply to my query: "Is anything more needed?" would seem to indicate this. But the fault is my own. I did not pause to consider that I had not defined my idea of spirit-communion, and that others might infer that I meant by it simply the phenomenal manifestations of the séance-room.

If nature is a unit, an undivided whole; if there be an infinite spirit pervading it; a God in it and through it, then spirit must be the essence, the very foundation of all things, and there can be no escaping from an all-pervading spiritual power, a vast spiritual brotherhood, holding in its embrace all spheres of existence.

Believing this most earnestly, most devoutly, spirit-communion is to me the glorious culmination of all religious experience; it is the answer to all aspiration; it is the ultima thule of all study, the goal of all scientific research, and he who accepts it as a fact is bound also to accept all that is the logical outcome of this fact.

And just here is where the trouble arises with too many of us. We have no adequate idea of the scope and spirit of this great movement, its methods and aims. We accept the fact of spirit-intercourse, but we narrow it down to our petty, individual standpoints. We accept the fact of intercommunion between the two worlds, and let it end there. We lose sight of or fail utterly to comprehend the grand fact that the aim and object of that intercourse throughout all the ages has been the purification and elevation, the true spiritualization of mankind—the harmonious development of all the powers and attributes of the human soul to a complete, consistent whole.

Now if the assertion made above be true—that he who accepts the fact of spirit-communion is bound to accept all that is the logical outcome of that fact, where do we stand?

If one truth has been demonstrated more clearly than another to me through this great movement called Modern Spiritualism, during my thirty-four years of experience in it, it is this: Life here has an immense influence upon life hereafter. The conduct of a human being in this life immensely affects his condition in the next, and the highest happiness that can possibly come to a human soul, here or hereafter, springs from the daily expression of all that is truest and best, all that is highest and noblest, most divine and most godlike in that marvelous nature with which he is endowed.

If the thousands of spirits who have come back to earth during the past forty years, and declared they were happy or miserable, not at all because of what they believed or disbelieved, while denizens of the earth-life, but because of the general trend of their life-conduct in the direction of good or evil, because of the deeds done in the body, spoke the truth; if the universal instinct of mankind, as old as the instinct of immortality, recognizing a great law of compensation and retribution, and pronouncing the fiat, "As ye sow so must ye reap," be not a delusion and a fraud, then must not Spiritualism, whose pivotal truth is spirit-communion, of necessity hold most vital relations to all the conditions of life?

I cannot see how any of us, into whose consciousness has really entered even a faint conception of the genius of this great movement, can fail to recognize that the ministering angels of the spirit-world are constantly striving to push us on in the great work of making our individual lives pure and sweet with human graces, recognizing our own divinity, and that in the expression of it lies the only possible method of salvation from all the woes that beset humanity.

I most earnestly believe that nothing more is needed than a vital belief in the glorious fact of spirit-communion, and a comprehension of what grows out of that fact, to constitute a "bond of heart union," that shall banish forever from our midst all "the sharp antagonisms," all the "unfriendly criticisms," all the "jealousies," "rivalries," and "scandal-mongering," that so pain and distract some hearts, disturb their efforts, and lead them to fear that no worthy or winning presentation of the vital relations of our faith to practical every-day life can ever be given to the world.

Let me repeat from my former article: All that constitutes true religion can never find truer disciples or worthier representatives than can be found among those who find in Spiritualism the realization of their holiest dreams, their most sacred aspirations. And permit me to add that just as soon as a vital belief in spirit-communion really enters into and is grasped by the human consciousness, it follows as day follows the night, that it begins to awaken at once "brotherly and sisterly love," "a supreme love of truth," and "an earnest aspiration for personal rightness."

Now recognizing, as I do, the mighty work Spiritualism is doing in the world as an unrecognized reformatory power, I feel that I ought to rest contented with that. It may be a great weakness on my part that I do not. To me it is the science of all sciences, the philosophy of all philosophies, the culmination of all religions; and there are times in which I long inexpressibly to see it recognized as such by the world. Yet I do know that nothing can, by any possibility, arrest the grand work it is doing in the world, or even to any great extent interfere with its progress; and that at no time within its history has that work been more far-reaching, more all-pervasive than it is to-day.

All that which Brother Newton feels to be so painful and so distracting, is to me but the inevitable accompaniment of every great movement that stirs the world of thought, especially upon religious or spiritual issues. The history of all such movements, not excepting Christianity, shows us that they have ever thrown to the surface all sorts of crudities, all sorts of discordant, jangling elements. But they bear the same relation to the great movement itself that the sticks and straws, the froth and foam that eddy and whirl and bubble and splutter upon the surface of some majestic river, bear to the calm, still depths below.

We certainly, by the aid of the angel-world, have laid grand foundations for the erection of a worthy temple that shall challenge the respect and admiration of the world. And in the impatience of our hearts we cry out at times, Why does not the superstructure arise? And all the while, hidden from our external sight, the temple is slowly rising, stone by stone, from its massive foundation in the eternal verities; and the day is hastening on when the scaffolding that now surrounds and conceals it shall be removed and the grand structure stand revealed, its white walls of Love, Purity and Spirituality luminous with the light of an inward glory.

DR. F. L. H. WILLIS.

GERALD MASSEY arrived in New York, from Liverpool, by the Cunarder Umbria, Oct. 7th, and writes us that he is ready to accept calls to lecture which may be extended to him by spiritualistic and philosophical societies in this country. The marked success of this talented and outspoken Spiritualist orator and "poet of the people" at the Music Hall meetings, in Boston, some years ago, is a matter of history, and should recommend him to the attention of all managers of meetings under whose notice this paragraph may fall. He may be addressed for engagements, Sonora House, 203 West 13th street, New York City.

☞ W. J. Colville officiated at the funeral of Mrs. Jacob Jackson, formerly of California, on Wednesday, Oct. 10th. Mrs. Jackson had been a Spiritualist and private medium many years, and though little known in this neighborhood had many friends in the West. Only a few friends were present at the services, which were very impressive. The deceased was 72 years of age, and leaves no near relatives.

Spontaneous Spirit Phenomena.

Another of those cases which are frequent of late, of spirit manifestations at unexpected times and places, is reported as having taken place at a farmhouse in Illinois, about eighteen miles from Chicago, in a family by the name of Cure. The first indication of the presence of unseen guests was Sept. 14th. Mrs. Cure had set the table for supper, and went to the kitchen, remaining there about five minutes. On her return she was astonished to find not only the table moved from where it stood when she left it, but the dishes upon it differently arranged. Somewhat terror-stricken by the unaccountable transformation, she went to the barn and called her husband. Upon both entering the house, the table and everything on it were precisely as Mrs. C. had first placed them.

While Mr. C. was laughing at what he declared to be imagination on the part of his wife, the kitchen door flew open and a pan of roast pork shot out and deposited itself half way across the room on the floor, and the table transformation was repeated. There was no more laughing by Mr. C. He summoned his son and hired man and proceeded to discuss the events. While doing so, three or four cucumbers came through the window, and the men hurried out but failed to find any one. Returning to the house they lit a lamp, but the unseen opened the window and a gust of wind extinguished it, and, too badly frightened to relight it, they sat in the dark all night, during which no manifestations occurred. The next morning Mr. Cure went to the barn, harnessed his horses to a market wagon, and went to the house for his hat and coat. Upon his return he found the horses unharnessed, the wagon pole down and the harness hanging in its usual place. Much else of a similar nature took place on Friday night and Saturday, and on Sunday a priest was called, who went through the usual formalities for the exorcising of spirits, by which it was supposed, as no demonstrations occurred for the time being, that they had accomplished their purpose, but on the Tuesday following they again took place, and it became known that the chief disturber of the peace of the house was Frederick Cure, a brother of Peter, who passed from this life three years ago. The spirit on Tuesday spent all his time in writing, asking to see his son, and in the evening the son came and held a long interview with the spirit, his father, who appeared satisfied; wrote "good-bye," and departed. The next day Mrs. Cure busied herself in putting the house to rights.

We make this condensation of accounts given in the Chicago Times of Sept. 26th and 27th, sent us by a correspondent. The Times says that hundreds of persons of honesty and reputation are ready to testify under oath that the phenomena occurred as reported, of which we for want of room have omitted to mention a far larger number than we have described, of equal, possibly of greater wonderment to those not familiar with the events of Modern Spiritualism. The spirit or spirits evidently worked with a purpose, and found its accomplishment in convincing the farmer and his wife that their friends who had been accounted dead are yet alive, and awakening a widespread interest that will lead many to an investigation which in due time will end in a knowledge of the same great truth.

That Wandering "Starr."

Prof. Starr, the itinerant showman who professes much that he is unable to accomplish, and who has, a score or more times, had his pretensions exposed and been forced to flee the place for fear of further exposure, has lately made a raid on the good people of Titusville, Pa. Commenting on his presence the Herald of that place says that no Spiritualist is ever led to change his views by any such exhibition, though "Our people have been entertained repeatedly with 'exposures' of Spiritualism—once by Rev. Mr. Dodd, also by Prof. Kellar, the noted magician, and by several other 'professionals' whose names we have forgotten."

So far from these "exposers" changing the views of those whose belief rested on knowledge, their own views were changed. The first above named, after speaking in public and publishing a book against the truth of Spiritualism, became convinced of its verity at his own fireside, through the mediumship of his daughter, and afterward advocated it with voice and pen. The second "exposer" alluded to has publicly admitted the genuineness of the phenomena over his own name. As for the "several other professionals" whose names, even, the Herald has forgotten, they have gone with their names into forgetfulness, while the truth lives on, and Spiritualism is daily adding to its ranks hundreds of thousands, who find in it rest and consolation and an assurance of a future life which nothing else can impart.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—The opening article treats upon "Christian Science," in which it is claimed, and justly, that the cures effected by practitioners of that and other systems of healing of like nature, and which, though bearing different names, are essentially the same, find the solution of their mystery and power in the Spiritual Philosophy, the teachings of which are closely followed, however persistently the healer may, for the sake of catering to popular prejudice, disavow them. The reasonableness of cremation is clearly set forth in extracts from what an English clergyman writes in advocacy of that mode of disposing of vacated human bodies. A score or more of other topics are dealt with on the remaining pages, the whole constituting a very valuable issue of this popular monthly. New York: 206 Broadway. [For sale at this office.]

☞ The Ottawa (Ill.) Times of Sept. 29th contains a lengthy obituary notice of the widow of the late Col. H. W. H. Cushman, who had been a resident of that town since the year 1841, with the exception of a few years when she resided in Middleboro and Roxbury, Mass. Mrs. Cushman's departure was quite sudden, she being ill but a few days. Three daughters survive her. Her father, in his day, it is said, saw and conversed with spirits, and she herself was very mediumistic, embraced the truths of the Spiritual Philosophy at an early day, and did much for the cause in many ways.

His advertisement appears on seventh page of the BANNER OF LIGHT.

OCTOBER'S COME.

Now autumn breezes cool the air,
The chill frosts make the foliage fair,
October's come.
Now business men like lunatics
Begin to act, since politics
Begin to hum.
The torch-light clubs in bright array
Parade in just the same old way
Each pleasant night.
Next day your clerk feels lame and sore,
And tells you that the boots he wore
Were very tight.
The honest voter's in demand,
The politicians shake his hand,
And wish him well.
Let two months pass. The very men
Who treat him best will tell him then
To go to swell
The ranks of those deluded fools
Whom politicians use as tools
And then despise.
But, though they've fooled him oft before,
The slight will fill him, as of yore,
With dumb surprise.
October's come. Its brilliant days,
When all the forests seem ablaze,
Inspire the soul—
Until it sinks in dull dismay,
For now, alas! it 's time to pay
That bill for coal.

Dr. Isambard Owen, Secretary to the Investigation Committee of the British Medical Association, has submitted a report on the inquiry into the connection of disease with habits of intemperance, and some startling statistics are therein given. The committee obtained and tabulated particulars of 4,234 cases of deceased persons—from which all deaths under thirty were excluded—the result exhibiting the following averages of life: Total abstainers, 57.31 years; habitually temperate, 66.48 years; careless drinkers, 61.52 years; free drinkers, 58.87, and decidedly intemperate, 53.42. There is a "great moral" concealed somewhere in this remarkable achievement of medical science!

The Spiritual Congress at Barcelona.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The first International Spanish Spiritual Congress, as I advised previously, opened at Barcelona on the 8th September last, and closed on the 17th. The delegates came principally from France and Italy, neighboring countries; but there were many from the principal cities of Spain and Cuba—according to Mr. Leymarie's Report, published in the Revue Spirite first of this month, from which I cull the following:

It was proposed and carried that the proceedings of the Congress be published in French, Spanish and Italian, and that the next Congress, in Paris, during the Exhibition next year, be attended by all the delegates present. Mr. Leymarie, the representative of France, promised that he would do all in his power to favor the proposition, and invite the aid and coöperation of all the brethren in France and abroad, including the American, English and German Spiritualists. Mr. Leymarie represented also Belgium.

The reports of the numerous correspondents were read and listened to with much attention and interest, and the Congress, in view of the variety of nationalities and tongues, decided that each coöperative body be requested to express its affirmations and propositions separately. The conclusions arrived at by the Spanish section were unanimously adopted:

"This First Spiritual International Congress affirms and proclaims the existence and efficacy of Spiritism, as an integral and progressive science. Its foundations are: the existence of God; infinity of inhabited worlds; the preëxistence and persistency of Spiritism; the experimental demonstration by mediumistic communication with spirits of the survivance of the human soul; the infinity of phases in the permanent life of each being; the recompenses and punishments, as natural consequences of acts; infinite progress; universal communion of beings, and solidarity.

The actual character of Spiritism is thus formulated:

1. It forms an experimental and positive science.
2. It is the contemporary form of revelation.
3. It establishes an important stage of human progress.
4. It gives a solution of the most profound social and moral problems.
5. It raises reason and sentiment; it satisfies conscience.
6. It imposes no creed; it invites study.
7. It realizes a great aspiration, which is the consequence of historic necessity.

Abidingly with these enunciated principles, this Congress hopes that all societies and adepts will, by all legal means available, lend help and coöperation to individuals, collectivities that endeavor to civilize mankind; and, therefore, this Congress advises:

A. A complete study of the spiritual doctrine.

B. Its incessant propagation by all allowable means.

C. Its constant realization by the practice of public and private virtues.

To obtain such result this Congress expects that each society and spiritual adept will look on all well-meaning men as brothers in the battle of life—battle against vice, error and misfortune; in consequence of which it advises:

D. To respect all investigators, all propagators of truths, even if they be not Spiritists.

E. To use constant efforts to secularize society in all spheres of life.

F. To endeavor to obtain absolute liberty of thought, integral instruction for both sexes, of cosmopolitism embracing all social relations.

G. The federal autonomy of all Spiritists, of all adepts belonging to constituted societies, each society to entertain constant intercourse with the centre of its locality, each local centre with the national centre, and each national centre with those of other nationalities.

Finally, this Congress notes that it is not advisable to accept, without scrutiny, the doctrines of an individual or Society who does not wish to accept its counsels.

It also intimates that Allan Kardec has demonstrated in his works the danger of an excessive faith in mediumistic communications, which, he says, must be submitted to the crucible of reason and logic—death not establishing progress.

Adopted: José C. Fernandez, honorary président.

MM. the effective présidents: Vicomte de Torres Solanot, Pierre Gaëtan Leymarie, Efisio Ungher, Huelbes Temprado.

Vice-présidents: Dona Amalia, Domingo, Giovani Hoffmann, Facundo Usich, Pedro Fortoult, Ercole Chiaïa, Edward Froula, Miguel Vivès.

Secrétaries: MM. San-Benito, Enlogio Prieto, Modesto Casanovas, Narciso Moret.—15 September, 1888.

The following propositions, presented by the French, Italian, Cuban and Belgian Boards, united—by Messrs. Eulogio Prieto, De Garay, De Ona, Ercole Chiaïa, Giovani Hoffman, E. Ungher, José Nicolau Bartomeu, Pierre Gaëtan Leymarie:

This International Spiritual Congress in Barcelona, 8th September, 1888, affirms and proclaims the real and indisputable existence of the rapports of the incarnated and disincarnated souls.

Considering that fact in its various phases, this Congress makes the following declarations:

1. Spiritism is a positive and experimental science, sanctioned by close investigation and history.

2. Spiritism is a superior philosophical science, which satisfies more than any other the conscience, reason and justice.

3. Spiritism is a psychological science, which proves to us the existence of the soul, and which gives us the most logical explanation of the mutual rapports of the soul and body.

4. Spiritism is a divine science, which imparts a rational belief in God—the certainty of a future life—which establishes the responsibility of our acts according to strict justice, and proves the necessity of successive reincarnations as a means to indefinite progress, either on this planet or in other sidereal worlds.

5. Spiritism is called to become a social science, to solve the following humanitarian problems: of education and integral instruction for both sexes—of legislation—of property—of mutuality—of association—of fraternity.

6. Spiritism is the true school of respect due to all searchers after truths, even if they are not adepts of the founder of our philosophy, of our grand propounder, Allan Kardec.

In consequence, this Congress adheres to the following propositions, which the delegates intend to put into execution in their respective countries, as soon as favorable circumstances will permit them:

A. Endeavor to unite, federate all Spiritists of a country—to federate all national spiritual centres;

B. Introduce the elements of the spiritual doctrine into popular instruction, and have chairs of Spiritual Philosophy in our superior schools;

C. Propagate the doctrine among the masses, in shops, in industrial centres, the most humble lodgings; by pamphlets, gratuitous lectures, and by the press.

D. Advise the groups and spiritual centers that the master, Allan Kardec, has cautioned us against an excessive credulity in teachings given through the means of communications from the other world: 'They must be submitted to a severe criterium,' said he; 'credulity without control discrediting Spiritism.'

E. Recommend well to all serious friends of progress the close and impartial study of the spiritual works and facts, and of science in general.

F. Recognize that, if local, departmental or national spiritual federation is logically required, each one, according to his tendencies and aptitudes, must enjoy complete liberty of action in the spiritual domain.

G. Teach the disdain of ostracism—our ranks must be widely open.

H. Interest Spiritists in the study of coöperative and practical association, from the mode instituted at Guise (France) by Mr. Godin, founder of the Familistère; to stifle the animosity of classes, and render impossible revolutions and their excesses, and, as did that worthy man, aim at the association of capital and labor;

I. Transform prisons and penitentiaries into moralizing institutions to rehabilitate the man who has fallen into harm, as the society for the redemption of the inmates of Saint Lazare acts, in Paris, under the direction of the honorable and courageous Mrs. Isabelle Bogelot;

J. Establish a Body of Ideas to assist every movement which endeavors to modify civil and penal systems of every country in the sense of charity and justice according to Spiritism;

K. To join every society constituted to stop conflicts between nations, by permanent international arbitration;

L. Tend progressively to disarm nations, to abolish frontiers, by speech and the press;

M. Insist on the suppression of capital punishment, wherever it exists;

N. Work to abolish slavery in all its forms."
—15th September, 1888.

Mr. Leymarie says at the close of his Report that an eminent orator of Madrid, not inimical to the doctrine, delivered a lecture, Sunday, the 16th September, in the spacious circus of Barcelona, under the auspices or in the name of one hundred and fifty thousand free-thinkers; the liberal tendencies of the Spiritists having pleased the citizens, they requested the Presidents of the Congress to preside at the meeting. Mr. Huelbes Temprado, a spiritual free-thinker, delivered some noble and impressive words, and the audience that filled the circus cheered him as much as they did the great orator.

A numerous group of galley-slaves, at Tarragona (Arragon), to whom works of Allan Kardec had been distributed, have amended and meet together to form circles and console one another; they sent an impressive address to the Barcelona Congress. HENRY LACROIX.

Australian and New Zealand Items.

It will seem strange to the children of the Lyceums in this and other American cities to be informed that the teachers and pupils of the Lyceum at Melbourne, Australia, at their meeting on August 19th, took the initiatory steps of their Spring and Summer Session, just on the point of commencing; but such was the case, and the following officers to serve during the new term were chosen:

Conductor, Mr. F. W. Debney; Vice Conductor, Mr. Dickens; Secretary, Mr. J. Borrowman; Guardians, Messrs. Warne and Veevers; Treasurer, Mr. W. H. Terry; Librarian, Mr. Warne; Curator of Museum, Mr. Thomson; Watchman, Mr. Everett; Musical Director, Mr. Clay; Leaders, Messrs. Noble, Gibbs, Thompson, Veevers—Mesdames Burbank and Braid, Misses Burbank and Kennedy.

The Harbinger reports the past session as having been a fairly successful one, and that during it a valuable organ has been obtained, the library enriched by additions, and the finances of the Lyceum improved.

Mr. J. C. Bradley lectured during the month of August to large and appreciative audiences. His subject on the 8th was "The Relation of Matter to Spirit," in the course of remarks upon which he said that material bodies are essential to spirits in this world; that bodies are made for spirits, not spirits for the bodies. In the next sphere, where more refined conditions exist, the bodies are less material, being in fact the astral part of the present body, which became more beautiful in accordance with the development here. This world is refined and beautified by spirit acting on matter. Will and force are synonymous. The Divine will is the immortal force permeating all matter. Disease is a disturbance of the spiritual forces of the individual—a warring between the physical and spiritual. The use of pure foods, and abstinence from meat food, facilitates the supremacy of the spirit over the body; and when the spiritual is in the ascendant, passing out of the body is painless, and the entrance into the new life easy and natural. Mr. Bradley continued the subject at the next meeting, supplementing his remarks with answers to questions from the audience. He was to lecture under the auspices of the Victorian Association of Spiritualists, Sunday, Sept. 2d.

The Wairarapa (N. Z.) Standard of July 20th publishes a lecture on Spiritualism, delivered in the Presbyterian Church, on the previous evening, by the Rev. Mr. Cecil, and in a sub-leader commenting upon the same, says:

"To the surprise of many the lecturer, who appeared to be a man possessing brains as well as culture, by a series of carefully arranged arguments, confirmed by personal experiences under satisfactory test conditions, absolutely demonstrated the genuine character of spiritualistic phenomena from raps to materialization. Nevertheless, he cautioned his hearers against having anything to do with it, because it was forbidden in holy writ."

The first semi-annual meeting of the Adelaide Spiritualistic Society was held in Kent Town, July 13th. Following an address by the President and the reading of the Secretary's report, the following choice of officers was made: President, E. A. D. Opie; Vice-Presidents, C. Perrott and W. P. Bretnall; Secretary, J. McKenzie; Librarian, W. Mitchell; Committee, Messrs. Drews, Frost and Beardsley.

The Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, remarks at some length on the report of the committee of the American Spiritualist Alliance—Messrs. Kiddle, Cross and Benn—on "The Proper Methods of Scientifically Investigating the Phenomena of Spiritualism" (first published in THE BANNER), reprinting it in full, and recommending its perusal as "an interesting and valuable document." "We have had," it says, "numerous 'directions for the formation of circles' and 'guides to Spiritualism,' but have met with nothing which contained so much in a small compass as this report."

A London correspondent of one of the New Zealand papers says: "It may not be generally known in New Zealand that Lady Barker (now Lady Broome), who resided for some time in your colony and wrote the popular work on Station Life there, is a great Spiritualist medium, whose extraordinary powers were much discussed several years back among English notables."

More Light, published at Greytown, Wairarapa, N. Z. (August), says:

"Reverend gentlemen of nearly all denominations, from one end of New Zealand to the other, have been firing off their little pop-guns at Spiritualism during the last two months. What can the matter be? Is it possible that the craft is in danger?

There is a large number of Spiritualists in Dunedin, but no organization. Fresh circles have lately been formed and a renewed interest is manifest. The Napier Spiritualists have benefited by the attacks made upon them from the pulpit."

A correspondent of the above paper writes:

"Whilst in Wanganui I was pleased to find such an interest being taken in Spiritualism; many private circles are held, and when a person gets among them it is surprising to find the number of people who are investigating. Many investigators keep it private and are very timid. Taranaki seems very good—many circles going. Whilst there I saw some very extraordinary phenomena. Since my last visit there (some five months ago), there is an increase in the number of investigators, and very earnest ones at that. I always can find in any town or village I may go to, some circles, and people seem to have more the courage of their opinions now than formerly, boldly saying they are Spiritualists. At Nelson, also, there are many circles, and good phenomena are obtained."

☞ Mrs. Emma Miner, inspirational writer and speaker, will accept lecture engagements. Address, Clinton, Mass. We have been acquainted with Mrs. Miner for several years, and know that she is a most estimable lady, a fine medium, and an intrepid thinker. Her story, "Bars and Thresholds," now in course of publication in the BANNER OF LIGHT, is intensely interesting, and bids fair to be the most instructive and enjoyable story of the season. The readers of Light on the Way are not wholly unacquainted with Mrs. Miner's ability as a writer. We hope our New England Spiritualist societies will give Sister Miner a most cordial reception. We take great pleasure in recommending her to all in want of an able lecturer upon the Spiritual Philosophy.—Light on the Way.

The Savage Way.

HOW THE INDIAN TREATS AN INJURY—
OLD TIME METHODS.

The savage is emphatically the child of nature. He lives close to nature, his only education is gained in nature's school.

When the Indian receives an injury, he does not seek a cure in mineral poisons, but binds on the simple leaf, administers the herbal tea, and, with nature's aid, comes natural recovery.

Our rugged ancestors, who pierced the wilderness, built their uncouth but comfortable Log Cabins and started the clearings in the woods, which in time became the broad, fertile fields of the modern farmer, found in roots and herbs that lay close at hand nature's potent remedies for all their common ailments. It was only in very serious cases they sent for old "saddle-bags" with his physic, which quite as often killed as cured.

Latter day society has wandered too far away from nature, in every way, for its own good. Our grandfathers and grandmothers lived wholesomer, purer, better, healthier, more natural lives than we do. Their minds were not filled with noxious isms, nor their bodies saturated with poisonous drugs.

Is it not time to make a change, to return to the simple vegetable preparations of our grandmothers, which contained the power and potency of nature as remedial agents, and in all the ordinary ailments were efficacious, at least harmless?

The proprietors of Warner's Log Cabin remedies have thought so, and have put on the market a number of these pure vegetable preparations, made from formulas secured after patient searching into the annals of the past, so that those who want them need not be without them.

Among these Log Cabin remedies will be found "Log Cabin sarsaparilla," for the blood; "Log Cabin hops and buchu remedy," a tonic and stomach remedy; "Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy;" "Log Cabin hair tonic," for strengthening and renewing the hair; "Log Cabin extract," for both external and internal application; "Log Cabin liver pills;" "Log Cabin rose cream," an old but effective remedy for cartarrh, and "Log Cabin plasters." All these remedies are carefully prepared from recipes which were found, after long investigation, to have been those most successfully used by our grandmothers of "ye olden time." They are the simple, vegetable, efficacious remedies of Log Cabin days.

The continued call for this well-known pamphlet—which was one of the earliest publications in the interest of Modern Spiritualism, and has now been before the public for more than a third of a century—has induced the publishers to issue a new edition, at a reduced price. The lessened price at which it is now offered will facilitate that object.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Sept. 25th, 1888.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[By R. G. Dawson.] We are told that only the highest types of animal and vegetable unfoldment exist in the spirit-world. Shall we infer, then, that as man's condition and appearance on earth will have changed in the far future, there will be a corresponding change in spirit-life coincident to that on earth?

ANS.—As man changes with the development of life and of the planet upon which he dwells, he will put forth a higher, a more beautiful aspect, because the external is the manifestation or the semblance of the interior force and power known as the spirit. This is seen somewhat on earth, for however plain in feature or misshapen in figure a person may be, if his spirit is kindly and genial and progressive, we shall see this flashing forth from his eye, beaming in his countenance, and in spite of physical limitations and depressing conditions, the external becomes in a measure the reflection of the interior soul, or individual man. In the spirit-world, as man advances in knowledge and in self-command, as he becomes more unselfish, more beautiful in character and strong by nature, his external appearance will change somewhat to correspond with the interior growth, and therefore as the ages come and go spirit-life presents a higher type of humanity than the earth has done in the ages past.

The human, so far as we understand it, can never become extinct, while so far as our observation goes, and as our studies are concerned, we are taught that the lowest type of animal life, such as existed on earth in the first æons of unfoldment, have become extinct; they do not exist in the spiritual department; their work and purpose seem to have been to prepare the way on this planet for its higher unfoldment and for the coming of grander forms of animal life. They seem to have been the outgrowth, so to speak, of the forces and gases, the effluvia of this planetary existence, which were cast forth by the earth in its development, belonging to the earth earthy and moved upon by an activity of spiritual force throughout, as an automatical machine is moved upon by the force and will of its operator. These animal forms of life lived their existence, made up a part of the planet, and by-and-bye yielded up their forms to other forms that were to follow.

Just when and how and where the immortal principle sprang into activity in the animal form we are not yet prepared to state, for we are not personally decided upon the matter. That it did spring into active operation we are persuaded, since in that department of experience and existence which we call spirit-life, independent somewhat of this external existence of yours, we see at times animal forms and phases of animal life corresponding to those which are domesticated on earth at the present time, or with those that are capable of domestication; therefore we know that the principle of life in the animal is immortal, that it can be perpetuated—that is, from year to year. The human spirit seems also to have its various times of change, of transmigration, and we discover that even the lowest, humblest human being, untutored and unrefined, who passes to the spirit-world, may go through various changes and gradations of unfoldment, until through the processes of discipline, of experience and of study, he may rise to higher and higher degrees of development and of cultivation, and after a time present an appearance of refinement, of growth and of knowledge highly creditable, and beautiful to gaze upon. We do not believe the time will ever come when these human individuals which make up the great family of mankind will become extinct; we believe the personal entity will ever remain, exercising itself and making its power felt in mental, moral and spiritual ways, for the elevation and for the happiness of all.

Q.—[By Mrs. Seth T. Davenport.] Does not the near presence of our spirit friends lead us to speak of them; and when thoughts of them flash upon our minds without any premeditation or apparent cause, is it not because they approach us very closely?

A.—This is sometimes the case—more frequently, perhaps, than you are aware. You may be sitting in your apartment, busily engaged in some personal employment, and suddenly you hear a friend speak to you. You have not been thinking of that friend, you did not hear his approach, but when he has spoken you recognize his presence at once. So may it be with the approach of a spirit-friend. If you are of a susceptible nature, easily acted upon by external influences, you will the more readily sense his presence and catch impressions from his mind. If you are not easily acted upon, then he may be in your atmosphere for some time before he will be able to cast an impression, a reflection or thought from his mind to your own. Those who are sensitive, who have impressible natures, whose affectional emotions are in the ascendency, will undoubtedly sense the presence of spirit friends more readily than those who are positive by nature, and who do not dwell so much in the realm of intuition or of affection.

Your spirit friends desire to make their presence known to you; those who love you and who have passed from the body wish to inform you of their power to communicate, or at least to return and watch over your interests. This is sometimes almost a passion in the hearts of certain spirits, who long to be known by their mortal friends, who do not wish to be considered dead; and they often approach, seeking to cast an influence on them, and, it may be, open the way for communication with them. So it is possible, ay, it is often the case, that when a mortal is passively engaged in some employment or thought of his own, a sudden thought of some departed friend will flash across his mind; and this may be only a telegraphic signal of his presence, given by the spirit whose name has come up, whose memory has returned, to some earthly one, that he may perhaps catch an influence, an inspiration or an impression from the world of spirits.

Q.—[From the audience.] Can you recognize any spirits that are present around us?

A.—These meetings are designed especially for the consideration of questions or subjects that are adapted to the general wants of those present, or of those who shall read our words. While at this time, and at every meeting, we perceive large numbers of spirits present, coming to their friends in the audience for some purpose, either of imparting a cheerful and uplifting influence, or directing them in some special work of earth, and also to be blessed and benefited themselves by the contact, yet we do not, nor can we, exert our forces to come into communication with such spirits personally, because, were we to do so, the especial end for which we work at these meetings would not be accomplished.

There are times when an avenue is opened here for those spirits who can communicate with their mortal friends to do so from this platform. It is not often that one comes to a person in the audience, not because the guides do not wish it, but simply because it is not easy for such spirits to take possession of the medium at once and give that direct and terse communication which is necessary in the limited time at our command. Those spirits who come to parties from a distance are not affected personally or magnetically by the presence of their friends; they are prepared in advance to speak their word and give whatever thought they have to convey. Sometimes, when you come into the presence of a friend whom you have not seen, or have not come in contact with for a long time, you are agitated and cannot express yourself clearly—not at once. This is frequently the case with returning spirits who come personally to their friends. Through the law of psychological attraction these spirits revert in thought to their last hours and scenes on earth, and take upon themselves the conditions which possessed them ere they passed from the body, and may not be able to speak or to announce themselves, consequently they cannot readily make their wishes known. This is a law which neither spirits nor mortals have been able to overcome, one unerring in its operation. Spirits coming here to communicate, and who generally do so, are those who have a positive will-power and can exert their thought upon the subject in hand, overcoming any law of attraction, of emotion, which may possess them, or those who have friends at a distance to whom they send their words of counsel or identification, and, not being disturbed by any magnetic attraction or atmosphere, can accomplish that which they have to perform.

We see spirits here this afternoon, many of them, and we might enter into a description of those who are standing by the side of friends present; yet we do not feel that it could be done in such a clear, concise manner as we would wish, or as the parties present might desire, therefore we confine ourselves to the work we have in hand.

Q.—[From the audience.] Will not the main work of the spiritual movement be taken up and carried on by the Christian churches, so that it will not be necessary to form organizations outside for that purpose?

A.—The main work of the spiritual movement will, we think, in the future, be taken up by the so-called Christian churches, since it is observed by these bodies of Christian laborers, so called, that the work of demonstrating the truths of immortality, and of teaching mankind of itself, imparting a knowledge of humanity to man, is one that is destined to accomplish a great and lasting result—to make its way and move mankind to the very centre and foundation of its being.

The main work of Spiritualism is to break up old superstitions and the power of creeds and dogmas, to liberate the human mind from thralldom and to teach it to think for itself. Its work is to teach man how to live here as well as how to prepare for the hereafter, and the Christian Church is watching the progress of Spiritualism closely, and taking notice of the liberalizing thought and sentiment proceeding throughout the world, and is swayed and acted upon by that same liberalizing thought and sentiment. The Church has withstood the encroachments of Spiritualism, and has turned aside from the approach of liberty of opinion, until it has been forced to take cognizance of these.

Now, the Church is permeated, to a large extent, by these same influences, coming from the world of spirit. It may not publicly acknowledge this power, but it is obliged to live them out in its utterances, and in its forms and declarations, to a certain extent. By-and-bye this same Church will open its doors and welcome into its halls these same spiritual forces and movements—not in the name of Spiritualism; oh! no; we do not look for that. It may take up some other name and title, but it will incorporate the work of the spiritual movement into its own labor. It must be so, since the old systems of things, of superstitions, of theological ideas and assumptions are fast losing ground; they are becoming decayed, and must fall in the march of human advancement. The Church desires to maintain its hold upon the people; it is not ready nor willing to yield up its influence and its power; but if it would remain, it must become vitalized by the great spirit of truth and progress, which is making its way throughout the world to-day.

It has been asked: What is the future of Spiritualism? Will it remain a distinct movement, a philosophy and a religion independent of every other religion or philosophy upon the globe, or will it become incorporated into the great general system of religious thought, and not long remain an independent feature of human progress?

We do not believe that Spiritualism will become altogether swallowed up in the great religious movement of the age; we cannot see this, since spirits will always return from the higher life to give their individual and distinct identifying communications and counsels, since they will appear in homes on every hand, in the home of the unbelieving heretic or atheist, so called, as well as in the home of the religious enthusiast, and therefore Spiritualism will not be altogether swallowed up in any church or religious establishment. Yet we look for it to be taken up into the churches, to make its way in their midst among their people, giving out its truths with a liberal hand, for it is a purifying and an uplifting influence which it brings. It matters not to us whether it be recognized as Spiritualism or not; if its teachings and its influence be received we shall be satisfied.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Sept. 21st, 1888.

Nathan Tanner.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to speak in your meeting, Mr. Chairman; even if I could only give my name I should be very thankful. Many miles intervene between this place and the one where I passed away; yet miles and time have nothing to do with spirits, as we reckon by space. I know my dear one will question why I have not attempted to communicate before in the three years which have flitted away so quickly; but we cannot explain the spirit-laws that govern us to your comprehension.

You would like to know who is talking, sir. It is Nathan Tanner. I would like my friends to know that I visit them in Cincinnati and Chicago. It was in Cincinnati that I laid aside the old mortal form. It was not because I did not understand something of spirit-return that I have not made my presence known before. Some of my dear ones well understand that father has been anxious to do so.

Eighty-six years did I dwell in the form, and it is somewhere near three years since I laid it aside. I would not return to earth to stay, but I would like to have them know that Nathan Tanner is not dead. And I have not been idle, but have ever been learning more and more of spirit-return and forming new acquaintances just beyond the shining river. This is a life of activity; all have something to do, and are anxious, each one, to do their own allotted work.

Ira Lake.

I dwelt in the mortal life something over seventy years. As a spirit I have frequently come to this place in company with others, hoping to learn more of spirit-law in order to be able to control elsewhere. Many years of study have I given to this subject, and yet I feel there is much more to learn. I did understand something of it on earth, but was not privileged to learn as much as some of you here. My name is Ira Lake, and my home was in Norwalk, Ohio.

I know my dear ones will look anxiously for a word from Father Lake. It is two or three years since I cast off the mortal form. It troubles us a little to measure time as you do on earth, so you must bear with us if we do not get everything perfectly correct.

Sarah is with me, also my dear old mother. How beautiful it is to catch a glimpse of the life beyond before the spirit takes its flight. There is much I would like to say, if I could speak with my friends privately—many things that come before me which I cannot mention in public.

Daniel Shaw.

You have no music here to-day; but in heaven we are not dependent upon one, two or three, and we do appreciate what is given us.

I know the people of North Abington will not forget Daniel Shaw; neither will my dear children—my daughters—for it is a delight to them to know that those they love can return to them. They well remember the father who has not long been laid away; but it seems long to you, my children. I have a dear boy, many miles away, but I feel that your good paper will reach them all.

As I have stood here listening to what others have said, many times, an anxious feeling has stolen over my spirit, and a strong desire to have my voice heard also, to send a message to those so dear; and I ask them now to come into private conversation with me when they can find a good opportunity.

How sweet is the music of earth. I loved it from boyhood, and for many years—thirty to forty—I enjoyed so much being with musicians. My children will endorse what I say.

In your last meeting I certainly thought I should be able to speak, but failed. It is something like attempting to lift a heavy weight: as you look at it, you think you may be able to raise it, but when the time comes you make the trial, and find yourselves unequal to it.

So with us spirits: we think we can take control and say whatever comes to us; but when we make the attempt we frequently meet with failure. I would like the children to know that dear old grandma, my angel mother, came to welcome me in that land that knows no parting, where no good-byes are spoken. But a few more rising and setting suns and we shall all be together. I am satisfied with my home, and I know that I can make it still more beautiful.

Aunt Patty Mayo.

How do you do, Mr. Chairman? I was quite an old lady when I went away, nigh on to eighty years; but that don't make any difference with us. I was a little older than the gentleman. I was a Methodist when here, but it did n't do me any harm—only kept me back a little. I did n't learn quite as much as I should if I had known of this gettiug back here after throwing off the old body.

But I don't know as it was anything wrong if I was a Methodist. It was after the old Wesleyan type, and I was just as sincere in that belief as I am to-day in knowing that we can come and talk through another person. I'm all right enough, I guess.

I thought I heard it thunder. I thought it lightened, but it did n't, did it? [No.] I guess it had something to do with my going out of my earthly body; I don't just know.

Well, I was 'way down here in Orleans—you know where that is—and I got into a hall one time, and nigh enough to one of these machines, or instruments, it makes no difference, and was trying to use it, for I want 'em to know I aint dead, if I did live nigh on to eighty year, and I aint seen any dead people, man, woman or child, since I went out. I want 'em to know, too, that this guide gave me the privilege of coming, just the same as he would one of your ministers to-day. He 's no respecter of persons; he told me to come right along and say just what I wanted to, and then let somebody else come. I suppose that 's all right, aint it?

He attends to the business of this room, do n't he? You could n't get a better one. I know he 's honest.

I 've got some friends in Wellfleet, some in Orleans, some in Peru and in Springfield, but more in old Provincetown.

I 'm glad I got in here this time. When I was in that hall, all under heaven I could say was just my name, Aunt Patty Mayo. I guess folks 'll know who she is. And when they come to find I 've spoke in meetin', I guess they 'll think I left my Methodism behind. It don't matter, for I find now you make your heaven while you are here.

I just want you to know that you 're building that home every day, and if you do n't build it pretty good, you 've got to tear it down and build it over again.

I want 'em to know I 've found John, or he found me, I don't know which, it don't make any matter.

Aunt Patty Mayo, of Orleans; they 'll know who I am there, and in Wellfleet, too. When you come on our side, Mr. Chairman, I 'll do all I can to help you. There won't be any clouds there, neither; it 's all sunshine. Here you get about three clouds to one gleam of sunshine. The people know how to speak there, too. Good-day, Mr. Chairman.

J. J. Pennington.

I find, as I enter this council-room to-day, that all are welcome. I was here some three years since, and to-day I have been given the privilege of speaking again, for at that period there were some things that lay heavily upon my spirit as I came here to speak, and to-day they have not been lifted very much.

I would like to reach some friends in Chicago and some in Henryville, Tenn., where I passed away. I know I have not been forgotten there.

There are some little business affairs which I would like to fix with one John Henry Wilson, in Chicago. The last I knew of him was on Lake street. There have been so many changes I hardly know whether he is to be found there now. I would like to have a voice in some matters, and if he would meet me privately where I might speak of them I should be very glad. It was what brought me here the first time three years ago, and to-day, as I step into this room, I feel the same load upon my spirit, and I wish to have a few words with some of them in the mortal life.

Lucy is with me, and I met William a little while since, who has lately crossed the boundary called death; that word I often feel should be blotted out, it has brought so much sadness to you mortals. I well remember when I did not wish to hear it spoken. We do but commence to live when we quit the tenement of clay.

I feel that in due time I shall be able to reach some of those whom this matter concerns so closely. My name is J. J. Pennington.

Lucy Vickery.

I have never tried to speak here before, but I have tried to give out an influence of love to my dear ones. My home, Mr. Chairman, was in Batavia, N. Y. I would also like to reach Almond, to let them know that Lucy Vickery is not dead, but has only passed from earth to the beautiful beyond.

My mother, whose name is Sarah, is with me, and so is little Noah, who has grown to manhood in spirit-life, having passed out when a little child by accident. How grand, how beautiful, how sweet, to feel that we shall find our own—not one, but all of them—and that we may dwell together, walk together and hold an interest in what concerns one another, as well as in what concerns the dear ones left on earth. Not many of my near friends are on this side—some are in New Hampshire and a very few in Rhode Island. I know this good paper bears our messages out into the world, yet often only by chance do they reach our friends, who sometimes are angry because we have spoken.

And still we dare to speak, because our permission comes from higher intelligences. How is it that mortals dare to send out revengeful feelings when their loved ones speak to them? They may bar their doors and fasten the windows, yet we heed not locks or bars, for nothing can prevent our coming.

You may prevent our speaking, but we are given the power to visit earth, and the homes of those we love, and if we cannot speak in private, then must we come publicly, to prove that we live beyond the grave.

Alice M. Gould.

I need not tell you, my dear mother, that Alice is not dead, for that you well know. But how hard the parting! For twenty-five years did I dwell in mortal life, and through my will-power staid longer than I otherwise should. Not that I was afraid to go, for I was reaching out to the angel-world, and taught concerning it, as my mother was gifted with mediumship from her birth, and to-day she realizes that Alice comes to her. She not only feels my presence, but that of other dear ones who crossed the boundary before me.

I would say to my father, sister, and brother, that this beautiful world is but a step from you, and when I found my breath was coming fainter and shorter, as it seemed, the clouds opened, and a most beautiful vision came before me, leaving a smile upon the lips. I knew then they understood that I had passed all suffering, for my suffering was severe while I lingered. Sister Gracie came and said to me that "Grandma is waiting for you at the gates," and it was a welcome sound. I know that dear ones would have held me here; the dear friends aside from relatives; dear companions whom I had learned to love in the mortal life.

As they gazed upon my face, I heard them say, "How pleasant she looks, and how free from suffering." I know mother would say, "It is well with the child!" So it is, dear mother. I was not afraid to go; for many weeks I was looking forward to the coming angel. When the gate was opened wide I stepped out, and entered heaven; mother, I would like you to know your Alice lives to-day, and may be of some benefit to you and the others.

I have well noted all that has been passing, and, dear mother, I know you have some trials to encounter here; yet these will only make your home the brighter when you come to claim your daughters dear. I know this message will reach you, and you will say in your soul: "It is well with Alice."

My home, Mr. Chairman, was in Lynn, Mass. Alice M. Gould. I have felt before a strong desire to speak, but have given way to the little children, who are to me an emblem of heaven, and whom I love.

John H. Armstrong.

I lived on earth much longer than the young lady who has just spoken; who is, let me say to you, a beautiful, angelic spirit.

I would like my dear ones to know that I have not left them. My home was in Laporte, Ind., and I know I am not forgotten by the people there. They will also remember when I laid off the old mortal form.

Susannah, my beloved wife, who walked with me so long here, has, I know, been instrumental in giving much benefit to mortals here, and still will do so. I would like each one of the children to realize that we are not dead; it is only a change from the old form into the new—just like throwing off an old coat and putting on a better one that has no rents in it.

I have felt many times, when dwelling in the flesh, that, if possible, I would visit your circle-room after passing out, and send a few words to my friends. When on earth I anxiously waited, many times, for the coming of the paper, that I might know who had spoken; and I feel that those dear to me turn its pages frequently to see if any relative has sent a message. I know, since I passed on, some clouds have arisen; they were small comparatively, but they looked large to some of the children.

My old father, whose name was also John, used to say to me sometimes: "John, when you think your trials and troubles are great, go out and see some one that is worse off than yourself." And it seems to be a good medicine; it helps one very much; you come to think yourself a great deal better off than you did before.

I hope my message may reach some one in Columbus, Ohio. I also have friends scattered in different directions.

Ethel Magee.

[To the Chairman:] I lived in Springfield, Vt. I feel so nice to think I 've got in here, and got in this big chair myself. I see a gentleman down there [in the audience] that has got a little girl on the spirit-side. She comes sometimes and plays with me. I want to tell you my name is Ethel Magee. I 'm so glad I got here. Won't you give me that lily to take to my mamma? [Yes.] Don't you forget it.

Harriet Johnson.

How glad we are to see the children drifting in here. Sometimes they sit silently, watching and earnestly looking to see what others have to say; then, as they are permitted to speak, they try to gain power enough to give a few words, thinking in some way perhaps their dear ones may see what has been said. We all try to do our part, and if mortals do not choose to listen to us when they come to spirit-life, they look back with regret because they closed the door upon us. I know that old theories and church creeds come up and bind mortals closely, and they dare not let them go for fear they shall not gain heaven.

Yet would I ask my dear friends of earth to study a little more and dare to think for themselves. As spirits returned eighteen hundred years ago, they do to-day. God's laws are never broken; they are not changed. What does it mean when you read that in olden times those were seen who had passed through what was called death? What do these words mean: "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body"? You cannot for one moment suppose that your dear ones are "dead." They have only passed on from mortal sight. And how much happier you might be, while dwelling here, if you would make a little advancement and try to learn something of the home beyond.

These thoughts came to me very forcibly while waiting here and noting the privileges which are given to all, from the prattling child of four to the aged person of eighty years.

I would like my friends in Montreal to know that I often visit them. It was there I laid aside the mortal form and put on the new and shining robe. I feel that I shall be remembered in Montreal, and also in North Bend, Ind. My name is Harriet Johnson.

Mother joins me in sending greeting to the boys. They are not together, but your good paper reaches the vicinity where they are.

Albert G. Towers.

Allow me to introduce myself, Mr. Chairman, as Albert G. Towers, of Texas, Mich. I did not live here in the mortal past seventy years without learning something of spirit return, and I feel like saying: God bless the good BANNER! let it float all over the world. It was a precious gift to me.

Dear children had preceded me to spirit-life, and the dear one who walked by my side. My daughter I met, also my son Robert, who pointed the way, saying, "Come, father, I have much to show you in spirit-life." Gladly did I accept the invitation, and I must acknowledge the beauties of spirit-life were wonderful and mysterious to behold.

It has been said to me, while dwelling in the flesh: "Your stories of spirit-life are too good to be true." But it is not so; we can only draw an outline of what is past your conception. Your flowers and your music on earth are delightful to the sense, yet they are, compared with ours, but as shadows to the reality.

How I love to see the little children in the land above with their arms full of flowers and their hearts full of glee. And I have exclaimed to mother, "Could there be a heaven without the children?" She has answered: "The children make up their part." How true! how true! We shall know each other there in the "sweet by-and-bye," when we lay off the mantle of the mortal. Many times when the shades of darkness were cast over the earth have I felt some dear one come near, yet I could not feel sure of it. Then it was but a thought, now it is knowledge.

Oh! mortals, learn what you can of this blessed truth. It is better for you to receive it while here on earth. I know that old theology stares you in the face and says: "Dare not to think," but the Great Spirit says: "Think: for this purpose was your brain given you." I am grateful for this opportunity of speaking.

Capt. Bangs Mayo.

I spent so many years on the mighty deep, Mr. Chairman, that I can hardly tell you really where my home was. I passed away nearly a half century ago, and have a few distant relatives yet left in mortal life, but my connection seems to be somewhat broken with them. The last that I knew, some of them were in Rhode Island, some way down on the Cape, in Wellfleet, and some in Massachusetts.

About thirty years ago my daughter Sena was here, but I lost trace of her. I know they have not come to join us, or I should have met them during this time. I am happy to be able to say that Capt. Bangs Mayo is permitted to speak in your Circle-Room, although a perfect stranger to all within the hearing of his voice.

I laid off the mortal form, which was not very old, away in the West Indies, where it was pretty nearly warm enough to cook you.

The yellow fever claimed me for a victim, but I had hardly time to know it before I entered another sphere. I knew nothing of what is termed Spiritualism. I had been taught, in my early days, Orthodox ideas: that one of two places we were sure to find when we died; but I thank the Great Spirit I have found but one—the kingdom of heaven which is within. You build it while you dwell in the flesh, and if you do n't build it as it ought to be, all you 've got to do is to tear off the clapboards and fix it over. You 'd better build it pretty well on this side. I found I had something to do in the way of progression, and to-day I know I can still progress.

How sweet to realize that, in time, we shall find all our own. I am looking forward to the day when we shall clasp hands and say: How do you do? with never a good-bye.

Harriet Maria L.

Finding the privilege granted me, I have returned to speak in this meeting. I know the question will be asked: "Have you tried before?" Yes, I have, but not of late; and not through this instrument. I felt, to-day, a drawing toward this room. I know a dear one who is not present, but still, as I had gained permission from the guide, I would not stay away.

I would say to my dear one—for it is to one in particular that I would address my message—I would like him to know that these little clouds will soon turn, and he will behold more of the silver lining than has been shown to him of late. He feels, many times, alone, and that this dreary world is cold. I would bid him banish the clouds and let the sunshine in. I know he will say: "Maria, it is hard to do that, when I feel you have been taken from my side."

I must speak blindly, but my dear one will understand my meaning when he shall see this, and know of the little disappointment that came to me when I looked for his face, but found it not. I am happy in my spirit-home. We are not idle there, but have a work to do to help the dear ones here.

Please put this down as from Harriet Maria L., to one who will understand. For certain reasons I will give no more.

Hannah Clark.

I suppose all are welcome, Mr. Chairman, if they do n't have too long a story. Julia Ann said she had been here, and I might come right along, just in the same way. The people at Landaff, N. H., will know who is talking when they see this printed. They will understand, too, what has brought me here to-day.

Henry, you have wondered a good many times, for there 's a thought that flits back and forth, why grandmother Clark did n't come. For a number of reasons. One is, that sometimes I was too late; at another time I did n't get power enough to speak; at another time, I did n't get permission. I think these are pretty good reasons.

I want them to know, as Nancy said, we have got to tell our own story in our own way. I say to Henry, for I am talking partly to him, I have been away to California. I have been where Stella is, and you 'd ought to see how the doors are pasted up; so tight you could n't breathe in that atmosphere. She thinks we 're all going to sleep until Gabriel blows his trumpet. I think she 'll wait a good while. I have n't seen Gabriel yet, and I 've been on the other side quite a long time, as you reckon it here. More than that, Stella do n't just understand what is going to be, or what is now. She might get a good deal of comfort out of this life, if she did n't hold the door together so close.

Henry, I know you have opened the door quite a little way, and you can open it further. Nancy says she had a great deal to do with helping you open that door. I want to tell you, too, that Lucy says when she gets strong enough, has power enough, she 's going to send a few words to Josiah (she calls him José), and the children, too; but we 've got to wait until that time.

Oh! the Lord bless you! what a lot of flowers you 've got here. I just spied 'em. I used to raise china asters myself. Well, they 'll do for you here; they would n't do for us now, after we 've had more beautiful ones.

We thank you just as much for bringing 'em here; it helps us a deal—gives us strength; then again, a good many of those that have never spoken, for instance the children, gain courage, when they see the flowers, to come right up and speak.

Here 's a man that wants to get in, but I 've got the floor, and I 'm going to stay till I get through.

Flavy says she do n't see how in the world Stella can be happy in such a belief. I do n't think it is a belief; I think it 's a kind of teaching, or something like that, because what sense is there in mere belief? I want to ask you if you 'd like it if you thought you were going to lie in the grave three or four thousand years? 'T would be an awful long nap, would n't it?

William Dudley.

I have stood here, anxiously looking on, not so much wishing to disturb the old lady, but thinking when the floor was vacated I would take the stand, and she got a little nettled over it, looking at me so many times. I feel now that it is time for me to speak. I have also been in this surrounding many times.

I was a soldier. I felt like putting my shoulders to the wheel, and I can say I went out for my country's sake.

It is nearly twenty-five years since I came to spirit-life. We meet together on this side and often go to one and another of the battle-fields and look around where we have seen the fight rage so fiercely, and as I have visited those spots I felt satisfied with the way I passed out.

I have tried to use my influence with those at home. I have friends in New Hampshire, and also in Massachusetts, but the nearer ones have crossed that boundary that William Dudley crossed so long ago, and have flitted on with the rest.

I have met the dear mother in spirit-life who adopted me when a little boy, and how gladly did she take my hand and say: "William, is it possible I have found you at last?"

My own earthly mother passed away when I was a mere child, and she also came with her hand out, ready to receive her boy. I would not return to stay. I would like Daniel to know that in a very short time he also will join the number that have crossed over. How good it is to know that life, not death, awaits us.

Well do I remember that my mother by adoption—Betsey—took my hand and said: "William, you do not need to go to war. Why do you leave us?" I replied: "The boys are going, and I must go, too." And I went.

With Gettysburg and Little Round Top we boys are all familiar. There were the poor soldiers, crawling up by the wall, holding on to their sides, as the life-blood ebbed away; then, as the angel-world came nearer to us, also came the thought of the loved ones at home. You cannot imagine the feelings that ran through the soul. But it was of short duration; and it seemed as though the heavens opened, and the loved ones who had gone before came to welcome us, as we have since come to welcome others.

I fell at the battle of Gettysburg. I have friends in Unity, in Newport and also in Ackworth, where I shall be remembered as a boy.

THE INDIAN CHIEF'S REMONSTRANCE.

BY EMMA SUARE BOOTH.

Ye pale-faced hordes, that came across the seas,
And brought destruction with you to lay waste
My people's heritage, and brought disease
And strange, death-dealing instruments to haste
The extermination of my fore-doomed race:

What have they done, these red men of the woods,
That you should hunt them with unceasing hate,
And send your armies like o'erwhelming floods
To sweep them through the world's last lonely gate
Into the misty future's untried state?

Think of their homes a hundred years ago,
And look, oh! interlopers, at them now:
Driven, still driven backward by a foe
Too powerful to resist; they no more know
Their ancient hunting-grounds the stars below.

What is your argument? That wide-spread fields
Of ripening grains and orchards bending down
'Neath luscious fruits which cultivation yields
Are better far than swampy lands o'ergrown
With thickets, or the forest's gloomy frown.

But tastes can differ, and the red-skinned race
That once were scattered o'er this mighty land
Loved in God's works his glorious thoughts to trace,
And marvelled most where ocean, tameless, grand,
Still rolls his thunderous music o'er the sand.

They saw more grandeur in the huge rocks piled
In picturesque confusion on the coast;
They saw more beauty in their caverns wild
And mountain passes, than your towns can boast
In architecture wrought at fabulous cost.

And so your vast improvements all are lost
On Nature's simple offspring; ignorant,
But proud and independent, they have tossed
Their arms aloft, and prayed that God would grant
Them vengeance on the wily immigrant,

Who, coming hither, played upon their trust
And want of knowledge, and with smiling face
Bought their free lands for baubles—gone to dust
Long years ago—till, forced from place to place,
No home receives the remnants of their race.

And modern grievances their aid have lent
To fill my people's veins with rancorous heat;
The unworthy tools, employed by Government
To deal with them, too oft have used deceit,
And made your friendship seem a lie and cheat.

What wonder, then, if they break out in wrath,
And strive to right their wrongs by dint of arm?
What wonder if they throw across the path
Of progress obstacles, and ring alarm
In peaceful ears that thrill with dread of harm?

Go, see to it that justice first be done
To every one, and compensation made
For all the unjust past. Do you atone
For your shortcomings ere you seek to wade
Through blood to conquest in the next decade.

Invite their aged chiefs and honored braves
To meet you where the calumet may be Passed round in friendliness; and, while the waves
From light's pure fount break over you, agree
To guard as yours their rights and liberty.

Then keep that promise sacred, that your God
May kindly bless and prosper all you do;
And when, sometime, along life's rugged road
You need a friend's assistance, firm and true,
The Indian will be that friend to you.

New Publication.

THE REAL HISTORY OF THE ROSICRUCIANS, founded on their own Manifestos, and on Facts and Doctrines Collected from the Writings of Initiated Brethren. By Arthur Edward Waite. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, pp. 454. New York: J. W. Bouton.

Modern Spiritualism has in its progress awakened a deep interest in all that relates to the occultism of past ages, and of the secret orders related thereto. No one of these occupies a more prominent place than that of the Rosicrucians; and the little that is known of that order serves to invest this volume with an attractiveness that few books of our day possess to students of the mysterious. As says Heckerthorn in his "Secret Societies of All Ages and Countries," "A halo of poetic splendor surrounds the Order of the Rosicrucians; the magic lights of fancy play round their graceful day-dreams, while the mystery in which they shrouded themselves lends additional attraction to their history."

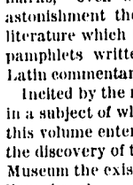
In most books hitherto assuming to give information concerning the Order, the impenetrable veil, whatever their author's real motive may have been, has been made more impervious, and so successful have the efforts made to keep it so been, that, as Mr. Waite remarks, "even well informed people will learn with astonishment the extent and variety of Rosicrucian literature which has for centuries lain buried in rare pamphlets written in the old German tongue, and in Latin commentaries of the later alchemists."

Incited by the renewed and rapidly growing interest in a subject of which so little is known, the author of this volume entered a field of research that resulted in the discovery of tracts and manuscripts in the British Museum the existence of which he has reason to believe has been unknown to previous investigators. These, with other important documents, statements and historical facts, he places before his readers, summarized or in extenso, as their value to the object in view demands; and offers for the first time in the literature of the subject, the Rosicrucians represented by themselves. He claims to have performed the task in a sympathetic but impartial manner, purged from the bias of any particular theory, and above all uncontaminated by pretensions to superior knowledge which those who may hitherto have claimed have never been able to substantiate their possession of.

Newspaper "Gospel."

An editor, who has evidently seen service, thus sets forth in an exchange a great wrong which is regularly visited upon the men of the press:

"The man who handles the local department of a newspaper learns after due experience not to expect even briefly expressed thanks for a column of pleasant things, but he knoweth as surely as cometh the winter that a single line in which there is an unintentional misrepresentation, will cause some one to be heard from as on a housetop. And we may add that when he has made pleasant mention nine hundred and ninety-nine times of some person, place or thing, but on the thousandth time fails to do so, he must not expect to be forgiven. The omission may have been from accident, inadvertence, or even an entire lack of knowledge. It matters not. The simple fact remains, and he will be judged by that."



LOG CABINS have mostly disappeared as human habitations. Many good people have lived happy lives in them, and many great men have been born in them. Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and "Tippecanoe" Stomach Tonic, made by Warner of Safe Cure fame, are reproductions of the best of the old-time remedies with which the pioneers of America maintained their rugged health.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Otselic, N. Y., Oct. 5th, 1888, Hiram Preston, aged 86 years.

"Uncle Hiram," as everybody called him, was a strong Spiritualist. Spirit communion to him was a fact. Formerly he was a Universalist, but for the last twenty years he has enjoyed the knowledge of a future life through spirit communion. He lived the most of his life in the neighborhood where he left the physical body. Everybody liked him. His note was as good as his word, for he was an honest man.
From an old friend, MAJOR CARPENTER.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

THIS Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

FINELY executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

We have rushed to this pinnacle of greatness with a mad impetuosity unparalleled in the annals of the world; ignoring social adjustments, essential to the symmetry and stability of a state.

My purpose being to prove the existence of a class-conspiracy, the design of which is to subvert the principles of our government by a monopoly of all wealth, I have discussed the merits of no measure further than to prove the contralizing tendencies."

The Boston Spiritual Temple.—There was a full attendance at the morning service. In answer to the question, "What is truth?" the guides of Mrs. Lillie said: It has been my mission to look at the subject in many ways—searching the realms of endless truth. There is but one way of arriving at truth, and that is through your own capabilities and powers; and the best means is by investigating for yourself. Further answer to this question was given in a very appropriate improvised poem.

In answer to the question, "How are we to discriminate between truthful and false communications?" the guides said: All things are written for our vision, but our eyes are dim and we cannot see; therefore let us be searchers after truth with the light of our reason—the best light that can be obtained. The foolishness of one age becomes the reason of the next. In our beautiful philosophy we see, hear, speak and converse with the spirits of those who occupy other spheres, who we sense as spiritual beings once living in bodies like our own, but now living in bodies of a more spiritual form. Spiritualism gives us the truth with regard to the continuity of life.

In answer to the question: "Would the Spiritual Philosophy be understood and believed were it not for physical manifestations?" the guides said: We believe that the physical phenomena are an essential element in the progress of our work. Demonstrations, physical and mental as they are, prove very pleasant to experience. We advise always the cultivation of your own spiritual powers; many of you have not read or heard anything more tangible than you have had in your own home circles. The outer senses must be appealed to for proofs. We need each and every one of us to be philosophers and to verify our position by the laws of nature, which prove all things.

At the close of the morning address Mrs. Ada Foye, of California, was invited to the platform and cordially welcomed by Mrs. Lillie and Capt. Holmes—the welcome being unanimously ratified by a vote of the audience.

Mrs. Foye responded with a few well-chosen remarks.

Evening Session.—In response to a question calling for a contrast between Christianity and the defunct religions of past ages, the guides said it would be impossible in a single evening to give all the merits and demerits of Christianity. Christianity might be called ancient Spiritualism, for John and other ancient writers had their phases of mediumship long before Christianity was born; yet while Spiritualism could take every word that fell from the lips of Jesus, Christianity is a mixture, a name, a form of external ceremony and creedal bondage. Profanity is an outgrowth of Christendom. You never hear profane language from a Hindu, or follower of Mahomet or Confucius.

The evening services closed with a beautiful improvisation upon "Wisdom," "Knowledge," "Love," proposed by a member of the audience.

Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform the remaining Sundays of October, also during November. O. L. R.

W. J. Colville in Berkeley Hall.—Sunday last, October 14th, W. J. Colville addressed another large and deeply interested audience in Berkeley Hall at 3 P. M.; the music was excellent, and a fine influence pervaded the assembly. The subject of discourse was "The Development of the Occult."

Starting with a brief resumé of the previous Sunday afternoon's discourse, the speaker reaffirmed that so-called Occultism, when applied to any system of spiritual culture and research, was a misnomer, if by it was intended any intentional veiling of truth, the purpose of all avowedly theosophical societies and publications being to arouse interest and bring to light spiritual truths long hidden from the multitude. It may seem to some paradoxical to declare with one breath the spiritual equality of all mankind, and then with the next pay deference to "Himalayan Brothers," but it should ever be borne in mind that theosophy teaches that adepts, or mahatmas, have only become wise through a long and earnest course of spiritual study and development.

Now Spiritualists have been far too prone to leave everything to spirits, as Christians have left everything to God. There are two kinds of trust in God and belief in the efficacy of prayer; so there are two kinds of trust in spiritual guidance, and while the one is extremely elevating, the other is intensely depressing. The right kind of a trust is a confident, hopeful acknowledgment of supreme goodness, coupled with a conscious realization of the valuable help we obtain from minds more enlightened than our own. The wrong kind of trust is an indolent confidence in the ability and disposition of unseen influences to do our work for us instead of helping us to work energetically ourselves.

Now the best feature in theosophy is the stress it lays upon individual psychic culture; and is it not indeed high time that we set about raising the standard of mediumship everywhere, not by harshly denouncing every supposed delinquent in the mediumistic field, but by so raising the tone of our own aspirations and improving the degree of our inner perception that we reach after and obtain higher and more profitable communion with the invisible world, and at the same time through spiritual culture educate ourselves above susceptibility to imposture?

All will admit that it is one thing to tell a falsehood or play a trick, and quite another to find people ignorant enough to be duped. If we are blind, all sorts of artifices can be successfully resorted to to take us in; but if we gain our sight, attempts to deceive us are futile.

In the popular play, "Jim, the Penman," the author shows how two people were tricked by an adventurer for more than twenty years, solely because they were both misled by appearances, neither having developed that psychometric gift the cultivation of which Dr. Buchanan says will mark the dawn of a new era in civilization. In this practical utilitarian age no one cares much for what is wholly visionary, and were it not for their distinctly practical side, mystical studies would be out of keeping with the spirit of the times. But when we see how necessary it is to cultivate our interior perceptions, that we may rise above the reach of fraud, particularly that life may have a higher object than the accumulation of a fortune, we can readily see of what priceless value spiritual development is to morality, health and happiness.

True theosophy is identical with unadulterated Spiritualism. Vagaries are to be met with everywhere; personal ambitions and prejudices are the curses of all movements; but the intelligent student of the spiritual nature and its capabilities must let go all party quibbles and seek truth through the medium of individual psychic culture. Unity but not uniformity must be our aim, and while one special line of effort may be peculiarly ours, it should be our object to make our work as rich and versatile and our school of philosophy as eclectic as possible.

Universal brotherhood must be our watchword, and as the East and West come ever nearer together and learn of each other, we shall become true cosmopolites, and, sinking all petty jealousies and strifes, seek the common welfare of our common humanity.

In a glowing peroration the speaker sketched the future of Spiritualism, and said that like a good ship, with all the barnacles removed, like a fair and healthy tree, from which all parasites had been separated, it would yet appear as the religion and philosophy of the civilized globe. If enemies attack, and errors are exposed by faithful friends, let us be thankful for the honest criticism which points out the weakness in some of our methods, and allow the present feeling of unrest only to spur us on to conquests never before won over ignorance and vice, which we must ever fight to subdue until they are utterly vanquished.

[No synopsis can do justice to the lecture, which was a very timely and forcible one. Many requests were made for its early publication in full.]

Sunday next, Oct. 21st, at 3 P. M., Mr. Colville will lecture, by particular request, on "Rome and Reason—a Review of Recent Utterances of Cardinal Manning and Col. Ingersoll."

Last Sunday evening Mr. Colville addressed a large audience, composed chiefly of young people, in Pilgrim Hall, Chelsea, on subjects chosen by the audience, whose members showed excellent taste in their selections, as they called out much valuable thought on the nature and object of reformatory discipline here and hereafter, in opposition to prevailing methods of punishment and ecclesiastical dogmas in conflict with the Spiritual Philosophy.

Tuesday, Oct. 16th, Mr. Colville gave two lectures in Hartford, Ct.

Sunday next he will lecture in Brockton, Mass., at 7:30 P. M.

His classes in spiritual science meet in Berkeley Hall, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M., till Nov. 2d inclusive. Each lesson is complete in itself. Single admission 25 cents.

Letters, etc., for Mr. Colville may be addressed 27 Hollis street. He can lecture out of Boston Tuesdays and Saturdays if immediate application is made. He will positively return to California in a few weeks.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—This hall was crowded last Sunday to listen to that highly gifted medium, Mrs. Ada Foye of San Francisco.

The afternoon session opened with Prof. Longley's "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters," finely rendered by Mrs. Mary Nickerson.

President Lewis, before introducing Mrs. Foye, said that when he engaged her for this meeting he supposed that she was a stranger in Boston; but, accompanying her in the morning to the Berkeley Hall meeting, he was surprised to see the general welcome given her—the entire audience rising to join in the hearty greeting. Mrs. Foye was born in Boston, but has resided for the past twenty-two years in California. She is intensely in earnest, and filled with a confidence in her spirit-guides which cannot fail to inspire and carry conviction to the most skeptical.

After an invocation Mrs. Foye remarked that in Spiritualism we have first phenomena, then philosophy. When we first start out we might talk the theory of Spiritualism to men "until doomsday," and they will not believe until they have received some demonstration. Men must witness the phenomena; theory cannot satisfy. There are persons who sincerely doubt immortal life, and the phenomena given are important to reach them. She claims to be a Christian Spiritualist, and asserts very positively that Christianity and Spiritualism harmonize completely—not the creeds of the churches, but the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth are in harmony with the great truths of Spiritualism. The same power that caused the shaking of the house, and the cloven tongues as of fire upon the day of Pentecost, pervades Spiritualism to-day; the same power that sent the spirits to visit Peter in prison and John upon the Isle of Patmos sends his angels to-day, showing that Spiritualism is as old as Christianity and harmonizes with it perfectly. We should go to Spiritualism, then, as we would to the Bible for the good we can get from it.

The churches are becoming vacant and halls where spiritual meetings are held are filling up; and the time is coming when ministers must preach the truths of Spiritualism to gain an audience.

The speaker then made an earnest appeal for honesty in mediumship—each medium doing his (or her) own work in his (or her) own way, and doing it well—and announced that in the evening she would give tests, if each person desiring one would write the name of some spirit friend upon a slip of paper and bring to the hall. These tests are given in one of four ways: By raps, by writing, the person called for standing by her side, or by being written upon the wall.

At the close of the lecture Mrs. Bagley gave some very fine tests which were recognized.

At the evening session, after the singing of "Gates Ajar" by Mrs. Nickerson, Mrs. Foye was again welcomed to the platform. The hall was completely filled, over fifty persons being unable to obtain even standing-room. She remarked in opening that Spiritualism is a science and a religion. As a religion it appeals to our hearts and the devotional nature, teaching us to prepare to meet those who have passed on before; it is a science because it is built upon facts and demonstrative proof; and the time is coming when it will be as easy to communicate with our departed friends as it is with the living. Scientific men have tried to put it down; the pulpit has preached against it, but Spiritualism goes on, and will, until the churches are permeated with it. Spiritualism teaches that no soul is lost—all will have a place in the great future. God has made no soul in vain.

Mrs. Foye, seating herself at the table, then proceeded to give names of spirit-friends, which were written upon slips of paper nicely folded and placed upon the table—a hundred or more—and in every instance the names were correct, and questions presented to the spirits correctly answered.

This is one of the most wonderful phases of mediumship ever witnessed by a Boston audience, and cannot fail to convince any one of the truth and reality of spirit return.

Mrs. Foye will be present in this hall next Sunday, and will answer questions regarding the phenomena of Spiritualism at the afternoon session—the evening being devoted to tests. This will be her last appearance in Boston for the season. She will be present also at the Thursday evening circle, and we learn that the Spiritualists of Boston contemplate giving her a reception before she leaves for her Western home—the time and place to be announced hereafter.

HEATH.

Another correspondent writes: "Mrs. Foye gave this Society a good sensible talk on mediums and mediumship. She spoke in a candid, simple manner, such as all could understand. Having been one of the first mediums, and having had such a varied experience in diversified gifts, Mrs. Foye is well calculated to give valuable information to those who have but recently had their minds called to the subject.

She said that when but twelve years and six months of age, her gifts were made manifest, and she has exercised them ever since, and expects to do so as long as earth-life lasts—and in the life beyond if possible.

She believed in prayer every hour of life, but her expressions indicated her idea of prayer to be a desire for conditions of growth to higher and better spheres of life—and not as the Christian prays for things which may be unattainable.

I consider that the remarks and ballot tests of Mrs. Foye (the latter much resembling those given through the late Charles H. Foster) will work for good wherever presented."

Ladies' Aid Society.—In the afternoon and evening of Friday, Oct. 12th, the members of the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society held their regular meeting at 1031 Washington street—the President, Mrs. A. E. Barnes, presiding. The evening exercises consisted of singing by Miss Ella Wakefield, Mr. Wheat and Dr. Sweeney, Prof. Fisher accompanist, and addresses by Dr. Richardson and Mrs. Waterhouse. After social converse the company dispersed, highly pleased with the evening's entertainment. A cordial invitation is extended to all to visit these meetings. Every one is made welcome.

All who have been attendants at our evening meetings for the last fifteen years are familiar with the passing around of a basket soliciting a penny contribution for the benefit of Mr. Lyman. On last Friday afternoon Mr. Lyman passed to spirit-life after an illness of thirty-six years. Two of his sisters were with him during the last few days of his sickness. The remains were taken to South Royalton, Vt., for interment. The attention of the Ladies' Aid was called to Mr. Lyman's case by personal recommendation of THE BANNER. It has been a pleasure to assist Mr. Lyman, as he was always, even in the hours of his greatest suffering, patient and very grateful.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meeting at this hall, under the supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Eben Cobb, was fairly attended last Sunday morning, Mr. Cobb acting as Chairman. After singing by Mrs. Case, Mr. Cobb, speaking on "Faith and Hope," illustrated his theme in an interesting manner and to the acceptance of the audience; Mrs. Shultz, of San Francisco, Cal., followed with highly interesting remarks on the same subject, branching off in the line of thought to so-called "Christian Science," contrasting it with the spiritualistic idea of mind over mind and disease. It was refreshing to listen to remarks on the power of mind over disease, rather than to idle theorizing that disease does not exist, as advanced by some. Would that more Spiritualists understood the subject in the same light as this speaker.

Miss Peabody gave some remarkable tests of spirit intelligence, which were appreciated by the recipients, and Mrs. Forrester some fine readings. Dr. Eames spoke for a short time. I noticed Dr. Ware, of Maine, in the hall.

The afternoon and evening services were fully attended, and quite interesting. COM.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Last Sunday the meetings at this place were well attended. In the afternoon Mrs. Buck opened the exercises with remarks, closing with tests, all of which were recognized. Mrs. Forrester was next introduced; after some appropriate remarks she gave several satisfactory psychometric readings. David Brown gave spirit delineations; Mrs. J. T. Lewis of New York presented some fine readings; the guides of Dr. Thomas gave two medical examinations which were pronounced correct. In the evening Dr. Dean Clarke again occupied the platform in his usual eloquent and philosophic style. Many questions were asked by persons in the audience, and answered by the doctor in a satisfactory manner. Next Sunday Mrs. Loring will again be with us. F. W. M.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were reopened here Sunday, Oct. 14th, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman, who, with Miss Emma Ireland, Miss Knox, Mrs. Rich, Mrs. Chandler, Mrs. Loomis Hall, Dr. Barker, Mr. Tuttle, participated in the exercises. Music by the Doctor as organist and Miss Grace Holton as pianist, added interest to the services. M. M. HOLT.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—Sunday, Oct. 14th, the Lyceum entertained forty-six members from the Lyceum of Brockton, and in spite of the extremely unfavorable weather the session was well attended—one hundred and twelve in the march. A fine programme of readings, vocal and instrumental music, was offered. Those who assisted in the exercises from the Brockton Lyceum were: readings, Lelia Sharp, Lottie Alden, Edith Keith, Charles Newlus, Laura Edwards; song by Mr. Sheban; duet, Hattie Manning and Edith Keith; address, Mrs. Sheban; selection by Jones's Orchestra; the children from Boston Lyceum: readings, Lottie Giles, Maggie McNiven, Emma Russell, Alice Ballou, Rosa Isaacs, Flossie Butler, Annie White, Lillian Ilich; songs by Gracie Scales, accompanied by Master Bertie Newton and Jessie Judkins.

At the conclusion of the exercises a collation was served in the Banquet Hall. Thanks to many friends who contributed.

The sewing circle of the Lyceum meets every Wednesday afternoon and evening in Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. All are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday, Oct. 14th, the guides of Mrs. H. S. Lake spoke upon "The Spirit and the Letter of the Law." They said: "The terms spirit and letter are used by us to denote the inward and outward forces which enjoin obligation, which is the law. Law implies that there is something to be observed; this law may be in harmony with the spirit, or it may be simply the outward form, which is the letter. Most persons have regard only for authorized usages and customs, quite indifferent to the fact as to whether those customs and those usages conform to the principle of right, as revealed unto themselves. But just in proportion as men and women learn the truth are they obligated to proclaim and live the same; as they comprehend justice, they are to aid in its establishment. Considerations of material gain are not to weigh against the enactment of the spirit of the law. Though opprobium assail, and calumny condemn, the individual soul is to rise superior to these, and abide by its own revelation. The protest of Martin Luther against the violation of the spirit of responsibility in each human soul, conflicted with the letter of the law as interpreted by the Church.

Ancient rites and customs, rules and usages are the external forms only of as much of the spirit as could be imprisoned in these things at that time; later light may reveal their defects or deficiencies. Martyrs, heroes, reformers—these are they who rise into the spirit, and, confronting the external forms, now hollow and unsound, advance to loftier heights, leaving the lowlands of past interpretations. You should, each one of you, take up your march thither, analyzing, investigating, and abiding by your own convictions of the spirit, till it form at last the letter of the law of life."

Several fine selections were rendered by Mr. Geo. J. Parker and Miss Etta Parker

The guides of Mrs. Lake are to give a series of lectures upon "The Home, the Church, and the State." The first of these will be given next Sunday.

Friday afternoon, Oct. 19th, at 2:30 o'clock, a meeting for women will be held in the Library Room of the Temple. Lecture by the guide upon "Spiritual Work."

Wednesday Evening Social at 7:30, to which all are cordially invited. Children's School Sunday, at 10:30 A. M.

First Spiritual Temple Fraternity School.—The second session of this school was held last Sunday, with numbers increased. After the usual preliminary exercises the lesson of "Love" was taken up, and nearly all present gave their views on the subject—as embodied in deific, parental and filial characteristics.

Harmony of the physical, mental and spiritual should be the aim and method of this school, and the minds of the youngest section should be reached through the affections; with those older, the heart and head should be appealed to; those still more advanced, through the intellect and spiritual perceptions. Dogmatic teachings are not in harmony with our system.

This should be a pleasant place for all to come; we would not wish one unwilling child to be here. Discipline and order are essential bases of the harmony we would have. As order is heaven's first law, it is not only necessary, but will be found in practice very pleasant. Let us deserve the name "Fraternity," and make this school an institution to be proud of.

Mrs. Stoddard, of California, was present, and presented copies of her book, which in turn were presented to the children.

Next Sunday "Justice" will be the "Object Lesson"; the morning lesson will inform the children of the Advent of Modern Spiritualism in 1848. As nearly all children have been taught of the birth, life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, so should we, as Spiritualists, teach our children the origin of what has given to the world freedom, hope, and absolute proof of the immortality of the human race. If we are consistent in our actions, lives and emotions, we shall fulfill our destiny by so doing.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. Reliable speakers and test mediums always present in spirit phenomenal gifts. Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn, Conductor.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The People's Spiritual Meeting of New York.—Last Sunday afternoon the exercises opened with singing by the audience of several spiritual songs, after which Mr. T. O. Ostrander spoke on "The Utility of the Teachings of Spiritualism." He was followed by Mr. Stone, Mrs. Morrell, Mr. J. Bentley and the Conductor. Great interest centered upon the address of Mr. A. E. Laurene on "Scientific Mediumship." The lecture was replete with logic and good sense. Spiritualists, and especially mediums, should become acquainted with its teachings and strive to live up to them. Dr. B. M. Lawrence, Wilson MacDonald, Mrs. M. C. Morrell, Mr. Ostrander and F. W. Jones filled up time to a late hour. FRANK W. JONES.

Spiritualist Meetings in Brooklyn.

Johnston Building, Flatbush Avenue, corner of Nevins Street.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

The Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference Meetings have been interesting of late. There has been a good attendance during the entire summer. During the Conductor's absence several weeks, Mr. W. C. Bowen took charge and sustained the meeting, satisfactorily to all concerned. Last Saturday evening Mr. Swackhammer made the opening address upon "Spiritual Gifts," reading and explaining passages from Paul's Epistle to the Corinthians. The conference exercises took in quite a wide range of topics intimately connected with and influenced by Spiritualism. Messrs. Harris, Elwell, Ellsworth, Bowen, LaFume, Mrs. E. C. A. Hull, Mrs. Slocum, Mrs. Ruggles and others participated in the speaking, and all seemed highly pleased with the session. "The Divine Woman" is to be the subject of Mrs. Helen Marion Walton's address next Saturday evening. FRANK W. JONES.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Fourth Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, Pa., is now endeavoring to build a hall on the camp-meeting grounds of the First Association at Parkland, Pa. The corner-stone was laid on the Fourth of July last, and it is desired to have the hall ready for dedication at the opening of the next camp-meeting season. In order to further this enterprise the Fourth Association has instructed its Secretary to suggest that collections be taken up by the various Spiritual Associations, and that benefit séances be held for this fund. Individual contributions will be thankfully received. Contributions may be sent to our medium, Dr. C. S. Bates, 1230 North Front street, Philadelphia, Pa., or to the undersigned.

Lowell, Mass.—The meetings of the First Spiritualist Society commenced for the season on Oct. 7th, with eloquent addresses by Dr. H. B. Storer of Boston. Oct. 14th we had Mrs. E. C. Kimball, of Lawrence, who gave interesting addresses, and also many wonderful tests, which were recognized by those present, in the afternoon and evening.

Next Sunday, Oct. 21st, Dr. H. B. Storer will again lecture for us, and I trust that we may have a good attendance to hear him.

Oct. 28th, Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., will occupy our platform, and other speakers will follow during the season.

B. S. FREEMAN, Cor. Sec'y,
No. 5 Brooks street.

Fitchburg, Mass.—Our society has had a rare treat in listening to the lectures and singing, the past two weeks, of Prof. W. F. Peck. We hope in the future to have his services again. We wish him God-speed in his work for humanity. Bishop A. Beals is engaged for the last two Sundays in October.

Clinton, Mass.—We have just closed a successful three weeks' engagement with Dr. H. F. Merrill, the platform test medium. We cannot speak too highly of his mediumistic work, or of the reputation he has gained as a gentleman during the several times he has been among us. We take pleasure in recommending him to other societies. EMMA MINER.

Dr. Joseph L. Newman.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Permit me space in your paper to pay a brief tribute to the memory of our risen friend and brother, Dr. J. L. Newman.

I met him for the first time at Henniker Springs, N. H., in the fall of 1857. After the Harvard College affair, which occurred in the spring of that year, I was prostrated by a fearful attack of inflammation of the brain, and laid at death's door for a week. I struggled back into life again from that illness, with my nervous system a wreck. I was in a pitiable condition all that summer. In the early autumn I went to Henniker Springs with my dear friends, the late Nathaniel White, Esq., of Concord, N. H., of blessed memory, and his noble wife, for the benefit of the pure air and the reputed virtues of the waters.

It was there I met J. L. Newman, then a young man, who had, I think, but recently come into a knowledge of his own psychic powers. In my shattered physical condition and my broken-heartedness over what then seemed to me the utter shipwreck of all my plans and purposes, my hopes and ambitions for life, I was irresistibly attracted by his strong magnetism, which seemed as clean and sweet and pure as the breezes that blew over the granite hills of his native State, and by his genial, sunny, hopeful nature.

He held out to me a strong, helping hand, and from that day to this, though our life-paths were widely divergent for the most part, so that we met but seldom, we remained firm friends.

I shall never forget his genial, sunny smile, or the cordial, magnetic grasp of his hand.

During my thirty-one years' acquaintance with him I never heard a whisper against his moral integrity, his perfect uprightness of character, and I believe that his moral life was as clean and sweet and pure as was his personal magnetism.

Though his life was quiet and unobtrusive, and flowed on like a placid stream, revealing its depths to but very few, those who knew him best loved him most, and there survive him in the hearts of many sufferers whom he restored to health, as a precious legacy, sweet, fragrant memories of his patience, kindness, and tenderness of sympathy.

The announcement that he had so suddenly been called up higher, was a great shock to me for a moment, but was soon succeeded by a thrill of joy and congratulation that for him "life's fitful fever" had so peacefully ended; and if ever the plaudit: "Well done, good and faithful servant," fell upon human ears from the lips of Heaven's welcoming hosts, I believe it fell upon his, for he was true to himself to the end, and of such natures is the Kingdom of Heaven.

DR. F. L. H. WILLIS.

COBDEN, ILL., Oct. 9th, 1888.

Messrs. Colby & Rich—Yours with draft duly received. If any living mortal can appreciate such favors I am certainly one, after my long life of struggles, trials and discipline. Ever since THE BANNER started I have dealt with it, and ever since your firm commenced business I have dealt with you in the book business in various ways, and never found a mistake and never the least cause for complaint, but ever found all business promptly and honestly attended to by every one connected with your establishment. I mention this, because by this you know me better than any readers of THE BANNER, and when you so promptly and liberally respond to my appeal to Spiritualists, for whose cause I have given the last forty years of my life, it is to me a more heartfelt satisfaction, because I am sure you know me and my situation better than other persons, with very few exceptions. I should be glad to express to each of you personally the grateful acknowledgments I feel: to Mr. Colby for $10.00; to Mr. Rich for $10.00; to Miss Shelhamer for $10.00, and to Spirit Johnny (by advice of my dear old friend Pierpont), $10.00. This, with what Sister Wood collected at Onset, and $9.00 received from Eben Owen of Sacramento, Cal., makes $120.00 toward the $500.00 I need, and which will be strictly applied to building myself and wife a cottage here at Cobden on the common home land of part of my children and grandchildren, where I can quietly close out the few remaining years of my earthly life.

Gratefully yours, WARREN CHASE.

Bridgeport, Ct.

Sunday, Oct. 14th, J. Frank Baxter continued his labors in this place. His course is to give a lecture in the day upon some liberal, secular, religious or reform subject, but in the evening his theme is invariably Spiritualism. The fine poem of one of the Cary sisters, "Many Mansions," prefaced a lecture on "Heaven: What? Where? and Who are There?" The discourse was practical and applicable, and well merited the applause it received.

The evening subject was "Spiritualism in Fact and Fancy." The séance following the evening lecture was one of the finest Mr. Baxter has ever given in Bridgeport. The descriptions were minute and accurate, and test after test was given, some of them not short of the marvelous. The press—particularly the Morning News—has given good notices of Mr. Baxter's meetings, and the paper named has made a specialty of presenting each Monday morning a good outline account of the séance, giving the full list of names, etc., publicly pronounced and described by Mr. Baxter each Sunday previous.

A meeting of the Society for the choice of officers was held on Wednesday evening, 17th inst., and was fully attended. It was lively, but resulted in a re-election of the same board.

Mr. Baxter will lecture here the next coming two Sundays and will benefit the Society on Friday evening, Oct. 26th, with a gratuitous entertainment.

COM.

New London, Ct.—The Pierpont Lyceum will open its meetings for the season of 1888–'89 in Pierpont Hall, Sunday, Oct. 21st, with Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, of Boston, as speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to chronicle in the BANNER OF LIGHT that the lamp of Spiritual Philosophy continues to burn in the "city by the sea." While this society is based upon a platform broad and liberal, the very best speakers the spiritual field contains, the scientific and the literary as well, will be procured. The following talent has been engaged in addition to Mrs. Byrnes: Mrs. E. Cutler, of Newark, N. J., for two Sundays in November; J. Wm. Fletcher, first two Sundays in January; Mrs. E. A. Wells, of New York, first Sunday in February; Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Boston, last two Sundays in February. Intervening Sundays remain to be filled. Week-day evenings: J. Frank Baxter will occupy the platform on Monday evening, Nov. 26th; Mrs. R. S. Lillie on Tuesday evening, Dec. 11th; Mr. Edgar W. Emerson will be with us Tuesday evening, Jan. 15th. No little credit is due to members of the Ladies' Aid, who have been instrumental in making the "Sociables" profitable and entertaining. And if the experience of the past is a criterion to go by, larger accommodations will have to be secured for these entertainments. H. P. MILLER, President Pierpont Lyceum.

New London, Ct., Oct. 15th, 1888.

Portland, Me.—P. L. Peck, Corresponding Secretary of the Spiritual Temple, writes: "Large audiences greeted on the afternoon and evening of Sunday, Oct. 7th, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant. In the afternoon she lectured on 'Spiritual Phenomena,' and improvised a poem on 'Harmony, Home, Love and Contentment.' In the evening she made general remarks upon Spiritualism and the duties of Spiritualists to be truthful to themselves and charitable to all, and improvised a poem on 'Sunlight, Home and Voices from Above,' the subjects of lectures and poems being given by the audience. At these meetings, as at all of Mrs. Conant's, she gave psychometric readings from articles deposited on the table by members of the audience. Some of the readings were amusing and close to the truth; the owners of the articles on the table Sunday said that they understood the descriptions and they were correct; and some of the tests were so plain and satisfactory that the skeptical admitted them to be very remarkable. Mrs. Conant occupied the platform of the Spiritualist Society at Mystic Hall, Sunday, Oct. 14th, very satisfactorily to large and attentive audiences."

Haverhill, Mass.—Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester spoke again last Sunday to an interested and appreciative audience before the Brittan Hall Spiritualists. The theme selected by her control in the afternoon was: "Let there be Light." The evening theme was: "Brain Power"; its value to us as capital in a thoughtful and advancing age.——The ladies of the Association gave a harvest supper last Tuesday night, which was attended by Mrs. Manchester, who, in the course of the evening, exercised her mediumistic gifts in improvising songs from subjects given by the audience.——Next Sunday Dr. C. H. Harding of Boston will occupy the platform and give illustrations of his psychometric gifts. E. P. H.

DEFEAT is a school in which truth always grows strong. Though your disease baffle your physician, if you put your blood in good order with Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla, you can rely on finally growing well and strong. Pure blood means good health.

A Hundred Years a Hero!

HOW SETH WARNER WON A WIFE AND BECAME FAMOUS.

Col. Seth Warner, of Vermont, the famous hero of the Revolutionary war, was a leading fighter for the Hampshire grants.

These titles were disputed by the State of New York, and its authorities obtained an edict of the King of England in their favor. The settlers were stung by the supposed injustice. This state of things brought Colonel Seth Warner to the front. With Ethan Allen and others he actively opposed every effort of the New York State authorities to enforce possession, and finally he, with Allen and others, were outlawed and a price put upon their heads!

To circumvent New York, it was necessary that some one should go into that State and gain required information. Col. Warner, assuming for safety the name of "Dr. Howard," undertook this perilous and romantic journey.

While on his way home he stopped at a country inn where an old gentleman and daughter were storm-bound. The father fell ill, and the daughter called upon Col. Warner, who, with his wide knowledge of simple remedies, successfully treated the "old man," and he finally won this devoted woman for a wife.

Such incidents were not uncommon in those years. When the doctor was not easily reached, months of sickness, and even life, were often saved by some unprofessional friend versed in the use of simple herbs and roots. The health of early settlers and their powers of endurance convince us that such medicines did only good and left no poison in the blood to work as much injury to the system as would the disease itself.

In time of peace the colonel was in constant demand for his knowledge of simple remedies and their power over disease. But it was left to another of his name, of the present age, to give to the public what was then used with such positive success.

Warner for over a hundred years has shared with Ethan Allen the admiration of the American people.

Colonel Seth Warner belongs to a family of wide distinction; no less than eight members thereof won fame in the regular practice of medicine.

Looking to the adoption by the people of this generation of the old-time, simple remedies, his direct descendant, H. H. Warner, the well-known proprietor of Warner's safe cure, for many years has been experimenting with old-time roots and herbs formulæ, and, his search having been finally rewarded with success, he gives the world the result. These recipes and formulæ in other days accomplished great things because they were purely vegetable and combined simply so as to cure the disease indicated, without injury to the system. In harmony with their old-time character, we learn that he proposes to call them Warner's Log Cabin remedies, using as a trade-mark an old-fashioned American log cabin. We understand that he intends to put forth a "sarsaparilla" for the blood, the sarsaparilla itself being but one of a number of simple and effective elements; "Log Cabin hops and buchu," a general stomach tonic and invigorator; "Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy," "Warner's Log Cabin hair tonic," a preparation for that universal disease catarrh, called "Log Cabin rose cream"; "Warner's Log Cabin plasters"; and "Warner's Log Cabin liver pills," which are to be used in connection with the other remedies, or independently as required.

Warner's safe remedies are already standards of the most pronounced scientific value in all parts of the world, and we have no doubt the Log Cabin remedies, for the diseases they are intended to cure, will be of equal merit, for Mr. Warner has the reputation of connecting his name with no preparation that is not meritorious.

Very Good.

The BANNER OF LIGHT has for its editorial motto the following from what it calls "Spirit John Pierpont," and the sentiment is exactly right—in fact, the best "spirit message" that we ever heard:

"Before the oncoming light of Truth, Creeds tremble, Ignorance dies, Error decays, and Humanity rises to its proper sphere of Knowledge."

There is no discount on that; and if the Rev. Mr. Pierpont actually said it, he is wiser as a "spirit" than he was as a preacher in "earth-life." It seems to be a peculiarity of "spirits," and we say it to their credit, that when they arrive "over there" they become Liberalized! We are glad to learn this, as it makes the prospect for the future quite pleasant and shows the increase of liberal ideas. An Orthodox heaven to a progressive man would be hardly better than purgatory; but a spiritual heaven, conducted on reasonable principles and favorable conditions, would be a great improvement and perhaps a desirable residence.—Boston Investigator.

The Spiritual Rostrum.

The Religious Instinct; Its Origin, Growth and Ultimate Perfection.

An Inspirational Discourse Delivered in Chicago, Ill., September, 1888, by

W. J. COLVILLE.

There are many persons who now-a-days question the desirability of religion, as many consider the word religion implies restrictions antagonistic to liberty, maintaining that as religion is derived from religio, which signifies to bind, or to bind again, therefore to be religious implies to be held in bondage. Now while there is no necessary idea of bondage connected with religion, we must all admit in a certain sense that we must be bound in order to be free.

There are no two words in the English language which mean more directly opposite things than liberty and license, than freedom and lawlessness. No one can be lawless and yet free; no one can be unmindful of the interests of his fellow beings and live as though he were the only occupant of the world, and enjoy liberty, for liberty is a pure, holy, divine and healthy sentiment, which unites man forever and forever with the eternally true, with the eternally free. "He is free whom the truth makes free, and all are slaves beside," is an utterance that has been wisely quoted thousands of times in the past, and will be quoted thousands of times in the future, as it expresses the true idea of what liberty is. Liberty is freedom to serve truth; freedom to live a life of truth in obedience to one's highest convictions of right and duty. Genuine liberty is liberty for the soul, for the spiritual nature, for the immortal mind, over which death can have no power and the grave no victory. Liberty is a divine and holy realization of our relation to divine law and order, and the willing subjection of all our material inclinations to immortal guidance. Liberty never concerns itself with the first person singular, with my affairs or my interests; liberty knows nothing of the great I, but always speaks of our interests, of our concerns, of our welfare. Liberty, therefore, is in perfect accord with self-abnegation, and yet with purest self-enjoyment in the spiritual sense.

Without doubt it is natural to man to love happiness and to search for it; it is natural to the human family to try every experiment until they find happiness; every creature seeks happiness, and it is our supreme conviction that the day is coming in this world when everybody on the planet will be happy. Our sincere conviction is, that that wonderful goal of joy looked forward to by all nations and individuals, will one day be found; that as the Eternal Parent is an infinitely happy spirit, all children of the one Great Eternal are, by their very nature, by the essential and unchanging constitution of their being, ordained to happiness. Our belief is that all darkness and discord, all the pain and trouble through which mankind at large is now passing, and through which individual minds are passing, even beyond the grave, is never anything worse than a school discipline; and even though a school be a purgatory, it is still an educational institution.

Our idea concerning man's existence is that every creature, without exception, is born not only with a great desire to be happy, but also with an instinct that happiness is natural to him and will eventually be realized by him.

Happiness can only be attained in one way: in purity, not in impurity; in truth, not in error; in love, not in hate; in knowledge, not in ignorance; in wisdom, not in folly. And as happiness can only be obtained in wisdom, knowledge, love, liberty, truth and righteousness, no matter where we may be, whether in an external form or in spirit, we must be unhappy as long as we are impure, foolish, ignorant, untruthful, unloving, unwise or unrighteous; and as all unhappiness is the result of ignorance and imperfection, it is as the grand old Grecian sage, Socrates, described: happiness, goodness and knowledge are all one, while evil, darkness, ignorance and misery are all one and inseparable; so we must all admit that as there is within the mind of man an ineradicable desire to be happy, and happiness can only be found in the one way ordained by Eternal Providence, i. e., in compliance with divine order, all souls will at length be happy, all lives will eventually flow together in one divine channel, and all feet march together up that great hill, upon the summit of which stands the city of gold, the symbol of the transmutation of all life's perplexities into the absolute fullness of eternal harmony.

Sorrow is oftentimes an alchemist transmuting the baser elements into the more precious. Our perplexities and woes, and even our restless discontent, are all servants of the divine plan that works out infinite good at last; when we hear the words pronounced so often on funeral occasions, "Peace at the last," let us pause for a moment and ask, "What is the last?" The last, Omega, is identical with the first, Alpha. In the beginning God created, i. e., in the beginning of the history of a planet God began to manifest himself, and at the last his manifestation is complete to all souls from that planet. In the beginning man was endowed with a pure and holy soul, immortal, ineffable; and at the last, no matter how long that soul may have been eclipsed, it shines forth in divine splendor; in sheen of glory it bursts from behind the clouds which have so long veiled it and caused short-sighted minds to deem it lost forever.

All our imperfections and errors may be compared to the mists and fogs and smoke arising from the earth, especially from great manufacturing centres; while our souls, in their union with the Eternal, may be compared with the glorious lights of heaven, that are never diminished or quenched because earthly factories and chimneys fill the air with smoke.

Here on the earth we are surrounded with imperfection and error; we are living in a smoky atmosphere, and the smoke arises from the chimneys of our houses and our factories, wherein we do material cooking and engage in material merchandise. We cannot see the glorious lights on high when we are in the midst of a city whose chimneys fill the air with smoke, but when we get some distance out of the city, though our traveling brings us no nearer to the heavens above, no nearer the glorious sun, no nearer the circling planets and the "fixed stars," so very far away, by it we get out of the smoky atmosphere that we ourselves have created by our own occupation and our own very imperfect way of doing business; so when we have got out of the mental smoke which befogs ideas, out of the smoky atmosphere of our doubts and misbeliefs, got rid of all unhealthy sentiments which arise from our perverted nature, and which make impure the atmosphere we breathe—God will have come no nearer to us, angels will be no closer to us, divine power no more ready to bless us; but we shall see the sun where aforetime we saw the fog; the fog will clear away that hid the sun—then will the sun appear. This simile will be found very important and easy of application in almost all cases.

Astronomy teaches that the sun is much older than the earth; but no matter how old it is, the earth could know nothing about it until the sun became visible to the earth. No matter how old the stars may be, the earth could know nothing about them until it became ready to see them; so from man's standpoint of imperfect observation, it appears as though new worlds were ever coming into existence; as though new truths were ever being born; though from God's point of view, from the point of view of the angels, who have passed beyond the murky shadows of earthly imperfection, there are no such new creations, new dispensations and new revelations, as less enlightened minds suppose, but they understand how man, in his ever-increasing intelligence, draws ever nearer and nearer to a knowledge of the Eternal and his works. And so when you sing, "Nearer, my God, to thee, nearer to thee," you must not imagine that the idea of prayer, when interpreted truthfully, spiritually, philosophically and scientifically, carries with it the slightest suggestion that God ever changes his disposition toward us; you must never suppose for one moment there is any such thing as an atonement or reconciliation offered to the offended Majesty of Heaven, whereby he is importuned to have mercy upon the sinner; never suppose there can be any opposition in the divine nature between the divine attributes, so that mercy and justice are reconcilable by vicarious atonement.

But in the light of a true perception of man's spiritual nature he offers atonement who effects reconciliation, who reveals the fatherly character of the Infinite, who removes all that doubt, fear and pride which, as the smoke filling the earth's atmosphere, hides the glorious luminaries of the heavens from man's observation; and as theology of old has often concerned itself with changes in God, and from the very earliest times men have engaged in propitiatory rites, in offering sacrifices to placate a hitherto implacable Deity, as men supposed that by their altars running with blood, by human as well as animal sacrifices they might prevail upon God to be merciful—they will learn in the future that God was never unreconciled to man, but man has, unfortunately, often been unreconciled to his brother man, and the reconciliation which needs to be effected in society to-day is the unification of all races and the identification of all human interests. We must no longer remain unreconciled to each other, and in our own individual nature we must no longer remain at discord with ourselves. Follow out this train of thought simply and logically, and you will all understand the true nature of atonement.

The religious instinct in man is as natural as the instinct to walk, talk, eat, clothe one's self, or sleep. Any good phrenologist will tell you that the organs of veneration, spirituality, sublimity, benevolence, conscientiousness, and all the others which portray religious and moral faculties, are just as natural as the organ of alimentiveness, which disposes toward the enjoyment of food, or the organ of destructiveness, which, immoderately developed, causes men to be dangerous to one another, but when perfectly balanced and wisely unfolded, gives strength of character, without which man would have no intellectual vigor or spiritual power.

The religious sentiments are born in man, and the organ of spirituality, which phrenology has discovered, as well as the organ of veneration, proves the natural instinct of worship, which, because natural, may be cultivated or repressed, but never totally eradicated.

Nature worships in every flower that turns its face to the sun, offering an act of adoration to the great fountain of energy; the animal that looks up to man, a dog or horse looking up to his master with loving gratitude, displays the instinct of veneration, and when men erect high pedestals and place upon them statues of great men and women, almost deifying heroes and heroines; while they spare no praise and stint no gratitude when asked to pour out eulogistic adoration at the feet of some benefactor of society, man, though he calls himself an infidel and avows no faith in God, doubting if there be a spiritual or supreme Being, his natural instinct of veneration leads him to bow down to some superior man. In America there are men who acknowledge no supreme Ruler of the universe, who do not believe in erecting houses of worship, and who disregard religious sentiment and worship altogether, who are ready to almost deify George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and other eminent patriots; those who read history are so profoundly touched with a sense of the majesty—we may also say divinity—of the greatest characters who appear upon the historian's page, that they consider no monument, no eulogy too extravagant when these men are brought before them as objects of respect.

There is in man an irrepressible instinct of veneration and worship, and when people talk about the time coming for worship to cease, for adoration and devotion to come to an end, we tell you if that time does come man will be born with only half a brain; but as long as he is born with a whole brain physiologists and phrenologists will still behold the outward indications of sentiments of worship within the mind.

This true instinct of worship, veneration, adoration, this continual looking up to a higher power, is the lever in man which lifts him to a higher and more glorious life; that moral sense, or conscience, that spiritual faculty which is so closely allied to, and, indeed, inseparably identified with the distinction between right and wrong, or the sense of good and evil, is the magnet within man's being that attracts him to a higher life, the inspiration of the soul within him that causes him to rise to a more blessed level and without which moral and spiritual progress would be impossible.

Unfortunately, man has been so ignorant of his true nature that what has been, after all, the divinest and kindest gift of the Eternal to his children, has been regarded as the voice of God's displeasure, as the anger or wrath wherewith he would smite his enemies. How very, very often, in human ignorance, men denounce as cruel that which in days of added wisdom they declare to be most kind of all. How very often that parental discipline which brings the most tears to the eye and the most immediate sorrow to the heart of a child, in the days of its administration, in after years proves itself, to the absolute satisfaction of the offspring, to have been the noblest and kindest ministration of fatherly and motherly love and wisdom.

So when we look back through the dim vistas of by-gone years, when through the long ages we see humanity toiling up the steeps of time, and shedding blood even, for what we may now term superstition or fanaticism, we find the instinct of worship, even within the savage breast, deepest down in human nature of all instincts, and destined at last to overcome all imperfections and shine forth in its native brilliancy as God's best gift to man.

Let us consider briefly some of the forms which this natural instinct of worship has already taken to manifest itself, how it is now manifesting itself, and how it is likely, indeed certain, to manifest itself in future. Our first proposition is that no one ever worshiped anything without deeming it in some respect superior to himself; no one ever bowed to any power, force or creature without endowing that power, force or creature with superior attributes; and no one ever endowed any creature, force or power with superiority until that force, power or creature had manifested something that looked like superiority to the worshiper.

Let us revert to the earliest form of savage worship, the worship of animals. Wherein does animal superiority consist? Surely in superior physical strength. No one can deny for a moment that the larger animals on earth are man's superiors physically; in bodily strength, in power to protect themselves, in power to fight, they most certainly excel. Poor, illiterate, naked savages, not armed with the weapons which intelligent and skillful nations have devised, could not protect themselves against the marauders of the forest; they were stung to death by venomous reptiles they could not control; they were eaten up alive by monsters of the forest they could not destroy, but who mercilessly destroyed them. Had they not, then, good reason to recognize superior strength in such creatures? Now, as they witnessed in animals and reptiles a disposition to do them harm, they discovered, also, that they could appease them by offering them food; that they would often eat the food given them instead of destroying them and their children. What was the outcome? Surely a system of sacrifice; even human sacrifice grew up in the CHAPTER IX.

A PROPHECY FULFILLED.

During Doris's illness the Carrolls were not entirely uninformed of her condition. Dr. Carroll frequently saw Dr. Placent, Mrs. Mason's physician, and inquired about her. Dr. Carroll felt much doubt as to her recovery under such conditions. They were repeatedly advised through Lydia's writing to "be patient. There would be a change for the better soon." They comforted themselves with this reflection, and conveyed all their information to Miss Parker, at Roseville, who began to watch for Dr. Carroll's visits as for an angel's.

Mrs. Carroll could not bear to leave the city, even through July and August, wishing to remain as near Doris as possible, in case she should need her.

One morning in July Dr. Carroll drove his mother and Lydia out to Roseville to spend the day. Dr. Carroll reported Dr. Placent as saying Doris was gaining slowly. He had advised Mrs. Mason to take her to the seashore for a couple of weeks, and they had just gone, the day before, somewhere, he had forgotten where.

"Then they have been gone two days," said Miss Parker.

"How glad I am that Doris will get away from that dreadful house, even for two weeks!" exclaimed Lydia.

"I most wonder at Sarah's going," said Miss Parker. "She always had a horror of watering-places; but no doubt this is some quiet place. I really wish I knew where they were. I should feel easier in my mind to know just where they were."

"Perhaps Lydia can tell us," said Mrs. Carroll. "I am learning to place a great deal of reliance upon what Lydia writes. I really think if she were to write that my house would burn to-night, I should go to work and move everything out of it directly. I should expect the flames would spring from somewhere."

"It seems very strange to me," said Lydia, seating herself and drawing out her lace-work; "but I know it isn't myself. My hand just writes of itself. At first I was afraid, but now I'm not. If I can only write truthful things I shall be glad to have it so, and so far you say I have."

She paused a moment to count stitches, when suddenly she threw her work away off into the grass on the lawn.

"Why! how strange! It went before I knew it," she exclaimed.

She picked up her work and began to count again, but the lace shook and twisted around her fingers so that it was impossible.

"Perhaps somebody wants you to write," said Miss Parker.

"It may be," she replied. "I brought my tablets. I will bring them out here."

She was soon seated between Miss Parker and Mrs. Carroll, with pencil in hand. After a few moments' waiting she wrote:

"Mrs. Mason has gone to Creighton. She will only stay one week. Bad news will bring her home. Doris will be better. Mary Stuart."

"Do n't you want us to know what the bad news is?" asked Miss Parker.

"It is about property."

"Is that all you wish to say about it?"

"Yes." Lydia dated it, July 25th.

Then came several little messages for Miss Parker and Mrs. Carroll, and one for Mr. Brooks, from Mrs. Stuart:

"Tell Mr. Brooks to continue to search for the truth. He will be rewarded. He has a great trial before him, but he will be blessed in the end."

It was a pleasant, happy day, and passed all too quickly with the trio of friends.

When Dr. Carroll came after them at night, their first inquiry was about Creighton.

"Yes, there is such a place; a quiet seashore town. I can ascertain about it."

Dr. Carroll drove around to Mrs. Mason's house. He found Katy and James in charge.

"Where have they gone, James?"

"To Creighton, sor."

Gathering up his reins, he inquired:

"How was Miss Doris looking?"

"Quite plazed and peart like, sor. I 'm thinkin' it will be for her good, the blissid crathur. An' it 's hersilf that 's kept like a bird in a cage. I jist hope she 'll git a chance to stritch her wings for wanst."

"Not much of a chance with those women over her," growled the doctor as he drove away. "Strange they can't let an innocent girl like her enjoy herself a little."

"Then they have really gone to Creighton? How strange!" said Mrs. Carroll.

"What is so very strange?" asked Mr. Brooks, entering in time to hear her exclamation.

Mrs. Carroll explained about the message.

Mr. Brooks said, thoughtfully: "The more I examine these phenomena, the more astonished I am. Try my best, I cannot bring any theory to bear upon them which will satisfactorily account for the facts which have come under my own observation and into my own personal experience, except what they claim to be—spiritual phenomena and philosophy."

"Granting that there may be those who practice fraud in spiritual manifestations, there is certainly none with our Lydia. She has written me of people whom nobody in this city knew, and written truthfully. She has written prophecies, and they have been fulfilled. It is certainly a power outside of herself, and an intelligent power, too. I am almost prepared to believe it is spirit power."

Lydia entered at that moment and gave Mr. Brooks his message. He seemed too much affected to speak for a few moments. He turned to the doctor:

"Yes, there is before me a great trial. I have been educated for the ministry. If I accept this Spiritual Philosophy I must resign my position in it, for the facts of the one will not sustain the creeds of the other. I will try to make my choice wisely."

"And you will be blessed in the end," quoted Lydia.

"Thank you. I hope that prophecy will be fulfilled;" and he walked slowly home.

It was the Rev. Dr. Packard's home. It had been arranged that Mr. Brooks should take up a temporary residence there during his absence. The year of vacation granted him by the society would expire in August. Mr. Brooks mused upon this fact as he seated himself in the study. He asked himself what was in the future for him? He was sincere. He would not for a moment have swerved from the right way, as long as he thought it to be the right way.

He was disturbed. He prayed for guidance, but the little messages in his pocket were more potent than prayer. He could not quiet himself to read, or write. He put on his hat to go back to Mrs. Carroll's, when he met the doctor on the stairs.

"I was just going back to your house, doctor."

"Let us go, then."

"No. Come in. It was you I wanted to see particularly. I wanted to make a proposal to Lydia, subject of course to Mrs. Carroll's approval and yours."

"A proposal to Lydia!" The doctor's tone was an astonished one. Mr. Brooks turned at the sound.

"Oh—not that, you know. It is about some writing."

"All right. What is it?"

"I want to go over there some day when Lydia is in the right mood, and ask a good many questions. I will have them written and sealed in an envelope, or I will ask them mentally, just as you advise. There are some things I want to be advised about. I cannot as yet get the help I need from any source known to me. I want to try this way."

He spoke slowly and wearily. Dr. Carroll looked at him as he sat in the waning light. He looked pale and worn. Restless days and sleepless nights were beginning to trace their lines on his face.

"I declare, Brooks, I pity you!" Mr. Brooks smiled at the doctor's earnestness. "You will be welcome to come. Try the sealed envelope. We have, many a time. The result has always been satisfactory."

While this conversation was taking place during the twilight hour, Doris was admiring the sunset, as she stood upon a large rock on the beach at Creighton. They had arrived on the 23d of July. They were to stay at a small, quiet hotel. Everything was comfortable, for Mrs. Mason's income was amply sufficient to have it so.

It was late in the day when they arrived, but Doris had already inhaled delicious draughts of sea air. She had never seen the ocean, and was impatient for the morning. Dr. Placent said:

"Keep her on the beach all day. Let her eat and sleep there, if she wants to."

Mrs. Mason felt bound to follow her physician's orders.

No words can describe Doris's delight when she was first taken to the beach. Directly she found a large rock, sheltering as best she needed from sun and wind. She appropriated this place to herself. Mrs. Mason and Miss Shallot found equally desirable places near her. They generally had books with them, but those were tabooed for Doris, much to her satisfaction, knowing too well what the selection would have been.

Five days of delightful peace and rest had passed. Although the place was far from being a fashionable resort, Miss Shallot found so much to occupy her time and thought that she failed to give much of it to Doris, after having seen her safely ensconced in her favorite nook.

Mrs. Mason and Miss Shallot had become very much interested in the Rev. Ebenezer Tulkin, a missionary returned from China. He was a brother-in-law of Mr. Crane, the proprietor of the Creighton House, and was introduced to them by him, he having had a previous acquaintance with Mrs. Mason.

"I say, parson," said the irreverent Mr. Crane, "who knows but there is a chance for a widower like you? You are awful pious; so is she. She 's got piles of money, and not many heirs either. Perhaps you can learn to talk matrimony as well as missionary."

"I think your remarks are very flippant, Bro. Crane. Mrs. Mason is too old."

"Well, if you can't make up your mind about the old woman, there's the spinster; she's a firm friend of the old lady and will be likely to get a big slice of her property."

The reverend gentleman did not seem to receive the latter suggestion very agreeably. He had his own private views of beauty in the fair sex, and Miss Shallot did not represent his ideal. After all, the property question was something to be considered. He resolved to be very cautious about committing himself, although he allowed himself to seek their company frequently.

When they went into dinner the fifth day of their stay, Mrs. Mason found a telegram had just arrived for her. It was from an attorney in Greenhaven. It read:

"Serious business troubles are imminent. It is necessary that you return to the city at once, where I can more conveniently consult you."

"Serious business troubles," she repeated to Miss Shallot and Doris, who were waiting to hear the news. "I am at a loss to conceive what it can mean. I have had very few of late years. But we must return at once."

Upon making inquiry she found she could not reach Greenhaven that day. She decided to postpone her departure until next morning, and telegraphed her decision to Mr. Wilkins.

Doris was glad she could have one more visit to the beach, and hurried quickly back. Soon she perceived the Rev. Tulkin approaching.

"Oh, dear! there's that tiresome man! I wonder if he means to stay near me all the afternoon!" Doris had no time for other thought, for he seated himself beside her.

"Now 's my time to quiz the girl a little," he thought, but he only said:

"A fine day, Miss Doris."

"Yes, sir," responded Doris, as she had done a dozen times already, in reply to the same original remark from him.

"Ahem! Miss Shallot has not come down yet?"

"No, sir. She will come presently."

"She seems to be a very estimable lady," he remarked, leading his way cautiously.

Doris was silent.

"Mrs. Mason seems to be very friendly toward her."

Doris felt she must say something, and she could truthfully say the "Yes, sir," that now fell from her lips.

"I am pleased to see that she is very religious."

"Very," said Doris, quietly.

"I suppose she seems quite like one of the family?"

"Yes, sir. She has lived with us ten years." And Doris heaved a little sigh, thinking how long those ten years seemed.

"She is no relation, I suppose?"

"No, sir. She is my governess."

"Then very likely Mrs. Mason will remember the fact of her faithfulness and devotion in arranging her final affairs?"

He said it in a questioning tone. She felt it to be an impertinent inquiry, and there was a little reserve in her voice as she answered:

"I never heard her say anything about it. I really do n't know."

It was evident he could learn nothing he desired from Doris.

"Where are the ladies?" he asked.

"At the house, packing up. We are going home to-morrow."

"Indeed! I had not heard of that!" He raised himself stiffly and walked hurriedly away. He stood apart from Doris a little while, thinking. And these were his thoughts:

"I think I will venture. She is very pious and zealous, and will make an admirable helpmeet. And I think she may be sure of a legacy from the old lady. Yes—I 'll venture it."

Although he thought decidedly, he was in a very nervous mood as he approached the hotel. He lingered around the piazza. In about an hour Miss Shallot came down and came out alone. The Rev. Tulkin was waiting for her, and the two strolled away to the beach.

What passed between them need not be recorded, but the fact must be mentioned that upon her return to the hotel Miss Shallot announced her engagement to the Rev. Ebenezer Tulkin.

She gave a month's notice directly, as "dear Mr. Tulkin was unwilling to wait longer for her."

If the Rev. Tulkin had been anything except a minister or missionary, Mrs. Mason would have rebelled. As it was, she felt forced to accept the situation.

"I think I will return with you, Mrs. Mason, and make arrangements for leaving at once. Providence seems to have so willed it, and I feel it my duty to walk in the path chosen for me, even though my dear Ebenezer should ask me to return to China with him."

Doris was radiant with happiness.

"Indeed, Mr. Tulkin, I 'm very, very glad!"

Mr. Tulkin thought he must be gaining a prize.

"Thank you, Miss Doris. I do feel the Lord has indeed led me into a pleasant and blessed path!"

Doris was stricken with a sudden reproach. She ran out of the room, and wailed into her handkerchief:

"Oh! he did n't understand me! And, of course, I cannot explain. How can I tell an engaged man I am glad she is going, because she is disagreeable? But, then, he felt 'the Lord had led him' before I said anything, so perhaps it is all right.

Mrs. Mason was too much disturbed about business troubles to give much thought to Doris just then. They regretted leaving Creighton. Miss Shallot was charmed with the place, but the prospect of her wedding in the near future made her quite willing to return to the city.

She took a very affectionate leave of her dear Ebenezer publicly, on the hotel piazza, much to Doris's disgust.

"Seems to me that was too much! Why, grandma! She lectured me for just shaking hands hard with Mr. Brooks. Said I 'must be more reserved and ladylike!' That did n't look very 'reserved'!"

Mrs. Mason agreed with Doris, but refrained from criticism, for Miss Shallot was at that moment assisted into the carriage by the Rev. Tulkin.

The journey was made without accident or particular incident. Miss Shallot fairly beamed upon Doris, whose readily forgiving nature responded, in spite of all the unhappiness of which she had been the cause.

It was too late for Mr. Wilkins to attend to business that night, but early next morning he conferred with Mrs. Mason.

"I am very sorry, madam, but I am afraid matters are looking very serious for you. I think your agent, Mr. Staines, has made some unfortunate investments. I hope it may prove no worse than that. I heard of a little trouble, and thought he might not apprise you of it. As an old friend of your husband's, I feel an interest in your affairs; and the fact that you have at times placed some matters in my charge has made me a little over-officious, perhaps."

Mr. Wilkins had occupied several minutes in making this speech, and Mrs. Mason impatiently listened.

"I do not as yet feel that you have been officious. Perhaps it is necessary that my attention should be called to it. I am willing to listen to whatever you may think proper to say."

Then followed a long conference concerning certain stocks and bonds, of which she owned a large amount. The result was that when Mr. Wilkins left the house, he was invested with full authority to take charge of her business and her agent, Mr. Staines, also.

