It was my privilege to attend a séance not long since with another private medium—the subjoined being a brief account of my experiences: Several of the family (where I was an entire stranger) I found to be mediumistic—one of the daughters possessing spirit sight, and the power to give impressions as they came to her. She said to me: "There is a spirit here who gives me the name of Mary." I said: "Yes, I know a spirit by that name." She then described the spirit, which proved to be entirely different from the one I had supposed it to be. I said: "You have the name right, but the description is not correct." She replied by asking: "Do you know a family by the name of Martin?" I said: "Yes"; then came clearly the description of the spirit answering to Mary as given, which proved a grand test of identity in the name and complexion given at first, and not the Mary that had recently given me a communication in writing, which was at the time in my pocket. Both of these ladies named Mary were particular friends, one of them a relative.

The medium then asked: "Have you such a patient [describing her] whom you are anxious concerning?" I replied in the affirmative, whereupon she gave some valuable prophetic information in regard to the patient, which I hope will prove correct; at any rate, what was said about her was true to the letter in many ways. She then correctly described and named an individual who had wronged me greatly in business ways during the late civil war, and of whom she could not be expected in reason to possess any personal knowledge. I asked if I ever should obtain what was my due; and she replied to the point: "Only through a woman." I said I had tried that way, as the man had put his property into the hands of his wife before he passed on. She added that the man could not rest at ease until the wrong had been righted, and he wanted my help in the matter.

There were seven witnesses present who heard the plea for help, and were much impressed by this lesson regarding the bearing of mercantile probity or its opposite on the life-conditions of the world to come.

This young lady, as in the case of the gentleman medium mentioned above, has never made use of her spiritual gifts for fee or reward, though she bids fair to become renowned in her specialties.

At this time when great exertions are being made to destroy confidence in Spiritualism altogether, it gives me pleasure to chronicle so many private mediums who are doing a great amount of good in a quiet way, and where there can be no reasonable ground for the doubt with which some investigators regard "the dollar" as an adjunct in spirit-communion.

New mediums are coming forth daily. Children are astonishing the world with their spiritual gifts. Where one unprincipled individual palms off imitations of spirit power for the genuine, are to be found many genuine mediums who have taken no pains or thought in the matter of Spiritualism or mediumship.

Spiritualism does not depend upon any Spiritualist or medium for its truthfulness, since it is based on the eternal fixed laws of the universe, and is one of the established facts in the nature of things. Pretended mediums and arrogant "exposers" may have their day for awhile, but Spiritualists who are well informed will feel no cause for alarm, but rather pity the individuals who sell themselves for mere purposes of gain. Let truth and error grapple; who ever knew truth to be put to flight in a free and open encounter?

The Instinct of Immortality, Whence?

Extract from a Sermon by Rev. T. W. Woodrow, preached in Seneca, Kan.

We have traced the prevailing belief of mankind in immortality to "instinct." It will be proper now to inquire whence is instinct? It is twofold:

First, implanted: innate. The thought is intuitive with the human mind. Second, psychic. Psychology is the influence of one mind in the body upon another: or the impression one mind receives from another in the body.

Psychics is the influence the world of disembodied minds (called spirits) have upon us, or the impression we receive from them. This is the distinction between psychology and psychics which is made by metaphysicians. Psychology has to do with the sensible or visible world, psychics with the supersensible or invisible world. We often know each other are near when we do not see each other or hear each other speak. The old common saying is born of a law deeper than coincidence or mere accident: "Speak about an angel and he soon appears." How often this "happens," and how often two together speak up on the same subject at once, or when one speaks of a thing for another to say: "I was just thinking about that." Such is the mysterious connection of mind with mind. This is called psychology.

One mind can mentally impress another. This is an established fact. The proximity of the other world to this keeps up a continual apprehension in the human mind of its existence. If there is another world of disembodied minds it is not incompatible with the known laws of mind to suppose that they impress us. We often feel that they are near, although we cannot see them. This is psychics, and there is no radical difference between this and psychology.

Some receive mental impressions more easily than others; some have mental impressions so vivid that they know it; others are hard to impress mentally; and this accounts for the fact that with some the faith in immortality is a vivid certainty, while with others it is dim, uncertain and vague. Faith is a psychic impression: it is the apprehension of things unseen; it is produced by the agency of invisible forces ever present and acting on the human mind.

Hence to get rid of the faith or impression of immortality the eternal world of intelligences would have to be abolished and destroyed, or the wire of connection between minds in the body and out of the body would have to be broken. This done, and the sentiment of immortality would soon fade from the human mind. You cannot get rid of it by arguing against it, or by denying it or asking questions about it which the mind cannot answer. The silent voice of the invisible ones will control the thoughts and impressions of the mind in spite of the noise and cavils of doubt.

The influence of this psychic force upon the human mind is recognized by the poets. It runs as a golden thread through all literature. Picking up Longfellow's poems, my eye soon fell upon these stanzas:

"When the hours of day are numbered,
And the voices of the night
Wake the better soul that slumbered
To a holy, calm delight.

Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door;
The beloved, the true-hearted,
Come to visit me once more.

Uttered not, yet comprehended,
Is the spirit's voiceless prayer;
Soft rebukes in blessings ended,
Breathing from their lips of air.

Oh! though oft depressed and lonely,
All my fears are laid aside
If I but remember only
Such as these have lived and died."

Concessions of Vaccinators.

To the Editor—Sir: Adverting to the remarks of certain correspondents in your ably conducted journal, I desire to state, if courteously permitted, that the cause of medical freedom in particular, like that of liberty and justice generally, is not, in my humble opinion, likely to be wisely or virtuously promoted by clash of arms and brutish violence, either on the part of oppressors or oppressed. In brief, sir, I have no sympathy whatever with any force in matters pertaining to the science of health, public or private, except that lasting power or strength of efficacy which belongs to the armament of reason, according to logic, based on a careful, patient, well-conducted series of reiterated experimental trials. In a debate following one of my lectures on "Smallpox and Vaccination," delivered in Hope Hall, Liverpool (next door, by the way, to the Medical Institution), the following concessions of vaccinators were yielded or admitted in the presence of almost thousands then, but not now, in thralldom:

"Lymph has undergone a long human transmission, and lost its prophylactic influence.

"Smallpox, after vaccination, is often severe and mortal, independently of the number of vaccinal scars, or whether one vesicle or six vesicles."

"Mortality increasing with each epidemic in the best vaccinated towns, is proof conclusive that vaccination has not now the victory over smallpox which vaccinators formerly claimed for it."

"Other diseases than cow-pox, especially syphilis and chronic eruptions, are now conveyed into the system of previously healthy children."

"Matter taken from smallpox, horse-pox, swine-pox and cow-pox, is at present mixed up with human diseases, and when used as lymph may be called 'pure,' though very impure, no test of purity being known to vaccinators beforehand, but afterward only by the symptoms of recognized diseases."

"We are far from denying vaccine disasters, or injuries done to children, and think that under all circumstances the operation should no longer be compulsory."

"We have no sympathy with official despotism."

I think, sir, such facts as these concessions of vaccinators demonstrate should find more general acceptance in Oldham and elsewhere.

Yours with respect,
WILLIAM HITCHMAN,
Member of the Royal College of Surgeons.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE:

BENEFITS HOPED FOR FROM ITS ATTAINMENT,

By JULIA WARD HOWE.

The Baptist tabernacle at San José, Cal., was completely filled recently by an audience of more than average intelligence to hear an evening lecture by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, of Boston, on "The benefits, general and particular, that women may hope to derive from the exercise of the Suffrage." The Times of that city did itself the credit of presenting a good report of her remarks, from which account we present the following:

The progress of society, said the speaker, is represented by the progress of its ideals. In the Pentateuch are related bloody conquests by Israelites, the records of which now bring a shudder of aversion to men and women alike. The new ideal of womanhood is one of the greatest forces of the century, and it is visibly improving her bodily condition. Some years ago, when it was first proposed that women should be permitted to enter medical colleges, their authorities rose up in unison, protesting that the sex had not health enough to stand the strain which the course of study would impose upon their vital forces. And on one occasion Dr. Edward Clarke, in the presence of such great men as Prof. Agassiz and Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, lectured down to us on those miserable bodies of ours which would be brought to grief and ruin if compelled to sustain the strain of a college course. Yet, somehow, young women, in actual experience, bear this strain as well as young men.

The body of woman or man, born a natural body, can be developed also into a spiritual body, becoming thereby active instead of passive. The womanly idea has been something passive and passional. Adah Isaacs Menken speaks of a "dead beauty," ornamented ghosts which bring no life because they have none. The children of such parents inherit deadness of soul, and are mere mummies. If, by some unusual conditions, the higher life should measurably exist in them, it is systematically poisoned out, and they are compelled to lead spiritless, routine lives. In the body of this death-in-life we see the artificial smile and the skin-deep, superficial eyes. Margaret Fuller wrote of ladies who from their gondolas ascended the marble staircases of Venetian palaces and "exchanged with each other the customary galvanized grimaces." Such are but corpses, the face bound in a net of seeming, the muscles unserviceable through compression, the circulation of the blood impeded, their feet tortured by high heels at the back and sorely pinched in front—woman given over to be bound hand and foot in pain.

With free women, true to their higher nature, by contrast there is activity of brain; the eyes—no longer glazed—express the life within; their meaning lips express pleasure only when it is real; the lungs have free play, and the blood is therefore fully oxygenated; their whole frame has the poise of power; there is a natural grace of figure, and their walk, their feet being free from compression, shows the natural grace so conspicuous in Italian women not of the fashionable classes.

Next to the human brain, the human hand is one of the most wonderful of creations. If the brain receives from the Creator ten talents, the hand will receive five. But the hands of fashionable women are as useless as the feet of Chinese women, and chiefly utilized for the display of finger rings. These miserable caricatures of women will pass away when women can have free access to truth and justice.

The value of the suffrage is that it opens a vista of opportunities by the removal of arbitrary limitations. A German philosopher says that the race cannot live on well without a belief in immortality, because the contrary view involves a limitation of the scope of the faculties to too narrow a field. So of the limitations of women which isolate them from the great issues of society. This limitation of suffrage to one sex is defended on the ground that a position in politics is not a true one for woman, because we look to her for morality, purity and self-sacrifice. If, however, political inferiority involves moral superiority how would it do to apply the same rule to men, and exclude them from the franchise?

There are three things that are especially needed. First, a better world to work in; second, better work to do; and third, better ability to do it.

Emerson said that it was enough for us to do in the world if we paid our debts and kept clean. Women often have also to pay their husband's debts, and keep their children clean.

It had been said to advocates of woman suffrage, "You don't want the suffrage, for you will not vote, but your cook will." It might have been said of Christianity that it was only of use to beggars; yet it had become a power. In New York taxes were paid to keep the city clean, but it was reeking with filth, because the money was stolen. Had the mothers of New York the suffrage, they would see that their children should not be poisoned by living in dirt. Surely the public does not want to cheat the public; and the more the basis of power is extended the more likely will the current of public opinion become broader and stronger so as to sweep past the eddies.

One object to this extension is that it would "increase the ignorant vote." This is better than the objection that preceded it—"we have all the rights we want." The Jewess Esther, surrounded with the means of gratifying every want, could not sleep because her people were oppressed. The blood of Miriam and Deborah was in her veins. Shall we, because "we have all the rights we want," be indifferent to lifting the whole race?

In Massachusetts this fear of the ignorant vote was the principal weapon of the fashionable women who sent delegates to the Legislature and engaged lawyers to speak for them against woman suffrage. On one occasion a woman, said to represent labor unions, petitioned against woman suffrage, and used very abusive language against its advocates. One of the questions presented to the legislative committee for answer was: "In the event of woman suffrage, would not intelligent women and women of character stay away from the polls and ignorant women crowd to the polls?" William Lloyd Garrison replied: "It seems to me the present occasion is a sufficient answer to the question: here are women of character and education petitioning for the suffrage, and here is ignorance petitioning against it."

On one occasion she had come to the New York Nineteenth Century Club to answer Rabbi Guptil, who was to speak against it. He wrote to her previously for information as to works advocating it. She gave it to him; he read them, and when he came to discuss the subject stated that he had become a believer in that which he had undertaken to oppose.

There are evils which in the weaving are silken webs, but in the breaking become steel. So if we undermine the sentiment of justice, which is indispensable to the life of free institutions, by denying the right of suffrage, the consequences may be next to impossible to remedy. The changing currents of society may alter the centres of wealth and influence; but from the heights of equality and humanity there can be no decline; and Justice, when lifted up, will draw all the world to her.

☞ I always took an interest in your paper. I read its columns from week to week, and the Message Department was my especial favorite. I tried honestly to verify what was given in this way, and whenever I was able to verify a message it did me a great deal of good. Sometimes I found a little mistake in what was given, but I did n't pick and hack at it, and think it was the medium or you people here making up things; I tried to reconcile it with the idea that spirits must have a very hard time in getting back, and that when they get hold of a machine, in their eagerness and haste, they don't stop to think whether they have got it in special working order for their use or not, and I have found out since I went over that that is exactly the idea, and that a great many more truthful statements are made than mistaken ones, so I feel you are doing a good work.—*Spirit James H. Free Thought.

RE-INCARNATION.

BY R. S. WOOLFORD.

The argument pro and con upon this "perplexing" theme will continue until its truth is generally proven to the comprehension of the masses. This auspicious time will not be in our generation on earth, but that it will come before the expiration of the next century we have been assured by those invisibles who have taught it us orally. To rightly comprehend reïncarnation, we must bear in mind:

First. That the soul did not always exist as an individuality.

Second. That every existence away from soul-life (so to speak) is a prison-life of limitation and varied degrees of mental blindness.

Third. That there is no personal God, but that it is collective life in all its phases which constitutes the great oneness of all life.

"God made man after his own image, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," is about the inspiration that Moses received upon this vexed question, and Moses clothed the inspiration with language adapted to the comprehension of his followers; and here the case has rested with mankind.

The soul is the product of an affiliative blending of two soul-angels, for the purpose of returning unto universal nature what they have received from nature—a living soul. The negative side of this infantile living soul is the emanation essences of all material worlds up to the time of its soul-conception; the positive is the concentrated love of its soul-parents, and it is this positive that never sleeps or dies.

These soul-infants must be educated, so that in time they will become the equals of their soul-parents in experience-wisdom. To do this solar systems are "created," and like clocks their running days are fixed, as also the quota of infant souls that are to be trained within their radius. Each solar system has its guiding angel, which you are at liberty to worship as God, if you choose to do so.

The infant souls of each solar system are divided into reliefs—first, second and third. This angel has his subordinates, and so well organized is the "army of this angel" that the effect of their united labors is to the finite mind as the master strokes of a personal God. Those incased in flesh are the third relief, or the workers amid the grosser elements of nature, and in order to impel them to labor earnestly, the second relief, or those who have passed out of a material body, and are now living in its counterpart (a spiritual, or merely a more refined matter body), inspire the earth-workers with promises of special rewards. The first relief constitutes those who have passed out of a material, as also a spirit body, and, like the prodigal son, are again with their soul-parents, enjoying a feast, a recreation. Now, it is from this latter state of existence that reïncarnation takes place. The only difference between one of these prodigal soul-sons or daughters and an infantile soul-son or daughter is, that one class has been to the "front and fought amid the battles of life," the other class has not.

We have not here touched upon the journey of the soul in its subdivided expressions through the lower forms of life—mineral, vegetable and living—below man. We have been told that it requires about fifteen hundred years, on an average, to pass from earth-life again to soul-life. There being no partiality in the purposes of this angel we have spoken of (calling him and her by what names you may), each soul is required to pass through a discordant earth-life, as well as a harmonious one, a brutal as well as an angelic one.

But the emotions—soul-ripples—of these imprisoned souls on earth disintegrate the atoms composing material worlds; and as this disintegration proceeds, the refined counterparts become more beautiful, until finally the "spirit spheres" will be in the near future a thousand times more beautiful in their contour, residences, etc., than they were ages ago, or even now.

Our solar sun is the home (the office) of this angel, and its light is but the materialized light of its dual soul-life. This dual angel was a mortal long before our solar system was evolved, and it was his hand that evolved it. All his and her knowledge were evolved just as you are acquiring knowledge to-day; and what they are now you shall be some day. The soul-angels create space, consequently collectively there was no beginning to life, and there is no limit to the achievements of soul-life when individualized.

Christ said: "I take upon myself the sins of the world," and they were heavy to bear. He did this sympathetically, not literally. Let any sensitive attempt the same and report results. If they do not find themselves in mental torment they will have succeeded in carrying a heavier load than either Confucius, Socrates or Christ could carry. It is too much for any mortal; therefore this angel rules that all must ultimately carry their own sins, and through the emotional side of their nature burn them to ashes, through the process of many reëmbodiments, until finally, like a body of light, they will return to the soul-centre of light, and from thence, like a comet, will be able to pass all material worlds in review, as on its journey the soul seeks more interior unfoldment.

The question is often asked: "Why do I not know who I was before I was born on earth?" If you did know, and for what purpose you came, your life would be void of that intensity, that fervor which is necessary for soul-expansion. In other words, this knowledge given to you prematurely would defeat the very purposes for which you were reïncarnated. But in all cases where the mortal ever obeys conscience, and does not stoop that thereby thrift may follow fawning, he and she—just as soon as the great object for which they came has been accomplished—will have this knowledge given them; also its burden, for know you not that when this is given you, and this light floods your soul, you have comprehended God, and from that time on to the day of your exit from this world, you are dead to the world, and can no longer enjoy it as others around you do? You have simply graduated, some may say, prematurely.

Minister's wife (Sunday morning)—"Is it possible, my dear, that after all you have said about Sunday newspapers, you are reading one?" Minister (very much hurt)—"You ought to know me better than that, Maria; this is the last evening's paper."—Epoch.

RODNEY'S RIDE.

In that soft mid-land where the breezes bear
The north and the south on the genial air,
Through the county of Kent, on affairs of state,
Rode Cæsar Rodney, the delegate.

Burly and big, and bold and bluff,
In his three-cornered hat and his suit of snuff,
A foe to king George and the English state
Was Cæsar Rodney, the delegate.

Into Dover village he rode apace,
And his kinsfolk knew, from his anxious face,
It was matter grave that had brought him there,
To the counties three upon Delaware.

"Money and men we must have," he said,
"Or the Congress falls and our cause is dead.
Give us both and the king shall not work his will—
We are MEN, since the blood of Bunker Hill!"

"Holo Rodney, ho! you must save the day,
And your vote alone may decide its fate!"

Answered Rodney then: "I will ride with speed;
It is Liberty's stress; it is Freedom's need.
When stands it?" "To-night. Not a moment spare,
But ride like the wind, from the Delaware."

"Ho, saddle the black! I've but half a day,
And the Congress sits eighty miles away—
But I'll be in time, if God grants me grace,
To shake my fist in King George's face."

He is up; he is off! and the black horse flies
On the northward road ere the "God-speed!" dies.
It is gallop and spur, as the leagues they clear,
And the clustering mile-stones move a-rear.

It is two of the clock; and the fleet hoofs fling
The Fieldsboro' dust with a clang and cling.
It is three; and he gallops with slack rein where
The road winds down to the Delaware.

Four; and he spurs into Newcastle town.
From his panting steed he gets him down—
And off speeds Rodney, the delegate.

It is five; and the beams of the western sun
Tinge the spires of Wilmington, gold and dun;
Six; and the dust of the Chester street
Flies back in a cloud from his courser's feet.

It is seven; the horse-boat, broad of beam,
At the Schuylkill ferry crawls over the stream—
And at seven-fifteen by the Rittenhouse clock
He flings his rein to the tavern Jock.

The Congress is met; the debate's begun,
When into the Hall, not a moment late,
Walks Cæsar Rodney, the delegate.

Not a moment late! and that half-day's ride
Forwards the world with a mighty stride:—
For the Act was passed, ere the midnight stroke
O'er the Quaker City its echoes woke.

At Tyranny's feet was the gauntlet flung;
"We are free!" all the bells through the colonies rung,
And the sons of the free may recall with pride
The day of delegate Rodney's ride.

Banner Correspondence.

Minnesota.

ST. PAUL.—E. F. B. writes: "In the summer of 1832 my father came from Cambridgeport, Mass., to visit me (then a resident of Troy, N. Y.). He was a man of more than ordinary physical development, whose health had never been subject to any special disturbance—in short, was often quoted as one of almost gigantic strength and will-force. A few days after his arrival he met an old friend, a former resident of Cambridgeport, who invited him to make him a visit at his residence in Albany County; and as an incentive to his acceptance, told him that there was good woodcock-shooting in his meadows, excellent fishing in his immediate neighborhood—that he had guns, ammunition and fishing tackle in abundance, and withal a first-class game dog at his service. My father accompanied him home, telling me that he would return in one week.

I was engaged in a manufacturing business, my time and thought absorbed in preparation for autumnal trade, and his absence escaped my mind entirely, when the following occurrence prompted me to immediate action: I dreamed (or thought I dreamed) that in the evening's twilight I was walking along the tow-path of the Northern or Champlain Canal, near its junction with the Erie Canal, opposite the city on the west side of the Hudson River, and directly opposite me I saw the figure of a large man, enrobed in what appeared a white sheet, with a bandage passing under his chin and tied upon the top of his head, on the tow-path of the Erie. I thought it a singular costume for an evening's exercise, and gave it no further consideration until I arrived at the junction of the two tow paths, when, to my surprise, he was standing by my side, his face turned toward me; and, to my greater surprise, it was what appeared to be the corpse of my father. The shock of so singular an encounter awoke me; but I thought it only a dream, and shortly dropped to sleep again.

I should think it about an hour after that the same occurrence was repeated. I became somewhat nervous, left my bed and sat pondering over it by the window until I satisfied my mind that it was but a reflection of my first experience, and again laid down, was soon asleep, and for the third time I had a like experience. I immediately arose, went to the friend's home where I supposed my father remained, and as I arrived his friend came out the door. I asked if my father was still with him. 'Yes,' was his answer, 'but he is much better, and the doctor thinks he will recover.' He then told me that for several days they had thought his case was hopeless, and that he positively forbade their advising me of his condition. I went to him, and his countenance was the very counterpart of the one I had seen in my dream (if it was a dream). He lived but ten days, and when laid out preparatory to his burial he appeared clad in the same white robe, with the same white bandage above referred to, and every feature was identical with that which I had three times, in as many hours, witnessed in my sleep. I will add that I had never been over the ground defined in my supposed dream at the time this occurred, but to gratify my curiosity I afterward did so, and identified every object associated with the event.

Was this a dream? was it a vision? or did the spirit of my father withdraw from its earthly tenement to prepare me for its final exit?"

ONSET.—"Observer" writes: "I desire to make a few observations: One of your correspondents in a recent BANNER OF LIGHT confused things badly; the management of the Association was placed in a peculiar situation, and was surprised that a notice should appear announcing that the Middleboro Band would be present on the opening day—as the officers had not given it any thought, and knew nothing of it until they read the announcement in the letter referred to. The band was not present.

Again were the members of the Board astonished that this correspondent should make the same report to your paper that has been going the rounds of the secular press, to wit: that a saving of two miles' distance would be made by purchasing tickets in certain ways.

If financial individual interest was not prominent at Onset, doubtless there would be more harmony; it takes money to run or support a camp-meeting; there is no question but that it is for the interest of Onset to have good successful sessions, and all who attend the meetings should be willing to work for the interest of the same.

Thus far the Association has depended largely for the paying of speakers and music, etc., upon the small royalty from each passenger coming over the Old Colony Railroad, and it is for this purpose that the management desires all who visit Onset to purchase tickets to Onset, thus aiding directly in contributing to the fund from which the platform is to be supplied and the running expenses met. Is there really anything wrong in their request?"

NEWTON.—A correspondent residing in this place speaks highly, from personal experience, of the medial powers (trance and business) of Mrs. M. E. Walker, of 1469 Washington street, Boston, whom she has ever found to be reliable in statement to her patrons and sincere in her devotion to the angel-world.

Missouri.

KANSAS CITY.—Adrian B. Ormerod expresses great satisfaction with the BANNER OF LIGHT, taking special interest in the Message Department, which he thinks cannot be too highly appreciated by both spirits and mortals as a means of intercommunion. He recommends spiritual culture to every individual as an inexhaustible source of happiness. "I have," he says, "been a Spiritualist but a short time. A conviction of the truths of Spiritualism came to me when about to relinquish all hope of a future life, and that conviction has proved to be to me of inestimable value. Lyman C. Howe gave excellent lectures here, and the seed he planted will in due time yield a good harvest, though, as far as human vision can see, much of it fell by the wayside."

ST. LOUIS.—Samuel Penberthy writes, June 24th: "The First Association of St. Louis has elected new officers for the present term: G. E. Williams, President, No. 2705 Dickson street; Recording Secretary, Samuel Penberthy, Hotel Western, 3d and Carr streets."

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—Harry Millinet writes that he has attended several séances held by Mrs. Effie Moss for materialization, at one of which "Winona," an Indian spirit, came and treated him for deafness, and at the same time gave his wife a number of tests. An average of three spirits came to each of the sitters; those accustomed to doing so walked around the room, sang and conversed in clear, audible voices. He says: "While Mrs. Moss was entranced and standing outside of the cabinet by the side of my wife, there would gradually appear near the medium in mid air a female spirit known as Egyptia, who, after remaining visible for a minute, would gradually dematerialize in plain view of the circle. On some occasions spirits stood under the full glare of gaslight gazing at the circle, the color of their eyes being plainly seen. I trust the spirit-world will prolong the life of this worthy medium. All charges of deceit by the press of this city against her are false in every particular, as scores of Spiritualists will testify."

Connecticut.

WILLIMANTIC.—W. D. Clark, Secretary, writes: "The First Society of Spiritualists held its last meeting of the season Sunday, June 24th. Prof. W. F. Peck occupied the platform, as he had done most acceptably through the month of June. His lecture in the evening on 'Thomas Paine' was exceedingly fine. A portait of Mr. Paine, presented us by the Boston Investigator, hung in the rear of the platform, and under it a motto from his works. We thank the Investigator very much for so kindly remembering us. We also thank those who have so liberally contributed to our aid, making it thus far the most successful season we have had for several years."

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—A brief essay upon "The Aims of Art," by G. F. Watts, is followed by an interesting "Personal View of Japanese Art," which the writer, Mortimer Menpes, considers to be of "intense and extraordinary vitality, in the sense that it is no mere exotic cultivation of the skillful, no mere graceful luxury of the rich, but a part of the daily lives of the people." The writer "shudders to imagine" what even an uneducated Japanese would think of some of our so-called "Japanese rooms," which in most cases would be to him displays of bad taste and bad art. Mr. Menpes, who is an English artist, has spent much time in Japan, and writes from personal knowledge of his subject. Eight illustrations are given. An historical paper upon "The Crown; Its Growth and Development," will attract the attention of every reader. Sixteen engravings of crowns are given, from "The Votive Crown" of the seventh century, found in Spain, to the English crown made in 1833. Additional papers of interest are, "Old Arts and Modern Thoughts," No. II. of "Current Art," and "Charles Dickens and His Less Familiar Portraits." The frontispiece is an engraving of Hellbuth's "Summer Day." Of the full-page illustrations "Niobe," from the picture by Solomon, engraved by Jonnard, is worthy of special note. New York: Cassell & Co.

ST. NICHOLAS.—A spirited frontispiece is in illustration of Huldah Morgan's wide awake story for boys, "Ringing in the Fourth." Equally in keeping with "the day we celebrate" is "Rodney's Ride," a stirring ballad of the Revolution, by E. S. Brooks, illustrated by R. B. Birch. In "Dogs of Noted Americans," sketches and pictures are given of the canine faithful friends and social companions of John Burroughs, T. B. Aldrich and Frank R. Stockton, that of Aldrich said to assist his master in editing the Atlantic so far as to receive the mail from the postman and carry it to the library. In "Recollections of the Naval Academy," a graduate of Annapolis, H. Abert Johnson, describes the methods by which naval officers are trained, several fine illustrations by the author adding much to the interest of his narrative. W. J. Abbot explains by what succession of circumstances a pig caused the war of 1812. New chapters are given of "Drill," also of "Two Little Confederates." A. V. R. Eastlake gives a Japanese Cradle Song, with music, and an English version, and tells how babies are managed in Japan. New York: The Century Co. Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—The author of "A Step in the Dark" commences a new serial story entitled "For the Good of the Family." A short completed story is given in two chapters: "Oliver and I," illustrated by Ludlow, and a one chapter story, "Mrs. Van Koert's Teapot." "A 1 at Lloyd's" concisely describes a famous London institution, and much information of a practical value is given in "Hard of Hearing," "A Chapter on Sweet Pickles," "The Garden" and "What to Wear." The engravings are excellent, and the whole number ditto. New York: Cassell & Co.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—"Psychometry," "Physiognomy," and "Language of the Hand" are among the subjects treated upon in the July number. Dr. Cetlinski contributes a translation from the French of an article upon "Epistaxis, or Bleeding of the Nose," giving information of much value. Of the remaining contents are "A Curious Pathological Phenomenon," "Physical Decay of Cities," "Relation of Exercise to Health," and "Food Adulteration." New York: 206 Broadway.

FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM. By Warren Chase. A Sequel to "The Life-Line of the Lone One," an autobiography of the author, as The World's Child, who gave the first public lectures in this country in defense of modern spirit intercourse, and whose name is first on the list of calls for copies of "Nature's Divine Revelations," when in press in 1847. Boston: Colby & Rich, publishers. 1888. Price, $1,00.

The author, now well advanced in life, has given in this work a detailed account of his varied life and experiences. In the first chapter he refers to internal and external forebodings of social, political and religious convulsions. In the following eight chapters various subjects and incidents are considered, embracing the birth of Spiritualism, the first Spiritualist paper, early workers, biographical sketches, career in politics, incidents and events in the path of life, social, political and religious creed, extracts and scraps of correspondence, poetical selections from various sources, etc., etc. The author has a large acquaintance, who, no doubt, will be very much interested in his "Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum."—The Religio-Philosophical Journal.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

She was the second companion who has been called from his side within five years by the white-robed messenger called Death to leave the mundane and enter the supermundane sphere of life.

She leaves a large circle of friends and acquaintances to mourn her early departure. She was held in high esteem by all who knew her. Her husband also has the sympathy of many friends in his deep bereavement.

Those who know that it is only the earthly body that is laid aside, and that the loved one has entered a condition where pain, sickness and death can never enter; has left a world of mental darkness and entered a world of light ("for there shall be no night there"), and has joined the innumerable company that no man can number, and especially loved ones who have gone before, and can, under favorable conditions, communicate with us—these have consolation indeed! DANIEL K. SMITH.

Ashland, N. H.

From Toledo, Ohio, on Wednesday morning, June 13th, of Bright's Disease, Charles W. Johnson, of Defiance, O., aged 19 years 9 months and 17 days.

"Charley," as every one loved to call him, was a young man of more than ordinary ability and intelligence, one who bid fair to live a life of great usefulness. He was left an orphan at the age of twelve years, and went to live with his uncle, who early induced him to unite with the Methodist Church, but he imbibed spiritualistic ideas from his mother, who was a medium, and in his eighteenth year espoused the cause of Spiritualism. He was one who never hid his light under a bushel, and never gave offence. One of his first acts was to subscribe for the BANNER OF LIGHT, which he continued taking until too feeble to read. "He thought of death as but the birth into that life which God, the Supreme Intelligence, has in his infinite love provided for all his children—'The True Life.'"

From Concord, Mass., June 18th, 1888, Mrs. Mary A. Collier, aged 62 years and 7 months.

She was wife of Asa Collier, who preceded her to spirit-life ten months ago. A son and daughter remain to mourn the loss of the visible presence of a noble mother and a truly charitable and generous woman. Her deeds of love and kindness have been many, and many poor souls will mourn that she can comfort and bless them no more in the form. Dr. Buffum sang sweetly "Only a Thin Veil," and "Sweet Dreamland Faces," in his own inimitable manner. The Unitarian minister read and prayed, and the writer made a few remarks, while the immortal woman sought her home among the angels. M. S. WOOD.

A REVIEW
OF THE
SEYBERT COMMISSION APPOINTED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
TO INVESTIGATE
MODERN SPIRITUALISM

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

MAN AND HIS RELATIONS. By S. B. BRITTAN. The author of this volume deals earnestly with the startling facts which have puzzled the brains of the metaphysical philosophers of every age and country; and in his masterly classification of Sensorial, Intellectual and Moral Phenomena he has grasped the greatest curiosities of the mental world.

The contents of this Book may be briefly summarized by simply quoting the titles of the several Chapters in the order in which the subjects are treated by the author. These appear in consecutive relation as follows:

The Tenant and the House. Electro-Physiological Discoveries. Circulation of the Animal Fluids. Conditions of Vital Harmony. Physical Causes of Vital Derangement. Voluntary and Involuntary Faculties. Influence of the Passions on the Secretions. The Mind as a Destructive Agent. Renovating Powers of the Human Mind. Mental and Vital Powers of Resistance. Evils of Excessive Procreation. Marking Offspring, or Mental Electrotyping on Vital Surfaces. Influence of Objects and Ideas on Mind and Morals. Relations of Mind to Personal Beauty. Relations of Mind to the Character of Offspring. The Senses and their Functions. Psychometric Perception. Philosophy of Fascination. Animal and Human Magnetism. Magnetism as a Therapeutic Agent. Importance of Magnetism in Surgery. The Phantom Creation. Psychological Hallucinations. Mental Telegraphing. The Faculty of Abstraction. Philosophy of Sleep. Psychological Mysteries of Sleep. Inspirations of the Night. Somnambulism and Somniloquism. The Clairvoyant Vision. The Law of Prophecy. Apparitions of the Living. States Resembling Death. Philosophy of Inspiration. Rationale of Worship. Natural Evidences of Immortality.

These great themes are treated in a truly philosophical spirit, and illustrated by an immense array of facts, which are here carefully classified and clearly explained for the first time. This Book has elicited a surprising number of critical reviews and highly complimentary notices from leading journals and distinguished individuals at home and abroad.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

The Betrayers of Spiritualism.

One of the latest discourses delivered through the organization of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, in Chicago, embodied an effective arraignment of the "betrayers of Spiritualism." She set out with the assertion that no cause can be betrayed if it is true, any more than it is possible to betray the light of the sun, the glory of the stars, or the beauty of the earth and heavens. Hence there can be no fear that the truth that is in Spiritualism will suffer from either avowed foes or professed friends, yet it is true that the advocates of every cause have been betrayed and persecuted. Every movement has its Judases. A tradition exists in the history of the church at Jerusalem, that Judas did not betray his Master from any ill will or desire that the latter should perish, but that he boastingly accepted the challenge of the thirty pieces of silver, as many are accustomed to do in the cause they espouse, believing that Jesus could extricate himself from his enemies when the hour came, and would rise triumphantly above them. He evidently did not comprehend the enormity of his deed. He may have wished to show those who reviled and despised Jesus that the latter could perform wonders, and the thirty pieces of silver were taken as one would accept a challenge. Many a man does a similar act in behalf of his friend, and is thought none the worse of for it.

Every cause, remarked the speaker, has not only its foes on the outside, but its mistaken advocates within; its professed friends, and those who betray it by their individualism, that is, their selfish desire to mistake their own personality for truth itself. Truth is not harmed by its enemies. Spiritualism has never spread and prospered more than it has recently since it has been so hotly and concertedly assailed in the pulpit and press. Forty years ago, it was "humbug," "imposture," "imagination," "electricity," and a number of other things, until the church combined to call it "Satan." For a time it was let alone, because the preachers did not profess to be able to deal with Satan, and so it went on increasing with greater rapidity than any single subject has made headway in the same space of time. After some twenty years of being ignored, a fresh attack is made all along the line, as it is discovered that it has by no means died out. Now it is receiving new attention; attention from without in the form of attacks on Spiritualism, and of addresses by presidents of theosophical societies who would have nothing to say unless they talked about Spiritualism. It has thus become a fashion among the intellectualists, by at least one of whom it is claimed as being at the very foundation of Theosophy. As for Talmage, the speaker thought that anything said in favor of Spiritualism from such a source would be against it.

But the church as a whole has ceased its attacks on Spiritualism, for the reason that it is dawning on the enlightened clergy of every denomination, many of whom were named by the speaker, that possibly Spiritualism may be the foundation for the church of the future, and hence it behooves them to wait and watch its influence on the welfare of the church of the present. As a pertinent illustration of the change that is going on, it was narrated that in the psychological department of the British Association of Science, Mr. Alfred R. Wallace presiding, at one of its meetings, some person in the rear of the room, when the company were invited to relate their experience on psychological subjects, rose and said that he did n't know anything about Spiritualism, "but I think——" he was going on to say. "Stop!" interrupted Mr. Wallace; "we are not here to listen to what you do not know, but to what you do know. If you do not know anything about it, please do not say anything." Ignorance is excusable, but to be ignorant and still not know it, ought to carry punishment enough for any one.

There are outspoken and avowed Spiritualists in the church ranks, and they are as moral, upright, honest and intelligent, as any class of people in the world. There is no condemnation for those who are undecided between the church and Spiritualism, who do not betray the truth yet have not the courage to avow it. Neither are they to be condemned who borrow the light of Spiritualism to use it as their own, who take liberal teachings and ideas from Spiritualism and preach them from pulpits entrenched behind church authority. But, said the speaker, those are to be held the betrayers of the truth who are within the ranks of Spiritualism, and who consider their own personality as more important than truth itself, who make the mistake of thinking themselves to have been appointed for a special mission or purpose, who think the truth is not strong enough to declare itself and purify and work its way into the hearts of men, who take with them into Spiritualism the desire to manage things, who wish it may serve them without knowing it. He betrays the truth who mistakes himself for a cause, and stands between the light of heaven and any who are receiving that light.

In every cause there is some one who, seeing the light enter the crevices of his narrow dwelling, calls men in from the broad sunshine and warns them against a cloud, bidding them see the light as he has prepared it for them. But no cause ultimately suffers from such expressions; it is only individuals who suffer. There is an inevitable variety of views in every new movement. Spiritualism is broad enough to give all the privilege of thinking and judging for themselves. Nay, it will be worse for those who do not thus think and judge for themselves. Spiritualism is founded upon the truth of immortality, and therefore it cannot be overthrown. Faith in immortality is as wide as the human race. Spiritualism declares itself to be one with every manifestation of the spirit in all ages, to be the same power in a different name and form that has appeared to all in demonstration of spiritual existence, and announces itself to be one with angels and ministering spirits, tokens, signs and wonders of a supermundane agency that have gone unexplained. It cannot itself suffer, but in its presentation to the world it may.

The foundation of a truth can in no way be shaken by the falsehood or betrayal of any one professing it. Human intelligence is fully capable of understanding the manifestations of Spiritualism. One man's evidence of spiritual intercourse and communion is more valuable than the denials or doubts of a thousand. Spiritualism is capable of its own defense. It makes no claim that its advocates are superhuman, that its mediums are more than human; but it does insist that they shall be treated as human beings and not be suffered to be betrayed on its own altars. Judas becomes a saint by the side of any one in the ranks of Spiritualism who turns traitor, informer, detective, and would accuse every body of being fraudulent except himself. The time will surely come when even the betrayer will acknowledge the light that he seeks to betray.

What Labor Wants.

It has been well said that the grievance of the working class is not the less real because they are not at all times able to make a clear and complete statement of it. It exists all the same, whether they can define it or not. And experience is teaching us all that it is a grievance which will never cease until the causes of it are as far as possible taken away. The remedy for a wrong of this character is not to be applied by any single class, since the social structure is not formed in that way, but must come from a desire and determination of the entire community to right a wrong that is so extended and serious. Therefore employers and employed, capital and labor, are to coöperate. The State and the Church are to unite in so worthy and necessary a work.

But all permanent labor reform implies increasing habits of thrift, in its turn; the visible growth of intelligence; the spread of temperance and general sobriety; and the persistent practice of all the economic virtues. Above all things, in this age of many temptations, there must be a growing hostility to the saloon and all its destroying influences. The laboring man must become the unrelenting foe to this sure destroyer of his prosperity, this ruthless robber of his self-respect, this betrayer of his peace and happiness. On this enemy he must set his foot with a determination never to take it up. If the saloon is the worst enemy of the community, it is especially so of the workingman.

It has been suggested, by way of helping on the improvement of the laborer, that children be taught and encouraged to save money by attaching a penny savings-bank to every public school, in this way inculcating in their opening minds the true principle of thrift by the practice of prudence, and teaching them that future enjoyment always costs a present sacrifice. In all the larger towns and cities, cooking-schools should be established, to instruct thoroughly in the one art whose practice lies close to the foundations of civilization. Without an adequate knowledge of this most essential of all arts, it is needless to say that no increase of wages or relieving decrease of work will bring any addition to the workingman's health or any increase to his happiness.

Courts for the conciliation and arbitration of differences should be maintained at all centres of manufacturing and mining industry, whether established by mutual agreement or by government. The former method prevails in England, the latter in France. To such courts all questions respecting wages, hours of labor, and terms of employment which may arise between employed and employers, should be invariably referred, and the decision be binding.

There is no sufficient reason why labor organizations should not exist and work under a regular charter, and thus become legally recognizable and responsible. Under so just and equitable a system it would be easy for capital to see its way to the adoption of the profit-sharing plan, according to which labor becomes more and more its own employer, and the present antagonism of interests gradually disappears. This, however, is expected to be conditioned on the increasing thrift and intelligence of the workingman, who would soon be able to convert profit-sharing into coöperation.

And in reference to taxation, it is manifestly unjust and wrong to lay taxes on the amount shown to have been expended; it ought to be laid on what is actually possessed and what is earned instead. Jevons, a recognized authority on the subject, insists that labor combinations should be perpendicular rather than horizontal: that is, that in all cases of a combination of labor and capital in one and the same concern, the competition should be with similar combinations, and not, as now, between labor on one side and capital on the other.

Let the foregoing principles be seriously discussed and thought upon by the laboring classes, and they cannot but rise to a higher and broader contemplation of their interests and welfare than ever before. Heaven never fails to help those who help themselves. There is no weapon so effective for permanent good as reason. It is never employed in vain. If persistently used by labor, which at the same time bears its ills as best it can, feeling certain that the day of its redemption draws nigh, there is no question of the triumph it will ultimately achieve. And it will come to stay. Who can picture the happy change that will be wrought in the entire social state on the successful readjustment of these most important relations?

Mr. Kellar as an "Exposer."

To superficial observers only, and those who have no knowledge and rather desire to have none of Spiritualism, the pretensions of such a professional as "the wonderful Kellar" have any weight. He occasionally gives out as a soothing palliative to those of his audience who know better than he teaches, and those who, though not avowed Spiritualists, see through the flimsiness of his pretensions, that he does not affect to duplicate what occurs in the presence of mediums, but only the tricks of those who assume to be such but are not. But this position, which the rapidly increasing number of believers in spirit phenomena forces him to occasionally take, is studiously kept out of sight in his public announcements, and those who see them are designedly given to understand that he is successfully engaged in demonstrating that the phenomena of Spiritualism in their entirety have no existence except in the skill of an expert conjurer, and that they who think otherwise are wofully deceived.

Those who are inveigled by this specious advertising to attend his performances are led to believe, or are expected to, that a few imitations of phenomena—and these a very few, but all that are within reach of a conjurer, some of them dating as far back as when Signor Blitz was a boy—constitute the all-in-all of what have been witnessed and tested by Spiritualists, when the truth is there are scores of phenomena that he cannot touch and dare not attempt to.

We are informed by one who has attended his exhibition in this city that he is very chary about explaining the modus operandi of the tricks he pretends to be identical with those of the phenomena of Spiritualism. About all he explains of these is one that is so apparent it needs no explanation; and that is the perambulation of a small table, which is effected by means of a hook attached to his wrist; just as though that accounted for the movement of a table weighing fifty or seventy-five pounds, or a piano that weighs eight hundred, with no one within ten feet of it! And yet Conjurer Kellar had the bold effrontery to say, night after night to a Boston audience, at the close of his hook-and-table performance: "This is the way all mediums do it."

In the early days of the Seybert Commission, when the indications were that that distinguished—we may be blamed by some for not now terming it that extinguished—body had taken Mr. Kellar into its confidence as a leader in its councils, he was reported in the Philadelphia Press as explaining the way in which slate-writing is done by one whom he says "floored me once for a little time, but I soon caught up with him." "How do you think he worked," exclaimed "the wonderful Kellar" exultingly. "This was the way: Before coming to the séance he wrote out a sentence on a slate in tar carbon, a material that on a dark surface is invisible, and will bear any amount of washing without coming away. When he put the slates together he burst between them a little capsule of pure hydrogen, and then quickly closed them. The gas, combining with the tar carbon, made the writing plain."

But there was no soiling of one's fingers with "tar carbon" at the Boston Museum last week; and the conjurer gave his audience only this explanation: he used his own prepared slates, on which the writing had been previously placed, (and which he stated was the "way in which Slade did it,") and would not allow any one to bring his own slates, as every medium for that phenomenon is not only willing but prefers that his sitter should.

Mr. Kellar has made great ado in claiming to perform what he calls "the cabinet trick." He does what resembles the manifestations which used to occur in presence of the Davenports, but he does not permit his cabinet to be examined, neither does he explain how the effects witnessed are produced, with the exception of those he himself performs after releasing his hands from the ropes. But as to the manner of freeing his hands his audiences are not enlightened. He did, however, undertake to explain it all in London, when the Davenports were there years ago, and he attended one of their séances in that city, at which were present a notable company, among whom was Dion Boucicault. How far Mr. K.'s explanation on the ground of trickery, of what then occurred, was to be credited, may be inferred from Mr. Boucicault's own account, over his own name, given at the time, as follows:

"While Lord Bury was stooping inside the cabinet, the door being open and the two operators seen to be sealed and bound, a detached hand was clearly observed to descend upon him, and he started back, remarking that a hand had struck him. Again, in the full light of the gas chandelier, and during an interval in the séance, the doors of the cabinet being open, and while the ligatures of the Brothers Davenport were being examined, a very white, thin, female hand and wrist quivered for several seconds in the air above. This appearance drew a general exclamation from all the party.

At the termination of this séance, a general conversation took place on the subject of what we had heard and witnessed. Lord Bury suggested that the general opinion seemed to be, that we should assure the Brothers Davenport that, after a very stringent trial and strict scrutiny of their proceedings, the gentlemen present could arrive at no other conclusion than that there was no trace of trickery in any form, and certainly there were neither confederates nor machinery; and that all those who had witnessed the results would freely state in the society in which they moved, that, so far as their investigations enabled them to form an opinion, the phenomena which had taken place in their presence were not the product of legerdemain. This suggestion was promptly acceded to by all present."

A few years since Mr. Kellar was in Calcutta; at the same time Mr. Eglinton, the English medium, was holding séances in that city. The following, from a letter sent by Mr. Kellar to the editor of the Indian Daily News, a copy of which paper containing it was sent us, explains itself:

"In your issue of the 13th of January, I stated that I should be glad of an opportunity of participating in a séance with a view of giving an unbiased opinion as to whether in my capacity of a professional prestidigitateur I could give a natural explanation of effects said to be produced by spiritual aid.

I am indebted to the courtesy of Eglinton, the spiritualistic medium now in Calcutta, and of his host, Mr. J. Meugens, for affording me the opportunity I craved.

It is needless to say I went as a skeptic, but I must own that I have come away utterly unable to explain, by any natural means, the phenomena that I witnessed on Tuesday evening. I will give a brief description of what took place."

After relating the particulars of numerous marvelous tests he received, he continues:

"Forty-eight hours before I should not have believed any one who had described such manifestations under similar circumstances.... I repeat my inability to explain or account for what must have been an intelligent force that produced the manifestations, which, if my senses are to be relied on, was in no way the result of trickery or sleight-of-hand.

(Signed) HARRY KELLAR."

Mr. Kellar's explanation of how the phenomena are produced, as given at the Museum last week, may satisfy those who have never witnessed them in the presence of mediums; but to those who have been thus privileged his "exposé" amounts only to a demonstration of how he can imitate some of them. If he were to confine himself to an exhibition of his really clever prestidigitational tricks and his remarkable mathematical powers (as demonstrated by his chessboard performance and "Psycho"), in conjunction with his fellow-performer, the Indian juggler, "Nana Sahib," whose Oriental tricks are certainly very mystifying, his entertainment would, in our opinion, be much more pleasing to his auditors than his "explanation which does not explain."

Sensible Pulpit Preaching.

We are gratified to be able to name at least one pulpit of character and influence, in these days of Talmagian assaults on Spiritualism, from which just and true utterances are to be heard in reference to the presence of spirits and their power to communicate with mortals. It is the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Syracuse, N. Y., whose occupant is Dr. Spalding. The congregation is the largest and wealthiest in that city of eighty thousand inhabitants, and the pastor enjoys an unbounded popularity. He very recently preached on the subject of spirit witnesses, admitting at the outset that the idea that spirits in heaven are interested in those here on earth has found a sure lodgment in the human mind. He said that the great hosts, whose genius is so near akin to the inspirations of the prophets and the apostles, had all along held to this glowing thought. And he quoted Edmund Spenser and John Milton in support of the assertion.

The spirit visitants, he said, were unseen, as Milton describes, because these eyes of ours are only for material objects. Nevertheless, he added, their presence is not the less real, and not less real than God's presence, or than the Spirit's own influence which we have never seen, but whose power we never doubt. This partition wall which separates the two worlds is very thin, remarked Dr. Spalding. It is nothing more than this veil of flesh, which holds our spirits only for a time, and is so soon to be rent, when our spirits shall go forth to mingle in the innumerable throng which people the air around us. Is this veil, he asked, impenetrable to them? It is not wholly so, he said, even to us. Though now we are at so many points shut in from one another by material walls, though so much of our communication with one another is restricted to these channels of sense—to speech, and touch, and sight, and hearing—yet it is not altogether so. Our minds hold communication with each other through viewless avenues, and we impress our thought upon another, sometimes with mightiest power, when every channel of sense is closed.

It is a thin partition that separates us, he repeated, that separates our spirits from one another, even when we are here in the flesh. How much thinner this partition is, he argued, to that one who has broken through the outer wall, and is free from these physical laws which surround us.

Is this dangerous ground that we are treading upon? he inquired. Perhaps it has become so to the weak and superstitious, said he, in reply, for the reason that all high ground is perilous to such; but that is no reason why a strong man should not frequent it to refresh his soul, to gain some new sense of the exceeding smallness of this material earth as it lies there under the boundless spiritual world.

He confessed that there was something inexpressibly precious to him in the truth that our holy dead still live, live for us, live with us, and are made ministering spirits to us. He called on his hearers to believe that around and over us they stand and watch like stars and sentinels of the sky; rejoicing even more fully in the fruits which we have gathered from their labors; the mother that taught us in infancy, the father that sacrificed for our comfort, the child that perhaps gave us our first lesson in faith, the friend whose counsel was sweet and whose life was an inspiration; these now coming to us, penetrating through memory and hope to our innermost spirits, loving us with an increasing ardor, beholding us with a deeper solicitude, appealing to us in ways more persuasive than of old to live worthy of ourselves, of God, and of the great hereafter.

The ceaseless noise of this world's machinery, the onward rush of our fierce passions, the untempered ambition and care of our lives, this is too loud for their gentle voices. But they speak on, and now and then, in those better periods of life, in those blessed pauses which come to us in our sorrows, in our sickness, in the twilight hours, in the midnight watches, we hear them ringing clear and beautiful as heavenly chimes—the voices deep and solemn which sound along the corridors of centuries, and those more familiar ones of those we have known and loved, saying to us, "We are near; we behold your cares; we see your conflicts."

Such is the appeal, said the speaker, which comes to every reverent heart in the best hours of its existence. What potency there is in it! It comes from those who love us best, from those who know our troubles, who themselves have passed through them, who hold us in their tender sympathy, who measure these earthly afflictions alongside of the heavenly glory, these earthly losses and gains alongside of the eternal loss and gain. "Patience" is what those who are witnessing us from the other side are saying to us. Patient continuance in well doing. Looking for no great exploits nor dazzling attainments, but doing each day's duties, doing each little service, and "having done all to stand."

This is a good spiritual discourse. Why it can be in any sense wrong or wicked to believe in spirit intercourse, when we are all the time confessing that it is spirit alone that vitalizes the universe, we are wholly unable to understand. The preachers at large are hostile to this practical belief in spirit communion, because they apprehend that it is going to divest them of their authority, and thus render their living precarious. And so it undeniably will. Nevertheless, what is real and true we all have a right to know and enjoy and profit by, whether the human institution of a priesthood survives or perishes in consequence. Verily, the light grows brighter every day.

Mediumship as a Penal Offense!

There are certain people who are willing to live on this planet with other people, on the single condition that they shall themselves rule and regulate the rest. Of this self-selected class the editor of the Brooklyn Citizen appears to be one. He makes haste to improve the occasion of Judge Gildersleeve's sentencing Madam Diss Debar to the penitentiary for six months by declaring that "it sets a precedent which it will be easy hereafter to follow."

He humanely professes to understand now "both the Mosaic mandate that witches should be put to death, and the excessive zeal which led to the burning of innocent women for witchcraft in the days of Cotton Mather." He of course means the hanging, instead of the burning, of women condemned for witchcraft, though he applauds the "excessive zeal" that led to it all the same. That is the kind of zeal he would like to see in operation.

What has been gained, he asks, by the trial and sentence in the case just specified? Listen to his answer to his own question. He says that "before we are much older it will be unnecessary to prove particular acts of fraud on the part of Spiritualist mediums in order to secure their punishment. They will come naturally under the head of vagabonds and public enemies, and be liable to arrest and punishment on sight, together with the less guilty creatures whom humanity has ordained to live as a sex and a class apart from it. Hereafter," adds this conceited specimen of intelligence, "to be a medium, to be proved to lay claim to spiritualistic powers, ought to be a sufficient cause for imprisonment, with hard labor." In short, this editorial lawgiver, who so admires the Mosaic law and loves the spirit of the days of Cotton Mather because of its "excessive zeal," demands openly that mediumship shall be made a penal offense. He calls for "a formal declaration making claim to the possession of supernatural powers in the line of mediumship," that it shall be made "a penitentiary offense." That is the way he would go to work to "purge" society of what he is pleased to call "one of its abominations."

The age we live in forbids the handling of such a spirit as his in the way he challenges reprisal. Impregnably entrenched by the rights that are guaranteed to us all in the National Constitution, in respect to freedom of conscience and the unrestrained enjoyment of religious belief, the liberal mind instinctively refuses to resent or punish even the most offensive displays of illiberality. It would be inconsistent with itself if it did so. We can tell this ferocious bigot, however, that he has greatly overshot the mark this time, and provoked only the profoundest pity and contempt of those who will condescend to notice him at all. The world is not moving along any such lines as he is traveling so satisfiedly. The day has departed for punishing free inquiry with the penitentiary!

The Mediumship

Of the future is strongly hinted at in the answer to a question on our sixth page by the guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer, when they said:

"It may be possible that the person mentioned possesses personal mediumistic qualities, and we would advise him to sit either alone or in connection with some congenial friend for the purpose of ascertaining this and of unfolding whatever powers are his. In this way it is possible for him to create a magnetic atmosphere which will be of service to his spiritual friends, and through which they may approach and communicate with him personally. We do not know that this is so, but we think it likely, and worthy the trial of investigation."

These remarks are directly in the line of a statement made through the late Mrs. J. H. Conant, to the effect that under the constant increase of spiritual knowledge now going on in the world, the advanced intelligences in spirit-life hopefully looked forward to a time when the excarnated ones would be able to approach mortals individually and directly, through a prepared channel of receptive personal conditions, without feeling the need of a third party in physical life to act as a medium for the transmission of their thought.

Barking Again!

As a canine, who having pursued a flying feline through an aperture in the garden fence, stands frantically addressing the spot whence disappeared his hoped-for prey, so the Regulars of Maine are at present surrounding the capitol at Augusta with upreared muzzles and angry shouts. They know they chased a "doctors' plot law" into the building and through the Representatives' Hall and Senate Chamber, and they refuse to believe their prize was finally lost through the veto of the late Governor Bodwell and its subsequent endorsement by the upper house.

Consequently we see them making frantic efforts to set aside the decision, and Judges Goddard and Symonds, it is reported, have placed before Judge Peters their petition for mandamus to compel the Secretary of State to place the act to regulate the practice of medicine on the state files as a law.

If any proof were needed to show the utter unconstitutionality of such proscriptive statutes, and the bitter selfishness of their progenitors, the case in Maine would fully furnish it: The people of that State do not want a doctors' plot law; the law-makers have ousted it; the press of the State have no marked interest in it, but the doctors are howling themselves hoarse with demands that the courts step in and override the veto of the Governor and the vote of the Senate, and thus force a protective monopoly bill, framed for their own particular benefit, upon the citizens as a law. They are particularly frantic at present, as they are evidently certain that it will not do for them to approach a new legislature with a demand for such a statute, and therefore their only hope lies in legal quibbling in favor of the one they think they have obtained.

☞ There is a somewhat obscure sheet in New York called "The Morning Journal." Like other sensational dailies in that metropolis it glories in misrepresenting Modern Spiritualism. It is self-evident to every student of the subject that its editor knows he misrepresents facts when he allows his reporters to write up slurring articles against bona fide mediums.

☞ Our Free Circles Tuesday and Friday of last week were recherché—so the numerous visitors asseverate. Those who did not peruse the Answers to Questions upon the sixth page of last week's BANNER, should do so on the first opportunity, as they are replete with intelligent conclusions, given in clear and unmistakable language.

But the supply is abundant all over the land.

It is said that a Cincinnati gentleman and his family, who spent the winter in Florida, became much attached while there to a colored waiting-maid and wished to bring her home with them. She agreed to come on one condition; and that was that the family should keep her forever and not sell her. Of course, this condition was accepted. The poor creature actually believed that by going to live as a servant in the North she became a slave and could be sold.

Twenty-one years ago Maximilian and his two principal officers, Miramon and Mejia, were shot by the Mexican authorities for endeavoring to subvert the republican government and create a monarchy instead. It was a deep scheme of European royalty, backed up by the Jesuits of the Catholic Church. It was well for the Mexican people that it failed. May they profit by the lesson.

"PROGRESS" is the name of a new monthly paper in this city, the second number of which is just issued. Its purpose is to advocate prohibition, woman's suffrage, the rights of laboring men and better social conditions for all. E. Norris is its managing editor. Associate editors, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Rev. O. P. Gifford, Prof. Garland and others. Publication office, 1 Columbia street, Boston. A Progress of this kind should meet with no impediment it cannot overcome.

Whereas the literary lyceum field was once the whole of New England, especially the State of Massachusetts, to-day Ohio has more lecture courses than any other State in the Union; next comes Kansas, then Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois. New York now is a better field for lecturers than New England.

"Howard," in last Sunday's Boston Globe, says "Henry J. Raymond, the founder of the New York Times, long since passed away into the shades of oblivion, rescued thence semi-occasionally by hands of affection, which, too, will soon have passed away." "Shades of oblivion," forsooth! Spirit Henry J. Raymond is more active to-day than ever in the affairs of the mundane sphere of life in a literary point of view; and he wants this fact generally understood by the press in which while here he was so deeply interested.

ADVICE TO INVESTIGATORS.—Here is a line from Ivan Panin upon which self-satisfied and narrow inquirers concerning Spiritualism can profitably ponder: "It detracts naught from the razor that it cannot cut a rock. Say not, therefore, this is false. Rather see whether thou art not the rock."

Mr. B. F. Underwood, formerly editor of The Index, more recently of The Open Court, is now editor of The Graphic News, an illustrated weekly published in Chicago, the character of which will naturally be expected to be, from "the man at the helm," liberal and progressive.

SPIDERS MAY BE BEST FRIED.—An exchange chronicles that Mrs. Fraly Goodin, of Sharpsburg, N. C., was poisoned in a strange way the other day. She was taken violently ill after drinking a cup of tea, and an examination showed a dead spider in the teakettle in which she had boiled the water for the tea.

Louis Kossuth, after being killed by telegraph several times, is yet alive at Turin, Italy—which city has been his home for the past twenty-five years. A recent visitor spoke to him of the flourishing condition of Pesth, when the great exile lamented to hear such a fine account of "the pearl of Hungary and not to be allowed to see her." He was reminded of the change a wig and a pair of spectacles would effect, but he shook his head and remarked with a glow of patriotic fervor: "It is just possible that I may see Hungary again. If Russia attacks my country I will go without a wig or disguise, and will visit every village and every city, and give my right arm in the service of my Fatherland."

A party of Latter-Day Saints undertook to kill each other near Wheeling, W. Va., last week. The saints fell to quarreling and then to fighting, and five or six were stabbed, two of them fatally.

June 28th, 1888, was the fiftieth anniversary of the coronation of QUEEN VICTORIA, of England. Salutes were fired, bells rung, and a State dinner at the castle was an occasion of great brilliancy, it is said. Spirit Prince Albert was there, unquestionably, and enjoyed the occasion, although unseen by those present. From America he sends congratulations to his Queen and people.

The most important question which agitates the good people of Boston just now is: "Are some of the city's public servants untrustworthy?" According to the reports in the Evening Record such is the fact.

The spirit of Thersites is still abroad in the land, which ought to be summarily exorcised, and doubtless will be by the higher powers at the proper time.

INGERSOLL ON RHYTHM.—At a late reception Robert G. Ingersoll expressed himself as follows to the poetess Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who was present:

"I am a great believer in rhythm, coupled with thought, of course. Do you know what rhythm is? It is the rise and fall, the swish and swing of the blood in the human frame, produced by emotion, whether in poetry or music; whether grave or gay, courageous or fearful, malicious or loving; whether the surging tides of passion, the dancing ripples of innocent joy, or the placid calm of satisfaction flowing on under the clear, bright skies of a cloudless conscience."

Susan B. Anthony announces that she is willing to retire from active work as a Woman Suffragist in favor of some one younger. She has been a great worker.

"The red hot glare that peeped into my windows at eight o'clock this morning boiled the water in the lake, roasted the fatted calf on the lawn before my door, melted the ring on the finger of the prodical son, and thrust sharp rays of torment in the very heart of despair."

A BRIEF BIT OF HISTORY.—Just one hundred years ago Benjamin Harrison, great-grandfather of the Republican candidate for President, as a delegate to the Virginia Convention opposed the ratification of the Federal Constitution. He sided with Patrick Henry on the question, but after the Constitution was ratified gave it his hearty support.

The so-called Narragansett Pier bathing costume which has recently been launched on this unsuspecting and confiding world of fashion will just about clothe a butterfly.—Boston Evening Record.

Where's Comstock?

It is a Bridge of sighs just now. The plank was too "thin."

Browns—Gad, Jack, what do you want of that sheet of postage stamps? Why, you've got a hundred there! Joans—Well, you see, I've just completed a poem, and I may—er—send it to more than one paper.—Town Topics.

"What does your father do?" asked the teacher of the new boy. "He's a contractor," was the reply. "A railroad contractor?" "No, ma'am; a sausage contractor. He ties up the ends after another man has filled 'em."

Which never ceases to enlarge itself
Till by broad spreading it disperse to naught.
—Shakespeare.

THE FAITH-HEALERS LOSING GROUND.—New York dispatches of June 30th aver that the faith cure business is now at a discount: "An illustration of this was disclosed to-day. Dr. J. Newton Scott has been practicing for five years as a 'metaphysician,' or faith-healer, most of the time in Jersey City. Business grew duller and duller. The newspapers ridiculed the faith-healing craze, and Dr. Scott's practice diminished almost to nothing. He became straightened in circumstances and despondent. This morning a caller knocked at his door in vain. The door was broken open and the doctor was found dead. He had committed suicide."

Terrible conflagrations have recently devastated Sundsvall and Umea, Sweden, causing a property loss of 45,000,000 kroner. Twelve thousand persons have been rendered homeless by the flames. Houses, forests and standing crops on farms in other districts were also burned.

Several of the great (?) daily papers of New York City are discharging many of their reporters, on the score of economy, it is said. But there are other reasons much more potent.

Last year's U. S. revenue amounted to the enormous sum of $97,000,000! What a navy we could make with that amount of money.

A justice in Indiana, who had endeavored vainly to recover $20 he had loaned an acquaintance, had the latter before him as a witness recently, and managed quietly to stir him up to an outburst of ire that just fitted a fine of $20 for contempt of court.—Gatesville (Tex.) Star.

War talk in the United States Congress and elsewhere seems to prevail. The English navy and army are about to rehearse a sham invasion and repulse. The young German Emperor is eager for war. There is prospect of stormy times in Bulgaria. Bismarck evidently regards France as by no means pacific—there he says: "The unexpected may happen at any time."

An old lady recently visiting in a prison asked one of the attendants why the prisoners received such coarse food. He told her it was to keep their blood from becoming impure. And when asked what they would do if their blood was impure, he dryly responded, "break out."

It does not require anything extraordinary in the way of intellect to shoe a horse, but there is a fortune in store for the man who can shoo a fly so that the little pest will stay shod.—Harper's Bazar.

Eleanor Kirk informs the Cape Ann Advertiser that she learns that Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, of Brooklyn, has been invited to give one of his peculiar free advertisements to a current novel which is just now making trouble in the Sabbath-schools and other quarters; which leads her to continue:

"What an advertisement that would be for Miss Rives [the author]. The more he denounced it, the more dollars it would put in her pocket. Dr. Harrison A. Tucker, the head trustee of the Tabernacle, [Mr. Talmage's Church] and the most influential spiritual medium in the United States, is a living example of this influence. His trance practice has doubled, and his sale of medicine is enormous."