Mr. Wilkins had no confidence in Mr. Staines or his management, but Mrs. Mason possessed unbounded faith in him, because he was a member of her church. Her business had been in his care for five years, and as she had always received satisfactory answers to all her inquiries she had felt no uneasiness.

She now felt troubled. That there might have been unfortunate investments she had a fear.

The two days which passed before Mr. Wilkins would again call would have passed tediously, had it not been for the preparations for Miss Shallot's wedding. Mrs. Mason was very generous, and presented her with a liberal sum toward them.

Mr. Tulkin was hastening matters for his departure to a distant field of missionary work, and his bride was to accompany him, and in less than a week from the time they left Creighton Miss Shallot became Mrs. Tulkin, and they had left the city.

Meanwhile inquiries did not progress smoothly. Mr. Staines was indignant at Mr. Wilkins's interference. He appealed to Mrs. Mason. She felt troubled that she had doubted him for a moment, and decided to confer with Mr. Wilkins again.

"The fact is, madam, Mr. Staines has some reason to feel embarrassed by my interference just now. I am sorry to have to communicate what I must to-day. I scarcely know how to break the news to you, but you must prepare yourself for the worst."

He looked pitifully at Mrs. Mason.

"Unfortunate investments are bad enough, and through those you have lost the most of your fortune. Deliberate, premeditated villainy is worse, and of this Mr. Staines has been guilty. Through him you have lost your all."

Mrs. Mason was very pale. She could not speak for several minutes.

"Surely not all! Why, I had more than two hundred thousand dollars invested!"

"It has all gone, madam, and—what is more—Mr. Staines has gone, too."

"What! Brother Staines gone?"

"Yes, Brother Staines has gone. He is probably safe in Canada by this time."

"I cannot understand it," she said, and her hands fell at her side, as if she were powerless to move them.

"I can explain it all in detail, if you are able to attend to me. But had you not better defer it a few hours? You look quite overcome."

He poured her a glass of water and turned to hand it to her. She had been sitting near a table. He saw her leaning heavily upon it, and attempted to raise her, but she was unconscious.

Never on earth might she listen to the story of trust betrayed: of the dishonesty which had appropriated and squandered that which was to have been a source of comfort to her old age. Mercifully was she spared the knowledge that her all, even her home, had been sacrificed through the villainy of one who draped the fair cloak of righteousness about him, while his soul was the abode of evil designs.

Mr. Wilkins called help, and James assisted him to carry the prostrate form up-stairs. Doris came in to assist, and was filled with a strange fear and apprehension.

She followed Mr. Wilkins to the room where he and Mrs. Mason had lately been sitting.

"Mr. Wilkins, what is the trouble?"

"Miss Doris, I can only say that Mrs. Mason has met with serious losses. In fact, she has lost everything. She was not at all prepared for the announcement, although I have done my best to break it to her by degrees. She had so much faith in that rascal, Staines, that she could not for a moment entertain the idea of villainy."

Mr. Wilkins began to gather up numerous papers, and continued:

"Unfortunately, I have been obliged to bring certain facts to her notice, the proof of which she could no longer doubt. She has sustained a severe shock. Has she any near relatives except Miss Parker and yourself?"

"Only my brother Morris."

"I would advise that Miss Parker be informed at once; and your physician must be sent for. I will call at Dr. Placent's office on my way."

He left Doris sitting there astonished and frightened. She returned to Mrs. Mason's room directly, and anxiously awaited the arrival of Dr. Placent. She stood near her while the doctor touched the feeble pulse of the unconscious woman.

"Has Mrs. Mason been unusually excited lately?"

"Very much so. Mr. Wilkins told me this morning she had met with losses, and they were talking about them at the time."

"Were you present?"

"No, sir." Dr. Placent glanced around the room.

"Where is Miss Parker?"

"At Roseville."

"Are you alone here?"

"With the exception of Katy and James."

"I would advise you to send for Miss Parker at once."

Doris hesitated. What should she do? When Mrs. Mason recovered she would be offended. Doris felt she must explain.

"I do n't know what I ought to do about it. Grandma and Aunt Amelia had a little trouble before auntie went away, and I do n't think grandma would like to have me do it."

Dr. Placent saw that she was much distressed.

"Of course, I do not wish to be inquisitive concerning family matters, but I 'd like you to answer me one question. Would Miss Parker be willing to come back, providing Mrs. Mason makes no objection?"

"Yes, indeed! It was n't auntie who was provoked, at all."

Doris stopped suddenly, remembering Mrs. Mason was unable to make any defense.

"Then I must tell you nothing need come between them now. I do not think Mrs. Mason will ever again be conscious of the presence of any particular person."

Doris gave a shocked exclamation.

"I think you had better send for her, and if Mrs. Mason recovers, and makes any objection, I will take the blame on myself."

Doris left the room to find James. "You are to tell her that grandma is very sick, and Dr. Placent wishes her to come." She returned quickly.

Then followed a few simple directions.

"Not much can be done. I will call again in a few hours."

world, and frequently parents offered their own children to monsters; they offered one child that several might be saved. Later on, they frequently offered prisoners whom they had taken in war, and in still later times they offered those who were less perfect than others, in order that by the sacrifice of one they might save many. Sacrifices to the barbaric gods of all tribes originated with fear of animals and the elements.

When men saw creatures of savage propensities holding sway on earth, they soon thought of militant powers in heaven, of wrathful and unmerciful gods, especially as they saw Nature bestowing what seemed to them her greatest gifts upon the cruel and ruthless. They soon endowed the power that brought everything into existence with attributes like those of the serpent, the bear, the lion, the tiger and the wolf; and then, when they turned their eyes to the heavens above, and also contemplated the phenomena perpetually transpiring upon the earth around them—wind, thunder, lightning, volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, cyclones and all forms of devastation, which were more active in early times than now—did they not naturally endow the powers who ruled all things with awe and majesty, with power and might, but with very little love, mercy or tenderness? And, indeed, to any one who is not a careful scientist, a profound philosopher, or deeply spiritual in his thought, the universe certainly suggests the idea of wrath mingled with beneficence. To any one who cannot read in the future the harmonizing and equalizing of all things, this world appears to be given over in large measure to powers of darkness, hate and cruelty. To those who look only upon the surface, there are no satisfactory evidences of a perfectly good God supreme in the universe. We do not wonder that awful ideas of devils, hells, divine wrath and fiery retribution hold sway, when we see the lightnings strike the dwellings of the innocent as well as of the guilty; when the earthquake does not spare the babe at the breast, nor the mother who is so necessary to the maintenance of her offspring, any more than it spares the murderer; when the volcanic eruption has no sympathy for the young and tender, any more than for those who have lived a life of sin.

There is an awful mystery in nature; a mystery which scientists, philosophers and theologians have alike endeavored to unravel, and have, as yet, been unable to satisfactorily explain save when, from the higher realms of spirit and the deepest intuitions of man's divine soul, a voice has declared this is only a prelude to the oratorio, a scaffolding to the temple, which, when it appears in all its beauty, crowned with light, the scaffolding removed and the noise of the workmen hushed—when all the forces of angry waves have subsided and there is a great calm, when the rain and wind have ceased, then you will see the earth rejuvenated and perfected. Then you will know that all is for the best, and the righteous shall shine forth in the kingdom of their Father.

There is wonder and dread all over the world, and those poor, short-sighted theologians who can see out of earth into hell, but cannot see through hell into heaven; who can see beyond man to devil, but cannot see beyond devil to the angel into which that devil will at length be converted; who can see the strife, discord and storm, but cannot see beyond it the day of ineffable calm and great glory yet to be revealed—such short-sighted gazers into the mysteries of human life and destiny are not merely imagining horrors or supposing calamities—they simply do not see far enough; their point of view does not reach out into the universe far enough.

Until we have more powerful telescopes and greater powers of spiritual vision; until we are longer-sighted with regard to spiritual things, we shall be tormented with dread of fiends and hobgoblins, and all the awful creatures which people the realms of the unknown; but when ignorance dies and we know good, that all is for good; when brighter light and fuller revelation explain the mystery and solve the problem, then, because darkness is no more, the hobgoblins will disappear even from imagination, and in the light all will know that there is nothing to fear. When in the darkness you are afraid of everything, even of your own shadow, and often of that most of all. When Emanuel Swedenborg in the last century, and Danté centuries before, saw into the hells and told of states almost too awful to be depicted, they did not describe what did not exist; but Danté, who had been educated in Roman Catholicism, and had therefore been taught that there was an endless hell for those who died in mortal sin, and Swedenborg, who had been brought up in the Lutheran faith, and taught that those who died out of Christ would be damned forever, could only modify their ideas of everlasting torment; they could not see far enough beyond the hells, into the heavens which all must at length reach. Any one standing at a point where he can see but a little way before him, can describe only what is not very far ahead, and is apt to imagine there is a boundary line, a horizon, and nothing beyond it. A child standing upon the shore with a field-glass, looking across the water, thinks there is nothing beyond the water—it is all water and nothing but water in that direction to his vision. But those who have been over seas have found land on the other side. You cannot show the distant land to the child on the shore; you cannot, even if your sight is excellent, stand on the Pacific slope and look across the water to the Sandwich Islands, China, Japan, or any land whatever; but when travelers have been across the water and found land, and one comes back to tell the tale, you accept a revelation from the land invisible; there is water indeed, but there is land beyond the water. This is but a poor and faint illustration of the heavens beyond the hells, of the paradise beyond the purgatories, of the good beyond the evil, of the light beyond the darkness.

Looking at matters from your earthly standpoint, unless spiritually endowed and enlightened, or in communion with those who have crossed the seas, you know of nothing more than that which follows directly upon your present state. After a few short years in the earthly body you encounter death and the grave, and there is the end of life to physical sight or material perception. But there are those who can see beyond, and where you declare death they declare fullness of life; where you declare destruction they declare resurrection and reconstruction. Siva, among the Brahmins, is "Destroyer" only to the ignorant; the same divinity is both Destroyer and Reproducer to the enlightened.

The religious systems of the world must come and go, rise and set, wax and wane, and all that will remain forever is man's perception of absolute truth, and this will be perpetually increasing.

We have already alluded to the worship of the lower creation—to the worship of the dark, brutal and belligerent forces of nature, which led to sacrifices of the most fearful character—and we think we have accounted for it naturally, that man, being on a material plane, and surrounded with forces he could not control, and seeing no further than his immediate environment, worshiped the physical force which was superior to his own; and there are millions of people to-day, who, with all their boasted intelligence, scientific ability and literary acumen, never advance further than savages in a spiritual direction; thus they only perceive what seems very unjust and cruel in natural phenomena.

Why do the most illumined minds refuse to bow before the blind force which is the substitute for God among atheists and materialists? Why do they not acknowledge that supreme law or infinite force, a vague abstraction in the universe, and declare that is all we can know about causation? Why do they not bow down and worship the blind "necessity" of modern materialism?

We have only one answer: that ideal "force" is not as good as we are, and we will not worship our inferior; we will not bow to the materialists' substitute for God, because it is an image of clay inferior to the substance of which we ourselves are made.

We claim to have some affection, some intelligence, some mercy, some sense of justice, but a blind, unintelligent force, a mere abstraction, a something not ourselves, not endowed with any intelligence, wisdom, love or sense of justice, is infinitely our inferior, and that which is our inferior calls for our contempt, not our adoration.

Instead of believing that the universe is guided by some unknowable power that brings multitudes into existence, mocks them with noble powers and wonderful endowments, cherishes in their breasts the highest hopes and loftiest sentiments, and then allows a cartwheel to run over their body, or some other accident to cause their death, and that is the end of them; instead of believing in a power which gives glorious life and then allows it to be destroyed by the blundering of a drunken cabdriver or a careless engineer; instead of bowing before a power that gives intelligence, hope, aspiration, all that constitutes noblest manhood and womanhood, and then destroys these attributes in a moment by a falling tile or by a missile hurled at your head by a careless boy, we prefer to believe in an intelligent, controlling power that regards the material body as the most external and superficial vesture of man, and sees the man himself forever safely alive, forever in spirit.

If I am a brute, I naturally worship a bigger and stronger brute than myself; if I am merely an animal, I naturally worship a larger and stronger animal than myself; and if I am a human being, with no other instincts cultivated, no other powers developed than those I share in common with the lower creation, I naturally bow to those of the lower creation, who have attributes such as mine but more powerfully developed than mine. And thus it is only natural that as long as man is on the material plane of thought and affection, and does not recognize anything more than his material nature, he will invent a material substitute for God, which substitute is the direct result of the mammon-worship of this age—a remote result of the ignorant animality of savage times. There is fully as much animality and brutality, and more treachery, in the respectable man of business, who does not care how many wives and children he ruins, how many heads of families he dooms to misery, and perhaps suicide, by his tricks in trade, misrepresentations and gambling speculations, than in the panther or the wolf. We would rather be in the clutches of a tiger than in those of a man who lives for self and money only. We would rather trust to the tender mercies of the wild beasts of the forest than to those of a creature who has more intellect but uses that intellect solely for personal aggrandizement, recognizing nothing beyond buying and selling, eating, drinking and getting gain. As long as this worship of mammon continues, and to make a fortune is the supreme object of life; so long as education has for its watchword competition, and your most approved mottoes are, look out for yourselves, take care of number one, there can be no spiritual revelation to satisfy the highest needs of human nature. There can be no sunshine visible in which we can bask with delight, if the air is filled with noxious exhalations and the smoke from a thousand factory chimneys. Man must get rid of the mist and smoke that is continually enveloping him. When he is no longer selfish nor brutal, then he will be able to accept a glorious revelation from the spiritual universe, which is absolutely necessary to happiness and a true understanding of the plan of the universe.

We are ready to make the assertion, extravagant though it may appear to many, that we know people who have absolutely discovered God. But if they have discovered God, have they met a person and had a personal interview with an omnipotent spirit, in the guise of man, who proclaimed his deity by name? We answer, they have beheld the divine presence with the eye of the soul; they have become spiritual to the extent of entering into conscious relation with the divine spirit made known to them in the innermost recesses of their being. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." A great many people quibble at that beatitude; many want to know what it means to see God. According to the statement itself, no one can know what it means to "see God" until perfectly pure in heart; therefore, until they are in that condition, they have no means of either proving or disproving the statement. The sight of God to the pure in heart is the full perception that everything is good and for the best; that all life will turn out well, and all roads lead at length to the great terminus of the celestial city; that all boats will land at length upon the shore of eternal happiness. By perceiving God we mean perceiving spiritual truth, love, wisdom, goodness and righteousness; perceiving perfect justice in the order of the universe. And when we have found divine justice ruling and governing all, we do not trouble ourselves as to whether Deity has or has not an anthropomorphic form; when we have found divine wisdom, love and truth, we do not care to ask how love, wisdom and truth are presented outwardly to sense or intellect; we are satisfied with the knowledge of the soul, with the perception of the interior nature.

For all discussions in theology concerning God's personality or impersonality, we shall care less than for the changing sands on the seashore. It does not matter whether we can decide as to the personality or impersonality of God. There are a great many things beyond our intellectual range, even beyond our moral perception, and there are a great many mysteries in the universe that are beyond us, which we do not need to settle.

But if we have found enough to content our souls in truth, if we have found enough to still the wild beating of our rebellious, sorrowing hearts, to demonstrate life immortal where we have hitherto found death, and the victory of truth where hitherto we imagined the victory of the grave; if we can stand by the side of a corpse and yet see a resurrected being promoted to a higher state of intelligent existence; if we can shed the tear of sympathy with the mourner who is bereaved of an earthly presence, and yet be so convinced that the so-called dead are alive and with us, that the tears which flow through ignorance we can wipe away; if we can bring wisdom's consolation to the sad heart; if we have the certainty that though every earthly prop be destroyed, and every earthly opportunity denied, though we have lived our lives from the ordinary standpoint in vain, labored and toiled for naught, that there is in the spiritual universe a crown, a reward, a glorious result for our every undertaking that cannot be observed from earth's plane of observation, then we have found the God we all need to find, for we have found infinite goodness; Infinite Good is "God," which is an old Saxon word, meaning the Good One or the All Good. God then becomes a word no longer meaningless upon our lips. All human speculations concerning God and the life beyond must eventually pass away, all outward forms and ceremonies of religion will pass away, but the essence of religion will never pass away. Religion may cast aside its outward dress; its pagodas, temples, synagogues and churches may all be looked upon some day as things of the past and no longer needed; but supposing the outward church does come to an end, how will it come to an end? By growth. The church will grow so large it will cover the earth, and when the whole earth is a temple, then nobody will need a smaller temple. When the temple was small, it stood on a little spot of ground, and people could easily tell you how large it was; but when the whole earth becomes holy, you can never wear your shoes anywhere if you have to remove them when you tread on holy ground.

We believe in the extension of holy ground, in the enlarging of consecrated territory, so that we can find God everywhere.

Where did Jacob find holy ground? Out in the wilderness, where he had but a stone for his pillow. There had been no rite of consecration, no house of worship was built there, but he was constrained to remove the shoes from his feet, for the place whereon he stood was holy ground. Where did Moses find holy ground? where did he see the phenomenon of the burning bush? There was no temple built by human hands and dedicated to the Most High where he received the divine message; he was in the solitary, unconsecrated desert.

Where did Jesus tell the woman of Samaria that God should be worshiped? It was not necessary to approach a holy mountain, as the Samaritans thought, with their ruined temple on its summit; it was not necessary to enter Jerusalem, with its temple of unparalleled magnificence, or pause within its walls, for God is everywhere. Spirit and truth are the only two essential words used in connection with his worship.

In the future the religious instinct will be entirely disconnected from fear, from all harsh conceptions of Deity and moral obligation; the very word obligatory will be removed from the thought of religion, and God will be worshiped in perfect freedom.

But some may still ask how can perfect freedom be reconciled with religion, or religio, which means binding? Can we be religious—completely bound—and yet enjoy perfect freedom? Yes, for you can serve your father and mother from pure love; you do not fear them at all if you love them perfectly. The youngest child can know what it is to feel: Father would never punish me, nor would mother; but when they tell me what to do I do it because I love them; and because I love them I choose to please them.

The only worship God can care for is the kind of worship we have just mentioned; any other is craven, and usually selfish. When worship is offered to God for the sake of receiving something in return, is not the worshiper like a child who obeys his parents not from love, but because if he is a good child he may get a toy or some sweetmeats? Such worship is not religion. There are people who are so afraid of God they worship in order to escape hell. Congregations in times of revival are thrown into hysteria at the thought of endless perdition, and then they are said to receive the spirit, having prayed for the holy spirit because they very naturally did not wish to drop into fire and be burned forever. There is no religion in such experiences. Where true religion appears is where people worship lovingly and truly the eternal God, from gratitude to the God who blesses them; where their hearts are full of gratitude to the Eternal Fount of All, and they love the Eternal with all their hearts, with all their souls, with all their minds and with all their strength; fear is gone, dread is removed from such forever.

True religion has nothing but love in it. The only reason why the men and women of the future will worship will be because they love the Eternal. Now as God wants nothing, and as you cannot possibly do God a favor, add to his glory or bestow one fraction of honor upon the Eternal that he does not eternally possess, religion resolves itself into practical philanthropy; and love for the Eternal takes the form of love for all his children. Religion, rising in glorious light from its chrysalis, transformed into a butterfly, becomes philanthropy, humanitarianism. When we support religious services in days to come, we shall know that others are helped by them, and that they generally benefit society; we shall do whatever we can to help our brethren to a higher and nobler life. There is a divine utilitarianism which recognizes the usefulness of whatsoever tends to promote the spiritual nature, and this will be the impetus to all religious observance in days to come. Nothing is more important than that doubting and nervous persons, in particular, should be helped to a spiritual sight of divine goodness, and assisted to realize the truth of immortality. Pains, suffering and diseases of every name proceed from doubt, fear and sorrow; and to remove these deadly enemies of health and happiness is to employ the only effective measures to overcome sickness and insanity.

LOVE'S LITANY.

BY CLEMENT SCOTT, IN AMERICA.

Helpless! alone I stand! Give me your hand,
Lead me across life's turmoil and despair!
Take me away to Love's sweet blossom land,
Out of this darkness into light and air!
Give me your hand! to wander through my hair,
To pass across my forehead; let it touch
My lips, just once, that murmur you are fair
And tender, Sweet! I do not ask for much—
Give me your hand!

Midnight has closed me round! Give me your eyes,
That I may wake to see life's loveliness,
And gaze into a mirror'd Paradise,
Where we may wander on, no less! no less!
Give me your eyes! that I may look you through,
Unfold your soul, discover how your heart
Trembles at love's awakening. Ah, you—
You will be merciful! Ere I depart
Give me your eyes!

Behold your suppliant! Give me your heart,
All that is in it that is very pure,
Your woman's sanctity; the counterpart
Of gifts the angels gave you that endure!
Give me your heart! that I may set it round
With pearls of prayer, and rosaries recite
Of deep thanksgiving! Let me feel I've found
A way to peace out of life's dark night!
Give me your heart!

SALT LAKE.—Warren J. Richards writes: "A large audience gathered at short notice at Emporium Hall in this city, on Sunday evening, Sept. 23d, to listen to a lecture by Dr. D. J. Stansbury and witness some of the phenomena occurring in his presence. The Doctor and his wife were en route to their home in San Francisco, but were induced to stop over Sunday with us. He gave an interesting account of his development as an independent slate-writer, with timely advice to those sitting for that and other phases of mediumship. An invitation was then extended to all who wished to receive a message to write the name of a spirit-friend upon ballots which had been distributed. These were collected and deposited upon a table. The doctor then washed three pairs of slates, which were shown to those sitting in the front rows, and then bound together by rubber bands. The writing could be plainly heard by various persons upon whose shoulders the slates were laid. There were two portraits and several messages found upon the slates. One message was still wet when the slate was opened, from not having been thoroughly dried before closing. I received a long message from my mother; the others were also recognized.

The Doctor next exhibited the 'Occult Telegraph,' and explained its construction, showing the impossibility of working the instrument without the aid of an invisible intelligence. After several had examined the instrument it was closed and locked. The Doctor placed his hands upon it, when it began at once to give forth messages in response to the ballots which were upon the table, the right one being selected by clicks from the instrument and opened by some one in the audience to prove its correctness. The names of the writers were recognized in every instance, and the appropriateness of the messages acknowledged; in some cases a description of the spirit was given, together with age, relationship and cause of death.

The two hours' entertainment proved most enjoyable to Spiritualists, while many who had never witnessed anything of the kind expressed their entire satisfaction of the genuineness of the phenomena. The Doctor remained over Monday and gave private séances to a large number of investigators.

We hope soon to organize a permanent society; are expecting J. J. Morse here soon; also Dr. and Mrs. Nickless to assist in the work."

BURTON.—D. Higbee, M. D., writes: "The part planchette is yet to perform in the introduction of Spiritualism into families of all creeds and no creeds, is hardly dreamed of. There is a right and wrong way in the working or management of this little oracle. A few simple rules must be understood and observed: Sit regularly every Sabbath and Thursday night—four to six persons, two or three of each sex. Open séance by singing—instrument may accompany, voice is best. Sing ten or fifteen minutes. Then sit around a table, hands in contact, and two most sensitive opposite sex with right and left hand on planchette. Then some one invoke the presence of some loving spirit friend or friends. Sit still or sing while spirits are magnetizing planchette, table, room and persons, so as to get control of electro-magnetic forces and concentrate them on planchette. After waiting twenty-five to thirty-five minutes, either one holding planchette should ask audibly, 'Is my spirit friend (A. B.) present? If so, please tilt the planchette up sidewise (holding fingers lightly on one side) and strike the feet three times for yes.' If no motion, sit still fifteen or twenty minutes longer and repeat question. If no motion, some other one in the circle call for a friend, waiting few minutes, and so go round circle. When planchette moves freely, give this rule: three raps mean yes; one rap, no; two raps, don't know. Then frame all questions so the spirit can answer by yes or no. When reasonable time has been given to that spirit, ask for another. First séance may continue one and a half hours; subsequent, forty-five to sixty minutes.

After planchette is well under control, one or two in any family can operate it. All must remain orderly and quiet, and the instrument be handled mainly by the person in whose hands it works well."

WASHINGTON.—G. H. Brooks writes: "On my way to Washington I spent the last Sunday in September in Pittsburgh, Pa., and, with the assistance of Brother C. O. Pierson, formerly of this city, and the Conductor of the Lyceum while here, organized a Children's Progressive Lyceum, with Mr. Pierson as Conductor. The Lyceum started out with a great deal of enthusiasm and with a large attendance. It has a fine array of leaders and teachers, and is destined to do a world of good. Mrs. Glading was the lecturer for the month of September, and had been greeted by full houses. Our meetings and Lyceum opened here the first Sunday in October, with a very good attendance. The Lyceum misses the inspiration of its former Conductor, C. O. Pierson, but all have made up their minds to work with greater zeal and determination, and make it a success. I was elected to fill Mr. Pierson's place until they could find a new Conductor, which we hope to ere long. Our evening meetings are increasing in attendance. Our socials every Tuesday evening, in one of the prettiest little halls in the city, are to be full of interest, and will build up the social life of the Society. I trust that great good may be done through this means."

PORTLAND.—C. A. Reed writes: "Spiritualism is moving right along in this section of country. People seem to think there must be a genuine vein of pure metal or there would not be so many efforts to counterfeit it; hence many are hunting for the pure vein, and do not intend to give up or slacken investigation. At this time we have in Portland a Mrs. S. Seip, of San Francisco. She is a very earnest and eloquent speaker, and appeals directly to the inner conscience of her hearers to prove her position; her teachings cannot but improve our religious and moral well-being. Sunday, Oct. 7th, she assisted in dedicating our new hall, west side of 6th street, between Alder and Morrison streets, on which occasion we had a most enjoyable time. I intend that the meetings at this hall shall have the best philosophy and broadest platform that can be found anywhere consistent with good morals. New and progressive thought shall always meet with warm and true friendship while I have control. I do not ask the speakers and mediums to agree with me in all things, but shall court different opinions, knowing that thereby truth may be evolved. All mediums I trust will find in me a true friend and strong protector."

New Jersey.

NEWARK.—H. C. Dorn writes that the cause of Spiritualism in this place is prospering. Three meetings are held regularly, that with which he is connected being at present addressed by George Chainey, who is soon to commence a course of lessons on Psychic and Physical Culture. Mrs. E. A. Wells, of New York, and Mrs. N. J. T. Brigham, frequently lecture in Newark. The general interest is fast increasing, and the prospect of a successful winter campaign for the truth is very encouraging.

Free Thought.

Is the Healing Gift an Inheritance?

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At this time it seems to me to be a duty on the part of Spiritualists who have embraced the philosophy as a fact in the nature of things, but who are now engaged in imparting a philosophy which, to the writer, seems antagonistic to Spiritualism proper—the same being entitled "Christian Science," "Spiritual Science," "Metaphysics," "Occultism," "Theosophy," "Esotericism," etc., etc.—to put themselves in a position concerning the New Dispensation which will not mislead an individual from true Spiritualism and its philosophy into the acceptance of teachings which do not, directly or indirectly, allude to the benefits derived from the spirits of the departed.

Doubtless many individuals who are teaching these peculiar tenets, or have embraced those names as a cover "to catch Christians" and skeptics to Spiritualism, are in full sympathy with the spiritualistic cause and know it is a fact, but not a popular one: hence, to get business, they adopt any name or theory, or leave out the true philosophy—which is ancient and modern Spiritualism—in teaching, that they may not frighten some weak individual who will accept a truth if it is "sugar-coated." I would like to ask, in this connection, the following questions:

(1.) Is the healing element which is prominent in the world to-day derived from any other source than that which was known in Bible days as the gift of healing?

(2.) Do the spirits of the departed assist the practitioner in making cures in this age, and in the same manner as claimed in the Bible, i. e., by and through the spiritual gifts of a Jesus, a Paul, a Peter, in the New, or Elijah and Elisha in Old Testament times?

(3.) Why should individuals who recognize the return of departed spirits, with intelligence and power to assist and restore the sick to health, also to diagnose disease, not admit and teach the same in their classes to those who had not been convinced of the truthfulness of the healing element from that source?

(4.) Is there anything new in the philosophy attached with various new names to Spiritualism that is practical, which is not included in the Spiritualistic Philosophy, such as has been advocated for the past forty years by well-informed Spiritualists? the same being obtained from departed spirits by and through mediumship?

(5.) Is not the entire subject, so far as explainable, simply the "gift of healing," which is an inheritance, and cannot be obtained at colleges from teachings—the same being epitomized in the simple words "adapted power"?

(6.) Is not the healing element more connected with the material and spiritual make-up of the individual than it is in the mind of the individual?

(7.) Do not the users of these new names for the old philosophy (of the gift of healing) make a mistake when they attribute to mind the power to create disease—also to eradicate it? And is not disease caused more largely from the organism becoming over-taxed or exhausted? thus generating a superabundance of electricity or magnetism, and causing an unbalancing of the forces of the individual, destroying the equilibrium of the entire system, and thereby affecting the mind and causing it to become inharmonious, disease and sickness being the result? And is not this untoward condition removable, by the human organism becoming restored to its equilibrium through some adapted healing element, either with or without human contact, according to the susceptibility of the individual affected? [Often this is accomplished with animal magnetism or electric force—or the more potent force of spirit power, which exists with well unfolded individuals who possess the healing gift.]

(8.) Has either magnetism, electricity or spirit force, any intelligence? and if not, are they not the life-giving elements which sustain the earthly body, and which are utilized by human beings when they are understood and comprehended?

(9.) If the no disease theory—or that which claims that all disease is in the mind or imagination of the individual—be true, is it not a duty for these same "no disease" theorists to establish the fact at once in some notable way, such as curing yellow fever patients in Florida, so that others can see it to be such?

(10.) Why is it that some of these new discoverers (?) can teach, and others can practice, if what they are treating of be not a natural gift which some have and others do not possess—just the same as set forth in the Spiritualistic Philosophy? Many individuals can teach the laws of life and health, but do not possess the gift of healing to any great extent; and it is the same with those who claim to give massage treatment: in a class of a dozen such individuals it is admitted that not more than four out of the number will be successful in giving treatments which will benefit the sick, while all can give treatments alike; this clearly shows that it is "power" that makes the cures, and not theory or the process made use of; and still the regular medical doctors will recommend massage treatment instead of magnetic—they both being really one and the same thing, where power finds expression in the operator.

When will the church people, and also the medical men who claim to be "regulars," admit the existence of this power to heal the sick, which has been practically acknowledged in all nations and ages in the past, and of a necessity must be continued to the present day—the laws of the universe being the same and unchangeable?

(11.) If Spiritualism is true, and spiritual gifts are as common to-day as they were in the past, why should those advocating the healing gift not admit the fact, instead of sailing under all sorts of flags except the essential one: i. e., Spiritualism proper? [The healing gift should not be considered a secret to be taught at colleges or in classes, but as free as the sunshine, and the air we breathe, when an individual possesses the power within him (or her) self to exercise that spiritual gift of healing.]

Is it not far better for Spiritualists to be identified as such? What have the above-cited "Societies" under their various names done that Spiritualists have not accomplished? Let the true friends of Spiritualism hold unswervingly and openly to their basic facts, for in them they have a foundation that can never be uprooted or destroyed.

DREAMTHORP. A Book of Essays Written in the Country. By Alexander Smith. 16mo, cloth, pp. 299. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Whoever has read the author's thoroughly enjoyable poem, "A Life Drama," and his "City Poems," will know what to look for and find in these prose emanations from the same pen. Though termed "prose" they contain many passages that are highly poetical, and a better book for a quiet hour is seldom if ever met with. It is one of the "Good Company" series of the publishers.

LORD HOPE'S CHOICE. A Novel by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens, author of "Fashion and Famine," etc. 12mo, paper, pp. 312. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers.

One of the most popular works of fiction of a writer whose reputation as an author won for whatever she produced an extended patronage. The present copy is included in Peterson & Brothers' twenty-five cent series.

WHITTIER AND HIS POEMS.—To an Englishman who lately visited him Mr. Whittier expressed his surprise that his guest should know so much of his poetry by heart. "I wonder," he said, "thou shouldst burden thy memory with all that rhyme. It is not well to have too much of it; better get rid of it as soon as possible. Why, I can't remember any of it. I once went to hear a wonderful orator, and he wound up his speech with a poetical quotation, and I clapped with all my might. Some one touched me on the shoulder and said, 'Do you know who wrote that?' I said, 'No, I do n't; but it 's good.' It seems I had written it myself. The fault is, I have written far too much. I wish half of it was in the Red Sea."

Blessed is the man who, having nothing to say, abstains from giving us wordy evidence of it.—Theophrastus Such.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

Other Tales and Sketches.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

In one volume of 515 pages, neatly and substantially bound in cloth. Price $1.25, postage free.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle-Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages, the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presention of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world, and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

"The Real Origin of the Spiritual Phenomena."

We shall publish next week, from the pen of PROF. HENRY KIDDLE, of New York City, an interesting and important Review, bearing the above title, in which the singular and scientific (?) conclusions arrived at in a recent work, "Posthumous Humanity," by Adolphe D'Assier, find skillful and accurate dissection.

Ecclesiasticism in State and Schools.

The secular view of religion in the State and the Bible in the public schools was set forth in a pamphlet by ex-Judge Hurlbut of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, some eighteen years since, a copy of which now lies before us. It is quite needless to say that this most rational view is presented with the utmost clearness and genuine ability. It is the habit of the clergy to enter the lists of this engrossing controversy, and the statements and arguments of a trained publicist are therefore the more worthy of profound attention. In Judge Hurlbut's brief introduction to his essay, doubly timely at the present juncture, he quotes Lord Macaulay, with whom he agrees in saying that "the experience of many ages proves that men may be ready to fight to the death, and to persecute without pity, for a religion whose creed they do not understand and whose precepts they habitually disobey."

To begin with, the Judge distinctly proposes to amend Article I. of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, forbidding Congress or any State to make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting its free exercise; but additionally authorizing and empowering Congress to "enact such laws as it shall deem necessary to control or prevent the establishment or continuance of any foreign hierarchical power in this country, founded on principles or dogmas antagonistic to republican institutions." The writer takes the position openly that the Pope of Rome should be compelled to abstain from making his appointments in the United States, since the present course of proceeding subjects our democratic state to a power against which loyal Catholic monarchies of Europe revolt. Vattel does not hesitate to pronounce such appointments by the Pope a violation of the laws of nations and the principles of common policy. "A people ought not," he says, "to receive laws from strangers, to suffer them to interfere in their affairs, nor to take from them their advantages."

"It is clear," asserts Judge Hurlbut, "that there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent the Pope from appointing a lord cardinal for the United States, or elevating any citizen to that dignity, who does not hold office under the general government. The prince-bishop of Rome does not enjoy a like privilege in the well-regulated monarchies where his religion is established. Surely Rome is regarded by us, in the language of the treaties, as "the most favored nation," which is probably owing to the "distinguished consideration" with which our countrymen are accustomed to regard modest merit. "The free toleration of all religions does not imply a tame acquiescence in the growth of a foreign organization, with an order of nobles, or quasi nobles, of foreign appointment, displaying a pomp and power wholly at variance with the spirit and principles of a democratic state." A Catholic writer of high and deserved distinction is cited as saying that "the spread of Catholicity, associated with the foreign civilization throughout the country, would destroy the order of American civilization, and reproduce in our New World that of the Old World, on which ours is, in our judgment, a decided advance." It is an advance, too, in the main because we have discarded the theocratic element in the government and adopted the democratic.

Coming to the school question, Judge Hurlbut lays down the proposition plainly that a free state establishes schools as means vital to its existence. He adds, that when those who deny to the state any power whatever to tax for educational purposes can show that a free state can flourish without the exercise of this power, they will be clearly in the right. For himself, he esteems a proper state establishment for common education the main pillar of the republic. A tax being a matter of compulsion, when the citizen is thus coerced he can demand with justice that the fund to which he contributes shall be applied to the legitimate purposes of common education, such as a democratic state can properly promote and no other; and that he shall enjoy equal advantages with all the other contributors to the common fund. In view of this, the founders of the common school in New York State, in their report, limited the instruction to such elements of learning as were absolutely necessary for the man and the citizen, and which the children of the poor and humble could readily attain between the ages of five and fifteen years. They likewise recommended that "the principles of morality" be taught; but were wholly silent on the subject of religion. The education was to be such as to offend no one's prejudice, assail no one's faith, and confer only an unmixed benefit upon the youth of a democratic state.

The common school was intended in every State to be neutral ground where the children of the Christian and the heathen, the Catholic and the Protestant, the Unitarian and the Trinitarian, the Jew and the Infidel might, without offense to the parents, be taught certain elements of learning necessary for their welfare and the safety of the state. It was by this standard, and no other, that the principles of morality were to be taught in the schools. The basis and foundation of them all is common to all people alike. Confucius, Socrates, Jesus, taught the fundamental rule of all conduct, the simple rule of justice between man and man. The principle of morality contained in this rule is fortunately sufficient for the purposes of a democratic state. He who thoroughly observes it will never become an improper or dangerous citizen of a just government. It is a maxim of natural equity and justice, springing from the sentiments proper to humanity. The state needs only so much of morality as makes men just, since justice is the only function of a democratic government.

"A democratic state," remarks Judge Hurlbut, "does not decide between the idea of a personal deity and a supreme divine power in nature, and will not therefore encourage an authority or bias in favor of one idea or the other. And yet, if it places the Bible in the schools, (as a whole or by selections) it really seems to determine in favor of a personal divinity." We may call ourselves a Christian people, but we are a democratic State, and such a State, as a State, can have no religious dogmas engrafted upon it.

A New Departure by the Jews.

The Jews in this country are, as is well known, required by the law of Israel to observe their Sabbath, which occurs on Saturday, with rigid strictness, and consequently are obliged to give over work and business on that day; while the law of the State forbids work and business on the following day, Sunday, and thus they are left with but five days in the week to earn their living and make any advance in prosperity. It is evident that the rest of the community has one day's clear advantage of the Israelites in our midst. As the Jew cannot work on Sunday out of regard for the consciences of other people, and cannot really afford to lose Saturday beside, he is between the upper and nether millstone, and a conflict is all the time going on in his mind between his individual interest and his religious duty. As a local contemporary puts it, the synagogue has been deserted for the market and the workshop, and the Christian Sunday has been used for social dissipation.

Rabbi Schindler, a Jew of distinguished attainments and marked original power, has led off in Boston in a movement that promises to supply the want so long felt by his race and religion, by instituting in this city a course of Sunday lectures, and opened it on the first Sunday of the current month. It is to be taken for the initiation of a quiet and sensible reform, whose aim is to establish better relations between the Jewish people and the society around them. Yet it is in no sense to be interpreted as a surrender of the historic Jewish Sabbath or any part of its meaning. While it does involve giving up of Saturday to the interests that are nowhere else suffered to slumber around them on that day, it practically transposes the observance of the Jewish Sabbath to the Christian Sunday—and that is all. Still, even that will be accounted a bold step to take by Jewish authority in this country.

In opening his first Sunday lecture, Rabbi Schindler told his hearers that they did not meet to celebrate a festival of the weekly Sabbath, nor even confessedly for divine worship. But he admitted that the practice was a new one in the history of the Israelites of Boston. He acknowledged that the sensation was a new one. He advised them that these lectures were to be of a moral and religious nature, and were intended to interpret and propagate Judaism and nothing else. The Jewish religion emerged from a chaos of polytheism. Its founders appointed as a day of rest that one which suited them best, and shrouded that day with sanctity.

But times have changed since then. The Jews are no longer a nation, nor do they own a country. They cannot enforce the observance of their Sabbath by legal means. "All endeavors to run counter to the current of the time," said the Rabbi, "have proven to be disastrous to ourselves. We have to reckon with realities; we have to calculate with facts; we live scattered among nations, among vast majorities who have settled upon another day of rest, and we are placed, unfortunately, between the horns of the dilemma either to yield to the majority or to observe two days of rest." He admits that in observing Sunday rather than Saturday for the benefactions of religious instruction, they concede and do not concede to those around them, as the case may be. Historically, he insists that the Jewish Sabbath is right as it is. The Jews were the first nation to grasp and proclaim the truth that one day out of seven is absolutely needed for the welfare of human society. But they bow in this matter before the majority, and are satisfied to abstain from work on the day ordained by the State as a day of rest.

The Rabbi claimed that the gain would be in putting a check upon irreligion. The Jewish children will learn that they belong to a religious community which is one of the oldest in the world—a religion which has proclaimed the truth that there is but one God, and that all mankind are one common brotherhood. They will learn their duties toward God and their fellow-men, to distinguish between right and wrong, between virtue and vice, good and evil. They will likewise be taught that man has higher aspirations than the pursuit of material wealth. In short, they will receive instruction in morality and guidance in relation to their conduct in life.

Above all else, it is the purpose and policy of the new Jewish Sunday lectures to reform the institution of Judaism so far as to adapt it to the needs of the current age and time, and to break down that exclusiveness long practiced by the Jews as a class, which has generated a fatal temper of religious indifference and listlessness. It is that cancer of exclusiveness, says Rabbi Schindler, which has even eaten through the vitals of Judaism while they have pretended to nurse it. The Israelite congregations have been mere stock companies, to provide for the mutual benefit of their members. They ought rather to exist to impart the needed instruction of how to lead a moral life.

"Christian Science" and Psychometry.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal would like to be told what the matter is with the Christian Scientists, that they have failed so notably to improve their Florida opportunity, if, as they say, fever, sickness and pain have no real existence, being, according to their theory, mere "ideas," children of a "disordered imagination." In that case, he says, the Scientist would be in no danger. The people of Florida at large are foolish enough to entertain the "idea" that they are having yellow fever and are dying of it. He thinks there never was such a chance for Christian Science to approve itself and make converts, and calls on its votaries to come forward and show themselves. He cannot believe they are afraid of catching "this epidemic and fatal idea." Conscience, if not humanity, should compel scores of them, safe in their superior knowledge and strength, to offer their services, even if only as nurses. Faith without works, he reminds them, is dead.

Hall's Journal of Health devotes its leading article in the October issue to the subject of "Christian Science," which it asserts to be only another name for the "faith cure." The endeavor, under this practice, is to induce by prayer the aid of the Deity in effecting the cure, or else it is a recognition of the supremacy of mind over all forms of matter, and particularly of the individual mind over the anatomical structure through whose organs it expresses itself. The human organism is compared by physiologists to an electric machine with its connecting wires, the brain being the battery, the sensatory nerves the transmitting wires, and the will the operator.

The millions of cells composing the body are constantly undergoing waste and replenishment. Out of death comes life, all nature through. The decay produced by every effort of the mind or body must be provided for by the means at hand for re-supply by purely natural processes, or the bodily health becomes permanently impaired. When the power of recuperation is lost in the general decay, death ensues.

Now the Christian Scientists, says the Journal of Health, wholly ignore these natural processes by means of which alone the worn-out tissues are ejected, and new ones are supplied, and the impaired body is restored to healthfulness. Without doubt, as the Journal believes, many persons through weakness and long-suffering give themselves up to die without the energy to make the least mental or physical effort toward restoration, even though no real disease is apparent. All that such persons need is to have their minds reassured, when a strong counter action in the right direction will often effect a change from hypochondria to convalescence and eventually to health.

The manifest indifference shown by the professed faith-curers to the yellow fever devastation excites the Journal's inquiry if yellow fever and other contagious diseases are out of their reach; and if they will continue to treat only those who have become victims of hypochondria and have lost all their will-power. It does not presume to question that all power is of the spirit. For this reason it looks to the Spiritual Philosophy for a final solution of the cause of the cures which have been effected at harmonious gatherings, when all minds are centered upon the same object, a singleness of purpose being the governing rule. It teaches and proves that every human being is encompassed by an aura formed of his own characteristics, and surely determinative of his moral and intellectual value. Psychometry, or soul-measure, explains the whole mystery of the mind cure. But neither the prayers of the zealots nor the faith of the afflicted, except so far as they create harmony on the one part and receptivity on the other, have any effect whatever.

The Diatribe

Against the spiritualistic physical manifestations which took place in the Academy of Music in New York City last Sunday, was the most infinitesimally weak effort ever attempted by the enemies of our Cause to cast obliquy upon it—judging from the reports that have reached us through the New York World and The Sun of the 22d inst. The explanation of how independent slate-writing is done was so ridiculous that even the skeptics present were dissatisfied. The whole thing was a tissue of misrepresentation from beginning to end, as every Spiritualist conversant with the genuine manifestations can fully attest. But the most absurd part of the performance was the explanation (?) which Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane endeavored to make as to how the raps are made, by attributing them to the action of the toe-joints, the same as the learned (?) Doctors alleged "the trick was done" nearly forty years ago in Buffalo, N. Y. But, for the edification of those Spiritualists who may not have seen the sensational reports in question, we copy verbatim the last paragraph of The Sun's missive, which will be sufficient to show the precise tenor of the whole affair. Here it is:

"Doctors from the audience went upon the stage, and felt the woman's foot as she made the motions by which she used to do the rapping. Then she stood in her stocking feet on a little pine platform six inches from the floor, and without the slightest perceptible movement of the person made raps audible all over the theatre. She went down into the audience, and there, resting her foot on another person's, showed how by the motion of the great toe the sound was produced"!

Can anything be more preposterous than this?

Grand Reception to Mrs. Ada Foye.

Members of the several spiritual societies of Boston will unite in tendering to Mrs. Foye, of San Francisco, a public reception at Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Chandler streets, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 30th. It will be an attractive musical and literary entertainment, and Mrs. Foye will give an exhibition of her wonderful phase of mediumship. Exercises will commence at 7:30.

The Independent Telegraph Instrument

Is the latest invention on the part of the spirit-world to convince skeptics of the reality of communication between the two spheres of life. It consists simply of an ordinary telegraphic key enclosed in a case between two slates and secured against the possibility of human contact. To this is attached a "sounder," the same as is used in every telegraph office in the world. It was first brought out by Mr. W. S. Rowley of Cleveland, Ohio, and is still used by him for medical purposes. THE BANNER gave a lengthy account of the phenomenon when the facts were first made public. Other mediums, it seems, are now using the new invention. A communication comes to us from Denver, Col., of a recent date, wherein Mr. E. S. Bennett, the writer, after alluding to Dr. Stansbury's wonderful slate-writings, says:

"The principal interest at Music Hall centered in the 'occult telegraph.' The instrument was placed upon a table, and freely inspected by Mr. A. O. Rhodes, Principal of the Denver School of Telegraphy, and Mr. L. C. Rice, Manufacturer of Telegraph Instruments and supplies.

These gentlemen stated to the audience that the apparatus was such as is used everywhere for telegraphic communication, and that there were no hidden connections with ground wires as far as they could detect. The doctor seated himself at the table, simply placing his hands upon the box; the experts seated themselves one on either side. In a few seconds the first click was heard; this was repeated, and then followed a succession of telegraphic dots and dashes, and soon the operators were busy taking down the messages. The clicking of the instrument, which was a new Western Union sounder, could be heard in all parts of the auditorium. The position of the box was frequently changed, working equally well on the doctor's head as on the table. The principal message was from Samuel Bowles, formerly of the Springfield Republican, and was as follows:

'77,' 'I have a message for you.'

'Ladies and Gentlemen—The spirit-world comes into closer communion with you to-day than ever before. Extraordinary methods are being devised by the higher intelligences to attract the attention of the scientific world in order to oppose the materialistic tendencies of the age. The spiritual telegraph will demonstrate the immortality of the soul. (Signed) SAMUEL BOWLES.'

This message was corroborated by each of the operators, as well as by a gentleman in the audience, who had taken it as received. Mr. Rhodes stated to the audience that he was not a Spiritualist, and that he could not tell how the instrument was operated unless by a combination of human magnetism and electricity. So far as he could detect there was no opportunity for nor attempt at fraud. He believed it to be an honest instrument and just as represented. (This statement was loudly applauded.)

The slates were then opened and found to contain twelve closely-written messages, all of which when read were recognized by persons in the audience.

Altogether the séance was a marvelous one, and produced a profound impression upon the audience. At the close of the meeting scores of persons came upon the platform and congratulated the Doctor upon his success, while others critically examined the instrument and slates."

Hygienic Advice.

A correspondent forwards us the following letter, which we have submitted to the Spirit President of our Public Circles, with the appended result:

"The writer is a most intense sufferer from nervous and mental debility, loss of sleep and nervous sensations too numerous to describe; is driven from the house by terrible and inexpressible feelings of gloom and desolation, and a sense of being alone, and cannot stay in his room at night; his general health is, or seems to be, tolerably good, but the mental distress for five or six years past has been such that it seems utterly impossible for him to live!

Would such a sufferer improve his condition by violently passing out? or can anything be done to alleviate his state? He has been told by mediums that his troubles are caused by some spirit-influence acting on him. Is this correct? and if so, what is the reason for so doing, and what can be done to rid one of such influence? The nervous system has been greatly overtaxed by various causes. Can such sufferings as these be for any purpose? (as he has been often told.) He considers it an actual duty to pass out of this scene of misery.

Of course every method has been tried for relief without success. He has been unable to do any work for many years on account of this nervous state, and the want of some very light employment adds to his wretchedness."

ANS.—This is a case of nervous exhaustion, and one that a physician should study and advise upon. An "overtaxed" system rebels against its treatment in the symptoms described by our correspondent. The application of vital magnetism by some congenial and healthy healer; the adoption of a plain, nourishing diet —principally of ripe fruits and well-cooked grains and vegetables; daily walks and exercise in the open air; also free ventilation of his room at night, will tend to lessen, and will in time remove the form of neurasthenia from which he suffers.

This is not a case of mediumistic disturbance, or of spirit "obsession," but one that springs from physical causes alone. We advise the patient to take a daily morning sponge bath with tepid water, and to rub the entire surface of the body (with a brush or coarse cloth) until it glows.

We by no means advise this patient to destroy his physical life; no man has a right to do this. Let him rather seek earnestly and persistently to overcome the malady from which he suffers, by every moral and mental means within his reach, and especially by following the simple rules which we have laid down.

Mrs. Richmond in Chicago.

We recently stated, in advance, that a report of the services held at a reception extended to Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond by her friends in Chicago, on the occasion of her return to her society, would appear in these columns. Doubtless the promised MS. embodying the account got stranded somewhere in the mails, as we failed to receive it. We will therefore try to make good our promise to our readers by giving them the following condensation of the account appearing in the Better Way of Cincinnati:

"Mrs. Richmond returned from her summer tour to her Chicago home, Monday evening, Oct. 1st, having visited during her absence Lookout Mountain, Cassadaga (N. Y.), Cuba (her native home) and, finally, Cincinnati. The reception given her in the parlors of Mr. E. W. Slocum was an event the memory of which will remain forever a bright spot in the heart of every one present. A delegation waited upon her at the depôt, at 6:30 P. M. While on her way to the house Ouina came and held the lady till she was seated before a company of one hundred and fifty of her friends, who warmly welcomed her. Her appearance, fresh, with no indication of fatigue from her trip, her form covered by loving hands, as usual, with freshly-cut flowers, she seemed the embodiment of that energy which pointed to a new and more pronounced work in the sphere she so ably occupies.

W. J. Colville in a touching manner delivered an address of welcome. He was followed by Morning Star, who, through his medium, Prof. Gleason, spoke in his usual elegant manner. Other gentlemen followed in toasts during supper, being called out by the lady leading the exercises.

The 'spread' was profuse, and every one did justice to this feature of the occasion. Solos by Mr. Colville and Mrs. Orvis were appropriately chosen and finely rendered.

On the following Sunday Martine's Hall was crowded, morning and evening, by large audiences assembled to welcome the medium and her guides at the commencement of their autumnal and winter season of service."

☞ Attention is called to THE BANNER'S reports of local meetings the present week, as much matter of interest will be found therein.

The First Folio Shakspeare.

Mr. J. W. Bouton, of New York, has recently brought back with him from his thirty-ninth annual trip to Europe a copy of the First Folio edition of what purports on the title-page to be "Mr. William Shakspeare's Comedies, Histories and Tragedies." The title-page further announces that it is "Printed by Isaac Iaggard and Ed. Blount, 1623." It is an almost perfect copy of the precious folio. The book measures twelve by eight inches, and is bound in extra super red morocco, with gilt edges. The title-page is damaged, and some of the leaves have been mended.

A copy of the Second Folio likewise accompanies the Shakspeare set, printed by Tho. Cotes for Robert Allot in 1632. This is pronounced a "sound, undoctored copy," having a portrait of Shakspeare, verses and preliminary leaves in perfect condition. It likewise contains Milton's epitaph on Shakspeare, believed to be the first poetic production of Milton to appear in print. A copy of the Third Folio was also secured by Mr. Bouton, which is extremely scarce. It was said that the greater part of this impression was destroyed by the great fire in London. The Third Folio is vastly more rare than the first and second. The date of its issue was about 1665-'66. The Fourth Folio, included in the list, was printed in 1685, and is the most perfect of all.

Spiritual Therapeutics.

Under the above title a book is soon to appear from the press of the Educator Publishing Company, Chicago, advance sheets of which are before us, showing that it is to be a very meritorious work, the contents consisting of twelve instructive lectures by W. J. Colville, followed by an interesting series of questions and answers, and a lecture on "Unscientific Science," by Dr. Anna Kingsford, author of "The Perfect Way," etc. The controls of Mr. Colville are too well known for their brilliant and masterly presentations of advanced truths to need any encomiums from us. That the dozen discourses contained in the coming volume will be fully equal to any heretofore produced through Mr. Colville's remarkable mediumship, the lecture on the first page of this paper, "The Religious Instinct; Its Origin, Growth and Ultimate Perfection"—which is one of the number—fully attests.

Mr. Gerald Massey,

Of England, the poet and scholar, who delivered a very successful course of lectures in this country several years ago, will speak in Berkeley Hall, Boston, on the afternoon of Nov. 11th, upon a subject that should fill the hall to overflowing, entitled "MAN IN SEARCH OF HIS SOUL."

☞ Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, of anti-spiritualistic fame—crowded Tremont Temple, Boston, on Monday evening last, while he strove to tell of "Some People We Meet." Rev. T. has been well photographed of late by a New York correspondent of the New Zealand Mail. Read the paragraph and see if you do not recognize the picture:

"When the Rev. Dr. Talmage finished his bitter and scathing sermon on Spiritualism, [some months since,] every man, woman and child in the congregation felt that it was the key-note to a fight. The reverend doctor talks like a fighter, he acts like a fighter, he looks like a fighter, and he is a good fighter—at long range. He reminds me very much of the Irishman who went out to fight a duel with a Frenchman. The Frenchman was sick, so his second approached the Irishman's second and said: 'My dear sir, my principal is so weak that he can hardly stand; would you have any objection if he should lean against yonder milestone?' 'Not in the laste, sur; not in the laste, if you will grant me a favor.' 'Certainly, certainly,' said the Frenchman. 'Thin,' said the Irishman, 'my principal is wake, too, an' I would like to have him lane against the other milestone.'"

☞ At the Columbus Avenue Universalist Church, on Sunday morning last, Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner preached from the text: "I have gone astray like the lost sheep." After showing the relation of this text to individuals, Dr. Miner continued: "The sheep, however, sometimes stray, and when they do they fall into difficulties. How widely have the communities, the commonwealths and the nation itself gone astray! What means this breaking of treaties one after the other, with the poor, ignorant Indians? I am glad that the Indians have rejected that treaty. They cannot be deluded with a pair of mules and a cow and seventy-five cents an acre for land that the government gets one dollar and fifty cents for. This thing must be corrected, and we, as a nation, must act upon the principle of righteousness in all things."

☞ George H. Johnson writes from Raton, N. M., in renewing his subscription: "I have been reading the BANNER OF LIGHT for a few years, and thought of not sending for it this year; but as I begin to realize how much I would miss it, I have concluded to write you for it at once. I make good use of it by handing it to people who would not see it otherwise. I do not fear to hand it to any one. I have given it to some of the preachers and church-members here, and hope that they read it well. There are many here investigating Spiritualism. I wish some speaker would stop here, and give a few good lectures on the subject."

☞ Mrs. Emma Miner's admirable story: "Bars and Thresholds," a continuation of which will be found on our first and second pages, wins commendation on every hand. She has already received many kindly letters from correspondents, going to show that it is accomplishing the main object she had in view in writing it: i. e., that of creating an interest in the family circle, and developing home mediumship.

☞ THE BANNER contained last week a paragraph concerning the recent highly satisfactory experiences of Dr. W. E. Clayton in presence of the medium Dr. Henry Rogers. The address of Dr. R. should have been given as at 684 Tremont street, Boston.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.—A gathering of Spiritualists occurred at this place Friday, Oct. 12th, for the purpose of holding a camp-meeting —an account of which, furnished by "Cyrenus," will be given next week.

☞ We are informed that Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain has been too ill to attend to any business for two weeks past; her health is better now, however, and she hopes in a few days to be able to attend to her correspondence.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

BY GEORGE A. BACON.

The papers this past week make mention of the gracious fact that a wealthy bachelor merchant and philanthropist of Philadelphia—Isaiah V. Williamson—has decided to endow, to an extent of several million dollars—one paper says ten millions—an Industrial School where boys can be educated and taught some good trade, free of expense.

Verily the good seed sown forty years ago by practical Stephen Girard is bearing in this generation valuable fruit of its own precious kind. May his example become contagious among those who have large means at their disposal.

Such instances of comprehensive generosity, where their influence for good becomes cumulative as time rolls on, are too rare in these days of colossal fortunes, but none the less it is a very dutiful service to hail them with marks of proper appreciation when they do occur.

Several notable examples of unusual gifts, for educational purposes, are to be thus credited to the present generation—those of Girard, Peabody, Johns Hopkins, Asa Packer, Ezra Cornell, Peter Cooper, the Vanderbilts, Leland Stanford, et al., and now this of Mr. Williamson's. There are other than these, to be sure, but none that we recall of quite equal proportion.

The first and most important factor in the solution of the labor question is that of occupation for the toiling masses. To be employed is man's normal condition. Given work, the means of subsistence is secured, the first measure of content is gained, and this is half the battle.

Idleness is the subtlest foe of man, be he plebeian or patrician. Idleness breeds vice as naturally as stagnant waters generate miasma. Hence the necessity, on moral and social grounds, of regular and continuous work.

The next step in the life of the daily laborer is in the degree of personal aptitude and skill, which, when marked, sooner or later leads to independence.

The value of the service which industrial schools, when rightly managed, give to those privileged to enjoy them, is not to be commercially measured. In this connection too much cannot be said in praise of old Stephen Girard's donation in behalf of the fatherless boys of Philadelphia. It will be remembered that this consisted of $2,000,000 and certain interests in several parcels of land in that city. His great business sagacity was never more grandly displayed than in the success which has attended this munificent contribution to his adopted city. The annual income is now about $350,000, and yearly increasing. This enables the Directors, if they wish, to erect a new building every year. Already eleven marble dwellings have been erected, (in an enclosure of forty acres, surrounded by a wall ten feet high) and in these dwellings fifteen hundred boys, orphans on their father's side, are housed, fed, clothed, provided for when sick, and educated, not only in books, but in manual labor at mechanical appliances, and in industrial arts.

They enter between six and ten years of age, and may remain till eighteen. When suitable places are secured they can leave at fifteen. On leaving they are supplied with two suits of clothes, etc. Before they are graduated many become expert at wood and metal working, at mechanical and free-hand drawing, surveying, type-writing, stenography, etc.

Now if Mr. Williamson can only see his way clear to correspondingly endow a Girl's Industrial School, either in Philadelphia or elsewhere, it would most fittingly complement that of Stephen Girard.

Again we say, may these examples of great practical generosity become largely contagious, many times multiplied, among those who are favorably conditioned, for the power to do so imposes the obligation.

Washington, D. C. Oct. 14th.

☞ Mr. Schrieber, the lighthouse-keeper at Point Isabel, Texas, recently deceased. At his former residence, now occupied by his widow, demonstrations occurred on the evening of Oct. 12th, of a nature very mysterious to Mrs. Schrieber and others. It consisted of an assault upon the house by numbers of shingle nails. Nothing special was thought of the matter until the next night, when, about dusk, a shower of nails struck the house, varied by an occasional oyster-shell and clod of earth. People gathered, but could not tell whence the missiles came. The next night the bombardment was continued, brickbats being added to the nails and oyster-shells, and every now and then an old scrap of copper or iron casting. Several persons were struck, and bricks rolled through the house or entered at the windows. At the latest account, says the Galveston News, from which we gather these statements, the affair remained unexplainable, though many attribute the disturbance to spirits, or "ghosts," as they term them. It is further said that about ten years ago the house of the County Clerk was similarly bombarded, and all efforts to discover the source from whence the showers of missiles came proved unavailing.

☞ Mr. John Lumsden, from Tennessee, has been at Onset for several seasons; he has no pecuniary interest in the place, but visits it with his friends annually as a Northern health resort during the heated season. His company consisted of some thirty individuals last season. He says of this latest visit: "We, one and all, look back with pleasant feelings toward Onset, and the good and kind friends we met there, hoping some day to meet them again. It seems to me that there is something about Onset that 'sticks closer' to one than I have found in any other place it has been my lot to see."

☞ The sensational newspaper press of the day still continues to calumniate our Cause whenever a medium falls from grace, just as though the Spiritual Philosophy was responsible for the shortcomings of individuals. An insane nun jumped from her chamber window recently in New Jersey and was fatally injured. Was the Catholic church responsible for it? By no means. Protestant ministers sometimes elope with other men's wives. Are the Protestant churches as a body responsible for such acts? By no means. Why is it, then, that Spiritualism should be branded as a fraud because of the weaknesses of some of its members?——Justice and Right will eventually take the place of Bigotry and Superstition. We can afford to wait.

☞ Mr. Rowley, of Cleveland, O., will in the future devote his time principally to the cure of disease through that wonderful instrument, the occult telegraph, the physician in attendance being Spirit Dr. Wells, formerly a noted practitioner in Cleveland.

☞ Dr. J. C. Street, specialist, and J. L. Wyman, M. D., magnetic physician and surgeon, have joined forces, and are now located at 181 Tremont street, Boston, Mass.

A Reception

In honor of Mrs. Ada Foye, one of California's finest mediums for public platform work, was given on Tuesday evening, Oct. 16th, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Lillie, Melrose, Mass.

Although it began raining early in the evening, the friends assembled in good numbers to avail themselves of the privilege of thus becoming better acquainted with this gifted lady.

Mrs. Lillie, in a few words of greeting, spoke of the kindness which had been extended to herself and husband on their recent visit to the Pacific Coast, and expressed her pleasure in being able to reciprocate it in some degree, by thus welcoming Mrs. Foye to their home.

Further words of greeting were participated in by a large majority of those present, among them being Capt. Holmes, Dr. Richardson, Dr. Street, Mr. Rockwood, Mr. Ring, Mrs. Dunklee and Mrs. Lovering. A few words from Mr. Lillie and a piano solo by Maudie Banks, were followed by a pleasant interval of social interchange of thought. ☞

THE VISION.

The sleep of the Dreamer is dying;
The Dream is about to be born!
He sees that Old Time is untying
The Laborer's Crown of Thorn;
The Night with its shadows is flying,
And we shall see clearer at morn;
We feel the first airs that come sighing,
A new life to waken and warn
Of a Light in which tears shall be drying,
And hell fire no longer can burn;
Our old earth shall cease from her crying,
Nor vainly to heaven will yearn—
Immortals with mortals are vying
To lift up the fall'n and forlorn.
We stand 'twixt the dawning and dying,
That mingle the verge and their bourne—
The Past, in its shroud shadow, trying
To hide its face, tortured and torn;
The Future before us enskying
A glimpse of the Millennial Morn.
The Sleep of the Dreamer is dying;
The Dream is about to be born.

Mrs. Elizabeth H. Foxcroft of Cambridge, it is said, died the very day before the time fixed for her opening the "Monday class," a class of children to which she had consecrated five years of her life. She had made all her preparations, and was but awaiting the morrow to begin the work. She will now have a class of children in the spirit-world to instruct, and thus continue on in the good work.

According to The Record of this city, there is a man in Wakefield, Mass., worth $1,000,000, who sleeps in his stable, gets his food where he can procure it the cheapest, owns twenty houses, collects the rents himself, and at present is working on several old barns, converting them into tenement houses. He will be a pauper in the spirit-world.

The Norwegians are breaking up wornout wooden ships in a singular way. Mr. Leary, who built the great timber rafts at Joggins, N. The expense of constructing and then of breaking up rafts more than the cost of transporting, renders the big raft system more expensive than vessels.

On a recent Sunday many of his followers in the United States held memorial services. The Disciples to-day stand fifth in numerical strength among the religious bodies in the United States. They have about 6,500 churches, and not less than 700,000 members. Their annual increase is about 50,000. They have five universities and nineteen colleges, besides other schools and seminaries.

DID N'T WANT TO LOSE HER TOTAL DEPRAVITY.—A story is told of an excellent old lady who lived in Concord, (Mass.,) at the time of the great prevalence of transcendentalism, and she was very much bewildered by the freedom and audacity with which many of her articles of faith were treated. But she finally came to this conclusion: "I do n't care so much about predestination and free will and all them sort of things, but if they take away my total depravity I shall feel as though I had n't any religion at all!"—Washington Chronicle.

UNITY PULPIT.—This weekly publication, in a neat pamphlet of sixteen pages, of the Sermons of Rev. M. J. Savage, reaches in this week's issue the third number of the tenth volume. The Unity Pulpit is published by Geo. H. Ellis, 141 Franklin street, this city.

It is a notorious fact that nervous diseases are not cured by the poisonous drugs prescribed by most of the "regular" physicians.—Exchange.

True. Patients are cured by the magnetic healers, and yet the "regulars" want a law enacted by the Legislature of this State, making it illegal for these competent healers to practice! Our advice to the people all over the Commonwealth is, that they vote for no man who is in favor of such a law. Common sense, common justice, and the health of the community demand this course.

Rev. Dr. James Woodrow—if dispatches from Columbia, S. Facts of Spiritualism.

Do not all the controversies of Spiritualism cluster round this plain question, "What do your facts mean?" Assume the facts as proven. They are proven, though prejudice or ignorance deny it. But, then, what do they mean? There are students of psychical problems who deny the conclusion of the Spiritualist that communications made through a medium are proven to be from the source assigned to them. Are these communications so coherent in themselves, so conclusively, in matter and in form, proceeding from their claimed source, as to warrant us in accepting them without question? This is a momentous inquiry, and Spiritualists have so generally rejected the hypothesis of diabolic inspiration—and quite rightly in my judgment—that it is incumbent on them to be sure of the ground on which they elect to take their stand. They have no right to pass by the evidence propounded by any critics without being sure that it is unworthy of attention. The powers of the incarnate human spirit, for example, have to be taken into account. The infinite possibilities of the disruption of the personality after death are not to be dismissed without due consideration. Some people have thought about these things before us. What have they to say? In the name of long-suffering patience, what is the use of crude fact divorced from its interpretation? —By Rev. Stainton Moses, "M.A. (Oxon)," in London Light.

The Fraternal Union.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

During the past summer a few earnest inquirers have held familiar conferences every Sunday forenoon, striving to obtain new light on spiritual laws. We realized the importance of phenomena in demonstrating the nature of spirit-life, and were grateful for the opportunities we had enjoyed in the past; but all felt that improved opportunities would lead to better results.

Some of our number had seen wonderfully good manifestations through the mediumship of Miss Stafford, which strengthened our desire so that our society sought an arrangement with Mrs. Bliss, and she welcomed our proposition to relieve her of all responsibility and make the best possible arrangements for séances. The Union has the control of five rooms in the house of Mrs. Wade, at 123 Concord street (lately vacated by Dr. Wellington), and its séance-room is so situated that imposture is impossible except some spirits impose upon us or some of our officers prove to be unfaithful to the trust reposed in them.

Our mediums will be so paid that they will have no interest in drawing more visitors, and will be free from domestic cares.

Nov. 1st Mrs. Bliss will commence sittings in certainly as good a séance-room as has ever been opened, and with some original provisions. We do not seek wonders, but to meet spirit-friends under circumstances that will help us to understand the universal law. Two classes have already been arranged for six séances, and a few more persons can obtain seats. See advertisement.

To Inquirers.

☞ As numerous letters are often directed to this office from distant points inquiring as to who are the best mediums to apply to for spiritual information, we take this method of replying to all such that, while we believe the mediums advertising in our columns are reliable, yet we cannot recommend any special medium to any particular person, as the medium who may satisfy one investigator may not be able to meet the requirements of another. It is best, therefore, for each investigator to visit such mediums as he may believe possess the power of bringing him into communication with the spirit-world, and thus judge of their claims for himself.

List of Lecturers.

THE BANNER publishes from time to time a list of Spiritualist Lecturers with their post-office addresses attached without charge, and in consideration of our so doing it seems to us they should be more particular than many of them are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Attention to this request is earnestly desired, and should be attended to at once.

For Tired Brain, use Horsford's Acid Phosphate. Dr. O. C. STROUT, Syracuse, N.Y., says: "I gave it to one patient who was unable to transact the most ordinary business, because his brain was 'tired and confused' upon the least mental exertion. Immediate benefit and ultimate recovery followed."

Where Log Cabins Flourish.

A party of American gentlemen, who had been camping out on an island in the great Lake Nipissing, Canada, last summer, were returning in a sail-boat and were yet seven miles from port when the sun went down, and with it the sailing breeze.

A discouraging situation, truly.

"Never mind, I can row you there inside of two hours," said the guide who had charge of the party, as their murmurs arose.

"Why, man, it is seven miles; there are four of us in this heavy boat—it 's a big job you undertake," said one.

"No matter, I have done the likes before and can do it again," cheerfully replied the broad-shouldered Irishman, as he stowed away the sail and bent to the oars. He was a splendid oarsman, and the boat was soon under headway again.

"What would I not give to enjoy your health and strength!" remarked the Professor.

"Yes, I am pretty healthy, and, though I am past sixty, I feel as strong as ever," replied the guide. "But only three years ago I stood at death's door, and never thought to pull an oar again. You see, I was in the woods all winter, logging, and I got into the water one day, and caught cold. It settled on my lungs and I had a bad cough, which hung on till I ran down almost to a skeleton."

"Call in a physician?"

"Yes, I went twenty miles through the bush to see a doctor; he gave me some medicine, but it did n't help me much."

"How was the cure effected?"

"An old Scotch lady, who had come over from the States, gave me a preparation of balsams and herbs, which she said the early settlers in America used, and it soon stopped my cough and put me on my feet again."

One has but to travel along the frontier to learn how easy it is to get along without doctors, and how effective are the natural remedies which the old grandmothers know how to prepare. They often cure where the best physicians fail.

Every mother of a family knows how coughs and colds are quickly and radically cured with syrups and teas made from balsams and herbs which "grandmother taught us how to make."

Warner's Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy was, after long investigation into the merits and comparison with other old-time preparations, selected from them because proved to be the very best of them all. It has brought back the roses to many a pallid cheek—there is no known remedy its equal as a cure for coughs and colds.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

to be held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth treet (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 2d, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

We praise thee, oh! our Father, for all the bright and beautiful things of life; we return thanks to thee for the blessing of existence itself, for the power that is given us to inhale thy odors and thy atmosphere—not only in this natural life of outward sense, but in the larger and diviner realm of spiritual existence. Oh! our Father God, we would be drawn into an atmosphere of spirituality; we would that our minds might become open and our spirits receptive to the truths which angels have to bring from immortal heights. We pray that we may be purified in spirit, sanctified in thought and aspiration, and drawn nearer to the truth of eternal love and wisdom.

Oh! thou who art the divine source of all blessing, the sum and substance of all life, the omnipotent power that controls the universe, we would recognize thee as our parent, our guide and friend; and may we at this time, and at all times that are to follow, be ready and willing to receive from thee and thy ministering spirits such ministrations and such instructions as thou dost deem best for our guidance and our help. We ask thy blessing to rest upon all at this time, in the hovel and in the palace, in the humbler walks of life and upon exalted heights. May all receive thy benediction, and recognize its source and power. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By Rev. T. W. Woodrow.] How many spheres are there, and who are the denizens of the first in spirit-life?

ANS.—It would be almost impossible to tell how many spheres there are in spirit-life, if we consider the word sphere as meaning a state or condition, since there will be as many states and conditions of spirit-existence as there are varying temperaments, tendencies and organizations of human life. In this sense, the first sphere of the life apart from the body itself on earth, would be that which is closely allied to the physical, that which is congenial to the earthly state. Those spirits who have become divested of the mortal flesh, yet who are unable to express themselves as they did on earth, who cling to the material, whose tendencies are outward, belonging to the sensual department of existence—those spirits whose aspirations, desires and habits are of the earth earthy, will occupy this first state of spirit-existence: it may be called one of carnality, one like unto the plainest physical condition. Spirits who withdraw themselves from outward contact with the earth, save only as they desire to minister through its avenues and opportunities to some human being, for some wise and generous purpose, will occupy a sphere or condition, call it what you will, very far above and beyond such mentality and spirituality as that of the first sphere of which we have spoken, and there will be many intermediary grades of condition, as many indeed as there are types of temperament, of tendency and aspiration in the human heart and organization.

If, however, your correspondent means, in using the term "sphere," to inquire how many worlds there are belonging to the spiritual state, how shall we reply? Who can number these? The entire universe of space, we are taught, is filled with worlds—worlds upon worlds and systems upon systems, each of which may be inhabited, doubtless, by human spirits. A spirit who has gained all the experience possible, passed through all the discipline that he may take up in that portion of the spirit-world contiguous to earth, may be prepared to pass on to another and a higher stage of spiritual existence, through and upon which he may gain a larger experience and a loftier discipline, until, having reaped of these all that is possible to his life, he may still pass on, accompanied by friends and congenial associates, to reap higher developments and pass through grander unfoldments in worlds beyond.

We will not undertake to state how many such worlds as these may fill the universe of space. As the student of astronomy, as he pursues his investigations, becomes almost astounded at the number of luminous worlds that open to his view, so we, in pursuing our studies of these other worlds in space, devoted to the spiritual, become amazed, and stand still in wonder at the numberless worlds that open before our investigation.

Q.—From which phase come communications?

A.—Communication between the world of matter which lies all around you, cognizable by your mortal senses, and the world of spirits which may still lie around you, contiguous to this outward life, peopled by those who once dwelt in these bodies of flesh—who, having become decarnated, yet possess all the sensations of life, activity and intelligence—has been established in every department or phase of human life, so that a spirit occupying this sphere, state or condition of the other life, may, under certain circumstances, communicate with a mortal and give him a message; and a spirit dwelling in a higher sphere, more remote, perhaps, from this external state—more upon a spiritual plane, elevated above that which belongs to the material alone—may also come into communication with a mortal, imparting advice, instruction or consolation, as the case may be, and so on. Spirits who occupy any stage of advancement or growth in the spirit-world, which lies contingent to this world of yours, and which is really a counterpart of this outward existence, may, under proper surroundings and associations, afford communication, such as may inspire, elevate or instruct you.

Perhaps your correspondent desires to know if there are other worlds in space beside that spirit-world which is the counterpart of this earth, that are inhabited by human spirits who have ascended to those planes of existence from this earth and its spiritual counterpart; can they communicate with mortals, or how far advanced must they be before the communication ceases to exist?

We find that, as spirits ascend from the spiritual plane of life, belonging especially to this planet, they do not maintain a direct and personal communication with those who still dwell on this earth, but their communication with the spirits who dwell upon this contingent part of the earth, and also with mortals, does not entirely cease; it is transmitted down through various media, until it reaches those for whom it is intended, and, therefore, spirits of a very wise and exalted state, who have passed through a great variety of personal experiences, who have long since parted with earth and its earthly condition, may, if they choose, communicate with mortals, provided they are given or afforded a proper medium of communication upon this mortal plane. Such spirits will transmit their magnetic influence and electrical thought through their own chosen media, until it reaches the inspired brain on earth, and is given in words or signs of instruction and exaltation.

We would add in this connection that we have never known a spirit to pass on from the spirit-world which belongs directly to this planet, into other worlds of space, while it has had any endearing association, sympathetic chords of affection, or other interests, to hold it or claim its attention here in connection with earth. Those who have friends in the mortal for whom and in whom they take an interest, over whom they desire to watch guardedly, will reap an experience and gain useful information in their own chosen lines of protective influence and labor, they will not cease their connection with the spirit-world and this earth until those lines of attraction have been removed from the material or mundane sphere; therefore those spirits who have passed onward, and who desire to maintain a communication with earth, do so only for the humane and general purpose of instructing in some manner those who dwell on earth, and who are interested in reformatory measures, or that which is calculated to benefit humanity at large.

Q.—How long are we to be confined to one sphere before passing to another?

A.—That depends very much upon the length of time it takes for a spirit to gain its needful experience, in contact with any one sphere, condition or world. Some spirits ripen more quickly than others; they gain the discipline required for their unfoldment earlier than others, and consequently will pass onward in a more brief time than will other spirits who require greater preparation for receptivity of mental and moral faculties.

One man, passing from the body, may find himself in a condition not to be desired; he may have been worldly-minded on earth, thinking but little of the spiritual, devoting his attention to the material life and its emoluments. This man, then, not having cultivated his spirit, it has been warped, it requires the conditions for proper growth, and he finds himself allied to the physical life. Now possibly this man has devoted his attention to external things simply through ignorance, not having learned of his spiritual nature sufficiently to give it the attention it should have claimed, but when he enters the other world he comes under magnetic conditions favorable for the growth of the spiritual, and there will be attracted to him ministering spirits who will desire to assist and bless him in his efforts to rise above the lowly state. He then may find the external things of material life cloying upon his nature, having had an all-sufficiency of them, and consequently his aspirations begin to put forth their power, and it will not take him very long to outgrow the first stage of his spirit-life and to enter upon a higher plane of unfoldment and of growth.

On the other hand, there may be a person of a worldly nature who is proud and haughty, filled with self-sufficiency, who desires only the external show and grandeur of material life, not caring for the spiritual part at all. This man, having laid up for himself treasures on earth, and having ignored those higher treasures which belong to the soul, on finding himself apart from the body may be a dissatisfied and disappointed spirit. He does not care to learn anything of the new life; he is unhappy because obliged to loosen his hold of the physical; he desires to remain here in contact with his former associations and scenes of grandeur and of influence. Such a man, not turning away from the material, not sending forth aspirations for higher knowledge and a loftier existence, may for a long time remain in this condition, and perhaps pass through many strange, varied and painful experiences before there is born within him a desire to rise higher and progress to worlds beyond. And so we might go on ad infinitum, giving illustration after illustration, to show that it depends entirely upon the man or the woman personally whether the stage of preparation shall be a lengthy or a brief one, in any sphere, condition or world of experience beyond this mortal vale.

Q.—Does the control of mortals by possessors grow harder or easier?

A.—The control which spirits hold and gain over mortal media grows more easy in most instances. For instance, a band of spirits may be drawn within the atmosphere of a certain sensitive on earth, so as to take possession of that sensitive for a subject, to operate upon her nervous organism and experiment with her brain forces, until they bring them under their own control. These spirits, then, as they continue to approach their medium, become more familiar with her organization, and after a while gain such an influence over her that it is comparatively easy for any of the band to take possession of her mental faculties, and subject them to their own personal use.

There are many spirits coming in contact with mortal life day after day, and year after year, and those who frequent places where communication between the two worlds is established must of necessity become familiar with the law of spirit approach and control of mortals and of matter, and so, as they practice and experiment with their subjects, they find their labor becoming more easy and more readily accomplished. We find, as we look over the land, that there are many avenues of communication open between the two worlds which are not known or recognized in mortal life; we discover that many private homes have their altars, at which they receive spirit messages from the unseen world, and it is in these private ways and homes that the great and glorious work of Spiritualism is carried forward. While we have many public mediums through whom the great work is performed, yet in private much more of communication, of instruction and of consolation is born to earth than can possibly be known to the great outside world; therefore, we say, the communication between the two worlds is growing more easy, more beautiful each year, and we look for the time, perhaps not so far distant, as we believe, when there will be communication in every home, when the presence of the spirit-world and its inhabitants will be recognized in nearness to each heart of earth, and those who have passed beyond the earthly habiliments of flesh will rejoice daily because they are not missed and mourned, because they are recognized by friends, as they are often present with them in mortal life, and because death itself has been laid low.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Sept. 28th, 1888.

Samuel Carman.

Mr. Chairman, it gives me great pleasure to speak here to-day. I shall be remembered in Philadelphia, and also by camp-meeting friends, for while dwelling in the flesh I often visited the old Neshaminy Camp-Ground. How much I enjoyed it! I learned, too, a great deal that was of help to me in crossing over.

My name is Samuel Carman. I feel that it will gratify my dear ones to know I have been able to say a word here. Little do you realize, mortals, the vast multitude of spirits that are gathered around you here, anxious to make themselves known. How dear the name of mother, and how sweet is the reünion in the spirit-home.

Polly Hambleton.

Seventy-nine years is considered a long time to journey on in mortal life, and it did seem long to me; but the years flit away quickly on the spirit side. I was a friend to mediums, and I would ask each one to be lenient, to be patient, for you are not aware how much you may do for them in that way. I was only too glad to help them when on earth, and agreed with William that our home should be the medium's home. I have wished, since I drifted through the portal called death, I had done more for them; but while dwelling in the flesh we cannot see as we do after throwing off that old garment. I hope these few words may reach some loved one on earth. I am Polly Hambleton, and my home was in East Hamburg, N. Y.

John Warren.

I feel like begging pardon as I enter this room and am given permission to speak, for while dwelling in the mortal, I must acknowledge, I could not believe, in what is termed Spiritualism—although my dear Marla did. I was what is called a materialist, until at last Maria came to me, and I saw her before the spirit was called up higher. Then I was willing to acknowledge that the spirit did live beyond the grave and had the power to make itself known.

And what became of my old opinions? There was nothing to them. When she was able to show her form, how could I hold out longer? I am thankful that I could testify to this truth before the breath left my body.

I know some dear ones will be watching and waiting anxiously in Copley, Ohio, to see what might possibly come from me, and I shall progress faster for making this acknowledgment. My name is John Warren.

Joseph Hall.

I feel grateful for the privilege of speaking here. My object in coming is, partly, to send a few words to those dear to me, partly to gain power for future work. I know I can be helped in more than one way by controlling this instrument. I shall be remembered in Providence, R. I., by many. Alice is with me to-day, and has urged me to speak. I have never done so before, although I have been here a silent listener. There are those whom I would like to reach in New York City. Your paper goes into the homes of some of my relatives, not all, and I trust that those who do receive it will see that others read it or hear it read.

My name is Joseph Hall. It is many years since I lived in these parts, still I think I may be remembered in Boston.

John Schofield.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to introduce myself as John Schofield, from Leeds, Eng. I have come a good way to speak here. There is a young man, not far from here, that I am interested in with regard to some business affairs, and I think your paper will be handed to him. His name is Jackson. I would say: Do n't lose your courage, young man, because I know that patent will come out all right eventually. You've almost crazed your head over it by night and day, and now you're losing a bit of courage.

I want him to know I don't leave him, for I promised him I would stand by him through the whole matter, although his relations laugh at him and say: "What a fool you are to be fussing with that thing!" Now I know what I am talking about. I was engaged in a similar affair when I was dwelling in the flesh.

I want to give out this message, feeling assured it will help him; it will give him more courage to go on and become established in business, for he is a poor boy, and this thing will be the making of him.

Just say that it is John Schofield, one who has promised to stand by him, that has just spoken.

I have many friends in Sheffield, Eng., also in Bradford, and I think some of 'em will be glad to know that I live. Some of 'em can't look over the steeple of the church, because it's too high, but the time is coming when you can look right through these steeples. I just want 'em to know it, and to know it aint a great way off either. Much obliged to ye. Some day I'll do as much for ye. As my mother used to say: "One good turn deserves another."

James Greaves.

By perseverance I am at last able to speak, Mr. Chairman, for which I am truly thankful. What a glorious thing it is to know you are going to find your own again. For many years I have been trying to come into communication with my children, and with one I have succeeded—my boy, Richard. I feel that it has been a comfort and a happiness to him to commune with us, although not very frequently.

Annie is here, and the mither, too. I would like this to reach my daughter Agnes, and I think Richard will forward it to her, that she may learn a bit here.

It is very pleasing to me to look into this meeting, and more gratifying still to send out a few words, for it will be a comfort to some, although they won't understand how father could be able to give it through another. No, my children, you cannot comprehend the laws of the spirit.

The mither sends greetings to them all. And, Richard, in a little time I feel that I will come into communication with you. I want you to do as you promised me you would: try and let the children know that father is able to send a message. My home was in Amesbury, Mass. My name was James Greaves. I was Scotch by descent, if you please.

Minnie Glover.

[To the Chairman:] The gentleman said I could come, but I must be brief. Oh! the lovely, lovely flowers! (alluding to those on the table.) Grandma used to have some like those red ones. The flowers that we have are white. Grandpa says that white flowers are emblems of heaven.

We have the loveliest time where we are. We go by the crystal waters, and we gather, oh! such lots and lots of flowers: more than you've got here. Then we have books and we go to school. My teacher is Spirit Alice, who used to make the verses when she lived in Philadelphia. She stands here, and she says, "Not verses, but poetry"—that's what she tells me. And, many times, we speak in poetry, too. Don't you think she's a lovely teacher to learn me so much?

Grandma is here now. I came into this room when the little lady was here, [Miss Shelhamer,] but they did n't let us talk. Got in the wrong meeting, did n't I? Grandpa said I'd have to try that over again. And then this minister here [the Chairman] said: You must n't stretch out your story too long.

I want to tell you where I lived. It was in Philadelphia. Did you ever go there, where the streets all make braided work? [Yes.] Aint it a lovely place? Where I lived was in a great big house. [The child had a bad cough.] That do n't hurt me very much; it does a little, because I had a trouble in the throat when I went away.

I come pretty near forgetting my name; it is Minnie Glover. Grandpa says Minnie is no name at all. I think it is good enough. I aint going away. I'm going to hark and see what the others say. I'd like one of those flowers before I go home.

Dennis Parker.

I have gained permission to speak to-day, knowing it will comfort some poor aching heart, for separations are hard, and when spirit-return is better understood, you will not be so saddened when one is taken out of the home. I would say to-day (not that I understood so much of it), learn all you can of spiritual truth on this side, for you cannot know too much.

How many times since I left the dear one, have I thought: "Oh! if I could only make her know how close I come to her in the room, and by her side." Many years have passed since they said I was dead. I have friends in Providence, R. I., and some in New Orleans, where I threw off the mortal form.

I wish to say to my dear one, Mary—and a true, good wife she was to me—that through all the trials that have overtaken her since I left her, through all the sorrow and living trouble that have come to her poor aching heart, she has not been alone. No, Mary; Dennis has been beside you, many, many times. When the dear little grandchild, Ethel, was taken out of the home, you clasped your hands and said: "I cannot give her up." With a wistful look, the last words she spoke to you were, "God bless you, grandma." You can never forget it. For those words and that look left an impress on your spirit that cannot be effaced.

We are not together all the time; the child was called up higher to dwell with the dear spirit-mother, who was taken away years before. That is why you learned to love her so much! The mother going out and leaving her, your spirits became closely cemented together.

I think the change that you and Olive made has been beneficial to you both.

You will ask if I know of Charles. Yes; I well knew when he went on the water again, and I know the anxiety that comes to your own spirit so much. You have often wondered why I have never spoken to you. There are many reasons. Not because I have been far away. I could not take control of the instrument as readily as I wished, therefore I have stood by, as a listener, for I have been one of the company in these meetings many times.

I feel that I went out in a good cause, and now the soldiers are as one, together in the higher life. I will leave my name, Dennis Parker. I could talk much longer, but others wait.

Charles A. Hunt.

I passed away in Tavares, Fla. Only thirty-four years of mortal life were alloted to me. I think I shall be remembered in Charlestown, Mass., where formerly was my home. I would like to send greetings to my friends, both there and in Florida—at Jacksonville especially.

I would ask my dear ones to come into communication with me, if possible, in that city or in New York, because attractions draw me there.

I have been in this meeting I can't tell how many times, but not thinking of speaking. I had not a very strong desire to speak myself: I came for what I could gain from hearing other spirits. In this way we learn to control instruments in other surroundings; then again, we gather power which helps us to materialize our forms. So we come here for various reasons. I feel thankful that I have been able to control, and trust it may prove of benefit to others as well as myself. Charles A. Hunt.

Hannah Sharp.

I also desire to speak to my dear ones. I trust that my message will reach Emma and Alice. I passed away somewhere from three to four years ago, as near as I can reckon mortal time. On entering spirit-life a great surprise awaited me; the scene was more beautiful than it would have been possible for me to imagine. I did not at first understand that we could return and use another's organism to speak to our friends of earth; but since I made this discovery I have been anxious, I may say over-anxious, to give out a few words.

My home was in Saxonville, Mass. If I could come into communication with even one dear one I should gain so much, and I should feel happier. They, too, would be glad to know that Hannah was not dead, as so many of my people think to-day. They believe they must wait until the judgment day, and then perhaps not find me. That seems cruel to us. Mother, sister, brother, all will be reünited, and we shall know our own. How grand, how great will be the meeting when that time shall come!

And it will not be the judgment day, for I have learned, since leaving the mortal, that our homes depend upon our lives here. You are building your homes, dear friends, every day. Now do build them beautifully, as it is your privilege to do.

I am happy. It is not because we do not have companionship in spirit that I am drawn here to-day, it is for two purposes: one is, to try to establish the fact of the immortality of the soul, and another, that the dear ones may be happier while sojourning here in the mortal life. Grandma Sharp sends greetings, too. We have found the little buds that have been transplanted; they are not small now, but are growing on and on, to a grander unfoldment of the spirit. Hannah Sharp.

Charles Drew.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the sensations which were mine on passing out, of heat and terrible thirst, away upon the hot plains. I get no suffering, sir; it is merely a reflection of the past which creeps over the spirit, as I take control of the instrument.

I have a dear mother in your own city, and by coming here I shall be able to make her know that her boy lives. She feels now that he does, for my mother understands something of what you call Spiritualism. For my part I think the ism ought to be left off. I knew very little of it, as I drifted away to the hot plains; I cannot talk of it.

Mother, father is here, and sends greetings; and the little one also that was laid away so long ago. I would ask Lizzie to stay by mother, for the sands of life are fast running out. As father says, it is worse to suffer from thirst than for want of food; and with the soldiers I can truly sympathize, as I can realize something of the heat and thirst which came to them on their long marches.

Mother, I would be glad to talk with you privately, but not yet, the channel is not open. Do not fear that I shall experience pain in coming, my sufferings are over; there is merely a suggestion of old conditions as I come in contact with mortals and with earth. The sensation has even now passed by with which I commenced to speak.

It does seem a little strange that father and the little one should go out through the water while the want of water sent me to spirit-life. But how grand it is to know we are all coming together again.

Lizzie does not understand about our coming back to communicate, but mother does, and I know she will give us the opportunity.

My name is Charles Drew, and my father's name is Andrew.

George Elbridge Greenleaf.

I do not take on any sensation from my passing out, as that young gentleman did, although I went to spirit-life by an accident; so you will understand readily that the experience of all is not alike in this respect. I desire that my message may reach my father and mother.

Carrie is here to-day, mother, and Uncle Proctor wishes to be remembered to father. Charlie Emerson, the cousin, would like his mother to know that he lives, and in due time will be able to give a message.

I am not very much used to speaking in public, although my father is, and Uncle Proctor was. I promised myself some time ago that I would make the attempt, and I hardly think I shall make a failure, because the guides stand by, and when we falter a little, or weaken, they give us assistance. Uncle Proctor says that if Elbridge do n't wish to know where we have gone, or to learn anything of the happy country beyond, then he must find it all out when he enters spirit-life.

Carrie wishes to be remembered to her own dear ones, and I will speak a little for her:

"Mother—how I love to repeat that sweet and endearing name—you did not think when you came to see me last that I was so near the other side. Yet there is only a thin veil between us, and I will try to talk with you more in time, perhaps privately. Dear mother, the angels watch over you."

My name was George Elbridge Greenleaf. My father is Stillman Greenleaf, of Lowell.

Lucy A. Miller.

I have gained permission to speak, hoping my words may reach dear Fannie. I am only too glad to make myself known. Since leaving the mortal, how often have I said: Oh! if they only knew how near we were—the dear ones and relatives—they would not be so sad as they are at times on our entering the rooms.

It is now, I should judge, about three years since I cast off the mortal form and put on the beautiful and shining robe of immortality. I am happy in my spirit-home. I find no idlers there, and we are glad to do our work. Oh! how many have come to this beautiful world since I passed out, and have found us ready and willing to aid them.

I have seen them, sometimes, as they came, looking eagerly to the right and left, until one who is called an angel—that is, a good, pure spirit, who has progressed on to a high state of happiness—would approach and ask what they were seeking. Frequently the reply has been: "We are looking for the throne of God." I know these spirits were disappointed in not finding what they sought, yet I think some of them were happily so, when they found they could return to earth. I knew something of this "ism" before I passed out.

My home was in Columbus, Ohio, where I feel confident I shall be remembered; and also in Buffalo, N. Y. My friends are scattered in different surroundings.

Sarah, I want you to learn all you can, and in order to do so I would like you to take the paper and inform yourself all you can on spiritual matters, and then higher intelligences will be able to reach you with an influence that will open your mind to light and truth while you dwell in the mortal form. My name is Lucy A. Miller.

Ralph Douglas.

I will introduce myself to you, Mr. Chairman, as Ralph Douglas. I think I shall be remembered by some on this side of the water. My home was in Keswick, Eng. I am very happy to make myself known. I have stood here ever since I saw you turn the key in the door, for I thought by perseverance I should be able to let John and William know that Ralph was n't dead, half as much as they are. I am feeling first-rate. I tell you what it is, we all like to get back and let you know we're not the dead people, but you are on this side. For I know what I'm talking about. When I found that this gentleman had given the privilege to some others that had crossed the mighty deep, I thought I'd ask it, too; so you see what I got by asking.

I would like them to know that mother is with me, and Margaret, also little Johnnie, who, if you'll believe it, is grown to be a man. I was surprised when I saw him, but they told me it was the same one that was here. I understand more than I thought I could have learned in these five years, as they call it, since I went out.

I want them to know I step over to Leeds sometimes, and I see what is going on in the meetings. I also see what is going on about Liverpool, but they take no more notice of me than if I was n't there. I have learned the reason: they can't see me. We've got the advantage over you: we see you when you do n't see us.

Minnie, to Harry.

Mr. Chairman, I made a promise many months ago, that when there was a privilege given me I would accept it, and to-day, as father said, Minnie, go and speak, I would like to give a short message, for I know a dear one is waiting to receive it. Mother has asked many times: Why do n't Minnie come, or why do n't father come? Oh! mother, you do n't understand that we do come, only you can't see us with the mortal eye.

Do n't think for one moment that I have not made the attempt to speak before, for I have been here in all the meetings. I want Aunt Lizzie to know I often come into her home. I passed out of mortal life in a breath, as you might say. Poor Harry! how hard it was to give me up. And mother, too.

But if you could catch a glimpse of the beyond you 'd know that I am happy. I come to you often in the stilly hours of the night, and place my hand upon your forehead, whispering: "Dear Harry, look up." But you cannot behold me; you may perhaps sense my presence, as you have wished you could.

I know that by trying to come into communication with me you will learn more and more; also by reading and going into meetings where channels of communication are opened you may hear from others, if not directly from me, for I often visit those places. Your father, Harry, and Bro. Sammie send greetings to you. Mother, father says as soon as possible he will send a few words to you. He passed away in Virginia. That seems but a little way off to us. My dear mother is in Lynn. I know she will understand when I say this message is from Minnie to Harry.

Charles and Arthur also send greetings to the dear ones; they have been in the home and known of the influence of the mother, to let them know they have not been far away from them.

William Chandler.

It gives me pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to speak, for I know there are those yet dwelling in the mortal life who are waiting anxiously to see if a word comes from some dear one across the river. George has asked several times why father did not speak, but I have always found some excuse. It is but a few years I have been on the spirit-side, and I have had much to learn since I came, for I knew nothing of Spiritualism, having been, as you might say, schooled in old theology. I lived on earth many years, and I will acknowledge I had heard the return of spirits spoken of.

George, I know you are in the right channel now, and I would have you go on. It seems to me sometimes if the dear child had not been removed from the home, perhaps you would not have learned any more this side than I did. As I have said to your mother, perhaps it had to be so, that you might gain some knowledge of the future life. Certainly it was so, and her passing out of this life has been a stepping-stone for you and Abbie to learn a little about those who have been gone longer.

I remarked to Rosilla, how wonderfully strange everything has been arranged for us. I know now, before I passed away, after your mother had gone, I felt her presence many times. I had heard it said that our loved ones hovered about us, but I did n't understand that they could speak to us. Children, learn what you can on this side.

It is not of much use for me to speak to the rest of 'em; the doors are barred and the windows are made fast. I am happy to-day in receiving this privilege, and I hope it may be of some benefit to others.

My home was in Tyngsboro', Mass. My name is William Chandler.

William K. Knight.

My name, Mr. Chairman, is William K. Knight, of this city, where I passed away. Cecilia is here, and has asked me to say a few words. I told her I had no long story to tell. Many have said that, and found more to tell than they expected.

I am satisfied with my home, and I should be very much pleased if I could come into communication with some of 'em—John, especially—but if I can't, I must wait. I think my coming here may help to open a door into the home. There are two in New Jersey who I think will see this paper, and I shall hope to come into communication with them privately.

Verifications of Spirit Messages.

CARRIE MATHEWS.

A spirit message was given through Mrs. B. F. Smith, in BANNER OF LIGHT Sept. 22d, 1888, from CARRIE MATHEWS, of Belfast, Me. I took the paper to the mother of Carrie, who lives in Northport, and she pronounced it all correct—every name. The house she speaks of was burnt down some five years since. Her father was master of a vessel, and sailed out of Belfast a number of years. I think it is one of the best tests I have read for a long time.

Yours truly, DAVID PEIRCE.

Belfast, Me.

BARTLET ELLIS.

IN the BANNER OF LIGHT of Aug. 25th I read a communication from BARTLET ELLIS, of Plymouth, Mass., who was my father's cousin, which I recognize as correct. Yours truly, MRS. E. B. MACY, per MRS. M. L. POOLE.

North Temescal, Alameda Co., Cal.

JOHN WILSON.

IN THE BANNER of Sept. 22d is a message from JOHN WILSON, of Ashburnham, through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, which I recognize; he always lived in this town, and in plain sight of my home. He passed away very suddenly, during the severe storm last March. It must be pleasant for him to be able to reach his friends so soon after being taken so suddenly from them. R. C. EATON.

Ashburnham, Mass., Oct. 14th, 1888.

HARRIS BURPEE.

I will drop you a line to let you know that we recognize the message of HARRIS BURPEE, of Sutton, N. H., given at the séance of June 29th, 1888, as it is all true. Yours respectfully,

Sutton, N. H., Oct. 9th, 1888. THOMAS BURPEE.

LEGEND OF THE FALLING TEAR.

BY M. L. GAYLORD.

Mothers, weary grown with weeping,
In your anguish by the bier,
Listen to love's angels, keeping
Watch o'er every falling tear:

'Neath the shadows, broken-hearted,
Wept a mother for her child.
Death, from loving arms, had parted
Hopes that dearest thought beguiled.
Beauty, that o'en matched the flowers,
Had been hers to fondly press;
Smiles, that chased life's sunniest hours;
Earth was heaven in each caress.

In her woe, the night time darkened,
Tears, like rain, kept welling o'er;
In her mute despair she hearkened—
Only the refrain: "no more";
Vain for her the clouds were lifted;
Sobs went moaning o'er the wild.
Heart from heart, seemed ever rifted—
"Oh, my beautiful! My child!"

Kneeling thus, amid her weeping,
Prayed she to the far-off skies,
Till her sighing, stilled to sleeping,
Oped a vision to her eyes:
All about her, 'yond the seeming
Of earth's dark and dismal day,
Came there light all brightly gleaming,
Clearing all the mists away!

Forms there seemed to float, aerial,
Sparkling robes, and waving light,
Changing shadows of funereal
Darkness into snowy white.
Bands of children, sweetly singing
Songs that breathed Elysian air—
Buds and blossoms, perfume bringing,
Weaved they with their golden hair.

As they passed the mother yearning
For her treasured one, alone—
Ecstasy! with fondness burning,
She beheld her own—her own!
"Mother mine, oh! know me truly.
I'm your darling, day by day.
Hold me, fold me, love me duly,
But I cannot longer stay.

For I have to carry thither
All the tears you sadly shed!
Wouldst thou send me weary, whither
Blessings might bedew thy head?"
"No, my sweet one—mother's loving
Shall be peaceful, calm and wise;
Ever tender in its proving,
It shall trust the nearer skies."

Earth's morning broke. The vision fled.
Seemed an angel-presence near.
No more the mother's child was "dead":
Faith had gemmed love's falling tear!

October Magazines.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—The contents of this number are largely political. Articles not of that nature are the first of a series of sketches, "America's Crack Regiments," the subject of this being "The Seventh Regiment of New York," its history from its organization in the early years of the present century, illustrated with twenty-two engravings; "The Valley of the Connecticut; A Summer Drive"; "The Sandwich Man," a story; "Pioneer District Schools," and new chapters of "Boy Life on the Prairie," and "Two Coronets." In "The Great Red Pipestone Country," Helen S. Thompson graphically describes the Indian occupants of that locality, the Sioux, with pictures of many of them, the narrative possessing a special interest at this time on account of the noble stand they have taken in defense of their rights. Several fine poems enrich the general contents. New York: 749 Broadway.

THE FOLIO has, the present month, in addition to much musical intelligence of interest, and a full-page portrait of Lillie Vane, nineteen pages of instrumental and vocal compositions. Boston: White, Smith & Co., 516 Washington street.—We have also received from the same publishers the following new music: Vocal: "Only the Sound of a Voice," words by Adelaide Proctor, music by Michael Watson; "Toreador Song," Ch. Lecocq; Instrumental: "Spring Flowers," (polka,) "Youth and Beauty," (gavotte,) both by Paul Kellar; "Pebble on the Beach," A. L. Bemis; "The Hunter's Return," (grand march,) Albert W. Holt; Czerny's Grand Exercises of the Scales, Op. 500 (Foreign Fingering).

HORTICULTURAL ART JOURNAL.—Fruit and flowers, the latter three blossoming branches of double flowering peach, in their native colors, are the attractions of this number. In addition is given a fine print of the Warner Observatory at Rochester. Stecher Lith. Co., Rochester, N. Y.

HERALD OF HEALTH.—"Notes Concerning Health," "How Quacks and Quackery Flourish," "People Who Enjoy a Vigorous Old Age," and "The Temperature of Foods and Drinks" are the general articles, those relating to women and the household, mothers and the nursery, following. New York: P. O. Box 2141.

George Eliot says truly in "Daniel Deronda": "Our consciences are not all of the same pattern, an inner deliverance of fixed laws; they are the voice of sensibilities as various as our memories."

WARNER'S LOG CABIN REMEDIES.—"Sarsaparilla," "Cough and Consumption Remedy"—"Hops and Buchu"—"Extract"—"Hair Tonic"—"Liver Pills"—"Plasters," (Porous-Electrical)—"Rose Cream" for Catarrh. They are, like Warner's "Tippecanoe," the simple, effective remedies of the old Log Cabin days.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Marlboro', Mass., Oct. 8th, Mrs. Mary Ann, wife of the late Edward Morse, aged 80 years and 5 months.

Since the removal of the husband and father, Mrs. Morse and her youngest daughter have, until recently, remained at the old home, but her last days were spent in the dual home where two daughters and their families resided, and where her transition occurred. Her almost painless pilgrimage to her ascended loved ones was there cheered by the tender love of children and grandchildren. She was a large-hearted, cheerful, faithful woman, and the increasing years found her active in body and young in spirit. Many dear relatives and friends outside the immediate home circle will deeply feel the loss of her visible presence. The funeral took place Friday P. M., Oct. 12th, and was largely attended. The writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Rice (Universalist), performed the service. Mrs. Emma Morse sang two beautiful selections in an impressive manner. A pillow of white pinks, bordered with ivy, bore the word "Mother" in purple immortelles, while a basket of beautiful flowers, the gift of grandchildren, rested upon the foot of the casket, and just below the plate were two united sheaves of golden wheat, with the words "Rest in Peace." JULIETTE YEAW.

From Onset, Mass., on Sunday, Oct. 7th, Mrs. Inez A. Kimball, aged 32 years 7 months and 11 days.

Although but little known beyond her own immediate circle, Mrs. Kimball was a faithful worker in the sphere allotted to her, and has been in the field of mediumship for the past six years, often giving beautiful messages from the higher spheres of inspiration as well as many proofs of a test mediumship that gave much promise of future use in the public field. She was earnest and indefatigable in all present duty, and gave a helping hand to many, even though herself limited in material things. It seemed, indeed, to mortal perception, that her transition was untimely, in the very outset of a career of medial usefulness; but celestial wisdom governs all life, and no doubt she can now do a better work, unhampered by earth-life conditions. She bore her illness (a low typhoidal fever) with perfect patience. Her mortal presence will be missed by her own immediate family as well as by the friends to whom she was endeared by her many acts of kindness and friendship. S. W.

From Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 27th, 1888, Traverse Swan aged 73 years.

After some months of suffering his spirit winged its flight to the Sunny Land he longed to see. The beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism was a great comfort to him for many years. Mr. Swan lived his religion, and was strictly honest in his dealings with his fellow-men. His pure and upright life leaves an influence that will brighten as the years go by. He was one of the first subscribers to the BANNER OF LIGHT, which he prized above all other papers. Services were held at his home by Mrs. W. D. Banks, her utterances being listened to by a large gathering of relatives and friends, who were eager to catch every word that fell from her inspired lips. Mr. Swan was a true husband, a true father and a true Spiritualist; was a great humanitarian; and we feel that he is now located where his field of usefulness can be extended.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

TOOTH-LIFE.
A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

THIS Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

Put up in a neat box. Sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. For sale by COLBY & RICH.

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

FINELY executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

THE VOICE OF NATURE represents God in the light of Reason and Philosophy—in His unchangeable and glorious attributes.

THE VOICE OF A PEBBLE delineates the individuality of Matter and Mind, fraternal Charity and Love.

THE VOICE OF SUPERSTITION takes the creeds at their word, and proves by numerous passages from the Bible that the God of Moses has been defeated by Satan, from the Garden of Eden to Mount Calvary!

THE VOICE OF PRAYER enforces the idea that our prayers must accord with immutable laws, else we pray for effects, independent of cause.

The Boston Spiritual Temple.—Berkeley Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity by attentive listeners to the instructive words that fell from the inspired lips of Mrs. Lillie. In answer to several questions, including one relating to the renouncement of Spiritualism by one of the Fox Sisters, the guides said, How can we answer them when Spiritualism has been exploded? Not until the last of this century has there been much light. Who are the founders of Spiritualism? The family at Hydesville have been given the credit. A depraved appetite and weakness has taken hold of these sisters; their fall is one of the shadows of Spiritualism; and in sadness of heart we speak to you of them. The origin of Spiritualism was not with the Fox Sisters. The power of the spirit was abroad in the land long before their birth, and it will take more than the hand of a child to retard its growth. The progress of Modern Spiritualism has never been equaled. Many of the best minds in the world are its advocates. The eternal principle of Truth is the grand foundation of Spiritualism; the phenomena are not confined to one medium, but to-day there are thousands all over the civilized world.

The Spiritual Philosophy has come in an age of wonders and of possibilities; has been growing forty years, and has belted the earth. If every medium should prove false, its mission would still be onward. The false kiss of Judas did not destroy Christianity! We never should have had a crucified Saviour had there been no Judas; and had there been eleven Judases, if but one remained firm, the truth we believe would still have come uppermost.

If we are but steadfast, out of all the temptations we shall rise to the beauty and grandeur of Manhood and Womanhood.

Evening.—In answer to the question, If there was no future life would this life be worth the living? the guides said: It is sad indeed to find one in a condition to feel that this life is not worth the living, and yet we could spend the hour on this theme, realizing how many there are with shattered hopes, with no words to cheer, and if we would take the trouble to inquire into the lives of such we would not wonder at their despair. There is but little of enjoyment in the externals of life. If there is anything we should be grateful for it is for being endowed with the element of hope; this hope finds comfort in Spiritualism. The number of those who have received convincing evidence of the return of spirits is more than double the eight millions spoken of by the secular press. Our belief does not rest upon the moral integrity of those who furnish its evidences; it rests upon the truth. The needs of mankind are just what they always were. Christianity says, Blessed are those who die in the Lord; the broader theme of Spiritualism brings comfort and blessings to all mankind.

The exercises closed with an improvised poem upon a subject furnished by a member of the audience.

Mrs. Lillie speaks from the same platform next Sunday, and the Sundays of November.

During the morning service Mrs. Ada Foye, of California, favored us with her presence upon the platform.

O. L. R.

W. J. Colville in Berkeley Hall.—On Sunday last, Oct. 21st, Mr. Colville lectured to a crowded audience in this hall at 3 P. M. Many visitors were doubtless attracted by the subject, which was: "Rome and Reason."

After some beautiful music by two talented lady singers, and a very impressive invocation, the lecturer proceeded to review the statements of Cardinal Manning and Col. Ingersoll, as published in the September and October (1888) issues of the North American Review.

Cardinal Manning argues, of course, in favor of the supernatural origin and doctrinal infallibility of the Church of Rome. The Cardinal attributes every virtue known to Christendom to the influence of that church, and endeavors, from the writings of very early fathers, to prove the claim made by the church that it is one, holy, catholic and infallible. Perhaps the best of all the Cardinal's arguments is the one concerning scripture—he maintaining that the living presence and voice of the Holy Ghost in the church antedated the writing and subsequent compilation of the various books collectively styled the New Testament. The Epistles were written to churches already formed by apostles who were at that time their pastors. The gospels, as we now have them, are certainly younger than at least four of Paul's Epistles, according to the best modern Protestant scholarship, consequently it stands to reason that oral tradition must have preceded scriptural reference in the ordinance and maintenance of church fellowship. This being the case, the Scriptures may be truly said to have been written by dignitaries in the church, and not the church to have been founded on the Scriptures. Many Protestant ministers to-day are compelled to concede this position, and this concession very considerably weakens the strongholds of Protestant Orthodoxy.

The Jewish Scriptures were never so highly prized in Israel as in a degenerate age when prophecy was well nigh extinct. This can be abundantly proven by the exact words of the Old Testament in many places.

So far as position concerning Scripture is concerned, Cardinal Manning has a far better argument than his Orthodox Protestant opponents, but when it comes to his statement concerning the superabundant fruitfulness in good works manifested by the church, Ingersoll is undoubtedly in the right when as an impartial reviewer of all religions, he convicts the leading lights in all professions in some instances of the commission of grievous crimes; and any careful reader of Cardinal Manning's article will see that he also acknowledges the immorality of certain prelates, but does not condemn any by name.

Concerning the infallibility dogma, the reasonable view to take is that alleged papal infallibility is necessary to the success of the Roman hierarchy as a colossal and most effective organization; but the deep spiritual truth underlying the doctrine is susceptible of far different interpretation, for the recognition of Peter's illumination consisted in Jesus pronouncing a state blessed where the individual is unbiased by the opinions of others, and allows the inward light to guide him to a just estimate of truth and its exponents.

Taking up the various doctrines of the Roman Church, the speaker dwelt particularly upon Purgatory, the respect shown to the mother of Jesus, invocation of saints, and the presence of Christ in the eucharist. Concerning "mariolatry," the ground taken was identical with the progressive thought put forward in Boston by Theodore Parker more than thirty years ago. The divine mother-element must be recognized equally with the divine paternity, and the error of the Christian Church has ever been that it has placed women too low, men too high in the estimation of mankind. Jews and Protestants of the Orthodox schools have erred grievously in excluding woman altogether from their conception of divinity; for while they never tire of speaking of the Heavenly Father they are shocked at the mere mention of a Heavenly Mother.

Setting all false prejudice aside, is it worse to speak of a queen than of a king of heaven? Does masculinity reign alone in the celestial spheres? Is woman an outcast? has she to be converted into a male to enjoy immortality, as some Mohammedans assume? No; there cannot be too much reverence for woman in any community, and we shall never be wholly removed from barbarism until we, as a people, remove every disqualification of woman, both social and political, and acknowledge in all things the true equality of the sexes.

Too many Orthodox Protestants are making a fatal mistake in assailing the so-called worship of the Virgin, for they persist in appealing to mistranslated texts, and thereby give the impression that Jesus was positively rude to his mother at a banquet and in other public places, while they uphold his every action as an example of the highest excellence. Where the Vulgate reading is best and most accurate, it should be gladly acknowledged by all lovers of fair play, and in the account of the miracle at Cana of Galilee: "Woman, what is this to thee and to me?" is a sensible reading, while: "Woman, what have I to do with thee?" as words spoken by a son to a mother, convict that son of heartless impertinence unless some very unusual interpretation is put upon the words.

As to communion with saints, this is simple Spiritualism dressed up in ecclesiastical garments, and in answer to the inquiry how the saints can hear and answer their petitioners, as reasonable replies can be given: 1st, We can mentally converse with minds not actually present; 2d, when we address a certain individual whom we have endowed with certain definite attributes, our desire to communicate with such an one relates us to a special plane of intelligence, though not necessarily to a person it may be superstitiously invoked.

Concerning purgatory, the doctrine evidently rests upon reason and spiritual experience; but the idea concerning indulgences needs to be completely blotted out, as it gives utterly false conceptions of retributive and reformatory correction, leading those who endorse it to believe in vicarious atonement, which is utterly out of agreement with every salutary conception of the mission of pain; he who sins suffers not to placate offended majesty, but to work out his own elevation.

On the school question the lecturer was very forcible and eloquent, also on the electoral duties of American citizens. Religion and education must be kept thoroughly apart in books of the public schools, but morality of the highest type must be enjoined both by teachers and instruction.

Mrs. Shepard and Mr. Fulton were not approved of. If we desire freedom we must not act as though we were wild beasts anxious to rend each other; we must not agree to believe that Catholicism is all vice, and Protestantism all virtue. Truth is outside of all creeds, and is also in some measure within the pale of every society. Freedom is not to be gained in this country in future at the point of the sword, but through the higher moral and spiritual development of citizens; and as long as we allow ourselves to be victims of plutocracy we may rail against vice in the church as much as we please, but we shall be feeding it outside the church's border.

In a short abstract it is impossible to reproduce anything like the full sense of a lengthy and impassioned oration, which was rapidly but very distinctly enunciated, and called forth bursts of applause at frequent intervals.

On Sunday next, Oct. 28th, Mr. Colville lectures again in Berkeley Hall, at three P. M., subject, "The Great Egyptian Pyramid—What Does It Teach Us?"

On Sunday evening, Oct. 21st, W. J. Colville lectured to a large audience in Brockton, Mass., and on Tuesday, Oct. 23d, he spoke twice in Hartford, Conn. He will lecture in Pilgrim Hall, Chelsea, Sunday, Oct. 28th, at 7:30 P. M., and in Hartford Tuesday, Oct. 30th, at 2:30 and 7:30.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—This hall was crowded last Sunday to listen to Mrs. Ada Foye's spiritual delineations, more than a hundred being unable to gain admission in the evening. Mrs. Mary Nickerson sang very finely, "We Shall Know as we are Known"—Prof. Willis Milligan, accompanist. After a few preliminary remarks Mrs. Foye's control proceeded to answer among others the following questions:

1st. What is to be the outcome of the spiritual declension at the present time? Ans.—We claim that there is no declension, but that Spiritualism is advancing rapidly and gaining strength from the opposition.

2d. What is the test of character in the spirit-world? Ans.—Real merit. In the spirit-world you are judged by your moral worth and not by any human standard.

3d. What is a Christian Spiritualist? Ans.—One who not only believes in the immortality of the human soul, and in Jesus of Nazareth as our elder brother (living as near as he can in accordance with his teachings), but who believes also that these immortal spirits can return to earth and give us hope for the future.

4th. Do Christian Spiritualists believe in the atonement of Christ? Ans.—They do not. Every one must atone for his or her own sins.

5th. What is Spiritualism? Ans.—A knowledge of the immortality of the soul, and that that soul or spirit when excarnated has power to manifest its presence to those yet in the mortal.

6th. Are not a belief in theology and the sincere life in the church just as beneficial as Spiritualism? Ans.—Any religion that makes a man better is good, but Spiritualism goes beyond, and satisfies the longing heart that cannot be satisfied by the old theology.

7th. Does the fact of our passing away from this life to another give us more knowledge? Ans.—No. Our condition is not changed by death; we shall know only what we have learned in this life, and shall have much to learn in the great hereafter.

8th. What do you think of the exposé by Margaret Fox Kane, as published in the Globe this morning? Ans.—We do not consider that Spiritualism has received any blow whatever. We know that these children were genuine mediums, and they are so still; but, through influences of an unpleasant nature, have been induced to betray their trust. Years ago Margaret Fox Kane took the "white veil" in the Catholic Church, and undoubtedly through the influence of that church has been led to take the course she has. Any woman who will go on for forty years in this work, and at the eleventh hour come out against it, cannot be depended upon. We pity her, and are sure that Spiritualism will not be harmed. But, on the contrary, this very exposé will set people to studying more closely the phenomena, and hundreds will be added to our ranks in consequence.

9th, Were there not spiritual manifestations long before the Fox sisters were known? Ans.—Most certainly; Saul visited the Woman of Endor and desired a sitting with her, and Samuel was invoked. The Day of Pentecost was a complete séance; the Disciples prepared themselves for it by prayer and fasting, and retired to an upper room where they were all together, of one accord, when Jesus materialized in their very midst, coming in when the doors were shut. A spirit also materialized to John upon the Isle of Patmos. Spiritualism is as old as the Bible.

10th. What is the difference between psychology and Spiritualism? Ans.—Simply this: A person may psychologize another and gain complete control of that person while both are in the form; this is psychology, or mesmerism. The mesmerizer passes away, and comes back and takes control of the same form; this is Spiritualism.

11th. Is it right to hang murderers? Ans.—Spiritualists do not believe in capital punishment. You do not get rid of the murderer when you hang him; he may come back, and do still more harm; better keep him where the community will be safe, and he can reform. Hanging is simply legalized murder.

At the evening session Mrs. Foye gave a very interesting account of her early experience as a medium, adding that Spiritualism teaches us to live correctly, and we should treat it as we do any other religion. Before giving any tests she paid a very high tribute to the BANNER OF LIGHT, saying that in California they looked for it with a great deal of interest, and urged upon all the importance of subscribing for it, reading it, and giving it to their friends—as some Orthodox brother or sister might read it also, and thus be made wiser and better. The tests were given in the same manner as reported at our last meeting, and were all recognized.

Mrs. Foye speaks and gives tests in Haverhill next Sunday.

President Lewis announced that Dr. Storer, and other well-known mediums, would occupy our platform next Sabbath.

The usual Thursday evening circle will be held, to which all are invited.

HEATH.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday, Oct. 21st, Spirit Margaret Fuller delivered, through the mediumship of Mrs. H. S. Lake, a lecture upon "The Home." She said: "No other question is quite so important to the individual as this one chosen for our topic to-day. The earthly home is the cradle of the soul. If it be born and rocked amid discords the consequences are trying to the spirit, retarding its growth and repressing its native powers. We view with concern the millions of places called homes being filled to-day with distorted and misshapen humanity, thrust forth into outward life without those conditions essential to peace and purity. The home is the centre of the heart's desires, be they good or ill. It is the gathering place of forces to be dissipated in the world. To be housed and fed secures the body against the action of inhospitable elements around, and this is well; but what shall shelter the soul, except the divine warmth of human love and tenderness?

To evolve harmony from the general discord is the mission of all progressive spirits. I cannot build your homes for you, but I can, at least, point out the method for their construction. I can emphasize the fact that it is essential to the welfare of the spirit, that in the home there should exist that mutual blending and helpfulness which result in rest and peace; and that, in an atmosphere of this kind, souls may be equipped successfully to wage warfare with matter for immortality. We do not expect that your earthly homes will answer fully to the soul's interior needs; but they may at least keep alive the dream of Paradise which comes to all at the dawning of manhood and of womanhood. Beware that you do not yield your dreams in the rough struggles and acute disappointments of later years. Your dreams are your soul's prophecies, and may be outwrought, nay, must be, somewhere; you may as well begin here and now. You should never be too hurried for tenderness, nor so eager for the material as to neglect those expressions of regard to which child and adult are both susceptible.

Artifice and falsehood are not home-builders; they disintegrate all they touch. Where love does not exist, there you may find the fountain-head which feeds your asylums, penitentiaries and houses of refuge. In vain philanthropists may patch the body politic, they cannot cure the evils they deplore. Why should we spin fine theories or indulge in lofty rhetoric, when by me, spirits, and before me, mortals seem driven to despair, because hatred and not love presided in the home where they took upon themselves the mask of this mortality? Let no young man or woman hesitate to choose between meagre material advantages mixed with love, and gaudy wealth defrauded of this tenderness. This is an era of material greed. He or she is an unwelcome preacher who proclaims a gospel which does not harmonize with the crystallized customs of the day. We are not here to 'let well enough alone.' We are present to quicken your dreams of peace and purity; to strengthen the ideals in your nature; to draft for you homes whose walls shall be aglow with light radiated from your own souls. Within its charmed precincts the art and poetry of existence may both be learned, and thus a beginning be made in earthly spheres for those states of rest and silence in the spirit realms where blended lives evolve beatitudes, and home becomes synonymous with happiness."

A pleasant feature of the service was the singing of very beautiful and appropriate selections by Mr. and Miss Parker.

Next Sunday the second lecture in the course will be delivered by Spirit Theodore Parker. Subject, "The Church." The School for Children convenes at 10:30 A. M. Wednesday evening Social at 7:30. All invited. Lecture for women in the Library-Room of the Temple Friday afternoons at 2:30. Subject Friday, Oct. 26th, "Spiritual Work."

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society.—The meeting of last Friday was well attended, and an unusual degree of interest was manifested. The entertainment of the evening was opened by singing by Miss Ella Wakefield. Remarks were made by Dr. Richardson and Mrs. Clara A. Field; a duet was presented by Mr. Wheat and Dr. Sweaney, Prof. Fisher at the piano.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

A Good Man Remembered.—Sunday evening, Oct. 21st, a large and merry party assembled at the residence of Mr. J. W. Mandell, 15 Putnam street, Somerville, to celebrate his sixty-seventh birthday. After partaking of a bountiful collation the company were seated in the pleasant parlor, when Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse, in behalf of the guests, presented the host with an elegant willow rocking-chair. Mr. Mandell was surprised, but responded in a feeling manner. Dr. Richardson made remarks congratulating Mr. and Mrs. Mandell and wishing them many happy returns of the day. Mrs. Mary W. Brintnall, under control of Dr. Currier, spoke many words of cheer and kindness. Mrs. Waterhouse, under control of her spirit guide, Luna, made pertinent and witty remarks, at times convulsing her hearers with laughter.

Master Bertie Blynn rendered several harmonica solos. Much pleasure was added to the occasion by the singing of the daughter and grandson of the host and hostess. The company dispersed with many congratulations and wishes that Mr. and Mrs. Mandell may long live together, and experience as much happiness in the future as their faces prove they have in the past.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—Last Sunday the children of the Lyceum attended in goodly numbers, there being one hundred and seventeen in the march. An interesting programme of readings and songs was given by Evelyn Moran, Gracie Scales, Mary Lichtenstein, Maud Fitzgerald, Alice Devereaux, Ida Burnham, Bennie Russell, Maggie McNiven, Angie Jordan and Sadie Peters. Mrs. Loring was present and read "Nobody's Child," after which she addressed the school.

Another Fair in aid of the Lyceum will be held in Berkeley Hall, commencing Dec. 10th, to continue one week. The various committees have already been chosen, and if hard work will accomplish the object in view it will be a success.

The sewing circle connected with the Lyceum meets every Wednesday afternoon and evening at 1031 Washington street. These meetings are well attended, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to come and join.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meeting opened with singing by Mrs. Case; afterward Eben Cobb, manager, made an invocation, and subsequently spoke: he contrasted, in a few remarks, the God of Spiritualism with the deity proclaimed by theology—making the issue so clear that there was doubtless no person present who did not see at once the reasonableness of the spiritual idea over that entertained by the popular churches. The usual talent was present in test and psychometric readings at the sessions of the day and evening.

COM.

First Spiritual Temple Fraternity School.—The session of last Sunday was opened with music and singing by Mrs. L. C. Clapp, followed by the reading of an invocation given through the mediumship of Miss M. T. Shelhamer. The object lesson was "Justice," which was commented upon by many present. The lesson of the day was a short explanation of the advent of Modern Spiritualism, when and where the rap gave promise of a reunion at the dissolution of the body of all the human family in the world of spirits. Next Sunday the object-lesson will be "Wisdom." The lesson of the day will be "Children in the Spirit-World."

ALONZO DANFORTH.

No. 2 Fountain Square, Roxbury.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were held here Sunday last with good audiences, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. Remarks by the Chairman, Miss Holt, Dr. Barker and Mr. Johnson were of an instructive character, and were well received; unquestionable proofs of spirit-presence were given through Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mr. Johnson, Mrs. Rich, Mrs. Wilkins, Miss Knox and the Chairman. The services throughout the day were interestingly interspersed by some of C. Payson Longley's inspirational music.

M. M. HOLT.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Mrs. Loring was with us last Sunday afternoon and evening; her remarks and tests never fail to please. Mrs. Robbins and Mrs. Forrester gave psychometric readings, which were pronounced correct. Mrs. Nellie Thomas, from New Hampshire, made remarks, closing with tests. David Brown also made remarks, and gave delineations. Next Sunday the fire test medium will exhibit under strict test conditions.

F. W. M.

Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington Street.—Meetings were held last Sunday, afternoon and evening. E. H. Mathews made remarks, and gave psychometric readings. Mrs. Hancock gave descriptions of spirits, by which they were recognized. Mr. Mathews will be at Eagle Hall next Sunday, the 28th.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—The meetings were well attended—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham speaking in the morning upon subjects furnished by the audience, and improvising three poems. In the evening she spoke upon the subject: "Spiritualism Exposed." Mrs. Brigham said: "We are in the midst of a newspaper snowstorm, but we can depend upon it Spiritualism will not freeze." After the morning lecture Mr. Luther R. Marsh was invited by Mrs. Brigham to make some remarks. He stepped up to the platform with the elasticity in his step and vigor of appearance of a man of fifty, and remarked that he had not come to be heard, but to listen to the angel lady clergyman whose inspiration came from a higher source. He expressed undoubted confidence in his experience with mediums, and his faith in immortality. His remarks were solid and convincing, and met the hearty approval of the audience.

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was well attended. Mr. Henry J. Newton made interesting remarks upon his experiences in investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism. Mrs. M. E. Williams enunciated some sound practical remarks. Mr. Andrew Engle, of Baxter, Ga., told a marvelous experience in proof of materialization. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave numerous recognized tests. On the whole the meeting was very enjoyable.

Next Sunday Mrs. Brigham will occupy the platform of the First Society, discoursing in the morning upon subjects furnished by the audience, and in the evening upon a subject furnished by the influences speaking through her. The morning service is at 11 A. M., and the evening at 7:45 o'clock. Meeting for Manifestations, 2:45 P. M.

New York, Oct. 21st, 1888.

[New York Special.]

Of course THE BANNER will see in the New York papers of this morning the report of the "Foxy" fiasco last night. If it does not cause many people to look into the phenomena who have heretofore ignored them, I shall be mistaken. Loud raps heard all over the building will make sensible people doubt their having been produced by the great toe-joint of any individual.

* * * *

I was at Mrs. Williams's séance last Saturday afternoon, and Spirit Frank Cushman called me up to the cabinet, and desired, the next time I wrote to THE BANNER, to say that they were quite ready to inaugurate the contemplated experiments, and were very desirous that they should be prosecuted in a strictly scientific manner.

GOTHAM.

Oct. 22d.

Newburyport, Mass.—The First Spiritualist Society opened its meetings for this season Sunday last with Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester as speaker, and right grandly did she portray the truths of our philosophy to a good sized audience that listened with close attention to the glorious thoughts uttered. Mrs. Manchester's singing and rhythmical improvisation on subjects given by the audience were very fine. She will be with us again November 25th. Miss Josephine Webster will be with us on next Sunday. Mr. Charles W. Hidden after a severe sickness is around once more. The Ladies' Aid holds its meetings every Thursday.

F. H. J.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Brooklyn.

Johnston Building, Flatbush Avenue, corner of Nevins Street.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Progressive Conference.—A good audience assembled in Preparatory Hall, Johnston Building, Brooklyn, to listen to Mrs. Helen Marion Walton's inspirational essay on: "The Divine Woman," which was received with great favor. Conference exercises were participated in by Messrs. Harris, Swackhammer, La Fume, Ellsworth, Mrs. Gridley, Mrs. Slocum, and Dr. Edwin Veres Wright. Mr. A. E. Laurens is expected to speak upon "Woman and her Master" on Saturday evening, Nov. 3d. A lively interest will be felt in that topic, and no doubt a large audience will be present.

FRANK W. JONES.

Letter from Lyman C. Howe.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Just now the cause is reviving in Paterson, N. J. A society has started with fresh promise in its activity. Bishop A. Beals spoke for this organization the first month—September; Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, Sunday, Oct. 14th; J. J. Morse is engaged for November; Mrs. H. S. Lake for December; and the laudable effort to secure the best talent ought to insure success. Certainly they can find none better than Mr. Morse and Mrs. Lake. Dr. Peck, I believe, is engaged for February, and he was counted one of the best they had at Cassadaga last August.

The First Society of Spiritualists in New York is moving steadily on, with Nellie J. T. Brigham as regular speaker, and she has many admirers. Choice music enlivens the three sessions held by this Society each Sunday. The conferences at 3 P. M. are devoted to short talks, music and readings by Mrs. E. A. Wells. Her descriptions are generally recognized by the parties to whom she assigns the spirit presence. Mr. Henry J. Newton presides, and uses the spare time in wise and witty suggestions, profitable and amusing.

The cause is healthfully growing in spite of all obstacles. Indeed, the obstacles are important helps to vigorous growth.

The sensational reports about the recantation of the Fox girls do not disturb sensible people, while they may excite pity.

Yours for the cause,

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—During the present month J. Clegg Wright has been with the First Spiritualist Society of this city, speaking and teaching Spiritualism in its purity as he understands it, or as it appears to him. His utterances have been given a careful hearing by the audiences on Sundays, and the social gatherings at private homes have been very highly enjoyed and appreciated.

Sunday, Oct. 14th, at 2 P. M., Mr. Wright lectured upon "Mediumship, Magnetism and Control," and in the evening upon "The Effects of Organization and Mental Quality on Control."

One illustration of the effect of magnetism on control was stated where the medium was a very fine psychological subject, and a splendid test medium for spirit communion, but who was holding séances for materialization, and the effect of magnetism from the sitters would invariably control him, so that he would appear before the curtain under the influence of that magnetic current, always personating some spirit friend. The speaker said that that medium had been "exposed" time and again, when he was simply under the influence of the sitters.

Sunday, Oct. 21st, Mr. Wright took for the 2 P. M. subject "Progress Before and After Death," and for the evening lecture, "Spiritual Culture, and its Effects on Civilization."

Both lectures were rich with the advance thought of the day, and were roundly applauded.

W. W. CURRIER.

Denver, Col.—On Sabbath evening, Sept. 30th, at Warren Hall, Denver, Col., at the close of the services, the following resolutions were presented to Dr. J. R. and his wife, Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless:

Whereas, Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless and Dr. J. R. Nickless, of New York, have been holding regular public meetings in the city of Denver during the past two months in the interest of a pure Spiritualism; and

Whereas, Said meetings have been more largely and better attended than those held by any previous teachers of the Philosophy who have come among us; and

Whereas, The results have been many conversions, and a final organization of scattered elements and individual believers into one harmonious organization called the College of Spiritual Philosophy of the city of Denver, incorporated by charter, with all the privileges and functions necessary to promote the cause; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we hereby publicly vote to Dr. J. R. and and Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless the thanks and profoundest gratitude of this College for their labors in our midst, and that we do commend them most heartily to any and all spiritual friends, individual or collective; and we assure them of a warm and kindly welcome to Denver whenever in the course of heavenly guidance they may in the future come this way; and this vote shall go upon record as crediting them with laying the first foundation for union in the great work of upbuilding Spiritualism upon a practical basis in Colorado.

HENRY WALKER, Chairman.

J. D. DONN, Sec'y.

Bridgeport and North Brookfield.—Notwithstanding the bad rain storm, Pythian Hall, on Friday evening, 19th inst., was densely packed throughout the exercises, to listen to the utterances of J. Frank Baxter. All were pleased with the music, interested in the lecture—"The Pro and Con. of Spiritualism"—and highly gratified with the accuracy of spirit descriptions and portrayal of characteristics in the delineations.

By a communication from Bridgeport, Conn., we also learn of Mr. Baxter's continued success in that city on Sunday, Oct. 21st, where unusually large, intelligent and interested audiences gave him hearing. The themes, "The Naturalness of Physical Death," and "Transition; or the Flight of the Spirit," absorbed the closest attention of the listeners.

Sunday, 28th inst., in the afternoon, he will lecture on "The Ethics of Virtue," and in the evening on "The Age, Persistence, and Permanence of Spiritualism," for "It is not limited to forty years," said he, "and is now here to stay!"

Mr. Baxter's lectures of next Sunday will be his last in Bridgeport this season. He, on Friday evening, 26th inst., will give a benefit entertainment to the Society of Spiritualists, assisted by the Sansone Orchestra of that city.

Haverhill, Mass.—Brittan Hall.—Sunday, Oct. 21st, Dr. C. H. Harding, of Boston, was the speaker and psychometric test medium at this hall before the First Spiritualist Association of Haverhill and Bradford. He addressed and exercised his gifts as a sensitive before fine audiences, alike in the afternoon and evening. In the afternoon the discourse treated of the difficulties which Spiritualism encounters in its advance—the conclusion being reached that they are only momentary barriers, which result in real advantage in giving solid and healthy growth to a cause which has come to stay. In the evening the address was an appeal to make the best use of the present opportunity.

The agreeable announcement was made that Mrs. Ada Foye, of California, is to be with us to speak and exercise her superior mediumistic gifts next Sunday. A lively interest was kindled by the announcement; she will be greeted with large audiences.

With advancing steps the Brittan Hall Association is about to leave its association features behind to take on the form of a legal organization.

Chatham, Mass.—Mr. A. E. Tisdale, on his recent visit here, was entertained at the home of Bro. Orick Nickerson. He spoke in Town Hall, Saturday and Sunday evenings, Oct. 6th and 7th. During the week he spoke several times in the homes of Spiritualists, and Saturday evening, Oct. 13th, in Town Hall, he gave a description of his life—how he became blind, also his development as a medium.

Bro. Orick Nickerson having secured the use of the Universalist Church for Mr. Tisdale, on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 14th, he spoke on "Intemperance and the evils that afflict humanity; their causes, and how to remove them." The closing lecture, Sunday evening, Oct. 14th, was on "What Spiritualism is and what it has done for the world," which was handled in a very able manner. We hope soon to have Mr. Tisdale with us again.

Norwich, Conn.—Dr. F. L. H. Willis, so well known in spiritual circles for his scholarly and scientific discourses on the Spiritual Philosophy, has won golden opinions for his labor in our society in the three Sundays he has been with us. His discourses are confined entirely to the cause he so nobly represents, and the inspired poems which fall from his lips are gems of wisdom and truth, touching in their expression many hearts in the audience. Skeptics particularly are astounded at this manifestation. Next Sunday closes his present engagement with us.—J. Frank Baxter follows him in November. Mr. Baxter is a general favorite here.

MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Brockton, Mass.—The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society opened its meetings for the coming lecture course, Sunday, Oct. 7th, with Mrs. A. L. Pennell, of Onset, as speaker. A good audience listened to her brief address, and received her many tests with great satisfaction. The meeting was very interesting, and with her new phase of mediumship was unusually fine. The same speaker occupied our platform Oct. 14th. W. J. Colville spoke for us Oct. 21st.

MRS. H. N. KEITH, Cor. Sec'y.

Keene, N. H.—Prof. J. W. Kenyon delivered two lectures in Keene last Sunday, correspondence in reference to which will find place in our columns next week. He will speak in Keene next Sunday, and go from there to Bridgeport, Ct., for the month of November.

To-day is important. Yesterday has gone. To-morrow never comes. Take care of your cough to-day by using Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy. It is a sure cure.

Log Cabin Grandmothers.

An Indiana doctor has recently discovered in a common weed whose medicinal qualities have never before been suspected, a valuable remedy for bowel disorders.

There is nothing particularly strange about this fact.

Nothing.

And yet the very simplicity of the new discovery would, with some, seem to throw just doubt upon its power. To make it one has only to pour hot water over the leaves of the plant. In its preparation no vast chemical works and appliances are required.

Is it to be wondered at, since such plainly prepared remedies are accounted as of such great merit in these days, that such wonderful results attended our grandmothers, whose teas and infusions of roots and herbs and balsams have exerted so great an influence in the maintenance of health and life?

Certainly not!

The greatest pieces of machinery strike us most by their exceeding simplicity.

The secret of the success of grandmother's remedies was their freshness and simplicity. Every autumn found the little Log Cabin abundantly supplied with fresh leaves, roots, herbs and balsams, which were carefully dried and prepared and laid away for use. Dreading to call a doctor because of the expensiveness of his far-made trips, they immediately gave attention to the disease and routed it before it had gained a foothold.

The old Log Cabin grandmother, in cap and high tucked gown, and perchance bespectacled in rough silver, her weary feet encased in "hum made" slips, is the dear, sweet nurse who rises to the view of many a man and woman to-day as the early years of life pass in retrospect.

The secrets of grandmother's medicines were rapidly being forgotten and the world was not growing in the grace of good health. To restore the lost art of log cabin healing has been for years the desire of a well known philanthropist in whose ancestral line were eight "goodly physicians" of the old style, men who never saw a medical college save in the woods, nor a "medical diploma" except that inscribed on the faces of healthy and long-lived patients. Much time and money was expended in securing the old formulæ, which to-day are put forth as "Log Cabin remedies"—sarsaparilla, hops and buchu, cough and consumption, and several others, by Warner, whose name is famous and a standard for medical excellence all over the globe. These oldest, newest and best preparations have been recognized as of such superexcellence that to-day they can be found with all leading dealers.

When Col. Ethan Allen was making history along our northern frontier during the revolution, Col. Seth Warner, the fighting Sheridan of that army, who was a skillful natural doctor, used many such remedies, notably like the Log Cabin extract, sarsaparilla and cough and consumption remedy, among the soldiers with famous success.

They are a noble inheritance which we of to-day may enjoy to the full, as did our forefathers, and using, reap, as did they, the harvest of a life full of days and full of usefulness.

"Star of Progress."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Permit me to call the attention of your readers to a new and valuable work of nearly four hundred pages which has just been published by its compiler and author, Henry W. Smith.

The title-page of the book reads as follows: "Star of Progress. New devotional music for Congregation, Quartette, or Choir, Lyceum Songs, Marches, and Responsive Readings. Together with beautiful select poems and hymns," etc., etc.

This is a publication long needed in the field of Lyceum work; it is replete with beautiful gems of poetry and song, and just fitted to train the growing mind of the scholar in the line of spiritual culture and thought.

A large portion of this valuable work—especially in the musical department—is original with its publisher, and shows the depth of his own spiritual and har

THE REAL ORIGIN OF THE SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

A Review.

BY PROF. HENRY KIDDLE.

The last resource of the determined disbeliever in Modern Spiritualism, when he can no longer deny the actuality of the phenomena which form its basis, is to construct some seemingly-scientific hypothesis by the use of which he may be enabled, however absurdly, to controvert the fact that these phenomena are due to the agency of disembodied [excarnated] spirits, the existence and intervention of whom are particularly offensive to a certain class of minds. The proceedings and published reports of the London Psychical Research Society afford some very striking illustrations of this curious and suggestive fact. The latest is presented in a work by a French writer, the English translation of which was published in the latter part of last year under the title of "Posthumous Humanity: a Study of Phantoms." The author of the work is M. Adolphe D'Assier, a member of the Bordeaux Academy of Sciences, and the English translator is Col. H. S. Olcott, president of the Theosophical Society.*

This work is of interest to Spiritualists, (1) on account of its recognition of the reality of the phenomena of Spiritualism, and (2) because it claims to afford a logical and satisfactory scientific theory by which they may all be accounted for without calling in the agency of spirits at all.

The writer, D'Assier, is an avowed disciple of Comte, and claims that the theory, which he sets forth as original, is in strict consistency with the materialistic philosophy of Positivism. Thus he confesses and avoids; he accepts, even to what many Spiritualists would regard an extreme degree, the facts and phenomena usually classed as Spiritualistic, and explains away their real significance so as to retain his aversion to what he, with others, calls the supernatural. In this respect he is a type of that large class who are led astray by what we may call a superstitious idea—superstitious, because it is a lingering relic of a false system of thought or belief. According to that system, there can be nothing natural that is not the result of physical law; hence to those who have neither cognition nor conception of anything beyond the universe of matter, whatever pertains to the spiritual side of the universe—far grander, more profound, and more real (since nearer to the absolute)—is supernatural.

There is no more prolific element of progress in our age than the extension of the idea of immutable law to the realm of spirit, and the resulting extinction of the notion of miracle as an interposition of divine power for some special purpose not foreseen in the original scheme of the creation. Such an absurdity must be especially offensive to philosophic minds; and, therefore, it has led to that denial of spiritual facts and phenomena which prevails so widely among physical scientists, and, indeed, among all thinkers whose minds have not been warped and narrowed by creedal fancies and traditions.

The fundamental principles of the Positive Philosophy are not at all inconsistent with those spiritual laws which have been directly deduced from the facts and phenomena of Modern Spiritualism; and could M. D'Assier have freed his mind from the superstitious notion of the supernatural, he would have perceived at once the true significance of those occurrences the verity of which he so fully recognizes, instead of attempting to apply to them an hypothesis wholly untenable in regard to all but a very small class of them.

The basic idea of Comte's system is that we know nothing but natural phenomena and their inter-relations, the constancy and uniformity of which give rise to the conception of universal law. This principle is obviously true, but is not more true in respect to our knowledge of the material than of the spiritual side of nature. The Spiritual Philosophy in these times of enlightenment is fast becoming as "positive" in this regard as that of any branch of physical nature, since it is based upon, or deduced from, not metaphysical or theological speculations, but the phenomena of the spiritual or supersensual realm, which have been so copiously presented, observed, verified, and recorded, during the last forty years, and have been collated with similar phenomena described in the annals of every age. These already afford a broad basis for the generalization of principles, or laws; and, if the investigation is permitted to go on, will ere long put spiritual science on a plane as positive, exact, and experimentally verifiable as that of any of the physical sciences, none of which, even in this age of scientific advancement, can be said to have passed very far beyond the rudimental stage. Will any truly enlightened scientist say the contrary? If so, let him study the far-sightedness and humility of the illustrious Newton.

The book which we here review presents so much that is suggestive of valuable thought to the student of spiritual science, that we cannot but feel under obligations to Col. Olcott for laying it open to English-speaking readers by his excellent translation; though, were it not controverted, uninformed readers would, necessarily, be greatly misled by its erroneous assumptions and absurd theory as to what the author variously styles, in his obvious mystification and uncertainty of judgment, the "mesmeric ether," the "mesmeric fluid," the "mesmeric aura," the "thaumaturgic fluid," the "vital fluid," etc., to the marvelous and inconceivable operation of which he refers all the various "apparitions" of which he treats, and to which he applies the peculiar designations of his newly-coined nomenclature, such as the "mesmeric personality," the "fluidic personality," the "epigastric personage" [sic], etc., etc.; and all this to eschew the hated term spirit, and to subvert and utterly destroy the basic proposition of "Spiritism," which he calls the "grand mystification of the century," as well as to prove that the "evocation of phantoms by the medium is a mirage."

The wonderful personage thus variously designated will be recognized as analogous to the no less marvelous and equally fanciful "unconscious secondary self" invented by the psychical researchers of London, in order to rule out the spirits, and explain away the facts that rationally demonstrate their intervention. It is to be carefully observed, however, that in these ingenious efforts there is always an entire failure to show why, on these hypotheses, the intelligence that accompanies these phenomena invariably alleges that they are the manifestations of excarnated spirits, or the surviving personalities of deceased men and women. How comes it that the "epigastric personage," or the "secondary self," always makes this curious mistake?

Referring to the doctrine of spirit agency as the cause of the phenomena, D'Assier offers the following singular objection, which we will quote as a specimen of his astuteness in spiritual science:

> "The advocates of this strange theory did not perceive the no less strange consequence which must follow. The perennial survival of shades would have long since rendered this planet uninhabitable for us. The dead would occupy the place of the living; for the accumulation of the specters of the different tribes of the terrestrial fauna [sic], heaped at the surface of the globe since the first geological epochs, would render the air irrespirable. We could not move save in a dense atmosphere of ghosts. Now chemical analysis has never shown in the air the presence of either of the immediate principles which enter into the constitution of a fluidic phantasmal form elaborated in an animal economy."

How utterly impossible it is for a mind spiritually so blind, so clogged and darkened by materialistic conceptions, to have any true idea of spiritual entities and their conditions, must be obvious to any one who has made any progress in spiritual science. The "fluidic phantasmal form" of which the author speaks is but a chimera of his imagination, a mere speculative entity, the assertion of whose existence is totally inconsistent with the principles of the Positive Philosophy, for no phenomena described justify any such assertion; and, certainly, no discovery has ever been made of the "immediate principles [material elements?] which enter into the constitution" of such an entity. How then could chemical analysis resolve them? But this shallow materialism runs through the whole book, and, we are sorry to have to say, finds no rebuke or refutation in any of the annotations of its translator, although it is as much opposed to Oriental Spiritism as to Modern Spiritualism. On the contrary, the translator, in his preface, is able to remark:

> "By the quality of mind which Prof. Tyndall calls an 'educated imagination,' the author propounds a reasonable theory[!] to account scientifically for many of the more striking phenomena of psychic action."

Imagination, truly! And if educated, certainly not in the right direction. An educated imagination is, unquestionably, an important acquisition to the scientist, as affording a speculative hypothesis to be verified by subsequent investigation and experiment, such as is illustrated by the methods of Kepler and Newton; but unverifiable chimeras such as D'Assier's "fluidic being and mesmeric ether" are just the opposite of scientific, and a burlesque on Positivism. Indeed, it is but a revival, under another name, of the "psychic force" theory of Serjeant Cox and others, now obsolete, having been abandoned by its inventors.

The general title of this work, "Posthumous Humanity," is to some extent a misnomer, since it treats of two classes of phantoms—the "post-sepulchral" and what by way of antithesis we may call the ante-sepulchral, familiarly known as the double. The author presents to his readers numerous well-attested cases, of considerable variety, in both classes—the "phantoms" of the living and those of the dead. Both of these he seems to be fond of calling shades, a term borrowed from the ancient Romans, who used the term umbra to designate a spirit.

Thus in the Æneid Dido says:

> "Omnibus umbra locis adero." [Everywhere will I be present as a shade.]

From the standpoint of gross mortality, the metaphor may do very well for the poet; but the term is scientifically, and in reality, absurd; and it is especially absurd in connection with D'Assier's treatment of the subject in which he speaks of the "fluidic structure of the shade." And his translator, strangely enough, adopts and imitates this nonsense in talking about the "shadow-world, and our relations with the same." To give an idea of this treatment, we will quote the author's own summary of facts and principles:

> "Innumerable facts, observed from antiquity to our own day, demonstrate in our being the existence of an internal reality—the internal man. Analysis of these different manifestations has permitted us to penetrate its nature. Externally it is the exact image of the person of whom it is the complement. Internally, it reproduces the mould of all the organs which constitute the framework of the human body. We see it, in short, move, speak, take nourishment; perform, in a word, all the great functions of animal life. The extreme tenuity of these constituent molecules, which represent the last term of organic matter, allow it to pass through the walls and partitions of apartments. Hence the name phantom, by which it is generally designated. Nevertheless, as it is united with the body from which it emanates by an invisible vascular plexus, it can, at will, lead to itself by a sort of aspiration the greater part of the living forces which animate the latter. One sees, then, by a singular inversion, life withdraw from the body, which then exhibits a cadaverous rigidity, and transfer itself entirely to the phantom, which acquires consistency, sometimes even to the point of struggling with persons before whom it materializes. It is but exceptionally that it shows itself in connection with a living person. But as soon as death has snapped the bonds which attach it to our organism, it definitely separates itself from the human body and constitutes the posthumous phantom."

While observation and experience allow us to admit the correctness of this description of the spirit (sometimes called the soul) clothed in what has been variously designated spirit body, perisprit (by the French), or astral form (by the modern Theosophists), a logical consideration of the facts shows clearly that the positive assertions of D'Assier as to its nature are mere materialistic assumptions. The "extreme tenuity of the constituent molecules," of which he speaks, and "the invisible vascular plexus," are nothing more than figments of the imagination—an imagination not properly educated, but, in fact, perverted by the cultivation of materialistic ideas. We discern in this work an abuse of the nomenclature of physical science: for the "last term" of matter, organic or inorganic [meaning the limit of divisibility], is, in accordance with scientific parlance, not the molecule but the atom; and both of these, we must bear in mind, are merely the creation of the scientist's imagination, since there is no sensuous evidence of the existence of either as an actual entity. How important it is, for all the purposes of exact and positive science, that we never lose sight of the distinction between conceived theory and observed fact! Yet physical scientists are constantly guilty of this fault. A positive philosopher, however, ought to be especially free from such an error.

Although the author recognizes so fully the reality of all the phenomena of Spiritism, and the existence of post-sepulchral apparitions of human beings, who possess and exercise the various functions of life, yet he absolutely destroys the force of all this as an evidence of what we call immortality. These posthumous phantoms have but little endurance. Like the "shells" of the theosophists, they are doomed to annihilation. Thus he says, still exercising his imagination, for he affords no proof:

> "The molecules of its tissue [the phantom's] disintegrating from each other, there comes at last a day when it has no further consciousness of itself. Its personality has then disappeared; it has become but a vague form, which dissipates itself slowly and becomes lost in the universal medium. This slow agony of the posthumous being is verified, if I may venture to say so, experimentally by the very course of its manifestations: tumultuous at the beginning, they decrease gradually in frequency and power, and end in complete cessation; thus indicating the daily shocks which the shade suffers from cosmic agents until its definitive annihilation occurs."

And this the learned positivist makes the destiny of all humanity. The "troubled spirit" that haunts his former abode, or place to which he is drawn by some association, and causes disturbances therein (and our author gives well-authenticated examples of this phenomenon), but who, as he progresses in spiritual knowledge, and passes from his earth-bound condition, abandons these useless manifestations and disappears from the earthly sphere, is conceived by this singular philosopher, as a mere disintegrating phantom tending to dissolution, instead of an immortal spirit, passing, by the law of progression in the upward pathway that leads from earthly passions, appetites, and associations, to the spheres of harmony and peacefulness. Such is the difference between the beautiful doctrine of Spiritualism, confirmed by the testimony of thousands of returning spirits, and the nightmare cogitations and theorizings of this materialistic philosopher, striving with forced logic and fallacious reasoning to interpret the undeniable facts that show a continuity of life beyond the grave, so as to make them conduct to the dreary gospel of annihilation. It is most certain that his pretentious volume will make but few converts, though it may lead astray some who pride themselves upon their scientific acumen and attainments, and vainly imagine that there is nothing beyond physical nature, and that

Written Especially for the Banner of Light,

BY MRS. EMMA MINER.

CHAPTER X.

RE-UNION.

Doris sat by the bed and held Mrs. Mason's hand. It was cold and lifeless. She could not realize that she was about to die. She looked at the white, rigid face. There was no answer, as she repeatedly called her name. For four hours she did not leave the bedside, and then Miss Parker arrived. She passed up the wide stairway and entered Mrs. Mason's room. Dr. Placent arrived at the same moment and followed her.

After a little examination and a few questions to Doris, he called them into the next room.

"It is a very doubtful case. She may live only a few hours, or days; and it may be weeks that she may lie in this condition; but I doubt if her faculties are ever restored."

"What could have caused it?" asked Miss Parker.

"Unusual excitement," replied the doctor.

"It began while we were at Creighton," said Doris. "Mr. Wilkins sent grandma a telegram to come home, and we came next day; and for a week they had talks together most every day. I could see that she was very much troubled. Then this morning Mr. Wilkins came again, and while they were talking she dropped right away in her chair. He says she 'has lost everything,' and the announcement was a great shock to her."

"Undoubtedly Mr. Wilkins will call to confer with you soon," said the doctor. "I will come in again this evening."

"You don't seem very much surprised, auntie. Did you know grandma was in trouble?"

"I heard of it," said Miss Parker, evasively.

"How strange! But is n't it dreadful? How badly she will feel about her property!"

"Doris, I don't think she will ever know about it. I doubt if she recovers from this. I wish I knew just what to do, but until I can have an understanding with Mr. Wilkins I can do nothing. I will stay and help take care of her at present."

"How thankful I am! Auntie, perhaps I am wicked, but I am so glad to see you that I am thankful for anything that will bring you back. Only, of course, you know I am sorry for grandma."

"Yes, yes. I know what you mean, Doris. I must go in again now. Be sure to let me know if Mr. Wilkins calls."

Doris promised, and went to assist Katy in some needful preparations for the invalid. When she returned Miss Parker asked, "Where is Miss Shallot?"

"Why, auntie! have n't you heard the good news? She has married the Rev. Ebenezer Tulkin, and they have gone off as missionaries."

Miss Parker dropped into a chair in astonishment.

"Married! That 's good! And gone? That 's better! How glad I am for your sake, child! Did you see him? What is he like?"

"Oh! he is a little, dried up, dark-complexioned man, has squinty eyes, and looks fussy. I don't like him a bit, except for taking her away!"

"Well! well! I never shall be more surprised in my life! Really gone?" and she glanced furtively at the door of Miss Shallot's old room, as if expecting even then she would appear to her.

Mr. Wilkins did not call until the next day. Doris remained with Mrs. Mason, while Miss Parker talked with him. He gave her many details, by which she learned that Mr. Staines had swindled her sister out of everything. She really no longer owned the home which at that moment was sheltering her.

"Then I am to understand my sister has lost all? That she has not even a pittance upon which to depend?"

"Not a dollar left, madam. Of course, some one must settle up matters. She has trusted them to me, and I will attend to them at once."

"I am wondering what will be the end of it all," said Miss Parker, as she returned. "If your grandma lives she will be a poor woman; not even a roof over her head. And if she lives and is sick, mercy only knows what will become of her. I have got to look this squarely in the face, Doris, and make my plans accordingly, for Sarah is past planning."

The day passed quietly. Doris saw that Miss Parker was in deep thought, and said little. She remained near her, satisfied if she could but touch her hand, and look into the face of one she loved so well.

While they were sitting there next morning, Mr. Brooks called.

"I will stay with grandma while you go down, auntie."

"Sure, it 's meself as will stay, Miss Doris. The sight of him will do you good. Go down wid your aunt now." And Katy took possession of the easy chair by the bedside. Doris gave her the fan and followed her aunt.

She had not seen Mr. Brooks since the day her aunt left the house. Mr. Brooks had called during her illness, and Doris had received flowers which she felt came from him. The remembrance of their last meeting was quite lost in the pleasure of seeing him again.

"Miss Parker! Is it possible? I did not expect this pleasure!" Then a sudden fear possessed him. Was it possible Doris had retracted? He looked inquiringly at Doris.

"Grandma is very ill. We had to send for her."

"I had not heard of that." A thought of Lydia's message came to his mind. Doris told him some of the particulars.

"I am sorry. How strangely it has all happened!" He took Doris's hand for a moment.

"How thin and pale you have grown! I wanted to see you so much while you were sick."

"And I wanted to thank you for the flowers." Something in his eyes reminded her of what occurred at their last meeting. He turned abruptly to Miss Parker.

"Mrs. Mason's illness and Miss Shallot's marriage will make quite a change among you."

"Yes. I shall stay here for the present, until we see how it is with my sister. According to all Mr. Wilkins says, she has lost all her property, and I shall have to plan accordingly. I think she is going to recover a little from this, but not fully, and in that case it will devolve upon me to take care of her, and of Doris, too"; and she clasped her hand affectionately. "Everything looks in a tangle, now, but I have no fears but it will all be straightened out for me."

"You may be sure I will do all I can," said Doris; "but oh dear! What am I good for? I don't know anything."

Mr. Brooks looked very much as if he wanted to speak, but it was evidently a dangerous subject. He changed it to another.

"I expect Dr. Packard will return next week, and then my engagement here will be concluded."

"I hope you will not leave the city at once?" said Miss Parker.

"I have not yet made my plans. For some reasons, I prefer to remain here a little longer. To tell you the truth, Miss Parker, I am interested in matters progressing at Dr. Carroll's, and wish to continue my investigations with Lydia. Upon this result will depend my future action. I do not wish to act hastily. I want time for earnest thought."

Doris looked at him gravely. He smiled, as he said to her:

"My first thought, when I came in, was that you had retracted, Doris."

"No, indeed! I don't think I could ever do it. I can't help believing my mother comes to me, and other friends, too."

"Yes, and the Spiritual Philosophy teaches so much that is hopeful and comforting. I wish it were all true. I may yet be forced to accept it."

"I wish you would go over to Dr. Carroll's and tell them what has occurred here," said Miss Parker, as Mr. Brooks was about to leave.

"I am going directly there, and will take your message."

Doris felt much pleasure in this call. "I hope he has forgotten all he said to me that dreadful day," thought Doris, as she returned to Mrs. Mason's room. An hour after, when the familiar face of a certain little boy appeared with more flowers in his hands, Doris doubted that he had.

She put them in a vase near her, and began to wonder if it would not be a great trial to Mr. Brooks not to continue in the ministry.

Days passed, during which Mrs. Mason seemed to gain a little in strength, but she did not recognize any one about her. She muttered short, broken sentences, words they could hardly understand. Sometimes she seemed to fancy herself a child, and again she talked of her husband. Sometimes she spoke of her daughter Mary, or rather seemed to speak to her.

Miss Parker and Doris nursed her faithfully.

"We must prepare for a change, Doris. This is the last week in August, and by the first of October we must leave here. Sarah may live a long time in this condition, but she cannot live here. The house is passing into other hands. I don't see any way except to take her out to my place in Roseville. She has nothing to support herself with, and you and I must take care of her. I can do it there with less expense. What do you say to it, Doris?"

"I suppose we must go. I am willing to do anything you think best. I will do all I can to help. One thing I can do—I can sew. And, auntie, I am willing to live plainly and get along with a little if I can only be with you."

"Yes, dear child, I know it. We can be happy if we are poor. But I have faith to think the way will open for us somehow. I must talk with Dr. Placent and Mr. Wilkins at once. We must make the move while it is warm and pleasant."

She turned to Mrs. Mason and gently smoothed her gray hair back from her face.

"Poor soul!" she said. "It is a comfort to me to know you will not realize the change that has come to you. We will not let her suffer for anything, will we, Doris?"

"No, I'll do all I can," she replied hopefully.

Dr. Placent thought there could be no objection to removing Mrs. Mason to Roseville.

Some of her personal property was at once removed. Her room was made ready for her—the best and pleasantest room in the house—and one fine morning in September James drove her over carefully. Doris was already awaiting them.

Mrs. Mason gave no sign that she could distinguish between her own home and Roseville.

The change was great to Doris, she had lived so long where there were so many apartments, each spacious and handsome. She missed the large halls, the wide, easy stairs, and numerous little conveniences with which Mrs. Mason's house was filled.

She missed the service of James and Katy. Still she was content to do with her own hands all that was required of her, and cheerfully and patiently assumed her part of the charge of Mrs. Mason. They rarely left her alone.

Two days after their arrival they were sitting out on the piazza, while Mrs. Mason was sleeping.

"And now, Doris, comes the 'tug of war,' as the saying is. We are to buckle on our armor, and earn our bread. I will make it as easy for you as I can, but it will be hard at the best."

"Don't feel badly, auntie. I am ready for anything," and Doris smiled hopefully into her aunt's face.

"I don't want you to go into the city to work, and the next plan is to have our work come out here. I have already quite an amount engaged, through the kindness of Mrs. Carroll. We will each do the most and best we can, and if we three can get a living and keep out of debt, it will be all I dare hope."

"Keep out of debt!" repeated Doris; "how strangely that sounds, when we have always been accustomed to plenty of money."

"You mean you have, Doris. I have had many a hard lesson in poverty, for which I may be thankful now, for I shall know so much better how to manage."

"Perhaps it is well I should learn how to 'manage.' Who knows but I shall be poor the rest of my life?" Doris smiled, as if she thought poverty attractive. "I dare say I shall be very stupid about learning many things, but I know you will be patient with me. I really want to be a help to you, instead of a burden, and I am ready to begin this very minute. I think we shall need to use all the minutes."

Miss Parker brought out a bundle of work, while Doris brought her little work-basket, which she soon saw must be exchanged for a larger one; and soon her needle was flying busily. They worked on in silence for a little time, and then Doris said,

"Is n't it most tea-time, auntie?"

"Yes; but our tea must be bread and milk to-night."

"That is good. You know I like milk. But your favorite tea—must you do without it?"

"Yes, I shall try for a while. Your grandma must have it, so you may make it for her."

They chatted so pleasantly over their bread and milk they forgot what they were eating. Doris put away the tea things and sat down at once to her sewing. At nine Miss Parker said:

"We must put the work away now. You have done well to-day, child."

Three days passed without much change. They were busy days.

"I most wonder that Dr. Placent has not been out here. He seemed to feel so much interest in Sarah's case."

"No doubt he is very busy," said Doris. She began to think of another physican she would be very glad to see, and, as if her thought were prophetic, Dr. Carroll stepped in through the open door. She had not seen him in a long time.

"Dr. Carroll! How glad I am to see you!" Her face expressed more pleasure than words. He took the little hands, grown so thin, and held them closely for a moment,

"I would have come to you long ago if I had not been forbidden, Doris; and now I warn you I shall never stay away again, unless you bid me."

Doris could not answer him, for at that moment Miss Parker, who had heard her delighted exclamation, entered the room. He received a warm welcome from her also; but Doris had suddenly taken refuge in a pile of snowy cloth which she was industriously sewing.

"It is always a pleasure to come here, Miss Parker; but my visit this morning is a professional one. Dr. Placent is quite ill, and has asked me to take charge of some of his patients. Mrs. Mason is one of them, I am happy to say. I don't mean I am happy that she is sick, you know," he added, laughingly, "but I am happy to have a good excuse for coming here every day."

"Sick or well, my door is always open to you, doctor," she replied.

"And now I will see Mrs. Mason."

She led the way, while Doris sat and sewed with trembling fingers. She wondered what was the matter with her. She thought Dr. Carroll's dark eyes must have looked through her and touched every nerve.

Miss Parker remained with Mrs. Mason a few moments after Dr. Carroll came out. He walked directly up to Doris.

"I want to ask a favor of you. Will you let mother know if Miss Parker needs anything at any time?"

"You are very good! Yes, I promise for auntie's sake. We mean to do the best we can, but trouble may come in spite of that."

"How glad I am auntie has such good friends," was her thought, as she turned away from the door.

"It will be nice to see the doctor every day, won't it, auntie? Perhaps he will bring Lydia out some day."

He did bring her the very next day. She could stay only a few moments. It gave Doris a hope of many pleasant meetings yet in store for them. And Lydia wrote her such a loving, comforting message from her mother!

"Auntie, see! This is worth more than all the money in the world!"

"So it is, Doris. I am more and more thankful, every day of my life, that we are permitted to hold communications with the loved ones who have passed from earth. It makes all joys sweeter and all troubles easier to bear."

After they had driven away Miss Parker was thoughtful for some time.

"Doris, I have been thinking about Morris for several days. I think we may find him and have him come home. It will make no difference to Sarah now, and may make it pleasanter for us. I think you had better write him soon."

"Oh! may n't I do it this very minute?" Doris dropped her work eagerly.

"Yes; the sooner the better."

The letter was quickly written, and Doris hastened to mail it. Returning, she began to count the days before he would receive it.

"Don't be too anxious, Doris. You remember he spoke of going away from Rathburn. He may have gone and the letter may not reach him readily."

The caution sobered Doris a little, but she felt glad she had written.

CHAPTER XI.

MR. BROOKS DEFINES HIS POSITION.

Dr. Packard had returned from Europe. He sat in his study, talking with Mr. Brooks, whose engagement was practically ended. He had warmly commended the young pastor for the manner in which he had discharged the various duties of the pastoral office during his absence.

"Have you a place in view where you expect to settle, Mr. Brooks?"

"None at present, sir."

"Then I would like to mention the Meadsville parish. It is without a pastor, and is a desirable location. I have some influence with parties there, and should be pleased to recommend you to the church."

Mr. Brooks was silent a moment. He knew the time had come when he must define his position.

"I am exceedingly grateful for your interest and consideration, Dr. Packard. Whatever I may do or determine upon in my future I hope to deserve your respect." He hesitated a little.

"I do not think you had better try to secure the Meadville Church for me. In fact, I think seriously of retiring from the ministry."

"My dear Brooks! what are you talking about? You, with your fine talents and ability to preside successfully over a church, to think of giving up the ministry? Why, may I ask?"

"My views in regard to the church and creed have changed so much that I do not feel it is at all my place."

"Views! Are you running away from the Orthodox Church? To what? Unitarianism?"

"No, sir. To Spiritualism."

The words were quietly spoken, but they fell like a bomb at the feet of Dr. Packard. There was a long pause, during which Mr. Brooks's clear eyes met Dr. Packard's steadily.

"Spiritualism! Brooks! I would n't have thought it of you! A man of your judgment and sense!"

"But what if that very judgment and sense compel me to accept it?"

Dr. Packard did not reply. Mr. Brooks continued.

"You may be sure I would not have done this without honest and earnest investigation."

"But, Brooks, when you found yourself wavering from the faith of the church, I do believe if you had prayed hard enough and long enough, the Lord would have restored you safely."

"And did I not? Could I tell you, or any man, how many days were one long prayer? How many nights were sleepless nights of agony? I have suffered all the torments a conscientious, sensitive nature can suffer. And in the midst of it all I was determined to know the truth. I had believed the creed of our church was a truth. I said if there was a truth beyond that, I wanted it; so I searched for it."

"Oh! there 's the trouble. I never knew of a person, or heard of one, who investigated Spiritualism but got led into it at last," said Dr. Packard.

"Yes. And now I ask you honestly, is n't th at fact worth your consideration?"

Dr. Packard did not seem ready to reply. Mr. Brooks continued:

"I want to say to you that I have pursued my investigations in such a manner that no deception could possibly have been used.

"Through the hand of a young, ignorant girl, only fourteen years old, poor, and taken from a poor quarter in the city by that benevolent lady, Mrs. Carroll, even while she was teaching her to write, that girl, I say, has written me messages from friends who passed away years ago, and of whom she could have had no knowledge."

Dr. Packard sat like one stupefied.

"See here!" said Mr. Brooks, drawing a large envelope from his breast pocket, "here are some messages from my mother, and in my mother's own handwriting. And some from my father. In one of them he mentions you, but you will have to explain that one to me, for I don't know to what he alludes." He passed it over to Dr. Packard.

"Here are messages from my sister, and my cousin. Here is one from M. Boulanger, a Frenchman, who was a friend of mine. It is written in French, and excellent French, too. Remember, sir, that Mrs. Carroll had to teach this girl to write even English. And I did not even know M. Boulanger had died. I wrote to Paris to inquire, and here is the letter his brother wrote me in reply, and it corresponds with the facts stated in the message:" and he placed the letter with the message.

"And here are messages from Herr Lichtmann, written in good genuine German. Lichtmann was my father's friend as well as mine."

"Yes, I knew Lichtmann." Dr. Packard picked up the German message and held it daintily in his hands, as if he were afraid it would burn him. Then Mr. Brooks said:

"Dr. Packard, you knew my father."

"Yes; he was a good man, and a faithful minister of the gospel. I had hoped to see his son follow in his footsteps."

There were tears in Mr. Brooks's eyes as he turned toward Dr Packard.

"Here, please look over some of these. See if you think they are like my father."

In one of them the father had alluded to Dr. Packard, for they were close friends. It spoke of a matter of which Mr. Brooks knew nothing, but which Dr. Packard understood. He leaned back in his chair and gasped:

"Brooks! nobody knew that but he and I! I don't know as I wonder you think they came from him!"

"And then I wrote a long list of questions. I folded the paper, placed it in an envelope and sealed it. I carried it to this girl several times. The envelope was placed on a table. She wrote answers to those questions. The envelope was not removed from my sight at any moment, and it is still sealed. You may examine both."

Dr. Packard took the papers like one who has a disagreeable duty thrust upon him.

"Some of these messages were written while the girl held a spelling-book in the other hand, diligently studying the lesson Mrs. Carroll had marked for her. Frequently they were written upside down."

Dr. Packard began to pace the floor. "I would give worlds, if they were mine, to know the truth, but I am not sufficiently composed to criticise these at present. I would like to examine them again, if you will please leave them for a little time."

"Certainly," replied Mr. Brooks. "To me nothing can be more comforting, more natural, more self-evident than these facts."

"But think a moment. Think how many people go crazy over it!"

"I don't see that, sir. I have seen or heard nothing, as yet, which has in the least disturbed my mental equilibrium. But, since you speak of that, you and I both know there are those in insane asylums who have gone crazy over religion."

Dr. Packard continued his walking.

"Do you remember Mrs. Somes, the lady whose child died the day you left the city?"

"Perfectly. I had forgotten to inquire for her."

"She is in an insane asylum. Through the loss of that child she became insane. And yet, you or I cannot deny but that she was a good, exemplary and consistent member of your church."

"Yes, that is true," he assented.

"I attended the funeral," said Mr. Brooks. "I tried to point her to a source of comfort, but nothing touched her. If I could have said to her then, as I can now, 'Madam, your child still lives,' could have taken her where she would have had indisputable proof that the child was still near her, and loved her, that it was conscious of her continued remembrance, do you suppose she would now be an inmate of that asylum?"

Dr. Packard was overcome with emotion.

"Very likely there is much to choose in this Spiritual Philosophy. There is in all churches, and all professions, and in all walks of life. I want the good, the pure, the true. I want that which will help me to be a better man, and to help others to be better. I have learned some new truths, and have accepted them. Come what will, I must stand by them. I can only ask that my friends may believe I am honest in my convictions, and mean to do rightly."

"I believe you are sincere, Brooks. I should like to talk more with you about this. Meanwhile, may God bless and keep you!"

THE UNBELIEVER.

BY ROSE MAXIM.

They are having a revival, wife;
I just stepped in to-night;
It seems all other faiths are vain,
And theirs alone is right.
They say 't is not the good deeds done
That bring eternal joys,
But that belief alone can save,
While unbelief destroys.

Their heaven has still a great, white throne,
And angels wearing wings,
And streets of gold, and gates of pearl,
And harps with a thousand strings;
And life-long sinners enter there
If dying they repent,
While for one wrong unpardoned,
There 's endless punishment.

That hell of theirs has had repairs,
(Much needed, I 'll allow,)
The infant living is not there,
They use less brimstone now;
But still it is an awful place,
And sad the sinner's fate,
And though the souls are burned as long,
The heat is not so great.

But I 'm not troubled much about
A place of future woe,
For if the Lord is everywhere,
What matter where we go?
He said, "Though ye descend to hell,
Behold, there I shall be";
And if it 's good enough for him,
It 's good enough for me.

I don't believe the devil has Quite all the power there is,
Nor that man's love and mercy
Exceed God's tenderness:
I don't believe I could rejoice
As endless ages roll,
Beholding others' agony
Of body or of soul.

But I believe God made the world,
And all that dwell therein,
And that by his creation came
Both holiness and sin,
And to be free from pain and fear,
From want and sorrow free,
With peace of mind, and conscience clear,
That 's heaven enough for me.

San Bernardino, Cal., Camp-Meeting.

The Spiritualists of Southern California came together in camp-meeting on Friday, Oct. 12th. In numbers there were not many, in comparison with our Eastern meetings, but they made up their lack in numbers by earnestness of purpose. The meeting was called to order by Mr. William Heaps, President of the local society, who in a very pleasing manner welcomed the friends and strangers to the city of San Bernardino, and tendered the camp-meeting the use of their hall and grounds during the term of camp. Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke, Vice-President of the local society, extended a cordial welcome to the lady visitors, closing her remarks with an original poem—which was sung by the choir.

Mrs. Ella Wilson, of Santa Anna, responded in behalf of the Spiritualists of Southern California. Remarks were also made by Dr. T. B. Taylor, of Los Angeles, and Dr. J. R. and Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless, of New York. The services closed with tests by "Sunflower," the messenger spirit of Mrs. Nickless; she giving many messages of comfort to mortals from their loved ones of the other shore.

The hall in which the services were held is owned by the local society of San Bernardino, and has a seating capacity of between three and four hundred. The handiwork of the ladies was seen in the tastefully decorated walls, with appropriate mottoes. Over the rostrum, in golden letters, were these words: "The Temple of Truth—Dedicated to Progress, Liberty, Love and Fraternity—There is no Death." In the rear of the hall, in evergreen letters, surrounding a large anchor, "Spiritualism the Hope of the World."

On Saturday afternoon at the Conference Meeting, J. V. Mansfield, of New York, gave a lengthy and interesting account of early day Spiritualism.

Evening.—Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless, of New York, occupied the platform, the controls taking for their subject, "Spiritualism—What Good Has It Done for the World During the Past Forty Years?" The words that came from the lips of this gifted speaker were listened to with marked attention. After the lecture a man in the audience said he had been intemperate all his life until three years ago, when he became convinced of the truth of Spiritualism. When he was assured that his dear mother and darling little ones knew every act of his life, and saw him every time he entered a dram-shop, he said, "I will never touch another drop of spirits again," and he has not up to this date. This is one good Spiritualism has done.

The Camp-Meeting was duly organized, with preamble and constitution, but the election of officers was deferred one week.

Sunday.—Morning services were conducted by Dr. T. B. Taylor, of Los Angeles, who answered questions presented by the audience. A test was given by Mrs. Nickless, who spoke to a lady, saying, "Your mother comes to you, puts her arms around you, and says, 'My dear, dear child! if you cannot come to me, I can come to you, and I bring your little one with me.'" The lady addressed broke down with grief. The chairman of the meeting said: "This test is wonderful, and needs explaining. The spirit who has come to this lady is her mother, and her body has not yet been buried — the funeral is this afternoon. This daughter has been refused admittance to the house where her mother's remains lie, she being a Spiritualist, the other members of the family being in opposition."

Afternoon.—Mrs. Ella Wilson lectured, taking for her subject, "What is Truth?" Mrs. Wilson is a new lecturer on the spiritual platform, and bids fair to become one of its brightest lights.

Evening.—The hall was crowded to overflowing to listen to Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless. The controls spoke in reply to that old, old question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" After the lecture many interesting and convincing tests were given by "Sunflower," the messenger spirit of Mrs. Nickless.

The weather is fine; figs, grapes and other fruits are abundant. The Southern California Camp-Meeting's first season will be a success. CYRENUS.

"One-and-a-quarter street," "Three-and-a-half street," "Ten-and-three-quarters street"—these are the pretty names a "Board of Survey" proposes to give to certain small streets in Philadelphia. This system of fractional nomenclature it is proposed to extend all over the city, supplanting such excellent names as Walnut Place, Lancaster, Crosby, Rye and Corn streets. If the Philadelphians can stand this, they have no sense of the ridiculous left.—The (Springfield) Republican.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable persons, giving the spiritual manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed. Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

Experiences at Onset.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Amidst the solitude of an almost deserted camp-ground I still linger, that I may catch a few of the autumnal rays which come to the October resident at Onset, Mass.

I have spent the summer at this pleasant resort, and have found much to admire.

I have taken quite broad and extended observations of the place and of the people, both residents and non-residents, permanent and casual visitors, stockholders and cottagers, and I am fully convinced that Onset is blessed with as much honesty, intelligence and virtue as the old Commonwealth can show on an average throughout her whole territory. So, under this conviction and within the atmosphere of such environments, I have lingered at Onset to enjoy a few weeks since the summer crowds have gone, and, with my family, I breathe the pure air and partake of the fullness of health and happiness which this section of the State affords to its residents.

There are, however, some associations of midsummer still lingering here, which have until within a few days allowed every earnest seeker for the great truths of immortality to see and experience their phenomenal evidence. Many of the mediums remained until late in the season, so that I have not been entirely alone, or without opportunity to study spirit phenomena, and turn my research to the deeper problems of spirit-life and its manifestations on the physical plane.

The prevalent and general accusation of fraud in the séance-room, echoes from Boston's experience and modes of expression for the last few years, led me to an earnest and critical review and examination of that which I have seen and experienced during the summer, both within the séance-room and in my own sittings with mediums, and the result has been to confirm my convictions of the truth of our spirit philosophy in all of its various departments of manifestation, from the "rap" to materialization and its mediums.

The materializing medium is the most abused public or private benefactor of the present time. No instrument, man or woman, which the hidden and unseen forces of truth and its science have used to present to men new knowledge, has ever been so unreasonably accused of dishonest intentions and fraudulent results, as has this class of the community. Old and well tested and absolutely truthful mediums have been accused of the gravest crimes, both by the community and the public press. This it was that led me to a renewal of the study and observation which I have above spoken of. Such investigation was extended to various mediums, and in no one instance have I seen anything which partook of the nature of fraudulent manifestation, coming from the various cabinets; and not a sign of an accomplice has made its appearance to me, or in any séance I have attended. My experience in spirit-research, as well as the medium's honest effort, has been highly satisfactory, and finding no "frauds" among the mediums who have come under my eyes at Onset this season, I gladly bear my testimony in their behalf.

There are two mediums who have been here this season, who have been prominent public mediums in the past, who have now left public work, and are to devote their labors to private individual research for scientific and historical purposes, who I think deserve special mention, and a word of commendation, for their past labors and their present faithfulness to the cause of Spiritualism, as well as their excellent mediumship. Yet I would not select these two for special mention were it not for the fact that they have been attacked, with many others, in the press, as impostors who have been "exposed" the last winter in Boston, at the public raids made on mediums, when one of them has not held a public séance for more than two years, and the other has never yet been detected in fraudulent manifestations. I refer to the well-known Berry Sisters, Helen and Gertrude.

It is well known in the spiritual community that Miss Helen withdrew from public mediumistic work over two years ago, and now that Mrs. Gertrude has done the same, and will give no séance save to private sitters, I wish to render to them, as faithful and honest mediums, my earnest word of approval for their past work; and I do not know of a more convincing or forcible way of putting such before the public than by relating my experience in a late private circle held in my house at Onset last September.

After all was quiet here these two ladies were visiting in my family, and one evening it was proposed that we hold a dark séance. We did so, and no manifestation I ever witnessed gave me greater proof of the truth of spirit-return or the potent force in their mediumship than the results of this séance.

It was then arranged between ourselves and the spirits who manifested to us that they would hold a materializing séance. One or two evenings later I draped the door between our dining-room and parlors, and converted the dining-room into a cabinet and the parlors into a séance-room.

Mrs. Gertrude went into the cabinet, and Miss Helen acted as the manager to announce the names of the spirits when they materialized. These mediums had no apparatus nor opportunity to manipulate anything connected with the séance, had they desired to do so. We had strict and positive test-conditions, and did not intend to deceive ourselves.

In the course of the evening twenty-one different materializations took place, and the presentation of twenty-one well-organized physical beings was the result. These forms came into physical life from the cabinet, and in the room where we were in full view when they were coming from the invisible to the visible condition, and they were as much human, intelligent beings as we ourselves.

Many of the forms or spirit-beings repeated their coming twice, while a few returned the third time. They staid with us from one to twenty minutes, holding conversation and performing other acts, as people do when making such visits. There were as many as three out with us at a time, and this number came, in several instances, at one time during the séance.

There were several instances where the materializations took place in the parlors and did not come from the cabinet or return to it. One instance of this kind was the materializing of a woman by the side of a book-case on the shady end from the light and where it was some darker than in the middle of the room. She came to me, gave me her name, and talked about the pictures in the house, and about crayon drawings in pastel, and then went and opened a drawer wherein I keep paper, and selected some soft crayon paper, and brought it to me, saying, "This is the kind of paper I wish you to put on the table when you hold séances or have sittings; and I will try and make you a picture." Thus she showed a knowledge of my custom and practice in pastel work, which was unknown to either of the mediums.

She afterward took a crayon and made a fine and artistic drawing of a woman's face, about the size of a cabinet photograph.

Before she dematerialized she led me to the extreme end of the rooms, from the cabinet, and taking me to a picture which was the result of my own study, said, "We made this." The light then came through a window, from the street lamp, where no curtain obstructed its rays. I said, "You cannot stand so much light." "Oh! yes, I can," and she took my hand and led me direct to the window, and put her face close up to the glass, that she could view the surroundings which the street lamp brought into view. I then had a full and complete view of her face and clothing, for she stood there for several minutes. She then returned to the parlor nearest the cabinet and dematerialized, while entering the cabinet, but soon reappeared with another lady, my own deceased daughter.

My mother came to me on this occasion, as did also a deceased sister, and the latter told me what my living sister had been doing in the earlier evening in Boston, which I verified the next day when I called to see my sister living in that city.

There is no better established fact in my physical life and personal experience than the fact that these visitors were in form, appearance and intelligence, like unto ourselves, having physical bodies, with the appearance of perfect human beings. They walked, talked, sung and laughed, and did all these things in our presence as naturally as we ourselves. They seemed to enjoy their calls, and had as pleasant a time as any persons who have honored us with their presence this season. They seemed to enjoy the life on our side, and were happy in their visit. Now if those visitors were not returned spirits, our former friends and relatives, and others, as they purported to be, who and what were they?

There is one fact of which I am sure, and of which I can assure all readers of this letter: There were no trap-doors, no side entrances and no accomplices nor any assistants at this séance, save such as came from the invisible world, and were spirit operators for these two mediums. One of the mediums was in the rooms with us all of the time, and the other, entranced, could do nothing to bring such beings to us without our observation, except by and through their mediumship and mediumistic powers and environments.

Believing in Jesus's maxim that the "laborer is worthy of his hire," I would not refuse nor neglect to render this tribute to those who have so fully earned it by their honest service to the angel world for the elevation of mankind, and bringing to men this evidence of immortality.

Fraternally your brother in the study of spiritualistic science. B.

Onset, Mass., Oct. 10th, 1888.

Quarterly Convention of the New Hampshire State Spiritualists' Association,

Held at Washington, N. H., Oct. 12th, 13th and 14th.

From first to last it seemed as if Dame Nature, like another John, intended to baptize us with water, while the spirit-world, as if in rivalry, accepted the challenge, and gave us an outpouring that more than compensated for the discomforts to the physical.

Naturally the attendance was limited, but if I were to give you the most meager outline of the intellectual and spiritual feast, I fear it would occupy more than our fair share of your space.

Prof. J. W. Kenyon of Worcester, Mass., was our only speaker from abroad. Though a stranger to most of us, he won a warm place in our regards by the profound and searching analysis he brought to bear even on the most hackneyed themes. He seems to have an almost unlimited ability and desire for work in the cause, and we are confident that as his talents become known, he will not lack for calls to labor in the harvest field.

Mrs. S. B. Craddock of Concord gave us some of her best inspirations, and "White Feather," her Indian control, by her quaint and amusing conceits gave a variety that should be heard to be fully appreciated. Mrs. Craddock's time is mainly occupied by her medical practice, and if that fact is any indication of fitness, she needs no further recommendation.

Mrs. Addie M. Stevens, of Washington, whose long and faithful service in the cause entitles her to the respect and affection of every brother and sister in our ranks, gave essential aid in various ways. The sorrows and trials of this world, of which she has had a full share, have but refined a nature previously noble, and the sentiments uttered by her controls are always in harmony with the medium.

A cordial letter was received from Miss S. Lizzie Ewer, of Portsmouth, expressing her interest in the Convention and regretting her inability to be present. We hope to see her at our next meeting.

Saturday evening a varied entertainment was given. Instrumental music was skillfully rendered by the Mellin Family, and recitations by two young ladies whose names I failed to get, but whose services were greatly appreciated. "White Feather" was bright and witty as usual. Prof. Kenyon gave a humorous reading, also a phrenological examination. Mrs. Stevens read a poem, and two or three songs were sung by the Secretary—all forming a programme the performance of which was pronounced very enjoyable by those present.

At the close of the meeting Sunday evening the usual vote of thanks was passed: to the railroads for reduced fares; to the press, speakers, mediums, singers, and all who had in any way contributed to the success of the Convention, which was then adjourned without date. GEO. D. EPPS, Sec'y.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—Base-Ball as "Our National Game" is the subject of the leading article by John M. Ward, illustrated with nearly twenty-five engravings, portraits of prominent players. Following this the "Pranks of a Pet Lemur" are described by Olive Thorne Miller, and the story of "Jim" is pathetically told in verse by Nora Perry. Belva A. Lockwood contributes her view of the "Present Phase of the Woman Question." "The Second Mayflower," by Alex. Black, recites the early history of the State of Ohio. A paper relating to the "Jugglers and Snake-Charmers of India" is replete with interest. Gustave Kobbe gives, with remarks thereon, specimens of political campaign songs from that of 1840 to the present. Other articles of interest are "Zulu Warriors at Home," new chapters of "Miss Lou," and the conclusion of "The Heart of Colorado," and "Millionaires of New York." The Cosmopolitan Magazine Co., New York.

THE THEOSOPHIST.—In the October number "Two Curious Experiences" are related, somewhat similar in their character, but with different endings. "Atmagnyan," a Knowledge of the Atma, the spirit of man, is treated upon in a summary of lectures recently delivered in Bombay by Pandit Nirbhyanand. The first two chapters are given of a translation having reference to the Hindu and Jaina versions of the "Ramayana," one of the greatest epic poems of India. Of the remaining contents are "Hindu Marriage," "Social Relations Among the Brahmans," "Experiences of a Student of Occultism," "Influence of the Moon on Vegetation," and "A Study of Tornadoes." Madras, India: The Proprietors. Boston: For sale by Colby & Rich.

THE BIZARRE, NOTES AND QUERIES, for October, contains a disquisition, occupying ten pages, upon the game of Chess, the origin of which is involved in obscurity, but is conjectured to have descended from the Brahmans through Persia to Arabia about the sixth century. Manchester, N. H.: S. C. and L. M. Gould. For sale by Colby & Rich, Boston.

YONKERS.—Alfred Andrews writes: "Mr. and Mrs. Gale, of this city, have been stanch Spiritualists for over thirty years. Several years ago Mrs. Gale was developed as a magnetic healer. Her first patients were those of her own family and friends. A few years since one of our liberal-minded physicians had a case of paralysis that baffled his skill—a boy of ten years, who, through an accident, was fast losing control of body and mind. The doctor, knowing of Mrs. Gale's power, suggested to the parents to try her treatment. They did so, and in a few weeks the boy had so far recovered as to go out of doors as usual. Since that time Mrs. G. has cured many cases of paralysis physicians have tried for years in vain to cure. One of these was Mrs. K., of New York City, who had been a bed-ridden invalid over twelve years. She is now well and strong. A remarkable feature of this case is, that the patient became developed as a fine medium and healer, and before she was fully recovered began to treat her own family; and on several occasions since she has treated Mrs. G. with great benefit. Mrs. K. is now a powerful healer, and her daughter a fine medium. In another family attended by Mrs. G. the mother and two daughters became developed as mediums, the former showing good healing powers. About three months ago my oldest daughter became ill. After a few visits the doctor in attendance very frankly said he did not know what the trouble was, and advised a visit from a New York City specialist. Upon my suggestion he consented to my trying Mrs. Gale. The case had progressed to paralysis of the right foot and hand, and was beginning to affect the brain. Mrs. G. treated her about a dozen times, and my daughter has now recovered her usual health.

Hundreds of cases can be given of the cure of chronic diseases; also of acute attacks of pneumonia, diphtheria, etc., of patients in various places on the Hudson River from New York City to Peekskill.

Mrs. Gale's method of reducing and securing hernia has been adopted by some of the physicians of this city as being simple and efficacious.

While some of the more liberal doctors recommend Mrs. G. in some of their most baffling cases, others speak of her work with sneers, and try to ridicule it; but they only bring contempt upon themselves, for most of her patients are fearless and outspoken in her praise. Among her patients were two of our oldest physicians, and one clergyman's family of this city; one physician in New York City; two clergymen in Tarrytown, N. Y. In some of the best families in this vicinity Mrs. Gale is employed in preference to any doctor, and has had as many as seven patients in one house.

Another remarkable feature of this lady's work is, that she is not now, and never was, a strong and vigorous woman. Two or three times within a few years she has had an attack of heart trouble; about a year ago she was so very low as to be given up by her family and not expected to live from one hour to another. But she soon rallied, and with the help of her former patient, Mrs. K., recovered, and has done more healing the past year than ever before. This proves that it is not physical power that does the work.

There are not less than a dozen mediums and healers in this vicinity who have been developed under Mrs. Gale's treatment, and although there are but few outspoken Spiritualists in this place, the work of this healer has impelled the community to look with more respect upon the cause than heretofore.

So the good work goes on. Let others go and do likewise, for magnetic healing is one of the most practical and convincing phases of the spiritual movement.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham has favored us for many years with lectures about once a month, and her ministrations are doing great good in a quiet way."

PHILADELPHIA.—"A Student of Nature" writes: "I notice in the October number of the Esoteric magazine an article in reference to 'The Healing of the Nations,' with quotations therefrom. This book, from the inspired pen of Charles Linton, with a lengthy introduction of Ex-Gov. N. P. Tallmadge, was published in 1855. In 1864 a second series was published by the same author. The first has become very scarce, and copies are difficult to obtain. The second series is almost impossible to find a copy of. After some months' search I succeeded in obtaining one at the cost of ten dollars, and I would not sell it for ten times that price.

If ever man on this earth was inspired, Charles Linton, the writer of these volumes, was. Thirty-three years ago he gave to the public a book wherein was set forth nearly all the information one can desire, or need, to make his path clear toward spiritual development. The second series is even more beautiful than the first—if such is possible. Any one who will take these books, and read them carefully, will find no occasion to look toward the East for instruction in spiritual development—for the masters inhabit our own country, and have been in our midst, yet we have known them not. If there ever lived a master—a true adept so far as giving spiritual food to the hungry is concerned—he lived in the person of the writer of 'The Healing of the Nations.' For in these books (the first and second series) all the truths are taught which are being struggled with at present by many Theosophical writers. I say 'struggled,' for it is indeed a struggle with many of them to attempt to explain what they do not themselves understand, and in the attempted explanation using obscure terms which make it a difficult and laborious undertaking for the average person to read intelligently. In 'The Healing of the Nations' great truths are taught in simple language—language which all can understand. There are no perplexing mystifications—no secret symbols. The instructions for reaching the highest goal of human attainment are all to be found in these books, and yet the humble writer is scarcely known in name to the present generation of Spiritualists or Theosophists. Perhaps some of the latter would rather grope along for years, gathering here and there a few crumbs, as they are doled out to them by some unknown and perhaps unknowable 'Master of Wisdom,' living far away in the East, than to have the teachings of a writer of their own country. For myself, I candidly say that I prefer the plain teachings of these books to any teachings which are supposed to have been sent us by the Eastern adepts, or their pupils. They contain all the higher spiritual truths now being taught by Theosophists, and a great deal more; and the language is far more spiritual than that in any of the books on Theosophy I have read.

To many they would prove a signal light—a guide to peace and happiness, and it is much to be regretted that it is almost impossible to obtain them at any price. Is it not possible to reprint the work, and place it in the hands of the people? Will not some enterprising publisher reproduce the work?"

KEENE.—A. C. Hardy writes: "Prof. J. W. Kenyon delivered two lectures here Sunday, Oct. 21st. In the first he instituted a comparison between Christianity and Spiritualism. He said Christianity was the result of a union of Paganism and Essenism as consummated by Constantine. The dogmas, forms, and ceremonies of Christianity came from Paganism; but its ethics from the Essenes. Jesus never taught dogmas, but ethics. Paul was made to father the Pagan doctrine of salvation through blood and faith in the merits of another, while Jesus taught that the kingdom of heaven came by forgetting self, and devoting the whole life to the good of others. Spiritualism is doing both a negative and a positive work. It is showing what is false in the creeds of the past, and building up a more perfect faith founded on knowledge gained by demonstration. In place of total depravity it gives us development from all lower conditions; in place of eternal punishment it shows us that the effects of misdirected lives are to be overcome by doing good to those we have wronged. It ignores the existence of evils and shows us there are none worse than ourselves; God ceases to be anthropomorphic and becomes the intelligent cause of all being, living, breathing and thinking in all of nature's forms. Heaven becomes not the abode of a few elected from all eternity to sing songs and play on golden harps, but the spiritual home of all, adapted to their needs and capacities, where all functions of mind shall be expressed.

In the evening, Prof. Kenyon discoursed upon the good in Spiritualism. For an hour and a half he held the close attention of his audience, while he pictured the great blessing the world has received and the good displayed in the curing of disease and the exercise of other spiritual gifts. It is impossible to give an adequate idea of the beauty and power of Prof. Kenyon's discourses in a brief report as this must necessarily be. This is his second visit, and we hope it will not be his last."

WARREN.—Mrs. Cora G. Fowles writes: "A company of Spiritualists and others held a meeting at my home on the evening of Oct. 5th. Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant conducted the services. The circle was opened by singing, with organ accompaniment. After an invocation Mrs. Conant made interesting remarks upon the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. Twenty or more articles were psychometrized, they having been placed on the table before she entered the room, the readings being correct. Many spirits made themselves known by giving their names in full and the causes that led to their passing to spirit-life. It was impossible for Mrs. Conant to know anything about the matters referred to, as the readings and communications were given to strangers, nearly all of whom were skeptics. Every one present received convincing evidence of spirit-return. Having proved Spiritualism true by communications through my own organism, I was anxious to convince my intimate friends of the same; hence this meeting, which was very satisfactory. Mrs. Conant made a good impression. She left the following morning to fill engagements in Portland. I recommend Mrs. C. to all investigators and seekers for truth."

THE RAMONA INDIAN GIRLS' SCHOOL.

As it Is at Present.

BY HORATIO O. LADD.

Under the shade of a group of sturdy old cotton-woods, on the banks of the Rio de Santa Fé, in the midst of a spacious plot of seven acres, stands a small cluster of adobé houses and a long, plain, light-colored wooden dormitory. An orchard of pear, peach, apricot, cherry, plum, quince and apple trees, makes a bank of fruit blossoms behind this group of Mexican and American buildings, in brilliant contrast with the dark green of the grove.

Here in the gay sunlight of a cloudless New Mexican morning are children running from one building to another clad in work aprons, carrying brooms, dusters and baskets of wood or coal, or freshly washed clothes to the lines; or in neat school garments with smoothed hair and clean faces, approaching the door of the schoolroom. Soon there are gathered around a dark-eyed teacher, with a gentle look and manner, twenty or thirty little North American Indian girls, from five to thirteen, with black eyes, ruddy cheeks, trim figures, and slender hands and feet.

An open grate fire is burning in the center of the schoolroom; the walls are plain, but brightened with reading and singing charts, and the mottoes and pictures above the long blackboards. A kindergarten table on one side with low chairs and numerous groups of material make a cosy corner. Half-a-dozen Apache boys, waiting for their own government school to be erected near by, form a background to the picture.

This is the Ramona Industrial School for Apache Girls, the Indian department of the University of New Mexico, whose large brick building, Whitin Hall, stands in sight on higher ground on the other side of the river.

These Apache girls were brought a few months ago from camps three hundred miles away to the queer old town of Santa Fé. They have been transformed in this school from dirty, thin-faced, unkempt girls in moccasins, buckskins, blankets and paint, into eager pupils who are dressed and can read, count, write, draw, sing, sew and work like the American white girls in our own homes.

These children are all genuine Apaches, yet show traits which surprise those who have despised the Indian. They are not inferior in capabilities to white children. They learn quickly, are apt in number-work and imitative studies, like drawing, writing and singing. They readily catch hold of the forms of words, and at once associate with them their objects or ideas. They learn the letters without any particular effort of teaching. They have to learn everything, as we learn a foreign language, as English is to them a foreign language. They understand it more easily than they speak it.

Their interest in domestic occupations is marked. They prefer their sewing-classes to play, and their trained eyes and muscles make accurate stitches. At the age of ten or eleven they cut and make their under-garments, aprons and plain dresses, and do every kind of sewing that is required in the hems, gathers, sleeve-fitting, overcasting and button-holes. Those of twelve make excellent bread, cook plain food, wash dishes, do laundry work, make beds, set and wait on tables, sweep, dust and arrange rooms.

The work of the school is so divided that it falls lightly on each one of these little girls, who are thus learning, in a three years' course, to become capable mistresses of homes. Those who take a longer course, of six or ten years, will be trained to become skilled cooks and housekeepers, designed to take places in American households, whence they will carry established habits into their own homes, perhaps with husbands trained in the Government schools.

These Apache girls appear to have strong mimic powers and to be fond of using them. The evenings in the dormitory are devoted to games of their own invention. Their charades are vivid personations. Their naturally keen observation seizes upon the peculiarities of persons and animals. They "play school" with accurate imitations of their teachers, commending and correcting the pupils with good judgment. They watch the scenes in different church-services to reproduce them. The tall, sedate, long-bearded singer in the choir is depicted with great truthfulness in the act of singing. The Bible is pounded with vigor, with a squint to their companions, when a certain preacher is personated.

They detect and remark on bad acting. Their imitations of a trained bear are wonderfully good. Once the bear began to talk English. Immediately one of the girls among the spectators exclaimed with critical surprise: "Why, how well that bear talks!"

A favorite play is "tourist." The Ramona School is most generally visited by numerous tourists. They are usually astonished at the attainments of these savage children, and often express themselves before the pupils, who sit with demure faces. But Nature has been lavish in her skill at making eyes and ears for the Apache. The American tourist is there ore vividly impressed on their minds. Her remarks are treasured up and her peculiarities remembered. In the dormitory, at evening, the visit is reproduced. The pupils are in place. The tourists enter, walk about, look about, and talk with the "teacher."

"Is that girl all Indian?" says one. "That is a muchee bright boy." "She reads well." "Our children would not learn so muchee in so short time." "Is it true these are Apaches?" "Where are their parents?" They never forget to praise the reading or spelling, especially if the teacher is present at the play, thus adroitly reminding her of the propriety of commending her pupils.

They have commonly a sense of value which many white children lack. One evening a group of girls in the dormitory were talking of their little matters, and about going up town for candy, where they are allowed to purchase to some extent what they like with money they have earned by industrial work. Some declared that candy was good, and their favorite thing to buy. One of the older ones was heard to say in reply: "Candy eat, no come back. I buy scissors, have now."

CHOICE SOUVENIRS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.—Lee & Shepard of 10 Milk street, this city, have issued three publications designed as holiday gifts of peculiar style and beauty. The first is "All Around the Year," an illustrated Calender for 1889, by J. Pauline Sunter. It consists of original designs on heavy bristol board, in sepiatint and gold, gilt edges, ornamented with rings and chains in silver, with silk tassel. The illustrations are of the flight of time, the dates of the months being given on twelve tablets, one month on each, with an appropriate design. The second is "A Christmas Carol," by Dinah Maria Mulock, and the third is a New Year poem, "A Friend Stands at the Door," by the same author. Both are of similar style to the first, in sepiatint, gilt edges and ribboned. All of these are dainty tokens of remembrance and good wishes, and undoubtedly will be popular as such. Each is enclosed in a box.

ITALY AND THE PAPACY.—It is said that the Holy See regards as a fresh affront the new penal code which the Italian Chamber adopted almost unanimously. Article 173 declares punishable by a year's imprisonment, and a fine of one thousand francs, any minister of religion who, in the exercise of his function, shall publicly censure or vituperate the institutions or laws of the State, or the acts of the authorities. Article 174 prescribes imprisonment for from six months to three years, a fine of from fifteen hundred to three thousand francs, and permanent or temporary interdiction from his functions for an ecclesiastic who, "abusing the moral force derived from his ministry, shall excite others to ignore the institutions or laws of the State, or the acts of the authorities, or otherwise to transgress the duties owed to the State, or those attaching to a public office, or who shall prejudice legitimate patrimonial interests or disturb the peace of families."

The Ghosts,

AND OTHER LECTURES.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear, beating against the shores and rocks of time and fate, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as Love kisses the lips of Death.

This work treats upon various subjects, viz: The Liberty of Man, Woman and Child. Liberty sustains the same relation to Mind that Space does to Matter. The Declaration of Independence. One Hundred Years Ago our Fathers Retired the Gods from Politics. About Farming in Illinois. To Plow is to Pray; to Plant is to Prophesy, and the Harvest Answers and Fulfills. The Grant Banquet. Twelfth Toast—Response by Robert G. Ingersoll, November, 1879. Rev. Alexander Clark. The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream. Extract from a Speech delivered at the Soldiers' Reunion at Indianapolis, Sept. 21, 1876.

This work is elegantly bound and printed in clear, bold type, on heavy, tinted paper.

The author takes the ground that man belongs to himself, and that each individual should at all hazards maintain his intellectual freedom.

An "Exposure" of Spiritualism.

The Boston Transcript made a very recent exposition of its ignorance and bigotry on the subject of Spiritualism, in an article which it felt called upon to concoct by reason of the public demonstration attempted to be made by Margaret Fox Kane in New York. The Transcript plainly betrays its satisfaction at having so coveted an opportunity to vent its dislike in one direction and pay its court in another, at one and the same time, little knowing, or perhaps caring, that it is not by such efforts on any subject of wide interest that it can help either in the formation or the guidance of public opinion. It likewise chooses to forget the fact, well remembered of so many, that one of the most accomplished, able and versatile editors it ever had, the late Epes Sargent, Esq., was a full and firm believer in the phenomena of Spiritualism, and an invaluable contributor to its best literature. The article referred to comes with the worst possible grace from a paper whose repute is so largely bound up with such an association.

It makes haste to characterize the Margaret Fox demonstration as an "exposure" of Spiritualism, which it could not be proved to be by any existing evidence. She is to-day as much a medium as she ever was. Otherwise, how could it have happened that the raps, in The Transcript's own words, "seemed to come from all sorts of places, and were heard all over the great hall"? Suppose "the doctors," as reported, did say then (as they did forty years ago) that "there is no doubt that they came from her [Mrs. Kane's] toes"—are we to take for granted what one person wishes us to believe, while rejecting as worthless what another person simply reports of his actual knowledge? Who is to set up the standard of evidence that shall be accepted, and what is that standard to be? It is also very true, as The Transcript asserts, that "other exposers of Spiritualism have done precisely the same thing"; but in all such instances they were mediums in the first place, and merely employed their gifts in an attempt to make some people believe the actual phenomena to be only an "exposure" of the phenomena.

Experience has shown that there are such mediums, willing to sell themselves and their natural gifts where they hope to make the most money. Even The Transcript felt compelled to say on Mrs. Kane's behalf that "she is now exceedingly poor," and stated that it was too apparent that "her necessities rather than her will consented to the exposure." That is the key which readily unlocks the secret of so many of these exposures. They invariably turn out to be exposures that do not expose. Yet it is instructive to note the hungry eagerness displayed by the enemies of Spiritualism who, while bidding high to be fooled and defrauded, so that their prejudices be but ministered to, are so ready to charge everybody else with credulity and a constitutional incapacity to weigh evidence addressed to their senses. Such people, instinct with desire that the new shall be put down for the benefit and continuance of the old, are ever found haughtily pointing the finger of contempt at others who differ from them, as being below the reach of common sense, incapable even of faithfully reporting what they actually see and hear, and dupes from choice on a matter affecting their whole lives and happiness.

But this is the point which it is the aim of The Transcript to make, and constitutes the nub of the whole matter: "These Fox Sisters," it breaks out at the last, "are certainly a strange sort of apostles for a new religion." There is where the shoe pinches the phenomenally religious mind of The Transcript. It perhaps never heard of the old and ever true saying, that the small and humble things are expressly chosen for the purposes of confounding the wise and mighty. Possibly it may be able to specify some one of the accepted historic religions of the world that originated in the seats of learning or authority, and so worked its way down among the poor and unlearned of the earth. It is plain that The Transcript, for one, would much sooner take its religion from the sanhedrim than from the solitude, from pomp and power, than from the hills of Bethany and the shores of Galilee. But truth is not given to men always in the manner they expect or even approve, and the lesson therefore has to be repeated again and yet again.

The homiletic style which The Transcript affects when it finishes off and distributes its counsels with such a disregard of economy, would be enough to excite mirth if it was not so unconscious a display of ignorance and bigotry. Swallowing the assertion without even a bite, "that it was upon these mysterious rappings, now confessed to have been a paltry trick, that the great mass of the popular acceptance of Spiritualism—so far as it is accepted—rests," it digests a solid chunk of wisdom in declaring that "Spiritualism, coming up in an age when everything must be proved, must submit itself, if it expects to be accepted, to the most rigid rules of human evidence. So long as it cannot bear tests which exclude the possibility of fraud, it cannot be accepted by careful people as truth." Which is as much as to say that all those who prefer "exposure" to the phenomena themselves are the "careful people" of the world and the only undoubted lovers of "truth."

It is absolutely needless to traverse the familiar ground that the one thing which Spiritualism invites is a rigid examination by the rules of evidence, not excluding, however, the testimony which it is ready to present itself. Science, which stands responsible for the spreading materialism of the age, refuses to test its evidences simply because they transcend both the limits and the conditions of its own aims and methods. With the subtle and mysterious relations of the human spirit it openly professes to have nothing to do. Yet the overwise Transcript and others like it demand that Spiritualism shall be tested only by such rules of evidence as science shall frame and operate. It is only asking that the less shall include the larger; that matter shall judge spirit; and that the reporter of the laws of the universe shall become the legislator. The dogmatic spirit displayed in such a demand itself betrays the need of a new baptism in the waters of spiritual truth.

If it requires, as generally believed, spiritual rather than wholly material discernment to discover spiritual things, then it assuredly follows that something more than the fixed rules of material science is not only applicable to the investigation of spiritual phenomena but is absolutely required for it. Therefore the evidence which Spiritualism is at all times ready to submit on behalf of its phenomena is to be studied and weighed by rules that must diverge in many essential respects from those laid down for judging evidence wholly material, or certainly so up to a limit which they do not yet presume to pass. A being partly spiritual, and destined to become wholly so, will necessarily concede that in estimating spiritual facts the first and obvious necessity is to search diligently for the spiritual law by which those facts are governed and regulated. To do otherwise is to display only the conceit of self-satisfied ignorance.

Now Spiritualism notoriously invites science to assist in this great and new search. And science answers, always with a greater or less show of scorn, that this is not its province, and declines to engage in any such quest. But the dogmatists in religion and smatterers in science continue to insist that spiritual truths, however transmitted, shall be subjected to the rules laid down by science for investigations of a wholly different character. These latter, in fact, affect to be the patrons of science and religion together. What headway the world would make in the future if it entrusted its work to a class that does not dream that all things needful to know have not yet been discovered! That, however, is just the attitude assumed with such a lofty air by the Boston Transcript, when it would dictate the rules of evidence by which all spiritual phenomena are to be investigated and judged. It has yet to learn that the discovery of truth is not an affair of social, sacerdotal, or scientific favor.

But while Spiritualism is thus opposed by both press and pulpit in respect to its simplest claims, it is steadily and silently making its way through all the recognized ranks of society and among all classes of people. It is more and more inspiring—rather than honeycombing—the churches, finding a resting-place in the bosom of the family, illuminating solitude, and establishing a life-companionship. If it were but a superstition, appealing only to human ignorance and credulity, it would not be the foe to all superstitions which it is. If it did not offer the consoling and satisfying responses to human questionings that it does, it would never have attained the foothold it has attained in human belief and affections. It brings to this latest and newest age of the world the very messages which have been sought by the pilgrims of earth with groans and tears all through the centuries of mortal existence. No mere superstition can set up any claim that can compare with this.

They who profess to be content to traduce and reject such an evangel of blessed truth must be also content to be the losers. They are willing to deny themselves the true riches from a wholly mistaken view of values. They dress up the religious conception with ideas of respectability. They are thorough materialists without knowing it. When phenomena that constitute the varied vehicles of truth are convincing people the world over of the priceless reality of their meaning, they think to stem the resistless tide with puny sneers and haughty contempt, and by the dragging into the arena, as in this latest instance in New York, of some fallible and weak instrument of the invisibles that such may become, for wholly personal reasons, mayhap, a swift witness against the real facts. But silently and grandly the influences of the new revelation to the human race continue to work and to advance, and promise not to rest until the earth is fitted for the habitation of an exalted and spiritualized race. Perfection here is of course never to be expected, but it certainly may begin here and indicate the way toward the final destiny. This is the real "exposure" which Spiritualism invites, and is entitled to have made on its behalf.

☞ Newspaper slang against Spiritualism and its medial instruments cannot injure it or them. Its grand teachings are based upon Truth, and all the efforts of bigotry and superstition cannot impede its progress. The best men and women in the world are its adherents, being blessed by a knowledge of the facts of immortality, and of direct spirit communion.

Boston Woman Suffrage League.

At the regular meeting of this organization held on the evening of Oct. 1st, Edwin D. Mead, whose standing as a thinker and lecturer is widely established in New England, delivered a fine address in the line of the current discussion on public school matters in this city, in the course of which he uttered many sentiments that were worthy of repetition for their breadth and capacity. As evidence of this fact—and that there is a public demand for it—we are in receipt of a neatly printed brochure* wherein this entire discourse finds embodiment, in connection with liberal additions and emendations by Mr. Mead.

He said he was more solicitous than for anything else that Catholic captiousness and unfairness, where they exist, shall not be met with feverish unfairness, but rather with justice, and even with magnanimity. "I trust there is no woman and no man here present," he said, "who did not read with indignation and shame the charge of one of our university professors to one of our large congregations, last Sunday, that Protestant men and women who have Catholic servants in their employ should say to them on the eve of election day, that if they intended to vote at the dictation of the priests they must look for work elsewhere." "You know what that means," said Mr. Mead. "It means the boycott and the inquisition." "No Catholic word has been so bad as this."

The speaker added that we had heard altogether too much in these days about its being impossible for a man to be at once a good Catholic and a good American. He protested against it with all the emphasis possible. Nothing, he said, could be so offensive to an honorable and patriotic man. Whatever criticism is to be passed upon some of the text-books used in the parochial schools, he asserted that the lack of the patriotic element in them cannot be recorded. Many of these books ring with patriotism. And they ring, too, with the spirit of democracy. However much "divine right of bishops there may be in the books, there is no divine right of kings. Toward this American republic there is especially a feeling of gratitude for a toleration such as Roman Catholics have enjoyed in no Protestant country in Europe."

He however deprecated the educating of the children of any one class of citizens apart from the rest. In this direction he said tersely:

"We do not want, any of us, Catholic reading-books, nor Quaker spelling-books, nor Jewish geographies, nor Baptist histories, nor Presbyterian grammars, nor High Church cook-books, nor Unitarian geologies, nor Trinitarian arithmetics. I have heard a story of a little girl who belonged to a Presbyterian family coming home from school in some distress because one of her young Jewish friends had claimed that Jesus was a Jew. 'Rachel says, mother, that Jesus was a Jew.' 'Yes, dear, Jesus was a Jew.' 'But how could he be a Jew, mother? Was he not the son of God, and is n't God a Presbyterian?' I wonder sometimes, when I note the sectarian atmosphere that pervades many homes, that God is n't thought to be a Presbyterian or a Baptist much oftener than he is. And our dangers will grow much graver than they are if we extend this sort of thing into our schools and set our boys and girls to studying Episcopal histories and Catholic geographies. My good friends, we cannot afford, any of us, to live and breathe in these provincial atmospheres."

In relation to the Roman Catholic Church, Mr. Mead said that while there is much in it that he dislikes, and while he was always willing to be considered a member of a vigilance committee to stand sentry on it, he would also always stand sentry for it when it is unjustly besieged:

"Were I engaged in an apology for the Catholic Church, I should go further. I should enter the great domain of dogma, and declare on how many points I deem the Catholic doctrine superior to Protestant doctrine. I should tell you that the Catholic doctrine of purgatory, an intermediate state in which men who are not great saints yet not great sinners are purified and educated for the higher life, is, to my thinking, a better and a truer doctrine than the sharp Protestant division of all men into celestials and hellians, turned either to eternal beatitude or eternal torment upon the accident of death. I should tell you that the Catholic doctrine of miracle—a doctrine that asserts the perennial power of God in the Church, as able to manifest itself upon occasion at the hands of Ambrose and Francis or of the pious Boston parish priest as at the hands of Peter and Paul and Jesus and 'them of old time'—is a vastly nobler doctrine than that of our Protestant churches, which recognizes a superannuated supernaturalism and no other. And I should tell you that the Catholic doctrine of inspiration, the doctrine of a Holy Ghost that is living and not dead, a Divine Spirit whose authentic utterances are still to be heard among men and not simply to be sought for in a book in the library, a Spirit not local, historical, Palestinian, but throbbing, omnipresent, in the Church of God—I should tell you, if you are Protestants, that this doctrine is a sublimer and diviner doctrine than yours."

In summing up the case for the public schools as they are, Mr. Mead rightly holds that just so long as they are made the prize in a contest between ecclesiastical greed of any sort on the one hand, and plain secular possession on the other, just so long will this contest grow fiercer and hotter, and be certain to draw into its raging vortex a multitude of other interests which are esteemed precious in the sight of their present possessors. The public schools should teach nothing connected in the remotest manner with creed or church. The education they bestow should be only fundamental, and of no recognized religious color. So far as it is moral, it should carry its morality with it without specialization or distinction, the practical character of the instruction given being synonymous with practical morality itself.

We close this notice of a stirring address—which covers many points, of necessity not here reverted to—by the following extract wherein Mr. Mead gives sound advice to the Woman's League, and the general public, regarding the city election in December:

"Upon you, the women of Boston, there has suddenly come a very great and a remarkable responsibility. You are suddenly called upon to exercise political power under the most trying of conditions, when politics is mixed with religious animosities and the most violent appeals are made to prejudice and passion. The enemies of woman suffrage will be quick to point to every extravagance and indiscretion on your part, in the brave performance of a trying duty, as an impeachment of your cause as women. That cause can only be advanced by this experience, whatever the vote may be this year or next. It is not the less important that the coming vote be sober and intelligent, uninfluenced by the violent partisanship of either Protestant parson or Catholic priest. I do not say this to the women of this league—I sincerely wish that the voting of the men of Boston would be as just and careful as yours is sure to be—but I say it to the hundreds of women whom it is in your power to reach."

*The Roman Catholic Church and the School Question. By Edwin D. Mead. Boston: George H. Ellis, 141 Franklin street. 1888.

MRS. ADA FOYE has during her present visit Eastward awakened the most profound interest on the part of Spiritualists and general public alike—her mediumistic labors in Boston, Haverhill, Stoneham, and elsewhere having been crowned with the most flattering success

Ordination at Last.

The recent ordination of Rev. W. H. Noyes of Boston by the council of Congregational pastors and delegates, called for the purpose of ordaining him for the foreign missionary field, Japan being his chosen destination, was an event of notable interest in religious circles far and near, by reason of his having been openly refused ordination by the prudential committe of the American Board last year, at its session in Springfield, Mass., on the ground of his enlarged views in relation to future probation for the heathen who died without having any knowledge of the Christian gospel. This case was purposely made a test case by the prudential committee, which was determined to suppress all such tendencies to heresy in a summary manner. No change has been known to have taken place in the views of Mr. Noyes on the subject in question since the date of the former trouble, but he has improved a waiting policy to secure his object when it could be accomplished without attendant excitement.

Being finally ordained for his chosen work by a council of the churches instead of by the American Board, it now remains to be seen whether the Board will continue to refuse an application made by him for an appointment which would clothe him with the character of a regular missionary sent out by the Board. If it should so persist, then he will be supported by the personal contributions of parties connected with the Berkeley-street church of Boston.

The examination of Mr. Noyes as a candidate for missionary work was all the more interesting from the fact that the same parties who subjected him to an unfavorable test last year were some of them participants in the recent examination, and were obliged to look on and see the consummation of what they before refused to do. It was all a struggle then for the integrity of the doxies, which has finally taken the form of an open defiance of the American Board by an individual church, which no such board possesses the power to discipline. This is the hottest possible fire in the rear for the American Board, which may perhaps engage other churches and thus make the condition of the Board so precarious as to bring its prudential committee to a sense of prudence which they have not heretofore recognized.

The Ideas Prevalent about Marriage.

People differ as widely on the subject of marriage as on any other, as seen in the discussion now going on in the daily press, based on the query: "Is marriage a failure?" We have before us clippings from the editorial opinions of four papers of world-wide repute. The first—the London Telegraph—remarks on the enlarged independence of the female sex in respect of their ability to maintain themselves, and argues from this fact that women are able to take their own time and make a wise choice, perhaps preferring to remain single all their lives. The second—the Montreal Post—emphatically responds to the question whether marriage is a failure, that it is not; although many men and women as husbands and wives are failures. The third—the New York Herald—says that common sense is at its best in marriage, and the truest marriages are based upon it. It says there are no marriages so uncertain as love unions, because love is apt to be the enthusiasm of selfishness. The fourth—the New York World—asserts that marriage is not a failure, but a great many married people are failures of the most malignant type. The amount of the matter is, therefore, that the fault, or the contrary, is to be looked for in the parties to marriage rather than in the institution of matrimony itself. But inasmuch as the individuals in their character constitute the whole thing, of course marriage is a success or not just as they are.

☞ A writer in the Boston Daily Globe of a recent date says, in referring to a paragraph to the effect that "Consumption in its early stages can almost always be cured by strengthening the lungs with pure air, and pulmonary complaints can be warded off in the same way," that it reminds him that he is quite well acquainted with the author of the above statement. And then the writer goes on to say that he came to New England about four years ago, from a climate where heavy winter overcoats are unnecessary. The first December he was in Boston he went, at the earnest solicitation of a friend, to the agency of one of the biggest life insurance companies in the world to get his life insured. He was suffering from a very slight cold at the time, and the medical examiner of the company, a well-known and highly respected Boston physician, rapped on his chest, thumped on his back, felt of his pulse, looked at his tongue, took a telephone, or some such instrument, and listened to his heart, and went through all the customary and impressive formalities of a medical examination. At its conclusion the wise doctor shook his head gravely and informed the writer that he had incipient consumption, and that the greatest precaution would be necessary if he expected to pull through the winter. He was, of course, rejected as a candidate for insurance. But the way he pulled through that very severe winter may be seen by the fact that, although he was unaccustomed to the rigorous climate and the sudden changes of temperature, and was engaged in night work, taking a half-hour's ride in a cold horse-car every morning at three or four o'clock, he found his chest measurment increased nearly four inches within six months, and his general health better than for years, a chronic catarrh having entirely disappeared, all without any remedy except the practice of filling the lungs with pure air and holding the breath as long as possible. Every time they meet on the street the wise doctor throws a homicidal glance at the humble newspaper man, as much as to say: "Aint that fellow dead yet?" and the latter feels like thumbing his nose at the doctor and replying: "No, but he would have been if you could have had your way."

This writer then goes on to say that we have more doctors to the square inch than any other city in America: Three medical institutions turn them out by the score upon a defenseless and unoffending community every year, and they go about, as the old lady said, "Like roaring lions, seeking whom they may devour somebody."

THE WORLD'S FAIR AT PARIS will open on the fifth of May next, continuing until the thirty-first of October. It is desirable that the industries of the United States be fairly represented, and that they may be so no charge will be made for space occupied, and goods will be forwarded and returned free of freight charges by the Commission, whose office is at 35 Wall street, New York, and may be addressed for further particulars.

A Spirit Relates an Experience of Its Earth-Life.

The following, which we copy from More Light, published at Greytown, Wairarapa, New Zealand, is said by a Dunedin correspondent of that paper to have been written by a spirit who, when on earth, was a seer. The events are said to have occurred to herself and others of her friends in Germany, and the account she has given of them is now published at her request:

One day my sister was walking through a lane near home; she had been for an afternoon stroll; I believe there was no one with her at the time, but there were many people passing and repassing. As she was about to emerge into a meadow at the end of the lane, she heard a voice say, "Come with me." She looked round, thinking it was some boy, but the voice again said, "Marie, come with me." She recognized the voice of our grandmother, who was then residing in Denmark.

She was much startled by the voice, and was at first unwilling to take any notice of it, so, thinking it was a mental delusion, she hurried on; but she had proceeded only a few steps when she was taken hold of by the shoulder and turned half-way round, facing the other part of the field, the voice again saying, "Come with me." My sister mustered up courage to say, "What are you, and what do you want?" The voice then seemed to rush past her, for she heard a noise, she said, as of some one passing a few yards in front of her, when it again spoke, saying, "Come on, Marie, I will not hurt you." My sister went on for some distance, the voice always in front, and as if it were walking backward. Still following—for she meant to see if there was really anything in it—she went on till at last she came to a large well, having bricked sides, without a lid, it being used to water the cattle in the summer time. The top was about five feet high, with steps, which she was made to ascend to look into the well. She protested, saying it would daze her, and she would fall in, but still the voice said, "No, come on."

On the water, to her utter amazement, as in a picture, she saw our grandmother lying on a bed, as white as death, and some one standing at the foot whom she could not recognize. She appeared to see a door open, and a man come in, dressed in black, apparently a doctor; he took grandmother's arm to feel her pulse, and did something or other she could not understand. The man said, "No; life is extinct." Mind you, my sister heard this and saw this picture all in the water. She said nothing sounded hollow or ghostly, and she appeared to be as an invisible person in the room; she was taken no notice of. The person at the foot of the bed, whom she supposed to be a nurse, said, "Is she dead, doctor?" He replied, "Yes, I can do nothing." He talked for a few minutes, and then left the room, the woman following.

The voice then said to my sister, "Tell nobody, for none but those you know will credit what you say. Tell no one out of your own family; do not be disturbed in your mind at all, but I could not do without telling you. Now go home quietly, and do n't make a bluster about it, but be just as quiet as you can."

My sister went home, and followed the directions given her; when she reached her bedroom, she called me in and said, "Grandma Rode is dead!" I replied, "Oh, rubbish! we only got her letter yesterday, saying we might expect her on a visit next week." She said no more just then, and we went to tea; after which she again began to tell me about her afternoon adventure. Next morning a telegram came, saying that at half-past three on the previous afternoon our grandmother had died of heart disease. She had just come in from her afternoon walk in the gardens, and was about to change her bonnet for a cap, when she said to the maid in attendance, who was not really a servant, but an old nurse, "I feel very queer; I hope I am not going to be ill." Being fatigued with the walk, she lay down on the bed for a few minutes, the nurse going out of the room for a cooling draught. On her return, she found her as I have said, and immediately sent for the doctor, who was not ten minutes in arriving; but when he came life was extinct. Our grandmother often afterward appeared to my sister and myself, and she told us that as Marie was out walking and she also, that gave her strength, and she wished us to know that she was no longer on earth, though how she was able to do it I could not then understand, for if you, on earth, read in any book, you will find that if it is possible for us to appear again on earth, three days after death or passing over is generally fixed, I do not yet know why, but I used to notice this when on earth. This occurred in the little village of Wiezolf, in Germany, to my sister, and our grandmother lived hundreds of miles away. MARY RODE.

Women Registered.

Eleanor Kirk thus cleverly paragraphs the recent registration of Mrs. Cynthia Leonard, chairman of the equal rights party campaign committee, and the secretary of the same body, Miss Anna Johnson, in New York City:

"What is to be done with the women who succeeded in registering the other day in New York, or perhaps, what is more to the point, what will become of the Board of Registry" Mrs. Leonard and Miss Johnson simply walked into the proper office and up to the proper officials, and requested to be sworn in. 'We have n't any right to register ladies,' the chairman replied. 'Have you any orders not to register ladies?' Mrs. Leonard inquired. Well, no, they had n't, and someway this settled the matter. The ladies were duly registered, and went away rejoicing."

☞ "T. W. S." forwards a letter—which we shall print next week—giving details of a pleasant visit made Oct. 24th, by a large number of members and friends of the Worcester (Mass.) Association of Spiritualists, to Miss Jennie B. Hagan, at her home in South Framingham: The occasion being an informal celebration of the first anniversary of her occupancy of a new house which herself and her mother have caused to be erected in that place.

☞ Do n't fail to read THE BANNER'S local reports this week.

In Advance of the Telegraph.

At a séance held at the house of John R. Furlong, in Arkansas City, Kansas, a short time since, a Mr. Binkley was informed by his spirit-father, in reply to an inquiry he made respecting his mother, whom he thought was in Ohio, that she died on the morning of that day at 3:30 o'clock, and that he would hear of the fact the next morning. It is needless to say that the recipient of the information was greatly surprised.

The next morning Mr. Furlong called on Mr. Binkley to ascertain whether the prediction of the spirit had been fulfilled. It had not. Regarding what followed we give Mr. Furlong's own words: "Going upon the street, I met the telegraph messenger boy. I inquired if he had a message for Mr. Binkley and he replied that he had. I then, to his great surprise, told him the contents of the message. The only discrepancy is that the time is stated in the telegram at 1:15, while the spirit-communication fixed it at 3:30. As the exact moment of death is often uncertain, the chances are that the spirit was correct."

An interesting fact in connection with the above is that, after the circle had been formed, Mr. Binkley "happened to drop in." He was invited to join, but declined to do so, saying he knew nothing of Spiritualism and was merely actuated by curiosity in calling; that he would sit aside as a spectator.

☞ The attention of our readers is called to a very interesting little work entitled "CONSOLED," which W. J. Colville has supplied to us at wholesale, so that we can offer it at the low price of five cents per copy. The work is a translation from the French of Antoinette Bourdin, a talented and charming writer. It is an interesting narrative of experiences in spirit-life, and extends to nearly seventy large sized pages, in stiff paper covers.

To Correspondents.

Quite a number of persons—the majority evidently new to the spiritual movement—have written us for an opinion as to what is to be the ultimate result of the recent public denunciations of Spiritualism by two of the Fox girls. We say now to the movement, as the older Spiritualists know how often the New Dispensation has been "wounded in the house of its friends," and how triumphantly the Higher Intelligences having it in charge have in each instance brought safety and honor out of seeming disaster.

In reply to these correspondents we would state that we consider all the harm has already been done which can result from this "exposure"—and that harm has been wrought not upon the cause but upon the two persons who, for reasons best known to themselves, have claimed to have acted as impostors and charlatans for the past forty years. This burden they have themselves voluntarily bound upon their own shoulders, and can carry it where they like.—Spirit-communion—founded on ever-present experimental knowledge, and not on a past belief in any thing, person or event—remains a grand fact, and would so remain, demonstrating its truth through new instruments, were every medium now known to the world to become recalcitrant.

Mrs. A. Leah Underhill, of the Fox Family, (a thoroughly respectable and reliable lady of New York) still remains true to the story of '48, and those who wish to know the real experiences met with at that period should read her very interesting book—"The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism."

The following editorial from The Saratoga (N. Y.) Eagle (a paper which speaks its own mind freely at all times) so succinctly states our own view of this case—with the added value of coming from a secular journal—that we transfer it to our columns:

"Probably Spiritualism has been 'exposed' more than four thousand times during the last forty years. Now the Fox sisters, who were perhaps the earliest mediums conspicuous in the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, are causing a sensation by making another 'exposure.' Like previous 'exposures' the stories of the Fox sisters, who are reputed to have become very intemperate, will be satisfactory and convincing to those who know nothing of the marvelous phenomena of Spiritualism, which have so far baffled every scientist who has attempted to explain them upon other grounds than those alleged by the mediums.

Where science fails, these dissipated and degenerate mediums will scarcely be able to influence intelligent people.

It requires but little thought to foresee that a movement which extends to every quarter of the globe, is rich in literature and talent, and numbers many millions of adherents, cannot be seriously affected by any action on the part of two weak-minded women, even with the aid of a sensation-seeking press."

Impromptu Materializations.

San Francisco papers add one more to the rapidly increasing number of cases of a similar nature, in an account they give of the unexpected occurrence of events corroborative of the fact that "all houses in which men have lived are haunted houses."

The residence of Mr. Liebenbaum and family at 1421 California street, has for some time, it is stated, been the scene of such incidents as locked doors being suddenly thrown wide open. Sometimes the front door would be noiselessly opened, and a foot enter and walk up stairs. These demonstrations became so frequent and annoying that the family vacated the premises. After removal Mr. Liebenbaum, who is a practical business man, determined upon making further investigation. He sent two of his employés, who it was said and believed "all the spirits, ghosts and goblins in creation could not scare," to watch. These young men, well armed, took their position in the parlor soon after dark. They watched for hours; but nothing came, and they partook of refreshments, and were having quite a merry time, when suddenly there stood before them in the hallway, in full view through the opened door, the dreaded figure of which they had heard so much. The spirit was in their presence, and they were so panic-stricken that neither of them dared approach it. Every door in the house was locked, and the keys lay on the table before them. Silently the parlor and front doors opened. After staring at the young men the spirit walked upstairs. Ascending a few steps it stopped, leaned over the railing, and stared long and steadily at them, and then disappeared in the direction of the second story. The watchers sprang through a front window, and ran to the street.

The New York Journal in closing its account says: "Two suicides have been committed in the house. The former owner of the property is said to have killed himself there, and Herr Mueller, book-keeper for Liebenbaum Brothers, likewise took his life within the building. It is said that the strange figure is very much like young Mueller, and some persons believe that it is his materialized spirit."

Passed to Spirit-Life.

Oct. 29th, from her home in East Boston, Mass., Mrs. Flavilla E., wife of Charles F. Whittaker, aged 33 years 8 months 17 days.

The deceased was born in Rockland, Me., and was seven years ago last June united in marriage to Mr. Whittaker, who for years has been a valuable and efficient member of the BANNER OF LIGHT household. The many friends drawn to him in mercantile and social life by his kindly services and genial manners will, we feel, unite with us in expressions of the deepest sympathy for him in this hour of his separation, in the mortal, from a true and loving companion.

Funeral services took place at the late residence of the deceased, 220 Lexington street, East Boston, on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 30th, after which the remains were removed to Rockland, Me., for interment.

☞ A foregleam of a new year reaches us in the form of an artistically designed and issued by the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, from the art bureau of John A. Lowell & Co., of this city. The lithograph "Who's Afraid?" represents a scene familiar to seashore visitors, and will serve during the coming winter as a reminiscence of the past summer's experience.

A. SHUMAN & Co., manufacturing retailers, 440 Washington street, corner Summer street, Boston, call attention in another column to their boys' department, where may be found tweed suits for children and young lads. These goods have proven substantially to be the best known substances for hard service available for wearing apparel. The goods are so flexible as to conform easily to the figure and are woven so as to make it tough and durable. Yet beauty is not sacrificed for utility, and parents will be certain to find something which will please in price and kind.

It is an unfortunate fact that the great subject of the origin of the races is, and is likely to be, in a miserably chaotic state. The craniologist, the philologist and archæologist agree only to disagree; and the student of general anthropology cannot yet, it is quite certain, blend the strong arguments of these specialists and reach to a plausible conclusion. The stronger the argument of any one phase of anthropological science, the more decidedly contradictory is it of the assertions of the others.—Ex.

ELECTION TIME!

Now the ears of night are startled with the rolling of the drum,
And the campaign bands are firing off their hoarse and fearsome toots,
And in glittering togs accoutred the smug paraders come,
And the air is red with rockets, and deaf with the salutes,
And through the proud procession the grinning gamin scoots.
Sound aloud, ear-shattering trumpets! ye drums, go rat-a-tat!
Sputter, ye kerosene torches on the edges of the night;
Hope, betters uncontrollable, to win to you a hat;
Fight, soldiers of politics, manfully the lung-depleting fight;
Whoever loses or wins, be sure the country is all right!

The intelligence that the diadem of the Empress Eugenie is now on exhibition in a New York dry goods establishment, leads a press correspondent to exclaim:

"It was Carlyle who said that the evolution of Eugenie's character was the most marked and symmetrical of any known to history. Eugenie was a vain girl. Her beauty has faded, but physically and spiritually she is to-day one of the most beautiful women in the world."

"My friends," said a temperance lecturer, lowering his voice to an impressive whisper, "if all the grog shops were at the bottom of the sea, what would be the result?" For answer came: "Lots of people would get drowned!"

AT THE HOLLIS.—M. Coquelin and his troupe appeared for the first time in Boston at the Hollis Street Theatre on the evening of Monday, Oct. 29th. The audience was large in numbers, and of exceptional distinction and refinement, and the artist clearly proved his claim to eminence. On Tuesday night Mme. Jane Hading faced a Boston audience for the first time, and scored a marked success. This week ends the engagement of these celebrities. Frederick Warde is to follow.

It is the belief in some parts of China that the souls of very atrocious criminals, who have either been executed or died in prison, are sent back from hades by Yenlo, the judge there, to undergo a further term of imprisonment, one death not being enough to expiate their crimes. The Lynn Bee says that the general public care as much about Dr. Mackenzie's row as they do about last year's weather reports. The New Orleans Picayune thus sums up the matter—and is about right, we think:

"The word-battle now going on between German doctors and Mackenzie seems to be about an abscess in the cavity of the trachea which was aggravated by a canula. If Bergmann has a chance to lance Mackenzie before he is cauterized by the queen's subject, all may be well. JOHNNY'S COMPLAINT.

Our preacher says—an' course he 's right—
It 's very wrong to tell a fib

Why in his sermons he will run

The borrower of trouble is on hand on all occasions. A clever writer says of him when met with in Christian concerns: "He is always drawing on the future—always a bankrupt future in everything but sorrow; and even when it comes to death, the borrower illustrates the future life with the lurid light of the flames of the bottomless pit, although more often concerned in that light for others than for one's self, it may be said."

The London police seem to go from one absurdity to another in their efforts to discover the Whitechapel murderer. Starting out with the theory that the perpetrator of the crimes is an American, they have put on rubbers that he may not hear them approach, and are now training bloodhounds to track him. Whether they will place rubber overshoes on the feet of the hounds is not yet known, but it is understood that they are educating the animals by reading to them long accounts of the atrocities committed by Americans in various parts of the world. They are also rousing the antagonism of the dogs against everybody who wears a slouch hat and uses the verb "guess." They are great men, those London bobbies.—Saginaw (Mich.) Evening News.

DISASTER IN THE ARCTIC.—The whaling bark J. A. Howland brought to San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 27th, the news of a terrible disaster to the American whaling fleet in the Behring Sea. When the Howland left Sea Horse Island, on Sept. 17th, thirteen whalers were shut in pack ice about twenty miles from Herald Island, almost the identical place in which the ill-fated Jeannette was first caught. On board these vessels are from five hundred to six hundred men. The vessels caught are the barks Andrew Hicks, Lancer, Mars, Ocean, Ohio, Secord, Reindeer and William Bayless, of New Bedford, and the barks Illsial Hunter, John West, Sea Breez and Pasano of San Francisco. With their catch, they represent five hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. The catch was very poor until the latter part of August, when the whalers, becoming desperate, took great risks in running up the little coves in the ice, and suddenly, before they could escape, thirteen were firmly hemmed in. The fleet was provisioned only to the early part of November.

Acknowledgments.

Since my last acknowledgment of receipts from the BANNER OF LIGHT office I have received one dollar from Clark Irvin, of Erie, Pa., and one dollar from Wm. Foster, Jr., of Providence, R. I.—each of those friends about my age, their letters accompanying the sums are highly appreciated testimonials.

This makes receipts to date $128, and as my spirit friends assure me the necessary amount will come, I have begun the work on my cottage, and hope to have it completed early in the spring. That, however, will depend on my friends. I again request that no one send me a dollar which will deprive him (or her) of any needed comfort in this life. WARREN CHASE.

Materialized Apparitions:

If Not Beings from Another Life, What Are They?

BY E. A. BRACKETT.

This work is in two Parts; the first containing carefully-prepared narratives of the author's interesting observations and experiences in the investigation of the phenomena of Materialization; the second, opinions and theories concerning the same. The investigation appears to have been pursued in a truly scientific spirit, by one possessing more than ordinary qualifications for the purpose, and with unusual facilities—the results being correspondingly positive and overwhelmingly conclusive regarding the reality of the phenomena in question. Aside from its positive testimony, the work affords many valuable suggestions to investigators as to the proper manner of proceeding in order to attain the best results.

The work contains 182 pages, 12mo, and is printed in large type, suitable for readers of advanced age. Cloth, $1.00, postage free.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 2d, 1888.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[By C. V. N. House.] Can the spirits give a cure for neuralgia in the sciatic nerves and through the general system?

ANS.—Neuralgia in any form is produced by an unequal distribution of the nervous forces of the system, either by depletion in certain parts of the nerve aura, or a surplus of the same in other portions of the body. Neuralgia is also attended by a depletion of the vital fluid; the blood needs to be enriched and equalized in its circulation. We know of nothing so good for the cure of neuralgia as the application of vital magnetism imparted by a healthy, congenial, assimilative human being through the hands, and for the manipulation especially of the sciatic nerve. The application of electricity is beneficial to certain organisms, but not to all; there being a difference in constitutions, one general rule will not apply to all, and it is wise for each case to be experimented upon by itself. However, we believe that the application of vital human magnetism, if imparted by one who is congenial to the patient, will prove of more or less value, although, of course, it will be more beneficial to some natures than to others.

Q.—[By R. G. Dawson.] It was said that in the course of long ages the human form will have changed so materially that it will bear but slight resemblance to that of the present time. Now are those in spirit-life who perhaps have resided there for thousands of years any different from those of to-day?

A.—It has been said that, through the various gradations of spiritual advancement, the human form becomes so changed that it may eventually bear but little resemblance to the external form of man upon this mortal plane of being. This does not mean that its outlines will be lost, that its general features, its symmetrical proportion and stature will be changed: it means that as the spirit advances, gains knowledge, power and intelligence, all these characteristics display themselves in the external features and through the general form; therefore the human body of the spirit advancing becomes more refined, less made up of the grosser particles, which may properly be called of material nature, and by-and-bye, as the spirit who has dwelt perhaps for centuries, for thousands of years in the spiritual world, grows more etherealized, his form begins to shine even as the light, seems to be almost transparent, yet there is the general outline of height, of stature, of proportion, of symmetry of feature, of figure, and much else that combine to make up a human form. We are told that man was created in the image of God—and while we do not accept and advocate the thought of a personal God, yet we may believe that man has been fashioned in the likeness of divine intelligence, the omnipotent over-soul of all life; and man shows these likenesses, these qualities, as he advances in spirituality, grows more intelligent, and gains not only knowledge but wisdom, or the power of applying that knowledge in useful ways to serviceable ends, and he shows this likeness, and puts forth these characteristics through the appearance of his outward form, which we see grows more etherealized in appearance, brighter, more like unto the light, filled with power and activity, with electrical strength and motion.