☞ A reception was held, according to the printed card in THE BANNER, at the parlors of Dr. S. K. Rich, 566 Columbus avenue, on Sunday evening last, in aid of the invalid medium, Mrs. Dimond, on which occasion, our correspondent informs us, remarks appropriate to the occasion were made by Mrs. M. F. Butler, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher, Captain Richard Holmes, Mrs. Nickerson and others. Quite a sum was realized.

☞ We are informed that DR. Henry Rogers and wife were to leave San Francisco, Cal., on the 27th ult. for Onset Bay Camp-ground, where they will continue their public work for independent slate-writing and pictures. The Doctor's development has, it is stated, been greatly advanced by his visit to California, and fine results are being obtained.

☞ We see that Mr. Barney of the Cincinnati Better Way announces his intention of raising the price of his paper from $2,00 a year to $2,50. In this he is quite right. So much reading matter is well worth that sum.

☞ Much depends upon a man's courage when he is slandered and traduced. Weak men are crushed by detraction, but the brave hold on and succeed.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN for July contains, in addition to its usual condensed illustrations of progressive science and universal reform, a psychometric prediction of peace under the policy of the Emperor of Germany, and a novel and profound exposition of the intellectual organs of man, and their illustration by comparative anatomy. While affirming the substantial correctness of Gall's location of the intellectual organs, it presents a new view of Psychology by explaining the indispensable correlation and coöperation of the intellectual faculties and the spiritual or vital energies, which is so controlling a law that the intellectual faculties cannot be estimated by reference to the forehead alone. The system of Anthropology is emphatically a new philosophy.

☞ We are informed by a correspondent that Mrs. H. D. Greene, one of the oldest clairvoyant and healing mediums in Boston, is located at 68 East Chester Park, where she is still able and willing to exercise her medial specialties for the relief of suffering humanity.

☞ A fine panorama of Jerusalem and the Crucifixion is now on successful exhibition at Merrimac and Monitor Building, Madison Avenue and 59th street, New York City, under management of W. D. Andreas.

Spiritualism's Forward March.

[Extract from Constancia, Buenos Ayres, reprinted in the Norwegian spiritual paper, Morgen Damrengen of Christiana, May, 1888, and translated for the BANNER OF LIGHT by C. G. Helleberg.]

Spiritualism advanced in South America very much in the year 1887, especially in the later months. In the Province of Mendoza, where Spiritualism is new, have been formed three societies, and a fourth is forming in the city Rivadovia in the same province. Our friends have established a paper, La Perseverancia, which is edited by the learned Professor M. de Villars. In Gualeguay, Province Etre-Rios, a society has been formed, also in Victoria. The little table with three feet is used every day by which spiritual ideas are transmitted; the same can be said of Gualeguycho.

We are in close communion with the societies in the Capital of Paraguay, which are working with great success. Here in Buenos Ayres all the spiritual societies have, by continued study and experiment, made great progress. Spiritualism is the subject about which most families are talking, and investigations are taking place everywhere. Travelers say that everywhere Spiritualism is the theme spoken of, either for or against.

Verification.

The spirit-message in the BANNER OF LIGHT of June 23d, from MARY TRUE, of Amesbury, Mass., was characteristic of her. She was a philanthropic lady, who often made dresses and gave them freely to the poor. I knew her well. W. C.

"Health is a thing to be attended to continually. There is no kind of achievement in the world that is equal to perfect health."—THOMAS CARLYLE.
"I am weary, oh! my brothers."—MRS. BROWNING.

TIRED!
TIRED!
TIRED!

Is the voiceless cry going up from the world's busy workers to-day. Weariness, which is not a passing sensation but an abiding consciousness, is a direct warning that body and mind have been too long subjected to the overstrain of our present mode of life. Our ancestors may have been stout and strong, but WE manifestly suffer from faults of organization, nourishment or vital stimulation. The attention of thinking people and seekers after truth is therefore invited to a new Curative System, embracing scientific Magnetic Remedies which will restore the harmony and balance of the great nerve centres, and thus virtually renew the springs of life and action.

This practice—the Magnetic Heilend System—has been introduced in this country by DR. EDITH HALE with remarkable success. Its principles are new. It marks the advance of the age in curing serious chronic maladies: Indigestion, Obesity, Nervous Prostration, Liver and Kidney Disorders, Diseases of Women, Heart Difficulties, Paralysis, Scrofula and Cancer, without recourse to drugs, which are poisons in their essential nature.

Natural remedies, given in accordance with natural laws, WILL remove weariness, vitalize the energies, cure the torments of dyspepsia, the miseries of neuralgia, and the scourge of blood and skin disorders

Semi-Invalids! YOU who seek health and strength, and desire to part company with Depression, Debility and the myriad taints of lurking disease; You who have the intelligence and candor to test these new Magnetic Remedies, are invited to confidential consultation with DR. EDITH HALE, Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

Distant Patients
Successfully Treated.

WRITE, stating your leading symptoms just as you would mention them to your nearest friend. Report your age, weight, temperament. Relate briefly what you know of yourself physically in the past, and what you dread for yourself in the future.

Enclose Consultation Fee—Two Dollars—and rely upon receiving in reply a full Diagnosis of your difficulties, sound counsel as to the means of permanent cure, and estimate of the necessary expense of the same.

Accompanying this Diagnosis will be sent postpaid a trial package of the leading Magnetic Remedy which would be prescribed for the individual case of the applicant.

This trial or sample of Remedy being offered to give the distant invalids the same opportunity of judging in this regard as they would obtain by calling at our office personally.

Further, the Consultation Fee of Two Dollars will be entered on DR. EDITH HALE'S Books, and when treatment or remedies are subsequently ordered, the Fee will be accredited to each one as so much already paid on account.

Treatises on Chronic Diseases, on Obesity, on Cancer, references, and full proof of success, together with general information, will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

Every letter will be placed on file, and in the order received will be answered with as little delay as is consistent with careful consideration of each case.

This liberal offer is made in the utmost good faith, desiring to benefit burdened and weary humanity.

Respectfully,

EDITH HALE, M. D.,

GUIDE POSTS ON IMMORTAL ROADS. By MRS. JACOB MARTIN.
This book is the outgrowth of a soul that has battled with despair, and feels, through sympathy, the woes of others.
It is not sent forth as a literary effort, but only as a harbinger of hope to those who hunger for future life; and that its simple facts may encourage others to seek such evidence as is necessary for their own minds.
It proves by the Bible that we are immortal and that we are not. It shows how unreliable the scripture is in such matters, and how powerless is Christianity to comfort the bereaved. It proves by fifty millions of witnesses that God does not answer prayer.
No woman, were she not upheld by an honest desire to serve humanity, could hurl this book into the Orthodox world and thus invite its criticisms and rebukes. But, in the hope of pointing the weary to "guide-posts" on their roads, the writer of this brave little book accepts the probable results of her convictions.

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held May 8th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! our Father God, we would at this hour waken to the consciousness of thy presence here in our midst. We realize that thou art everywhere, that thy spirit of love may be found in each human heart as well as abroad in the free atmosphere of life; but oh! our Divine Parent, we would realize these things in the inner recesses of our souls, realize that thou art indeed a part of each individual life, that thy love and tenderness, even thy wisdom and divine power, permeate all existence, and spread abroad through every avenue of being. Accept, oh! our Father, the aspirations of our lives; may they go forth unto thee like the incense of the flowers, and become grateful in thy sight. Oh! may we at this time come into holy and sweet communion with the angels of diviner worlds; may we receive from them not only ministrations and consolations, but instruction and stimulation of mind and heart which shall uplift our souls and benefit us in seeking the experiences of life. We ask the blessing of all the good and pure to rest upon each one, especially upon the sorrowful and mourning hearts; may these be comforted; may the word of truth go forth until, like a jewel of great price, it is received into every heart, and cherished in every home. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present the questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By O. S. B., Newton, Ia.] Do those who dwelt on earth thousands of years ago return to this sphere and respond to questions concerning their life here and their experience since their departure?

ANS.—It is not impossible for spirits who dwelt upon the earth thousands of years ago to return in contact with your present life and—if they can find instruments adapted to their use—to communicate with you concerning their previous existence or any matters upon which they are informed. That this is frequently the case we are not prepared to admit, because our observation has proven to us that generally those spirits who were clothed in garments of flesh on earth thousands of years ago are not vitally related to this planet at the present time. True, there are a few such who have maintained an active interest, not only in the development of the world and its natural forces, but also in the career of humanity, and who, therefore, frequently come in contact with earth and exercise their influence in diverse ways, presumably for the benefit of the race.

That these spirits of whom we speak can sometimes communicate with mortals may be admitted, and when such is the case, those receiving their instructions must undoubtedly feel an expansion of mind and an uplifting of spirit, because of the exalted matter thus brought to them. That which is childish, savoring of folly, or not extremely wise in its composition and purpose, cannot emanate from minds that are highly exalted and far advanced in spiritual attainment and knowledge. If such be given to you in the name of wise and exalted spirits, you are justified in questioning it, since such matter can only proceed from minds that, like itself, are puerile, foolish and uninformed.

Q.—Are those termed "ancient spirits" better qualified to answer queries on abstruse subjects than spirits who have but recently passed to the higher life, but who made large acquisitions in wisdom while living on earth?

A.—Not necessarily, for those spirits whom you are pleased to call "ancients" may have so severed their connection with earth-life and its conditions as to be disqualified in person from sending you any information or ideas upon abstruse or other subjects; and, secondly, what you might receive as coming from those minds may be largely diluted with the opinions and even the vagaries of minds not as well-informed as you suppose.

Let us understand this subject. We have here, we might say, a man of large mental calibre, one who is keen and profound in his researches into some vital question, which, however, in its present aspect, may appear abstract and even abstruse to your minds. Perhaps, however, this man of whom we speak has given the subject his special attention, studied into its laws, and come en rapport with it to such an extent as to have gained knowledge upon it. He may have dwelt upon the earth until within a very short period of time, but his mind may have been ripened in wisdom in this special department of information, and he may be fully qualified to teach you concerning it, as he reaches you from his spiritual home.

We will take, on the other hand, a spirit who has been known to history for many long years, a sage or philosopher, but possibly ignorant of the facts connected with the abstruse theme of which the first mind we have mentioned is conversant. Your spirits reach out to that ancient philosopher, and question him concerning the subject. He may not be able to respond to you; but, seeing the bent of your minds, there may be other spirits, not wise or well-informed, who, however, would like to be known as the ancient sage, and who will return and give you those thoughts which are presented to their minds, but which may not be absolutely true. The man or woman who is studious, scientific in method of research, self-learned, gaining information and instruction by special research, and who still continues to maintain an interest in earth and humanity because of vital relationships existing here and connecting the spirit with the earth, will be much better qualified and perhaps more easily brought in contact with you to discuss that particular question than some ancient spirit who is known to you now through historical records.

Understand us: we do not wish to belittle the statements of any spirit, nor do we decry the importance or the elevation of those philosophers, prophets and sages who have been known in the history of the world and who now appear to you in the name of the ancients. Whatever word of wisdom they have to give, whatever code of ethics or system of instruction, we feel will be of use to humanity, but we would not wish our friends on earth to be misled by ignorant or mischievous spirits, and therefore we say to you: Judge wisely, seek earnestly, consider that which is brought to you, and if you find it is good and reliable, whether given in the name of an ancient spirit, a modern one, or in the name of no spirit at all, accept it and make the best possible use of it for your own advantage; but if you find it weak, childish, open to question, and not in accord with the highest light reason has given you, reject it, though it come in the name of prince or potentate of the olden time.

Q.—[By A. S. J.] Why is that one who has in the spirit-world a hundred or more relatives and others with whom he was intimately acquainted in this life, upon attending séances is invariably visited by only two or three—and they always the same—and hears no word, either by direct communication or through others, from the remaining ninety-seven or more?

A.—We should judge the reason of this to be that the person indicated has not as yet come en rapport with a medium who is adapted to the use of his spirit-friends. His own magnetism may not have assimilated with those mediums whom he has seen, or their spiritual attendants, and no direct current of approach established between him and his spirit-friends, or in connection with a mediumistic instrument. It may be possible that the person mentioned possesses personal mediumistic qualities, and we would advise him to sit either alone or in connection with some congenial friend for the purpose of ascertaining this, and of unfolding whatever powers are his. In this way it is possible for him to create a magnetic atmosphere which will be of service to his spiritual friends, and through which they may approach and communicate with him personally. We do not know that this is so, but we think it likely, and worthy the trial of investigation.

Could this individual find a medium whose magnetism will assimilate with the atmosphere of his personal spirit-friends, and that medium is sufficiently developed for their use, he will have no difficulty in hearing from them individually, and in receiving such messages as they may have to give. He must not suppose that because he only hears from one or two of his many friends that the others have forgotten him, or that they desire to neglect him while he remains on earth. Undoubtedly they are as anxious to come to him as he is to receive them, and they send out their best influence to assist in making his life brighter and more cheerful as the days go by. It is probably only for want of proper instrumentalities that they do not come and make their presence known.

Q.—[By "Inquirer."] A mother of six children becomes at the age of forty afflicted with creeping paralysis, rendering her extremely inharmonious, and finally to such a degree that she becomes an inmate of a retreat for the insane, where she dies at the age of sixty-six. What is the condition of such a one in spirit-life immediately after her transition?

A.—Probably the condition of such a spirit immediately after being dispossessed of the weakened body is a sensation of release, of immeasurable relief because of the transition. It does not follow, by any means, that the spirit is bound down, depressed, or in any way unhappy because of the inroads which disease made upon the physical system. Even though the mind seems to have been unbalanced, and the individual was incarcerated in a retreat for the insane, it does not follow that the spirit was mentally unsound, or that, in its newly-awakened state, it presents any of the appearances which characterized its expression during the last few days of its stay on earth.

This state of insanity, we understand, was produced merely because of a weakened condition physically—the vital forces had run low, the nervous power was not evenly distributed throughout the system, and therefore the spirit could not retain a full control of its organs, nor manifest itself properly through the brain. The expression being thus uncertain and imperfect, sometimes confused, the lady was said to be insane; nevertheless we believe that the spirit itself was strong and clear, and able to assert itself under proper conditions. Therefore, in passing from the body—the prison which held it—the spirit could only feel a sense of release and one of great relief because of its separation from material things. There may have been a sense of weakness, for it is true that the spirit being closely allied to the physical will, to an extent reflects those conditions which belong to the outer; but this weakness of the spirit is one that will soon disappear under the invigorating influences of the spirit world, and as such a spirit comes to understand its conditions, realizes what a new life it has entered upon, what avenues of expression belong to it, what opportunities may be found for further expansion, it begins to throw off the weakness and the debility incident to its passage through matter, to gain in strength and in power of manifestation, to realize its uplifting surroundings, and to avail itself of such associations as come to it that will bless and make it happy.

Q.—[By G. K., Baltimore.] A few days ago I attended a funeral of a friend and saw clairvoyantly the spirit-body (an exact image of the one in the coffin) lying near the coffin, with the eyes closed like the physical. As there is nothing in the universe without cause and purpose, I would kindly request the control to explain the same in this case.

A.—Various spirits, with their varying temperaments, are in need of special conditions in passing out of the body. For instance: One individual, possessing a bright and active mind, which will exercise itself in spite of adverse material conditions, which will not become suppressed, even though the vital forces of the mind grow weak and cannot express themselves, even though age creeps on and makes itself felt in the outward form—will not require any season of repose or recuperation of its forces when it passes from the material form. A spirit of this class is wakened in a moment, realizes its new condition, understands something of its surroundings, and is ready to take hold upon them in the first moment of its release from the physical form. We have another person who is delicate, sensitive, easily wrought upon by surrounding influences, giving out more of his magnetism than he can take from others. Therefore this person requires a season for repose and recuperation, so that the vital forces may be strengthened and invigorated for the new experiences which lie before it. After passing from the mortal form he sinks into a magnetic slumber, during which he may be transported from the scene of his physical career to the surroundings of the spiritual body by friends and attendants in the other life.

Between these two individuals are various cases which may meet with different experiences on passing from the body, according to the needs of their mental natures as well as to their temperaments. Undoubtedly the spirit spoken of by the questioner was, at the time when the outward spiritual body was seen by the clairvoyant, passing through a season of recuperation and repose, and that it had been withdrawn from the physical structure by attendant spirit friends who were watching over it during the time when the funeral observances were taking place. Probably the spirit of the man himself was oblivious to his surroundings and was gaining what he required most, so that when he aroused to an understanding of his new condition he might be able to let go of the old life, its associations and its forces, and to take up the new with comprehension and ease.

Q.—Is life—human and animal—decreasing as to length of years?

A.—As we look abroad upon humanity, realize the status and condition of man to-day, and compare it with that of the past, we should say that longevity is not decreasing. True, the history of the world has pointed to instances of very long life. We have been told of individuals whose years have extended beyond a century of time, and we may point to like cases in the present. In many instances we have not the sturdy strength and vigor of our forefathers; and yet, as we gaze upon the man of seventy years to-day, behold his vitality, his youthful appearance in many directions, and see how he can grasp, take hold and reason upon the questions and problems of the age, we realize that humanity is advancing, and that length of years is allowed to men and women as fully and beneficently as it ever was.

Again, let us not forget that in this present century and in these days of progress, a man may gain in thirty years fully as extended an experience as one centuries ago could have gained in three score years and ten. Let us remember that in this present generation a man of seventy years may look back upon a life that has been rich in discipline and filled with events. Such an one has seen many results in the world's history, which he can reason upon and apprehend, and this could not possibly have been the case with the man of like years a few centuries ago.

As this is true in the department of human life, we may believe that the time is coming when man will receive on earth during his natural lifetime even more of experience, discipline and grandeur of unfoldment. What matters it if one can receive in fifty years what it takes another a hundred to gain, if he profits by that which is given him, and prepares himself to receive that which is to follow?

Animal life, we do not think, as far as statistics go, differs very materially in length or duration from what it has done in the past. There are instances, of course, where the domestic animal has lived longer than it does in most cases to-day, and yet, if we make up the statistics on the various parts of the earth, we may conclude that there is very little variation after all.

Q.—Can spirits read the thoughts of mortals?

A.—Some spirits can read the thoughts of certain mortals, but not of all. The more grandly advanced a spirit, the more rounded out in the attainment of knowledge and wisdom, the larger will be the circle of those minds whom he can read, whether they be on earth or in other localities of space. We take, for instance, an individual in private life on earth: He has friends and relatives in the spiritual world whom he tenderly loves, who are in direct sympathy with him, who are so fondly attached to him as to desire to watch over his career, and whose magnetism assimilates with his own. They will be attracted to his side, and his mind will be like an open book to them. Other spirits, not en rapport with his mind, not caring especially for him or his welfare, and for whom he has no decided preference, may even be in the same apartment with him, and, although qualified to read and understand other minds with whom they may come in contact, can see and understand nothing of what is passing in the mind of this individual, for he presents a positive attitude to them, and his thoughts are as a sealed volume.

Controlling Spirit.

We wish to say to the friends present that sometimes, while we are replying to questions in this Circle-Room, we perceive other questions arising in the minds before us. It is not at the time possible for us to take them up and respond to them. Perhaps, could we do so, some thought might be evolved, some suggestion made which might be useful to other inquirers as well as to the mind presenting it.

We wish to say that when the friends desire to propound a query that is suitable, they are at liberty to write it out and place it upon the table, when it will be read by the Chairman and considered in its turn.

We wish also, at this time, to briefly consider a question which has been sent up to us, and which seems almost to demand an answer by the mind propounding it. It is concerning the real soul-essence of man. This questioner desires to know if the soul itself is flesh, or if it is formless. This is as near as we can understand the inquiry. If it is formless, of what use is the soul? If it is of flesh, what is its relationship to the outward body?

We gaze upon the diamond which reflects to us from its heart a glorious light, flashing out in scintillating rays and beautifying the piece of senseless stone into the radiant gem. We will not call that heart of fire, flashing out its glorious light to our gaze, a form of stone, and yet we know the piece of carbon itself is only an objective form. We may liken the ray of light within to the soul-principle of man. We do not recognize the soul as a thing of form or flesh, but rather as a radiant light, illuminating, beautifying, sending out its flashing power through the form bestowed upon it.

The spirit of a man may present to our view that which has a form, with parts and functions, acted upon by that grand principle of light, of fire, which we call the soul. The entity is, of course, the soul-principle, since without the soul-principle there would be no animation, no consciousness, no intelligence; and yet the entity is not only the soul, but the spirit also, the two wedded and making a complete one, since without the spirit and its parts and functions the soul-principle would manifest no intelligence nor give practical evidence of its power and vitality. Therefore we look upon the entity, the man himself, as the soul and spirit wedded together, and making up a whole which has the power of expressing itself through various avenues in life, particularly on earth through that mechanical structure known to you as the corporeal man.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held April 13th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Loammi Baldwin.

Good day, Mr. Chairman. I was one of your people here, and have taken a seat just about four rows back many a time in this good old hall, and have listened to what has been said from spirits. Let me give you my name, sir—Loammi Baldwin. My home was in Charlestown, and I hardly believe they have forgotten me there. I rather think, too, that some of the Boston people will know me. I was pretty constant in your meetings, and they were meat and drink to me. I hardly could wait the time for the wheel to come round.

Now I've thrown off the old mortal, and am able to give out in the same way others have done. I would like to say, for the benefit of the dear ones, that Loammi is happy. I made a promise before I threw off the old cloak of mortality that if possible—of which I had not any doubt—I would make myself known through the good old BANNER OF LIGHT. This is not the first or the twentieth time I have tried, but I suppose you will say that I failed every time. That seemed to be it; but I've got here at last, and there aint one of you any more happy to hear me speak than I am to speak to you.

I would like to speak to Sarah, and 'Ria, and George, and Willie, and Charlie; I name them all so they'll know I don't show any partiality, because I know they'd say "father didn't speak of them." Now I've got you all in a group, and I want to say I found it more beautiful than I am able to describe in words. I can't do it, but fail every time. We can only give you a few sketches or outlines of the beauties of spirit-life. I suppose you think the lilies on the table here are nice, but we have better ones on our side, and I do n't think I should want to swap with you. I suppose you 'll say I have n't been asked.

I have tried a good many times to speak to one and another, as I have been thrown in contact with you in Charlestown, but you passed me right by, as much as to say dead people don't amount to much. I know the changes that have been made since I left the mortal; they have changed from that home to another in Melrose.

Sarah, Lizzie is with me, but will not speak now; perhaps in due time she may be able to give out something to you. I am always grateful for the privileges that are granted me when I have been permitted to come into communication with some of you. Sarah, go to Daniel's when you can; the door is always open—they are glad to know of your coming. I understand fully, by your own spirit, that you expected to come into each other's company a little while since but failed, the same as I have done.

I am no stranger to you, Mr. Wilson; I knew you very well by coming into your meetings. I thank you for this privilege, which, I assure you, I am grateful for.

Emma M. Livermore.

I would like to send a few words to my dear ones. I passed out in North Reading, Mass. You may place my name as Emma M. Livermore. I am happy in my spirit-home. How many times has father said: "Dear Emma, why did the angels call you home?" But the storm ceased when they came for me. "Jennie," I said, "sing the beautiful song, 'Over the River,' which we used to sing so many times; the song of the beautiful river, where we shall meet and be together forever."

I would say to each loved one yet dwelling in the mortal, that many times I come and stand so near I can place my hand upon their brows.

I have said in my soul: I thank thee, dear Father, that in thy wisdom thou didst make wise provision that we should not die, but have everlasting life. Father, mother, sister, husband, all understood something of this before I crossed the portal. I waited patiently for the angel to come and bear my spirit onward and upward, and I found it was but a step. A storm had been raging through the day, and when the angel-usher came for me the storm abated, and the sun came out so brightly they knew I was happy.

Father understands and realizes a great deal more than mother of spirit return. While passing over it was beautiful. Bright angel forms I saw around me, and friends I used to know came with outstretched arms to greet me as in the long ago.

I am happy. My dear ones are yet left to fight the battle of life, which is heavy. As near as I can count your mortal time, it is nearly eleven years since they came for me; but I have not been silent all the while. I have tried to be one of the angel guides that have come to them in the "stilly hours of the night."

Father, as you have stepped from hall to hall, your Emma has been with you many times, and as I have been by your side I know you have realized and sensed my presence often. Sometimes, dear father, when trials have come a little heavy you have called on Emma to come a little nearer. Grandma says that we come unbidden as we come so easily in the twilight. Now, after passing the portal, I know Spiritualism is true. Father, dear father, think of me a little oftener; for your Emma is near you often. My father is Professor Cadwell.

Job Simmons.

I would speak a few words as I come from what you naturally term the spirit-world. But, mortals, where is the spirit-world? Only a thin veil comes between and separates you from us.

You may put down my name as Job Simmons, formerly of Brookfield, Mass. I have been in spirit-life more than half a century, as you call it here; then naturally the question may arise, have I never manifested before? No, never. But don't think I have not made the attempt. Two have passed over into spirit-life that have been mouthpieces for us and voiced our thoughts here in your meeting that I have tried to control, yet I have found by trying and persevering that I have made my voice known to-day.

I have very few relatives left in the mortal. There are some in Byfield, Mass., a very few in Vermont, and some others scattered, that know very little of me because of the time that has elapsed between us. I am glad in my soul that these channels have been opened, that we may speak to mortals. I think some of the older inhabitants of Brookfield will understand who Job Simmons was.

Sarah and Dorcas and Asaph are with me, but we can't all manifest at once. I have many times thought I did not understand how one could speak so much easier than another. Some make harder work of everything than others: that's about all the reason I can give you. Much obliged to you, sir.

John Farnsworth.

You may place me in Shirley, Mass. John Farnsworth. I have often tried to say a few words, but, as you will readily perceive, have made a failure of it. To-day the channel seemed to be just right for me to speak. Mary and John are with me, and Eliza part of the time, but not to-day. There are attractions which draw us into different surroundings, therefore we are not all present at the same time.

I would like to say to Mr. Chandler of Shirley that we are not "dead people," as we have so long been termed. I often step into the stores and go into the town-house, as we called it, but how little notice is taken of us, because a veil is across the eyes of mortals. Through all these years I have not been silent or sleeping, but I have been active and trying to learn all that was possible in spirit-life. It is like a school, and what you do not learn on this side you must on the other; therefore, mortals, learn while the opportunity is before you.

We are so grateful when we know there is a channel open that we may speak through. I thank the Giver of all good and perfect gifts that in his wisdom he made the wise provision that we should commune together.

William Messenger.

I know there are many loved ones waiting for a few crumbs of comfort. You may place me in Boston, as William Messenger. I have tried before, but as the gentlemen have said, have failed. Now because we fail once, that does not weaken our courage to try again. I would like to reach Susie, and also would have them all know how happy we are in the spirit-life, for that is the life; we just commence to live when we throw off the mortal. I am satisfied, although it is but a short time since the angel usher came, and bid me welcome across the portal that awaits you all; I am satisfied, as I said, with the home, but I know they are not reconciled yet, for the burden is hard in earth-life, yet how blessed the meeting in spirit-life. I would like to say a little more, but I feel I cannot, it is such a little time since I crossed over.

Ralph Severance.

I came from North Andover, Mass.; that was my home when dwelling in the mortal form. You may put down my name as Ralph Severance. I shall be remembered there by the boys as going out in the boat and coming to spirit-life through the water. I do not wish them to think I suffered any. No—no suffering. I am happy, and I want them all to know it. I would not return to stay if I could by turning the hand. I know, boys, I have heard you talk a great deal since Ralph went out, but it is n't always best to believe all that is spoken. I am happy now, and I am not going to change it any either. For all the world contains I would not wish to come to earth to stay, not wholly, because my home is so beautiful there. We have no wish to return to the old mortality again. I find when we put on the new form, the desire for the earth-life is all taken away from us. Be a little careful what you say, because we hear and see more than you think for, and we have heard many things spoken, especially in regard to my passing out, that I will say before the angels were not true. I am all right now.

Ara Oliver.

I would like you to place my name upon your paper, Mr. Chairman. It is Ara Oliver, and I come from Auburn, N. Y. I have tried many times to speak in these meetings, for I find this is the only channel where we can send a message out through a paper, although I know there are other channels that are provided for me, but not all for mortals. I am happy. Father, mother and Uncle Durham are with me to-day; yes, and little Ollie. I can't get along without calling his name.

This will reach Martha and Frankie. Dear girl! how much I have watched over her since I left the mortal, and I know many friends love them both. Martha, I know you are a whole-souled wife to-day. I thank God for what you have done.

I wish to say to Mary, and all the others beside—who are too numerous for me to call their names—we are happy in our spirit-home. Mother often says that Mary did talk a little to her before crossing over in regard to spirit-return, but she did not understand how we could come into communication with the loved ones here. Now, Mary, mother understands full well, although she has not been able to send a message, only, as I say to you, she sends love and greetings to you and yours, and each one in the families, which are many. Shed not a tear for the darling child; he is happy, and in time, he says, when he gets tall enough he 's going to write a letter. He must wait a little. He wishes me to say that he was the child that asked for the flowers.

I trust these letters will be delivered in due time to the loved ones who are so anxiously waiting for them. I know this letter will be printed in your good paper, which reaches sister Mary, and in that way will reach the others. Thank God there is one paper that tells of our return. I am thankful for the opportunity you have granted me.

Hiram Chandler.

I come from what is termed the spirit-world. I passed out in Graniteville, Mass. My name is Hiram Chandler. I have thought many times before, as I have been in your meetings, that I should not miss that time.

George has often wondered why, if others sent messages through the paper, Hiram, William or Newton never did. Now, George, I have found the way, and the boys can follow after a time. I know, dear brother, that you have often thought the way I went out held me in bondage which I could not free myself from. Oh! never take what you cannot give, and that is life. I am not held in bondage to-day; I am happy, and have been granted privileges as much as others.

Dear brother, the darling girl is here, too, and sends love, and says to grandma that she will keep the promise she has made her, for she knows but a little space of time will elapse before she will be able to speak to her what she wishes to. George, father and mother are present; but William and Newton are not just at this moment. I am happy. Don't think for a moment I am far away, or so bound or fettered that I can't make myself known as well as others; if there is a channel for one there is a channel for all; we are all God's children. Thanks to the angel world, there is a channel we may speak through.

ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION; or, The Result of Oriental, Greek, Roman and Mediæval Civilization. By Reub. Sharpe. 8vo, paper, pp. 201. Erie, Pa.: Walker & Gallagher, Printers.

To those of limited time and means this volume will prove very welcome, presenting as it does in a condensed form an outline of general history, and covering a wide field by imparting desirable information regarding only its most important events. A key to the tenor of the work and the disposition of the author in its preparation, will be found in its closing paragraph, which reads as follows: "When extravagant claims are made by Christian churches, the rising generation should be made acquainted with many facts not taught by organized churches, which seem inclined to conceal many facts of their origin and history."

YOUR ANSWER OR YOUR LIFE. The Riddle Propounded by the American Sphinx. By Moses Hull. 12mo, paper, pp. 100. Des Moines, Iowa: Moses Hull & Co.

Though the author introduces this book by remarking that there is little in it to be claimed as original, no one will fail to see that, though the facts may not be presented for the first time, it certainly is the first time they have been placed before the public in so clear and direct a manner. There are no superfluous words, and the statements made, unquestionably true, are worthy the thoughtful consideration of every one who has an interest in the future welfare of this nation, and is desirous of doing what he can to secure it.

A new edition of one of the best novels of its author, all of which are excellent. A Hungarian nobleman residing in New York is called to his native country by important business. He leaves his wife and daughter in that city. The former dies, leaving the latter, a child of seven years, in charge of the nursery maid, who is to have care of her until the father's return. Shortly after, crossing Broadway, the maid is overthrown by a passing vehicle, and the frantic girl rushes wildly through the streets. From this point the story increases in interest and abounds with incidents that hold the close attention of the reader through its thirty-eight chapters; at fifty cents, the price of this edition, the reader gets a very liberal equivalent for his money.

INTERIOR SIGHT, AND THE SPIRIT-WORLD AS I SEE IT. Thirty-two chapters from the Spirit of Vanroom Robbins to Benjamin Rulon, Through Sarah E. Patterson, Medium. 8vo, paper, pp. 81. Printed by G. W. Pither, Swedesborough, N. J.

The spirit who has transmitted this narrative of his experiences, and somewhat those of others since passing from this sphere of existence, was in this life of Quaker descent. He was a member of the Twenty-Eighth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers; was wounded at the battle of Fredericksburg, Va., and passed to spirit-life from Lincoln Hospital, Washington, December, 1862. His brother-in-law, Mr. Rulon, to whom these chapters were communicated, says he was strictly honest, conscientious and truthful, and could be relied on when in the mortal, and he has perfect confidence in the truthfulness of the accounts he here gives, commencing with that of his awakening to consciousness in spirit life, and the sensations he experienced during his passage from the physical form.

There is a genuinity of sentiment and a sympathetic vein of human brotherhood in these "Talks" which their author gives us, not as "the belated blossoms of a St. Martin's summer, but the fruit, rather, of the whole happy summer of his ministry," that will attract many readers. In a talk upon "Sleep" he says "it is something to thank God for with all our heart"; and it is a great mistake in many to say its indulgence is a great waste of time. Sleep, in some cases, "is better than to labor or to pray, and may bring us nearer both to God and man."

A work that aims to be practical rather than theoretical, with lessons and examples adapted to the ordinary affairs of business and all forms of mercantile pursuits. A handy and valuable book for every one.

CASSELL'S NATIONAL LIBRARY.—The recent volumes added to this dime series of standard books are: "The Diary of Samuel Pepys, Vol. III, March to November, 1668," "Coriolanus," by Shakspeare, "Areopagitica, Letter on Education, Sonnets and Psalms," by John Milton, "Essays on Goethe," by Thomas Carlyle, "King Richard II.," by Shakspeare. New York: Cassell & Co., 104 106 Fourth Avenue.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLICATION SOCIETY of London has been instituted for the purpose of furnishing in a cheap form literature adapted to the wants of students of Theosophy and Occult Science. We are in receipt of six numbers of its publications, entitled respectively, "Theosophy and the Churches," "Psychic Bodies: Ancient Opinions on Soul Survival," "A Synopsis of Baron du Prel's 'Philosophie der Mystik,'" "The Theosophical Movement," "What is Matter and What is Force, and The New Epidemic," "Re-incarnation. THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocketbooks. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health,

Dr. Hardcastle's TOOTH-LIFE.

A Delightful Tooth-Powder.

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

Put up in a neat box. Sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents. For sale by COLBY & RICH.

THE RELIGION OF SPIRITUALISM: Its Phenomena and Philosophy. By SAMUEL WATSON, author of "The Clock Struck One, Two and Three," thirty-six years a Methodist minister.

Mr. Watson's long connection with one of the largest and most influential religious organizations in this country, together with his well-known character for integrity of purpose and faithfulness in the discharge of every known duty, combine to render this a book that will attract the attention and command the studious perusal of thoughtful minds. It contains the principal records of a critical investigation of nearly all phases of spirit-manifestation through a period of twenty-seven years, commenced with a belief that Spiritualism was "the prince of humbugs," and a purpose to expose it, and ending with a conviction that it is a truth far transcending all others in value to mankind. The book here presented will prove one of inestimable worth, not only to Spiritualists but to those who, not having witnessed the phenomena, have no information of the facts which form the immovable foundation on which Spiritualists base not merely a belief but a knowledge of the reality of a future life. It is eminently well adapted to place in the hands of those whose attachment to the faiths and forms of the Church incline them to have nothing to do with the subject upon which it treats.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be unsuccessful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

OUTSIDE THE GATES,

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And I saw, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabiters of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

And God shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens, for the Land of the Blest overflowth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This book of nine chapters consists of two parts. The first, containing a series of addresses by Spirit Benefice, entitled "Through the Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life" by Spirit Susie, a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments, an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this 12mo book.

THE VOICE OF PRAYER enforces the idea that our prayers must accord with immutable laws, else we pray for effects, independent of cause.

EDUCATION; or, The Coming Man. An Essay Involving the Basic Truths that Underlie the Universal Church.

Whoever takes this pamphlet in hand will read it through and be spiritually benefited by so doing. The theory of education it sets forth is so in harmony with the loftiest conceptions of the spiritually-minded, that no one whose thoughts tend upward, and who sees that out of the present turmoil and seeming retrogression are to come peace and advancement for all earth's people, will hesitate to adopt and do what he can to give this elucidation of it a wide circulation. Terse in language, clear in argument, forcible in expression, apt in illustration, and, withal, founded on immutable truth, the work bears its own recommendation, and will be welcomed and read by thousands.

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OF,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the intelligence and attention of the reader, has in this volume issued to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a strength of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the hypocrisy, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1888.

Spiritualism in the Golden State.

The fourth annual session of the California Spiritualists' Camp-Meeting Association commenced at Lake Merritt Park, Oakland, Sunday, June 3d, and, under the efficient management of the President, Hon. I. C. Steele, Chas. E. Eliot, Vice President, and their associates, is achieving a grand work.

The report already printed in the East said: "The initial lecture" was "made in the morning by Mr. Morse. Mrs. R. S. Lillie lectured and Mr. E. W. Emerson gave tests in the evening, the attendance being very large all through the day." Mrs. R. S. Lillie was advertised to open the services, but owing to detention on the road, J. J. Morse, who was announced for the evening service, was substituted in her place.

Mr. Morse made a fine opening, which gave promise of one of his best lectures, but, after speaking a few minutes, an untimely return of a throat trouble obliged him to desist, and the morning service was made up with music and other attractions. I am happy to state Mr. Morse has regained his health and has since rendered efficient service in various capacities, as speaker at meetings, teacher of classes, and chairman at some of the services.

In the afternoon W. J. Colville gave us, in the opinion of several cultured critics, one of the best lectures delivered by him in California, holding a very large audience in close attention to the end.

In the evening Mrs. R. S. Lillie made her first appearance in California, and met with a warm reception by a very large audience; she has gained many ardent admirers, both for her great abilities as a teacher and for her personal qualities.

The singing of Mr. J. T. Lillie has formed one of the most pleasing and highly appreciated features of the meetings.

Edgar W. Emerson followed with tests, which gave general satisfaction, and his freedom from anything of a sensational style has enhanced the value of his illustrations. The announcement of his presence is sufficient to insure a large attendance at any service.

The lectures of our resident speakers, the President, I. C. Steele, Dr. W. W. McKaig, W. E. Coleman and J. J. Owen, editor of the Golden Gate, have been attended by large and appreciative audiences.

The class in Spiritual Science, taught by W. J. Colville, has grown to such large proportions that it is now held in the large tent.

Mr. Morse is also holding developing classes three mornings weekly.

The indefatigable worker, S. B. Clarke, Treasurer, informed me that more than double the number of tents were demanded to accommodate those in attendance than were required last year, and that the transient attendance upon the services is also very much larger.

The test séances of Mrs. Ada Foye, the world-renowned platform test medium, drew a very large audience, in fact the large tent, with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred, has proven too small for the attendance upon the séances of Mrs. Foye and Mr. Emerson, and the canvas sides have to be raised to accommodate the large numbers unable to gain admission.

Notwithstanding the attractions of the camp-meeting, the Sunday evening séances in San Francisco, given by Mrs. Foye and Mr. Slater, are attracting very large audiences. The recent attacks upon Spiritualism and mediums by those whose bread and butter is endangered thereby, have only served to increase public interest and add to the number of investigators. An attendance of fifteen hundred people at the camp-meeting last Sunday evening, and fully as large a number at the meetings of Mr. Slater and Mrs. Foye in this city at the same hour, indicates anything but the dying out process so louldly proclaimed by opponents.

The presence of the veteran "Spirit Postmaster," J. V. Mansfield, has recalled to my mind a matter of interest to the public which I do not remember having seen in print. The accuracy of the statement may be relied upon, for my informant was one of the parties interested in the investigation.

During a former visit of Mr. Mansfield to San Francisco, a party of three persons, Rev. Thomas Starr King, Conrad Wiegaud and Dr. Riley—the last two persons being scientists employed in the mint—determined to make a thorough test of his powers to give messages from those gone before. The most intricate and ingenious methods were employed, on many occasions, to prevent the medium from gaining any knowledge of the contents of the various letters to spirit friends, but Mansfield succeeded in getting answers even under the most unfavorable conditions; (one letter was enclosed between sheets of glass, bound together in a manner to prevent opening without breakage,) but the result was, all the investigators became convinced of the truth of spirit communion. Great results sometimes follow apparently small beginnings, and it may be a gratification to hard-working but perhaps poorly appreciated mediums, to feel that those séances with a medium in all probability assisted the spirits to form a strong band of workers around the glorious speaker, and in later years enabled him to stem the current setting strongly toward the formation of a Pacific Republic, preserving California from the horrors of disunion and civil war. ALBERT MORTON.

San Francisco, Cal., June 18th, 1888.

Cincinnati, O.

Sunday, June 24th, although warm, was much cooler than any time during Mr. J. Frank Baxter's engagement in Cincinnati. This, together with the facts that this Sunday would conclude his labors in the city for the present, (as well as end the Society's season,) and the speaker's great popularity, called out very large audiences.

The subject for the day was "Life and Death," that for the morning dealing with their relation to the physical, and that of the evening their bearing upon the spiritual man. The morning effort was devoted to lifting man out of the valley of superstition, clearing up much of the mystery of life, and showing the naturalness and necessity of physical death. It was in many respects scientific, especially as pertaining to the modus operandi of "how we live" and "how we die," and why the final act of earth-life must be painless. The whole was not alone argued, but made plain by suggested experiments. To say it was masterly, ingenious and intensely interesting but feebly voices the expression of the audience.

Mr. Baxter embodied his evening thoughts under the special subject: "The Existence and Emancipation of the Spiritual Body." He taught—drawing his proofs from Nature, from scientific conclusions, from experiences, from psychological and metaphysical law, from clairvoyance and from spirit instruction—that man was of a threefold rather than of a twofold nature, composed of spirit (soul), spiritual body and physical body; that when the physical was laid aside, the spiritual, its counterpart, survived, actuated as ever by the inmost, or soul. All knew of the physical form and most believed in the spirit; but "Is there a spiritual body?" was the question. Entertaining and weighty was the evidence offered in the affirmative, and conclusively answered were the materialistic propositions in the negative. Mr. Baxter, in the latter part of his lecture, explained as to his best ability from study, transition, and gave a most beautiful picture—as seen clairvoyantly or spiritually—of the separation of the spiritual from the physical; in other words, of the emancipation of the spiritual body and its reception to spirit-life.

At the close of the evening lecture, as usual, Mr. Baxter gave one of his séances. On this occasion he seemed pressed upon unusually by innumerable invisibles, so much so that for a long time only a little in detail could be given, names after names were impressed and spoken so continuously. Finally relief (to the medium) came, and several fine full delineations were given.

Mr. Baxter's coming has been productive of much good, and he has made many firm friends in Cincinnati—some originally strangers, but now converts.

The Society of Union Spiritualists, under whose auspices Mr. Baxter was invited and presented, passed resolutions eulogistic and commendatory of his labors, and on this Sunday evening they were read before the large audience, which unanimously acquiesced, and flatteringly applauded.

This meeting concluded the season's work, and all adjourned to September, when another season opens with Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond as speaker and medium for the first month. ☞

(MR. J. MILTON YOUNG is our authorized agent at Lake Pleasant, and will be pleased to receive subscriptions for the BANNER OF LIGHT. Mr. Young also has a full line of our publications for sale at his bookstore. He will conduct the correspondence for THE BANNER from this Camp-Meeting.)

The month of June closes with Lake Pleasant at its best. Nature is blooming in every direction, and to dwell here among these grand old trees, with mountains, hills, rivers and cascades in every direction, with singing birds and sighing breezes, is certainly a privilege. When will people learn to appreciate life as it really is, instead of worshiping mammon? Development is a big word, and we but partially understand its import. Life certainly is worth living, though oftentimes disappointment and misfortune are our daily experience. Sunshine and shadow are both essential, else they would not be. While I am writing this the notes of an organ and the words, "Home of My Beautiful Dreams," as rendered by the singer, float out upon the evening air, and the question which the ages have ever been asking comes up afresh: Will we ever reach that "home"? In this connection the lines of Whittier come to us with a more than ordinary force:

"Yet Love will dream and Faith will trust,
Since He who knows our need is just,
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress-trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever lord of death,
And Love can never lose its own."

The grounds are in better condition than at any time for several years.

J. K. Nevins, the florist, is bringing loads of flowering plants to this place.

The Lake Shore Café and Railroad Restaurant, under the new management of Mr. Ellsworth of Athol, opens in fine order.

No. 2 of the Wildwood Messenger is out.

General satisfaction is expressed from all quarters that we are to have a six weeks' session this year.

Mrs. Hattie C. Mason and Mrs. Helen M. Flint, of Boston, have arrived for the season.

Houselots upon the "Highlands" are being taken. There is a large call for cottages and rooms.

Boating upon the lake will be a favorite pastime this summer. The new steamer "Baby Belle" and the new row-boats will be appreciated.

Among those who have come to stay through the season is Mr. Charles E. Watkins, the independent slate-writing medium, of Boston. Mr. Watkins's family accompany him. They have a fine cottage, corner of Broadway and Lyman streets.

Dr. Arthur Hodges, of Boston, came to-day for a brief tarry. He will return permanently the 8th of July. Dr. Hodges is one of the best known mediums here, having been connected with this movement since its inception.

There is quite an influx of people from the surrounding towns at this place each Sunday.

New Hampshire will be well represented here this season. Vermont likewise.

Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting, Tenn.

This Camp-Meeting Association has achieved much in the four years of active labor it has enjoyed in propagating Spiritualism. Its sessions have been held so as not to conflict with other camp-meetings and on an altitude where the temperature is pleasant. There are no sultry nights in the South, and on Lookout Mountain bed-covering is in demand even in midsummer.

There will be daily sessions for lectures and tests, participated in by the following noted speakers and mediums:

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Mrs. Adeline M. Gladding, Mrs. S. A. H. Talbot, George H. Fuller, Esq., Dr. H. F. Merrill, Dr. Samuel Watson, Geo. W. Kates and wife, A. C. Ladd, Esq., and several others.

A large number of well-known test mediums are expected to be present, who will give personal test sittings and hold test séances, in the phases of trance, clairvoyance, psychometry, slate-writing, materialization, spirit-photography, production of flowers, and numerous physical phases.

Excellent music will be furnished by Mrs. Ross and orchestra.

The Association owns the camp-ground, hotel, cottages, tents, pavilion, etc.

There are numerous springs of pure and mineral waters upon the grounds—also many noted wonders of nature. The views of the valleys extend into the States of Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama, with distant views of Kentucky, the Carolinas, Virginia, Mississippi, etc. Whichever way one turns the mountain is full of grandeur.

Up the rugged sides and along the rocky crest run two railroads—one an incline and narrow gauge, and the other a broad gauge tramway (now being constructed) that will connect at Union Dépôt in Chattanooga with trains from all parts of the country.

There will be special hotel and railroad rates. All the guests will be comfortably housed in the hotels or cottages.

As a health resort Lookout Mountain is famous.

Special terms will be given to Spiritualists desiring to erect or rent cottages.

Special Notice.—The Southern Association will meet in Convention on Friday, July 27th, to hear reports, elect officers, and arrange for missionary work.

Haslett Park, Mich.

I wish once more through your paper to make an appeal in behalf of the Home for Mediums to be erected at Haslett Park. It is the desire of the members of the "Mediums' Protective Union" to place a building on a beautiful lot donated by Mr. Haslett for a home for mediums; to be used by any one of the members during camp, and to be open at all times of the year, rent free, for any member who wishes to go there for rest, and to gather those forces so necessary for their work.

The building is to cost about twelve hundred dollars, and we desire to raise this money by making appeals to the ever generous public. We earnestly ask that our friends—the friends of mediums—help us in our undertaking. This building is to be used by mediums only. Send your donations to Dr. E. W. Edson, 519 Cedar street, North Lansing. We most earnestly hope to receive responses sufficient to enable us to begin at once our building, and see the work go on during the coming camp.

The ladies are to hold a fair on the grounds this summer. Those who wish to donate articles for the fair will please either send them to Mrs. O. Marcey, Lyons, Mich., or inform her of their intention.

I hope this appeal will not be made in vain, and that our Spiritualists will prove more than willing to aid in the bettering of the conditions of the medial workers for our cause. G. H. BROOKS,

Sec'y Mediums' Protective Union.

Onset Bay.

Mr. Sibley, a yearly visitor, from St. Louis, Mo., has arrived at Onset for the season. He is negotiating for several cottages for a delegation from St. Louis, who are expected to soon arrive, to spend the heated season.

Parties from Dakota are corresponding with Col. Crockett regarding prices, with the anticipation of coming to Onset.

A POOR MAN'S "HOME."—Mr. Charles Weekley, the vaccination officer for Hampstead, applied to the Bench for the committal of John Hobbs, laborer, of Netherwood-street, Kilburn, who had been ordered to pay a fine of 5s. on a vaccination summons. Sergeant Edwards deposed that he went to levy the distress for 5s. He found that defendant and his family occupied one back room, in which there were only two chairs, a bedstead, and a table, the whole lot not being worth half-a-crown. It was a "disgraceful place." The Bench granted an order of committal to gaol for seven days unless the amount was paid forthwith.—Daily Chronicle, (London, England.)

Fire having had its innings in Sweden, water has made "a run" in Mexico: It is estimated that the recent floods at Leon, Silas and other points along the line of the Central railway in that country involve a loss of $4,000,000. Twenty thousand people and more are without homes. The loss of life has been large—not less than seven hundred to one thousand—and hundreds of people are still missing.

College Hall, 24 Essex Street.—The services last Sunday were well attended and of much interest. Mr. Cobb spoke in the morning on the remarks of the Rev. DeWitt Talmage as printed in the Globe last week, and ably so from a spiritualistic standpoint.

In the afternoon Mr. Cobb, Mr. Hatch and Mrs. A. E. King, the latter entranced, spoke upon mediumship, highly extolling it, and severely condemning all simulations. Miss Peabody gave some fine reading tests at both morning and afternoon sessions. She is quite marked in her readings. Good tests were also given by Mrs. T. J. Lewis, from Chicago, Mrs. Forrester, Arthur McKenna, Peter McKenzie and Mrs. Willard. Miss Dr. Anna Webster made some pertinent remarks and gave evidences of spirit-control in singing under influence. Announcement was made that Mrs. A. E. King had given up her sittings for the season, but would hold herself in readiness to lecture and give tests. Miss Dr. Anna Webster, of Chelsea, would also do the same; both of them have been developed for that phase of power. It was also announced that Mrs. T. J. Lewis would go to Onset for the season next week. Mrs. Lewis is said to be remarkable in her spirit tests, and this is what the people need today.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Excellent audiences were present at this hall on Sunday last, and the exercises were exceedingly interesting. Those of the afternoon were opened by Dr. P. C. Drisko with an interesting address. He was followed by David Brown, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Robbins and others. Tests and spirit delineations were given by P. S. McKenzie, David Brown and Mrs. Lewis.

In the evening Miss D. B. Simpson offered an invocation, followed by a stirring address, which was well received. Mrs. T. J. Lewis and Mrs. M. W. Leslie made excellent remarks, and each gave many clear tests, and much evidence of spirit presence. ••

Strawberry Festival.—The Annual Strawberry Festival of the First Society of Spiritualists of New York took place at Adelphi Hall, Wednesday evening, June 27th; it was largely attended, a great financial success, and one of the most enjoyable affairs of the kind it was ever our pleasure to attend. It was gotten up under the supervision of the ladies of the First Society, with Mrs. Henry J. Newton as President, and to those who know this lady it need not be said it met the most sanguine anticipations of all. The programme was an excellent one, consisting of speaking, recitations, vocal and instrumental music, improvised poems by Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, and whistling solos by Miss Mamie Horton. The refreshments, consisting of cake, ice-cream and strawberries, were ample and of the very best quality. The hall was finely decorated with flowers and plants, the arrangement of everything exhibiting exquisite taste. To look in upon the festivities and see the older members of the society, such as Newton, Leonard and others, one soon forgot that "old age comes creeping on," for they were as gay and frolicsome as boys of eighteen; and here I should not forget to state that Gen. L. Barney, of The Better Way, was as lively as any of them, and it was plainly manifest that, if he is rather sedate and ministerial at times, he fully appreciates a good thing. S.

Soul-Communion Meetings.—These meetings, which have been held every Tuesday evening (save one) since last September, at 230 West Thirty Sixth street, will be closed during the remainder of the summer. They have been well attended, and much satisfaction has been manifested by the people as to the good results obtained from the quiet soul-communion, which tends to harmonize each one with himself and his surroundings. Healing as well as developing power has been strongly manifested in these quiet communings. The meetings will be resumed in the early fall.

The Monday evening conference, which has been held each week for nearly four months, has been well attended. Good speakers have been present at every session, and subjects of interest were discussed. MRS. M. C. MORRELL.

In Memoriam.

On June 6th, after an illness of more than a year, Mr. S. N. Maxam, an esteemed resident of Shattuckville, Mass., was called to his inheritance in the realms of spirit-land.

His life of seventy years had ripened into that fullness which comes but from discipline, sorrow and disappointment, mingled in greater proportion with reward, joy and fulfillment of the heart's desires. For many years he has been an ardent and consistent advocate of Spiritualism, finding in its teachings and in communion with the progressed of spirit-life great strength, joy and consolation.

Upon his premises he erected, at his own expense, a fine hall, which was devoted to the spiritual good of the public, free of charge; oftimes at great trouble and inconvenience to himself speakers and mediums were heartily welcomed, and all within a reasonable distance were invited to listen to truth under the name of Spiritualism.

Many readers of THE BANNER will become sad when they learn that this brave-hearted, pleasant faced, earnest brother has passed through death's portals—particularly those who have partaken of his hospitality at "Indian Rock"—a large plot of ground upon his farm famous for Indian legends, largely confirmed by land formations and discovered relics, as well as by communications through different mediums, wholly ignorant of the locality and legendary fame, as well as of each other, and of what had been previously revealed. This "hunting-ground," called "Indian Rock" because of the great rock—upon which I had the pleasure of sitting in the midst of several prominent Spiritualists and speakers, space enough being left for a small organ and choir—has been transformed into a place of beauty through the kindness of Mr. Maxam, involving protracted labor and much expense. At least once a year the call resounded far and near for a grand reunion at "Indian Rock." In response many pilgrims were seen winding up the hillside to the Mecca where we were sure of a spiritual baptism, and where we could gratefully say to our genial host, "It is good for us to be here."

We know that Bro. Maxam's entrance to that other life must have been amid the rejoicings of grateful spirits who welcomed him right royally.

MRS. MILTON RATHBUN.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—The Eagle of June 30th records that "the Spiritualists enjoyed a pleasant drive to the sightly, hospitable and home-like residence of Wm. B. Ellsworth, near Saratoga Lake, last Sunday. Some thirty-five or forty were present, and the occasion was interesting and spiritually profitable. Mr. Ellsworth and wife extended a cordial welcome to the guests. Dr. Mills, Gen. Bullard, Harvey Lyman and George R. Burrows made brief remarks, and Mrs. Barton gave a recitation with fine effect. Dr. Mills, in a clairvoyant state, delineated spirit presences, and then laying his hand upon Mrs. Laura Ellsworth, a newly-developed medium of remarkable gifts, she became entranced and controlled by the father of the host. She gave some fine tests."

After Failing to Kill

A Great Scientific Truth, they now ask for a Legal Monopoly in the Employment of the Same.

"At the recent meeting of the French Association for Advancement of Sciences at Oran, a motion was passed, recommending the government to forbid the practice of hypnotism, except by physicians."

One century ago, the Scientific Committee appointed in Paris to investigate the truth or fallacy of the claims of Professor Mesmer, declared "Mesmerism to be a fraud" pure and simple, that it should be suppressed as such, and the regular profession shouted a thundering amen. Prof. Mesmer, by virtue of this narrow-minded bigotry, left Paris and died in obscurity. But the great truth had too firm a hold; it would not die. A century later the Regular Profession accept the truth, re-christen it Hypnotism, admit for it all that poor Mesmer ever claimed for his discovery, and now have the sublime audacity to ask for a law giving them the exclusive right to practice Hypnotism or Mesmerism.—The American Spectator.

Wisconsin State Association.

The Quarterly Convention was held at Rehearsal Hall, Milwaukee, on the 22d, 23d and 24th of June. We had excellent speakers for the occasion: Mrs. Colby-Luther, of Crown Point, Ind., a powerful and logical reasoner; Mr. J. L. Potter, of Wonewoc, a tower of strength; Dr. Thomas of Minneapolis, Dr. Arnop, and lastly Mr. Mikeswell, who gave public tests on the rostrum by independent slate-writing. These exercises insured a general interesting and entertaining session of our Convention. J. SPENCER.

The officers, Executive Board and members of the Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists, desiring to extend the boundaries of spiritual truth, and to unite in a common brotherhood the moral and secular interests of all those in sympathy with the philosophy of Spiritualism, invite public attention to the Constitution and By-Laws of the Wisconsin State Benevolent Society, and earnestly solicit coöperation in its aims.

The only requirements are, that members of this Society maintain their standing or membership in the Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists at the nominal price of $1 per year, and pay the very small assessments stipulated in the Constitution of this Society upon being notified of the death of any member by the Secretary.

Send to the Secretary, Dr. J. C. Phillips, Omro, for a copy of the Constitution and By-Laws of the Wisconsin State Benevolent Society of Spiritualists.

Mrs. E. Y. Johnson's Funeral.

The funeral services of Mrs. Johnson, wife of Dr. E. Y. Johnson, Treasurer of the Onset Bay Association, took place Wednesday, June 20th, at her late residence in Warren, R. I.

A large number of relatives, friends and neighbors attended, in respectful memory of a good woman. Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, officiated, speaking inspired words concerning the mission of so-called death, also paying a high tribute to the departed as being a true, noble soul; he also alluded to her being a chosen and useful instrument for the control of loved ones from the spirit side.

Dr. Storer had been intimately acquainted with Dr. Johnson and wife for many years, and Mrs. Johnson had signified her wish that when her time came to go hence Dr. S. should conduct the funeral.

Rev. Mr. Dean, a warm friend of the family, was also present. COM.

Historical Revelations

OF THE RELATION EXISTING BETWEEN

CHRISTIANITY AND PAGANISM

SINCE THE

Disintegration of the Roman Empire.

BY THE

ROMAN EMPEROR JULIAN

(Called the Apostate),

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF T. C. BUDDINGTON.

Historical Revelations, or a Comparison between the Relations of Paganism and Christianity since the disintegration of the Roman Empire, by the spirit purporting to be the Emperor Julian (the Apostate), is one of those peculiar spiritual works that come like a meteor in a dark night or a thunderbolt from a cloudless sky.

Flashing its light upon the spiritual darkness of the mediæval ages, it gives to this generation a hint of the spiritual forces which have long been trying to lift the pall which has shrouded the religious world for centuries.

No person in Religious History has been more vilified and misunderstood than Julian, and probably there are few so well able to illuminate the spiritual gloom which settled upon the world after the overthrow of the old Empire.

Coming at this period when the foundations of Christian faith and its relations to the spiritual life are being scrutinized as never before, and especially when the phenomena of Christian Spiritualism are perplexing and confounding the beholders the work of Julian should and will be welcome to all classes who desire to know the truth.

LIFTING THE VEIL:

OR,

Interior Experiences

AND

Manifestations.

BY SUSAN J. AND ANDREW A. FINCK.

An interesting and instructive narrative of the experience of one who from early childhood was subject to the visits and recognizable guidance of spiritual intelligences. The opening chapter gives a graphic pen-picture of Southern plantation life when the "peculiar institution" of that section of our country was in its prime. The periodical visits of the circuit preacher, the preparations in the "big house" and the "quarters" of the negroes for the event, are finely described. As the narrative proceeds the development of mediumship gradually unfolds faculties previously latent, and tokens of the presence of spirits become more and more frequent. Accounts of clairvoyant, clairaudient and other experiences follow—all remarkable—including independent slate-writing, the sudden production of flowers, etc. In the latter part a thrilling account is given of the wonderful mediumship of a slave woman who startled an entire community with the eloquence of her discourses, prophetic visions, and powerful denunciations of wrong.

The book from beginning to end is one of intense interest; there is not a dull page; and treating as it does of the inception and growth of Spiritualism at the South, of which but little has been known to the public, it will command, as it should, a wide sale and do a good work.

The book contains finely executed portraits of the two authors, Mrs. Susan J. and Andrew A. Finck; also Folix M. Finck, and two clairvoyant scenes in spirit-life.

Cloth, large 12mo, beveled boards. Price $2.00, postage free.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY: Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters. By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq. With a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, Including various notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

This volume contains Gibbon's complete Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

Among the illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

Christian Dogmas vs. Spiritual Truths.

A Discourse by

PROF. HENRY KIDDLE.

The dogmas of the Christian churches embody the ideas which at different times and by various minds have been entertained in regard to elementary spiritual truths. While having, therefore, in general, a basis of truth, they are all, more or less, departures from it. Unfortunately, those who should revise and modify them, in the light of the present time, bigotedly cling to them as absolute and infallible, and thus become the enemies of religious progress.

They set them above the fundamental principles which every spiritualized mind must accept because in harmony with its own deepest conceptions, although these are the doctrines taught by him whom they recognize as the Christ, or the one specially anointed—using a Hebrew metaphor—for a great spiritual office and work in connection with the religious advancement of the race. History clearly shows that the Messianic office or function has been performed by many personages at various times and among different nations; and if their teachings are viewed from a strictly spiritual standpoint they will be found to be in essential accord; but none of them prescribed any fixed dogmas, or formulations of unchangeable, absolute truth, such as the creeds of the churches.

The simple congregations (ecclesiæ) of the Christ's followers, who met at stated times for their spiritual improvement, as well as to keep in mind the treasured spiritual truths which had been imparted to them by the Great Teacher, adopted no such dogmas; they needed none, because his precepts were so few and simple that every one could readily understand and remember them. He had avoided the subtleties of intellectualism; he presented to their minds no metaphysical refinements, as to the nature of Deity, the Fall of Man, the Atonement, the Vicarious Sacrifice, Predestination and Election, Justification by Faith, the Parthenogenesis, or Virgin Birth of the "only begotten Son of God," or any of the other mystical vagaries of theological speculation. It is ecclesiastics, not spiritual religionists, that have delighted in these, not simply useless, but really pernicious figments of the human intellect. These things have obstructed the spiritual advancement of mankind, which it was, manifestly, the great object of Christ's mission to promote.

Moreover, it should be observed that Christ prescribed no liturgy. He gave to his disciples but one very brief and simple prayer, and that only at their special request; while the saying of prayers he particularly discouraged, and never once "made a prayer" in the utterance of which he asked the disciples, or any of those who were present, to unite with him. His prayers were his own—made in the privacy of his own devotion; but he enjoined praying in secret, with the heart's earnest desire, not with a multitude of words, pompous declamation, or "vain repetitions," which he denounced as heathenish. How very far have "Christian ministers" and their flocks departed from the spiritual methods and philosophy of their Master in this regard! Christ evidently discouraged ecclesiastical ceremonies and organizations, because he knew how spiritless and dead they always become. His teaching consisted in the enunciation of principles, which when assimilated by the spiritual nature of those embracing them, and earnestly carried into practice, must, of necessity, govern the whole character, and bring about the change called regeneration, or spiritualization, by which is meant a translation from the mere life of the body to the higher, inner life of the spirit. Thus gradually was the Kingdom of God to be brought upon the earth.

I think it can be shown that the religious tendency of the Spiritualism of our time has been to bring into greater prominence, and indue with greater power, those simple principles which, according to the record, Christ taught, and which his disciples, in their apostolic efforts, endeavored to enforce. It is true that, in some respects, the apostolic teaching, particularly that of Paul (who was not a disciple of Christ, having never listened to his inculcations), mixed with the pure gospel many intellectual refinements, which greatly corrupted it, despoiled it of its spiritual efficacy, and laid the foundation of much bitter controversy and warring sectarianism. Paul's epistles, received by theologians as the result of a literal and infallible inspiration, while containing much spiritual truth (for the "apostle of the Gentiles" was endowed with a very clear intuition), have, far more than the teachings of Jesus, been made the basis of the dogmatic systems of the Christian churches. Indeed, Jeremy Bentham, in his work entitled "Not Paul but Jesus," goes so far as to say:

"In the Gospels and Paul's Epistles, two quite different, if not opposite, religions are inculcated; and in the religion of Jesus may be found all the good that has ever been the result of the compound so incongruously and unhappily made; and in the religion of Paul, all the mischief which, in such disastrous abundance, has so indisputably flowed from it."

There is much truth in this statement, with, however, considerable exaggeration. The logical tendency of Paul's mind naturally led him into intellectual subtleties which Jesus evinced his superior nature as a spiritual teacher by wholly avoiding.