Q.—[By A. B. L.] If so-called tests, given through trance mediums, are not the result of telepathy, why are the mediums not able to give the date on a coin held before them in the closed hand of an investigator?

A.—A medium clairvoyant, one who possesses spiritual sight, independent of the material or physical eye, however blindfolded he may be externally, or however dark his surroundings, would be able to see the date of a coin while in the hand of the investigator, in the pocket, or in some hidden place toward which the clairvoyant mind and sight had been directed. But all mediums are not thus clairvoyant, have not their spiritual vision opened to this extent. There are mediums who are acted upon by attendant spirits who have no such occult powers of their own in development, and one may have his brain power and nervous organization manipulated by an attendant spirit so that there may pass through his mind, or be uttered by his tongue, a message from some unknown spirit in the other world; and this same spirit, unknown to the medium, by the message delivered, proves its own identity, and brings the internal evidence of the truth of its claims; there is that imparted in the message which the medium could not possibly have known, and perhaps that which the person receiving the message does not know or understand at the time, but he may learn to be authentic at a later date.

This is not telepathy, in one sense, although it may be in another. It is true, there is a transmission of thought from the mind of the spirit operator to the mind of the medium he controls; and this transmission of thought, passing through the brain of the subject, is delivered to the receiver just as it is understood by the medium who has gained it from the operator beyond.

Spiritualism deals with all the occult forces which belong to humanity, or which are allied to the universe, and it claims its methods operate in connection with every one of them. Thought may be transmitted from mind to mind on earth, even at a distance, under proper conditions. Those who are in sympathy with each other may, if they experiment, learn to so operate their thought as to have it imparted, one from the other, and to establish a communication in that way. This is true of mortals; may it not be true of spirits? May it not be true of spirit and mortal interchangeably? We affirm that it can; that the transmission of thought from a decarnated spirit to an embodied mind is not by any means an impossibility; indeed it has been proven a fact for many years. It is constantly occurring, and those who study it closely may become more interested, day by day, as they learn more of its operations and of the delicate conditions which spirits must employ in order to reach intelligently their friends or associates on earth.

Q.—[By E. H.] Spirits claim that it is to their advantage to act as a control or guide to mortals. Please explain.

A.—It is sometimes to the advantage of an especial spirit to serve as a guide or controlling intelligence of a mortal or a medium on earth. A spirit may require a certain line of experience in connection with earthly life, and by taking up its stand with some mediumistic organism upon whom he may operate, and with whom he may come into magnetic sympathy, the spirit will receive through that mediumistic organism those experiences and advantages denied him on earth, perhaps, or which possibly he may have ignored while in the body, but which he finds essential to his unfoldment and advancement now that he has become decarnated. Very often a little child will be drawn into contact with a medium and take possession of that organism and manifest itself to mortals. Perhaps it will become a messenger, bearing messages to those of earth whom it visits from their friends in the spirit-world. Those friends may not be able to personally control the medium which this little child can control, and so the little one is chosen as an instrument for the impartation of this influence and these messages, which are not only of service to mortals, but also of benefit to the spirits who convey them. Now, such a child will pass through a period of discipline and instruction in contact with its medium which will be advantageous to it by-and-bye; in the spirit-world it will gain a knowledge of physical life and its environments, of the earthly plane and its varying conditions, of the very atmosphere you breathe and the life you live, which will be very useful to it in expanding its mind and awakening a thirst for knowledge within it. Such a spirit will come in contact, through its missionary work, with all classes and phases of human life; it will study these, become familiar with them, and so be able to learn more of humanity than it possibly could do through books, or through any of the external methods of education; therefore by taking up its position by the side of a medium as a guide, attendant, or personal control, the spirit really gains value for itself, and receives an impetus in its upward development in the spirit-world. And as with the child, so with more matured spirits needing a discipline or an experience, or wishing to learn human nature as displayed through the external senses and avenues of life, they may gain it in this way, just as is claimed by some spirits they are doing from day to day.

By the Controlling Spirit.

We wish now, Mr. Chairman, to answer a brief question which has come to us from a mind on earth seeking knowledge concerning the conditions of spirit-life and of spirit communication. This mind has frequently inquired: "How can we best prepare ourselves to meet our friends when we pass from the body, and how can we best prepare a reception for our spirit friends when they approach our homes and desire to enter into communication with us?" It seems to us that the best manner of preparation for meeting your friends on the other side is that of self-improvement and growth. Those who believe that their departed friends are pure and good—and very few are willing to admit their ascended friends to be anything else—will desire to occupy a like plane of purity and goodness when they too pass from the body. To do this one must watch his daily life, must seek to express his spiritual qualities in external ways, by cultivating a beautiful spirit, by trying to grow in grace and purity of thought, as well as of action, not by criticising one's friends and neighbors, or those with whom he comes in contact, adversely and harshly, but by seeking to find that which is good within his fellow beings, and to excuse the fault, if it can be excused, to gloss it over with the mantle of sympathy. Give sympathy and helpful feeling to those who are unhappy or unfortunate, and certainly you will find your spirit growing in sweetness and purity, and all things that are lovely. By such growth the soul rises in power as well as in thought; it gains strength to understand the things that come to it in life, as well as to cope with its difficulties. Spirit friends watch over and smile upon it, and are glad that the soul is thus putting forth its powers of expansion, and rising in spirituality, and they are made happy by this state of improvement, and will be very sure to welcome you to their own plane of purity and of goodness, even though your spirit rises to it through such avenues as these of which we speak.

How can you best welcome your friends who come to you from the other life? By cultivating a harmonious disposition of your own, sending out a sweetness of thought and a magnetic influence which is cheerful and inspiring to mortals as well as to unseen spirits. Make those who come about you in physical life comfortable and at ease; be sympathetic; and in fact send sunshine throughout your homes to the best of your ability; instead of repining because of the things which are unpleasant to you in life, because of its painful experiences, seek to make the best of what comes, not by sitting down beneath your load of perplexities, but by doing all you can to overcome adverse conditions, and looking upon the brightest side that is yours. In doing this you will open your hearts to the approach of spiritual influences; you will send out a magnetic aura bright and beautiful, which will shine upon you and your friends, and which the angels will delight to gaze upon in approaching your life. These same angels whom you desire to welcome will then be able to enter its atmosphere of light; it will not present crude, dense elements to them, which they cannot penetrate, therefore they will come more readily to your side to assist you in the hour of trial, to bring helpful influences in the time of need, to shower upon your heart that peace and blessing which is uplifting and beneficial in an external sense, in spiritual ways.

While it is true that returning spirits are pleased to be welcomed by the incense of flowers, by the harmonies of music, and that they delight to gaze upon beautiful objects in this external world when they come in contact with this life and its conditions, all these are not essential to their happiness or to their approach; but there may be sent out from a humble, lowly spirit, whose circumstances and surroundings on earth are in the midst of want and poverty, a beautiful light, which sheds a radiance throughout the dwelling and gives delight to those spirits who come to it; there may be generated by that life a most glorious element, which is attractive to returning spirits, and a perfume may go forth from it sweeter than the fragrance of flowers in summer-time. From the depths of that heart may come up pure thoughts, loving aspirations to do good, in strains of sweetness such as are indeed welcome to angelic ears, and strains more refined and beautiful than those evoked by skillful fingers from the finest instrument on earth; therefore it depends upon that which you send out from your own life, from your own spirit, to your returning friends, whether they will delight to come to you and take up their place by your side to watch over and guard you and give of the tender sympathy of their natures, or whether they will be repelled and unable to approach very closely, because of the density of the magnetic elements which you send forth.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 5th, 1888.

Daniel S. Flagg.

I feel that it is a privilege to enter this room to-day, Mr. Chairman. This great truth was no stranger to me while I dwelt upon earth, for I felt that dear ones came into close communion with us, and I now know that it was true.

Although my old home is far away from this hall, I found I was able to come as quickly as if it had been close by. I am happy in my spirit home. My seventy years of mortal life seemed a long time. In boyhood's days I well remember that I thought a man of forty was quite old.

Many dear ones will be glad to know I am able to speak for myself, and would wish me to tell them of my home beyond, which is beautiful. Dear friends, you, too, are building your immortal homes day by day, and it is your good deeds and pure thoughts that will make that home lovely and desirable. Learn all you can of the higher life now, because it will help you so much hereafter. How beautiful it is to think that life is ever progressive and active.

I have often been in this room as an earnest listener, for I enjoy hearing what others have to say. My dearest mother is with me, and many other loved ones who were waiting on the shore to meet me. How warmly they greeted me! the old friends and neighbors, as well as relatives, for many had crossed over.

My home was at Santa Cruz, Cal. Daniel S. Flagg.

Caleb Packard.

About fifteen years since I threw off the old mortal garb and started out in the new life; and some three years since Lucy joined me in the happy home beyond the river.

My dear boys! how proud I am of them; they were so kind to their mother. But twelve years after I passed away did she remain here in the form. How glad I was to welcome her! I cannot half express the happiness that was mine when I saw my dear one coming to meet me. Frank and Elmer were living with their mother when she dwelt here. I am proud of my boys.

We are happy together in our spirit home. I have dwelt there some fourteen or fifteen years. I have much more to learn. There is always something to learn on the spirit side, and we lead a life more active, if that were possible, than in the mortal. We are all anxious, too, to do our part of the work.

It is a beautiful home, just across the river, where loved ones wait to greet you, and where no coldness comes between friends, and no ill feeling can spring up. I will be remembered in Wollaston and Quincy, Mass. My name is Caleb Packard.

Clara Harrington.

One dear one cared for me long before I was called to the life beyond, who made my home happy—my dear daughter. How good it is to feel that you are not in anybody's way after you get into years! I lived for eighty-five years, and the dear child—how anxiously and tenderly did she watch over me. I well appreciate now what was done for me, but could not as much at the time.

Before the spirit took its flight, in the still hours of the night I realized the presence of my dear ones, for I knew what it was to hold sweet communion with those who had passed on before. Oh! this life is but a shadow compared with the eternal life. As I look back I see much that might have been done, but now we seek to go forward and try to do what we can to help mortals. We may shed around them something that is a part of our work.

How grand, how beautiful are the homes beyond the veil, where loved ones come together and understand each other fully. The question has been asked concerning the little ones: "Shall we know them there?" Yes; the children do not forget the parents; they visit them often, and keep the links of affection bright.

My name is Clara Harrington. I hope this message will reach Lincolnville, Pa.

Georgiana Williams.

I want my mamma and papa to know that I do keep the promise that I made to them through another medium some time ago. I said if I could I would speak here, so it might be printed in your paper, for since I went away it has only been a few months, and dear mamma and papa feel they cannot be reconciled to my going; but, as grandpa says, the angels came for me, and the Great Father in Heaven knew best when he called me home. But, oh! mamma, I am not far away from you, and there's only a little time between my coming to the home.

I know you have not moved Dolly; you leave her in the rocker where I placed her, because it makes you feel bad to move the things Georgiana left. Mother, don't mourn me as lost or dead, for we are all so happy in the bright Summer-Land, where the flowers bloom. The beautiful white flowers—I love them. How many times I would feel that if I could only have a few flowers! And now I have all I want. Dear mamma, don't shed the tears for me. Aunt Etta sends greetings to Grandma Williams and to you and papa, for we come together in the home so often.

And, mamma dear, so many times do I come into the room where you sit, so sad, thinking of me and wondering, in your own spirit, if I do come there, as I have said, through the other lady, to you.

I don't want you to think me dead, but I want you to feel when I am out of your sight and you cannot behold me as you would if I had only gone a little way, perhaps to school, mamma. You know how I used to say to mamma, be a good girl while I am gone. I'd like to have you feel as you did then, and not shed tears for me.

You found the flowers as we told you, did n't you, way down in grandpa's field? You did n't think they were there, but we knew the daisies were not all gone.

Now, mamma, I want you to listen for some little sounds, as we make them in the room, and I know you, and papa, too, would be happier if you could feel that the little girl was there, sitting in the little chair and holding dolly, as she used to. Oh! yes; for I do come, truly, mamma, and it is so nice that we can come. Grandpa, too, does try so hard to make Grandma Williams feel he is there, though when she knows it she do n't own it. She ought to, because it is wrong, when you do n't own what really comes to you, and you know it. Grandma Marshall sends love, too. How glad I am that I can speak to mamma and papa!

My home, where I used to live, was in Haverhill, this State. Georgiana Williams.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, and the guides, for the privilege of speaking to-day, it will be of so much comfort to mamma; and also that I can keep my promise through the other lady. I was ten years old when I passed away, only last spring.

George Gleason.

All are permitted to enter here without money and without price. You hardly have a meeting that I am not one of the invisibles present. We have as much anxiety and as much interest in coming from the spirit side to these meetings as you mortals can have who sit and listen to what may be spoken.

How many times I have thought, as I visited the old home so far away: Do they think for one moment that we who have crossed the portal called death are dead people? Not by any means. We are more alive to-day than we possibly could be in the old form. I am satisfied with my home. Do not think, friends, that we have not companionship on the other side. We form acquaintances even as you do. Then again, the veil is thin that separates us from you; we can go around among you, day by day, and listen to what you may be saying. Yet how little do you sense it. I have thought often that it would be well to give more thought to the spirit side while here; but many are engrossed in business affairs, and feel there will be time enough for that by-and-bye. Little do they know how soon they will be called across the river. It is not long since I walked in the mortal form. I look back to that time, as you would count it, nigh on to twenty years, yet it seems to me but a little while. We do n't count time as you do; we often try to, but cannot, correctly, because we have dropped the reckoning.

I would like this message to reach Oshkosh, Wis., that they may know George Gleason has spoken here to-day. Some will remember me; they are scattered; some have crossed over, and some have made changes. No relatives dwell there, nearly all have come to me: mother, father and brother. There is one, Susan by name, that yet dwells in the Western States, but I hardly could direct you just where, it is so long since I threw off the mortal form.

Mrs. Sarah E. Weyburn.

I have wished, for it is a desire of the spirit, to communicate with mortal life. I hoped I might be able to give a few words to some dear one yet left here, and I assure you, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the few moments given me. I have often thought, as I have come near one and another, and as I have drifted even across the water, whether they remember me?. My earlier days were spent in Bath, Eng., and the latter part of my life in the West. I know I shall be remembered more where I passed away. How often have I thought what a privilege it was to come into your meetings, and for spirits and mortals to hold sweet communion together.

Sixty years I dwelt in the flesh, and but a little while have I been in the spirit-life—some two or three years. I know there will be some who, as they read this message, will remember me. They will say my work is not done yet, for I was always anxious to be engaged in work of a spiritual kind; it gave me a great deal of satisfaction and comfort, and I feel, to-day, there is much for me to do and to learn on the the spirit-side. I lived in Kalamazoo, Mich. I was the wife of Dr. William Weyburn.

Amos Perry.

I have been in every meeting you have had here for more than twelve months, and I have been well paid for coming. We gain a great deal by coming into this council-room, as the red man calls it. We draw from each one of you a magnetism that makes us feel stronger; and let me say right here, Mr. Chairman, your meetings have been very harmonious, and that is a great help to us, also what we learn here enables us to control other mediums in different surroundings. Don't misunderstand me, and think the whole purpose of our coming is to benefit ourselves, for as we gain from you mortals we give out to you an influence that makes you feel lighter in spirit even if we do n't speak to you.

I would like the dear ones to know I have kept my promise, Addison, for I have promised you that I would come here in due time and give out a few words. Your mother, Hannah, is here to-day, and George. Seward is not here, for he has a mission to perform in other directions.

These meetings, Mr. Chairman, are doing more than you can understand while you dwell here. When you are called up higher you will understand more fully how great a benefit has been derived from them, both by spirits and mortals.

I lived in Troy, Kan. My name is Amos Perry. I shall be remembered, I think, by some there, and one in the audience will recognize me.

Annie Levi.

I want this letter to go way to Canada—to Montreal, to my mamma. She is Ellen. I want it to go there, 'cause that 's where I went away from. I did n't know that I could come back and talk till I got to this meeting. Then an elderly gentleman, Mr. Taylor, said: "Come with me, dear; I will show you how the people send letters to their homes." Then I came right along with him. I wan't afraid. He told me this was the meeting-house where you put our names down and write the messages. That 's what the gentleman called it.

I want you to say to mamma, in the letter, that I am going to school, and I have grown to be quite a big girl. I was only five when I went away. Grandma has told me this so many times I do n't forget it now. Grandma says it is about five years since I went away. My name is Annie Levi.

Walter Adams.

The one thing uppermost in our mind that we want to impress upon the dear ones that are left is this—that we are not dead, and that there is no dying. I passed away some twenty to twenty-four years ago. I have sought in different directions to send a word of comfort to my own dear father and mother. They need not feel I am dead, or that they must wait until the judgment day before they find their boys again.

I find that the judgment day is every day, as near as I can come at it. I was but a boy, of some nineteen or twenty years, when I passed away, and I would like them to know I have an active life, although not a soldier in the spirit-world, for we have no need of them there. I also would like them to know that I am satisfied with my home. Mother says it is heaven, but it is a life of progression, of advancement, and I find that I have a great deal to learn.

I have met many of the boys since I passed away. Charles and Moses, and also Jimmie, are with me. Jimmie belonged in the same family. I entered the army without any feeling of dread. Although so young, I felt it my duty to go. I looked forward in going to the time when we all should return to our homes; but in one moment was I sent out of the physical form, while on horseback, for we were of the Third Mass. Cavalry.

As I look back I feel now that a good turn was done me in sending me out, for I found a good home, where there are no aches nor ills. Grandmother Adams sends greetings. Some of my friends live in New Hampshire and some in this State. I passed out in Jackson, La. My name is Walter Adams. This is my first control of an instrument.

George Chandler Spaulding.

Mr. Chairman, I greatly appreciate the privilege of speaking to-day. When we come here and look through the spirit of the medium, we can behold you as plainly as you can look at each other. I am satisfied, as I look upon this audience, that some one will understand who is speaking, but still the doubts will come a little for fear you may not be right. It is many years since I passed away—some thirty or forty—but they have gone very quickly.

Charlie is here to-day, and sends greetings to father, mother, sister and brother, who are yet left on earth. I would like to make some demonstration in the home, Uncle Eben, that you may feel some of the dear ones are there, for it would be a comfort to you all, and we are working for that purpose.

I know that some will remember me in Oshkosh, Wis. Father and mother are with me, but not present to-day. I would like you all to know we visit you often in your snug little home, and are only too glad to make some demonstration that you may know we are there—not only once, twice or thrice, but many times—and we still keep trying.

I esteem it a great privilege to speak here to-day. My name is George Chandler Spaulding.

James M. Sherman.

A number of years ago, Mr. Chairman, I was in your meeting and spoke, but did not accomplish what I was seeking for; some little business affairs came up which I did not wish to make public; and to-day I am going to repeat a part of what I said. I know I could be of benefit to some in the flesh if they would only listen to what a spirit might have to say. Don't think for a moment that you know a great deal more than we do, for we ought to have some knowledge on the spirit side which it is out of your power to gain.

I very often take a stroll over Cottage Hill by the paper mill, and also by the silk mill, and I enter many homes. I have tried, by means of one and another, to make myself known. The place that I am speaking of is Newton Upper Falls. I am still trying to come into communication with two particular ones, for I know it will be of benefit to them as far as the material goes, and it will be of benefit financially if they will only give me an opportunity of speaking to them privately.

As I said, I asked this same favor from your platform a number of years ago. It has not been granted me yet. If they still hold out until the grave closes over them, I shall be ready to meet them on our side. James M. Sherman.

Joseph Dame.

I want to reach some friends in North Cambridge, to let them know that those who have passed on still live, and come to visit them as really as they ever did. I well remember many in the good old city of Boston, although a number of years have passed since I left the mortal life, and many changes have been made here since I went out.

At one period my work was that of a hackman, long ago, when business was done on a smaller scale than it is to-day. The streets have been changed since then, and new buildings have taken the place of old ones. Things look very strange to me in some parts of your city, while in others they look very familiar. Around the markets it looks very much as it used to. As I come on the Common, and go out toward what I think you call the Highlands I find changes; where the water was I see now the land. So you must understand that we visit the earth quite often to note what is going on.

To-day I would like to reach George Gleason, who yet dwells in the mortal form. I think he sees the BANNER OF LIGHT, and will feel that Joseph Dame has really been speaking. He also will be glad to know I do n't forget him, for we were young men together.

Jeremiah Morse.

We come into your meetings, Mr. Chairman, and drift around, many times, where there are mediums, thinking, perhaps, we may come in contact with some dear one, for the laws of attraction call us into the surroundings of many, where there are channels to be found.

It is many years since I passed out of mortal life, but I have frequently visited the earth, hoping to come into closer communion with some dear ones. Jerry has come to dwell with us in spirit, the father and mother, and how gladly did we receive him. When you find that a dear one must leave you here, do try and be as calm as possible, for you hold the spirit to earth when it would soar upward. You know not how you bind the spirit by your tears, by the sorrow that you manifest when you find we must leave you. I know you will say: "How can we help it when we are mortals?" I did not say you could help it. I know you can learn much of spirit law by what we may give you in a few words.

Many times have I stepped in to what are called the grove-meetings, feeling very anxious to speak a word, but it was not in my power, for reasons which I cannot explain, and this is the first privilege granted me of taking control.

I would say to the dear ones that are left, we sympathize with you in your sadness, on account of what has come into the home and what has come to the dear one of trouble mentally, and having to be removed from home. What you thought was best to do you did, and it was best, under the circumstances. I am happy to know that in spirit-life no such trials come; we all have a good understanding and have no defect in the physical form.

I would like them to know that Jeremiah Morse still lives, and has been happier because he could approach friends in Bethel, Vt., and in South Royalton. It is a great pleasure to speak, and I am very thankful for it.

Henry A. Maynard.

I feel confident that the dear ones, the neighbors and all, will remember me in White Plains, N. Y.

I have made the attempt to speak, and I have given out much through relatives, for we have an instrument in the family. William and his wife, I know, realize my presence at many times, and have often wondered why I did not speak through the paper. It is not because I have not been one of your company, for I have been in nearly every meeting. I have come as a scholar, to learn what I might, and to bring an influence to you here, to make you feel better for having come. It has been said, it is good to meet together; we fully find it so, as we meet in your room.

How grand it is to know we are all coming together in that land of light that knows no parting, where no suffering nor any ills can overtake us, where all is bright and beautiful: A life of progression, of activity, of harmony and peace.

I would like William to know that I have spoken. He reads your paper, therefore will see that his brother has sent a message. My name is Henry A. Maynard.

Emeline Clark.

I want my dear ones in Chicopee, Springfield and Shrewsbury, Mass., to know that I visit them. There are many who have not forgotten me, and I have been very anxious to tell them that I, with the rest, have been trying to prove the immortality of the soul. I have been in the hall many times when different mediums were present, and once I was able to give my name. To-day it is worth a great deal to me to be able to speak a few words, and send love and greetings to the dear ones, in Springfield, Mass., particularly. Emeline Clark.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

SARAH E. BASSFORD.

I noticed in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Oct. 14th a communication from SARAH E. BASSFORD of New York, through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, Sept. 14th, in the Banner of Light Circle Room. It pleased me very much to read the communication, as I am satisfied of its truth. Mrs. Bassford, my spirit wife, passed over nearly fifteen years ago. I have had a knowledge of spirit return for about two years, and the manifestations I have had since are enough to convince the most inveterate skeptic. I gave Mrs. Bassford the present at Mrs. W. H. Allen's, 464 Washington street, Providence, R. I., about nineteen months ago, in the presence of twenty-eight persons, and all have seen her materialize with it a number of times in her séance-room; also at Mrs. Stoddard-Gray's, 923 West 34th street, New York, several times, as many can attest; also at Mrs. Mayer's in Chattanooga, Tenn., and in Charleston, S. C., in March last. How sweet to think we shall be with our loved ones by-and-bye to part no more. Yours for the truth,

JOHN F. BASSFORD.

NANCY A. W. PRIEST.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Sept. 8th there was a message from NANCY A. W. PRIEST. I recognize it as a lady I knew many years ago. I sent the paper to a cousin of Miss Priest and asked if she would recognize it; either direct to the BANNER OF LIGHT, or to me, if she thought it came from her cousin. She wrote: "I am not a believer in Spiritualism, neither am I a disbeliever, as I have never had an opportunity of seeing any thing of it. I will say the message is very much like Nancy's expression. She was a very intimate and loved friend of mine from early girlhood."

Miss Priest's friends are all Baptists.

New York City. MRS. C. RUSSELL.

J. B. RICHARDSON.

The communication from J. BROOKS RICHARDSON, which came in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan. 28th, 1888, is true in every particular. I fully believe it came from him. It has a deep meaning for me which no one else would be likely to understand.

DANIEL SHAW.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Oct. 20th a spirit-message from DANIEL SHAW was recognized fully by his family and friends. And the facts therein were truthfully stated. There can be no doubt that it came from the spirit of the person it purported to be. May the BANNER OF LIGHT long continue to shed its rays of light to the sorrowing soul, and scatter its truths to all who earnestly seek them. A. F. BLANCHARD.

November Magazines.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—An etching of exceptional artistic completeness, by James D. Smillie, of a painting by Mr. F. A. Bridgman, an American, is the frontispiece. The subject is "A Hot Bargain," the scene being at the horse market in Cairo. The painting was exhibited at the Salon of 1884, and the Royal Academy in 1887. Mr. Bridgman, who is a pupil of Gérôme, passed two winters in Algiers and on the banks of the Nile. His appreciation of Arab life is unsurpassed, as also is his reputation for transfixing on canvas the splendors of the Orient. Among the most interesting pages are those which, under the title of "Art in the Theatre," treat upon "Costume Designing." The article will modify the ideas of theatre-goers, who, taking a superficial view of the stage, think it an easy matter to produce upon it a thoroughly good play. The multitudinous array of details and the herculean labors attendant upon their proper distribution to meet critical artistic requirements, are very clearly set forth. An English artist, J. S. Cotman, is the subject of the opening article, with five illustrations. A second article on "The Kepplestone Collection" is given, with five illustrations. "Kensington Fifty Years Ago," is described by James Dow, with ten illustrations by Luker. "American Art Notes" and "The Chronicle" close the contents. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE QUIVER.—This, the closing number of the fourth, creditably rounds out a volume of much interest and value in its influence of a moral and humanitarian nature. Both of these commendable features are seen in the opening article, an illustrated one descriptive of a Free Library in the East End of London, alluded to as "a cheery landmark—a veritable lighthouse amid much that is dingy and unattractive." Two serial stories are concluded, and short ones are given; these, with sketches and poems and a frontispiece entitled "Harvest Gladness," make up an excellent list of contents. New York: Cassell & Co.

OUR LITTLE ONES.—A fine frontispiece embellishes this month's number, a scene in the "Jardin d'Acclimation," Paris. The contents are of the usual attractiveness for young children, in reading matter and illustrations, including an illustrated sketch of the educated seals, recently on exhibition in this city. Boston: Russell Publishing Co., 36 Bromfield street.

WE THE PEOPLE.

BY W. H. VENABLE.

"Its own are all things between earth and sky."—Campanella.

We the People—not the crown,
Not the Surplice nor the Brand—
Noble's crest nor Schoolman's gown,
Burse nor Rostrum, Grange nor Town—
We the people rule our land.

We the People—not the few,
High nor low nor middle class;
High and low and middle too,
Free men! the and I and you,
We the Multitude—the Mass.

Myriads waited myriad years,
Goaded by the lash of Power;
Groaning, wept a sea of tears;
Lo! at last their day appears;
Heaven's clock hath struck the hour!

Asia deemed their woe decreed;
Brahm nor Buddha heard their cry;
Europe heard with scornful heed;
Prince and Pontiff mocked their need,
Making Christ a bitter lie.

Demagogue nor demigod
Shall again control the world;
Man awoke! disdained the rod!
Spurned the despot's whip and prod!
To the dust his rider hurled!

Man has come unto his own,
Rank and blood and gold are great,
But the greatest greatness known
Is intrinsic worth alone—
Worth exalts the man, the State.

Earth grows better growing old,
Still by happier beings trod;
Plato's Iron men are gold;
New humanities unfold;
Evolution's law is—God.

We, the People, moving slow,
Lift the Nations as we climb;
Patience points the way we go;
In our bosom burn and glow
Hopes and purposes sublime.

We are neither fools nor blind,
Nihil horde nor rabble mob;
We the People know our mind;
For the weal of human kind,
Thoughtfully our pulses throb.

All are wiser than the wise;
All are better than the good;
All for all can best devise;
We the People sympathize
With each brother's brotherhood.

We the people know our need—
Common want of common man;
By our prescience 't is decreed
Who shall follow, who shall lead,
Who shall execute, who plan.

Congressman and President,
These are but the People's hands.
Theirs to do and represent
What the head—the government—
What the People's will commands.

What the People wills is best.
When have we the People lied?
We have builded in the West;
Freedom leans upon our breast;
Freedom is the People's bride.

We the People—we the State—
Subject, sovereign, both in one—
Trust in Highest Potentate!
Trust, oh! world, in us, and wait!
God hath willed our will be done!

MEDIUMSHIP AND ITS RELIABILITY.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Some weeks ago you printed a report of the finding of a diamond ring through medial means, the individual used as the instrument being a business man who does not pretend to make mediumship a profession. I have been informed that there are those who have felt to question the wisdom of circulating such reports—however true—in view of the continued practice of mankind to seek material advantage rather than spiritual light when they come in contact with mediums.

I will say that in giving that report I had no selfish motive in view—my only object being to state the fact of its being done, that Spiritualism might have the advantage of this one additional proof of its claims that excarnated spirits do know of our joys and sorrows, our gains and losses, and many other things; that they hold their identity after the change known as "death," and can and do return through the operations of the universal laws of life.

I am satisfied that all grades of spirits return, and can help or otherwise, as the case may be, the road earthward being open to all alike; and without question many spirits return with selfish motives for their friends and mediums. When, therefore, any investigator calls upon a medium, I would counsel such inquirer to ask advice concerning the revelations of the Spiritual Philosophy, rather than seek for pecuniary advantage or a knowledge of lost property. I would have him who seeks "points" for speculation from the excarnated spirit-intelligences, remember that the same amount of risk exists in asking business advice from them as would exist if he asked the same questions of spirits yet robed in the physical and actively manifesting on State street or Wall street. I am not sure but that the risk is greater—for mortals have an external appearance through which our better judgment can be aided, measurably, in deciding whether they are worthy of trust or otherwise; whereas it is quite difficult for individuals not favored with spiritual sight to know who is dictating the message, and what his (or her) object is in so doing. Varying influences rule in these matters, and the medium's advice which is good to-day may prove of an opposite, or negative, value to-morrow.

There are but few individuals who have grown up to a condition to know truth from error; but some individuals no doubt get more of truth than others do. I would not advise any one to depend implicitly upon spirits, whether in or out of the material body; "try the spirits;" in either case according to the principles of reason and common sense, and the ordinary bearings of business and daily life. Such was the command in the days of ancient Spiritualism, and it is of equal value now.

The same idea exists in my mind regarding what is called "planetary" influence, and a feeling which prompts certain individuals to seek mediumistic advice at every turn in life, for fear of coming into adverse conjunctions, or working against good ones then in preparation: I would not counsel that it be done. No doubt that a truth underlies the primary position as to the "horoscope," with its indications of good and ill, but the grand work of Spiritualism is to teach men to be self-reliant, and to know that the true aim in life is to build up a well-grounded individuality; therefore, as I have remarked at the outset, it is better that all shall seek, whether in the presence of mediums or amid the concerns of daily life, for that spiritual enlightenment which may fittest contribute, through cultivation, to the strengthening of their own better judgment, and give them in fact, and for their lasting benefit, what the genesaic legend alleges was purchased at such a fearful cost by the Adamic pair: A "knowledge of good and evil."

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

TOOTH-LIFE.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

THIS Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

FINELY executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28¼. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

Price 50 cents.

LIFE AND LABOR
IN THE SPIRIT-WORLD:

Being a Description of Localities, Employments, Surroundings, and Conditions in the Spheres.

BY MEMBERS OF THE SPIRIT-BAND OF
MISS M. T. SHELHAMER,
Medium of the Banner of Light Public Free Circle.

When one becomes fully convinced that friends who have passed from existence on earth still live, the questions naturally arise, How do they live, and what are their occupations? The purpose of this book is to answer these inquiries, and, so far as the language of a material life is capable of describing a spiritual one, it does so. These descriptions are not mere theories and surmises of what may exist beyond this state of being, the acceptance of which depends mainly upon the faith of the individual to whom they may be presented, but statements of facts made by those who live that life, and are familiar with the scenes and experiences of which they write.

In one volume of 426 pages, neatly and substantially bound in cloth. Price $1.00, postage 10 cents; full gilt, $1.50, postage free.

An Edition of Life and Labor in the Spirit-World has been issued by COLBY & RICH which is embellished with eight illustrations representing scenes in spirit-life. The titles of the illustrations, which are very suggestive of the scenes portrayed, are as follows:

At Home in the Summer-Land.
Little George and his Spirit-Mother.
Lucy Aiken and her Kind Ministrations.
Beulah, a Spirit Missionary.
Unhappy Spirits. What we Sow we shall Reap.
Fannie Davis Under Spirit Control.
Little Bertie. "For Mamma."
An Excursion to Sunny Island.

The price of the Illustrated Volume, which is all other respects is the same as the edition above advertised, is $1.50, postage 10 cents.

The Boston Spiritual Temple.—Sunday morning, Oct. 28th, Mrs. Lillie spoke clearly and satisfactorily in answer to the question "Why do spirits prophesy events that never occur?" and in reply to one regarding the existence of a Christ on earth said there had been many of them. A striking event gives prominence to individuals. It was common to crucify people in the days of Jesus as it is in the present time to inflict what is termed capital punishment. Had there been no crucifixion the life of Jesus would not have stood out with greater prominence than that of either of the twelve apostles. The command, "Go forth and heal the sick, the halt and the blind," was a spiritual command, and Christ was a medium, wonderfully developed, able to bestow the gift upon others. He knew intuitively who was endowed by nature and the spirit. He went among the fishermen, and selecting some in whom he saw peculiar qualities, said to them, "I will make you fishers of men."

In answer to a statement of Dr. Pentecost before the Liberal Club that we must stop thinking of God and a future life, and devote ourselves wholly to this world, the guides said, He might as well advise his hearers to stop breathing; he can no more live out his theory than could he who said take no thought for the morrow. Ingersoll says, one world at a time; but the man who thinks only of to-day, and says he has enough to do in this world, and no thought for the future, when he goes into the next life enters it a pauper. Experience should furnish us with reason, and by watchful thought and care we should learn how to live here. A stinted mind with a plethoric body is an uncomfortable possession. Spirits have opened up through mediumship more scientific knowledge of the human system, and given clearer diagnoses of diseased human bodies, than were ever given before its advent. We need all the universe open to the human mind; give a man something to reach up for, and it will ensure his progression. If we fall every day let us profit by it; we shall be made better by blundering. We are spiritual beings not only for now, but for eternity.

In answer to the question, Do you believe in God? it was said, Most certainly we do; God in all things, and that we are all the sons and daughters of the living God. This is exemplified not alone in the sons of Judea, but in the sons and daughters of men everywhere.

The morning service closed with an improvised poem.

Evening.—In answer to several questions the control said: You have asked us questions that would require an infinite mind to answer. There are some things we can know as certainties; there are others that must ever remain to us uncertain, and these belong to the infinite. We can give you an idea of God, but it would be but an individual opinion after all. You have been told by the religious teachers of the past that the only God in the universe was a triune God whose attributes were love and anger. Who is to interpret these old mystic terms? Christianity is a fragment of the old mythological ideas of God, but the nineteenth century has expunged some of those ideas as false. The storm and the tempest that are by some attributed to the anger of God are set in motion by nature that, like the good housewife, restores everything to order. On account of opportunities for advancement we believe there are better men and women to-day than ever before; what we miss to-day we shall have by-and-bye. There is a voice within that tells me more than I can depict in words. Whatever a man sows that shall he also reap. We shall have over there what we have lived for here.

The services closed with a poem. Mrs. Lillie will speak in Berkeley Hall every Sunday in November.

W. J. Colville in Berkeley Hall.—On Sunday last, Oct. 28th, W. J. Colville again lectured in Berkeley Hall at 3 P. M., under the auspices of the Independent Club, to an audience which completely filled the hall. Miss Austin sang exquisitely, and the general interest in the lecture was pronounced. The subject was: "The Great Egyptian Pyramid, and What it Teaches the Present Generation." The discourse was very interesting, and displayed great spiritual and historical insight into the knowledge and purposes of the enlightened ancients. While paying a high tribute to the work of Prof. Piazzi Smyth, the lecturer ventured to disagree with some of his distinctly theological positions, the ground taken being that the pyramid marked a culminatory point in a very remote period of civilization, and that it was destined as a perpetual monument to exact science and pure religion as embodied in the verities of ancient Masonry. A very interesting interpretation was given of the most prominent sections of the interior, all of which, the speaker said, referred to the destiny of the earth and of the individual human spirits, of which the mystic hierophant is the standing type. Following the lecture a pleasing poetic improvisation was rendered on subjects proposed by members of the audience.

In the evening at 7:30 Mr. Colville addressed a large and deeply interested audience in Pilgrim Hall, Chelsea, on "Rome and Reason." The lecture differed materially from the one alluded to last week in these columns. Little was said concerning doctrine, the time being chiefly spent in contrasting the primitive organizations of Christians with the church of to-day, and outlining the kind of church which would best adapt itself to the growing needs of the American people. Though Church and State must be kept totally distinct in this country, irreligion is not to be desired. There are divine truths underlying all creeds and ceremonies, and it should be our work to disclose the hidden verity, and by explaining what seems mysterious to the people at large, end the reign of priestly despotism, and conduct the rising generation into paths of pure and rational spirituality. Very pleasing music by a select choir added to the enjoyment of all present.

Thursday evenings Mr. Colville has been giving a course of instructive lectures on "The Rosicrucians and Their Symbols," at the receptions held by the Independent Club. The last in the series was to take place Thursday, Nov. 1st, at 62 West Newton street, at 7:30 P. M. Mr. Colville's farewell lectures in Boston this season will be given next Sunday, Nov. 4th. He will speak in Berkeley Hall at 2:45 P. M. Subject, by particular request, "Is Marriage a Failure?" A fine male quartet will render several choice musical selections. At 7:30 P. M. he will speak in Pilgrim Hall, Chelsea, celebrating the tenth anniversary of his first public appearance in America. The topic of discourse will be "Ten Years in Retrospect and Ten Years in Prospect; A Review and a Prophecy."

W. J. Colville's classes in spiritual science close Friday, Nov. 2d, in Berkeley Hall, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. The attendance at all the sessions has been encouraging. His lectures in Hartford, Conn., Tuesdays, Oct. 16th, 23d and 30th, have also been quite successful. He speaks there for the last times in the parlors of the "Home," 54 Prospect street, Monday, Nov. 5th, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M., on "Universal Theosophy." He will lecture in Denver, Colorado, under the auspices of The College of Spiritual Philosophy, Sunday, Nov. 11th. Lectures morning and evening. Answers to questions in the afternoon; he will also lecture on the two following days.

His engagement in San Francisco, covering a term of five months, commences Jan. 6th, 1889.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Sunday, Oct. 28th, the hall was crowded to witness the "fire test" through the mediumship of Mrs. Temple, which showed beyond a doubt the power of the spirit to protect the physical against fire. The medium's hands and arms were thoroughly washed with soap and water in presence of the audience, before the presentation of this phenomenon. Through the earnest request of many friends the management have secured the services of Mrs. Temple for next Sunday, Nov. 4th. Dr. E. H. Mathews, David Brown, Mrs. T. J. Lewis, Mr. McKenzie and Mrs. Buck also gave fine tests and spirit descriptions. F. W. M.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Tuesday evening, Oct. 23d, Mrs. Ada Foye held a developing circle in this hall. Circle opened with singing by Mrs. Mary Nickerson. Mrs. Foye made brief introductory remarks, after which she gave excellent instructions regarding the development of the different phases of mediumship, and illustrations of her own spiritual gifts as already described in THE BANNER.

Last Sunday a good audience gathered to listen to that veteran worker, Dr. H. B. Storer, who opened the services by reading a poem, said to have been dictated through the mediumship of the late S. B. Brittan. After singing by Mrs. Mary Nickerson, accompanied by Prof. Milligan, Dr. Storer said, in opening, that there never was a time when the phenomena were more sought after than the present. People are willing to listen to what may be said about Spiritualism, but they desire most of all to see the phenomena, because they demonstrate to them the reality of spirit-life. Spiritualism consists of three parts: 1st, The continuity of life. 2d, The existence of spirits in that life beyond, and 3d, The possibility of communication with them after death. It demonstrates that we are all immortal, that spirits are all around us, and can communicate with us, giving us spiritual and material aid. The theory of a life after death must come first, and then proofs of that life come in the shape of the phenomena, witnessed in numberless places throughout the world. We all seek for light and truth according to our necessities. A man who has not lost friends cares little about the knowledge, and there are hundreds who care nothing for a life beyond, being satisfied with that which their selfish nature may secure for them in this life; but the time does come to all, at last, when friends pass away, the fondest hopes are disappointed, and life's promises fail. Then we look about us and ask if we are to live on and be in some measure compensated for our trials here. It is the mission of Spiritualism to educate us in regard to the future life, so that we may abide in security and have perfect confidence that all will be well with us hereafter. Spiritualism takes its place naturally in the world, and if lifted up will draw all men unto it.

Miss A. Peabody gave tests and psychometric readings, giving, among other names, that of Hattie Davis, who desired recognition. Mrs. C. H. Loomis-Hall said that she was sitting at her home for telegraphic communications from the spirit-world, and would soon be able to give some experiments from this platform. Several tests were given, which were well received and recognized.

At the evening session Dr. Storer spoke upon "Human Experience the Source of Human Knowledge." Tests were given by Mrs. Hall, Mrs. T. J. Lewis and Mrs. Knox. Mr. Ridell said that the spirits had saved him from drinking, profanity and the use of tobacco, and that light from the unseen world was shining all about his pathway.

Edgar W. Emerson will occupy the platform next Sunday, afternoon and evening. HEATH.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday, Oct. 28th, Spirit Theodore Parker, through the mediumship of Mrs. H. S. Lake, delivered a lecture upon "The Church." He said, in substance: "The Church should be the conservator of spiritual energy. Therein should be expressed all those subtile longings of the soul which dignify human life, and reveal to it its own divinity. Hence it should be builded upon the recognition of brotherhood, of fellowship and fraternity. Hitherto the church has taught that the universal energy needs placating; that somehow man's worship is essential to the repose of deity. The fact that there is no true worship of the divine which is not expressed in terms of service to the human has been lost sight of.

I reverence the Church, inasmuch as it typifies the struggle of the race for spiritual attainment. But while I do so reverence, I do not bow abjectly before it, and stultify my reason in the acceptance of creeds which I know to be false. Perceiving error, I seek its overthrow. Realizing that conscience is the keeper of the soul, I strive to quicken in the Church intellectual honesty and spiritual fortitude, that men may begin to forget the gross conceptions of deity which they have created, and to accept a broader and clearer understanding of human obligation.

The attitude of the Church relative to self-abnegation, I deplore. The body is too sacred a structure to be marred or destroyed at the bidding of a Bible, a conclave, or a creed. Its functions are a part of the divine economy, the legitimate performance of which quickens the spirit. Penance, or "mortification of the flesh," is not the true idea of spiritual advancement. The Church should direct spiritual energy along the line of physiologic understanding. It should imperatively demand that the body should be properly cared for, as the precious habitation and servant of the soul within. I would, were it possible, eliminate from the Church all service which is not spontaneous and born of overflowing reverence and aspiration. The acceptance of creeds and the observance of liturgies count for nothing in the stature of the spirit, when divorced from true devotion to the welfare of the race.

This, then, should be the goal toward which the spiritual efforts of mankind should be directed; to lessen want, and war, and crime, by hearty human sympathy organized within the precincts of the Church."

As usual the music was a most enjoyable feature of the exercises. Next Sunday Spirit LaFayette proposes to speak upon "The State." Fraternity School for Children will meet at 10:30 A. M. Wednesday Evening Social at 7:30, and all are cordially invited to attend. Lecture to women by the guides of Mrs. Lake, Friday afternoon, Nov. 2d, at 2:30.

The First Spiritual Temple Fraternity School held its fourth session last Sunday, Mr. M. C. Ayer presiding. After singing, an invocation and responses, the object lesson, "Wisdom," was commented upon by both children and adults. Wisdom is the right use or exercise of knowledge in the choice of what is commendable as a means to accomplish the ends; as faculty of the mind for judging what is most just, proper and useful; a knowledge of what is conducive to our happiness or prosperity. He that is perfectly wise is perfectly happy, as the very beginning of wisdom makes life easy for us.

The lesson of the day was "Children in the Spirit-World," imparting by means of questions and answers the truth that the young passing from homes on earth are tenderly cared for as they enter the life continued; that death is simply a change of conditions: that the playmates of childhood, the dear friends missing from earth-life, are living in a life continued, and that the change they have experienced is only an event on an eternal road of progression toward the infinite.

Our mission to the children attending this Temple School is to instruct them, to lead them to become able followers of the spiritual truths of to-day, men and women educated for the work in the century to come. At every session we feel encouraged in our work. We hold no inducements for children to attend other than that we will teach them to form a Spiritual Temple out of the actions, thoughts and desires of this life, that shall endure forever.

Next Sunday the object-lesson will be "Charity;" the lesson of the day will be "Spirit Communion." We invite all who wish to come, and bring the little ones with them. ALONZO DANFORTH.

No. 2 Fountain Square, Roxbury.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The services commenced with playing and singing by Mrs. Case, after which Mr. Eben Cobb offered an invocation, and related an incident that occurred on his way to the meeting. Miss Peabody gave remarkable tests of spirit intelligence. A gentleman placed a glove upon the desk, to be read psychometrically. Miss Peabody spoke of the owner of it as having crossed the ocean, also the man presenting it as having the gift for spirits to rap through his forces. The gentleman said that he heard a loud rap the previous night, and came to the meeting with the glove on that account. He thought the rap was made by the spirit that wore the glove, and who had come from across the ocean, but was now in spirit-life, and the intelligence corroborated the impressions that came to him, and gave satisfaction in many ways. Miss Tyler, who came to the meeting a stranger to nearly all present, received, also, a fine test from Miss Peabody.

Mr. Ridell followed with remarks touching upon those of Mr. Cobb. Dr. Eldridge gave tests that were recognized, and diagnoses of disease. Mrs. T. J. Lewis followed with remarks, closing with some tests. Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham closed the services with remarks.

The afternoon and evening services were more fully attended, interesting remarks being made by Mr. Cobb. COM.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—Last Sunday morning a large audience of pupils and visitors filled the hall. After the opening exercises of vocal and instrumental music, readings and banner march, in which there were ninety-seven children, we were favored with readings by Lottie Giles, Lillie and Eloise Wendemuth and Allie Cummings; singing by Mabel Waite, Alice Devereaux, Maggie Fitzgerald, and a piano solo finely executed by Master Bertie Newton. Miss Emma Ireland, the child medium, gave an excellent address. Mr. John Wetherbee related some marvelous tests he had received in past years through the mediumship of Mrs. Ada Foye.

The sewing-circle of the Lyceum held a very interesting circle in Lyceum Hall on Wednesday evening of last week; these circles are well attended and very enjoyable. We hope all the friends of the Lyceum will remember our fair, to be held in Berkeley Hall the week beginning Dec. 10th, and send us contributions for our tables. HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

The Independent Club opens for the season in Wells Memorial Hall, 987 Washington street, Wednesday, at 2 P. M., Nov. 7th. W. J. Colville makes the opening address.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' meetings were held on Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. The services were of an unusually interesting character, the chairman, C. M. A. Twitchell, Mrs. J. E. Downing, Dr. C. H. Harding, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Mrs. Thomas, Miss Knox and Mr. Capel participating. Services throughout the day were interspersed with sweet melodies, including some of C. Payson Longley's songs—Miss Grace Holton, pianist, and Dr. Hale as organist. M. M. HOLT.

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Sunday evening meetings, under the auspices of the Cleveland Progressive Lyceum, were inaugurated the first Sunday in October by Helen Stuart-Richings, the gifted lecturer and elocutionist, who occupied the rostrum for the entire month, Mrs. R. generously tendering the Lyceum a benefit, which took the form on Friday evening (26th ult.) of Costume Readings, in which her talents and study have distinguished her above all our other lecturers. The choice programme rendered was enhanced by Miss Clair Tuttle, who recited in a very pathetic manner "Sister and I," receiving a unanimous recall. Miss T. is the youngest daughter of Hudson and Emma Tuttle, the well-known author and poetess; her commanding form and expressive countenance fit her well for the profession she has chosen; her voice of rare power and beauty won the hearts of the audience completely. This promising young reader is to make her début as a professional some time in December.

Liquidation of the Lyceum Debt.—The indebtedness, which cast such a shadow over the genial features of Conductor Carleton at the opening of the season, has been cancelled, and "Richard's himself again." Great credit is due Dr. George Ferris, the young magnetic healer of this city, for the kindness and zeal he displayed in arranging for an entertainment of outside talent for the benefit of the Lyceum, donating, as he did, the entire proceeds to it.

The Spiritualists' Progressive Thought Society.—A new organization has been effected on the West Side of this city, with the above title, having for its object the encouragement of home talent, the development of mediums and the establishment of a strictly progressive Sunday school for children, etc. Mrs. Parker, President; Dr. George Ferris and C. C. Stevens, Vice Presidents; N. B. Dixon, Secretary; Mrs. R. D. Shook, Treasurer. The Society meets in Good Templars' Hall, 485 Pearl street, every Sunday, 2:30 P. M.

Transition of a Well-Known Citizen.—Judge R. F. Paine, a lawyer of great ability, and for many years Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, passed recently to the higher life, and although the funeral services were conducted by the Unitarian minister, Rev. F. L. Hosmer, we recited a spiritual poem at the request of his eldest son, Robert Paine, editor of The Penny Press of this city. The Judge in his younger days was a Presbyterian, but was well known the latter years of his life to have been a Spiritualist. Forty years ago he espoused the cause of Abolitionism. His life followed the line of progressive thought all through. The judges of the city attended his funeral in a body, as did many members of the law.

"Orange Blossoms."—As a contrast to the solemnity of the above, we are pleased to chronicle two weddings: First, that of the marriage of our Lyceum Guardian, Miss Nellie Ingersoll, to Mr. George Ackerson, leader of "Shore" group. Both have been members of the Lyceum many years, and are beloved and respected by all. If happiness is not the result of this union, we shall query with "Mona Caird": Is marriage a failure?

"Can ye sever the twain that to oneness go?
The voice of Divinity answers, No!"

The second wedding to be recorded is that of our friend and co-worker, (who left the city last February to edit a labor paper in Byesville, O.,) Mr. C. G. Oyston, to Mrs. A. M. Gill, medium and lecturer, recently arrived from England. The happy couple contemplate making their future home in this city. May the anticipations of both couples be fully realized.

Other weddings in our Lyceum ranks are contemplated shortly, but until the invitations are issued your reporter is prohibited from divulging the names of the parties.

Will A. Mansfield.—This medium for independent slate-writing recently made a professional visit to Cleveland, and remained about ten days—being kept busy all the time, as we are informed.

Mrs. M. A. Hawley, clairvoyant, test and business medium, has just arrived in this city from Westfield, N. Y., and can be found at 64 Bolivar street.

J. Clegg Wright, the brilliant inspirational speaker, occupies the spiritual rostrum in Memorial Hall during the entire month of November; following him in December, Mrs. Ada Foye of San Francisco, the world-renowned platform test medium, makes her initial bow to a Cleveland audience. All are on the "qui vive" to witness her marvelous mediumship. The other speakers for the season are Walter Howell, J. Frank Baxter and J. J. Morse.

Spiritualism vs. Orthodoxy.—During November (time and place to be announced hereafter) a public discussion will take place between a minister of the gospel and Mr. J. Clegg Wright, which promises to be of great public interest.

Mediumistic Apostasy.—The recent public recantation of Mrs. Margaret (Fox) Kane's mediumship at the Academy of Music, New York, of course created a flutter in this city, both in spiritualistic, and other circles, and while the event will have no more deleterious effect than did the Report of the Seybert Commission on the movement, it will no doubt frighten the timid ones, and possibly affect the attendance at our meetings for a season; yet in the main it will stimulate greater investigation. The finding of an unsound brick in the spiritualistic edifice will not materially affect its solidity.

There is a great lesson to be learned from this late coup d'etat of the Foxes that Spiritualists everywhere will do well to heed; thousands throughout the country will throw up their hands and eyes in holy horror at the disloyalty of Margaret and Kate to their mediumship and the cause, failing to see their own—forgetting they have been doing privately for a long time what these original spirit mediums have lately done publicly. Spiritualists who stultify themselves constantly by hiding their Spiritualism behind church pulpits, and mediums—professional ones, at that—who send their children to "Orthodox" Sunday schools in lieu of Spiritual Lyceums, should be a little modest in the condemnation of others' apostasy.

Cleveland Secular Union.—The secularists of this city have arranged to hold their meetings in our hall (Memorial) every Sunday, 3 P. M.

Richings' Reception.—A large company assembled on Thursday evening (Oct. 25th) in the parlors of Helen Stuart-Richings, at Huron Terrace, to spend a social hour. Mrs. R. was at her best, and delighted the friends with her piquant Scotch vocalism and psychometric readings. E. Anne Hinman, the mental scientist, was present, and gave a brief talk on the method of mental cure.

"The Cleveland Institute of Phrenology and Psychology" has been recently organized and chartered by the State, with D. M. King of Mantua Station, Ohio, as President. THOS. LEES.

Spiritualistic Meetings in New York.

Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th Streets.—The People's Spiritual Meeting. Services every Sunday at 2¾ and 7¾ P. M. Mediums and speakers always present. Frank W. Jones, Conductor.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 2¾ and 7½ P.M. Reliable speakers and test mediums always present in spirit phenomenal gifts. Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn, Conductor.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7¾ P. M. Admission free.—Meeting for Spirit-Manifestations at 2¾ P. M.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham considered in the forenoon the following subjects selected by the audience: "The Principle of Friends (Quakers) and its Relation to Spiritualism." "Agitation the Beginning of Wisdom," "Man's Relation to the Solar System," "Put not off until To-morrow what can be Done To-Day," and "In Transfiguration does not the Law of Psychology play an Important part from the Spirit Side toward the the Sitters?" She also improvised four poems. Subjects: "The Sunflower," "The Tree of Life," "The Wild Aster," and "The Lord's Prayer."

In the evening the subject was, by request: "An Exposition of the Beauties of Spiritualism." The speaker remarked: Solomon says deliver us from the little Foxes that spoil the young and tender vines. Whatever has been "exposed" has been the false and hurtful—the parasite that had no part in the tree of truth. Spiritualism is not materialism, and those who stop at the open door of materialism hinder others from entering in. Investigate earnestly, honestly, patiently, and yet critically. The subjects for the evening poems were: "Hope," "Charity," "Voices of the Moonlight." Mrs. Brigham will speak in Brooklyn every Sunday in November. Mr. Lyman C. Howe will occupy the platform of the First Society during the month of November.

Henry J. Newton, Esq., opened the Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon by relating some of his varied experiences in the phenomena of Spiritualism, and commending the late progress made in spirit-telegraphy, reading as a text an article from last week's BANNER OF LIGHT entitled: "The Independent Telegraph Instrument." Mr. J. B. Gibbs, one of the shining lights of the temperance cause in New York City, gave his experience of how he became a believer in Spiritualism, brought about by manifestations in his own house during his recent severe sickness, and remarked that there was "no toe-joint business about it either," which remark called out much applause. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave a large number of fully recognized tests. Prof. Baldwin, of Chicago, will open the Meeting for Manifestations next Sunday afternoon, discussing "Scientific Spiritualism." S.

Chicago, Ill.—Charles Dawbarn has been lecturing in Chicago of late for the Young People's Progressive Society, in place of Mr. Morse. The society holds its meetings in Avenue Hall, afternoon and evening, and very good audiences are in attendance. Mr. Dawbarn is one of the most interesting lecturers we have yet listened to. Our meetings are all free to the public, no admission being charged.

Avenue Hall, 159 22d street. A. L. COVERDALE

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday was a most interesting one with the Spiritualist Association worshiping in Brittan Hall, made so by the presence of Mrs. Ada Foye of San Francisco. In the afternoon she answered questions which were presented by the audience, and in the evening gave platform tests.

Mrs. Foye was an entire stranger in this city, and met with audiences she had never before seen, containing a strong representation of the investigatory and perhaps skeptical element. To such the tests were largely given, and in a most satisfactory way. Although the evening was rainy the hall was densely packed, and the closest attention given to what was taking place. Names were written, as usual, on slips of paper, folded up and placed upon a table, and responses were obtained to a large number, giving names of spirits responding, with dates of death, and where burial took place, together with ages. In some instances these items of information were followed with interesting messages.

In every instance the spirits purporting to respond were recognized, and their statements acknowledged to be correct. Of those who received messages all but two or three were investigators, not acknowledged Spiritualists, and comparative strangers, who did not in the least hesitate to accept what was given as literally correct in every particular. It was a most remarkable manifestation of spirit presence and spirit power, and the most interesting phenomenal occasion which ever occurred in this city.

Next Sunday Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., will be here, whose speaking is of great importance as a mental phenomenon, it being entirely without preparation, and under spirit control of a high order.

The Spiritualists of this city are in great sorrow by the death of Mrs. Hattie P. Griffin, which took place in Bradford Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. She was expecting to make Mrs. Foye her guest during her stay here, but sickness prevented, and she was called to pass into the light of the spirit realm. Mrs. Griffin was an accomplished elocutionist and a gifted lady in that direction, whose efforts have often been enjoyed in the past by audiences of Boston Spiritualists.

Haverhill, Oct. 29th, 1888. E. P. H.

Albany, N. Y.—We still live and prosper, notwithstanding the efforts of our opponents to dislodge us from our impregnable position, which efforts, contrary to their intention and expectation, tend to bring the subject more prominently before the indifferent and unthinking portion of the public, not many of whom would give it more than a mere passing thought were it not placed before them as something that would annihilate all proof of an immortal life, and drive every believer in Spiritualism back into the ranks of the materialistic popular religions of the day.

Our Society is meeting with excellent success, and the meetings are well attended by thinking, intelligent people. Dr. Charles T. Buffum occupied the platform during the month of October, and has more than met our anticipations. We are so well pleased with his lectures, singing, and especially his tests, that we have engaged him for a month next spring.

Mr. Edgar W. Emerson lectured and gave tests Oct. 19th and 26th, and gave good satisfaction; some of the tests he gave from the platform were remarkable for their accuracy of detail.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham lectured Friday evening, Oct. 26th, to a large audience, and every word was listened to with close attention. The subject was "The Difference Between the Orthodox and Spiritual Religions." Mr. Edgar W. Emerson followed with excellent tests, and Dr. C. T. Buffum sang "Only a Thin Veil Between us," with guitar accompaniment.

Mr. Frank T. Ripley will occupy our platform during the month of November, and Mrs. E. Cutler during December.

The Ladies' Aid Society is a great assistance to us in many ways, by getting up entertainments, socials, etc. It is preparing for a Fair to be held Dec. 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th, from which it is hoped to add about five hundred dollars to its treasury.

J. D. CHISM, JR.,
Sec'y First Spiritual Society of Albany, N. Y.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—This is a city of churches, the Presbyterian largely predominating, but Spiritualism has a foothold and the society of Spiritualists is growing in a remarkable manner. Its hall, though spacious, is not half large enough to contain the crowds that come to listen to the lectures and proofs given of a life beyond this, and numbers are forced to leave for want even of standing-room. Some of the best lecturers and mediums have been engaged for the present season. The President, Mr. McElroy, is an efficient and earnest worker, and is ably seconded by the Vice President, Mr. Stevens, who works and talks Spiritualism every day. Both are solid business men, and command the respect of all who know them. The members seem to work harmoniously together and are deserving of praise for what they have accomplished. Mrs. A. M. Glading opened the season and occupied the platform during the month of September, Frank T. Ripley the present month, and in November Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates; Mr. Edgar W. Emerson and C. Fannie Allyn come later. We have been favored, also, with the inspirational lectures of Mrs. Ella M. Stevens, wife of the Vice President. She is entitled to much praise, and only needs to be heard to be appreciated. Societies in Western Pennsylvania and elsewhere should keep her employed in the work she is eminently fitted to be engaged in. There are other good workers in the society I would like to mention, but want of space forbids. The Secretary, Mr. Lohmyer, is ever ready to do all that he can for the good of humanity, and Mr. Gordon is always willing to give time and money for the cause. Thus may we continue to labor until, in the fullness of time, truth and deeds, not falsehood and creeds, shall prevail.

S. WHEELER.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—J. Clegg Wright closed a successful engagement before the First Spiritualist Society of this city Oct. 28th. His utterances have been well calculated to instruct thinking minds, dealing at all times with the principles underlying and governing the laws of life and being. The subjects for the closing lectures were, at 2 P. M., "Some Speculations of Men on the Origin of All Things"; at 7 P. M., "The Persistency of Life an Argument for Universal Progress." The elucidation gave a scientific contrast between the speculations of the past and the experimental facts of the present day. At the close of the evening lecture the following testimonial was unanimously passed by a rising vote:

Testimonial

In behalf of Truth, Justice and Progress: We feel that our duty is not complete until we give expression of our heartfelt thanks to our friend and brother, J. Clegg Wright, for the noble work accomplished by him during his engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of this city, just terminating. We recognize in him a gentleman, a scholar, and a teacher of ability—fearless in the defense and dissemination of facts pertaining to the great problems of Modern Spiritualism.

In parting, we bid him God-speed in the good work he is so ably performing, and trust the day is not far distant when we may again have the privilege of listening to him before this Society.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan will occupy the same platform next Sunday, Nov. 4th. W. W. CURRIER.

Bridgeport, Ct.—J. Frank Baxter on Sunday, Oct. 28th, gave his closing lectures in this place. His addresses and accompanying exercises of songs and spirit tests have been very attractive, and large audiences have been the result. Earnest and honest, positive and magnetic as Mr. Baxter is, a grand impression has been made, acknowledged not alone by his auditors but by the press of the city as well. Last Sunday afternoon he spoke on: "The Ethics of Virtue." In the evening his subject was: "The Revivals of Spiritualism—the Causes leading thereto and their Results." Abstracts or a synopsis would fail of justice, did space permit, so no attempt can be made. The séance of last Sunday evening was a marked one, the delineations being particularly fine. In this connection let it be said, never have séances been more appreciated in Bridgeport than have those of Mr. Baxter. COM.

Willimantic, Ct.—Dr. George A. Fuller occupied our platform the first two Sundays of October and gave universal satisfaction. He should be kept busy in the noble work he has undertaken.——The last two Sundays we have listened to the inspired thought of Bro. Lyman C. Howe, and it has been a spiritual feast for our best thinkers. Logically he handles the subject presented by the audience and closes with a poem which is a wonder in itself. Long life to Bro. Howe.——J. William Fletcher will be with us the next two Sundays and will give his illustrated lecture after the second Sunday. Mr. Fletcher has been with us before, and always draws a full house.

Newburyport, Mass.—Miss Josephine Webster, of Chelsea, Mass., lectured, sang and gave tests before the First Spiritualist Society of Newburyport on Sunday last. She was listened to with close attention, and gave much satisfaction as an earnest and able expounder of the Spiritual Philosophy. The well-known test medium, Mrs. E. A. Cunningham, of Boston, will be with us next Sunday.

Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant last Wednesday evening gave psychometric readings. Mrs. Colby-Luther is expected here two week-evenings during December; dates to be announced shortly. F. H. F.

Stoneham, Mass.—On the evening of Oct. 25th the Stoneham Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society engaged the services of Mrs. Ada Foye, who came accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Lillie. The evening exercises commenced with a song by Mr. Lillie and wife, after which Mrs. Foye gave many remarkable and satisfactory tests. After the name of a spirit was given the friends present would ask the age at the time of passing out, also the cause. I think all present were satisfied. Interesting remarks were made by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Mrs. M. S. Wood, C. Fannie Allyn and the Rev. E. B. Fairchild. SARAH G. BARRETT.

Stafford, Conn.—Prof. W. F. Peck closed the fall meetings of this Society, speaking on the last two Sundays of October, and giving four very fine discourses. This was Mr. Peck's fourth visit to Stafford, and our people like him very much. ***

The Late "Expose" in New York City.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A tour of the New York and Brooklyn spiritual meetings, following the "toe-joint" exposé of a week ago by Maggie Fox at the Academy in the former city, reveals the opinion of our own people to be about as follows:

In the morning, at Conservatory Hall, Brooklyn, F. F. Cook spoke upon "Spiritualism a Vitalizing Power." He said the printer, in the announcement, had made his subject read visiting in place of vitalizing, and that in the future he should use the term more, as it really was quite applicable, because Spiritualism visited us in our homes without seeking for it—it came to us of its own accord. In regard to the doings of Mrs. Fox-Kane, he said that if she claimed she was untruthful in the early days of her mediumship, what good reason had we to believe her now in this latter declaration?

He came into the cause a rank materialist; the phenomena led him to believe again in another life beyond this through a faith of reason; but to-day, even if the phenomena were all swept away, and the prop it gave the cause removed, he would still be firm in his belief—still true to his faith—because his growth had passed from a mental to a spiritual one, and his convictions were now of the spirit itself. He seemed to judge the event as necessary in the divine plan—in the evolution of the movement from the spirit side.

His ideas, drawn from his own experience, could not help but meet with an answering sentiment in the hearts of all advanced Spiritualists who heard him.

In the afternoon at Adelphi Hall in New York, the sentiment seemed to be that the so-called exposure did the Cause no harm, but, on the contrary, gave it wider publicity among all classes through the press.

At Mr. Jones's afternoon conference, Mr. Jeaneret spoke of the weak character of the would-be defamer of the Cause she had served so long; spoke of how little it could really injure an established movement like our own; and urged strongly on the part of all mediums a discrimination as regards doing all that is asked of them, unless some good and wise reason is given them for it.

Let all honest mediums continue in well doing; and let those who are weak and tempted by the almighty dollar and the need of it, try to imitate the stronger ones, and so help on the moral status of the Cause.

W. J. CUSHING.

WORCESTER.—Mary J. Weatherbee writes: "There is something to my mind beautifully touching in the reply made by Mrs. Stowe, when, upon an introduction, the gentleman said: 'Have I the honor to meet the author of that famous book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin"?' 'Yes,' she replied, 'I wrote the book, but God dictated it.' Very beautiful now, when through age and feebleness her hand has lost its cunning and she must rest, that she can say: 'Call it not mine, but a higher intelligence working through me.' It is recorded that when Daniel had revealed unto the king his dream, the king prostrated himself as if to worship him; but Daniel said: 'This secret is not revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more than any living,' practically saying: 'Some higher intelligence has spoken through me; give me not the praise.' He acknowledged he had no more wisdom than the learned men of the realm, yet he read the strange characters upon the wall, and told the king that the most high God was displeased with him for his haughtiness, and that his kingdom was to be given to another.

We naturally wonder that Daniel could have had the courage to give this testimony; yet though he had everything to fear, he spake fearlessly. The parallelism between this and Mrs. Stowe's reproval of one of our great national sins, is very striking. She dared to read the will of the Most High concerning it, and undertook the hazardous work of setting forth the wickedness of the system and the judgments that would come upon the offenders. She had quite as much to fear as the prophet Daniel, for nations as individuals are not willing to be reminded of their faults, yet she went forward with no misgiving as to the success of the message she had undertaken to deliver. Long after her books had been scattered broadcast, and the whole world seemed to have divided itself into friends and foes, she held the even tenor of her ways, as if to say: 'The Lord is on my side, how then shall I be afraid?' As she herself said, 'The object of these sketches is to awaken sympathy and feeling for the African race as they exist among us; to show their wrongs and sorrows under a system necessarily cruel and unjust.' She makes no cumpromise, but proposes to tell some of these evils, 'since not the half could be told of the unspeakable whole.' Who can doubt that the very inception of such a plot was the work of some superior influence?

Any other individual might have said: 'If such a work must be done, let some other one undertake it rather than I be subjected to bitter partisan hatred.' In Mrs. Stowe's mind there were no such misgivings. Does not this verify the statement, 'The angel of the Lord encampeth around them that fear him, to deliver them'? No great error was ever fought against without indomitable heroism. A brave heart, such as comes not from any expectation of worldly aggrandizement; a courage that can only come from consciousness that one is doing God's holy will—such was the inspiration that led the Maid of Orleans; that led Martin Luther in his defense of religious liberty, and has sustained every defender of a righteous cause. Let us all ever bear in mind that the divine possibilities are the same yesterday, to-day and forever, whether we understand and believe them or otherwise."

LOWELL.—"A. H." writes: "The spirit moves me to give a few words commendatory of a discourse delivered here by Dr. Dean Clarke on the 21st ult., in Grand Army Hall, under the purported control of Spirit William Lloyd Garrison. I am not a 'Spiritualist,' but I believe there is no excuse for spiritual ignorance in this enlightened age; and those who ignore the opportunities for enlightenment are those whose especial desire is to be 'rooted and grounded' in the old ruts. The discourse alluded to was one I wish everybody could have heard. It was a refined, lofty and eloquent setting forth of man's duty to himself, in developing the power within him, and his privilege of attaining to and living on a high plane of existence. It was elevating and instructive, and would have honored any church-pulpit; there was no word to conflict with any pet creed, or that would not assimilate with the pure and holy teachings of Christ. But one thing troubles my conscience: to whom shall the credit be given—Wm. Lloyd Garrison or Dr. Dean Clarke? Who ever thinks of thanking the organ for the music it furnishes? the manipulater of the keys gets all the praise. And yet the instrument, after all, must in a great measure determine the quality of the music evolved. So credit must be justly due one who has arrived, through tortuous ways of suffering and self-sacrifice often, to get into such a condition of mind as to come en rapport with highly advanced spirits who are emancipated from the flesh. It seems that one must be in an exalted state of mind to allow such a flow of good and beautiful thoughts from whatever source, whether from the spirit within one's self or from a spirit without."

WORCESTER.—Thomas W. Sutton writes: "On Wednesday, 24th ult., a large number of ladies and gentlemen—members and friends of the Worcester Association of Spiritualists—who have become deeply interested in Miss Jennie B. Hagan, through her able and beautiful ministrations upon our rostrum, and from her endearing qualities in social life, visited her at her home on Irving street, South Framingham, by special invitation, the occasion being an informal celebration of the first anniversary of their occupancy of the new and beautiful house which herself and her mother have caused to be erected for themselves.

The mortal who crosses the threshold of that home realizes very speedily that he or she has entered into a harmonious, heavenly and spiritual atmosphere—so it was at least with those of us who were fortunate enough to be present on this occasion, and we were loth to leave when the hour of 11:30 announced the approach of the train to convey us on our homeward journey.

The exercises of the evening were of an interesting and spiritually profitable nature. Jennie and her good mother provided a bountiful supper for all, and after an hour spent in social intercourse, Mr. Woodbury C. Smith, President of our Association, opened the exercises of the evening in a few well-chosen and appropriate remarks, closing by introducing Dr. A. H. Richardson, of Boston, as Master of Ceremonies.

Dr. Richardson spoke of his long acquaintance with Miss Hagan and of her value as an instrument for spirit communications, also of the great pleasure it afforded him to be present and assist in celebrating the anniversary of the opening of this earthly home of the spirit-world.

Brief remarks appropriate to the occasion were made by Mrs. Helen E. Smith, Mr. Ivers Gibbs, T. R. Johnson, Thos. W. Sutton, Edgar P. Howe, E. H. Hammond, Mrs. J. E. Fisher, Mrs. Hastings, Mrs. Dr. Prentiss, Robert Fisher and others of the Worcester friends, after which Miss Hagan, under control of that bright little spirit, "Boy White," entertained the company with a very witty recitation.

The evening was enlivened by solos and duets on banjo, violin and harmonica, by Mr. Joseph Reynolds and Miss Alice Reynolds, of Worcester, and humorous dialectical readings by Mr. Sutton.

Dr. Richardson being obliged to leave at an early hour on his return to Boston, Miss Hagan improvised a most beautiful poem upon the subjects: 'The House-Warming.' 'Home,' 'Mother'—subjects given by those present—after which Dr. Richardson spoke in an able manner of the truth and beauty of the Spiritual Philosophy, impressing upon all the duty of embodying in their daily lives the knowledge that had come to them. Many of those present met Dr. Richardson for the first time on this occasion; they were well pleased with him, and hope for a more intimate acquaintance in the near future.

The balance of the evening was occupied with music on the organ and singing; many tests of spirit-presence were given by 'Blue Flower,' the Indian control of Mrs. Parker of Worcester. Friends were present from surrounding towns; among them we noticed Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Metcalf of Holliston, Mrs. Sullivan Jones of Milford, Mr. Gardner Phipps and mother of South Framingham. All were united in the expression of the one sentiment: 'We have had a splendid time!'

Miss Hagan closed a very successful engagement with us on Sunday, 28th ult. We are sorry to learn that we cannot secure her services again before 1890, but we must not murmur, for what is our loss is the gain of others. To societies and friends who have heard Miss Hagan it is unnecessary for me to say a word, but to those who have not I would say, engage her at your earliest opportunity, and I am certain you will want her again."

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—"Medium" writes, Oct. 28th: "The invitation to an informal reception at the temporary residence of Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings, in this city, last Thursday, was responded to by a large number of Spiritualists and investigators. Among them we noted Dr. and Mrs. Sapp, Miss Anne Hinman, Thos. Lees, H. S. Davis, Mrs. Hawley and Mrs. Combs.

A delightful evening was spent in conversation, vocal music, psychometric readings, and recitations. An animated but wholly friendly discussion took place between Miss Hinman and Dr. Sapp, in re Christian Science, Miss H. being a strong advocate of the mind-cure theory. Space will not admit of the report of pros and cons, but the general opinion was that between such opponents an effort to reach a conclusion was hopeless.

Mrs. Richings favored the company with several Scotch ballads, among them 'Caller Herrin',' sung as only a Scotch lassie can sing it. Mrs. Comb's quaint Indian guide, 'Kanaka,' entertained all with her cute ways and sayings. From the moment of taking control of her medium until that of retiring she keeps up the motions of grinding corn, at the same time chatting away with simplicity, wisdom and wit curiously blended. Little Ameda Welch contributed a recitation in a graceful, child-like way.

The brightly-lit parlors were well filled, and not over-crowded; and flowers and trailing vines graced piano, tables and mantel. Mrs. Richings, among her many accomplishments, possesses that of the true hostess, the rare and gracious faculty of drawing others out, and putting every one about her at ease. We shall not soon forget her stay in Cleveland, and only regret that it must be so short. May she be blessed wherever she goes."

TOLEDO.—W. M. Smith, Secretary of the First Alliance of Progressive Thought, writes: "We have had the pleasure the past few weeks of listening to a series of interesting and instructive lectures through the mediumship of D. A. Herrick of Jamestown, N. Y., trance speaker, physical medium, and independent slate-writer. Mr. Herrick has given good satisfaction as a speaker, and been very successful in his séances on week evenings. He has, in connection with J. B. Jonson of this city, a fine physical and cabinet medium, held séances, interesting and instructive to Spiritualists and investigators. At their dark circles they sit around the table joining hands with the sitters. Almost as soon as the lights are extinguished, different instruments are played upon and floated about the room, voices of spirit-friends are heard speaking through the trumpets, messages are written (paper and pencils being placed upon the table) and put in the hands or pockets of those for whom they are intended. I have several times received communications from one who was very dear to me when in earth-life, and consider it my duty to heartily recommend Messrs. Herrick and Jonson as honest and conscientious mediums, and valuable exponents of the philosophy of Spiritualism."

Vermont.

LYNDONVILLE.—A correspondent writes Oct. 27th: "In a lecture last evening at St. Johnsbury, Vt., the Rev. James M. Buckley, D. D., LL.D., of New York, defined Spiritualism as 'Infidelity with a ghost in it.' A short time since I clipped the following from a Boston daily paper:

'The strong testimony of Rev. Dr. Hale to the verity of Modern Spiritualism has been referred to. Now comes Rev. Joseph White, of Janesville, Wis., and in an essay before the Wisconsin Conference of Unitarians—an essay remarkable for compact logic and literary symmetry—says: "When its conceptions have been clarified, its methods purified, and its pretensions graced with modesty, I find nothing unreasonable in the main tenet of Modern Spiritualism. If there is a spiritual universe around us, as the evolutionary process goes on, and man ascends toward that universe, must not the day come, sooner or later, when these two worlds shall meet upon their outer edges, and slowly overlap? May not that day be darkly dawning?"'

Here we have the utterances of a 'ghostophobic' bigot, who refuses to read the signs of the times, contrasted with those of a scholar who perceives the inevitable, and is willing to acknowledge the sight. People whose method of thought finds a basis in knowledge in this particular, will not be slow to discover which of these reverends is in the right."

Oregon.

PORTLAND.—Morris S. Liden writes: "I now hail you from the Pacific Slope, reaching Portland Oct. 12th. There are three societies here, two in Portland proper, and one in East Portland. The First Society of Portland is an old established fact, and the East Portland Society in point of numbers well established. Col. Reed, in the largeness of his heart, has been holding free meetings in a hall under his charge, and they have been well attended. Thursday, Oct. 25th, the people present at a Fact Meeting decided to organize a new Society, and a committee on organization, etc., was chosen, Col. Reed in the chair. Dr. Louis Schlenenger is doing good work here as a test medium."

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—A correspondent writes: "At the Progressive Spiritualists' meeting on the afternoon of Oct. 28th, Dr. Lawrence gave the opening address. He was followed by F. S. Lambert, Dr. J. Williams, Mr. Deming, H. B. Philbrook, Dr. Nathan J. Morris and Mrs. J. Billop-Hugo. Mrs. Lena Fox gave several written spirit messages; Mr. Lambert recognized one as from his father, who forty years ago passed to spirit-life. Prof. Van Horn gave seventy-five or eighty tests; nearly all recognized. At the 8 P. M. meeting, H. B. Philbrook spoke, and many tests were given by the Conductor."

San Bernardino, Cal., Camp-Meeting.

Our meeting moves along in the even tenor of its way. Harmony prevails. The weather is all that can be wished. Flowers, grapes, figs, almonds, and other fruits, are abundant in this delightful, semi-tropical climate. The interest in the meetings still continues. Although not of large attendance, they are well patronized, and many are receiving the light of the Spiritual Philosophy and its phenomena who never had the opportunity before.

The Southern California Camp-Meeting has become a permanent organization, and has elected the following officers: President, Dr. T. B. Taylor, of Los Angeles; Vice-Presidents, William Heaps, Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke, Mrs. Mary Carter, of San Bernardino; Dr. J. R. Nickless, of New York; Dr. H. W. Gould, of San Diego; Dr. Boyd, of Passadena; Dr. L. L. Moore, of Lemoor; Secretary, Mrs. M. E. Taylor, of Los Angeles; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Ella Wilson, of Santa Ana; Treasurer, Charles Ehrenfeld, Esq., of Los Angeles.

The headquarters of the Association will be until further notice at No. 37 South 4th street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Monday, Oct. 15th, evening services. Invocation. Mrs. E. E. R. Nickless, poem by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke, lecture by G. W. Featherstone, of New Mexico, formerly pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, Falls County, Texas. The speaker gave an account of his leaving the ministerial work, remarking that he embraced Spiritualism because it taught that the only way to righteousness was by doing good for the sake of good.

Remarks were made by Mrs. E. R. Nickless (under control), William Heaps and J. V. Mansfield.

Tuesday, Oct. 16th.—Afternoon.—Conference. Remarks by Dr. T. B. Taylor, Mrs E. P. Thorndyke, Mrs. E. A. Hammatt and Mrs. Nickless. Evening. Opening song by the choir. Poem, "Progress," read by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke. Remarks by Dr. Taylor, J. V. Mansfield, Mrs. Mary Carter. "Sunflower," the messenger spirit of Mrs. Nickless, made many sorrowing hearts happy by giving them descriptions and messages from their dear ones who were present but could not be seen.

Wednesday, 17th.—Afternoon.—Facts Meeting. Invocation by controls of Mrs. Nickless. Dr. Taylor stated the objects of the meeting. Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, of Encinitas, related her experience as a medium.

Mrs. A. Rush, of Los Angeles, gave an account of spirit pictures appearing on the windows of the house she occupied. Thousands of persons came to witness this phenomenon. The St. Louis, Mo., and Cincinnati, O., press sent representatives to investigate. Other facts were related by Dr. J. R. Nickless, Mrs. Ella Wilson, Willy Libby and Mrs. Thorndyke.

Evening, lecture by controls of Mrs. Nickless, subject: "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." "This was the Mosaic teaching. A new light was brought into the world by the teacher Jesus. He taught: 'Love ye one another!' 'Love your enemies.' Your teachers of the church have been preaching the word of the New Testament Dispensation and practicing the letter of the Old. If a man takes the life of his brother his life is taken to pay the debt, thus repaying one murder by committing another. This was not the teaching of Christ, who tried to save mankind and make the world better. For all our sins retribution must follow. None can bear another's burdens. We must work out our own salvation." Many recognized tests were given by Mrs. Nickless, mostly to skeptics.

Thursday, 18th.—Afternoon.—The magnetic healers gave free treatment for one hour. Twenty-two persons came upon the platform for treatment. Several reported themselves well; others much relieved, and the remainder felt a powerful influence. The healers who officiated were T. B. Taylor, Mrs. M. E. Taylor, J. P. James, Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, J. R. Nickless and Mr. J. Tilly. Mrs. Dr. Taylor narrated a remarkable cure of herself from using magnetic paper.

Evening.—Lecture by Moses Martin, Esq., of San Bernardino. Subject, "Formation and Dissolution." The lecture was very instructive and interesting, and showed much research and study.

Friday, 19th. — Afternoon. — Facts Meeting. Song, "When the Mists Have Rolled Away." Original poem, "Raindrops," by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt. Dr. J. R. Nickless opened the meeting, giving a number of interesting facts that had come under his personal observation. Facts were related by Dr. Taylor, Wm. Heaps, Mrs. Nickless, Mrs. Ella Wilson, J. D. Potter, Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke, E. A. Bonnie of Passadena, and Robert Jenkinson of Hanaford.

Evening.—Dr. Taylor lectured; subject, "Christian Science." J. V. Mansfield related a reminiscence of early Spiritualism, and an account of witnessing a remarkable cure of blindness and cancer by Dr. J. R. Newton many years ago in Cincinnati.

Saturday, 20th.—Afternoon.—Facts Meeting. Dr. Taylor gave an account of attending one of Mrs. Hardy's séances, in Boston, when materialized hands of all sizes came through an aperture in the centre of the table. Facts were related by Mrs. Mary Carter of San Bernardino; Mr. J. Tilly of Los Angeles; Mr. W. Libby of Pomonia; Mrs. Ella Wilson, and others.

Evening.—Remarks were made by Moses Martin, Mrs. Nickless and Dr. Taylor on causes producing unreliable communications through mediums.

J. V. Mansfield, William Heaps and Mrs. E. A. Hammatt also addressed the meeting. Mrs. Nickless gave descriptions of thirty-nine spirits, all of which were recognized by their friends.

Sunday, 21st.—In the morning Dr. Taylor addressed the people; in the afternoon a poem was read by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke; and a guitar solo was rendered by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt—the lecture being by Mrs. Ella Wilson. The speaker made a very strong appeal for liberalism on our spiritual platform.

In the evening, after singing by Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless (under control), she offered an invocation; a guitar solo was then given by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, and Mrs. Nickless (entranced), addressed the audience. After remarking upon the various conditions of mind among her hearers in reference to a future life, she reverted in eloquent manner to the benefit brought to all who would receive them by the cheering revelations of Modern Spiritualism concerning the naturalness of that state of being, and the nearness of its relations with the present life: "When earth's children realize that the few years of earth-life are but a speck when compared with eternity, they will awaken to the realization that there is something else required of them than a mere satisfaction of earthly appetites and ambition. They will not grasp everything from their brother; they will help all humanity." It was a very able discourse, and held the people spellbound to the end. After the lecture Mrs. Nickless described thirty departed ones—all but three of whom were recognized.

Further remarks were made by J. V. Mansfield and William Heaps.

BARS AND THRESHOLDS.

Written Especially for the Banner of Light,

BY MRS. EMMA MINER.

CHAPTER XI—CONTINUED.

Left alone, Dr. Packard again took up some of the papers. He pondered over the message in which allusion was made to himself.

"This is surprising! No one knew of this fact. He could not have told or written Brooks or anybody else, for this occurred while we were in Germany, and he died suddenly that very day. I cannot understand it!" Dr. Packard was unconsciously speaking aloud in his excitement. "I really should like to inquire into it, but, to tell the truth, I am afraid to! Poor Brooks! He will be ostracised. His old friends will cut him, and those who do n't will tolerate him as an idiot or lunatic. Well! well! I must put these aside for to-day," and he laid them carefully in a drawer.

Mr. Brooks sat in his room a little while and thought over the scene at Dr. Packard's. He felt much easier, now that he had been given opportunity to speak of the change in himself. Then he went over to Dr. Carroll's. He told Mrs. Carroll of his interview with Dr. Packard.

"I think he was as much astonished as I was when I received my first message. He really feels bad for me. Of course, he thinks I am deluded. I have left all my messages for him to read at his leisure. I hope they may make some impression on him."

"Do you think he is one who will be likely to make investigation?"

"Well, I should n't like to misjudge him, but I think not. He is quite elderly, and well anchored in his views. Another thing: if he had a prospect of years before him, as I have, and strength with which to battle his way, it might be different. No, I do n't think he will have anything to do with it; but I think I can count on his continued friendship. My father and he were intimate friends."

There were tears in Mrs. Carroll's eyes, as she replied:

"I shall always respect you for the sacrifice you are making."

"I do not feel that I am making a sacrifice. I can ask nothing better than that my life may be given to teaching these truths of immortality."

"I hope many friends will be found to sustain you."

"I shall never cease to be grateful that I formed an acquaintance with your family. You will have my mother's blessing as well as my own."

The next day Mr. Brooks went out to Roseville. It was early, but the morning work was already disposed of and Doris was busily sewing. He carried some flowers and some morning papers.

Of the flowers Doris was very glad. Of the papers, she could only look at them wistfully, for she must not lay aside her needle.

"Grandma would n't let me read many of the daily papers," said Doris, "and when I did get one, there was so much cut out that my curiosity was so aroused it quite spoiled the pleasure of what I did read."

"What was left you?"

"Oh! the politics, the finance, the Christian Association, church affairs, deaths, and so forth," and she smiled at the recollection.

"Hum! quite interesting! And so the table gossip, current items, love scenes and divorce cases were tabooed? Well, perhaps you did n't lose very much, after all. But did n't she let you read Dickens, or Longfellow, or any of those books?"

"No, indeed! I remember seeing a paper at Mrs. Carroll's, giving a description of a Dickens Carnival, and I could not understand it at all. Somehow I felt I ought to know all about it."

"It really would be a great pleasure and profit too. Dickens is one of my best friends. I am never dull or lonely with his books near me."

Then, as if a thought occurred to him, he said:

"I suppose Miss Parker has taken charge of you now, Doris?"

"Yes; I 'm here to answer that question for myself," said she, coming in in time to hear it. "Doris must do as I say now;" but the pleasant face smiling at Doris so kindly did not promise it to be a hard task.

"Then I am going to ask a favor of you. May I bring over some books for Doris, such as I think will be really interesting and proper for her?"

"Yes, indeed, and thank you too." She looked at Mr. Brooks keenly. "I believe that Doris may read anything you will read, so you see I trust you a good deal."

"Thank you for that. I shall certainly inflict myself upon you often with my books. Only if I come when it is not convenient for you to listen, you must send me away."

"Doris and I have to be very busy, but I trust we shall always find time for a friend."

"At present I am quite at leisure. Dr. Packard has returned, and the charge of the church no longer devolves upon me, so it leaves me quite free. Nevertheless, I must look about for some good, permanent employment. A poor man like myself cannot live without work. As the ministry is out of the question, I must earn my bread and butter some other way. I confess I am a little anxious. I do n't expect many of my old friends to stand by me now."

"Dr. Carroll will be one good friend to you, at any rate, and here he comes now to tell you so," said Doris, as Dr. Carroll drove up to the piazza. A shade passed over his face for a moment.

"Dr. Carroll comes to see grandma now that Dr. Placent is sick," said she, as if explaining why Dr. Carroll should call.

Mr. Brooks's face brightened, and still more as Dr. Carroll gave him a hearty grasp of the hand.

"Well, Brooks, so you have been 'bearding the lion in his den'? eh! Mother has been telling me about it. I admire your pluck. Wonder what the venerable doctor will say of all those angelic letters? A pretty strong dose, was n't it?"

"Rather. I tried to be easy at first; but you know how it is—the whole or none, and the least is surprising. But he was really very considerate, considering the cause. I expected he would call me an idiot, but he kindly contented himself with only thinking it."

"Well, I have got past minding it. I am willing that folks should call me an idiot, or crazy, if they want to. It does n't alter the facts of the case, and I am happy." He certainly looked happy. "I think the way will open for you soon. I have a plan in my head which I will talk over with you when I can get an hour. Now for Mrs. Mason," and he started for the invalid's room.

Mr. Brooks had come in to Roseville by the train, but he rode out with Dr. Carroll. Then they discussed plans for the future.

"I have no doubt you can make engagements to lecture. I know several gentlemen of influence, and if you will consent to go on the platform I am sure you will be fully employed. I think you had better try it."

"I shall be very grateful, then. Perhaps I had better think of it."

Mr. Brooks's mind was occupied with this thought as he returned to his hotel.

CHAPTER XII.

ONE COMES, ANOTHER GOES.

The days passed into weeks, and Doris had received no reply to her letter to Morris.

"Auntie, if I do not hear to-day I shall think he has left Rathburn. Oh! if I only knew! Do you suppose if Lydia could come out she could write us anything about him?"

"Perhaps you and I can find out something. We will take the time, at any rate. It is in a good cause."

The little table was brought, and Doris laid her thin, white hands upon it. In a moment it began to tip, and raps sounded upon it.

"Is Morris in Rathburn?"

"No."

"Where is he?"

Doris began the alphabet, speaking the letters very slowly. The answer was "Jacksonville, Florida."

Then came another message. "I want Lydia."

"We must send for her next time Dr. Carroll comes out, Doris. I feel there is something she wants to say that she can write better."

When Dr. Carroll came out, they were glad to see Lydia with him. She had come to spend the day. As soon as they were quiet Lydia wrote:

"Morris is in Jacksonville, Florida. He is quite ill. He will recover. Write him to come home. I wish some one could go to him, for he is among strangers. Mary Stuart."

They were still talking over this message when Mr. Brooks arrived.

"Are you willing I should go to him, Doris? I am a stranger, of course, but I should come from his friends. He looked anxiously toward Miss Parker.

"You are very good to offer, but we could not even pay your expenses. I am sorry."

"But, my dear madam, I am amply able to do it myself. And I should like the trip, to say nothing of the good which might possibly come to Morris."

Doris waited with eager face.

"Oh! if you only would go! I should feel so easy and safe about him then!"

"Then I will go at once—to-morrow. Now write your letters, make your plans, and I will come out this evening for your instructions."

They were grateful souls that Mr. Brooks left behind him as he went back to his hotel.

Mr. Brooks was sacrificing something besides time and money in going to Florida. He realized that he was leaving a clear field to a rival for whom Doris had much respect and affection. If he had been at all selfish he would have remained at home. But Doris and her happiness were dear to him. He would try to find Morris and bring him home.

"Now that Mr. Brooks is gone," said Doris, "we shall miss his readings. He reads so well, and I have been so much interested in his books." She glanced toward a table where "David Copperfield" was lying, a book she had enjoyed immensely. Longfellow and Whittier were there, also. She could find time for a few lines as she sat at her sewing. These books

THE GIFTS OF SPIRITUALISM.

BY JAMES M. ROGERS.

It plants within the human soul
  Truths that shall flourish all our lives;
Though suns may fade—stars cease to roll,
  Yet man, immortal, still survives.
It teaches earth is but the round
  That lowest in life's ladder stands;
That onward, upward e'er are found
  Diviner skies—sublimer lands.
It brings no doubts, it leaves no chance,
  No unled step, no blinded fate:
Sure as the morn night will enhance,
  Follow the raptures that await.
As flowers unfold, as forests grow,
  As age succeeds to callow youth,
The deep'ning tides forever flow,
  Of science, rapture, glory, truth.

It opens wide the golden gates
  That bar our way to sunny lands,
And shows each loving one that waits
  With longing heart and outstretched hands
Of welcome to a happier home,
  Across that threshold, thick with flowers;
No more through desert wastes to roam,
  But joy and bloom—love-lighted hours!
'Round like an ocean ever lies
  The life, the light, the force divine;
The splendors of celestial skies
  In fragrance breathe, in glories shine,
While music, such as poet hears
  When twilight clothes his soul in dreams,
Flows wave on wave o'er raptured ears,
  Transcending all earth's shallow schemes.

THE SCIENCE OF IMMORTALITY.

A Lecture by

W. F. PECK,

Delivered at Cassadaga Lake Camp-Meeting, Aug. 11th, 1888.

"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Discontent is doubtless the most universally common characteristic of the human family. Man is never contented, never satisfied; he longs constantly for something he does not possess, for something which he imagines will add to his stock of happiness and make his path in life smoother and more agreeable. He longs for wealth, position, fame and power; and, in striving after them, he pauses at no sacrifice, however great, in order to accomplish his object. Millions of human lives have been destroyed, millions of happy homes have been desolated, and rivers of human blood have flowed, in order that he might gratify this most insatiable thirst for wealth and power. Yet greatly as he desires temporal things and earthly advantages, great as is his ambition to encompass all that is supposed to make life agreeable and happy, there is one longing, one desire that takes precedence of all others; an aspiration beside which all other aspirations pale into utter insignificance; a longing that towers mountain high above the pigmy desires for earthly advantages. This overwhelming aspiration of the human heart is fitly set forth in the question with which I begin my discourse:

"If a man die, shall he live again?" A question which, though attributed especially to Job, was asked by thousands of inquiring lips long before Job saw the light of day; has welled up from millions of human hearts since, and will continue to be asked for ages yet to come, or until the doubt therein implied gives place to positive knowledge.

From time immemorial man has looked upon death as the "king of terrors," the last, greatest, and most terrible and implacable enemy with which he has to contend. He pictures him as an insatiable monster, constantly dogging his footsteps with murderous daggers uplifted, hungry for his life; or at every step and every turn barring his way, and with clammy arms outstretched, striving to fold him in its cold embrace. In the language of the poet, apostrophizing death:

"He saw, where'er he went,
Whatever path in life he trod,
Thy goblin form before him stand,
Like trusty old assassin; in his aim
Steady and sure as eye of destiny."

Do what he would, the spectre would not be banished. In the busy marts of trade and industry, in the quiet household, in the festal throng, in his houses of worship, ay, even at the bridal altar, this haunting demon shed its malign influence, and cast its black shadow over the sunshine of his life. This fear of death naturally produced a corresponding love of life, and we find that man has constantly taxed his inventive faculty to its uttermost in order to devise means whereby this enemy might be baffled, and his own life prolonged. Hence, when the early alchemists, experimenting in their laboratories, discovered alcohol, they were so delighted with its wonderfully stimulating effects upon the human body, that, believing they had discovered the elixir of life, they called it "aqua vitæ," or water of life, thinking that its use would have the effect of prolonging existence perhaps forever. Had they been able to peer into the future, could they but have gazed down the stream of time, and observed the thousands on thousands of shattered wrecks of manhood strewn along its shores; could they have seen the ruined families, broken hearts and desolated homes, all resulting from this discovery, they would undoubtedly have named it "aqua mortis," water of death. But the future opened not its doors: the curse of intemperance rolled not its dread pageant of horrors in panorama before their vision, and they, in ignorant rapture, bowed them down before this newly-discovered imp of perdition. In the early history of the American continent, it is chronicled that Ponce de Leon, a Spanish navigator and adventurer, searched for months and years throughout the islands of the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico, and the everglades of Florida, in the hopes of discovering the fabled "fountain of youth," which, according to a legend of the natives, possessed such wonderful properties that bent, decayed, wrinkled and shriveled old age had but to plunge beneath its crystal waters, and emerge in all the freshness and vigor of rosy youth. And so this man, intelligent for his generation, fitted to lead armies and navies, searched in the vain hope that he might discover this miraculous fountain, and renew his youth. To-day, taking advantage of this characteristic of mankind, thousands of men are making fortunes by concocting and vending elixirs, panaceas, and cure-alls; and millions more are spending their money and time, and ruining their bodies, by swallowing these nostrums in order to prolong their lives. Indeed, man's whole time seems to be spent either in striving to preserve his own life, or endeavoring to shorten the lives of his fellow beings.

Undoubtedly the dread of death had its rise in the mystery with which death was enshrouded. Man knew, of course, that he was born; he knew that he lived an uncertain length of time on the earth; and he knew that, at the last, it was his inevitable fate to become the prey of death. But of death itself, and of what lay beyond, he knew absolutely nothing; all was a dark and rayless mystery. Out of this mystery, man, as is his habit with all mysteries, evolved strange and weird theories of the Beyond, and, indeed, as to whether there was a beyond, he knew absolutely nothing. Yet, aided by that faint consciousness, possessed by mankind generally, of a life beyond the grave, he constructed a theory of a future world, and peopled that world with the phantoms of his imagination. Hence arose the absurd though characteristic stories of mythology; the stories of gods, goddesses, satyrs, genii and fairies; of places of rewards and punishments; of Heaven, Paradise and the angels; of Hades, Hell, a lake of literal fire and brimstone; of the river Styx, that flowed between this world and the abode of damned souls; of the boatman Charon, who ferried the souls of the damned over the dark river, and so on ad infinitum. These mythological stories all had a slight foundation in fact, and, considering the disadvantages under which the ancients labored, were doubtless as rational as could be expected of them. We of modern times, however, taking advantage of the progress in the arts and sciences, and the consequent broadening of the intellect, are able to form a more rational and satisfactory theory, to lay down a more solid foundation upon which to erect the temple of our faith in a life beyond. And I design in this discourse to treat principally the evidences of immortality as furnished by the laws of nature, science, philosophy, reason and common sense, without reference to the more positive and demonstrative evidences furnished by Spiritualism.

First, let me define the word Immortality. According to Webster, the word means "Unending existence." That is immortal which cannot be destroyed or annihilated. Now it is a well-known fact that matter, per se, is indestructible; matter may be changed, may be resolved into its original or primary elements, but cannot be destroyed; therefore matter, being indestructible, is immortal. This is my first proposition, my foundation-stone.

My second proposition is this: Spirit is matter. I know that this proposition is contrary to the generally received opinion, especially of the Orthodox world, which holds that spirit is the opposite of matter, that spiritual things are the very antipodes of material things. Let us see: matter is something; the opposite of something is nothing; if spirit is the opposite of something it is nothing, and as nothing has no existence, therefore, if spirit is the opposite of matter, it has no existence save in the imagination of those who hold to this view of the subject. If spirit is something it is material, and, as matter is indestructible, therefore spirit is indestructible, consequently, spirit is immortal. Now I am a materialist, inasmuch as I hold that nothing can exist outside of materiality, and as I believe spirit to exist, and to exist as matter, though in a very sublimated form, there is no difficulty in the way of my accepting the immortality of the soul or spirit.

Again: It is also a well-known fact that a body of matter cannot be set in motion except it come in contact with a body of matter already in motion. Let me illustrate: Here is a man, rejoicing in all the vigor of manhood, strong and muscular; he can at will contract the muscles of his body sufficiently to lift easily five or six hundred pounds. But an accident befalls him, and in the twinkling of an eye he lies before us a corpse. There is the same person, the same body to all appearances, yet he who but a few moments before was overflowing with life and activity now lies before us utterly unable to lift even a finger. Why? Because that which gave it life and strength, that which set the body in motion, has gone out of it, and, according to our proposition, that which has gone out of the body, the spirit, must have been material, otherwise the body could not have been moved by it.

Says some doubting friend, "You say that the spirit is material. Well, now, let's see; what did the body weigh in life?" "One hundred and fifty pounds." "Well, let's see what it will weigh now; place it on the scales: one hundred and fifty pounds." "There!" says my friend, "that fact disproves your statement. If the spirit is material, it would weigh something, but you see the body weighs just the same after as before death; consequently, that which went out of the body could not be material." Wait a bit. Let us examine this question a little further, and I think we will realize that the fact that spirit is intangible to our gross physical senses, is no proof it is not matter. As all are aware, matter varies greatly in density, from the solid metals up to the invisible and almost intangible and imponderable gases. Some forms of matter appeal to all the senses; there are others that are apparent to but a portion of them, while there are others still that the unassisted faculties can take no cognizance of whatever. For instance, here is this table. I can see it, feel it, hear the concussion produced by rapping on it, and, were it some particular kind of wood—say, fresh pine—I could both smell and taste it. Here, you see, all five of the physical senses take cognizance of matter. Ascending a little in the scale, let us consider the atmosphere. Here we have a body of matter which may contain all the elements in a gaseous form, yet manifesting itself to but a portion of the senses. It is invisible—the eye cannot take cognizance of it at all—yet it is tangible and ponderable, weighing over fifteen pounds to the square inch of surface on which it rests. Again: Light, according to the Newtonian and Substantial philosophy, is composed of infinitesimal particles of matter in rapid motion. I know this is opposed to the undulatory theory of light now so generally accepted, but I have not the time to discuss the question as to the relative merits of these different theories. I merely wish to say, that if the Substantial theory is correct, then in light we have a form of matter which is intangible and imponderable. The only sense that cognizes it is the sense of sight. Again: The science of chemistry, with all its subtle power and keen perception, has never yet been able to devise means whereby the perfume of the flower can be detected or analyzed. This perfume is doubtless composed of infinitesimal particles of matter, the very essence of the flower floating in the atmosphere. These atoms are absolutely invisible, intangible, imponderable; they manifest themselves only to the delicate olfactory nerves—to the sense of smell. So fine and yet so powerful is the odor of musk, that a few grains of that substance have been left exposed for years, filling the air with their pungent emanations, with no perceptible diminution in substance or weight. Again: According to the Substantial philosophy, electricity is a form of matter and not a "mode of motion," as held by most of our modern scientists. If this is so, then we have in electricity a form of matter which, in its equilibrium, is utterly undetectable by any of the physical senses; yet, when set in motion, becomes the most powerful agent in Nature, rending and riving the mightiest of man's works, and making playthings of the products of his skill.

Following up consistently the proposition already put forward, that "nothing can exist outside of materiality," I must therefore affirm that even the thoughts that are being generated in our brains here to-day are material. This, no doubt, will be a startling assertion to some of my hearers. Let me offer you the proof of its truth. I have already stated that "no body of matter can be set in motion, unless by contact with a body of matter already in motion." Any person who has ever investigated the power of mind over matter will readily see the application. A thought will retard or accelerate the circulation of the blood; a thought of a certain character will send the blood leaping through the arteries to the very extremities; will cause the face to flush and the eyes to brighten with joy. Again: a thought, of another character, will send the blood rushing back upon the heart, will cause the cheek to pale, and the limbs to become limp and lifeless. You have, most of you, doubtless, read of the incident I am about to relate. A certain nobleman was condemned to be beheaded; with his hands pinioned behind him, he kneels and lays his head upon the block; the executioner bares his victim's neck, and then, deliberately lifting his gleaming axe high in the air, waits for the word of command. Suddenly there is a commotion in the vast throng of spectators, and a man rides up covered with dust, and holding a paper aloft, shouts: "Hold! a pardon from the king!" And so it proves. An officer steps up to the kneeling man and exclaims: "Rise, my lord; the king has pardoned you." No response. "My lord, the king has pardoned you; rise and rejoice with us." Still no answer. Hastily stepping forward they lift his head, but it falls back limp and lifeless; the man is a corpse; killed by a thought.

By a simple thought I can contract the muscles of my body sufficiently to lift a weight of several hundred pounds. Indeed, the power of thought is limited only by the strength of the muscles.

Emerson says "thoughts are things"; and so they are. A thought is a thing just as much as a flower or a tree. Thought is just as much a product of the food you eat as are your blood, your muscles, your bones. The physiologist will trace the bread and butter you take into your stomach while it changes into chyle and chyme, enters the blood and blossoms into thought from your brain. We may draw a most excellent lesson from this: As a man eats, so will he think; in other words, the character of our thought depends largely on the food we eat.

The materiality of thought affords a perfect explanation of many mysterious but common phenomena. For instance, an orator will mount the rostrum and sway his audience with the power of his will and eloquence. He may not utter a single new truth, his language may even be commonplace and uncouth; yet he keeps his hearers' attention from first to last wide awake with interest and excitement. Another speaker mounts the platform, utters the deepest and most profound truths, the newest and most valuable thoughts, and his audience grows tired, drowsy and inattentive. Why this difference? Simply because the first man materialized his ideas more fully than the latter; in other words, he coined himself into his thought and hurled it upon the sensitive brains of his listeners with the force of a bullet. The latter man materialized his thought so feebly that its gentle patter had all the soothing effect of rain upon the roof, and his audience went to sleep.

What is the secret of the mighty power wielded by reformers and teachers in the destinies of the nations? Their ability to materialize their thought.

Jesus of Nazareth taught no new doctrines, gave to the world no new moral precepts, but the man himself stood behind the thought; he coined his very soul into his teachings, and the impress he made upon the moral and spiritual life of mankind will endure through eternity.

Thomas Paine gave to the world no ideas that had not been promulgated by others before him. Yet that heroic patriot so imbued his thought with his own personality, so materialized and vitalized the children of his brain, that they swept through the colonies like a storm, reviving and encouraging the drooping spirits of our forefathers to deeds of noble daring, and the materialized thought of Thomas Paine drove from our shores the last vestige of British power and authority. And so of the works of every reformer. Thought, substantial, materialized thought, was the weapon by which they won their victories.

Again: It is conceded by many of the best and deepest thinkers and scientists of the age, that all material things are photographed upon their surroundings, and that this image or picture is indelible, and cannot be effaced. The physical senses cannot discover this delicate impression, but to the one whose spiritual senses are developed they become an open book. The psychometrist will read and interpret these hidden records with greater facility than the school-boy cons his lessons.

Some philosophers hold that every individual is surrounded by a sort of nerve aura, or magnetic atmosphere. Upon this atmosphere every thought we generate, whether uttered aloud or not, impinges and photographs itself, and years after the sensitive, the clairvoyant, on entering into that atmosphere will see and describe the thoughts thereon indelibly impressed.

Does not this fact prove that thought must be material in order to make an impression on material things? To my mind it is conclusive.

The illustrations already given of the varying density of matter, from the grosser forms up to the sublimated essences, are sufficient to show that the proposition that spirit is matter is neither unreasonable nor unphilosophical, thus demonstrating that it is possible for spirit to exist, and that, having an existence, it is therefore indestructible and immortal.

"But," objects some listener, "admitting the indestructibility of matter and of spirit, what evidence have we of the immortality of the individual, of the continued existence of the personal conscious entity?" "We know," he goes on to say, "that all visible forms change and become extinct; that our bodies are resolved into their original elements, and cease to be as individuals; what reason, then, have we to suppose that the same will not be true of spirit-forms?"

Let me reply that there are many reasons why spirit-forms do not follow the same course as physical forms, in that respect. First, the spiritual is the real, the permanent; the physical, or visible, is the unreal, the transitory. The spirit is the enduring mold around which the physical is temporarily thrown, to fit it for this stage of existence, to render it visible and tangible to physical senses.

But there are numerous evidences to be drawn from well-known facts in nature, which point to the continuation of individual spirit-existence. The universality of the belief in immortality is a powerful evidence of the truth of that belief. We find among all nations, tribes and people a firm conviction of a future life; this fact can be accounted for in no other way save that the belief in immortality is a natural belief or instinct, and like all instincts is founded on a reality. In short, nature has implanted in man this recognition of a fact; if there is no such fact as a basis, then nature has certainly made a mistake, a thing she is never guilty of doing.

Phrenology, which is now an acknowledged science, also answers Job's question in the affirmative. According to this science, every organ or faculty of the brain governs man's belief and actions regarding things that have an actual existence; there is no organ of the brain that, in its normal condition, recognizes a myth, a thing or condition of things that cannot possibly have an existence; and, in proportion as the different faculties are developed, so does man recognize or fail to recognize the conditions to which these organs refer. Take, for instance, the organ of Tune. A person with this faculty largely developed is a lover of music, and can distinguish the slightest inharmony or discord in musical sounds; he is shocked and pained when discord is produced, and is delighted with beautiful harmonies. On the contrary, the man whose organ of tune is small has no conception of music whatever; the most delightful compositions are to him but a mere jangle of sounds—he cannot distinguish one tune from another. I once heard a well-known Spiritualist lecturer say that, so far as the organ of tune was concerned, he was an idiot! He said he "could not tell the difference between 'Old Hundred' and 'Yankee Doodle,' except that one seemed to jig along a little faster than the other." Mark Twain says of Horace Greeley that "he knew only two tunes: one was 'Old Hundred' and the other was n't; and when he sung them, the best judges of music could n't tell which was 'Old Hundred' and which was the other one."

Then, again, we take the organ of Color. With this faculty large, a man becomes an ardent admirer of Nature in bloom. He loves flowers and paintings, and cannot only distinguish colors readily, but will detect the faintest difference in shade of color. With color small, he becomes what is called color-blind. Strange as it may seem, there are many people who cannot distinguish one color from another. I have met several such. It is related of Dalton, the chemist and philosopher, and author of the atomic theory, that he was actually so deficient in this faculty that he could not tell the difference between a ripe cherry and the green leaves upon the same tree. This, strangely as it sounds, is a historic fact, and has given to this infirmity the name of "Daltonism." Dr. Dalton was a Quaker, among whom, of course, all bright colors are prohibited: yet he wore his scarlet doctor's robe in blissful unconsciousness of committing any impropriety. He could not see any difference between it and the modest drab or gray of his brethren. This, it is true, is an extreme case, yet there are many who are more or less color-blind.

Situated a little to one side, and near the top of the head, is the organ of Spirituality. This organ, according to the best authorities, governs man's belief in immortality. With this faculty large, a man has an intuitive knowledge of a hereafter. We have all met persons who assert that they never had a doubt as to future existence.

Invariably you will find such a person has a large development of the organ of Spirituality. On the other hand, there are many persons so devoid of this faculty that where there should be an elevation in the cranium you will find a depression. Such a person is not to blame for his skepticism on that point; he has not the slightest conception of a future life, nor can he understand why others should believe it. He is very apt to ridicule persons who do believe in immortality; he looks upon them as foolish, crazy, idiotic. But the question arises: which is crazy, which is the idiotic one? Is it the one who has all the natural faculties of his mind fully developed? Or is it the one who is lacking in these natural faculties?

Imagine Horace Greeley coming suddenly into the presence of some great master of the violin while performing one of his most brilliant sonatas. Observe Mr. Greeley's look of astonishment and surprise at the to him meaningless gymnastics. Waiting a few moments, the sage of The Tribune inquires: "What are you doing, sir?" "Doing? why, I am making music!" "Music! what is music? is it something to eat, drink, or wear?" "Certainly not; it is something to hear and enjoy. Do you not observe the delicate harmony of the various chords, the effects produced by blending different tones, the change of movement, allegro, andante, adagio? Does n't it thrill you with its beauty?" "No, sir; all your scraping and scratching gives me no more pleasure than the beating of a Chinese gong; not so much, indeed, for the gong has a pertinent meaning, especially when one is hungry." So Horace turns away, fully convinced that the musician is a lunatic or an idiot.

Or picture to yourself Prof. Dalton gazing at that prince of artists, Raphael, as, with brush and palette in hand, he places upon canvas one of his most exquisite conceptions. Suppose the philosopher to say: "My friend, what in the world are you daubing that nasty, sticky stuff on that canvas for?" "Why, sir," responds the artist, "I am painting a picture; do you not observe the beautiful tints, the delicate blending of color, the fine effects of light and shade?" "No, sir; I can see nothing but a dirty daub on a piece of canvas; you are certainly a fit subject for the insane asylum, and ought to be put there before you waste any more time and spoil any more cloth."

Now to the minds of most persons there would be no question as to who was the lunatic; most people would say at once that Mr. Greeley and Prof. Dalton were very much lacking in a certain portion of the brain; that, so far as tune and color were concerned, they were both idiots. Yet they would be no more in the wrong than is the person who lacks the organ of spirituality; nor is the latter any more justified in ridiculing the believer in immortality than is the color-blind or music-deaf in denying the existence of color or music.

The fact has always existed prior to the faculty to perceive the fact. Light existed before the eye, and the action of light upon the delicate organism of the animal developed the faculty to perceive and recognize the existence of light. Sound existed before the ear, and its action upon the animal developed the hearing. Color existed before the organ to perceive it did. Music existed before the faculty of tune was developed; therefore, reasoning from analogy, we are justified in saying that the fact of immortality has developed in man the faculty to perceive that fact, hence the existence of the organ of spirituality is a powerful proof of immortality.

Again: The natural appetites and desires of the human body prove a continued existence. Man has no appetite or desire but that nature has provided its gratification, and, my friends, this fact speaks volumes; think of it for a moment! Man hungers: nature provides food to satisfy that hunger; man is thirsty: nature provides her favorite beverage in abundance; he loves a concord of sweet sounds, and lo! the very air is vocal with harmony; he delights in beauty of coloring, and nature spreads abroad in rich profusion her wealth of tints, and hues, and golden glories. No want unsupplied, no desire ungratified, no appetite unappeased.

Shall we then admit the possibility that the one supreme aspiration of the human heart, the great and overshadowing desire of our nature, is an exception to the rule? Are we to believe that this deep craving for immortality, this earnest hunger of the soul as it reaches out longingly toward that life which, it fondly hopes, will right all the wrongs of this—are we, I ask, to believe that beneficent nature has implanted this greatest longing of the human mind only at the last to blot it out in the blackness of despair and disappointment? No. Such a conclusion is unreasonable, illogical, unphilosophical. On the contrary, as hunger proves that food exists, as thirst proves that water exists, as the love of the beautiful demonstrates that beauty exists, as the desire for harmony proves that music exists, so does this master desire prove that when this body is no longer fit for the indwelling of the spirit, the intelligence, the man, though the body decompose and fall to dust, shall live on, rising higher in the scale of being, delving deeper into the hidden mysteries of the universe, gathering to itself the wealth of knowledge and wisdom of which but the faintest glimmer can be discerned in this life, living in harmony with its surroundings, in affection with its fellow beings, and in happiness beyond conception, growing, broadening out into the infinity of the universe, and through an eternity of time.

Nature never makes a mistake. All her work is rounded out full and complete. As we look below us and follow nature throughout her various ramifications, we make the discovery that, with the single exception of man, the measure of being is full in this life. The fish, glancing his bright scales through the crystal water, with all his bodily wants supplied, his hunger appeased, frolics in the very abandon of contentment. He appears to desire nothing more—the measure of his being is full. The bird, hopping and twittering amid the branches of his sylvan retreat, with physical wants all supplied, pours forth its very heart in a torrent of joyous melody. No wish ungratified, no longing unsatisfied—the measure of its being is full. The beasts of the field and jungle, with their bodily wants supplied, lie down in content, with no longing beyond the present; the measure of being is full.

But with man how different! Feed him well, clothe him well, give him everything that earth can give, raise him to the very pinacle of fame and power, shower wealth upon him, clothe him with honors as with a garment, and yet there remains with him this empty void, this unsatisfied longing, this craving hunger, this consuming thirst for something higher, nobler, better than anything contained in the treasure-house of mortality. Whence this longing? what means this yearning? When in the silent hours of the night or in the sublime stillness of the forest, or when wrapping about him the cloak of meditation, man withdraws him from the influences of the external world, and the divine spark that glimmers in every human breast brightens and glows 'neath the breath of soul-communings, then aspirations that words cannot define, longings that defy language to express, hunger that refuses to be appeased by the husks that feed the body, thirst that longs for a fountain purer, clearer and sweeter than ever burst from the sides of the rock-ribbed mountain, possess and absorb him with a power and fullness beyond expression. And while his whole being is absorbed in this interior condition, a voice, a still, small voice speaks to his soul in language unmistakable: "Oh! man, contain thy soul in patience, for Nature, thy loving mother, hath given thee these longings in order that they may be gratified; hath left that void in thy nature in order to place therein a joy, a gratification, a happiness beyond all that earth can give; and though in this life thy wants are unsupplied, yet, beyond the veil that obscures thy dim vision, life, life eternal is vouchsafed thee, and there the measure of thy being shall be filled. Yes, either man lives hereafter, or Nature has made a stupendous mistake in his case. If so, wherein is man better off than the brute? Nay, his lot were more to be pitied than that of the beast; for 't were better to be a fish, a bird, a beast of the field or jungle, with its bodily wants supplied, contented with its lot, than to be a man with all his vast capacity for enjoyment unsatisfied and neglected.

Yes, the evidence is strongly in favor of spirit existence; and the thought comes to the soul-sick, weary child of earth as a blessed balm; giving hope to the hopeless, strength to the weak, and to the sick, discouraged and despairing, a glorious prospect in the hereafter, a hopeful courage to overcome the difficulties and obstacles that are the constant attendants of earth-life, and, above all, an incentive to so live that the beautiful spirit garment shall not be dragged in the mire and filth of sensuality and lust, nor soiled by the narrow aims and degrading passions of the selfish animal nature.

As Love is the bond that unites all life, all intelligence, the underlying principle upon which all progress, all happiness is based, eternal life whispers to man: "If thou wouldst attain to the highest seats in the temple of spiritual progress, thou shouldst love thy fellow-man; let justice and charity be thy watchwords; let good deeds be thine armor; and thus, when thou comest into thine inheritance, thou shalt have cause to rejoice that, 'Though a man die, he shall live again.'" were opening a new world for her. Many others were promised as soon as she had time for them.

Meanwhile Mrs. Mason failed gradually, needing more and more of their care and time. It was not given grudgingly, but they were forced to work early and late to earn enough to keep the wolf from the door.

"I never dreamed what it was to be poor," said Doris one day, while they were contriving how to pay the butcher and the milkman, and have something left for coal. Miss Parker laughed.

"They say folks are not poor when they can pay their debts and have anything left, and we have two dollars."

"That is something to be grateful for, I suppose, and when I take this work home I shall get something more."

"It is bad enough to be poor, but worse to be poor and sick. I am thankful we have our health spared, Doris."

Dr. Carroll was surprised to learn of Mr. Brooks's proposed trip. He found time to see him a moment, and accompany him to the dépôt.

"It is good of you, Brooks." He stood with his hand on Mr. Brooks's shoulder. "I will try to take care of Doris for you while you are gone." The words were significantly spoken.

"I have no hope it will be for me. At the same time I am glad to be assured she will not want for a friend. I believe you are the only man in the wide world with whom I would trust Doris. I think you would seek her happiness before your own."

"Yes, I would, but I'm afraid I shall not have a chance to try it;" and the train rolled away, leaving Dr. Carroll feeling that a sacred trust had been reposed in him.

"I will not stand in Brooks's way," he thought. "I will leave him a clear field, and then if Doris wants him she will have a chance."

And so Dr. Carroll made his visits strictly professional. There was always a word and glance for Doris, but so guardedly given that she never for a moment suspected how his heart was beating when he came into her presence.

The two weeks which passed before she heard from Mr. Brooks were tedious days; and then came word that he had found Morris, and he was really quite ill of fever.

"I shall take good care of him, day and night, and bring him back safely with me."

She was much happier now; but the illness proved to be a long one. It would be some time before he could bear the long journey.

Meanwhile Doris worked hard—too hard for her strength. Dr. Carroll was troubled to see how thin and pale she was growing. He came in toward the close of a chilly, rainy October day. She was sitting near the window, trying to catch the last of the daylight before she laid her work aside.

"Doris, must you work so hard?" His voice trembled a little, in spite of his effort to speak steadily.

"Oh! I'm doing very well. I don't mind it. Auntie makes it as easy for me as she can. Poor aunt! She has much the harder time. I wish I could do more for her. Don't worry about me, Doctor!" and she turned a hopeful though weary face toward him.

"When Morris comes home I am sure he will help us, and I shall be so much happier I shall be stronger, I think."

"She does n't say a word about Brooks," he thought, as he went into Mrs. Mason's room.

The days passed into November, and Doris was made happy one day by a letter, stating they would start for Roseville the next day, and would probably arrive on Saturday. She could hardly eat or sleep, but forced herself to attend to her customary duties.

The day came at last, and just as the lamps were lighted they arrived. Doris saw behind Mr. Brooks a tall, fine-looking young man. She rushed past him, and instantly their arms were around each other. It was a long time before either could speak, and then they spoke together. She still clung to him while she thanked Mr. Brooks.

And then Dr. and Mrs. Carroll and Lydia came. They were a happy party that night. Sitting close by Doris, Morris related much that had befallen him since he went away. But before they separated Morris said:

"If it had not been for Mr. Brooks, I am sure I should not have been here to-night. My doctor told me it was his care that saved me, not the medicine."

Doris silently reached over her hand to Mr. Brooks. He knew she was grateful and was his friend, and he tried to be satisfied.

"And we have one other fact to bear in mind," said Miss Parker. "We seem to have been led by our spirit-friends in this matter. If Doris had not inquired into the cause of the raps on her table——"

"And if auntie had not been brave and true enough to go to see Mrs. Carroll about Lydia," said Doris, interrupting her.

"And if Mrs. Carroll had not been kind enough to take me home," said Lydia.

"And if Lydia had not written us that Morris was sick in Jacksonville," said Dr. Carroll.

"And if Mr. Brooks had not gone to take care of me," said Morris.

"And if we had closed our eyes and ears, and turned away from all Mrs. Stuart said to us, we should not be as blessed as we are to-night. Let us be grateful to an Infinite Power that has so wisely provided a law in Nature by which we may be counseled and comforted," said Mr. Brooks, gravely. "Let us consecrate ourselves anew to the work of the angel-world, wherever an ignorant, suffering or sorrowing humanity may need it."

A solemn silence followed his words, and from each soul was breathed a prayer for guidance.

Morris, looking upon Mrs. Mason as she was lying so helplessly on her bed, could not but forgive her for all the sorrow she had caused them.

"Poor soul! She meant well enough, no doubt, but she made a great mistake."

"Yes, but she will grow out of it when she has passed over," replied Miss Parker.

"I don't think I understand you," Aunt Amelia."

"I mean that I believe when we have passed through the change called death we shall be able to see that many things taught us were errors. We shall find that we make our own hell and our own heaven. Sarah's mistakes were those of ignorance and erroneous teachings. She firmly believed she was right. One great mistake was in trying to make others accept her views. She would n't look at any other side of the question, or be willing any one else should. When she sees her mistake she'll be sorry enough, and I have no doubt will do as much to help us as she has done to hinder us. But we can forgive and forget it all, Morris. The worst is over."

They were all glad to learn that Morris had improved all opportunities for education. He wished very much to be a physician, but did not see his way clear for study.

"I think that can be easily managed," said Dr. Carroll. "Come and study with me awhile."

"I ought not. I must help Aunt Amelia and Doris. Grandma is so much care to them that it would be simply wicked in me to refuse to take one of their burdens on myself. I must not think of it."

But Mrs. Mason was soon to be called home. As the night of the old year passed away, her mortal life passed with it. She began the new life in a new world. As they stood quietly around her bedside, Miss Parker said:

"Let us hope that she sees we are really grateful for the good she has done. The rest she will understand."

After Mrs. Mason's funeral Morris immediately entered Dr. Carroll's office, making his home with Mrs. Carroll.

It was unnecessary for the inmates of the Roseville cottage to work so hard and steadily now, and in the long winter evenings they were quite at leisure. Mr. Brooks came often, and brought the promised books, but they rarely saw Dr. Carroll. He was keeping the pledge made to himself to "leave Mr. Brooks a clear field."

Doris became conscious of a longing to see him, and going over one day with Morris, felt a disappointment that he was not at home. She spoke of it to Mrs. Carroll, who inwardly resolved that the doctor should learn that fact when he came home.

Dr. Carroll lost no time in going out to Roseville the next day, and spent such a pleasant hour that he heartily wished he had not gone at all, or that he might go every day.

As the weeks passed, Morris and Lydia became friends. Lydia studied and read so diligently that, thanks to Mrs. Carroll, she was wonderfully improved.

It was with much satisfaction that she saw the friendship between Morris and Lydia developing into a stronger sentiment. She hinted as much to Doris one day when she was at Roseville.

"I shall be delighted if it is really so. I love Lydia dearly! I should like her for a sister. I hope it will prove so."

"Well, do n't mention it to either of them, or you may frighten them. Lydia is a good, noble girl, and would be a worthy wife for any good man. I think they are very well suited to each other."

It was a delightful anticipation to Doris. She loved Morris very dearly, but was not narrow-minded enough to be jealous of his affection for Lydia. She repeated to Miss Parker all Mrs. Carroll had said.

"Oh! yes, I saw that some time ago. Lydia is a dear, good girl. They are worthy of each other."

It was the first of March, and a stormy, disagreeable day. Mr. Brooks had not called for three days. Doris thought he must be out of the city. She did not expect him this day, but he came, and seated himself to finish the reading of "Bleak House."

"What delightful readings we have had this winter," said Doris, after they had finished the discussion of the book. "I never enjoyed anything so much before. Even being able to read what I like, I should not have been able to choose so wisely. I think we owe you a great deal, Mr. Brooks."

Her smile more than repaid him for any trouble he might have had, but just then his thought was busy with another matter.

"I have news to tell you to-day, ladies."

"Is it something pleasant?" asked Doris, turning toward him. "No, I see that it is n't. Your eyes say 'No.'"

"Then my eyes are good interpreters of my feelings. I have to say that I have an offer of a desirable position in the West—in Illinois. Financially it will be good for me; and, better than that, I shall have the pleasure of being in my chosen work. I confess I don't want to leave this city. I am considering the matter, however, and shall probably decide in a few days."

"Somehow Illinois never seemed so far before," said Doris.

"That is just what I thought."

At that moment Miss Parker seemed seized with a sudden sleepiness, and quickly excused herself.

"Now or never," thought Mr. Brooks, trying to brace himself for what was to follow. He walked directly over to Doris, and stood by her side, as he said:

"Doris, I once told you I loved you. You are still very dear to me. Unless you can respond to my affection I must go away. Now tell me, must I go or stay?"

Doris covered her face with her hands for a few moments, and when she raised it to him it was pale and sorrowful.

"I am sorry, but I cannot. Oh! I can't bear to make you so unhappy, when you have been so good to us; but what can I say? I must tell you the truth."

"I know it, Doris. You are not to blame. I have been hoping against hope all winter. I shall say now, as I said before, I shall be your friend and brother."

He walked away from her a little, and stood for a moment.

"I shall come out once more before I go. Good-night."

As Doris heard him walk quickly down the lawn she gave way to uncontrollable tears. She sobbed so convulsively that Miss Parker heard her, and came out to see what was the matter.

"Why, Doris! What ails you?"

"Oh! auntie, I 'm just as wicked as I can be! But I could n't help sending Mr. Brooks away, truly I could n't. I do love him dearly—we all do; but I do n't want to marry him, and I must n't, must I?"

Doris was incoherent.

"Not if you do n't want to, child."

"I remember now what he said to me when you left grandma's house, but I supposed he had forgotten all about it."

"I never thought he had got over it," Miss Parker replied, speaking as placidly as if it were measles or whooping cough. "But you need n't blame yourself, Doris. He never really expected you would care so much for him, for he told me so once. I suppose he thought he would make one more effort. But do n't cry any more, child. We can't help it."

Doris retired, but not to sleep. Her sensitive soul was hurt, that she must so hurt another.

In that one little moment, when she sat with covered face, she had had a revelation.

The morning found her wakeful and weary, but she silently went about her little duties. Miss Parker watched her curiously, but said nothing. The storm still raged furiously, and Doris privately hoped Mr. Brooks would not call that day. She did not feel equal to meeting him. But he came that afternoon.

"May I leave my books here, Miss Parker? I mean those I already have here? I have boxed up the others, and I do n't care to remove these, if you will kindly allow them to remain. And now I must go. I shall be sure to inflict a few letters upon you. Good-bye;" and without so much as daring to touch Doris's hand, he was gone.

And then Doris cried again, in the midst of which Morris came in.

"I say, Aunt Amelia, does Doris really care so much for Mr. Brooks as that?"

"Do n't misunderstand her, Morris. Fact is, as you are her brother, you may as well know. Doris thinks a great deal of Mr. Brooks as a friend, but he cares more than that for her, and has told her so twice. But she does n't want to marry him, so he has concluded to go away."

"I am sorry. I think so much of him myself that I hoped it would be all right with them. Do you suppose Doris has anybody else in her mind?"

"I would n't undertake to say what was in any woman's mind, Morris. Doris does n't have many acquaintances."

That same hour there was a scene in Dr. Carroll's office. Mr. Brooks was there to take leave of the Doctor.

"Brooks! I am amazed! I thought you were fast for this part of the country. I hope nothing has happened."

"Yes, something very important. I shall confess to you, Doctor, that it will be best for me to go away. Doris has sent me. I tell you this frankly, because I want you to understand that I have now no hope of winning her. Take good care of her, and if at any time I can do her a friend's service, I am ready and willing."

"I am sorry for you! I really am! When you went to Florida, I pledged myself to leave you all fair chance. I have only been there once since Mrs. Mason's funeral. I felt sure you would succeed."

"It is not to be; so good-bye."

Mr. Brooks's next call was upon his old friend, Dr. Packard. He wanted his messages before leaving the city.

"I really should like to keep the paper in which mention is made of myself. I have read it many times, and always with wonder."

"Certainly. And, Doctor, if I can ever be of any assistance to you in this matter, I should be very glad."

"Thank you. And as for you, you will have my best wishes and my prayers."

The night express carried Mr. Brooks far away, bound for new scenes, new friends and new work.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Charlestown, Mass., Oct 20th, David Smith, aged 60 years.

Bro. S. was well known as an old camper at Silver Lake, Lake Walden and Lake Pleasant. His first wife was the late Mrs. Armstrong, a well-known medium. He leaves a widow and three children. Funeral services were held on the evening of the 23d. Dr. Richardson spoke kind and tender words. Dr. A. Hodges followed, his controls offering words of comfort and hope, closing with a tender and beautiful invocation, after which Miss McIntosh feelingly sang the old and favorite hymn, "I would not live alway," and Dr. Hodges pronounced the benediction. May those left behind have the sweet consolation which Spiritualism alone affords.

ZÖLLNER.

An Open Letter

TO

PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.

BY C. C. MASSEY,

Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

THE

AND Bacchic Mysteries.

A Dissertation, by Thomas Taylor, Translator of "Plato," "Plotinus," "Porphyry," "Iamblichus," "Proclus," "Aristotle," etc. Third edition. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Emendations and Glossary, by Alexander Wilder, M. D.

In the Mysteries, the drama acted at Eleusis and other sacred places, were embodied the deeper thoughts and religious sentiment of the archaic world. The men and women initiated into them were believed to be thenceforth under special care of God, for this life and the future. So holy and interior were the doctrines considered which had been learned in the Sanctuary from the two tablets of stone, that it was not lawful to utter them to another.

The reader desirous of getting the kernel of the doctrines of Plato, Orpheus, Eumolpas, and their fellow-laborers, as well as of the Alexandrian Eclectics, will obtain invaluable aid from this treatise.

The Record of a Ministering Angel.

BY MRS. MARY J. CLARK.

The ministry of angels is a subject that will always possess a deep interest for serious, thoughtful minds. There is nothing for which the hearts of humanity long with more pathetic yearning than for a resumption of fellowship with the loved and lost. What mother does not long for one sound of the voice of her son who has crossed to the further shore? What would not fathers give for one more smile from their daughters passed all too soon away? And what is more reasonable than to hope that the loved and lost have joined the ranks of the angels, and are busy in tender services for those whom they, having left behind, love still the more? This book is written with the view of stimulating such hopes, of lifting sad hearts out of the darkness of despair into the sunny region of hope and courage and faith.

SPIRIT WORKS: Real but not Miraculous. A Lecture read at the City Hall in Roxbury, Mass., on the evening of Sept. 21st, 1853, by ALLEN PUTNAM.

This lecture, delivered in Roxbury, Sept. 21st, 1853, and repeated at the Melodeon, in Boston, Nov. 1st, same year, though preceded by several addresses by Laroy Sunderland, A. E. Newton, J. M. Spear and others, in smaller rooms, and on more private notice, was the first Lecture on Spiritualism in this vicinity to which the public was invited through the press and by posters, and the first to be printed and issued in pamphlet form. Though the author says that it seems crude now, and contains some allusions to local and transient events, it is interesting and valuable because of its connection with the introduction of Spiritualism.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle-Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages, the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presention of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world, and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

The Raps.

The question whether the phenomenon that introduced a new revelation of truth to earth's people, marked the advent of Modern Spiritualism, and from the place of its occurrence took the name of "Rochester Knockings," was of human production or produced by the denizens of another, and to us invisible, state of existence, has recently been brought into prominence and become the subject in various quarters of more or less animated discussion. We propose, therefore, as briefly as possible consistent with the facts, to review the matter, though it has been done an almost innumerable number of times, and the question it gave rise to has been settled in favor of the spiritual theory beyond all dispute in the minds of those who have duly weighed the evidence.

Phenomena of the class to which the knockings or raps belong have a history coëval with that of man on earth. Old Egypt left its record of their existence and of a belief in their spirit origin in hieroglyphic language and symbolic representations on the walls of its temples of worship and within its tombs hewn in the solid rock.

Its priests performed cures; its oracle chambers were séance rooms, and the speaker, either male or female, was simply the medium in a state of trance. The priest in charge was the Hearer, or Recorder, who gave out the utterances of the spirits, whom they termed Gods, who spoke through the lips of entranced mediums. (Oxley's "Egypt and Its Wonders," p. 167.)

In the twelfth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, following the account of Peter's release from prison by a spirit, we are told that he went to the house of Mary, the mother of John, and knocked at the door. Attracting the attention of a damsel named Rhoda, she went to the door and inquired who it was. Being answered by Peter and recognizing his voice, she was so overjoyed that she neglected to open the door, and ran in to inform others of the unexpected presence of the one for whose release they had met to pray; but they could not believe it was Peter, and said to her: "Thou art mad!" But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they: "It is his angel!" they supposing he had met his death at the hands of the officers of the law, and that, as a spirit, he had come to them and knocked at the door, showing the belief of the early Christians to have been that their friends who had passed from this life could return to them and make known their presence by raps.

Bodin, quoted by Calmet ("Phantom World," p. 145), speaks of a friend who, in the year 1588, was very frequently visited by a spirit who gave him good advice and assisted him in his studies. "He usually rapped at his door at three or four o'clock in the morning to awaken him." On one occasion "the spirit showed himself in broad day, striking gently on a glass bowl and then upon a bench."

Humbert Birck, a burgess of note, in the town of Oppenheim, died in November, 1620. On the Saturday following his funeral, noises began to be heard in a house in which he had lived with his first wife, he at the time of his death living with his second wife. His brother-in-law, supposing it to be Humbert who produced the sounds, said, "If you are Humbert, my brother-in-law, strike three times against the wall." The request was answered with three raps, though ordinarily he rapped several times. This spirit was heard to rap loudly at a fountain, (Calmet, p. 190.) At one time a great number of persons assembled in the house. "Humbert was asked to rap against the wall; he knocked very gently"; then he was desired "to go and fetch a stone and knock louder; he deferred a little, as if he had been to pick up a stone, and gave a stronger blow upon the wall; the master of the house whispered in his neighbor's ear as softly as he could that he (the spirit) should rap seven times, and directly he rapped seven times."

About the year 1645, Richard Baxter, author of "Baxter's Saint's Rest," a book valued by many Christians second only to the Bible, delivered an "Historical Discourse on Apparitions," in which he said:

"There is now in London an understanding, sober, pious man, oft one of my hearers, who has an elder brother, a gentleman of considerable rank, who, having formerly seemed pious, of late years does often fall into the sin of drunkenness; he often lodges long together here in his brother's house, and whensoever he is drunk and has slept himself sober, something knocks at his bed's head, as if one knocked on a wainscot. When they remove his bed it follows him. Besides other loud noises on other parts where he is, that all the house hears, they have often watched him, and kept his hands, lest he should do it himself. His brother has often told it me, and brought his wife, a discreet woman, to attest it, who avers, moreover, that as she watched him she has seen his shoes, under the bed, taken up, and nothing visible to touch them. They brought the man himself to me, and when we asked him how he dare sin again after such a warning, he had no excuse."

Omitting for want of space much of intervening history having a bearing on our subject, we reach the year 1716, when phenomena occurred in the house of Samuel Wesley, father of the celebrated Methodist preachers, John and Charles Wesley, at Epworth, in Lincolnshire, Eng. The senior Wesley kept a journal in which he faithfully and minutely described all the events we refer to. This remained in manuscript a long time, and finally passed into the hands of Dr. Joseph Priestly, who subsequently caused it to be published in a pamphlet. John Wesley likewise wrote out a full account of what transpired as reported to him by his father in 1720, and by persons who were in the house at the time, and testified from their own knowledge. Samuel Wesley in his journal says:

"The second of December 1716, my daughters Susannah and Ann were below stairs in the dining-room; and heard, first at the doors, then over their heads, and, the night after, a knocking under their feet, though nobody was in the chambers or below them. The like they and my servants heard in both the kitchens, at the door against the partition, and over them.... My wife would have persuaded them it was rats within doors, and some unlucky people knocking without; till at last we heard several loud knocks in our own chamber, on my side of the bed; but till, I think, the 21st, at night, I heard nothing of it. That night I was waked a little before one, by nine distinct very loud knocks, which seemed to be in the next room to ours, with a sort of pause at every third stroke. The next night I heard six knocks, but not so loud as the former. I know not whether it was in the morning after Sunday the 23d, when about seven, my daughter Emily called her mother into the nursery, and told her she might now hear the noises there. She went in, and heard it at the bedstead, then under the bed, then at the head of it. She knocked and it answered her."

In John Wesley's complete works, issued by the New York Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his entire record of the phenomena is given. One passage—there being many similar (Vol. VII., pp. 474-478)—is the following:

"In the morning she (Hetty, who was on a visit and heard sounds the night previous) told this (of having heard sounds) to my eldest sister, who told her: 'You know I believe in none of these things. Pray let me take away the candle to-night, and I will find out the trick.' She accordingly took my sister Hetty's place, and had no sooner taken away the candle than she heard a noise below. She hastened down stairs to the hall where the noise was; but it was then in the kitchen. She ran into the kitchen, where it was drumming on the inside of the screen. When she went round it was drumming outside, and so always on the side opposite to her. Then she heard knocking at the back kitchen door. She ran to it, unlocked it softly, and when the knocking was repeated suddenly opened it; but nothing was to be seen. As soon as she had shut it the knocking began again. She opened it again, but could see nothing. When she went to shut the door it was violently thrust against her. She let it fly open, but nothing appeared. She went again to shut it, and it was again thrust against her; but she set her knee and shoulder to the door, forced it to, and turned the key. Then the knocking began again; but she let it go on, and went up to bed. However, from that time she was thoroughly convinced that there was no imposture in the affair."

In a pamphlet written by Abraham Cummings, published at the opening of the present century, and reproduced in the BANNER OF LIGHT in the summer of 1872, a very interesting narrative is given of remarkable spirit phenomena that occurred in the year 1800, including rappings. One of the witnesses says:

"August 13th, 1800, I was at Mr. Blaisdell's house, with more than forty people, besides their own family, and heard knockings. We all wondered when we heard a sound on one side or corner of the house; the next sound on the opposite side or corner, and a third sound equally distant from the second, and so on for a number of sounds, while the succession was as rapid as one sound could be clearly distinguished from another. We were sure that no person, nor even several persons, could make sounds so distant from each other in such quick succession, even were it possible for them to be in or near the places of these sounds, without discovery."

Many others testify in like manner to hearing the rappings, and to manifestations of intelligence by means of them.

Never was there a more erroneous belief than that which some people profess to hold, that Spiritualism had its origin and rests in its entirety on the phenomena that took place in Rochester, N. Y., on the 31st of March, 1848; and we think we have clearly shown that neither at that place nor time did knockings or raps made by unseen intelligences first take place. Neither did they then for the first time manifest an intelligent origin. In a letter of Mrs. Wesley concerning the rappings in her house one hundred and seventy-two years ago, after mentioning that about seven o'clock one morning she was desired to go into the nursery, she says:

"On my coming thither, I heard a knocking at the feet, and quickly after, at the head of the bed. I desired if it was a spirit it would answer me; and, knocking several times with my foot on the ground, with several pauses, it repeated under the sole of my feet exactly the same number of strokes, with the very same intervals. Kezzy, then six or seven years old, said, 'Let it answer me, too, if it can,' and stamping, the same sounds were returned that she made, many times successively."

The similarity between the method of ascertaining whether the raps were intelligently produced above described and that adopted in Rochester in 1848 is quite marked. The mother of the Fox girls, certifying of the events of the 31st of March, says, "My child (Cathie) said: 'Mr. Splitfoot, do as I do,' clapping her hands. The sound instantly followed her with the same number of raps."

Unquestionably efforts have many times been made to establish a means of communication between what have been inappropriately termed "the living and the dead"; but they had all proved futile, until, step by step, through animal magnetism, mesmerism, clairvoyance, and allied studies and experiments, the age became propitious for an effort that should prove successful, and that effort was made in 1848, with what result, twenty or more million people, made better and happier thereby, can to-day testify. The thirty-first of March that year can therefore be noted as the date of the advent of Modern Spiritualism.

And yet it was not on that day the raps were first heard in the house at Hydesville. Mrs. Ann Pulver testified to being told by one who lived in the house in 1844 that she was not feeling well, that she had not slept much the night before, because of unaccountable noises that kept her awake and made her nervous. Miss Lucretia Pulver testified to having lived there all one winter, and hearing "knocking frequently in the bedroom." Mr. and Mrs. Weekman, who occupied the house previous to the Fox Family, testified that in the early part of 1847 the knocking was heard by them, and they expressed confidence in the statements made by Mr. and Mrs. Fox, because of their own experience in the same house. Mr. E. W. Capron, in his history of those events, says: "Another curious feature in the early manifestations should not be lost sight of. All the family, except Mr. Fox (who never was a medium), left the house, as appears by the testimony, during one night, and still the sounds were heard as usual. In their absence questions were answered as freely as when they were all present. It was not until after the confusion and excitement had subsided that the spirits seemed to select the two youngest girls, Catherine and Margaretta, as their mediums for producing sounds." Mr. Capron further says: "Although the Fox Family were the only ones known to the public, it is a fact worthy of note that about the time the sounds commenced with them in Rochester they also commenced in the family of Mr. Lyman Granger, a wealthy member of the Methodist Church, residing in that place. As with the Fox Family, so in Mr. G.'s they at first displayed no partiality for any particular member of the family. They would rap to Mr. Granger in the field, when entirely alone, and to most members of the family; but finally they selected his daughter Elizabeth as a medium," and did not manifest themselves unless she was present. The rappings were also heard in the home of Rev. A. H. Jervis, a clergyman of Rochester.

In "The Missing Link," a valuable and reliable work on the early history of Modern Spiritualism, since it was written by Mrs. A. Leah Underhill, the eldest of the Fox Sisters, is given a very minute account of the tests to which Margaretta and herself submitted in Corinthian Hall, Rochester, N. Y., November, 1848, before large audiences. Introducing the narrative, Mrs. Underhill says:

"Modern Spiritualism was now to be tried in a way by which no guilty person could hope to escape detection. Any one guilty of fraud as great as this would have been, had it consisted of simulation on our part, must certainly have met with swift exposure, and been stripped of all power or opportunity for further mischief. In fact, could it be rationally apprehended that we, or any one, would have dared to face an adverse public of a thronged city, and the entire sentiment of a world against us, as we had been directed to do, with nothing but a damning falsehood at our backs to lean upon?"

On the first evening the audience consisted of about four hundred. A committee of reputable citizens was appointed, who at the close reported that unknown to any one they selected a place to conduct their investigation; that the sounds on the floor, near where Margaretta and her sister stood, were heard as distinctly as at other places, and that some of the committee heard the rapping on the wall behind them. The raps were heard on the outside of a front door and on the door of a closet. A member of the committee placed one of his hands upon the feet of the ladies, and the other on the floor, and though the feet were not moved, there was a distinct jar on the floor. On the pavement of the street and on the ground the same sound was heard. They all agreed, and so reported, that the sounds were heard, but that they entirely failed to discover any means by which they were done.

This report was wholly unexpected, Mr. Capron says:

"So sure were the editors of the Rochester Democrat that the meeting would be the last of the rappings, that they wrote an article, and had it in type, saying the whole thing was exploded. When the report was made the article was suppressed."

At the second meeting another committee reported in like manner. At the third meeting a sub-committee of ladies was appointed, who took the mediums into a room, disrobed them, satisfied themselves there was nothing to produce the sounds, clothed them in garments of their own selection and caused them to stand on sacks of feathers on a table, with their dresses tied tightly above their ankles. Immediately the raps were heard on the table, floor and walls. The gentlemen then came in and heard the raps under these conditions, and the committee, Mrs. Stone, Mrs. J. Gates, and Miss M. P. Lawrence, signed a certificate attesting to the fact and gave it to the mediums.

But it seems uncalled for to bring forward these things in view of the fact that, as we have shown, the raps were no new occurrence, but had been heard at numberless times and places, hundreds and possibly thousands of years before, in the presence of tens of thousands of disinterested and often unwilling witnesses. Yet we cannot dismiss the subject without alluding to the testimony of one of the most distinguished scientists of this age to the genuineness of the raps as a part and portion, the corner-stone really, so far as its placing is related, of Modern Spiritualism. Prof. Wm. Crookes, F. R. S., in the "Quarterly Journal of Science" (London) for January, 1874, in "Notes of an Enquiry into the Phenomena called Spiritualism during the Years 1870-73," makes reference to raps and knocks of various kinds made and heard in different places, "in a living tree, on a sheet of glass, on a stretched iron wire, and a stretched membrane, a tambourine, on the roof of a cab, and on the floor of a theatre," and where no known law and no contrivance or trickery could afford any clue to their cause. He then inquires whether the sounds thus heard are the result of some blind, irrational, hidden material force, obeying the laws of nature. His conclusion is, that being with other phenomena allied to Spiritualism evidently governed by intelligence, a thinking being is concerned in their production. "The intelligence," he maintains, "is sometimes of such a character as to lead to the belief that it does not emanate from any person present."

Immediately following the raps at Hydesville, explanations other than that of they being produced by spirits were freely volunteered, some of which were of a most ridiculous nature. Prof Loomis having given in Silliman's Journal a statement of the effects of vibrating dams on the houses in their vicinity, Prof. Dewey of Rochester undertook to show that the raps were caused by the friction of the water passing over the dams in that city; while Rev. Dr. Potts (in a lecture before a literary association in Rochester) broached the ridiculous toe-joint theory. But ex-Rev. C. C. Burr was the first to promulgate the toe-joint theory, which he did by going through the country—he lecturing and his "brother Heman" giving the illustrations. He wrote to the New York Tribune a letter announcing, after the manner of the yellow-bill "exposers" of this day, that at Hope Chapel, New York, on the 13th of January, 1851, he would make it "plain to the humblest capacity" that the raps were made by the toes of the medium. The Tribune of the next morning, then edited by Horace Greeley, gave the exhibition a notice, however, that could not be said to be superlatively complimentary. Among other things it said, "If Mr. Burr's sounds are produced by the toe-joints, the Rochester raps are produced in some other way."

Margaret Fox Kane, at a session of the Seybert Commission, Nov. 6th, 1884, alluding to herself standing on glass tumblers and having the raps produced, said, "They (the spirits) have done it a hundred times." At the same session Dr. Furness asked her, "Are you ever conscious of any vibration in your bones?" She replied, "No; but sometimes it causes an exhaustion, that is, under circumstances when the raps do not come freely."

In 1854 we boarded at the West End, Boston, with a music engraver by the name of Knight, who was a rapping-medium (so-called in that day), but he was never known as a public medium. We were not a believer in the spiritual phenomena at that date, and attributed the raps to some other cause than that claimed by our friend. We tested the matter in every possible manner: We asked that the raps be first given upon the looking-glass, then upon the table at which we were sitting, afterwards upon the stove, etc., which responded distinctly as we called. Still we could not believe any occult force produced the raps. But we diligently pursued our investigations from time to time, until we found that the raps were made in the presence of other individuals; that several had had the alphabet printed upon cardboard, and then the fact became manifest to us that an invisible intelligence caused the rapping; as, whenever the dotter with his pencil touched each letter of the alphabet, from a to z, three distinct raps would be given at the letter to be recorded. Not only the names of decarnated individuals were given, but intelligent communications also, proving spirit identity, thus fully establishing the fact to our mind of direct communication between the two worlds.

In conclusion we submit it to our readers, and to every honest person, to say whether they can reasonably conclude that in any one of the cases we have cited the raps could have been caused by the toe-joints or by aught else than by and through the agency of the denizens of the spirit-world?

Prof. S. B. Brittan and the Fox Episode.

At the BANNER OF LIGHT séance, held at our Public Free Circle-Room on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 30th, Spirit S. B. Brittan gave (in answer to a correspondent) his views as entertained in spirit-life regarding the late action of the Foxes—Margaret and Kate. Owing to the present interest in what we know will really prove to be but an evanescent episode in the history of the New Dispensation, we have caused the report of his cogent statement to be written out in advance, and herewith place it (together with the query which called it forth) before our readers:

QUESTION.—[By D. T. Averill, Northfield, Vt.] After serving over forty years as an instrument for those who have laid aside their mortal forms to manifest their continued life and presence, Margaret Fox Kane now repudiates the idea of spirit communion. Can her recent expression of views be considered honest and sincere? Does it appear—from the spirit side of life—that Mrs. Kane has been playing the impostor for near half a century?

ANS.—Forty years ago Margaret Fox and her sisters were chosen by certain spirits to serve as instruments of communication between the two worlds, and the physical forces of these children were utilized for this purpose.

It will be remembered by old Spiritualists—and also by many who are not Spiritualists, but who took an interest in the proceedings of that time—that these rappings at Hydesville challenged the attention of thinking minds from all quarters, and many came to that humble hamlet to investigate, and to expose, if possible, the source and cause of these occult, mysterious noises.

It will also be remembered that certain pseudo-scientific minds came to the conclusion, openly expressed, that these rappings were caused by the movements of the toe-joints.

This singular conclusion was laughed at by the world in general, and perhaps very few considered it to any extent. Years have since rolled on; those childish mediums have developed into womanhood, and each of them has had her special and individual experience, in contact with the world. Life has not been full of sunshine to them; and because of circumstances in life, and strange surroundings, Kate and Margaret especially have drawn to themselves certain influences from both sides of life not particularly advantageous to those who seek to develop spirituality of thought and life. I claim, and I think that thousands of intelligent spirits claim the same, that these Fox girls have been genuine mediums for the spiritual world; that they have possessed wonderful powers which have been utilized by returning spirits, in demonstrating to humanity the truth of immortal life. These powers still remain in the organisms of these women, and may, at times, be acted upon by their unseen attendants.

So far as I know anything of the subject, I learn that the band of spirits attending Margaret Fox during the early part of her career is not with her at the present time, but its place has been taken by other unseen intelligences, who are not scrupulous in their dealings with humanity, but feel that the end they have in view justifies any means which they may adopt to establish it.

Margaret Fox Kane, then, and her sister Kate, we look upon as false witnesses, who make use of their powers to unworthy ends; but in this present epoch of agitation upon all religious subjects, especially regarding the cause of Spiritualism, we must expect to find false mediums and false witnesses.

There are in the ranks of Spiritualism a few self-deluded persons, who have served, in times past, as instruments for the spirit-world, but who, because of their self-delusion, have come to the conclusion that they are neither conscious nor unconscious mediums for spiritual manifestations—but that the source of their powers rests within their own organisms; they have decided that it is not wise to give credit to the spirit-world for what they have performed in the past; they would much rather the world would look upon them individually as the ones who produce these manifestations by their own clever tricks or personal gifts. There are a few other individuals in your ranks who are perhaps not self-deluded in this respect, but have been swept under the psychological power of persons and of classes on this side of life—which power, operating upon their own susceptible organisms, has its effect in producing within their minds the dominant idea that they are not dependent upon the spirit-world for the manifestations witnessed in their presence, but that these demonstrations of occult force are drawn out from their own organisms, and have nothing whatever to do with independent spiritual influence.

But while there are a few of these people in our ranks, we must not forget that we have a large army of faithful, reliable workers, men and women, who, for many years, have stood firm and steadfast by the truth, and have toiled fearlessly, dauntlessly, over the rugged way, bearing their banner of progress aloft, challenging the attention of the world; a large army of faithful and reliable mediums, who give credit to the spirit-world for that helpfulness and instruction which have gone forth through their organisms to enlighten and to bless mankind.

We are not dependent upon Margaret Fox Kane for the maintenance of spiritual truth on earth. We are not dependent upon any one or upon all of those swift witnesses who now represent Spiritualism as untrue, and who turn aside from it as though in scorn; for we have at our command a large host of willing instruments, through any one of whom we may give forth undoubted evidence of the truths of immortality, of the correctness of spirit-communion, and of the fact that though a man dies here yet is he resurrected in the spirit-world, where he finds reünion with his friends, awakens into new consciousness, grander power, stronger vitality of being, and learns that he is indeed a progressive intelligence, expanding by nature, and growing more wise through experience as the ages roll on! We have many such instrumentalities—God bless them!—that are faithful and reliable. It is not as though Mrs. Kane was the only medium on earth to be depended upon; it is not as though herself and the sister who endorses her act formed the basic foundations of the grand temple of Spiritualism. True, they have played an important part in this mighty work; true, they have served as instruments for the dissemination of light and knowledge upon spiritual things; we recognize all that they have been, and we deplore their present condition: we pity them! It is not themselves alone that do this thing; they are under the dominant influence of a strong psychological power, which holds them in its iron clasp, and it will not, in the present year, or perhaps in years to come, loosen its hold upon them.

I would say individually, Mr. Chairman, to every Spiritualist who has started back amazed at this attack on Spiritualism from the Fox sisters: There is nothing to fear; every stanch and earnest mind that has grasped the truth for itself; every earnest investigator who has studied Spiritualism and mediumship from his own standpoint—who has nailed fast every fact to his life as it came to him, who has not been careless in research, but who has closely scrutinized the evidences, the claims which Spiritualism has brought to his attention—need not fear the results of this so-called "exposure." Those whose investigations in this direction have brought the truth individually to their comprehension, will only hold the faster to the facts they have gained knowledge of by experience, and which have become a part of themselves. Not if every public medium in the land, and all over the globe, should stand forth and proclaim Spiritualism to be a falsity, would the cause hide its light and abandon a world it came to bless!

Spiritualism can know no refluent wave; it has entered so many private homes, it has become a part of so many hearts, it has made its way so universally into the very sanctuary of human existence, that whatever cloud may sweep across your sky, fear not for the future of the cause! It has come to stay!

All earnest mediums and faithful workers will—in view of this latest blow aimed against the Living Truth—gird on their armor anew and stand forth bravely to do their work still more faithfully in its defense.

A Burning Wrong!

We have repeatedly pointed out in the past the utter absence of justice in the treatment of the American Indian, when he comes in contact with alleged civilization—whether at the point of private dealing or of governmental power in the United States. A clear case in this direction is just now being urged upon the public attention by The Christian Union, of New York City—the great organ of liberal Orthodoxy in this country. The utter absurdity, as well as bitter cruelty, of the position assumed by those who have the power to undo this great wrong is so clearly set forth by the Union that we have no wish to condense its statement, but prefer to print it entire, for the sober consideration of the patrons of THE BANNER:

"We desire to call the attention of our readers to a very gross injustice from which some loyal soldiers of the Republic have been suffering for two years at the hands of the Government. The injustice is none the less because the soldiers have red skins. Out of eighty-two adult male Indians at present confined in Fort Marion, Alabama, supposed to have been captured in an Indian war, sixty-five served the Government as scouts during the whole or a portion of the war; namely, from the spring of 1885 to the fall of 1886. Of the remaining seventeen, four were friendly to the American Government, and influential in keeping their people quiet on the reservation, but were too old and feeble to be enlisted as scouts. Fifty of these men now confined as prisoners of war were with Capt. Crawford as scouts at the time he was killed. Of the 365 women and children in the fort, 284 constitute the families of these soldiers, and are suffering imprisonment with them as payment for the loyalty of their husbands. We are not inclined to make an appeal to the public against such an injustice as this until every private means has been exhausted for a correction of the wrong, nor without scrupulous care in ascertaining from trustworthy sources the facts. For the trustworthiness of our information in this respect we appeal to records on file in the War Department, and we make our appeal to the public because private appeals to the War Department to correct this injustice have hitherto been unheeded. In the name, not merely of humanity, but of justice and of loyalty, we demand for those who were loyal to our Government, and enlisted in its service, some better reward than being confined with the enemies of our Government as prisoners of war."

☞ It is admitted that the red men of this country still own more land than there is in France, or in the whole German Empire. Such being the case, why is the Washington government trying to force them to sell out at a quarter part the value of their property? This is a question that needs solution. It is no wonder that the Indian delegation which was conferred with in Washington recently rejected the proposals presented to it. It is to be hoped that at the next session of Congress there will be found members who will see to it that white speculators are not allowed to lobby through any bill depriving the red men of their just rights.

The Grand Outlook.

The philosopher Leckey, in his "History of European Morals," says that one of the foundation reasons for the rapid spread of the Christian religion among the Romans was its continual reference to another world. And this is the very reason why Modern Spiritualism has taken such a firm hold of the people in this and other countries. But while the Christian has simply faith in a future life, the Spiritualist has a full knowledge of immortality by and through direct spirit-communion. The ancient record says, "God has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise, and the weak to confound the strong." And the way that the worldly-wise of this age ignore the Spiritual Philosophy, because of the humble medial instruments through whom the light from heaven is descending, seems to warrant the statement.

When the impartial historian writes up a full account of the Spiritualism of the nineteenth century, and gives the details regarding its much-abused medial instruments and their loyal adherents, immortality will no longer be a problem to the new race, but a fact so palpable that all will be cheered by the comforts and blessings that such knowledge will bring.

Convulsed Presbyterianism.

We stated in a recent issue that Prof. Woodrow—who was not long since dismissed from the Columbia Theological Seminary because he failed to see, as a good Presbyterian should, that the doctrine of evolution was intrinsically opposed to the spirit of the Christian religion—had gained a point in his struggle with his bigoted opponents. It is a matter of history that after he had found a place in the State University of South Carolina (also located in Columbia), and the theological students attended his lectures, and "listened to him gladly, the seminary faculty threatened them with expulsion if such course were persisted in. An appeal to the State synod has resulted in giving the case to Prof. Woodrow, and the placing of two directors favorable to him upon the Seminary's Board of Directors." The Florida, Georgia and Alabama Presbyterians are now about to be appealed to by the conservatives to crush out this bold disciple of improved methods, theologically speaking, but Prof. W. is a man of wealth and strong will, beside marked ability, and the zealots who are seeking his destruction will surely fail in their object.

Cancer Cure.

The following remedy for cancer, which was sent to Miss M. T. Shelhamer by a lady in Pleasant Valley, Ia.—who was herself cured of the dreadful disease by faithfully following this rule—and which we printed about six years ago, is now republished in our columns at the request of several correspondents:

REMEDY.

Drink freely of "wild tea," or "red root," made of the leaves of the red root, which grows plentifully in the West. Apply a poultice of the wet leaves, after the steeping of the tea, to the cancer; this will, in a little while, cause a yellow pus to flow. Continue the treatment, and in all cases keep the bowels open with tincture of colchicum.

The above applied to a hard tumor will, in a few weeks, cause it to soften, break and pass off. The grounds used as a poultice should be kept wet with the tea. To prevent return of cancer or tumor, blood purifiers should be taken for some months—such as dandelion, sarsaparilla, or yellow dock teas.

Gerald Massey,

England's "Poet of the People," will speak upon "Man in Search of his Soul—a Journey of Fifty Thousand Years," in Berkeley Hall, Berkeley street, Boston, on Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of the Independent Club. Mr. Massey will give but two lectures during his stay in Boston.

The Age of Reason.

Attention is called to an advertisement in another column, setting forth a reduction in the price of this sterling work by Thomas Paine, which has become an historic volume in America and elsewhere.

☞ "How many Spiritualists are there in Chicago?" the Chicago Times says was asked some years ago in Judge Tuley's court during the trial of a case in which the validity of the transfer of some real estate was concerned. The answer was an indefinite one as to the actual number of those who subscribe to the abstract term, but it contained the astonishing statement that three-fifths of the people of Chicago believe either in the return of spirits from the spiritual to the terrestrial sphere, because they (the people) have become convinced of the fact by manifestations, or they believe that such return is possible. In either case the belief is Spiritualism, though the holder may not call himself a Spiritualist. The same proportion of Spiritualists undoubtedly exists among the populations of all the great cities of America and Europe.

☞ J. J. Morse sends us, from the Pacific slope, a fine photograph (executed at Allen's Studio, San Francisco) wherein are depicted in a manner to suit the most critical taste, a pleasant family group, consisting of Bro. Morse, his estimable wife and charming daughter.

☞ The cause in Washington, D. C., is prospering at present under the ministrations of G. H. Brooks, who speaks there for a two months' engagement. "Pastora's" letter will appear next week.

☞ We learn by a private letter from our good friend Mr. Joseph Kinsey, of Cincinnati, that he is rapidly recuperating from his long illness; this is very gratifying intelligence.

☞ Miss L. Barnicoat is spoken of as a good medical and magnetic healer. She will also answer calls to lecture. Address 175 Tremont street, Boston.

List of Lecturers.

THE BANNER publishes from time to time a list of Spiritualist Lecturers with their post-office addresses attached without charge, and in consideration of our so doing it seems to us they should be more particular than many of them are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Attention to this request is earnestly desired, and should be attended to at once.

Tributes to Mrs. Ada Foye.

During her late visit to Boston and vicinity this noted medium from San Francisco received marked and appreciative attentions wherever she made her appearance—the raps, ballot and psychometric tests, etc., etc., given in her presence creating a profound interest in the matter of inquiry into the spirit-phenomena, which will prove of great benefit in these days when certain recalcitrant mediums are doing their best to injure the cause of demonstrated immortality.

The following accounts of official and friendly recognitions extended to her as an honest and faithful medium and worthy lady, during the last week of her stay in this city, will serve to indicate in degree the state of the public feeling hereabout concerning herself and her work:

A Happy Evening.—The pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. S. Butler was the scene on Monday evening, Oct. 29th, of a pleasant reception to Mrs. Foye. The earlier part of the evening was spent in social conversation; then their guests assembled in the parlor, and were entertained with a reading, followed by an inspirational poem from Miss Emma Nickerson; addresses were made by Mr. J. H. Lewis and Mr. F. D. Edwards of the Phenomena Association; Capt. Richard Holmes, of the Boston Temple Society, and Mr. Thos. Dowling; singing was furnished by Mr. Bert Thayer, Miss Mabel Waite and Mrs. Lizzie Clapp. At a late hour the party broke up, after a very enjoyable and entertaining meeting. T.

Union Reception.—A Reception by representatives of all the Spiritualist Societies of Boston, was extended to Mrs. Foye at Parker Memorial Hall, Tuesday evening, Oct. 30th. Capt. Richard Holmes (of the Berkeley Hall Society) presided—making a felicitous speech of welcome, to which Mrs. Foye feelingly replied.

Master Brice and Miss Banks favored the audience with a piano duet.

Dr. H. B. Storer gave reminiscences in the life of Mrs. Foye, and related his experience in trying to convert the faculty of Yale College with Mrs. F.

J. T. Lillie next gave a finely rendered solo.

Dr. A. H. Richardson followed in his usual frank and warm-hearted way; and Emma Nickerson read a selection.

Mrs. J. T. Lillie made a most eloquent speech, which was well received.

Miss Waite and Mrs. Lake contributed congratulatory remarks, and Miss Gracie Scales read a selection and was encored.

Eben Cobb made a felicitous and pleasing speech; J. H. Lewis addressed the people briefly, as also did J. W. Fletcher. Capt. Holmes closed the reception service with a poem.

Mrs. Foye then gave a very convincing séance, which terminated the exercises of a highly successful occasion.

A Friendly Reunion was held in honor of Mrs. Foye on the evening of Wednesday, Oct. 31st, at the residence of Mrs. M. A. Pope, 375 Columbus Avenue, Boston. The various Spiritualist societies were represented, in the large gathering of friends, by delegations of their officers; all present seemed filled with the kindly and appreciative spirit of the occasion.

Capt. Richard Holmes presided, and the exercises from first to last proved of marked interest; Mr. Lillie and Mrs. E. C. Clapp sang; Mrs. Nickerson, Thomas Dowling, Mrs. W. S. Butler, Eben Cobb, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Dr. J. C. Street, L. L. Whitlock, Dr. A. H. Richardson, Mr. Lewis and John W. Day made pertinent remarks; tests were given by Arthur Hodges; Miss Lucette Webster gave a thrilling recitation; and Mrs. Foye made a brief address, in which she strove to embody her feeling of high appreciation for the kindnesses which had been extended to her since coming to Boston. During her remarks loud raps could be distinctly heard in the room, in seeming endorsement of her statements. A pleasant number in the evening's proceedings was the bringing into the room by little Miss Gertie Paige, of a choice basket of flowers, sent by the publishers of THE BANNER for Mrs. Foye. Mrs. Lillie made the presentation in the form of an improvised poem, and Mrs. Foye received it in a speech in which she bore witness to the great help which THE BANNER had ever extended to herself and all spiritual mediums.

At Lyceum Hall.—By reference to the report of the Spiritualistic Phenomena Association (under meetings in Boston, eighth page) it will be seen that Mrs. W. S. Butler and others honored with friendly gifts the farewell appearance of Mrs. Foye in Boston. Mrs. F. is now in Philadelphia, where she speaks during November—her address for the month being 2209 Thompson street, that city.

The Constitutional Liberty League.

Our readers have been repeatedly warned to be on their guard against schemes to destroy in Massachusetts the liberty of the people, and bring them under the absolute authority of the old medical colleges. The conspiracy against the people has been successful in thirty States and Territories, and the remainder will be captured also if the people are not vigilant. The ultimate purpose of this legislation is to give despotic authority to colleges, and suppress by force all magnetic healing, clairvoyance and mediumship—in short, everything but parchment practice. In several States this has been accomplished by laws which would punish the magnetic healer, and even a common nurse; but such laws are so odious that they are not yet fully enforced. They will be, however, when they have been passed, unless the people most interested come to the rescue.

There has heretofore been no efficient national movement to resist the medical conspiracy; but it is now announced that such a movement has been started in Boston for the restoration of the rights of the people throughout this country, as well as the protection of Massachusetts.

The Society which was incorporated last week is called the NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL LIBERTY LEAGUE, the charter of which was issued to the following associates: Joseph Rodes Buchanan, M. D., Hon. Stephen M. Allen, Prof. R. F. Humiston, Prof. C. W. Emerson, Benj. O. Wilson, Horatio G. Newton, M. D., Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner, Rev. James Kay Applebee, Gardner S. Cheney, John Perrine, M. D., Bertram Sparhawk, J. Winfield Scott, L. A. Hulse. The objects, as stated in the charter and by-laws, are to "educate and enlighten the public mind in reference to human rights and constitutional liberty; to revive and encourage the patriotism, heroism and statesmanship of the founders of this Republic, and to assist in maintaining natural and constitutional rights."

The methods of the League will be "to secure the coöperation of the press, public speakers, political, religious, secular and liberal societies, the establishment and widespread circulation of the National Liberator, as the official organ of this corporation, and the publication and distribution of other literature stimulative of independent thought and philanthropic action."

The first number of the Liberator was issued Nov. 1st. The editorial corps announced is Prof. Jos. Rodes Buchanan, M. D., Boston; Prof. Alexander M. Ross, M. D., F. R. S. L., Toronto, Canada; Prof. Alexander Wilder, M. D., Newark, N. J.; E. B. Foote, M. D., New York; A. O'Leary, M. D., Waverly, Kan.; Perry Engle, M. D., Newton, Ia.; Prof. R. F. Humiston, A. M., Boston; R. C. Flower, Esq., Boston; Rev. James Kay Applebee, Marblehead, Mass. The Liberator is issued monthly at one dollar a year.

The Society proposes to do battle actively against vicious legislation, and also to extend protection over its members when they are unjustly assailed. For these great objects it needs the sinews of war, and several hundred dollars have already been subscribed by its members. It is hoped the Spiritualists and Liberals of this country generally will subscribe liberally to its funds, which will be used in the most efficient manner. The proscriptive medical law of Iowa was broken down by the parties who are now engaged in the National League, and hope to do a national work.

☞ Charles W. Hidden, hypnotic and magnetic healer, of Newburyport, Mass., is under engagement to appear in Augusta, Me., for a brief season beginning with Monday, Nov. 12th. Mr. Hidden has, we are informed, a creditable record as a healer, and is also a medium of acknowledged ability. It is probable that during his engagement the Spiritualists of Augusta will be favored with a public illustration of his abilities as a healer, lecturer and medium.

☞ A goodly delegation of the friends of Mrs. H. W. Cushman, musical medium, celebrated the thirty-seventh anniversary of her development on Saturday evening, Nov. 3d, at her residence in Charlestown District.

☞ The Resolutions passed at the close of the San Bernardino (Cal.) Camp-Meeting (see first page) reached us too late for this issue. Will appear next week.

THE CAUSE AND THE FOX.

Our Cause is constructed on heaven's own plan;
In it is no shadow of blight or of ban;
To its work it 's been true since it early began.
But "Maggie"——!

Our Cause needs no tricksters; but honest and just
Should its mediums be, without shadow or rust;
And in them may the race of humanity trust.
But "Maggie"——!

Our Cause, in its soulful and dignified way,
In the hearts of the masses is growing each day;
And whenever it speaks it has something to say.
But "Maggie"——!

Our Cause is a friend we can take by the hand
In a million fair homes through the breadth of the land;
A something our love and respect to command!
But "Maggie"——! JUSTICE.

The cabalistic sign "O. The "O. K." was too much, however, for Black Hawk, and even at that early day it quickly came to mean literally what it is accepted as meaning to-day—that it was proper and in good form.

Mr. Isaac B. Rich, the business manager of the BANNER OF LIGHT establishment, is also the proprietor of the Hollis Street Theatre, the prettiest and most recherche of all the theatres in the city. Under its excellent management it is an unqualified success. One of the most generous specimens of practical benevolence on record is the gift of $1,000,000, by Daniel Hand, to the American Missionary Society, for the education of the colored youth of the South. Mr. Hand is eighty-seven years old, and was in business in Charleston when the war broke out. Being a loyalist he came North, leaving his business in charge of his clerk, one Williams. Supposing his property had been confiscated, he made no inquiries about it for twenty years, and was greatly surprised when Williams reported his trust worth $2,000,000. They divided equally, and now the coming generation of blacks will reap the benefits of it.

THE TEMPEST OF LIFE.

I know not when, on the heaven-blue sea,
The boat of Death shall be launched for me;
When the heart shall falter, the brain shall reel,
And the active fingers cease to feel:
But I know sometime on the other shore
The bark shall be anchored forevermore.

I know not how the change shall be,
Through what black waves of misery,
What clouds shall gather, or storm-waves beat,
Ere the outward voyage shall be complete;
But I know when the pain of the voyage is o'er,
I shall pass through the tempest nevermore.

A Mediumistic Wedding.

An interesting and lengthy report is given in the San Francisco Chronicle of Oct. 16th, of a marriage in that city the day previous, at which Mrs. J. J. Whitney, the well-known medium, officiated. The contracting parties were Augustus Hatch, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Jennie Mead, of Illinois. As the ceremony proceeded, after a prayer, "a peculiar change," says the report, was noticeable upon the officiating medium's features. Her voice came in low steady accents, as though repeating the words from dictation. They were the words of the Episcopalian service, with some few changes.

Mrs. Whitney held the wedding ring in her right hand, and paused. Then she slowly reached out her hand to give the ring to Mr. Hatch.

"There is a spirit present," the medium said. "It is that of a tall, handsome man, robed in the vestments of an Episcopalian priest."

Mr. Hatch asked if Mrs. Whitney could tell the name of this spirit. She did not reply at once, but in a moment said:

"I see the name, but it is indistinct. The letters are before me. They are clearer now. W-i-l-l-i-a-m; yes, that is it, William. It is not clear. Yes, E. Now it is all plain—William E. Coleman."

Mr. Hatch was deeply affected.

"Do you know," he finally said, "that that is the name of an uncle of mine, who was the rector of an Episcopalian church in Massachusetts?"

The Chronicle says that this is the sixth wedding at which Mrs. Whitney has officiated, and in each case the service has been different from the others. She follows no regular ritual, but acts and speaks from inspiration.

Other Spiritualist Meetings.

Elsewhere will be found some of the reports of local meetings which from week to week are printed in THE BANNER. The extra space which we have this week devoted to the Fox matter necessitates that we give the following, received at later date, but brief mention:

HAVERHILL, BRITTAN HALL.—"E. P. H." informs us that the services at this place last Sunday were conducted by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., and were attended by the usual full audiences. Mrs. Manchester will occupy the platform at Brittan Hall again next Sunday.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.—Mrs. A. E. Cunningham spoke and gave tests here on Sunday last. She will be here again Jan. 6th. Next Sunday Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn will be the speaker. Since last Sunday this Society has lost another of its members—Mrs. John Mulchahey, who was a firm believer in the Spiritual Philosophy.

AMERICA HALL, 724 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were held here Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale chairman. Large audiences were in attendance throughout the day, manifesting profound interest, songs by C. Payson Longley adding much to the pleasure.

THE SPIRITUAL TEMPLE FRATERNITY SCHOOL, BOSTON, held a well-attended session last Sabbath. Its services consist every Sunday of singing, invocation and reading of responses, followed by the object lesson and lesson of the day. "Charity" was the theme on the 4th inst. The object lesson next Sunday will be "Truth"; and the lesson of the hour: "What is True Religion?"

LOWELL, MASS.—Ed. S. Varney informs us that Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant spoke for the Society in this place last Sunday, with good success. Mrs. E. C. Kimball, Mrs. Lizzie Manchester, Mrs. Juliette Yeaw and others are to follow.

ALBANY, N. Y.—J. D. Chism, jr., Secretary, informs us (in a letter which we shall publish next week) that Frank T. Ripley spoke for the Society on Nov. 4th, with excellent results.

To Inquirers.

☞ As numerous letters are often directed to this office from distant points inquiring as to who are the best mediums to apply to for spiritual information, we take this method of replying to all such that, while we believe the mediums advertising in our columns are reliable, yet we cannot recommend any special medium to any particular person, as the medium who may satisfy one investigator may not be able to meet the requirements of another. It is best, therefore, for each investigator to visit such mediums as he may believe possess the power of bringing him into communication with the spirit-world, and thus judge of their claims for himself.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 9th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Supreme Being, thou Eternal Spirit of all Goodness, thou Soul of all Intelligence and Wisdom, we turn to thee with hearts receptive to thy teachings, with souls expansive to thy ministrations and thy blessing. We recognize thee as the source of all power and acknowledge the supremacy of thy law, and bow down in adoration when we number up the many benedictions, the glorious experiences, and even count the stern disciplines of life, knowing that these have all been vouchsafed to humanity for a wise purpose, even for the unfoldment and the development of the soul, the mind, and the entire man.

The fool hath said in his heart, "There is no God," but the wise man, looking abroad upon the universe, recognizing the display of intelligence, the hand of wisdom, of power, and of infinite law, will bow his head in silence, even though thou shalt be nameless to his breast. We cannot say there is no God, for we believe in an intelligence who is the infinite sum and substance of all existence, and so we turn to thee, our Father, recognizing thee indeed as a parent of goodness, one who can gather up every human life in its broad embrace, and behold there shall be none lost. We return our thanks to thee for all things that are ours; we ask the divine protection of thy angel hosts to rest upon every one of thy children—upon the sad, the lowly and the suffering, as well as upon those high in place and power; and may we feel the electric chain of eternal love binding every heart, until all can sing grand songs of fraternity and of peace, forevermore. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We are now ready for your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By "Onyx," Boston.] Why is a suicide more harshly judged, and in a worse condition in spirit-life, than is a murderer?

ANS.—Your correspondent takes a strange position concerning the adjudication and judgment of the spirit-world, since there are none in the spirit-world who judge either the suicide or the murderer more harshly than each individual will judge himself. There may be one spirit so crude and unformed, so illy developed in spiritual powers that he may not be able to feel the enormity of the offence he has committed against God in the deprival of a fellow-creature of the physical body; such a man, known to you as a murderer, will not at first—perhaps not for some time—be able to understand his position in the other life, and therefore he may not harshly judge himself and his past doings, but may be so depraved in motive and deed as to delight in the acts he has done that offended his fellows, therefore there will be no harsh judgment of himself in his own mind, however much others may condemn him; yet such a spirit as this, unformed, depraved and crude as he may be, must eventually come to an understanding of himself and of his condition.

The sunlight of heaven, shining down upon the frozen earth in the winter time, may not have much effect upon it; but as the spring approaches and new conditions arise, the sunlight still streaming nearer and nearer to the frozen locality, will eventually thaw out the frost and release those atoms which have been enchained, so that a condition of mildness, of genial warmth, of fertility, will ensue. So the sunlight of heavenly love, streaming down upon a human heart, may not for a time have much effect upon it, so encased are its sensibilities in those crude, depraved conditions, which arise from various causes connected with earthly life; yet, as the sunshine continues to pour down upon the human being, as the soul is brought into closer rapport with the magnetic qualities of spiritual life, the warmth, the light will eventually take effect, and you will discover that the heart is thawing, its sensibilities becoming more keen, and the man is getting alive to his surroundings, until at length he comes to understand his needs as they really are. When this awakening comes, this spirit of whom we speak will realize what he has done; the enormity of his offence will press upon him, his conscience will become aroused and the lash of remorse make its sting felt. Who shall say that the man is not harshly judged, not by any tribunal or sphere of adjudication, but by his own soul? Having come face to face with himself, his spiritual faculties being aroused, he will know neither rest nor peace until he has repented deeply of his sin, and has sought to atone for it in beneficent works and ways unto others.

Who judges the suicide harshly? we would ask your correspondent. No one has a right to pass judgment upon the soul, that, tortured perhaps by conditions which it could not understand, deprived itself willfully of its material covering and its earthly experience. Only the soul itself may pass judgment. And if the man who has committed suicide, standing outside of the physical body, discovers that he has been weak and should have remained on earth, bearing its discipline and reaping its experiences—if he feels that he has cut himself off from that which might have proved advantageous or useful to him—if he discovers that he has not opened for himself avenues that are better, brighter and higher, for advancement, for growth and experience than he held on earth, and finds that there are conditions, tendencies and inclinations still drawing him earthward, interests connected with others to hold him to the physical life, that he is still tethered to its outward surroundings, although parted from the physical body, the man will deem himself not only a coward, but a very foolish person, for having committed the suicidal deed. He passes this judgment upon himself, and it is the harshest decree that will be given to him. This man will seek, undoubtedly, to rectify, as far as he can, any mistake he has made; he will endeavor to bring his influence in such ways that it may be exercised for good in connection with others, and he may outwork plans and labors which he left unfinished here, so that he, thus fulfilling his earthly mission, may arise above his unhappy state to one of beatitude and peace.

Q.—[By W. C. Ralphs, Cocoa, Fla.] While sitting quietly in the evening, I perceive flashes of light, and masses of what I may term ethereal-ized matter, among which are dark spots one-half to three-fourths of an inch in diameter; while during all the day I notice four distinct forms in front of me. Please inform me what all this denotes.

A.—It would be well for your correspondent first to learn whether he is not the victim of some physical disturbance of the nervous structure, and if he satisfies himself that his physique is sound in every direction, then he may conclude that he is passing through a process of mediumistic development. It is often the case, when one is developing as a clairvoyant, that he sees flashes of light, and masses of fine matter of a vaporous appearance, these being the results of operations upon his clairvoyant system by attendant spirits who wish to develop his powers. Again, there are those passing through mediumistic development for the materialization of spirit forms who perceive these same appearances, which are emanations from the magnetic elements which spirits use in presenting temporary materialized forms to mortal sight. Undoubtedly, if your correspondent sits quietly by himself, or with a few harmonious friends, at stated intervals, seeking the presence of good spirits, and providing them with favorable conditions for the development of mediumship, by coming to the séance-room in a congenial and pleasant frame of mind, free from disturbance and anxiety, he will, in time, learn what these peculiar appearances mean, and we should judge that after a while there will come to him evidences of mediumistic development which may be utilized for his own and others' good in time to come.

Q.—[By Mrs. W. Miller.] Where is the spiritual world? and how far distant is it supposed to be?

A.—We have replied to a query similar to this but recently. We will briefly say, in this connection, that it is difficult to give the distance and locality of the spirit-world, as there are worlds without number located in space. That portion of the spiritual world belonging to this planet is but a counterpart of this earth which you inhabit; it lies contiguous to this same sphere of being, and indeed many of its inhabitants are here with you, side by side, mingling with your occupations, passing to and fro with you daily, so that it may be said you are not separated from them.

Your correspondent may inquire: "If this be so, are these spirits who dwell near to us, within the atmosphere of this planet, in homes and habitations of their own, or do they dwell in our homes of earth?" There are spirits who do not leave their earthly habitations, but still continue with their friends in the mortal. They may say to you, when they return through mediumistic sources, that we have our homes; we have our dwellings, and we have our occupations, all of which is very true, but they are in connection with yourselves, and are not independent of your own lives. There are other spirits who will make the same statement to you. But that which they possess in the spiritual atmosphere is not the home in which you dwell, nor are they confined to the same conditions which influence your lives; they have dwelling-places of their own, not seen by mortal eyes, not to be handled by the physical touch, yet real and substantial to the spirits, and as useful, in every respect, as are the objects which you handle and the homes that you inhabit.

There are other spirit-worlds in space—many of them, more than you can count—each one peopled by its own spiritual intelligences, each one affording conditions for the unfoldment of experience and of human life, each one presenting to its inhabitants those objective forms of existence that are useful in the expression of thought and energy, and also those forms of subjective life calculated to awaken thought within the mind. Each of those spirit-worlds revolves within its own orbit, no doubt; so far as we know, this is so, and each one may afford to those who come to it every opportunity for gaining knowledge and reaping experience which is required by the advancing spirit.

Q.—How are so many wonderful cures effected, as reported, through "faith-cure"?

A.—To come into that condition of mind known as "the exercise of faith," is to come into a receptive, passive condition, placing reliance upon higher things than outward conditions, and not paying so much attention to the ills, the ailments, the anxieties of self. This state of mind affords opportunities and conditions to external, intelligent influences, for the impartation of such magnetic qualities as may be required by the patient in regaining strength and activity of mind or body.

Undoubtedly those who pass into this negative, receptive condition, must be in sympathy with him who is known as the healer, and this healer must also be in harmony with his patient; and if he be one through whom and from whom magnetic elements may pass—elements not only of the physical body and atmosphere, but also of the spiritual intelligences who attend him—then will there be an impartation of strength or healthful vigor from the one to the other. Thus we account for the cures effected in this way; and such cures are effected in various quarters at this time, as they have been for many years, by the exercise of that element in the human mind known as faith, because by its exercise there comes an influence which enables the departed intelligences of another life to exert their power upon those in need; and not only this, but the more positive elements which may be aroused in the human operator are brought into subjection; there passes from him without resistance the magnetic element needed by his patient to restore equilibrium to the circulation of the nervous energy in the body. When the nervous forces are disturbed, or the circulation is unequal, the physical system will be disorganized, to an extent; it will suffer pain and weakness, and to restore these there must be an application of force silent, unnoticed though this circulation may be, it will perform the work necessary for the recuperation of the physical health.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 12th, 1888.

Reuben H. Broughton.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to speak in your Circle-Room, Mr. Chairman, for I have been here many times, hoping to send a few crumbs of comfort to those in mortal life. Dead! oh! how often do we hear that word spoken which never should be uttered, and how much satisfaction it gives us, as we are starting out in the new life, to return and assure our dear ones of our continued life and our constant love. I had no doubt of the immortality of the soul. I knew we should find our own again, for I learned a great deal of spirit-return during my mortal life. I was not far from seventy-nine years of age when I was called higher.

I would ask those that are left to try and come into communication with us, if possible. I am Reuben H. Broughton, of Titusville, Pa. Your good paper reaches some of my friends.

William Todd.

I know I am in the good city of Boston, Mr. Chairman, and I am glad to be able to speak for myself. Caroline is with me to-day, and we are happy together in the spirit-home. It is many years since William Todd stepped from the mortal life into the immortal, and cast off the old form and put on the new. I have not been idle. I have found a work to do and have been given power to do it. You little understand, mortals, how much help you may receive from those who have passed over, and how thin the veil is which hides us from your view. I well remember many in this city; many, too, whom I knew have joined me on the heavenly side.

As I look in the audience I find two who I think will recognize me, and I know I shall not be entirely forgotten in New Bedford or in Braintree.

Willie Damon.

Oh! the pretty flowers! Can I have two of those pink flowers, one for papa and one for mamma? The Spirit Chairman said I could speak if my tongue didn't get to running too fast. I've been in this meeting, oh! so many times, and grandma says it is just like going to church when we come here. Sometimes I go home where the people are, but they do n't see me. They can't see me, grandpa says, but sometime they 'll come where we are, then they 'll see us plainly.

I lived in Cummington, Conn. My name is Willie Damon. Why! there 's Eddie Johnson [referring to a spirit]. We have a beautiful home, but we do n't have to stay there all the time; we can come to earth just when we like; it 's only a little way. Then we go to school; it 's a spiritual education we get over here. I went into Guild Hall two times, and the medium just spoke of me, but did n't let me talk any. I 'd rather talk a little myself.

We thank the people for the flowers. Sometimes the children come, and they are a little mite diffident, and when they see the flowers they forget it. I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for letting me speak, and writing it down, so that mamma and papa may know I aint dead.

Hannah Humphrey.

I would not have you mortals think that I was a stranger to what is termed Spiritualism, for it was my guide and comfort for many years, and I was never ashamed to own that I believed in spirit return. For sixty-eight years I dwelt in the mortal form, and what I learned here has been of great benefit to me since crossing the portal called death. Oh! how sweet it is to find the dear ones waiting on that blissful shore.

How kind my dear daughter and Edward were to me! They did all that willing hands could do. I had no fault to find, I had no regrets as I looked back; as the pale boatman came for me, I was ready to step into the boat, and was rowed safely across to where the loved ones stood to greet me.

I found that it was the life on earth that built the home yonder. Many times, when I have seen the suffering and needy, my spirit has gone out to them, and I did what I thought I could, although I would have liked to do more, and I find that it has helped to make my home more beautiful. Dear mortals, live not for self alone, but for each other. Drop a kind word wherever you can; do a kind act whenever there is a channel open for you, and in spirit-life your home will be much more beautiful and bright.

I have felt that the time would come for me to speak. My name is Hannah Humphrey, and my home was in Portland, Me.

Edward W. Seaburn.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to introduce myself to you as from New Bedford. I think I shall be remembered there as Edward W. Seaburn, and also at the old camp-ground, where I loved to go.

It is but a little while since my dear wife, Martha, joined me in spirit-life. We were separated only a short time. How little did she think that before another season came she would be with me; or when she went for a short visit to New York, it was to be the last of earth. Yet she tells me she had felt, for some time, that it was but a little way to me, and not long before she should join the happy spirit-band.

Gardner, remember, dear boy, we do not forget you, we do not leave you. I know you made home pleasant for the mother, and watched eagerly at the time of her going out. Oh! how grand is the union in spirit-life, as we come together, not for a month or a year, but to be forever where no more parting is known, and where no heaviness creeps over the spirit, but all is harmony, peace, and good cheer.

I am satisfied with the home that I have on the spirit side; but I trust I shall make it more beautiful.

As I look down the aisle to-day, I see little children thronging in, laden with beautiful flowers for each one.

How anxiously, friends, do you look for a word from the spirit side. We often hear it said: "No one comes to me." And yet there is not an individual in this room but that some dear one is attracted to. Although you may not get a message audibly, they are here, and come into sympathy with you; the room is crowded with what you call invisibles, in the spirit-form, and all are attracted here for a purpose, to help you, to give you magnetism, and to receive from you. How much it helps us when we find a harmonious influence among mortals in your circle-room to-day.

I do appreciate this opportunity of speaking, for I know that the dear ones I have left on earth will be anxious to catch a little crumb from the spirit side. I would like them to know that Martha was borne so close to me that I reached out my hand to receive her as she entered spirit-life. Edward W. Seaburn, of New Bedford. Martha passed away in New York.

Susan Cordwell.

Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with your city, and as I look upon one face and another, I see a resemblance to some who have passed over. It is many years since I entered spirit-life, and I have often visited this circle-room, yet this is the first time I have been able to speak. I would like Maria to know I have gained power to control, and so also has Aunt Susan, for whom I was named. My name is Susan Cordwell. I lived in Boston; my husband's name was George W. Cordwell.

Lily Allen.

I was borne away to spirit-life when I was a mere child, and have grown to womanhood there. I have no remembrance of earthly life, but have been educated on the spirit side, and have learned to know the dear ones that are left. My own dear earth-mother yet dwells in the flesh. Father has often said: "How much we missed you, darling, when they bore you away, a little child."

How little did you understand then, dear mother, for what purpose I was taken. It may have been a stepping-stone to you to learn something of spirit-return, for I know you are now seeking avenues for such knowledge, and that dear ones come to you in the silent hours of the night.

Grandma sends greetings to you to-day, dear mother. Father is present, and says he may not speak to-day, but in the near future he will be able to give something to you. I know you look eagerly for a word from the spirit-land.

I love to repeat the name of mother, although I never was permitted to use it here. It is the dearest name that can be spoken. I came frequently into the home before father left it. You did not understand much of spirit-return at that time, but since father has crossed over you are trying to learn more and more, and also to educate yourself spiritually, which will be of great service to you when you come to us. I know many times you feel lonely, but the blessed angels come to help you by day and by night; then, dear mother, be comforted, be cheerful; we want you to be happy. Years ago I spoke the name of mother, and it has always been sweet to me.

My name is Lily Allen. My mother will understand, but she is not in the meeting.

Olive Cummings.

I have not much to say, Mr. Chairman, yet the desire comes ever to the spirit, as it enters the atmosphere of earth, to speak a word of love to some dear ones. I have heard mortals ask why their friends could not come as well as others. There is no law against it, but we cannot always gain power to take advantage of such conditions as may be offered. I saw the way open for me to-day, and I gladly availed myself of the opportunity.

I have wanted to come into communication with James, but have not been permitted to. I know he may ask me if I materialized. Yes, James, but imperfectly; there was a lack of harmony in the circle, and I could not make my form perfect. In some respects you thought it looked like Olive; in others you said no, and went away with many doubts. Now, dear husband, while you dwell in the mortal, doubts will come to you; but I would ask you to use your own reason in regard to this. I did come, I was there, I did the best I could under the circumstances.

Now let me ask a favor of you: Go somewhere in the State of Maine to a medium, through whom I may speak with you privately. I know of the changes that have taken place since I passed over. I know and well understand of one that you desired to come into the home, but failed. The darling little boy—I ask the angels so earnestly to watch over him. I feel that in time they will give him to me, for he is not strong; the other may be left to be companionable to you, James. I feel you need them both, but I see the frailty of the little one.

I am happy in my own spirit home, but as I come to earth my sympathy goes out for you. Oh! if I could only help you with my hands! But I work no more with them, but with the spirit continually. My home was in Hallowell, Me. My name is Olive Cummings, and my husband's name, James C. Cummings. I have two dear boys with him.

John Chase.

I feel that my dear ones will be glad to know that I live, and have gained the power to speak in your meeting. How grand it is for us to realize that we are not forgotten. I am confident there are some who will remember John Chase. The dear ones yet left will not fail to recall the time when I passed over; I was well into years. The spirit as it enters the other life is not old, have you chase away despondent feeling. I do but with many others; for we have power to visit other homes, and we form acquaintances in the spirit-life as readily as you do here. It is but a little time since I passed out, yet I find it is my privilege to come and give a short message.

Although many miles intervene between where I passed away and your dear circle-room, I have been here many times. I was no stranger to these things. I find now that this spirit-communion is a great help to us. I would ask all to be patient with the instruments we use, for mediums are very sensitive beings—they have so much to contend with. Just think, for a moment, what it must be for one spirit to use another's organism, and you will understand that it taxes them very much indeed at times.

I am happy in my spirit-home. I would like to say to Brother Colby: Be patient, for there is always a silver lining to every cloud. He will well remember who is speaking here, for he has often wondered in his own spirit why I did not have something to say. Think not for one moment, dear friends, that I have not been attracted here. I have been, and I have learned much by hearing others speak. I know you come here with a good feeling of harmony, trying to give out your magnetism to the spirits, as they need it so much, and as you give to us so will we give back to you.

Dear mortals, the veil is thin, how very thin between us and you, and when the angel of change comes, how quickly is it torn asunder, and you behold the spirit-side. The beauties of spirit-life I cannot express to you any more than can others who have tried to do so. I am grateful for the opportunity and power to speak. My father also sends greetings to the dear friends of THE BANNER, for this is where we all love to come, although we are in the immortal realm while you dwell in the mortal. [To the Chairman:] The gentleman said I could speak just as soon as the lady had stopped speaking. She 's a lovely, lovely lady. She used to let the spirits come a great many times; she told me that, and I know she would n't tell me a story. I came here two times before, and once the gentleman said there was n't any more time.

All the time is ours where we are. We know you have to keep looking at your watches, and the clocks, to see what time it is; we do n't do that, because we do n't have to hurry. There 's a doctor man here on the spirit side, and he goes down and stands by an elderly gentleman in the audience, and puts his hand on his head, and says to him, God bless you. That gentleman can't hear quite good, and the doctor says he will come and help him. Tecumseh also comes to that gentleman, the good red chief from the summer-land. Metooka also comes.

Oh! the lovely flowers! One lady brought some of them, did n't she? She 's a nice lady; she do n't never be cross. I can see her spirit when she comes here.

I lived in Burlington, Vt., where there 's lots of snow when it comes time for it. My papa's name is John Metcalf; did you know him? When you come to us I 'm going to take you right around and show you my father, and I 'll bring you as many flowers as I can in my white apron.

My name is Annie Metcalf. My father is with me, but he aint here to-day; if he was, I guess he 'd tell me not to talk so fast. I was in a hurry; I was afraid they were going to shut the door; but the spirit-man, the minister-man, says he do n't shut the door on the spirit that is just coming. He 's a lovely minister; he comes to make you all feel better. The doctor-man wants the gentleman to come again some day—the one that can't hear good.

You 're a nice man. Do n't you never speak cross to the children when you meet them in the street, but just say, "How do you do, dear?" That will be laid up for you on the spirit side; and you 'll feel happier when you go to bed. Sometimes children have dirty faces, and then you can say, "Now, dear, run right home and wash your face."

I 'm glad I came here to-day. Can I come again to-morrow? Grandpa says I always was a chatterbox. I guess he do n't know what kind of a box that is.

I did like the flowers; but grandma did n't allow me to pick 'em; she said it would spoil the looks of the garden. Where we are we can pick just as many as we want to.

My teacher is Alice Cary. She 's a lovely lady, and she 's got a sister Phebe. When she teaches me, she says I must n't talk too fast. I won't learn my lessons if I do. I 'm going now. Good-bye.

Nancy Harrington.

God bless the children! We should be patient and lenient with them. The dear little child was so grateful for the privilege of speaking here, she came in with so much animation, her whole spirit in a glow, that she could n't tell half her story. The flowers attracted her attention. Oh! how good it is that the Great Spirit put it into the hearts of mortals to bring flowers here—they are so sweet to look upon and the perfume is so good.

How beautiful to know that heaven is composed in part of the children. I have wanted to say a good many times when I have heard a mortal speak to a child in this way: "Oh! go away! do n't trouble me," stop, dear mortal, you know not how it grates upon the spirit of the dear little one. Speak gently, speak calmly, for you would not wish to give that little spirit pain. You know not how much happiness you may give by a kind and gentle word. Also, let me remind you that in childhood the disposition is forming.

Before I left the earth-life, which was about three years since, I felt that I could almost see across the beautiful river, and I know now that I really did catch a glimpse of the dear ones who had gone before. For many years did I feel that I held sweet communion with the loved ones who had crossed over, and they have told me since how much they did come to help me and give out their influence.

I would thank the dear friends for the flowers they brought that were wreathed around the casket, at the time they laid away my mortal form. I look back to that period, and thank them all for the kindnesses to me. They will say: Did I attend my own funeral? Yes, dear mortals, we are permitted to attend the funeral and to be cognizant of what is passing, even to hear the voices. I can see plainly as I look now through the spirit-eye of the instrument, and I see you all here perfectly. I would also thank Mr. Foster for his kindness to me, and for what was spoken afterward. I lived in Providence, R. I. My name is Nancy Harrington.

Lida Will be glad to hear from father. I would much rather speak in private, but when not permitted to do so we must come publicly. I feel that what I have said will reach Etta.

Lida would ask me, I know, if her own dear earth-mother is with me. Yes, dear child, she is, but is not able to speak to-day. I know of the anxiety that comes to you, but I would have you chase away despondent feeling. I do not like to see you unhappy, and I perceive it is of detriment to your health. So do try to shake it off and look on the brighter side, my child, for in due time you will be with us. I can't talk with William as I would like to, because he do n't believe anything in Spiritualism. Dear child, do n't press the matter. In the angels' own good time the scales will be dropped from his eyes, and he may behold more than he has thought possible. At times now he cannot shake off the feeling that, perhaps, they may come. He argues like many others: "If they do come, why not directly to me, instead of through a stranger?" The dear boy does not understand the laws by which spirit-communication is governed.

When I was on earth I knew naught of spirit-return. I did not trouble myself about it, although many times I heard it spoken about. I found I had a great deal to learn, on crossing over, that I might have learned.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to have this message sent to Effingham Falls, N. H., to Mrs. Etta Cook. I passed away in Portsmouth.

Georgie Johnson.

I desire that my friends may know I am not so far away but what I often come into the home. I have many times been into the meetings, in Springfield, this State, and have enjoyed listening to what the mediums might say upon the platform after they got through with what they call a lecture. Sometimes I got tired waiting. I was glad to hear them call out the names, and once they spoke mine, but that was all. We would like to talk a little besides. Grandfather says it is just like passing you a plate of fruit, and you look at it, but do n't taste it: that 's the way it is with us when we go into the meeting and the medium only calls our names. I suppose it is what you call giving out proof to relatives that we live, although it is n't so much satisfaction to us. I was in your last meeting when the little lady was here, but the Spirit Chairman said: "Not to-day." Then I drifted away; I did n't stay till the meeting was over.

Oh! the lovely, lovely flowers! We thank you people for bringing them here. Grandma Johnson says they are painted by the finger of God—and I think it must be so, they are so perfect.

When I went into the spirit-life I found I must go to school. A very kind lady was appointed to teach me, and that I was not to forget the dear ones of earth, was a part of my spiritual education.

Grandfather sends greetings to the home; grandmother, too, and Aunt Sarah. I feel grateful that I have had a chance to speak a few words and give my name, Georgie Johnson. Eddie is here, too. I lived in Springfield, Mass.

Annie Page Celey.

Grandfather lately crossed over, and he said to me: "Annie, do n't forget to give greetings from us to the dear ones, Aunt Katie and Aunt Dora." I know you will say: "Annie, you promised to give a message sometime"; and the door has been opened to-day.

I cannot reach father or mother, as they will not receive me. Not because they do not love me, for their poor hearts were nearly broken when Annie went away. Oh! mother and father, I wish you would learn a little of the spirit side while here, but I know you will think it is wrong to call those back again who have passed from mortal life. God gives us the power to visit you often. Mother, in the hush of midnight and in the twilight, do I come easily and quietly. I would like Eddie to know that I come home.

I know you will ask if I am happy. Yes, dear mother. I call it heaven, because it is a place of happiness and harmony. Dear father, do not let the early teachings hold you at this time, for you should learn something further. I know you would not tell me anything wrong. Grandfather says that before he passed out he saw grandmother and myself waving our hands for him to come up higher. And, father, you thought then that grandfather was not just in his right mind. But he was sound, and saw us as plainly as you can look on mother's face, for we came to help dear grandfather over.

To-day I speak for him; and dear Aunt Dora I speak also for Uncle Augustus, for he tells me to give love to you and Frankie. Oh! Frankie, do n't say your father do n't come to earth when he visits you so often. I would like, Mr. Chairman, for you to announce my name as Annie Page Celey. I lived in Salem, N. H. Celey is my name by marriage.

Ellen Johnson.

I knew not of spirit return when I passed out, but in a short time dear ones gathered around me, and began to tell of how much happiness they gained by entering earth-life and speaking to their friends. How little did I understand of what I was to find. The beauties of spirit-life can never be pictured; we may show the outline, but that only faintly.

How glad was I when I saw Mary coming toward me, and in a few moments Robert also.

Clark, do not take any notice of what the girls may say—Lucy or Ellen; it only shows their ignorance when they throw the paper aside, exclaiming, "Sheer nonsense." Do not let it wound your feelings, dear child, for you are in the right channel, and as your father and mother have spoken to you, it is true that they live and have the power to visit you. Clark, Aunt Ellen has been to you many times; and when you feel you stand alone, because I know the children all go against you on this subject, remember, dear boy, you are in the right channel.

I lived in Manchester, N. H., and my name is Ellen Johnson. Many of the dear ones do not countenance these messages, and some do. You will find it so throughout the land.

George Frost.

On coming in contact with the earth and mortals I take on the sensation with which I passed over. I know my dear wife has watched for a message from me, and has turned your paper over many times to see if I have not gained power to speak. For some reasons I have not spoken. I care not to speak in public; but as I find I cannot come in a private way to you, dear wife, I take this opportunity to say a few words, so that when there is an opportunity you would grasp it, for I so much prefer to come in private. I knew not of spirit-communion when I was here. I was engaged in a manufacuring business which largely absorbed my time and attention.

I would like this message to reach my own dear one in Providence, R. I., for I know she is there a part of the time; and the children, who do not give themselves much trouble to learn of spirit-return—I would like them to learn of it, as it would be a help to them when they cross over. I find if I had given more thought to the spiritual side of life instead of so much to the material, it would have been better for me, but we do n't wish to recall the past.

My business was located in Newmarket, N. H. I passed away in New York, as I was called there by affairs concerning the Company. As I made the attempt to step upon the boat I made a misstep and went down. That is all I can remember. When the sad tidings came to the dear one, it was hard to bear, but when she learned a little of spirit-return it became a great solace to her to know that she could communicate with me, which she has done several times, and I feel that the time is not far distant when I shall hold communion with her again. My name, Mr. Chairman, was George Frost. I would like very much to reach M. J. Frost of Providence, R. I.

Esther Knox.

Loved ones are waiting for a word from me. Some will receive it kindly, and some will hardly glance at the message, for so we find it in the homes of many, not only with my relatives but with many others; for we have power to visit other homes, and we form acquaintances in the spirit-life as readily as you do here. It is but a little time since I passed out, yet I find it is my privilege to come and give a short message.

Although many miles intervene between where I passed away and your dear circle-room, I have been here many times. I was no stranger to these things. Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

MILTON EMERSON.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Sept. 8th is a message from MILTON EMERSON, which was recognized and read by his friends here and at White Cloud, Kan. We were glad to hear from him, and hope he will soon favor us with another communication. We consider this an excellent test, as he promised us at our séances to communicate with us through THE BANNER. We would also be glad to hear from any of our friends who have gone before. Fraternally yours,

C. C. HOLLEBAUGH.

Falls City, Neb., Oct. 29th, 1888.

MRS. SARAH E. WEYBURN.

In your issue of Nov. 3d I see a communication from the above-named, with whom, when a State missionary in Michigan, in 1868-9, I was well acquainted, and more fully so in the winter of '69, while editing The Present Age, then published at Kalamazoo, where Dr. and Mrs. Weyburn resided. The communication is correct in its statements so far as I know, and is characteristic of the lady, who was a warm-hearted woman and a zealous and devoted Spiritualist. I am glad to be able to testify to the correctness and great value of THE BANNER'S Message Department. [1]

[From the Wide Awake.]

THE RAMONA INDIAN GIRLS' SCHOOL.

As it Is at Present.

BY HORATIO O. LADD.

[Conclusion.]

They often use their English songs in their Apache plays, and the older ones often admonish in English the little ones to go to sleep: "Shut your peepers now—tuck in—go to sleep." They like to indulge in Apache to describe the exciting incidents of the playground, but if overheard they are required at once, while the excitement remains, to tell the story in English. At first this is very hard for them, but soon the Indian sign-language of arms, fingers, feet and every feature is vividly illustrating the story as told in English to the amused listeners.

The pupils are from the first obedient, quiet and orderly in school, very tractable, modest and self-respecting. Though they are the children of barbarous tribes they seldom quarrel among themselves, and have never come to blows in their greatest provocations, though they have once showed the power of the Apache tongue in "calling names." The younger girls follow the example of older ones with great docility. What they say in their Apache tongue and how they regard the life around them, is of course not easily known.

They have, however, a ready appreciation of the change in their condition. They say that all the best things and people come from the East; "What shall we do," they were heard to say to one another recently, "if we have to go back to live in tepee and wear blanket?"

To this one of them replied excitedly, "If we have tepee, we will have it clean. We will have blanket and clothes clean, if we do not have houses like these."

They exhibit a kindness of feeling which would be called, in any other children than Indians, "true politeness." If their teacher, of whom they are fond, is seen getting fuel, one or two of the Apache boys admitted to the school run and take it from her hands, saying, "I too," "I too." A short time ago this teacher received the unexpected tidings of the death of her brother. It came to her but an hour before the opening of school. When it became known to the Ramona girls their sad countenances showed their quick sympathy with their teacher, who tried to perform her usual duties. Soon it was evident that every word and act was thoughtfully expressing the tenderness of these little Apaches. Everything was put and kept in place. Every lesson was learned and recited with special care. There was little intrusion of needless questions or noise. The work of their sad teacher was made light in every way. She noticed all this with surprise, and asked the matrons at noon if they had instructed the girls thus to act. They knew nothing about it. That evening a matron learned, by close questioning, that the four older girls (from twelve to thirteen years old) had called the little ones aside that morning, told them of their teacher's sorrow, and that they must not trouble her in any way that day.

Some white men and women say that such children should be exterminated, that they are only fit to die. Is it quite true that the children of these people, who thus condemn them, show a better right to live?

November Magazines.

THE CENTURY.—Passing the many attractive features that mark the opening pages of this, the initial number of the thirty-seventh volume of this popular monthly, the reader will naturally first turn to the new portion of George Kennan's Siberian Exile narrative, given as the result of a fifteen thousand mile journey and the exploration of every important prison and mine in Siberia, and interviews with hundreds of the political prisoners of Russia—a series of papers that is attracting the attention of the civilized world. The special subject in this issue is "Political Exiles and Common Convicts at Tomsk." "The Guilds of the City of London" are interestingly described by Norman Moore in the opening article, illustrated with sixteen engravings by Joseph Pennell. A serial story, "The Romance of Dollard," is commenced by Mrs. M. H. Catherwood, one of devotion and heroism, based upon events in the early history of Canada. Geo. W. Cable gives the first of a series of "Strange True Stories of Louisiana," that of this month being "The Young Aunt with White Hair," a story of Louise Cheval, captured by Indians and rescued by Spanish soldiers in 1782. Of other articles are "Letters of Lord Nelson," with two portraits, "Mistaken Premises," a story by Julia Schuyer, "Pictures of the Far West," new chapters of "Lincoln," and poems by T. W. Parsons, Joaquin Miller and others. New York: The Century Co. Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY opens with another installment of "Passe Rose," by A. S. Hardy; Bradford Torrey, in "A November Chronicle," tells of the pleasures of out-of-door life in the Indian Summer of the year; Ellen Terry Johnson has a graphic and striking contribution in "The After-Suppers of the King"; John Fiske writes vigorously on "The Eve of Independence" (no one who takes pride in the story of America's advent as a nation can afford to miss reading his outspoken sentences); "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove," by Miss Murfree, "Boston Painters and Paintings," by W. H. Downes, and "Studies of Factory Life," by Lillie B. Chace Wyman, are further continued. "The Makers of New Italy" is a resonant tribute of appreciative praise to Mazzini, Garibaldi and their compatriots; other articles not here enumerated, poems by Lucy C. Bull and Walter Kelly, and the usual departments, complete the table of contents. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, Boston, Mass.

ST. NICHOLAS.—A sketch of girl life in the West is given in "Dream Horses," the opening article of this the first number of a new volume. Photograph illustrations of English ships of war accompany an interesting account of the "Queen's Navy," and its manœuvers in jubilee days, by Lieut. Smith, R. N. The remarkable experience of "Ann Mary," whose fortune it was to have two thanksgiving days in one year, is told by Mary E. Wilkins, and in the same line of pleasant story-telling are "In a Cellar," "The Loaf of Peace," and "Elsie's Invention," the latter suggestive of a cheap and ready means of home comfort, which many readers will be likely to adopt. Ed. Alton commences his instructive "Routine of the Republic," conveying to children and adults needed information about the Federal Government. A variety of fine poems, and a profusion of exquisite engravings, etc., constitute the remaining attractions. New York: The Century Company. The Old Corner Bookstore, 283 Washington street, Boston.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

THIS Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1850, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

The Latest "Death-Blow."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In order to estimate the real worth, or rather worthlessness, of the purported "confession" of Margaret Fox Kane, and her sister, after forty years of professed imposture, it is important to recur to the testimonies of their parents and neighbors given immediately after the outbreak of the alleged disturbances in their house at Hydesville, N. Y.

I do not see that any of the papers which are so ready to seize upon the recent statements of these self-accused tricksters as constituting a "death-blow to Spiritualism," are at all anxious to reproduce the evidences upon which the belief in the spirit-origin of the "rappings" was at first founded. These evidences are full, elaborate, compiled upon the spot, and have been for years before the world, not only in ephemeral pamphlets published at the time by different parties, but have been preserved in such volumes as Capron's "Facts and Fanaticisms of Modern Spiritualism," Mrs. Hardinge-Britten's "Modern American Spiritualism," and other works. Mrs. Kane herself can hardly be supposed to be acquainted with those testimonies, or even she, if in her senses, could scarcely have had the hardihood to impose on her audiences the silly and improbable statements with which she has recently regaled credulous crowds in New York and Boston:

In the first place she appears to be ignorant of or to be misleading concerning even her own and her sister's age at the time of the commencement of the rappings. She seems to wish to make it appear that either they were too young to be aware of the enormity of the imposition they were practicing upon their parents and others, or that they were exceedingly smart in fooling their "dear mother" and many other people. She is reported as saying:

"My sister Katie and myself were very young children when this horrible deception began. I was eight, and just a year and a half older than she."

Now the mother, in a statement dated April 11th, 1848, only about a fortnight after the beginning of the disturbances—a statement to which she says she is willing to make oath if necessary—says:

"The youngest girl [Kate] is about twelve years old." "The other girl [Maggie] is in her fifteenth year."

It is not at all probable that the mother could have been mistaken to the extent of six or seven years in the ages of her children at that time; and when it is added that "Mr. and Mrs. Fox were connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which they had for many years been exemplary members, and had sustained a character unimpeachable for truth and veracity," there seems little question as to which is the better entitled to credence in this matter.

Mrs. Kane further states that the knockings were first made by "bumping an apple, tied to a string, on the floor," and then by "rapping on the bedstead";—that the alleged method of snapping the knuckles and toe-joints, which was afterward practiced, was not invented until after the sisters were taken by Mrs. Underhill to Rochester.

The detailed account given by Mrs. Fox, the mother, of the occurrences of the evening of the 31st of March, is entirely inconsistent with the above. After trying in vain, with her husband, to discover the cause of the disturbing sounds, and getting evidences of intelligence which claimed to proceed from the spirit of a person who had been murdered in the house, they called in their next door neighbor, Mrs. Redfield. When she came, "the children were sitting up in bed, somewhat terrified, and clinging to each other." In this position it was evidently impossible for the girls, even if mischievously disposed, either to continue the bumping of an apple on the floor or rapping on the bedstead, without being detected. Yet the sounds continued, manifesting intelligence beyond the knowledge of the children.

Another neighbor, Wm. Densler, was then called in, and we have his testimony at length. He appears to have entered upon the investigation with earnestness and intelligence, and by means of questions elicited a number of statements regarding the alleged murder. He returned to the investigation on the following evening, and again on Sunday, the succeeding day. On this occasion he states what is conclusive as to the occurrence of the sounds without the presence, and, of course, without any fraudulent agency on the part of the girls. He says:

"I went over again on Sunday, between one and two o'clock P. M. I went into the cellar with several others, and had them all leave the house over our heads; and then I asked, if there had been a man buried in the cellar, to manifest it by rapping, or any other noise or sign. The moment I asked the question there was a sound like the falling of a stick, about a foot long and half an inch through, on the floor in the bedroom over our heads. It did not seem to bound at all; there was but one sound. I then told Stephen Smith to go right up and examine the room, and see if he could discover the cause of the noise. He came back and said he could discover nothing—that there was no one in the room or in that part of the house. I then asked two more questions, and it rapped in the usual way. We all went up stairs and made a thorough search, but could find nothing."

Here is positive testimony to the fact that the rappings and other sounds occurred in the Fox residence when neither the sisters nor any of the family were in the house. Add to this the testimonies of numerous other witnesses, which might be quoted at great length, to the effect that not only rapping sounds (which might possibly be imitated by the snapping of joints, etc.), but also "a sound like the death-struggle, the gurgling in the throat, etc., of a man whose throat was cut; then the sound of dragging a lifeless body across the room, down the stairs, the feet striking on each step; then a sound as if shoveling dirt in the cellar, the nailing of boards, and the filling up of the hastily-made grave—all sounding as perfectly natural as if you had stood in the graveyard, and heard the clods descend upon the last resting-place of the body of a friend, were heard in the presence of these girls: Add also the evidence of numbers of individuals and committees, whose testimony might fill a volume, who investigated the phenomena after the Fox girls left Hydesville, in Rochester and elsewhere, and found the sounds to be often produced on the walls of rooms and at a distance from the persons of the mediums, and hence without the possibility of trick on their part: Add further the fact that similar rappings and other sounds have occurred in every part of the country and the world, in the presence of people of unimpeachable honesty and veracity—who never saw the Fox sisters or could have learned their alleged tricks—the sounds in all cases claiming to emanate from excarnate spirits;—and this accumulated evidence makes the story now told, wholly incredible. It is far more probable that this self-accused woman is now playing her rôle for a price, than that hundreds of witnesses were deceived by a childish trick, as she alleges.

At all events, the idea that her purported "confession" can operate as a "death-blow to Spiritualism" is the silliest of all foolish imaginings. Spiritualism means vastly more than toe-crackings or even genuine "raps." If there are persons calling themselves Spiritualists who have been made such by relying on the mere word or the good faith of the "Fox Girls" or any other mediums, rather than on their own positive knowledge and cultivated spiritual perceptions, the sooner they are shaken off the better. The cause will be stronger without them. True Spiritualists do not build on any such foundation. Spiritualism is accustomed to "death-blows." It has always thrived on them, and always will.

Yours without a tremor, A. E. NEWTON.

The Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday at Berkeley Hall the guides of Mrs. Lillie spoke upon "Our Foes from Without and Within." Spiritualism, they said, has been attacked by one of its own household, yet spirits not mortals were its founders. Mediumship has not been dependent upon the quality of its channels; from the first every medium has been accused as a falsifier, and this opinion can only be eradicated by convincing demonstrations.

The Fox girls were no more the founders of Spiritualism than were the chairs and tables that were moved, but simply the instruments. Spiritualism is not to blame for the imperfections of one of its vessels. Those imperfections are not the fault of its teachings. We find antagonism where it should be least expected, viz., from those who have already adopted ideas of the immortality of the soul. If the followers of the Christian religion had read the twelfth chapter of Corinthians, and lived up to it, there would have been no quarreling between them and Spiritualists.

Spiritualism is a message of hope destined to come to all; by intuitions our little ones are to-day made witnesses of its truth. It comes to those who are in the church and out; some of our best mediums have been chosen from religious families. Let us enter the closets of our being. Let our first thought be for better philosophy, better Spiritualism, ever aspiring to be of a higher type of manhood and womanhood than we have been before.

The morning and evening lectures were reported verbatim, and will be printed in full.

Mrs. Lillie occupies the platform the remaining Sundays of November. O. L. R.

W. J. Colville in Berkeley Hall.—On Sunday last, Nov. 4th, Mr. Colville lectured in this place, at three P. M., to a large and deeply interested audience, on the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?"

The topic was most interestingly and impressively treated, and in a thoroughly practical manner. Alluding to the various theories of woman's rightful position entertained by ancient and modern writers and thinkers, the lecturer proved the fallacy of any embracing the idea of her inferiority. The first chapter of Genesis expressly states that men and women were created equal and together, while the second chapter records the creation of Eve as Adam's companion and helpmeet. Woman's true position is ever by the side of her husband as his equal in all things.

In the days of Solomon the Queen of Sheba was as great a monarch as any man; among the ancient Israelites Miriam and Deborah, as prophetesses, ranked as high as any male prophets in the estimation of the people, and it was a good and wise injunction of the Hebrew sages that no woman unless a Jewess should be united in the marriage covenant with a Jew, for men and women, having by right equal authority in the household that harmony should prevail, it is essential that they think and feel alike in every matter pertaining to the education of their children. Mixed marriages are always a mistake, because it is impossible for children to be well brought up in a home where parents disagree.

If marriage is ever a failure the following reasons may be assigned: Wealth and position are sought for more than sterling worth and noble character; good books are esteemed above moral principle; the lower nature is gratified at the expense of loftier emotions; a selfish desire to be blest is more prominent than an unselfish resolve to confer blessing; weaknesses are exaggerated and better points are overlooked; company manners are reserved for strangers, and home conduct is vulgar and unfeeling; and most terrible of all, the slanderer is welcomed in the household, as Othello welcomed the treacherous Iago, refusing to heed the wise and faithful words of virtuous Emilia, as she protested against the slightest taint being imputed to her friend Desdemona.

Home is impossible in its best sense unless the sanctity of marriage is upheld; and home is far more than church or school in the building of a nation; but the civil or religious rite, while a reasonable recognition by religion and the civil law of a relation previously consummated in spirit, can secure no safety or purity to those whose hands are wedded while their hearts are far apart.

Speaking of child marriages in India the lecturer said that the Pundita Ramabai, in her enthusiasm for her sister women in the East, seemed to overlook the better features of the system she condemned altogether, for, though grave objections can be raised to it, it is distinctly a part of Hindu education to carefully train boys and girls married in infancy so that the greatest possible harmony may prevail in the household in future years; and as Eastern women as a rule court seclusion and shun publicity, their lot is never harder than, nor is it nearly so exposed to temptation, as that of the American or European girl in her teens, who is taken from school or convent to the altar, to become the wife of the man who pleases her own or her parents' fancy, only because of the name of his family, the extent of his wealth or the beauty of his exterior.

Divorce may sometimes be necessary, but it is a dreadful thing to marry if one feels that it may ever be needed, as nothing short of the deepest love and highest respect should ever lead to marriage. As we outgrow false standards of value, and estimate character more and externals less; as we base our educational system on the soundest moral basis, and resist every tendency to adore the god of gold; as we cultivate the spiritual nature more, and excite the physical less, there will be more instances than there are—and there are not a few even now—where the sweet old ballad of "Darby and Joan" may be appropriately sung at the celebration of a golden wedding.

Marriage is unhappily often a failure, but it is very often a success; and if we are becoming more keenly alive to the evils of our social state, let us not regard them as though they were unalterable, but let us ever remember that to discern an evil is an evidence that we can remove it if we will. More kindly forbearance one toward another in all relations of life will eventuate in drawing ever nearer the glorious day when peace will be universal, and marriage a triumphant success.

Some very sweet selections of sacred music were finely rendered by the Clinton Male Quartet, and Mr. Colville gave a fine impromptu poem on "True Love," "The Web of Life," and "Liberty, Fidelity and Harmony."

The audience included many representative persons, who highly complimented the speaker on his truly inspired and brilliant effort. Many regrets were expressed at his leaving Boston after a stay of less than five weeks.

In the evening, at 7:30, Mr. Colville lectured in Pilgrim Hall, Chelsea, to a crowded house, on "Ten Years in Retrospect and Ten Years in Prospect," in which he sketched some of the leading changes which have transpired since the first Sunday in November, 1878, when he lectured for the first time in America, in Parker Memorial Hall, Boston. Speaking of the BANNER OF LIGHT, he said it had been a warm and powerful friend to him from the first. Speaking of Boston and its people, he said he had far more to be thankful for than to criticise, and of his ten years' travels on both sides of the Atlantic, that he had met with abundant kindness everywhere and felt very sure there were far more gracious than unkind people in the world. Alluding to the general status of Spiritualism, some very pertinent remarks were made in re the "Foxy fiasco."

A very pleasing farewell poem concluded the interesting exercises.

Mr. James S. Dodge, the Chairman of the meetings, made some very kindly remarks, and many of the audience personally greeted the speaker.

Mr. Colville lectured in Hartford, Ct., Monday, Nov. 5th, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. His final meeting took place Wednesday, Nov. 7th, at 2 P. M., in Wells Memorial Hall, under the auspices of the Independent Club. Classes in Spiritual Science ended with large attendance, both afternoon and evening, at Berkeley Hall, Friday, Nov. 2d.

Mr. Colville is announced to lecture in Denver, Col., next Sunday, Nov. 11th, also on the two following days; on the following Sunday, Nov. 18th, he commences an engagement in San Diego, Cal. We are informed he may shortly return to Boston, as his stay in California is very uncertain. All letters, etc., till further notice, should be addressed to him at 1144 Grape street, San Diego, Cal.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Thursday evening, Nov. 1st, Mrs. Ada Foye gave a farewell circle at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street, before leaving the city for her new field of labor. President J. H. Lewis paid a high tribute to her for the amount of good she had accomplished during her brief stay in Boston, particularly for the union of sentiment and feeling created, and the help she had given in developing those with whom she had come in contact.

Mrs. Foye said briefly that she felt to rejoice that the Spiritualists of Boston have good hearts and willing hands, and are trying to do all in their power to advance the cause of Spiritualism. If clouds or shadows come to us they are lifted by angel hands, and the "silver lining" is always seen. The effort to do right is rewarded by God and the angels. Mrs. Foye then gave some very convincing tests of spirit presence, presenting names, dates, and facts regarding them, closing with a strong appeal for union and harmony in the spiritual ranks. Raps were distinctly heard high upon the wall, and all about the platform—not made by the "toes" of the medium either.

"Wildflower," through the mediumship of Emma J. Nickerson, came to the platform, and presented Mrs. Foye with a beautiful photographic album, the gift of Mrs. Maggie F. Butler, and also a splendid basket of flowers from the Phenomenal Association, which Mrs. Foye accepted, thanking the donors most heartily, wishing for each and all success in life, and a glorious immortality in the great hereafter. A beautiful basket of flowers, the gift of the BANNER OF LIGHT publishers, was also displayed upon the platform, so that her pathway seemed really strewn with floral offerings. The inspirational poem given by Mrs. Nickerson's control during the presentation was very fine.

Sunday, Nov. 4th, large audiences gathered to listen to that noted test medium, Mr. Edgar W. Emerson. Mrs. Mary Nickerson sang: "I Stood on the Bridge at Midnight": Mr. Emerson gave an invocation, and, afterward, heartily welcomed all present. We know, he said, that out from the conditions of the past there is an immortality unfolding itself in the soul every day that will prove to us the reality of an immortal life. We believe, as was said by another, that "the demands of the human are the commands of God." Our loved ones, those who sat with us at our tables and worked with us, are coming to us with words of comfort.

Mr. Emerson's control then proceeded to cite the names of spirit friends, which were recognized by persons in the audience, giving among the others the names of Capt. Enoch Ryder, of Cambridgeport, Isaac H. Wright, of Dorchester, and Alexander Dickerson, of Cambridge, each of whom desired to have their friends visit some good medium in order that they might communicate some things important for them to know. The tests given, both afternoon and evening, were simply wonderful, and must have convinced every one of the sincerity and truthfulness of Mr. Emerson and his spirit guides.

Mr. F. C. Algerton will occupy the platform next Sunday afternoon, and Mrs. Emma J. Nickerson in the evening. The usual test circle will be held on Thursday evening, and all who are interested in the phenomena of Spiritualism are most cordially invited to be present. HEATH.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—Last Sunday the exercises were conducted by Mr. Charles Thayer. The exercises consisted of singing by Gracie Scales, Maud Fitzgerald, Eva Blanche Morrison; reading by Mary Lichenstein, Emma Russell, Maggie McNiven and Ellose Wendemuth; piano solo by Miss Ida Burnham. The calisthenics were led by Miss Amy Peters. The arrangements for the fair in Berkeley Hall, Dec. 10th, are progressing finely.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meeting last Sunday morning was opened with singing by Mrs. Case and an invocation by Mr. Cobb. Eben Cobb made remarks, which were well received by an appreciative audience. Miss Peabody gave tests to strangers, Dr. Eldridge diagnosed disease, Mrs. Forrester gave psychometric readings, Miss Dr. Webster sang, under the influence of her spirit guides, Mr. Redell made remarks, and Mrs. Lull the closing address. The afternoon and evening exercises were as interesting as those of the morning. COM.

Lake, under the influence of Spirit Lafayette, gave an eloquent discourse upon "The State," a brief summary of which will appear in these columns next week. Next Sunday, at 2:45, the guide of Mrs. Lake will speak upon "The Principles, Perils and Responsibilities of Mediumship, in the Light of the Fox Disclosures."

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Last Sunday morning, Dr. Barker opened the exercises with remarks; David Brown, Dr. Thomas, Mr. McKenzie participated. Tests were given by David Brown. In the evening Mr. Algerton, from Chicago, addressed the meeting and answered questions, closing with a poem. Mrs. Temple, the fire test medium, gave an exhibition of her powers. Mrs. Abbie Burnham gave tests. Mr. Algerton closed the meeting with a benediction. F. W. M.

Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington Street.—Last Sunday Dr. Mathews opened the afternoon meeting with remarks, followed by Mrs. Burnham and Mrs. Hancock. A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Last Sunday Lyman C. Howe spoke to the question, Which is the most important, the phenomena or the philosophy of Spiritualism? He said: "Neither and both; the phenomena and the philosophy are both important, but they do not constitute all of Spiritualism. Some devote themselves entirely to the phenomena, and stop there. Others, unable to sift the true from the false phenomena, reject all, and study the philosophy alone, thus falling away into atheism." Upon "Progress in Political Economy," the speaker said: "Political Economy is slowly but surely progressing. From barbarism we have attained civilization. From theocracy, despotism, monarchy we have merged into republicanism and democracy, but still we are far from perfect. Neither of our political parties is perfect, but we are progressing to a political economy that will study the needs of humanity."

Mr. Howe's audience followed him closely and frequently interrupted him with applause.

In the evening Mr. Howe spoke upon "Who, What and Where is God?" The lecture was very logical, and listened to with the greatest attention. Mr. Howe will occupy the platform of The First Society each Sunday of November.

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was largely attended. Henry J. Newton spoke on the disappointments of life, and gave interesting experiences, running back to the time when he was a Methodist. Mr. Newton was frequently interrupted by applause during his remarks. Mr. Leach related experiences in his investigation of the phenomena of Spiritualism. Mrs. Wells gave sixteen tests, all of which were fully recognized. S.

New York, Nov. 4th, 1888.

Haverhill, Mass., Unity Hall.—Miss Jennie B. Hagan commenced her engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of this city, Sunday, Nov. 4th, under very favorable circumstances. Miss Hagan has many warm friends in Haverhill who are always in their seats when she is to occupy the platform, and last Sunday was no exception; they were there in large numbers.

The Home Orchestra made an informal call upon Miss Hagan, Saturday evening, at the home of the writer, spending an hour in social converse and a happy reunion.

At the 2 P. M. service three subjects were presented from the audience and received a careful and candid consideration, "Visions" being the theme proposed for the closing poem.

There were fourteen questions presented at the 7 P. M. lecture, twelve of them receiving appropriate notice. Two were reserved for next Sunday evening's lectures, as they pertained to the Fox-Kane recantation, and demanded more extended consideration.

W. W. CURRIER.

Fitchburg, Mass.—On Sunday, Oct. 28th, Mrs. A. E. Cunningham, of Boston, gave platform tests acceptably for the First Society; and a like service—with the addition of short addresses—was successfully performed for us by Mrs. E. C. Kimball, of Lawrence, on Nov. 4th. Mrs. Kimball is to be with us again March 24th, 1889. The 11th and 18th of the present month Mrs. Celia M. Nickerson, of New Bedford, is to fill our platform. MRS. E. S. LORING, Sec'y.

Proceedings

Of the Annual Convention of the Vermont State Spiritualist Association, held in Waterbury Hotel Hall, Waterbury, Oct. 19th, 20th and 21st, 1888.

Reported for the Banner of Light.

Mrs. Abbie W. Crossett, President, called those assembled to order at 10:30 Friday morning, and introduced that well-known worker, Mrs. A. P. Brown, of St. Johnsbury, who, after an invocation, turned to me and described a spirit standing near, whom I recognized as Col. N. Lord, jr., of Montpelier. The President made opening remarks, after which Mrs. Brown saw and described the spirit of a lady standing by Mr. L. Webb. Mr. W. followed with interesting remarks.

Afternoon.—Conference opened with music by Lucius Colburn and remarks by Dr. S. N. Gould, of West Randolph, who spoke with his usual earnestness, and was followed by Mrs. Crossett, under control. Dr. Geo. Brunson described an interesting spirit phenomenon which occurred in an Advent family in Peru, N. Y. Mrs. A. P. Brown and Dr. Gould closed the conference. Following, a lecture was delivered by Lucius Colburn, of Manchester, Vt. Dr. Gould saw and described three spirits.

Evening.—Much to our regret the Duxbury Glee Club could not be present, so Mr. E. B. Clement, of Barnet, kindly and acceptably sang and played at nearly every session. A fine inspirational poem by Joseph D. Stiles preceded a conference participated in by W. B. Parish, of Stowe, Lucius Webb, of East Granville, and Mr. Warren Elliot, of Lincoln. Song and music by Mr. Clement. Lecture by Mrs. A. P. Brown, who spoke with power and eloquence.

SATURDAY, OCT. 20TH.

Called to order at 9:45 by the President. After music and song a general conference was held, which proved to be one of unusual interest. The speakers were W. B. Parish, Dr. E. A. Smith, Joseph D. Stiles, E. B. Clement, Dr. S. N. Gould, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Crossett. Mr. Stiles, after an able address, gave the names of twenty-two spirits, all recognized. Remarks by Dr. Smith, Lucius Webb and Dr. Gould favoring the appointment by the Association of a State Missionary in the spiritual cause, closed the session.

Afternoon.—Conference was opened by L. O. Weeks, followed by Mr. Elliot, D. T. Averell, of Northfield, and Daniel Tarbell. A lecture by Mrs. Crossett was listened to with close attention; it was one of that lady's best efforts.

A business meeting of the members was held for the election of officers for the year ensuing, with the following result: President, Lucius Webb, of East Granville; Secretary, Luther O. Weeks, Proctorsville; First Vice-President, Dr. E. A. Smith, Brandon; Second Vice-President, Hon. A. E. Stanley, Leicester; Third Vice-President, Janus Crossett, Waterbury; Managers, Mrs. Abbie W. Crossett, L. D. Smith, A. F. Hubbard, E. B. Clement, Dr. S. N. Gould, A. S. Baker, Mrs. S. A. Wiley, Wm. B. Parish, E. A. Smith; Treasurer, Janus Crossett; Auditor, Lucius Colburn.

On motion of Dr. Gould, a special vote of thanks was extended to our retiring President, Mrs. A. W. Crossett, for the able manner in which she has presided over every session the past two years. A graceful and feeling response by Mrs. Crossett closed the session.

Evening.—This session was occupied by Joseph D. Stiles as a test-séance. About eighty names were given, nearly all of which were recognized. His invocation and poetic address were well received by the large audience, and, judging by the enthusiasm of those present, the names, descriptions and relation of personal incidents given by him must have carried conviction to many.

SUNDAY, OCT. 21ST.

Morning.—The usual conference was opened by Mrs. Brown. Able remarks were made by Dr. E. A. Smith, Mrs. Brown and Drs. Gould and Smith. Music by Mrs. J. E. Thomson. After the audience had joined in singing, Hon. A. E. Stanley of Leicester gave one of his masterly and eloquent addresses replete with gems of thought.

Afternoon.—A spirited and interesting conference was participated in by W. B. Parish, Mrs. Crossett, E. B. Clement, Sabin Scott of Eden and Dr. E. A. Smith. Dr. Gould then read a letter of fraternal greeting to us from the Secretary of the N. H. Spiritualist Association. Two members of the Glee Club came in and played and sang. We were also favored with a song by a young lady whose name I did not hear. The President introduced Mrs. Fannie Davis Smith of Brandon, who said: "I was almost envious as I sat in the audience this morning and listened to that scholarly discourse of Bro. Stanley, and wondered at his mighty power to transfer his white thoughts to white paper." The subject Mrs. Smith proceeded to consider was "The Promise of the Future, or, The Outlook of Modern Spiritualism," and the audience seemed almost spellbound by the eloquence of her remarks.

Evening.—Conference opened by Mrs. M. A. C. Heath of Bethel, music by E. B. Clement. Joseph D. Stiles offered an invocation, and after more music held one of his wonderful test séances, in which he gave the usual descriptions and the full names of one hundred and thirty-five spirits seen by "Swift Arrow," and almost the entire number was known to one or more persons present. Hon. John F. Deane and James A. Spaulding of Cavendish coming to the writer.

Resolutions of thanks were presented by the Secretary, and accepted and adopted by the Convention, thanking all who had in any way aided in making the Convention a success, and our stay pleasant and profitable; and to the different railroad companies for reduced rates in our behalf, after which we adjourned to meet at Bellows Falls in January next, if suitable arrangements can be made at that point.

Thus closed one of the most harmonious Conventions it has been my pleasure to attend.

Yours for the cause,

LUTHER O. WEEKS, Secretary.

Letter from Lyman C. Howe.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I had the pleasure of a brief visit with Dr. F. L. H. Willis last week, who was on a professional tour to this place. His face and sphere alike indicate the spiritual quality of his character, which is a sweet tonic to all he touches.

This society has advantages over most similar ones, in that it owns a fine church and "owes no man anything but love." A choir of sweet singers invites the angels down, and a lady florist, Mrs. Robinson, lends the sweetness of her cultivated taste to the hours of devotion in sweet-breathing flowers. "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." It is not only a joy, but an inspiration, and helpful to the superior emotions.

My host, Mr. Norman Melony, is a strong, frank manly man, and his companion in life a most estimable woman, and rare medium. It was she who saw Prof. Wm. Denton in spirit at Lake Pleasant, and insisted upon it, only about twelve hours (I think) after he left his body in a far-away land, and when no person in America suspected his demise. Miss Flora Melony, who served so efficiently in the musical attractions at Cassadaga, is a leading light among the singers and helps at our meetings.

All speak well of the labors of Geo. A. Fuller, who preceded me here. J. W. Fletcher follows in November, and Jennie B. Hagan in December.

There is a pointer in the religious activities here in the Congregational Church. Mr. Free is radical and progressive, but some divisions of sentiment caused him to resign, and Rev. Mr. Sullivan took his place. But now they are both here, and both preach in the same church. I am informed that last Sabbath Mr. Sullivan preached in the morning, taking strong grounds for law and destiny as ruling the world by the inexorable relations of cause and effect, and hereditary transmission of character and capabilities, moral as well as physical. In the afternoon Mr. Free preached on the same subject in the same church, taking an exactly opposite view! This approximates free thought in the pulpit.

I recently enjoyed a pleasant visit with Warren Sumner Barlow at his home in Paterson, N. J., and the issues and isms of the day were freely ventilated. The poet author looks vigorous and fresh as a silver crowned youth; and his mentality has the ring of a well tuned instrument in daily use. He evidently owes much of his success to his intelligent and devoted wife. With a noble woman to share the aspirations and devotions of life, a man can have no excuse for failure. A clean man, body and soul, is hardly possible apart from the influence of woman.

Bro. Barlow is still busy with his pen, putting reason into rhyme. He has two new volumes that will soon appear—the sooner the better: "The Voice of the Church," and the "Rhythm of Evolution." Some extracts from these showed me the trend of thought and the quality of the verse. If these extracts represent the average they will lead all the rest. They are superior in depth of thought, poetic figure, elegance of diction and melodious rhythm to any of his earlier works. LYMAN C. HOWE.

Willimantic, Ct., Oct. 31st, 1888.

Suffield and Poquonock, Ct.—On Monday evening, Oct. 29th, J. Frank Baxter lectured in the Town Hall of Suffield. His singing pleased, his lecture interested and instructed, but his numerous tests and remarkable mediumship, so novel in this vicinity, astounded his many hearers, very few of whom had ever listened to him before. Mr. Baxter will appear here once more along in the winter. He was announced to lecture the two following evenings in Poquonock, some six miles away. Grand audiences assembled on both evenings, Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 30th and 31st, in the Spiritualist Hall, a building erected and owned by the Poquonock Spiritualists themselves, and were entertained and instructed well by Mr. Baxter's exercises. He will give other lectures in this place during the coming winter. A SPIRITUALIST.

Norwich, Ct.—J. Frank Baxter began a series of Sunday lectures here by giving two on Sunday last, the 4th inst. Good audiences greeted him, and listened to two capital discourses. "The Three Ps" was the afternoon subject. The evening lecture dwelt upon "Phenomena as the Bases of all Beliefs," and was intensely interesting. The delineations of spirits that followed were accurate and remarkable.

Mr. Baxter always does good work in our city each season, and as his present engagement includes all the Sundays of the present month, his numerous friends feel assured of much pleasure and profit. UNCAS.

The Obsequies

Of Mrs. Hattie P., wife of James A. Griffin, occurred at her late residence, 141 Main street, Bradford, Mass., at 2 o'clock P. M., Wednesday, Oct. 31st—Mrs. R. S. Lillie, of Boston, conducting the service.

The remains were clad in a white robe, and reposed in a white broadcloth covered casket. The floral offerings were very beautiful. At the head was placed a pillow of roses, with the word "sister" in immortelles inscribed upon it. On the casket was a basket of choice flowers; at the foot was a floral star; on the breast of the departed rested a small but choice bouquet of roses.