The mystical attributes of God were never presented in his teaching, because he knew that God cannot be comprehended by the human understanding, but is to be spiritually apprehended in his personal relation to us; therefore, Jesus invariably represented him—metaphorically, of course—as our Father, and all mankind as his children. The teaching of Jesus is the Gospel of Love—the infinite love of God toward us, his children; and our duty to love him perfectly in return, as well as to love all our fellow creatures as the children of a common Father. Thus, the foundation of all his spiritual and ethical doctrine is the Fatherhood of God, and its corollary, the Brotherhood of Man. The famous ethical precept, "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye so unto them," is but a logical deduction from these higher, simpler, or more elementary truths. Take away from men the recognition of a Supreme Being—the mental and spiritual ideal of all that is good, loving, wise, and powerful, without any conceivable limit—and you destroy every ethical and spiritual standard, every moral sanction, every incentive to truth, justice, and mercy that does not spring from considerations of mere policy or selfish personal interest; while we all must recognize that unselfishness—self-sacrifice—self-abnegation, is the very essence of spiritual excellence or spiritual progress and exaltation. Certainly, this is the central principle of the spiritual philosophy taught by the angels of our modern dispensation, as it ever has been by all the messiahs and angelic teachers of the past. Its sublime, if not superhuman, exemplification on Mount Calvary, gave to Christianity its great and wonderful impulse, and its truly marvelous sway over the human heart; and, making the "cross of Christ" the expressive symbol of divine love and human self sacrifice, has given it a powerful and enduring influence, that no priestly cruelties or ecclesiastical tyranny and corruption have sufficed to destroy.

In the teaching of Jesus we find that the highest spiritual condition is presented under the expressive figure of the "Kingdom of God." A simple analysis of this phrase will show it to be exceedingly appropriate as well as pregnant with meaning. This state of the soul, whether embodied or disembodied, is a kingdom because it is subject to a controlling, guiding force; and that force is the divine will, as recognized and known, in the cultured and progressing conscience of man. I say progressing, because the more the conscience is cultivated and obeyed (and obedience is the only means of cultivation) the clearer and stronger will be its intuitions of rectitude and goodness, or, in other words, the more will its possessor know of the nature of God, and what his will dictates in regard to personal conduct, thought, and feeling. Hence the Kingdom of God denotes, first, a condition of the soul in which obedience to the divine will is the ruling principle, in every thought and action; and, secondly, a community of all those who have attained that condition. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness," said Jesus, "and all else shall be added unto you." In the simple prayer which he gave his disciples, he significantly employed the expressions, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." There is no heaven where man's will takes the place of the divine will; but such is the almost universal condition that prevails on earth at present, and scarcely less among so-called Christian and enlightened nations than among any others. Jesus significantly repudiated all earthly kinship or affinity except with those who were members of that kingdom. For example, when he was told that his mother and his brethren were without and desired to speak with him, he proclaimed a kinship higher and broader than that of earth, by saying: "Whosoever doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother."

And so in all things he enjoined spirituality in place of earthliness—the life that fits us for the immortal state in preference to that which binds us to the darkness of earth, cramps our spirits in the low habitudes of physical existence, and bars our progress to the kingdom of God, in which alone is real immortality. Spiritism may give us a knowledge of the continuous existence of the spirit; but it must be spiritualized—it must become truly Spiritualism—before it can conduct us to the kingdom of God, the realm of that immortality which Jesus and his disciples taught as aphtharsia, or incorruption. In the work of a remarkable medium, published more than twenty-five years ago, I find this spiritual truth expressed in a different way. After enumerating three kinds of so-called Spiritualism, he goes on as follows:

"The fourth kind, and truest and best, indeed that which only is truly spiritual, is the growing up into a spiritualized, out of the merely physical, selfhood; and this growth of soul necessarily admits the subject of it into the mysteries of being, precisely in accordance with the degree of the person's own unfolding. Such Spiritualists are good, moral, humane, charitable, merciful, kind, and true; religious, Christian, in deed as well as name; and such as these are never pulling down, but ever building up the Good, the Beautiful, and the True. When such a one dies, his or her stay in the middle state is very short, for he is speedily intromitted to the mysteries and grandeurs of the world of soul."

By the process which is called by Swedenborg vastation, the spirit, by which I mean the soul clothed in its spirit-body, is freed from the corruptions of the earthly life, and passes progressively from the spheres of discipline and purification into those of purity and harmony—called in the Christian teaching aphtharsia. This may well be called the "soul-world," because the soul, which is the essential, indestructible, self-conscious element of our being, regains in that condition its pristine purity and unity with the Divine nature. When Jesus said, "I and the Father are one," he only proclaimed his attainment to that advanced condition of spiritualization; he certainly did not mean to claim an absolute identity with the Supreme Being.

And this brings me to the consideration of that first and most fundamental of all the dogmas of the established Christian system, the Deity of Christ; which, I may say, seems to me the greatest perversion of the religion taught by Jesus. That religion was pure monotheism, the worship of one God; but Christianity became, in about three centuries, what may be called Christolatry—the worship of Christ as God; to which was subsequently added the worship of that inexplicable and inconceivable personality, the Holy Spirit, and the enunciation of the mystery of the Trinity, "Three persons and one God"—a dogma that, in no sense or form, is to be found in the religion of Jesus, or in any of the Scriptures that treat of him or his disciples; nor is it fairly deducible from any of his recorded teachings.

The Humble Nazarene, as he is so often called, could not have been guilty of the assumption of making himself equal to God the Supreme, to whom he ever offered his devotions, and whom he always recognized as a Being separate from himself; but he was, nevertheless, conscious of the fact, that, by being in harmony of will with God, he possessed transcendent spiritual power—power even to control the forces and agencies of physical nature. In this he but illustrated a truth which students of spiritual philosophy are now beginning to understand and rationally to explain, not as a special interposition of the Almighty, nor as a miraculous violation of universal law, but as the exemplification of a higher spiritual law, and in complete conformity with the economy of the universe, both physical and spiritual, which man in this state of being so imperfectly comprehends.

Jesus taught this truth; he abnegated all special power, all performance of what, in modern parlance, is called a miracle, when he said to his disciples that they should do the same "wonderful works" which they marveled at seeing him do; and that they should do even greater works than those. He plainly indicated that it was merely a matter of spiritual unfoldment and elevation.

The rationale of these alleged marvelous works of the spirit achieved by the Nazarene, Modern Spiritualism has been the means of revealing as a general principle, and thus has afforded a rational basis for the so-called supernaturalism which underlies Christianity; but the foolish, short-sighted ministers, and other supporters of the Christian church systems, have not been able to perceive any value in our modern revelation of spiritual truths; nay, they have, with suicidal perverseness, indiscriminately condemned it, just as their ancient ecclesiastical prototypes scoffed at and rejected the revelation of spiritual power and spiritual truth which Jesus brought to enlighten the world.

The so-called miracles of Jesus, even if we accept the Gospel records of them, no more prove that the sacred mystagogue was God the Supreme than the inventor of some novel piece of mechanism, such as the telegraph, the telephone, or the phonograph, is proved to be God by his ingenious application of general law. Christ obviously and confessedly, operated by means of spiritual law, which, under certain conditions, gives to spirit the unlimited control of matter. The subtle principles underlying the laws of the spirit-world are known only by a very few, and only to a small extent by any; while those of the material world, being cognized through the senses, are far more generally understood, and far easier of application.

The orthodox idea is, that Jesus demonstrated his absolute deity by these miraculous works; whereas, it is obvious to us that they were mere phenomenal feats, designed to startle the gross and materialistic, but not to manifest his exalted spiritual character, or to impart the divine principles and precepts which formed the subject of his teaching. They prepared the way for these by exciting in the minds of his followers a feeling of reverence for the teacher. There were wonder-workers, such as Apollonius of Tyana, for example, who could and did perform similar feats; but they were very far from evincing the exalted spirituality in life, character, and teaching of the Nazarene. "God manifest in the flesh" is a favorite expression of those who assert the identity of Jesus with the Supreme, but that expression is very far from implying it. God is manifest in every human being, in whom the divine individuality of the soul, created in the image of God, governs the inferior personality of earthly embodiment. Jesus is reported to have replied to the disciple Philip, when the latter said to the Master: "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us;" "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." The attributes of God are the elements of his personality—his self-consciousness, his power, his wisdom and his love; these are not to be seen in any embodied form—the personality of the Supreme knows no form, or any conceivable limitation; therefore he can be seen nowhere physically; and spiritually to us only in the soul-manifestations of the spiritualized man or woman. God could be thus seen in the Messianic man, because the latter exemplified beyond all other known characters, the power, sublimity, purity, and supremacy of the divine soul ruling over the lower selfhood—the inward controlling the outward—the existence of the kingdom of God within; where, as he taught, it can alone prevail.

Since the soul was created in the image of God, only in the highly spiritualized man, in whom the powers and properties of the soul prevail and hold rule, can that image be seen; so that one who has attained that condition of entire freedom from the corrupting influences of the fleshly nature may truly say: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."

Let me give you an illustration from experience. I had a friendly argument, a few years ago, with an ex-Congregational clergyman, who, through the mediumship of his wife, had become quite an earnest Spiritualist, as to the interpretation of this and other texts of Scripture, supposed in the Orthodox system to prove the deity of Christ, he contending that they were inconsistent with any other than such a claim on the part of the Nazarene. In the evening, while we were en séance, his wife was controlled, and wrote automatically the following:

"Your earnest conversations call me from other work to direct your minds. I, too, am learning, as we all must until we approach more nearly the perfection of God. Do not let the beauty of Christ's work—his love and tenderness—be marred by the claims he apparently set forth. So pure a spirit, dwelling as he did at a great spiritual height, perceived more clearly than any other whence he had come, and whither he was going, and felt, as none other has, his oneness with the Father. This to me shows his superiority to other pure teachers who preceded him; they aspired to this union with eternal purity; he felt it ever present with him."

This message was signed: "Your fellow student who was once called the Beloved of Christ." It was of peculiar interest, as unconsciously written by one whose mind was impregnated with the orthodox idea of the absolute deity of Christ; and it seems to me to state, very beautifully and succinctly, the exact truth as to the real nature of that much-misunderstood personage.

Then there is the doctrine of the atonement, which forms the basis of the Orthodox Christian system, but which no logic can possibly correlate with the dogma of Christ's deity; for how can we conceive God the Son sacrificing himself to God the Father? This, however, is the dogma. Christ, who is "very God of very God," voluntarily assumes human embodiment, and offers himself a victim to appease the "righteous indignation" of his Father, with whom he is mystically identified. Though absolutely identical as God, they are different "persons"—one is all love and charity and forgiveness, while the other is implacable except by this mysterious sacrifice. The disobedience of Adam is conceived to have practically destroyed the divine fatherhood; and the descendants of the first pair are placed under an eternal ban—given over to everlasting perdition, from which they can be redeemed only by God's permitting his alter ego, the Son, "begotten before all worlds," to be incarnate by another father, the Holy Spirit, who, though a separate person, is yet no other than God himself; for the greatest of all the creeds, accepted alike by Catholics and Orthodox Protestants, says: "There is one Person of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost; but the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost is all one." Thus the God who is inexorably angry with his children, the God who sacrifices himself to save those children from perdition, and the God who assists in the incarnation by his mysterious paternity, are not three Gods, but one God. This is what is so often held up to the adoration of mankind as the mystical "Trinity in Unity" and "Unity in Trinity," and to their admiration as the glorious and gracious "plan of redemption," devised in the council of the Triune God for the salvation of mankind. Well might Mr. Chadwick, the Brooklyn Unitarian clergyman, speak of this senseless and really blasphemous doctrine, as he did last Christmas day, as "more irrational, monstrous, and absurd than anything else ever devised by men pretending to the rank of intellectual beings."

And what authority has it? Certainly none in the Christian Scriptures rationally interpreted. It is not the teaching of Christ, either in the Synoptic Gospels or the Fourth Gospel; nor is it to be found in the letters of the Apostles, or in the Revelation of St. John. It is the grossest perversion of the spiritual principles enunciated in these writings, in which we find, indeed, the true doctrine of the atonement—at-one-ment—to which I have already referred—not the reconciliation of God to man, but the reconciliation of man to God—the bringing of humanity to a spiritual condition of harmony with the divine nature, that as Christ prayed, they all might be one with the Father, as he had become, and one in heart and purpose and heavenly desires with each other, the latter condition being the natural result of the former, since oneness with God necessarily implies universal, millennial harmony—"peace among all of good will." Thus the mission of the Christ was not to be the scape-goat of God's otherwise implacable wrath, but to make men realize the fatherly kindness of an infinitely loving God, with whom there can be no such thing as passion—no "variableness or shadow of turning." The change designed to be wrought by the Christ was not in the immutable, imperturbable mind of God, but in the corrupt nature of man, by the exertion of a spiritual influence, bringing into the world a new light and a new life. This was the metanoia which the precursor, John, preached; not simply, as translated, repentance, which indeed it included, but a new state of mind—an enlarged horizon of spiritual truth, a better knowledge of the divine nature, and a fuller conception and realization of the glories, as well as the responsibilities, of the future life.

That this was the view of Jesus, his own words as they are recorded show; that it was the view of St. Paul the language of his second letter to the Corinthians clearly proves: "God hath reconciled us to himself through Jesus Christ, and hath given us [the apostles] the ministry of reconciliation." And again: "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself"; and he adds: "We pray you, be reconciled to God."

This is the true, rational idea of the atonement. It has no relation to appeasing, placating, or satisfying divine indignation, whether "righteous" or unrighteous; because the true idea of God is altogether inconsistent with any such conception. It is only by going back to the anthropomorphic notions of God entertained by some of the Jews that a seeming sanction of Scripture is found for this absurd perversion.

In no respect are these fundamental principles discredited or even modified by anything, having any proper claim to respect or reliability, that has come to us from the spirit-world during the past forty years, or since the time when the attention of mankind commenced to be awakened to this subject by the sensuous manifestations of spirits. These elementary truths may be variously expressed and illustrated; they may be submitted to the intellect as merely abstract propositions, or offered to the heart in those beautiful concrete forms in which we find them in the simple statements of the Nazarene; but, however presented or expressed, they are the essential and unchangeable principles of man's relations to the spiritual universe, and to the Infinite Spirit that governs and guides it. All other truths pertaining to man's spiritual condition and destiny are but corollaries to these basic principles, of God's existence and love, and of the indispensable necessity that his intelligent, self-conscious offspring should, while retaining the full possession of their indestructible selfhood, be in harmony or union with him. When these principles are apprehended aright, everything else becomes plain and easy.

Then we acquire an unshaken confidence in the dispensations of the Supreme, faith in his omnipresence, and perfect trust in his all-wise care. Then, while we recognize his angelic instrumentalities or ministers, we never can fail to keep in mind whose ministers and messengers they are; while we are ever conscious of the beautiful guardianship of our brother and sister spirits who have passed to the bright realms of aphtharsia—of purity, peace, and self-forgetfulness—and feel gratefully appreciative of their kind offices, we see in them the reflection of the still greater love and beneficence of the Heavenly Father, whose agents they are. While we are assured that to him is known and felt every aspiration of our hearts for the good that is divine, we also know that every such desire is satisfied in the way that infinite tenderness and wisdom can alone dictate, and by those agencies that are best adapted to the purpose.

I am aware that there are those who occupy Spiritualist platforms who ignore, if they do not deny, these cardinal truths of spiritual illumination and progress, apparently satisfied to know that life goes on after the death of the physical body, but regardless of the condition or sphere in which that life is to be passed. But the great fact made known to us by Spiritualism is the illimitable progression of spirit or soul; and we have no right to ignore that fact here or hereafter; we have no right to neglect the culture of our spirits in this existence, when it is obvious that the very purpose of the material life is discipline and invigoration—certainly not of these frail bodies that soon return to the dust whence they came—but of that element of our being which is inextinguishable and immortal. "One world at a time," says the indifferentist, the sensualist, or the sciolist, when the fact is that the real purpose of this life can never be fulfilled except by keeping in view the conditions and responsibilities of the next and higher state of existence. True, the penalty incurred by neglect is not the total forfeiture of the life of the spirit; and you can enter that life and remain in it—that is, in your appropriate sphere—until there comes to you the impulse to advancement. Whittier has well expressed this truth in the following lines:

"Though God be good, and free be heaven,
No force divine can love compel;
And though the song of sins forgiven
May sound through lowest hell;

"The sweet persuasion of his voice
Respects thy sanctity of will.
He giveth day; thou hast thy choice
To walk in darkness still.

"Oh! doom beyond the saddest guess,
As the long years of God unroll,
To make thy dreary selfishness
The prison of the soul!—

"To doubt the love that fain would break
The fetters from thy self-bound limb,
And dream that God can thee forsake
As thou forsakest him."

For myself I may say that I should never have taken any great interest in Modern Spiritualism had I not viewed it as giving a positive basis for the purest as well as the surest and most rational religion that ever dawned upon men's spiritual conceptions; had I not been able to bring its cardinal truths into harmonious relations with the good and true of all ages and all nations. It is, in my view, consistent with that Everlasting Gospel of which all people, of whatever period, tribe, or nation, have known as much as, in their particular stage of unfoldment and amid the influences of their physical environment, they were able to apprehend and make available for their further development. Never has there been a time in the history of the world, I fully believe, when the sons and daughters of earth were so well prepared for spiritual illumination as at present—dark, yes, dreadfully dark, as the general condition of our race still remains. There are in this age soaring minds, that, with untired pinions and undazzled gaze, have entered the penetralia of the temple of spiritual truth, where the mysteries of the soul-realm are revealed; and there are angels from that exalted sphere of knowledge that, through mortal intermediaries, have dispensed to recipient mortals some of the treasures of wisdom which they have gleaned in their upward climbing toward the Infinite.

These things are contained in our spiritual records; but, though open to all, they are for those alone who can apprehend them, while to others they are sealed up, or a subject of derision and scoffing. But God is not mocked. His angels are not disappointed or disheartened. This light was not given for the blind, but for the seeing. This vital atmosphere in which we are immersed cannot be utilized by those who have no lungs to breathe it; and the measure of its life-giving strength to every one is his special capacity of inhalation. So with the spiritual light that has come to the earth at this time: had there been none able to perceive it and utilize it, it would not have been dispensed; and, of course, they whose vision is dim with prejudice and willful error cannot behold it. Let them remain, if they will, in the dismal caves and darkened cells of antiquated dogmatic systems, hugging their dear delusions to their breasts, and waiting for the archangelic trumpet to sound the reveillé, and muster their awakened souls to the great judgment of Truth. Revelation was not exhausted, as the enemies of modern revelation suppose, more than eighteen centuries ago. We have an authority which they deem infallible for this fact. "I have many more things to say unto you," said the great Teacher to his disciples; "but ye cannot bear them now." So, were another Messiah to come to the earth, at this time, would he have to say to his selected disciples. The same indeed is true of every teacher; he is obliged to withhold much from his pupils, the limit of their mental growth and unfoldment prescribing the measure of the instruction that can be given to them.

In connection with this let me say that perhaps the grandest result of the development of this time is the substitution of conscience and spiritual insight for the authority of sacred scripture and tradition; not that this has been, as yet, consummated; the seed-thought, however, has been sown, and has already germinated, and its continued growth and final development are as certain as any of the processes of nature. The spiritual emancipation of the race will not be fully achieved until every vestige of bibliolatry has disappeared, and man has learned to look to the Inner Light as his guide to truth, and has shaken off the thralldom of book-worship and ecclesiasticism. I would not speak of this as an entirely new conception, but rather as the revival of a principle which has been asserted at various times in the history of Christianity, and particularly by the great reformer, Luther, nearly four centuries ago, when he said to the Pope's Legate, who demanded that he should retract: "My soul seeks the light of truth. I cannot be forced to do anything against my conscience." Luther claimed the "right of private judgment" against council, priest, and pope; and on that principle Protestantism was founded. Its progress and spiritual power were, however, soon checked by the suppression of this very principle—by the substitution of Bibliolatry for Mariolatry, and by a dogmatic, persecuting spirit which split the Reformed Church into a hundred warring sects.

The cause of this state of things—which we see to exist even in an exaggerated degree among Spiritualists—is, that men appeal to the external intellect to apprehend those truths that belong to the realm of spirit, and which can be only seen clearly in the Inner Light. The simple truths I have referred to are the principles—principia, beginnings—which must be accepted, or confusion and discord are inevitable; while with them in full activity intellectual differences become only the pleasant and profitable incidents of our unending career, ever stimulating us to effort and leading us into new realms of knowledge and investigation.

Self-Help for Women.

The number of employments open to women is steadily increasing, and it is impossible to say that the future may not see as great changes as the immediate past has seen. The tendency of modern society is, in Napoleon Bonaparte's phrase, "to convert all trades into arts," and just so fast as this process goes on, rude strength becomes less essential and fineness of touch is more needed. Among the higher occupations there are some gaps which will soon be filled. The tenth census of the United States gives two thousand four hundred and thirty-two women as physicians and surgeons, and only forty-eight as "chemists, assayers and metallurgists," whereas the latter vocation would seem to follow easily on the former. It gives only seventeen women as architects, whereas domestic architecture would seem employment peculiarly fitted, at least in its indoor aspect, to that sex. It certainly seems absurd that they should forever go on calling in male advisers to tell them how many shelves to have in a pantry, or where to set the wash tubs in the laundry. But it is needless to give details of employment; just as far as the demand for an intelligent self-support exists, so far the opportunities will be equalized between the sexes, and more and more places will be found "higher up" for women. The great thing to secure is a feeling of genuine self-respect among women who earn their own living; to convert the class to be found even among those laboriously industrious who sincerely hold that no woman who earns her daily bread can be a lady. This will be outgrown; and with a greater ability to earn money will come better judgment in the use of it.—T. W. H., in Harper's Bazaar.

He is idle that might be better employed. Dyspepsia is never idle—its tortures never cease. Better employ Warner's Log Cabin Hops and Buchu Remedy, put the stomach in healthy action, and be fitted to continue your regular employment.

Massachusetts.

GREENWICH.—Juliette Yeaw writes: "The services of the Independent Liberal Church closed for the season July 1st, at which time the audience-room was completely filled. Upon the platform, organ and desk was arranged a magnificent display of flowers, presenting a scene of beauty seldom equalled.

The music was exceptionally fine. In conformity to the idea of the observance of the day as 'Children's Sunday,' the morning reading and discourse were appropriately arranged.

As is the usual custom upon the closing Sunday, the Lyceum session was holden in the audience-room, opening with the march from the vestry below, through the aisles of the church to the platform. Here again was presented a beautiful scene, as, grouped with bright banners, children and leaders joined in song stood between the brilliantly frescoed background and the radiant foreground of flowers.

A fine story was read by Mr. H. W. Smith; a poem by Mrs. Johnston; recitations were presented by Misses Mamie and Cretie Southworth, Misses Nellie and Mabel Nevins, Misses Edna, Lena and Bessie Johnston and Lily Ruddock; Miss Nellie Sears sang a beautiful song; Miss Gracie Smith rendered two in her peculiarly impressive style, and Birdie Lamond pleased all with her first song in our midst. With the responses, remarks by Mrs. Yeaw, further singing by the school and the march, the programme was completed.

The three years' history of this Society presents no better record than that of this most enjoyable day.

The large audience dispersed with expressions of universal satisfaction, yet with sincere regret that the parting hour had come; pleasing anticipation, however, remained that in September the relation between speaker and people would be renewed.

Your correspondent is well aware that she writes with enthusiasm of matters in Greenwich, but she also knows that the half has not been told—of the church, its noble founders, its devoted adherents, the development of individualism, the rending of creedal bonds—and better than all, the unbroken harmony and kindly spirit 'leavening the whole lump.'"

CLINTON.—"E. M." writes: "Since the first of February we have had a series of interesting meetings—Rev. E. Fairchild, Mrs. N. J. Willis, Dr. George A. Fuller, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes, Joseph D. Stiles and Dr. H. F. Merrill having occupied our platform. The lectures have been instructive, and the tests satisfactory. We have just concluded a two weeks' engagement with Dr. Merrill, whom we recommend as a fine test medium, and a faithful and conscientious worker for the Spiritual Philosophy. He is reëngaged for Sept. 30th and Oct. 7th. During this season we have organized a Ladies' Aid Society, which is prosperous. We shall resume our meetings in September."

WORCESTER.—T. R. Johnson writes: "The Worcester Association of Spiritualists closed its meetings for the season on Sunday, June 24th—Miss Jennie B. Hagan of South Framingham being the speaker for the month of June. We have had a most successful season, having paid every dollar of indebtedness, and have a small balance in the hands of the Treasurer.

THREE RIVERS.—E. D. Blakeman, writing of Reincarnation, says: "To those dissatisfied with the life they have led since coming to a knowledge of good and evil, such a theory may be comforting, and therefore all right and acceptable; but to my mind, and to many others, it is far from being so. To me it destroys all certainty of realizing that we shall meet and recognize our loved ones who have passed on.

If my spirit, after laying aside this earthly tabernacle, must be reincarnated in some infantile embryo, be born again, forget all it has learned and experienced in this busy life—forget father, mother, brothers, sisters, and all dear friends, what matters it to me whether I believe they will be (in spirit) reincarnated, or whether they will be privileged to pass on and up to higher, holier, and more desirable stages or spheres of progressive existence? To me it seems that this reincarnation idea serves to destroy all desire to enrich our minds with stores of progressive thought, and knowledge of a higher spiritual state, since no matter however much we may obtain in this present life, all is to be obliterated at death, and not even a glimmer of recollection left that we ever have before been through the same mill of an earthly experience! Such thought to my aspiring mind seems dark and gloomy.

The old doctrine of reincarnation might have answered the dark and unprogressed minds of the ancients, but to me it seems out of place, in this enlightened age and nation, for spirits to make the slightest endeavor to promulgate ideas that belonged to India and other non-evoluted nations thousands of years since, the inhabitants of which, even to this day, hold in belief, not only in reincarnating the spirit, or rather of passing into the embryotic germs of new human bodies, but that various kinds of animals, birds and reptiles will be receptacles of human spirits when set free by death! It is, however, quite natural that the spirits of men who have held tenaciously to such (to me uninviting) theories, should still seek to promulgate them, they not knowing, and perhaps not wishing to know, anything to the contrary.

We are told by some that highly progressed spirits do not have to be reincarnated again, but that they find themselves ready and prepared to pass on and up the eternal hills of progression. Heaven grant that such may be true. Of course in this, as in other things, like other men, I may be the most apt to 'believe that which I wish to be true.' Let that be as it may, there is one thing I think it would be well for us to know, that is, which one, two, three or four of a family circle will be permitted to go up higher, so that those who are to reincarnate may bid them farewell while yet an opportunity is possible for the final parting; but how much better to believe that no such parting will ever come."

FOWLER.—Mrs. Lunt-Parker writes: "Having closed a six months' successful meeting in the city of Lansing, we bade a kind adieu to the many dear friends we formed there, who gave us their best wishes for our success and return in the future. There are many earnest workers in Lansing; among them are Dr. Edson, Mrs. Merrill, and Haven and Cornell, who have done much for the cause.

After leaving the city of Lansing we journeyed to Mr. F. Trowbridge's grove, and held a ten days' meeting there, including two Sundays and three week-evenings. The many tests given by Lily May Lunt and my guides were said to be highly appreciated, and the friends are in hopes to have us with them again soon. The grove is indeed a lovely spot, and the genial presence of Mr. and Mrs. Trowbridge makes it all the more pleasant. The nearness to the Half Way House is an advantage to all, for the proprietors, Mr. George Enis and wife, try to make their guests happy.

Mr. Trowbridge is willing to have the grove used for spiritual grove and yearly meetings, and will make everything pleasant for the friends if they wish to occupy it. There is a lake near by that undoubtedly could be utilized as an additional attraction to the beautiful grove.

We desire to return to Mr. Trowbridge and his companion a vote of thanks for their kindness to us while on their grounds."

New Jersey.

CAMDEN.—Dr. James Jennings writes: "In the BANNER of March 31st is a question by 'Inquirer' as to the possibility of a person's seeing his double. I am hence induced to describe an experience which I met with some twelve years since: While working out of doors on a very hot August day I began to feel strangely, and hurried into the house. I immediately lay down on the lounge and became unconscious. When my consciousness returned I saw my body propped up upon the lounge, with my wife beside it for support, while I myself was standing at the foot of the lounge looking at my body and listening to a spirit Indian who controlled my mortal organism and gave instructions to the friends present as to what to do to restore my physical for my return to it. I was thoroughly and intelligently conscious of all this, but the physical was not as palpable to my sight as the spiritual, which was clear and distinct. The act of moving back into my body again (from which I was spiritually absent about two hours) I know nothing at all about."

Washington Territory.

SEATTLE.—D. S. Smith writes us that the Indians of the Squakson, Nisqually, Chehalis and Skokomish tribes of Olympia have a new religion, which has seemed to outside observers to be already prolific of much good among them. They style their new belief the "Slocum Tumtum" (thought), it having originated with one of the Squakson tribe named John Slocum. Some time ago John claimed to have been favored with a revelation from the spirit-world, in which it was revealed to him that any Indian desiring to participate in the festivities of the "sahale illahe" (happy place, or heaven,) must lead a purely upright life, it being necessary for such Indian to abstain from all gambling, drinking, swearing, etc. The announcement of this alleged revelation by Slocum has made him so prominent a personage among his dusky believers that he is now regarded with much more reverence than the "Hyas Tyee," (big chief, or great chief,) of whom he claims to be an apostle.

Their mode of worship is in some respects similar to that practiced by the Quakers years ago, each one speaking or acting as the spirit moves him. Before beginning a meeting they always select a leader, who goes into a trance. The meetings usually last several hours, being terminated when the leader's trance is at an end.

At the time of writing our correspondent informs us that, the attention of Agent Eells having been called to this new system of thought so practically followed out by the Indians, regarding the present life and its influence on that of the future, he had interfered and ordered that it be abolished—notwithstanding the good it was effecting among his wards—and that the Indians had appealed for protection to Gen. R. H. Milroy, ex agent for the district, who, for answer, had referred them to the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which assures them defense in worship conducted according to the dictates of their consciences.

We have not as yet received information as to the sequel in this case.

New York.

BROOKLYN.—Samuel D. Greene writes: "The good work in our glorious cause is being pushed forward at the Sunday meetings at Conservatory Hall, Brooklyn. For the last four or five Sundays we have been favored with the inspirational remarks of Wm. C. Bowen. He is an earnest, full-souled, logical and comprehensive speaker, eliciting many a heart-response to his noble utterances in vindication of the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism—lately traduced and maligned by pulpit and press—both of which, through ignorance, bigotry and old-time superstitions, have striven to distort the angel teachings of peace and good-will.

Despite all opposition a new and intense interest is being awakened, and as thought is the agitator for wisdom, so inquiry and investigation lead many to a further search for the truth. All such become soon assured that the door for spirit converse is open, and that the continuity of life in the beyond is a fact. Then the loved ones who have passed on cheer them with their assurances of the realities of spirit-life, thereby bringing them a peace which passeth all understanding; soothing and calming many a troubled, storm tossed mind."

OSWEGO.—John Camp writes in testimony of what returning spirits have done for him. He is convinced that when he was quite young his father in spirit-life was instrumental in preserving his mortal existence on several occasions. He closes by saying: "I know it was my angel-father who saved my life. The whole world cannot weaken me in this opinion. I know it is true. I wish every one could have as good proof of the verity of spirit-return as I have had."

Maine.

KENDUSKEAG.—C. W. writes: "I hold to the old adage, 'virtue is its own reward,' or, in other words, that peace which must ever flow up into every soul as the result of patient, energetic continuance in 'well doing' must have been to you ample reward through all the years you have labored to release humanity from the thralldom of ignorance and superstition and help them to a better knowledge of the relationship of each to the other and all to the Infinite: Still perhaps an occasional echo of response from those who have been the happy recipients of blessings resulting from your toil may possibly bring to you something additional of 'hearty good cheer.'

I like very much your extracts from and comments upon the discourse of Rev. Phillips Brooks, as given in THE BANNER of June 16th. In speaking of the same you are pleased to say: 'A grand truth is conveyed in the utterance, "His is the large and enlarging mind that can grasp and hold it clearly and comprehensively."' This is just the work THE BANNER has been doing, not only among the 'pines of Maine,' but equally, with the sunlight, all over the world, aiding in the more rapid unfoldment of liberal thought and a broader grasp of knowledge.

The closing paragraph in that article deserves to be inscribed in letters of gold upon our national escutcheon, emblazoned on our flag, and taught in every seminary and schoolroom in our land."

Pennsylvania.

WARREN.—Thomas Palphramand writes expressive of the great pleasure afforded him in reading the BANNER OF LIGHT, for whose receipt he is indebted to Hon. Hugh Young. On the 12th of March last our correspondent celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday, he having been born in Darlington, Eng., (where also William Denton first saw the light of mortal existence) in 1804. He is pleased with the hopeful prospects for human betterment as the days go by, and regards the Woman's Congress recently held in Washington, D. C., as one of the most encouraging "signs of the times."

PHILADELPHIA.—T. J. Ambrosia, President of the Second Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, writes that at a meeting of the Association Sunday, June 10th, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kershaw (members of the Association) presented their infant son for baptism. "The ceremony was performed by one of the controls of Mrs. T. J. Ambrosia (Miss Leland), assisted by the control of Mrs. Emma Nutt. It was the first of the kind we have witnessed, and, though devoid of conventional rites and formula, was solemn, impressive and interesting.

The Second Association will discontinue its meetings during July and August, resuming in September, when we hope to be able to report continued and increasing success in the spiritual cause."

Connecticut.

WILLIMANTIC.—A correspondent writes: "Sunday, the 24th of June, finished the month's lectures given by Prof. W. F. Peck. During his stay among us he has accomplished a good work, and his lectures rank among the best ever delivered from our rostrum. His music, in connection therewith, makes him one of the most desirable speakers.

Prof. Peck gave, in connection with local talent, a Musical and Dramatic Entertainment in our hall on Friday evening, June 29th. It was well received by a goodly number present, and was worthy even of a larger audience. After the entertainment refreshments were served in Lyceum Hall by the ladies—consisting of ice cream and strawberries, cake and lemonade. It was nearly midnight when the company dispersed.

Sunday, the 1st of July, occurred the annual election of officers for our Progressive Lyceum, which resulted as follows: Conductor, Dumont Kingsley; Assistant Conductor, Mrs. John Conant; Guardian, Miss Eunice Ripley; Musical Director, Miss Lizzie Lyman; Assistants, Miss Flora Melony, Mrs. W. D. Clark; Librarian, Charles Spencer; Guards, W. D. Clark, B. W. Taft, Charles Spencer. Lyceum adjourned to Sept. 16th."

Kansas.

ELK FALLS.—A. C. Williams writes that he believes animals and birds can be and often are directed in their movements by spirits, and relates an incident in his own experience as follows: "A spirit-friend of mine told me she would send or bring me a dove to keep in remembrance of her. A few days ago I was employed fixing a wire-fence, my horse and cart standing near by. I was making considerable noise, sufficient to prevent the approach of a bird; but, notwithstanding this, a dove alighted on the cart, apparently very tame. My immediate impression was that my spirit-friend had fulfilled her promise. When I started to leave the dove flew directly at me. On relating this to others I have been told of several incidents of a similar kind happening in their own experiences."

CHICAGO.—Mrs. J. A. Clark writes that Frank C. Algerton has closed his eight months' engagement with the society of which she is Secretary. He is now absent for rest and recreation. Before his return to Chicago he will visit Onset Bay, Lake Pleasant and Cassadaga. The society has engaged his services for next winter; in the meantime its platform will be occupied by local speakers.

THE HIGH TIDE AT GETTYSBURG.

BY AN EX-CONFEDERATE SOLDIER.

A cloud possessed the hollow field,
The gathering battle's smoky shield.
Athwart the gloom the lightning flashed,
And through the cloud some horsemen dashed,
And from the heights the thunder pealed.

Then at the brief command of Lee
Moved out that matchless infantry,
With Pickett leading grandly down,
To rush against the roaring crown
Of those dread heights of destiny.

Far heard above the angry guns
A cry across the tumult runs—
The voice that rang through Shiloh's woods
And Chickamauga's solitudes,
The fierce South cheering on her sons!

"Once more in Glory's van with me!"
Virginia cried to Tennessee:
"We two together, come what may,
Shall stand upon these works to-day!"
(The reddest day in history.)

Brave Tennessee! In reckless way
Virginia heard her comrade say:
"Close round this rent and riddled rag!"
What time she set her battle-flag
Amid the guns of Doubleday.

But who shall break the guards that wait
Before the awful face of Fate?
The tattered standards of the South
Were shriveled at the cannon's mouth,
And all her hopes were desolate.

In vain the Tennesseean set
His breast against the bayonet!
In vain Virginia charged and raged,
A tigress in her wrath uncaged,
Till all the hill was red and wet!

Above the bayonets, mixed and crossed,
Men saw a gray, gigantic ghost
Receding through the battle-cloud,
And heard across the tempest loud
The death cry of a nation lost!

The brave went down! Without disgrace
They leaped to Ruin's red embrace.
They only heard Fame's thunders wake,
And saw the dazzling sun-burst break
In smiles on Glory's bloody face!

They fell, who lifted up a hand
They smote and fell, who set the bars
Against the progress of the stars,
And stayed the march of Motherland!

They stood, who saw the future come
On through the fight's delirium!
They smote and stood, who held the hope
Of nations on that slippery slope
Amid the cheers of Christendom!

God lives! He forged the iron will
That clutched and held that trembling hill.
God lives and reigns! He built and lent
The heights for Freedom's battlement
Where floats her flag in triumph still!

Fold up the banners! Smelt the guns!
Love rules. Her gentler purpose runs.
The mighty mother turns in tears
The pages of her battle years,
Lamenting all her fallen sons!

New Hampshire State Convention.

The eighth annual meeting of the New Hampshire State Spiritualist Association was held at Manchester, June 22d, 23d, 24th, in the fine hall occupied by the local society on Hanover street.

Among the speakers and mediums present were Dr. Storer of Boston, whose presence has come to be almost a necessity in our State gatherings; Mrs. A. M. Stevens, of Washington, a lady whose rare gifts should be more fully employed by Spiritualists everywhere; Miss S. Lizzie Ewer, of Portsmouth, who is a credit to the State of her adoption and is doing a grand work within its limits; Mrs. E. B. Craddock, of Concord, whose diversified gifts are many and highly appreciated. Miss Jennie B. Hagan, whose talents are known everywhere, kindly volunteered her valuable services for Friday and Saturday. Several others were expected, but for various reasons failed to appear.

Mrs. Stevens called the meeting to order on Friday at three P. M., in the absence of President Fisher, and after a song, "Home So Blest," by the Secretary, welcomed the friends and spoke of the small beginnings of all great changes in human thought, and in high terms of the speakers at past gatherings.

Miss Ewer paid a tribute to her adopted State, recited a fine poem, and emphasized the value of personal labor and the duty of each doing well whatever was required. Miss C. W. Knox, of Boston, after a few remarks, gave a number of tests which were received with much satisfaction.

Miss Hagan was the bearer of a message of fraternal greeting from the Worcester friends. After referring to those who had met with us in the form, but had now arisen and were still near and interested with and for us, she spoke of the blossoming season of the year and its analogy to the unfoldment of our spiritual nature. Dr. Storer remarked that we came together not only to clasp hands and look into each others' faces, but to enjoy communion with the invisible. Bro. Burpee, of Manchester, related some wonderful tests occurring in his own family.

Evening.—President Fisher called the meeting to order, and after the song "Our Beautiful Home Over There," and an invocation by Mrs. Stevens, Dr. Storer addressed the convention upon "Prayer as a Factor in the Evolution of the Race." There is no happiness to be compared to a knowledge of spirit presence and a reliance on it for help. Of intuition and reason he said woman is the exponent of one and man of the other. Following Dr. Storer Miss Hagan remarked upon the recent Talmagean onslaught against Spiritualism, showing it to be the annual attack which that preacher thinks it necessary to make to prevent his flock from straying into forbidden fields. She closed with poems on "The River of Time," "Ideals," and "Vanished Faces."

SATURDAY, JUNE 23D.

Morning.—After a song, "Summer Roses in the Heart," Mrs. Stevens said that we, of all others, are able to give a reason for the faith that is in us. We come to conferences full of experiences, and our highest duty is to keep these bodies pure as temples for the indwelling of the spirit.

Miss Ewer fully endorsed the sentiments expressed by Mrs. Stevens, and closed with personal messages and tests to many present. The time of the conference was fully occupied till noon by Mrs. Blake, of Nashua, Dr. Storer, Bro. Burpee, the Secretary, and others.

Afternoon.—Song: "Beautiful Home of the Soul." Miss Hagan, alluding to the excessive heat of the day, admitted the sagacity of some preachers who pictured hell as a hot or cold place, according to the state of the weather. She spoke at some length and in her happiest vein, and closed with a fine poem; also improvisations on the following subjects given by the audience: "When the Shadows Flee Away," "When I Go," "Who Will be There?" Miss Ewer spoke of the reality of the "Home of the Soul," and, though conditions were very unfavorable, gave many fine tests. At this point Miss Hagan and Miss Ewer were obliged to leave to fulfill Sunday engagements, much to the regret of all. The Association proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year with the following result:

President, N. A. Lull, of Washington; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. Amidon of Manchester, Jonathan Arey of Salisbury, and S. B. Craddock, of Concord; Secretary, George D. Epps, of Francestown; Treasurer, N. P. Batchelder, Ashland; Auditor, Justus Fisher, Keene.

Evening.—Song, "Dream Faces." After an impressive invocation by Mrs. Stevens, Dr. Storer, as the speaker of the evening, said, "The phenomena of Spiritualism have done more in changing the current of public opinion on man's spiritual nature than all else. Societies are now formed for scientific investigation, and while some seem to waste time on trivial matters, the current is in the right direction." Dr. S. spoke for over an hour, closing with a brilliant apostrophe to Spiritualism as giving to men a new heaven and a new earth; giving these not to the few, but the many.

SUNDAY, JUNE 24TH.

Morning.—Invocation by Mrs. Craddock. Song, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us." Mrs. Stevens requested that subjects be given by the audience, and the following were handed in: "What has Spiritualism Done to Merit the Antagonism of the Churches?" "Moral Outgrowth of Spiritualism," "Spiritualism a Religion," "What is God and Where?" "Spiritualism and Old Theology," all of which were handled in a very effective manner, the remarks thereon being greatly enjoyed by all present.

Afternoon.—Song, "I'm Going Home." Mrs. Craddock, after an invocation, spoke at length on the "Purpose of this New Departure as a Natural and Healthy Outgrowth of the Spirit of the Age." Men have found in it what has never been found elsewhere—the divine law of compensation.

After another song Dr. Storer spoke briefly on one of the topics of the morning, "The Relations of Spiritualism to Morality." Mrs. Craddock closed the session with a number of fine tests.

Evening.—The closing exercises commenced with the announcement by President Fisher, in behalf of friends at Keene, of an invitation to hold a convention there next fall. After some discussion the matter was referred to the executive committee.

Dr. Storer gave the valedictory discourse to a well-filled hall, seeming to get fresh inspiration with each thought. His theme was "Progress, the Grand Law of the Race—Here and Hereafter." He gave a very interesting account of a recent interview with A. J. Davis, who held that the keynote for right living here is 'an even mind." Nothing short of a verbatim report could do justice to this marvelous production of Dr. Storer's. At its close Mrs. Craddock gave way to her controls and entertained the meeting with some pleasing tests. The following resolution was then offered and adopted by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention be extended to the friends in Manchester for the use of their hall, and for courtesies extended to the speakers, mediums and visiting friends; to the press for its favorable notices; to the singers, and all who have in any way contributed to its success.

GEORGE D. EPPS, Secretary.

What the Doctors Say.

June 12th the Massachusetts Medical Society met at Huntington Hall, Boston. The Boston Evening Transcript reports that Dr. Otis K. Newell and Dr. B. Joy Jeffries occupied a large portion of the time in delivering addresses which clearly illustrate the present drift of feeling in the Regular profession.

The so-called "quacks," including the Homeopaths, received a severe criticism and castigation at their hands, and the query might naturally arise from those who employ said quacks with satisfaction—What for?

Dr. Newell calls Massachusetts the "hotbed of quackery," and says: "In medicine, unlike any other science, the quack is only readily detected by him who is well versed in the art itself, and it therefore devolves upon the physician more than any one else to aid in his exposure and extermination."..."If the united effort of this society cannot soon succeed in establishing the most effective laws for the quick suppression of such vice, there is one way, I believe, in which it can be done. I refer to the education of the public in general medical, hygienic and sanitary affairs. In other communities this is already being done with great effect, and here, in spite of the insulting lack of legal support, the medical profession is doing much in the same direction."

He says, also, that "no homeopath has ever added a great discovery to medicine, and there does not exist in the world to-day a large, well-sustained homeopathic school of medicine or hospital—not even in the country where the principle originated." He then paid his particular respects to those who practice mental healing, and the class of people whose "credulity" leads them to such "doctors," and closed with reference to the lack of support the proper study of medicine received from "the laity."

This admission has a sad look for the future of the allopathic mode of treatment as being a finality, and the facts themselves go to prove that the people want some other and more successful way of eradicating disease, otherwise they would flee to these self-considered efficient doctors.

Dr. Jeffries's remarks are (in brief) as follows: "It is very generally agreed that the lawyer, the minister, the squire and the physician, do not hold the same relation to the community as they formerly did. As that position was one of trust and confidence, it well behooves us to carefully study the causes that have broken it down, and correct, if possible, any fault lying at our door; on the other hand, it is equally our duty to right ourselves before the community if our efforts have again placed us in a position to be trusted and confided in."...."Why have the profession as a whole lost their hold on the community and the respect naturally theirs?"

No man ever made a fortune as a physician, says Dr. Jeffries in his remarks. This may be a truth, but some of the Back Bay doctors may not fully coincide with such views. Dr. Jeffries laid much stress on the people not being able to designate a "quack" from one that is not such; and desired that all Regulars should completely separate themselves from "quacks," socially and otherwise. [Perhaps, however, they would not carry the breach between them to the extent that they would refuse to prescribe for the quack in case of sickness.]

The autocratic standing assumed by the venerable Society just mentioned, and the fierce utterances used against the homeopaths, and eclectics, too, by parity of reasoning—as they, not being "Regular," must be "quacks" (there being but two grades of goods acknowledged at medical "headquarters"—ought to be retained in the memory of the practitioners of these respective systems at least till next fall, when a certain species of Regulars will ask them for their aid in obtaining the passage of a "Doctors' Plot Law," so that the "Profession" in its effort to break down all competition may not have to mourn, as now, "the insulting lack of legal support" which greets its laudable (?) endeavors. Let the disciples of Hahnemann and other medical reformers, then, turn a cold shoulder to their specious appeals for coöperation, remembering that as the "leopard cannot change his spots" neither can the persecutive nature of the Allopathic institution be changed, and once given the power, by statute, every other system of practice will be obliged, gradually but surely, to succumb.

To give a specimen of the feeling engendered at points where sumptuary medical laws have found passage I will quote from the recent experience of a magnetic physician, related by himself, as occurring on Sunday, June 10th, in a town some twenty miles from Boston. The healer said he visited the town, and finding but one meeting there (Congregationalist) he attended the evening service, which took the form of a general conference. Several speakers expressed their views upon a passage in the Bible which the minister read to them, which was to the effect that the Pharisees watched Jesus to see if he healed the sick on the Sabbath day, that they might accuse him of breaking the Sabbath; he then read Jesus' reply by asking them a question as to what they would do in case a dumb beast should fall into a ditch, etc. The healer declared that he would have been much pleased to enliven the occasion by drawing an humble parallel between his case in the nineteenth century and the great Founder in the first, putting "Regular Doctors" for Pharisees, in this instance: He had, though people wanted his services because of their value, been proceeded against by the medicos who wanted their fees, under charge of healing the sick illegally, and had been forced to give up practice in New York State. He would have been pleased to add that he had exercised his healing gift that very day upon a lady who was in the congregation while the passage was being read by the minister; though in twenty-nine States of this boasted free American individuals were not allowed to heal the sick with spiritual gifts even on week-days, to say nothing of the Sabbath—while the doctors were watching to-day, just as did their prototypes in Judea, to see if they could not discover some irregularity going on in the eradication of disease, to which they might apply their medico-political "lex talionis." Shame on all such procedures, whose inevitable outcome is the sacrifice of the many that the few may thrive.

ANTI-MONOPOLIST.

EXPERIMENTING WITH DIVINING RODS.—The use of hazel twigs or currant twigs as divining rods to discover underground springs of water is still in general practice in England and on some parts of the continent. It is not seldom that professors of the art are also found in this country. Of late several English notables have been experimenting with the rod, and in some cases rather startling results followed. It seems to have never occurred to these hunters of springs that over large tracts of country the ground is everywhere permeated with underground water veins, and you can scarcely dig anywhere without touching one. In olden times the same hazel twig, cut in a V form, was used as an unerring guide to witch-finding, which is the possible reason for its being called witch-hazel. Witch-hunting was a profession. Led into a company of women, the forked end of the rod held in the professor's hands bent toward the person who was guilty. Thousands were thus sent to the stake.—Globe-Democrat.

Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated. 'Tis not best to suffer pain for even one little day, when one application of Warner's Log Cabin Extract will drive it quick away. Nothing better for external or internal application.

PASSING ON.

When you and I are dead, Love,
The birds as sweet will sing,
The wild flowers blossom just as bright
In the warm breath of spring;
And cities then will rise and fall
In the great world's onward tread;
Whate'er has been, the same will be
When you and I are dead.

When you and I are dead, Love,
And the tall grass o'er us waves,
When dark with age the marble slab
Leans o'er our lowly graves,
When all we loved have passed away
With the years that o'er them sped,
The world will journey on the same
When you and I are dead.

When you and I are dead, Love,
In the streets where now we be,
We shall be missed no more than is
A wave upon the sea;
With clasp of hand, and beat of heart,
With smiles and hurrying tread,
Like us to-day the throng will press
When you and I are dead.

WILLIAM G. BROWN.

Stevens Point, Wis., June, 1888.

Biographical.

Damon Y. Kilgore, Esq.,

Passed into spirit-life from his home in Philadelphia on April 25th, 1888, in the sixty-first year of his age. The funeral services were attended by J. Clegg Wright, the well-known Spiritualist lecturer, upon the 1st of May, after which his body was cremated, in pursuance of his wishes as expressed in his will, as the most scientific method of disposing of the body after death. On Sunday evening, June 24th, a memorial service was held in the Spiritualist Hall in Philadelphia, Mr. Wright giving an analysis of the life and labor of Mr. Kilgore on earth, and forecasting what would be his work in spirit-life.

DAMON Y. KILGORE was a native of New Hampshire, born Oct. 17th, 1827, in Bartlett, at the foot of Kearsarge Mountain, within full view of Mount Washington, where he resided until he was fifteen years of age, at which time he left home to attend school, defraying his expenses of education either by his own manual labor or by teaching day school, and classes of penmanship in the evening. He subsequently resided in Massachusetts, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania. He was a natural reformer and educator.

His first teaching was as a means to an end, the end being self-education at institutions of learning of a higher grade than any within the immediate vicinity of his childhood home, but at the early age of twenty-three he commenced his work of public education. Four years of his early manhood were spent in teaching what he then believed to be the truth from the Methodist pulpit, into which he carried that earnestness of purpose born of conviction and always the parent of success; preaching ninety nights in succession without reward other than the happiness derived from the conversion of the sinner and unbeliever to what he believed to be the truth. As a minister he justly earned the reputation of being an honest, consistent preacher, whose talent and magnetic eloquence would be sure to be rewarded by the highest honors of the church.

He early espoused the cause of the slave, and was the first evangelical minister who invited William Lloyd Garrison into his pulpit to educate his people in freedom; about the same time he extended a similar invitation to Lucy Stone as a champion of the rights of woman, saying that: "Woman has as good a right to preach as a man, and if she can preach a better sermon she has a better right." This occurred in 1852, and of course excited much comment and some unpleasant criticism from both church and laity. Zealous in his efforts to raise the standard of Christian morality and life among his people, by his excessive, arduous labors he soon developed bronchitis to such an extent that he was compelled to change climate and cease from habitual public speaking.

The West was supposed to be the best climate for him, and accordingly he went to Madison, Wis., and engaged in educational work as a teacher, and when the beautiful village of Madison was incorporated as a city he drafted its public school law, organized its public schools, was elected for several successive years Superintendent of the Public Schools, at the same time doing duty as Principal of the High School and a member of the Board of Education. At that time, 1856, he introduced into those schools what is recognized to-day as the advanced methods of government and instruction. Respecting even the conscience of a child, he secured the general attendance of the children of Catholic parents, advocating their right to be taught science in the public schools without being compelled to read or listen to the reading of the Protestant Bible. He subsequently occupied the position of President of the Evansville Seminary and Normal School at Evansville, Wisconsin.

Gradually outgrowing the dogmas of the Church, his veneration for truth compelled him to take a firm stand against Christianity as a system of religion and to withdraw from the church, although implored by those high in office to stifle his convictions and continue his membership.

About the time of the civil war he became convinced of the truth of Spiritualism through the mediumship of a little child, and through the mediumship of one of his pupils obtained valuable information for the government as to the existence of the Knights of the Golden Circle, their secret organization, plotting against the life of the government, its chief executive head, and several of the Governors of Northern States, which he individually communicated to Abraham Lincoln, who, by investigation, verified his statements and thwarted their schemes.

He served in the war as Quartermaster, and won the proud distinction from Abraham Lincoln of being an honest Quartermaster. While in active service he found time to establish the first school for colored people in Alabama.

After the close of the war he settled in Philadelphia, studied law, and became a distinguished member of the Philadelphia Bar. His first case, a case of murder in the first degree, brought him prominently before the public as a Spiritualist, it involving the facts of spirit control, in which he introduced for the first time in the history of law animal magnetism as a defense in a court of justice, and strange to say his last important argument made in court twenty years afterward involved these same facts of spirit control. As a lawyer he was active counsel in important cases in Georgia, Kansas, New Jersey, as also in Pennsylvania. He always espoused the cause of the poor, and the unpopular cause if he believed it to be the truth, whatever of reputation, business or position it might cost him.

He for many years was an earnest worker in the labor cause—counseling the laboring man to accomplish by education and the ballot the great reforms needed.

Woman he never flattered, but to her was a true friend, advocating her political, industrial and social rights, and for fifteen years he labored incessantly with his wife, Carrie Burnham Kilgore, to whom he was married in 1876, for the recognition of woman's right to practice law in Pennsylvania, educating the public and the courts out of their long-time conservatism and prejudice by active work in the Legislature, the Courts and the public press. He lived to see Mrs. Kilgore admitted to practice in all the State Courts, from the lowest to the highest, and in the United States Courts of this District, which he regarded as the crowning work of his life.

He was, at the birth of the Republican party, an intimate friend of Sumner and Wilson, frequently speaking upon the same platform with the latter.

To him more than to any other person, excepting, perhaps, Francis E. Abbot of Boston, was due the possibility of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, held in Philadelphia in July of 1876.

Commissioned by the angel world in his early practice to do equity, he never lost an opportunity of educating the Courts in the higher truths, urging them to use their vast power to make precedents in favor of justice and equity.

Too true to principle to engage in speculation, and benevolent to a fault, to his credit be it said he never amassed wealth, but died poor in this world's goods, possessed of an integrity of character which no man dared to assail. A grand, majestic soul, venerating not creeds nor men, but nature in all her integrity and sublimity, possessing an unusual power of original, independent thought, and a rare magnetic eloquence, irresistible in its effect upon his hearers, we could not feel that his work on earth was done, but that some great mistake had been made in that controlling fate to which we all must submit, however unwillingly.

If there is any truth in spirit-prophecies he will yet continue the great work of education and reform from his home in spirit-life, and many will be convinced by his labors of the truths of Spiritualism. Upon his death-bed, raising his hand with a firm gesture, he said: "Let no man ever say that Damon Y. Kilgore recanted his faith. Tell them, Carrie, that he died as he lived, believing Christianity to be a fraud upon humanity, and that he was willing to risk eternity upon his convictions of truth," adding, "Let Spiritualism and Liberalism have the credit of whatever is good in my life."

In his home he was ever a genial soul, from whom radiated brightness. The terrible dearth occasioned by the passing away from this home of its supreme light is only measured by the intense devotion and companionship. The only consolation is the possibility of spirit communion and in the character left as a legacy to his wife and two young daughters, to whom he was intensely devoted.

Four sons by his first wife are still living, one of whom is County Judge in Nebraska. We learn that Mrs. Kilgore, who is the only woman lawyer of Pennsylvania, is about to publish a collection of his speeches and poems, together with a biographic sketch of his life written by herself, and the memorial eulogy given by the control of Mr. Wright.

July Magazines.

THE CENTURY.—A finely-executed two thirds length picture of "Pasteur and His Granddaughter" is given as the frontispiece, a bearing upon which is found in an article upon "Disease Germs and How to Combat Them." The opening letter-press is an interesting description of "Sinai and the Wilderness," by E. L. Wilson, illustrated by nearly twenty engravings by Harry Fenn, after photographs by the author. The present paper of the Cathedral Series has Litchfield Cathedral for its subject, illustrated by Pennell. Nicolay and Hay's "Lincoln History" treats of the Army of the Potomac and General McClellan; the illustrations are portraits of Charles Francis Adams, Rear-Admiral Wilkes, John Slidell and J. M. Mason. Nothing of more thrilling interest has appeared in the series of articles published by The Century concerning the Civil War than the four in this number upon "The Career of the Confederate Ram Albemarle," by Gilbert Elliott, Edgar Holden, M. D., Commodore W. B. Cushing, and its captain, A. F. Warley. Spirited illustrations intensify the interest of the narrative. Rev. Dr. Buckley gives his views of "Dreams, Nightmares and Somnambulism." George Kennan continues his "Siberia," in "The Steppes of the Irtish," illustrated from original sketches and photographs. Col. Higginson contributes a fine poem, "Waiting for the Bugle," and "The High Tide at Gettysburg," by W. H. Thompson, an ex-confederate soldier, is especially noteworthy. "Topics of the Time," "Open Letters," and Brie-à-Brac" are as usual varied and interesting. New York: Cassell & Co. Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street, Boston.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—"The Continental Congress" is the subject of a lengthy and elaborate contribution to this month's issue by Judge W. J. Bacon. Charles K. Tuckerman gives "Personal Recollections of Andrew Johnson," and "East Tennessee One Hundred Years Ago," is interestingly described by Senator J. S. Fowler, who claims precedence for that locality in the inauguration of the movement for the abolition of slavery throughout the Union, societies being established for that purpose in Washington County as early as 1814. Cyrus Thomas, Ph. D., supplements an article in the May number corroborating by additional evidence the statements therein made that the ancient mound-builders were Indians. The opening paper of this number is a biographical sketch of the late Chief-Justice, Morrison R. Waite, the frontispiece being from a photograph of him in his judicial robes, taken less than two weeks prior to his sudden transition to another state of being. The "Original Document" is a fac simile of an autograph letter of Montcalm, in 1744. New York: 743 Broadway.

WIDE AWAKE.—An exquisite portrait of Helen Keller, the deaf, dumb and blind girl of Alabama, is presented as a frontispiece. Of this remarkably sensitive child Sallie Joy White gives interesting details, forcibly illustrating the supremacy of the spiritual senses and the dual nature of the individual. This month's number in the series, "The Children of the White House," gives interesting sketches of those of President Monroe, the illustrations including portraits numbering twenty-six. Edward Everett Hale's account of the old time Artillery Election days on Boston Common will interest all young readers and many old ones in this vicinage, to whom it will recall pleasant memories of the past. "Etelka's Story" is a fine story by Susan Coolidge, and another is "The Red, Red Copper." New chapters are given of "Plucky Smalls" and "Double Roses." Mrs. Humphrey tells "How to Keep Mosquitoes Away," the way being one which never fails, to burn Dalmatian powder. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY opens this month's contents with remarks upon "Hardy Flowering Plants." Some of the fine floral designs exhibited last fall at the Hamburg, Germany, Horticultural Exhibition are shown in five engravings. Following these, experiences and instructions in the culture of gloxinia, carnations, gladioli and narcissus are given, the frontispiece being a finely-colored lithograph of a cluster of the last-named. A score or more of shorter articles complete the contents. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE FOLIO for July is a grand number—issued by White, Smith & Co., 516 Washington street, Boston. We have also received from the same publishing house the following new selections: Instrumental: Grand March, "Soldier's Joy," duet for pianoforte, by Paul Keller; "Bride's Song," by Adolf Jensen; "Carnival of Venice," arranged by T. P. Ryder; "Harrison's Grand March to the White House," C. D. Blake; "La Gitana Waltzes," four hands, E. Bucalossi; "Dress Parade March," Paul Keller. Vocal: "Three Cheers for Cleveland and Thurman," C. A. White; "Look from Out Thy Window," Louis Gregh.

A swallow does not make it Spring, but a simple application of a good remedy will give immediate relief. There is nothing better than Warner's Log Cabin Extract for external or internal applications. Prices $1,00 and 50 cents.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

Mr. Howe had been failing in health for some years. He embraced Spiritualism in its early manifestations; was often influenced, and took great interest in the subject of spirit-return. He was a faithful worker for the cause in a quiet, unassuming manner. He labored faithfully at Onset, and accomplished much to build up the place in a financial (as well as spiritual) way, having entered into mercantile pursuits there, building several stores and cottages, and thus amassing quite a little property on the grounds; also owned a cottage at Lake Pleasant.

He was at one time engaged in business in Marlborough and South Framingham, Mass. He was an industrious, frugal and honest man in all the walks of life.

It is well with him, as he was cognizant of his new home before he reached it. So-called death was to him a higher condition of life, or a simple crossing of the border-line.

The funeral service was held in the Auditorium at Onset July 6th, Dr. H. B. Storer officiating, who paid a high tribute to the memory of the departed as being a true Spiritualist and a man of strictest integrity. Prof. Peck and Chas. W. Sullivan furnished music. COM.

He has gone to meet a former wife, children and hosts of friends on the other side, and leaves a wife who was at one time one of the best healers in the country, and is highly mediumistic now, but who in her age and feebleness looks longingly to the time when a more spiritual body may be hers, and she can once more take up her work of helping others.

His funeral was held on the 27th, which was his ninety-first birthday. He subscribed for the BANNER OF LIGHT the first year of its life, and has given it his support ever since. Our veteran friend regarded his word as inviolate, and all who knew him found him to be an upright, honest and generous man.

Mr. Morton moved from Battle Creek, Mich., to Ancora, N. J., where he resided a number of years before coming to Vineland. A generous tribute of praise was given him from the overflowing affections of an aged gentleman who came a long distance to pay his tribute of respect to his old friend. Said he: "This has not been a mournful occasion, has it?" "Why should it be?" I replied. "Mr. M. was nearly a century old, and has long waited to go." "Yes," said he, "Morton was full of years, but I can't help choking—I love him—he was a good man." How beautiful it must be to be followed in his spirit pilgrimage by such loving and well-merited recognition. May we all seek so to live that earthly love shall follow us in our upward way, and be to us a shield until our new-born souls can lay hold of the different conditions which the better land supplies.

S. A. ENGLISH.

Bro. Clark was a prominent manufacturer of cement, whose name was known to dealers in all parts of the United States. He was a firm and consistent Spiritualist, well-grounded in the Philosophy, and an uncompromising advocate of the phenomena—he having been a chosen friend of Harry Bastian and other medis. His wife (by second marriage), who survives him, was Mrs. Carey, a well-known and prominent medium in Chicago and Milwaukee—formerly associated with Mrs. Kate Blade of that city.

WHY WE LIVE. By SUMMERDALE. This is a book that Spiritualists and others will read with pleasure and profit. Written in the style of the old "Pilgrim's Progress" of John Bunyan, it possesses the peculiar charm of that work, with added interest and value from its treatment of higher states of being. It describes glowingly the beauties of the future life, its mansions of abode and temples of worship, its fruitful groves, fragrant gardens, green valleys and crystal waters; portrays the happiness of families reunited, and the never-ending bliss of those who, after a weary pilgrimage on earth, fall by the wayside, almost disheartened, and awaken to the enjoyment of rest in a life that is immortal.

Rome as Our Ruler.

The conflict with the Roman Catholic Church for the political control of the United States, so long apprehended and so generally deprecated, seems to be precipitated at last by a concerted attack on our Public School system by the ecclesiastical authority, which evidently thinks itself now sufficiently strong in its position, especially in the larger cities, to initiate the decisive action it has so long had in contemplation. In thus choosing its point of attack, it has shown its customary sagacity, conscious that the leverage of influence is always longest and strongest at the educational point. That sufficiently explains the direct command of the plenary council of the Roman Catholic Church, sitting at Baltimore, to every priest in the United States to establish a parochial school in his parish within two years, on penalty of removal from his parish if he should fail to comply. And every Roman Catholic parent who refused to send his child to this ecclesiastical school was threatened with priestly excommunication. This was the machinery with which our public school system was to be broken down.

This work of substituting the parochial for the public school is now fairly begun. Of course such a school is intended to be sectarian and ecclesiastical in the narrowest sense. It is nothing to the point that the Romish Church styles itself the universal church, since no church on earth can rightfully set up such a claim, and therefore, in spite of its conceded age and extent, it is only a sect like all the rest. Following close upon the parochial school movement comes the next step of ecclesiastical authority, taken right here in Boston, which is the removal to another department of an old and honored teacher of history in the English High School by the school committee, a majority of whom are Roman Catholics, on the charge of having taught from a history placed in his hands for that purpose by an intelligent school committee as a text-book. This history contained a brief synopsis of the traffic in Indulgences which was notoriously carried on in the sixteenth century, and which, as all readers of history well enough know, led to the Protestant Reformation with Martin Luther at its head and its hero. The sales of these indulgences supplied for a time the chief part of the funds needed for the erection of St. Peter's great church at Rome.

It is not specially to our present purpose to comment on the gross abuse of which these sales were made the pretext, and against which was effectually directed the wave of revolt historically known by the name of Protestantism. It is sufficient to refer to it as a fact whose studied suppression in any true historical course furnishes all the proof needed of a pure sectarian spirit and intent. A church claiming to be universal assuredly may not thus refuse to acknowledge and accept universal truth, except at the manifest risk of becoming partisan in the place of universal.

This episode in the Romish plan here in Boston has amounted to an event, whose public importance is so wide as to have not only provoked plain and positive speaking from the pulpit and press, but has called forth a public meeting the present week of the foremost citizens, naturally including many clergymen, and brought out much matter of a condemnatory nature. It is inevitable that any thorough discussion of this subject must compel all consistent opposers of the pretensions of the Romish Church to abandon their last plea for everything like sectarian instruction in the public schools and advocate an unsectarian system of instruction, pure and simple.

For ourselves, we would not meet this issue after the manner of the Protestant clergy, who still mistakenly persist in adhering to Bible teachings in the schools. If the parents of children are really so strenuous for that as they would have us think, they will not omit to impart all needed instruction of that kind at home, and not leave a matter of such importance wholly to paid teachers of both sexes. There is where the Protestant interest in the schools makes its fatal mistake. It needs to broaden its ground by discarding Bible or sectarian teachings in the schools altogether. Not until it does that will it have firm ground to stand on. We are of course aware that the Roman Catholics originally opposed keeping up Bible-reading in the schools on the ground that it was sectarian, and therefore unfair, and subsequently charged that the schools were "Godless," because they were relieved of this stumbling-stone of offense. But that fact only serves to fortify, and in no sense weakens, the position of those who would consistently eradicate the last vestige of sectarianism from the instruction they furnish. The public school is a purely secular institution, and the State supporting it cannot do so on any religious ground whatever.

On the manifest danger to our free institutions from this or any other threatened ecclesiastical interference with the very first condition of their existence it is needless to expatiate. They who cannot instinctively realize it, admit thereby their incapacity to understand that those institutions rest on widespread intelligence fostered by free and equal education. So far as common morality helps to furnish the foundation for them, it is not less an element of that education itself. But it is a purely secular, and in no accepted sense a religious, education. It is an affair of the State, not of the Church. So far as taxation for religious instruction is concerned, the State possesses no power whatever to compel it. In this country the Church, by whatever name, stands on its own feet. If it be supported by the voluntary offerings of its members, it is well. If it looks to a foreign potentate for its sustenance, it cannot presume on anything like political support here. The State with us is the supreme authority, of which we are all individual members.

Over and over again have we inculcated the doctrine of the complete secularization of the public schools as the only true and lasting one. We now again insist, in the face of this newly joined issue, on the enforcement of that principle. The priests and preachers are at perfect liberty to talk their dogmas in the pulpits and at home, on Sundays and all other days; but the children of our still free population have an inalienable right to a certain amount of training in scientific, secular knowledge, that they may become fully qualified to enter on the battle of life in a free country.

On this most grave subject Gen. Grant uttered timely and memorable sentiments in an address made by him in the centennial year, which deserve repetition now. After warning his soldier hearers to begin by guarding against every enemy threatening the perpetuity of our free republican institutions, he said: "In a republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign and the official the servant, where no power is exercised except by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign—the people—should possess intelligence. The free school is the promoter of that intelligence which is to preserve us as a free nation. If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition and ignorance on the other. Now, in this centennial year of our existence, I believe it a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundation of the house commenced by our patriotic fathers one hundred years ago at Concord and Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the more perfect security of free thought, free speech and free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar of money appropriated to their support, no matter how raised, shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school. Resolve that neither the State nor nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan or atheistical tenets."

The true position to take and maintain is that of State against ecclesiastical education. As Rev. Mr. Mills said in a recent pulpit discourse in North Church, Newburyport, Mass.: "We must have non-sectarianism in education, free and untrammeled, and the right to worship God as we will. The parochial schools were not established at the desire of the Roman Catholic laity, but rose up at the behest of priest, bishop and pope located on foreign soil. Their very existence is evidence of an enemy to civil liberty, and they make a mighty engine of politics, for those that are educated in them are brought under the suppression of a power located on the Tiber. . . . We should bring such atmospheric pressure upon the Roman Catholic laity that they will rebel against papal interference. Under the hat of every American citizen there is a sovereign, and no American sovereign should be under the dictation of anything but American law."

And he thus tersely stated the situation: "The American school system is that the school shall be controlled by the State, and that our children shall be trained for a true citizenship. The theory of Rome is that the school shall be under the control of the Church, and the object shall be, not to make loyal citizens, but loyal subjects of Rome. I do not stand for Protestant as against Catholic education, but for State as against ecclesiastical education. The public schools should be maintained by the State, and should be made the palladium of our liberty and patriotism. Every American patriot should pay tribute to this school system, just as he has before resisted the encroachment of a foreign power or the dismemberment of the Union."

In a carefully prepared discourse on the same subject, Rev. Mr. Moxom recently preached to a very large audience in Tremont Temple, in Boston, laying down the preliminary proposition that the State and Church are distinct organizations under our written constitution. The Roman Catholic Church, he said, acknowledges supernatural and earthly allegiance to a foreign power which is opposed to civil liberties. That power, by the use and distribution of indulgences, may absolve a man or a people for crimes against the State, and the Pope recognizes or refuses to recognize any government, according to its harmony with his will. History shows that whole peoples can be freed from civil obligations by papal indulgences. Therefore it is a political force and agency. He believed it was time to call a halt when the Catholic Church assumes to be a censor of our educational implements. Under a ruling like that already made in the Boston case in favor of Catholicism, the Congregationalist could protest against the use of books in the public schools which treated of the early persecutions of the Baptists by Congregational authorities, and the people of Salem could demand the elimination of all that portion of our colonial history which treats of the dreadful punishments inflicted for witchcraft.

While sectarian doctrines are to be wholly kept out of the public schools, it by no means follows that secular knowledge, as recorded in accepted histories and books of science, is to be out out from their pages because it may reflect more or less severely on the past of any sect or church whatever. Truth is sure to overtake error in the end, and no arbitrary attempts to suppress either are to be allowed sway in a system of free education.

Crops, Weeds, and Patience.

A recent sermon of M. J. Savage, a printed copy of which lies before us, so closely bears on the condition of those persons, both inside and outside the ranks of Spiritualism, who are continually in such a fever of dissatisfaction over its history and methods, that we are naturally tempted to briefly portray its timely spirit and transfer to our own columns some of its pertinent and welcome expressions. Especially are such persons warned in this discourse to "go slow," inasmuch as, in the felicitous language of Mr. Savage, "the natural growth of the world takes along with it our pet reform, and if we do not allow ourselves to be blinded by haste we shall see that God and ourselves are, indeed, not working in vain."

While living over in thought the farmer's life, all things blossom out to him with human meanings. It is with those same meanings that he had to do. Among other seasonable suggestions, he did not think it would be wise for him to spend much time in leaning over the fence and considering the condition of the fields that belong to his neighbors. How many of us, he remarks, in fancy cultivate our neighbor's fields while our own are running to weeds! In this way our attention is distracted from the real work that awaits our performance. How many persons spend a large part of their lives cultivating other people's farms! How many think they might have done wonders if only some other field had been assigned them! How many neglect the real work of their lives because it is not such as they think they could have done best! How many grow bitter because their neighbors do not choose to adopt their methods!

We are what we are, and where we are; and the finest possible things for us to aim at are, how to keep ourselves sweet-tempered, to help our neighbor all we can, but always in a loving spirit, and to get the best results possible out of our life-work. It becomes our supreme duty to offer our help when our neighbor's field is really starving. His field then becomes ours. We should not then dare to turn away, for where the highest need is there is God's command to help. And all things coöperate with us, as the sun, the dew, the air, the planets, the sea and the clouds coöperate with the farmer when he is doing his best. But they will do nothing without his coöperation. He is in partnership with the universe. The elements do the most as well as the most wonderful part of all. Yet if he were to plead his insignificance and do nothing, as many people do in regard to hoped-for results in their own lives, he would never get a harvest of any sort.

Weeds will grow, too, without taking the trouble to sow them for a crop. The farmer well knows that their rankness is but an indication of the richness of the soil. What are weeds but simply plants and flowers that are either undeveloped or misplaced? They would be well enough, and might be even beautiful, if they did not interfere with the more important growth that is being cultivated at the same time. As weeds are, therefore, not to be mistaken for perfect plants, so negative goodness is not to be mistaken for positive virtue. Virtue possesses an emphasis and carries with it the sense of power. No power—no good; with power—the possibility of evil. Therefore power is essential; but it must be controlled and guided. Weeds are inevitable in everything. They testify that the world is growing. All undeveloped, misplaced things are weeds. We shall never be rid of them here or hereafter.

The important point is, not that there shall not spring up and grow a single weed, but that, in spite of the weeds, the fields shall produce good, healthy, positive crops. If they do this, it is not wise to lie awake fretting over the weeds. The great question with us all as individuals is, whether on the whole and in the long run our days are fruitful of good. A too minute attempt to kill our little faults eats up both the courage and the time that should be given to matters of larger import. We must look a long while to find a perfect person, and then we shall not find him. Many of us are addicted to picking out faults in others that we are free from ourselves. As Hudibras neatly hits them off, they compound for the sins to which they are inclined by damning those for which they have no mind. But until people become perfect, which is not likely to be in our day, if the majority crop is good we must try to be content.

Before we condemn the life of another we must find out whether it has had a chance. If we find a life drooping and dying, to which we might be the very sun, dew and air that are needed for its bloom and fruitage, it is as if that life were put into our hands, and we are to answer for it. And finally, after we have done our best, we are to keep still and trust, waiting patiently for the issue. We lack faith in nature, that is, in God. In the great causes in which we are interested, our planting, our tending, all that we can do are needed; but God cares as much as we do. Quoting again the words of Mr. Savage: "The natural growth of the world takes along with it our pet reform, and if we do not allow ourselves to be blinded by haste we shall see that God and ourselves are, indeed, not working in vain," if in certain years some of our crops fail, let us try to be content if only a part of them come to perfect ripeness. If we have to leave some of our work unfinished, let us try to remember that God knows how to finish it through other hands.

The Berry Sisters

Are at the Onset Bay Grove, and will commence their regular sittings on the 15th of the present month; they will be held, during the season, as usual, at the Berry Cottage, opposite the Temple building.

☞ Dr. H. B. Storer will have for sale the best spiritual literature at Sunapee Lake Camp-Meeting, (N. H.) and will act as agent for the BANNER OF LIGHT, which will be on sale during the four-weeks' meeting.

☞ Dr. Stansbury, of San Francisco, called at this office recently, en route for Onset Bay, where himself and wife will pass the season.

Rev. Mr. Gray on Catholicism.

Under the heading of "Intolerant Catholicism," the Boston Herald of Monday last contains a synoptical report of a sermon on Sunday at the Tremont Temple by Rev. James M. Gray, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, in which the reverend gentleman sharply reviewed the position of the Catholic Church in its efforts toward the establishment of a theocracy in place of our free republic in America.

His subject was titled, "The Corporation of Rome in Prophecy and Politics." While he held in abhorrence the monstrous evils of the Catholic church, he was still of those who believe that there is some good in it. He added, however, that the good was as hard to find as a grain of salt in a bag of sugar. He said that the story of the Inquisition is never to be forgotten, no matter what text-book of history is used in the Boston public schools. This was Mr. Gray's first allusion to the Travis-Swinton incident, and it was well received. He quoted from the New York Freeman's Journal ("strangely misnamed paper," he said) to show that if the Catholics got control of the government of this country, they would assuredly interfere with Protestants' beliefs. Catholicism, the paper said, is the most intolerant of faiths, because it alone is right. The Western Watchman also recommended punishment for heresy. "If the Inquisition is not repeated here," Mr. Gray said, "it is only because the opportunity has not yet offered. Our own Boston Pilot has said that there can be no good government without the Inquisition, wisely designed to guard the only true faith." This showed, Mr. Gray averred, that there was not in Catholicism that liberty of conscience promised in our national constitution. The Pope himself has described liberty of conscience as being absurd, erroneous and pestilential. The Pope also calls free speech the liberty of perdition. Mr. Gray declared that free speech had been abridged and stopped in this city, citing Mr. Davis's imprisonment for preaching on the Common in proof of this. The Catholics are determined to shatter the public school system, he said, and the Travis case was only a single incident in the onward march of Rome toward a set purpose. Continuing, the speaker said: "The rising generation must be trained, and when text-books that tell the truth are driven out of our schools, it is time we introduced them on our public platforms."

The applause that followed this declaration, the reporter remarks, made the Temple shake for nearly a minute, breaking forth again and again.

There is one thing somewhat curious in regard to the recent onslaught alluded to above, it seems to us, and not exactly consistent withal, namely: While characterizing the Catholics as illiberal, and therefore dangerous in their proceedings, this identical Protestant clergyman at the same time cautioned his hearers against countenancing the Spiritualists and Liberalists of the present day!

Petitions in Rebuttal.

Indications not being wanting that even at this early day the Massachusetts Allopaths and their allies are joining forces to make a strong effort the coming autumn to obtain the passage, by the next Legislature, of a doctors' protective law similar in its nature and provisions to those which already disgrace the statute books of thirty States of the American Union, we are informed that, as a measure of counter-action, printed petitions will be placed at headquarters at the Lake Pleasant, Onset Bay and Cape Cod Camp-grounds, to which all visitors (male or female) who are believers in medical freedom and who are residents of this State, are requested to attach their signatures in solemn protest against any such high-handed sacrifice of the rights of the common people for the benefit of a titled class in this republican community.

We trust these petitions will receive the attention of every friend of "free medicine and patients' rights" in the Bay State, and that each will see to it that his (or her) signature is appended to these definite and well-defined protests against medical usurpation.

It will be well for the voters in Massachusetts who desire to preserve inviolate such privileges as they now have, to watch the men nominated as candidates for the fall election, and throw their ballots for no man who is in favor of abridging the right of individual conscience as exercised by his constituents in the choosing of remedial assistance when disease afflicts themselves or families.

☞ In point of fact, religion can amount to nothing unless it is itself a reality. If it is less than this, it is mere profession and faith, or in other words pretence and superstition. Prof. Drummond, of Edinburg, not long ago came over to this country with others to investigate the religious systems of American colleges, and in the course of an address made by him to an assemblage of Yale students he remarked to them that religion is founded on facts. In very many instances, he told his hearers, "outsiders," as he termed them, are the brightest and wittiest men in the colleges. He said they refuse to identify themselves with "us"—assuming that "us" comprised all there is of religion—because they see all the little weaknesses of Christianity. A young man, said he, should be religious as a young man, not as an old woman. He would allow no interference with amusements, and welcomed the cricket and foot-ball players to the ranks. A dozen or more of the society to which he belonged had gone into the slums of Edinburg to live and work among the poor and wretched, and they are the manly and strong men of the university.

☞ We understand that G. F. Whitney, M. D., and W. S. Rowley, Occult Telegrapher, of Cleveland, O., will visit Onset the present season, thus giving the Eastern people an opportunity to consult with the unseen forces—through a new and wonderful use of electricity. The telegraphic instrument, it is said, is operated entirely independent of human agency, expressing intelligence of a very high order on all subjects of the greatest interest to humanity—especially those of a moral, religious and scientific nature.

THE PILGRIMS IN CHICAGO.—A. R. Orvis writes us that after six weeks' successful ministrations on the Pacific Coast, and while on their way homeward to the Eastern Camp-Meetings, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, inspirational speaker, Mr. Edgar W. Emerson, seer and test medium, assisted by Mr. J. T. Lillie, composer and vocalist, will hold two public meetings and séances at the Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., on Sunday, July 15th, at 3 and 7:45 P. M.

☞ The London Society for Psychical Research in the last number of its "Proceedings," in a notice of the Seybert Commission's Preliminary Report, remarks, referring to Spiritualists: "This little book should have a powerful effect on them." Thank you! That is precisely what it has had—a most "powerful effect on them," but the effect is not of a kind the S. for P. R. evidently anticipated when it gave its wise and solemn advice!

☞ THE BANNER received a pleasant call recently from John Lamont, Esq., a prominent Spiritualist of Liverpool, Eng., who is on his first visit to America, and who bore a letter of introduction and earnest friendly recommendation from Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten, of Manchester. He had just reached Boston from Onset Bay Camp-Ground, and expressed himself as much pleased with his experiences thus far.

OUR NATIONAL GAME.

In Six Parts—Part I.

The time has come when one and all
Play sick to see a game of ball.

THE BALL— ○

THE SQUARE— ◇

"The people of this country should be very grateful to Claiborn Duff, of Breathitt, Ky.," declares the Courier-Journal, "for the discovery that sorghum seed, heretofore almost worthless, makes a flour superior to buckwheat for batter bread. We have tried this flour, and would advise all others to do so."

Elsewhere will be found notice of the grand awakening of revolutionary enthusiasm in our boyhood's home, the old town of Amesbury. We are sorry to be obliged to state that bigotry and self-importance were also resurrected on that day in some quarters, to the utter disgust of sensible people in the place. As one instance, the police seemed to be seized with a burning desire to show their authority—one of "the force" ordering a fine bugle-player, who chose on the 3d to perform on his instrument out-of-doors, for the delectation of several respectable citizens, to stop playing. The player replied that as a law-abiding citizen he would do so, if such was the provision of the statute, but did not believe his action contrary to law—neither did any of the respectable witnesses present. Mr. Currier, the Manager of the Opera House, told the musician he could go in front of his establishment and play as long as he pleased. But the man declined under the circumstances. Another case of a truly wonderful character took place on the 4th, when an old Italian, well-known in town as a quiet, inoffensive man, was arrested for selling peanuts, "haled into court," and fined $6 and some odd cents! When remonstrated with, it is alleged the startling ruling was made that peanuts, being a FOREIGN (?) commodity, were contraband!

JUST THE SAME AS A MAN.

To the Editor of the Boston Globe:

Will you kindly inform me can a woman become a citizen of the United States? C. R.

A woman can be naturalized same as a man. I think, from examination of United States Statutes, that in those States where woman suffrage prevails they can vote for presidential electors; they can for Governor and Mayor in those States. PEOPLE'S LAWYER.

The New York World avers that the bustle is said to be on its last legs; that the flat has gone out from the White House; that Mrs. Cleveland's decision is to rule "flat"! There'll be some kicking first, Jo Cose thinks.

It has been calculated by Professor Rogers of Washington, that the dynamic power of a single pound of good seam coal is equivalent to a man's work for one day, three tons for twenty years, and one square mile of a seam of coal only four feet thick will represent the labor of a million men for twenty years.

The Delaware peach crop is said to be immense—from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 baskets. The problem is, how this unprecedented harvest is to be marketed.

Yowling cats, barking dogs, grunting hogs and carping critics, all belong to the same genus—the only difference existing between them being that the last-named use two legs, while the others travel upon four; but the bark of the critic and the bark of the dog, however, sound pretty much alike, and do about an equal amount of execution.

If a rich man, dying, bestows his wealth upon some church, or for the endowment of some theological seminary, or to send the gospel to the heathen, he is a noble philanthropist; but if, being a Spiritualist, he bequeaths his property for the promotion of the cause of Spiritualism, he is insane! No matter how level-headed he may be upon all other subjects, his heirs immediately set about the task of proving him non compos mentis in the matter of disposing of his own; and judicial owls upon the bench and before the bar blink stupid assent to the proposition. It will not always be thus.—Golden Gate.

BURDETTE PAYS HIS RESPECTS TO THE CLOWN:

Dear century plant, I love thy bismuthed face.
Thy peaked hat, and grotesque painted smiles,
Thy dear old jokes that, with a tender grace,
Make plaintive music for thy antic wiles;
Thy bearded old conundrums, bald and blind,
The mellow beauty of the afternoon
That years untold through all thy wit hath shined.

Friend of my childhood, thou art never old;
He hath no heart who says thy jokes are stale;
Warm is the soul that loves the jest thrice told,
And dear the friend who loves the twice-told tale.
What though the title-page tells all the rest,
Must all our mirth be shiny with veneer?
Are not the oldest songs of all the best?
Are not the oldest friends of all most dear?

What then? The little ones are pleased with thee,
And in their childish plaudits, sweet and clear,
The old dead laughter of my boyhood's glee,
Called back again to life, I seem to hear.
I laugh, with echoes of old laughter blent,
To think how new and bright thy jokes were then:
So every circus-day I seek thy tent,
And shout to hear thy "Here we are again!"

STATUE OF GOV. JOSIAH BARTLETT,
Unveiled at Amesbury, Mass., July 4th, 1888.

As announced in previous issues of THE BANNER, preparations have been for some time making in Amesbury, his birthplace, to pay a tribute of merited honor to Josiah Bartlett, one of the foremost among the revolutionary fathers, and one whose distinguished services shed an equal glory upon Massachusetts, his native State, New Hampshire, his adopted home, and the whole confederated Union.

This recognition has taken the form of a statue,* the generous gift to the town of Amesbury and State of Massachusetts, of Jacob R. Huntington, the pioneer of the carriage business which has made this place so famous. Mr. Huntington has amassed a fortune with his own hands and brain, and, with a loyalty and patriotism which have always characterized him, determined some time ago to in some way establish in his home some fitting testimonial of his affection—finally deciding to furnish the young and old of his contemporaries and posterity a memorial of, and an incentive to, patriotism, in the shape in which it can now be seen on the triangle which bears the donor's name—at the junction of Main, School and Sparhawk streets.

The statue was made by Karl Gerhardt, (who is the maker of a very excellent statue of Gen. Grant,) from a painting of Bartlett executed by Trumbull, and the only portrait of him extant. It is eight feet six inches in height, and made of government bronze. It stands on a pedestal of polished Quincy granite, the foundation of which is set several feet deep, and surrounded by granite curbing. The whole work extends about twenty-one feet above the level of the square. The figure represents the subject attired in a long, loosely fitting coat, with ruffles at the cuffs, and knee-breeches. The left hand is represented as holding the Declaration of Independence, and the right hand as holding the quill pen with which the name of Bartlett was made immortal upon that incomparable roll of honor. The entire execution of the work is excellent.

JACOB R. HUNTINGTON, DONOR OF THE STATUE.

On the spot where now stands the Old Ladies' Home, Josiah Bartlett was born in 1729. Self-educated, in lonely poverty, he, without the assistance of college or academy, at the age of seventeen, began the study of medicine with an Amesbury physician, establishing himself at Kingston, N. H., after entering practice. As an instance of his native fearlessness in the promulgation of what he considered the right, it is recorded that while in Kingston, in 1752, he was laid low with a fever which nearly ended his career of promise, and his desire for cooling drinks so overcame his precepts that he partook freely of cider; whereupon he immediately began to get well. This incident, coming right home to him, brought him to see that pure air and cooling beverages were essential to the successful treatment of fevers, and it was then that more enlightened methods of dealing with these diseases began to prevail. Two years later he introduced Peruvian bark as a cure for common and malignant throat diseases, having first experimented with it upon one of his own children.

JOSIAH BARTLETT.

It is not to be supposed that he failed to pay the usual penalty of such gross "unprofessional" conduct; far from it! since the narrative from which we quote goes on to say that the members of the medical craft were shocked by the innovations which he was responsible for, and the New England Medical Society, of which he was one of the founders, rewarded him by expulsion. In a single year that Society, presumably under pressure of an enlightened public opinion, reinstated him and elevated him to its presidency.

He served upon the Committee of Correspondence and Safety, under the direction of which the convention met and organized a government, and in 1774 it elected him one of the representatives to the Continental Congress. He was reëlected in 1776, and when the roll of States was called to vote on the Declaration of Independence, New Hampshire being the first called, he answered with a most emphatic "Yea," staking his all in a single word upon the issue. He was elected for the last time in 1777, but resigned at the Yorktown session, because he was needed at home to rally the patriots for the battle of Bennington, in which Bartlett fought by the side of Stark. In 1779 he was appointed chief justice of the court of common pleas; in 1782 was elevated to the supreme bench, and in 1788 was chief justice of the highest court in the State. In 1793 he was selected as the first Governor under the new constitution. For thirty years he was held in affectionate regard by the New Hampshire people, and when by reason of the infirmities of age he voluntarily retired to private life, he carried this affection with him. He lived but a short time to enjoy the serenity of retirement.

Of him it has been truly said: "He was a ruler in whom the wise placed confidence, and of whom even the captious could find nothing to complain."

His remains now repose, with those of his wife, in the old cemetery at Kingston, covered by a square sarcophagus of marble, which bears this inscription: "This monument is erected over the sacred relics of His Excellency Josiah Bartlett, late Governor of New Hampshire, died May 19th, 1795, in the 65th year of his age; and his virtuous wife and amiable consort, Mrs. Mary Bartlett, who died July 14th, 1789, in the 59th year of her age."

The exercises at the unveiling have been so fully treated by the daily press that we give them but casual mention here. The weather was delightful, the attendance very large, and from many portions of the country, the procession was fine in appearance, and all things passed off harmoniously, and to the mental profit of every one present. Among the other dignitaries His Excellency, Charles H. Sawyer, Governor, and members of his staff, officially represented the State of New Hampshire.

At 1:30 the President of the day, Hon. E. M. Boynton, called the assembly at the grand stand on Huntington Square to order, and delivered an address of welcome. We celebrate to-day, he said, the one hundred and twelfth anniversary of Independence, but not for this alone do we honor Bartlett. One hundred years ago, on June 21st, 1788, his personal influence turned the scale and secured the adoption by New Hampshire—the ninth State, necessary to save the Constitution of the United States.

HON. E. MOODY BOYNTON.
President of the Day.

At the close of his eloquent remarks Mr. Boynton rose to the true, spiritual height of the occasion when he said:

"PERHAPS FROM HIS HOME BEYOND THE CLOUDS BARTLETT AND HIS GLORIOUS ASSOCIATES OF THE REVOLUTION MAY BE PERMITTED CONSCIOUS PRESENCE WITH US, TO WELCOME US AT THIS HALLOWED SPOT WHERE HE STUDIED THE GREAT LESSONS HIS LIFE ILLUSTRATED. We listen, like the shepherds of Bethlehem, to hear the triumph song of our immortals of peace and good will to men. Oh! shining ones, your work is moving on with ever increasing vigor, and the next song, not alone on Judean hills to lonely shepherds in the darkness, but in noontide glory to all the inhabitants of earth the music shall resound from earth to heaven, PEACE AND GOOD WILL HAVE COME TO MEN, AND THE NEW HEAVENS AND THE NEW EARTH SHALL BE COMPLETE. We are yet in the first century of our constitutional liberty the twilight of man's independence, yet the rays of morning gild our mountain heights of freedom. Its noontide splendor, who can tell! What uncounted millions shall rejoice in the sun of American liberty when all clouds have passed away! Forty centuries of Egyptian darkness obscure the pyramids; forty centuries of light and liberty will shine from this statue of Josiah Bartlett. Speak, patriotic lips, and tell us of those centuries to come! What inventions, what brightening glories shall the ages yet reveal, when the pilgrims from all nations throng to pay tribute at your feet with tears of gratitude! Then free ballots, free presses, free schools, free pulpits, and free hearts and homes shall complete the circuit of the earth, and (the) Christ (principle) shall reign in man."

Prayer followed by Rev. A. C. White of Amesbury, after which Prof. J. P. Marshall, of Tufts College, read the Declaration of Independence. The statue of Josiah Bartlett was then unveiled by John Seuveur Poyen, a grandson of the donor of the statue, and a lineal descendant of the historic Bartlett, the unveiling being accompanied by a salute by Battery C and music by Chandler's Band of Portland, Me. The following is the text of the inscription on the memorial, which is to tell to coming time the reason of its erection:

JOSIAH BARTLETT,

BORN AT AMESBURY, MASSACHUSETTS, 1729,

DIED AT KINGSTON, NEW HAMPSHIRE, 1795,

PATRIOT, SCHOLAR, STATESMAN,

A Delegate to the Continental Congress,

A Signer of the Declaration of Independence,

With Stark at Bennington,

A Member of the Convention which Ratified

The Constitution of the United States,

Chief Justice, President and First

Governor of New Hampshire,

Not more Illustrious for Public Services

than for Private Virtues,

This Monument Erected July 4, 1888, and Dedicated to his Countrymen

by

A Citizen of Amesbury.

The President then introduced J. R. Huntington, Esq., donor of the statue, who presented it to the Commonwealth in a few well chosen words. The statue was accepted on behalf of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts by Lieutenant Governor J. Q. A. Brackett, in an appropriate address; Hon. Robert T. Davis, of Fall River, delivered the oration; and Prof. J. W. Churchill, of Andover, brought the exercises of the unveiling to a close by reciting with splendid effect the following poem, written for this occasion by John Greenleaf Whittier:

ONE OF THE SIGNERS.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

Oh! storied vale of Merrimac!
Rejoice through all thy shade and shine,
And, from his century's sleep, call back
A brave and honored son of thine!

Unveil his effigy between
The living and the dead to-day;
The fathers of the Old Thirteen
Shall witness bear, as spirits may!

Unseen, unheard, his gray compeers,
The shades of Lee and Jefferson;
Wise Franklin, reverend with his years,
And Carroll, lord of Carrollton!

Be thine henceforth a pride of place
Beyond thy namesake's over sea,
Where scarce a stone is left to trace
The holy house of Amesbury.*

A prouder memory lingers round
The birthplace of thy true man here,
Than that which haunts the refuge found
By Arthur's mythic Guinevere.

The plain deal table where he sat
And signed a nation's title deed,
Is dearer now to fame than that
Which bore the scroll of Runnymede.

Long as, on Freedom's natal morn,
Shall ring the Independence bells,
Thy children's children yet unborn
Shall hear the tale his image tells.

In that great hour of destiny
Which tried the souls of sturdiest stock;
Who knew the end alone must be
A free land or a traitor's block;

Amidst those picked and chosen men,
No firmer fingers held the pen
That wrote for liberty or death.

Not for hearths and homes alone,
But for the world, the deed was done;
On all the winds their thought has flown,
Through all the circuit of the sun.

We trace its flight by broken chains,
By songs of grateful labor still;
To-day, in all her holy fanes,
It rings the bells of freed Brazil!

Oh! hills that watched his boyhood's home,
Oh! earth and air that nursed him, give,
In this memorial semblance, room
To him who shall its bronze outlive!

And thou, oh! Land he loved, rejoice
That, in the countless years to come,
Whenever freedom needs a voice
These sculptured lips shall not be dumb!

* Amesbury, Almsbury or Ambresbury, famous in Druidical, Arthurian and Christian tradition, is supposed by antiquarians to have derived its name from its vicinity to the "Anointed Stones" of the great temple of Stonehenge. One of the first of ancient England's great Abbeys was erected in Amesbury.

The successful labors of J. Madison Allen—covering three months in Peoria, Ill.—are now closed. His address will be St. Louis, Mo., for a short time, (at 1217 Washington Avenue,) after which he will be at the camps in Iowa and Michigan. In the autumn he returns to Peoria.

Bishop A. Beals closed his engagement in Hartford, Ct., Sunday, July 8th; he speaks in New York at Columbia Hall, for the People's Spiritual Meeting, on the 15th. Will be at Onset Bay Camp the last Saturday and Sunday of July, and at Queen City Park, Aug. 28th. Will speak at Paterson, N. J., the month of September.

☞ A fact not generally known, but which THE BANNER has inculcated for many years, that several writers not Spiritualists have just learned and are recommending, is this: "Take a sponge bath, followed by skillful massage, (laying on of hands.) It will relieve the worst attack of disordered nerves." Why, we have at this office for sale a biography of the celebrated Dr. J. R. Newton, who cured many years ago hundreds of people solely by the process described above. The healing mediums, similar to Dr. N., who practice to-day in our midst, are healing more patients than the "regular" M. D.s, and that is the reason why the latter want to suppress the former by law!

☞ The notorious T. Warren-Lincoln-Mansfield-et-al) is now on the war-path, and himself and his "mediums"—so his circular sets forth—are exceedingly desirous for the scalps of professional exposers of Spiritualism, whose challenges, the document avers, will be accepted on sight and instanter. His latest appearance—"a religious illustrated lecture of spirit power"—was in Amesbury. Spiritualists and inquirers can do themselves and the community no better service than by rigidly staying away from his exhibitions—on whichever side of the fence they may happen to claim to be given!

"Our Young Folks' Reading Circle" is the name of a new organization, formed for the purpose of promoting good reading among the boys and girls of our land from eight to sixteen years of age. It is officered by a Board of Directors, including William H. Rideing, of the Youth's Companion; Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Frances E. Willard, Rev. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Christian Union, and others. The central office is managed by Mr. S. R. Winchell, at 106-108 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, to whom inquiries should be sent for information and forms of membership.

☞ Annie Lord Chamberlain writes from Mattapan that she would like her patrons to be as patient as possible, since she is answering their letters as rapidly as health and circumstances will permit.

This absorbing little story is written to teach a very important lesson to young women. The story is thrilling, dramatic and touching, yet it carries a high moral purpose through all its pages. It is a book that every young woman should read who is receiving beaus. The lessons taught are very practical, yet so well woven into the story that no one can begin to read it without an increasing desire to finish it.

"Health is a thing to be attended to continually. There is no kind of achievement in the world that is equal to perfect health."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

"I am weary, oh! my brothers."—MRS. BROWNING.

TIRED!

TIRED!

is the voiceless cry going up from the world's busy workers to-day. Weariness, which is not a passing sensation but an abiding consciousness, is a direct warning that body and mind have been too long subjected to the overstrain of our present mode of life. Our ancestors may have been stout and strong, but WE manifestly suffer from faults of organization, nourishment or vital stimulation. The attention of thinking people and seekers after truth is therefore invited to a new Curative System, embracing scientific Magnetic Remedies which will restore the harmony and balance of the great nerve centres, and thus virtually renew the springs of life and action.

This practice—the Magnetic Heilend System—has been introduced in this country by DR. EDITH HALE with remarkable success. Its principles are new. It marks the advance of the age in curing serious chronic maladies: Indigestion, Obesity, Nervous Prostration, Liver and Kidney Disorders, Diseases of Women, Heart Difficulties, Paralysis, Scrofula and Cancer, without recourse to drugs, which are poisons in their essential nature.

Natural remedies, given in accordance with natural laws, WILL remove weariness, vitalize the energies, cure the torments of dyspepsia, the miseries of neuralgia, and the scourge of blood and skin disorders

Semi-Invalids! YOU who seek health and strength, and desire to part company with Depression, Debility and the myriad taints of lurking disease; You who have the intelligence and candor to test these new Magnetic Remedies, are invited to confidential consultation with DR. EDITH HALE, Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

Distant Patients

Successfully Treated.

WRITE, stating your leading symptoms just as you would mention them to your nearest friend. Report your age, weight, temperament. Relate briefly what you know of yourself physically in the past, and what you dread for yourself in the future.

Enclose Consultation Fee—Two Dollars—and rely upon receiving in reply a full Diagnosis of your difficulties, sound counsel as to the means of permanent cure, and estimate of the necessary expense of the same.

Accompanying this Diagnosis will be sent postpaid a trial package of the leading Magnetic Remedy which would be prescribed for the individual case of the applicant.

This trial or sample of Remedy being offered to give the distant invalids the same opportunity of judging in this regard as they would obtain by calling at our office personally.

Further, the Consultation Fee of Two Dollars will be entered on DR. EDITH HALE'S Books, and when treatment or remedies are subsequently ordered, the Fee will be accredited to each one as so much already paid on account.

Treatises on Chronic Diseases, on Obesity, on Cancer, references, and full proof of success, together with general information, will be sent to any address on receipt of stamp.

Every letter will be placed on file, and in the order received will be answered with as little delay as is consistent with careful consideration of each case.

This liberal offer is made in the utmost good faith, desiring to benefit burdened and weary humanity.

Respectfully,

EDITH HALE, M. D.,

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held May 15th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou supreme and eternal Spirit of Truth, we turn to thee at this hour, seeking for light and understanding upon thy laws. We behold thy presence as manifested throughout the universe in its grand and glorious works. We listen to thy spirit speaking to us through the dewy lips of the flowers, as their incense is borne in upon our lives and we realize that it is a part of thy presence, tender, holy and sweet. We behold thy smile in the sunshine that floods the earth, giving to its germs newer and diviner being. We realize that thou dost send abroad throughout the universe that which is for the best, that which doth not destroy save for the purpose of rebuilding and renewing; therefore, our Father, we praise thee for storms and tempests, for clouds and darkness, even as we praise thee for sunshine and peace and all that is beautiful in the sight of man, for we recognize thy power everywhere, and realize that thou art, in thy own wisdom, doing all things well. Pax.

At this time we open our souls to thee, seeking for truth and knowledge from beyond. May our hearts grow tenderer under the divine ministration of angel helpers; may our minds expand and become illuminated in the light of thy wisdom; and may we press forward in sympathy of spirit, seeking to do thy will and to learn of thee and thy angel children according to our needs. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We will now attend to your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—As the Fisheries Treaty is agitating the public mind just now, pro and con., the author of this question wishes to know from a spiritual standpoint, if spirit intelligences are interested in the suject, what they think of the treaty, from the higher life standpoint? The vital point is, should it be accepted or rejected?

ANS.—There is as much of a diversity of opinion upon this subject in the spirit-world as there is on earth. There are spirits closely united to friends on earth interested in the public welfare, and certain of these spirits are anxious the treaty upon the fishery question should be strictly maintained; while there are other spirits, who claim to be intelligent and philanthropic in character, who are not so certain that it would be wise for this treaty to be strictly followed according to the letter. Therefore, one can only give an individual opinion upon it.

It is a question that will eventually outwork itself here in your nation, one that will so vitally appeal to the interests of individuals, as well as communities, as to call for close attention, and we have no doubt that in time it will be adjusted according to the most pressing demands of the people at large.

We do not care to give our individual opinion upon this subject, because it concerns no one but ourselves; yet rest assured that whatever concerns the vital interests of the greatest number of the human race is that which shall not only call protection but also vital influence from the spiritual world, and will receive these influences to such an extent as to assist it in developing to the grandest result. But this is a work of time. Men must learn by experience on both the spirit and the mortal side of life, and as discipline is thus brought to them they will learn how to regulate their conduct, not only individually, but for the benefit of communities.

Q.—[By W. C. Ralphs, Cocoa, Fla.] While sitting for the development of independent slate-writing a bright light has appeared upon the slate, varying in size and brilliancy at different times. Will you please inform what its appearance probably indicates?

A.—The presence of this electric light, spoken of by your correspondent, undoubtedly indicates the presence of spiritual intelligences who are seeking to concentrate their power upon the slate in question, that to serve as an instrument of communication for them. Undoubtedly these spiritual intelligences are seeking to conserve their magnetic forces and direct them through the organism of the sitter, that they may be expended upon the slate for the purpose of tracing thereon such communications as they desire.

We should advise the questioner to patiently follow his investigations, to sit quietly at stated intervals, and to allow his spiritual attendants time and opportunity for experiment with the forces of his nature, as well as with the various organs of his system, that they may learn how to govern them. It may be that in time there will be received from invisible hands communications of importance to humanity, or it may be that, if these spiritual guides are not able to develop that phase of mediumship known as slate-writing, they may have the power of unfolding clairvoyance in their subject, which of itself is a grand as well as beautiful phase of mediumship.

Q.—A correspondent, who is a firm Spiritualist, and has been for many years an active worker in the cause of Spiritualism, inquires why it is that those engaged in the spiritual work, who have passed on, are scarcely ever heard from?

A.—This may be true in public life. Seldom do those spirits who, in the past when inhabiting mortal forms, took an active part in not only the work of Spiritualism, but also were engaged in the various humanitarian movements of life, return and publicly announce themselves to the world; but such intelligences have by no means withdrawn themselves and their interests from earth and its inhabitants. Indeed, they exercise a wide and useful influence in connection with this life, sending forth their magnetic forces to assist in building up a new system of humanitarian work as well as of stimulating the people for higher and nobler living.

It is not necessary for a spirit who was once known on earth as a noted character to announce himself through a medium in order to accomplish effective work in connection with mankind. It may be that such a spirit may not find suited to his use a machine just as he desires, and so he hesitates in announcing himself, preferring that the influence he sends forth, whether it be through one or through a hundred instrumentalities, shall prove by its power and effectiveness the quality of his spirit and the purpose he has in view. Consequently it may be that many such souls spoken of by the questioner are conjointly working in connection with mediumistic persons on earth for useful ends—that of uplifting man, of sending forth power and strength to those in need, of bringing enlightenment to the ignorant, and in other ways working to hasten the time when knowledge shall increase over all the earth and truth and justice shall maintain their sway. But these individual spirits do not consider the outward, the external personality, as they may have done on earth, and as you are prone to do even now, for they understand that principles are all, and that personality in many respects is naught unless applied and expressed through active principles. Therefore the noted characters who have labored for humanity in the past are not idle at the present time, but they silently send forth their forces with the aid of such instruments and through such channels as are provided. We concede, however, that at times and in many places even these souls of whom we are speaking find an opportunity of manifesting their thought and their identity, of impressing their spiritual power upon sensitive souls and sending it forth for helpful ends; and again we believe that in the time to come, when human hearts become more receptive to spiritual thought and power, these earnest workers of the higher life will find more open avenues and grander opportunities for expressing that which they have to give through external life; but for the ten years that are now opening before us we do not expect so much of this, because we perceive signs of friction and of turmoil, as though a revolution were taking place in the minds of mankind. Indeed, it seems to us that there is to be an awakening of the new and a depression of the old, a revivifying of the interior forces of spiritual life in the hearts and minds of mortals. And as this process of regeneration, so to speak, goes on, man will begin to understand more of himself, though he may not be able to express his thought because of the confusion and friction about him, yet all this agitation will mean something more than a benefit for him and his kind, because it tends toward the cleansing of the atmosphere and the elaboration of higher thought and grander effort in the time to come.

Q.—In St. John, iv: 24, it says: "God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." If such is the case, will the coming ages be inclined to make Spiritualism the leading belief, and creeds of a various nature now existing become extinct?

A.—We believe thoroughly not only in progress, but in the laws of evolution. Indeed, we cannot see that progress can exist without the operations of the law of evolution, and this is applicable in the religious department of human life, just as surely as it is in the physical domain.

"God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." We know of nothing that exists higher than spirit. We realize that the great activities of the universe are set in motion and controlled by spirit. Intelligent spirit? you ask; yes, most certainly, since the highest type of existence in any department of life tends toward intelligence; and as we know nothing beyond intelligence we feel that within intelligence are contained grand possibilities of expansion, and we must believe that the Great Infinite Spirit, the moving force of all activity and of all being, must be intelligent. God is a spirit, and as we come to recognize that this great, moving, controlling power is spirit, then shall we begin to put forth our own spiritual proclivities and understand that we are also spirits, a part of the Great Master Spirit of all existence.

The questioner asks if Spiritualism is to be the religion of the future? and if the creeds, dogmas and sects of the present time and of the past are to become extinct? While we are obliged and even ready to admit that the various creeds and dogmas of ecclesiasticism are of the earth earthy, belonging to the material life of man, yet we must also allow that each of them contains an element of truth, which is the spirit vivifying the outer structure, the material semblance, and giving it life. But what of this spirit of truth which may be found even within the dryest dogma, the most confining creed? It is an outgrowth of that internal life of man which demands something for its sustenance, which cries for recognition, and which will not be put down. It has infused itself into those creeds and dogmas because human opinion is crystallized as expressed in external life. This spirit of truth, because of the ignorant bigotry and superstition of the ages, has been obliged to confine itself, and permit itself to be crowded upon by these elements, which belong to those degrading conditions of the human mind; but as ignorance disappears in the light of knowledge these elements of superstition and error must of necessity disintegrate and fall away, leaving the vital spark of truth, however feeble and small it may have been, which illumined them, to take its place in the world and shine forth unclouded into the hearts of humanity.

We believe that Spiritualism is to be the religion of the religious thought of the future: not altogether in its present aspect as understood to-day, because Spiritualism is but dimly comprehended by even those who seem to know most concerning it. Its mission, its power, its life and its activities have not been properly investigated nor understood. It is far-reaching in its scope, and has enough vitality to take every so-called religion, sect and even dogma, dispossess it of that which is false and misguiding, and leave only that which is strong, brilliant and true. Spiritualism is to be the religion of humanity, no doubt, since the purpose of Spiritualism is to elevate humanity, to lift it to a higher plane of thought, to infuse into human hearts the elements of divine goodness; indeed, not so much to do this, perhaps, as to call up from the depths of human life those elements of divine goodness which lie within, to give them a stimulus, to send forth their power and express themselves in active service. If Spiritualism is to do this it must come both as a destroyer and a builder. It must come to destroy that which is equivocal, that which is false, and that which contains error, but only to build up that which is true and abiding, to give to man the precious jewel of great price, immortal truth and knowledge.

God is a spirit, and we may indeed worship him in spirit and in truth, since we are a part of his divine nature. The spirit within man may leap forth to recognize and to reach the spirit in the Infinite Intelligence, and grasping hold of that which is divine, the spirit within man may go forth daily, traversing the ways of space, investigating the laws of the universe, and seeking patiently, yet humbly, to understand and to know its God, its Maker, and its Divine Friend.

Q.—[By Peter H. Kent, National Home, Va.] When a person is under the influence of chloroform, ether, or other anæsthetic, and is wholly unconscious of a surgical operation on his body, and of all else that transpires about it, does his spirit, or, strictly speaking, he himself, leave the locality of that body? If so, of what state is he an occupant?

A.—The person whose physical senses are subjected to the action of ether or any other anæsthetic, so that apparently he becomes totally unconscious of life and its activities for a time, does not of necessity pass from the body. His spirit may only be for a time brought under the subjection of these external influences, and overshadowed, so to speak, by them, so that it sinks into a magnetic slumber, during which he gathers repose and strength, which will be found useful for the time through which the body must pass in gaining power and recovering from its wounds, or the physical operations that have been made upon it.

In one case this may be so, but in another the spirit of the individual may be so far detached from the frame as to pass out into the spiritual atmosphere, coming in contact with spiritual life and its people, and gaining experiences of that other world such as it could not while in full control of its physical organism. It depends very much upon the nature, characteristics and surroundings of an individual how this will be. If the spirit that passes out from contact with its mortal frame is aspirational, seeking for light and knowledge, he may, during this intermediary time, become associated with spirits of a high and noble order, who will so stimulate his spiritual nature as to greatly affect his future career on earth, making him known by his good works; but if the individual is not aspirational, if he delights in sensual things, in physical life itself, then even during the time that his body is under the influence of an anæsthetic he may be brought in contact with spirits of a low order, those who are undeveloped and who do not care for the higher class of spiritual studies or things.

As we said before, all these conditions depend entirely upon the individual himself, for it is a universal law that like attracts like, and it must be so in every department of nature or of being.

Q.—Do those who are active as mediums of communication on earth, between the two worlds, carry with them to spirit-life those peculiar gifts and there exercise them for the benefit of others to communicate with intelligences in a world beyond?

A.—Mediums are persons whose organs and whose mental powers have been operated upon by unseen influences, and either brought under subjection to invisible but potent intelligences, or have been opened to the spiritual world itself. Mediumship we understand to be but the quickening of the power latent in every individual, belonging to the spirit itself, and is a part of the individual life. Those who are mediums here will be mediums always. Those who are receptive to spiritual influences while on earth will be receptive to other influences of a spiritual character after they pass from the mortal form.

We are to understand that there are worlds upon worlds peopled by intelligent, progressive beings, and that from these high worlds may be sent down to those beneath intelligent thought and influence, which must be directed through proper channels in order to accomplish effective work. For instance, in that spiritual world closely connected with this earth, so that it is really a counterpart of this external planet, reside many individual spirits who are highly endowed with the unfoldment of mediumship. These powers are not inactive in their present stage of existence, and they are operated upon by intelligences and influences from worlds that are still beyond. Through the agency of these mediums the inhabitants of this spiritual world adjacent to earth may come into communication with progressive spirits who have ascended far beyond the earthly condition, may receive lessons of wisdom and influences that shall uplift and guide those other spirits in their search for light. All who have the gift of mediumship and who desire to be useful to their kind may believe that they will come under such ministration and power from beyond as to be able to send forth uplifting influences to their kind in whatsoever department of human life they may be found.

Q.—Is there an organized effort in spheres contiguous to earth to disturb séances, and by apparent falsities and imposition to prejudice the public mind against the manifestations of spirit presence given at them?

A.—We do not know of anything of the kind existing in spirit-life. We do know that there are many mischievous spirits who delight in working confusion in the minds of mortals, but such spirits are attracted only to those on earth who are themselves undeveloped in the higher moral faculties, and whose lives present an open avenue for their approach. We know of no extended organization among degraded spirits for the purpose of working confusion in the séances of earth among those who are investigating spirit communion for the purpose of decrying Spiritualism, or bringing reproach upon the name of mediumship. We do know very well that such a claim has been made by certain spirits, and also by certain individuals on earth who do not understand these laws; but we firmly believe the claim to be a false and misleading one.

There are thousands, ay, millions of spirits, who are interested in the dissemination of truth and the promulgation of knowledge throughout the world, and these spirits are doing their utmost in sending forth an influence to enlighten mankind. Very many of these intelligences frequent the séance-rooms of honest mediums, and patiently, but quietly, labor for the accomplishment of their ends. There are constantly going forth over this land, indeed, all over the globe, relays of spirit influences bearing messages of consolation and uplifting powers to bless mankind. It is also true that, in certain quarters within the last few years, there has seemed to be much of confusion concerning Spiritualism and the development of mediumship. In many circle-rooms there have been what seemed to be evidences of fraud and gross imposition, and yet there are many who claim that this is the work of the spirits.

We do not deny, as we have said, that there are special spirits who will not hesitate in assisting a mortal in perpetrating a fraud, if the opportunity is given them. Those who will quietly laugh at the thought that they have outwitted or deceived others exist in the spirit-world as well as here, and, for malicious or other motives, they may come in contact with certain mediums, and make use of their sensitive organisms for just such unholy work as this. But there is a reason for this, and we must look for it in the very séance room, among the medium, her associates, and those who approach her in order to learn of spirit-return. We are not to lay the blame upon organizations in spirit-life, for there is no such establishment in that other world.

By-and-bye, when men come to look upon Spiritualism as a spiritual thing, then will they seek to understand more thoroughly something of the spiritual laws which control it, and, doing this, they will seek to know something of themselves, for, entering into an investigation of this work, they will desire to know if they are spiritual-minded, and, if so, how they can best regulate their conduct and their movements in order to bring the highest results from their investigations of the subject. Then shall we find mediums, as well as sitters, coming into closer harmony for one grand purpose—that of receiving and of understanding God's holy truth; and then shall we be less annoyed by attempted imposture or by the exposure of that which certainly seems to have been allied to fraud.

Q.—What form of mediumship is, in its exercise, most exhaustive to the vitality of the medium, and which the least?

A.—The undue exercise of any form of mediumship will exhaust the vitality of a medium and bring sorrow and pain to him or to her. Any phase of mediumship that is fully developed, wisely guarded and usefully employed will not exhaust nor in any way inflict sorrow or pain upon its possessor. We speak advisedly, having given the matter careful observation and consideration. It is true that mediumship in every form and all departments must be exercised in connection with the nervous structure of its subject, and the nerve forces of a medium may be so thoroughly drawn upon as to prostrate the physical system to such a degree as to eventually bring about a condition of ill health or of insanity; but this need never be the result if the spiritual bands who have mediums in charge will exercise their thought, their precaution and their guardianship wisely, and, at the same time, if the mediums and their mortal associates will also do their part in trying to create conditions that are favorable to the work of the spirit-world.

A medium who becomes so thoroughly engrossed in his work as to desire constant employment, as to demand that his spirit-friends shall make use of his organism at all times and in all places, will most certainly use up his reserve force, and by-and-bye become prostrated, mentally and physically, because of his action. But if he is content to listen to the voice of the wise and good and to defer to his spirit-guides in the prosecution of his work, he will probably be so led and protected as to be able to exercise a large degree of usefulness through the employment of his mediumship.

It is very true that there are spirits so thoughtless or selfish that they will make use of a medium at any time or in any place in order to communicate with mortals; but such spirits are not wise and are not competent to be the guides and protectors of those human instrumentalities who stand between the earth and the spirit-world. Hence it is best for a medium to invoke the presence of spirits who are not only loving and tender, but who are wise and have a knowledge of the laws of mediumship, to ask that they may be surrounded by those influences from above who will afford the very best condition for an extended usefulness to humanity. If this be done, and the medium himself does not become selfish or mercenary, seeking to make use of his gifts for selfish purposes, he need not fear the encroachments of evil influences or of debilitating powers, nor fear to be exercised for the world in such ways and at such times as his wise and loving spirit friends may dictate.

Q.—Are all human beings mediumistic?

A.—Yes; since all are spirits, since mediumship is but an opening of the spiritual perceptions to the realities of another life and to higher influences. "But," you will ask, "how can it be that mediumship is only the opening of the spiritual perceptions to scenes, influences and conditions of other worlds and other lives, when some mediums of whom we know seem to be not at all spiritual by nature, but appear to live entirely in the physical domain of life?" Even so, mediumship is but the quickening of some spiritual perception inherent in humanity. It may have been touched upon by influences from another life, or the conditions and associations of mortal existence may have given it power to unfold, but it is the reaching out of the spiritual to other things than those which belong to the physical, and yet the spiritual nature, the spiritual character of the medium may not have been quickened, illuminated or uplifted into a high aspirational plane, for this must be a process of education as well as a condition of unfoldment or of inheritance.

All are spirits, all have spiritual faculties and perceptions, but some are clouded and crowded upon by the external conditions and associations of life. They are not so circumstanced as to send forth their hidden powers, but these, at unexpected times, become quickened, drawn forth and made to express themselves. Therefore, we say, all are mediums, for all are individual, intelligent spirits, and sometime, under some circumstances, in some condition or department of life, we believe every spirit will be directly acted upon by higher intelligences, by unseen influences, that every human life will receive direct inspiration from above, and take into its own being those high and holy thoughts and ministrations which shall prove its own mediumship to its understanding, and bring to it higher conceptions of life and duty.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

My name, when dwelling in the mortal, was Cornelius Robinson, and my home was in Leominster, Mass. I have tried many times to speak in these meetings, but I have failed to send out my words to the dear ones left yet in the mortal. How often I have heard them remark that if one comes to earth why does not another? It is true, all are permitted to come, but all are not able to manifest. I have not only stepped into your hall many times, but have also visited other halls where meetings have been held, hoping to be able to announce my name. I am happy, for that will be the first question asked by the loved ones here.

Mother is with me, and also Sarah. I would ask them to come into communication with me privately, the dear ones that are left, but I know full well I ask in vain, yet I understood a part of spirit-return, for I looked forward to the coming of the good paper more than for my food.

I am satisfied with the home I have, and do not wish to return to stay, but have a strong desire to come into communication with the loved ones yet left in the mortal.

Annie Greives.

I have asked permission to send a few words to the dear ones yet left on earth. You may place my name as Annie Greives, of Haverhill, Mass. I know Richard hopes I may sometime give him a long, long letter. I will do the best I can, Richard, for I know you are looking for a few words from me each time the paper comes. I know you have often thought: "Why, Annie, can you not give out a few words?" Oh! how sweet to know only a thin veil is between us; thinner than a silken lace is the veil that closes you from us, Richard, and when there is an opportunity, grasp it always, that I may converse with you privately, for I do enjoy such a meeting more than I do to come into a hall. I have found you in meetings, and you have often wondered in your own spirit why Annie could not just give her name through some of the instruments that have been made use of. We understand a great deal more than it is possible for you in the mortal to know, although as I have often said to you, dear husband, I am but one step from you. Not a day nor an hour in the day passes but I come to you. Sometimes it is but a moment, at other times there are attractions stronger that hold me to you.

Richard, learn all you can, for this life is but a shadow; ours is the real when you cross the portal called "death," which there is none, only transition, or change from the mortal to the immortal. I often have wished that Louis would converse with me; you will feel happier if he would. But, dear husband, if you knew how much happiness it gives me to hold a few moments' conversation with you I know you would be paid for the trouble taken in communing with me.

Your father and mother stand by my side, and ask me to remember them to you, dear Richard, and as soon as they are able they will give a message to you, especially James, your father.

Winchester Reed.

You may place my name as Winchester Reed, from Keene, N. H. I have tried many times to come in rapport with the loved ones, but have not been able to send a message, as I have wished to. I was not a stranger to spirit-return; I understood and enjoyed a great deal of it. It is not all in understanding, but in communing with the dear ones who have crossed the beautiful river. How true! only the river that runs between us—a group this side, and a group the other—we can almost clasp hands together; in a little while we shall be able to do it.

I would say to the dear child, learn all you can. And the grandchildren, I don't forget one of them. The dear old friends I often meet in the beautiful beyond that I once knew in the mortal, all coming with happy smiles to greet me. Think, for a moment, what it must be to be with them forever. I would not ask to come to stay, but to come into communication with the dear ones, and if they do not feel happier I will not press it further. I am happy in my spirit home, and would not exchange it for your mansions here, but we do enjoy coming into communion with the dear ones that are yet left here.

Samuel Bemis.

I have promised and am going to make the attempt to speak, with the permission of the guides. My name is Samuel Bemis, from Forksville, La. That is where I went out—not my home—so the dear ones will understand why I give it. I have much to say: In the first place, Jennie, I am not dead. You understand something, but little comparatively, of the reality of this life. I would like to talk with you so much, but I find, dear Jennie, these interviews will not be so frequent as I hoped; but let me say, dear wife, never, never will I get so far away from you but I shall try to make my presence known. [Aside:] Wait a minute, darling, Uncle Samuel will tell them. That child is very earnest for me to say Bemie Ollie is here.

I wish I might speak loud enough so they might all know we are not dead people. Jennie, your mother is here to-day, and my father—but can't all speak at once; they wish to send greetings to and to be remembered by all the families on both sides.

Let me ask you one question, dear Jennie: Will you not sit by yourselves, passively, you three, and see what we may be able to give out to you? I know there is harmony among you, and feel that I shall be able to make my presence known through some little sounds. The child also will be present with us. I would like you, Jennie, to send the letter to Willie after perusing it yourself. I am happy, Jennie. Don't trouble about "Jumbo"; he's all right enough, but the person who kept him is not. Don't trouble; it is better to suffer two wrongs than to do one. Oh! how glad in my soul have I been to know that it was just commencing to live instead of dying. Death! there is none. I have seen no dead people, and, Jennie, your father says he finds it all a great mistake, the belief of the "sleep of the dead." How strange that mortals with good sense could not understand that the spirit never went into the grave. Your father tells me he was firm in the belief, but, thank God! he lost it all when he crossed over.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, that I have been able to speak for myself. I have tried four different times before. Mortals do not understand it is not wholly getting a control, but it is getting permission after we find we can use the organism.

William Perkins.

I would like to speak a few words, if I can get power enough, but I partake a little of the sensations I went out with. My home was in Chelsea, Mass.; William Perkins. I was pretty weak when I passed away, but oh! how beautiful to know, not to think, that the dear ones hold you in remembrance. And the flowers that were brought were so beautiful! I know it showed the kindness of their hearts, and I thank each one. I thank the Lodge of the Order for what they did.

Grandmother says that she is with me. Not only one dear one with me, but many that had crossed the river before me. The old dread disease that hung around me so long I am freed from to-day. I am happy. I wish not for one tear to drop for me, but look a little higher and know that we are able to come around you. I have some dear, good friends just across the ferry, in East Boston. They will understand why I call not their names. Dear, good friends, I am happy, but not strong yet, for it is not long, as you reckon in mortal life, since I passed over.

Leonard Coleman.

I suppose soldiers can come as well as others. I went from good old Boston to the war. My name is Leonard Coleman. I left father and mother just over in Chelsea, Mass. I don't want to say much about the way I went out, but I think it is very likely I shall let it out before I get away. I would like John to know this is not all mind-reading, neither is it all fraud, neither are all the people fools. Bigger heads and more brains to-day have investigated and found it true. But, thank God, the boys in grey and the boys in blue shake hands together. But I'll stop about Libby Prison folks!

I did n't say where I went out; it makes very little difference. I've got into a good home now, where we're treated like—spirits—and truthfully will I say I am glad I did my duty as far as it was pointed out to me. But when taken prisoner, then it seems everything in the form of duty is taken away from you.

I am happy in my spirit-home. For the feelings of father and mother, I will not dwell on my sufferings before I passed out. Oh! ye mortals, how little do you understand how much it cost for liberty! All that are connected in any way with the government, don't be stingy with the heirs of the soldiers. Let me say to you each one, Be charitable to both sides, for many of the boys in grey were forced into the service against their will. Long before I passed out I had many conversations with the boys in grey, by stealth, and one after another has told me how glad he would have been to be on the other side, but was forced into the ranks.

We have now reached a land where no fighting is to be done. I never regretted that I went, for I felt in duty bound to go for my country's sake. Stand by the country, and stand by the boys that went so freely for it.

Andrew Lyle.

Andrew Lyle, of Barnet, Vt. I would like to say a few words, so they may know that others come to earth as well as the ones that have just spoken. Aleck is here, and mother and Mary. Aleck is all right now; they did n't forget to give him a good body and a good spirit when the exchange was made. I would like to say to each one, as they ask for me in Barnet, that I am not dead, neither have I seen a dead person since I crossed over; more alive to all intents and purposes than you could be here in the mortal. We just begin to live as we cross the portal called death.

I am satisfied with the home I have to-day. I am all right enough, and able to talk, too. I never found "that place." I don't think it 's best to look after anything you don't want to find.

I am satisfied with the home, and I find now that you 've got to build your own home, no one will build it for you. You can build it beautiful or miserable. If you don't build it right, you 've got to do it after you get there by progression—that is the term we use. No, I would not wish to come back to stay, if they could give me all that 's in Vermont. It 's a pretty good State to live in, but I am satisfied with the place I have, and feel I can progress on from one state of happiness to another.

Lily Kimball.

I have been given permission to speak by the spirit guides who stand beside me. I lived in Methuen, Mass. Lily Kimball. I am happy, and grandfather says he thinks it is about time I tried to make myself known, for both grandfathers are with me. Father and mother, shed not a tear, for your Lily has gone to bloom in heaven, where no aches and pains can find her. Aunt Betsey is with me to-day, and Uncle Francis. Mother, no one enjoys better than I do coming into communication with you when I can do it—which is not always possible. You were so sad when they bore your Lily away; but oh! mother, you did not know then it was the stepping-stone for you and father to know that the dear ones who had passed on before were waiting to come into conversation with you.

It has been many years, Grandma Kimball says, since they passed away, and never have they been permitted to commune with the dear ones until Lily was taken out of the home. Father, grandfather says that he well understands how much happier you are by feeling that we can all come around you, and that if auntie does n't wish to know anything here, she must commence with the children in the a b c's and learn when she crosses over. Mother, the new-born babe is with us, and Aunt Betsey says she will care for the darling until they come to claim it.

Oh! how glad I am to know there are channels that we can speak through. I have been in this meeting many times, but have not spoken before. Father, grandfather says that when you get the impressions so strong go by them in your business, and you will find it will be much better.

Dear brother, Genie and Frank, and sister Mabel and Jennie, we send love and greetings to each one. I've not forgotten dear old grandma who is with you, mother, for we'll not forget one of you. I know Jackson will see the letter, because I see he has the paper, therefore I am sure he will be able to know Lily has kept her word. He has asked, "Lily, will you try and send a letter sometime?" Getting permission to-day, I have kept my promise.

Now, mother, I know you are sad at times for the little darling brother Seymour who was taken away so long ago. He is grown to manhood, but he knew me when I came to spirit-life, through the visits that he had made in the home, all these many, many years.

I would like you, Mr. Chairman, if not too much trouble, to send this letter to 352 Main street, Lewiston, Me., to Mrs. Jennie A. Willman, for I know father and mother will get it through some friends. Much obliged to you, sir.

Verification of a Spirit-Message.

S. B. NICHOLS.

My attention was called to the communication in the BANNER OF LIGHT of June 23d, signed S. B. NICHOLS. After reading it I could truthfully say that it was characteristic in style and thought, and therefore I feel it right that I should publicly say so in your columns.

Hoping that the friend who silently called it forth will also acknowledge it, I am,

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 20th, 1888.

To the Liberal-Minded.

As the "Banner of Light Establishment" is not an incorporated institution, and as we could not therefore legally hold bequests made to us in that name, we give below the form in which such a bequest should be worded in order to stand the test of law:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto Luther Colby and Isaac B. Rich, of Boston, Massachusetts, Publishers, [here insert the description of the property to be willed] strictly upon trust, that they shall appropriate and expend the same in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient and proper for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression."

The Spanish Armada.