The remarks of Mrs. Lillie eloquently depicted—in harmony with the facts of the spiritual religion—the passage of that young mother from the mortal scenes of this life to her spiritual home, and the care and interest she would still have for the husband and her dear children left in the mortal.

The exercises were opened by Mr. and Mrs. Lillie singing, "When the Mists have Cleared Away," and at the close of Mrs. Lillie's remarks Mr. Lillie rendered, in beautiful effect, the song entitled: "She has Crossed the Shining River." W. W. CURRIER.

Providence, R. I.—Miss M. T. Shelhamer spoke very acceptably for us last Sunday evening, on the question: "Do the Dead Return?"——The Association having voted to adjourn without date, the chairman said that he would invite Dr. Frank H. Roscoe to lecture next Sunday evening, and he proposes to hold meetings every Sunday so long as they receive financial support. E. H. WHITNEY.

TRIANGULAR ANALYSIS, INFINITE BEING AND IMMORTALITY.

BY "FRANKLIN."

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of June 4th, 1887, and of April 21st, 1888, it was demonstrated by "Triangular Analysis" that man has a body occupying geometric space; also a mind, capable of active thought, and a spiritual nature, involved in varied emotion. The material body of man is acted on by the forces of the world of space, such as light and gravitation. The mind conceives of space as infinite in extent, (for a limiting wall must have two sides in a finite conception.) Forces and diffused matter pervade all space as far as science has penetrated. We then have infinite power in this world of space.

All matter is controlled by mathematical laws, which are as infinite in diversity and extent as matter or space. The mind conceives of infinity in thought to comprehend these subjects. In fact, man thinks of space further than he can see with a telescope, as the history of Astronomy demonstrates. At every point man finds wisdom. The universe of space is not only infinite in extent and power, but there is no limit to the development and embodiment of wisdom therein. There is an infinite wisdom.

But man has, beside a body and mind, a spirit capable of love. The fact of parental love is an exhibition of goodness, seen by man, infinitely better than man could have invented. No man or animal lives except by the attraction of two parents toward each other; an attraction showing harmony and tenderest provision for the offspring. The very particles of the universe balance in harmony and unity of design with the thought and emotions of every child. Here is infinite goodness, when considered with the Immortality and guidance to be mentioned herein. Thus the threefold nature of man is embraced by an infinite threefold, which is a unit, but appears to man's sensuous perceptions as infinite power in space; to his mind as infinite wisdom, to his spirit as infinite goodness. But wisdom and goodness are attributes of being; we cannot attribute them to inanimate objects. Hence though unable to comprehend the whole idea, either by sense, thought or emotion, we are by reason led to accept an Infinite Being, capable of wielding universal power, and with infinite wisdom and goodness.

This conception accounts for and explains the vaguely muddled ideas about the Trinity, and harmonizes with the necessities of logic. There is a necessity for a triune idea even of a God, in the threefold consciousness of man, acting through his senses, his thoughts and his emotions; for whatever man sees with his eyes gives him an object of sense and an ideal of the mind, and arouses emotions of the agreeable, the disagreeable or the indifferent. Hence there is a threefold nature seen in everything, owing to the threefold nature of the observer. This view of Triangular Analysis is replete with suggestions of great interest to educators as well as students of religious systems. Motives for action, happiness, progress and many essentials of a philosophy of life are in harmony with this idea of an Infinite Being, without which man would find an inhospitable environment without hope or utility. Harmony is the only proof in mathematics, which is the method or science of all knowledge.

According to the latest scientific revelations, matter is indestructible. It is not conceivable that mental consciousness can be made by the operations or motions of material particles in straight or curved lines. Hence if the mind were derived from the matter of the body, there is no evidence of its destructibility, and even that hypothesis is denied us. Because the dead body does not give evidence of mind, we cannot therefore assume that mind does not exist separated from the body after death, as the mind is not perceptible to our senses.

We know of no way in which mind, any more than matter, can be destroyed or created. The same is true of spirit. Furthermore, as the imagination cannot create what has not been derived from reality, we have reason to infer that Immortality of mind and spirit is something that may exist. For even the agnostics and atheists talk about it, and they could not imagine a "nothing" to talk about when it does not exist; neither could any one else. The mind and spirit, and their realms of thought and emotion, are only expressible, in mortal language, by means of analogy to the body and its world of space. Hence as infinity of time, as well as space, are found in the material conception, we would by analogy find harmony or agreement in the idea of infinitely enduring mind and spirit. Hence we may say that Spiritual Science embraces the conception of Immortality.

Regarding the scientific principles of analogy much may be said at another time. In the outline here possible there can be but an iota of the numberless agreements that have been seen in this subject. Under the head of Spiritual Mathematics, which affords years of practically useful study, there is as wide a field as in the ordinary college mathematics.

Infinite being and immortality of mind and spirit are essential to happiness, for without the continuity of mind and spirit we must, at death, lose all we hold most dear; and without the guidance of a loving, wise Power we have no hope of safety in this world of tremendous forces, where we do not see the sequel to the miseries of mortal life. Infinite being of itself would not harmonize with a limited life to beings who have human affections. That which has most of harmony is fullest of the elements that prove Mathematics.

Without the idea of spirit an infinite Power, Wisdom and Goodness and Immortality, men deny that life is worth living; art becomes a folly, and love a delusion. Justice, honor, morality, without these essentials, become baseless dogmas. Such materialism as denies these leads to suicide oftentimes, and, if true, would justify it to the wretched. The churches must show reason to overthrow this doubting or reason will overthrow faith. Spiritualism must show that man has a spirit in mortal life, or post mortem communications appear impossible, and will be considered hallucinations by those who are not mediumistic or impressionable enough to perceive the reality of such phenomena, and who believe that consciousness is derived from the material body and the activity it derives from the spatial world. Hence, as Dr. S. B. Brittan frequently remarked when in the body: "Our books of mental and moral science need re-writing." The new science needs to be so harmonious as to afford some harmony between its students. At present, agreement is the exceptional case among mental philosophers.

Who Will Rise and Explain?

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In the Message Department of THE BANNER, Oct. 13th, is a communication from Spirit SARAH E. BASSFORD.

I never knew Mrs. Bassford in earth-life, but became acquainted with her as a spirit, through her materializations at the séances of Mrs. William H. Allen, Providence. Mr. John F. Bassford, her husband, was present, having just began investigating Spiritualism. He was an entire stranger to the medium as well as the sitters. In the course of the evening a form emerged from the cabinet, approached Mr. Bassford, announced herself as Sarah E. Bassford, called him by name, and in the course of a somewhat protracted interview, alluded to family matters in a way that positively evidenced that the form was all it claimed to be, namely, Sarah E., the wife of Mr. Bassford.

Aside from the facts alluded to in the conversation, her air, manner all through, size and features were those of the late Mrs. Bassford, and so satisfactory were all these that Mr. B., unequivocally, in the most positive terms, declared that the form was his wife. He was astounded, overwhelmed, I may say, and was scarcely able to express himself. The revelation was altogether beyond what he had deemed possible, having been trained a strict Catholic; but so palpably true was it, that he at once accepted it in entirety, and thenceforth became a believer in spirit-return and communion.

The same, or the following week, he attended a séance in New York, when the same form appeared, again evidencing an identity which was unmistakable.

Subsequently Mr. Bassford put upon his wife's neck a gold chain, which was the present alluded to in the communication. She took it away with her, being seen to dematerialize just within the curtains of the cabinet. The next séance Mr. Bassford attended was in New York, when his wife came, wearing the chain she had received in Providence. She now wears this chain wherever she appears. She has materialized in Charleston, S. C., also in Chattanooga, Tenn., in every case wearing the chain. She frequently comes at Mrs. Allen's when her husband is not present, sometimes saying it was at his request, and at other times to dictate a communication to him.

Such are the facts. Who of the doubters, skeptics and deniers will rise to explain them, as well as the communication itself, given as it was through Mrs. Smith? WM. FOSTER, JR.

50 Battey street, Providence, R. I.

The State.

The following is a brief summary of the discourse of Spirit La Fayette, given through the mediumship of Mrs. H. S. Lake at the First Spiritual Temple, corner of Newbury and Exeter streets, Boston, Sunday, Nov. 4th:

"The union in society of the members of the same necessitates laws to hold in restraint those who would encroach upon the rights of their fellows. The enactment of these laws and their execution may properly be said to be the functions of the State. But as law is only the crystallized sentiment, in a Republic, of the acting majority, the expression of the State may be wise or unwise, according to the development of the times, and consequently there is danger from too much, as well as too little, law.

To protect all in the enjoyment of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, is the legitimate function of government. That men are entitled to life and liberty is very generally conceded, but how far they may pursue happiness is a matter of controversy, which to-day is causing unrest in every class of society. It should be apparent to all, it seems to me, that when any individual attempts to secure his or her happiness by infringing upon the life, liberty or equal right of another to enjoy, such individual becomes a source of danger to the State, and it is her province to protect herself.

There is a class existing in this Republic who claim the right to prey upon the weak of appetite, in order that they may enrich themselves; another who seek to fetter intellect in order to perpetuate power; and still another who burden honest toil in order that they may live with less of effort. Each of these classes is a dangerous element in a government which can only preserve itself by strict adherence to justice; since when the moral forces are weakened material collapse must inevitably ultimately follow.

The safeguard against this state of things is the enfranchisement of the spiritual forces represented in woman, the cultivation of integrity and intelligence among the masses, the dissemination of facts, spiritual as well as material, and the steady determination of all liberty-loving citizens to render practical the theories of democracy implanted in the Declaration, thereby vivifying the body politic with the potencies of brotherhood, which will render the Republic a fixed fact in the progress of the race."

Medical Diplomas.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

One of the great questions to solve to-day is this: Shall individuals who are exercising their various spiritual gifts in healing the sick be rigidly required to acquaint themselves with all that goes to make up the education of the so-called "regular" medical practitioner? To my mind it is notoriously self-apparent that such antiquated lore is not in harmony with the requirements of these new systems of relief, and therefore of no possible use to their practitioners!

Thousands of good and honest individuals, in all portions of the world, possess by inheritance the gift of healing in their organism, and are doing much good in this direction—frequently making cures when the "regular" medical practitioners fail to benefit, and that too often without the aid of medicine. Shall laws be placed upon the statute-books of the various States, rendering it a penal offence for them to exercise their gifts, and forbidding the public to employ them unless they have toiled for years through that morass of error and sciolism known as the "regular" system, and have a diploma testifying to that fact—a diploma, too, from some institution which shall win the endorsement of Examining Boards, the majority of whose members are the deadly enemies of magnetic healing and kindred systems?

It is alleged that thirty States of the Union have already enacted such laws, and a concerted movement is now being made to have all the States included in the great medical trust. Monopoly rules the hour, and there seems to be a disposition to make the sufferings of the sick lawful and legitimate ground upon which a medical syndicate may be established whose diploma-bearers shall alone have legal right to practice.

There is at present not a law in existence in the State of Massachusetts, for instance, which prevents any honorable individual from exercising or practicing the healing art or gift when necessity requires—with or without a diploma from any college; but concerning the colleges chartered under the general laws of this State it is certainly true that if said colleges do not obtain a special enactment from the State Legislature, their managers place themselves under the penalty of a heavy fine if they issue a diploma or any document conferring special legal power upon their students. Students, therefore, who are fitting themselves for and receiving such diplomas with the mistaken idea that their possession will enable them to practice in all parts of the United States, should bear this fact in mind: And these remarks apply to other States as well as Massachusetts. It is far better to have all the facts made known.

I am satisfied that spiritual gifts cannot be legislated upon or confined to any class of people, any more than they were in the Bible days; and there is no need of affixing any title or initial before or after the name to signify that an individual is qualified to heal the sick by spiritual force. I would have the public remember that success is the best diploma; and I would have the practitioner endeavor at all times to be honest in the statement of his claims, and to avoid the cultivation of any misconceptions on the part of his patrons. I would have every practitioner approach the public with a plain statement of what he proposes to do, the mode of practice he has in use, leaving the matter of a personal title out of the question entirely. Paul, Peter, et al., healed the sick in the old days by spiritual force, but the prefix of "Dr." or the affix of "M. D." would not have enhanced their power, while it certainly would have materially detracted from the dignity of their position.

It cannot be expected that any one practitioner can successfully embrace all the various modes of eradicating disease in his or her practice, hence there is a necessity—to meet the demand of the age—that all of the various modes of treatment have their special practitioners, and one should be judged as legitimate as the others, and be equally protected by the laws. If not so, why not?

A. S. HAYWARD, Magnetic Physician.

Boston, Mass.

DID HE ORIGINATE JOURNALISM?—An ingenious physician of Paris—Renaudot by name—more than two hundred years ago hit upon a good idea for "cutting out" his more learned brethren, which he was not long in putting into execution, to his own no small advantage, and the great chagrin of his brother professionals. His plan was an extremely simple one, for he obtained his popularity by the very innocent expedient of collecting information, and circulating delectation and amusement. But, inasmuch as the seasons were not always sickly, and he found he had plenty of time on his hands, he was encouraged by his success to devote his attention more exclusively to the business of journalism, by providing the public at large with news; and, accordingly, in 1631, he succeeded in obtaining for himself and family the sole privilege of publishing a newspaper, called the Gazette de France. Such, at least, is the account of the origin of newspapers given by De Saint Foix.—Press and Printer, Keene, N. H.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE NEW SONG.

Doris missed Mr. Brooks very much. She could hardly bear to touch the books over which they had spent so many happy hours. It was a fortunate diversion when Lucy Harrison came to spend a week with her. There was so much for each to relate they were not often silent.

Toward the latter part of the week Morris came in with a troubled face.

"Aunt Amelia, do you remember Hugh Scott?"

"It is not likely I should forget Hugh. Why?"

"He is in the city. I saw him yesterday. He came to see me. He tells me he has been West. He has been ill of some sort of fever, from which he has not fully recovered. I do so wish he had a homelike home instead of being in a boarding-house. Don't you think you could take him for a few weeks? He would n't be much trouble, and would pay you."

"Indeed I can, and will. I feel a great interest in Hugh, he was so good to you. Invite him to come at once. I am very glad you came to me about it."

The next day Hugh was pleasantly installed at Roseville. After he had rested a little, he went down to the parlor where they were all sitting.

Miss Parker and Doris were sewing, while Lucy was reading aloud to them.

"I do n't like to interrupt you," said Hugh.

"But we want to talk to you," said Miss Parker; "or rather we want you to talk to us. I have always felt an interest to know what became of you after you went away. That is, if you do n't mind telling us."

"I shall be pleased to tell you, then. I suppose I must go back to the beginning—at the time I left the city. First, I want to speak of Mr. Brooks. I owe much to that good man. He talked with me about my past life. I had been pretty rough, but he made me see there was something better in life than I had cared for. He did n't ask any promise of me, but I made up my mind if I ever got well I would turn over a new leaf, and I did.

"I went to Rathburn, gave Morris his letter, and then started West. I got a position as clerk in a hardware store, and attended evening schools until I was n't ashamed to show my head in a Commercial School. I studied hard for a year. I got a good clerkship as bookkeeper, and held it until the firm sold out. The new firm brought their friends along with them, so I was thrown out.

"Meanwhile I was brought among the influences of certain men who took an interest in me. One of them had a brother in this city who has influence in a bank, and he gave me letters of introduction to him. I intended to come at once, but was detained by this illness.

"I called on Mr. Lyman, at the bank, as soon as I arrived, and he says my place will be ready for me the first of May.

"There! I have told you a long story, I think, and I must end it as I began it, by saying I owe much to Mr. Brooks's good influence over me."

"We know Mr. Brooks. He is a good and noble man," said Miss Parker.

Doris was silent and sober.

"But now that you are here, Hugh, we will try to repay you somewhat for what you did for Morris. You were a blessed good friend to him," said Doris.

"And he is one to me now by bringing me here. I was lonely enough at that boarding-house, with Morris poring over those dry medical books."

"Morris would n't like to hear you call them dry," said Lucy. "He is in love with them."

"I do n't suppose they are dangerous companions, so he is safe. I am thankful he is engaged in work he likes," said Hugh, his eyes following Lucy as she rose to help Doris fold a most unmanageable dress that was fearfully and wonderfully made.

"I do n't want you to go away to-morrow, Lucy," said Doris, when they found themselves alone. "I wish you would stay to help us entertain Hugh. It would be so pleasant for us all. Do write a note to your mother and tell her you are to stay a couple of weeks longer."

Lucy gladly consented, and the letter was sent at once.

They were very pleasant days. They read by turns. They sang old songs. And for the first time Hugh was initiated into the mysteries of communication with a world unseen by him.

"Why, Miss Parker! Excuse me, but if I open my lips I am afraid I shall say something impolite. I have heard of such things, but I always supposed it was something foolish, if not worse; but if you and Doris believe in it, it can't be either."

"It is true many people do think so; they are really sincere in thinking so; but, Hugh, we are equally sincere in believing it."

"Do you believe it, Miss Harrison?"

"I cannot say yet that I do. I never heard of such things until I came here. It looks now as if I should be converted before I go away."

"If it had not been for a message that Lydia wrote we should not have known where Morris was, and Mr. Brooks would not have gone to him," said Miss Parker.

"I am devoutly thankful for that, at any rate. Then Mr. Brooks has faith in these communications?"

"Yes."

"Do you mean that Mr. Brooks really went away out to Florida, with nothing to rely on in finding Morris except that message?"

"Just that exactly. Lydia has never made a mistake. We were satisfied that Morris was there and sick. And he was. We did not doubt, because of our previous personal experiences."

"I should like to learn something more about it. If I ask a good many questions please understand I don't want to be rude or argumentative. I only want to know all the whys and wherefores."

"That is just the right way to learn—to question. So far as we know we shall be glad to tell you. We must have Lydia come over often while you are here. She writes for us a great deal."

"Miss Moore is a fine-looking girl. Morris seems quite struck with her," and Hugh smiled.

"Yes. And she is as good as she is pretty."

"Morris will be a fortunate fellow if he marries Lydia," said Doris.

There was a pleasant little party at Roseville that evening. Mrs. Carroll, Lydia and Morris came in. Doris was surprised to see Dr. Carroll with them.

After a little conversation and some writing by Lydia, Morris, who was a fine reader, read Whittier's "Dead Feast of the Kol-Folk." There was a little silence as he concluded it.

"I always have felt that people waste a great deal of sympathy on those 'heathen tribes,' as they call them. It seems to me to be much more natural and a good deal more satisfactory to believe like the Kol-Folk, than to think we may be parted forever from some of those we love." Miss Parker spoke earnestly.

"Yes," said Dr. Carroll, "and not only that, but the fear that some of our very dearest may be consigned to eternal torment. We who are born in ignorance, and inherit elements of character against which we must struggle all our lifetime, ought to have a chance, both in this world and the next, to progress out of these tendencies. And the spiritual philosophy teaches that we may. To me it is a grand, comforting thought, without which I should often be discouraged with myself."

"Life has seemed so much more satisfactory to me since I came to understand these truths," said Mrs. Carroll. "When Sidney first became interested in this matter I felt very badly. I thought he would go to ruin surely. But as he learned, and taught me, I began to see I had a mistaken idea of it—I began to wish it might all be true. And now I do accept it." She spoke with emotion.

"With the exception of Sidney I am quite alone in the world. My near and dearest relatives have passed over. It is a comfort to me to believe I need not wait until some far-off, indefinite resurrection day to meet my family."

Doris, who sat near her, took her hand, while she repeated one of the verses Morris had just read:

"Come, father, come, mother,
Come sister and brother,
Come, husband and lover,
Beneath our roof cover,
Look on us again."

After a few moments' pause Lydia repeated the last verse of that strangely beautiful poem:

"List, then, to our sighing
While yet we are here:
Nor seeing, nor hearing,
We wait without fearing,
To feel you draw near.
Oh! dead—to the dying
Come home."

In the moments of silence that followed, when soul spoke to soul in the fullness of affection; when memory softened all the past; when new and higher aspirations flooded their souls with a pure baptism, who shall say they did not kneel in the sanctuary of true prayer and offer grateful tributes to the source of infinite wisdom and power?

The parting words were quietly spoken. Dr. Carroll did not even say good-night to Doris. He simply took her hand and left a kiss upon it. She was dimly conscious of its presence during the night. She wondered it should thrill her hand so strangely.

"Doris," said Lucy, as they were arranging their hair before retiring, "I do think it is all beautiful. You know father and mother were never church people. I suppose they are what you would call materialists. Somehow I never could feel that death was the end of us."

"It would n't be worth our while to be born, if it were, would it?" said Doris, with a little sigh.

"Not for some of us, certainly. I have been waiting for something in which I could believe, and now I have found it. I am glad to believe that our places and conditions in the next world, will be exactly what we have earned, and what we deserve—that if we have n't done rightly, we are going to have a chance to do better."

Miss Parker stepped into the room in time to hear Lucy's last words.

"So am I. It never seemed a just thing to me that my sins should be shouldered by anybody, especially by such a good man as Jesus of Nazareth. I'd much rather suffer for them myself."

"Well!" said Doris, giving a little flourish with her hair brush, "if some folks think all we Spiritualists are wicked people, and want to do wicked things, they are very much mistaken. It will help me to remember to respect myself, if I remember that my dear mother is watching me."

"And if folks generally could be taught that the fathers and mothers, and little children they call dead, are watching them, as well as God Almighty, it would be a saving grace, I think!" and with these words Aunt Amelia went out and closed the door.

But Hugh had heard the conversation, as his own door was open. He was filled with a respect for these followers of the new gospel of peace, and as he covered his fire, he muttered half aloud:

"If ever I hear anybody fling out against Spiritualists again, I 'm afraid I shall want to fight." Giving the fire a vigorous poke, he continued, "Doris is a pretty girl, but Lucy is—well—she 's Lucy; and that 's saying a good deal!" with which indefinite expression he tried to compose himself to sleep.

CHAPTER XIV.

ONE HAPPY YEAR.

Dr. Carroll considered it a very fortunate thing for him that Hugh had sufficient symptoms of malarial fever about him to warrant a professional attendance every day. Still he did not utter to Doris the words which were so often upon his lips. He felt sure of himself, but he was not sure of her.

Yet through all the days that followed, until June blossomed upon them again, he contrived in many ways that she should see and feel that he really cared for her.

And yet Doris did not readily accept the fact. "He is very kind to me, as he is to everybody, but he probably does not mean anything in particular. At least I must not think he does." But his words and flowers were cherished for all that.

It was the first of June. Doris awoke with the thought of her birthday.

"Nineteen years old to-day, auntie!"

"Yes, dear child. I 'm thankful we have been spared to each other. It has been a hard year for us both, and yet I should n't be willing to part with one of my experiences."

"And I am most thankful for being here with you, and for Morris coming home, and oh! when I begin to count my blessings they seem so many!" and Doris ran happily down stairs.

On the breakfast table were several packages, and an immense bouquet of roses. Dr. Carroll's card nestled among them.

She was as happy with the least of these gifts as the greatest. She was wearing some of the flowers when Dr. Carroll came over with birthday greetings. They were very busy, and could only stay a moment, but it was long enough for Dr. Carroll to notice the act, and give her hand a silent pressure of thanks.

They drove away, leaving Doris to make hurried preparations to go into the city on errands of business. The little house was in order, and she said, anxiously:

"Now, auntie, do n't tire yourself too much while I am gone. I feel very unwilling to leave you this morning. Are you sure you are quite well?"

"Quite well. Do n't hurry too much. Kiss me twice this time."

She affectionately bestowed the caresses, which she would have done without asking; and hurried to catch an early train into the city.

Left alone, Miss Parker continued her sewing, in the midst of which a neighbor came in for a call. While sitting chatting with her, she suddenly exclaimed, "I really do n't see what is the matter with me. My eyes feel blurred, and I feel dizzy. I was well enough when Doris went away this morning." She laid her work on the table, while Mrs. Naples helped her to a glass of water.

"Had n't you better lie down a few minutes?"

She went into her neat, cool room. She lay down directly, feeling much fainter. Mrs. Naples bathed her head. She brought some wine, but it was with difficulty she could swallow it.

Mrs. Naples felt alarmed, and started to the door to call across the street to her daughter. She saw Morris just coming on the piazza.

"I 'm glad enough you have come, Mr. Stuart. Miss Parker is taken quite sick. I feel most frightened, and was just going for help."

Morris quickly made his way to her room. She was unconscious.

"I will go for Dr. Carroll at once. Can you stay with her? Doris has gone to the city, but I will try to find her." He hurried away, thankful he was in time for the noon train.

Fortunately Dr. Carroll was at home. No one knew where Doris was to be found, she had so many places to go about the work.

"It is possible she may call here or at the Harrisons. We must send word there at once. Send her home directly if she comes here, Lydia. I will go with you, Sidney." Mrs. Carroll put on her wraps hurriedly. Turning back, she said: "If we are not home by three you and Morris had better come out."

Arriving, Dr. Carroll made his way quickly to her room. At the first glance he knew that he stood in the presence of a dying woman.

"You must remove her clothing, mother." Mrs. Naples and her daughter were still there. She was soon placed on her pillow again, utterly unconscious that they were around her.

The hours passed away, and still they remained at her side. Four o'clock came, and Morris and Lydia arrived. They seated themselves near the foot of the bed. Dr. Carroll sat near her pillow. Mrs. Carroll remained in the parlor that she might be the first to see Doris and break the news to her.

Meanwhile Doris, calling upon a customer, found a lady who wanted some assistance about a dress.

"I will go and attend to my other customers, and then come back to you, if that will do."

She hurried through her business, feeling a little disappointed that she would have no time to call on Mrs. Carroll. As the day passed on she began to feel a strange impatience to go home. She hurried with the work as fast as she possibly could, and abandoned the thought of making other calls.

She was pleased as she passed the parlor window to see Mrs. Carroll sitting there.

"How glad I am I did not go to your house! I never felt so impatient to get home as I have to-day. I would have come at noon, only it would have seemed so disobliging."

Doris was hanging her hat and wrap on the hall rack as she was speaking. As she came nearer, Mrs. Carroll said: "Did you see Lydia or Lucy?"

"No. Why, how you look! What is the matter?"

"Sit down here a moment, while I try to tell you."

"Has anything happened to Morris?"

"No, Morris is here."

"Then it is Aunt Amelia!" She broke quickly from Mrs. Carroll's restraining hand and hurried into her aunt's room. Morris and Lydia turned as she entered. She saw only the pale, peaceful face of her dear aunt, and she knew the angel of death had placed his seal upon it.

Dr. Carroll rose and came toward her. He held out his arms, and Doris, hardly conscious of what she was doing, yielded herself to them.

There was no word spoken. She shed no tears. She moaned with a grief that touched the souls of those who heard her. Dr. Carroll led her from the room and sat down beside her.

"It was very sudden. I have reason to believe she suffered no pain. Let us be thankful for that, since the end must have come to-day. We could scarcely consent to give her up did we not know she passes into the hands of the angels, who love her, and who can care for her even better than we could. Dear Doris, let me try to comfort you."

Doris answered not, but she turned toward him as if relying upon his affection and protection. For an hour they sat thus, neither speaking a word.

Sometimes he touched her hair with a movement expressive of sympathy and affection. Again, he clasped her hand closely. They were silent pledges of trust and affection; and when he at last resigned his charge, it was to the arms of Mrs. Carroll, who embraced her with a mother's love.

Mrs. Carroll remained with Doris until after the funeral, after which the house was closed for a week, that she might have time to plan for her future.

Dr. Carroll came to her one evening toward the end of the week.

"Doris, since you must make so great a change, I wish you would give yourself into my keeping now. It would only be a few months difference at the most."

"But I had not thought of such a thing so soon. Does it seem hardly right?"

"So soon after auntie's death, do you mean?"

"Yes."

"If, upon reflection, you still have such a feeling about it, I will not urge our marriage. But, Doris, think a moment. You know it is not to us as it is to some people. We shall feel that Aunt Amelia has not left us. She knows we love each other, and it seems to me she would rather see you in your own home with me than to see you anxiously struggling along alone."

"Perhaps so. I will think of it."

"And now, Doris, tell me frankly which you would rather I would do—take a home by ourselves or live here? This is, practically speaking, my own house, for, I am glad to say, I am able to support it, my practice is so good. Mother loves you dearly, Doris. What do you say?"

"I really think I should prefer to stay here. We all love each other, and then we should all be together."

His thanks were most gratefully though silently spoken.

Mrs. Carroll could not find words to express her delight at the proposed arrangement.

"Nothing could make me happier," she declared.

The cottage at Roseville was rented. Doris's preparations for her wedding were being completed, when the subject of a wedding tour was broached.

"I really do n't think I can be gone more than ten days, Doris. Where would you like to go?"

"Unless you have some objection, I think I should like to go to Creighton. I remember it as such a lovely place. It is quiet, too. You could rest there."

"Creighton it is, then. I think you have made a wise choice."

And so on the last day of June, Doris became Mrs. Carroll, and they journeyed to Creighton.

Doris was very happy as she sat on the beach, nestled away among the rocks.

"It is delightful to be here and not be so closely watched as I was by Miss Shallot last summer."

"But I am watching you pretty closely, I think," he replied, laughing.

"Oh, well! I do n't mind your watching, you know!"

"So I am insignificant already," am I?"

"Now, Dr. Carroll! You know I do n't mean that!"

"There is one thing I should very much like to know."

"What is that?"

"Do you ever intend to call me anything except Dr. Carroll?"

"I suppose so—only I am accustomed to that name. Would you rather I should call you Sidney?"

"Very much."

Doris found she had to have a good many laughing reminders.

Sitting there, listening to the sweep of the tide, Doris was sometimes glad to let her thoughts wander to the loved ones at home. She was glad to think of Mrs. Carroll as being really happy in Sidney's marriage; glad to think that in all probability she would some time have a sister in Lydia; glad to think Lucy and Hugh were becoming so fond of each other.

"We have much to be thankful for, have n't we Dr. Carroll?"

"Yes, Mrs. Carroll," he replied gravely,

"Well—Sidney, then. I do n't believe I shall ever learn to remember."

WASHING WINDOWS.—There is a right and a wrong way to wash windows, and as this operation is usually dreaded, the following method will doubtless be appreciated, as it saves both time and labor. Choose a dull day, or at least a time when the sun is not shining on the window, for when the sun shines on the window it causes it to be dry streaked, no matter how much it is rubbed. Take a painter's brush and dust them inside and out, washing all the woodwork inside before touching the glass. The latter must be washed simply in warm water, diluted with ammonia; do not use soap. Use a small cloth with a pointed stick to get the dust out of the corners; wipe dry with a piece of soft cotton cloth; do not use linen, as it makes the glass linty when dry. Polish with tissue paper or old newspaper. You will find this can be done in half the time taken where soap is used, and the result will be brighter windows.

'MONGST THE HILLS O' SOMERSET.

'Mongst the hills o' Somerset
Wisht I was a-roamin' yet!
My feet won't get usen to
These low lands I 'm trompin' through.
Wisht I could go back there, and
Stroke the long grass with my hand,
Like my schoolboy sweetheart's hair
Smoothed out underneath it there.
Wisht I could set eyes once more
On our shadders, on before,
Climbin', in the airly dawn,
Up the slopes 'at love growed on Natcherl as the violet
'Mongst the hills o' Somerset!

How 't 'u'd rest a man like me
Jes fer 'bout an hour to be
Up there where the mornin' air
Could reach out and ketch me there—
Snatch my breath away, and then
Rense and give it back again
Fresh as dew, and smellin' of
The old pinks I ust to love,
And a-flavor'n' ever' breeze
With mixt hints o' mulberries
And May-apples, from the thick
Bottom-lands along the crick
Where the fish bit, dry er wet,
'Mongst the hills of Somerset!

Like a livin' pictur' things
All comes back; the bluebird swings
In the maple, tongue and bill
Trillin' glory fit to kill!
In the orchard, jay and bee
Ripens the first pears for me,
And the "Prince's Harvest" they Tumble to me where I lay
In the clover, provin' still
"A boy's will is the wind's will."
Clean forgot is time and care,
And thick hearin', and gray hair—
But they 's nothin' I forget
'Mongst the hills o' Somerset!

Middle-aged—to be edzact,
Very middle-aged, in fact—
Yet a-thinkin' back to then,
I 'm the same wild boy again!
There 's the dear old home once more,
And there 's mother at the door—
Dead, I know, fer thirty year,
Yet she 's singin', and I hear.
And there 's Jo and Mary Jane,
And pap, comin' up the lane!
Dusk 's a-fal in'; and the dew,
'Pears like it 's a fallin', too—
Dreamin' we 're all livin' yet
'Mongst the hills o' Somerset!

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—Mrs. B. F. Raynor writes: "That spirit phenomena actually occur I fully believe, and also that our spirit friends can, with certain conditions provided, come to us in visible form. Having been for thirty-five years a Methodist in faith, and a member at this time in good standing, I believe I have learned in another form that heaven comes down our souls to greet.

Five years ago I was invited to meet with a party of friends (the majority of whom believed in Spiritualism) to hear a lady play under control. I had never been in a circle before. We had a pleasant evening, and some very fine music. After an hour spent in this way I was privileged to be one of four to sit at a table. Suddenly, without expectation or volition on my part, my hand was raised, and slapped on the table. The host said I was a writing medium. I laughed, yet was frightened at the strange influence that came over me. From that time some power has been using my hand, writing many communications for myself and others.

Two years ago I began to visit a materialization medium. I had some names from spirits, but failed in getting a test to convince me. Two weeks ago my hand wrote out, 'Go to Mrs. Sawyer. You will get all the tests you want. Take a paper and pencil; put them on a table near the cabinet.' Thursday, Oct. 10th, I went there, Mrs. Sawyer being an entire stranger to me. She knew not my name, nor whom I came to seek. There were present five ladies—including Mrs. Sawyer and her daughter Della. No gentleman. After singing, the form of a young man came, and took me up to the cabinet, giving the name, as I thought, 'Freddie.' Forms came to the other ladies. Then came one who stood holding Miss Sawyer's hand, and pointed to me. I went forward, asked her name, when to my joy and astonishment she said, in a clear whisper, 'Addie.' Oh! how my heart bounded, for I had no doubt it was my daughter, who passed from me thirty years ago. She said, 'Mamma, is it not sweet to be able to talk with one another?' A few words passed. I said, 'Is papa coming?' She said, 'Yes; look; there is papa.' I looked behind me, and right under the gas-jet stood one I recognized at once. He was right back of the chair I had occupied. I saw his face plainly, and fully recognized him as my former husband, who passed away thirteen years ago. I suppose he had come before, but I never was able to say it was really him until that afternoon. He did not come from the cabinet, but materialized behind my chair. Then another form came, and stood by the table for a moment. I heard the pencil that I had placed thereon drop, but did not know she had taken the paper. After the séance closed we searched, and found it in the cabinet, with a message on it signed 'Helen,' my sister-in-law.

Truly I have seen great and wonderful things. I cannot doubt what my eyes have beheld. I write this for the comfort of others, who, if they seek, will find, and in justice to one whom I believe to be a good medium."

TONAWANDA.—B. G. Chapman reports having received during the war excellent evidence of the correctness of the Message Department of the BANNER OF LIGHT, in a communication read by him in a copy that came to his notice, his tent-mate being a subscriber.

LAKE PLEASANT.—Aug. C. Carey writes: "The weather here is perfect. The leaves have mostly fallen, giving us a fine view of the mountains beyond. A few families remain. The Superintendent of the Fitchburg Railroad has kindly promised to make this a flag station through the winter, which will result in much going and coming to and from. Persons who wish to visit the Lake can obtain meals of Mrs. E. V. Jackson, our genial postmistress, on the bluff. At the close of the Camp-Meeting in September last, Mr. A. T. Pierce, President of Lake Pleasant Association and Director in the New England Spiritualist Camp-Meeting Association, resigned all the offices held by him in both Associations. The President and all the Directors of the N. E. S. C. M. Association and a large majority of the stockholders in the Lake Pleasant Association requested him to withdraw his resignations, which he consented to do. New streets are being cut, and the grounds are being thoroughly cleansed."

FALL RIVER.—Mrs. Hibbert writes: "A full measure of success has attended our meetings of late. Our first speaker was Miss M. T. Shelhamer, who gave her audience much satisfaction in her exposition of the truths of Spiritualism. On the next Sunday we were favored with the services of Miss Mary B. Williams, a young lady resident here, and an excellent inspirational speaker, who gives promise of being of great benefit to the cause of truth. She spoke on a subject proposed by the audience in a very instructive manner. The third Sunday, Nov. 4th, we had Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, who lectured and gave psychometric readings, correct in each case. Her services throughout were highly instructive and greatly appreciated. By these lectures an impetus has been given to spiritual inquiry and progress in this city."

CAMBRIDGEPORT.—H. D. Simmons writes: "The Spiritual Society of Cambridge is progressing finely. The people show by their increasing attendance that they appreciate the teachings given from the platform. Thus far the speakers have given good satisfaction. We have a fine place of meeting, Odd Fellows Hall, 548 Main street, the best hall in the city, and we invite all earnest seekers of truth to come in and listen to the inspired utterances, and judge for themselves whether or not these things are so. We hope the Spiritualists of Cambridge will all join with us, and assist in carrying on the good work so successfully begun. We wish to see the hall full.

Our speakers have been Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, Mrs. H. S. Lake, Mr. Dowling, and Mrs. M. C. Bagley."

LOWELL.—Ed. S. Varney writes: "Initial services of the season were held the first Sunday of October. Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, was the speaker, and it seemed peculiarly appropriate that the theme of the opening discourse, 'The Soul's Well Being,' should be one that touched the keynote of the heart-warming religion of Spiritualism. The doctor was followed by that fine test medium, Mrs. E. C. Kimball, of Lawrence, who at each visit has sown fruitful seed and evoked an interest which the writer can bear testimony will prove deep and lasting. That worthy veteran in the cause, Dean Clarke, occupied our rostrum the third Sunday in October, favoring his auditors with the wisdom and progressiveness of his thought, the glow of spirituality and the richness of cultivated intellect. Sunday, the 28th ult., we had with us one with whom we are always delighted, Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., who spoke upon 'The Futility of Margaret Fox Kane's So called Exposé,' 'The Depth and Comprehensiveness of Spiritualism,' and improvised beautiful poems upon subjects given by the audience. Nov. 4th Mrs. Jennie K. D. Cohant spoke for us, and Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball. Mrs. Lizzie Manchester, Mrs. Juliette Yeaw are to follow. Spiritualism, as an uplifting inspiration, is steadily gaining ground in Lowell. Our meetings are well attended, and would be still more so could we obtain a hall on the ground floor or up one flight instead of five. But I suppose it is in consonance with the eternal fitness of things, for ours is the highest gospel yet given to the world, and, as the poet says: 'All earnest souls must climb if they aspire.'"

District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON.—F. H. Worley writes: "All the teachings of Spiritualism tend to broaden our conceptions of duty to our fellow-man. One thought, however, which is always insisted upon as a truth by returning spirits, particularly tends to raise us to a higher plane of action; it is that our thoughts and actions here make our homes in the spiritual world. If all our thoughts and actions are selfish here, our homes there will be cramped and gloomy; if they are liberal and benevolent, our homes there will be commodious and happy. When all understand this truth, and feel its full force in every-day life, there will be no trouble to get all persons to place the right estimate upon riches. We ignore the necessities of our earthly life, but true earthly riches consist in a sufficiency of this world's goods to satisfy our reasonable wants, and not in burdensome, selfish accumulations, which, while they can add nothing to our own happiness, curtail the enjoyments of numbers of our fellow beings. When all bodily wants are satisfied they are no longer troublesome as wants, and all will be free to cultivate the better and higher powers of our common human nature. It will be as if everything were free to all, when all, by a reasonable amount of honest industry, can secure the necessaries and comforts of life; especially when all, by proper education and training, shall know how to use aright and not abuse the good things of life. The overestimate put upon wealth and the wealthy is the result of wrong ideas in the minds of both rich and poor; these ideas induce many of the rich and poor to discard humane and moral sentiments in the mad struggle for riches. In opposition to all this, Spiritualism teaches that just in proportion to our unselfish exertions for the happiness of others here, we build our homes happy and bright in the spiritual world, while our enjoyment of what we have here is greatly increased. Just as we merge our selfish, contracted efforts for our own individual happiness in broad, liberal endeavors to promote the welfare of all, do we individually become capable of entering into and enjoying the highest state of happiness in this life and the life to come."

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—A correspondent writes: "Sunday, Oct. 14th, Odd Fellows' Hall was the scene of the christening of a child under spiritual auspices, Mrs. J. J. Whitney, whom Eastern Spiritualists know from her visit to Onset last summer, being the medium. A vocal selection by Miss Lena Sedgley, and a duet by Miss Sedgley and Miss Carrie Minor, introduced the services. When the child was brought forward Mrs. Whitney took it in her arms, and selecting a white rose from a basket of flowers, placed it in the child's right hand, and said, 'As white is emblematic of purity, so we would have every act of his life. As the red not only typifies strength, but that divinest of all human attributes, love, so the spirit guides will fill his heart with love for all humanity.' A red rose and a violet were then handed to the child, the spirit guide of Mrs. Whitney saying: 'As the blue symbolizes truth, so would we have this child make it the cornerstone of all his work in life. We will give him for his worldly name, Whitney Clyde Beacher; for his spiritual name, Truth; and now may the great spirit overshadow him and guide him, and lead him into all truth, and our prayer is that good spirits may attend him, and be ever near to keep and direct him aright. May he find new joy and new light in all his undertakings, and be ever ready to do the bidding of his guides. We ask the spirit to baptize this one afresh from the fountain of eternal truth, that he may go from place to place with his heart filled with love for all humanity. Amen.'"

BONNE TERRE.—S. T. Suddick writes: "Eight of us, all neighbors and friends, who never saw a professional medium or sat in a circle outside of Bonne Terre in our lives, were seated around a common deal table recently, our hands resting on the top surface and fingers touching each other's all around the table, and our feet also touching each other's beneath the table, the lamp placed on the organ only five or six feet distant: These conditions were strictly test, and will be sworn to if necessary; and under these circumstances raps, loud and distinct, occurred on the under surface of the table. We know none of us produced them. We were all sitting perfectly still and all heard the raps. No 'educated toe' could have brought out these singular sounds; neither could such have produced the other manifestations which lent interest and additional weight of conviction to our séance.

Now we only commenced these sittings six months ago, and it is but a short time since these noises began; we have kept up our circles weekly ever since, have got many, many messages from our loved ones gone before; and are not in the least inclined to ascribe them to the agency of a 'toe'—however great!"

Maine.

BANGOR.—R. B. Cookson, Secretary Maine State Spiritual Temple, writes: "Having a deep interest in Spiritualism, and appreciating the worth of your valuable paper as a disseminator of the truths of our grand philosophy, I give you an outline of the progress being made in this vicinity.

Since the close of our Camp-Meetings at Temple Heights, Verona Park, Etna and Madison, we have employed Oscar A. Edgerly of Newburyport, Mass., to speak in Bangor, and surrounding towns. We have several resident mediums who are doing good work in their different phases. I feel, with others, to thank Mr. Edgerly for the good work he has accomplished among us, and can cordially recommend him to Societies as an earnest worker, a logical and eloquent speaker, and feel that he deserves constant employment. Mr. E. soon leaves us to fill engagements elsewhere; we wish him God speed. We understand that parties are negotiating with C. Fannie Allyn, and that she is soon to visit Bangor; we met her at Etna camp during the late meeting, where she was a general favorite; she will receive a warm welcome in Bangor."

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—A correspondent writes that a successful meeting was held on the evening of Nov. 4th, at Mrs. B. F. Hamilton's, 110 S. Paulina street. There were twenty-three ladies and gentlemen in the circle, all of whom received satisfactory tests. Mrs. Hamilton is doing a noble work in this city, and has the best wishes of her friends. A stranger attending her meetings could not but believe in her religion."

A PHYSICIAN'S PROBLEMS. By Charles Elam, M. D., M. R. C. P. 16mo, cloth, pp. 400. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

This is a new volume in the low-priced series of some of the best books in the English language, "Good Company." Mere mention of the contents of this will be sufficient to commend it to the attention of our readers. They are, "Natural Heritage," "Degenerations in Man," "Moral and Criminal Epidemics," "Body vs. Mind," "Illusions and Hallucinations," "The Demon of Socrates," "The Amulet of Pascal," "Somnambulism," and "Revery and Abstraction," and an essay contributed, says their author, "to the natural history of those outlying regions of thought and action, whose domain is the 'debatable ground' of brain, nerve and mind." Witchcraft, clairaudience, prevision, entrancement, and collateral subjects are dealt with at some length, and though it is evident the author is not disposed to commit himself to the spiritual theory, he cites instances of actual occurrence in each department in proof of and support of it. The book is free from a spirit of dogmatic asseveration, and in its historical, thoughtful and suggestive character well worth the half dollar charged for it, which moderate price places it within reach of all.

SPIRIT COMMUNION. A Record of Communications through H. B. Champion. With Explanatory Observations by J. B. Ferguson. Revised Edition. 8vo, morocco, pp. 261. Parkersburg, W. Va. Privately Printed by Globe Press.

The contents of this volume, of which it is stated only one hundred copies have been printed, were first placed before the public in 1854 by Mr. Ferguson, a clergyman of Nashville, Tenn., who in that year published a book entitled "Spirit Communion," and in 1864 accompanied the Davenport Brothers to England as their agent. The communications purport to have been given in the main by Dr. Channing, through the medial agency of Mr. H. B. Champion, their object being to establish in the minds of men the existence in each of an "Infallible Monitor, born of God," who "unfolds to the self-conscious spirit the infinite fullness of Divinity"; so that man may no longer be led from without, but from within—a Freeman in the Universal Empire of Being; holding universal kinship with those affinities which ally him with the Source of all Good."

Supplementary to the main body of the work are given specimens of the pulpit oratory of the Rev. Mr. Ferguson. The volume is strikingly peculiar in the excellence of its typography and general make-up.

UP THE NORTH BRANCH; or, A Summer's Outing: Being the Record of a Camping-Out Trip up the North Branch of the Penobscot and Down the St. John River, Through the Wilds of Maine and New Brunswick, by Members of the "Lake and Forest Club." By Capt. Charles J. Farrar, author of "Eastward Ho," "Wild Woods Life," etc. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, pp. 332. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Nothing more need be said of this book than that it is true to its title as above given. It is the fourth volume of the "Lake and Forest Series," popular among sportsmen and vacation ramblers, as sources of information regarding the best places to visit, how to reach them, and how best to enjoy their advantages when reached. As such this new work will be eagerly sought for.

A MODERN ADAM AND EVE IN A GARDEN. By Amanda M. Douglas. 12mo, cloth, pp. 411. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Though differing considerably from the author's previous books in its style of plot and general construction, it is bright, breezy and interesting, and will help all who read it to realize that personal labor finds in due time its reward, and that only through it can perfect health and happiness be attained. The leading characters are Adam and Eve—brother and sister. The former had a position that yielded a very moderate income, and, at the latter's suggestion, in looking about for a means of increasing it, a garden was started which, from a small beginning, became large and profitable. The story is a practical one, and gives "points" that are valuable to any one who is disposed to follow its lead.

FIGHTING PHIL. The Life and Military Career of Philip Henry Sheridan. By Rev. P. C. Headley. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, pp. 380. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

This volume is a new edition of one of the series known as the "Young Folks' Heroes of the Rebellion," and acquires fresh interest from the fact of the recent demise of its subject. It gives a vivid account of Sheridan's daring exploits, an extended notice of the course of study and discipline at West Point Military Academy, and a brief history of the United States Cavalry.

THE ADVENTURES OF A CHINAMAN IN CHINA. From the French of Jules Verne, by Virginia Champlin. With fifty illustrations. 12mo, cloth, pp. 271. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

The reputation of the author as a fascinating writer, one whose facility in the use of his powers of imagination seems to be without limitation, is sufficient to attract to this book a host of readers. The young will be delighted with it and their elders find in its pages much to interest them.

"Petticoat" Bishop.

HE TURNS UP LIKE A BAD CENT IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

I have been wondering for a long time what had become of Washington Irving Bishop, the "mind-reader," who made a pot of money hereabouts some time ago, writes a New York correspondent to the Washington Star. I had read with pain some very harsh allusions to Bishop in California newspapers, allegations that he had gone clean crazy, others, worse still, hinting at crookedness, and finally a report that he had "escaped" from San Francisco and was on his way to Australia via. the Sandwich Islands. This week I opened a little package that came to me by mail with an odd looking stamp, and I got news of the wanderer. The package contained a half-sheet poster and a newspaper. The poster was a triumph of displayed typography in Central American Spanish, headed "Teatro Principal!" It advertised, according to my notion of hybrid Spanish, the "last two and only marvelous sessions of Señor Commander Washington Irving Bishop, of world-wide reputation, the grand diviner of thoughts, on the afternoon and evening of Sunday, Sept. 30th." It told how "Commander" Bishop had astonished the natives in "New York," including "the President, the ministers of state and the diplomatic corps," with his wonderful power. Then followed the programme. The first "act" was the "reproduction of a new life, as performed before His Majesty the Emperor of Brazil and the imperial family." Then followed the "discovery of hidden papers, as executed before the King of Sweden and Norway"; the "transmission of a musical air from one's brain to another's, as performed for the Czarina of Russia," and "the localizing of imaginary or actual diseases, as demonstrated for the Prince of Wales." A foot-note stated that, to "allow the audience an opportunity to recover from the nervous excitement which the experiments produced," Commander Bishop would allow an interval of fifteen minutes between acts. The appended prices of admission ranged from twenty-five cents for la galeria eventual to nine dollars for plateas y palcos primeros. The newspaper inclosed was El Observador of Guanajuato, and it contained a notice of the performance very flattering to "Commander" Bishop, in which his occult powers were praised as enigmatico, admirable, inexplicable y maravilloso, and the editor printed a column article to show that the artist's success was due to his having hypnotized the entire audience.

I believe this is the first news obtained of the whereabouts of the eminent charlatan and fashionable fakir since he shook the dust of this country off his heels. Crazy or not, he is evidently making money somewhere away down in Central America, and he may turn up here yet as debonair, as extravagant and as self-assured as ever.

Mind-Reader Bishop turns up again, says the daily press, this time in Havana, where he was dreadfully guyed by the audience. The crowd present howled so that the captain-general fined the psychologist fifty dollars, which probably wiped out his income for one night at least.

Written for the Banner of Light.

SPIRITUALISM THE DAWNING LIGHT.

BY H. P. TALLMADGE.

The golden gates are opened wide,
And loved ones who have gone before
Return and linger by our side,
And whisper of their love once more;
And when we launch our fragile barque
Upon the bosom of the tide,
They'll convoy o'er the billows dark
Until we reach the other side.

Since the command: "Let there be light!"
No greater boon to man was given;
Piercing the gloomy pall of night,
It raised our thoughts from earth to Heaven.
What conquest could with this compare?
What else could banish all our fears?
Or what could save us from despair,
Till joy was mingled with our tears?

No longer shall we feel oppressed—
The vale's no longer dark with gloom,
Since loving friends oft have caressed,
And shed their halo round the tomb.
It speaks to us of higher birth,
And of relief from earthly pain;
We gather but the things of worth;
And only part to meet again.

We'll linger on the shores of time,
And through the mist will upward gaze
To yonder Zone, that fairer clime,
Where golden light forever plays.
We know not what is yet in store,
But know we have not long to wait
Till we shall join those "gone before,"
And pass to them beyond the gate.

There gentle breezes swell the sail;
On crystal seas serene we'll glide
Where storm and strife no more prevail,
But peace and love alone abide;
On wings of thought then upward soar,
And mystic realms of life unbar;
Then sing God's praise forevermore,
As we glide on from star to star!

San Bernardino, Cal., Camp-Meeting.

Monday, Oct. 22d.—This being wash day the campers enjoyed themselves in various ways. At the tent of Dr. Nickless, in a little circle formed, Dr. Nickless and Henry B. Allen holding the slates, a communication was received between them from Achsa W. Sprague, saying she was with all true workers, and that success would follow them. Great good would be done in the work commenced.

Evening.—Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, of Encinitas, gave an account of the work she had in contemplation, and already commenced, at Encinitas, that of building a mediums' home. The land she has already purchased at an expense of twenty-five hundred dollars, with the improvements. On this there is an indebtedness of five hundred dollars. This amount she wishes to raise to clear the land. She is now ready to turn it over to the Spiritualists by will or deed as soon as she can obtain a clear title. Her plan, as given her by her spirit guides, is to erect small homes of two, four and six rooms each, that mediums may have their own abodes, and not be obliged to come in contact with each other unless they wish to, mediums being so peculiarly constituted it is better they should live in little homes by themselves. The land selected is very desirably located, on high ground, about two miles from the Pacific coast. All kinds of fruits and vegetables can be raised without irrigation. By contribution and collection ninety-five dollars were raised, and given the speaker to aid her in the noble work she has commenced. In support of the movement remarks were made by Mrs. Nickless, William Heaps, Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke, and Dr. Nickless. The exercises closed with tests from Mrs. Nickless.

Tuesday, Oct. 23d.—Afternoon.—Facts Meeting. Dr. T. B. Taylor related an incident that was told him by the gentleman to whom it occurred, of his having been stopped from drinking by the spirit of his wife. Dr. J. E. Small of Cucamonga told of a vision that came to him of seeing a man killed on the railroad by the locomotive. He subsequently witnessed the killing of this man, in every particular the same as shown him. J. D. Potter, of San Bernardino, who has been a medium for the past thirty-six years, gave some wonderful experiences of his early mediumship. Dr. Wilcox of Los Angeles said he had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for over thirty-one years, but never felt satisfied; though he tried to be a good Christian, there was always lacking the proof of an after-life. In Spiritualism he found that consoling fact, and now he is perfectly contented. Facts were related by Dr. J. R. Nickless, Dr. Taylor, Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, and William Heaps.

Evening.—Song, with guitar accompaniment, by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt. Lecture by Dr. J. E. Small of Cucamonga. Subject: "Who and Where is God?" The lecture covered a great field of research, showing conclusively the impossibility of any special locality or personality of a God as had been taught by the theologians of the past. Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless gave tests with names in full. A gentleman in the audience said: "I wish to say I came to these meetings out of idle curiosity, being positive there was nothing in Spiritualism, but through a test given by Mrs. Nickless I know my dear wife lives, and it has made me a better man. I shall never touch liquor again. I never drank until after my wife's death. I felt her loss so badly, I took to drink. But now I know she lives, and we shall meet again; now the world looks beautiful again, and I wish to thank the good lady (Mrs. Nickless) for the great good she did me. May she be spared to continue her good work many years to come."

Wednesday, Oct. 24th.—Afternoon.—Facts Meeting. Evening.—Lectures by J. D. Potter, of San Bernardino. Mr. Potter spoke inspirationally, and is a speaker of more than ordinary talent. Why he is not in the field when there is so much need of workers, I do not know. He was followed by J. V. Mansfield, who gave the history of his mediumship from early childhood. Tests by Mrs. Nickless, all of them recognized.

Thursday, Oct. 25th.—No services in the afternoon, as the committee were arranging the hall for the young folks in the evening, when they were given a grand hop. This was enjoyed by both old and young. It was a success in every particular.

Friday, Oct. 26th.—Afternoon.—Facts Meeting.—William Heaps related an account of the circle he attended the evening before, given by Henry B. Allen. Dr. J. R. Nickless, of New York, told of the return of an army comrade whose death he did not learn about until some weeks afterward. Mr. D. Edson Smith, of Santa Ana, spoke in the highest praise of the mediumship for materialization of Mr. Mott and Mr. France, and gave an account of his being taken out of the theological school, the professors being afraid of his heretical ideas. Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless, entranced, gave a short address on materialization. She said when the world fully understands what is meant by materialization and the conditions needed to produce the best results, all persecution of its mediums will be stopped; there is much to be learned by earth's children regarding mediumship.

Mrs. Mary Carter, of San Bernardino, spoke of attending a séance and holding a spirit-form by the hand; instantly the white drapery left the spirit and she had the medium by the hand. She said most people would cry fraud at this, but she knew it to be simply a case of transfiguration. Remarks were made by Mrs. Andrews, of Los Angeles, Mrs. M. E. Taylor, Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, and Rev. Mr. Featherstone, of New Mexico.

Evening.—Song, "The Beautiful Hills," by William Heaps and his daughter, Mrs. W. N. Kelly. Poem, "Sons of the Nation," read by Dr. T. B. Taylor. Song, "Have Faith in One Another," guitar accompaniment, by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt. Lecture by the controls of Mrs. Nickless. Remarks by D. Edson Smith. Mrs. Nickless gave twenty-eight descriptions of departed ones, all but three of which were acknowledged as correct.

Saturday, Oct. 27th.—Afternoon.—Facts Meeting. Song, with guitar accompaniment, by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt. Invocation, by the control of Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless. Poem, "Woman," read by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke.

Mrs. Nickless related a sitting with the late Harry Powell, when the pencil was produced on the finger of one of the circle, and written with, the same as on the medium. Dr. D. Edson Smith, of Santa Ana, read an article by Rev. Dr. Powers, of Utica, N. Y. Remarks were made by Mrs. Julia Schroder, of San Diego, Dr. J. R. Nickless, Mrs. M. E. Taylor, Rev. Mr. Featherstone and William Heaps.

Evening.—Musical and literary entertainment. Solo and chorus, "A Thousand Years," by Dr. Taylor and choir; reading, "The Dying Old Man to his Young Wife," by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke; song, "The Bright Alsatian Mountains," by Miss Mabel A. Nickless. She was called back and sang "Pretty Pond Lillies;" recitation, "Don't Forget the Old Folks," by Miss Alice Wilson; song, "Phantom Footsteps," by Henry B. Allen; chorus by the choir; reading, "Reformers," by Mrs. M. E. Taylor; song, "Voices from the Spirit-Land," by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt, with guitar accompaniment; poem, "Owcena," read by Dr. Taylor; declamation, Will Carleton's, "Gone with a Handsomer Man," by Mrs. Ella Wilson; song, "Rainy Morning," by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt. The final was a harmonica solo, "The Mocking Bird," by Master Frank T. Dunckelee of Pomona, with organ accompaniment by Henry B. Allen.

Sunday, Oct. 28th.—Morning services.—Song by Mrs. E. A. Hammatt; invocation by Mrs. Nickless; reading by Mrs. E. M. Taylor. Dr. T. B. Taylor answered several questions presented by the audience.

Afternoon.—Song by William Heaps and daughter, Mrs. Kelly. Poem, read by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke. Lecture by Mrs. Ella Wilson, of Santa Ana. Subject, "Are Liberals Liberal?" The words of this talented lady were well chosen, and carried the conviction with them that she is liberal enough to accept the truth wherever and by whomsoever it is presented. Mrs. Nickless spoke in accord with the lecturer's remarks, and expressed the hope that all who had found the spiritual truths would not keep them to themselves, but give them to their neighbors, friends, and all the world. Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke read a communication she had received from "the Medium of the Rockies," Mr. John Brown, Senior, who regretted he could not be in attendance. He sent his greetings to all.

Evening.—The hall was not large enough to hold all who came, it being crowded to suffocation. This spoke volumes for the work done in San Bernardino during the camp-meeting. Song. Invocation by the controls of Mrs. Nickless, who, after further singing, reviewed the spiritual work of the past thirteen days' camp-meeting. A much greater work had been accomplished than was known to mortals. A work had been commenced in this Southern California which would continue until all realized the great spiritual influx which was being so universally showered upon earth at the present time. Tests were given by Mrs. Julia Schroder. Mrs. Nickless described thirty-eight spirits, all of them recognized. Remarks made by Mrs. E. P. Thorndyke, Dr. Nickless and William Heaps, closed the last public meeting of Southern California Camp-Meeting Association. It has been a success in every particular.

On Monday many of the campers took a ride to Arrowhead Springs, where they regaled themselves with a hot bath from the water that came from the mountain, enjoying it hugely. CYRENUS.

San Bernardino, Oct. 31st, 1888.

November Magazines.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—A portrait of Sam. Houston is followed by the second and concluding part of Lee C. Harby's romantic chapter in Texas history, "The City of a Prince," New Braunfels, designated as "something unique; a piece of the Old World set down in the New; a German town, in fact, transplanted into American soil." The narrative possesses much interest in its portrayal of adventure and human endurance. "Boston in 1741 and Governor Shirley" is illustrated with a map of Boston harbor in 1732, and a nearly full-length picture of Shirley. Among the incidents given of that date it is related that a privateersman having "brought in a bale of papal indulgences, taken from a Spanish prize, Fleet, the printer, bought them, and printed his ballads on their backs." "The Treaty of Ghent" is the subject of a paper by Hon. Thomas Wilson, illustrated with a portrait of the residence at the time of the American Commission. Of the remaining contents are "Unconscious Heresies," a continuation of "A Trip from New York to Niagara in 1829," and "A New France in New England," the last mentioned substantiating by facts the possibility of a fulfillment of an able New England statistician, that before the end of the first quarter of the next century the French Canadians in the New England States will outnumber the Anglo-Saxon population. New York: 743 Broadway.

WIDE AWAKE.—To all interested in the welfare of the Indians this number will be very welcome. A touching story and a true one is related by Margaret Owen Foster, entitled "The Little Captive Chief"; "An Evening at Carlisle," by Miss Sparhawk, a teacher in the Indian school, describes an entertainment given by Indian girls, and pleads eloquently for the education of Indian youth. The appeal to children to build the dining-room of the Ramona Industrial School for Indians at Santa Fé is reprinted, and the names of contributing children thus far given. John Quincy Adams's household is the subject of this month's "Children of the White House," with many illustrations, including, as a frontispiece, a picture of "The Dorothy Q. of To-Day," a relative and namesake of Dr. Holmes's "Dorothy Q." "Plucky Smalls" continues his adventurous way, and "Double Roses" blossom, both reaching their conclusion. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.—The frontispiece, the subject of which is "A Lady of Pompeii," gives one a faint idea of the luxuriousness of the people of that unfortunate city, which an interesting illustrated paper by Edith Marget serves to more fully explain in its descriptions of the revelations modern excavations have produced. Included among the remaining contents are: "The Lace Makers of Le Puy," illustrated; "A Woman's Friendship: Mary Stewart and Mary Seton;" "Other Women in Germany," and "Elementary School Teaching as a Profession." The publishers announce an enlargement with the December number, with new special features. New York: Cassell & Co.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—In "Good Health by Right Living" is given the result of an interview with Mrs. Densmore, a well-known physician of New York, in which the subject was fully discussed. S. Helen Clarke gives Part I. of a treatise upon "Magnetic Hygiene." An interesting "Case of Clairvoyance" is related, and a variety of matters in the line of this periodical's specialty instructively treated upon. New York: 206 Broadway.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEER.—An instance of unconscious heroism in the performance of duty in imminent peril is shown in the case of Miss Mamie Davis, a telephone operator in Jacksonville, Fla., who held to her work when left entirely alone for a time during the yellow fever epidemic. The editor truly says: "No word of ours could add a touch to the picture thus presented to the reader's mind of this heroic girl alone, her luncheon in one hand, switch plugs and cords in the other, keeping up communication in the fever and panic-stricken city."

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.—"Planting Lawns," "Noxious Insects," "Our Native Plums," and "Fall Pruning of Grape Vines," are the subjects of the leading articles; following the "Golden Rod" is treated upon in a fine poem by Dart Fairthorne. Seasonable matter fills the remaining pages. The frontispiece is a colored lithograph of the Lilium Excelsium. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE SIDEREAL MESSENGER.—"Current Celestial Phenomena" is illustrated with a engraving of the planet Mars, as seen by the writer at the Cincinnati Observatory, March, 1886. The general contents cover a broad field of astronomical observation. Northfield, Minn.: W. W. Payne.

THE BIZARRE, NOTES AND QUERIES.—Among a variety of entertaining contents are "Foretellers of Storms," the affirmations of "The Order of the Sacred Heart," "Chinese Proverbs," "Origin of Things," and "Famous Earthquakes." Manchester, N. H.: S. C. & L. M. Gould. For sale by Colby & Rich, Boston.

LINCOLN FORESAW THE ERA OF TRUSTS.—Just at the close of the civil war, the following prophetic utterance was penned by Abraham Lincoln:

"Yes, we may congratulate ourselves that this cruel war is nearly to a close. It has cost a vast amount of treasure and blood. The best blood of the flower of American youth has been freely offered upon our country's altar that the nation might live. It has been, indeed, a trying hour for the republic, but I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of our country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of the war. God grant that my suspicions may prove groundless."

HISTORICAL REVELATIONS

OF THE RELATION EXISTING BETWEEN

Christianity and Paganism

Since the Disintegration of the Roman Empire.

By the Roman Emperor JULIAN (called the Apostate), Through the Mediumship of T. C. BUDDINGTON.

Historical Revelations, or a Comparison between the Relations of Paganism and Christianity since the disintegration of the Roman Empire, by a spirit purporting to be the Emperor Julian (the Apostate), is one of those peculiar spiritual works that come like a meteor in a dark night or a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky.

Flashing its light upon the spiritual darkness of the mediæval ages, it gives to this generation a hint of the spiritual forces which have long been trying to lift the pall which has shrouded the religious world for centuries.

No person in Religious History has been more vilified and misunderstood than Julian, and probably there are few so well able to illuminate the spiritual gloom which settled upon the world after the overthrow of the old Empire.

Coming at this period when the foundations of Christian faith and its relations to the spiritual life are being scrutinized as never before, and especially when the phenomena of Christian Spiritualism are perplexing and confounding the beholders, the work of Julian should and will be welcome to all classes who desire to know the truth.

Bible Marvel-Workers,

And the Power which helped or made them perform MIGHTY WORKS, and utter Inspired Words; Together with some Personal Traits and Characteristics of Prophets, Apostles and Jesus, or New Readings of "THE MIRACLES."

BY ALLEN PUTNAM, A.M.

Mr. Putnam has here, in his uniformly candid and calm spirit, furnished an unusually vivid, interesting and instructive volume of about 240 pages. He here allows what he incidentally calls "THE GUIDE-BOOK OF CHRISTENDOM" to tell the story of its own origin and character, and mostly in its own words and facts. Biblical light leads his way, and as he moves on he finds and points out Fact after Fact, View after View, Meaning after Meaning, attaching to old familiar mental pictures and forms of Bible scenes and personages which possess the charm of novelty, while they generate conviction that they are true and valuable. Without questioning the genuineness or truth of any part of the Bible itself, and without attack upon any sect, denomination or individual, Mr. Putnam, following the clear leadings of light which John the revelator furnished, examines most of the prominent Bible marvels and personages, and presents to the public a work which will show to most readers spots where they have been accustomed to overlook very plain and distinct information lying upon the very surface of our English Bible, which, if recognized, will lead devoted lovers of the Bible, and its contemners also, to estimate it with more discriminating justice than they have been accustomed to apply there.

"The book from beginning to end is one of intense interest; there is not a dull page; and treating as it does of the inception and growth of Spiritualism at the South, of which but little has been known to the public, it will command, as it should, a wide sale and do a good work.

The book contains finely executed portraits of the two authors, Mrs. Susan J. and Andrew A. Finck; also Felix M. Finck, and two clairvoyant scenes in spirit-life.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian Scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are made in the work before us."—New York Sun.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

LIFTING THE VEIL;

Or, Interior Experiences and Manifestations.

BY SUSAN J. AND ANDREW A. FINCK.

An interesting and instructive narrative of the experience of one who from early childhood was subject to the visits and recognizable guidance of spiritual intelligences. The opening chapter gives a graphic pen-picture of Southern plantation life when the "peculiar institution" of that section of our country was in its prime. The periodical visits of the circuit preacher, the preparations in the "big house" and the "quarters" of the negroes for the event, are finely described. As the narrative proceeds the development of mediumship gradually unfolds faculties previously latent, and tokens of the presence of spirits become more and more frequent. Accounts of clairvoyant, clairaudient and other experiences follow—all remarkable—including independent slate-writing, the sudden production of flowers, etc. In the latter part a thrilling account is given of the wonderful mediumship of a slave woman who startled an entire community with the eloquence of her discourses, prophetic visions, and powerful communications of wrong.

The book from beginning to end is one of intense interest; there is not a dull page; and treating as it does of the inception and growth of Spiritualism at the South, of which but little has been known to the public, it will command, as it should, a wide sale and do a good work.

The book contains finely executed portraits of the two authors, Mrs. Susan J. and Andrew A. Finck; also Felix M. Finck, and two clairvoyant scenes in spirit-life.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY: Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters. By EDWARD GIBBON, ESQ. With a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

This volume contains Gibbon's complete Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what were the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

Among the illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

IS IT THE DESPAIR OF SCIENCE? or, Science Applied to Spiritualism, not in the Manner of Dr. Hammond. By W. D. GUNNING.

Very pleasantly written, suggesting the possibility of solving the mysteries of spiritual manifestations, by tracing the analogies offered by the subtler forces of Nature.

This little work has been entirely revised, and a considerable more matter added to it, and will be found an unanswerable argument in favor of Spiritualism.

Post-Mortem Confessions:

Being Letters Written Through a Mortal's Hand by Spirits Who, When in Mortal, were OFFICERS OF HARVARD COLLEGE: With Comments by ALLEN PUTNAM, A. M., Author of "Natty, a Spirit," "Bible Marvel Workers," "New England Witchcraft Explained by Modern Spiritualism," "Agassiz and Spiritualism."

This volume contains several letters written by spirits who, while in mortal, were officers of Harvard College, and now freely write out confessions that they were wrong in making that far-famed attack upon Modern Spiritualism in 1857 miscalled The Harvard Investigation. These letters are to be so valuable as history in future times that they merit a place in every family library, deserve to be carefully read now, preserved and handed down to posterity. They came forth in response to letters written by a graduate from that college, who was the personal friend of those officers, and yet their contestant at the time of the sham Investigation. He supplements the correspondence with his views of the timeliness, aims and operations, present and prospective, of Modern Spiritualism itself. It is a unique and instructive work, by one thirty-four years a Spiritualist and eighty-four a mortal.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHIC NARRATIVE OF PSYCHIC PHENOMENA IN FAMILY DAILY LIFE EXTENDING OVER A PERIOD OF TWENTY YEARS

BY MORELL THEOBALD, F. C. A.

Some of the most astonishing phenomena in the history of Modern Spiritualism are recorded in this volume, the descriptions of which are given with a marked degree of fidelity to detail and effort to corroborate their truth by unimpeachable testimony. They include independent writing in various languages, on walls and ceilings, in closed apartments and on note books in locked desks; lighting of lamps and fires; filling of kettles with water, and making preparations for breakfast, even to cooking food, making tea and "laying the table"; organ playing with no one visibly present; materialization and dematerialization of forms and fabrics, bringing of flowers, ringing of bells and movements of physical objects. Fac-Similes are given of various writings, one of them in Greek, with a translation. The book covers a period of twenty years, and of each of the phenomena above specified, together with others, numerous instances are narrated.

The author says that the book has been written in the intervals of a busy professional life, which fact has proved of advantage; for, while as careful as possible not to be carried away by enthusiasm, or by imagination, in a region wherein there is much scope for their action, the disjointed method of working he was compelled to adopt operated as a protection against a surrender to mere fantasy.

The Bubble Burst.

Ridiculous as the recent sensational appearance of Margaret Fox Kane in this city as an "Exposer of Spiritualism" was to the public, it was far more so to those who became knowing to some of the private manipulations of a scheme to speculate and make money out of a misguided woman's weaknesses; a scheme that involved a confession by her of having for forty years lived a life of deceit and the practice of gross imposition on the people, knowing as she must have known that such a confession was without any foundation in truth. The following facts connected with her stay in this city

It appears that one F. W. Stechan (understood to be the advance agent of a New York Entertainment Bureau) engaged a room at the Crawford House in this city for Mrs. M. Fox Kane, to arrive Nov. 1st. Upon her arrival he registered her name, and requested that the checks for her meals be charged to her room, giving as a reason that she was unaccustomed to handling money. Nov. 2d "Dr." C. M. Richmond arrived and registered at the same house. From Mrs. Kane's singular demeanor on her arrival, the clerk was led to ask Mr. Stechan if she was a victim of dipsomania. He appeared somewhat indignant at the imputation this inquiry implied, and said "No, indeed! She is an exceedingly nervous person; and her journey from New York to Boston has affected her. Some years ago she was addicted to the use of intoxicants, but not now; no one but a Spiritualist would make such an inquiry.

Being thus established with his dramatis personæ for the farce to be given on Sunday evening, Mr. Stechan's business and his location became known as follows:

"FRANK W. STECHAN,
Manager Mrs. Fox Kane,
Crawford House,
Boston.
From Wade Entertainment Bureau, N. Y."

The so-called "exposure" came off Nov. 4th. From that date to Nov. 10th she remained in the hotel, apparently, for reasons best known to themselves, deserted by her manager and his confrères. Though announced to appear in Philadelphia Sunday, Nov. 11th, as she asserted, she was thus left with limited means, to settle her hotel bill. Under these circumstances she applied to Manager Harris, of the Howard Athenæum, (where the company under the control of the said Bureau that directed Mrs. Kane's movements had been playing,) and he very kindly furnished her with a pass over the Fall River line to reach New York City. During the interview she informed Mr. Harris that she was billed to show in Philadelphia Sunday night, Nov. 11th, but her employers would be disappointed by her non-appearance, as she did not mean to go there.

While at the hotel Mrs. Kane had several callers, one of whom sent to her room his card, on which was written:

"CURTIS, SPIRIT-GRABBER."

She looked at this a moment, and said to the messenger, "Tell him I am not in." Another who came, desiring to see her, sent up his card, on which was "Mr. Richard Hodgson, Secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research." Mrs. Kane gave no more favor to this than to the other. She said the reporters for the daily papers expressed surprise at her having such a stupid assistant as Richmond, and the action of her agent naturally leads one to suppose that it was also a matter of surprise to him.

After Mrs. Kane's departure the floor of her room was found littered with scraps of paper and torn cards, among the latter her business card as a medium, on which, after stating location in New York and terms, came this line: "Conclusive proofs are always received of the presence of spirits," followed by the attestation of a well-known gentleman of New York that "Mrs. Kane is one of the best mediums known to his large experience," spirit-friends communicating through her, giving "conclusive evidence of their identity." To this we may add that it is well-known that, under the control of her legitimate spirit-guides, she has written messages with great rapidity from right to left, so that they could be read only by holding them in front of a mirror and deciphering them from their reflection thereon; a feat which she could not do without spirit-aid, and which she has failed to explain, for the reason that she cannot consistently with her allegation that she has never been indebted to such assistance.

Taking all the known facts in the case upon the character of Mrs. Kane's mediumship, and the exhibition the "manager of Mrs. Fox Kane" made with her as the central figure of the "show" in this city and New York, all concerned in that lamentable display may well seek to conceal themselves by deserting her as they did, and thus bringing the farce to a close.

P. S.—The Boston Music Hall Kane fiasco manager is reported as saying that he had got through with her; that her New York agent had "shook" her, and that he had paid her the $25.00 agreed upon for her Sunday services (?) in the Music Hall. He wound up by saying that he wanted no more of her, and he guessed her hotel bill would about eat up her salary!

MORAL.

The old saying, that "the wish is father to the thought," holds good in this instance, as the sensational public press—when the Fox got caught in that New York Theatrical Bureau trap—announced in catch-penny capitals that Spiritualism was fully exposed, etc. Now will these newspapers, which have been "swift" witnesses against the Spiritualists of this country and their philosophy, apologize for the circulation of so much falsehood? We shall see.

One of our correspondents, in alluding to this recent escapade, says:

"What a contemptible and disgusting piece of business the Fox affair is! Contemptible in regard to the fallen, treacherous mediums (and their low familiars, who it seems still cling to and work with them) and in regard to the depraved, groveling individuals, who, to injure our cause and put money in their pockets, use them, and thus deceive the public. It is lamentable that the ignorance and prejudice of the people who know nothing of Spiritualism should be so strengthened, without our having any corresponding means of correction and vindication: How can we reach the general public and bring them to a fair consideration of the real facts? If the secular papers would do us the justice to place the real facts before the public, what a world of good it would do!"

☞ The Spiritualistic press all over the world is requested to copy the above statement of facts.

When the secular press speaks out bravely and with unaffected independence upon a matter so engrossing to all hearts and minds as that of continuous intercourse between the realms of earth and spirit, it deserves a special and separate mention of commendation, which we trust we shall never be backward to propose. It is with grateful admiration that we read a recent editorial article in the Minneapolis (Minn.) Tribune on the subject of "Exposing Spiritualism," which, as is well known, has taken on fresh and enlarged interest by reason of the professed "exposures" of the Fox Sisters, whose case was treated with proper consideration in the last issue of THE BANNER. The Tribune sums up the matter in clear and vigorous terms. While it allows that there are to-day over eight millions of avowed Spiritualists, and the number of men and women who believe it yet dare not own it is probably three times as many, it rightly insists that "Spiritualism as a religious belief is as much entitled to tolerance and respect as Catholicism or Unitarianism, or as the faith of Swedenborg, which takes pious cognizance of the same phenomena which Spiritualists hold as evidence of future existence." This is good ground, and in fact the only ground to be taken in the case. For, as The Tribune justly reasons, "any belief which tends to improve a portion of a community, no matter how small, should be encouraged. Your neighbor's path to a higher moral and spiritual plane may not be known to you, but you have no reason to believe that it is less safe, less sure or less direct than the one you are following yourself."

The Tribune sees no particular reason why the cheap and oft-repeated charges of deception, "immorality," etc., etc., should be regarded as final dispositions of Modern Spiritualism in its present stage of development. Concerning the latter accusation—so greedily caught up and flung at the New Dispensation when anything occurs among its followers which can be tortured into giving a seeming foundation for it—The Tribune very justly says: "When a Sunday school superintendent leaves the country with the cash box, or a minister leaves his charge and his family to visit abroad with another gentleman's wife, nobody thinks of reflecting on the Christian religion." Why, we would inquire, cannot public fair dealing accord a like treatment to Spiritualism?

The mere fact of the ability of certain persons to produce raps, and to execute slate-writing with the properly-contrived apparatus of the conjurer, "argues," says The Tribune, "nothing against the genuineness of other demonstrations.

As for the "toe-joint" theory, The Tribune, while allowing it a place among the arguments used by those who oppose Spiritualism, is still of opinion that "The destroying of the belief of a large body of people, and annihilating the latent hope in the hearts of millions that death is but the dropping of a veil between us and our beloved, requires a higher type of demonstration." It is unable to see why a system involving "deep faith and sincere convictions, both aiding to secure better morals and leading the mind into better channels, should be subjected to ridicule or contemptuous derogation," on the poor grounds alleged by its detractors.

Now comes the broad, liberal, common-sense assoveration of the Minneapolis Tribune, that comprehends the whole subject and covers the whole ground. "After all," it says, "Spiritualism contains nothing that is opposed to religion, morality, or the Bible. The Bible is a religion born of spiritual faith, of miraculous visions of angels, interviews with spirits, prophetic signs and warnings and dreams. From Genesis to John, the communion between the physical and spiritual world is an accepted fact. The supervision of spirits over earthly affairs is related as a matter of course. The warnings and admonitions of spirits excite no wonder. The communication of angels and mortals forms the warp and woof of evidence in the Christian religion. The Bible furnishes a long list of very eminent men who talked with angels or saints or spirits. We are left, then, to deny their testimony and call the old prophets and wise men frauds, or accept it as the evidence of spiritual communications. If men, in the days of Moses and Abraham and Job and of Saul saw and talked with angels, why not in the days of Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith? The New Testament is full of spirit-revelation, of faith and reliance upon spiritual manifestations. If people only nineteen hundred years ago saw and talked with the dead, what is there so marvelous in it to-day? If the spirits of the dead once walked the earth, what special odium should attach to men who claim they never have given up the habit? If the dead ever did come back to anybody on earth, what is there to be derided in the notion that they are doing it to-day? Some of the Bible characters who claimed to be mediums, that is, seers of spirits, were not much better or wiser than some of the gentlemen who claim such powers to-day. Moral character did not seem to be a test of mediumship then, nor is it so claimed now. The character of communications was not always angelic then, according to our notion, inciting to war, pillage, and murder. If immortality is not a fable, but a divine truth, the souls of men abide somewhere, under new conditions, governed by laws of a spiritual nature. There does not seem to be anything very blood-curdling, or horrible, or immoral, in discovering that the great law which guides the sap in the tree and the blood in one's veins, should extend over and embrace the spirits that are chained to the flesh and the spirits that are freed from its weight."

The best possible refutation and rebuke of the bigotry and ignorant narrowness which sets itself up to condemn and denounce Spiritualism until it shall have become a social fashion and thus achieved social control, is furnished in just such plain words as are uttered so bravely, in an age in which superstitious cant dies so hard, by this leading journal of the great Northwest, the Minneapolis Tribune. It merits both thanks and admiration for what it has spoken. And it has spoken at the right time.

"Spiritualism, as a religious belief," we repeat, "is as much entitled to tolerance and respect as Catholicism or Unitarianism, or as the faith of Swedenborg, which takes pious cognizance of the same phenomena which Spiritualists hold as evidence of a future existence." And what Spiritualism is fairly entitled to, that it strenuously claims. It will be content with nothing less. It asks for no crusts or bones in the way of charity, but will come steadily and silently into full possession of its own, not by conceded favor but as a royal right. Its weapons are not carnal weapons, yet its work is with humanity in all its varied conditions; hence it employs such agents and agencies as are most effective to accomplish its desire and purpose. And employing these, it will not be content to take the place to which its ignorant enemies assign it, and it refuses to wear the stigma which they selfishly choose to affix to its name. A new day is in its morning, that warns the bats and the owls to betake themselves to their dens.

The Influence of Surroundings.

The modern scientific term for surroundings is environments, which is a far more accurate and comprehensive term. How greatly an individual, a people and an age is indebted to these environments, both directly and indirectly, it is not easy to estimate with precision and fullness, although the characteristic results are not difficult to perceive and appreciate. What occurs in one period of the world and could not have occurred in a previous period, is due to conditions that prevailed at one time, but did not and could not at another. The case of the individual fairly enough illustrates the subject.

There is a struggle all the time going on, and none the less because the individual may be wholly or partially conscious of it, to emerge from the existing form into another, and the ascertained law is that it is from the lower to the higher. This takes place from two leading causes—a desire of adaptation to the environment, and an inborn impulse to development. It is thus an internal and an external force that is operating all the time, and in a certain sense a centrifugal and a centripetal force. Finally appears in operation the law of conservation, which in the case of the individual manifests itself chiefly in heredity. Natural selection, or the survival of that which is best fitted to survive, is the result of all three. This rule, now held by advanced scientists to be invariable, is traceable most clearly in the realm of biology, but in morals and character there are a multitude of circumstances to be considered which compel the allowance of a wide latitude of construction. It cannot as yet be so clearly demonstrated that heredity rules in human character, as it can be that striking traits are visibly transmitted, as it can be shown that physical endowments are both transmissible and subject to the direct influences of environment.

In the life of the individual in society it is easy to see the effect which a certain state of things is sure to produce, which under an entirely different state of things would be inconceivable. Every person of intelligent observation readily recognizes the work done on the character of their inmates by squalid tenements, in dirty and sunless streets, away from the animating warmth of clean and healthy social influences, and in the midst of hard and repulsive associations. As in physical life, moral and spiritual qualities will be sure to be visibly affected by such unfavorable environments. Defilement will never fail to be the result of handling pitch. If, therefore, society would save itself by improving in all ways the environments of its members, it must bestir itself in those quarters in which its chief perils are notoriously accumulating.

As a recent writer in Progress practically observes, the place where a man earns his bread, where he makes his home, and the street he mostly frequents, forms his compelling and conclusive environment. The State has interfered to modify the rules of work, and it is no less called upon to modify the tenement-house home and the street in which it is located. The death list is not wholly physical; it is moral also. Avarice and apathy work together to the same frightful end. The State, it is reasonably held, has the same right to compel better surroundings for its citizens that it has to prevent their degradation by the tyranny of employers. This is become so large and important a question in our modern cities with their swarming populations that it may be considered a vital one in the preservation and growth of society.

Words for Non-Spiritualists to Ponder.

"Ye have the poor always with you," said the humble Nazarene. So it has ever been and will continue to be until the longed-for millennium arrives, of which there is no likelihood until unadulterated love shall take the place of hate in the minds of mankind. Still much is being accomplished by philanthropic individuals.

We have been instrumental in aiding many destitute ones for years, and still applications are coming to us for aid. Our God's Poor Fund was established for this purpose by request of spirit friends, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that many unfortunates have been from time to time relieved in consequence—as numerous letters of acknowledgment fully attest.

We have in mind one very peculiar case: It was that of Austin Kent, residing in Stockholm, New York, who was for a long time bedridden with chronic rheumatism. He was a great sufferer. One morning, while we were opening our mail, a spirit said: "Please send Mr. Kent ten dollars, as he is in great need." We accordingly sent to him a letter containing the amount requested. The next mail brought us a letter acknowledging its receipt, with a statement that on the very morning we received the spirit message, he had prayed earnestly to the angels for assistance, saying in his prayer that if his appeal was heard by them he felt confident some way would be opened whereby he could be aided, as he believed the words spoken of olden time: "Ask, and it shall be given." "And now," said he, I am sure that my prayer was heard, and I am deeply thankful for THE BANNER'S aid. May God bless you in your noble work, as he surely will." He lingered in his diseased form a long time after this, and we assisted him pecuniarily many times ere he passed to the spirit-world. He subsequently came to our public circle-room and thanked us for the assistance we had rendered him while in his agony of mind and body.

Many other similar cases could be cited wherein pecuniary aid has been rendered the destitute—not only by THE BANNER, but by others who were or were not mediums—with names and dates; but the sensitive ones benefited who are still on the earthly plane would not like to have us publicly record their names.

The only reason why we have given the above statement of facts is because of the continued abuse and vilification Spiritualists are receiving from those who, knowing nothing of Spiritualism and its media, except through the garbled statements of wholly unreliable people, consider the former a system out of which no good thing can proceed, and the latter as impostors of the most unpromising character.

Alfred Russel Wallace on Materialization.

In a correspondence between Alfred Russel Wallace and Vaughan Jenkins, on the materialization phenomenon, more particularly relative to the American experience of Mr. Wallace in this country, to the conclusions of which Mr. Jenkins took exceptions, the former expresses some of his views as follows, as published in Light:

"FRITH HILL, GODALMING,
June 26th, 1888.

E. VAUGHAN JENKINS, ESQ.:

Dear Sir—You have evidently formed erroneous ideas of what 'materialization' is. No Spiritualist believes it to be 'the real body' of the individual, or even 'a real body' in one sense of the term. It is something temporarily material for purposes of identification; but what exactly no one can tell. All the information we can get shows that it is formed partly (often chiefly) from the body of the medium, partly from the bodies of the persons present, or from their 'atmosphere' or emanations, and that the likeness to any individual is produced by an effort which is not always successful, since, during the same evening, the same spirit-form sometimes appears in very different degrees of likeness to his mortal body; sometimes more like the medium, hence many of the accusations of imposture. The permanent materialization of hair and portions of garment is very extraordinary. Sometimes such things do vanish away, either rapidly or gradually, but in other cases both remain. All we can at present do is to make sure of the facts. The laws of the phenomena we may never know till we are spirits ourselves, and not, perhaps, even then. Can we tell really how we move our hands and fingers to write and express our thoughts? Spirits do not appear to be able to tell us how they materialize. It is a faculty exercised by the will-power of some spirits, and is probably quite as rare and remarkable and inexplicable among them as physical mediumship is among us. Believe me, yours faithfully,
ALFRED R. WALLACE.

P. S.—The appearance of the double of any living person, sometimes to two or more witnesses, seems analogous to materialization, and the person whose double appears has no conception how it is done. Neither have the spirits who materialize, except that it seems to be more directly a matter of will with them.—A. R. W."

Raps at Henry Ward Beecher's Church.

An incident illustrative of the truth that the spirit rap is produced at times and places where the toe-joint or any similar theory of its origin will not apply, is related by Albert Morton in the Golden Gate. We remember to have seen mention of it at the time as happening in the vestry of Mr. Beecher's church in Brooklyn. Mr. Morton says:

"The reporter's table was immediately in front of Mr. Beecher, and among them were several mediums—including Mr. Beecher; the effect of the combination was to form a strong spiritual battery, in which condition the spirits improved the opportunity to produce raps. Finally, the signals of approval grew so strong, when the speaker pleased his invisible hearers, as to create considerable curiosity and excitement in the minds of the listeners, and the 'spirit circle' was broken up by the removal of the reporters to other locations in the church. The stale, toe-joint, snapping theory, which was proven fallacious many years ago, but has recently been revived by the sensational reports of interviews with poor, broken-down Margaret and Kate Fox, would hardly afford a reasonable explanation of the manifestations in Beecher's church."

☞ D. Higbie, M. D., Burton, Mich., says: "In using Planchette sit in a well-darkened room for five or six séances—then gradually admit light."

Idlers that are Not Idlers.

We live in thought, or we do not live at all. If we think we live only in sensation we do only because we think so, thus making thought all. Therefore it may often be impertinent and intrusive to tell another that he is a good-for-nothing, merely because he is not working industriously with his hands. The world's work is happily varied, and we are not the distributors of it. If it may with sweeping truthfulness be said that very few persons find the places in life for which they are specially fitted, it is to be said on the other hand that those who do ought to be left undisturbed in the performance of what they are specially qualified for. Yet the case is, that they are the very ones whom the ill-assorted majority select as the objects of their ill-natured and envious criticism.

A man may be thought an idler, and even lazy, and yet be really engaged in doing precisely that which has got to be done somewhere and by somebody in order to show the others on the way. It is not for us to judge one another too closely, if at all. One may indeed pass a considerable term of his life in apparently enforced idleness, when he is simply going through the stages of preparation for a subsequent career of usefulness and honor. The case of General Grant will always be in point as a distinguished illustration of this statement. Scarcely one of those who had before known him would have supposed that he was silently being schooled for the great work he was a few years afterward to be summoned to perform in the field of war. It is the same with men and women in all other departments of life and activity. Without the previous period of seclusion, during which the faculties are all encouraged to gather strength and form for the test to which they are to be applied, they would find themselves unprepared just when they are needed, and no time can be allowed for preparation.

The geniuses of the world's history have each and all been subjected to this unconscious discipline before being called to their work and position. It was so with Mahomet, with Shelley, with Luther, with Darwin, with our own Hawthorne. What they ultimately yield from their interior lives for the enlargement and enrichment of the common life, is but the fruit that has ripened unnoticed by others, and never would have ripened save in solitude and seclusion.

The Epidemic Scare.

It has come to be clearly understood that all zymotic diseases originate in filth simply. The putrefying of animal or vegetable matter by the combined action of heat and moisture evolves a variety of microbes, and these are the cause of all the epidemics known. Science has accomplished wonders in tracing different diseases to their origin. It has been said that the microbic theory respecting zymotic diseases introduces us into a whole under-world of knowledge, of which we have only entered the portals. More extended and definite knowledge is to be expected in the near future. By the help of these discoveries of science we are enabled to ward off different diseases by avoiding their causes. It has been proposed to organize an international congress and board of health for the investigation of epidemic diseases, and also to exercise jurisdiction over every plague-spot and germ-plantation on the face of the globe, thereby preventing disease by preventing its origin.

Mr. Massey in Boston.

As noted on our fifth page, Gerald Massey, of England, delivered on Sunday afternoon last the first of two lectures which he is to give in this city under engagement with the Independent Club at Berkeley Hall. The occasion proved a pronounced success, socially, mentally and financially.

He will speak at the same place next Sunday afternoon, having for his subject: "The Devil of Darkness."

It is announced that Mr. Massey will be followed, in this course of lectures, by Isabella Beecher Hooker.

Our Foes Within and Without:

A discourse titled as above, having especial reference to Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane's recent denunciation of Spiritualism, and given through the mediumship of Mrs. R. S. LILLIE before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society in Berkeley Hall, Sunday morning, Nov. 4th, 1888, together with the evening discourse bearing upon the same subject, will appear in the next two numbers of THE BANNER, and subsequently be put in pamphlet form, the price of which will be very moderate.

Mrs. Ada Foye in Cleveland, O.

This distinguished platform test-medium will occupy the spiritual rostrum at Memorial Hall, 170 Superior street, during the month of December. Friends in surrounding towns wishing to engage this remarkable medium for week-day meetings or parlor séances can apply to Thos. Lees, 105 Cross street.

Memorial Services

Will be held on Sunday, Nov. 25th, at 10:30 A. M., under the auspices of the First Spiritual Temple Society, at Berkeley Hall, Boston, as a tribute to the friendly and spiritual worth of the late JOSEPH L. NEWMAN.

☞ A question was propounded at the spiritual meeting at Berkeley Hall, Boston, last Sunday morning, for the spirit in control of Mrs. Lillie to answer, as to whether, in consequence of Mrs. Kane's "falling from grace," the Spiritualists should ignore their 31st of March celebration in the future. "By no means!" was the emphatic reply of the speaker, which elicited applause; and then ollowed brief but cogent remarks upon the subject, going to show that such episodes as had of late agitated the public mind could do no possible harm, as MODERN SPIRITUALISM was based upon Truth, which could not be overthrown.

The speaker's subsequent remarks, in extenso, upon the question of the destiny of the soul, were listened to with the closest attention by a large congregation, and elicited frequent applause, so clear was the reasoning and so potent were the statements made.

☞ "C. J. B." writes from East Derry, N. H., 3d inst.: "Several people are getting interested in reading THE BANNER here now, and quite a number await with pleasant anticipations for the story, 'Bars and Thresholds,' as it proceeds.—The message from MR. DAVIS BUTLER which appeared some time ago seemed very natural. He was one of our neighbors. His wife spoke of it as 'a beautiful message, and just like him.'"

Gerald Massey at Berkeley Hall.

This distinguished English author, poet, lecturer and Spiritualist, addressed a large audience, gathered under the auspices of the Independent Club of Boston, at the above named hall on Sunday afternoon last. His scholarly remarks were attentively listened to, and called out pronounced appreciation on the part of his auditors.

Mr. Massey was described by the Herald as an elderly gentleman, with greyish moustache and chin whiskers, and wearing glasses. He read from manuscript very quickly and clearly, keeping his subject easily in hand throughout.

Mr. Massey's discourse was well treated by the secular press; from the accounts in the Herald and the Globe we condense the following, reserving a full report to a future number of THE BANNER:

"Man in Search of His Soul for Fifty Thousand Years, and How He found It," was the theme: The speaker alluded to the primitive forms of worship by sign language and by the piercing of ears—forms which continue in some tribes to the present day, and are preserved by those who have no idea of their meaning. We learn in burying the dead that they were interred for future birth, whence the expression, mother earth. The primitive ideas of burial are still extant among the aborigines on this continent. All descent of man is traced from the mother, the earliest form of burial being feminine. The dead were buried with the idea of being reproduced. In Egypt the male burial was the form of resurrection. Religion originated in the reproduction from another life. The dog was in all likelihood the first animal under the dominion of man. The bones of dogs were buried with human skeletons, showing that at a remote period the dog was buried as an intelligent conductor of the way after death. The primitive man was not a positivist, but a realist, holding to his bit of rock-reality. The practical gnostic sees through death; he does zot doubt, because he knows. Spiritualism has outlived all superstition. It was a common creed that only seers, kings and leaders attained immortality. Hence, "The king never dies." This was because they attained knowledge in themselves. They were recognized as immortals, as mediators between the two worlds on account of their mediumship. Here comes in the origin of the immortal condition.

The primitive Spiritualists were terribly earnest to overleap the barriers of death. He spoke of the Hindus, Chaldeans, Assyrians, Egyptians and Scythians being acquainted with animal magnetism; of Indian soothsayers preparing themselves with the sweating bath for their ecstatic condition; of the fasting of the Malay; of the Zulu doctor castigating himself till he swoons into a trance; of the part played by serpent wisdom in the ancient mysteries; of the hypnotist; of the manitu or medicine men on the Guinea coast, the sacred trees from which narcotics could be distilled for the purpose of inducing trance; of the old customs of masking and mumming; of Harlequin, the potent transformer; of masks in animal forms, representing the nature powers, or the Totemic and typical ancestors; of the book of the dead, re-discovered in the reign of Housapti, the fifth king of the first dynasty, who lived more than six thousand years ago; of the Egyptian Karast, or Christ, the mummy image, all pointing to the universal idea of re-birth, or immortality.

The customs of drinking and of smoking to-day are customs bequeathed to us under sacred guise, and inborn into the children of this generation.

For ages in Egypt man was represented to be an immortal spirit. It was thought to be a joyful thing for the spirit to revisit the earthly body and see how well it had been preserved. It was the supreme type of transformation into an immortal image. The Egyptians did not, as many thought, make mummies as types indicative of physical resurrection. Their idea was transformation, not resurrection.

Christianity was formed on mere dust, that a mere whiff of science can blow away. It clings to the earth with a rootage of eighteen hundred years. The present Christian belief is an ignorant one, swallowing all that is unbelievable. The idea of physical resurrection is unscientific and utterly false. The church was gnostic until the middle of the second century: it was spiritualistic. Then it put its foot down upon all phenomena, like the dog in Æsop's fables, dropping the substance for the shadow, drawing down the blinds to shut out the light of nature. Ever since there has been a ceaseless war between the church and Spiritualism.

Physical resurrection cannot establish the continuity of human existence for us. Christians oppose and fear cremation because it may make future life desolate.

You cannot graft a living shoot into a dead root. Christianity and Spiritualism cannot be united, because the first has only a mythological, not a spiritual origin. It is for Spiritualism to join hands with science, not to seek an alliance with a system falsely founded. A new and more comprehensive gnosticism is one of the crying wants of the age.

Mr. Massey will make his last appearance for the present at Berkeley Hall next Sunday afternoon; speaking at that time on "THE DEVIL OF DARKNESS."

BY C. J. HELLEBERG, CINCINNATI, O.

A CLAIRVOYANT AT THE BRUSSELS FAIR.

La Messager of Liege, Belgium, of the 1st of October, reprints from Figaro, Paris, what a correspondent of that journal says of an "exceptional curiosity" at the Hermes Fair, established at the South Wet-Dock. This "curiosity" is an Italian woman by the name of Lully, thirty-five or forty years old, who, placed between two carousals of wood-horses, in the midst of orchestra noise and racket of parades, passes into a magnetic sleep as quickly as an isolated subject sheltered by a cabinet. It is only necessary for the magnetizer to place his hands over her eyes a few seconds and Lully is asleep on her elevated chair surrounded by a crowd of spectators. Thus placed, Lully at once, without hesitation, tells what is on a visiting-card in a portfolio; gives the address of the hatter printed on the lining of a hat; and tells the contents of a letter inclosed in an envelope. She pronounces, without having heard, the name of any person who places a hand on her shoulder or forehead. The words which she repeats or reads cannot be communicated by any ingenious combinations of questions, by speech or movements of lips, because the magnetizer neither speaks nor questions.

The lady reads in French a letter written in the Flemish language, although she speaks French but poorly, and absolutely knows nothing of Flemish. The correspondent says: "In magnetic sleep she becomes a polyglot; I have heard her read and fluently translate two verses of Virgil. The phenomena are not new, but the great interest in this exhibition resides in the subject's instantaneous transmission and sure responses. Lully is a perfect subject. She has caused nearly the whole of Brussels to come to the fair-ground, and several physicians have offered considerable sums of money to persuade her to quit her booth and submit herself for a year to their experiments. Lully is very submissive and gentle when in magnetic sleep, but becomes ambitious in her normal state. She is now studying to make herself more perfect in the French language in order to exhibit in Paris. She transmits well the spectators' thoughts, but she is obliged to express herself in a patois tolerably euphonical between the provincial and the Piedmont ligurien. She expects to be able in a few months to present herself before the Parisian public.

MAGNETIC HEALING.

A writer in the Homopathische Monatsblätter, (Stuttgart,) for June, 1888, remarks that magnetic healing is considered by some to be charlatanry, or self-delusion, because it does not to them seem possible that from certain human beings a nerve-fluid flows which influences others. He then says he had an opportunity in Wiesbaden to observe an experiment which decides this question. The well-known magnetic healer Kramer, in the Restuarant "Kaiserhalle," placed his walking stick on a table, and held the head of it in his hand; from the end of the stick, of seven persons present, four of them saw a gaseous fluid flow, and also felt it very plainly. Two evenings later the experiment was again made, and after one person who happened to be present had expressed his suspicion that Mr. Kramer might have his stick prepared, Kramer asked for another, which was given him by one of the strangers. From this, of eight persons present, six saw the outflow very plainly. Among them was a doctor who, from this remarkable experiment, became convinced of the fact in dispute. It is seldom that a magnetic healer has such a strong magnetic power as Mr. Kramer, who is seventy-five years old.

SEANCE AT ODESSA.

In La Vérité, a spiritual paper of Buenos Ayres, of Aug. 1st and 10th are reports of eleven private séances held in Odessa. At that of April 13th were present the following persons: Marie Miaskovska, Samuel, Sophie Nelbourg, Eugène Schuschalemberg and Johannes Packla. The séance was held in the dark from nine to ten P. M. The first manifestation was a rain of leaden shots coming nobody knew from whence; the table was elevated, remaining in mid air some time. Answers of mental questions were given. Flowers were thrown on the table, having the fragrance of violets, and drops of water fell upon the hands of the sitters. When lights were brought there were found small, odorless flowers with fresh dew-drops on them; no one knew what kind they were, but, judging from the character of the stem, thought they were blossoms of fruit trees. After an intermission of about twenty minutes, Eugène, the medium, was directed to seat himself outside the circle. Having done so, various physical phenomena took place, considerable freedom being displayed in the displacement of the medium and his clothing, all occurring within ten seconds.

Demise of Col. B. P. Burpee.

Among New Hampshire Spiritualists no one has been more prominent than Col. B. P. Burpee, of Manchester, who passed to the higher life, Nov. 1st, having attained his seventieth year.

He was born in New London, N. H., Aug. 27th, 1818. He resided in that town some forty years, after which he removed to Sutton, where he engaged in trade, and later lived in Hopkinton, and also in Goffstown. For quite a number of years he was established in Manchester, where he died. He had served in the Legislature and in the city government. Colonel Burpee received his title from having commanded a regiment in the old State militia. He left five children.

He was a man of decided convictions and fearless in their expression. He was identified with the local Society of Spiritualists, the State Society, and with the Sunapee Lake Camp-Meeting, of which he was a director during the last year. His funeral was largely attended by members of the city government, old-time residents and personal friends. Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, delivered an appropriate address, analyzing and commending the character of our risen friend, and outlining the philosophy of life which had governed his conduct. Rev. Mr. Morrison, of the Universalist Church, participated in the exercises.

☞ The Social of the ladies of the Unity Church, Santa Cruz, Cal., held in Masonic Hall, Oct. 19th, was of more than ordinary interest. Prof. Strohlein and pupil rendered a duet upon the zither and Prof. S. two solos. J. J. Morse welcomed the guests in an appropriate address. J. C. Munson sang, as did also Florence, the accomplished daughter of Mr. Morse. Previous to the collation Mr. Morse gave a reading and Florence Morse sang another song, and at the close of the feast dancing was engaged in until twelve, when the company dispersed, congratulating one another upon having participated in a thoroughly enjoyable time.

☞ The fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. James Wilson was observed by about two hundred of their friends at their residence in Bridgeport, Ct., in which city they have lived thirty-one years. Judge Dailey of New York read a poem written by himself for the occasion. Berger's Orchestra furnished music for dancing, and a collation was served by Mr. Andrews of the Seaside Institute Café. The evening was to all present a very happy and enjoyable one.

☞ Prof. J. W. Cadwell closed a highly interesting course of mesmeric entertainments at Brockton, Mass., Nov. 9th, and commenced an engagement of the same nature with the Reform Club of Lowell, Mass., on the evening of Nov. 12th. Two years ago he gave entertainments in Lowell for seven consecutive weeks, and there is every reason to warrant the prediction that he will be equally successful at the present time.

☞ Helen Stuart-Richings delivered the closing lecture of a series in Cleveland, O., on the 28th ult., at the close of which she gave psychometric readings. The exercises throughout held the close attention of a large and appreciative audience, notes upon which by a correspondent will be placed before our readers next week.

☞ W. J. Colville has put in the hands of the BANNER OF LIGHT publishers a copy of "ART MAGIC," now out of print, and for which large prices are often asked. It is hereby offered at $10, and can be sent immediately to any applicant who forwards that amount.

☞ Mrs. Gertrude Berry, one of the well-known Berry Sisters, has removed to No. 4 Jefferson street, Providence, R. I., where she has not retired from her mediumistic work entirely, but is giving circles to good responsible parties only.

☞ Dr. James A. Bliss, the developing medium, will visit Memphis, Tenn., for at least one week, commencing Thursday, Nov. 22d; and will hold developing circles every evening. For full particulars inquire of Mrs. Louisa Meigs, 277 Poplar street, Memphis, Tenn.

☞ As we go to press the report is current that Molly Fancher, the fasting girl of Brooklyn, N. Y., is passing to spirit-life. We shall print next week an account of her remarkable spiritualistic experiences.

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

NOVEMBER IN THE GARDEN.

The sunflowers in the garden
Are bending limp and low;
The cornstalks, brown and withered,
Stand rustling in a row.
"We were so fine," they murmur,
"A little while ago!"

The sky is gray and gloomy,
Without the sunshine's glow.
There is no smiling anywhere
Unless—oh, gladsome show!
Twelve plump and golden pumpkins
All beaming in a row!

They say, "Why so despairing?
We're always here, you know,
At this unpleasant season
Expressly sent to show
The need of glad Thanksgiving
In spite of frost and snow."

A repertory of the attractions presented since the opening of the theatre, Nov. 9th, 1885, fills one sheet, while on another are printed the potent attractions to come for the season of '88–'89. The entire book is lined with deep red satin, with "Hollis Street Theatre, Isaac B. Rich, Proprietor and Manager," in heavy black lettering on the first leaf of the book.

To Inquirers.

☞ As numerous letters are often directed to this office from distant points inquiring as to who are the best mediums to apply to for spiritual information, we take this method of replying to all such that, while we believe the mediums advertising in our columns are reliable, yet we cannot recommend any special medium to any particular person, as the medium who may satisfy one investigator may not be able to meet the requirements of another. It is best, therefore, for each investigator to visit such mediums as he may believe possess the power of bringing him into communication with the spirit-world, and thus judge of their claims for himself.

List of Lecturers.

THE BANNER publishes from time to time a list of Spiritualist Lecturers with their post-office addresses attached without charge, and in consideration of our so doing it seems to us they should be more particular than many of them are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Attention to this request is earnestly desired, and should be attended to at once.

COLBY & RICH, at their Bookstore, No. 9 Bosworth street, have on sale a large assortment of highly interesting books suitable for Christmas presents, which they offer to the public at very reasonable rates. Give this firm a call and examine their assortment for yourselves. tf

For Dyspepsia, use Horsford's Acid Phosphate. Dr. LORENZO WAITE, Pittsfield, Mass., says: "From its use for a period of about eight weeks, to the exclusion of all other remedies, I attribute the restoration to health of a patient who was emaciated to the last degree in consequence of nervous prostration and dyspepsia. This patient's stomach was in such an irritable condition that he could not bear either liquid or solid food. An accomplished physician of many years' experience, whom I called in consultation, pronounced his case an incurable one. At this stage I decided to use Horsford's Acid Phosphate, which resulted as above mentioned."

To Correspondents.

☞ No attention is paid to anonymous communications. Name and address of writer in all cases indispensable as a guaranty of good faith. We cannot undertake to preserve or return communications not used.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon Mrs. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 9th, 1888.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[From the audience.] Are the inhabitants of the spirit-world conversant with what transpires on this earth, politically, religiously and scientifically?

ANS.—There are spirits who have passed beyond the flesh and the environments of earth, who take no especial interest in the doings and the movements of the earth's people, and these are not particularly cognizant of the political, religious or scientific signs of the times; but there are many spirits who are cognizant of these movements and signs, and who know perfectly well just how the religious circles are moving; just what is taking place in political life; just what improvements, discoveries and experiments are being made in the realm of science. There are, undoubtedly, more spirits who take an interest in these humanitarian subjects—for they belong to humanity at large—than there are who do not. Those classes of spirits who desire to know what is taking place in your midst come en rapport with you of earth, and gain from your minds, from your environments, and from the signs of the times, just what is the present condition, and what may presumably be the outlook for the future. There are spirits who may not be interested especially in the religious movements of the age, who take a great interest in the political state of the various countries, and there are others who take no interest in religion or politics, who are greatly concerned with the movements of scientific research or discovery, and so on. Any spirit interested in humanity, who has friends on earth, who feels himself drawn backward to this plane of existence, will take an interest in something belonging to the human race, or may take an interest in all its concerns; those who do not trouble themselves concerning things going on in your midst are those who have reaped all the experience necessary for their advancement in connection with this earth, and are passing on to other disciplines and other grades of unfoldment.

Q.—Is the description of the spirit-world and its inhabitants, as given by Swedenborg in his work on "Heaven and Hell," a correct one? if not, in what respect does it differ from the real state of things?

A.—Swedenborg, in his descriptive work called "Heaven and Hell," has given to the world many correct delineations of the conditions and surroundings of certain spirits; but although he describes and speaks of various spheres and localities in the other life, he has not strongly depicted many of the various conditions and planes of existence which are to be found there.

Swedenborg was undoubtedly a sensitive medium, one attended by a special band of spirits, for the dissemination of information and truth among mortals concerning the spirit-world, but he was also a man of pronounced ideas, possessing certain theories and beliefs of his own which he was slow to yield, even under the influence of his attendant spirit-guides, therefore we find in his productions many of his ideas woven into the descriptions given through his instrumentality by the spirits from beyond.

We must also remember that in the day of Swedenborg there was not such an open avenue between the two worlds as we find at the present time. There was much arising from the material atmosphere of mankind which retarded the advancement of spiritual thought as delivered from beyond, and therefore Swedenborg, as also other sensitives, was limited in expression, and in description even, by the conditions which surrounded him on earth.

Again, we understand that those bands of spirits attendant upon the seer were not fully rounded out in the development of their intellectual and spiritual powers of thought; they had come in contact with certain planes of spirit-existence, but had not passed out freely into the spiritual atmosphere, mingling with the inhabitants of various states of spiritual advancement, to such an extent as to warrant them in giving a full and free description of spirit-life, as it may be considered when summed up as a whole; therefore they gave, through their medium, such descriptions and such symbolical ideas and representations of spirit-life as they could best do, and these are what you to-day peruse in the works of Swedenborg, called the seer.

Spirit-life is made up of the various minds, temperaments and organizations belonging to human life. It is just as real a world and as natural a place of abode as is the world which you inhabit. We have various conditions of advancement and growth in humanity, as you have here in the nineteenth century: there are those occupying a very low plane of development, and then we pass onward, through grade after grade of unfoldment, until we come to a stage of exaltation represented by spirits wise and beautiful in their intelligence and spiritual culture. The conditions, surroundings and localities of each class of spirits correspond in appearance with the interior condition and aspect of the individual spirits who inhabit them; therefore the external surroundings of those spirits very low in moral development are crude and unsightly.

The higher we proceed, the more beautiful, refined and lovely are the localities inhabited by intelligent spirits. Swedenborg has given you an idea of this, not only in his work called "Heaven and Hell," but in other productions of his mind, but if Swedenborg were in your midst to-day, with his sensitive brain and peculiar organization, he would undoubtedly be acted upon by a band of spirit intelligences who would give you a more clear description of the other country than he could have given you in his own day and age.

Q.—Can a young medium, just starting out as a lecturer, hold a strong power in the beginning, or does he only hold such a power later, as the result of development?

A.—It depends very much upon the process of development through which the medium has passed. For instance: we find one young medium acted upon, perhaps for years, unconsciously to himself, by spirit intelligences who desire to unfold his mediumistic powers, and to operate through his organization, for their own particular work. The time comes at last when this sensitive is conscious of this external influence; he is obliged to yield to it, even so far as to be brought out upon the platform, to open his mouth, and utter such speech as is given him by these unseen attendants. The medium does not know, from one moment to another, what he shall say, yet as he continues to speak, his mouth is filled with words, given forth in logical utterances. Such a medium is acted upon directly by spirit intelligences attending him, his own organism is used as a machine, and his own mind is not exercised upon it to any extent, and it may be, in his first appearance, as in his last, that he is under the direct influence of one or more spirits, who exercise their power upon him.

We take another medium, operated upon for the development of his powers, who is, of himself, a mind prone to thought and who has attracted to his side spirits interested in lines of thought like unto those which engage his attention; or it may be that those who come to him are interested in certain reformatory movements or questions which do not chain his attention; but they find in him an instrument which they may use for awakening thought in others. This man finds himself acted upon, not mechanically, for he does not open his mouth to speak with words that he has never heard, and knows not from whence they come, but thoughts arise in his mind, and words are given him, and he repeats them as they come. It may be that this medium is exercised upon by attendant spirits as much for the development of his own intellectual faculties, of his own spiritual nature, as for the impartation of knowledge and information through his instrumentality to other minds; yet is this medium under the influence of external intelligences who are using him for some good work, and it may be, at the first time he opens his mouth to speak, as at the last, that he is so far under the influence of these intelligent minds that were they suddenly withdrawn from him, were the magnetic attachments severed between him and them, he would fail to utter a word, and be unable to go on with the thread of a discourse.

Q.—Will you kindly give your ideas upon the outcome of the present controversies with regard to our public schools?

A.—It seems to us that the outcome of the present controversy in relation to our public schools is to be a good and a broad one for humanity. An age when thought can be ventilated freely on all sides is upon us, when man dares to speak that which is pressing upon him, and we are glad that it is so, even though this agitation produces conflicting opinions, and we perceive in the atmosphere much that is hazy and unpleasant to view. We, however, naturally look for this, and therefore, friends, it does not disconcert us in the least. The discussion of this question concerning the education of our young people must of necessity arouse men and women who have given the subject but little attention, and it will train their minds, not only to think in this direction, but also in others that are important, and will, we believe, have a grand and beautiful result not only in our own community, but elsewhere, broadening the human mind, and bringing to it a clear and grand experience.

Do we believe that in this present day an arbitrary demand will be made upon our people that a portion of our youth shall not be trained in that direction which the general public believes to be most beneficial? No; we do not. It is our certain belief—according to our best judgment do we express the opinion—that the day is ripe for the ventilation of thought concerning our educational system, and it seems to us it will be shown that although that scheme of instruction which is most prevalent at the present day may be faulty in certain directions, may be subject to amendment, yet in the abstract it is the very best which we can afford to our young people, therefore it should be vitally protected. We believe that public sentiment is growing in these directions, that the controversy in relation to our public schools will prove of great benefit, not only to those who dwell in private homes who are turning their minds toward it, but also to our public people, those who are interested, or should be, because of the offices they fill, because of the mission devolving upon them, and the responsibilities that are theirs, that it will train these minds to think more correctly, to exercise a wiser judgment not only concerning the training of the youthful mind, but also concerning humanitarian interests in many directions.

We have not the slightest fear that man is to retrograde in this present century; we have no fear that we shall take a backward step, either in the direction of school discipline and training, or in any other line. We believe man is steadily advancing, therefore there comes to us no concern as to the efforts of those who would hold back the car of progress; at the same time it is wise for every intelligent individual to exercise his own right judgment and to put forth the very best effort he can, not only for the protection of himself and his family, but for humanity at large. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; this should be the watchword of every home and every heart, that no clouds may arise, no thorns remain unnoticed, but that all shall be uprooted and destroyed that tends to discord, or in any way to harass the best interests of our people.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 19th, 1888.

Samuel L. Tower.

How often have I thought that after I passed over I would return and send a communication to prove that we live beyond the grave. Many times, as I have entered this room with the desire of doing so, I found I could not take control.

In Millington, Mich., and also in St. Joseph, I have friends. Sarah is here. William comes at times, but is not present to-day. How gladly would we speak to our friends in their homes if we could. Before the spirit took its flight I caught a glimpse of the beautiful beyond. How sweet it is to know that the dear ones come to meet you as you pass over with extended hands. I did not fear to go, for I had learned something of the future while dwelling here; yet I found on entering spirit-life, some two or three years since, that I had much to learn. The friends on the spirit side send greetings to the dear ones that yet remain on earth, the larger number having come to us. Samuel L. Tower, of Millington, Mich.

Mrs. Sarah Blake.

As I come into this room I see some familiar faces. I have not been in spirit-life a very long time. I shall be remembered in Roxbury, Mass., for as I step into the old surroundings I meet and recognize faces which I well know. Changes have been made there, and I often speak with James, calling his attention to them.

It is many years since he passed over. The law of attraction draws us to earth often. As we enter the homes of our friends sometimes they realize that we are there; at other times they do not know of our going or coming. We all come for a good purpose. How little do mortals realize our mission, which is to help them, to attract them into right channels and hold a good influence over them. You may feel that some loved one approaches at twilight, or at midnight, to strengthen and to cheer you, although you cannot see us with the mortal eye. My name is Mrs. Sarah Blake, and my husband is James H. Blake.

Minetta I. Homer.

I passed away with consumption. During my hours of suffering I would eagerly ask the angels to come nearer, so as to help me, and I would say to dear Frank, "How long will it be before they will come to release me from this severe suffering?" I know how much he has missed me. I have been cognizant of it as I have visited him in the home.

Nearly thirty years I dwelt in the mortal form, and I feel that if I could return to earth to stay by turning my hand, I would say no. Our homes are beautiful, and the little children add to our happiness as they gather around us, all laden with beautiful flowers.

You may wonder why we leave our beautiful homes to come to earth; but it is because love is stronger than aught else, and dear friends yet remain upon the mortal shore. Do, dear friends, seek to come into communication with us. Think how much happiness you can bestow upon us by opening a door through which we may enter and speak intelligibly to you.

In the home, if you simply sense our presence speak to us, for it holds us there closely, and makes us realize more sensibly that we are known and recognized.

How delightful were the sensations I experienced as I was rising out of the suffering body, and taking on an immortal form, and how blest I was as the dear friends came to welcome me. As the angels came by my bedside I looked upward, and felt I was almost there.

Frank, mourn me not as gone far away. When trials come and the clouds look dark I am over there to help lift the burden, that you may feel lighter and happier in your soul. I lived in Boston, and shall be remembered as Minetta I. Homer. My husband is Frank P. Homer.

Charles Wood.

I was no stranger to what is termed Spiritualism. I was early taught that spirits hovered around us, and if so, I thought they surely must come to earth to do it; then why should it seem so strange, so impossible, that they should be able to commune with us?

I dwelt in earth-life over eighty years; and think you I lived to that ripe old age and did not learn anything of spirit-communion? I did learn a great deal, and there is much more for me to learn yet. The family was made complete when I threw off the mortal form; father, mother, brothers and sister, all reunited in spirit-life, for I was the last to give up the old ship. Relatives and friends and old neighbors gave me the hand of welcome across that stream. In the home of the dear ones yet left, they understand of my coming and of others coming, for there is one closely connected with the family, in Newton, that the dear spirit-guides hold a watch over and through whom they try to bring some crumbs of comfort to you mortals here. Learn all you can concerning the spirit-world while you are here, for I look upon my earlier years as almost lost time. Some will recognize me, I think, in Newton, in Boston, and also in Worcester, where I lived. Charles Wood.

Zuba Lacount.

I have not as yet been able to send a message from this place, for several reasons: at one time I could not take control, at another I was a little late, then again we cannot always get permission to speak. As I have looked into the audience, I have seen familiar faces, and have to-day. I know, Matilda, you often ask why do not certain ones come; and you are studying some of the laws that govern and hold the spirit.