As this year is the three hundredth anniversary of the attempt of Philip II. of Spain to conquer England by what was termed the invincible armada, and as the success of this attempt would have been attended with consequences of incalculable importance, not only to the people of England but to the people of this country as well—for the conquest of England would at that time have led to the control by Spain of England's North American possessions—the event has a high degree of interest for all of the English-speaking race, and for this reason amply justifies the anniversary researches that have been made respecting it. One fact, however, that has been brought out by these recent examinations of old records is that the armada was relatively a much less formidable fleet than public opinion has credited it with being. The current historical statements describe the Spanish vessels as formidable leviathans in size and prodigiously powerful in their armament, while, on the other hand, the English fleet is said to have consisted of a few small, active-moving vessels, manned by sailors who were thoroughly trained in their profession.

As a matter of fact, the Spanish vessels were not much larger than those which the English brought into opposition to them. Their construction with a high forecastle and poop gave them an appearance of size which was wanting when tested by the ordinary rules of tonnage. These additions were serious defects, for they presented such a mass of material to the wind that, practically, the Spanish vessels were only able to make headway when the wind was fair, while their English adversaries could readily manœuvre, no matter in what direction the wind was blowing. Beside this, the English vessels carried broadside guns of more than twice the weight of those on board of the Spanish vessels of the same size, and while the Spanish fleet had fifty-nine fighting craft, the English had forty-nine. Taking all these circumstances into account, it is not at all strange that the armada was broken up before those on board of it had a chance of attempting the invasion of England.

The Spanish authorities had counted upon their ability to lay alongside of the English war vessels and seize them by throwing upon them great bodies of boarders who would by weight of numbers have driven the English sailors into the sea. But under the circumstances, they were as helpless to undertake this operation as the crew of a war vessel that had only sails for motive-power would be to seize by boarding a steam frigate. In the chief engagement the Spanish vessels became hopelessly mixed up, and only about a dozen of their number had any opportunity of engaging in the fight. The risks of invasion were, therefore, very much less than the English had imagined, or than the ordinary historical account has led most persons to suppose. Indeed, it seems to be one of the weaknesses of the English to overestimate the danger that their country runs of a foreign invasion, for the fear that was felt throughout that country at the time the armada sailed has in some respects its parallel at the present time among those who are depicting the utterly defenseless and helpless condition of England, and the easy prey she would be to any ambitious continental nation that might attempt the work of conquest.

Incidents of Mediumistic Experiences.

In a review of "D. D. Home; His Life and Mission," by Madame Home, recently published by Trübner & Co., London, given in Light, the following incidents of Mr. Home's experience as a medium are related:

"When he was nineteen years of age he went to stay with Mr. Ward Cheney, of Manchester, N. H., U. S. A. As he entered the hall he heard a rustling as of a silk dress, and again in the drawing-room. Each time he turned round and could see nothing. At last he saw an active looking, elderly lady, clad in a dress of heavy grey silk, which again rustled. The host heard it this time and inquired the cause. Home told him, and Mr. Cheney made no response. The lady did not appear at dinner, but on leaving the room Home heard the rustling again, and the words: 'I am annoyed because they have placed a coffin above mine.' Home told his hosts. They recognized the lady and her dress, but declared the story of the coffin to be absurd. Again the rustling came, and the words were repeated, and 'Seth had no right to cut that tree down' was added. Mr. Cheney admitted that his brother Seth had cut a tree down, and that the lady in the grey dress would not have liked it. Once more the old message came, and was strenuously declared by the host to be rubbish. Home went to bed distressed. It was the first time he had received a false message. He slept badly, and told his host so. Mr. Cheney told him that he would take him to the family vault, and show him that, even had they desired, there was no room to put another coffin on top of this lady's. The two went with the man who kept the vault. He was about to open it, when he turned and said, in a half-apologetic tone: 'There was a little room above Mrs. ——'s' (the grey silk lady's) 'coffin, and I have put the coffin of Mrs. L.'s baby there. Perhaps I ought to have told you. I only did it yesterday.'"

"His Excellency N. Aksakoff, Madame Home's uncle, who was not a Spiritualist, had passed away recently, when in April, 1882, came a message: 'He begins to believe that he lives, but he often fears that it is a dream.' Hardly had these words been spelt out when there were heard footsteps, exactly like M. Aksakoff's, in the adjoining room, and the portière was drawn back. Madame Home saw the full form of the spirit as it approached. The raps recommenced: 'It is true, it is true'—and 'There is my shadow' (at that instant Madame Home felt something put into her hand), 'the shadow of him who loved you dearly.... Take it; it is I who give it you. You have touched my hand. I have then a hand. I live. GOD IS.' After further messages the well-known footsteps were heard receding till they faded in the distance. On lighting a candle the 'shadow' was found to be a framed photograph of M. Aksakoff, taken from the adjoining room. He had so alluded to his photograph in life."

The First Independent Club.

At a recent business meeting of this organization the Secretary was directed to prepare the following resolutions bearing upon the transition of Dr. Warren S. Stokes:

Whereas, Our worthy brother and esteemed associate, Dr. Warren S. Stokes, has been suddenly removed from our midst; and

Whereas, The loss we have sustained in his decease, and the still heavier loss sustained by those nearest and dearest to him, should be placed upon record; therefore,

Resolved, That it is only a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that in regretting his removal from our midst, we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our respect and regard; a true man, filled with honest purpose, a genial friend and a valued member of the First Independent Club. Though now without our sight, we know he is yet with us in thought and impulse, and cognizant of our grief: one who from arduous duties could not be always with us, but whose hearty interest was stanchly maintained and manifested among his daily associates.

Resolved, That the sympathy and condolences of this organization be extended to the relatives of the deceased, who with such brief warning were called upon to bid him an earthly farewell and perform the last sad rites of burial.

Resolved, That a copy of this sincere testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be forwarded to the relatives of the deceased, and also published in the BANNER OF LIGHT.

ARCHDEACON JULIUS, in his Easter sermon as reported in the Ballarat Star of March 27th, gave utterance to some very liberal and rational views, quite in accord with Spiritualism. He drew an analogy between physical and spiritual growth, showing that up to a certain point they ran on parallel lines, and continues, "The analogy, so far, between physical and spiritual life is complete; but here the analogy ends, for while in the case of physical life the body grows mature, and at last decays and dies, in the case of spiritual life the soul grows, develops more and more, is immortal, going on from strength to strength, eternal, being filled, as it continually progresses, with the fullness of God." This is another evidence of the progress of the religion of Spiritualism, which is impressing all progressive minds and finding its way into many churches.—Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of Spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocketbooks. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health,

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

THE CHILD'S GUIDE TO SPIRITUALISM. The author of this little work has performed her task in the face of a great difficulty, viz., the opposition of Spiritualists to anything savoring of creeds; but the best wisdom is to avail ourselves of everything of which we can make a proper use in the important matter of training the minds of our children. It is to them we must look in the future for the harmonious carrying out of those plans which dwellers on the other shore are constantly developing. We take great pains to impress the minds of grown-up people with the truths of Spiritualism. Spiritualists have no schools. Our children attend schools where orthodox ideas are constantly instilled, and it is our duty to do all we can to counteract such influences; for the children absorb orthodox ideas almost without knowing it. This work, then, has been undertaken from the feeling that there was urgent need of it. It has been the aim of the author to avoid all disputed points. The book is not a creed, but designed to familiarize the child with the spiritual philosophy, which can, it is believed, be better done in this way than in any other. Flexible cloth, 25 cents.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW
OF THE
Seybert Commissioners' Report
OR,
WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.
BY
A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission," with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1888.

The Spiritualist Camp-Meetings.

Onset Bay.

Now is the time when the invincible bad boy makes wry faces over the loss of one or more of his fingers, and the daily papers abound with reports of accidents. The small boy, with a grand flourish that makes one cringe with fear, displays his first toy pistol, while his chum throws torpedoes and fire-crackers dangerously near, keeping you on the qui vive, and making you heartily glad when the day is over. The Fourth was observed here with old-time enthusiasm, and the white-haired man celebrated with the zest of a school-boy.

The Onset Business Club, whose object is the advancement of the general interests of Onset, held a meeting July 1st, and voted to hire a band for each day and evening from Aug. 12th to Sept. 1st, and to erect swings, and arrange for amusements and attractions during that time.

Passed from earthly existence July 2d, at Onset, Sidney Howe, aged sixty-eight years. Mr. Howe was an old Spiritualist who had been identified with Onset Bay Association since its organization. He owned a considerable property here, and leaves no wife or children to inherit it. A sister aged seventy-three is his only near relative. Three weeks ago Mr. Howe led the People's Meeting, which he was instrumental in organizing early in the season, for the last time. His funeral was held at the auditorium in the grove Friday, July 6th, at 12 o'clock, a large concourse being in attendance. The casket, draped in black, was placed upon the front of the platform, and covered with wreaths of pond-lilies and other flowers by ladies, under the direction of Mrs. Wilcox and Mrs. Griffith. Exercises commenced with the solo "Only a Step," by Mr. C. W. Sullivan, assisted by Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. Adams, Mr. Caswell, and Prof. Phelps, Mrs. E. Cassell presiding at the organ, followed by the reading of a poem by Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston. The song, "Beautiful Life," was finely rendered by Prof. Phelps, after which Dr. Storer delivered a very appropriate address. The body was embalmed, and deposited in East Wareham Cemetery.

Camp-meeting commences the 15th. Buy your tickets to Onset proper and patronize the steam cars to the grounds, as by so doing you help support the meetings.

Mrs. Townsend-Wood speaks in the forenoon, and J. Clegg Wright in the afternoon of the 15th. The Middleboro' band will be present to discourse choice music. The singing, which will be congregational, will be under the leadership of Charles W. Sullivan. Prof. Crane will preside at the organ.

Go to Belmont Café for a fish, clam or meat dinner. You will find it neat, palatable and inviting, and the proprietor and his helpmeet courteous and obliging.

The relic room and museum is now open for the season.

Mrs. Cadwell, materializing medium of New York, is spending her first season at Onset, and with most favorable results, as since coming here she has regained her voice, having been able to speak only in a whisper for more than a year. This speaks well for the recuperating virtues of Onset. The drinking water here cannot be excelled, and the pure ozone of the air has a quieting and strengthening effect upon the invalid.

Sunday, July 8th, opened clear and cool, with a strong breeze from the southwest. The cars brought many visitors to the grove. The Lyceum was held in the Temple at 2 o'clock P. M., D. N. Ford, Director. At 4 o'clock the People's Meeting was held in the grove and well attended, Mrs. Eva Cassell presiding. Dr. Lawrence, Dr. Stansbury of San Francisco, Mrs. J. J. Whitney, also of San Francisco, Dr. Brown of Philadelphia, Mr. Bartlett of Chicago, and others spoke, making the meeting a very interesting one. As the regular camp-meeting commences next Sunday, the 15th, the "People's Meetings" will be suspended until Aug. 19th.

Dr. Paxson, of Philadelphia, has been given the use of the platform for Tuesday and Friday of this week. Mrs. M. S. Wood, an old worker in the cause, is the first speaker on the programme for the camp-meeting. Onset is now wide awake for the season. Even the old wooden pump in front of Association Office has its usual amount of patronage and is doing its work faithfully and well without a remonstrance.

A ferry is to be established between Burgess Point and Shell Point, Onset, to connect with the motor cars running from that locality to Onset Station.

The Bay Breeze is the refreshing name of a new paper, containing Onset news and items of interest from all along shore.

David Gerry and family, of Charlestown, and Mrs. M. H. Cushman, are at Marcy cottage.

Mrs. David Tucker, of Middleboro', is at her cottage on Prospect Avenue. Mrs. Rebecca Poole and son Louie are at their cottage on West Central Avenue. Louie is engaged to play at Sunapee Lake Camp-Meeting as leader of the orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Page are located corner of Third and West Central Avenues.

S. S. Bourne's bakery is again open, looking very neat and tempting.

Mr. B. M. Lawrence and son are stopping at Wickett's Island Home, as is also Mrs. M. E. Williams, of New York. Mrs. Pet Anderson is expected this week.

Mrs. M. F. Whitney, formerly of Aquarian Cottage, has taken charge of the Highland House.

Mr. and Mrs. John Libby, of Salem, have taken Clarence King's cottage on West Central Avenue. Mr. Libby will be one of the special police during camp-meeting.

B. S. Brown, dentist, has rooms at Greenleaf Cottage on South Boulevard.

John Lumsden, of Nashville, Tenn., is at "Old Pan" Cottage.

Mrs. A. Nash has desirable rooms and a small cottage to rent at 30 South Boulevard.

Edward Stanton is running Motor No. 1, and Charles M. Howes has charge of No. 2, on the O. B. G. R. R.

The following have registered at Headquarters since July 4th: Mrs. Helen E. Loveland, East Somerville, Mass.; Susan A. Low, Mary L. Dodge, Chelsea, Mass. At Nestlenook Cottage: J. J. Whitney and wife, San Francisco, Cal.; John Lamont, Liverpool, Eng.; Mrs. C. M. Barnes, Birmingham, Conn.; Chas. M. Howes, New York City; Mrs. H. C. Cushman, Boston; Dr. D. J. Stansbury, wife and son, San Francisco, Cal. At Golden Gate Cottage, West Central Avenue and 6th street: Dr. A. J. Symes and wife, Cleveland, O.; W. S. Dean, Warren, R. I.; Mrs. A. J. Eldridge, Watertown, Mass. On Pearl Avenue: Sara Williamson, Boston. At Cedar Cottage, East Boulevard: F. J. Lippitt and Mrs. Gilbert. At Rolock Cottage, Longwood Avenue: Mrs. John A. Stow, New York. At Glen Cove House: C. Davenport Cowan, Amanda M. Cowan, S. J. Shaw and wife, Boston. At Union Villa: John Lumsden, Lucette Lumsden, Alice Gennett, Harry, Fred and Clarence Gennett, May Crawford, Callie French, John, Horace and Jesse French, all of Nashville, Tenn. Clinnie A. Ballou, George T. Albro, Wm. H. Willis, Frank G. Myers and wife, Wm. R. Morris and wife, Miss Clara Morris, all of Providence, R. I., E. C. Bailey, of Boston, at the Onset Hotel.

Lake Pleasant.

[MR. J. MILTON YOUNG is our authorized agent at Lake Pleasant, and will be pleased to receive subscriptions for the BANNER OF LIGHT. Mr. Young also has a full line of our publications for sale at his bookstore. He will conduct the correspondence for THE BANNER from this Camp-Meeting.]

Another week has passed into history. In "Festus" I read that "we live in deeds, not years," yet not all appreciate the beauty and sublimity of this great truth. Some people live more in one hour than others in fifty years. It is not a matter of time, but of comprehension and experience. Another illustration of soul development is the fact that one person in traveling sees something of interest at every turn of the road, another sees nothing. The one wanders down the dim aisles of the past and anticipates the future; the other exists only in the things of to-day. One dwells in an atmosphere of soul-culture, the other lives only in the material and can get no further. How true it is that there are those "who having eyes see not, and having ears hear not." If "there is a home we each have built," how important that we give our best efforts for the advancement of humanity.

That the world at large is growing more liberal, more studious, and more thoughtful, is seen to a marked extent in the character of the audiences which annually convene at this camp-ground. Fifteen years ago Lake Pleasant was regarded as a curiosity shop, and a medium was either a witch or a constant visitor to graveyards. People came to scoff and to ridicule, and, turning up their noses, proceeded to explode the whole business in one afternoon. (It takes longer than that now.) The "good" Sunday folks of staid Franklin County of course were shocked and amazed to think that His Satanic Majesty had obtained a foothold by the shore of "Montague Pond." All this has changed. The scoffers now come to pray, and the church no longer antagonizes the spiritual philosophy, but serves it up every Sunday. Scholars and scientists come here to investigate. Lake Pleasant has set many thousand people to thinking, and thought never stops.

SPECIAL NOTES.

The opening on the "Fourth" was a grand success. The Unitarian Society of Greenfield had an outing here on Thursday. A large party were in attendance.

The Lake Pleasant Association extends a cordial invitation to societies to occupy these grounds for picnic purposes.

Mr. William R. Tice, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Tice have arrived for the summer. Mr. Tice is treasurer.

The Worcester Cadet Band received a most cordial greeting upon their arrival on Tuesday evening.

Through the kindness of friends in various parts of creation our table is constantly supplied with choice flowers. Recently a box came one hundred and fifty miles by mail, arriving in fine condition. Thanks to one and all.

Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Fletcher of Lowell are at their cottage on Lyman street.

The photograph rooms of Mr. Frank Crozier, on the Park, will soon be open.

President Beals and Mrs. Beals favored us with their presence on Wednesday.

Madam Fermont is booked at the hotel.

Mrs. Clara A. Field, of Boston, has returned to camp. The secular papers give favorable notices of Mrs. Field's work upon the platform. She has been before the public for a series of years.

H. A. Buddington, of Springfield, called here on Wednesday, on his way to Onset.

Mr. Dovar M. Pierce, of Greenfield, a "printer-man," called on us recently. Also Mr. Potter, of the North Adams Express.

One writer says: "Night is the time for sleep." We wish we could. Around us all Nature seems calmly sleeping, and oh! for six hours of the sleep of our boyhood days. J. M. Y.

Temple Heights, Me.

The Maine State Spiritual Temple will hold its Sixth Annual Camp-Meeting at Temple Heights, Northport, Me., commencing Saturday, Aug. 11th, 1888, and closing Sunday, Aug. 19th.

Its officers are G. H. Rich, President, Thorndike; A. Rigby, Vice President, Oldtown; R. B. Cookson, Secretary, Bangor; F. Otis Gould, Treasurer, Oldtown, Me.

This grove is situated on the west side of Penobscot Bay, six miles below Belfast, and about midway between Wesleyan Grove and Saturday Cove. It is delightfully located for camp-meeting purposes, combining the delights of forest life and the attractions of the seashore. A wharf, at which large steamers may land, has been added to the other improvements of the grounds.

A large number of cottages have been erected upon the grounds, and several more will be built this year. Tenting space for the meeting can be hired from the Secretary at a merely nominal price. A living spring of water upon the grounds gives an abundance of pure water.

The boarding house will be in charge of a competent manager who will furnish board and lodging at the usual prices. Lodgings will also be furnished by many of the cottagers.

The rates over the Maine Central Railroad from all points, to Belfast, will be one fare for the round trip. Ask for camp-meeting tickets. At Belfast Mr. A. J. Harriman's express will meet all trains and carry passengers and baggage to the grounds.

Parties from Portland, by taking the 6:45 A. M. train on the Maine Central, can arrive in Rockland in time to take the steamer Rockland for Temple Heights.

The steamer Rockland will leave Boston & Bangor S. S. Co. Wharf, Bangor, daily, (Sunday excepted) at 6:30 A. M., standard time, for Rockland and intermediate landings. Returning, leave Rockland at 1 P. M., arriving at Bangor at 7 P. M. On her down trip she reaches Temple Heights at 10:50 A. M., and the return trip at 2:20 P. M.

Parties from Boston and vicinity should take the Boston and Bangor steamers. Ask for return ticket to Rockland. At Rockland they should take the Steamer Rockland for Temple Heights, leaving Rockland at 1 P. M., arriving at Temple Heights at 2:20 P. M.; or they can get a return ticket to Northport and come down to Temple Heights by team.

The speakers for 1888 are: Dr. H. B. Storer, Geo. A. Fuller, M. D., Mrs. Juliette Yeaw, Mrs. Abbie Morse, Mrs. J. Wentworth, Mrs. A. P. Brown, Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly.

Services will commence at 10 A. M. and 2 P. M. Conference and Fact meetings held daily, time announced from the rostrum.

Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly, of Onset, Mass., test medium, will be present during the entire meeting. Other mediums, both public and private, will be in attendance, and ample opportunities will be given for all to investigate and become assured of the truth of immortality.

A cordial invitation is extended to all speakers, mediums and friends to be present.

Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting, Tenn.

The camp opened propitiously on Sunday, July 1st. The audiences were of such numbers as to make the opening day satisfactory to the Association, but small in contrast to what they should have been on the grand mountain where they met. The music and singing were excellent. The opening address of President Albert was full of feeling and earnestness. All visitors and speakers were made to feel that they were among a social people, and would find many hearts and hands extended to them.

Morning.—The services were opened by an invocation by the guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. The regular discourse of the morning was delivered by the guides of Mrs. A. M. Glading.

[A synopsis of this address, together with one of that of Mrs. Richmond, delivered in the afternoon, sent us, but unavoidably omitted this week for want of space, will be given next week.—ED. B. OF L.]

Afternoon.—The guides of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond opened the services with an invocation. After the singing of a hymn by the congregation, they announced as the subject of their discourse, "Why Does Man Claim Immortality?"

The service at night consisted of an able address by Dr. George A. Fuller, and tests by Dr. H. F. Merrill. The lecture was eloquent and logical, worthy of a full report. The tests given by Dr. Merrill are startling and convincing.

The excellent beginning to the camp services augurs well for a month of great interest and success.

NOTES FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

The only meeting on Monday, the 2d inst., was in the evening, when a conference was held, George W. Kates, Secretary of the Association, presiding. Dr. H. F. Merrill gave many recognized descriptions of spirits, with a number of messages. Mrs. Glading also wrote messages, some of which were very convincing.

Tuesday, the 3d, the guides of Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Glading and George A. Fuller answered questions at the morning meeting, following which tests were given by Dr. Merrill. At the evening meeting Mrs. Glading's guides spoke eloquently for two hours and gave psychometric readings.

July 4th a grand celebration of the day was had. George W. Kates gave an oration, of which the Times said: "We have frequently heard this gifted speaker, but never listened to his words with greater interest than on this occasion. Mr. Kates had had no notice of his appointment to deliver the oration until a very short time before its delivery, and this fact made the interest still more apparent. Mr. Kates held his auditors' closest attention for an hour and a half, and at the close of the address was warmly congratulated by his friends."

Mrs. Richmond improvised a poem, the theme of which, given by the audience, was, "The Red, White and Blue." The Times said that the effect on the people was electrical, "the audience applauding the fair improvisatrice to the echo."

Mrs. McCann of New Orleans sang in a charming manner; Geo. A. Fuller delivered an address; Dr. H. F. Merrill gave descriptions of and messages from soldiers killed in battle on the mountain—one, whose name, birthplace, place of enlistment, etc., were recognized by a lady from Augusta, Ga.

At night a fine pyrotechnic display, after which a dance was engaged in by the young folks till after midnight.

Thursday, July 5th, a conference in the morning, a lecture by Mrs. Richmond in the evening; tests at the close of each meeting.

Sunapee Lake Camp.

Boston will be largely represented at Sunapee this year. The Independent Club and Eben Cobb's Society at College Hall are to be present by delegates.

The grounds have been much improved by Mr. Blodgett, and the sanitary conditions as well.

The musical and literary entertainments on Saturday evening will be a great feature this year. Ten professional artists constitute the musical troupe, and the full capacity of the hall will no doubt be tested at each entertainment.

Mr. Nelson, mine host of the "Forrest House," is determined to improve upon his success of last year, and please everybody who enjoys comfort and good food.

The best talent will present the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism at the Sunapee meeting.

The Boston and Maine Railroad has issued a handsome fare and time-table of Sunday excursions to Sunapee Lake from stations on their road. Consult it at the depôts.

Manchester and Keene people should at once apply for Sunday excursions from those cities to Sunapee. Nothing like local influence to insure the coöperation of the railroads. Large parties could easily be gotten up at both places.

The three steamboats—"Edmund Burke," "Armenia White" and "Lady Woodsum"—will carry passengers from Newbury Station to Blodgett's Landing at equal rates.

Several new cottages are in process of building.

Parties who desire tents should order them at once of Geo. W. Blodgett, Newbury, N. H.

New Era Camp-Meeting, Portland, Ore.

The New Era Camp-Meeting, which closed on the 20th of June, was one of the best meetings ever held in Oregon, and was noted for its harmony and good fellowship. Though the weather was not as pleasant as could be desired, the attendance was over the average of other meetings hitherto held on the grounds; I noticed there were some thirty tents, beside there were several cottages and one hotel building. The Society that owns the grounds has, through the aid of the State organization, built a very fair meeting-house, with a seating capacity of four to five hundred, but the natural and most beautiful place for meetings is under some remarkably fine fir trees that form a complete shelter from the sun, and remind us that "the groves were God's first temples" "as shrines for humble worshipers to hold communion with their Maker."

This camp-ground is on the east bank of the Willamette River, some twenty miles above the city of Portland, on a high eminence overlooking the river and surrounding country. A small stream called Rock Creek also winds around the base of the hill on which these grounds are located. Nature has done much to make this place fitting for the purposes for which these grounds are dedicated. Although at present we cannot boast of efforts to be compared with Onset Bay and other camp-grounds East, may we not hope that at no distant day thousands may meet where we now have but a small beginning.

There were many mediums on the ground, and some as good as you will find anywhere, among whom I would mention Mrs. Ladd Finnecan of San Francisco, of whom it might be said she has no superiors; Mrs. Bruce of Lebanon, Oregon, a most excellent slate-writing medium; Mrs. Brown, recently from Michigan, a good psychometrical reader. There were also many other local mediums who bid fair to make their mark in the world. Thus we send you greetings from the Pacific over to the Atlantic: From ocean to ocean, from shore to shore, the good news of glad tidings, of great joy to all people:

"There is no death; the sun goes down
To rise upon some fairer shore."

There will be another camp-meeting at New Era, held under the auspices of the State organization, commencing Sept. 8th and continuing some two weeks.

Grove Meeting in Michigan.

Thinking a short sketch of the grove-meeting just closed at Devil's Lake, Mich., might be acceptable, I send the following account. Some four weeks ago I received a letter from Mr. J. B. Allen, of the Devil's Lake Hotel, asking my coöperation in the matter of a meeting, to be held in his grove at that place about the last of June. Arrangements were accordingly made for a three days' meeting, to be held June 29th and 30th, and July 1st. Having so short a time in which to make arrangements, and being unable to induce the railroad company to run excursion trains, made it rather uphill work, but it was carried through to a success.

On account of bad weather only one meeting was held on Friday, which was at the hotel in the evening. On Saturday we held two meetings at the grove, and one at the hotel in the evening, at all of which we had a fair attendance. On Sunday we held two meetings at the grove, with an attendance of about six hundred, which, considering the fact that there were no trains run to the Lake, was good for a first meeting. Some of the friends drove twenty miles or more to attend the meeting, and staid during Saturday and Sunday. We had as speakers Mrs. L. A. Pearsall, of Disco, Mich., and Mrs. Palmer, of Deerfield, Mich., assisted by the following mediums: Mrs. A. D. Carroll, clairvoyant and platform tests; Mrs. M. E. Jameson, M.D., clairvoyant and psychometric readings; Mrs. Nettie M. Ketcham, clairvoyant and tests. Mrs. Ketcham answered mental questions with marked success. Mrs. F. F. Blakely, trance and tests. Mrs. Blakely sang finely in Spanish, being, it is claimed, controlled by Madame Zorocco, a Spanish opera singer. These mediums were all from Toledo. Mrs. Margaret Owen, of Lake Pleasant, Mass., was present. We were also favored on Saturday and Sunday with short but good speeches by Mr. W. F. Trimm of Adrian, Mich., and Mrs. B. J. Holg of Morenci, Mich. Never in my experience in attending meetings at Lake Pleasant, Haslett Park, Battle Creek and elsewhere, have I seen such enthusiasm manifested as was shown at this meeting—such a hunger for Spiritualism, both philosophical and phenomenal, is seldom seen.

At the close of the afternoon meeting on Sunday, a call was made for those interested in effecting a permanent organization for the purpose of holding a yearly meeting at this grove. Mr. W. F. Trimm, of Adrian, was chosen Chairman, and called the meeting to order, when they proceeded to organize as follows: President, Mr. B. J. Holg, of Morenci, Mich.; Vice President, Mrs. M. J. Marlatt, of Onsted, Mich.; Secretary, Mr. J. B. Allen, of Devil's Lake, Mich.; Treasurer, Mr. A. D. Rice, of Clayton, Mich. After the election of officers, Mr. Allen was asked on what terms the association could secure the grove for their meetings, when he replied that as long as he lived and owned the grove, they were welcome to the use of it free of charge, pledging himself to do everything possible to make the movement a success.

I would say in closing, that the manner in which we were entertained by "mine host" Allen and wife, also his kindness in placing the steamer Tecumseh Chief, at our disposal, going to and returning from the grove free of charge, will not soon be forgotten by our party. Also to Mr. Welch, the partner of Mr. Allen, and the gentlemanly clerk, Mr. Chase, we would return thanks for their endeavors to make our stay with them a pleasant one, which we hope will have many repetitions. W. M. SMITH.

Niantic, Ct.

The month has opened cool, still its low temperature does not stop the singing of the birds in our fragrant pines. This morning I was awakened by a happy robin about daylight. I never supposed I should ever tire of these sweet songsters, but I had the headache and I did wish he would be quiet; but no; he is singing even now at eventide, the same old joyous song of praise to his Creator.

I have been around the camp and find about twenty families, while others have been, opened up, and gone, to return at the opening the 5th. Some have been here quite a while. Mrs. J. D. Eager and Cyrus Welch of New Haven, also Mrs. Lewis, of Groton. Mr. L. H. Burnham, of New Britain, the tower man, as we call him, has been tinning and painting the corners of his one hundred and twenty-five feet of tower. He will put into the store part of it a line of edibles for the campers.

Mr. A. Bill and daughter, of Willimantic, are here, he being our genial bus driver to and from the cars.

Mrs. Dorman, of Willimantic, and her two sons also, who are ever ready to lend a helping hand in time of need, keep row and sailboats to let.

Mr. Frank Wright, of Meriden, has his new cottage just completed, and it is quite an ornament to the grounds. Nearly opposite is E. O. Harrington of Bridgeport. Many more have cottages here. E. M. Lyman, of Springfield, will let his this year, and we have one to let, built last season. The restaurant, I hear, is to have the same manager it has had the last two years—Herbert Stearns, of Willimantic, with Miss Jennie Mitchell for pastry cook, which makes us feel assured of the best of everything needful for the entertainment of visitors and campers in the eating line. It is no use to talk business, science or religion to a hungry, famished individual; first care for his physical wants, then he will be in a condition to listen to the needs of his intuitional, toward the unfoldment of our highest good, which should be the desire and aim of one and all.

May the shackles of bigotry and superstition, which bind the soul in sackcloth and ashes, be rent asunder, and we employed, like my song bird the robin, in singing praises to the giver of every good and perfect gift this world affords, both in the rain or in the sunshine. We have on the ground even now one who exemplifieth these sentiments—Mrs. White, of New London, who, a year ago, I thought to meet no more this side the vail; but though confined to her bed with consumption all winter, she has, by the aid of a magnetic healer, been enabled to come to her cottage home by the shore once more in earth-life. She knows she must soon pass on; but die? no, never. She will not stop talking, I tell her; her brain power is clear, and she will only lay aside the worn-out casket, and step into the sunshine of immortal life, in the twinkling of an eye, as it were. "Yes," she says, "I was bound to come to Niantic for the Fourth, if I had to be carried back in a box," and by will power she is here, but for how long in her present frail tenement, I cannot say.

MRS. N. H. FOGG.

Etna (Me.) Camp.

Our camp-meeting commences Aug. 31st. The outlook for the success of Etna Camp, at Buswell Grove, was never better than for 1888, and a grand meeting is anticipated. OLIVE EMERY.

Cape Cod Camp-Meeting at Harwich.

This is the oldest camp of Spiritualists now in existence. The new grounds on the shore are very pleasant, and the meetings, under direction of Dr. H. B. Storer, will be interesting and profitable as in past years. The excursion fare from Boston to Harwich and return is $3.40.

Montreal, Canada.—Geo. Dawson writes: "The platform of the Montreal Association for the Investigation of Spiritualism was occupied on Sunday, July 1st, by Frank T. Ripley, of Boston. In the afternoon he discoursed on several subjects handed in by parties in the audience, and in the evening he lectured on "What is Spiritualism?" At the close of the lecture he gave fifteen tests, all of which were fully recognized with the exception of perhaps one or two. Mr. Ripley has been engaged by our Association for the month of July, during which time there is no doubt he will do a good work for Spiritualism in this city. He has already set a good many people thinking, and has made a good impression on all who have had the pleasure of hearing him."

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—The society resumed meetings Sunday, July 1st, the Court of Appeals having adjourned. J. Clegg Wright is engaged for Sundays July 22d and 29th. E. J. HULING.

Mr. Baxter in Plymouth County.

Again the season has wheeled around, and again Mr. J. Frank Baxter's annual visits to Plymouth County are in order. His coming is always looked forward to with pleasure, anticipation and profit. Gala occasions they are, for from far and near come the people and in crowds to note what this exponent of the Spiritual Philosophy has to say, to hear him sing, to witness his mediumship and catch the inspiration of his magnetic enthusiasm.

On Sunday, July 1st, he addressed audiences in West Duxbury, in the morning, by request, relating experiences, with running comment and apt application, and in the afternoon gave a telling discourse on "The Permanence of Spiritualism." In the evening he lectured to a large audience in Kingston, to the delectation and surprise of many who had heard much of but never had heard the gentleman himself. A séance followed both the afternoon and the evening discourses—that of the afternoon in Duxbury being extra fine and convincing, though that of the evening was hardly short of wonderful.

On last Sunday, the 8th inst., Mr. Baxter spoke in the open air to a large gathering in Park Hill Grove, near West Norwell. It was a lovely day, and, omitting dusty roads, there was not a single drawback. Prominent people were noted from Hingham, Weymouth, Scituate and Norwell. Under the general topic "The Spiritual Era," Mr. Baxter took timely occasion to speak decidedly plain with reference to the inauguration, growth and influence of Spiritualism, notwithstanding contentions, oppositions and insults, not to add persecutions. His allusions to alleged exposures; his showing up of persecutors, as illustrated in several instances, notably the press of Philadelphia and New York, and of late the court and jury in the Diss Debar case; his calling attention to the rabid attacks and unjust vilifications of certain sensational preachers, all were very ably presented, and, in view of the great and many discussions of late, in this section as elsewhere, the whole lecture was well selected and the eyes of many were opened to the true state of things, and they felt, while listening to Mr. Baxter, the great injustice done through prejudice—not to add jealousy—to the little understood subject of Spiritualism. A grand séance followed the lecture, presenting much for study and reflection.

In the evening Mr. Edwin Wilder, prominent in Hingham, in very appropriate remarks introduced Mr. Baxter to an audience in South Hingham. The latter upon this occasion spoke upon the value of phenomena in establishing and maintaining beliefs, theories and theologies. He showed how every religion known had sanctioned spirit-phenomena, and all but one—that the Chinese—had had their origin in the same. The lecture was radical, and in its bearing upon theological inconsistencies by many would be considered iconoclastic. Mr. Baxter, however, meets with great favor in this vicinity, notwithstanding his outspoken denunciations of what he deems errors in premise, belief, etc., because he is known throughout the section, and all, critics included, know him to be honest. A séance followed this lecture, and name after name was given and recognized, and many things in detail, by parties knowing to them, were acknowledged as minutely correct.

The last Sunday of the month, 29th, Mr. Baxter will lecture forenoon and afternoon in the town hall at Hanson. This will probably be the last visit to this county this season. His themes as announced are in substance, "The Worth of the Spiritualist Platform," and "Materialization." OLD COLONY.

The Case of Mrs. Dimond.

I delivered the thirty eight dollars, contributed by generous friends through the agency of Colby & Rich, to Mrs. Dimond, as requested, and found the sad case well cared for at the present time.

I called at her old residence, 12 Kendall street, Boston, and found the house closed, and that Mrs. Dimond had been taken away on a stretcher but a short time before I arrived.

I learned that she was carried to the residence of Dr. Rich, 566 Columbus Avenue, which I visited, but the invalid was so nervous and exhausted at the time that Dr. Rich thought it would be unwise for me to see her; therefore I left the money with her, and it will be used for her comfort.

A brief review of her present situation, and what has already been done for this unfortunate medium, may not be out of place, as the case has awakened much sympathy for some time past in the ranks of Boston Spiritualists. At the time Mr. Dimond passed on, there was a demand for money to pay his funeral expenses, which amount—$30—was supplied by the audience at the Boston Spiritual Temple Society at Berkeley Hall. Mrs. Little spoke consoling words at his funeral, and on learning the situation of Mrs. Dimond, she made many earnest appeals to her hearers for assistance; a fund was thus created, which gave Mrs. D. a weekly support until she could be removed to some hospital. Messrs. Jacob Edson and L. L. Whitlock donated some pamphlets to the Boston Spiritual Temple Society and Ladies' Aid Society, to be sold for her benefit; this realized additional funds for her support, and at that time an effort was about being made for her removal to some hospital. At this time unfortunately she fell and dislocated her hip, and had to remain in the house for some weeks before removal could take place. Dr. Rich, noting the appeal for assistance for her, as printed in THE BANNER, called, and paid her quite a sum of money, he states, and others called for the same purpose.

The furniture being held by mortgage was sold, and some place had to be provided for her to go. I learn from Dr. Rich—who, by the way, was at one time an old school physician—that he took his carriage and visited every public hospital in Boston to see if she could be admitted as a patient, but the rules of said hospitals were such that she, an old chronic case that was considered incurable, did not come within their province. After a long search by himself and Emma J. Nickerson, they found that she must be removed at once, and Dr. Rich kindly allowed her to be brought to his home, where he will see that she is cared for until different arrangements are made—Emma J. Nickerson having the charge of her physical condition.

The Boston Spiritual Temple Society, through its agent, has delivered to her $102 at various times. The gathering at the home of Dr. Rich Sunday evening, July 1st, realized $48.00, and the $38 00 sent by Colby & Rich from various sources, places the fund at this time—with what Emma J. Nickerson said she should add thereto—at $88.00; but this sum in sickness, with nothing coming in, will go but a little way. (The money here mentioned does not include certain sums which visiting friends and others have paid to Mrs. Dimond direct.)

I learn that the owner of the house where Mrs. Dimond resided was kind in allowing her to remain for some time past without paying rent. I also learn that her attending physician has been very kind and attentive to her.

Mrs. Dimond to-day is a very sick woman, and but little hopes are entertained (by those knowing her condition) of her recovery to good health. It seems singular that there is no free hospital, or bed in one, where Mrs. Dimond can be placed, and that she must be cared for by comparatively strangers or go to the poor-house. A. S. HAYWARD.

In the absence of our Secretary, Dr. J. C. Phillips, I am requested to write a report of our late Convention, which I very cheerfully comply with, believing in a practical demonstration of our willingness to aid in "good works."

As but few delegates arrived on the early trains of Friday, the 22d, the meeting was not formally called to order in the morning, the time being devoted to reception of delegates and social converse. At 2:30 P. M., the meeting was opened with brief words of welcome by the President, Prof. W. M. Lockwood of Ripon, followed by a discourse by J. L. Potter of Wonowoc, upon "The General Trend of Spiritual Truth." The subject was treated with terse argument, interspersed with the quaint witticism peculiar to the speaker and his guides. The evening was devoted to a lecture given through the mediumship of Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther of Crown Point, Ind., and was an able discourse upon "The Scientific Aspect of Spiritualism."

Saturday morning, June 23d, a general conference was held. A discussion upon "How Best to Extend the Work of the State Association" was participated in by a goodly number. In the afternoon speaker J. L. Potter again interested the friends, and in the evening Dr. U. D. Thomas of Minneapolis gave an entertaining discourse upon "Our Country—its Pride and Shame," prefaced by a fine poem composed by himself for the occasion.

Sunday morning, June 24th, Mrs. Luther delivered a radical, intelligent exposition of "The Most Perfect Steps to be Taken by the Liberal Minds of the United States to Protect their Government." It was the ablest lecture of the course, and the appreciative audience in attendance gave frequent expression to their accordance with the thought in hearty applause. It is a rare privilege to listen to such eloquent logic from the lips of a brave woman in defense of principle and truth. Would that our spiritual rostrum might be graced by more such minds.

Sunday afternoon the time was divided between J. L. Potter upon "What Shall the End Be?" and Dr. Arnoup, of Chicago, a sort of traveling missionary, who desired to present his thought before the Association.

The closing lecture was given Sunday evening by Mrs. Luther to a large and attentive audience, after which demonstrations of independent slate-writing were given through the mediumship of Dr. J. E. Mikeswell. He requested that some skeptic sit by his table with him, which request was first complied with by a stranger, when a message was written on the slates and recognized by O. Severance, of Milwaukee, as coming from his little child in spirit-life. Another was acknowledged by Mr. Van Horn as from his mother—this time a Sentinel reporter occupied the skeptic's chair.

The society is under obligations to Mrs. Ida Hourde, of Minneapolis, for vocal music, which she very kindly rendered each session. Professor Lockwood, by request, interspersed the exercises with some fine organ voluntaries. The weather was all that could be desired, and the lovely "Cream City" seemed to smile its benediction upon the efforts of Liberal workers. A number of strangers and friends from abroad were in attendance, and altogether the meeting was a fraternal and profitable occasion. The next Convention will convene at Omro some time in September.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Boston.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Sundays, at 10½ A. M., 2½ and 7½ P. M. Eben Cobb, Conductor.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street, corner of Essex.—Sundays, at 2½ and 7½ P.M.; also Wednesdays at 3 P.M. Able speakers and test mediums. Excellent music. Prescott Robinson, Chairman.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The services at College Hall last Sunday were remarkably interesting. Mr. Cobb opened the meeting with remarks on the query, "What is Authority?" The usual talent was present to read psychometrically, and otherwise, and give tests of spirit presence. Mrs. A. E. King, Miss Peabody, Peter McKenzie, Mrs. Forrester, Mrs. Leslie, and others, spoke during the day and evening. The most interesting feature at the services was the speaking by a minister, who prefers to be known as a stranger, who, like the feathered songsters, makes his annual trip from North to South, he preaching in the South in winter, and spending his summers at the North. He was at Onset Bay last year, and spoke at the conferences several times with great acceptance. He held his audience spellbound with his eloquence and illustrations of the spiritualistic philosophy. He seemed to be under inspiration while he spoke, and no doubt he is assisted by the denizens of the spirit-world, whether admitted or not. He is doing his work in his own way, but according to the writer's standpoint, he cannot work on the church side and the spiritualistic one at the same time, and command the respect his talent demands. If he had the manhood to come out boldly, and speak as the spirit giveth utterance, he would soon be a leading light in the new dispensation. Mr. L. L. Whitlock also made appropriate remarks. COM.

Spiritualist Meetings in New York.

Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, between 49th and 50th Streets.—The People's Spiritual Meeting (removed from Spencer Hall). Services every Sunday at 2½ and 7½ P. M. Mediums and speakers always present. Frank W. Jones, Conductor.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 240 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

New York City.—The last meetings until September of the Progressive Spiritualists, at Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th street, were held Sunday, 1st inst. In the evening Henry J. Newton gave a half-hour discourse. He spoke of the war waged against Spiritualism and mediums, and gave a scathing rebuke to all pretenders who imitate the phenomena of our noted mediums by tr

"THE SPIRITUALISTS' RELIGION."

BY A. E. NEWTON.

It is singular with what pertinacity the opponents of Spiritualism adhere to and reiterate misapprehensions and misrepresentations as to what Spiritualism really is. This is especially true of sectarian religionists, who appear to feel instinctively that their narrow and ill-founded systems of faith are in imminent danger of being toppled over if the simple truth on this subject were understood and accepted by the popular mind. Hence their persistent endeavor to give Spiritualism a bad name by misstating its real nature and uttering all sorts of calumnies and slanders against its adherents.

The recent calumnious diatribe of Parson Talmage, of Brooklyn, is fresh in the mind of the public. It was evidently a sort of mad-dog outcry intended to frighten away, if possible, the unthinking crowds who hang on the lips of this sensational preacher, from giving any attention to those significant facts of our time, which, while demonstrating the spiritual nature of man, throw a flood of new light upon all religious questions and thus tend to expose the crudities and errors of the popular theology. No doubt this outcry was incited by the knowledge that the preacher's own church, as well as the whole community about him, is to some extent becoming "honeycombed" by a conviction of the essential truth of Spiritualism, which conviction must in time produce its enlightening and liberalizing effects.

One notable result of Parson Talmage's ill-advised fulmination has been to make public the fact that a prominent elder in his church, and one of its leading supporters—Dr. Harrison Tucker—is, and has been for years, a clairvoyant physician, who, under acknowledged spirit-control, in the trance, diagnoses and prescribes for disease, and has amassed wealth by a successful exercise of this "spiritual gift." In fact, he is, by his own statement, a Spiritualist, in the authorized, dictionary sense of the term, as really as is the writer of this article. Being interviewed on the subject recently by the Brooklyn Eagle, Dr. Tucker frankly gave an account of his trance experiences, extending over a number of years, at first under the control of a spirit-uncle—which experiences were entirely similar to those of thousands of other spirit-mediums; but when directly questioned as to whether he was a Spiritualist, he is reported to have virtually denied it, answering somewhat evasively as follows:

"I do not believe the Spiritualists' religion. The foundation of that is infidelity, and the tendency is downward. But I know that spirits can communicate to mortals, because I have received the communications from my uncle, who mentioned his name on two occasions. What influence it is that dominates me in my trances every day I do not know. It may be the spirit of my uncle. At any rate it is some external and superior intelligence."

Now Webster's Dictionary defines a Spiritualist, in the recent or modern sense of the word, as "one who believes in direct intercourse with departed spirits through the agency of persons called mediums; one who attempts to maintain such intercourse." And Worcester gives an equivalent definition: "A believer in the doctrine that the spirits of the dead hold communication with men." These definitions by our standard lexicographers, it is true, are faulty in using the words "dead" and "departed," since it is plain that if spirits can communicate they must be both alive and present. The more proper term to apply to them is decarnated, or excarnated; i. e., disrobed of flesh. But neither definition says anything about belief in any system of religion as being necessary to constitute a Spiritualist. It is simply belief in (or knowledge of) the fact of spirit-intercourse. This Dr. Tucker positively avows. Why then should he refuse to avow himself a Spiritualist? Dr. Talmage himself has made an equivalent avowal. In a sermon preached in his pulpit some years ago, and reported in the New York Tribune, he said:

"As in war, one part of an army signals to another part, so may we on earth signal joy to those in heaven, and those in heaven signal joy to us on earth."

This signaling is communication—intelligent intercourse. He may mean it only in a very restricted fashion; but if communication exists at all, the principle and its rightfulness are admitted, and Parson Talmage, notwithstanding his sweeping denunciations, is himself a Spiritualist in the recognized sense.

But Dr. Tucker says he does "not believe in the Spiritualists' religion." What is the Spiritualists' religion? Who has ever defined it to any general acceptance? The fact is—and it would seem as though a man of Dr. T.'s intelligence must know this—that Spiritualists have no distinctive system of religion. What constitutes them Spiritualists, as already stated, is a belief in or knowledge of the simple fact that spirits exist and can communicate. Those who agree in believing this one fact may and do also believe in a great variety of religious doctrines not inconsistent with it—some in no religion at all, and others in very little. There is scarcely a creed in Christendom, or heathendom either, aside from bald materialism, which does not admit of belief in spirit existence and at least the possibility of communication. Consequently Spiritualists in the recognized and dictionary sense of the term are to be found among people of almost all creeds, and of no (religious) creed.

But Dr. Tucker proceeds to say: "The foundation of that [the Spiritualists' religion] is infidelity." Who authorized him to make such a definition? and what does it mean? "Infidelity" is non-faith, no-belief. It is mere negation—a denial. How can a mere denial be the "foundation" of a religion? The statement is an absurdity in itself. A religion must be founded on affirmations—positive beliefs. Doubtless the Doctor's real meaning is that many Spiritualists (not all—for he is one himself) are unbelievers in some of the religious doctrines which he as a member of the Talmage church regards as true. Very likely this is so, but that does not justify him in declaring that Spiritualists, as a whole, have a religion whose "foundation is infidelity," and whose "tendency is downward." This is but a sweeping slander, born of sectarian narrowness, and wholly unworthy of a man who claims to have been for years the instrument and mouthpiece of a "superior intelligence."

It may be true that there are believers in spirit-intercourse who hold to religious or irreligious doctrines that are erroneous and have a degrading tendency; but the same is equally true of believers in astronomy and electric telegraphy, or any other fact in nature—yes, even of believers in the Bible and Christianity. All do not believe alike in all things. Outside of the one point in which all Spiritualists agree, there are wide differences of opinion and of practice; and there is neither intelligence nor honesty in classing all together and denouncing all alike for the alleged errors or follies of some. He who does this stamps himself a narrow-minded, uncharitable bigot and calumniator, whatever his professions may be.

The point I wish to emphasize is that Spiritualism, in its modern and accepted sense, is not a distinctive system of either religion or irreligion, and that Spiritualists, as such, are not necessarily either believers in or deniers of any formulated scheme of religious doctrines. The one fact of which they have become convinced—the fact of spirit-intercourse—may be honestly held along with a great diversity of views on the various questions involved in a system of religion.

At the same time it is true that whoever accepts the one fact of spirit-communion, and wisely avails himself of its privileges, if possessed of an inquiring and truth-loving mind, is quite apt thereby to be started on a course of thought and investigation which is very likely to modify old opinions, to reveal some errors in the teachings of the popular theology, and in time lead to clearer and broader views of human life, duty and destiny—that is, the essentials of religion. But in this investigation no one need to give up a single iota of truth, and if his aspirations are ever upward, as they should be, the tendency can never be downward.

It is further true that if one becomes a Spiritualist in the full meaning of the word—that is, spiritual in thought, perceptions and aspirations—he can never rest satisfied with any external, formal, or superficial system of religion, but will seek for and recognize the essential, the vital, the truly spiritual in all religions. He may become "infidel" to many popular but crude external notions of religion, but will have the fullest faith in the eternal spiritual verities which underlie all. And this faith ever tends upward.

But human minds vary greatly in both the strength and purity of their aspirations for truth, and in ability to apprehend it and perceive its relations. Hence those who start on the road of progress advance at very different rates of speed, and often on quite divergent lines; while many seem content to remain stationary in some circling eddy of belief, especially if comfortably surrounded by sympathizing friends and supplied with abundance of this world's goods. To such, naturally, all progress seems to be a "tendency downward."

The broad-minded and philosophic Spiritualist, therefore, learns to be tolerant toward all who give evidence of being earnest truth-seekers, however wide their differences on religious questions, knowing that all who are struggling upward will eventually arrive at essential truth, by however variant paths. And he learns, too, to be patient with even the wayward, the sinister and the indifferent, confident that the discipline of experience will sooner or later correct their aberrations and conquer their perversities.

Dr. Tucker, it would seem, ceased long ago to grow. Having advanced so far as to become convinced that "spirits can communicate to mortals," (because his uncle did so through his own organism, on two occasions, years ago,) he has stopped there, contented with the theology adopted in his youth, as expounded by Parson Talmage. Perhaps it was not necessary for the use he was to serve in the world as a trance-physician, that he should go any further. It has been no uncommon thing for this useful class of practitioners to be utterly ignorant and skeptical as to spirit-existence or any spirit agency in the matter. Going into unconscious trances, utterly oblivious of what is said or done through their own instrumentality, they have sometimes spontaneously described spirits who were present, giving convincing proofs to others, yet on recovering their normal state have ignored and derided the idea of spirit-intervention. Dr. Tucker was permitted to go a little further than this, and then stopped. He does not even know what influence it is that dominates him every day, but thinks it may be his uncle!—showing that his spiritual perceptions have not been opened, but still remain dormant. What more absurd than that he should make his undevelopment a standard by which to measure and judge others? And yet this is but what humanity at large is continually doing in their judgments of truth and of each other.

It is quite probable that some Spiritualists, by ill-considered expressions, have given color to the idea that Spiritualism consists of or embraces a defined system of religion, or of anti-religion, as many will have it. Individual Spiritualists of limited attainments are very apt to assume that the conclusions they have personally arrived at on religious questions, as the result of their own thinking and investigation, constitute Spiritualism, or an essential part of it, whether religious or anti-religious in character. And others still are inclined to insist that "what spirits teach is Spiritualism." These are great mistakes. Such individual opinions and spirit-teachings, taken as a whole, it is well known, present great incongruities and irreconcilable contradictions. All cannot be true, or parts of one system of truth. No comprehensive system of religion or philosophy has yet been formulated which commands the assent of all who are called Spiritualists. While every one is at liberty to try his hand at such a formula, yet years are likely to elapse before a satisfactory one shall be produced—as centuries passed before Christianity was elaborated into a congruous system, and even yet no one formula receives the concurrence of the whole Christian world, so-called, or is likely ever to do so.

It behooves all, therefore, while seeking the highest truth, to be modest and tolerant, catholic and just—to abstain from dogmatic assumptions and sweeping condemnations—each striving earnestly and reverently to develop his own powers of rational thought and spiritual perception, and to live from the spirit rather than from the external, as the only sure way to attain the absolute truth.

"The Spiritualists' religion," whenever it shall be formulated, will embrace the essential truths of all religions, discarding their crudities and irrationalities. It will be broad, tolerant and charitable. It will have no antagonism with true science, and will recognize all the facts and needs of man's spiritual nature. Its cementing element will be brotherly love, flowing from the spirit. Its "tendency" will be only upward.

THE M. D.s AND D. D.s IN TROUBLE.

When the temperance societies attacked the saloons those interested in that calling united in an effort to defend their business, by which they made their living or their wealth. That was naturally to be expected. They did not attempt to prove that their business was for the good of the community or was beneficial to the people at large, but they used all the legal support they could get (and still do), because the suppression of the saloons took away their livelihood and incomes, and forced them into other business. Now the M. D.s are rapidly losing their practice, as a class which they call "quacks" and "impostors" has arisen, whose members are far more successful with patients than they, and the people are rapidly finding this out, aided as these new workers are by an invisible intelligence in many cases, which demonstrates possession of all the knowledge the Regulars possess, and often much more. Why should not the Regulars, therefore, defend their calling with all the aid they can get from the law, and seek to obtain the passage of laws in support of their business when they can?

If we can rely on the best testimony of some of the ablest physicians, it is not at all certain that the medical profession is necessary for the support of life or even health, but if these healers are not restricted by law the occupation of the old-school doctors will soon be gone. If "quackery" succeeds best in removing disease, let us have the quacks—the name is no objection. "Old opinions, rags and tatters, get you gone, get you gone." We, the people, need no laws to protect M. D.s, the saloons, or any other branch of business which is being superseded by the advancement of the race. Frauds and adulterations should be punished, and legitimate progress supported, and the old school of medical practice is going—for "advance" is the order.

Next come the D.D.s. Their old fables have lost the power they once had over the people; all that pertains to their pulpits, preaching and practice is fast failing in influence. The occupation of the clergy is in danger of being superseded, and as their pay is large and their lives are largely luxurious, of course they may be expected to attack the enemy that is ruining their business and depriving them of their salary; hence the rabid attacks on Spiritualism by T. DeWitt Talmage and others, and their efforts to enlist the courts of law and the popular newspapers, as in the Diss Debar and other cases; but "Othello's occupation" will soon be "gone," in spite of all the pulpit, the press, and a few subservient courts and pious juries can do to save it. The saloons, the old school of medicine and sectarian theology must all go, and Spiritualism is the power that is removing them; it cannot be stopped by conservative numbers, for it involves "the survival of the fittest."

THE MODERN PRESS.

BY GEORGE CANNING HILL.

[The following address by Mr. George Canning Hill, delivered ten years ago before a meeting of the Psi Upsilon Fraternity at the Parker House in Boston, is a philosophical analysis and a compact estimate of the character, power and promise of the public press, such as is not to be met with among the many cursory and superficial eulogiums which so prominent a subject constantly invites. The searching sentences of Mr. Hill are of eloquent impressiveness, and challenge the repeated reading of those whose instant attention they will engage:]

So far as the Press is recognized as a power, it is a reflex as much as a positive one. If no journal could be produced without the help of other ones, neither could they exist at all without our current social state to demand them. This is no less the inspiration of their being than the excuse for it. The Press is the universal reporter—advertiser—commentator. It collects the scattered rays of fleeting intelligence and binds them in a single sheaf. It serves as the focus of passing views and opinions. It knows no corner and no night. Steam is its cicerone, and electricity is its courier. It expresses and spreads the common thought more than it corrects or directs it. Its enterprise has so far gained on its reflectiveness, because, like the world it serves, it is more eager for news than for methods or results. It has not yet put on the prophet's mantle, but is satisfied for the time to be the runner and the gatherer. In an age that is almost morbidly active for discoveries, that studies alike the star-beam and the working of the murderer's conscience, it, too, is flushed with the wine of the new spirit, and inquires up and down the world for its untold secrets. The first result may be sensationalism, but the thick rind often hides a sweet and succulent fruit.

The Press differs from all other recognized social forces in being the only silent one; omniscient and omnipresent in the human sense, it utters its most impressive words without the sound of a voice. For such a reason is it that it secures at once and everywhere the confidence of a personal companionship. Thus does it button hole the absorbed hack-driver sitting in the open door of his carriage, and abstract the lawyer among the noisy arguments of the court-room. Being silent, it is impersonal also. Its devotees need ask for no honors higher than the single one of its implicit service. They must be content to know, without being known. The potent but subtle magnetism of personal association with such a force is reward and honor enough. The true journalist keeps behind the throne. The deus ex machinâ never shows itself. The inexplicable We is forbidden to be revealed. Within this simple mystery is wrapped up very much of the power. In expression, the Press is versatile to the extent of all-sidedness. It presents a facet to every ray of intelligence, to intercept it. It does not as yet make opinions as fast as it collects and presents them, and by this parallel rendering of their sentiments and views communities are brought closer together and human society tends continually to unity. To show what others say and think is still its leading office—what it thinks itself is but the secondary commentary. From those who operate it it extorts a solitary service, while of itself it produces intensely social results. With steam and the electric fluid for its willing servitors, it lays continents under contribution, throws bridges across oceans and seas, and invites men of widely sundered states and countries to a more intimate neighborhood and friendship. So vigorously does it churn together the elements and outcome of the general experience that stagnation henceforth becomes impossible. If it does not generate thought, it at least quickens thinking—and that is, perhaps, all the life there is to speak of.

Obedient as the Press may seem to be, it is, nevertheless, sleeplessly jealous of its standing and influence, lest they be either underrated or misapplied. It is an unerring measurer and gauger of public men, and best knows the diminutiveness of most estimated great ones. An integer in the fabric of society, it has a scorn of being thought to represent merely individual interests. The personal organ is dead the day it is born. If to-day, therefore, it is the advocate, to-morrow it is the judge. If it is the eulogist now, it was the censor yesterday. Though it have three hundred and sixty-five opinions in the year, it is none the less consistent always. Not as yet has it won its rank among the learned professions, and it is doubtful if it ever will, for it must needs be practical instead of technical, and liberal rather than learned. In this country it is not recognized as the stepping-stone to public preferments, and it perhaps gains by the dissociation. In England it is the accepted touchstone of intellectual capacity, recruiting parliament, the bar, and the schools of authorship. In France it is the acknowledged finishing-school of publicists and statesmen, and the entrée into the best society. With us, politicians would fain make a sort of whetstone of it to sharpen and polish their blades; advertisers find in it the greater part of their intangible capital; lawyers and doctors resort to it as birds do to the hedges for shelter; the grand army of grievance-bearers marches up and flings down its knapsacks full of complaints at its feet; the accused fly to it with their ready explanations; the defamed with their denials and defenses; the philosophers with their remedies, the poets with their fol-de-rol, and the female sex with their endless causes.

The world at large seeks the cover of its sheltering fold. Everybody is eager to proclaim his existence, and something more, through its effectual agency, they alone excepted who are in the real secret, and sit silent at the source of its power. It is Argus, Briareus, Hercules, and Hermes rolled into one. Day and night it keeps its messengers running, flying, swimming, delving, looking and listening, and with their faithful assistance it manages to turn the world inside out. For it a Schliemann uncovers Homeric Troy to verify the immortal story; a Stanley cuts the dark core out of the forbidden fruit of Africa; governments despatch astronomers to the far-off capes to report the transit of Venus, and correct the distance of the sun; a Sitting Bull harangues his harlequin braves, and swings round the circle of Indian villages; the tireless interviewer pulls the bell at all front doors; and the local gossip glues his capacious ear to every private keyhole. All this purely for the production and dissemination of intelligence, the valuable and valueless.

It supplants the orator, compresses verbose debate into pregnant statement, makes only straightforward business of legislation, and turns eloquence into the raw staple of facts and figures. It edits the telegraph, the mails, the caucus and convention, the legislature—science, art and invention—commerce, law and agriculture. It is the free publisher for them all—makes their announcements—adjusts their differences—and assures their influence. It boils down books; extracts the soul from treatises; culls bouquets from the garden of the poets; gives flexibility and present use to learning; sets professors in Greek to writing on international law; and, in general, sifts, assorts, and distributes literature. Its insatiate appetite for news—presenting horrors and humors in parallel columns—will, however, create a surfeit sometime in the future, and after that is over will yield to the finer suggestions of its palate for thought and reflection. Just at the present time it is not greatly given to the nicer moral shadings, but flings the pigment on the canvas with a rapid brush, and exhibits all things together in the same uniformly fierce glare of light. But this fault of loudness will gradually be disciplined down to a low-keyed suggestiveness, with a steadier aim and more practiced engineering; and it will yet become the true living outline of the national literature.

Never while a sleepless, voiceless, bodiless and nameless power like this enjoys existence and a place in society need there be felt the least apprehension for the return of the Middle Ages to the human mind, or of its drifting insensibly back into a "cycle of Cathay." It blows the winged seeds of intelligence beyond the reach of all forms of mental tyranny. It is itself the grand inquisition of thought. It is at once Agora and Academe. Dead stagnation will never befall while it continues to stir into ferment the social mass. Public opinion, through its ubiquitous agency, will always be kept alive and sweet. The breakfast takes its relish from its welcome presence, and the tea is agreeably flavored with its chat. In one respect it certainly differs from all other products of human aptitude and industry—it can never become a monopoly; not, at least, until water runs up hill and tariffs are adjusted to protect all classes equally. As its erect front is stamped, in this our day, with the indelible mark of enterprise and unrest, so, in some other day, when the external in life changes places in a measure with the internal, will that front wear the still deeper lines of thought and meditation. In that day it will become a great deal more than the marvelous servant of awakened intellectual curiosity; something more than a busy purveyor of news and a tireless runner on errands; and, teaching while in the act of serving, it will instruct the popular mind in the deep soundings of judgment, the reality that reposes in a thoughtful tranquility of life, and the measureless riches to be got from the inexhaustible mine of habitual contemplation.

Tribute to the Late John M. Spear,

In a letter dated December 27th, 1887, from the veteran abolitionist, Parker Pillsbury, he speaks of the recently deceased John Murray Spear as follows: "He certainly was one of the most humane, tender-hearted and conscientious persons I ever knew. I think he could well say, as did Gov. Andrew, that he never hated anybody because he was poor, ignorant or black. And a degree further, I think, Mr. Spear would go, and never hate any one because hated by everybody else. He was always early in every enterprise of reform and progress, however unpopular; and the more it was opposed and proscribed and persecuted by the heads of churches, sects or parties, the more certain we could always be of his earnest and hearty support."

Dr. J. L. Newman of Boston, Mass., in a letter of date December 21st, 1887, writes of Mr. Spear: "My poor words cannot help to fill the vacancy made by the transition of one whom to know was to revere. While he has taken up life under more satisfactory conditions, we must walk the weary way, missing his wise counsels, his genial companionship, and his sublime example."

What an indefatigable worker! In one year he delivered eighty-one lectures on prisons and the causes of crime; visited prisons and distributed among them 7500 books; traveled 8000 miles on missions of mercy; and became bail for poor prisoners to the extent of $10,490.—The Peacemaker (Philadelphia) for June.

ATLANTIS.

Proud isle of the long distant ages,
Weird land of philosopher's dreams,
Thy name, in all history's pages,
With mystical radiance gleams;
Enchantment her glamour of glory
Has cast like a mantle o'er thee,
As Time has repeated thy story,
Lost gem of the sea, Atlantis,
Atlantis! lost gem of the sea.

Bright sunshine no more gilds thy mountains;
Thy slopes are enshrouded in night;
Undiscerned are thy clear, gushing fountains,
Once crowned with seven-hued light;
All hushed are thy bird-notes, once gladly
Resounding o'er valley and lea;
Slow tides through thy forests sweep sadly,
Lost gem of the sea, Atlantis,
Atlantis! lost gem of the sea.

Sunk in ruins, thy palaces nestle
Where finny tribes fearlessly roam;
Far above thy rich fields the stanch vessel
Sails swift through the high-tossing foam.
Thy monuments, fallen and shattered,
Can give to tradition no key;
The threads of thy banners are scattered,
Lost gem of the sea, Atlantis,
Atlantis! lost gem of the sea.

Thy sons lie at rest 'neath the waters,
Their tombs 'mid the coral groves placed;
And with them repose the fair daughters
Whose presence thy mansion halls graced.
All at peace are thy foes and defenders;
Side by side sleep the slave and the free;
What now are thy kingdoms or splendors,
Lost gem of the sea? Atlantis,
Atlantis! lost gem of the sea.

What scenes of earth's newness elysian
Were rimmed by the curve of thy shore,
Ere came mighty Nature's decision:
"Stand thou before heaven no more?"
What tales of heroic endeavor,
What wisdom of wond'rous degree,
Are sealed in thy bosom forever,
Lost gem of the sea? Atlantis,
Atlantis! lost gem of the sea.

Great mother of nations unnumbered,
Once teeming with manifold life;
For centuries past thou hast slumbered,
Unmoved by the surges' hoarse strife.
Man's curious questioning scorning,
Close-hidden thy secret shall be,
Till thou greetest eternity's morning,
Lost gem of the sea, Atlantis,
Atlantis! lost gem of the sea.

Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting.

We are indebted to Mr. George W. Kates for the following synopses of the discourses delivlivered on the morning and afternoon of the opening day of the Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting, Sunday, July 1st.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS BY MRS. A. M. GLADING, UNDER THE INSPIRATION OF HER SPIRIT GUIDES.

We turn to a page of the Bible, in which is written the Word of God, as we take control of this our instrument and speak the words that have arisen in our soul through our medium, being upon this glorious mountain peak, and breathing the pure air and the incense of these altars that almost reach the clouds and pierce the very heavens. This, in our capacity as control, makes us one with these scenes and with you who are gathered here.

A spirit is here that broods and breathes into your lives like the fragrance of sweet flowers, or like the sound of music among the trees; drinking in this beauty your lives are created anew, and come more near unto the soul of life. Thus it must seem evident that this Word of God is the book of Nature.

Let us turn page after page and read the wonders of Nature that are written there, and we read that everywhere is life, ay, life, taking as much of life as is traced in this book of Nature; we peruse the pages, looking it through and through from earth and sky to suns and planets, and we have never come to the word death. There is no death, whatever has taken place; but man in his blindness and ignorance has invented the word. That which you term death transforms the atom into beauty, and when it fades there seems to you to be nothing beyond. But the soul of the Infinite has whispered through manifestations that daily take place that there is yet another page to be turned to by men in scientific mood, as the sublime mysteries and living forces of Nature can speak; a page so profound that it will take ages to reveal all the wondrous words that the Infinite Creator has written or will reveal.

He struggles even now to make this known, until at last it will be possible to make this great love known to the comprehension of man.

The Bibles that have been written by man (for if written by God there would have been no need of a revision) contain many deep mysteries, many sacred records of truths, and many histories. But the so-called Scripture has been changed until it no longer resembles the original documents from which it was compiled.

Not so with the Book of Nature; as we bend to read it we find life written on every blade of grass, stamped upon every leaf and flower that breathes in fragrance gratitude to the Infinite Creator for their being. We read life written everywhere. Then let us clasp hands with Infinite knowledge, struggling to throw aside all that will impede the work of progress.

Any student of the occult laws of the Creator will find that we cannot understand God fully; but in his works we can read his will revealed in knowledge and wisdom; something so great that the finite mind has contemplated it with awe; but we must add the third quality of his life to make this word complete, that of Love—these make the divine trinity in which man lives.

In the records of this Bible is recorded the fact that man must work out his own destiny; as God has willed so man must perform, not in a personal God, not in any individuality, but in the great life that flows in upon man's reasoning faculties, just as the sweet tones of music that just now have died upon the air. From the instrument touched with skillful hands, those tones were vibrant with harmony, but if touched with unaccustomed fingers the instrument would have yielded naught but discord. Thus with the soul of man; in his eagerness he in ignorance touches life's strings, and produces discord, but by acquiring knowledge of their uses he is enabled to evoke from the instrument the harmonies of God's will.

We look upon the book of Nature, which is God's Bible, and find that every living creature, however small or insignificant, expresses some portion of God's word. Man is supposed to possess all the finer senses; to be capable of reasoning, of controlling the affairs of nations, of holding the great chalice of Nature in his keeping, and controlling the forms of life that are beneath him, yet from the lowest conditions on the earth he can learn a lesson that leads to wisdom....

Man has not the instinct of the lower animals to protect him from that which will injure, but he has another undiscoverable, almost impalpable sense or faculty which leads him to wisdom and enables him to read what is written in the book of Nature. Through the psychometry of the soul we understand how wonderful are the lessons of life, how important are the lessons that Nature teaches him.

We do not get this teaching by gazing upon the forms of Nature and magnifying their glory, but we find each life provided according to its need, supplied bountifully. To meet all these demands there must be an Infinite Soul that breathes through all.

When we hear any one say, in the midst of all these wonders of Nature: "There is no God!" we know his soul has not been linked in love to the Infinite God; we realize that he has been walking in darkness with reference to the law of life.

On the other hand, when we see people who believe literally the so-called Bible, we see how they have been led by priestcraft; how they are in the dark valley of ignorance. They are in the shadow of experience, instead of upon the mountain height; they are not breathing the inspiration of knowledge and wisdom.

Suppose each soul should be led on to contemplate this Bible, this wonderful book of nature, and while turning the pages should make itself familiar with the spirit of that which is written there, and become one with the knowledge that is given, not only to keep one's self, but to give to those who come as eager souls. Give them a seat at your table bountifully spread of the spirit; let them revel in the food with which you have already regaled your own souls; take this spiritual knowledge and spiritual evidence to them; this is the spiritual philosophy that makes you understand the Infinite Creator. We have nothing that will teach the great truth of the Infinite Spirit so well as the Bible of Nature, from which deduct the knowledge of the past, so vast that it was never dreamed of by the writers of history, but which was recorded in the book of life. We read it in fossils which have been buried for ages. Everywhere is recorded the Word of God printed upon forms of nature revealed to the thinking mind.

This meeting is as a school in which teachers and scholars will unite, blending their desire and their hope to the one great end—that is, to understand. Understand yourselves first if you can. When you try to do this, and see how impossible it is, you will see how impossible it is to comprehend God. But learn the lessons which you can; in order to give expression to Divine Wisdom, your experience will be that which will reveal it more and more, and as one by one those who are in mortal life are controlled to speak, the light around this little pavilion will radiate and illumine many hearts.

We do not attempt any set speech in this inaugural address; it has only been an interblending of our spirits with yours—a friendly conversation, a reaching out of our souls to be magnetized with yours, that you may hold communication with the immortal world; a greeting of the spirit-world to yours. But oh! so glorious is it that my voice may sound from a hundred years ago—that so many may reach you from the graves of the past to greet you in the harmonious blending of souls that love.

In closing, let me say that he who would reach the highest altitude in the spirit-world must endeavor to live a good life in this world. You cannot enter into the highest glory and happiness with any duty undone, or with something that is unperformed in your material life. You must express the highest that is given you, and if it is not done in one form it must be in another, until you are able to live the ideal that the Infinite Soul has created within you.

Then begin now; to-day is the accepted time, to-day is the moment in which the resolve should be written upon the soul and recorded there, so that you may read the word that God has written in the book of Nature. Day by day, wherever the opportunity will occur, we will teach you much which the finger of God has written.

The lesson this morning has been but a friendly discourse. May the angels unite together with you in this great work, preaching from the house-tops, from the mountain peaks and from the valleys below, the great truths of Eternal Love, Life and Wisdom.

It is certain that in every age, among all classes of people, the highest civilization has attested that man's intellectual and man's religious nature craves an expression beyond the senses. It is also evident that all people have had some form of religion; and however objectionable may have been their creeds, however much some of the external services may be revolting to modern thought and civilization, the inception of every religion is based upon the knowledge that there is an overruling, all-wise and all-conscious Intelligence, and upon the relationship of the spirit of man to that Divine Intelligence.

There are those in the world of secular thought who call themselves materialists, who claim that man's belief in immortality is merely a matter of education; but what is education if there is nothing to prompt the idea? If the intellect of man could not conceive of immortality, how would people have become educated without the evidence of some kind? The materialists say: But the thought of a God has its origin in the fear of man. We deny this. The thought of an over-ruling Intelligence or Power may have its origin in the sublimity and awe of man's nature, but not in his fear. Fear is as foreign to religion as truth and love are to falsehood and hatred. It is wholly impossible to ascribe the reverence of past ages, the monuments of religious thought, the deep religious fervor, the evidence of spiritual truth in the man of mind to the paltry passion of fear. Sectarianism and the narrow limits of creed may bind man by fear; but as Jesus set his disciples free, as it was claimed by John that the truth had set them free, so in every age the noblest men, the most exalted spirits, those who have had consciousness of the deepest and of a religious kind, were the freest from fear.

There is an innate perception in man which claims an Infinite God as the Ruler of the universe, a Divine Intelligence that governs and pervades all, and claims an inheritance for man that is beyond the senses. Upon what does it rest? If man is governed merely by material laws he would never have thought of such a thing. No one knows, but it must be positively certain that the bird singing in yonder tree has no dream of summer gardens in paradise where it will sing its song forever. It is certain that the animals around you do not dream of an intelligence separate from that which is the instinct of their being, as stamped upon them at the time of their birth. No other form of life in the visible universe, excepting man, has any conception of truth apart from the senses, of any moral or scientific proposition. It is clearly shown that man alone worships an invisible, yet to him an all-potent and palpable power. If, then, the thought of immortality originated in the mind of man, whence came it?

We contend that the universe contains no falsehoods; that the visible realm of earth, air and sky fulfill their promises; that whatever is promised in the root is fulfilled in the tree; whatever is promised in the nest is fulfilled in the flight and song of the bird; nature does not waste her resources; that no promise is made that is not to be fulfilled. If there were no light in the universe would man have eyes, and go mockingly about, prowling in the darkness vainly endeavoring to find something to see? Down in the shadow and chaos, in the night of that primal gloom which preceded the order of material creation and evolution, the rays of light first implanted the promise of vision. The very eyes through which you gaze have been millions of years in the process of formation, to the end that the ancient splendor of the sun could be seen by the eyes of man. Nature patiently through the ages has waited thus long for man to gaze upon her loveliness, and be her interpreter. Whatever the visible universe, in great majesty of primal law and primal intelligence has provided for, must be fulfilled.

Intelligence through man, from some unseen source, steps into this great laboratory of nature, and interprets the meaning of sound, and sights, and color; the spirit of man, capable of this interpretation, must be greater than that which is interpreted. It is useless for the materialist to say that the human mind is developed from matter, when the human mind is the only power in the universe that can analyze matter, classify it, and call it by name and interpret its meaning. It is useless for the materialist to declare that the thought of immortality is derived from the dust; the dust nowhere proclaims anything in and of itself; it is man's intelligence that imbues the nature around him with the life that is his own, until by some great master-stroke from within the soul he recognizes through nature the Infinite Intelligence that has fashioned all this. Where in all the dust that is beneath man's feet, in all the clouds overhead, could man find the thought of immortality if it were not true?

It is only in the human mind that the proposition can rise as to whether it is best to sacrifice one's life for another, or greedily insist upon one's own life at the expense of another. There is nothing of that kind in the animal kingdom; in man there is sufficient of that selfishness which is born of the dust, and there is nothing to express these moral propositions except in the lives of the saints and angels amid the great heartless struggle that goes on in the world.

But, for the most part, human beings are struggling with those propositions that do not belong merely to the realm of physical human existence. Man would never think of them; his life would be as legitimately saved at the expense of another as the life of the beast. He would no more think it wrong to take the life of a human being than the bird of prey that, from its far height, swoops down upon that which will sustain its life. But, because man has a moral nature, because his spirit is superior to his body, because from that source which never fails and never fades, he knows of this glimmering of right, and because that spirit prompts to greater triumphs in self-abnegation than in the unchecked yielding to self, man has fought the moral battles of the centuries.

To-day, upon the pages of history, who are the greatest heroes? Are they the Wellingtons, the Napoleons, the Cæsars that you most praise—those who have slaughtered the most of their kind? We trust not. The mind of to-day turns luminously toward the light of such as have set the seal of thought upon the ages. You worship at the shrine of Plato; you turn toward Socrates and the philosophers; you turn toward those wonderful German metaphysicians who have given to you the solution of mental problems of the world; you turn to poets like Goethe, Schiller, and the rest, who weave the immortal thoughts of the skies into their songs of earthly paradise; you turn unto all who have given a lofty example or noble theme for mankind, and you declare these to be greater than all heroes of battle. Nay, if one mans a life-boat and goes out to save those who are drowning from a sinking ship, you cry "bravo!" and he is a greater hero than he who mans a ship of war and slaughters his kind. The earth is gradually rising to a contemplation of its moral propositions, and the spirit of man is what has done this.

Therefore, as said before, the reason man claims immortality is because immortality is true.... There have been those who have had open communion with the world that is invisible to your senses, but is palpable to your spirits; and there is enough testimony in the world apart from and included in what man usually calls secular history, to show that the ages have been filled with the evidences of man's immortal nature.... Then let us declare to you that there are more people upon the earth to-day than at any other period of human history who have open communion with the spirit-world, more who openly avow it, more people who believe in immortality, more people who demonstrate a knowledge of immortality by palpable evidence from those who have passed on before.

What the angel of Socrates was to him; what the prompting voice was to Plato, who in angelic guise won him on to the divine contemplation of his Cosmos; what the ministering spirits were to those in the Catholic and Protestant churches who believed in the ministry of angels; what the voice was that prompted Martin Luther to forsake the sacrament of the Roman Catholic Church, with all its ceremony and mockery; what the voice was that led George Fox and the Quakers to a higher conception of God in the worship of the spirit instead of the letter, in the form of ministering spirits, in the form of guardian angels, in the form of those who preside and abide near the household, near the hearts of those they love, has been found in greater abundance in the world to-day....

Nor are these voices to be eliminated; nor are they to be put out of the world by any superficial or external cry; nor are they to be turned aside by any falsehood. Man's outward consciousness and perception of this spiritual nature must be fed; this spiritual consciousness must have its outlet in the communion with spirits. This communion is legitimate.... Doubt it not; the windows of man's spiritual nature are being opened wide, and messengers are passing and repassing daily.... No man who believes, who knows of the constant communion of spirit-friends, to whom it is a constant knowledge, can ever fail to try to be and do the best that is in him; for, with the light of angel-eyes above them, with the knowledge that the sainted mother can perceive every thought, that the darling child can know of every sinful wish or desire or action, who would willingly commit an offense against themselves or others? We say the redemption of the world does not lie in creed or dogma, in ritual of form or ceremony; we say the redemption of the world does not lie in the dull propositions of science nor the cold rules of mathematics, but in the human spirit, in its countless wellsprings of affection. What terror has failed to do in past time, through creed and dogma, God willing, angels and ministering spirits will do unto the world of mankind in the awakening of this immortal nature and its triumph here on earth.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE: Discourses upon Holy Scripture. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Vol. VIII. 1 Kings xv., 1 Chronicles iv. 8vo, cloth, pp. 360. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

We have alluded to the general plan of this work on the appearance of each of the previous volumes, and have only to remark at this time that many persons would find more satisfaction in it had Dr. Parker discoursed upon chapters and passages in Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus and Deuteronomy, which he has passed by in silence, rather than, as he has done, given his attention solely to those every commentator and preacher from time immemorial has dilated upon, to the entire neglect of the portions we refer to. If every verse of the "Holy Scripture is God's Word," as claimed by our evangelical brethren, why should not every verse receive the attentive consideration and elucidation of the servants he has called to preach it?

Those who find pleasure in stories of the sensational class will read this volume with avidity, and at its close lay it aside with a feeling of satisfaction. A crime is committed, the perpetrator of which all means fail to discover, until, indulging in haschisch, he becomes his own exposer.

SOCIETY RAPIDS. A Story of High Life in Washington, Saratoga and Bar Harbor. By "One in the Swim." 12mo, cloth, pp. 250. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Brothers.

A strictly Southern love story, the scene being in New Orleans and on two plantations. The heroine is the belle of the city; the hero a planter's son. The Mardi Gras festival and an exciting horse race are among its leading features. The same publishers have issued a twenty-five cent edition of "Nana," by Emile Zola.

Mrs. Lake in Philadelphia.

Observing a report in your columns of the work of the gifted medium, Mrs. H. S. Lake, in our city during April, and desiring to bear our testimony to the value of the efforts of her guides, we send this communication in justice to the instrument and her inspirers, not only for their work for the First Society, which was of great spiritual and financial service to them, but for the reörganization of the Ladies' Aid, which was accomplished by her during her ministration in September last, and which has proved a most efficient aid to the parent society.

The membership has increased from a beginning with sixteen members to seventy during the few months of its present existence; and during the late long, cold winter, it helped many deserving poor to needed food and clothing, made a handsome donation to the First Society, and retains a snug sum in bank as the nucleus of a building fund to erect a place in which to hold spiritual meetings in the city of brotherly love.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, who came in October, aided in the framing of the constitution of the little society, which aspires to the securing of a permanent edifice for First Society meetings and entertainments. That this is a most necessary and worthy object no Spiritualist will deny who desires to see his sacred cause take the rank and dignity it deserves in the home of the independence bell. JULIA R. WATERVLIET CENTRE.—Samuel McCleary says: "Names of persons celebrated while on earth are given through illiterate mediums, and investigators are perplexed. The idea that a Webster would come to a novice in this world's lore I could not for a time admit. But an inner voice whispered to my spirit, 'Hold!' and said that while Webster was an intellectual giant among men in matters of jurisprudence, he probably would not be such in the more subtle and inner experiences of the spirit and spiritual knowledge. But when the name of Benjamin Franklin came to me unasked, written by the hand of an unlettered country girl, quite a stranger to me at the time, I was perfectly astonished, and came near concluding that spirit phenomena were an inexplicable hocus pocus. But again that inner voice spake, more emphatically than before, and said, 'Hold, and go back to your early years.' Then light dawned. I remembered a book auction in Waterford, where I first laid eyes on the life of Benjamin, when I first caught an inspiration from 'Poor Richard' that has followed me from that day to this (over fifty years), and I also remembered the enthusiasm at the time which prompted me to buy two copies, for fear the salesman might, in his multiplicity of books, overlook them. Persons present noticed this freak of mine, and I was known ever after throughout that village as Dr. Franklin, and am to-day to the few remaining ones. Do you ask me now if I believe Dr. Franklin was there? and I answer in all sincerity, I know it, or I know not anything. Having been so long strongly attracted to his writings I had become closely affiliated with his spirit, and he with mine; hence it was nothing strange that he should be drawn to me at times, and no more appropriate time was there than this when he could make his presence known.

Some time after this experience I commenced the investigation of Spiritualism, under the direct influence of old Ben Wade, then United States Senator from Ohio, who had investigated, and found it to be true; and after him an elder brother also, Dr. James Wade, of our place, under his own roof, through the mediumship of his own half-grown granddaughter. About this time I made the acquaintance of a family about three miles distant from us, that held circles. In this family was a writing medium, a young unlettered girl. All the family were strangers to me, but after a little acquaintance this girl's hand would write long messages for me, often in my absence, and await my coming, each being signed 'Benjamin.' At last I went to New York, to see what I could learn there. A Mr. Conklin was holding free circles there. I called upon him, and such a company as I saw there I never met before—mothers appareled with crape weeping for joy. At last my turn came. The method practiced was to write upon each of four pieces of paper the name of a deceased friend in such a way that no one could possibly see the names, fold them, lay them on the table, and mix them so that it was impossible for even the sitter to tell one from the other; each sitter would thus fill out three sets with the same names. In each case Mr. Conklin would point and ask, Is this spirit present? or this? or this? and so on. When one of mine was designated by raps, I, without opening it, would put it in my pocket, and throw the other three away. On my slips I wrote the names of a couple of sisters and a brother, and on the fourth Benjamin. Upon designating one of my slips, Mr. Conklin was immediately controlled, and dashed off a message for me, signing it, and I said to myself, I think Benjamin is around. The message said the writer would visit me at night. Concerning his proposed visit I was perfectly blind as to its object. I had been for years, and was at the time, an inveterate consumer of tobacco, both smoking and chewing. He, as well as my wife in spirit-life, counseled me to quit it, that they could come nearer to me, and do for me what it was impossible for them to do while I continued the use of it. Of course I quit it, and have done without it in every shape not less than ten years. My nervous system gradually underwent a most favorable change, and I began to have spiritual visions. I have had many of them, all of which have been very instructive, and it was to these, probably, 'Benjamin' referred, as they were given me frequently at night after his promise."

NEW YORK CITY.—Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn writes: "I have attended several of the séances of Mrs. Jennie Holmes, referred to by Mr. Hempstead in the BANNER of June 30th, at her residence, Cypress Hills, in each instance with satisfactory results. I heard spirits converse with each other in the cabinet while spirit-forms were outside in conversation (audible) with friends, and heard two spirits within the cabinet sing together. A gentleman conversing with a spirit suggested it might be the medium transfigured. The spirit said she would prove he was wrong by bringing out the medium, and did so. At times two spirits were out together, while Rosa, a cabinet spirit inside, would talk to us. Different languages have been spoken by the materialized forms to friends, and forms have dematerialized in view of the sitters."

ONSET BAY.—"Observer" writes: "At the People's meeting, Sunday, July 8th, remarks were made by Dr. Stansbury, of California, Mr. Bartlett, of Chicago, Dr. B. M. Lawrence, and Mrs. Whitney of California, the latter closing with some fine tests of spirit-presence, which proved very interesting; she being an entire stranger in this section of the country, made them all the more convincing to skeptics. Col. Wm. D. Crockett, President of the Association, introduced her to E. Gerry Brown, and his little child came and gave her name. Mr. Brown considers it remarkable, and the best test he has received for a long time. Mrs. Whitney is well-to-do in the material, and is negotiating for the Temple to give tests in, and anticipates staying during the camp season. She is the only one in her family who is a Spiritualist—being of a family of ministers, having two brothers who are Episcopal ministers; other relatives of hers are also ministers.

Gen. Francis Lippitt, of Washington, D. C., is now on the grounds. He is a yearly visitor at Onset, and a stanch Spiritualist."

BOSTON.—J. D. Moore refers to the lively interest Orthodox clergymen are manifesting in Spiritualism, and quoting the remarks made thereon by Rev. A. J. Gordon of this city and Rev. J. P. Newman of Brooklyn, N. Y.—which we omit for the reason that they have already appeared in these columns—says "it is really consoling to see in the differing views of these gentlemen that all clergymen are not on one side." Our correspondent further says: "Concerning the vindictive utterances of two other clergymen on the same subject, allow me to say a word. I refer to Dr. Talmage and Rev. Emory J. Haynes. The former, whose recent fulminations against Spiritualism have been widely noticed by the press, said: 'There is not an asylum between Bangor and San Francisco which has not the torn and bleeding victims of this delusion.' The latter, Rev. Emory J. Haynes, pastor of Union Temple Baptist Church, Tremont Temple, in a sermon published in Temple Pulpit said: 'Oh! Spiritualism, thou hast filled the mad-houses of half—oh! of all the commonwealths of the nation, with thy victims.' What, I would ask, but pious venom could induce two clergymen, occupying prominent positions, to stand up, in presence of a congregation of intelligent people, and utter such statements? Could we attribute these stale misrepresentations to stolid ignorance it might mitigate their case in a measure, but no such plea can be offered in their behalf. Spiritualism, with the beautiful lines,

'Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again—
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,

inscribed upon its banner, is gladly willing and abundantly able, at all times, to meet all such foes of truth, whether from pulpit, press or platform, and measure swords with them intellectually, morally or spiritually."

EAST BRIDGEWATER.—Remarking upon independent slate-writing, and the various pretensions that are made to explain it as a conjuring trick, Mr. E. C. Bennett says: "About four years ago I was presented with a ticket of admission to an entertainment in Providence, at which an exposure of slate-writing was to be made. I attended out of curiosity. The 'Professor' took an ordinary slate, circulated it freely among the audience for examination, and when everybody was satisfied of its genuineness, he, holding it high above his head, carried it up to the stage, and carelessly (apparently) laid it on a stand in full view of the audience. After a recitation common to his craft, he took the slate from the stand, and holding it up before the audience, exhibited one side covered with writing. 'How wonderful!' It took the house. The applause was most emphatic. The explanation of how this was done, as given by the performer, was very simple, and in comparison with the method of Keller, a very clumsy one; yet it seemed to be sufficient for the audience, no one present seeming to know anything of the actual phenomenon, and, as a matter of course, the larger number of them said, 'That's the way it's always done.'

For myself, I can look at this subject both as a Spiritualist and as one familiar somewhat with legerdemain. In my younger days I gave the latter a good deal of time, and after a thorough apprenticeship traveled through the country as a prestidigitator; this was before I gave the subject of Spiritualism a thought. Years after I had given up the road I chanced to come in contact with the subject of Spiritualism, and I investigated its claims, fortified against fraud by my experience in conjuring. As to table-moving and tipping, I have been one of a party of four sitting around a table in midday, the room as light as the sun could make it, with no one within two or three feet of the table. Under these conditions the table did, in answer to questions, tip or move to the alphabet, and spell out intelligent answers. If there were any hooks used on this occasion, they were operated by unseen forces; the sitters were friends and neighbors—no money changed hands, and no motive existed to deceive each other, even were it possible, and it was utterly impossible."

HOLLIS.—R. C. Boutwell writes: "At one time I ridiculed the idea of spirit-communication, but accident—or, as I have since thought, design—led me into the presence of a circle, and I received convincing proof of its truth. My uncle (who adopted me at three years of age) passed to spirit-life July 13th, 1887, aged ninety years. He was a strict Orthodox. About two weeks before he passed on a medium called, and when he had gone, uncle asked me if my aunt (his late wife) came during our sitting and left a message for him. I told him yes, and gave him the message. He said: 'I don't know what to think of this; I don't know—I don't know.' I remarked: 'Well, we shall all know sometime, and if I outlive you, and you can come and talk to me through a medium, will you do so?' He answered: 'I will if I can.' He passed on in about two weeks from that time, July 13th, 1887, and the 16th of July the same medium I spoke of called, and was controlled. The spirit control said: 'Your uncle sends me to you, as he cannot now come himself, and wishes you to go to Nashua, N. H., at once and examine some legal papers, which you will know where to find, and see if the signatures are correct according to law, as the matter troubles him, and I will be with you and examine them also, and report to your uncle.' Said I, 'Who is this talking to me?' The control said: 'My home was in this town of Hollis when in the body, and I was called Mark Farley.' I asked: 'Have you seen uncle?' The answer was: 'Oh, yes; he is at present surrounded by his late companion in earth-life and his friends, who are greeting him and giving him a welcome to the new life he has entered upon. Your uncle is not developed enough to control a medium, and sends me to you and wishes you to attend to this matter at once.' I did so; and my uncle has since come to me and told me through a medium of his surroundings, of his meeting parents and friends, and that what I had told him of my belief in spirit-communion was all true, as his communication proved, only I had not told him the half of actual reality. The 'Mark Farley' uncle sent to me about the papers was a lawyer in Hollis years ago, and an old friend of my uncle when on earth. I remember him as an old man when I was a boy."

KALAMAZOO.—A correspondent writes: "On Sunday, June 17th, a meeting was held in Parsons's grove, a short distance west of the Texas Grange Hall, in Kalamazoo County, under the auspices of the Southwestern Michigan Spiritualist Society, L. S. Burdick, President. Charles A. Andrus and L. V. Moulton, both of Grand Rapids, were the speakers. Miss Lora Birchard presided at the organ and sang. The little Harris sisters (twins, ten years old) were also present and sang some of their pretty songs. The occasion was also enlivened by the Texas Cornet Band. The weather was warm, but otherwise it was a beautiful summer day. There were about five hundred people present, some from Paw Paw, Benton Harbor, South Haven, Decatur, Kalamazoo, Vicksburg, Schoolcraft and other places.

The afternoon exercises were shortened a little for the purpose of attending the funeral of Allen McLinn, an old resident in that vicinity, a pioneer Spiritualist and Liberal, who passed away on the preceding Friday, after making all arrangements for his funeral, giving particular directions in regard to details, and especially instructing the family that there should be no conformity in any respect to beliefs and ceremonies that he had rejected. His wishes were fully carried out."

CLEVELAND.—J. A. Heinsohn writes: "The philosopher, I. H. Fichte, in his criticism of the writings of Darwin and others on the origin of life, reaches the conclusion that there must be soul germs that have a preëxistence and cause the life of all living organism on our globe. This supposition of soul-germs has recently been substantiated by the spirit-control of Miss Shelhamer.

The terms soul and spirit are often vaguely or erroneously applied, and I think it is well to understand and apply these terms correctly. According to the above philosophical and mediumistical views, soul is the primary and original power and cause of all organic life on earth. Spirit is not an entity by itself, but the unfoldment of the latent potencies of the soul by means of evolving a necessary human organism for life's purpose. From the birth of a child to its departure from earth there are three different states of consciousness: first, the unconscious—during infancy; second, the conscious—during child life; third, the self-conscious—during mature life. Under favorable circumstances the spirit may obtain a high state of intelligence, morality and spirituality. The inference is, therefore, that spirit is the outgrowth and unfoldment of soul."

HELENA.—A correspondent writes: "There are many people in this country who lean toward Spiritualism, and who would come out and own the cause, were it not that they lack backbone and moral courage. A goodly portion of our rich and well-to-do citizens spend hundreds, and some thousands yearly for policy, politics, tobacco and poker, but not one cent for the good of their fellow-men. These people need a few philanthropic souls scattered among them to show them their responsibility, and overturn the orthodox plan of reward for evil by 'salvation through the blood of the lamb,' giving clearer views of human duty in its stead, by awakening the people out of their long sleep of selfishness, and displacing from their hearts the love of the 'almighty dollar,' by infusing a little of the 'milk of human kindness.' I think much good might be done in this field if a few vigorous organizers were to come here and 'start the ball rolling.'"

HAILEY.—E. E. Richards writes: "Please allow me space in your columns to say a few words in behalf of the keen, searching, psychometric power of Mrs. A. B. Severance, of White Water, Wis. To her more than any one else I am indebted for a state of almost perfect health and a partial development of my own psychic powers. Her predictions have been singularly accurate and faithful. She has been correct in my case while others have failed. With pleasure I recommend her to all desiring to investigate this interesting study."

"AS SHE IS SPOKE."—"Mister, I say, I don't suppose you don't know of nobody what don't want to hire nobody to do nothing, do n't you?" The answer was, "Yes, I do n't."

LETTER FROM PARIS.

BY HENRY LACROIX

The month of May last I found here a backward month—much of March and April about it. But then, as the Parisians are warm-blooded and elastic in character, it made no difference in the general sense. The streets, boulevards, parks, gardens, the Bois de Boulogne and the theatres were as full of active life as usual. The gay and resplendent capital is not easily influenced by what makes others unhappy or morose. Even when the German army encircled it and forced its population to live on rats, the Parisians made fun on such a fare. But now that June has set in, great heat, as in July, comes on, too suddenly, too soon. The Fates that inhabit above, in the air, find it difficult to establish a balance, both in the atmospherical and political sense, in this Old World of Europe. Boulanger having been chosen by the fates and the sensitive masses of electors as a proper instrument to innovate required reforms—viz: the dissolution of Parliament and the revision of the Constitution, which is not Republican—all the influences that have their feet turned backward, make much about it. The members of parliament or députés, pocketing easily five dollars a day—but without hard cider—are not much disposed to give up their seats for the risky event of general elections; hence the revision is quietly put off—until the proper moment! Elsewhere on the continent the Triple Alliance, "sensing that nothing good can come out of France," under truly republican management, or rather fearing the contagious example, are looking at and working for the "balance of power"—on their side! So, then, I insinuate that the fates must find it hard to please these specimens of humanity on this side of the Atlantic. But then, this world, as our new world, (as all worlds in fact,) is bound to go ahead even against triple alliances, resting on divine right.

The people here rise above everything, and, as an example, they are fast completing the Tower Eiffel, three hundred mètres high, which, in English measure, is over one thousand feet. The reduced copy of the famous Bastille, which was besieged and torn down by the infuriated Parisians 14th July, 1789, is now open to the public. It lies close to the Tower Eiffel and the Champ-de-Mars, where the Exhibition Buildings present already an advanced aspect. This miniature Bastille is set in a quarter quaint as it was one hundred years ago, with its shops of all kinds, bearing queer signs, old French, with V's for U's on them. The whole life occupation of the old time, in dress, masculine and feminine, in business, industry, amusement, is here represented in full. It is verily interesting to spend an hour or so in this great curiosity shop, so much multiplied. The Exhibition next year will no doubt be a grand affair, the finest exhibition that has ever taken place on the crust of our planet. They do get up things finely in Paris when they go about it. And notwithstanding the cold mien of certain governments, the industry of every country will be there well represented. It is a question above the political sense, in which dollars and cents play an active part. Competition cannot be held back by crowned heads or their enactments. Therefore '89 of this century is bound to make a bold and stupendous show in Paris. In the last century it began by proclaiming "The Rights of Man," and now it is going to show the effects of it. It will be an exhibition of the manhood of mankind; and surely Paris, the most beautiful city in the world, is the most suitable place for such a practical display.

Sundays and feast days are kept in France in various ways; some close their shops, others do not. Theatres are open, and railways and boats do a thriving business on those days, as the people then indulge in short trips, for the enjoyment of the young folks, in the country. Fairs are one of the popular amusements, and gingerbread Fairs, held everywhere around Paris, on these days offer quite a sight to those who have never beheld them. With what astonished eyes would not our youngsters exclaim before the pavés or pavements of gingerbread there profusely exhibited! With what delight they would behold the multitudinous toys at every step, and the antics and plays before every tent and baraque, wooden shed! French gingerbread is made without molasses, which is not to be had anywhere. I had to bring some with me from New York, to keep my boyhood fresh and tasty. Syrup is named here molasses. The best gingerbread comes from Dijon, and honey forms its sweet foundation.

The Salon has had its day and vogue lately. I found it superior to other years, so far as my knowledge and taste go. Art here is an essential thing, which interests every one, rich or poor; every variety of it is closely cultivated. Gounod in music, and Sardou in the dramatic, have many followers, who endeavor to compete with them in execution. I met a few days since a young Parisian lady, who will surely surprise the artistic world, as Malibran and Sontag did.

Representative men are fast leaving this earth-sphere for a superior one. And so this world goes—some leaving every second and others returning to fill up their places. It is wisely ordained. I had noticed before Mr. J. B. A. Godin, of Guise, and his celebrated institution there, the Familistère, wherein about fifteen hundred people live and work on the coöperative system. Well, on my return here, I learned of this good man's demise. His widow, however, a most worthy woman, carries on the great work, as President of the Association. I shall certainly pay her a visit of condolence, and give your readers some further information. Mr. Godin was a zealous adherent of Spiritualism, and so is his widow. He began life as a poor locksmith, but with a big head, like Franklin, and rose and rose until he became a widely useful celebrity. A self-made man is a great man. Mr. Godin passed away on the 17th of January last, at Guise, and his funeral—a civil one—was attended by the most prominent men of the country. Thirteen remarkable discourses were delivered over his grave.

Robert Houdin's theatre for sleight-of-hand performances is known the world over. One of its principal artistes, Mr. E. Jacob, whom I have known well for years, is an adept of the Spiritual Philosophy. I have seen him in private imitate well several of the spirit doings, but for all that, his spiritual convictions are firm. This expert artiste is also an astrologer; he has lately published a voluminous work on the subject, styled: "Les Mystères de l'Horoscope," or the Mysteries of Prognostication, which has been very favorably noticed by the press in general, with illustrations in some cases. As is often the case with French authors, Mr. Jacob has written the above named work under the nom de plume of Elie Star.

And while noticing artistic things I may as well mention that many of the theatres are en relâche, in relaxation for the season. At the Théâtre Français the fine piece of Adrienne Lecouvreur has had a long run of success, being billed for every alternate day. I was very much pleased with that masterpiece of Scribe and Legouvé. At the Vaudeville a sensational plot, full of wit, humor and extraordinary scenes, called: Les Surprises du Divorce —The Surprises of Divorce—has also been having a vast amount of public favor, and surely it deserves it.

A good project is being mooted among our Fraternity in Paris. It is that of having a Spiritual Congress next year, during the Exhibition, with a free platform. Those among our lecturers, test-mediums, etc., who intend coming over, are cordially invited to take a part in that Congress. Certain days should be devoted to English addresses, for the benefit of the large class of American and English residents, and visitors also. It is to be hoped that our people will take that project in due consideration and do their best to help it onward. Those desirous of doing so are invited to write to "Mr. P. G. Leymarie, editor of the Revue Spirite, 24 rue des Petits-Champs, Paris, France," and state particulars. The Spiritualistic press will please advertise the above in its columns, and editorially promote the good work.

SURGEON-GENERAL W. A. HAMMOND says we can each prolong our life if we learn the secret thereof. WHAT IS THIS SECRET? If you soak a sponge in oil, the sponge will have in it all the peculiarities of the oil. So every organ in the body contains all the peculiarities of the blood. If the kidneys, the only blood-purifiers, do not clean the blood of the waste of the system, then the various organs will give out, and you will have RHEUMATISM, MALARIA, HEADACHES, AGUE, CHILLS AND FEVER, IMPOTENCY, BLADDER DISEASES, LAME BACK, NEURALGIA, NERVOUSNESS, BAD EYES, STOMACH TROUBLES, BOILS, CARBUNCLES, ABSCESSES, APOPLEXY, PARALYSIS, and in women FEMALE TROUBLES. The secret of good health, then, lies in keeping the kidneys well. If you don't, you can't cure any of the above diseases. They may not suspect it, but eight persons out of every ten have some form of kidney derangement. The only scientific blood-purifier is the famous WARNER'S SAFE CURE, which not only cures kidney diseases, but the majority of ailments which really come from unsuspected kidney disease.

BIRTHDAY POEM.

Inscribed to Adeline M. Glading, June 1st.

BY H. MAUD MERRILL.

Oh! sweet, perfumed month of roses,
Thou art favored in array,
Since the fairest of all flowers
Claims thy first her natal day;

"Heliotrope, the sweetest-scented,"
Is her name in Flora's clime;
And our hearts, with love unmeasured,
Bow enraptured at her shrine.

Proud and stern a noble warrior
Stands, with Hoolah at his side;
With her sharing birthday honors,
While their hearts beat high with pride.

Choose ye, Winalow, the fairest
Of the flowers that cluster here,
Blend their radiant hues together,
For the one we hold so dear.

In their glorious, fragrant beauty,
Place them on our darling's breast;
Let them breathe a tender message
As they nestle there at rest.

Friends of earth to day, and others—
Angel guests from unseen land—
All are come with birthday greetings,
For a clasp of that dear hand.

Oh! sweet heart, so sympathetic
For the weary and forlorn;
Would that we could bring some token
Suited to thy birthday morn.

But the gift alone we bring thee
Is pure love, sincere and true,
That the years but serve to strengthen—
Which shall live all ages through.

And we wish thee many birthdays,
Each one happier than the last;
And that loving friends be with thee,
As each golden mile is passed.

Glenburn, Me.

Striking Psychological Phenomenon.

A lengthy article appeared in the Boston Sunday Globe, June 24th, concerning Herbert and Frank Cutter, which has created quite an interest in certain quarters. Having known "the boys" (now young men) for some years, I called to see the family, and talked with the parents, also attempted to talk with the boys; they may know what I said, but I could not understand what they said.

The eldest one could spell words with three letters, like dog and cat, etc., but could go no further in English, but when the boys talked together in the peculiar dialect for which they are so remarkable, they seemed to know clearly what each other said. I could not see them in any other light than that of foreign birth in looks and speech; they seemed to be intelligent, and displayed it in the same manner that foreigners do who cannot speak the English language. Their manner of making their wants known is similar to that which is made use of by the dumb—often pantomiming with their hands.

The oldest has many features that resemble his father; he seems quite well bodily, and eats what is set before him, and seems to relish it. The youngest eats but little, and is very careful what he eats, hardly consuming sufficient to sustain nature; he is quite thin in flesh; he does not resemble any one in the family, not even the brother in many ways, but talks as he does. There is less than two years difference in their ages. They came in while I was at their home, having been to Newton to take a photographic picture of some buildings.

I was very much interested in Mrs. Cutter's remarks concerning her mediumship. She said that she was born a medium, also spoke of some wonderful phases of power coming to her. She, many years ago, was influenced to personate different spirits of various nations, representing them in costume that she was influenced to make. She would represent the Japanese and other nationalities to perfection; the invisibles would tie her up in broad daylight so that she could not untie herself; they would also cramp her feet so that they looked about half of their usual size. The writer saw these manifestations in 1870.

The parents of these young men cannot comprehend, or do not recognize, that the spirit of some foreigner has taken possession of the organisms of their children, except it be in the form of a spirit-control, the same as other mediums are controlled to speak in foreign languages.

Mrs. Cutter has always had a great inclination to admire and befriend dumb animals, and was very fond of attending menageries. She is an avowed Spiritualist, a perfect sensitive, and a delicate instrument in the hands of the unseen intelligences. She is both electric and magnetic in her organism; she has good success as a magnetic physician, and has a highly respectable class of customers. She does not pretend to account for the cause of these young men talking in unknown tongues, to the almost utter exclusion of all knowledge of English.

Mr. Cutter wonders why it is that these two children should be thus circumstanced, and hopes the mystery may in time be solved.

Mrs. Cutter was employed by Mr. Seybert in Philadelphia for several weeks; at that time she had physical manifestations, and he was investigating the spiritual phenomena. She relates some wonderful physical manifestations that took place while she was in his employ that were very convincing to Mr. Seybert.

I cannot see any other way of explaining the phenomena connected with these now young men except that they are mediums, and some foreign spirits control them both to speak in the manner described, and do not "let go" their control, as they do in other instances and with other mediums. The external body may have been marked the same as birth-marks appear upon children, by fright or otherwise.

"A singular psychological phenomenon was recently observed to occur in the city of Boston: Two young men born of respectable American parents, being now of the ages of eighteen and twenty years respectively, from birth subject to an invisible power, in such a manner as to speak in foreign languages, which no one in their vicinity could understand. They were both affected alike, and conversed freely together, apparently understanding each other with facility. At the same time they could not speak so as to be understood in their own language. Children both older and younger of the same family are intelligent, but exhibit none of the peculiarities of clairvoyance, nor seem in any degree susceptible to psychological influence. In the case of the two brothers, we attribute the cause to ante-natal influences produced through impressions made upon the nervous system of the mother."

Some years ago two ladies, sisters from Cincinnati, O., came to Boston, and being mediums themselves and well-to-do in the material, assisted the boys financially in their necessarily hard struggle, by purchasing for them a home at Hyde Park, Mass. They held séances with them and prepared quite a pamphlet concerning their experiences; numerous copies of this brochure were printed at the time, the most of which were consumed (ere they could be delivered) by the great Boston fire.

These two young men I regard as good subjects for the Psychic Research Society to investigate, as their case would furnish ideas and experiences entirely outside the beaten path concerning the theory of life, usually traveled by these savants.

THE MIND CURE.—Mind cure, like the poor, was always with us; it masqueraded through the ages, in the guise of voudooism, the royal gift of healing, and witchcraft, finding its expression in charms and talismans among the gnostics, and in terrific noises to frighten away the demons of sickness among the Chinese. The mind cure of to-day is practical, experimental psychology twisted up into double bow-knots of mysticism and mistiness; it is a return from the simple truths that are now dawning upon mankind to the mysticism of the Platonists, the Rosicrucian and the alchemists. It means degeneration from the highest type of psychic experimentation to a low form of metaphysics; retrogression from the intellectual to the sensual, from order to disorder, from law to chaos. Pure psychology read the fate of the mental method of therapeutics as Daniel read the inscription to Babyln's last king. The intense egoism and ignorance of this superstition would inevitably bring about its downfall. Any system that utterly ignores the physical constitution of things must a times come into collision with fact. It has within itself the elements of dissolution; viewed through knowledge of cause and effect, it is evident that the mental method will have to "move on."—Dr. Louise Fiske-Bryson.

The Ghosts,

AND OTHER LECTURES.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear, beating against the shores and rocks of time and fate, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as Love kisses the lips of Death.

This work treats upon various subjects, viz:

The Liberty of Man, Woman and Child.

Liberty sustains the same relation to Mind that Space does to Matter.

The Declaration of Independence.

About Farming in Illinois.

Bacchic Mysteries.

A Dissertation, by THOMAS TAYLOR, Translator of "Plato," "Plotinus," "Porphyry," "Iamblichus," "Proclus," "Aristotle," etc. Third edition. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Emendations, and Glossary, by ALEXANDER WILDER, M. D.

In the Mysteries, the dramas acted at Eleusis and other sacred places, were embodied the deeper thoughts and religious sentiment of the archaic world. The men and women initiated into them were believed to be thenceforth under special care of God, for this life and the future. So holy and interior were the doctrines considered which had been learned in the Sanctuary from the two tablets of stone, that it was not lawful to utter them to another. What was seen and learned elsewhere might be admirable; but the exercises of Eleusis and Olympia had in them the something divine, and those who observed them were "the children of God," and imaging him in wisdom, intuitive discernment, and love.

The reader desirous of getting the kernel of the doctrines of Plato, Orpheus, Eumolpus, and their fellow-laborers, as well as of the Alexandrian Eclectics, will obtain invaluable aid from this treatise.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 136.

WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT. By A. B. CHILD, M. D.

This book aims to speak of life as it is. It has approbation for everything, and condemnation for nothing. It recognizes no merit, no demerit, in human souls; no special heaven for pretended self-righteousness, and no special hell for a bleeding, suffering humanity. It accepts every creed, belief, and doctrine, every action, good and "bad," as being the lawful effect of a cause that lies in unseen spirit, which cause is above the power of human volition.

The Explosion of a Magazine.

There was a great fanfare, a month previous, in respect to what was going to appear in the July issue of The American Magazine, published in New York, on "Spiritualism and Like Delusions," which was to show, according to the announcement, that "Spiritualism is at best a mild form of insanity." It was likewise announced that "other features of the paper will be an untechnical description of the scientific means conjurer-mediums have used, including, among other things, the chemicals used in picture-painting." The writer of this much-proclaimed paper, which was to take the cover clear off of all secrets and mysteries and reveal to common sight the profoundest laws of the universe, was Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, "the eminent specialist on brain diseases." The idea evidently intended to be conveyed was, that what he did n't know about Spiritualism and its "conjurer-mediums" was n't worth knowing, and consequently need not be inquired about.

Well, the July number of the American Magazine has been issued and the great paper of Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton on "Spiritualism and Like Delusions" has come out in it; and if ever the character of the war failed to come up to the loud-sounding manifesto, it is so in the present case. A more complete bankruptcy of confident pledges and promises was never known. Naturally, just as Talmage did, he makes the Diss Debar case the threshold of his structure, and invites his readers to walk in across that and sit down to their promised entertainment. Then he strikes out with the rather bold remark, that "it would almost appear that if the cultured individual were more credulous than his less favored brother, it cannot be denied that he is more obstinate in the retention of his fixed idea when he has one." He even confesses that medical men have their faith in the existence of any such thing as common sense severely taxed—which would seem to be so much the worse for them, though Dr. Hamilton doubtless would have it inferred that it is so much the worse for common sense. He charges learned college presidents and clever railroad operators with seeking the assistance of ignorant men and women, "who thumb greasy playing-cards or lapse into fictitious trances and guess more or less shrewdly as to the health or business affairs of their clients." Even Vanderbilt, the eldest of the name, was guilty of "sending a look of his hair to a quack in another city, who made a diagnosis thereon."

Candidly, however, though without regard to precision of statement, Dr. Hamilton says that "the subject of Spiritualism is but one phase of a mental state which has probably existed for all time." The vision of Job and the Witch of Endor are dragged forward in proof. But he dates Modern Spiritualism with the year 1716, "when nine persons of the family of John Wesley all had communications with disembodied [excarnated] souls by means of raps." The "spiritualistic craze," as he calls it, by way of an "untechnical description," broke out again in Germany in 1825. Forty years ago it invaded our own country, and he proceeds to narrate the history of its origin. In describing the practical verification of the statement of the spirits through the Fox girls that a murder had been committed in the house before, he first inferentially denies that what was actually found belonged to a human body, and then says it is reasonable to suppose that their being there was "quite accidental," and finally clears up all doubt by asserting that the presence of such things would ordinarily have no significance "beyond that the house was probably built upon the site of a graveyard or shambles." A truly scientific explanation from an "eminent specialist on brain diseases," not including his own.

Then he proceeds to relate how the excitement spread in central New York, each town holding its "circles," and the city of Auburn having not less than eighty mediums. He speaks of the state of fanaticism and folly, and the mob violence of those "whose daily life was governed by supposed spiritualistic direction"—though, for ourself, without claiming to be at all scientific, we recognise some slight difference between being governed and being directed. But let it be observed that any mob violence charged was not the work of the mediums. It was that of that portion of the people who were at once the pronounced enemies of spirit-communion—people not specially cultured, but rich in bigotry, and, therefore, according to Dr. H.'s own discrimination, the possessors of all the "common sense." But, "fortunately," he says, "the better sense of the community asserted itself"; after a while, "law and order prevailed"; "the pretended communications were proven to be wholly false"; and "the popular mania subsided." And he freely admits, for which we must all thank him, that "the belief in Spiritualism and the behavior of its followers is much more moderate than it was thirty-five years ago." He regards "the true mental status of the Spiritualist" as "by this time pretty well established."

Next comes an admission from this "eminent specialist on brain diseases"; he is ready to allow that "a mere belief in Spiritism (another 'untechnical description') does not affect the ability to make a last testament or contract, any more than the acceptance of the miracle of the Immaculate Conception as a truth, or others of a disputed nature." Why, no; since belief in a dogma is very far from establishing the fact of perfect sanity, whereas the actual, personal knowledge of a fact, superseding blind faith, and leaving the mental faculties in a state of healthy freedom, ought not to be compared for a moment with it or to be classed with it. Spiritualists discard all such rubbish as that of a human offspring without a dual parentage, and are therefore in no sense to be reckoned in with those who profess to believe either that the Son of God was born of a woman and without a father, or that the Creator of the universe is a being made up of three beings, each distinct yet all one. We should rather say that they are to be suspected of mental incapacity to make a last will and testament who believed either of these preposterous and inconceivable things, than are those who believe that decarnated spirits communicate with mortals because they personally know it to be so.

Nevertheless, Dr. Hamilton thinks the tolerance of the courts in this matter of "popular delusions" to be "remarkable." He cannot but mean by this that he would greatly restrict it if it were in his power. He holds a believer in the ancient doctrine of metempsychosis to be of "an insane character." Who, then, is safe, in the omniscient view of this "eminent specialist on brain diseases"?

He has the conceit to further assume that scientific progress has materially aided "dishonest Spiritualists"—and they are all lumped together by him at the outset—"in their forms of deception." Let him explain in detail. Pray listen, and wonder at the hollow audacity! A man who should swallow such stuff into his mental belief would indeed be unfit to make a last will and testament. "The clumsy rappings of the last generation," he says, "are things of the past, and instead of being produced by anatomical peculiarities of the joints, and mechanical contrivances placed within the shoes of the medium, they are now readily and simply evoked by a small electrical helix, armature and sound-board, connected with wires passed through the table-legs and terminating in a 'Key' controlled by the operator, while storage batteries and small incandescent lamps furnish a better supernatural light than the more unsatisfactory etherealized solution of phosphorus or luminous paint." He asserts what is notoriously untrue, and what THE BANNER has again and again denied, that Hermann, Kellar and Hertz nightly and unostentatiously reproduce the slate, folded paper, and other tricks "which, in the hands of Slade and those of his ilk, continue to mystify the would-be deceived."

Now who pretends to believe that every medium, male and female, old and young, far and near, in the heart of families and in solitude, is provided with the scientific apparatus which Dr. Hamilton above describes? How is it, too, that the phenomena are produced through an increasing number of persons continually who have no warning in the first place that they are mediumistic, and in the next place would not know how to use the machinery described if they had it? And how is it, again, that the raps do not happen to include all forms of the spiritual phenomena, with the most of which the above clumsy machinery, termed scientific, could have practically nothing to do?—But this is all childish nonsense, and nothing more.

This "eminent specialist" now takes a tack and steers on a different course. He offers compassion to "the perfectly honest and sincere" who are "possessed of the delusion" of Spiritualism—men like Wallace, and Varley, and Crookes, and De Morgan, and Flammarion, and Wagner, and Zöllner, and Fechner, and Scheibner, for instance—and patronizingly affirms that they should not be "ridiculed," for which they will owe him unspoken gratitude. He tries to comfort all such with the statement that they are but innocent victims of "expectant attention," in which, as he kindly explains, "the subject becomes to all intents an automaton susceptible to impressions from without, the responsibility being suspended for a time, as the higher centres of the brain lose their power of control." How glad the above-named men of science will be to learn that their case is no worse! This "automaton" business, it seems, applies especially, according to the writer, "to those religions where emotional excitement predominates." Then of course all the modern Evangelical denominations are included, inasmuch as their representative feature and strong point is Revivalism, which is the foam and froth of all human emotion.

Then follows a specimen of pure pedantry. The spiritual communications are alleged to be "the result of some disorder of the organs of special sense, or of the brain itself, but it is not necessary that actual disease should exist." All that is needed, like the machinery for producing the raps, is "an active imagination," "expectant attention," "fixation of the mind upon one subject," all of which will "easily lead the susceptible person into a declaration of the reality of his false perceptions." He quotes Galton on visionary tendencies, who asserts that in many persons they are strong enough to deceive the judgment; but neither he nor his cited authority can explain how it is that millions of persons are thus afflicted with clouded judgments. Calling the positive and definite impressions of such a multitude "the silly vagaries of vacant minds" is a good deal more inconsistent than the outstanding twelfth juror calling the other eleven too obstinate to get along with.

Speaking of the late President Lincoln in the way of illustration, he says that "Mr. Lincoln was remarkably superstitious." Quoting his biographer, Mr. Lamon: "He lived constantly in the serious conviction that he was himself the subject of a special decree, made by some unknown and mysterious power, for which he had no name." And if ever it was true of any man that he was "the subject of a special decree," it was true of Abraham Lincoln. He was certainly selected and raised up for the large good of his country and of humanity, and sealed his mission with his martyrdom. It may seem strange, exceeding strange, to such "eminent specialists" as Dr Hamilton, but it has got to be said, nevertheless, that "they do n't know everything down in (his) Judea." He can potter away among his rubbish of illusion and hallucination, and talk superstition to people who long ago came out from under its dark and deathly shadow, but the laws of the universe will continue to perate with the same unerring force, silent though it be. His dealing with hallucinations as an explanation of spiritual phenomena is blow the lowest standard of puerility. If anybody illustrates the doctrine of illusions, he certainly does himself in treating of what he considers the delusions of Spiritualism.

As an instance of hallucination, on which he lays so much stress in order to overthrow the claims of Spiritualism, he recites the particulars of a case of clear mala a potu, or what is commonly called the "horrors"; about as irrelevant as anything would could be, and infinitely more silly than anything he has brought against Spiritualism. And he solemnly proceeds to deduce from this illustration the lesson that it is perfectly easy for an impressionable man or woman to declare that he or she has actually seen a real person; as well as to impress the further lesson that "the truth-seeker will always eradicate the possible physical and mental causes, even before he proceeds to question the authenticity of the particular story." Which can only mean, that the truth-seeker will be particularly careful to examine every case of hallucination thus presented, to see if the victim of it is not troubled with "snakes in his boots."

Summing it up and hastily concluding, this professed and professional expositor of the "delusions of Spiritualism" slaps down the flat and broad personal statement that "most of the stories of the Spiritualists are based upon guesswork coincidence, or are based upon unjustifiable assumption." And what, pray, is his individual, unsupported statement based upon? He does it seem to bestow a thought upon that, evidently thinking it is of no consequence, as it clearly is not. The little stories with which he garnishes this exposition are nursery affair, with which he is willing to have us think him most familiar. This is the whole of this promised demolition of the phenomena of Spiritualism, and all will admit that it is a lame an impotent conclusion indeed, lamely enough concluded.

The National Indian Defense Association.

This humane and highly serviceable organization is not yet three years old, but in that brief time has accomplished a great deal for the Indian, in particular were it was out of his power to help himself. It was formed to protect and aid the Indians of the United States in acquiring the benefits of civilization, and securing their territorial and proprietary rights. It holds that the United States laws for the protection of persons and property should, so far as is consistent with the obligations of the government to the Indians, be extended over the Indian reservations, and should exercise for them the rights of self-government to the degree that is essential to their development, and with such modifications, in respect to the administration of justice as the case may demand.

It likewise insists that the tribal condition should be maintained so far as the interests of good government within the reservations demand, modified only so far as may be necessary to merge it eventually into some political institution in harmony with the general system of our government. Also, that such lands as are intended for the perpetual use of the Indians should be patented to the tribes, in trust, to secure permanent individual occupation and industrial use, and ultimately to inure in severalty to the Indians, the distribution to be made according to age and numbers.

The ultimate aim of the National Indian Defense Association is thus measurably identical with that of the Indian Rights Association, but one carefully studying the ground occupied respectively by the two, will discover a very marked and important difference—for while the Indian Rights Association seems determined to push matters on the instant, and to the extreme, in what will inevitably prove a pseudo-civilizing direction, the National Indian Defense Association remonstrates with the disciples of unseemly haste, and declares, we think with truth, that the civil and political rights contemplated cannot be forced upon any Indian who does not want them, without serious disregard of treaty obligations, and cannot with safety be thrust upon any who are unprepared to use them. In other words, this later Association holds that severalty and citizenship cannot become civilizing agencies when thus bestowed. A certain degree of preparation must be the condition of the granting of these rights and the imposing of these duties; otherwise they cannot be a blessing. And this Association holds that this work of preparation can best be done on the reservation, and under the agency system. Education should precede severalty and citizenship—education meaning the whole process of metal, moral, social and industrial training.

The policy embodied in the General Severalty law has not thus far been extensively adopted, it having been found impracticable in the majority of cases to apply it without such serious damage to friendly relations as would transform the Indian into a rebel. Therefore the President has moved slowly. The Indian is nevertheless kept in a most unwholesome state of suspense and uncertainty. For this reason the Association has prepared a substitute for the General Severalty law, which is now in the hands of the Committee of the House of Representatives. It makes no taking of land in severalty optional, places citizenship on self-supporting ability, and otherwise remedies several serious defects in the existing law.

But the principal part of the Association's work consists in furnishing legal assistance to Indians in adjusting the difficulties which arise under the United States laws regulating intercourse with them. These laws contemplate the existence of separate government agents for each tribe, through whom they are to have all their dealings with the government; but the executive department has gradually come to ignore these tribal authorities, and has direct contact with the individual members of the tribes.

Hence the report of an agent in regard to the wishes and interests of individual members has more weight at the Indian Office than the declaration of any actual agents or heads of the tribes. The administration of the Indian Agent has thus become practically that of a provincial governor under an imperial government. Such a state of things having no root in the law or in the decisions of the court, complicated questions abound for the solution of the Government, of Congress and of the Courts. The Indian Office now assumes even to decide the question of an individual right to tribal membership and participation in tribal property and functions. Questions that belong to the courts are often subjected to legislative or executive decision—such as those of trespass on Indian lands by settlement, by timber cutting, and by pasturing; of leasing of lands to persons other than Indians; of the hiring of white persons as laborers; of the husbandry of the natural products of their land; and of the utilization of mineral deposits. Then, too, there are questions involving the construction of treaties, agreements and laws, and calling for the statement and settlement of long and complicated accounts. It is important that some competent person, skilled in Indian law, and alive to the Indian's interests, should have charge of all such cases and see that the decisions are according to the law and the facts.

As a rule, the Indians cannot employ attorneys, for want of the means to do it. The Indian is powerless to procure advice in any dispute between himself and others, or between himself and the government. And one of the professed objects of the National Indian Defense Association is to supply this professional advice whenever desired. What it has already done in this direction shows the need of doing still more. From a printed sketch of the origin and work of this Association we gather a full statement of the practical work it has done for the Indian in the courts. It is a remarkable record, and deserves the widest public attention. In no less than seventeen cases have legal advice and aid been given by the Association to different tribes of Indians, which, from their inability to employ counsel, would not otherwise have been helped. Among the rest, the Indians of Indian Territory were assisted to defeat the bill for organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, and the Sioux Indians were helped to vindicate their right to accept or reject the bills proposing to divide and allot their reservations. The attorney now employed by the Association is a man of ability, of rare knowledge of Indian law, and for his continued support, and that of his office, a sum not less than $2,500 is required. A publication fund is likewise needed, to impart information promptly to the public.

An earnest appeal is made to our citizens to aid in so humane and worthy an object to the full extent of their ability. The President of the National Indian Defense Association is Alexander Kent. Communications seeking further information can be addressed to Dr. T. A. Bland, Corresponding Secretary and General Agent, at 1425 New York Avenue, Washington, D. C.

A Just Decision.

A Texas correspondent writes us as follows regarding a magnetic healer, Fanning's, case in San Antonio, June 7th, 1888:

"In District Court Hon. Judge Noonan, presiding, gave this date the following lesson in a humorous way to the narrow-minded doctors of this city. The appealed case of the city of San Antonio against Dr. Frank Fanning, to secure the payment of occupation tax as a physician, and which tax was assessed against him as a fine, was before the Court when Judge Noonan remarked:

'This case is submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. The question before the Court is as to whether or not the defendant, Frank Fanning, is guilty of following the occupation of a "traveling medical specialist" without first paying an occupation tax therefor. Under the facts it appears that the defendant is possessed of animal magnetism in an unusual degree; but is not a physician or doctor. If he be so endowed by nature it is a blessing, and defendant should not be prosecuted for it. We have proof that defendant is not a doctor. The doctors don't recognize him as a doctor, and the fact that he is never invited to their champagne banquets is conclusive upon the Court that he is no physician. The judgment is for defendant, and that he be discharged.'"

☞ New York and Massachusetts have recently each sentenced a female criminal to be hung by the neck until death ensues. It is murder for murder. One illegal, the other legal! How long shall such barbarism exist in professedly Christian communities? Is it not quite time to do away with the Mosaic law, "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth"? Instead, imprisonment for life should be the penalty for murder. The late Robert Rantoul, one of the ablest men of Massachusetts, wrote strongly in his day against capital punishment, and was endorsed by some of the best writers in Germany. Would that we had among us today such a man as Mr. Rantoul. The clergy as well as our statesmen are mainly silent upon this momentous subject. When a murderer is hung he enters the spirit-life full of vengeance toward those who have summarily divested him of his earthly body, and by and through the psychological laws returns to earth and causes more murders, until his evil propensities are fully satiated. Our long intercourse between the two spheres of life—the mundane and supermundane—warrants us in making such a statement. Angelic intelligences are a unit in regard to this matter, and they endeavor to reach the minds of all good people, to the end that capital punishment be done away with in cases of murder, and imprisonment for life be substituted therefor.

☞ As various parties are claiming to receive messages from the spirit of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant in the form of advice to the BANNER OF LIGHT managers, we deem it but just and timely to state that the spirit in question has authentically notified us that she has had nothing whatever to do with the communications aforesaid.

GERALD MASSEY concluded his series of eight lectures in London by one on the evening of Sunday, July 1st, in which, in reply to Max Müller, he undertook to prove that thought can exist independently of words. The lecture received frequent demonstrations of approval during its delivery.

☞ Attention is called to the letter from Paris, France, by our special correspondent, Henry Lacroix—third page. The closing paragraph embodies a matter of important and general interest, and should be thoughtfully perused by our readers everywhere.

Decease of Hiram Sibley.

Hiram Sibley passed to spirit-life from his home in Rochester, N. Y., July 12th, at 10:35, from the effect of the apoplectic stroke he suffered on Monday, 9th.

He was born at North Adams, Mass., Feb. 6th, 1807, and was the second son of Benjamin and Zilpha Sibley. He learned the shoemaker's trade, at which he worked for a number of years. At the age of sixteen he migrated to the Genesee valley, and, after a time, was employed in a machine shop, and subsequently in carding wool. By the time he was of age he had learned five trades.

In 1843 he removed to Rochester, and for a time engaged in politics; but since 1840 he had been interested in the telegraph. In that year he went to Washington, where he assisted Prof. Morse and Ezra Cornell in procuring an appropriation of $40,000 from Congress to build the historical first telegraph line from Washington to Baltimore.

The success of this enterprise is known to all the world. Mr. Sibley conceived the idea of uniting all the patents and companies which rapidly sprang up in one organization. The result was the Western Union Telegraph Company, of which he was the first President. He held this position for sixteen years, and under his management the property increased in value from $220,000 to $48,000,000.

Ten years before the Pacific railroad was built he made an individual contract with the Government to construct an overland telegraph line to California. The Western Union Company, which at first declined to join him in the enterprise, finally united with him, and the line across the Rockies was completed in four months and eleven days, although two years' time was allowed by the contract.

Mr. Sibley's next great enterprise was the construction of the Russian overland telegraph. It was intended to connect Russia and the United States by a line of wire reaching through British America across the wastes of Alaska, under Behring's Strait, and over the frozen steppes of Siberia to the Russian capital. Mr. Sibley visited Russia in the furtherance of this design in the winter of 1864–65. He was cordially received and entertained by the Czar, and honors were showered upon him at St. Petersburg. The Russian government agreed to build the line from Irkupsk to the mouth of the Amur River. But when fifteen hundred miles of this line had been completed, the needles of the trans-atlantic cable began to vibrate, and the success of this enterprise ruined the Russian overland telegraph. It was abandoned at a loss of $3,000,000.

At the close of the war Mr. Sibley, whose fortune had become enormous, made large and varied investments in the South. When the Mississippi valley was devastated by floods, he gave $10,000 worth of seeds (of which he was one of the largest growers in the world) to the sufferers, and attended personally to the distribution of his bounty.