I would like my husband and children to know that mother has not left them, and that on the spirit side there are no aches or pains. My children, live in peace and harmony while you remain in this life, for it is too short to lose friendship.

How glad I was when I found it was still life, and not death. I often step into Provincetown and Wellfleet, and sometimes the thought runs through my spirit: "Do they realize that I am so near?" Abbie, I would like you to learn a little more of spirit-return, for it will be a help to you when you are called to take leave of mortal scenes. Mother is waiting to clasp her children in her arms.

I see, John, that disappointments have come to you, and that you do not succeed as you thought you were going to. I know disappointments have come to dear friends, aside from the immediate family.

George is here, and sends greetings. And, Matilda, your own dear earth mother that was borne away when you were a mere child, often visits you. I have come into communication with her, and we have conversed together many times. She well understands that the threads are breaking, and also knows of the changes that have come to the father. How many times do we visit you when least you know we are there. The dear angel child was taken out of the home for a wise purpose, and you are seeing it, more and more, every day.

I would send greetings to my children; they are scattered, some in Wellfleet, and some in Malden. I would like them all to know that mother comes to them. My name is Zuba Lacount, and my home was in Wellfleet, Mass.

Emeline Moore.

For more than a twelvemonth I have been a frequent visitor here. I want my loved ones to know that I live, and that I have the power to visit them.

Our home above is one of those mansions which the Father has promised his children. The buildings are to all appearances houses, even as yours are on earth. We love to take care of them and adorn them the same as you would do here; but nothing is material, all is spiritual.

A little while ago, as Lizzie was talking with me concerning our earthly friends, the earnest desire and question arose within me, What can we do to make them know when we are there?

Now every little sound that we make has a meaning, just the same as do the sounds that come over your telegraphic wires, and we would have our friends listen for these sounds. I have often wished I might gain more power, for it is the greatest disappointment we meet to come to visit the loved ones, and find that we cannot make them realize it.

How often have I seen earnest faces in this room and noted the wish in the heart that some spirit would manifest its presence. Have courage, dear mortals; in time we may gain power enough to speak to the dear ones, for one has as great an attraction to earth as does another at times.

In Volney, Oswego Co., N. Y., I think I shall be recognized. My name is Emeline Moore. I was the wife of I. D. Moore.

Oliver S. Adams.

It is forty years and more since I threw off the mantle of flesh and became clothed with an immortal form, and I feel that it is about time I tried to speak for myself. I know, Caroline, you have often wondered why I did not come. Bless you! I couldn't count the times that I have come to earth, or that I have been in this room. I have seen you and Carrie here together, and how little you knew that I stood so near you at that time. We love to come into these meetings, for we gain instruction by hearing the spirits speak; also it gives us power to control other mediums.

What a grand and noble work is going on here! Then, again, what a grand work is going on beyond the veil, of which you never will understand until you come to dwell on our side. We would ask you mortals to send forth an earnest petition for the guardianship of the angels, that they may walk hand in hand with you and spiritualize your own existence while dwelling here.

I think some of the old townsmen in Reading, Mass., will call Oliver S. Adams to mind, and I know, Caroline, you do not forget me. George Green is here to-day and sends greetings to you. I am satisfied with the home I have, but through progression I hope to build it more and more beautiful. I have a great desire to return to earth to help mortals. How little you realize of the activity of the life beyond the veil: no idlers there, no drones, for all have their work to do, and are glad to do it.

Many changes have I seen in the old town; some places look familiar, and some I would hardly think I had ever looked upon when here.

This message will reach my dear wife and daughter, for your paper goes into the town, although some I know would be glad to "put it out." They can't do it.

Annie Boutwell.

[To the Chairman:] Grandpa said I could come. Then this minister man here said I could, too, if I did n't talk too fast. I want to tell you I go to school, and I have to recite to a spirit-lady; she 's a teacher. I did n't go to school here. I wan't big enough. Grandpa said if I 'd staid here just a year more I 'd have gone to school, but I went right off, I did n't have to wait a year. We have birds and doggies and horses, and all the animals, just the same as you have here: but they 're very kind; they do n't do any harm.

[Pointing into the audience:] There 's a gentleman with white hair, sitting on the outside of the seat, and a spirit-lady stands by him, with her hand upon his shoulder.

[To another:] A lady is coming close to you, and she says she comes in the home, many times.

Oh! I 'm glad I got here. When that gentleman, Mr. Adams, stopped talking the minister man said: "Now, little girl, is the right time to come and speak." [To the Chairman:] Don't you want little girls to come? [To a lady in the audience:] Do n't you know a little girl where we live that has the pretty flowers?

Now I see a grandma what comes to you, too, and she says: "God bless you." That 's good, aint it?

There 's a lady teacher here, a spirit, and her name is Lizzie Wilson. They tell me she lived in Columbus, Ohio. She 's a lovely lady. If you don't get your lessons good you must get 'em again.

I lived a long way off, in California, where they found gold. Oh! I was so tired when I went away! but I got all rested where I am. I lived in Oakland. That 's a nice place. 'T aint all gold there, any more 'n it is here.

Another place where Uncle William goes is Riverside. I don't go there. I suppose I can, sometime.

I want to tell you my name before I forget it —Annie Boutwell.

[To a spirit:] Oh! Eddie, what did you come for? You aint a going to talk, 'cause I aint got out. [To the lady in the audience:] I 'll bring the little girl some day, and grandma, too, if you 'll be good. You know you 've got to be good, else you won't have a nice, pretty home where we are.

Elizabeth Loud.

Dear mortals, be kind to the children. Sometimes I see a mother losing patience with a dear little prattler, and the thought comes, if the angel of change should come and take your little pet from you, you would have spoken more gently.

I well understand what it is to lose patience, for when trials come to a mother more than she feels she can bear, when she is weighed down with care and anxiety, with pains and aches, she may speak quickly to the little ones, not thinking how it grates upon the dear spirits, so young and tender. But it should be guarded against. I speak as a mother to mothers, because I realize the full meaning of the word.

It is many years since I left the mortal life, leaving a tender little bud to the cold world; but I have not been kept away, but have often come, by night and by day, and have sent forth earnest petitions for the guardianship of angels over the dear child. I feel that the desire of my soul has been answered, for they have been kind to the little one who has been growing during these years, and I believe that my prayer has drawn closer to the loved ones.

Eliza is with me, and Lucy, to-day. John has flitted away, as there are other missions for him to perform. I would ask as a favor of the dear ones in Columbus, O., that they try to come into communication with me, for I know there are instruments in that city, and also in Cincinnati, where they often go.

If they will only open the door once, they will feel repaid for their trouble, I feel confident, if it is only by knowing how much benefit it is to us. I can assure them they will find compensation for the trials and troubles that come to them here. I often go into the meetings there, and in Cincinnati. I visit the Lyceums frequently, for I hold an interest in them, and feel that I may give an influence for good and gain some benefit myself.

I have enjoyed coming here, as a silent listener. I see that a great work is being done between the two worlds. I have thought as I visited these meetings, oh! for the power to make ourselves known! In due time we will try to do all we can to show you we are here.

Many times I have felt that I would rather listen than speak; but for a certain reason, because of something that has occurred in the home of late, I have felt a desire to gain more power, to speak and let them know that Elizabeth Loud is not dead, but is anxious to help those dwelling in the mortal form.

Will Killen.

I 've got permission to speak, and I 've got in. I 've tried three times before. To-day I edged my way as close as I could to the last lady, who had so much to say, and I said I did n't believe I 'd miss it to-day, and I got it all fixed with the spirit-guide that as soon as she stepped out I might speak.

Now I 'm going right down to Fall River. I just want to wake 'em up there, and let 'em know they 'd better have a little more harmony, and then they can run the meetings. Now 't aint much use to try to run a meeting with everything criss-cross. They 're in a little bit of a snarl, now. I do want 'em there to know this is a truth, and that I do come. I was in the meetings when Frank Ripley was there speaking. I stood right close to his elbow, and I thought he 'd mention my name, but he drifted off to another spirit. I did n't leave, all the same.

Now, Harry Carter, if you do n't let us come and use your organism, I 'll just make new work for you. You were n't given all this power for nothing; it may help you in the meat business, and you 'd better give a little time to it. If you do n't, I 'll tell of you in another meeting, for that is where you 'll feel it the most. Often your mother will say: "Come, Harry, and let them see what the spirits have to give." Now, what kind of a way is that, when you have been given all this power, not to use it?

I want them to know in Fall River that I come there often, and that Alfred comes with me. My own people do n't believe that spirits come to earth, but I 'd like to know where they are if they do n't. If they do n't come to earth they do n't go away; that 's all there is about it.

I want to send a word to Fannie, as well as Harry. We will come, and we won't harm you; we aint here for that. We 'll give you some manifestations in your own home, and then you 'll know there is no fraud, for we 've got a band strong enough, and I know that Mrs. Carter would be perfectly willing we should come. Alfred sends greetings to Addie, and I suppose the rest of you. My name is Will Killen. I 've shortened the name because some will know better who I am."

Eveline Southwick.

Oh! how beautiful to know that in the new life we have the full use of our limbs. For fourteen years—and that is a long time, dear mortals—I was not permitted to use my limbs to dress or undress myself. Fourteen years of uselessness, almost. No, not exactly; but it seemed so hard to be deprived of walking. And now how grand it is to feel that I can go where I will! Oh! so delightful to know that we leave all infirmities behind us when we enter the new life.

Pliny often pitied me so much, but no one could realize for a moment the feelings that emanated from my spirit. I tried to be patient, but sometimes I lost my patience very soon when I thought that there was no help for me this side the grave.

I understood something of spirit-return, but not as much as I might have done if I could have gone into the meetings.

I shall be remembered by many in Berlin, also in Lynn, of this State, for I have dear friends in those places. I have watched and waited for an opportunity of speaking here. How sweet to know that all will be reünited—father, mother, sister, brother, husband and children.

For all my suffering I am repaid. I think that even the loss of the use of my limbs brought me a little nearer to the spirit-world, and that I could commune with spirits much easier than I would have done if I had been able to take upon myself material work.

I was only thirty-five years of age when I passed away. Young, you will say, to go, but my life was long enough when the suffering I had is considered. I am happy in my spirit home. I would not return to stay. But, dear mortals, we seek out these avenues where it is possible for us to give a word or even to listen to what others may say, for we educate ourselves somewhat in this manner. Often do we converse together on the spirit side, as really as you mortals do here. I would like to send greetings to every friend, for I know I am not forgotten. I go into some of the homes frequently. My name is Eveline Southwick, and my husband is Pliny B. Southwick, of Berlin, Mass.

Betsey N. Cook.

Well, I still find a channel open here. With the lady who has just spoken I think I can well sympathize, although my experience was not so severe as hers. She is a stranger to me, yet, dear mortals, we are all brothers and sisters on either side of life. I come here to-day for two reasons particularly: because I think some one in the audience will remember me, and because I feel that my message will reach my own dear ones not many miles away. Your good paper goes into the towns where they are, although not into all the homes, some being not so happy as to be able to have it, while others don't care for it.

Now, I understood something of spirit return. There were times when I was confined to my bed, and then I had a great deal of time to commune with my dear spirit friends and with the angels. I felt their presence with me much, having a good deal of what is called mediumistic power.

How gladly would I speak to the people of old Provincetown if I could make them hear my voice. I know they need to have somebody to stir them up in regard to spiritual things. Wake up, dear friends, and learn something while you have an opportunity on this side.

I know the children and brothers and sisters have not forgotten me, for as we visit you we see your thoughts and know of the longing that goes out to us. I would not come to stay; oh no! Never will you find a little child that will tell you it would wish to return to stay. But we do love to come into communication with the dear ones.

My name is Betsey N. Cook. I lived in Provincetown, Mass. My husband is Philip Cook.

Fanny Brown.

I have been waiting for the opportunity to give a few words. Oh! it is a glorious thing to have the power of communicating with mortals, that I may reach some loved one.

Hannah, I thank you for having given me the opportunity to speak to you privately. I was not one who would care to go into a public place, but to-day Henry has overurged me, saying: "Mother, you are stronger than I; do speak a few words for Uncle John and Aunt Hannah." I know, dear ones, how much you prize an opportunity of conversing with us for a few moments.

Carrie is here to-day, and little Ralph stands beside her—the sweet little angel child! All are anxious to come. When we find a channel open, how gladly do we accept the privilege. I think there are some in Waterville, Vt., who will be glad to read this message. My son Henry stands beside me, and asks me to send greeting to them all, and to the family particularly that he held an interest in. Tell them that dear little Ollie is often by his side.

Dear friends, how little do you realize of the interest that we hold in those we love after passing over. While the dear boy was nearing the spirit side, I came to him often. He clung to the mortal, not knowing of the beautiful home beyond. As he comes into communication with Ella and Carrie, he knows what he felt to be true when here. Often he says; "Mother, how much I did enjoy coming into communication with you." Press on, dear ones, and gain all you can, for it will prepare you to exchange the mortal for the immortal.

Hannah, I have visited Adelbert. He seems pretty well contented, and is as happy as he can be away from the dear ones at Riverside, Cal., where it seems but a step to us. I know Henry took pains to inquire of the spirit that sent a message, and found it correct.

How glad we are that we have a life of usefulness, and of labor on the spirit side, and that we shall all come together in a beautiful home. I clasped the dear boy eagerly, and I look back for the children yet dwelling in the mortal. My soul is full of gratitude for the privilege granted me to-day. Fanny Brown.

Eddie Taylor.

[To the Chairman:] That lovely lady saw me coming, and she said: "Eddie, wait!" Then I had to wait, so that girl could talk. I go to school just the same as she does, only I do n't have the same teacher.

I lived in Springfield, Mass. I want to tell you that Mr. John Taylor said: "Now, boy, go quick!" I aint a going to hurry! time enough —'t aint dark, and you 've got lamplight. When I come into the meetings there don't anybody say anything to me. Sometimes I see 'em look at me. I expect, like enough, they do n't see me.

Well, there was a Mr. Emerson, an instrument in the meeting, and I went up close to him till he had to keep stepping away and walking backward. I wanted to hear him say "Eddie Taylor," but he did n't speak a word about me, he only told of the big folks there. I tried hard to make him see me. I suppose I was n't high enough. Next time I 'll stand up in the chair, when he aint sitting there, and see if he do n't speak of me then.

That Mr. John Taylor is no relation to me. This man I spoke of never said a word about the little folks. I 'll just wait till a lady medium gets there. She 'll tell 'em of the little people just the same. I guess I 've got to go, for Aunt Jeanie has come. My name is Eddie Taylor.

[Printed in advance by the spirit's request.]

Sally Alexander.

I have got permission to speak here to-day. [Aside to a spirit:] Mary, do n't go. I hardly know how to take control of the instrument, but, as Mary has promised to stand beside me, I will not fear.

Seventy-eight years I lived in this mortal life, and I went away rather suddenly. I think they called the disease pneumonia. I thank God I did n't stay long to trouble anybody much. Clark, you know you came in and looked at me just before I left you, and you saw Jane right in the door. It was true, and she did come to help me.

It makes me feel a little hurt when I hear what Ellen says. I wish she did n't speak it, even if she thought it, because—as has been said—we aint to blame for our thoughts, but I do think we are for what we speak.

I know you would ask me if I am happy. Yes, Clark. I direct my conversation mostly to you, because I know you will read the paper; the girls won't, but they sometimes go and get it a little slyly, when you are away to work. I 'm going to tell of it; they do do it. When you are there they 'll throw the paper down and say: "Oh! what foolishness; dead people talking!" No, not dead people, all live people talking. I know when Ellen gets to our side, yes, and Lucy, too, they 'll wake up to a great surprise to think we have known of these things. We have heard a great deal they have said. I know Ellen was kind to come down and do all she could, but I do n't want her to speak as she does.

[Aside.] What did you say, Mary? She says that 's her own child; be careful not to bear on too hard. Well, she 'd better be careful. She 's in the mortal, and she aint at all careful what she says in regard to us. Now it is only about one year, as they reckon up the time here, since I went away.

I did want to talk with Clark about his father and his mother, a good deal, for he told me he had had a vision; he had seen his father plain, and the portals of heaven had been opened to him. He said it was very beautiful. But the children only laughed at him, and thought he was a little crazy. He did, for Robert told me he knew he caught a glimpse of heaven, and saw him, too.

John is with me to-day, and wishes to be remembered to them all. He is satisfied with what they have done in regard to the homestead, but he says, Clark, you 'd better give Joe work, when you can. You will understand my meaning, and I know you will be very friendly with him. Your mother says, she would be so glad if she could speak just a few words to Harrison, but the doors are closed. We heard him say, and we means more than one, if you talked to him, he would n't believe it. What does it amount to? do n't throw away your pearls; keep 'em. That 's what I would say.

But, Clark, you are in the right channel, and you are learning a great deal. William—as your mother sometimes calls you—is learning more than all the rest put together this side. Merinda sends love to you all. She says she thinks the little message that was spoken helped them a good deal, but they want to keep it secret. There 'll come a day when these things will not be secret.

This letter can't be printed to-day, can it? [No; not until next week.]

My name is Sally Alexander. I lived in Derry, N. H. My husband's name is John Alexander. He 's here to-day. I 've done all the talking. He says, "I usually did." That 's all right, I suppose, if I can talk better than he can. Nov. 2.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

ESTHER KNOX.

I am happy to recognize another communication in THE BANNER, the last emanating from the above-named spirit, with whom I was well acquainted during my eleven years' sojourn on the Pacific Coast. On my arrival in California, in 1873, I was domiciled at Tubbs's Hotel, in Oakland, for nearly two months. Mrs. Knox was then living there with her father, Mical Tubbs, who kept the hotel. I talked with her many a time about spirit-communion, and know that she took great interest in reading the Message Department of THE BANNER, to which she has now contributed in a very characteristic manner. Mrs. K. was one of the noblest and most self-sacrificing ladies I ever met, and lived strictly in accord with the highest teachings of our philosophy as presented through the BANNER OF LIGHT, which was her bible.

Mrs. K. was a physical sufferer for many years, and I congratulate her in her happiness in spirit-life. Such accurate messages as hers establish spirit-communion as a positive certainty. DEAN CLARKE.

FRANK H. RICHARDSON.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Oct. 13th is a message from FRANK H. RICHARDSON, which we fully recognize. What he says in regard to himself and Isa coming in materialized form together, is well understood by myself and others. In 1881 he went to Bridgeton Centre, Me., with his wife, at the home of John Morrison, hoping to improve in health, but he passed out in five weeks' time, and his wife (Isa) followed five months later. She is my daughter, and Frank is nephew of Dr. Amos H. Richardson, who is well known to many of the Spiritualists of Boston and vicinity. Frank closes his message by saying that he hopes John Morrison of Bridgeton Centre, Me., will see his message. It seems that he has not forgotten the great kindness he received from Mr. Morrison and family during the last few weeks of his mortal life and suffering. I have never met Mrs. B. F. Smith, but think her a remarkable medium, judging from what I read of her messages in the BANNER OF LIGHT.

MRS. SARAH G. BARRETT.

JEREMIAH WITHAM.

I was present at the Banner Circle when my father gave his message; he speaks of the teachings years back that he could not get away from, although he did not have the privilege that we enjoy to-day. Yet he feels it is but a poor excuse. And other points in the message are perfectly understood. We thank each and every one on this side, and the other side also.

I will say that my father was very firm in his religious belief, being an old school Free Baptist.

Boston, Mass. SARAH M. LANE.

POLLY HAMBLETON.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT Oct. 27th I read a communication from POLLY HAMBLETON, of East Hamburg, N. Y., who was an aunt of mine, which I recognize as correct in every particular. It was so characteristic I showed it to a niece, who also pronounced it correct. MRS. J. W. GRIFFIN.

OUTSIDE THE GATES, AND OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES. By a Band of Spirit Intelligences through the Mediumship of Miss M. T. Shelhamer. Colby & Rich, Boston, pp. 515, $1.25.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences, as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life," by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state. The book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds."—Alcyone, Springfield, Mass.

☞ The Independent, in treating of the attack on modern Orthodoxy in "John Ward, Preacher," refers to the servant girl in that book as being represented as singing at her work the weird hymn:

"My thoughts on awful subjects roll—
Damnation and the dead;
What horrors seize the guilty soul
Upon a dying bed."

"We do not believe," says this journal, "that this hymn has been sung in any Orthodox Church within the memory of any living septuagenarian." It certainly has not been the habit to sing such hymns in Orthodox churches of late years. The subject of hell, however, was not neglected in selecting from the hymn-books to be sung in one Boston church, while the late Nehemiah Adams, D. D., was alive. He used to find the famous hymn from Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," commencing "That day of wrath, that dreadful day," a favorite.—Boston Sunday Herald.

To the Liberal-Minded.

As the "BANNER OF LIGHT Establishment" is not an incorporated institution, and as we could not therefore legally hold bequests made to us in that name, we give below the form in which such a bequest should be worded in order to stand the test of law:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto Luther Colby and Isaac B. Rich, of Boston, Massachusetts, Publishers, [here insert the description of the property to be willed] strictly upon trust, that they shall appropriate and expend the same in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient and proper for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression."

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From her residence, 283 Shawmut Avenue, Boston, on Sunday night, Nov. 4th, Mary F. Grosvenor, aged 77 years.

She was widely known in this city for many years, for her gentle charity and loving ministration to all who came within her sphere. She held the love and veneration of all who came in contact with her. The simplicity and directness of purpose that characterized her commanded respect, and the loftiness and purity of her aims and deeds shed an uplifting power upon all around her.

She was identified with the work of the Spiritual Temple, at Exeter and Newbury streets, in Boston, ever since its organization, being ever active and earnest in present duty. Her whole being radiated a spiritual light that was unclouded by a shade of selfishness; and love to all humanity was the key-note of her life.

Her transition was of scarcely an hour in duration, an organic heart trouble being the immediate cause. It has come upon those of her household as a stroke of lightning from a cloudless sky, she having with her sister attended the service of the Temple in the afternoon, and retired to rest in her usual health and cheerfulness of spirit.

Being a member of the Shaker Community at Harvard from early childhood, with her family, she only left it to enter upon a life of larger usefulness. S. W.

From Greenwich Village, Mass., Oct. 30th, Benjamin Brooks, aged 75 years.

Mr. Brooks had long been sightless, and for nearly a year was confined to his bed with a cancerous hand, yet he patiently bore his sufferings. His devoted wife by day, and his faithful son by night, tenderly cared for him, while his daughter and her husband were assiduous in their kindness. Another daughter often visited her beloved father from her distant home. The funeral took place Friday A. M., Nov. 2d. Three beautiful selections were rendered by the choir of the Independent Liberal Church, one of which was written by Miss H. B. Lochlin, and adapted to the tune of "The Sweet By-and-Bye." Mr. H. W. Smith feelingly read appropriate selections from the new "Star of Progress," after which the writer gave an address and invocation. Tender hands bore the form to the family lot, from whence, after a short, impressive service, the friends turned homeward with blessed memories of the loved one mingled with thoughts of his release from mortal suffering. The frequenters of Lake Pleasant may remember the kindly, motherly woman, and Bert Brooks, the artist—wife and son of the departed. They share, with the other members of the family, the consolations of Spiritualism. JULIETTE YEAW.

From Cuba, Mo., Nov. 5th, Mrs. Eliza Sellon, aged 85 years.

Spiritualism has been to her for many years a fact that she was ever ready with her Bible to defend, if bigots professing religion assailed her. She was a subscriber for the BANNER OF LIGHT—which she took over thirty years last August—and paid for THE BANNER for others sometimes, she wished so much that every one might read it. Her interest in the cause was also shown in the purchase and circulation of many of the books she saw advertised in it. C.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

THIS Powder thoroughly cleanses the teeth, hardens the gums, purifies the breath, prevents decay, etc.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

The Boston Spiritual Temple.—As upon the previous Sunday, Berkeley Hall was filled to its utmost capacity with those eager to listen to the eloquence of Mrs. Lillie, many remaining standing during the entire service. In answer to the question, "In view of the recent course pursued by the Fox Sisters, should Spiritualists celebrate the coming anniversary?" the guides said, "Most assuredly we should. The dropping of the celebration would be an admission of the correctness of her position, and we know its falsity. In childhood she was a genuine instrument; the instrument proving false is no evidence that the work it once accomplished was not true." In answer to the question, "Can man safely pilot his own soul through this world without priest, church or platform?" it was clearly shown that he can. "Man," said the speaker, "in the past has not had the liberty to pilot his own soul. It has been the theory of the past that pilots are commissioned for that purpose, but at the present time that theory is subject to criticism. The time has come when we have the right to pilot our own boat. In many instances we cannot act independently; we are related to the ages of the past, we need to know what has occurred as well as what is occurring. We are therefore dependent upon the conditions of the ages; every event is the parent of something better and broader. It required the experience of martyrs to bring about the freedom we now enjoy."

The speaker remarked in this line of thought at considerable length, and then considered in a very instructive manner the question, "What is Religion?"

Evening.—In answer to a question relating to the responsibility of man, the reply was, Your question bears a somewhat close relation to foreordination. Man has ever been possessed of the attributes of the Infinite. Spirit return proves that man lives after death. This is an age of reasoning. Cause underlies effect. Reason sits upon the throne of life and governs intelligently. We do not believe in a perfect man or a perfect woman, more than in a perfect earth.

Mrs. Lillie occupies the platform the remaining Sundays of November. O. L. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—There was a good audience at Lyceum Hall Sunday, to listen to F. C. Algerton, of Chicago. Mrs. Nickerson sang "When Life is Brightest," accompanied by Prof. Milligan. After an invocation Mr. Algerton desired the audience to submit questions for his controlling intelligence to answer. Among others were the following:

Q.—Is prayer answered by the Infinite Spirit, or by our spirit friends? Ans.—Prayer is never answered by the Infinite directly; but when you lift up your hearts in prayer, your spirit friends form a connecting link between you and the Higher Spirit, and reach the Infinite.

Q.—Can spirits who have lived on this planet visit other planets? Ans.—When spirits have arisen above the material they can go with the speed of thought, visit other planets, and be visited by the denizens of those planets.

Q.—What was the true mission of Christ to this world? Ans.—There have been many Christs. Jesus of Nazareth was a spiritual Christ, and his mission was to teach the dispensation of love, which was the new birth. He was the personification of what every man and woman may be if they go about doing good.

Q.—Does Spiritualism have a tendency to elevate man? Ans.—Most certainly. A consciousness of the presence of our loved ones and communion with them have a tendency to make people happier, wiser and better. Such experience must be elevating; it removes the fear of death. Five-sixths of the people in the world are Spiritualists, whether they are conscious of it or not.

Q.—Is every one a medium to a greater or less degree? Ans.—All cannot be mediums, any more than all can be painters, yet all have immortality within them.

Q.—What is inspiration? Ans.—Inspiration is that which unfolds to you the universe and carries you to the Throne of the Infinite. Man may be great as a painter, but he can become greater under the inspiration of the spirit-world; he can be grander in any of the pursuits of life if under the outside force of inspiration.

Mr. Algerton is a fine speaker and was several times applauded.

At the evening session, under spirit influence, Mrs. Emma J. Nickerson said that they came to us as teachers of the higher life. You have not to go to your neighbor's home and knock to find this life. It is all around you, and spirits are ever present to teach eternal progression. Spirits are human, though clothed with the garb of immortality. Everywhere are human souls reaching after the truth. The mother can come back and direct her son or daughter in the right way. Mrs. Nickerson then gave a fine inspirational poem upon the subjects "Mother" and "Hope," followed with psychometric readings. The usual Thursday evening circle will be held, free to all who are interested in Spiritualism. Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, of Lawrence, will occupy the platform next Sunday. HEATH.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday, Nov. 11th, the guide of Mrs. H. S. Lake spoke upon "The Principles, Perils and Responsibilities of Mediumship." He said: "Underlying all the phenomena of nature there are certain principles; mediumship is no exception to the rule. Whatever the phase, the medium is only the channel by which the intensely active forces of spiritual life find expression upon your outward plane. The fundamental principle of mediumship is: harmony of the physical and spiritual structure of the instrument with the excarnated spirit or spirits operating. A sufficient degree of this harmony, undisturbed by extraneous forces, ensures a comparatively satisfactory manifestation; but any lack of the same makes itself felt in the absence of evidence of spirit power. Peculiarities of bodily organism are essential to all phases of mediumistic phenomena; I cannot explain to you what those chemical elements are, but they are cognizable by us as spirits. Now the perils attendant upon mediumship consist in this fact: that a sensitized being is susceptible to both the upper and lower strata of spiritual life; and also, when under control, the instrument is irresponsible. A moment's reflection will show you the peril of such a position. I have said that entire control renders the medium irresponsible; this is true; but he is responsible for the quality of the control, which will be determined by the quality of himself.

We as spirits, have made use of such persons thus far as it has been possible for us to render sensitive to our will. In this work we have arrayed against us many mortal minds, and the minds of many undeveloped spirits, who choose to prevent the work, if they can.

Hence these opposing intelligences seize such persons as by their habits of mind and external environment present a point of attraction. The Fox mediums are thus acted upon in their present apostasy. They are swayed, in their recantation, by a powerful psychic wave of mundane and spirit-life; but the tide flowing out from this stratum of existence will return, bearing upon its bosom many minds, whose attention would not have been directed to this subject had it not been for this very incident.

There will, moreover, be aroused within the minds of the mass of the people, whose attention is drawn to this subject, a healthful state of inquiry, that will express itself in more analytical methods of examination into the phenomena, which we most cordially invite.

We have no desire to impose upon the credulous, as we claim that mediumship—which is the only means known by which to demonstrate the continuity of life—must be able to bear the strain of candid investigation before it will be of much service among the generality of mankind.

Hence the responsibility resting upon our instruments is almost overwhelming, and does not invite, at present, the timid and dishonest. It is the desire of beneficent beings in our world to increase, rather than to diminish, this responsibility, as we learn more of the laws under which our work is done. We shall, in spite of opposition and apostasy, by-and-bye be able to give increased evidence of our presence among you, thereby rendering the purposes of life more apparent, as it expands under the light of a conscious continued existence."

Next Sunday Mrs. Lake's guide will speak upon subjects presented by the audience.

School for Children at 10:30 A.M. Wednesday Evening Social at 7:30. Friday afternoon lecture to women at 2:30.

First Independent Club, 987 Washington Street.—Week-day meetings were inaugurated Wednesday, Nov. 7th, with W. J. Colville as speaker, the "Higher Teachings of Spiritualism" being his topic. Several have pronounced this his most charming inspiration while with us, and for beauty and dignity of expression it was unexcelled. Mr. Colville was made the recipient of an album of etchings as a souvenir of his engagement, and responded by saying many pleasant words concerning the appreciation of his audiences and his active sympathy with the work of this body. May peace speed westward with him.

At 6 P.M. some fifty people partook of tea, and at 8 P.M. the Grand Master welcomed those present, defining the attitude and future intentions of the Club. Mrs. Case rendered some pleasing vocal selections. Miss Maggie Vaughan and Mrs. F. K. Rich contributed to the entertainment by readings. Dr. J. C. Street made a forceful plea for a closer following of principles in the onward progress, and Mr. Algerton, from Chicago, defined some of the spiritual attainments possible here. Mrs. Lull and Mrs. Fletcher each made spirited remarks, closing the exercises. The séance each Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock will be conducted by some well-known medium. For the next few weeks a short lecture will be delivered upon some pertinent spiritual subject during each Wednesday evening by J. W. Fletcher. On Thanksgiving eve a Social will be given, with dancing until 12 o'clock.

The above meetings are all in Wells Memorial Hall.
F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—The fine weather of last Sunday was the cause, no doubt, of so large an attendance at the Lyceum on this date, and it was really a pleasure to see Conductor Weaver in his accustomed place. The children's friend, Mrs. Butler, was detained at home on account of a very severe cold. The exercises consisted of the usual programme of singing, reading, marching and calisthenics. The following named scholars participated in the entertainment: Readings, Rosa Gleshaver, Maggie McNiven, Lillie Wendemuth, Eloise Wendemuth, Annie White, Hattie Dodge; singing, Allie Cummings, Eva Blanche Morrison, Maud Fitzgerald.

The Sewing Circle connected with the Lyceum meets every Wednesday afternoon and evening at Lyceum Hall, where active preparations are being made for the Fair, which opens on Dec. 10th in Berkeley Hall. Contributions gratefully received.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Sunday, Nov. 11th, the hall was filled both afternoon and evening. Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant opened the exercises with remarks and psychometric readings; David Brown, Mrs. Robbins, Mrs. Loring (of Braintree), Dr. Mathews, Dr. Thomas and Mr. McKenzie followed with remarks and tests which closed afternoon exercises.——In the evening the meeting was unusually interesting—Mrs. Conant, Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham, Mrs. Loring, Mrs. Stiles and Dr. Mathews participating. The music throughout the day was excellent.——Next Sunday Mrs. Ida Whitlock will occupy the platform, assisted by other good test mediums. F. W. M.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Three meetings were held in this hall, as usual, on Sunday last, and the audiences highly enjoyed the various exercises, such as singing, short speeches, tests, psychometric reading, etc., the same talent substantially being present as heretofore. The services were under the auspices of Eben Cobb, the prime mover of the meetings, assisted by his efficient wife. This worthy couple make these meetings a success financially and otherwise. COM.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were held here Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. There was a good attendance throughout the day. The Chairman, C. M. A. Twitchell, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. A. E. King, Mr. Ridel, Dr. Eldridge, Mrs. Conant and Mrs. Wilkins lent interest to the exercises. The services throughout were interspersed with excellent music.

M. M. HOLT.

Chelsea.—Frank C. Algerton will occupy the rostrum Sunday next at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. in Pilgrim Hall, Odd Fellows Building. He is one of the best speakers and mediums in the field to-day.

S. P. LOGAN.

Washington, D. C.—The First Spiritualist Society of this city reöpened its Sunday services the first week in October, and from that time to the present the audiences have been steadily increasing. Sunday, Oct. 28th, the Society moved into new quarters, 1412 Pennsylvania Avenue. The new hall is a great improvement on the one lately occupied, and the Board of Management feel confident that they have entered upon an era of increase and prosperity. There was a good audience present, the platform was beautifully decorated with bouquets and flowering plants. Bro. George H. Brooks, who fills the first two months of the lecture season, and who is rapidly growing in popularity with our people, was at his best. The late attack on Spiritualism in the recantation of the Fox Sisters was the subject chosen by his control for the evening's discourse.

It is not to the purpose of this letter to give a report of the lecture, and I will merely state that it was an able defense of the truths of the Spiritual Philosophy and phenomena, and an emphatic denunciation of the influence of the Romish Church, which had induced these women, who had in their day been genuine mediums, but had fallen by the way, to renounce the truth, and give the lie to that which was best in their lives. Notwithstanding spirits had used the Hydesville children to bring the fact of spirit-return palpably before the modern mind, Spiritualism did not depend upon them for its defense. Its proofs are in every household in the land, and its facts and continuity do not depend on any one medium, nor on all mediums. The Fox recantation will simply excite investigation, and result in new evidences of the fact of spirit-return.

It is within bounds to say that none of the psychometrists who have visited us have excelled Mr. Brooks. His readings of character and life-experiences are simply wonderful. The Lyceum which he inaugurated last spring is flourishing. He is indefatigable in his efforts to advance the interests of the Society. He is eminently a builder. There are speakers who attract large audiences, but leave no lasting effects of their work behind them. They amuse, they tickle the ears of the crowd, and when they leave the crowd go somewhere else to be amused and tickled. Mr. Brooks leaves behind him the evidence of faithful, laborious work for the cause of Spiritualism. In the East or West his entire time should be occupied. There are not too many of his kind. PASTORA LUPA.

Haverhill, Mass., Unity Hall.—Miss Jennie B. Hagan spoke for the First Spiritualist Society Sunday, Nov. 11th, before good audiences. At the 2 P.M. lecture there were six subjects presented by the people; the first, "What Has the Harvest Been?" was considered at length, and with marked interest. After briefly answering the other questions, Miss Hagan closed with a fine inspirational poem.

The lecture in the evening was a clear and candid statement of facts pertaining to the recantation from and denunciation of Spiritualism and spiritual mediumship by Margaret Fox Kane. Miss Hagan's statement of the case was timely, and to the point at issue, showing, beyond all doubt, that the mediumship of Mrs. Kane was of a pure nature in her early life that cannot be effaced by any recantations in her state of mind and body at the present day. The speaker had no word of condemnation, but pity instead, for the woman who had been so useful to humanity in establishing the facts of an immortal life. Spiritualism is grounded on the principle of eternal life, and in the main cannot suffer by the acts of any person.

The audience-room was filled with the thinking and investigating minds of the city and surrounding towns, who gave the speaker their undivided attention to the close.

Miss Hagan will occupy the same platform next Sunday, the 18th. W. W. CURRIER.

Albany, N. Y.—Frank T. Ripley on the evening of Nov. 4th delivered one of the finest lectures on Spiritualism that we have heard from our platform in many months. The subject was "Mediums and Mediumship." The speaker discussed the question from every point of view, and was listened to with close attention by a large audience. Mr. Ripley's guides followed the lecture with several fine tests. He was presented with an elegant bouquet by Bro. Charles Bilson; the audience manifested its satisfaction with the lecture by the best of order, close attention and several spontaneous outbursts of applause.

J. D. CHISM, JR., Sec'y First Spiritual Society.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—The Eagle of the 10th inst. announced that on Sunday evening, the 11th, Dr. Mills was to give spirit descriptions at the Court of Appeals room. Next Sunday, the 18th, Mrs. Emma L. Paul, of Morrisville, Vt.—an eloquent and popular lecturer—will speak morning and evening, the morning to be devoted to a memorial service to Charles Cleaver and his two children, who died of diphtheria.

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead"; therefore all Spiritualists are cordially invited to become members—either resident or non-resident—and to take an active part in its work.

NELSON CROSS, President.

J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Baldwin Lane, New York.

American Spiritualist Alliance.

The Alliance held its regular fortnightly meeting at its headquarters, 219 West 42d street, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 7th. The attendance was large, and the proceedings interesting.

The subject for consideration being the "Spiritual Manifestations Through Mediumship," it covered the whole ground, and gave great latitude for discussion.

The writer was requested by the President to open the discussion, and did so by relating an incident that had come under his observation, as follows:

At a séance for materializations, at which I was present on one occasion, there was also present Col. Roberts, brother of Jonathan Roberts, lately deceased. During the evening a form presented itself at the curtain of the cabinet, and said it was Jonathan Roberts, and requested his brother, the Colonel, to come up and talk with him, which the Colonel did; and a conversation substantially as follows took place:

I am pleased to meet you, my brother, and I desire that you give me something which I can report to your family, that will be convincing to them, to the effect that I have, in propria persona, met and talked with you this evening.

J. R.—Yes, I know what you desire me to tell you; but for some reason I cannot speak the words; I seem to lack the ability to do so. If Mr. Clark will come up and let me take his hand, it possibly may enable me to do so.

I went up, and taking his hand greeted him as I would before his decease, and then asked him what seemed to be the reason he could not speak the words he wished to utter without my aid.

Mr. R.—I don't know; but I think it is because this form that I am now manifesting through is made up of emanations from not only the medium, but also from each one in this circle, and that it is the same with the brain of this form. Its material is heterogeneous, and I find it difficult to use it to give full expression to my individual thoughts, and therefore I lack the power to express my thoughts as I wish, though I clearly understand what it is I desire to say.

Mr. C.—Then it would seem that the temporary brain power which has been built up is not fully coördinated, and the very anxiety you feel to express certain thoughts interferes with your full expression of them.

J. R.—That seems to be so. At any rate I cannot express the thought I desire to give to my brother.

We then returned to our seats in the circle, and immediately the familiar control said:

"Col. Roberts, I can tell you what your brother wished to say to you. He is now standing behind you, and he writes it over your head in letters of light, and I will read it to you," which the medium did; and Col. Roberts said that that was precisely what he desired his brother to say."

In this incident we see something of the limitation to which the dwellers on the supermundane planes of life are subjected when trying to express their thoughts through the aid of medial instrumentalities.

In an experience extending over several years, and with many mediums, I think I can say that whatever the phase of mediumship has been, the communication coming through them has often been colored or modified by the personal characteristics of the medium and the complexion of the audience, and the question I wish to present to The Alliance this evening is this:

"Is it possible for the inhabitants of the supermundane spheres to express their thoughts through mediums on this mundane plane without having them partake, to some extent of the mental conceptions and predilections of the medium?"

The discussion was participated in by Mr. Jeaneret, Rev. Dr. Hicks, Mrs. M. E. Williams, Dr. Cetlinski, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Coleman, Judge Cross and others; and while there was not a perfect unanimity of opinion, the general concensus seemed to be that the facts warranted the conclusion that the spirit-communications would always more or less partake of the condition of the medium; but that when the mediums gave themselves up in a complete consecration to their work and to the entire guidance of the controlling intelligence, they would in time come to think and feel in perfect harmony with the control; and when such a condition had been produced by a control in a medium, the controlling spirit could express its thought unbiased by the conceptions of the medium, because the bias of the medium had been set aside by the controlling spirit and corresponded to its own predilections. However, should a spirit holding different views from such control upon the same subject attempt to give them through such medium, he would find them somewhat modified and colored by the bias of the medium's mind.

The next regular meeting of The Alliance will be at 8 P.M., Nov. 21st, at same place.

J. F. CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

[We are highly gratified to perceive that intelligent Spiritualists, such as compose the American Alliance, are mooting the subject of spirit-control, which has for so long a time led to much controversy and misapprehension. Our long experience with trance mediumship has taught us to weigh in our own scales what to accept as legitimate or otherwise. By so doing we have never been deceived. Whenever we have discussed spiritual topics, untinctured by mundane affairs, we have invariably found such matter truthful. But when, as has often been the case, people consult mediums regarding mundane affairs only in which they are interested, the results are not always of a reliable nature. The old saying is strictly true, namely, that spiritual things are spiritually discerned. When Spiritualists as well as investigators shall fully comprehend this fact, discussion will cease upon this point. —ED. B. OF L.]

Norwich, Conn.—J. Frank Baxter continued his work in this city on Sunday, 11th inst., under the auspices of the Spiritualists' Association, giving two excellent lectures. The afternoon discourse, on "The Genius and Geniuses of Evolution," was grand, and could have been heard with pleasure and profit by every workman and alien in the land. The Liberalists and Spiritualists considered it Mr. Baxter's best effort of his many in this city.——The evening theme was "Spirit Existence and Intercourse Probable, as Demonstrated Independent of Spiritism." It was just adapted to the audience of the evening, and led directly to the open door of Spiritualism, which was entered, and then the positive evidence presented by Mr. Baxter in a striking and conclusive séance, wherein spirit after spirit was described, named and recognized. UNCAS.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, of Stoneham, Mass., was the lecturer for the First Spiritualist Society Sunday last. She spoke on subjects given by her audience; and the satisfaction of her hearers was ably testified to by the universal applause which greeted her at the close of meeting. Her poems were very fine and were well received.——Next Sunday Joseph D. Stiles will give tests to us: he will have a good audience, as he is well known and appreciated here.——Mrs. Dr. Green is still suffering from illness, and is not able to be about yet. F. H. F.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

First Spiritual Society.—Last Sunday Lyman C. Howe spoke in reply to several questions submitted from the audience, among which was the following: "Why are mediums not always able to give names correctly?" In reference to which he said: "All persons are not equally developed in language. Some mediums may be able to receive the impressions of words when they are connected with thoughts, but arbitrary names may be very difficult to catch. In reading a letter which is bunglingly written, if you come to a name you may find it very difficult to decipher it, whereas there may be half a-dozen words equally obscure, but you readily decipher them from their relation to the rest." The lecture was very fine, full of good, sound, common sense; just what one would expect of Mr. Howe. At the close of the lecture he improvised a poem that was regarded as one of his ablest efforts. In the evening the subject was, "Why is God, and Wherefore the Utility of Contemplating Him?"

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was opened by Henry J. Newton, Esq., illustrating experiences of his with mediums in the phenomena of Spiritualism, remarking that at his earliest convenience he should introduce in these meetings spirit-telegraphy, as has been successfully shown in many other places, he now having instruments made for that purpose. Dr. Lawrence gave an interesting history extending over forty years of his experience investigating the various phenomena of Spiritualism. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave numerous tests in her usual descriptive style.

Lyman C. Howe will speak next Sunday, morning and evening, for the First Society, speaking in the morning upon subjects furnished by the audience, and in the evening, by request, upon "Modern Spiritualism; Its Purpose and Scope in the Economy of Nature in this part of the Nineteenth Century." S.

New York, Nov. 11th, 1888.

At Arcanum Hall.—The meetings of Progressive Spiritualists held here on the 11th inst. were largely attended. The speakers' and mediums' meeting at three P. M. awakened a great interest, and the various exercises resulted in much good to the cause. Remarks were made by F. S. Lambert, Mr. Deming, Prof. S. Allen and Dr. J. Williams. Dr. A. L. Jenks (manager of Horatio G. Eddy, who also was present,) related experiences he had with this medium, who is at present holding materializing séances in the city. Fannie Naegeli, the child-organist, gave a beautiful recitation entitled "Wishing."

Many tests given by Prof. Van Horn were duly recognized. Mrs. E. Benwell of Paterson, N. J., entranced, delivered a benediction.

The evening meeting consisted of remarks by the Conductor, after which Dr. B. B. M. Lawrence gave a descriptive spirit art lecture. The Conductor gave closing tests. COR.

Letter from W. J. Colville.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Now that I am again in the West, after a very short but delightful visit to the East, I desire to publicly thank my hosts of friends for innumerable kindnesses received during the brief interval it was my privilege to be among them. The Independent Club treated me not only graciously but munificently. All meetings were well, and most meetings were very largely attended, on Sundays and week days, in and out of Boston. I never have anywhere addressed audiences more truly harmonious and sympathetically attentive to all ideas advanced from the platform.

By way of apology for not personally visiting numerous friends who have given me most pressing invitations, and by way of excuse for not answering hundreds of letters, and, most of all, for not accepting kindly offers of remunerative engagements from all parts of the country, allow me to say that between Oct. 4th and Nov. 7th inclusive I have spoken thirty-four times in Boston, eight times in Hartford, Conn., four times in Chelsea, once in Brockton, twice in Roxbury and once in Malden, making in all fifty public appearances in thirty-four days, besides attending to a great deal of literary work I could not possibly neglect.

Miss H. M. Young deserves unstinted praise for her excellent management of the Spiritual Science classes, by far the largest in point of attendants, and the most enthusiastic in point of interest, I have ever addressed in Boston. Taken all in all, I can only express most sincere and grateful thanks to all the friends in general, and to the BANNER OF LIGHT in particular, for valuable assistance rendered in bringing the meetings before the notice of the public, and giving such kindly reports of the lectures as have appeared from week to week in its columns.

My new work, "Spiritual Therapeutics," has some time since been in the hands of all the subscribers; it is now in the book-market, and can be obtained of Colby & Rich, at the regular price of $1, which some friends call very reasonable, as it is well bound and extends to nearly three hundred and forty pages. The object of the work is not to offer dogmas to the public for blind acceptance, but to give hints and suggestions in the way of solving some of the difficulties continually confronting us.

It is with great regret I was compelled to decline a most cordial invitation to Minneapolis; my very excellent friends, the Amorys, at whose charming house in Roxbury I spent some of the pleasantest hours and held some of the most enjoyable receptions ten years ago on my first introduction to the Boston public, positively urged me to visit them at this time and lecture in the delightful city which for the past few years has been their home; but my word was pledged to return to California at the approach of winter, and I had definitely accepted an engagement at Denver, Col., on my way out, so I had to say no most reluctantly.

From all over Massachusetts and other Eastern States I have received calls to lecture next spring. So far as I know I shall remain in California indefinitely, but my plans are uncertain, and I cannot say how soon I may be again moving eastward. I enjoy travel greatly, and think nothing of crossing either a continent or an ocean—so my Boston friends may possibly see me again sooner than either they or I expect.

This is only a hurried word written on the train. Next week I hope you will receive some items of interest from Denver, Col., where there is at present a very active and flourishing society. With best wishes and a heartfelt "Good-bye, but not forever," to all friends, believe me, Yours sincerely,

W. J. COLVILLE.

Bridgeport, Ct.—Our Society has of late been highly favored in the services of Prof. J. W. Kenyon, of Worcester, who has given us four profound scientific and philosophic lectures. At the close of his discourses he gives interesting psychologic tests and descriptions of spirits. His tests and lectures are considered as fine as have been ever given before our Society. We can heartily recommend him to the most advanced societies of New England. COM.

Cleveland, O.—The following are the points which will be debated by the Rev. S. S. Bartlett, of Chardon, O., and Mr. J. Clegg Wright, the distinguished inspirational speaker, in Cleveland, the last week in November:

Resolved, (1.) That the mental and physical phenomena of Modern Spiritualism can only be explained upon the hypothesis that they are produced by disembodied men and women called spirits. Mr. Wright will affirm. Mr. Bartlett will deny.

Resolved, (2.) That the book known as the Bible teaches all things necessary for the moral and religious development of man. Mr. Bartlett will affirm. Mr. Wright will deny.

Resolved, (3.) That it is most consistent with the present state of human knowledge and the dictates of human reason to believe that the intellectual and moral state of disembodied men and women is one of persistent progress. Mr. Wright will affirm. Mr. Bartlett will deny.

Resolved, (4.) That the Bible gives the strongest proof of a future life and gives the highest motives to prepare for a better life beyond the grave. Mr. Bartlett will affirm. Mr. Wright will deny.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester of West Randolph, Vt., spoke to the Brittan Hall Spiritualists in the afternoon of Nov. 11th, giving the views of one of her controls upon the question: "Why are we Spiritualists?" One of her controls purported to come, later on, to the assistance of Spirit Walter H. Whittier, bringing an interesting message from that spirit to the friends he has left behind, and giving assurance of his continued life, and of his interest in the welfare of Spiritualism, which was his enlightenment and assurance when in the earth-life.—In the evening the theme was that of "Immortality," professedly by Spirit William Denton, who spoke with characteristic force and eloquence.—The speaker for next Sunday is left for local announcement.

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—Frank W. Jones writes: "Joseph Noble, of Paterson, N. J., made the opening remarks at the People's Spiritual Meeting Sunday afternoon, Nov. 4th. His theme was 'The Phenomena and Philosophy of Spiritualism.' He contended that old Spiritualists should grow out of first principles, and adopt and practice advanced teachings. The Conference exercises were ably sustained by Mrs. M. E. Williams, J. F. Jeaneret, T. O. Ostrander, the Chairman, and others, and were of interest to all.

On the evening of the 28th Wilson Macdonald made an address on 'The Philosophy of Death.'

Sunday afternoon, 11th inst., Wm. C. Bowen, of Brooklyn, gave an interesting discourse upon a variety of subjects, giving delight and intellectual profit to all. An instructive and lively conference ensued, during which experiences were related by Wm. F. Nye, of New Bedford, Mass.; J. F. Jeaneret, Mrs. J. B. Hugo, Mrs. M. C. Morrell, T. O. Ostrander, and others, with manifestations of spiritual influence by the last three named. At the opening of the evening session the Conductor read Prentice Mulford's essay on 'What are Spiritual Gifts?' after which a conference, participated in by W. Macdonald, J. F. Jeaneret, John Bentley, Mr. Davis, Mrs. Morrell, Mr. Ostrander and Mr. Jones.

The Monday Evening Spiritual Conference sessions, presided over by Mary C. Morrell, at her parlors, No. 230 West 36th street, are attracting much attention. Questions of vital interest render these meetings of great importance, and the attendance is good.

The patrons of the Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference had the pleasure on the 3d inst. of listening to an address on 'Woman and Her Master,' by A. E. Lawrene, of the Eastern District. A lively conference ensued, participated in by Mrs. E. C. A. Hall, Mrs. S. A. Slocum, Mrs. Emily Ruggles, Miss Ryder, and Messrs. Harris and Swackhammer.

Dr. Edwin Veres Wright gave the address of the evening of the 10th inst. on 'Psychometry,' and three fine readings in illustration of his address; each being acknowledged accurate. Dr. Wright is a fine psychometrist and phrenologist."

Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURGH.—The President of the Society of Spiritualists in this place, John H. McElroy, sends a slip from The Leader—which paper is to be commended for giving place in its columns to so fair and honest an expression of opinion respecting the growth of Spiritualism in that city. Mr. McElroy says: "It shows the secular press is advancing, as this paper at one time strongly opposed us. The general tenor of the secular press is coming to us. So much for progression."

The article referred to is headed, "Is Spiritualism Growing in Pittsburgh?" and says: "Their hall is densely packed at every meeting, many being turned away for want of standing-room. A noticeable feature is the appearance of some of our most responsible and influential citizens, while the entire audience consists of intelligent, earnest and attentive listeners. No doubt the organization is rapidly becoming strong and steadily increasing in numbers. While there is much connected with Spiritualism that is passing strange, a careful investigation of its theories and the demonstrations of spirit-return presented by the different speakers would undoubtedly modify the preconceived opinions of many. The remarks of the speaker, G. W. Kates, last Sunday evening, were entirely impromptu. A gentleman from the audience suggesting the subject for discussion, the speaker at once, without a moment's hesitation or time to consider, entered into a most elaborate and far-reaching disquisition on the subject, while your modern writer requires at least a week to prepare for the elucidation of a subject of his own selection. Mrs. Kates gave interesting and remarkable revelations from the world of spirits which were pronounced correct by those directly interested."

PHILADELPHIA.—Julia A. Galloway, Corresponding Secretary of the First Association, writes: "Mrs. Ada Foye has given us a rare treat in the way of phenomena. Sunday, Nov. 11th, was her second appearance before a public audience, and our large hall was so crowded that hundreds were unable to gain admission. She has made many friends in the short time she has been with us. She is constantly receiving letters from different societies applying for her services, and we will soon have to part with her, very much to our regret."

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—A correspondent writes: "The series of lectures given in this city by Helen Stuart-Richings closed on the evening of Sunday, Oct. 28th, she at that time responding to a question from the audience relating to who or what are angels and where we meet them. She said that angels are not necessarily those of another life, they are sometimes in visible bodily form in this. That person who, triumphing over self, sets beneath his foot earthly, carnal and sensual desires, and whose breast is filled with love of humanity, is an angel. In this life we often meet these angels unawares. 'Be sure,' she said, 'you recognize them when you meet them, for they need your sympathetic encouragement.' Her psychometric readings were especially good. One instance reported in the Plaindealer was the following: Holding in her hand a bunch of keys passed to her from the audience, she said she received the magnetism of a man who had striven with all his might to attain some end, and just as he was about to reach his goal, a stone wall, figuratively speaking, had unexpectedly risen before him and barred his way. She added that she felt strongly the impression that the owner, or some very intimate friend, had been shot. She repeated this several times very positively, and then, suddenly starting forward, asked:

'Will the owner of these keys please say if I am right?'

A gentleman in the audience arose and replied that the effort was a complete success. 'I myself am the one who was shot.'"

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—A correspondent writes: "Recently a disciple of so-called Christian science called upon a spirit-medium for a séance. The spirit influencing the medium discovered the tendency of the mind of the sitter and alluded to her effort in that direction, also the law and the power of spiritual growth, with the words 'Be thou healed,' as spoken through one of the ancient mediums. Doubtless the sitter was pleased tha the spirits understood the tenor of her thoughts and gave encouraging words to her, also to all who have grown up to a condition to heal with spirit-forces without the need of a touch; but as all individuals have not yet arrived at this condition, it is the duty of all to work on the plane of unfoldment they have grown up to or into.

The question now is, which of these two individuals is on the highest pinnacle of thought and spiritual development—the one who discovered the condition the stranger was in, or the Christian scientist who sought of the spirits advice? Why do some Spiritualists ignore the basic foundation of all spiritual philosophy, and take the effect without searching for the cause, or, after finding it, ignore it for a philosophy that rests entirely on the law and principle that they reject? Without question Spiritualism is what is often alluded to as the rejected stone that will in its own good time be recognized as the chief corner-stone of the coming universal religion of humanity, which will include all human beings in their own sphere of growth or unfoldment."

Michigan.

SHEBOYGAN.—A correspondent writes: "There are several here who are much interested in Spiritualism. A lady friend of mine was quietly sewing one afternoon, when herself and her girl heard her name called. After searching the house over and finding no one, the girl, who is a writing medium, was impelled to write: 'Why, mother, it was your own little girl that called you!' The same lady was talking with another of this phenomenon, when the latter said she did not believe anything of it; but a few days later her spirit-mother came into the house while she was alone and said to her: 'Daughter, I want to say to you the return of spirits is true.' I have been very anxious to see some good medium settled in this place before I pass to the other side. I am so happy to learn from those who have gone that my journey here is most over, yet, as far as is in my power to do, will I do to aid those who would learn something of our sacred faith."

Indiana.

LIGONIER.—Joseph M. Bare writes that if the opponents of Spiritualism would improve the opportunities that exist for informing themselves of its merits, they would find that it is a truth notwithstanding a blustering few denounce it. He says: "It is very easy to be ignorant; all one has to do is to shut his eyes, and deaden his sense of hearing, yet such should remember that the more a truth is opposed the stronger it grows in the minds of the people, and the more is their attention drawn to it."

THE FASTING GIRL OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

FOR TWENTY YEARS SHE HAS LIVED ON THE BRINK OF THE GRAVE.

The Remarkable Existence of Mollie Fancher—Strange Trances and Wonderful Visions of Another World—Physicians and Clergymen Testify to Her Startling Powers.

Mollie Fancher, the wonderful fasting girl of Brooklyn, is very ill, and it is thought that she cannot possibly rally. For more than twenty years Mollie Fancher has been literally dying. For twenty-two years baffled Science has stood by her bed and watched. Eighteen months ago the wise men of the profession said that the end had come, but instead of the feeble pulse falling beneath their fingers it rallied, and she breathed on. Since that time she has been in better health and spirits than at any time since her strange illness began. About a month ago, however, she began to fall again. Her heart, which has been very weak for years, has become more involved, and not only does the end seem inevitable, but all about her realize that it will probably come very soon, and very suddenly. She sees no one save her physicians and nurse, and is exceedingly weak.

The cause of her last period of complete prostration was unlike this, which seems to be an absolute wearing out of the system. In April, 1887, while being moved from bed to sofa, the attendant allowed Miss Fancher to fall to the floor. She struck her head in falling, and was rendered unconscious for some time, recovering only after a long siege of neuralgic pains and heart trouble. Contrary to expectations she did not, however, go into anything like the cataleptic or trance-like state into which her first accidents threw her, and which were the cause of all the investigation and discussion which have made her famous.

The story of Mollie Fancher's life is much more marvelous than fiction. Her parents were Brooklyn people, who died before the accident befell her. They had placed their daughter in Prof. C. E. West's Brooklyn Seminary for Young Ladies, on Montague street, and there she received a careful education, and made many warm friends by her bright, sincere, happy ways. She had been in the school for four years and was soon to be graduated, when she was thrown from a horse and seriously hurt. Before she had recovered from this she was thrown from the step of a car, and, her dress becoming entangled, dragged a considerable distance. She was badly bruised about the head and body, and received the injuries to her spine which have confined her to her bed ever since.

At first Miss Fancher suffered much pain and had frequent convulsions. Able physicians were summoned, and yet could only say that the girl was in the power of a disease they did not understand and could not control. When but slightly excited her nervous system became uncontrollable, and at other times she was apparantly paralyzed. One by one other complications came, and first sight, then speech, and then hearing left her. Deathlike trances followed, and at different times it was even thought that she had died. At one time she remained in one of these trances for twenty days, when suddenly, without the slightest warning to those about her, a faint flush crept from heart to cheek and she seemed to be well. She saw her friends and talked with them, but even as she spoke with them of her visions of an unknown world the strange seal was again laid upon her soul and she was but an inanimate piece of clay.

This living death was as strange as it was horrible, but it was not in itself unprecedented. What followed was stranger still, and but for the fact that the experiences of those days are vouched for by men distinguished in medical science and theology and by citizens of unimpeachable veracity, it would be beyond belief. For the first two months after the accident Miss Fancher did not take a particle of nourishment. At the end of that time she retained a small portion of very light food, but since then and during the twenty years that have followed, it is asserted that she has not eaten or received into her stomach in any form sufficient nourishment to keep a healthy child alive one week.

About three months after her accident she went into a rigid trance, lasting about one day, after which her muscles relaxed, but the trance state continued three days longer. Her throat even was affected, and she could make no sound. Then the body, with the exception of her left hand and arm, became rigid. Her head rested lightly on her right arm, which was thrown upward. For nine years she remained in this position, the left arm and hand being the only part of her body which she could use. At times she could not speak, but during the greater part of the time she talked as well as any one. Sight did not return, however, and her eyes were tightly closed. Trance followed trance during these nine years, and were interspersed with seasons of what was termed "ecstasy."

Upon recovering from these trances she would relate to the friends at her bedside the most weird stories of the visions she had seen. She talked of "gates of pearl and streets of gold," of houses whose walls were apparently of marble, but transparent as glass, and of the many celestial beings about. She said her friends who were home in Paradise were with her, and she seemed to find comfort in their society. She became a medium of communication between living and dead friends. Powers of second sight were revealed and bore the most severe tests. She ate no food, it was said, but occasionally asked for the juice of fruits and something sweet. Her condition changed frequently. At times the sense of touch left her and then became particularly acute; again she could hear and taste and talk, only to be suddenly plunged into a state of entire darkness, seeing, hearing and tasting nothing. At times her body would assume the cold damp of death, except in the region of the heart, whose beating was barely perceptible. The upper portion of the body from the waist remained normal, but her limbs shrank to a bare skeleton covered with skin.

In 1875 this rigidity of body left her, but with it went the memory of the previous nine years. Again the power of second sight began to develop itself, and was tested by her friends in every possible way, and never failed to prove itself apparently genuine clairvoyance. Miss Fancher read sealed letters, and followed friends while they were away from her, delighting to tell them when they called upon her what they had been doing at certain times and in certain places since she saw them last. At one time the page of a book was torn out, cut in bits, and placed in an envelope, some of the pieces being purposely left out. The sick girl did not hesitate, but wrote on a slate the contents of the envelope, showing just what words were missing. Since 1875 her life has been practically the same year after year. An acquaintance of hers who has seen her constantly said to The World reporter of her daily life:

"Up to the time of this last bad turn Mollie has been as gay and happy as you please. She is one of the greatest talkers you ever heard of—talks of the same sort of things as everybody else, and in the same way. She can use her arms and hands, and does the most beautiful embroidery, lambrequins, and all that sort of thing, to give away to those whom she likes, but the rest of her body is completely paralyzed. They still say, you know, that she does not eat, but that I don't know about. I really do not believe she eats anything solid, or has in all this time."

"What about the trances?"

"Oh! that was so up to within a year or two, but I hardly think she has had any lately—certainly not clairvoyant trances. She has said and done some wonderful things, though."

"What does she look like now?"

"Oh! she is beautiful. Her face and neck are as full and round as can be, and her skin is just like alabaster and her cheeks are usually an exquisite pink. Her hair is short, you know, and brown and a little wavy, and is parted on one side. She does not look as if she were twenty-five years old, in spite of all this sickness."

At the beginning of her recent illness Miss Fancher's physician, Dr. G. Fleet Speir, of Montague street, said that the case was a very wonderful and interesting one.

"I have been abused by the fraternity," said he, "for asserting my belief in Miss Fancher's power. It exists: that is all I know, and it is all any one knows. I am satisfied that for years she took no solid food, and I know that she takes nothing at this time of any account. Her lips are moistened occasionally, with water or fruit juices, and it is only at rare intervals that anything more substantial passes her lips."

Prof. West, at whose school Miss Fancher was educated, said: "Physicians profess to disbelieve that this poor girl has the gift of second sight. I visited her daily for several years, saw her work, witnessed her mind-reading and heard her marvelous prophecies and statements concerning her visions. I know there could be no deception about it. It makes no difference whether others believe it or not."

Another of Miss Fancher's physicians is Dr. Robert Ormiston, who seconded Dr. Speir's remarks at the time of the investigation into her case. "I have attended Miss Fancher regularly," he said. "I am not a believer in the supernatural, yet I have seen her read the contents of a letter just received by a member of the family from Buffalo, and which had never been opened. I have seen various other manifestations of her strange power."

Her pastor, Mr. Hepstone, of Immanuel Baptist Church, speaking of the case, said: "There is something supernatural about the power possessed by Miss Fancher. I cannot explain it, nor do I attempt to. She is a modest, sincere woman, and there seems to be no limit to her mind-reading and clairvoyant power."

Miss Fancher is still living where she has lived ever since her case was first heard of—in the house owned by her aunt, Mrs. Crosby, at the corner of Gates Avenue and Downing street. Being so much worse, she is unable to see any one, and is left in the care of her nurse and physicians. She is particularly unhappy because her faithful aunt is herself away and seriously ill. With all her troubles life is still sweet, and friends are still dear to the poor little woman."—New York World.

"Is he a liar?" exclaimed one of two men talking loudly on State street about a third man this morning. "Well, I should say he was. He would rather tell a lie at sixty days than speak the truth for spot cash."—Albany Journal.

BARS AND THRESHOLDS.

Written Especially for the Banner of Light,

BY MRS. EMMA MINER.

CHAPTER XIV—CONTINUED.

Doris remembered that the proprietor of the Creighton House was Mr. Tulkin's brother-in-law. She wished very much to know what had become of them. Dr. Carroll brought Mr. Crane into the parlor one day, that she might inquire. Mr. Crane remembered Doris.

"You mean the lady who was Miss Shallot?"

"Yes."

"Wal, they got married, I s'pose you know."

"Yes, they were married at our house."

"An' he was intendin' to go on some missionary business. I never knew jest exactly how it happened, but he got h'isted off that. Then he laid round a spell, livin' on her savin's. They was both dretful disapp'inted to think the old woman bust up in the way she did, an' they did n't git nothin'. An' now they have cut sticks."

"Do you mean they have separated?"

"Jest that, mum. She told him as how she did n't marry him to support him in laziness, an' I guess she finally got putty raspin'."

Doris knew she was capable of it.

"I can't say whether she left him, or he left her. Anyhow, they 're split, an' I haint seed or heerd anything from him this six months."

"Is n't it dreadful! Poor Miss Shallot! I really pity her!"

"I suppose I ought, and if you will set me the example, I 'll try to."

"You hard-hearted man!" said Doris, laughing.

"I can't forget all she made you suffer so long."

"I shall try to forget it," she said, gently.

"Oh! no doubt! You are just angelic enough to do it. I 'm afraid I am not made of that stuff, though."

The delightful wedding journey ended, as all such do. They felt the depth of their affection more and more as the days passed on. They were all happy.

Dr. Carroll assured them that Morris was doing finely. Lydia was growing more sweet and womanly every day.

"What should I do without my two daughters?" said Mrs. Carroll one day.

"Better than we could do without you, dear mother," was the quick reply.

They were all pleased with the announcement of the engagement of Hugh and Lucy. Hugh wished very much to lease the cottage at Roseville. The distance and hours of the train would suit his business. He was well established in the bank, and could make a good home. Doris was much pleased to have it so. She could scarcely bear to think of the dear home as being in the hands of strangers. So on one bright October day there was another wedding, and the young couple were installed in the Roseville cottage.

Meanwhile Morris and Lydia must wait. Morris wanted to finish his studies, and begin practice, while Lydia felt she had yet much to learn.

Doris entered the parlor one day soon after the wedding, holding some sprays of autumn leaves she had brought from Roseville. As she turned to place them in a vase, she felt a hand placed on her shoulder. She was a little startled, for she supposed herself to be alone. Turning quickly she saw Miss Parker. Could it be possible? She stood perfectly still a moment, and then the loved face and form appeared once more, and more distinctly. She looked so happy, so peaceful!

"Sidney, it was Aunt Amelia, if ever I saw her in my life!"

"I don't doubt it. I wish I could see her."

Three times that day Doris saw her aunt, and the third time Mrs. Mason was standing beside her.

From that day the blessed gift of clairvoyance developed. She often sat by Lydia as she was writing messages for friends, and could distinctly see and describe those who had crossed the threshold of mortality. Many hours and many days were spent thus; and many, through the mediumship of this little family circle, were convinced that their loved ones, though passed to a world invisible to so many, could return with messages of affection and guidance.

The winter passed on, bringing with it only happy hours and good work. Doris was in society frequently that winter. Mrs. Dr. Carroll was a favorite with everybody. If she had an enemy she was unconscious of it, and went on her way untroubled and happy.

Morris had gone away to study, but his letters were frequent. Lydia claimed the majority, a claim no one disputed.

June came again with its sunshine and flowers. It was the first day—Doris's birthday. Many lovely gifts were awaiting her as she came down, for which she was grateful; but there was an oppressive weight on her spirit she could not account for or dispel. It was the first cloud her face had worn since her wedding-day. Dr. Carroll had been out toward morning, but instantly perceived it on his return.

"My dear Doris! what is it?"

"I am sure I don't know. It is foolish to have a fear when you don't know what you are afraid of, is n't it?"

"Has anything occurred to cause you uneasiness?"

"No. To-day is my birthday, you know. I am afraid I am silly enough to have a fear and dread of the first of June, so many dreadful things have happened on that day."

"Why, Doris! You don't mean that, surely!"

"Yes, I do. Mother died the first of June; Morris went away the first of June; Aunt Amelia left grandma's that day, and she died on that day—all on my birthday."

"But, my dear, it only happened. Surely there can be no fatality about dates."

"I know it. I said it was a silly fear. But as true as you live, Sidney, I am afraid of my birthdays. I shall not feel easy until I have said 'good-bye' to this one."

He began to walk up and down the floor thoughtfully. She went up to him, passed her arm through his, as he continued his walk.

"We have been so happy together, Sidney! Every moment I have been in this house has been a blessing to me, and I have to thank you most of all."

"My dear little wife, I am thankful if it has been so! I could not bear to see you unhappy a moment if I could help it. Whatever of sorrow may come to you in the future, I hope I may never be found so forgetful of the trust you have placed in me as to be thoughtless of you."

Doris was silently weeping.

"You have made me very happy, Doris. My home has been a heaven to me. You are everything that is good. Remember in time to come that I said this to you on your birthday morning, the first that found you Doris Carroll."

"I shall never forget it," she replied.

When they went down to breakfast Mrs. Carroll noticed the cloud on Doris's face. She wondered a little.

"Mother, I feel so strangely—just as if something were about to happen. I can see nothing, hear nothing. I think it is very strange. I wish Lydia could come down."

Lydia had been suffering from sore throat the day previous, and was feverish and much worse.

"She certainly is not able to write this morning, or we would see if she could explain it."

Dr. Carroll rose to hurry away to his patients.

"I feel so unwilling to have you go out of my sight," she said, as he was about to leave the hall.

He sat down instantly.

"If my work were other than it is I would not go. But what can I do, Doris? There are some among my patients who are very sick. I cannot, ought not, neglect them."

"Yes, I know; you must go."

He held her in his arms a moment. She tried to smile as he went out, but it ended in tears as she rushed into the breakfast-room, where Mrs. Carroll was standing.

"Doris! don't cry so! You really frighten me! Come, try to forget your fears. Let us take your gifts up to Lydia's room. She will enjoy seeing them. Sidney's is lovely, is n't it?"

It was a beautiful and expensive watch and chain.

"Don't think me ungrateful, mother, but I can scarcely bear to look at it. And yet how much I have wished for one! It was so like his kindness to remember it!" She turned as they were ascending the stairs, and said:

"I never felt such a presentiment of trouble before. I shall not be easy one moment until I see Sidney safe home again, and not then unless it is past midnight."

CHAPTER XV.

OVER THE THRESHOLD.

Doris was occupied with Lydia all the morning, even doing unnecessary things to take up her time and thought. Hugh ran in to say "Good morning," and Lucy came later to stay through the day. About two o'clock Doris was pleased to hear the Doctor come in.

"I came to see Lydia—can only stop a moment," he said.

"I really wish I were sick enough to keep you here all the afternoon, Doctor," said Lydia hoarsely.

"Your melodious voice has no charms for me to-day, little sister," said the Doctor laughingly.

Doris clung to him every moment he was there, even making him spill the medicine he was preparing for Lydia; at which he only smiled indulgently and poured some more. He paused in the doorway as he was about to go out—turned back, and kissed each one without a word and went out.

Two hours passed, during which Doris scarcely spoke. Mrs. Carroll perceived that her face grew suddenly paler and seemed rigid. Her eyes had a fixed look, as if she were seeing something that frightened her.

"Dear child—what is the matter with you?"

Doris put up her hand, as if she did not wish to be disturbed. Mrs. Carroll waited and watched her. Doris turned to her, and said:

"Mother, Sidney is dead. He was thrown

OUR FOES WITHOUT AND WITHIN.

A Discourse having Especial Reference to Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane's Recent Denunciation of Spiritualism, given through the Mediumship of

MRS. R. S. LILLIE,

Before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society—in Berkeley Hall—Sunday Morning, Nov. 4th, 1888.

[Reported for the Banner of Light by Miss Ida L. Spalding.]

INVOCATION.

Oh! ye ministering spirits, watching over the welfare of mankind, waiting to bless us in our labors, to aid us in our efforts, to inspire us by your power and teachings, we turn again to you, asking once more that we may be fed from the table spread so bountifully by your kindly hands; asking that the way of light may appear more beautiful and clear to our vision; asking that each mind here present may value the truth alone, and, looking for this, willingly behold all that appeareth in its name divested of the external garments that it may be more plainly revealed. We ask your aid that our lips may be silent unless they are to voice your truths; that our tongue may be dumb, save for the promotion and uplifting of the banner of light and knowledge, as this age and this hour demand. May we have strength given us to voice whatsoever word of duty lies before us unuttered, and may there rest upon each of these here assembled that sacred spirit of earnest desire which is ever the heartfelt prayer for good, for righteousness and for truth. In this spirit, and in this spirit alone, can we receive the truth and be enabled to behold it in all its excellence. Aid us, oh! ye spirits of light, to find the way, to walk therein, to take up our duties and discharge them, day by day and hour by hour, for thus alone shall we attain true growth of the spirit. May we be inspired to utter words of light and truth, as it seemeth to us the burden of the hour that must be spoken, and may those who hear gather somewhat of wisdom therefrom, that our lives may in the future be the better for the spending of this hour together. As there resteth upon us the blessing of your divine, holy and sacred presence, as your words are given us in and through our utterances, as your hand is felt in its uplifting power, leading and pointing us onward and upward, so do we praise you now, henceforth and forevermore, as the means of guiding our souls into that light infinite which alone we might not reach.

DISCOURSE.

Friends: We have taken a subject this morning that in part is a very unpleasant one, and not of our own choosing, save as we feel it our duty, as representatives of the movement known as Modern Spiritualism, to discuss it. Our Cause is to-day attacked by one in our own household. This being the case we have taken for our theme, "Our Foes Without and Within."

Spiritualism is acknowledged to be, by our enemies themselves, a movement embracing, at the present time, from eight to eleven millions of believers, or those who have accepted its fundamental truths and have had assurances of the genuineness of its phenomena, by the testimonies of its numerous witnesses. Spiritualism is also a work that has for its foundation chapters of the living Bible of the ages. Those of the latter-day movement, denominated Modern Spiritualism, have been written within the last forty-one years. Spiritualism, of itself, is older than that, because we understand that, in reality, the meaning thereof goes back to the fundamental power, which is spirit itself, and this is God, which embraces all of either knowledge, faith or hope in reference to the immortality of the soul. Those manifestations of its power which have been given to any age in the past are its spiritual wonders. They have been denominated miracles by those who did not understand the laws, both spiritual and material, that are called into action to produce these results. These, we say, of greater or less importance, have formed the foundation of all religious systems. The Christian religion was founded upon the peculiar spiritual manifestations which took place nineteen centuries ago, or nearly that. A man strangely endowed with spiritual power, yea, numerous men endowed as strangely with spiritual power, or at least very marvelously, lived, according to all tradition and all history, at that time, around whom such wonders were performed and such occurrences took place as to mark it as a peculiar spiritual era.

We may trace these experiences along the history of mankind, and we shall find that they marked all periods whereon rests any spiritual or religious structure that has attained any growth whatsoever. Modern Spiritualism is no exception. It stands out so prominently that it is in reality the most marked event of this century, or at least appears so from the present standpoint of observation. It came at a time when it was possible for it to progress with a rapidity which would have been impossible in any previous age. We have the telegraph, we have the power of steam, we have the wonderful inventions for giving permanence to thought that no other age has ever had. Therefore in forty years and a little more, Spiritualism has swept like a mighty wave of power over the earth, touching every civilized nation and causing multitudes to feel its reasonableness and truthfulness, until, as we said, millions are counted as Spiritualists.

Among these Spiritualists scattered all over the globe are Bible-makers or Bible-writers. What are Bibles? They are collections of men's spiritual experiences; and compilations of these have been at times held so sacred and holy as to be reverenced above all other books. This age recognizes all truth as sacred, all truth as holy; and all facts that are beneficial to mankind and worth preserving for the enlightenment of those who are to come after, are worthy of being recorded as a chapter in the Bible of this age.

Early in the history of the movement of Modern Spiritualism, a family wrought upon mysteriously, strangely and marvelously, and known world-wide to-day as the "Fox Family," lived in Western New York. The father and mother were honest, candid, truthful, religious people, whose names were inscribed upon the church-roll, and who were accounted worthy members thereof. They received the demonstrations at that time in a spirit of prayerful research and inquiry. The other members of that family were two little girls and an older sister, who was then married and away from home. The latter was Leah Fox Fish, and now Mrs. Leah Fox Underhill of New York City, a woman whose veracity, sincerity, candor and earnestness of spirit are unquestioned, and who occupies an enviable position in society as the wife of a true and honorable man, respected in all circles where he is known—a man of wealth and influence, if looked at from a material standpoint.

After many years of experience, this elder sister, feeling a duty herself, and having this duty urged upon her by others who felt the importance of having the phenomena occurring in that household recorded by one capable of so doing, wrote a history of some of the manifestations taking place in her early home. In this volume, entitled "The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism: By Leah Underhill, of the Fox Family," she says that, at the request of the writers of a vast number of letters received by her, she had undertaken this work. There is also appended not only the testimony of the Fox Family, but that of many witnesses who after the wonderful occurrences were called in to remain all night, sometimes watching, frightened, even in groups, while the little girls were crying under the bedclothes, terrified at the manifestations taking place.

At this point we will read you a few extracts from the book referred to, for not all of you Spiritualists even have read the same, and some who are here this morning will not otherwise understand that she who poses to-day as an exposer of the manifestations by simply producing, or endeavoring to produce, a few raps alone, has not, in reality, touched the main manifestations that occurred in this family in her innocent childhood, when she was one of the instruments employed as a means of producing them. On page 43 it is said:

"We had stored our winter's provisions in the cellar. Among them were several barrels of apples, potatoes, turnips, etc. From this cellar came the apples, potatoes and turnips flying across the room, hitting all in precisely the same place every time. It will now be remembered that these articles were in the cellar, on the ground floor, and had to come from the rear of the cellar, through the door, into the kitchen, through the kitchen up the stairs into the pantry on the second floor, through the pantry into the dining-room, up the second flight of stairs into the large room, hitting us as we lay in our beds near the front window." [A diagram of the arrangement of the rooms and course taken by these things from their starting-point is given in the work.]

"A cabinet shop was the next thing represented by the spirits. They seemed to be possessed of all kinds of tools to work with. After sawing off boards, they would let them fall heavily on the floor, jarring everything around them. Then after planing, jointing, driving nails, and screwing down the lid of a coffin, they would shove the hollow sounding article about the room. [This we understood at a later day.] Often, to our utter amazement, pickets from the discarded lots of a cemetery came flying through the room over our heads, on our beds, like débris in a tornado. They came from the extreme west side of the burying-ground, through that lot, and the distance of two hundred feet through our lot; an entire distance of about four hundred feet. That they came by no visible means we knew; as no human power could have thrown them through the air into our chamber window, hitting us on our beds, in the same place every time."

On the 39th page an account is given of a night when they called in neighbors to witness and testify to what was taking place:

"Before Calvin came up-stairs, and during a short lull in the performance, we quickly removed our beds to the floor, hoping thereby to prevent them from raising us up and letting us down with such violence. Calvin said as he came up that we were foolish to make our beds on the floor, as it pleased the spirits to see how completely they had conquered us. . . . The next instant he was struck violently with his cane. He seized it and struck back, right and left, without hitting anything. He sprang to his feet and fought with all his might.

Soon they commenced at his bedstead, and deliberately razed it to the floor, leaving the headboard in one place, the footboard in another, the two sides at angles, and the bedclothes scattered about the room. I had stowed some balls of carpet-rags in an old chest, standing on the floor with two trunks on top of it. It seemed but the work of a moment for them to get at the carpet balls, which came at us from every direction."

On page 35 is the description of another night:

"We had slept quietly for about two hours, when we were awakened by the most frightful manifestations—the house was in a perfect uproar. Tables and everything in the room below us were being moved about. Doors were opened and shut, making the greatest possible noises. They then walked up-stairs and into the room next to us. There seemed to be many actors engaged in the performance, and a large audience in attendance.

The representation of a pantomime performance was perfect. After the first scene there was great applause by the spirit audience. Immediately following one spirit was heard to dance, as if with clogs, continuing fully ten minutes. This amused the audience very much, and a loud clapping of hands followed. After this we heard nothing more except the representation of a large crowd walking down-stairs, through the rooms, closing the doors heavily after them."

This is preceded by an interesting account of their experiences in a house which had been "haunted," as they call it, for two or three years. Several families had moved out of it, too frightened to longer remain in the place. Then this family took it temporarily, while they were having another home built, and the spirits there and then found the instruments in the mediumistic qualities of this household through which to produce results that would cause investigation and excite further inquiry. In this sense the Fox Family were instrumental, in a measure, in starting the movement of Modern Spiritualism; but you will remember that, five years prior to this, the wonderful work of Andrew Jackson Davis, known as "The Principles of Nature; Her Divine Revelations," claiming to be written by spirits, was given to the world. Now, we ask, who were the founders of Spiritualism? and our answer is: Spirits, not mortals. It owes its foundation to the needs of mankind and the willing response of spiritual beings when they found the opportunity to make it.

In proceeding with our subject, which we can scarcely begin to do justice to in one discourse, we say first, that mediumship, all the way through, is not dependent upon the quality of the instrument through which it comes, save chemically, but upon the quality of the manifestations which are from the spirit.

To-day Margaret Fox Kane says she has been an impostor, a deceiver and a fraud for forty years. We say to her that everybody thought so from the first, and also that no demonstration has ever been accepted as an evidence of spirit-power because she or any one of the family said so, although the elder members were considered reliable and honorable people, for it is the rule that if a man, we care not who he may be, says he is having demonstrations so peculiar as to be considered outside of the recognized natural order of things, and such as were at one time termed miraculous, it is at once taken for granted that he is deceiving the public, and the general verdict is that there is something wrong. Therefore every medium is first accused of being a fraud by the majority of people, and it is only through the demonstrations and their worth that they can clear their skirts of such charges.

Although Leah Underhill was away from home at the time the manifestations first began, she immediately, on receiving intelligence of the same, returned to her family, with the intention of taking the little girls away, thinking this might put a stop to what was transpiring, as it was noticed that around or near these children the manifestations were most pronounced. However, as soon as she came, the little girls being out of the house, still stronger manifestations took place in the presence of Leah, showing that the spirits had found yet another through whom they could operate.

In reality these girls were no more the founders of Spiritualism than the chairs, tables or turnips that were thrown from room to room of the house. They were but the means in the hands of invisible intelligences at work earlier than this through Andrew Jackson Davis and others who were mesmerized, he, however, giving to the public the most prominent spiritual results. Spiritualism was the outgrowth of a movement in that part of the century that affected not one household, but many households; not one family, but many families, and was coming as a direct and most natural result of this age and time, when man was becoming familiar with the psychic subtle forces around him, of which he could make use, and for which he found his own body to be a reservoir. But the manifestations taking place in that family at that time, being of a very marked character, as far as the physical demonstrations were concerned, gave these mediums prominence, and therefore they are very properly spoken of as among the pioneer instruments of the spirit-world, but not as the founders of the movement. Thinkers and those who are familiar with the history of Spiritualism know that it was widespread, and that mesmerism, magnetism and the inventions preceding it prepared the way, and were in reality a John the Baptist making ready a way through the wilderness of materialism for the coming of spirit-manifestations and the advent of Modern Spiritualism.

Spiritualism, then, has to-day, we will say, its millions of adherents, and if we thought it best we could trace the pathway of this fallen herald of the movement, speaking of its physical phenomena merely. We could show you how, by being taken in her childhood, at a time when all human beings are most susceptible to influences, and made to gratify, unwisely we know, yet at the time it seemed necessary, the idle curiosity of the public, and by being fêted, flattered and pampered in her undisciplined youth, that a false appetite was created in this one which has at last tyrannized over her womanhood, and made it subject thereto. We speak thus, for the truth demands it. Most Spiritualists know this to be a fact; all do not. While this is most lamentable, it is a fact nevertheless, and proves the truth of the statement we made a little while ago, that the gift of mediumship, from first to last, depends upon the chemical qualities, and not, we are sorry to say, in all cases upon the moral qualities of the recipient thereof.

Spirits have come to all mankind. They have touched all with their power wherever they could, in their great desire to lead them out of the darkness of superstitious religious ideas that have held the race in thralldom. One of the best systems of religion that the world has ever known preceded the coming of Spiritualism; but it left so great a vacuum in the human heart and understanding, that the cry, wrung from so many agonized souls to know more of the future life, which had echoed through all the ages of the past, still continued to be heard. It was an unanswered prayer in the human heart until Spiritualism and the demonstrations thereof came in response thereto.

We have said that Modern Spiritualism is no exception, in some respects, to the general rule of all systems of religious thought that have preceded it. While they have had their spiritual demonstrations on which they have been founded, just as we have had ours, they have also had as unpleasant experiences to meet as we are having. We want to call your attention to this point just now, which is one of the fundamental doctrines of our faith, if we may term it such, and that is, that evil is ever the servant of good. With this thought we will go back to the early days of the Christian religion. Its founders were known as the twelve apostles. Out of the twelve there were two who proved traitors to the cause. In the most trying days of the Christ-man of Judea he said to those who were with him, "Tarry ye here and watch," and he went away. When he returned he found them sleeping. Three times he charged them to watch and pray, and the third time he came and found them sleeping he said, "Sleep on, now, and take your rest. Lo! he that betrayeth me is at hand."

This was said to three of the faithful, but they slept. We wonder if the spirits, returning from the Mount where they have prayed for mankind; where they have, in the struggle and agony of their prayer, asked the higher angels to help them, and if possible to let this cup pass from them—I wonder if they could not also say of many of those who claim to be believers in spirit communion, that they "found them sleeping"? We tell you, friends, that they who carried burdens on the spirit-side of life, and went up and down the mountain more than three times, have come and found many of you sleeping, too much weighted with the cares and anxieties of material life to give any really due prominence to your duties as believers in Spiritualism. We want to say right here that there is work for all to do. Believing, as we said, that evil is the servant of good, we know that even though Judas betrayed his Master, such an act was necessary to the completion of the plan, and that the spiritual uplifting which led from the crucifixion was the result of the deed that led to it.

A great many Spiritualists look upon the occurrence of to-day as of no account whatsoever, because they know to what depth a woman must first descend who, in order to serve the selfish purposes of a little greed on her own part, will become the willing tool in other hands to traduce the memory of a sainted mother and a worthy sister. Such a motive places it almost beneath our notice, because such a Judas as this will go so far in her malevolent way as to destroy the influence she employs to accomplish her purpose, and thus, while she wrecks her own reputation, will fail to attain the end she seeks. In yesterday's Globe, when speaking of spiritual mediums, Mrs. Kane is quoted as saying that "they are all swindlers and thieves, and ought all to be in prison." Now, then, if any one thinks we have been personal this morning, we ask him if he does not think the occasion demands a little personality? She said that of you—she said that of you, Mr. Emerson, she said that of us. While the statements which she has made within the last few weeks declare her to have been false from first to last, it is poor taste for one to convict everybody else with himself, and can only be accounted for on the ground that it is a righteous judgment that judges everybody by yourself. She also says in yesterday's Globe report, "I never took a dollar from any medium, and would not stoop to receive it." A little further on she says, "I never claimed that it was spirits. Here is one of my old cards that says 'I do not undertake to explain by what means I do it.'"

In this connection we will read a letter in Margaret Fox Kane's own handwriting, with her signature appended:

"Dear Friends: Do you think it would be possible to get a small collection of subscribers to put together and send me enough money to enable me to go on to Boston? The spirits have directed me to write you this, and to say that they will come through me in form. If those few who are interested would subscribe, I will leave for Boston immediately. [This letter is but one year and one month old.] Remember, the spirits order this, and they say that greater physical manifestations will be given than have ever yet been given through me. [Here she gives other names.] The spirits say they want the physical materializing manifestations to take place at your house. Direct to me." [Here follows her address at that time.]

To several different reporters in New York Mrs. Kane said: "I began as a deceiver in my childhood, and I have kept it up for forty years. At first I was too young to do otherwise than as I was directed" (that was no excuse for keeping it up until a woman of over fifty years), "and after the death of my husband, who left me $5,000 in trust, I was forced into it again." We would tell her that any honest woman would be forced to the wash-tub first! While poor, fallen, degraded and pitiable Margaret Fox says she has been a falsifier for forty years, here is the testimony given with yesterday's Globe report that she keeps it up well yet.

The position we have taken will be criticised, you must be aware, and we know we shall also have it laid at our door that we as Spiritualists held her as one of ourselves for that forty years. Why did we do so? Because she was one of the mediums of the spirit-world, early used for the demonstrations that then took place. The belief in their genuineness, as we said in the beginning, rested not upon her word, and not alone on the recorded testimony of those faithful neighbors, but on the manifestations at every séance given, where skeptic, heretic and Spiritualist alike were obliged to admit that they were beyond the possibility of being produced by any other means than those claimed by her, her sister and her friends at the time they took place, so that our faith is not in Margaret Fox but in the manifestations that occurred. The reason that loving arms have been around her, trying to hold her back, is that even when Spiritualist women have been obliged to take her out of the mire and purify the external, rappings could be heard all about her; and one time, when she was taken in a state we will not name, a pencil was put into her hand and the following communication was given to the woman caring for her: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of one of these, ye have done it unto me."

Spiritualism rests upon its demonstrations, not upon the character of its mediums: they are weak vessels of the clay at best. Before another week rolls round somebody may rise who has been considered a faithful medium, and turn traitor to the truth, for it is human nature to do this. But, friends and Spiritualists, your Spiritualism does not rest upon even the public demonstrations of the spirits given through these various mediums: it rests upon the manifestations that you have had repeated in your own households again and again. Do not think that we undervalue the public work, for we stand before you to-day as an operating power through mediumship alone; and may this tongue become dumb and cleave to the roof of this mouth, ere it dare to deny the power of truth which has rested upon it. On the manifestations that do occur, and the value of the same, does Spiritualism rest, as we have claimed; and there are thousands of honorable, earnest, true mediums to-day. Some of them are working in such quiet ways that they are scarcely heard of, except as we find now and then a person who says, "I became a Spiritualist through such a one." "What, is she a medium? I did not know it," you say. No, you do not know how many are used as mediums for giving forth this light; you do not realize how widespread is this movement of spiritual mediumship. If we were to ask those among this congregation to rise who have received some token that they are endowed with any one of the gifts of the spirit, more than one-half would rise to their feet. There are, we say, from eight to eleven millions of Spiritualists. There may be one million who have had something of an idea of who Margaret Fox Kane is, but there are millions who are their own mediums, and who in circles in their own homes receive manifestations of spirit power constantly. Upon such as these her denunciation of mediums and Spiritualism will have no effect. Now, as of old, the disciples first sent out are not all. Those who have been endowed with the power of the spirit are multitudes already, and it is coming silently into the heart and home and life of too many to be touched by such flimsy exhibitions as are given under the name of "exposures" to-day. Every medium, or pretender to the name of mediumship, who poses before the public as an exposer of Spiritualism, exposes nobody but himself, and even our intelligent opponents will say, "Why, I have heard enough about Spiritualism to know that this is not all there is to it."

We speak thus to-day, feeling that the dignity of Spiritualism requires something of a recital of what it is and where it stands. Our enemies outside are many. We have the church to contend with; we have bigotry and superstition to overcome; we have to meet the opposition of those who love falsity better than the truth. When we give utterance to a new thought they inquire at once if it conflicts with the ideas which they have held in the past, with their church dogmas or teachings, rather than if it is the truth and what are the evidences of the same. They rush after those who call themselves exposers more to gratify their idle curiosity than because they desire to know the facts in the case. But there is no power outside of Spiritualism to-day that we need fear, because the outside world are thinkers. Many times you meet Christians who are bitterly opposed to Spiritualism from prejudice, as we have stated, but it is because they have known nothing of it of themselves, and have allowed themselves to be biased by somebody else's testimony. Take almost any of them into a circle at your own home, show them some manifestation, and they will be surprised, admit their surprise and say: "I never dreamed it was anything of that kind." Bring them into an assembly like this to listen to a lecture not as antagonistic as we are obliged to give this morning, but something that voices the truth of Spiritualism or some of the sacred teachings that the angel-world has given us, and their hearts will be melted, their tears will fall, and they will say: "We did not know that was Spiritualism. Why, we have believed that for a long time. We thought Spiritualism taught immorality." And they accept the truths uttered. Spiritualism has crept into literature, into the pulpits, or, back of the pulpits, into the hearts of the ministry, and has permeated all classes of society everywhere. Even this report in The Globe shows that the reporter had talked with sensible Spiritualists, and had gained a pretty clear idea that there is something back of this movement of Modern Spiritualism more than is represented in this pretended exposure.

There is much work for us to do within our ranks. We are criticised for harboring such as she who denounces us to-day, and told that we ought to have turned them out long ago, before they had the opportunity to do us injury. We do not believe that Spiritualism is something out of which the evil-doers should be turned, but that it is something into which they should be turned for reformation. We know the pitfalls and temptations that lie all about some lives which are exposed to the public continually, as many of our mediums are, and we say that you cannot organize too soon, with a view to protecting the weak and reforming the fallen, in your own ranks at least. It is our belief, as far as temperance is concerned, that the cause is not helped by praying, but by working; and that it is not advanced by legislating against those who sell and distill liquors as much as it would be by organizing societies in a way that would enable you to take care of those who individually show such weakness as to give evidence that they are not able to care for themselves. We would have those addicted to the use of intoxicants taken charge of just as quickly as we would a lunatic. We believe drunkenness to be a disease as much as insanity, and would have all thus afflicted committed to institutions that would be not places of punishment or degradation, but homes where they would be so surrounded that this temptation could not touch them until nature recuperated and gave them vital power enough to resist its influence.

We heard a good old mother in Israel say only yesterday, "If I had known into what depths of degradation one of our earlier mediums had fallen, I would have come clear from my home in Vermont and given her that aid that would have taken her out of such conditions." We say to you, Spiritualists, that we have a work to do within our ranks in caring for and shielding those who are in reality instruments of the spirit-world from temptation and want, by every means in our power; and then, we believe, when every means has been tried, and we can no longer keep them from debasing, degrading and dragging down into the depths the high and holy gift of mediumship, we should make known to the world that we hold them no longer as exponents of our cause.

This is a point that is hard to settle, hard to know what to do with, or what we ought to have done. We have, therefore, made a plain statement of facts. For many years she who stands before the public to-day as a self-convicted fraud has not been considered (save by but few) as a representative Spiritualist.

Spiritualism stands on a foundation of experiences: its believers are counted by millions; it has hundreds of thousands of mediums. Among these latter are many whose phase of physical demonstration far exceeds even that that was formerly Mrs. Kane's. During the last few weeks you have had among you one of our instruments, Mrs. Ada Foye, through whose mediumship quite distinct raps are produced on the platform, on the wall, and all about her. Supposing, for instance, it were possible that by any ingenious (to use a word coined by the reporter) ventriloquistic machinery, these raps could be produced, then we say that their genuineness, so far as spirit origin is concerned, depends upon the intelligence which they evince. The medium says the raps indicate that a certain spirit is present, giving the name, and some one in the audience rises and says, "It is my mother," or "my father," or "my friend," as the case may be. Then says the medium, "Ask the spirits to denote through the raps how old she was when she died? of what disease she died?" or to give some proof of personal identity, and it is given. Therefore we say, not on the veracity of Mrs. Ada Foye, but on the demonstrated evidence given by the phenomena does her mediumship rest; and while this is true of this phase, it is also true of every phase of manifestation. We speak of this special one because it has lately passed under your observation. There are thousands of other mediums; there are mediums in your own homes, in whose presence raps or other demonstrations of spirit presence occur. We have heard many say, "My mediumship does not rest on the Foxes, it does not rest on Andrew Jackson Davis, it does not rest on any one individual, but it rests on my own experiences." This is the better part of our Spiritualism, that it comes to individuals because individuals need it. Every heart is an altar, and every soul a priest or priestess at that altar. We have in our presence Mr. Emerson, who, seeing and hearing spirits, has given you proof again and again, and in our presence and in the presence of others the raps and various phases of phenomena have occurred; and if Margaret Fox to-day should sink out of sight, and never be heard of again, Spiritualism would be an established fact among mankind.

In the early days of the Christian religion, when Jesus sat at supper with the twelve, he said, "Verily I say unto you, one of you which eateth with me shall betray me," and again, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night." Then Peter, loving and faithful to his Master until that last moment, exclaimed, in the earnestness of his spirit, "Though all shall be offended, yet will not I." But Jesus, with true spiritual discernment, turning to him, said, "Verily I say unto you, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice." While Christianity has had its Judas and its Peter, Spiritualism has its Margaret Fox; and if, with her snapping toe-joints, she finds in this nineteenth century fanatical doctors to swear to the truthfulness of what she asserts, I wonder if any one has heard a rooster crow?

The truth is mighty, and will prevail. Our foundations are everlasting; they rest on the rock of the eternal ages, in the bosom of the Infinite Spirit, and in the needs of mankind. We look up into the faces of our loved ones, who come to us individually, or through various mediums, and we feel a response from the soul without to the soul within. So that while we have our foes without and our foes within, we know that our guardians who are upon the mountain-tops are greater than they all, and that the truth shall prevail.

☞ Moral courage may be regarded as one of the supremest virtues, and entitled to praise and admiration whenever exhibited in defense of a good cause or a conscientious opinion. The voice of conscience is so delicate that it is easy to stifle; but it is also so clear that it is impossible to mistake it. Truth lies in a straight line, following which a man may always stand erect in the full dignity of his manhood; but falsehood ever has a zigzag, underground course, pursuing which he must bend his judgment, twist his conscience, and warp his manhood, till he ceases to be a man.

from his carriage. I saw him. Somebody is bringing him home now."

There was not an apparent movement of a muscle in her body as she spoke. Her voice had not a trace of emotion in it. It was as if a corpse had spoken.

"Doris! It can't be! You are dreaming, or under some strange influence!"

Lucy rose instantly and brought Doris water. She could not swallow it. They bathed her face, but she seemed unconscious of what they were doing. Mrs. Carroll began to feel an anxious foreboding, but tried to forget it in her solicitude for Doris. Nearly an hour passed, and then the door-bell rang.

"They have come, mother. You and I must wait a few moments before we go down. Lucy will go. She will know what to do."

Mrs. Carroll was awe-struck by her strange words and appearance. Lucy went down, and in a few moments reappeared, pale and frightened.

"It is too true," she said.

Mrs. Carroll did not reply. She fainted, and fell back on the lounge where she and Doris were sitting. Doris rose, placed her in a better position, and said—

"Stay with mother, Lucy. I will go down."

She did not remember how she made her way down the stairs and into the hall. A physician whom she only knew by sight stood there, as if awaiting her. She turned faint and dizzy.

Dr. Waters led her into the library, while three or four strangers, who had come to assist, placed the mortal remains of Dr. Carroll in one of the parlors.

Bridget came in, loud in lamentations. Doris rose, but found she was too weak to stand. Dr. Waters placed her in her chair again.

"Please take Bridget and Michael and go in the parlor," she said. Dr. Waters looked back at her anxiously as he turned to leave the room.

"I shall not faint, doctor. I shall feel much easier if you go to see that all is properly done."

As Doris leaned back in the easy chair, she was conscious of a wonderful presence. A band of angels gathered about her. Among them she saw her mother and Aunt Amelia. There were aged men and women, whose faces had gathered peace and rest. They looked upon her with a tender and infinite pity. There were little children whose innocent faces beamed with love. They held toward her beautiful flowers whose odors seemed to strengthen and uplift her. She could not weep. She could not cry out, even in the midst of her despair. She suffered silently, while she felt herself wafted into the presence of a power subtle and sweet, which compelled her to silence.

"I wish you would go up-stairs to mother and Lydia," she said, when Dr. Waters entered the room; "I think they need you."

Mrs. Carroll had not recovered consciousness. He assisted Michael and Lucy to move her to her room. She began to recover a little while they were removing her clothing.

"I want Sidney," she said feebly.

"He cannot come to you now, Mrs. Carroll. I will do what I can, or I will go for any physician you wish. Who shall it be?"

"Nobody. It does n't matter. Do what you think best."

He began to prepare something for her.

"Where is Doris? I wish she could come to me."

"In the library. I will go for her." Dr. Waters went down.

"Do you feel able to go to your mother? She has asked for you."

"I will try." She attempted to rise, but could not sustain herself.

"Please sit down again. I will tell her you will come presently. Mrs. Scott is with her."

He found her apparently asleep, and returned to Doris in the library. He took a seat where he could watch her, yet not be observed.

"What wonderful self-control that little lady has," he thought, looking upon Doris's quiet face. He little understood what magnetic forces were being brought to bear upon her to strengthen and sustain her.

Meanwhile Lucy's attention had been divided between Mrs. Carroll and Lydia. Morris and Hugh had been sent for, and Hugh had arrived. Dr. Waters had not left the house. Bridget came in occasionally to see if Doris needed anything. The doctor brought a light, soft shawl from the hall and wrapped it around her. He offered her a glass of milk. She drank it as obediently as a little child, but did not speak. The clock on the mantel struck ten.

"I think I will try to go up stairs to mother, if you will assist me."

She took his arm, but he almost carried her up the stairs. He placed her by Mrs. Carroll's bedside. She was sleeping.

"How is Lydia?"

"More quiet and comfortable. Mrs. Harrison is watching with her."

"Then I will stay here. Has any word been received from my brother?"

"Yes. He said he would take the night express. He will probably be here in the morning."

There was a long silence until the clock struck twelve.

"This is the end of my twentieth birthday," said Doris.

At six o'clock in the morning Morris arrived. He sat down and put his arms around her, but they could not speak. Then she said gently,

"Go to Lydia. She needs you."

Dr. Waters followed him out.

"I have done what I could for Miss Moore. She was delirious, but is now much better. She is seriously ill. I think another physician had better be called."

"Do you mean you wish to consult with some one?"

"No—only, as I am not the family physician, I thought you might be more satisfied if you had other advice."

"I am willing to trust you, if she is," answered Morris. "I will go to her now."

There was a silent meeting. After a little, Morris said,

"Are you willing Dr. Waters should prescribe for you?"

"Yes, I think he has helped me already. I do not care to change. I am more anxious about Doris than myself. Is n't she strangely calm?"

"Yes, I am thankful it is so. Poor Doris! It is a terrible blow to her. They were so happy together."

Then Lydia told him of Doris's presentiment, and that she described the accident when it occurred.

"That is a remarkable experience," he replied. "If Sidney had been less faithful and conscientious in his duty he would not have gone out that day."

"It was like him to do it. He would always do his duty and take the consequences," said Lydia.

"It is a mercy that his mother does not realize much of her sorrow just now. She appears to sleep all the time; but I am worried about Doris. It is an unnatural calmness."

"We must trust her to the angel-world, Morris. They will surely sustain her."

The day for the funeral arrived. Mrs. Carroll was not able to leave her room. Lydia, though very weak, went down to listen to the services. Doris was there, white and still. She did not appear to notice any one, only to listen attentively to the words spoken.

There was a profusion of flowers, and the odor oppressed her. She turned faint. Dr. Waters brought her a cordial in a tiny wine-glass, which she drank. At last it was all over, and Doris returned home, feeling that love and joy and hope were lying in ashes at her feet.

Lydia recovered rapidly, but Mrs. Carroll's convalescence was gradual. She could hardly bear to be separated from Doris for a moment. She was unremitting in her attention, and thankful she could bestow it upon her. July came with its sultry days.

"Would not a couple of weeks at the seashore benefit you, mother?"

"Undoubtedly; that is, if you will go with me."

"I will go, only I do n't want to go to Creighton. Let us choose some other quiet place."

It was decided that Lydia must accompany them. The trip was really beneficial to them all. A few days after their return Doris seated herself by Mrs. Carroll.

"Mother, I want to talk with you about something. I feel that I must make some plans for my support in the future."

"Doris, whatever we may do, I cannot bear the thought of having you leave me."

"And I will not. We will live together somehow and in some way. Sidney told me that he had leased the house for another five years. According to the date we have over four years more of the unexpired term. It is paid, so we need not feel troubled about a house for a little while. I have looked over his private papers, and find he has over two thousand dollars in bank. That is something to be thankful for if we should be in need."

"And I have three thousand in bank besides," said Mrs. Carroll.

"Then we need not fear the wolf at present," said Doris. "I intend to do something to support myself, so I can keep that money for cases of emergency. If I could, I should prefer teaching. I think I might get a school."

"Very likely. I do n't like to think of you doing it, but perhaps it will be necessary. Have you decided where to apply?"

"I think I will go to Dr. Packard for advice. He has a good deal of influence. He may help me. And I must go at once. I do n't want to be idle long."

Dr. Packard received Doris cordially. She made known her errand.

"I am sorry it must be so; but since it seems advisable I will do all I can to assist you. I have just helped Miss Forrest to the Roseville district school. She was appointed last week. I wish I had known this a few days ago."

"Perhaps Miss Forrest needs it as much as I do, so it is quite right she should have it."

"I will look this matter up at once, and will call in the course of a week to report my success."

Doris thanked him gratefully, and went home feeling that the matter was in the hands of one who had an interest in her.

Three days after this interview Miss Forrest called on Dr. Packard. There was a different expression on her face as she walked into his study from that she had previously worn. Before it was anxious and careworn; now it was bright and hopeful.

"I have come to say that I have resigned the position in Roseville, to which you so kindly assisted me, Dr. Packard."

"Indeed! There is no dissatisfaction, I hope?"

"No. But I am informed that I am fortunate in becoming an heiress. A distant relative has kindly made abundant provision for me, and now that it is not necessary I should teach, I prefer to devote my time to my mother. She is an invalid, and really needs me."

"I am pleased to be able to congratulate you. Plenty of money is a desirable thing if we understand rightly how to use it. Knowing that generosity is one of your characteristics, I am glad to believe that you will do much good with it."

"I hope so. Mother and I have known the struggles of poverty so long, I hope we may not forget those who are in need. But I shall not forget your kindness in helping me." And Miss Forrest, no longer a prospective teacher, tripped lightly down the steps and away.

Dr. Packard immediately called upon Doris, and told her what had occurred.

"I think I can secure that school for you, if you wish it."

"I should be thankful for it. You are very kind. I shall be quite impatient to learn the result."

A note from Dr. Packard made an appointment for her to meet a Committee on Examination the next morning. Doris's little hands shook nervously as she put on her hat.

"Oh! dear, I don't suppose I shall know enough to tell my name by the time I get there! I 'm sure I shall fail!"

"Indeed, you will not, Doris!"

"You know I never was in a public school in my life as a pupil, and I don't suppose their ways are Miss Shallot's ways."

"I should hope not!" fervently replied Mrs. Carroll.

Doris soon found herself in the presence of the formidable committee. They were three, Mr. Tibbitts, Mr. Brown and Mr. Closson.

"Don't be afraid of us, Mrs. Carroll," said Mr. Tibbitts, politely placing a chair for her. "This is a mere matter of form, since we have so much confidence in Dr. Packard's recommendation."

Doris thought the "mere matter of form" was something to think about, for thereupon followed such a complicated series of questions that she scarcely knew whether she was on this terrestrial ball or not, to say nothing of being able to locate any places upon it correctly.

She performed examples in arithmetic; she read; she spelled; she wrote.

With all this they seemed to be satisfied, for she received a formal election to the Roseville school.

"Now I shall do my best, mother. I am glad it is so near Hugh and Lucy. I shall feel quite at home."

The first of September had already recorded its date, and Doris began her new duties.

Lydia was left much alone with Mrs. Carroll. She still read, studied, and filled a daughter's place.

"Mother, I do n't feel right to be so dependent upon you now. Everything is so different from what it used to be. I have been thinking of it for several weeks, and now I have a proposition to make."

"I am willing to listen to your plans, Lydia; but it will only be a year before Morris will claim you. Cannot you content yourself to remain as you are until then?"

"We do n't know what may happen before then. I should like to make some arrangement by which I can be earning something. I cannot teach like Doris, but I can make use of my mediumship."

"Why, Lydia!"

"Why not? Others do. You know it is n't because I want to, but because I must. So many people come to me who are strangers and take up my time—time that I have willingly given them, and would continue to give them if I ought. But is it right? I would n't take money from poor people; but I mean the rich people. Why should n't I let them pay me, and so add my mite to the family store?"

"Perhaps you are right, Lydia. I think you may trust your impressions in the matter; only I confess I never thought of it before."

Soon the modest advertisement of "Miss Lydia Moore, Writing Medium," appeared. After this she had very little leisure. She gave satisfaction as a medium, and was glad to be pecuniarily independent.

SUNBEAM AND I.

BY RICHARD REALF.

We own no houses, no lots, no lands,
No dainty viands for us are spread;
By sweat of our brows and toil of our hands,
We earn the pittance that buys us bread.
Yet we live in a nobler state—
Sunbeam and I—than the millionaires
Who dine off silver and golden plate,
With liveried lackeys behind their chairs.

We have no riches in bonds or stocks,
No bank books show our balance to draw;
Yet we carry a safe key that unlocks
More treasures than Cræsus ever saw.
We wear no velvets or satins fine,
We dress in a very homely way;
But, oh! what luminous lustres shine
About Sunbeam's gown and my wooden gray.

No harp, no dulcimer, no guitar
Breaks into singing at Sunbeam's touch;
But do not think that our evenings are Without their music: there is none such
In the concert halls where the lyric air
In palpitant billows swims and swoons;
Our lives are as psalms and our foreheads wear
The calms of the hearts of perfect Junes.

When we walk together (we do not ride,
We are too poor), it is very rare
We are bowed unto from the other side
Of the street—but not for this do we care.
We are not lonely; we pass along—
Sunbeam and I—and you cannot see
(We can) what a tall and beautiful throng
Of angels we have for company.

When cloudy weather obscures our skies,
And some days darken with drops of rain,
We have but to look in each other's eyes,
And all is balmy and bright again.
Ah! ours is the alchemy that transmutes
The dregs to elixir, the dross to gold;
And so we live on Hesperian fruits—
Sunbeam and I—and never grow old.

Never grow old, and we dwell in peace,
And love our fellows every one;
And our hearts are glad at the large increase
Of human happiness under the sun.
And the days go by with their thoughtful tread,
And the shadows lengthen toward the West,
But the wane of our young years brings no dread
To harm our harvest of quiet rest.

Sunbeam's hair will be streaked with gray,
And Time will furrow my darling's brow;
But never can Time's hand take away
The tender halo that clasps it now.
So we dwell in wonderful opulence,
With nothing to hurt us nor upbraid;
And my life is full of reverence,
And Sunbeam's spirit is not afraid.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From the home of his son, Henry B. Stannard, at Simonsville, Vt., on the morning of July 17th, 1888, suddenly, Joel Stannard, aged 47 years.

Himself and wife were earnest and honest investigators of Modern Spiritualism soon after its advent, and as a natural result of such a course, became convinced of its truth, and faithful workers in a dissemination of the positive knowledge it gave of the immortality of mankind. He was a firm and reliable friend of all mediums. It was at his house that the writer became convinced of the reality of spirit communion, and was led to break the shackles that held him a slave to creeds and dogmas of old theology, and from that time, 1855, he has walked in the light that communion has shed upon his path. LIFTING THE VEIL;

Or, Interior Experiences and Manifestations.

BY SUSAN J. AND ANDREW A. FINCK.

An interesting and instructive narrative of the experience of one who from early childhood was subject to the visits and recognizable guidance of spiritual intelligences. The opening chapter gives a graphic pen-picture of Southern plantation life when the "peculiar institution" of that section of our country was in its prime. The periodical visits of the circuit preacher, the preparations in the "big house" and the "quarters" of the negroes for the event, are finely described. As the narrative proceeds the development of mediumship gradually unfolds faculties previously latent, and tokens of the presence of spirits become more and more frequent. Accounts of clairvoyant, clairaudient and other experiences follow—all remarkable—including independent slate-writing, the sudden production of flowers, etc. In the latter part a thrilling account is given of the wonderful mediumship of a slave woman who startled an entire community with the eloquence of her discourses, prophetic visions, and powerful denunciations of wrong.

The book from beginning to end is one of intense interest; there is not a dull page; and treating as it does of the inception and growth of Spiritualism at the South, of which but little has been known to the public, it will command, as it should, a wide sale and do a good work.

The book contains finely executed portraits of the two authors, Mrs. Susan J. and Andrew A. Finck; also Felix M. Finck, and two clairvoyant scenes in spirit-life.

Cloth, large 12mo, beveled boards. Price $2.00, postage free.

THOUGHTS FROM THE INNER LIFE.

The contents of this book consist of nearly one hundred communications on an equal number of subjects relating to life in the spirit-world, selected from those received during eight years at private circles held at the residence of Mr. D. E. Bailey, Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Swain of that city being the medium. They were given by what is termed the "independent," or direct voice of the spirits. At the sittings the medium was not unconscious; when the spirit friends began to speak, the company, including the medium, conversed with them the same as with another. A volume might be filled with accounts of Mr. Bailey's wonderful experiences at these sittings; but he chooses to place the communications before the public with as little comment as possible, in the hope that their readers may find in them strength for the weak, consolation for the sorrowing, and unquestionable assurance of the existence of a life beyond the present for all.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle-Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organism of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages, the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presention of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world, and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

The Only Security for the Public Schools.

The first question that meets us in connection with the public school issue is, if we of this country are to become homogeneous through the inevitable commingling of heterogeneous elements, how is that most essential process to be performed if a foreign potentate, whether religious or secular, is to be allowed to take the education of a large portion of the children out of the hands of the State and direct it without any regard to the character of our common life and institutions? There is no disputing the fact that the surest and shortest way of combining the complex nationalities that people our larger communities so as to successfully run them in the mold of American citizenship is by the efficient agency of our established public school system. It is the only system that is capable in practice of taking children from their parents and giving them a fitting preparation for the world of work and activity upon which they are destined to enter.

Hence the question of the preservation of the public school from the hands of ecclesiastical interference on the one hand and the dominating impress of bigotry on the other, is one that, if pressed to a final issue, is likely to stir the popular heart more profoundly than any question that has been raised since our free institutions achieved maturity. The better to provide for its permanent safety, it will be found necessary to revise and reform its spirit from time to time, so that it shall more completely adapt itself to the new necessities of the advancing time. There is not much question that the existing plan of instruction requires much simplifying, and would be greatly improved by being broadened instead of elevated. In short, the public school in its teachings should be entirely secular. If it leans to religion in a community where religion is wholly sectarian, it will inevitably be sectarian. Its highest aim ought to be to qualify the young for the duties of citizenship. The responsibilities of the home and church do not in any sense belong to it. It cannot be either Protestant or Catholic, because it should not teach the doctrines of the one or the other.

Rabbi Schindler expresses the exact truth about it when he says that there should be neither Bible reading nor prayers in the public schools. He says with equal truth that our Catholic neighbors and friends have a perfect right to send their children to whatever school they see fit, provided only they pay for such instruction themselves, and that no power has a right to inhibit such instruction. And he says it would be equally absurd to place their schools under State supervision. So long as this remains a free country, all parents have a right to send their children to whatever school they please. The public schools are intended to make of the children future American citizens, to fit them into the civilization of America, and to inspire them with patriotism and love for this great republic and its institutions. This is more than teaching a certain amount of useful knowledge, and preparing the child for his later life as a bread-winner. The public school may be faulty as it is, but it can be improved with time. Its one redeeming and educating feature is the principle of equality which is instilled into the minds of all its pupils. No private school in the world can produce such an effect on the child's mind, or imprint this lesson on the child's heart.

While our public schools unite individuals in a large common brotherhood, private schools disunite and separate them into classes, castes, races and sects. All these present inharmonies, thinks Rabbi Schindler, will disappear if left to the soothing influences of time and are not irritated by quacks. Nature will surely heal this wound, too, if let alone, just as she heals all others. Those who choose to take upon themselves the burden of supporting private and parochial schools will in due time become aware that they can have a better education for their children, free of charge, than they can possibly obtain by great private sacrifice. Neither theology nor religion of any kind should be allowed to enter the doors of our public schools. No sect should be allowed to intrude its influence. Morality should of course be taught, but theology never. Rabbi Schindler admitted that the Israelites have too often felt that their children were exposed to the derision of their schoolmates on account of their family faith, but they had held their peace and practiced their customary patience because they were in such a small minority, while acknowledging the great benefits offered by the public schools to their children. The Catholics, however, are numerous enough to make themselves heard; and only by a strict interpretation of the non-sectarian principle can the dispute ever be settled.

Rev. Mr. Savage, in a recent discourse on this question, unhesitatingly asserts that the reading of the Bible in the public schools should be forbidden. The present conflict, he said, is a conflict of principle as to the methods that shall govern the management of our common schools. It was inevitable in the nature of things. No one in particular has precipitated it, nor is anybody specially in fault. He did not think it necessarily implied any religious antagonism to our government. They who are opposed to the present method and management of the schools are entitled to the same credit for honesty of motive which we claim for ourselves. We simply represent the newer principle, and they the older one—much older than the republic itself. We believe that our principle lies at the basis of our prosperity, and that it must ultimately prevail. Our ancestry who fled from English persecution believed substantially alike, and practically had a State religion. In the course of the free immigration which was subsequently invited, it so happens that this can in no true and strict sense be called a Christian government. It is simply a great human government under which any man from any part of the world may be clothed in all the rights of perfect citizenship.

Our common school system is supported by universal taxation. The State consequently has no right to make that school anything but a training school for American citizenship. This is the one thought that should shape and govern its entire management. That thought implies that, first, no public school supported by all alike can justly be a sectarian school. The State has nothing to do with teaching sectarian ideas. It has no right to teach religion, in or out of the public schools, in any form. This reading of the Bible in the schools is at best but a piece of pure formalism. The principle is wrong from top to bottom. The State has nothing whatever to do with another world. Its business is wholly with this. Its domain is here only. The school should teach the plain difference between right and wrong, and it naturally would. This difference has been brought out as the result of human experiences, and is as plain as the multiplication table. In the long run, the public schools are unspeakably better than private schools, however good the latter may be. Not one mill of public money should go to the support, of private schools or institutions.

"Is Spiritualism Dead?"