Mr. Sibley owned the largest farm in New York State, thirty-five hundred acres in extent, located in Cayuga county. He also had a number of other large farms, among them being the Burr Oaks farm, one hundred miles south of Chicago. It is forty thousand acres in extent, and is the largest tract of land in the world cultivated and owned by one man.

Mr. Sibley was fond of saying: "There are two most valuable possessions which no search warrant can get at; which no execution can take away; and which no reverse of fortune can destroy: they are what a man puts into his head—knowledge; and into his hands—skill."

Mr. Sibley did much for the cause of education during his life. The Sibley College of Mechanic Arts of Cornell University, Ithaca, was endowed by him. The Rochester University and the Rochester Theological Seminary have also received large benefits from him.

THE BANNER readers already know that Mr. Sibley was for years interested in the investigation of the spiritual phenomena—(though, as usual in the majority of cases where a public man dies, such information is nowhere given in any of the notices we have thus far seen of his demise.) The late Epes Sargent, Esq.—a trustworthy and veracious witness—makes the following statement in proof of our assertion, on page 41 of his grand and life-closing work "The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism":

"In May, 1880, having learned from Mr. Watkins that Mr. Hiram Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y., a gentleman of wealth, had carefully investigated the phenomena, and had offered him a large sum of money to disclose 'the secret of his trick,' I wrote to Mr. Sibley for confirmation of the statement, and got a satisfactory reply, dated May 10th, 1880, in which he tells me that he and Judge Shurat had paid Watkins a hundred dollars for about ten sittings; and that they got the independent writing in a way to satisfy them that some unknown power moved the pencil. Mr. Sibley writes: 'I offered Mr. Watkins a large sum of money, which I proposed to settle on his wife and children, if he would disclose the trick (if trick it were) by which the manifestation was produced; and furthermore, I offered to give bonds, if he desired it, that I would not divulge his secret. I am ready to repeat the offer now to any person that can expose or explain the trick, if trick it be.'"

Our Trip to Onset.

We made on Saturday last a flying visit to Onset—business of importance preventing a longer stay. We found all things pointing out a prophecy of a highly successful season, which we trust may prove the case. Among other friends met with was that fine medium, Mrs. Cadwell, of New York. We learned from Mr. H. A. Budington that Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing is located at his cottage, on the South Boulevard, near the Auditorium.

We desire to express thanks to Col. W. D. Crockett, President, and other officers of the Association, also to E. Gerry Brown, of the motor train, and A. W. Wilcox, of the horse-railroad, for genial courtesies by them to us extended.

The Children's Lyceum in Cincinnati.

Much satisfaction has been expressed at the establishment of a Children's Progressive Lyceum in Cincinnati, and its marked success thus far encourages its promoters to proceed zealously in the good work upon which they have entered. A correspondent informs us that at a recent session the exercises commenced with the singing of "Happy Greeting to All"—Miss Belle Molloy presiding at the organ. Mrs. Sheehan, under influence of her spirit guide, spoke in consideration of the important inquiry, "Whither are we Going?" Mrs. Donnelly was influenced by one who passed to spirit-life in 1811. Mr. Grooms spoke to the youngest of the Lyceum, and the session closed with a march and hymn.

☞ Two of the yellow-poster fraternity have inflicted their presence upon the good people of Brainerd, Minn., and by raising their expectations to an unwarrantable height by promises to give astounding manifestations of spirit-power "in full gaslight upon the open stage," subjected to a far more astounding fall the expectations aforesaid, by a complete failure to exhibit anything they promised; so we are informed by a correspondent, Morris S. Liden, who was present. The yellow bills they lavishly distributed through the town for the purpose of getting bills of a different complexion and greater value from the people in return—and which they succeeded in doing—bear all the marks of others in their profession: "Eminent English Medium," "Religious Illustrated Lecture," etc., and the dramatis personæ, who style themselves "Miss May Howard" and "Prof. Williams," are doubtless the same as have appeared in other places under various aliases.

☞ The Victorian Association of Spiritualists at Melbourne, Australia, has recently been favored with inspirational lectures by Charles H. Bamford. In one on "The Use and Purpose of Spiritualism," the Harbinger of Light says he presented a parable of three men starting on a journey, who after traveling a distance were confronted by a great mountain. The first stopped short, affirming that there was nothing beyond; the second thought perhaps there might be, but he made no effort to solve the question; the third pushed on, and climbing to the top saw the country beyond and its inhabitants. He invited the others to follow on his track; they heeded him not. The first was the Materialist, the second the Agnostic, and the third the Spiritualist. Following this the speaker inquired with great pertinency, which of the three was most competent to tell of what was on the other side?

But no sooner was the Inquisition introduced than the Hebrews were the ones who suffered the first and the most by it, and last of all they were obliged to go to Holland to seek shelter, and politics was the cause of it."

THE DISS DEBAR AFFAIR.

As much interest centers on the case of Mrs. Diss Debar and the position of Mr. Marsh with regard to it, our readers will, we are sure, be gratified in reading the following—which we have necessarily condensed—from a lengthy account in The New York World of Sunday, July 15th:

Perhaps the most talked about man in New York during the last three months has been Mr. Luther R. Marsh, the central figure in the Diss Debar affair, which, from the first revelations in the latter part of May, up till a short time since, when the Madam and her partner were consigned to Blackwell's Island, furnished one of the most remarkable sensations to which the public has been treated in recent years. This was largely so because of Mr. Marsh's character. People could not understand how one of the shrewdest lawyers in the metropolis, a man of affairs, ripe in years and experience, intrusted with large public responsibilities, of high intelligence and wide knowledge, should be deceived by what they regarded as the tricks of Spiritualism, and should boldly defend and uphold his honest convictions in a public lecture in the face of ridicule, prejudice and intolerance. He is a brave man in these times who will avow a belief in Spiritualism, for he must be prepared for ridicule and ignominy, and to be dubbed a crank and a lunatic at the hands of a public who know nothing about it themselves. Mr. Marsh was probably convinced that he could make no headway against this popular prejudice, and so through the whole of the Diss Debar excitement, while the papers were ringing with his name and reporters dogging his footsteps, he maintained a reserved and dignified silence save upon that one occasion when he spoke at Chickering Hall and made an earnest and masterly plea for a man's right that his convictions be respected. He had been daily pressed to give his views for publication, but had steadfastly refused to speak about the case to any member of the press, although he talked it over fully and frankly with his personal friends, who have all along stuck to him and sympathized with him. Yesterday, however, Mr. Marsh consented to meet a representative of The World by appointment, and to go over with him the remarkable history of the Diss Debar case before he leaves New York, which he will do early this week, and probably to-morrow.

The World reporter was prepared to meet a tottering old man, on the verge of the grave, and with a wild look in his eye, but when Mr. Marsh opened the door of "the Temple" himself he found, instead, a straight, vigorous man with a clear eye, a firm grasp and a hearty manner, who looked like the successful lawyer that he is. "Come right in," said Mr. Marsh, and he took the visitor to the large front room on the second floor, where Madam Diss Debar performed so many of her feats, and where there were still some specimens of the "ghost" pictures to be seen. The rest of the house was empty, and some large packing cases stood down stairs, full of furniture ready for shipment to Mr. Marsh's new home on the shores of Lake Erie.

In the centre of the room was a large square desk, such as lawyers use, and which was strewn with papers and legal documents, whose presence Mr. Marsh explained by saying that he had been engaged in settling up the affairs of the New Parks Commission, and had just about finished the work. "There are," said he, "thirty-eight hundred acres in the new parks, embracing hill and valley, meadow and marsh land, and I have kept the run of everything so closely that there is hardly any difference between my figures, based on guesswork, and those of the engineers, based on measurement, and I have guessed to within five dollars of the cost of the Parks. I could n't have done it if I had not come down through seven generations of New England ancestors." His work as President of the New Parks Commission Mr. Marsh regards as the crowning work of his life, and the creation of the Parks originally was due to him, for he has long been interested in philanthropic measures, and seeing the lasting benefit which such parks would be to New York, pushed the scheme through to a successful ending. He says that the Parks have cost the city nothing, as the increased taxable valuation of the adjoining property more than compensates for the original outlay. Mr. Marsh has served the city without pay, giving his time and his valuable experience and judgment free, and, now that he has seen the work through its critical stages, is ready to retire.

Mr. Marsh spoke on the subject of Spiritualism with entire frankness and without the least hesitation, and maintained throughout the manner of a perfectly clear-minded man discussing a serious subject with which he was thoroughly familiar. He naturally does not feel very friendly toward the newspapers, and said it was not until the Diss Debar matter began to be talked of that he understood how the old Egyptians felt when they were visited by a plague of fleas and other insects, but that the papers seemed to be satisfied when the Madam and the "General" were convicted.

A PLEA FOR LIBERTY OF THOUGHT.

"It is very singular," said Mr. Marsh, "that a man may hold any opinion he pleases on politics or religion or any other controversial subject, but the moment he announces himself as a Spiritualist he is at once put down as a crank by the great body of the public, people look askance at him and the newspaper paragrapher makes fun of him. It is a popular superstition that Spiritualism is a fraud and humbug. I stand for myself and for what I believe to be truthful, and if I believe upon facts, considerations and conclusions that satisfy my judgment beyond all peradventure, I cannot be persuaded from believing except by proof that the evidence on which my belief was based is false and deceptive. I do not allow vague conjectures to affect my absolute knowledge. It is absurd for any man to put what he does not know against what another man does know. Every one is accountable to his own conscience, and should be allowed to form his own judgment as to the future life and the invisible world around us, and his honest judgment should not be controlled by the cant or mistaken opinions of friends or the malignant insinuations of enemies. There are many difficulties and perils in the way of a man who dares to avow his belief that the spirit of man survives after death and under certain circumstances manifests itself to the living. He may be thrust into Bloomingdale or some other asylum for the insane, and his will may be set aside when he is dead. Men may differ on any other topic, religious or political, and the difference is not regarded as in any degree affecting their mental equilibrium; but if one accepts a belief in Spiritualism he is immediately put down as a lunatic. No regard was paid to the character of the man expressing such belief, even when, as in his own case, he was one accustomed all his life to weighing evidence for what it was worth and knowing exactly what is proof and what is not.

"Now as regards these pictures, the 'spook' pictures, as they have been called, I will say at the outset that I still believe them to have been genuine productions from spirit hands, notwithstanding all that was shown at the trial regarding the character of Mme. Diss Debar. Here is one that the newspapers know nothing about, and which I value perhaps more highly than any of the others, because it was one of the first that came to me from the spirit-world, and because of the circumstances under which it was produced."

A VERY PECULIAR PICTURE.

Then he took from the mantelpiece and handed to The World reporter a picture about eight by six inches in size, and which was inclosed in a neat oak frame. It was on plain, unruled, common yellow writing paper, and consisted of what appeared to be a crayon picture of the head of Christ, with some writing in red ink above it. The picture was very peculiarly executed, and from an artistic standpoint was perfect. It was a full-face drawing of the Saviour's head, with a wide divergent aureole, somewhat like Guido's famous one-line picture of the same subject, the whole drawing being about as large as the palm of a man's hand. Every feature was fully shaded, and clearly visible, and the whole made a beautiful miniature which none but a master could produce, and with infinite labor.

The peculiarity of the drawing was that there was nothing of what artists call "hand work" about it, the lights and shadows all interblending with a softness and evenness to be seen only in a photograph. It was not a photograph, and not a pencil-drawing, for the lead in a pencil always makes a shining mark which reflects against the light, and which this did not show, and it could not have been done with such softness by a crayon. The words above the head of Christ were written in large characters in red ink, and began, "In his presence."

WANTED, AN EXPLANATION.

"Now this picture," said Mr. Marsh, "was produced by Mme. Diss Debar when I first became acquainted with her, some two or three years ago, and when I was more skeptical than I am now. It was done in this way: I went out and bought a pad of yellow writing paper, such as lawyers use, gummed on one side and on the end, so that each sheet must be torn off cornerwise. I brought it to Mme. Diss Debar's parlor, and, sitting down, held one end of it firmly in both hands, in this way." And then he took a pad from the table and held it in both hands so tightly that The World representative could not have pulled it away.

"The Madam," continued Mr. Marsh, "held the other end of the pad in the same way. In a few minutes we heard a faint sound of writing inside, and then the Madam said it was done, the whole time being perhaps seven minutes. I took the pad to the light, and there was nothing on its surface. She said open it, and I did so, and down near the middle of the pad, under ten or twenty pages, I found this picture on one of the pages of the pad, so it was utterly impossible that it could have been put there by human hands. I had to tear off the blank pages before I could reach the one with the picture on it. That is the way many other pictures have since been produced, and nothing has been brought forward by anybody to show how they could have been made by human hands.

"There are," continued Mr. Marsh, "only two ways in which that could have been done by a trick—only two explanations. One is that the picture had been prepared beforehand on a similar pad and substituted by legerdemain for the one I was holding. In this case you will remember that I went out and bought the first pad I came across, which might have been in any one of a thousand forms and kinds of paper, and went immediately with it to the house, so that if they had a pad of that kind there, which is hardly probable, they could not have put the picture on it in the short time before it came, there being at least a day's work in it. Then I am not such a fool that a person can take from my tightly-closed hands one pad of paper and substitute another without my knowing it. The other explanation is that I was hypnotized, or put into a mesmeric state, when a pad already prepared could be put in my hands without my knowing it. But there were half-a-dozen people in the room at the time, friends of mine, and they must have been hypnotized also, an impossibility for any one person to perform, and besides there is the question to overcome of putting the picture on the paper in a few minutes. Those," said Mr. Marsh, "are the only theories advanced to explain the phenomenon from a materialistic standpoint, and neither of them will hold water with me nor any other man of common sense."

WHAT HE THINKS OF PROFESSOR HERMANN.

"What do you think of the picture-producing that was done by Professor Hermann and others to show how Madam Diss Debar did the business?"

"I was at Prof. Hermann's lecture on the subject, and I called on him twice and we went over the whole subject together," replied Mr. Marsh. "He is a very clever gentleman, but he cannot begin to approach Mme. Diss Debar in producing the pictures, nor offer any solution other than that they are the work of spirit hands. He took a glass of water and it went up in the air and disappeared, and then he took it out of my sleeve; and he grasped a friend of mine by the beard and took from it a roll of bills, and all that sort of business, but when it came to bringing pictures on blank canvas or in a pad of paper he could not do it in a way that could not be easily understood and explained, and he could not do it as Mme. Diss Debar did. So again during the trial they called an expert, who said that then and there he was going to bring a picture as she brought pictures, and I sat in the witness-chair and held a pad tightly, as you saw me do a moment or two ago, and the expert said he could not do it if I held the paper that way. I laid the pad down on the table in disgust, and while my back was turned Mr. Townsend, the counsel for the defense, saw the expert write a word or two in it.

"And thus it is," continued Mr. Marsh. "Nobody has come along in all this time who, when it comes right down to the merit of the case, can explain on any plausible theory the production of these pictures by other than supernatural agencies. The pictures simply come, that is all there is of it, and you can't tell how they do come."

"Then here is another picture," said Mr. Marsh, as he took from the mantelpiece a small painting in oil of the head of a woman, unfinished and roughly done, but with some artistic merit. On the bottom was written in lead-pencil the date, and the names of the witnesses before whom the manifestation was performed, together with the letter "A," the picture being supposed to have come from Adelaide Neilson, and being not unlike that famous actress.

"Simply because," replied Mr. Marsh, "it could not have been done under those conditions. There must be no disturbing element when a picture is produced. Thus I lost a beautiful portrait of my mother which was coming on the canvas when somebody entered the room, and it vanished, and you must remember that my mother lived before the time of photographs and daguerreotypes. In a court-room it would have been utterly impossible to make a picture come. The oil paintings did not appear at once, but came gradually, though quickly, and the people in the room could see them growing from the first faint outlines to perfection, and then it took a day or two for them to dry. Mme. Diss Debar was sitting in that corner one morning, and said she saw a light on a blank canvas on the other side of the room, and I took it up to bring to her, and in passing before the mirror I looked in, and saw a complete picture on the canvas, which will show you how quickly they come, both sides of the canvas having been plain when I took it up, and Madam sitting some feet away. There were some thirty or forty pictures promised to me that I cannot get, now that Mme. Diss Debar is gone."

HE WOULD HAVE DEFENDED HER.

"If it had not been for the way my eyes were opened as to her character," continued Mr. Marsh, "I would have taken an active part in defending her at the trial, and you may be assured that I would have got her off. As it was, I simply maintained a neutral attitude, and in all my testimony and utterances I have confined myself to her merits as a medium and never said anything against her character. If she had not deceived me as she did, and if I had had perfect confidence in her in everything else than Spiritualism, I would have stood by her through thick and thin, and appeared actively in her defense."

Mr. Marsh spoke of the advances the cause of Spiritualism was making from the first discoveries forty years ago, of the rappings on the tables, and said that it was gaining ground rapidly and "permeating all the churches." He then said that he would continue his researches, and was even now in communication with the spirits.

A MESSAGE CAME LAST WEEK.

"Yes, indeed," replied Mr. Marsh. "I am receiving great sympathy and encouragement from the spirits. Here is a long letter I received from Henry Ward Beecher only a day or two ago through Mrs. Sawyer, who is a wonderful medium and can produce pictures in a slight degree, as can Mr. Duguid of Scotland and one or two others living."

Mr. Marsh then showed the reporter a long, typewritten communication signed "H. W. Beecher," which had come from the spirits through Mrs. Sawyer just as it was. It covered three or four closely-written pages, and said that Mr. Marsh was going to be a leader and discoverer in the spiritualistic world in connection with some great medium whom he was going to meet, and that after death he should pass to the spirit-land and associate with all the great men who had ever lived. This epistle was couched in a peculiar, spiritualistic, semi-biblical style, and was well composed. Mr. Marsh said it was the first typewritten message he had ever received from the spirits, and that they had generally communicated with him in pen or pencil writing, which was sometimes written backward and had to be turned to a looking-glass to be made out.

"My wife," said Mr. Marsh, "was a believer at a time when I paid little attention to Spiritualism. She wrote out with great rapidity long messages, inspired by the spirits, covering fifty or sixty pages at a time, and these she used to hand to me. I had little time to spare then, being in active legal practice, and put them away in a drawer. That was some twenty years ago; and I have recently taken up these spirit-communications and read them, and find therein many singular prophetic utterances that have since come true. It was pointed out in these messages that I would ultimately become a believer and do a great deal for the cause of Spiritualism. I have had all these letters of my wife's nicely type-written and bound, and here they are."

Mr. Marsh then showed The World reporter one of the original messages written by his wife over twenty years ago, which covered many closely-written pages of foolscap paper. The type-written copies were bound in six volumes, and embraced about one hundred and fifty pages, some of which he read to The World reporter; they were well written in a dignified, biblical style.

HIS PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

Mr. Marsh then spoke of his plans for the future, and although he lays down his work as a public officer, and has retired from active practice at the bar, he is not going to lead an idle life at the beautiful farm to which he will go early this week, having sold his house, No. 166 Madison Avenue, and shipped all his household goods to his new home. The farm includes some one hundred and fifty acres, and, with its improvements, has cost Mr. Marsh about seventy-five thousand dollars. He bought it twelve years ago for the only people who have even a sentimental claim upon him, three sons of his wife's sister, named Dean, and who are all married and living there.

It is two or three miles from the village of Brocton, Chautauqua County, two hours' ride from Buffalo and one mile from Lake Erie, of which it commands a magnificent view. Mr. Marsh is building a fine new house there, which he expects to move into this summer.

He said yesterday: "I will spend my time studying and reading and perfecting myself in a knowledge of Spiritualism, and hope to be able to advance the cause. There are eighty acres of the farm planted in grapes, and I will have a good time among the grapevines when the fruit is ripe. I do n't expect to come to New York again, except once next September on some official business, and am contemplating a trip to Europe in the winter. I have never been in Europe, and think I would enjoy a stay in London, where I have many old friends."

☞ Dr. Dean Clarke desires to hear at once from all societies who wish for his services for the coming season, so that he may conveniently arrange his time. Dr. Clarke ranks among our ablest exponents. As a teacher of the science of spirit intercourse few, if any, can excel him. When his powers are not impaired by ill health, he often rises to the heights of eloquence and inspirational power. When in Oregon in 1880 the Portland Telegram said of him: "When at his best Dr. Clarke speaks in a manner that would do credit to Col. Baker in his palmiest days." When in Michigan as State Missionary in 1868, he was frequently compared as a speaker to Selden J. Finney (whom he resembles in person). At the close of one of his most powerful efforts at a State Convention, Old Sojourner Truth said to him: "Chile, I'm an ole woman, an' I've been to a great many Conventions, an' heard a great many speakers, an' you have beat 'em all." As Dr. Clarke is a comparative stranger in the East by reason of eleven years' absence on the Pacific coast, thus much of commendation from those who have heard him is his due, that his valuable services may be constantly secured to our cause. Address him at this office.

☞ The matter of organizing Spiritualism into a sectarian movement is treated upon adversely by several able writers in our London contemporary, The Medium and Daybreak, notably by William Oxley in late issues, and in that of July 6th by one of the controls, whose words are recorded by A. T. T. P. A just view of the situation is held by The Medium, which says that those who from the world of causes are guiding the Spiritual Movement, and have labored to make it an impersonal work among mankind, are opposed in method, practice and results to the politico-sectarian and priestly systems. "But," it continues, "selfishness and self-conceit in their various forms, amongst those in the body and those who are out of it, clamor for the perpetuation of sectarian and priestly tyrannical systems, in the name and under the auspices of Spiritualism."

☞ Dr. W. L. Jack, of Haverhill, Mass., recently delivered lectures while Southward with great success, and to acceptable audiences, and is to again deliver a series there. While at his cottage at Lake Pleasant, he will give a limited number of private sittings—the greater part of his time being previously engaged.

☞ The Vermont State Spiritualist Association held its Quarterly Convention at Newport, Vt., the last two days of June and the first of July. A report of its proceedings from the Secretary, Luther O. Weeks, is received and will appear in these columns next week.

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held May 22d, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! Holy and Divine Spirit, we know that thou art a God of wisdom and a God of love; we acknowledge thy power; we realize that whatever thou doest is done because thou knowest it is best. We would also comprehend thy laws and regulations, learning of the mysteries of the universe, and reading the secrets of the worlds in space that march along in ceaseless order from age to age. We understand somewhat of thee, because, within the human heart, we feel thy presence and acknowledge thy wisdom. We know, oh! our Father, that thou hast set man here upon the steeps of time, that he may grow strong and enduring through the experiences he shall meet, through the traveled road he shall pass; and we believe that after the tumult and the storm of earthly discipline is over, thou wilt not only give to thy beloved rest, but give a new life and new power to gain knowledge and understanding. We worship thee in spirit and in truth, because thou art a God of truth and righteousness. We open our hearts for thy inspection, believing that thou wilt judge wisely and well, and knowing that in thy merciful tenderness thou wilt endeavor to bestow upon each life just that which it most requires. We ask the assistance and the coöperation of thy angels. We desire thy blessing and love; and we would walk hand in hand with the pure and good from divine spheres of life, that we may grow strong and beautiful in thought and spirit, like unto the angels of God. Amen.

S. B. Brittan.

I give you greeting, Mr. Chairman. To my spirit the glad sunshine of this glorious day and the sweet May breezes are singing songs of immortal life, songs of melody and sweetness which the mind of man can interpret to itself, if it desires to study and listen to Nature's anthem rising to the spheres.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, the promise of summer is revealed to you to-day in the bright spring-time, as an evidence of eternal life to the heart of mankind, and it seems to me that those who question anxiously concerning the continuity of human existence may read the lesson of endless life in the blooming earth, and from the glowing stars of heaven.

Spiritualism, to-day, seems to be also singing its sweet messages to the heart of mankind, breathing them forth in tender tones of love and peace, and to me the words are fraught with meaning, the message is bright with import, for doth it not say: "I am assailed from without, but no storms, no weapons that beat against me can avail, for I am the rock of truth, founded upon the ages of eternity"? To me this is, indeed, significant. And Spiritualism can truly say, in its soft and pleasing voice, which however rings down the ages through the soul of human life, "Out of the mouth of mine enemies I may be condemned, but in the hearts of my friends I live forever."

The grand and stately tree upon the mountain side which spreads forth its branches, friends, inviting to rest and repose beneath its shade the weary toilers o'er the rugged path, may, because of its important position, invite the storm and tempest, but it rears its stately head undisturbed by the winds that surge around it, and it lives through ages of time in spite of the tempests that sweep abroad. So Spiritualism, like a stately tree upon the mountain side of life, spreads forth its branches far and wide, inviting the weary, heartsick toilers of earth to come and rest beneath its genial shade. From its exposed position and from its prominent place it seems to invite, or at least to win the attacks of those who are its foes, but it stands undisturbed, in spite of the jest or sneer of calumny that may be hurled against it.

We may see a little pigmy of human life standing in the pathway, seeking to make his way onward. By-and-bye one comes along who is a giant in strength and stature, one who is powerful to accomplish all things. The giant strides onward, outstripping the pigmy in the race, and the little elf, made angry because he is outstripped, gathers a handful of pebbles and another of mud and filth, and in impotent rage hurls them at the form of the giant, who has passed him by. But, friends, the aim is so misdirected, and the strength of the pigmy is so puny, that his missiles fall far short and aside from the giant form; it strides onward, paying no attention to the assault it would have received. So with Spiritualism: it is the grand Giant of Truth, striding onward up the hills of time, paying no attention to the pigmies of intolerance and of theological bigotry that, filled with rage because they have been outstripped, hurl their dirty missiles against the form which shines so grand and resplendent.

Why do I speak thus to-day, Mr. Chairman? Because I have had coming to me in my spiritual home thoughts and requests from friendly hearts in the mortal life bearing the desire that I might, through some mediumistic channel, take notice of the assaults which Spiritualism has received of late from certain pulpits in our land, notably from that one in the Brooklyn Tabernacle occupied by Rev. De Witt Talmage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no particular desire to take especial notice of the tirade which that reverend gentleman has recently sent out against Spiritualism, because I know that Spiritualism can be its own interpreter; and not only that, it can bear its own refutation of that which is false and calumnious. I know that Spiritualism is the grand Giant of Truth, moving majestically along, bearing its torch of progress, and that no pigmy of theology can possibly stay its way. I know that Spiritualism bears aloft its banner of justice, and that eventually, through its aid, that banner shall wave o'er land and sea. Thus I reply to my friends: Why should we frown? why should we feel disturbed because some sensational preacher stands forth in his pulpit and denounces and calumniates Spiritualism? Why should we shrink because these tirades are sent forth in the name of religion? Do they not prove that Spiritualism is growing, that it is demanding attention, that these opponents of ours feel its importance, and are anxious to do their best in crushing it down, because they fear, if they do not do so, by-and-bye it will so grow and spread as to overwhelm and sweep them from their place? Most certainly is this the case; therefore we can afford to smile and let the tirades pass by, for a thousand such puny blows can have no effect upon the castle of strength which is ours.

Mr. Chairman, I come to my friends who have sent out their silent appeal to me to return and speak of this thing. I thank them for their confidence in my ability to meet the question. I recognize and appreciate the friendliness which prompts them thus to ask for my presence, and I trust I shall ever be ready to stand forth in the army of truth to do my part and speak my word as best I can.

Our good friend, Mr. Pierpont, has kindly invited me to consider your questions this afternoon, and I shall be pleased to do so, from my own personal standpoint and to the best of my ability. S. B. Brittan.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By L. B. S.] The subject of a recent conversation through planchette was Magnetism and Mesmerism. In reply to a question concerning the differences or the relations between the two, "Z," the communicating spirit, said, after drawing a double circle with a centre: "The inner circle represents Mesmerism, the outer, Magnetism. The dot in the centre of the circle is the Astral Body upon which these forces act. The Astral Body is not the Soul. Mesmerism is the influence of intellectual forces over mind; Magnetism the influence of united physical forces over both mind and matter." The spirit was then asked to explain more about "physical forces," and replied: "Physical forces are the strength of united spirit-kin, and the circle of psychic ozone. Those forces include magnetism and mesmerism." He was then asked what "psychic ozone" was, and said, "It is spiritually generated and focused electric light-rays." Now I wish the spirit intelligences at your circle would give their opinion of the correctness of these definitions.

ANS.—In your questioner, Mr. Chairman, I recognize a longtime and valued friend, and I am most happy to give my simple opinion upon any subject which might arise in her mind. I cannot, however, accord with all the conclusions evidently adopted by the spirit in communicating with your correspondent. I must only give my idea concerning these forces, as it has been developed from observation, and through experience with the laws and forces of human life.

Mesmerism, I conceive with the spirit mentioned, to be the power of the intellect as exercised over mind, it being that power or force generated within the human mind, and governed by the will alone, which enables one intelligence, strong and positive, to act upon, and in a measure govern some other intelligence similar to its own. Undoubtedly, the mesmeric force, or the force producing mesmerism, is of itself an imponderable element, closely akin to the electrical force of the universe, and those natures who have within stored up the largest amount of this imponderable force, find themselves possessed of positive natures to such an extent as will enable them to exert an influence, and exercise a power over other natures somewhat in sympathy with their own, but possessing a less degree of this subtle force or element of which we speak. This, then, to me, is mesmerism, and directly distinct from that other force or power in the universe, existent in man, which is called magnetism; mesmerism dealing entirely with the will or intellectual part of man, while magnetism deals principally with the spiritual and physical body.

This force called magnetism, generated both within the physical and the spiritual body of man, seems to permeate every part and portion of the being, and also to extend itself out from the inner life, forming a circle or aura around the individual. It may be imparted to those who are receptive to its influence, and may be useful in vitalizing such, in giving them new power and activity, or if unwisely directed, if not assimilative to those who are susceptible to its influence, it may produce a deteriorating effect upon their physical health, as well as upon their mental atmosphere. Thus do I find a difference between mesmerism and magnetism, or mesmeric force and magnetic force, and yet I conceive one to be as important as the other, and each undoubtedly to be produced by those subtle elements in the universe that are classed under the head of electrical force, or electrical law, concerning which men know so little, and there is yet very much to be learned.

Your correspondent speaks of the "astral body," and tells us it is not the soul. So far as I understand the claims and the peculiar teachings of occult students, I believe that the astral body is certainly not the soul, but that it is somewhat akin to what we Spiritualists are pleased to call the spiritual body. It seems to me that the astral body, of which theosophists teach, can be nothing more or less than the spiritual body surrounding the immortal element of life, acted upon by this immortal element or principle which I call the soul, and made to do its work in the great arena of existence.

It seems to me that the best way to reach the comprehension and attention of man is to simplify these questions and subjects, as far as possible, not to make them mysterious, or to clothe them in occult, metaphysical language, and if we come to understand something of the forces of nature, and the laws and possibilities of our own beings, we may discover that there are within ourselves not only the power and the force of mesmerism and magnetism, but also of many other conditions and laws, of which we know little now, but of which we may understand and learn by-and-bye. As we broaden out here on earth, in our studies and our conceptions of life, our souls and minds shall so expand that when we step forward on a higher plane of action and of view, we shall behold and have time to study those laws and forces which are now so obscure to us.

Q.—[By Freethinker.] Admitting that man has two natures—a spiritual or mental, and a material or physical—does not a too great exercise of either tend to weaken it and induce a preponderance of strength in the other?

A.—By the undue exercise of any quality of our natures we may develop an abnormal condition in that direction, for Phrenology teaches us that possessing faculties that are equal at first, by paying strict attention to the development of one at the expense of the other, ignoring the latter while pursuing our work for the cultivation of the first, we shall grow into an abnormal condition, exhibiting signs of undue unfoldment in one direction, while on the other hand we will show a lack of something which is needed to make up the perfect rhythm of our minds. Therefore, if one in the pursuit of material wealth, of physical health, pays strict attention alone to the external form, surrounds it with all that may provide for physical health, wealth and grandeur, but pays no particular attention to the mental part of his nature or to his spiritual proclivities, we may find him growing a man of stature and strength, externally speaking, one of great vigor and of influence in material life; but as we look within we find that he is narrow and contracted in his opinions, biased and intolerant, and many times we observe that the man grows selfish, and that really, while his physique may develop into splendid proportions, the spiritual part of his nature is stunted and dwarfed, because of lack of opportunity for cultivation and growth.

On the other hand, we may take an individual who pays but little attention to his material surroundings, who ignores the state of his physical health, but bends his mind to the development of his intellectual abilities; he studies early and late, takes no thought for the morrow what he shall eat or what he shall drink, because he finds food for his mind in the books and the laws that challenge his attention. What do we find also? That the physical grows weak and puny, is easily disturbed, that his external surroundings may be those of poverty, even of seeming shiftlessness, while the mind grows brilliant in its intensity, yet becomes abnormally developed. He is apt, also, to be a man of one idea, pursuing that particular study which claims his thought at the expense of others, and while he may be informed upon that special subject, he is very ignorant upon other themes which man should understand in order to be well informed.

Again, we take one whose nature is largely religious, who has the emotional part of his being strongly developed; he cares nothing for society, pays little attention to material life, ignores the state of his physical health, cares not for the study of scientific law, but he is anxious over the welfare of his soul and those of his neighbors. He spends hour after hour in exhortation and praise, day after day in expounding those religious thoughts and teachings of the ages with which he has become familiar to those who may listen to him. What is the result? This man may develop a puny and weak physique; he may show appearances and surroundings that are not well cared for—that are indicative of a poor lot in life. Mentally he is deficient in understanding, but spiritually he may be somewhat developed; he may glow and shine—not with the calm, steady light that comes from a well regulated, evenly-balanced nature, but with that fitful glow which is an indication of a diseased and perverted mind.

Therefore, friends, we say that in whatever direction one seeks to develop a part of his nature while ignoring any other portion, in that part will he be abnormally unfolded and show signs not only of an erratic disposition but also of a disordered mind. It is best to try and keep yourself well poised in every direction; to pay attention to the physical; oh! yes, that is important, for without a healthy frame one cannot be happy and at ease. It is wise for one to pay attention to the wants of himself and those dependent upon him, and to accrue a sufficiency, if he can, of the world's goods, to give to himself and his dear ones the means of living without being obliged to fret—to lie awake at night, turning plan after plan as to how and where he shall find the means of subsistence. It is wise for one to attend to the mental nature, to study the laws and conditions of life, to learn all that is possible of men, of times and of things, that he may be well informed upon the subjects of the day. It is wise for one to attend to his spiritual nature, to try to develop the graces of the soul, so that he shall be pure in thought, loving by nature, seeking to do that which is right and best for himself and his fellows, so that he shall grow in spirit, sending forth a sweet perfume from within that will bless and cheer the lives of those it may reach. One can do this, friends, and pay attention to every side of his nature, giving nourishment to each, and building up a bright character, a sweet life, that will be broad and sustaining in time to come.

Q.—If the previous proposition be wholly or partly correct, should an occasional exhibition of material proclivities in one whose medial gifts are almost constantly in exercise be a reason why one should condemn the person as a medium?

A.—We have answered the previous question from the standpoint of humanity at large, but we find that this relates especially to the standpoint of mediumistic life, and applies to those sensitives who are susceptible to influences from without and within, and who at least may be, at times, unconsciously used in such ways as they would not willingly outline for themselves. Perhaps it is one whose medial powers are fully unfolded and are exercised upon day after day and year after year by invisible intelligences for some work or purpose of their own.

We will take such a life and examine it a little, that we may see what it contains, and how it is played upon. Now, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that life of itself would have been very different had it not been acted upon by invisible intelligences. It may be that the instrument has developed such wonderful powers and activities of mediumship that it has attracted around it a band of spirits who find that by keeping their instrument largely under their own direct influence as far and as long as possible without the exhaustion of their magnetic powers, they may be able to pursue and accomplish through its agency some grand and beneficial work. But perhaps that instrument has not been sufficiently developed in every portion of his nature; it may have been that his mediumship, exercised so frequently, has helped to develop to an abnormal extent the spiritual side of his being at the expense of others, and these spirit-attendants find that their best work will be fulfilled by keeping him as largely as possible under their control. So we find that such an instrument may be acted upon for days and weeks, and even for months, giving forth grand and beautiful utterances and ministrations to human life; and then, perhaps, having exhausted all the surplus of magnetic force at their command, the spiritual attendants are obliged to let their instrument down for a few minutes; it gets out of tune, so to speak, and then it may be swayed upon by other influences in this physical life, surroundings and conditions, and even waves of thought that surge and beat upon it, and therefore it may swing to an opposite condition and reflect or give forth that which is unlovely and crude. No doubt this has been so in certain cases; no doubt it will be so until man learns the delicate laws of his being and seeks to live in harmony with them.

Is the medium, then, to be blamed because, after weeks and months of kindly ministration and useful work, he may suddenly veer around and attempt or accomplish something in mortal life that is crude, carnal or unlovely? We must examine into the individual case closely and justly, before we can decide. If it be as we have said, then he is not to be blamed, because the conditions, and even the atmosphere in which he is plunged, are stronger than his own will and spirit.

But again, we may take an instrument of the same kind, and find that he is not well organized, that the animal nature is really more in the ascendency than is the spiritual, but possessing certain medial qualities of his own which may be useful to the spirit-world, he has been drawn under the influence of a spiritual guard, who use his organism for their own purpose. In this case, as in the first, the spirit attendants make use of their subject just as long as the magnetic forces will allow, then there may be a cessation of their work and their influence for a brief time, during which the personal nature of the medium may gain the ascendency, exhibiting itself in its own peculiar manner, through its own physical appetites and material avenues. If this be so, shall we blame the medium? Well, have we any right to blame any criminal or any ill developed human being who has been brought into this world through crude and unlovely conditions, given a warped, biased brain and organism, and bidden to make its way in life? Society condemns; man has come to do so; yet he must remember that it is the business of life, of humanity and of society, to afford its people the finest conditions and the grandest organisms possible for the development of that which is pure and good.

So with the medium of whom we speak: he has not been rightfully endowed; he has been robbed of his heritage, therefore he expresses, undoubtedly, the best he can, when in his normal condition, that which he feels. While we condemn the sin, we must have charity for the sinner, and remember that as man advances, not only in intellect but in spiritual growth, he will come to study the laws of heredity and of human life, and studying will seek to regulate his conduct by the knowledge he gains, in such ways as will give posterity the grandest conditions for the development of honor and of truth.

Q.—[By J. T.] Can spirits materialize through a medium apparently having that gift quite largely, and who is conscientious at the time the materializations are produced? Can that be genuine?

A.—A medium who is perfectly honorable and conscientious in her desire to be of use to the spirit-world, who has no intention of defrauding the public, or in any way prostituting her medial gifts to unworthy ends, will attract to her side spirits who are wise and tender and true, who will desire to make use of her gifts for the elevation of mankind and the dissemination of truth, and if such a medium possesses the power of materialization, then undoubtedly her spiritual attendants will experiment with her power and with the forces of her being, seeking to utilize them in such ways as will make them of benefit to mankind. Such a medium, you say, is honest, and possesses materializing power. Very well; as like attracts like, we have no reason to suspect that those spirits who attend her are dishonest; undoubtedly they are as pure and honorable as herself, consequently they will not seek to deceive; they will try to collect her forces, and of them build up, so far as they can, representations of human forms that will personate and bear the likeness of spirits who are present and desire to manifest to their friends. This will be a genuine manifestation of materializing power, and if such occurs in the presence of any medium, then, indeed, may it be accepted as genuine and as truly useful to the world.

Q.—Are there any on earth sufficiently informed of spiritual laws and operations to designate what conditions a medium shall be subject to at a séance, or what manifestations a spirit shall give to demonstrate his presence?

A.—No; because no mortal can understand the spiritual environment of a medium at the particular time of holding the séance, and consequently what might be perfectly fair and honest as conditions at one sitting, might be unfair and useless at another; therefore, no one here in the body has the right to dictate to spirits and to their instruments what shall and what shall not be done. But fair-minded, intelligent, honorable people, who desire to study the laws of mediumship, and to come into harmony with spirits from the other world in this, may make suggestions and counsel with returning spirits and mediums as to the best course to adopt in seeking the needed evidences of spirit power. Spirits never object to honest criticism, nor do they object to receiving suggestions and even advice from their mortal coöperators; indeed, they are very glad to enter into counsel with intelligent, unselfish mortals, who are not self-opinionated, who do not presume to dictate.

I believe this whole question of mediumship is to be more thoroughly understood in the next decade of years. It seems to me that mediums and their spirit attendants, as well as those who come seeking evidences of eternal life from such sources, will be willing by-and-bye to discuss and to consider the question and the laws of mediumship, and to submit themselves to the wise desires and regulations of the pure and good of spirit-life, who understand their earthly instrumentalities, and whose only desire is to help the race in its march of progress. I believe, friends, that much of this adverse criticism, and even anger, which is abroad to-day, will soften, become friendly and bearable, and that a harmonious condition will prevail, so that we shall be able to make a code of instructions and to give a system of what you may be pleased to call tests, which will be convincing to the world, but not degrading to the mediums or to the spirits who surround them.

All that we ask of our mediums is perfect honesty, and the desire to coöperate in good works with those who are wise and truthful from the spirit-world. All that we ask of our sitters is that they will deal fairly and honorably toward our mediums and toward ourselves; that they will not be unjustly critical to such an extent as to suspect and condemn before they find any evidence of fraud. If they will come together with their mediums in an earnest, sincere, honest manner, anxious to know only the truth for the truth's sake, not to support any pet opinion of their own, but for the benefit of humanity, I will guarantee, Mr. Chairman and friends, that the spirit-world will be able to do all that is needful in demonstrating the truth of spirit return, and in giving light, cheer and instruction to the human race.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

William Hayward.

Will you please announce my name, Mr. Chairman, as William Hayward, from North Attleboro', Mass.? I have had permission to speak in your glorious meetings, for such they are. I would like to say much more than I feel I shall say, because others are anxious to speak. I would like to have dear brother Gardner know that I have tried to pen a few lines with the help of others. Brother Charles is here, and mother, and brother Mason, for so I term him. Ann, learn a lesson from the little child, if you believe the good book, which you say you do. We read: "And a little child shall lead them." And passage after passage tells you that we do come to visit you. Oh! how strange that mortals will close the doors so tightly, so closely, for fear of some wrong. Now if we bring you evil, lock your doors as close as you please; but if we bring you good, or happiness, throw your doors open wide, for you will need no lock.

Charlie, it is all coming out right eventually; and I suppose you are anxious to know when. That information is ahead of you. We do n't go backward.

I have been looking over the messages myself, and felt if others could send a message I would try to do so; and as I gained permission I was only too glad to be able to announce even my name. Please circulate this, Charlie. I know you will, and they will see that William Hayward is n't dead, any more than Charles is. I thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Alfred Miller.

Will you please, Mr. Chairman, to announce Dr. Alfred Miller, from Fitchburg, Mass.? I have failed in the attempt to even give my name to the dear ones that are left. Mr. Russell asked me to say that he is present. He was the leader of the band at Lake Pleasant, and sometime will be able to speak for himself. Emma is with me—dear child! and I will say to those in the mortal, that father is not dead, only gone a little before; Oscar is here, and will in the near future send a message to his dear earth-mother. I know, dear child, I did all I could for your head, but the angels called you up higher.

I passed out rather suddenly at last. My angel mother with outstretched hands beckoned me up higher. There was a welcome in the air, and a welcome at the gate, and a welcome to the mansion the dear God had prepared for his children. I found, on entering the spirit-home, many disappointments, but all for the better, let me say. Do n't misunderstand, and think I was disappointed in my home. It was happiness beyond what mortal minds can conceive here, and I would not, as has been said, ask to come back and stay, but would ask them to open the spirit-door, and by so doing we gain happiness and progression.

I have tried in the halls to make myself known by name, but failed; then tried to make myself seen, that they might give some description of me. Now, the door is open wide. I have come in, and I know there will be those who will be glad to hear from me in Fitchburg, in Ashburnham, and in Westminster—for I was well known in those places.

Josiah Wilson.

You may say I lived in Haverhill, N. H., Mr. Chairman. My name is Josiah Wilson. I suppose I will have to say that I have tried before, but always failed. Now, as the channel is open, I would like the message to reach Joseph, my son, in Haverhill. I want them to know we are not so far away but that we are mindful of those that are left. Never have I had an opportunity of speaking to a mortal but once in all the years since I passed over. I assure you I do appreciate that one time; but now I know your paper will be sent, for you understand it will give some one pleasure to read it, and also will be gratifying to us to know they have interest enough in us to read the paper. I would like George to know I have kept my promise as soon as possible. George is a dear friend.

Timothy Corey.

Three different times have I tried to speak, not wholly from a selfish motive, but for the others that are left. You may place my name as Timothy Corey, of Brookline, Mass. I hope the family will be able to feel that I live, and yet have an interest in the children and my dear wife Sarah. I have dear ones in Philadelphia and in Boston; and I wish to be remembered to the gentleman who treated me so kindly in business affairs. I know in due time I shall be able to come into communication with my dear wife privately, for some things in business matters we rather hold back a little in public. I have been cognizant of what has been passing. I understand full well the intentions of the purchases; but I have tried through influence to give you caution not to go too fast, and I think you have heeded it.

This is altogether new business for me; but do not misunderstand me, and think that while I dwelt in the mortal I never did any thinking in regard to what you term Spiritualism. I think the ism should be left off; spirit is all there is, anyway. It makes no difference what creeds or dogmas you have—it is all spirit, as I understand it. I know you have bodies for covering, like an old coat; when one gets worn and won't bear patching, they give you a new one.

I went out rather suddenly. I found, on entering spirit-life, many old friends that I once knew here, and many that had passed on years before. Father often said, "Children, do right." That certainly do n't mean any wrong. Do right, and you 'll be much happier in spirit-life.

I know this message will reach the dear ones. I know Mr. C. will understand the meaning, as he will read the letter. A straightforward business man. That means a great deal. I am satisfied with Mr. Perry and Mr. Brooks.

Eunice Robbins.

Will you please, Mr. Chairman, to announce one to-day who has tried to come near enough to even give a name: Eunice Robbins, of Leominster, Mass.? I was a long time in the mortal, but when I laid down the burden of life it seemed as if I was young again. I felt none of the infirmities of age as I put on the immortal. The dear daughters and others were kind to me, and every want was attended to—mother must be looked after. I know they did all that willing hands could do for one, and I know that since I have crossed the boundary they have thought I must have been near to them, which is true. I thank the good angels that they helped me to know a little something of spirit return while dwelling in the mortal.

Darling children, I am happy in my spirit-home. I would not ask to return and stay, but I would love to have you seek every opportunity to come into communication with us. It will give us as much happiness as it can mortals. Only a thin veil hangs between us—it seems as if we can almost clasp hands together. We look at you, dear children, and see you plainly. But you will say you cannot see mother. We understand it, darlings, because this thin veil is between us. You try to look at us with the mortal eye, and we look at you with the spirit eye. Oh! I thank the Father that he, in his wisdom, made the wise provision that we should never die, but have everlasting life.

These flowers are beautiful, yet they hardly compare with ours in the spirit. The perfume is sweet, and we thank you mortals that you bring the flowers into the meeting, for it attracts us strongly here to you to-day. Not only myself but little ones come, so eager and anxious to find some loved one.

A little child has gone to the lady [pointing to a lady in the audience]. She is there beside you. Do not place her with the "dead," but clasp that little hand and say: "I know they will care for my darling in heaven." The little girl walks down the aisle, and stands by the lady on the end of the seat. I see the child that you have placed away as dead. No, no; gone to bloom in heaven, and every link in the chain will be made whole again. Beautiful thought with the mortal, but a beautiful truth and knowledge with us. We love to come into communion with you to-day. Please to say I live, and the mother watches over the children. Eunice Robbins.

Nellie Wheeler.

Father says if the guide gives me permission I had better speak. My name is Nellie Wheeler. Mother, I am not the little child you laid away; I have grown to womanhood in spirit-life, and have been spiritually educated, not as mortals are, mother. In all your trials your darling daughter has stood beside you often. When father came he knew his child readily.

I cannot reckon mortal time, never having been taught that. The name of mother I never was permitted to use; but to-day I love to repeat it, for it is sweet to me, and in heaven you will have your rosebud back again. Mother, remember when trials come through others, as you know they have done, look a little higher, and ask the angel-world to come nearer, nearer still, and I know, dear mother, while we keep our watch over you here, you will be happier in your spirit to feel that your Nellie lives in heaven. We are not all here, but father is here, and grandma Wheeler. I know you are anxiously waiting for a word from father; but do not be impatient, it will be the sweeter when it does come. Nellie Wheeler, from Lowell.

Willard Gale.

I would like to announce my name as Willard Gale, from Haverhill, Mass., better known as Ayer's Village. I have only come into communication with Hannah two or three times, but I did appreciate those times. Hannah, dear wife, in spite of all opposition go on, for it is a truth, God's truth, and it is no other. In the stilly hours of the night have I come so near that I placed my hand upon you, and I know you have realized at times that I was there.

Do n't place me too far away, but bring me a little nearer when you think of me. Many times mortals place us too far off—away in the northeast corner of heaven; but let me tell you we are much nearer than you think. Hannah, learn all you can this side. Mother is with me, and grandmother. The rest are not here to-day. Hannah, when you pass the boundary you will have a good body, a perfect hip; you will not have to limp or go with a crutch. Try to come into communication whenever you can. You will say: "Willard, it is hard for me to do it with my lameness," because you have to be dependent upon others. But what are we placed here for, if it is n't to help each other?

I know you will understand the meaning when other mortals do not. I am happy, and I wish not to come to stay; but let me say that I do wish to come and speak for myself. Go to Dr. Robinson's as often as you can, for they give you some words of comfort that you do not get in the other place you go to. I am present, or I should not know the difference. Hannah, not but a little time, at the longest, before you will join the happy number, and there will be no more broken hips, no more aches or ills, no more opposition; but all will be harmony and love and perfect peace.

I thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the privilege. I have been here before, but it was n't your fault I did n't speak.

SPIRIT MESSAGES

TO BE PUBLISHED NEXT WEEK.

April 27.—Warren Hunter; Nancy B. Doolittle; Nathan Chase; Helen M. Currier; Raymond Dodge; Aaron Cilley; Miranda Gleason; Ella Poole; Charles L. Brown; Alpheus B. Hoag; John B. Morrison; Alonzo Gildden; Sarah G. Emory Dyer; George Holbrook; Daniel Sanborn; Manson Gore.

THE MESSAGES ON HAND,

"FORTY YEARS ON THE SPIRITUAL ROSTRUM," by Warren Chase, has been published by Colby & Rich, of Boston. The work is "a sequel to 'The Life-Line of the Lone One,' an autobiography of the author, as The World's Child." In their advertisement of the book, Messrs. Colby & Rich say:

"No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism, and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them. As a worker in every reformatory movement, Mr. Chase's career has been almost phenomenal in persistency, efficiency and self-sacrifice. He has been a pioneer—a pathfinder in the wilderness of moss-grown superstitions and hide-bound dogmas, making the way clear for the army of freedom-loving men and women that was to follow and destroy it. For this reason this autobiography of his should find place in the home of every friend of human progress and spiritual enlightenment, and be valued as a monument to his memory and his work."

The book is lively and full of interesting reminiscences, and friends of Mr. Chase and other Spiritualists will certainly desire to possess it.—The Truth Seeker, New York.

Verification of a Spirit-Message.

ADELIA DE VERE MATHEWS.

IN THE BANNER of June 30th was a message purporting to come from ADELIA (misspelt Adelia) DE VERE MATHEWS, deceased. We accept the same as being from our daughter, and thank you kindly for its publication. MR. AND MRS. O. H. MATHEWS.

New Philadelphia, O., July 9th, 1888.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

Being naturally of a mild, sweet disposition, and possessing a heart always ready to sympathize with others in affliction, she won the affection of all who were brought in contact with her. As a wife, she was devoted to her household, and performed its duties always in a cheerful spirit. As a mother, she was loving, kind and forbearing, and never happier than when she was ministering to her little ones. As a friend, she was loyal and true. She was a firm Spiritualist, and faithful to her belief in the hour of dissolution. She was sensible to the last, and about ten minutes before death called for her children and kissed them. Her husband and four little ones—the youngest two years of age—are left to mourn the loss of a true wife and mother.

July Magazines.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—In the opening paper of the "Review Section," Rev. Dr. Van Dyke, of Brooklyn, N. Y., endeavors to throw some light upon the declaration of Bishop Cox, that "Christianity needs no apology," and antagonizes the opinion of some that "every defense of Christianity in the pulpit is more hurtful than useful at the present time." It is interesting to note how the Doctor circumlocutes his subject, especially in view of the fact that truth is its own defense, and that it is idle to suppose there can be any greater or more powerful truth than "the Word of God." Rev. Dr. Colby of Dayton, O., follows the above with a discourse upon "The Temptations that Beset Intellectual Culture in the Ministry," containing advice and suggestions worthy of the consideration of every one who assumes to be a teacher of and an example for his fellows. An interesting, though evangelically biased account of "Japanese Preachers," is given by Dr. Griffis of this city. In it are the following proverbs of that people: "Proof is better than argument." "Clever preacher, short sermon." "The unskillful speaker is long-winded." "It is dark at the lantern's base." New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.—A portrait of Queen Elizabeth, from the painting by Zucchero, is the frontispiece, and "Woman and Democracy" the subject of the opening article, by Miss Julia Wedgewood. "Some Recollections of Cobden" are given by Lady Dorothy Nevill. The first part of an interesting sketch of Marie Bashkirtseff, the Russian painter, who, though deceased at the age of twenty-three, left two pictures judged worthy of a place in the Luxembourg, is contributed by Mathilde Blind. The narrative displays remarkable mediumistic gifts in its subject. Other interesting contents of this issue are: "The Endowment of a Daughter," by Emily Faithful, "A Woman's Thoughts upon English Ballad-Singers," by the Countess of Munster, and "Women and Club Life," by Amy Levy. New York: Cassell & Co.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—Editorial remarks are made upon the new language proposed to be adopted by all civilized nations, Volapük, and E. D. Babbitt, M. D., calls attention to what he considers its defects, suggesting the need of a more euphonious combination than Volapük offers of vowel and consonant sounds. The third of the papers on "Mind Cure" is given, closing the series. An interesting variety of shorter articles, including seasonable instructions in plant propogation by slips, fills the remaining pages. New York: 206 Broadway.

HERALD OF HEALTH—Dr. M. L. Holbrook supplies the opening article, treating upon sundry matters relating to health. The departments of "Woman and the Household," and "Mothers and the Nursery," are well filled. New York: P. O. Box 2141.

THE QUIVER.—"Play-Room for Poor Children" sets forth a labor which is effecting great good in London, and suggestive of a "mission" in which tens of thousands in this country may engage with advantage to the rising generation and themselves. "The New Playground of Europe" describes a trip to Norway. Of the articles that follow are "Notes on Pews," "Historical Hymn-Tunes," and "Hilda's Sacrifice." Several serial stories are continued and a number of short ones given. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER considers "The Commercial Aspect of Electric Lighting." It gives an elaborate, illustrated article upon "High and Slow Speed Engines," and in its "Abstracts and Extracts," "Correspondence," "Reviews," "Electrical News and Notes," and "Inventors," gives a vast amount of practical information upon its specialty. New York: 11 Wall street.

THE PATH gives advice "To Aspirants for Chelaship," "Some Teachings of a German Mystic," "Conversations on Occultism," etc. New York: P. O. Box 2659.

THE THEOSOPHIST (June).—"Uttaragita," a paper read before a Theosophical Society in India, "The Physiology of Yogam," "Hypnotism in a Palace," details of a séance in the Royal Palace at Madrid, as given in Spanish papers, and "The Hindu Trimurti or Trinity," are the principal subjects treated upon. Madras, India: Conducted (pro tem.) by H. S. Olcott. For sale in Boston by Colby & Rich.

(From the St. Louis Medical Journal.)

Mr. John Bright on Compulsory Vaccination.

SIR—The opinion of Mr. Bright concerning the justice and expediency of compulsion in respect to vaccination, published in the leading journals, is a distinct advance upon any former utterance on this subject by this distinguished statesman. On previous occasions Mr. Bright has been content to stigmatize repeated prosecutions for non-vaccination with the penalties of fine and imprisonment as "monstrous," and to promise his support for a Bill to repeal cumulative penalties. He now regards all punishment as unjust, and would abolish the penal clauses of the Vaccination Acts altogether.

This abolition of compulsion in respect of Jenner's hotly disputed process is, permit me to say, the sum total of a contention which has been unceasingly waged by an ever increasing number of sanitary reformers for upward of quarter of a century; although the principle of compulsion was vehemently and influentially opposed at a much earlier period. The Right Hon. George Canning, in 1808, said: "I cannot imagine any circumstances whatever that would induce me to follow up the most favorable report of the infallibility of vaccination with any measure for its compulsory infliction." And in the same year Sir Francis Burdett, M. P., declared such an Act would be unconstitutional; while at a later period, when vaccinists were demanding coercion, Sir Robert Peel declared that he would be no party to such a despotic project.

And yet the most cruel and hard-hearted vaccination laws, described in the Lancet for June 13th, 1868, by an eminent surgeon, Mr. Brudenell Carter (himself a believer in vaccination), as "an aggregate of useless, meddlesome and mischievous legislation," were passed without previous inquiry as to their utilty or necessity, and have now been instrumental in coercing, fining, imprisoning and spoiling the households of tens of thousands of the most intelligent and upright citizens during the past thirty-three years.

It is now more than two years since an able scientific investigator, Mr. Alfred Russel Wallace, published two remarkable communications (in the Pall Mall Gazette for March 24th, 1885, and the Manchester Examiner for May 6th, 1885), in which he demonstrated that the alleged greater mortality amongst the unvaccinated, as compared with the vaccinated, is "a mere arithmetical puzzle, utterly valueless and delusive," and the writer demands, in the interest of the public, an independent inquiry, which, he says, "should be entrusted to men whose studies or special training have accustomed them to deal with complex masses of facts and figures, and to deduce from them sound and trustworthy conclusions."

To these articles, although widely circulated, there have been no answers. The demand for an impartial public inquiry is now supported by a large and influential body of Members of Parliament on both sides of the House.

Yours faithfully, WILLIAM TEBB.
Devonshire Club, St. James, London, Eng.

EVANS'S MENTAL CURE, VITAL MAGNETIC CURE.—The so-called Christian Science, or the no-disease theory, is proven to be a mortal error by the philosophy inculcated in the two treatises above mentioned.

The philosophy in the Mental Cure Book illustrates the utilizing of the mind and subtle healing elements, in the form of a self-cure process, and acts as an auxiliary to all modes of eradicating disease extant, and harmonizes the ancient record with the progressive age of to-day. The two books will be sent by mail on receipt of $2.68, by the publishers, Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston, Mass.

Cardinal Mazzofanti, the linguist, who is said to have known a hundred languages, declared that he never forgot a word he had once learned.

No man will ever live long enough to regret the good he has done.

THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of Spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocketbooks. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health,

Of the four pages printed matter accompanying each box of "Tooth-Life," old Dr. Blankman, after reading it, made this remark: "It is the best thing I ever read on the subject, and it is all true, too."

The proprietor says: "As a Spiritualist from my youth, I say in all conscience, no person can fail to find in the box of 'Tooth-Life' and four pages of information accompanying it, that which I positively declare to be, on authority of an experience as an American dentist and student dating from 1860, of infinitely more benefit than twenty-five cents' worth of anything else on earth. The tooth-preservative measures taught alone are worth more to parents and guardians than a thousand times the amount of the investment."

What's to be Done?

BY N. G. TCHERNYCHEWSKY.

This novel and its author have a remarkable history. The work was written in 1863 in a St. Petersburg dungeon, where the author was confined for twenty-two months prior to being sent into exile in Siberia. The author was not only one of the foremost literary men of Russia, but one of the earliest and most influential of the Nihilists, and, though still in exile, he is looked upon by the Nihilists even yet with a peculiar veneration. His influence upon the youth of Russia was of the most extraordinary and wide-spread character, and was chiefly exercised through this romance, "What's to be Done?" The book was suppressed by the Czar, but not before it had had a large circulation. The Russian work is now rare, but it is read secretly in Russia still, where copies have been sold for a thousand roubles each. Though it has been translated into nearly every European language, this translation is the first in English.

THE TYLER BOYS.

BY F. M. LEBELLE.

This is a capital story, well written, lively and entertaining. There is as much dramatic interest in the affairs of these little people as in those of grown-up children upon a wider stage. The characters are so vividly portrayed that the reader can see them every one. The Spiritual Philosophy is nicely interwoven throughout. It is considered a difficult thing to write well for children, but this author has succeeded far better than the average of those who undertake it.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little Instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

THE VOICES.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

THE VOICE OF NATURE represents God in the light of Reason and Philosophy—in His unchangeable and glorious attributes.

THE VOICE OF A PEBBLE delineates the individuality of Matter and Mind, fraternal Charity and Love.

THE VOICE OF SUPERSTITION takes the creeds at their word, and proves by numerous passages from the Bible that the God of Moses has been defeated by Satan, from the Garden of Eden to Mount Calvary!

THE VOICE OF PRAYER enforces the idea that our prayers must accord with immutable laws, else we pray for effects, independent of cause.

Price $1.00; postage 10 cents.

☞ Persons purchasing a copy of "THE VOICES" will receive, free, a copy of Mr. Barlow's new pamphlet entitled "ORTHODOX HASH, WITH CHANGE OF DIET," if they so order.

BY ANTOINETTE BOURDIN.

This work is intended as a message of consolation to bereaved and sorrowing spirits. As it lays no claim to literary finish or scientific depth, it does not crave or expect the favorable mention of such critics as admire solely purity of diction and grandiloquence of style; at the same time for genuine depth of thought and true insight into the realities of the spiritual world and life, this humble brochure has few equals and fewer superiors.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experience there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Prescriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the un

The Spiritualist Camp-Meetings.

Onset Bay.

Encomium to the old pump in front of Association Office. This was the first well dug at Onset, 1877, and is familiar to many:

Old Pump! round thy battered form gather old and young, rich and poor, with feverish tongues and parched lips, but with grateful hearts they turn away rejoicing.

Thy pure, cool, limpid waters are a nectar unsurpassed by man's invention. Dusty and travel-stained the weary traveler stops by thy side, eager for the cup that satisfies but does not intoxicate. All who come are gratified, and turn away with renewed vigor. A cooling draught from thy limpid depths gives a cheerful smile to many faces.

Thy presence maketh glad many weary hearts. Healing is in thy depths. Thy voiceless mouth discourseth volumes in the aid of temperance. Generously thou givest of thy bounty, and none are sent away unsatisfied. Little children hover round thee, and are never repulsed. Old age, having slaked his thirst, doffs his hat in thy presence, and wipes the perspiration from his brow with a feeling of thankfulness to the great Giver of all good gifts.

Silent and alone, firm, erect and unflinching, dost thou bare thy form to the cold blasts of winter. Snow, rain, hail, and the shriek of the angry winds have no power to move thee.

Thou alone art ever the same to all men. Thou receivest all who come to thy side with the same civility. Thou art a lesson of patience, a monument of peace, a pattern of excellence, a bond of hope, a standard of purity, meekness, generosity, and all the attributes combined. Thou givest without stint or measure, and with no expectation of recompense. Thou needst no eulogy. Thy correct deportment and example are a silent reproof to intelligent but erring man. Thou art never remiss in thy duty. Yea, thou art a blessing in the land.

OPENING DAY.

"Let there be many windows in your soul,
That all the glory of the universe
May beautify it."

Sunday, July 15th, the morning dawned auspiciously—air clear and cool, with a gentle and invigorating breeze from the southwest, the waters of the Bay shimmering in the sunlight with dazzling brilliancy. Numerous birds were singing clear, sweet notes of gladness, and the saucy squirrel ran briskly about in search of an early meal. With all Nature clothed in her brightest dress, a person must be dull indeed whose heart is not filled with inspiration on beholding her most bountiful gifts displayed so lavishly all about us; for in drinking in this soul food, both heart and brain are refreshed. Oh, life is indeed charming! Who could wish, on such a day as this, they had never been born? 'Tis a grand, 'tis a glorious thought that we live, surrounded by so many blessings.

The cars brought many people to the grounds, and large numbers came to the Grove in teams from the surrounding country. The Camp-Meeting opened by the popular Middleboro' Band discoursing excellent music, and as the speakers came to the platform they seemed to catch the inspiration of the hour from the many bright upturned faces eager to drink in the thoughts as they flowed from inspired lips.

Mrs. M. S. Wood was the speaker of the morning, followed by J. Clegg Wright in the afternoon, after which Mrs. J. J. Whitney from San Francisco gave some excellent tests. Chas. W. Sullivan led the singing as formerly, while Mr. Frank E. Crane presided at the organ.

Concerts were given before each service and at noon in the Temple, and in the afternoon at the Onset railroad station.

NOTES.

Mrs. Helen Walton of Brooklyn, N.Y., who has rooms at the Baker Cottage, corner West Central and 9th streets, receives her friends every Friday afternoon.

The Saturday evening dances at the Casino are well attended. Fancy bicycle riding and other entertainments later in the season.

Mr. H. A. Budington and wife are at Alcyone Cottage. Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing arrived Saturday. They will be with us till Aug. 10th, whence they proceed to Lake Pleasant and afterward to Queen City Park.

The Associatoon has appointed a committee and appropriated funds for the prosecution of liquor dealers at Onset.

We are in receipt, at headquarters, of a printed petition in opposition to the passage of any Doctors' Plot Law in Massachusetts, which is being rapidly filled with names. Believers in medical freedom should not omit signing this petition.

Mrs. E. A. Wells, materializing medium of New York, and Dr. Henry Rogers and wife of San Francisco, are among the recent arrivals. It is said there are sixteen materializing mediums at Onset the present week.

Drowned in the Bay Saturday night, July 7th, Joseph Godfrey of East Wareham. The body was recovered Monday morning at ten o'clock. The deceased was a widower with one child.

We have on our table a new book in pamphlet form, entitled "Physical Proofs of Another Life," by F. J. Lippitt.

The Ladies' Industrial Union at the last business meeting voted to furnish street lights for Onset for the accommodation of residents all the year round; and Mrs. C. L. Woodward and G. F. Howe were chosen a committee to ascertain the required number and their desired location.

The People's Theatre has engaged the Temple for a series of plays, commencing with "Fanchon the Cricket" Monday evening, July 16th.

Mrs. C. M. Tinkham of Providence has hired the "Howard Cottage" on South Boulevard for the season.

Any one wishing a horoscope read cannot do better than call upon Prof. J. Lindall Basford, astronomer and astrologer, at Aquarian Cottage on Park street.

We are told that the Old Colony now sends out 1174 trains daily. Buy your tickets to Onset proper and patronize the motor cars to the grove; by so doing you are helping support the camp-meeting.

All Sunday trains now stop at Onset.

The O. B. G. R. R. Co. have built a bandstand at the Onset Depôt and engaged the Middleboro' Band to give concerts every Sunday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum held its usual session at 2:30 P.M. on the 15th, under Mr. D. N. Ford's direction. The Lyceum is increasing in numbers as well as in interest. There were seventy-three children in attendance; sixteen in recitations; three in song. Little Lulu Morse sang and played an accompaniment on the banjo very prettily. Mrs. Gilbert, of Washington, made some very interesting remarks to the children.

In the notice last week of Mr. Sidney Howe's funeral the song "Beautiful Life" was finely rendered by Prof. W. H. Peck, instead of Prof. Phelps as stated.

Headquarters Office, Onset, July 16th, 1888.

"Observer" writes: Eulogia Prieto Santisa, of Sagua la Grande, Cuba, W. I., together with a party of six from Boston, visited Onset last Sunday. Mr. Santisa—one of the prominent Spiritualists of Cuba—is a wealthy merchant now staying at the Tremont House, Boston.

Prof. J. R. Buchanan and wife and Dr. Petersen and wife were at the camp on Sunday. This was Prof. Buchanan's first visit to Onset; they dined at the Wasnburn House.

Prof. Butler (of the Esoteric Society, Boston,) and wife were also at Onset Sunday.

Dr. Shaw and wife, of Boston, are at the Union Villa; Dr. Brett and wife, of Boston, are staying at the Glen Cove House; Mr. Haines and wife, of Cambridgeport, are at the Glen Cove House; Mr. Haines is one of the officers of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, also a good medium; Mr. Ring, Treasurer of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, is also at the same house.

Lake Pleasant.

[MR. J. MILTON YOUNG is our authorized agent at Lake Pleasant, and will be pleased to receive subscriptions for the BANNER OF LIGHT. Mr. Young also has a full line of our publications for sale at his bookstore. He will conduct the correspondence for THE BANNER from this Camp-Meeting.]

With the next issue of THE BANNER the meeting at this place for 1888 will have opened.

The Worcester Cadet Band will arrive on that day, and for the succeeding six weeks we shall enjoy their inspiration. Whatever criticism may be made of the platform, the gospel of music is above censure. Prof. Ingraham has a fine musical organization at his command, and the Association was more than fortunate in securing them.

The regular list of speakers is somewhat varied, and includes the best talent upon the platform, which will doubtless draw "big" audiences. The Association did the correct thing in leaving Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday of each week for conference meetings, for although the list of speakers is an unpublished one, the interest will be none the less. There will be some able addresses at this part of the service, and we shall wait and watch as usual. Volunteers make good and efficient soldiers.

The present season concludes the original régime, as established by the projectors of this camp-ground. What the future will develop seems to be something of a study just at present. One thing is certain—there must be no back tracks, for the wheels of progress are not turning that way. A celebrated writer has said that the "past is secure." This is emphatically true of Lake Pleasant. May its future be full of golden fruitage which shall count in the hereafter.

SPECIAL NOTES.

Mrs. M. V. Lincoln, of Boston, well known to the Spiritualistic societies of that city, has arrived for the summer.

Boating is a favorite pastime.

Capt. A. W. Caswell, of Gardner, has arrived. His war record is of the heroic kind.

The Lake Pleasant Hotel is getting to be lively.

The Dillingham Cottage is open, Mrs. J. F. Dillingham presiding.

Mr. Frank Crozier, the artist, of Readsboro', Vt., is having his rooms put in order. He will come next week.

There are a large number of new comers in camp.

Cottages and tents are at a premium.

Six parties are to build six cottages on Ninth avenue, of a uniform pattern.

Miss M. C. Donnell, of Boston, is with Mrs. A. E. Blinn on Honto street.

Several of the members of the Worcester band will bring their families.

The train service this year will be most efficient. The "scoot train" will run as heretofore.

Rockingham County, N. H., will be well represented. The Boston & Maine railroad did the correct thing in putting on excursion tickets.

Dr. W. B. Mills, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., informs us that we may look for him soon. He will receive a most cordial welcome.

The train men say they meet lots of parties from the West who are talking of Lake Pleasant. The movement is growing.

The annual circular has been very widely distributed.

The political movements of the day create but very little interest at this camp-ground.

Flowers and plants adorn many a home here among the pines.

Lake Pleasant, Mass., July 14th, 1888.

Pilgrims to Lake Pleasant.—The Pittsburgh (Pa.) Dispatch states that the Spiritualists' Society of that city has under consideration the question of sending regularly appointed delegates to the Camp-Meeting at Lake Pleasant.

Lookout Mountain, Tenn., Meeting.

The first week proved to be of much interest, but was not numerously attended; still the officers of the camp feel encouraged, and think there will be larger crowds in attendance this year than as yet have gathered at Lookout. The Association is struggling nobly in a section where prejudice abounds, and where facilities for transportation are just being made for public accommodation. The future of this camp is a great one, and it should meet with more help from the friends in the North.

On July 4th a special celebration in honor of the natal day of the nation was held. G. W. Kates was selected as orator. He spoke at length upon "Freedom," eliciting much applause and receiving many congratulations for his effort. National songs were sung. Dr. Fuller also spoke eloquently, and Dr. Merrill gave several descriptions of soldier spirits and others present.

Saturday, July 7th, was "excursion day," and was highly enjoyed by all—especially those who went to the wonderful "Rock City." A night service was held on this date, during which Mrs. Claney, of Chattanooga, was controlled by the spirit of the camp's favorite, Mrs. S. A. H. Talbot, of Texas.

President Albert was the only person present aware of the demise of the good "mother in Israel," who was engaged to lecture at this camp. The intelligence of her decease was fraught with the influence of sorrow, and yet all felt that the dear one had attained a higher spiritual exaltation. A special memorial service is ordered for Monday, July 16th.

We copy the following report of the meeting held Sunday, July 8th, from the Chattanooga News:

"Yesterday morning Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond delivered an address, her subject being, 'In My Father's House are Many Mansions.' It was a most interesting and touching discourse, and was listened to with the closest attention by the audience present.

"The hall was well filled in the afternoon, and the services proved quite interesting. They began with a selection by the musicians, 'Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer,' after which Mrs. McCan rendered a vocal solo with taste and expression. Mrs. Glading then took the platform, and delivered an address on 'The Origin of the Soul.' Her remarks were deeply interesting, and showed that she possesses ripe thought and the gift of eloquent speech. At the conclusion of the address Mrs. Glading gave a number of psychometric test readings of various articles selected from persons in the audience. Several of the readings were very successful, and proved that the medium possesses remarkable powers in that direction.

"Dr. Merrill next gave a few tests, some of which were correct, while others were not acknowledged publicly by any one in the crowd.

"Mrs. McCan gave another vocal selection in her usual artistic style; and a violin and piano duet, Schumann's lovely Traumerei, was next played with fine expression by Mrs. Ross and Mr. Cook.

"Mrs. Glading then gave remarkable writing tests. Several members of the audience were invited to the platform, the writer being of the number, and each in turn was told to place one hand on the medium's shoulder as she sat at a table with a sheet of transparent paper before her, and a lead pencil held tightly between the thumb and forefinger. Beginning at the lower left hand corner of the sheet, Mrs. Glading's hand traced a message, writing to the right, and in such a manner that when the transparent sheet was turned over the message could be plainly read, the words having been written backward. The reporter's message read as follows: 'You are not a Spiritualist at the present time, but you will yet advocate the truth. A spirit as near in love as a mother is with you, and you will soon make a great change in your life professionally.'

"The phenomena are very remarkable, and the lady certainly does some strange things which are not within our ken.

"The doxology was then sung, and the meeting was dismissed."

The largest night audience of the season assembled, and was a worthy compliment to the eloquent speaker appointed. Dr. George A. Fuller addressed the meeting, taking for his subject, "The Truth will make you Free." This speaker is a prime favorite, and his logical and practical discourses are much admired.

It is a matter of pride to see a younger generation of speakers coming on. They should all be sustained, but those fired with a grand inspiration and holy purposes in life should be supported and encouraged. Your correspondent will try to give you limited items of interest during the progress of the camp.

Those here seem to enjoy themselves. Surely the meetings are interesting, and yet there is a lack of esprit and codperation on the part of the Southern Spiritualists. Dr. Fuller, Mrs. Glading and Mrs. Richmond have worked hard; Dr. Merrill gives tests at each meeting.

The expressive and earnest speaker on the spiritual platform is the one who will win public attention.

Tuesday, July 10th, the conference was made interesting by Dr. Fuller, Mrs. McCan, Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Kates, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Glading and others.

The first mediums' meeting was held Thursday, July 12th, at which Dr. Merrill, Mrs. Kates, Mrs. Glading and Mrs. Claney took part. Friday morning the different mediums again gave evidences, concluding with a slate-writing test by Mrs. Anna Cissna of Cincinnati, O. It was her first trial before a public audience. She obtained four sides of slates full—two of which were from our newly arisen sister, Mrs. Talbot. The writing seemed to be natural to her, as was the message. It was a great success, and marks a new beginning of usefulness for Mrs. Cissna.

At night an excellent concert and "hop" was enjoyed by all. It was a meritorious display of talent that graced the concert part of the programme.

Saturday was excursion and rest day, but a conference was held at night, presided over by Dr. Watson. It was a meeting replete with good thought and interesting display of mediumship.

Close of the Oakland, Cal., Camp-Meeting.

The Camp-Meeting at Lake Merritt Park, Oakland, Cal., that commenced June 3d, closed with appropriate services Sunday, July 1st. At the morning session Mr. J. J. Morse was the speaker. His subject, "The Crusades," was dealt with in the usual clear, forcible and impressive manner in which his guides treat all subjects brought to their notice for elucidation. Mr. Lillie added to the interest of the occasion by skillful rendition of choice vocal selections.

In the afternoon W. J. Colville interested and instructed a large and very attentive audience that in various emphatic ways manifested their appreciation of the efforts of himself and his guides.

In the evening, says the Golden Gate, the capacious tent was packed to its utmost capacity with a wide circle of standing attendants unable to obtain seats, to listen to Mrs. R. S. Lillie, who gave forth her inspirations in clear, ringing words that all could understand, and, it is needless to say, all fully appreciated.

Thus closed the fourth of these annual gatherings of the California Spiritualists at Oakland, the most successful of the series.

The Board of Directors of the Camp-Meeting Association for the ensuing year are: I. C. Steele, J. J. Owen, C. E. Eliot, Dr. G. J. Bentley of San José, S. B. Clark, Mrs. Eggert Aitken, Mrs. S. Cowell of Oakland, J. H. Shepard of Oakland, W. R. Colby, J. L. Bachelder of Tulare, and G. H. Hawes. At a meeting of the new board July 1st, the following officers were elected: President, I. C. Steele; Vice President, Mrs. Eggert Aitken; Secretary, Mrs. S. B. Whitehead; Corresponding Secretary, G. H. Hawes; Financial Secretary, C. E. Eliot; Treasurer, J. L. Bachelder.

Brandon, Vt., July 16th.

Ocean Grove, Mass.

The Twenty-second annual Camp-Meeting of the Cape Cod Spiritualists opened at Ocean Grove, Harwich, at 11 o'clock on the morning of Sunday, July 15th.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Dr. H. B. Storer, President; Ephraim Doane, Vice President; Mrs. Bangs Nickerson, Secretary; Mrs. Love C. Howes, Treasurer; E. Doane, T. B. Baker and Isaac Smith, Finance Committee.

The exercises opened with singing by the choir, followed by a poem, "Spiritual Presence," by Miss Jennie B. Hagan. Dr. Storer delivered the morning lecture, taking for his subject the poem of Miss Hagan.

The afternoon service opened with singing by the choir, invocation, and an address on "Psychic Force," concluding with an inspirational poem by Miss Hagan.

A conference meeting was held in the evening.

There was an unusually large number present for the first day.

The meeting will continue until Aug. 1st.

A large number of well-known lecturers and test mediums have been engaged to speak during the sessions. The meetings will be conducted throughout by Dr. H. B. Storer.

East Portland, Oregon.

The Clackamas County meeting closed after a ten days' session at New Era. We had an unusual rainy time, but all present enjoyed the services. Many good tests were given from the platform by Mrs. Ladd and Mrs. Brown. Many strangers were present who never attended a Spiritualist meeting before, and by what they saw and heard were set to thinking as they never thought before.

We had fine music and singing, furnished by Mr. Cruse, Mrs. Holland, Mrs. Buckman, Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Chesbrow. Miss Chesbrow is a fine organist and singer; she is but ten years old; a little brother of her's, eleven years old, and others, assisted in singing, much to the credit of all.

We decided to hold a State Camp-Meeting commencing September 10th, to hold ten days or two weeks. There will be some cottages built upon the grounds before the State Camp. I am building a three-room cottage, and two other parties and myself are building a dancing hall, 24x46, with spring floor. Some object to dancing in the lecture hall, and I am determined to give the people amusement.

We cannot "dash out" like your Eastern people, but we can do right at least.

Our grounds are all arranged in lots, and are leased for a term of years at very low rents. We are to have some good mediums at the fall meeting. We would like to see some of the Eastern mediums here.

There is an open field for a good materializing medium, and in fact for any good test-medium.

July 4th. M. F. MOORE.

Mr. Baxter at Wachusett Park, Mass.

Sunday, July 15th, was the occasion of the Spiritualists' Annual Grove Meeting at Wachusett Park, one of the most attractive spots in the State, on Wachusett Lake, foot of Mt. Wachusett. The day was auspicious, and hundreds from Clinton, Princeton, Westminster, Ashley, Fitchburg, Gardner, Sterling, Berlin, Worcester, were in attendance.

10:30 and 1:30 o'clock were the hours of service. J. Frank Baxter was the speaker, and was cordially received on this his third yearly visit. "What has the Spiritual Platform to Offer that can be Gained from No Other?" was the theme of Mr. Baxter's morning lecture, and that of his afternoon remarks, "How Came I to be a Spiritualist, and Being One, how Came I a Public Advocate." His narration was an intensely interesting one, occupying an hour and a half in its delivery. A descriptive séance followed. Absolute proof was given of spirit presence to the unprejudiced, and nearly all exhibited offered problems that no theory, aside from the spiritistical, could account for.

Considering the great promiscuity of a grove audience, the results obtained through Mr. Baxter's efforts of lecture, song and mediumship were more than ordinarily satisfactory.

A second gathering this season was decided upon favorably among the chief concerned. Mr. Baxter's services could not be secured, he is so fully engaged; but an effort will be made to get some exponent of the Spiritual Philosophy who can render efficient service.

N. B.—An organized management is needed to develop these meetings, relieve individuals of burdens, and equalize expenses. By such means not only could expenses be easily covered, but an overplus, to serve as a standing fund to meet future emergencies, created. The reporter, who is interested, hopes this suggestion may lead the several concerned to definite action in a matter of so great importance.

WACHUSETT.

Letter from Robert Cooper.

Messrs. Colby & Rich:

I am pleased to learn from Light and Medium that through your instrumentality an important addition has been made to the Testimonial Fund my good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Tebb, have inaugurated in my behalf. I am sure I feel very grateful for your generous coöperation, as well as for that of those who have responded to your kind and considerate appeal.

My requirements are few, and it is a satisfaction to feel that through the assistance of a few friends these will be supplied, and that I shall be placed beyond the reach of want.

I take as much interest as ever in our good cause, and do what I can to promote it. In this town there is more interest than ever, and a greater disposition to regard it favorably. Some of the clergy, however, are still opposed to it, and occasionally, like your Talmage, make an onslaught on it; but this only excites inquiry, and helps rather than hinders, for Truth, like a torch, the more it is shaken the more it shines.

Soon after my return from America, I agitated the Sunday question, and have succeeded in getting the day observed in a much more liberal and rational manner. I therefore have the satisfaction in knowing that my efforts in the cause of Truth and Progress have not been without result.

I do not expect to visit America again, and therefore shall not be able to see the faces of old friends any more, but hope to meet them again some day on the other side.

With the kindest regards,

Fraternally yours,
ROBERT COOPER.

Eastbourne, Eng., July 4th, 1888.

An Experience in Point.

In the last number of THE BANNER Peter H. Kent asks a question regarding the whereabouts of a spirit when the mortal is under the influence of an anæsthetic. I will relate an incident that transpired in my office a few years ago: A lady came in to have a tooth drawn. I administered what is called "laughing gas"; the effect was very pleasant. I removed the tooth, and might have taken out several without causing any pain.

As soon as she commenced to regain consciousness she began to sob, and tears flowed down her cheeks. Soon she said: "Oh! I would take it again. I was with Georgie." I looked up to her husband, who was standing near by, and noticed that tears started in his eyes; he said: "That was our little boy we lost two months ago." I told them I had no doubt but that she saw her boy.

From my experience I should say that people under the influence of anæsthetics do occasionally come in contact with spiritual life.

Greenfield, Mass. JOSEPH BEALS.

Return of Walter Howell.

Your readers may perhaps be interested to learn of my safe arrival in this country after a hurried European tour. I will not occupy time or space with details of my trip, but merely say that I had an enjoyable time. On Saturday, the 21st inst., I shall commence my work at Cassadaga Lake, and remain there until the end of the camp season. My engagement list is full until the end of 1888. I am open for engagements early in the new year. Letters may be addressed to me at 248 No. Division street, Buffalo, N. Y. During the month of September I am speaking in several places in Western New York and Northwest Pennsylvania. During the Sundays of October I occupy the rostrum in Buffalo. No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known; scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

Spiritual Phenomena.

THE SPIRITUALISTIC EXPERIENCES OF PROF. J. W. CADWELL, MESMERIST.

NO. TWENTY.

As our highly esteemed friend, the Rev. Mr. Talmage, has recently repeated a public delivery of his sensational sermon on "Spiritualism," I would like to review a small part of it in connection with my "Experiences" with the phenomena upon which that subject bases its claims as an indisputable truth. While Talmage lives he will undoubtedly help us keep this subject before the people. The report in the Hartford, Conn., Telegram, April 29th, 1888, of the delivery on the preceding Sunday, in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, is nearly word for word the same as that printed in the Kansas City Times, April 28th, 1884. The Telegram reports him as saying of Spiritualism: "An unclean, adulterous, damnable religion. Not a madhouse but has its victims. The Bible is enough for us to know of the future."

His text was a part of the plain and simple narrative of Saul conversing with the spirit of Samuel through that spiritual medium, "the woman of Endor": I. Sam., xxviii: 7-8; and I know of nothing in print that so fully proves Spiritualism true, and the Rev. Mr. Talmage wrong, as that text. He described at great length, in his own peculiar manner, that remarkable séance: "I see her," he said, "waving a wand, or stirring up some poisonous herbs in a caldron, or hear mutterings over some incantations, or stamping with her foot as she cries out to the realm of the dead: 'Samuel! Samuel!' Lo, the freezing horror! The floor of the tenement opens and the gray hair floats up, and the forehead, the eyes, the lips, the shoulders, the arms, the feet, the entire body of dead Samuel, wrapped in sepulchral robe, appearing to the astonished group, who stagger back and hold fast, and catch their breath and shiver with terror. The dead prophet, white and awful from the tomb, begins to move his ashen lips, and he glares upon King Saul and cries out: 'What did you bring me up for?'.... And lo! the floor again opens.... Nothing is left in the room but Saul and the two servants, and the spiritual medium, and the sculptured images, and the divining rods, and the bottles, and the vases, and the poisonous herbs. Oh! that was an awful séance!"

I should think so, if all that happened. Instead, I think it the most untruthful and extravagant exaggeration of a Bible statement I have ever known a minister of the gospel to make. Continuing he said: "I learn first from this subject that Spiritualism is a very old religion, ... a doctrine with which many of you are already tinged." Following this he gave an account of the origin of Spiritualism at Hydesville and accounts of ancient manifestations: "Nothing," said Mr. Talmage, "in the spiritualistic circles of our day, has been more strange, mysterious and wonderful than things which have been seen in the past centuries of the world," many of which he describes, and then asks: "What does God think of all these delusions?" and then he tells what he thinks: "He thinks so severely of them that he never speaks of them but with livid thunders of indignation. He says 'Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.'"

Now, seriously, Mr. Talmage, what shall be done with her? Why, break that other command of God, which the Bible says he wrote with his finger on a table of stone, "Thou shalt not kill," and kill her at once.

Did God give two directly opposite commands, one to kill and the other not to kill? If he did, it is not difficult to surmise which one Talmage would obey, so far as modern "witches" or mediums are to be dealt with.

Are both those contradictory commands from God? Are either of them? Are any of the Bible statements concerning Saul or witches reliable? "Search the Scriptures" and see.

In I. Sam., xxviii: 6, we read that "Saul inquired of the Lord.... And the Lord answered him not." In I. Chron., x: 13-14, we find a positive denial of that statement; and instead, that the Lord slew him because he inquired not of the Lord. In I. Sam., xxviii: 17-18, we read that God killed him because he did not execute the "fierce wrath of God" upon Amelek, which was, to break that command, "Thou shalt not kill," and utterly destroy an entire nation—men, women and children—for something that their ancestors had done nearly four hundred years before Saul was born!

As the Bible contains three plain contradictions about the death of Saul, which one is true? And which two are not true?

In his sermon, as printed in the Telegram, Talmage said: "Some of the performances of spiritual mediums are not to be ascribed to fraud, but to some occult law that after a while may be demonstrated." After making the above positive assertion, he contradicts it by saying: "Ventriloquism, legerdemain, sleight-of-hand and optical delusion account for everything." Oh! Talmage! your statements are as contradictory as those quoted from your Bible; and are they more reliable?

Further on, Talmage said: "I further indict Spiritualism for the fact that it is the cause of much insanity. There is not an asylum between Bangor and San Francisco that has not the torn and bleeding victims of this delusion." Is that statement true? Is it more disastrous than the "delusion" of modern theology?

My eldest sister died at the age of twenty-two years unconverted. At the open grave my mother laid her head on my shoulder and cried out in agony, "My God, shall I never meet my first-born child in heaven?" My mother never smiled again. The hideous, heathenish, hellish, Christianized thought that her child must wail with the damned in hell forever, as taught in the Congregational church, of which she was a member, made my mother insane; and for many years she was in the Insane Asylum at Northampton, Mass.; and with her there were the crazy wives of two Congregational clergymen. Having heard a minister of the gospel make a statement in his pulpit similar to that made by Mr. Talmage, I inquired of Dr. Earle, who then had charge of that Asylum, how many of his nearly four hundred patients were made crazy by Spiritualism? He answered, "Not one." I asked, "How many by religion?" He said, "Over thirty."

I would risk my life against a dime that there are more than one hundred in the asylums made crazy by religion of the kind Mr. Talmage preaches, to one by Spiritualism.

In his sermon, Talmage said that a steamship was delayed on the ocean by machinery breaking; and the friends of the passengers consulted spiritual mediums, who said that the vessel was lost; and "women went raving mad," and when it finally came into port all safe, many of the passengers found their friends crazy in insane asylums. Do people usually become insane when they learn—no matter how—that their friends are lost at sea? If so, we shall need more asylums soon. I think that statement of Mr. Talmage the most senseless I ever knew a minister to make. His entire discourse was a series of bitter misrepresentations, except his individual experience, of which he says: "Almost every man has at some time had a touch of hallucination. Some time ago, after I had been overtempted to eat something indigestible before retiring at night, after retiring I saw the president of one of the prominent colleges astride the foot of the bed, while he demanded of me a loan of five cents!"

One more quotation from his sermon: "And I have to tell you now that Spiritualism finds its victims in the troubled, the sick, the bereft. That is why I hate Spiritualism. It takes advantage of one in a moment of weakness, which may come upon us at any time. We lose a friend. The trial is keen and sharp, suffocating, almost maddening. If we could marshal a host, and storm the eternal world, and recapture our loved one, the host would soon be marshaled. The house is so lonely. The world is so dark. The separation is so insufferable. But Spiritualism says: 'We will open the future world, and your loved can come back and talk to you.' Though you may not hear his voice, you may hear the rap of his hand." Talmage goes on to explain how, by the different number of raps, communication can be had with the invisible hosts of the unseen world. He "hates" it, because it brings consolation to mourners whose friends go down in death: consolation such as his Christian religion cannot, unless both dead and living believed in Jesus.

"Put your hand," says Talmage, "in the hand of the witch of Endor" (who in the Bible is called a "woman" eleven times, and not once a "witch,") "and she will lead you to bottomless perdition, where she holds her everlasting séance."

He gives one instance of a Spiritualist having suicided; but fails to mention that a New York paper recently chronicled the fact that two clergymen had just done the same thing. He closes his sermon with this quotation from his Bible: "My spirit shall not always strive." No. According to Talmage's belief, when the realities of death begin to come over you, and you for the first time realize your danger and feel your need of aid, the "Holy" Spirit will refuse to help or "strive," and "when your fear cometh laugh at your calamity." [Bible.]

In the Utica Daily Herald, April 9th, 1884, is a sermon delivered by Bishop Foster, at the Methodist Conference, then being held in Rome, N. Y., on "Bible Prophecies and their Fulfillment." Among other things Bishop Foster said: "We stand in the grip of the greatest battle of infidelity of the ages, waged by the greatest minds.... Men may predict, but not prophesy, foresee. If I shall be able to show that there was a class of men back in those Bible times who did foresee events that did come to pass in the future, without connection with the past, then I ask: How did they do it? From our end we say, it was because God was in them. Tell me, skeptic, if you do not accept that theory how you will explain it? All talk of hypothetizing is empty; but you will agree with me that those men must have had a peculiar intelligence to see into the future as well as into the past."

Did Bishop Foster ask that question with an honest desire to get at the truth? If so I would like to answer, not "because God was in them," but because they were gifted with clairvoyant vision, or were entranced, or in some way influenced by excarnated human spirits. Some may ask why I think so?

If I can prove that mortals, while entranced, do "prophesy," do "foresee events that come to pass in the future without connection with the past," in this age of the world, and that the controlling intelligences claim to be human spirits, then I shall have proven that it was not "because God was in them" (for he would not misrepresent himself), and shall have answered Bishop Foster's question "scientifically"; and proven also that modern prophecies are as reliable as any that are recorded in the Bible.

In the Portland, Me, Daily Advertiser of Jan. 5th, 1887, there is nearly a column referring to just such a prophecy, made on the preceding Friday afternoon, and its remarkable fulfillment on the following Saturday forenoon. And the names and residences of several well-known and reliable witnesses thereof are given, thus presenting as strong proof of this fact as can be found for anything in the Bible.

This prophesying was simply the result of my mesmerizing a lady whom I had never seen or heard of until that afternoon.

Before I removed the mesmeric influence, she became entranced by what claimed to be an excarnated human spirit, who said that on the following day I should mesmerize another lady, who would have her upper teeth extracted painlessly while mesmerized; that the dentist would get a larger man to help, and be unable to get a fragment of one of the teeth. I would like to ask Bishop Foster: Was there any connection between that "prophecy and its fulfillment"? Between "the present and the future," in that particular case? Could any mortal have known that on the morrow a lady, who at that time had not thought of having teeth extracted while in the mesmerized state, would have several taken out while in that condition? Could any mortal, through any of the five senses, have known that one of those teeth would come so hard that the dentist could not extract it alone? Could any one have known beforehand that he would get a "larger man" to assist him? or have known that while both men were using their combined strength one tooth would break off, and, after being crushed, one fragment could not be taken out? or have known that during the difficult operation there would be no pain? All these predictions were minutely fulfilled on the following day, Jan. 1st, 1887, in Dr. Fernald's office, 216 Middle street, Portland, Me.; and the names and residences of the witnesses were given, as previously stated, in the Portland Daily Advertiser on the day and date already given.

It is self-evident, therefore, that a fulfilled prophecy is not evidence that "God was in the prophet" in the sense Bishop Foster intimated.

A lady who formerly resided at 59 Washington street, Boston, Mass., after being put into a mesmeric trance on a Monday, was controlled by a spirit who said that my wife left home on the previous Saturday, and although she then expected to return on Tuesday, she would not until the following Saturday. My wife was visiting a brother over one hundred and fifty miles from Boston, and at that time expecting to return home on the following day, but the sudden illness of another lady made it necessary for her to remain, and she did not return, as predicted, until Saturday. There certainly was no connection between the "present and the future" in this case.

Mrs. Gladwin, wife of Dr. D. W. Gladwin, of 67 Arctic street, Bridgeport, Conn., can testify to the truthfulness of this prophecy and its fulfillment.

Dr. Gladwin has quite recently been publicly healing the sick in Unity Hall, Hartford, Conn. The Daily Courant of that city, May 22d, 1888, has a lengthy notice of several remarkable cures performed by him and his associate in the above hall. About four years ago I met Dr. Gladwin at Lake Pleasant Camp-Meeting. Out of mere curiosity he called with me on Sue B. Fales, a well known medium, for a sitting. She said to him that in the near future he would become one of the most successful public healers in the United States. 'I can see you," she said, "on the platform in a large public hall that is crowded with people, healing the sick, lame and blind." He laughed at her predictions. At that time he did not believe that many people could be healed by magnetism, much less that he could cure by that means, as he had never tried to do so.

Since that prophecy, circumstances over which he had little or no control have brought about that very thing; and since that time, to my certain knowledge, he has stood on many a platform, in crowded halls, healing the sick; in Cincinnati, Trenton, Newark, Norwich, Hartford, and other cities. When that prophecy was made there was no probability of its fulfillment, and no possible connection between the "present and the future."

William D. Hilton, of Providence, R. I., who I think was Superintendent of the Providence and Worcester Railroad, was possessed of the gift of prophecy, or clairaudience. A freight train from Worcester was side-tracked late one afternoon in Providence. There were, however, two cars too many for that track, and as it was nearly time for the Boston and New York express train, the danger signal-lamp was lighted. Before the main track was cleared, Mr. Hilton heard a voice close to his ear say: "Hilton, that signal-light will go out." He ran to the rear end of that freight train, took off the red lantern, and hurried up the track until he had passed the signal-light and saw that it was burning brightly. At that moment a sudden gust of wind, or some other cause, extinguished it, and the headlight of the incoming locomotive was already in sight. By swinging the red lantern he succeeded in stopping the train, but not until it was within four feet of the rear freight car.

There were six coaches in the approaching train, crowded with passengers rushing on to instant death; and but for the fact that Mr. Hilton possessed the gift of "witches," and that some invisible intelligence knew that the signal-light would go out, there would have happened that night one of the most fearful railroad accidents known on this continent. There certainly was no connection in this case with the "present and the future." Hearing of this, and wishing to know the exact particulars, I called on Mr. Hilton, and at my request he gave me the facts, not only of this case but others as remarkable as this, in writing, which I hope to insert in my forthcoming book of "Experiences."

My second son wrote me from Bangor, Me., a few years ago, that he was about to leave that city for Norfolk, Va., with a vessel loaded with lumber, in which he had an interest. A few weeks later the Boston papers reported that lumber-laden, water-logged vessels had been seen off the coast between those cities, whose crews were supposed to be lost.

About three years later I mesmerized a lady in the parlor of Mrs. Dr. Abbie E. Cutter, late of Wickett's Island, Onset, Mass., who became entranced before I removed the mesmeric influence; and the control at once began to talk to me about my absent son who, she said, was not dead, as I supposed, but in a very hot place, and would return home within three months.

I did not believe him alive; but two days before the expiration of three months from the day of that "prophecy" he returned from South America. At the time the spirit who had entranced the lady said he was in a "hot place," the ship he was on had been becalmed for more than a week near the equator. When telling me where he was at that time, he remarked that it was the hottest place he ever was in.

There could have been no connection between the "present and the future" by which she could tell how soon he would return. If "God was in the prophet," in the cases referred to, he has more to do with mediums in this age of the world than with ministers. And Jesus said that his followers should do even greater things than he did: Is Talmage one of them?

I could relate more than a score of remarkable prophecies, made by my mesmeric subjects, that have been minutely fulfilled, and furnish as positive proof of the same as can be found in the Bible for any ancient prophecy and fulfillment, or as can be produced for any event of modern times. Men may doubt and sneer if they will; but they are only laughing at their own ignorance of positive facts connected with human life.

One more quotation from Bishop Foster's sermon. In speaking of the Bible, he said: "And no discovery has ever been made in scientific or historic investigation which invalidates a single fact in that book." A "fact" cannot be invalidated, whether found in the Bible or an almanac. All statements may not be facts. Bishop Foster, if I mistake not, claimed that every statement made in the Bible is a part of God's revealed truth to man, and therefore used the word "fact" for Bible statements.

When people lived in log-houses or tents, in Bible times, they did not know much of science, or of the deadly effects of air exhaled from human and animal lungs. Has not "scientific investigation" since the Bible was written proven that eight men and women, and two to eight of every kind of animals, birds and reptiles, could not have lived in "Noah's Ark" one year and ten days without fresh air?

Has not "scientific investigation" demonstrated that there is not water enough within millions of miles of this globe to cover the "highest hills under the whole heavens fifteen cubits deep"?

Has "scientific investigation" been able to "invalidate" the statement that Jonah lived in the belly of a whale three days and three nights? and while there obtained air enough to breathe with which to make long speeches about his being in "hell"? If not, "science" is worthless to man.

The Bible declares that God made heaven and earth, and all that in them is, in "six days": That he made "light" on the first day; that he divided the light from the darkness and called the light "day" and darkness "night." Does not a "scientific investigation" demonstrate that that first day's work was utterly annihilated when the darkness of the first night settled down on the yet uncreated heavens or earth, and prove that only five of those six days remained for the entire creation?

Does not "scientific investigation" prove that there is no "firmament," that the Bible says was made on the "second day," to "divide the waters above from the waters below," and in which he set the sun, moon and stars on the second day? If there is, it must extend out further than light can travel in ten thousand years. Is it a material something or immaterial nothing? If the latter, nothing was made on the "second day," and "heaven and earth, and all that in them is," were made in four days instead of six. "All talk of hypothetizing is empty," unless Bishop Foster can tell us where those first two days' work is now; and "you will agree with me that those men must have had a peculiar intelligence to see into.... the past," and see the creation of a "firmament" that never had an existence save in an imaginative brain, and "light," four days before the sun was made, that to-day forms no part of heaven or earth.

Is it true that "scientific investigation" cannot "invalidate" so positive a contradiction as that Moses and Aaron, and seventy of the elders of Israel, saw the God of Israel"? Exodus, xxiv: 9-10. And that "No man hath seen God at any time"? I. John, iv: 12. If it cannot, the sun may have been stopped by Joshua for the express purpose that God's chosen people might break that command of his, "Thou shalt not kill," and slay a vast army of defenseless men.

Are the wicked to be burned up "root and branch" at the final judgment? If so, what part is left of them for God's great enemy, the devil, to torment forever?

Is annihilation of the wicked true, as taught from the Bible by the Adventists, and endless perdition, as taught from that same Bible, by other denominations? If either are, is the prophecy in the closing chapter of the Book of Revelations true also? What does that proclaim as to the fate of the human race? The New Jerusalem is to descend from heaven upon the new earth. No more use for sun, moon or stars, as the glory of God and the Lamb is to light the eternal city. The golden streets are to reflect the effulgent splendor of an unending day. The twelve gates of pearl will swing wide open for the redeemed to go out and in forever. The River of Life is to flow from beneath the great white throne. And out there, on the banks of that crystal stream, are those burnt-up-root-and-branch people, alive forevermore.

Sing, oh! Talmage, an anthem to God: The dead are alive; the lost are found. The "everlasting séance" of the "witch" of Endor, in that "bottomless perdition" you talked of, while making double rhetorical somersaults in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, is ended. Hell is empty; and "Brimstone for Sale" posted on the door of the bottomless pit.

The soul-debasing nightmare of theology will wear off in the near future, and men blush at their past belief of the Creator damning his own children forever, because he failed to create them with a capacity to comprehend how "God's only begotten son" could be as old as his own father.

Science, Bishop Foster, has a higher mission than attempting to "invalidate" the thousand and one contradictory statements in your Bible, which "invalidates" itself so plainly that a "wayfaring man," if not a fool, cannot "err therein." Especially in that hideous fantasy, that the biggest rebel against God—the worst sinner in the universe—is to take unspeakable delight through endless ages in tormenting less sinful people than himself, just to spite his maker! who, Christians say, was originally one of God's most exalted angels in glory, but who, Jesus (in "John viii.") said, "was a murderer from the beginning."

Since writing the above, I see by the New York World of May 28th, 1888, that Professor Hermann gave an exposé of Spiritualism at the Academy of Music, in that city, the preceding night; and that "he completely exposes all the mediums' tricks, from slate-writing to spook picture-painting," and further states that "It was also a great night for the New York Press Club, for whose benefit the instructive entertainment was given." (?) "He took two blank slates, simply sponged them in the presence of the audience, then placed them together and tied them tightly with a cord. They were then given to a gentleman in the audience to hold. Upon nine separate bits of paper different people in the house wrote certain questions which they desired the Hermann spirits to answer. The nine slips were placed in a hat: a lady drew forth one. It contained the question, 'Who will be the next Governor of New York?' The blank slates were untied, when the following communication was seen to be plainly written upon one: 'Let us say grace for Governor David B. Hill. From the spirit-world.'

"The explanation of the trick followed. One of the slates simply had a false or double surface. It was shown as a clean slate to the spectators, after which the false piece was dropped from the frame, leaving beneath it another slate surface, upon which the above 'communication' had of course been previously written. The nine questions written by different members of the audience were simply palmed by the Professor, and nine slips containing the one question 'Who will be the next Governor?' substituted for them. Of course the lady who played grab-bag with the hat was obliged to draw the query, as there were no others in the grab-bag. So much for spirit slate-writing."....

Does the above expose "slate-writing?" or his other explanations of mediums' "tricks" expose them? Is it possible that I have been deceived by so simple a "trick" as slate-writing?

About four years ago, while filling an engagement of two weeks at the City Hall in Columbus, Ohio, on one evening that the hall was otherwise occupied, with my manager, Mr. Todd, I attended one of Professor Hermann's sleight-of-hand exhibitions in the Opera House, and as quietly as possible explained to him every trick that Hermann performed, not intending others to see, and we had taken seats by ourselves where no one could hear me. Before the "show" was over the professor requested that as there was one man present who evidently understood his tricks, he hoped that he would desist in explaining them there. I subsequently learned that the audience in the balcony "caught on," and were giving more attention to me than him. I have attended his entertainments several times, and can easily perform any trick I have ever seen him do. But I cannot explain independent slate-writing other than by spirit-power, as I have often witnessed it in the presence of Dr. Dobson, of Maquoketa, Iowa, Dr. Henry Slade, of New York, and Charles E. Watkins, of Boston, Mass. And if Professor Hermann will teach me how to do it as they do, I hereby pledge myself to make over to him all the worldly goods I possess on earth.

The last sitting I had with any of the three named was with Mr. Watkins at the Queen City Park Camp-Meeting last season, with my wife, who had never seen him till then.

Before he came into the room she wrote six questions on as many slips of paper, rolled them into pellets, and mixed them up so as not to be able to tell one from another. When he came in he asked her to hold one of those pellets in her hand. He did not approach within four or five feet of the table. He verbally gave the name written on that first pellet, and answered the question as concisely as the one addressed could have if there in bodily form. For the second pellet, while she held it, his hand was controlled to write the answer and the name. For the third he did the same, each as correctly as he had answered the first. On opening the pellets, after holding them, they were found to be the ones he had answered.

After she had taken the fourth pellet in her hand, she placed two slates together, with a crumb of pencil between them, which she held in the other hand, and we could hear the scratching noise between the slates. Being opened, on one of the slates was found an answer to her concealed question—in that pellet—and the name of the one addressed signed thereto in his own well known handwriting.

She then held the remaining two in one hand, and two clean slates in her other hand for a few moments; on opening them, one was found covered with two separate messages in different handwritings, the questions in those pellets being answered correctly; and the names of the two spirits addressed signed to them, also, in their handwriting.

Mr. Watkins did not touch one of the pellets; there was no arrangement in those slates for a false surface; and we have the slates at home now, the writing on them protected by glass, the sides and ends of which have paper pasted over them to hold the glass in place.

The "exposé" that Prof. Hermann made before the "Press Club of New York" must have been a very "instructive (?) entertainment."

Good Proof of Spirit Identity.

A lady residing in Somerville, this State, recently informed me that in 1856 her husband, who was a medium, said to a materialist, "James, a spirit, is here." The person he addressed named over several of that name he had been acquainted with, but no one responded as being present. Finally the spirit said: "You ought to know me; we went to school together." He then asked, "Is it James Woodworth?" "Yes," said the spirit. The materialist said: "He is alive, and resides in Liverpool, England."

The following week the materialist called again, and said he had received a letter from his mother, who resided in Liverpool, informing him that he would be surprised to learn that James Woodworth was drowned last July. The materialist held another séance, when the spirit said, "You have it proved to you," and could get no more from the spirit.

Her husband did not make his power, or gift, public, but had on many occasions equally as satisfactory tests of spirits returning, and related several of them; but the above is just as good, as far as proof and evidence go, as more of a similar nature.

The lady giving me the above information is perfectly reliable. Her husband, the medium, has been a denizen of the spirit-world many years. It is needless for me to state that the lady is a pronounced Spiritualist in the midst of the sectarian church-members of different denominations that reside all about her, and she is a medium herself. What better evidence can any one have than to see spirits and have them made manifest through one's own organism?

Recently I met an ex-Universalist minister, residing in Somerville, Mass. He seemed delighted to inform me that he had received some satisfactory communications from his spirit-daughter and others; he also said that in the past he had received remarkable tests of spirit-identity from loved ones gone before. I could but contrast his views now and those entertained while preaching or advocating the Universalist doctrine, with no positive proof of demonstrating the truth of immortality. H.

THE HIDDEN WAY ACROSS THE THRESHOLD, or the Mystery which hath been Hidden for Ages and from Generations. An Explanation of the Concealed Forces in every Man to Open the Temple of the Soul, and to Learn the Guidance of the Unseen Hand. Illustrated and Made Plain with as Few Occult Phrases as Possible By J. C. Street, A. B N., Fellow of the Order S. S. S., and of the Brotherhood Z. Z. R. R Z. Z "All things come from within." Neither height nor depth can measure the possibilities of the human soul. Boston: Lee & Shepard, Publishers, 10 Milk street, next to Old South Meeting-house. 1887.

We have read this volume of 587 octavo pages, with a great deal of interest; and while we can by no means endorse all there is in it, we find it so suggestive and entertaining that we shall read it at least once more; possibly several times. The price is $3,50, but it is a cheap book, and the fact that two editions have been exhausted within a year shows that it is appreciated. While the Doctor is a thorough Spiritualist, and gives some of the best explanations of Spiritualism we have ever seen, he is also a Theosophist of fine culture, and his book contains more matter, both original and selected, which will teach a novice something of what Theosophy is, and something of the occult forces in the universe, than any book we have yet seen.

The Doctor belongs to the orders mentioned above, and has studied the wisdom of Eastern occultists under the masters themselves, and consequently knows what he is talking about. Besides that, he has a way of telling what he knows, in such a manner as to make others comprehend him.

As before intimated, the Doctor is not only a thinker, but he is a gleaner as well. He seems to have read about everything, including all the principal works on Spiritualism. His exposition of Spiritualism, its purposes and its philosophy, suits us as well as any we have seen. His chapter on "The Spiritualization of Matter" is especially commended. We would make some quotations from the book, but really, we do not know where to begin, or to leave off. Our readers are advised to purchase and study the book.—New Thought

Among the Mexican Tailors.

The tailor measures it. "It is not enough."

"Is there enough of this piece to make me a pair of pantaloons?"

"Yes, sir; day after to-morrow I will send them to you by my son."

The boy comes with the pantaloons two days later. The customer notes that the youth is wearing a jacket made of the same piece of cloth.

"Boy, how is this that the other tailor said that there was not enough cloth for a pair of pantaloons, and your father has not only made my pantaloons but also a jacket for you out of the piece?"

"Sir, the son of the other tailor is a much bigger boy than I am."

WESTBURY.—In relation to belief of some that what are claimed to be spirit communications are simply the result of mind-reading, Mr. L. Hakes writes: "I have been an investigator of the phenomena of Spiritualism since 1851, and had multitudes of communications that seem to me anything but mind-reading. Several years ago I became acquainted with a Mr. Lee, living nine miles south of me. He was a medium. I did not know of any of his kindred. I was at his place one Thursday of the week, and proposed to him to see if we could not communicate with each other by aid of our spirit friends. I proposed that we each sit that night, and also on Friday and Saturday nights, at eight o'clock, half an hour each night, and see what the result might be. After I returned home I learned there was to be a spiritual meeting the next Sunday, six miles west of me, at 2 o'clock P. M., to be addressed by a prominent lecturer. That Thursday night I sat as agreed upon by myself and Mr. Lee, and soon after I sat there came raps. I questioned the spirit, and was informed by the raps that it was the spirit of a Mr. Lee, uncle of the one I had seen that day. I asked him if he would go and do an errand for me to his nephew. He said he would. I asked him to tell his nephew I wanted him to meet me at the spiritual meeting at such a place on the next Sunday at six o'clock P. M. In a little while he gave me his signal, and informed me that he had done my errand to his nephew, as I requested.

The next evening at eight o'clock I sat again, and the same spirit informed me he had just been to his nephew, and was informed that he would let me know the next night whether he would meet me at the meeting or not. On Saturday night he sent word by his spirit uncle that he would see me at that meeting the next day. On Sunday I went to the meeting, and had been there but a few minutes when Mr. Lee came. I asked him what caused him to come, and how he heard of the meeting. He said, 'You sent word to me about it by the spirit of my uncle, first on Thursday night, to meet you here to-day. I could not say then whether I could come. He came again Friday night, and also on Saturday night. I then told him to say I would meet you here to-day, and I come and find you here as you requested.'

Will some one tell me where mind-reading comes in in this case?"

MALONE.—Lyman Perry writes, advocating prayer as one of the most efficient means of reforming and elevating mankind. After arguing in favor of prayer for those living visibly in our midst, he says: "Of the two chief religions of our civilization the Orthodox Protestant is the most heartless and cold in its feeling and treatment of the so-called dead. While the Catholics pray for those who have passed on, unless they regard such as having become attainted with 'the mortal sin,' the Protestants, if a spark of life remains, sympathize with and pray heartily for their fellowman, but the moment he is dead they entirely cease all further prayer and effort in his behalf! They leave him to his fate. Some say they do not want even to hear from their friends 'over there.' Oh! cruel and unnatural dogma! Miserable creed that would arrest all aspiration and hope for the departed! How are these to obey the command to pray for all men, given in I. Timothy, II.: 1 if they exclude the dead therefrom? The living are but a very small portion of the all men. The vast and overwhelming majority are on the other side. And these all died more or less imperfect, and need help to progress to higher planes of spiritual development. Why, then, should we lose all interest in them, and offer no prayer in their behalf, as we did for some of them on earth? Cannot God hear and answer prayer for them now as well as then, in that world as well as in this? Spiritualists must answer in the affirmative. Why, then, should they not pray for the dead, especially for their friends recently deceased? Could anything be more natural and reasonable, more promotive of the grandest aspirations and desires of the human soul?"

NEW HAVEN.—E. P. Goodsell writes: "One of the brightest and most encouraging signs of the times as seen in many a year is the noble effort being made by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and her coadjutors, as spoken of heretofore in the BANNER OF LIGHT, regarding 'the Woman's Bible'—unwilling as they are that their sex should longer remain under the curse of slavery inflicted by those persons who made up, from tradition and otherwise, the so-called Christian Scriptures.

It cannot be successfully disputed that the noblest aspirations of women, of all the centuries since the Bible became extant, have been crippled by and through its binding them to the observance of certain meanings and dogmas purposely interwoven throughout its pages.

It is well known that a trained priesthood has been drawn from the various useful employments—useful to humanity and of true value to the world, but entering into the compact of the priesthood changed the idea of Nature, that man should earn his own subsistence. The Bible and its priesthood have been ever set in array against women, the mothers of our race; and being the only source of claimed authority in religion, will continue to resist the opening of any and all new avenues of light and knowledge to the people of America.

In India, religious law and custom demand that every female child shall be given to a male child in infancy, and she is thus bound hand and foot in such an entanglement during the unnatural stay of her mortal life on earth. Is it any wonder that only pigmies are born in that country? No! But the greater wonder is seen in the fact that intelligent spirits accept such a birth as that must of necessity be in the inception of the idea and its outcome. Possibly, however, there may be a grain of evolution following in the wake of the surging masses who are, and ever have been, struggling against unjust laws, to strike for freedom of thought and investigation. Christian countries also present kindred anomalies in their treatment of woman.

Let our own sisters in America first cast off forever the religious yoke—and in their might they are able to do that. Let those who, like Augustine, declare that 'woman was the cause of sin,' be firmly met with the declaration that such an accusation is void of fact and truth. The heathen may well laugh at our Christian college-bred missionaries for their futile and inglorious attempt to convert the peoples of so-called heathen countries to such fanciful ideas.

Sin, or 'the curse,' originated not in woman but in man, and culminated in the priesthood.

Woman is our world's best type of redemption. Christianity is in no sense a redeemer or saviour. Therefore I am glad to see the sisterhood of America awaking, if in never so small a degree, to the importance of the question of their rights and the bigoted attitude of the Christian Scriptures thereto."

WEST END.—Mrs. F. A. Logan writes that having spent three weeks of the time at the recent Oakland Camp-Meeting—occupying one of the thirty tents near the mammoth tent situated on an elevated spot of ground, bedecked and shaded with evergreen foliage, and adjacent to Lake Merritt, she was privileged to meet with and be greeted with many a warm clasp of the hand by friends from Oregon, Washington Territory, Nevada and other localities, who have kindly coöperated with her in years gone by. She speaks appreciatively of tests given by Mrs. Miller, Mrs. P. W. Stevens (sister of the late E. V. Wilson), et als., and addresses by Mrs. Crossett and Mrs. Cowles, Mrs. Dr. King, Mrs. Dr. Thompson (of Portland, Ore.), Dr. Hanbert (who is settled as regular trance speaker over the Spiritual Society of Seattle, W. T.), and others. The labors of these workers, together with the grand ministrations of the Eastern speakers, she thinks, produced a profound result, and she feels that the multitude received many new thoughts, and that much good was accomplished. She considers, however, that more spontaneity and less of rigid "regulations" will be found by camp-managers generally to be the best course to pursue when large numbers of mediums are found gathered together, subject, as they inevitably are, to the impressions of their guides: The door being thus left open, in her view, "a far greater outpouring of Heaven's choicest blessings upon the world of humanity" may be looked for. Mrs. Logan can be permanently addressed as above.

BOSTON.—"Franklin" writes: "People in this world are too much afraid of being sympathetic—as if it would hurt them, and they would 'go to the dogs' if they did not shut up their feelings in an iron box, as it were; while no one is required to do anything which he or she cannot afford to do, all will find that instead of hurting them, every kind word, every sympathetic expression, makes it easier to live, easier to stand the wear and tear of life; easier to be understood, and easier to keep peace; easier to accumulate riches of wealth material, and the higher kind too. This idea came to me to-day as I was looking about me, and reflecting on our methods of school work, of bringing up children, of treating criminals, of treating paupers, and those in asylums. Why cannot the world talk a little less about quarrels, and try to find ways to grow sympathetic?

I shall not soon forget a kind word which a rich old merchant in Broad street, during the war, gave me when I applied to him for business. He died years ago; never did he do anything for me but say a few sympathetic words, and I never saw him save that once, but it did me such a deal of good that I have not forgotten it in a quarter of a century and more—and yet it cost him nothing!"

MOUNT EVEREST.

[While the country below is wrapped in darkness, on Mt. Everest, owing to its great elevation, daylight still remains.]

BY MISS S. W. KELLEY.

Great darkness shrouds the plains below,
But on thy crest's eternal snow
The sunshine lies;
Deep silence through all nature reigns,
Like holy hush in sacred fanes,
Ere anthems rise.

Everest! thy summit, gleaming bright,
Glows far and near, a beacon-light,
To east and west;
So human aspiration rears
Through the great darkness of the years
Its shining crest.

In every soul there is one spot
Where total darkness cometh not—
A sacred place;
And there shall rays of Love Divine
At last in living glory shine,
With wondrous grace.

Oh, Mount! majestic and sublime,
Thou art the herald of a time
Which yet shall be:
When earth, from errors dark unbound,
With songs of light and love shall sound
From sea to sea.

A MUCH DISCOVERED COUNTRY.—From Mott street in New York to the Chinese quarter in San Francisco, the Celestials are talking about the Chinese discovery of America in 499, which antedates by some five hundred years the Norsemen's discovery. Then the Welsh are recalling the alleged voyage to America, in 1170, of Madoc, who, unlike the Norsemen who builded the Newport mill and then left, remained and grew up with the country. It has been claimed that the white Indians, seen on the western banks of the Mississippi by occasional wanderers centuries later, were the descendants of Madoc and his followers. With some show of reason the Welsh urge that the claims to distinction of a discoverer who comes and stays ought to be considered. At all events, it is growing more clear that in naming this country America, in honor of Vespucci, who came later than Cabot, later than Columbus, later than the Pole John of Rolno, or than Nicolo Zeno, the Venetian, injustice has been done, not only to Columbus, but to the Norwegians from Herjulfson down to Thorfin and including Leif, Thorwald and Thornstein.

We have thus far claims in behalf of the Chinese, the Norwegians, the Welsh, the Venetians, the Poles, the French and the Genoese.—Milwaukee (Ill) Sentinel.

EVANS'S MENTAL CURE, VITAL MAGNETIC CURE.—The so-called Christian Science, or the no-disease theory, is proven to be a mortal error by the philosophy inculcated in the two treatises above mentioned.

The philosophy in the Mental Cure Book illustrates the utilizing of the mind and subtle healing elements, in the form of a self-cure process, and acts as an auxiliary to all modes of eradicating disease extant, and harmonizes the ancient record with the progressive age of to-day. The two books will be sent by mail on receipt of $2,68, by the publishers, Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston, Mass.

The Spiritual Rostrum.

[From The Daily Dove.]

"Every Soul that has been Touched by Death has Part in These Exercises."

MRS. R. S. LILLIE.

[Reported by G. H. Hawes.]

We are reminded most forcibly here and now of the thought of one whose breadth and depth and liberality of ideas and feelings have made the way possible for your utterances in a great measure to-day, and it is him who said, "The world is my country." I believe that Spiritualism says this in reality, and looking upon the faces of those who have been servants of the cause, upon whom the world of spirit has called for assistance, that they might voice their sentiments and give the truth, we find that there are those who have come from the east and from the west, from the north and the south.

Spiritualism, or this grand message of the soul and its immortality, gives to us a positive certainty that those who have gone before us are only separated by the thin veil that hangs only over our vision, not over theirs; that while it is so dull and misty and filled with tears on our side, it is clear to them, so clear that in reality there is no veil on their side. They behold even now your thought, and with this thought of the world and the needs of mankind, the message that is to be given here, we believe, is for all, the unbeliever as well as the believer, the one who readily receives the same, or the one who yet must wait for the growth in knowledge that prepares the mind for its receptivity.

Wherever death has been a guest, there Spiritualism comes as a divine messenger of light to show what death is, to open the gates that they may stand thrown wider on their hinges, and reveal to us, in a measure at least, a knowledge of what awaits the immortal soul of man.

It is well that you hold your days memorial whereon you call up the pleasant memories of those who, while tabernacled in the clay with you, had such pleasant associations, and have left such sweet memories.

While they have changed in the mortal, they step from behind the veil, and are present with you, and not a spirit whose name has been mentioned but we find their immediate presence to our spiritual sight made clear, that tells us in reality: "Yes, we are undivided still, and there is but the thin veil of your mortal selves that hides you from the gaze of those who are around and about you."

There is no death; they stand so near to you that it is needless for the soul to seek by its power to reach out toward them with the thought to span or bridge the distance between your love and theirs. Therefore our thought upon this memorial service would be that the world is our country, and that every soul that has been touched by death has part in these exercises, especially those who are here assembled, as we are children of one great family.

The infinite spirit, God above us, and we the children of this living service of life, and every one of us, whatsoever our difference of opinion or belief, cemented by this point of unity, of death itself, at least upon this platform, stand united: You may believe in gods one or many; you may believe in Saviours one or many; you may differ one with another in opinions in regard to these things; you may each have an altar reared in your minds where the good ideal or idealized is placed upon the throne thereof, and wherever the name God is spoken your mind will revert to this altar, and your picture of God will rise before you, and according to that will your thoughts go forth; differ on these things as you may, our tears fall alike, our sorrow is just the same, our hearts are touched by the same bond of sympathy.

Whenever we are brought by the side of a grave there is no human heart that stands not mute in the presence of this mysterious change; never a difference so great or a belief so strong but what at that point the soul cries out in its agony and lonliness; and the reason that Spiritualism is here to-day, as a message more emphatic—with its positive supply of evidences and accumulation of witnesses, and the thousands who stand up and testify of its truth—is because of this great need in humanity, is because of this uncertainty by the side of the grave of our silent loved ones. Belief does not exactly satisfy, and all the difference of interpretation of texts, that contained any comfort whatsoever, left so large a blank in the human heart, and such a void, such an uncertainty, such a want of satisfaction that it could not be otherwise than that the great law of need and the great infinite power of love should at last respond to this, and in response to the same we have our Spiritualism of to-day.

At this point I want to say that many times the inquirer or skeptic says: "What is the reason that you as Spiritualists mourn just as other people mourn?" Our answer is that Spiritualism softens grief and sorrow, and pours light upon this change. But Spiritualism does not change nature, and our nature in the mortal is a desire for the medium of the mortal body, for the communion of soul with soul. What are we, each of us, as bodies external? We are mediums for the expression of the spirit; your bodies are mediums by which you communicate with one another. The loss of this is what we mourn, but we no more mourn uncertainties, we no more sorrow over our fears or doubts, but we have this great cause of sorrow removed; we have a knowledge at last that though the body passes away, there is no loss of the spirit.

Therefore the consciousness that somewhere, sometime, when death shall have loosed the bonds that held us and made us free, we, too, having been through the second birth of the spirit, shall at last pass out into the land beautiful, where their souls are. Oh! how glad we are that God, shall we say, did not close the way after the soul's departing. One of the darkest thoughts of the theological teachings of my past recollection is, that smiles went out never to return again; and I hear, even now, along the walls of memory, ringing back to my consciousness, the words so oft repeated as I have stood beside the dead: "They can no more come to yon, but you shall one day go to them." And at the close of this there has always been the largest word to me in all language, and yet it is but the little word "if." We have been told in the past: "You shall one day go to them if you will believe and accept." Spiritualism removes this "if," and says you are going anyway!

Therefore the greatest obstacle in the way of human happiness has been removed by this message; therefore we no longer mourn—saying if we live aright we shall meet them again! If we live right we shall be happier than if we live wrong; but if we live by any means wrong or deviate from the path of true righteousness they will, as God's ministering spirits of good unto us, aid us back to that which is right.

And as this is the knowledge, then, though we have our days of reunion when we throw open the gate still wider, that the spirits may bear back some message of light to us, yet we have a knowledge that they are constantly present with us to breathe a benediction, to give us a word of counsel or cheer, to uplift our saddened and drooping spirits, to point us upward to a higher life and better living, and at last to meet us after we pass the portal that leads us into the way of life and immortality that lies beyond.

Our workers have fallen on almost every shore and in almost every land, and just at this point the mind, without going to a far-off land and finding a lowly grave, remembers him who going forth to gather more light upon the material plane, stopped by the wayside, and passed through the gates that stood ajar, even on that unknown waste, away from all civilization, and yet not away from the loving angel-friends who had followed our loved worker, William Denton, on his researches. I speak of this at the point where we say the world and the vast country of knowledge is ours, as the children of earth seeking light, wisdom and truth, and death is the blessing at last to emancipate every spirit and set it free.

It has been ours to stand very near those gates that swing wider on their hinges and see souls pass out triumphant under a knowledge of this truth.

Many times our doubting skeptic friend has said that Spiritualism may be very well to live by, but wait until you come to die. We have waited these forty years of Modern Spiritualism, and have seen its philosophers or its believers led up to the gate of life, and it opened wide to them, and never one yet but either shouted or whispered back the message on their parting breath, "I see them; they are coming; it is better than I thought it was; I shall wait for you." And with this message of assurance of life, positive, the certainty of immortality, death has been vanquished and life is victorious. How many times through the gates ajar we have seen an angel stand looking this way, then gazing afar, pointing with outstretched hand to the spirits' goal, then silently leading a human soul out through the gates toward the better land. How oft we have watched them close and waited, ourselves tear-stained, outside the gate that closed with such a jarring sound. But at last the soul once more came back to us through the open door with a message of spirit-power; and that message was named SPIRITUALISM!

This is the third annual Report of the present Commissioner of Agriculture, Norman J. Colman, and is, in connection with those of the various divisions of this important branch of our Government, one of the most exhaustive that has appeared. As an indication of the existing status of the Department, it is said that the demand for its official documents far exceeds that of any previous time, three hundred and eighty thousand copies having been distributed the past year, and four hundred thousand of the bulky volume before us printed in anticipation of that of the current one. As one of the thousand items of interest, so far as the wealth-producing resources of our country are related, it is mentioned that more than half of the wheat and flour imports into Great Britain are from this country, and that last year the proportion from America was increased, while that from India was diminished. The comparative prominence of this country in its wheat surplus may be realized from the fact that where our exports have exceeded 136,000,000 bushels per annum for ten years, those of Russia were but 66,000,000, and of India 24,000,000 for the same period. Following the Report of the Commissioner, the volume contains those of the Entomologist, Chemist, Botanist, Vegetable Pathologist, Ornithologist and Mammalogist, Bureau of Animal Industry, Statistician, Forestry Division, Microscopist, Pomologist, Seed Division and Superintendent of Gardens and Grounds, and one on the National Horse of America. A number of these are finely illustrated.

TEMPERANCE AND PROHIBITION. By G. H. Stockham, M. D. 16mo, cloth, pp. 131. Oakland, Cal.: The author.

It must be admitted that with all the effort that has been made to decrease the sale of intoxicating liquors and lessen the number of those who habitually use them, neither the one nor the other has been accomplished; and the inquiry naturally arises, is the object sought impossible to attain, or are the methods employed wrong, and hence futile? Dr. Stockham brings for the consideration of his readers views of the matter seldom presented, and never to our knowledge in so clear and rational a manner. At first sight some of his positions may appear inconsistent with his admission that the fearful effects of intemperance affect the welfare of every household in the land; but a careful reading of what he has to say upon the subject of its suppression will be likely to lead the reader's mind into new channels of thought, and possibly of action.

THE SAFE SIDE. A Theistic Refutation of the Divinity of Christ. By Richard M. Mitchell. 8vo, cloth, pp. 385. Chicago: R. M. Mitchell, 6141 Stewart Avenue. Boston: J. P. Mendum.

The author thinks the attention of Christians ought to be arrested by the fact that the first step in worshiping Christ consists in defaming God, for it cannot be shown how Christ is a saviour without representing God to have made a partial failure. Further, that the declaration of Christendom that God was circumvented by an independent and inferior power, constitutes the greatest insult that man has ever offered his creator, and that insult has borne its natural fruit and been the greatest misfortune mankind has ever known.

GLEANINGS FROM THE PAGES OF HISTORY, by the Aid and in the Light of Progress. 8vo, cloth, pp. 300. Boston: For sale by Colby & Rich.

Seventeen articles in prose and nineteen songs and hymns with music constitute the contents of this volume. Of the former are "Platform of Principles and a General Basis of the Coming Church"; "A Statement of Facts and a Compend of Evidence"; "Spiritual Truths Recorded in the Bible," and "Reasons for Not Being an Orthodox Church-Member." Of songs with music are "Footsteps of Angels," "Shining Shore," "We Shall Meet Beyond the River" and "Home of the Soul." The compilation appears to have been made with care and good judgment.

BACON AND SHAKSPEARE.—Skeptics like Mr. Donnelly have done their best to throw dust upon the fame of William Shakspeare, but there are many scholars who laugh at them. Dr. T. W. Parsons, the accomplished translator of