Under the above heading The Boston Daily Globe of Friday morning, Nov. 16th, contained an editorial so full of honest and rugged justice to the cause of Spiritualism that we here transfer it to our columns entire. We desire to thank The Globe for its bravery in daring to publish a fair statement as to the Fox-Kane performances and their utter futility:

"It is now some weeks since the 'Fox-Kane exposure' of 'spiritualistic phenomena' was made public; long enough for something of its effect to be observed, if it is to have any effect upon Spiritualists themselves. The New York paper which first published the 'exposure' claimed that it would utterly destroy the faith of eight million people. That is the number of people conceded to be believers in the spirit origin of the phenomena, and Spiritualists themselves claim a still larger number of believers. But if the New York paper really expected to shatter the belief of these people, it must be disappointed. The professed Spiritualists do not seem to be greatly ruffled by the 'exposure'; they hold their meetings just the same, and the story of Margaret Fox-Kane and her sister, if it is alluded to at all, is treated with contempt and derision. However convincing this exposure may be to others, it is plain already that it will have no effect whatever on Spiritualists as a body.

What is the reason of this tenacity of belief on their part? Why does not Spiritualism die out after these repeated exposures? Is it because its honest devotees are willing to be deceived? Because they are blindly prejudiced in favor of their belief and will listen to no evidence against it? Or is it because the 'exposures' have not been conclusive?

It must be confessed that the explanation of 'spirit-rappings,' so called, given by Mrs. Fox-Kane, is not as conclusive as might be wished. It would not have attracted any attention if it had come from any other source. But when the woman who, when a little girl, had been a 'medium,' by or through whom the first 'Rochester knockings' were made, declared that the whole thing was caused by a voluntary cracking of her toe-joints, the statement seemed to have value as coming from the 'founder of Spiritualism.' But its value is somewhat weakened by the fact that thousands of people, including many men of good sense, heard the rappings and were unable to suggest any known cause for them. It seems difficult to believe that a child of seven or eight years, by a mere muscular contraction of the joints, could so deceive intelligent people who did not believe that the phenomenon was extra-natural. Moreover, the same or similar phenomena have been repeated since, at many times and in many places.

Not only the many Spiritualists who believe that the rappings had a supermundane cause, but the many 'non-Spiritualists' who attribute them to some as yet undiscovered natural force, may be excused for discrediting the improbable explanation offered by the Fox-Kane woman, particularly when her previous character and impecunious circumstances are taken into account. A few hundred dollars offered by a newspaper for an 'exposure' may have been a great temptation to her to invent an explanation for the curious phenomena which it is probable that she is as much unable to explain as any one else. At any rate, this is the explanation which professed Spiritualists assign for the 'exposure.' Moreover, these and other so-called 'spiritualistic phenomena' did not originate in the Fox household, but are, as Gerald Massey showed in his lecture in this city last Sunday, very ancient. It seems to be settled that Spiritualism, as a 'belief of eight million people,' will not be killed, as the New York paper expected, by Margaret Fox-Kane's hired exposure."

Eleanor Kirk sees things in connection with the workingwoman's condition just as they are, and reports them rightly beside. She writes, in a recent descriptive letter from Brooklyn, N. Y., that their condition never was so bad as it is now, and that the winter's outlook for those who earn a living by the needle and the sewing-machine is barren beyond description. The steady shrinkage in the wages of sewing girls is ascribed to the modern craze for "bargains" which possesses the rich. Said an intelligent woman at the head of a department in a mammoth dry-goods store in that city: "Our earliest customers, after a flaming bargain advertisement in our morning papers, are the women who come in their carriages with coachman and footman and every possible elegant and costly appurtenance. Long before the women who need bargains can do up their work (at home) and get to the stores, the cream of the stock is picked over and carried away by those who will scurry and push to save twenty-five cents on a nightdress or a petticoat, and then go to the candy counter and spend five dollars for a box of bonbons or ten dollars for a dainty luncheon for a party of friends."

The hideous selfishness of human nature is clearly visible in the above statement, which is in no sense exaggerated. The writer above named said that a prominent manufacturer told her that woman's underclothing would be sold cheaper than ever this winter, because bargains are an absolute necessity, and the bargains of last year must be improved upon this year, or dry-goods men might as well go out of business. "So you see," said he, "more seams must be sewed and more buttonholes made in order to earn the wages of previous times. What the sewing girls will do this winter is a problem, but it is safe to predict more misery than ever fell to their lot before."

Well may this writer decry the "heartlessness of wealth and the insatiable desire for bargains" which successfully circumvent the efforts of thoughtful and kind-hearted men and women to bring about a reform in this direction. "To see women faint from hunger," she says, "their children crying and literally dying for want of food, is no uncommon sight. I have witnessed it so often, and agonized over it so much, that I would sell my soul to Milton's head-devil, or go to housekeeping in Dante's Inferno, before I would ever buy a garment from one of these underclothing bargain counters." The truth has only begun to be told in this matter. None can see as a woman herself can the wicked wrong and hideous injustice of a state of affairs for which a remedy must surely be found.

The Crowing of Roosters.

The allusion made by the guide of Mrs. Lillie in the lecture given in this paper to the crowing of a rooster in connection with the denial of a fact, is not the first time that event has been mentioned in close relation to Spiritualism.

At the annual session of the American Scientific Association in the Lecture Room of the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C., April, 1854, the distinguished Prof. Hare read to that body an invitation from the Spiritualists of that city for its members to attend a lecture on Spiritualism. During the reading of the paper Prof. Henry entered, and, hearing the word Spiritualism mentioned, interrupted Prof. Hare with this inquiry: "I would be glad to know, Mr. President, if this subject is in order?"

Prof. Hare remarked that whether the subject were in order or not it was hardly in order to interrupt a member of the Convention in that manner before he had finished reading his communication. Prof. Henry replied: "It is a dangerous subject to be introduced into this Convention; it had better be let alone"; and he moved that the invitation be laid on the table, and it was so disposed of. At this same session the Association held a very learned, extended, grave and profound discussion upon the cause of roosters crowing between twelve and one o'clock at night. Several very ingenious explanations were given to account for this very wonderful phenomenon, which the American Association for the Promotion of Science regarded as calling for serious investigation, and to which they brought to bear the combined force of their highest energies, while they laid aside, as unworthy of the slightest attention, the accredited proofs of a future life. So much for Science as an agency for the advancement of a knowledge of truth among mankind.

Home for Aged Couples.

The fifth annual meeting of the Association controlling the above highly commendable institution was held at Young's Hotel in this city last week. Mrs. E. A. Carleton, M. D., presided, and stated that the Home is non-sectarian, and having no invested funds, depends upon the proceeds of its Annual Fairs, the sixth of which is soon to be held in Horticultural Hall, and the contributions of its friends for carrying on its work, which has thus far been productive of great good. Addresses were made by several clergymen. Much satisfaction was expressed at the great degree of interest shown at the meeting, and it was predicted that the coming Fair would be fully as successful as those of former years, if earnest work could make it so.

Lyceum Fair.

The attention of the Spiritualists in this city and vicinity is called to the Fair to be held in aid of the Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, from Dec. 10th to 15th inclusive, mention of which is made on page eighth.

☞ C. E. Watkins has, we are informed, developed considerable power with his occult telegraphic process for the successful diagnosing of disease. His address will be found in a card on our seventh page.

The Dreadful Sunday Papers.

A Pittsburgh, Pa., preacher—who doubtless expects us to call him a divine, whereas we shall only call him by his own name instead—Rev. J. T. McCrory, discoursed of late before the "American Inter-Seminary Alliance" in the Park-street church in Boston, on the two opposing forces in life, evil and good. His final outburst was directed to the Sunday newspapers, of which he very graciously announced that he had but "a poor opinion." He said that, "next to the saloon," there is "nothing so degrading as they are." He said "the devil is intrenched in them, and with them can use his power." His exceedingly fine vein of remark was rewarded with "a burst of applause" from the assembled American Inter-Seminary Alliance, numbering some four hundred persons.

Now this Pittsburgh parson is guilty of confessing a great deal more than he really thinks for. For if, as is notoriously the case, the Sunday papers more and more supplant the insufficient and inefficient work of the pulpit, then, according to the McCrory dictum, that brings the latter pretty close up to "the saloon." The man's temper has clearly run wild. Of course he and his kin oppose the Sunday paper for the fundamental reason that "it successfully invades his realm." That is the real ground of offence. If the Sunday paper is, as he says, "next to the saloon" in the character of its influence and in its results, and still succeeds in doing work which must be done but which the pulpit cannot do, then it follows that the saloon itself is successfully invading the sanctuary and carrying off the flock from the self-appointed shepherds. We should counsel some of the parsons to use greater discretion in their denunciations, lest they may cast a boomerang when they intend only a little harmless recreation.

Reception to Gerald Massey.

On Thursday evening, Nov. 15th, a pleasant party assembled at the residence of A. E. Giles, Esq., Hyde Park, Mass.—where Mr. Massey has made his home during his lecture engagement in Boston—to express sentiments of kindly remembrance and hopes of future success to this distinguished poet and author from the English shore. The interesting exercises consisted of brief remarks, singing, charades, etc., in which Theodore D. Weld (the old-time Abolitionist), A. J. Davis, and others, participated. Among the guests was a gentleman from the editorial staff of the Boston Evening Transcript.

Mr. Massey, in response to the desire of the friends present, favored them with readings from his works. The occasion was one of pleasure to all concerned.

HE SHOULD BE KEPT BUSY.

Mr. Massey lectures in Providence, R. I., the next two Sundays. In speaking of his engagement there, President E. H. Whitney says he hopes this distinguished visitor "will be actively employed, as he is doing an excellent work for Spiritualism." This is true, and we hope the managers of Societies in other localities will improve the present opportunity of securing the valuable services of Mr. Massey on this, his farewell visit to the United States. He may be addressed for engagements in care BANNER OF LIGHT.

Mrs. Ada Foye in Cleveland, O.

This distinguished platform test-medium will occupy the spiritual rostrum at Memorial Hall, 170 Superior street, during the month of December. Friends in surrounding towns wishing to engage this remarkable medium for week-day meetings or parlor séances can apply to Thos. Lees, 105 Cross street.

Lyman C. Howe, writing from New York, under date of Nov. 19th, says:

"The past week I have spent much of my time in the restful atmosphere of the harmonious home of Bro. Milton Rathbun, whose generous emotions and moral sympathies bless all who come into his sphere. Mrs. Rathbun, whose work as an author and speaker has endeared her to thousands, is in feeble health, but vigorous in spiritual helpfulness. The treasury of thought and sentiment stored in a large and choice library, coupled with art and music, and a tender peace and sweet good will radiating from the happy group, give to the weary worker and sensitive the most blessed and bracing tonic and healthful inspiration. Oh! that every faithful worker in this vineyard of the gods might find such a haven of rest when the day's work is done. Heaven bless the home."

☞ We are informed that J. J. Morse has been speaking of late—with the excellent success which always attends his platform utterances—in Fidelity Hall, Market and Church streets, Paterson, N. J. He speaks there again, afternoon and evening, on Sunday, Nov. 25th. During December he speaks in Conservatory Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y. He has June disengaged, and is open to calls for camps next summer—that is, during July and August only. Mr. Morse's address for the present is 541 Pacific street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

☞ Heraclitus foresaw, evidently, B. C. 513, the "non-plussed" condition of the would-be "exposers" of Spiritualism in A. D. 1888—for does he not distinctly say: "What they do, they know not; what they do not, that they think they do. Yea, what they behold they recognize not; and yet all things befall them according to divine destiny, both what they will and what they will not."

☞ Mr. Colville sold one hundred copies of his new book, "Spiritual Therapeutics," in Denver in three days. Those desiring copies can obtain them of Colby & Rich. It is a handsomely bound volume of 340 pages, and retails at the moderate price of one dollar. Its contents consist of twelve lectures, one hundred and fifty answers to questions, and other interesting matter.

☞ Much that is worthy of thought and reflection is to be met with in the sermons of the gifted John W. Chadwick, (minister of the Second Unitarian Church in Brooklyn, N. Y.,) which are given to the public in due course, and in sterling typographic fashion, from the publishing establishment of George H. Ellis, 141 Franklin street, Boston.

☞ Mrs. Clara A. Field writes us that she is slowly recovering from her recent severe illness, and asks the indulgence of correspondents, hoping soon to be able to attend to business. She may be addressed in care BANNER OF LIGHT, Boston, Mass.

☞ Dumont C. Dake, M. D., is a skillful medical attendant, and a genial spirit whose responses to the impressions of superior wisdom are vivid, and generous of good results.

☞ Mrs. M. E. Williams, of 232 West 46th street, New York City, is, it is rumored, about to pay a visit to "The Hub."

An Agnostic Indeed.

So thoroughly knowing a paper as the New York Graphic issues the solemn proclamation that "there is nothing in fact or history to show that when a man is dead he is alive." ..."So far as we shall ever know, when a man is dead he is utterly gone." Very well. But how does The Graphic know the truth of its assertion? Unless it has the documentary evidence right at its elbow, it is difficult to understand how it can be so positive and decided. It certainly could not be more so concerning a plain and simple fact right under its nose. Here is conceit embodied indeed. It beats Positivism in all its forms. Easy enough to give out a bald and bare assertion like the above, but a much more difficult matter to substantiate it. And the less the proof power the louder and stronger the assertion. There is really no answer to such as permit themselves indulgences of this kind. The only way to treat them is to invite them to tarry patiently at Jericho a while longer. To say that immortality is incapable of proof, in this age, is indeed a phenomenal exhibition of blank and blind assurance.

☞ We wish to call the attention of our readers to the Questions and Answers in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Nov. 3d; also to the Message of JEREMIAH MORSE of Bethel, Vt., which is true in every particular. Call at our office and subscribe for THE BANNER, or send to Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston. $3.00 for a year's subscription.—Twilight, Augusta, Me.

Thanks, friend Merrill, for your kindly notice of THE BANNER. It endeavors to do its whole duty in regard to the advancement of the Spiritual Cause, notwithstanding that certain selfish and dishonest people are occasionally "swift witnesses" against it. But we put our trust in the powers above, and THE BANNER will float to the breeze when its detractors are laid in the dust.

J. Gross, M. D., writes, Nov. 13th, from New Orleans, La.: "We have a family circle and succeed in all manner of tests; we have also had a perfect materialization in a room where we met for the first time, with only one amateur medium present. It convinced several of those present who were skeptics. We are much interested here."

☞ Thanks are returned to the generous souls who have recently placed upon our Public Free Circle-Room table such a variety of beautiful floral gifts: These are pleasing alike to the invisible and the visible audiences assembled.

We notice that W. S. Rowley of Cleveland, O., is making Occult Telegraph instruments like his own for sale. See his ad. in another column.

☞ The good work of Mrs. Ada Foye in Philadelphia is appreciatively spoken of on our first page, by the Secretary of the First Association of Spiritualists.

Hon. A. B. Richmond at a Memorial Service.

Interesting memorial proceedings were held in the Court convened at Meadville, Pa., Nov. 12th, in honor of J. D. Minniss, Esq., recently deceased. A committee appointed by Judge Henderson reported an address embodying a sketch of his life and public services and resolutions. Remarks were made by Judge Pettis, Judge Church and Hon. A. B. Richmond (known to the readers of THE BANNER as the author of that sterling work: "A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report; or, What I Saw at Cassadaga Lake."

Mr. Richmond's brief address was an eloquent tribute to the worth of one whom he designated as the playmate of his boyhood, the companion of his early manhood, and the true friend of his advancing years. In the course of his remarks he said:

"James D. Minniss, our friend and companion, is dead! so it was whispered in tones of sadness among the members of our bar when we met in court the morning after he had passed away, and so read his obituary in our evening paper. But is it true? 'If a man die, shall he live again?' has been the wailing plaint of mankind long before and since the words were uttered by the patient philosopher of our own revered tradition, yet under the enlightenment of this Christian century, If a man live, shall he die? is a far more philosophical and comprehensive interrogatory?"

Mr. Richmond closed with the following eloquent and truthful peroration:

"No! no! our friend is not dead, and while we are ignorant of the laws that environ his new existence, who shall attempt to define the limits of its possibilities?

Rash indeed would he be who, from the standpoint of creeds and dogmas alone, should say: 'I know all the secrets beyond the grave, and by faith alone I have solved the mysterious problem of death.'

Coëxtensive with the vastness of time and the limitless boundaries of the universe are the secrets beyond the mystic river—and the folly of man is never more apparent than when manifested in the puny efforts of sectarian creeds to reveal them. The countless conditions of the unknown laws of the great future now surround the spirit of our departed brother. The instinctive impulses of the soul tell us that he yet lives; science in its demonstrations of the correlation of force asserts the indestructibility of mental as well as physical force, while psychology proves the continuity of life and evidences its personal identity hereafter.

While our brother is gone from our midst, let us believe that he yet lives; so long as bereaved affection shall drop a tear on the coffin of its dead, or friendship cherish its recollections of the past, so long will the great truth find an affirmative response in every heart, If a man lives, he shall not die!"

"Materialized Apparitions."

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter received by Mr. E. A. Brackett, author of the volume above named, from Munich, Bavaria, in which the writer expresses having received great satisfaction in reading it. "I have," he says, "found in it so many experiences like my own truly and fairly represented, I find we stand on the very same ground as regards intercourse with beings of another life. This has caused me to read a paper on your excellent book in the Psychological Society in this place, and I have also translated the whole volume into German, and design to have it printed at my expense and to secure for it the widest possible circulation."

The writer further says that the paper he prepared and read before the Society in reference to Mr. Brackett's book created such an interest that he is authorized to engage a good, reliable medium for materialization to visit Germany, there being now no public mediums for that phase in that country. If such a one can be induced to go, he guarantees from a fund raised for the purpose to pay traveling and other expenses and a surplus for services; and he adds, "The medium would also be at liberty to visit other places in Europe after leaving Munich, and we should assist such traveling by recommendations to our friends."

The tribute this writer voluntarily gives to the intrinsic value of Mr. Brackett's book is a well-merited one, as all who are familiar with its contents will readily admit. While it has been deemed in Germany worthy of a translation, and awakened an interest that has led to a proposition to have a medium go thither to give palpable proof of the truth of the phenomenon upon which it treats, we trust Spiritualists in this country will fully recognize its merits as an auxiliary to their personal efforts to make known that truth, and do what they can to extend its circulation and consequently its usefulness in disseminating a knowledge of the facts of Modern Spiritualism.

☞ Dr. Wells, who diagnoses and prescribes so successfully through W. S. Rowley in the office of Rowley & Whitney, 89 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, has originated some specifics that have done wonders, if reports are true. We gladly call attention to their ad. in another column.

Gerald Massey at Berkeley Hall.

Mr. Massey gave his second and concluding lecture in this hall, under the auspices of the First Independent Club of Boston, on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18th. His theme was "The Devil of Darkness in the Light of Evolution."

There are two things [he said] which I have come to look upon as constituting the unpardonable sin of father and mother against the helpless innocence of infancy. The one is in allowing their little children to run the risk of blood-poisoning—such as was once suffered by a child of mine—from the filthy fraud of vaccination. The other is in permitting the mind and soul of their children to be inoculated with the still more fatal virus of the old, false, Orthodox dogmas and delusions.

Christian dogmas began [he remarked] with being unintelligible and inexplicable. The doctrine of the trinity was of purely mythological origin.

The argument of the non-theist is continually directed and limited to the false premises and inadequate conclusions of the Orthodox, which it is as easy and cheap to pulverize as it is to pummel a sack of straw! We can know nothing of an omnipotent God who plays fast and loose with the conditions of law! Were it so, all human foothold and trust in the stability of the universe would be gone. Education would be impossible. We are at first taught by means of the fixed facts, in order that we may found on solid earth, not on the ever-shifting sands—with prayers for God to catch them now and again, and keep them quiet for God's sake!

I rather think it would be more just to reply, there is not sufficient manhood and intelligence in you to put an end to the evils you deplore! "I, God! gave the earth for all;" and you permit the initial iniquity of absolute private property in land, whereby one man may clutch a county all to himself, and a few may claim a country. You allow the rights of property to overrule and override the interests of humanity! If your national property is doubling every thirty years, so is the national pauperism!

I also hold their other cowardly doctrine, that of vicarious sacrifice, to be the real, if indirect, cause of vivisection. It would have been impossible for a nation of animal-lovers like the English to tolerate the vivisection of the dog, for example, man's first friend in the wilderness of the early world, his ally in the work of civilization, unless the motor nerve and conscience of the race had been paralyzed by the curare of vicarious suffering. The beastly cruelties of its practitioners, which are flaunted in our faces with intent to terrorize the conscience of others, could not have been permitted by men who had not been indoctrinated by the worship of a vivisecting deity whose victim was his own son! And these myriads of slowly murdered dogs and rabbits, cats and frogs, cannot have the consolation of knowing that vivisection is salvation, and they are saviours of the human race from the consequences of its own crimes against nature and sins against self!

It is impossible to establish the throne of eternal justice by the violation of all that is human, as is fruitlessly attempted on this ground of the orthodox creed.

As with the Trinity so it is with the origin of the theological devi. The crucial question of the savage man Friday was too fundamental for the theology of Robinson Crusoe. Friday asks: "But, if God much strong, much mighty as the devil, why God no kill the devil, and so make him no more wicked?" Crusoe, imitating other theologians, not knowing what to say, "pretended not to hear him." I am told this passage has been omitted from certain recent editions of "Robinson Crusoe." To give an answer to that question we shall have to go back a long distance.

The horned new moon, the waning moon and the moon at full [he said] were in external nature eternally three in one. So the origin of the theological devil could be traced back to a day most remote. Satan meant an opponent or adversary, and the first great natural adversary recognized by primitive man was darkness, the constant enemy of light. Thus the power of darkness was literal before it became metaphorical, moral or spiritual. Darkness was the vast, huge swallower of the light, night after night, and, as the original devil that put out the light, was the subtle enemy, the obstructor, deluder and general adversary of man.

The crocodile was an ideograph of the swallowing darkness, and the serpent was another form of the swallower, since, according to the Egyptians, it was all mouth. Thus the mythical dragon and the old serpent were interchangeable in mythology—each being a representative of the devil of darkness. Out of the darkness leapt the lightning bolt, and in the deep waters lurked another subtle foe of life, and thus the jaws, the fang and the sting of death were assigned to the devil of darkness, who gradually assumed the character of man's mortal enemy.

The earnest mode of representing the eternal alternation of external phenomena called night and day, the good and bad, was in the universal myth of the twin brothers. These brothers were portrayed as in continual conflict with each other, and, as in the story of Jacob and Esau, fought in the struggle to get born the first. St. George and the dragon was but a later form of the same mythos, typical of the warfare between good and bad, light and the dark. When mind became an element in the manifestation of phenomena the twins were called the bad mind and the good mind, and were thus moralized on their way to becoming the dual divinity or modern God and devil. The dark divinity in the physical, mental or moral domain was only negative or negational; the bright one, the god of light, the good mind, was the Supreme Being, the reality, the author of all that was finally real and eternally true. Men of to-day were thus not only contemporaries of savages in many of their current customs and benighting beliefs, but were also the victims of their leavings, since various superstitions of to-day were nothing but the primitive fetishism that still survived in the last stage of perversion.

After mentioning the various heathen myths of the devil, Mr. Massey said: Our theology has made the primal shadow of physical phenomena substantial in the mental sphere, and from the external darkness of that beginning has extracted and internalized the modern devil. There is no devil such as Milton saw, and, as you must know, much current theology has been derived from "Paradise Lost." The mythical devil was pretty much dying out until it was revived by the theology of Luther, Calvin and Milton. The Romish church did not deify the devil as the Protestants have done. She was better acquainted with the tradition of his creation and the earthly nature of his character. Luther and Calvin doubled the devil and placed one at each end of their scheme of things, the upper or bright God being rather the worse devil of the two. They put the doctrine of dualism as perplexingly as did the negro preacher, who told his congregation there were but two roads open to them—one of these led directly to destruction and the other went straight to perdition.

The Satan of sacerdotal belief was not a being for God or man to kill, but an effigy in shoddy that only needed to be ripped up to show that it was stuffed with sawdust. In giving up the Orthodox hell and ancient devil, men were doubtless giving up one of the most potent motive powers. The devil was a fundamental part of the Christian scheme. If there were no devil, there need be no redeemer. Orthodox Christianity was answerable with its life for the literal truth of these stories of the devil, the fall of man, and the doctrine of a dying deity's atonement. Its life was staked upon the stories being true, and its life must pay the forfeit of their being found to be false. Still one would like to believe in just a very little hell for their dear sake. They have so devoutly believed in a big one for ours.

There is devil enough, however, only of another kind than the one we have played with. The devil and hell of my creed consist in that natural Nemesis which follows on broken laws and dogs the law-breaker, in spite of any belief of his, that his sins and their inevitable results can be so cheaply sponged out as he has been misled to think, through the shedding of innocent blood. Nature knows nothing of the forgiveness for sin. She has no rewards or punishments—nothing but causes and consequences.

His devil, he said, was the devil of heredity, working in two worlds at once. Evolution showed the continuity of ourselves, our desires, passions and characters. If men had not mastered and disciplined their lower passions here, they would be mastered by them hereafter. These old passions burned and burned, and would and must burn on till they were burned out.

We have been following [said the speaker] a phantom of faith, and the actual, veritable devil has been dogging us indeed! This is not a Satan of God's making. Not an archangel ruined, who in falling found a foothold on this earth for the purpose of dragging men down with him to that lower deep for which he is bound, but a devil to be recognized by his likeness to ourselves, the devil that is our worser self, the devil of our own ignorance and the deification of self, a devil bequeathed to us by the accumulated gains of centuries of ignorant selfishness and selfish ignorance—a devil to be grappled with and wrestled with and throttled, overthrown and overcome and put out of existence—not only in the struggle against all that is evil in the isolated individual life, but by the energies of all collected and clubbed and made coöperant to destroy the causes of evil whensoever and wheresoever these can be identified, whether as religious or political, moral or social. We stand in heaven's own light and cast the evil shadow of self and say it is the devil.

You must look out for natural consequences and effects that follow causes, not for rewards and punishments! You know that a little bile in the blood may cause great mental distress, but it is perfectly absurd to ask God to save you from these blacks in your eyes and blue devils in your brain. You must look to your liver and obey the laws of health. Eschew tobacco instead of chewing it, and take less whiskey or coffee, as the case may be. God intends man to get rid of evil as he grows enlightened enough to deal more wisely with human conditions in the process of—what? Of becoming manlier and womanlier.

Seen in the light of evolution, he said, the existence of evil was no longer a mythological mystery to be made the most of for preaching purposes, but a necessary concomitant of development. The moment men recognized evil, the responsibility for its existence became theirs. Here was something to be turned into good, a devil to be converted. It was not a doll to dandle and claim divine patronage for, but a misbegotten devil of ignorance, and a miscarriage of humanity in the past. There was no origin of evil in the moral domain that was not derivable from ignorance. There was no devil in the moral domain except in the devilish determination to do the wrong or permit it to be done, after one had evolved the consciousness that recognized the right.

The reason why God did not kill the devil was because man had unconsciously created or permitted all that is the devil finally; and here or hereafter man had to consciously destroy his own work, and fight himself free from the errors of his own ignorance; not man as mortal simply, but as an immortal, marching onward side by side with those who were elders in immortality, still united with man and lending a hand to effect in time the not altogether inscrutable but slowly unfolding purposes of the Eternal.

Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker will lecture before the Independent Club in Berkeley Hall next Sunday afternoon at 2:45. Subject, "How I Became a Spiritualist."

A Spectral Dog Saves a Train.

A New York Tribune reporter tells of having been seated on the Battery promenade recently, when a lady passed with a white dog. This led a man on the seat next to him to say that he never saw a white dog without being reminded of an experience of his when fireman on the Pennsylvania railroad ten years ago. A long train of passenger cars and three Pullmans left Jersey City at nine o'clock one evening. It was going at a sixty-miles-an-hour pace, when the engineer said, "Look here, Jack, there 's a white dog runnin' along side what 's been following us five minutes, and I 'm blamed if he aint keepin' up to the engine. Look at him." Jack did look, and saw the dog skimming along over cuts and ditches and round curves like a swallow. At length the engineer said there must be something wrong, and stopped the train, after which the dog was not seen. The conductor came and inquired why this was done, and having been told the train was started, moving slowly until the engine was within twelve feet of a huge rock that, loosened by the rain, had rolled down from the bank. Had it not been for the white dog the train would have struck the rock while under full headway, the consequences of which can scarcely be conceived. The man said, "I got shaky soon after that and resigned, and the very mention of a white dog, much more the sight of one, brings that strange ride back to me."

☞ We gather the following from late Indiana (Pa.) papers:

"Dr. Peebles, one of the busiest of busy men, lectured last Monday evening in the united Presbyterian Church in Indiana, Pa., upon 'Foreign Travels.' The four following evenings in Library Hall, upon 'Hygiene and Health,' and Friday afternoon and evening before the students and Faculty of the State Normal School in Indiana. Saturday evening he delivered a parlor lecture to over sixty persons upon what he saw of Spiritualism in China, Siam, Ceylon and India. He argued that Spiritualism both old and new was in harmony with immutable law, and afforded the only direct, tangible and positive evidence that we have of a future conscious existence."

☞ W. L. Jack, M. D., writing from Haverhill, Mass., under date of the 17th, says he has been very busily employed of late, and in the course of his letter: "The last issue of The Banner at hand is one of the very best published, and should be sent broadcast over the land. Its leading article, clearly setting forth the Fox fiasco fizzle, is the best editorial of facts you have given. It should be put in pamphlet form and freely distributed."

☞ A correspondent wishes to know where Wild Tea, or "Red Root," the cure for Cancer, published in Nov. 10th issue of The Banner, can be procured. We think the large botanical drug stores of this city and elsewhere could supply the herb. The lady who was cured of cancer by it described the Red Root as growing plentifully in the West—but we have no doubt it may be found in the large, reliable botanic stores of the East.

Removal.—A. S. Hayward, magnetic physician, having secured parlors at No. 4 East Brookline street, Boston (second door from Washington street, opposite Franklin Park), will remove there December 1st, where he can be found from nine to four (Sundays excepted). At other hours he will visit patients at their homes.

Acknowledgments.

It was Irvin Camp of Erie, Pa., who sent me the $1 which I erroneously reported for Clark Irvine in my last account.

Since my last report I have received toward my cottage fund, from L. A. S., of Hamburg, Ia., $5.00; from E. J. Cornel and wife, of Syracuse, Neb., $10.00; from Mrs. S. J. Dyer, do., $5.00. [These are old neighbors, and were educated with my children under Prof. Lyman, late of the United States Treasury and a frequent correspondent of the Banner of Light.] From J. J. Lake, Trenton, Ont., $1.00; Mrs. H. D. Cook, Normal, Ill., $5.00; total $26.00; making in all to date, $154.00.

As my spirit-friends constantly assure me the necessary amount will be raised, and I have perfect confidence in the Spiritualists who have been readers of The Banner for twenty-five years, I have let the contract for $500, to be completed early in the spring.

AUTUMN, 1888.

Spring, long awaited, blossomed but to fleet,
For hardly had she from their moaning won
The winds to melody, and coaxed the sun
To tinge with emerald the trembling wheat,
Than Summer, envious of a spell so sweet,
And all the sudden wonder it had done,
Dissolved the dream of joy at last begun;
Then stole not e'er again from her retreat.
But, ah! the solace wrought by Autumn's smile,
For Summer's ban of tearfulness and blight!
Almost it seemed as though from her exile
Spring, in atonement for too swift a flight,
Had ventured back on earth to make awhile
A golden resurrection of delight.

According to The Daily Monitor, Concord, N. H., "Prof." W. W. Dayton, "Spiritualistic exposer," (who does not expose) has been "performing" in that city and vicinage. New Hampshire is welcome to him.

Birth.—In Rockland, Me., Sunday, Nov. 18th, to Dr. H. P. and Gena S. Fairfield, a son, Lero Fontaine.

A Rochester dispatch to the New York Herald recently announced that Mrs. Catherine Fox Jencken was about to take the field as an exposer (?) of Spiritualism. We have heard nothing as yet of her exploits, but as she is to have one "C. W. Starr" as her manager (so reported), whose "rare" gifts" have been frequently "shown up" in these columns, the chances are that she will go into a speedy eclipse, a la Margaretta!

The Golden Gate is mistaken in attributing to Longfellow the lines:

"And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread
For all the boundless universe
Is life; there are no dead."

Their author is J. L. McCreery, and the verse is the closing one of the poem commencing:

"There is no death! the stars go down
To rise upon some other shore."

Generally but incorrectly credited to Bulwer. Mr. McCreery is a resident of Washington, and a Spiritualist. A collection of his poems was published by Putnam's Sons in New York in 1883, under the title of "Songs of Toil and Triumph."

Crops in Guatemala have been cut short by a severe drought. In many departments of Salvador all crops have been lost for want of rain. In Nicaragua, also, a famine is threatened on account of the drought.

The Folio for November—White, Smith & Co., publishers, 516 Washington street, Boston, Mass.—has as an introductory attraction a full-page portrait of "Nikita"; the number is full of valuable miscellany regarding current professional matters, and devotes eighteen pages to instrumental and vocal music.—We have also received from the same enterprising firm the following new pieces: Instrumental: "Home, Sweet Home," for the piano, by James M. Wehli; "It Is Better to Laugh," etc., "Ah, So Pure!" arranged for pianoforte, by Paul Keller; "New Paris Waltz," F. Wohanka; "Father of Victory," B. M. Davidson; "Harrison's Grand March," C. D. Blake; "Tarantella," revised by George Fox; "Beau Monde Polka," G. S. Brainard. Vocal: "Hallelujah! Lift Your Voices," "The Joyful Tidings," "The Wise Men's Star," "The Angel's Message," "The Angel's Song," five Christmas Carols, by H. P. Danks; "Marguerite," duet, C. A. White.

According to official statistics there were 2,647 avalanches last winter in Tyrol and Vonarlberg. The number of human lives lost was fifty-three, and about five hundred beasts were killed. Many hundred buildings were destroyed.

Last night, returning from my twilight walk,
I met the grey mist Death, whose eyeless brow
Was bent on me, and from his hand of chalk
He reached me flowers as from a withered bough;
Oh! Death, what bitter nosegays givest thou!
Death said "I gather," and pursued his way.
Another stood by me, a shape in stone,
Sword-hacked and iron-stained, with breasts of clay,
And metal veins, that sometimes fiery shone;
Oh! Life, how naked and how hard when known!
Life said, "As thou hast carved me, such am I."

At the third and last day's session of the Woman's Congress, held in Detroit, Mich., Nov. 16th, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe was reelected President; twenty-five Vice-Presidents were selected; Gertrude K. Easby, of Delaware, was elected Secretary, and Henrietta L. T. Wolcott, of Massachusetts, Treasurer.

A special telegram to The Herald states that a prominent physician of South Baltimore, Md., who is a Spiritualist, has men employed digging in his cellar at the dictation of a spirit who said that two hundred years ago he was a slave and that he was murdered and his body buried on the spot. A few bones, it is stated, have been found, sufficient to prove the correctness of the spirit's statement.

A great newspaper is a mighty engine. If we were to run such an engine, a real, a literary, political, social, moral locomotive, we'd fill her with the coal of conviction and the water of candor, and get up the steam of enthusiasm. Then we'd grasp the lever of intention with the hand of justice, and run her out upon the main track, hook on to the leading ideas, open the sand box and pull out for the next station on the road of progress, leaving the dead of the last disaster to be buried by those who love to linger about the deserted stations of the past. Steam would be reserved on account of warning from ahead, but never on account of wailing from behind.—Ex.

Massachusetts now has its mysterious murderer. Mrs. Mehitable White was found dead and mutilated in her barn at North Braintree, Nov. 18th. She was sixty-four years old. No clew yet to the assassin. If the Fox girls have ever said that Spiritualism was true, and now deny it and say that it is false, their testimony against it is not entitled to any weight. It is not fair to condemn on such kind of evidence. A contradictory witness is not reliable.—The Boston Investigator.

Dr. Lyman Abbott comes surprisingly near filling Henry Ward Beecher's pulpit, says The Voice, of New York City. The brain is there, but not the body, and it is the body that gives that kind of energy which is to words what powder is to the bullet. A body equal to his brain, and Dr. Abbott's preaching would be heard across the continent—maybe it will be yet so heard, in spite of the lack of a powerful physique.

Some friend of Cæsar—Brutus, perhaps—once asked the great Roman whether he deemed a liberal education necessary to success in life. "I do," said Cæsar. "I attribute my success to the thorough grounding I received in the dead languages at school. Indeed, I could not have attained my present eminence in Roman affairs without Latin."—Chicago Tribune.

The Independent Pulpit.—In this month's issue the editor announces that the death of some and the removal of others who have been helpful in the support of the liberal cause have compelled the limitation of his lecture services in Waco to one a month, and a proportionate reduction of his income, upon which he mainly relied for the publication of The Pulpit. He therefore desires for it one thousand new subscribers, and they may readily be obtained by one hundred Liberals enlisting ten each. We sincerely hope he may receive the needed aid. The Pulpit has been conducted on a thoroughly just and equitable basis, opening its columns to all grades of thinkers, and giving Spiritualism a fair field to meet its opponents in honorable discussion. The editor has been, to use a somewhat hackneyed expression, the right man in the right place, and we trust that a lack of pecuniary support will not oblige him to leave it. The Pulpit is a quarto of twenty four pages. Edited and published by James D. Shaw, Waco, Texas.

List of Lecturers.

The Banner publishes from time to time a list of Spiritualist Lecturers with their post-office addresses attached without charge, and in consideration of our so doing it seems to us they should be more particular than many of them are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Attention to this request is earnestly desired, and should be attended to at once.

Materialized Apparitions:

If Not Beings from Another Life, What Are They?

BY E. A. BRACKETT.

This work is in two Parts; the first containing carefully-prepared narratives of the author's interesting observations and experiences in the investigation of the phenomena of Materialization; the second, opinions and theories concerning the same. The investigation appears to have been pursued in a truly scientific spirit, by one possessing more than ordinary qualifications for the purpose, and with unusual facilities—the results being correspondingly positive and overwhelmingly conclusive regarding the reality of the phenomena in question. Aside from its positive testimony, the work affords many valuable suggestions to investigators as to the proper manner of proceeding in order to attain the best results.

The work contains 182 pages, 12mo, and is printed in large type, suitable for readers of advanced age. Cloth, $1.00, postage free.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This work is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, beside the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac-simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50, postage 20 cents.

Light on the Hidden Way.

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY

REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

The public receive in this book an illustration and defense of the leading truths of Modern Spiritualism from a source entirely distinct from that whence such works are expected to come; yet the most enthusiastic Spiritualist would not desire a fairer or more truthful presentation of the two forms of mediumship it portrays. The book can therefore be warmly recommended to those who would know of Spiritualism from one who is not a Spiritualist, and we fully agree with Dr. Clarke, who, alluding to the position of the author in this regard, says: "Her report, therefore, is an independent one, and deserves attention from those engaged in investigating this occult Borderland, where beings of the other world are reported as coming into relations with the inhabitants of our own."

OUR CHILDREN.

EDITED BY MRS. H. F. M. BROWN.

The Editor says in the preface: "Another book for children! Yes, another. Why not another, and still another? Little folks see the world in books. They call for the news; they want to know what is going on beyond the garden gate. Very likely they know that the future has something for them to do, so the little dears are trying hard to see and to hear what the full-grown world is doing to-day."

Price, single copies, 75 cents, postage 5 cents.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 16th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Almighty Spirit of Love, thou Radiant Angel of Life, of Harmony and Peace, we invoke thy presence, and we would expand our souls to thy inspiration, that our hearts may feel new pulsations of strength and activity, and our spirits become uplifted in light and joy. Oh! we would indeed be caught up into an atmosphere of purity and of peace, that our paths may stretch onward to higher life, to grander scenes of employment and unfoldment. We would come into harmony with all that is holy and true, with the pure and bright angels of the diviner existence. We ask the blessing of the pure, the wise and the good spirits of this life and of the heavenly life to be with us all; may it rest upon the lowly and sad until they are quickened by its influence, uplifted and made strong. May it enter every heart and remain there as an abiding light until each one shall see and know of promise, of hope and of good cheer, and grow better and happier because of its divine rays. May we all at this and at all times be ready to do thy will even as it shall be appointed to our hearts.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We are now ready for your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—China and Russia have tariffs higher than that of the United States. If a "high tariff makes high wages," how is it that wages in these two countries are the lowest in the civilized world? If "high tariff develops manufactures," how is it that these two countries are industrially the most backward of all the civilized nations of the earth? Please answer.

ANS.—These are questions which perhaps it would be well for every thinking mind of the country to study from both sides and reason upon dispassionately. We can only give an individual opinion upon them, the same as any intelligent mind would do. Personally we do not believe in a prodigiously high tariff, nor on the other hand are we altogether prepared to state that free trade, unqualified, is for the best good of the country. We hold that the tariff, relating as it does to the manufacturing and industrial interests of this country, may be adjusted satisfactorily to both sides or parties; but this can never be done through recrimination, by attacking persons or systems in a heated manner; it can only be done by discussion fair and open, and by the adoption of such means as may seem honorable and just to those intelligent minds who really desire the good of the country, and, what is of as much importance, the good of its industrial classes.

We do not care to enter into a discussion upon this platform of measures that are essentially political in their nature. The question of the tariff at this present time has entered so thoroughly into the political aspect of the country that for one to give a personal opinion, spirit or mortal, is to virtually class himself with either one or the other party that stands as representative of the politics of this nation; therefore, Mr. Chairman, we desire to be excused at this present time from saying more upon the subject before you.

Q.—It has been said by medical chemists that all nervous troubles of human beings proceed from an improper condition of the blood, either directly or indirectly, which leads to unnatural pressure upon the nerve cells, and thus each of the millions of filaments conveys to the brain its distinct complaint. The questioner is in doubt as to the above statement, as, being a mesmerizer, or magnetic healer, he has cured nervousness through manipulating the patient with his hands, needing no medicine to effect a cure?

A.—We shall assent in a measure to the scientific statement made, that nervous disorders of the physical system are principally produced through the vitiation of the blood. We believe, from study and observation of the physical system of man, that this is generally true. We find hundreds of human beings living under a state of such high pressure as to pay but little attention to their own organisms; they become careless in many directions, do not give proper care to diet and exercise, and to the general laws of health; thus the blood becomes vitiated, and in many instances poisoned by effete matter passing into the circulating fluid which should pass off from the system through natural exhalations. What is the result? Perhaps no organic disease may develop itself, and there may not be any special manifestation of functional disorder, nevertheless we find the individual becoming a chronic nervous invalid; he cannot bear what in former times would have made no impression upon him, and is easily disturbed by little things. Why is this? You may say: Oh! he has inherited a nervous organization—it is natural to him. This may be so, as we have many among us who have inherited organizations that do not properly perform their functions; therefore we find this pressure upon the nervous system.

But we are not referring to such individuals at present; we are speaking of those who have started out in life with a fairly good physique, who have been endowed with a constitution calculated to bear the wear and tear of the world, but who, because of their own neglect, their want of proper care, have become reduced to such a state as to be known as chronic nervous people. The blood, we affirm, is disordered in more than one respect; it does not circulate properly; it does not throw off those accretions which it should part with in order to remain in a healthy condition; the nerve forces do not distribute themselves equally throughout the system, and are not able to perform their own work as they should do; there is an over-pressure of nervous force in one department of the organism, and a depletion of it in some other, therefore the patient suffers what is called on earth nerve pains, he may have nervous prostration, and so on.

Your correspondent, Mr. Chairman, speaks of having allayed this nervous condition, and perhaps such pain as has attended it, merely by the application of his hand to the parts affected. This, we have no doubt, is true, since if he is magnetic, and is also used by spiritual intelligences for the passage of magnetism through his system to that of his patient, he may be able to accomplish all of this, since this spiritual magnetism, being of a high order, possesses curative elements which may reach the case and impart to the patient temporary if not permanent relief. We do not think, however, that a patient of the kind described can find permanent relief unless the magnetism is applied daily for a long period of time. Manipulations which tend to equalize the flow of the circulation will also tend to distribute the nervous forces equally throughout the system, and thus bring the sufferer into a condition where he will imbibe health, not only from his physician but from the atmosphere at large. We should judge, from what we have learned from specialists in the department of nervous troubles, that if a patient suffering from what is called nervousness or a disturbed mental condition, and also from physical nerve-pains, which are so torturing to those who have to endure them, would seek to live closely in accordance with the laws of nature, partaking only of wholesome, easily digested food, eschewing late hours, late suppers, and avoiding stimulants of all kinds, especially highly spiced foods, and otherwise conforming regularly to the most sensible rules of health, he would find his blood coming into a better condition. If he would also pay strict attention to his person, in matters of bathing, he would find the system able to throw off, through its natural avenues, those poisonous accretions which the blood has taken up and which it desires to dispose of. To live in the fresh air and sunlight, to a large extent, will do a great deal for a nervous person, or for one suffering from nervous pains. We know that there are classes of these disorders which are not easily reached by such means, but these methods will apply to all, and are likely to give at least relief, while if it is necessary to receive other treatment, we should most certainly advise the application of magnetism imparted by a sympathetic, congenial and healthy physician, since this impartation will tend to equalize the circulation of the blood, and also to evenly distribute the nerve forces of the system, that they may do their work in a more regular manner.

Q.—[By Mrs. I. A. Vesper.] Which is the soundest religion, Spiritualism or Christian Science?

A.—We do not know that Christian Science is essentially a religion, since it may be adopted, studied and understood, we believe, by those who adhere to any denominational religion, and also by those who profess to have no religion whatever. Neither do we consider that Spiritualism is directly a religion, yet it may be so called, since it applies to the manner of living of humanity: it teaches that unless a man seeks to live in direct accord with the rules of justice and of fraternal love to his kind, he will suffer because of his omission. Spiritualism teaches that as a man soweth so shall he reap in time to come, and that he who lives as nearly right as he knows how, seeking not only to be of use to himself, but also to his fellows, will undoubtedly, when he has passed on from one scene of labor to another, derive a satisfaction from the contemplation of his past record which will bring great happiness to his soul; therefore Spiritualism is a religion. And it is a great deal more, since it may be called a philosophy, the science of life; a science which demonstrates directly, through the operation of law and fact, that immortality is assured to humanity; a philosophy, since it can reason upon life and upon things, and outline clearly to the contemplation of the thinking mind, not only causes but effects, the sure sequences which will follow the one from the other, and so on.

Christian Science comes to the world at the present time, claiming to afford to humanity the way and the means for producing a state of health, bodily and mentally. It says to mankind: "Matter may be subjugated to mind." Spiritualism has claimed the same, and it stands upon this platform, that mind is above and beyond matter; that the spirit permeates and controls the material. And yet Spiritualism asserts that matter, although dependent upon mind, has its own domain and province, and that it must and will assert itself and its prerogatives in that domain and within that province; that is, the physical elements of the human body have their own particular line of work and function; they must perform that work and obey the law of their being. The mind of man has its own particular domain, and to a certain extent may control the physique. But there are limits; there is much connected with the physical which will assert itself, which must operate in accordance with the physical laws of the universe, and therefore will demand its rights and that attention which belongs to it.

Christian Science may do much by teaching mankind how to live regularly and correctly, so that the mind may gain the ascendency, and that the physical will not suffer many ills, because it will be harmonized in accordance with the mental nature. Christian Science may also do much, if it will, by scientifically establishing to the human mind its office and its work, but it cannot do this by claims and pretensions, it must do it by established effort and labor. If it opens classes and correctly teaches a man how he may conduct himself so as to ward off disease, or overcome pain when it attacks his system, then it is doing a grand work. We believe there are many conscientious workers in this particular field of labor who are seeking to do this very work. Spiritualism has sought to do it from its first entrance into the human family; it has had its branches of teaching in this department all over the land; has had its healers, mental and magnetic, who have sent forth the life-giving forces of their own natures, and also those from unseen but potent intelligences who are seeking to cure humanity of its many ills. Spiritualism and Christian Science, so termed, may work for humanity if they both seek to establish health of mind and body. We do not object to any agency that is calculated to help mankind up from a condition of ignorance, vice, ill health or suffering, but should call it God-given, and should certainly wish to speed it on.

Q.—[By O. S. P.] Obesity being regarded by many physicians as a diseased condition, what are the best methods and remedies for its removal?

A.—We do not make the sweeping statement that obesity in every case is the result of disease, but we believe that it is so in a great many cases. Here, as in cases of nervous disorder, we find the difficulty seated in the circulatory system; the blood is not of a pure, unadulterated quality; in many instances being vitiated by the admission of another fluid, which you may call water, if you please, since it is watery in appearance, that is, there is a deficiency of red and a superabundance of white globules, and therefore we find that the patient is really in a diseased condition. What are the best curative agencies for such a state? We should not advise the patient to dose himself with drugs, but to be careful what, by way of medicine, he takes into his system. We should recommend him, as well as the nervous patient, to attend to his daily habits and surroundings, to live, as far as possible, in the light, and in the fresh air, to attend to exercise especially, and also to his daily bath, taking a good course of rubbing with a flesh brush, morning and night. We should also recommend magnetic treatments, because we have great faith in the efficacy of magnetism, when healthfully and properly applied.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 26th, 1888.

Harvey Slade.

I desire to assure my dear friends in New York State that I am firmer in the faith to-day, if possible, than I was in the mortal. Then it was my religion to feel that the dear ones visited and held communion with me. I would say to them: Wait patiently; in a little while will you come to join those who have gone before. My angel-mother came to meet me. The time since her departure had seemed very long to me, for I lived eighty-five years on earth. My friends will understand who is speaking when they see my name in the paper. My home was in Lansingburg, N. Y.; my name, Harvey Slade.

Alice B. Sampson.

Oh! how quickly was I sent out to the other life! The spirit was not crushed, but the body was. Poor father and mother, how your hearts bled for me! I changed my course, thinking perhaps I should escape the limb as it came from the tree; but instead it was to bring me over into the beautiful home beyond. I felt at the time how much they needed me! Many times did mother say: "I cannot have it so!" It was not possible, seemingly, that her Alice was gone. No, dear mother, I am not gone; I am only a step from you. But it seemed as if I had gone far away at that period. Father and mother, if you would but learn a little of the life beyond you would feel much happier.

Annie, I want to thank you and the guides for what you have been able to learn of me since I passed over. Oh! that dreadful moment! As I heard the crash coming I turned away to escape it; but, no, it was so quick I had not time for thought.

But the letter! the letter! I well remember I held it in my hand. I know, Annie, you understand full well what it meant, and that you did receive nearly all the contents.

Oh! this beautiful spirit-land! I would not return to earth to stay, but I would ask you to be patient, dear mortals, for in a little while will the gate of the beautiful Summer-Land open to you, and then you will know what each spirit has been trying to explain to you. We may try, but we can only give a faint outline of the beauties of spirit-life. Flowers bloom everywhere, filling the air with their sweetness, and little children pluck them by the wayside, so happy in their glee.

In Plymouth, this State, Mr. Chairman, I was known, and the incident that hurled my spirit from the body has not been forgotten.

It seemed to have been only a few moments before I came to consciousness, and realized what had happened. Then my own spirit at once went out to my father and mother; in my soul I asked the angels to take care of them. Thirty-nine years did I dwell here in the form. Alice B. Sampson.

Stella P. Pinney.

Mr. Chairman, I have dear ones waiting for a word from those who have crossed over. Many a time have I drawn near to those dear to me, thinking perhaps they would sense my presence. Yet this is something hard to understand. How many times have I breathed this thought into my mother's heart: "Stella is not far from you." I am much nearer, dear mother, than you can think, although you understand much of spirit return.

I loved music, and we have much of it in spirit-life. It is perfect there; all the instruments are in tune. Every one watches so eagerly for the music as it comes, and often little groups of children sing together delightfully. What is sweeter than to think that your dear ones await your coming? Mother hardly felt reconciled to my going, but knowing of spirit-return, and feeling so much of spirit presence, her sorrow was lightened a little in consequence; still I know she missed the presence of the form. I tried to be patient, for when I was not suffering the world was bright and beautiful, and when the suffering came I tried to look beyond the veil, and feel that in a little time I should be released. I lived at Stafford Springs, Conn. My mother is Mrs. H. P. Fairfield, and my name is Stella P. Pinney.

Amos Dean.

While dwelling in the flesh, Mr. Chairman, I understood little of spirit-return; I did believe that spirits hovered around us, yet I must acknowledge I woke to a great surprise when I found that the spirit could return, using the organism to speak through. I realized then that I had been looking through a glass darkly, that old theology was a delusion, and only served to hold the mind in darkness. Many years did I walk in the mortal form, but not many since I threw off the mantle of the flesh. I am only too glad to acknowledge that I have been in error, and that I now see the light.

I know, Mattie, you have been looking anxiously for a word from grandfather, and finding the channel open for me I accepted the invitation, and came in to tell my own feelings and experience.

Throw aside all prejudice, lay by your doubts, rise above the clouds of error, and think for yourselves a little. I did not live in the day when there were so many privileges as you have. I know they will say to me perhaps I would not have accepted them, even if they had been granted me. I know what I am speaking of; it is better for you to go to school this side, instead of having to learn all on our side, although we find it is a life of progression, and we may learn there. But learn here, and you will be much further advanced.

Mattie, my darling, I know how many clouds have come to you, how many thorns you have had to walk over, and I have sent forth an earnest petition, asking the angels to guide you through these trials. You might ask me, in turn, if they are always to be. Dear child, be patient; in God's own time these burdens that are upon your shoulders to-day will be lightened. Your own dear mother, who passed away when you were a child, is here, and sends love and greetings to you. Your grandmother, Nancy, as I usually called her, is here also, and with your Uncle John sends greetings. Realize that you are in the right channel, and learn all you can. I wish you to come into communication with us when you can; but sit by yourself, in a passive mood, a little while, as the time is granted you, and we will promise to do our part.

I passed away in Southern California; my name is Amos Dean. I think I shall be remembered by the dear child, and some few others.

Col. Robert Cowdin.

Although but very few may remember me, I know there are some in this city who will. Two purposes have brought me here to-day: one is, to prove the immortality of the soul, or rather to do my part toward it; and another is to reach a dear friend in Florida, at Arlington River. I know that this paper goes all over the land, and that my friend scans its pages often.

Brother Paul, I know you will be glad to get a word from me. Yes, it was correct; I was there present at the time you had the interview, and what purported to come from the Colonel was right. As I was privileged to speak, I thought I would merely allude to the period when you thought it was I, or felt pretty sure it was. Every word that came through another instrument was correct, and I would like you to know that although I gave but a short message at that time, I had much more I would like to have said, but could not control longer. I found my dear boy who passed out in the army, and the one who passed away by accident before. One was wounded on the field, taken by the Confederates, and passed out in their hands. Now I would like this dear friend to realize for one moment what an effort I have put forth to come to this meeting and speak of these things. Much rather would I come privately, dear friend; if you can find a medium in your vicinity I will promise to meet you. Put forth every effort, as I have done to-day. Do not think for one moment because I am so anxious, and even over-anxious, it is because I am not happy. I am happy and satisfied in my spirit-home, but the laws of attraction draw us to the dear ones here, and when we think we have but a word to say we find we have much. It is the spirit of sociability that moves us, and we hardly know where to stop talking. Col. Robert Cowdin.

Lieut. William A. Ashley.

Coming into this room, which the red man calls the council-room, I find many chiefs present, who have come to give power not only to mortals but to spirits, for many would not be able to speak were it not for the help of the red men. Dear friends, remember you are giving out magnetism to each one that comes here to-day from the bright Summer-Land.

Oh! the beauty untold of our spirit-homes! But still we are drawn back again to you and earth-life.

As I listened to the gentleman who preceded me, I said: "Will it be possible for me to speak?" and the answer came from the Spirit-Chairman that there would be an opportunity, so I stood watching when he should be through. You little understand how we prize such a privilege as this—hoping that the paper may reach the eye of some dear one.

I have many friends in Springfield, Mass., and in Cummington, Conn. I think I shall be remembered, for I was a soldier. In the Battle of the Wilderness I fell, but the spirit was not killed. As I heard the call, I exclaimed: "Great God! am I out of that body?" It did not take me long to realize that I had cast off the old coat; but I said to the spirit who greeted me, "Grandsire, I fell, fighting for my country." "Dear William, you have spilled your blood that others might have liberty," was his answer.

How many times have I wanted to give out a word, thinking perhaps it would make one more link in the chain of evidence which brings the knowledge of immortality to the hearts of men. How hard we work to let our friends know we are at home, and still not a word comes from them to us. Would you close your doors against us, if we were in the mortal form trying to visit you?

The battle in which I fell was a hard one. Many a poor mother's heart bled for the boy that went out; many a tear coursed down the father's cheek for the son that is gone. As I have met them on the spirit-side, many times have they expressed themselves that it was true we were not dead. Twenty-five years have rolled away since they were called, both men and boys, to fight for their country. God bless the boys! Many a man stood back, while the boys came forward and said: "We will go." Lieut. William A. Ashley, of the Tenth Mass.

John Pratt.

What is sweeter than freedom? Liberty! I look back and well remember how the boys went forward in their teens. Very few came back. How glad I am to know that they all meet together on the spirit side. I should not have spoken of the soldiers, only I see them here, and as I look from one to another, an anxious look comes over the faces of some who have not spoken, but have gathered to see what might come, and to learn, so they may be able to control other instruments, with the hope of reaching some dear one. My feelings reach out not selfishly, although I am drawn a little closer to my own.

I know, Lizzie, I promised faithfully some time ago I would, if possible, give a few words, that you might be assured I did not forget you.

Walter, dear boy, stand by your mother, and be a help to her. She has done so much for you it is your turn now to do for her. How many times, since I had a little conversation with you, have I tried to produce some little sound or manifestation in your room that you might know I was there. I have been drawn to Washington, D. C., on account of some little matters I am interested in for you. I am working through influences silently, hoping it will be of some benefit. I speak of what I know; you will come out all right; but you must wait, you cannot hurry the wheel of time. I well understand the causes of this delay.

Now, Lizzie, whenever there 's an opportunity to speak with me privately, let it be where it will, grasp it, for if mortals knew how much benefit we derive from coming into conversation with the dear ones, they would try hard to gratify us. I should much rather speak in private, but these matters weighed heavily on my spirit in regard to some little business affairs, and concerning the boy Walter, so I have come in public.

Mr. French wishes to be remembered to your friends. You will understand who French is, as he was a neighbor. Let me just say to you, when you see your friend Mary, tell her her darling daughter Hattie is here to-day with the grandfather.

I see, dear wife, you have made a change, and I think for the better, as you must be a little more settled. Not but that the people were friendly to you, but there were circumstances which caused you to come by yourself. In regard to Walter, tell him from father when he obtains a situation not to leave it so quickly, but to hold it long enough to get something permanently from it. You will understand, dear wife, what I refer to; there are some things connected with our own affairs that I do not choose to speak of publicly, therefore I will hold them back until we can be brought in contact more closely.

I lived in Quincy, Mass., and was known by the name of John Pratt.

Amos Atwood.

I see as I step into this meeting strange faces looking toward me, and, oh! how thankful I am that we are not strangers in our beautiful homes beyond. Fifty-eight years did I dwell in the mortal, and when I heard the call to come up higher I knew there was no way but to obey it, and I thank the angel-world for the summons.

I would like them to know in the old home that I have returned. In Minneapolis, Minn., I knew many, but I passed away in Farmington. I shall be remembered in these places and in Claremont, N. H.

On entering spirit-life the loved ones came to meet me, and even the old neighbors. Dr. Parker was there with the rest. He greeted me with these words: "Is it possible you have made the change?" It is not only possible but true, I replied. And we entered into conversation just as we would in mortal life. I looked about me and from one to another in surprise at the land I had come to, for I had thought of heaven as a far-off country. I find it is simply a place of happiness, and that it is but a step beyond the mortal life.

Jennie Dinsmore.

[To the Chairman:] The Spirit-Chairman said I could come when that gentleman stopped talking, but I just kept waiting right close here. I want you to write this down—that little girls as well as big girls come. I go to school, and I want mamma to know it, because she sometimes wonders where her Jennie is. A great many times she thinks perhaps I've gone to heaven, and I don't come back again. Why, mamma, don't you know better than that? She 's got to learn it, just like goin' to school.

My throat hurts me. I had diphtheria when I went away. It 'll go off in a minute.

I want my mamma to know I've seen Grandpa Grimes. I want her to know that we come, oh! so many times. Rosie comes with me; she 's a nice little girl that I play with. I am coming up big. I was little when I went away. I have been gone a long time, all through the winters and the summers.

I want mamma to know I went away to England, and I saw, oh! beautiful things; but the houses looked funny. I went with grandpa. I wanted to talk so much in that other meeting, but I had to wait, because a gentleman had so much to tell; then I came here this morning as quick as the door was unfastened, and when you came in here alone I was right behind you. There wa'n't no peoples here then. I looked round in one place and another, and then I went out to the little room where the medy was. I did n't make any noise.

I want you to tell mamma I've found the kitty that went away, and they did n't know where it was. I've got it. We have kitties and dogs, just the same as you do here. I was Jennie Dinsmore, and I lived in Chelsea, Vt.

Hezekiah Toleman.

To-day I find children welcomed here as well as adults, and no distinction made. I have been only too glad to be a listener. How often the thought comes as to why the doors are shut so closely. Why can they not understand of our coming day by day. Here in your meetings it is such a blessing to find a door opened freely. Dear mortals, can you understand the greatness of this privilege which is offered without money and without price? Think not for a moment that we do not realize its value, for we do.

I well know every street in your good old city. Years have rolled away since they said I was dead, but I only passed out of your sight, for the spirit can go wherever it will. You may ask me if I knew much of this spirit return before I passed away. I answer emphatically, no; yet I should be a very poor scholar, if, during the time I have been a dweller in the invisible realm, I had not learned something. Progression is the word that is given to us in spirit-life, and we would say to you: Make all the advancement you can here, for it will help you as you are called higher.

As I have said to Father Hinckley, how I wish they might know, here in this good old city, that Spiritualism is the only true religion. He says: "Be patient, for we are getting into the churches a good deal." I think he ought to know, for he looks in upon 'em.

I have been looking about myself, and I see that many a one who stands in your pulpits mixes in something of Spiritualism. But they want to cover it up a little, so it won't affect the pocket. That 's where the trouble lays. When I see so many eagerly reaching out after something to satisfy the spirit, I say to myself, Why is it not made plainer? Here mortals are suffering for spiritual food more than for material food, and still they do n't know what is the matter. Now feed your spirits, and you won't be quite so restless.

I am not speaking personally to the mortals I address, for I know my words are going outside of this little meeting.

George, learn a little concerning the spirit-side; it is worth while to get gain, not only for this life but for that which is to come. Think, for a moment; this life is only like a shadow; the life beyond is the real life, and you should be looking out a little for it. I would like you to know I have been around you many times, trying to influence you in business affairs. You do n't give me any credit for it. This is because of ignorance. You do n't know, because you have n't looked into the matter and tried to come to a realization of the fact, that one who has thrown off the old form is still permitted to help you by his influence. My name, Mr. Chairman, is Hezekiah Toleman.

White Fawn.

I was asked mentally to come in this meeting an' speak. I want my medy to know when she do n't haves the braves nor the squaws I comes to help her be much strong, so she can gives out to them whats they needs. I was with her when she wants to get a blanket for the little pappoose. She did n't know I was there. I sees her when she talks with the brave. He wants to take heap wampum from her. She knows better, 'cause I touched her, an' I says: "Do n't you do that." Then I comes here to-day, to see if I could gives out something. They tell I to say that brave George be here. He sends heap greetings to her and the pappooses what she has in the wigwam. I wants her to know I keeps my promise what she thinks I going to. I wants her to know she goes straight along, just in that channel what she 's going in. She never minds when the other squaws and braves talk much of what they knows nothing about.

I tell her up here (pointing to the medium's forehead,) I will come, when there was a squaw with her, an' I was telling her about her pappoose, what 's in the happy hunting-grounds. Then she thinks, will I come and stands by her every time when they do crowd her. They crowd her much in the wigwam; she no take any notice, 'cause the brave George stands by her all the way through.

I wants her to know I was by her when she was where they has blankets they sells to the people. They cheats you, you no looks out.

I want you to put this down in scratches, on the paper, so it will reach my medy, 'cause she sees your paper. White Fawn. Good moon.

Sally Beebe.

I have dear ones who draw me closely to them. How good, how grand, how beautiful it is to be able to leave even one convincing point with mortals, the loved ones left behind. Many years have elapsed since I dwelt among the inhabitants of earth. I know I am not forgotten, as I sometimes hear my name spoken; but I am afraid they put me too far away, not realizing the truths of spirit-return.

We are well sheltered, dear friends, in spirit-homes which are bright and beautiful. Yet how near we are to you may never be realized while dwelling in the form; there is only a step between us. I was taught in my early days to believe that heaven was a far-off country, and if we were ever so fortunate as to gain heaven, we should belong to the elect. I thank God I find there are many mansions in the Father's house—that is, different degrees of happiness, and that all sooner or later become of the "elect."

On entering spirit-life I beheld one and another coming toward me; my dear mother, grandmother and Aunt Sarah came in a group; and one came, grown to manhood, who was transplanted early to the Better Land. The reality was more than I could quite comprehend or take in at once. Yet these children recognize us immediately, because of the frequent visits they have made to the homes of earthly life. I am very thankful that these things are so. Doubts will come to mortals, and I had my share of them. I feared that I would not find my dear ones when I passed over. My home was in Cummington, Conn.; my name, Sally Beebe.

Emma Hollingdale.

I have stood here anxiously waiting, thinking perhaps there would be time allotted for me to speak. I realize fuly that a loved one is waiting for a few words of comfort from his Emma, for we partake of the feelings of mortals as we come to earth.

I well remember many faces here in your city so eager to catch a word from some dear friends.

Dear husband, I know how anxious you are to hear from me, and how glad I am to come to you to-day. Much rather would I meet you privately, but that privilege is not always given. I would not find fault. Oh! no. I am happy in my spirit-home; but how many times have I heard you say: "Oh! it is perfectly awful that you are taken from me." I know you miss the form that is gone from the home. I know how lonely you have been, for I come so often to see you. How glady do I come and touch you gently upon the forehead.

I know I cannot reach some of the relatives in Newburyport, as I would like to, and I well understand what has been done. I see the flowers that are often carried to the mound, and I thank the friends for them. We do appreciate the kindness and the thoughts that go out for us.

Jeffrey, remember I am not far from you. I am much nearer than you can realize, or than you can have an idea of. Go into the home that you frequent, for there you can unburden your sorrows, can talk on what is termed Spiritualism. There you talk together, you give out sympathy to each other, and it does you a great deal of good even to talk of us.

I say to you, go to the home, for we are there often. When I say we, you will understand who I mean—Curtis—for he is often there and little Arthur, as well as many other spirits. Dear husband, I know you will understand who is speaking, and how much I appreciate the permission granted me to-day.

My name is Emma Hollingdale.

Addie Thompson.

I am grateful for the privilege of speaking here, so far from my old home, in Denver, Colorado. I have been in these meetings a good many times, and now I see that a dear old medium is here, Mrs. Ada Foye. I have been with her away on the Pacific coast, and I know when she sees the name she will remember me. It is for the purpose of speaking to her that I am here, although not alone for that. I would like her to know I have been with her, from place to place; a good deal of the time I was in meetings at places far away, in Cincinnati and Philadelphia. I was in the little gathering a few evenings ago where they made a demonstration for her. I say, God bless the mediums, for they are the mouthpieces of spirits, and we do appreciate the privileges they grant us. My name, Mr. Chairman, is Addie Thompson. I was connected with the theatre. I thank you very kindly.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

A. G. TOWERS—MRS. S. E. WEYBURN.

In your issue of Oct. 20th we find a message from ALBERT G. TOWERS, who claims to have lived in Texas Township, Kalamazoo Co., Mich. We were well acquainted with Mr. Towers, and can see unmistakable evidence in the communication of his identity. We can further say that the names given and points made are strictly true.

We also saw a communication from MRS. SARAH E. WEYBURN in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Nov. 3d. Mrs. Weyburn, and Dr. Wm. Weyburn, her husband, were well and favorably known in Kalamazoo, Mich., as very zealous advocates of the Spiritual Philosophy. Her many friends rejoice to hear from her from beyond the mystic river.

MRS. L. V. BURDICK.

GEORGIANNA WILLIAMS.

In your valuable paper of Nov. 3d was a message which we recognized as coming from our darling and only child, GEORGIANNA WILLIAMS. She had promised us a letter through Mrs. George McFallin of Lawrence, through whose wonderful mediumship we have received many tests which have convinced us of the truth of spirit-return. The names given in the message are all correct, and her dolls are in her rocker just as she used to put them, as she says. We look upon your paper as a messenger carrying words of comfort and encouragement to sorrowing hearts, and hope the time will come when it will be as welcome in every home as it is in ours. Respectfully yours,

MR. AND MRS. E. C. WILLIAMS.
9 Temple street, Haverhill, Mass.

GEORGIE ADAMS—MARY MITSCH.

With pleasure did we receive the messages—one from my darling boy, GEORGIE ADAMS, and the other from my dear sister, MARY MITSCH, through Mrs. B. F. Smith, printed in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Sept. 22d and Sept. 1st. MRS. HORACE C. ADAMS.

A FOREST SYMPHONY.

BY MISS S. W. KELLEY.

It was in no vast cathedral,
Where thousands bend the knee,
In no hall of sculptured tower or dome
Rose that glorious symphony:

It was in a grand old forest,
When day and evening met,
I heard a strain of music,
That rings in my spirit yet.

It commenced far up on the mountain,
'Mid the topmost branches there;
It rose and fell, and rose again,
Like an abbess' murmured prayer.

But as it swept down the hillside,
It grew so strong and deep,
It stirred my heart to yearning,
And woke my soul from sleep.

It wrapt my saddened spirit
In a joy unknown before,
And wakened a kindred anthem
That shall sound forevermore.

The vanished founts of feeling,
The quenchèd fires of power,
Were stirred to flowing and fuming
In the hush of that solemn hour.

As the voice of the Infinite speaking,
Seemed that mighty tone to me,
As it surged through the swaying branches,
Like the sound of the heaving sea.

It died far down the valley
In a whisper soft and low,
But its memory hovereth o'er me,
Wherever I may go.

Oh! mighty north-wind singer,
Oh! forest-organ grand!
How I long for the sound of thy wondrous notes,
And the touch of that master hand!

November Magazines.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—"An American Theatre" is the subject of the opening article. It is written by George E. Montgomery, and with its numerous illustrations, including portraits of several well-known ladies and gentlemen of the profession, is one of great interest. This is followed by an account of "The First American Embassy to Pekin," by L. McIntosh Ward, and a second installment of a finely illustrated paper upon "The Valley of the Connecticut," by J. R. Chapin. "The Twenty-Third of Brooklyn," is the subject of M. B. Farr's treatment of "America's Crack Regiments" in this number. Of other leading articles are "The Koto and Its Associations"—the Koto being the national musical instrument of Japan—"Some Adopted Americans," "Tony; A Study in Black and White," and "Mr. Myndert's Grandfather." New York: The American Magazine Publishing Company.

THE VACCINATION INQUIRER deals with the question of the abrogation of all laws making vaccination compulsory with the force and assurance of one who, in taking the affirmative, knows he has truth on his side. The facts it produces showing the evil results of vaccination are sufficient to convince all who desire only the right to adopt its views. In this number William Tebb gives quotations from several able conservative journals, which opinions he thinks must have shaken the faith of some of their readers in the advantages of the State-provided preventive. London: E. W. Allen.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—Dr. Philip Schaff contributes a sketch of the life and work of the celebrated preacher of the Greek Church, John Chrysotom. In the third paper, reviewing the influence of recent criticism on the evidences of Christianity, Dr. Behrends of Brooklyn treats of "Miracles." He does so quite briefly, avoiding all allusion to present events proven by thousands of competent witnesses to be exact counterparts of the so-called miracles of Bible times. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—"Notable People" continue to be described, four of them with portraits in this number. An article of interest to artists and others is, "How to Look at a Painting," and advice every one should heed is given in a paper upon "The Effects of Overeating." New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—The usual variety of entertaining and instructive reading is given this month, including a description of "Japanese Homes and Their Surroundings," "The Love Affairs of Some Famous Men," "The Art of Type-Writing," "Forty Years Ago," and "Some Things We Say and Do in America." New York: Cassell & Co.

HERALD OF HEALTH gives "The Health Habits of Sixty-Six Centenarians," "A New Prescription for Attaining Long Life," etc. New York: P. O. Box 2141.

THE FREETHINKER'S MAGAZINE gives Ingersoll's views of "Society and Its Criminals," and well-filled literary and editorial departments. Buffalo, N. Y.: H. L. Green.

THE PATH.—"Theosophical Activities" and "Is Heredity a Puzzle?" are among the contents. New York: W. Q. Judge.

Was It a Materialized Spirit?

Last week a strange adventure happened to J. F. Williams, of Breathitt County, Ky., says a local Kentucky paper. About twenty miles east of this town is a mountain known by those living in the immediate locality as "Maiden's Ghost Ridge." On the day above mentioned, about four o'clock in the afternoon, Mr. Williams was proceeding leisurely across this mountain, and just after emerging from the forest, though the air had been unusually calm and the sky clear, there came a rushing sound as if a tornado had broken loose, the trees bending and swaying before the invisible storm. Williams stopped and viewed this strange atmospherical phenomenon with astonishment.

Suddenly there came a peculiar sound from out of the rushing wind, and then Williams recognized the ghostly outline of a young lady clad in white and beckoning him to return in the direction from which he came. He also heard the voice in tones of distress say, "Stop! danger!" Williams, who had been an unbeliever in ghosts, affected to disregard the command of the spiritual lady, and was about to resume his journey when again he was warned in the most solemn manner to proceed no further. Becoming deeply impressed with the sight of the phantom, he at once changed his course and returned to Jackson, and from here proceeded to his home, convinced that the warning saved him from some dire calamity.

The mysterious appearance of the spiritual woman on this mountain is attributed to the murder of a lover, which was committed many years ago. The young man who was killed was about to be married to a beautiful young lady. Unfortunately he had a rival who was determined that the marriage should not occur. One day when the prospective bridegroom was making his way across the mountain alone, it is supposed that his rival, who was on the lookout, murdered him, as his body was afterward found, horribly mangled and crushed.

The rival, however, had fled the country before the discovery of the dead man's body, and escaped punishment. On learning of the death of her lover the betrothed young lady pined away and died of grief, and now it is believed that her spirit continues to stand guard at the fatal spot where death overtook her intended husband. Those who were acquainted with the young lady describe the voice on the mountain as bearing a striking resemblance to that of the deceased young woman, and therefore aver that it is her spirit.

The Writing Planchette.
SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

Works by Richard B. Westbrook, D. D., LL. B.

Girard's Will and Girard College Theology.
The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.'

The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."
12mo, pp. 183. Price $1.00.

The Bible---Whence and What?
"And now comes a Doctor of Divinity, with his reason, logic and learning, and tells us what the Bible is and whence it came. . . . This volume casts a flood of light upon things not generally known, but which linguistic and biblical scholars admit, and the author thinks that the people have a right to know all that can be known. . . ."—The Republican, St. Louis.
Cloth. Price $1.00.

Man: Whence and Whither?
The contents comprise chapters on the following subjects: Is Man a Mere Animal? Common Dogma of Man's Origin. The Evolution Hypothesis. Answer of Theism as to Man's Origin. Is Death the End of Man? The Foundation of Faith in a Future Life. After Death—What? Science and Theology.
Cloth, pp. 226. Price $1.00.

Divorce as a Question of Law and Religion; 7. Rational Deductions from Established Principles; 8. Objections to Liberal Divorce Laws Answered; 9. Prevention Better than Cure. THE VOICES.
BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

THE VOICE OF NATURE represents God in the light of Reason and Philosophy—in His unchangeable and glorious attributes.

THE VOICE OF A PEBBLE delineates the individuality of Matter and Mind, fraternal Charity and Love.

THE VOICE OF SUPERSTITION takes the creeds at their word, and proves by numerous passages from the Bible that the God of Moses has been defeated by Satan, from the Garden of Eden to Mount Calvary!

THE VOICE OF PRAYER enforces the idea that our prayers must accord with immutable laws, else we pray for effects, independent of cause.

Twelfth edition, with a new stippled steel-plate engraving of the author from a recent photograph. Printed in large, clear type, on beautiful tinted paper, bound in beveled boards.
Price $1.00, postage 10 cents.

The Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday morning in Berkeley Hall, Mrs. Lillie's guide spoke on "The Danger of Our American Industries as Viewed from a Spirit's Standpoint." To some this may seem a strange subject, as the visible one before you is a woman, while the interests and the government of the nation are in the hands of man. This is called the nation of the earth, the home of the free and the land of the brave. No one conversant with its history will fail to recognize its merits and acknowledge the power of its people to govern themselves. Our mediums, persecuted as they are, are in the enjoyment of more light and freedom than they would be in any other land. It was for religious liberty our fathers contended when they fled from the land of tyranny and oppression, and yet they came pinioned with the thoughts of superstition, bringing in one hand the parchment of liberty and in the other the chain of religious bigotry. You have recently unveiled a statue of freedom in your city. By tremendous sacrifice and suffering independence was gained and your forefathers became a free people, unfurling their banners of freedom with songs of invitation that welcomed all seeking for a home of liberty. The greater part of our country was a land of liberty, yet, before we were aware of it, we held four millions of human beings in bondage, and it needed even the shedding of blood to achieve their emancipation.

That we as a nation are in danger now, she said, no one can deny; at no time in the past has liberty been threatened as it is in the present: Commercial trusts menace the industries of our country; sumptuary medical laws seek to deprive our citizens of their constitutional rights; and the perpetuity of our public schools is threatened by the conflicting demands of the two great divisions of the Christian system—Catholic and Protestant. The duties which the present places upon the friends of justice and purity in this country—that it may hold its own, as the home of individual freedom in the future—are grave, and should be more widely recognized.

Evening.—Announcing as her subject, "Home as an Institution," the speaker took a retrospective view of homes as they were, and comparing them with what they now are, questioned whether there exists in the homes of to-day the same quality and quantity of love and affection that existed in the crude and early homes of the long ago.

After recapitulating some of the duties of a family, that if performed result in happiness to every member, the control said:

"It is the little kindnesses and concessions that imbue home with success. In this nineteenth century the questions are often asked, What is the cause of all these wrecks of humanity? Is marriage and home a failure? Our answer is, souls are of God, and it is only the effect of conditions that makes one more than another debased. One of the essential principles of a successful happy home is to make the wife an equal partner in the rights of its possession. Woman should never be obliged to ask her husband for a single dollar; it inculcates in her the feeling of dependence, and she never should be placed in a position to ask cringingly for what she should justly be entitled to. Much of the insanity of to-day is caused by the wreckage of home. We do not expect perfect men and women, but we would have them strive to make their earthly homes more perfect. The homes of the future are beautiful and lovely; they are the redeeming homes that we hope for by-and-bye."

The service closed with a poem.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 25th, memorial services will be held in tribute to the memory of Joseph L. Newman. Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Miss Emma J. Nickerson and Dr. H. B. Storer will participate in the exercises. Services commence at 10:30 A. M. O. L. R.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday, Nov. 18th, the guide of Mrs. H. S. Lake spoke upon subjects presented by the audience, among which were, "Reincarnation, How and Why?" "Memory." "Misunderstandings." "Soul and Spirit." and "The Atonement." He said: "The term reincarnation, like many other terms, is used, by different intelligences, to convey different meanings. To me it signifies reëxpression in the gross physical conditions now existing upon your planet; and I do not deem it improbable that there may be soul-entities, which, having once lived here, reappear in other organisms to attain a higher degree of spiritual unfoldment. To me the term soul signifies the central or pivotal principle, upon or around which the physical and spiritual personality revolves. Being a life-germ, indestructible, eternal, it demonstrates the persistency of force, in its onward march through different formations of matter. The spirit is the eliminated elements evolved from primary forms, and takes shape and substance in accordance with the specific efforts of the soul involved in the struggle for individual immortality.

Memory of these efforts is clear or clouded, according to the degree of harmony existing between the spirit and its grosser covering—the physical body. Experiences in mortal, material forms are stamped upon the spirit, and reappear to the eye of the soul as pictures in panorama. The function of memory is to revive these, and it operates more or less effectively, as power is established between the spirit and the body, along the line of certain faculties developed in the brain.

Misunderstandings frequently arise among people because of a lack of correct expression, or careful investigation into the meanings and motives of one's fellows. These misapprehensions will be continually lessened as the spiritual senses are quickened, making revelations which are at once rapid and accurate, and presenting the interior being as it is.

The atonement, in the popular sense, is illogical, unscientific and injurious. No soul can bear burdens for another except sympathetically. The beautiful and beneficent laws of nature enforce their penalties for all wrong doing upon the wrong-doer himself, thus serving the educative purpose for which they are. When man has risen to the dignity which it is his to attain, it will be impossible for him to even desire another to suffer for his errors and crimes, and in this attitude the legitimate atonement, or at-one-ment, between himself and the Divinity of Nature will be established and maintained."

Appropriate songs were sung by Mr. Geo. J. Parker and Miss Etta Parker, which added much to the enjoyment of the services.

Next Sunday Mrs. Lake's guide will discourse upon: "Spiritualism in its Relation to Human Progress." This will be her last ministration here until the first Sunday of January. Wednesday Evening Social at 7:30, to which all are cordially invited. Friday afternoon lecture to women at 2:30.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Last Sunday large audiences listened to Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, of Lawrence. The services opened with singing by Mrs. Mary Nickerson, accompanied by Prof. Milligan. After remarks by the President, Mrs. Kimball said her guides proposed to depart from their usual custom of giving tests and allow the spirits to write letters, which she would read from the platform. This was a new phase of mediumship, and proved to be very interesting. The letters appeared to be written and held before the medium and were read by her. Some of them were acknowledged by persons in the audience as very fine representations of character, and the names appended to them recognized. Among others, one from Mary Grosvenor, who recently passed to spirit-life, sending greetings to the Ladies' Aid Society, of which she was a member. The messages were similar in style to those given at the BANNER OF LIGHT Circles. The reading of them by Mrs. K. held the attention of the audience to a late hour.

In the evening Mrs. Nickerson sung "Love at Home" very finely, and letters were received and read by Mrs. Kimball's control. Hattie Griffin of Haverhill wrote that she was a member of the Independent Club, and her heart went out to all in the mortal. Susie Nickerson said she was at work in the spirit-land for the children the same as when in earth-life, and urged the importance of educating them in the glorious truths of Spiritualism.' She was a member of the Children's Lyceum when here.

The President announced the test circle to be held Thursday evening, inviting all present to avail themselves of the privilege thus given to communicate with and receive tests from their loved ones. HEATH.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society, 1031 Washington Street.—Since the opening meetings of this Society there has been a large attendance, and much interest manifested. At the evening meetings we have had talented lecturers upon the platform, while our musical attractions are not surpassed, when we have the exquisite improvisations of our sister Mrs. M. E. Whittemore. The charitable work of the Society has not been as large this fall as at some seasons. Most of the calls for assistance have been for clothing, and as our stock has become much reduced, it is thought advisable to ask through THE BANNER for contributions of new or partly worn clothing of any and all descriptions. If there are those who can render such assistance it will be gratefully received. Packages may be sent to the hall, 1031 Washington street. The penny collection, taken so many years for the benefit of Mr. Lyman, has not been discontinued since his death, but is still collected for the benefit of a very aged and infirm lady member of the Society, who is entirely dependent upon what friends may give her for her support. Surely the Ladies' Aid is doing a noble work, one on which those on the spirit side of life must approve, helping, in a quiet, unobtrusive way, of which only those familiar with its workings are aware. On Dec. 7th and 8th the annual sale of aprons and fancy articles will be held, when all are earnestly and cordially invited to attend.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall, Appleton Street.—Sunday morning, Nov. 18th, a very large attendance of children and friends participated in and witnessed the exercises.

During the past two years the pupils of this Lyceum have received lessons in elocution from Miss Lucette Webster. For nearly one year they have had vocal music lessons, first from Prof. LeClair and now from Prof. Willis Milligan, and will soon be able to present to the public the fruit of this course of instruction in the shape of the charming operetta, "The Fairy Queen." They are soon to be given a course in dancing and etiquette, under the direction of Prof. J. A. Cooper.

In aid of the Lyceum a Fair is to be held in Berkeley Hall, commencing Dec. 10th, and closing Dec. 15th. On every afternoon and evening interesting entertainments will be given. An orchestra will furnish music the entire week, and beautiful articles, useful and ornamental, will be offered for sale at prices within the reach of all. Remember us, friends, at this time, for it will be a grand place to purchase Christmas gifts, and you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have aided a good and noble work.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

First Independent Club, 987 Washington Street.—On Wednesday, Nov. 14th, at 3 P. M., Mrs. F. K. Rich conducted an interesting séance. The Ladies' Sewing Circle held its usual meeting at 3 P. M. A plan for broader and wholly unsectarian charitable work is being matured, in which various benevolent societies will unite and form a Charitable Alliance for indiscriminate work. Many organizations have been requested to send delegates and suggest methods.

The tea at 6 P. M. was well attended. In the evening J. W. Fletcher spoke upon mediumship, the Fox-Kane fiasco and our duties to mediums. Mrs. Case and Mrs. Wentworth furnished instrumental and vocal music, and Miss Maggie Vaughan and Miss Emma Nickerson gave selections in elocution. Mrs. S. W. Fletcher and Dr. J. C. Street made brief addresses.

New members are constantly being admitted; our books show at present a following of three hundred.

F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

[After November the Independent Club will remove to the Berkeley Hall Building, and hold its week-day session on Fridays.]

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The three services at this hall last Sunday were unusually interesting. The combined talent was under the direction of Eben Cobb, master of the ceremonies, assisted by his efficient wife. Miss Peabody, Mrs. Odlorne, Mrs. Chandler, Mrs. Forrester, Mrs. Pennell, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Case, Mr. Ridell, Dr. Eldridge and others took part in the meetings—the exercises at which took the form of short speeches, singing and playing, psychometric readings and spirit-tests. Mr. and Mrs. Cobb are a whole organization in themselves, and well know how to successfully manage spiritual meetings.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' meetings were held here Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale chairman. Large audiences were in attendance throughout the day. The chairman, Mrs. A. E. King, Mrs. I. E. Downing, Miss Nettie Holt, Mrs. J. F. Dillingham, Mrs. O. A. Robbins and Mrs. F. K. Rich participated in the interesting services. Good music is afforded from Sunday to Sunday. Next Sabbath afternoon Mrs. A. L. Pennell, test medium, late of New York, will be present; in the evening the child medium and preacher, with other good mediums. M. M. HOLT.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The forenoon meetings in this hall have been reöpened—last Sunday being the second morning meeting held in this place for about two years, and was very interesting—Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Lewis, Dr. Barker, Mrs. J. K. D. Conant, Mr. Ridell and Dr. Mathews participating. In the afternoon the hall was crowded. Dr. Mathews, Mr. Temple, Mrs. J. T. Lewis, Mrs. Conant, David Brown and Dr. McKenzie took part in the exercises. The evening meeting was addressed by several of the above-named speakers—tests and readings being also given, as usual. F. W. M.

W. J. Colville in Colorado.

Mr. Colville's lectures in Denver, Col., Nov. 11th, 12th and 13th, were largely attended and of great interest. They were delivered under the auspices of the College of Spiritual Philosophy recently established in that city.

On Sunday, Nov. 11th, the meetings were held in Warren Hall, 16th and Champa streets. The morning lecture was on "Spiritualism the Key of All Religions." The afternoon was devoted to answering a number of questions propounded by the audience. The evening lecture was on "The Relation of Spiritual Facts to Physical Science," the audience being exceptionally large and representative; five hundred and thirty people paid at the door for a seat, and many were admitted free. On the two following days lectures of a metaphysical character were given at 10:30 in Lyceum Hall, 13th and Lawrence streets (formerly a Methodist church) and in the same place, at 7:45, by particular request, lectures on "Atlantis and Egypt." The attendance both evenings was larger than the seating capacity of the spacious hall.

Great interest in all spiritual matters is now being exhibited in Denver. Speakers and mediums desiring Western engagements would do well to correspond with the Secretary of the Association, J. D. Davis, Box 2009. Denver is a rapidly growing centre of population and industry; it enjoys a salubrious climate, and is an excellent field for spiritual activity.

Mr. Colville left Nov. 14th for San Diego, Cal., in which city he is now located at the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Bothwell, 1144 Grape street.

"TIGER."

Stratham, N. H.—The meetings of our Society have been resumed, the gifted and eloquent inspirational speaker, S. Lizzie Ewer, of Portsmouth, occupying our platform, as before.

Although we are not many in number, we have been much encouraged since our first meeting, one year ago, in the constant and gradually increasing interest manifested. We have met on alternate Sundays through the year, at Severance Hall, and the attendance of our Exeter friends, and others from adjacent towns, has greatly cheered us.

Our lectures of the afternoon have been followed in the evening by exercises somewhat miscellaneous, giving of personal tests, improvisations in verse, psychometric readings, etc.

Very many tests have been gratefully recognized as strong and convincing proof of spirit presence. Some lectures of special interest lately given have been upon the following themes: "Is Spiritualism Utilitarian in its Teachings and Tendencies?" "The Higher Life, When, Where and How is it to be Attained?" and on Sunday, Nov. 11th, "The Demands of To-day." In the lecture upon which it was clearly shown that the most potent advocacy of truth is the fearless following of the high behest of personal duty by its adherents. At the close of this lecture our worthy President, F. H. Burleigh, being called upon, gave a brief address in his clear and vigorous style, the effect of which was to deepen the conviction already felt that weak and mercenary and "false witnesses" can never stay the onward march of right. F. A. HAVEN.

New London, Ct.—The Spiritualists of this place are earnest workers. I have spoken for them two Sundays and two week nights, and found large and attentive audiences. Mrs. Miller is President. The Ladies' Aid Society helps on the good work.

MRS. E. CUTLER.

All philosophy lies in two words—"sustain" and "abstain."

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

First Spiritual Society.—Last Sunday morning Lyman C. Howe spoke upon several subjects selected by the audience, among which were: "If an undeveloped spirit influence, what should we do to control it?" "Why is it honest people never prosper?" The speaker said that honest people do prosper; perhaps not in material things, but they gain integrity, honor and goodness, which are better than material wealth. If undeveloped spirits control us it is because there is something in us to attract them. We must make ourselves better, and in so doing help them to mount higher as well as overcome their evil influence. In the evening Mr. Howe spoke from a subject given him by request, as announced in the BANNER OF LIGHT of last week, "Modern Spiritualism; Its Purpose and Scope in the Economy of Nature in this Part of the Nineteenth Century."

He said: There is a Spiritualism that is not modern. How does the modern differ from this? Ancient Spiritualism was necessarily clouded with superstition and shadowed by blood. Science came with its reasoning power and wished to investigate this darkness in which immortality was shrouded. Religion said here you must depend upon faith. This gave rise to much skepticism, which paved the way for Modern Spiritualism.

Modern Spiritualism would not if it could break down the bulwarks of the mother church, for she is needed in the world as yet, but it would fraternize mankind and make the relations of the family more perfect.

The lecture was logical, beautiful and eloquent—full of good points and suggestions.

Mr. Howe will speak for the society next Sunday morning and evening.

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was well attended. Miss Ella F. Porter gave a fine piano solo. Mrs. I. C. Loud sang "The Message," by Blumenthal.

Henry J. Newton called attention to the editorial in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Nov. 17th, entitled "The Bubble Burst," and noted the fact that he had prophesied before this meeting, when it was stated in the secular papers that the Fox sisters had renounced Spiritualism, and were about to make a general exposé, that the result would be as set forth in said editorial.

Mr. Wm. H. Swartwout followed Mr. Newton, elaborating to some extent upon the sacred truths of Spiritualism. R. P. Wilson gave a description of the use and working of spirit telegraphy. He made the prediction that it would be but a few years before there would not be a disbeliever in it.

Mrs. E. A. Wells gave a large number of tests, some very remarkable, mostly to entire strangers, and all fully recognized. Next Sunday will be the closing one for the present with Mrs. Wells at Adelphi Hall. She has an engagement with the Union Society of Spiritualists in Cincinnati, O., for the month of December.

In the afternoon Mr. M. M. ("Brick") Pomeroy, editor of Advanced Thought, will open the Meeting for Manifestations. His subject will be "The Divinity of Spiritualism." Plans are being perfected to make an engagement with Mr. Pomeroy to deliver a series of lectures on various subjects, to extend over a period of several months, for the benefit of the Meeting for Manifestations. Mr. Pomeroy is one of our most popular and interesting speakers, and never fails to instruct and interest an audience. He is a thorough Spiritualist in knowledge, words and deeds. S.

New York, Nov. 18th, 1888.

Arcanum Hall.—At both the 3 and 8 P. M. meetings of Progressive Spiritualists at this hall the services brought good audiences last Sunday.

The mediums' meeting at 3 P. M. was opened with remarks by the Conductor. Dr. Williams and Prof. Allen gave facts and experiences. Prof. Van Horn gave many recognized spirit tests, including names, etc. Mrs. E. Benwell, entranced, gave a well-appreciated discourse.

At the 8 P. M. meeting Mrs. Harriet E. Beach spoke acceptably of her remarkable experiences with mediums.

Mr. J. B. Gibbs, a noted temperance speaker, delivered a stirring appeal in aid of that reform.

Miss Fannie Naegell, organist, gave a selection. The Conductor closed with demonstrative spirit messages. COR.

Greenwich, Mass.—Services at the Independent Liberal Church were resumed Sept. 23d, and up to the present time the attendance has been good, and the interest and harmony undiminished. The Society has cheerfully coöperated with Mr. Smith for the support of speaking for the present year. The writer has filled the desk, since the opening, with the exception of one Sunday, which was occupied by Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, who pleased all by her courteous manner, fine lecture, and exceptionally satisfactory psychometric readings. Mrs. Banks of Haydenville is a great favorite here and had an engagement for next Sunday, which the dangerous illness of her mother has compelled her to cancel. Miss Jennie B. Hagan is engaged for the first Sunday of June, the only time when her services are available.

The subject of last Sunday's discourse was from the text "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." The preliminary portion was devoted to noticing the rise and progress of great religious, reformatory and scientific movements, by slowly evolving processes from small beginnings, closing with allusion to the mighty unfoldments of Spiritualism from the small inaugural at Hydesville, out of which an undying flame has been kindled, that no small stream of invective could quench. Ignominious as was the effort of Maggie Fox Kane, much more so has been its failure, and in view of its recoil upon the misguided woman, Spiritualists could afford to withhold their censure, and pray that once more good angels might open for her a door, as she did forty years ago for grief-stricken humanity.

JULIETTE YEAW.

Lowell, Mass.—Our Society continues meetings in Post 185 G. A. R. Hall with encouraging success. On Saturday evening there was an assembly of friends who enjoyed an entertainment consisting of music and singing, recitations and readings. N. S. Wardwell conducted the services, which were kept up until a late hour.

To-day, Nov. 18th, Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., occupied our platform. The afternoon lecture was an able address. The evening services opened with singing by the choir. Mrs. M. gave an able discourse on the future of Spiritualism. She predicted that woman would move the future world. She also improvised music and poems upon subjects given by the audience. Last Sunday, Nov. 11th, Mrs. E. C. Kimball, of Lawrence, was with us for the first time. Letters were read through her control to friends, some of which were recognized by those present. Next Sunday, Nov. 25th, Mrs. Juliette Yeaw, of Leominster, will occupy our platform.

No. 5 Brooks street, Lowell. B. S. FREEMAN.

Cambridge, Mass.—Odd Fellows Hall, 548 Main Street.—Last Sunday evening Mrs. H. S. Lake, entranced, spoke to an intelligent and appreciative audience upon "The Value of a Living Faith." The lecture was pronounced a most eloquent and instructive one and was heartily applauded. It was followed by psychometric readings, all correct, after which Mrs. Lake's Indian guide, "Prairie Flower," greatly interested the audience by her quaint and peculiar discourse. Dr. Buffum sang some appropriate selections which were thoroughly enjoyed.——Next Sunday evening Mrs. Lake will be with us again. Our audiences are steadily increasing, and each service has been very satisfactory to the management and attendants.

REPORTER.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday Dr. C. H. Harding, of Boston, spoke and gave psychometric tests before the Brittan Hall Spiritualists. In his remarks the power of electric and magnetic forces was dwelt upon in their relation to progress and the unfoldment of the facts of the universe. Following each address were exercises in psychometry, which much interested the audiences, bringing before them convincing tests of the accuracy of the science.——Next Sunday Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, of Lawrence, will occupy the platform, supplementing her addresses, both afternoon and evening, with tests. E. P. H.

Haverhill, Nov. 19th, 1888.

Fitchburg, Mass.—The First Spiritualist Society has had the pleasure the last two Sabbaths of listening to the guides of Mrs. C. N. Nickerson, of New Bedford, who gave us four able and instructive lectures, also tests and readings, which were very satisfactory. The evening of the 23d she gave our Society a benefit circle, which we very much appreciated. The 25th of November and 2d of December Joseph D. Stiles, of Weymouth, will lecture and give tests for us.

Providence, R. I.—Dr. F. H. Roscoe, of this city, was our speaker for Sundays Nov. 11th and 18th. His subjects were: "The Conflicts of Life," and "Home, and its Influences on Earth and in the Spirit-Life." The daily newspapers gave good reports of the meetings.——Next Sunday Gerald Massey will deliver his discourse: "Man in Search of His Soul for Fifty Thousand Years, and How He Found It." I hope this eminent man will be busily employed, as he is doing an excellent work for Spiritualism. E. H. WHITNEY.

A Revival in Philadelphia.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

From her happy home by the western sea comes a brave and fearless little woman, "David" to meet the Goliah of "toe-joint" notoriety and to slay him [her].

Probably she does not know why she came at this time; but the denizens of the spirit-world know, for they have sent her to do a work in this "Cradle of Liberty," the influence of which will never be lost to our people.

Mrs. Ada Foye is doing a great service, not only for the Spiritualists of Philadelphia, but of the world, when she proves that her raps are not the result of a vibrating joint, nor her writing a clever trick to cheat the mourner and the hungry-hearted, but that each phase is the means of conveying messages from some loved one who has crossed the borders of mortal existence.

The thousands who flock to hear these tests of spirit presence and identity attest to their accuracy, and her visit to the city is, and will remain, a memorable event to them—in many cases the "turning point" of a lifetime. L. R. C.

2139 Uber Place.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The First Association has had Mrs. Ada Foye of San Francisco, Cal., speaking and delineating on the rostrum during November.

It really seems as though a revival is in progress; hundreds have been turned away for want of room—the large hall being packed with interested Spiritualists and investigators.

The First Society has been very active in spreading and disseminating Spiritualism for many years, and what is now being witnessed under its auspices should encourage its membership to labor even more unitedly and harmoniously than in the past for the good of our great cause.

Mrs. Ada Foye gives a short address on each occasion, after which she receives ballots with names of spirit-friends; taking a pencil she touches each and every one, when, if the spirit is present, a loud rapping, three times, is heard; she then looks up and reads—apparently in the air—the name, and generally the full name. The interest manifested can be imagined when some hundreds of ballots were collected and over fifty splendid and convincing tests were given.

This Society had its first supper of the season on Thursday evening, after which the choir of our Association gave some selections in a very satisfactory manner. Our choir is something all the members are proud of. The "Peak Sisters from Alaskey" amused the audience, after which we all departed.

Next month Prof. Peck is our speaker. T.

Portland, Ore.—The Spiritualists of this city send greeting to our friends on the Atlantic coast, and other places. The friends of truth are working to advance the cause of Spiritualism in Oregon with all the power they have at their command. The mediums here are all well treated, and encouraged to remain with us. Dr. Schlesinger, of San Francisco, staid with us a few days, and made many converts. Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler are with us now, making many friends. Mrs. Wheeler's guides place oil in her hands to cure the sick. This is a puzzle for the skeptics to unravel. It comes in broad daylight at any time it is required for that purpose. We occupy the G. A. R. Hall, the best hall in the State. Every seat is filled at our Sunday evening meetings. We hope some materializing medium will come this way and give us a call. All true mediums are welcome. Any one wishing to know about this country can write to me, and I will do the best I can to inform them. Respe tfully yours, C. NEWELL.

President of the First Society of Spiritualists.

No. 106 Jackson street.

Norwich, Conn.—J. Frank Baxter continued his interesting exercises of song, reading, lecturing and spirit-tests in Norwich, Conn., last Sunday, and was very happy in his selections and successful in his work. The afternoon discourse on "Heaven: What? Where? and Who There?" was novel in ideas and method, entertaining and instructive. The evening lecture on "The Exposition of Imposition" was timely, and Mr. Baxter justly showed the true inwardness of press and pulpit in their attacks on Modern Spiritualism, and the unprincipled methods of would-be exposers and their allies. Of course the Fox-Kane fiasco was fully analyzed and exploded, as it surely merited. Mr. Baxter's tests were very fine; his audience was deeply absorbed during this part of his exercises.

The Helping Hands Society, an auxiliary to the main Association of Spiritualists, holds fortnightly socials, the principal features of which are suppers and dancing. One of these was announced for Thursday evening, 22d inst. UNCAS.

New London, Conn.—Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes opened the meetings in the Spiritualist Society of this place Oct. 21st. It was Mrs. Byrnes's first appearance in this city; she was greeted with a fair-sized audience both afternoon and evening. Her subject for the afternoon was "Watchman, Tell Us of the Day"; in the evening, "What does Spiritualism Teach?" Both subjects were treated with great force and eloquence, and the impression the speaker made upon her audience will go far to establish her ability as an orator. Mrs. Elizabeth Cutler, of Philadelphia, has occupied the platform the last two Sundays, besides giving two "benefits" in aid of the Society. Mrs. Cutler is a psychometric reader of much ability, and that she is appreciated is manifest by the community at large, as each audience increases in number. J. Frank Baxter will occupy the platform on Monday evening, Nov. 26th. H. P. MILLER.

New London, Conn., Nov. 19th, 1888.

Watertown, N. Y.—J. Gifford, President, writes: "Your generous donation of copies of THE BANNER was thankfully received, and we are striving with our utmost ability to place these papers before the people, hoping thereby to advance the knowledge of Spiritualism in this locality. With our trance lecturer, Mrs. Carrie C. Van Duzee of Geneva, O., at our head, the First Spiritual Society of Watertown is growing very rapidly, and calling out as listeners to her highly instructive lectures a goodly number of our very best business and educated men and women. Mrs. Van Duzee's address will be until further notice (or several months at least) Watertown, N. Y., No. 12 Bronson street."

Worcester, Mass.—Prof. W. F. Peck has occupied the platform at Continental Hall during the present month, and has given excellent lectures to large audiences. Last Sunday, Nov. 19th, his afternoon subject was "Vicarious Atonement." It was a radical but logical and exhaustive arraignment of the position taken by the Christian church as utterly repugnant to common sense and reason. It was the best answer to the "plan of salvation" and "Jesus pays it all" we have ever heard. In the evening his subject was "Life and Occupation in the Spirit-World." It was an interesting and instructive lecture, and listened to with strict attention. Prof. Peck ranks with our ablest speakers. S.

Newburyport, Mass.—The well-known test medium, Joseph D. Stiles, occupied the platform of our society last Sunday. In the afternoon he gave the names of thirty-five, and in the evening of sixty-three spirits, nearly all of which were recognized. The audiences were large, though there were a number of temperance meetings and regular church services. He is engaged for two more Sundays during our season. Mrs. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt., is to be here next Sunday. She was here at our opening Sunday as the speaker, and our society was much pleased with her. F. H. F.

Clinton, Mass.—Mrs. L. W. Litch, of Boston, occupied our platform Nov. 4th, 11th and 18th very acceptably, giving some remarkably fine tests. She is engaged here for Dec. 16th. E. M.

THEOLOGIC TREATMENT OF SPIRITUALISM.

"And Jesus said, for judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind. And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, are we blind also? Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, we see; therefore your sin remaineth."—John ix: 39-41.

Jesus had opened the eyes of a man who was blind from birth, and so great was the astonishment of the people that all who knew the blind man discussed the matter. It being such a marvelous fact that a man born blind should suddenly be made to see, men could hardly believe it. Can this be the same man? it was said. "Some said yes, this is he: others said he is like him: but he said I am he." The Pharisees, who were the official authorities of the church, forthwith ignored the marvel by raising an irrelevant and stupid question, namely, whether it was lawful to give sight to a blind man on the Sabbath day. But naturally the astounding cure impelled people to exclaim: "How can a man that is a sinner (Sabbath-breaker) do such miracles?" The authorities, seeing the formidableness of the argument, now changed their tactics, hoping perhaps to be able to deny the reality of the miracle. Then they worried the man who was cured, asking him, and receiving from his own lips the confirmation of the truth that he had received his sight. Yet was there not one more loop-hole open for denial? "Ah!" said they, "we do not believe your story; you have not been blind." Until they called the parents of the blind man, and they asked them, saying, "Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how, then, doth he now see?" The parents confirmed the facts. This was irritating. They turn now once more upon the hero of the event and repeat their question with the same result. The facts could no more be denied. No possible trick or ingenuity could prevail against them. There was now nothing left for the church authorities but the well-known expedient of authoritatively condemning the cured man anyhow, and ignoring the miracle, thus getting rid by sheer and rude police force of the unpleasant and troublesome occurrence.

Now for the application. We find the Church authorities of our age using exactly the same tactics against Spiritualism. They seek to deny the reality of the phenomena. If this attempt fails there is the expediency of condemning authoritatively the whole matter. But how is it with scientific men who stand outside the Church? When they are confronted by astonishing phenomena not explainable by their theories, they do exactly what the Pharisees attempted to do, namely, ignore the facts. But it happens that these facts are of the most momentous importance for mankind, revealing the glorious destiny of man. They themselves are professedly Agnostics, that is, they say they have no evidence for or against immortality. They do not deny, yet they do not affirm anything; they simply say, we do not know. This position is occupied by very distinguished men. "And some of the Pharisees said unto him, are we blind also?" Modern Spiritualism answers: You are as blind and guilty as the Church officials. These are prevented by theological preconceptions from seeing, you are prevented from seeing by scientific preconceptions. Wherein are you superior?

"If ye were blind, ye should have no sin;" if there were not countless phenomena, absolutely genuine and absolutely demonstrated, your saying: "We do not know of any proofs for immortality," would be proper, and ye should have no sin," but since you refuse to look at the proofs, or try to ignore them, you are in no wise superior to the dogmatism of the Church. You are unscientific and unphilosophical by ignoring natural forces which it is your mission to discover. "Therefore your sin remaineth."

THOUGHTS—WHAT ARE THEY?

BY WARREN CHASE.

Some spirits and some mortals—both of whom are fallible and about equally speculative in opinions—assert that thoughts are things. To me there seem to be two insuperable barriers to this conclusion:

One is that things, as we understand the term, belong to this "three dimension" of space—have length, breadth and thickness, and exist of themselves, independent of other things; while no person has ever obtained the dimensions of a thought, or found one disconnected with a mind, and in this sphere disconnected with a brain through which mind acts and manifests itself and its existence.

The second is that as they are never found separate from mind, if they were things and originated in mind, they could be separated from it and exist independent of it, and be found floating around and caught and measured; and as they originate nowhere except in mind it would make mind the creator of things, which power is not conceded to any finite object, and hardly to an infinite.

Objects are produced from materials already in existence, and we can now analyze every thing and determine most of its parts, tracing all but those of the subtle and invisible elements which are beyond the reach of our instruments; and as no thing is beyond the reach of these, we must deny this property to thoughts.

The human mind is evidently an entity composed of many particles and in great variety; but an entity is not a thing with the "three dimensions," but belongs to Zöllner's "fourth dimension" in space, and to me thoughts seem to be motion and commotion of minds, corresponding to the motions of the body, which is a thing, but its motions are not things.

I cannot discover any reason for supposing that thoughts are entities, and had it not been for the scientific facts in Spiritualism we should have had no reliable evidence that mind was an entity that passed through and survived after death. Beyond this fact of life and individuality after death science has not yet gone, but in time may.

Letter from Lyman C. Howe.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

There seems to be a general quickening in this city and increased interest in spiritual questions since the "Foxy" farce shook the dullards from their moral stupor and opened the eyes of the blind.

The preposterous claims, self-stultification and self-crimination of these unfortunates have given a broader significance to the spiritual movement to the narrow and purblind critics who have supposed that the "rap" was the alpha and omega of Spiritualism, and the Fox family the only authority for its existence.

Such psychic ripples are contagious. The Whitechapel horror stimulates the murderous instinct wherever it reaches morbid tendencies with a tragic bias; and the more it is published and discussed the more active the contagion becomes. This law works both ways. Activity and expression extend the influence and increase the power of good and evil; but fortunately, evil—which is always incidental and limited—cannot become aggressive without arousing to superior action the ever-present and all-saving good. Hence, every evil carries with it the element of self-destruction, while the good liveth on forever.

The New York Sun yesterday (the 18th) contains a ludicrous letter addressed to Father Evans, and his answer. The lady claims to have been a medium and a speaker; "knows all about" Spiritualism, and, à la the Foxes, denounces it all as a most wicked and dangerous deception; she is at a white heat of enthusiasm to enter the field of battle for the Lord and a physical resurrection, and utterly annihilate Spiritualism from the face of the earth. Her ravings would be laughable if not so pitiful. Hers is but a manifest echo of the nonsense cooked up for the pious public by the secret service agents who precipitated the downfall and temporal ruin of the once innocent and angel-guided Fox Sisters. But while we must pity the weakness and pardon the wickedness of all such unfortunate agents in the hands of beneficent fate, we owe them a debt of gratitude for the great work their crooked destiny has done and is doing for the cause we love.

As Spiritualists we should harbor no unkindness toward any human soul, and no retaliative judgments or vindictive censure should find place in our hearts. Nevertheless, in the interest of truth and of all faithful mediums a just discrimination and fearless but friendly criticism should not be withheld. We owe it to the cause, and to the erring as well, to assist in the application and full enforcement of the lessons which these sad exhibitions of perversion and folly force upon us.

The First Society in this city, with Henry J. Newton for President, appears to thrive, and its work is steady and far-reaching. It draws many of the best minds in the city, each of whom becomes a center of accumulation and distribution to reach others beyond the immediate sphere of the Society. Mr. and Mrs. Newton are happily agreed, and work together in all spiritual and reformatory efforts. Excellent music cheers and charms at every public convocation, and the spiritual and reformatory literature served up by Bro. Titus Merritt extends the educational work.

Horatio Eddy is holding séances every evening at 59 East 9th street, under the management of Capt. Jenks, who claims extraordinary results. Knowing Capt. Jenks, and having faith in his integrity and sagacity, inspires me with hope for the good they may do.

Another "sign of the times" may be observed in the appearance this morning for the first time in many months (if not years) of a notice of our meeting in the Tribune. While this notice gives very little of value—being almost entirely devoted to a description of non-essential preliminaries—it is yet significant that it deigned to refer to us at all; and besides, there is no fling or flagrant misrepresentation in it: a credit which could not be given to some others of the New York press. For this let us be thankful to the candor of the Tribune.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

New York, Nov. 19th, 1888.

We have received from Elder F. W. Evans, Mount Lebanon, N. Y., the full text of the Mrs. Pomeroy letter (above referred to) and his curt reply thereto. We consider that Bro. Howe has so tersely and satisfactorily shown the main drift of the Pomeroy screed that it is wholly unnecessary that we assign the valuable space necessary to its full publication in these columns; but we will give to our readers the pointed reply of Elder Evans, which, on perusal, ought to conclusively satisfy the militant lady that this distinguished Shaker—in common with all who really know anything concerning the cause she misrepresents—entertains a very poor opinion of her claims and her animus.—ED. B. OF L.

MT. LEBANON, Nov. 10th, 1888.

MRS. L. M. POMEROY—Respected Friend: Your letter of the 5th inst. received. I have not seen the Springfield Union containing my article yet; it will come soon.

So you put yourself in the same class with Margaret and Katie Fox. They are mediums. You have been "a medium for writing, tipping, test and speaking medium, etc.," you "know just how it is done."

Margaret and Kate were mediums; now they say that they have been acting as frauds all these years. You do the same; and then expect the world to believe you. Yet you look for the Saviour, expect the bodily resurrection, and affirm that the dead cannot return until their bodies rise, that none have ever returned, you are positive about it, etc.

You forget that Moses and Elias and Samuel returned and talked with Jesus and Saul, and many other Scripture statements. Do you not think that yourself and the Fox women are very wicked women, and that no person should believe a word that any of you may utter?

Then you contradict yourself, and affirm your belief in Spiritualism, saying, "It is a power that produces raps, tipping tables, writing and test-giving; it is all done by power unseen." "For the devil has come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth his time is short." Thus you admit yourself to have been a medium for the devil to use in misleading humanity.

Do not wish you to come here. Better repent.

Respectfully, F. W. EVANS,
Mt. Lebanon, Col. Co., N. Y.

The Medical Laws of the United States.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Why should there not be a national medical law that will be equally as effectual in one State as in another? Why should the individual States have their own distinct laws in regard to medical practice?

A crime in one State, in medical treatment, should be considered such in all States. To-day a medical practitioner, residing in or near the line that separates two States, is often compelled to comply with two distinct medical laws in visiting his patients—that which is a crime in one State being considered a blessing in the one adjoining. Justice, it would seem to the most casual observer, demands that an act which in one State is legal should be considered such in all the States of the Union. Could such a statute be enacted a medical practitioner, a healer of the sick in any form whatsoever, could—if called upon for aid by a sick person in New York or any other State where now restrictive laws framed in the interest of Allopathy are in force—exercise his education or his natural gifts for the relief of the sufferer without being stigmatized as a criminal.

The very idea of such close monopoly rules and laws as have been "piloted" through the legislatures of thirty States of the American Union, is entirely against the spirit of the National Constitution, and there seems to the writer to be but one way to bring about a settlement that will be just and equitable before the law—and that is to enact a national medical statute that will cover all the States, giving to all practitioners privileges and penalties without regard to their mode of eradicating disease—thus preserving, in the name of the Republic, the constitutional right of its people to select any practitioner or mode of treatment which in their better judgment seems to be the most judicious and beneficial. There is no one form of eradicating disease which is perfection in all cases and with all individuals; infallibility is not yet reached in any of the modes extant, and which claim the patronage of the people, and it does not seem consistent or proper that the practitioners of the different schools should array themselves in antagonistic attitude, as men in battle or in politics do, to settle the medical problem; on the contrary, let the people move in the matter at once and establish a universal national medical law that will cover the entire United States.

Without question there are individuals before the public, having a "regular" medical diploma which entitles them to practice in certain States, who are successful in their calling, while there are others who have equal success in eradicating disease with no diploma from established colleges; and it is but too true that there are others who place "Dr." before their names in advertising and on their signs, and in some instances "Prof."—also "M. D." following—while the individual has nothing in his or her mode of treatment which would warrant the use of such titles, except the "mortal error" of his or her own "imagination."

The tendency to concentration is too widely prevalent at the present day. We see it in every department of business, where a few men or firms reach out into lines of goods, or the pursuance of methods that do not generally come under the particular branch of trade to which their energies are ostensibly devoted, and seek to cover, as far as possible, the whole market—thus destroying the individual interest and prospects of any one attempting to build up a small, legitimate business. Individuals cannot successfully cope with firms employing clerks by the thousand, hence we have a practical monopoly in operation along these lines. Now who is there who may read this article who wishes to see a like state of affairs in the domain of the medical and healing arts? Why should the adherents of any school—"Regular" or "Irregular"—be allowed to monopolize the whole practice of the country under forms of law framed for their own—not the public's—benefit? We see efforts in this direction being continually put forth, and it is the duty of the people to preserve their liberty of choice at all hazards.

The doctors themselves cannot work out this problem in a way to suit them all; hence the people must step to the front and settle the matter on the ground of a universal and harmonious equality for every system. Who can object to such a step that has humanity at heart in this issue, instead of self?

ANTI-MONOPOLIST.

☞ A parson and his parish at Adelaide, Australia, recently parted with mutual willingness, and in his farewell discourse the minister freed his mind as follows: "I do not regret our separation, dear brethren, for three good and valid reasons. The first is that you don't love me, the second that you don't love one another, and the third that God does not love you. You don't love me—my salary is several months in arrear; you don't love one another, or there would not be such a dearth of marriages among you; and God doesn't seem to love you as you ought to be loved, because there have been no funerals among you lately."

Twenty-five years ago the now Princess of Wales and future Queen of England was living on the third floor of a corner house in Copenhagen, and her father, who no one ever dreamed then of being a king, was poorer than many a burgher in the same street.

BARS AND THRESHOLDS.

Written Especially for the Banner of Light,

BY MRS. EMMA MINER.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE SKELETON.

The winter passed, and the Roseville school flourished. Doris walked straight into the affections of her pupils, and the good will of their parents. Mr. Brown, one of the committee, was a resident of Roseville, therefore he took it upon himself to frequently inspect the condition of the school.

"Mother," said Doris one day toward the end of the second term, "Mr. Brown came in again to-day. Seems to me he comes rather often. I do not like that man."

"What seems to be the trouble with him, Doris?"

"I cannot define it exactly; but every time he enters the door I am reminded of 'Uriah Heep.'"

"He can't be very agreeable, then, certainly," she replied, smiling a little; "I remember I never was favorably impressed with that character."

"I don't trust the man at all, and I am really afraid of him. I don't mean I am afraid of his criticisms, but I am afraid of him."

"Does he criticise you much?"

"No. I wish he would. Everything I do and say pleases him so much, and he will sit and rub his hands in that Uriah Heep fashion, until it seems as if I should fly out of the window, or anywhere to get out of his presence."

"I am sorry."

"I believe ~~his~~ term expires soon. I shall pray that he may not be elected again."

"How about Mr. Closson and Mr. Tibbitts?"

"Very good and kind, only Mr. Closson is as churchy as grandma used to be."

"Is Mr. Brown a married man?"

"No; I am told he is a bachelor," replied Doris, wondering a little she should ask that question, but forgetting it again directly in the hurry of getting away to school.

She had occasion to remember the question later in the day, much to her sorrow and disgust.

The afternoon session dismissed, she went over to Lucy's to wait for her train, according to her usual habit. Then and there Mr. Brown called upon her. He made a formal offer of his heart, hand and fortune, which Doris gently but firmly declined.

He became importunate.

"You must consider my decision final, Mr. Brown. I do not contemplate marriage with any one."

He attempted to throw his arms around her, but she hastily retreated with ill-concealed disgust.

"Understand me now, Mrs. Carroll. We must be friends or enemies."

"I have no desire to be anything but friendly to you. If you choose to become my enemy I cannot help it."

"Very well. Remember that you have made your choice," and he left the room abruptly.

Lucy coming in soon after was surprised to find Doris so discomposed. Doris related what had occurred.

"But don't say anything about it, Lucy; it really hurts my self-respect to have that man around. I don't think he will interview my school again at present," and Doris laughed and cried hysterically.

Returning home, Lydia gave her a message she had just written for her: "You have made an enemy. You did rightly. He will make trouble for you, but, dearest, stand firm in the faith. Sidney."

Doris related what had happened. "I expect to be persecuted now, mother. But I wonder that Sidney should tell me to 'stand firm in the faith.' As if anything could shake me!"

In another part of the city, Mr. Tibbitts, Mr. Brown and Mr. Closson were holding a committee meeting.

"And how do you think the Roseville school prospers, Mr. Brown? You have a special charge of that, you know," said Mr. Tibbitts.

"Ah! well! ahem! You know the old saying, 'a new broom,' and so forth," and Mr. Brown looked as though he might say a great deal if he chose.

"Yes. But I have visited the school several times. It seemed to me to be admirably managed."

"What cause have you for complaint?" asked Mr. Closson.

"Well, really now, I am placed in a delicate position. I hardly know how to say what I wish in order to be understood."

"When I was there, it seemed to me the recitations were above the average in excellence, and the discipline of the school admirable," said Mr. Closson.
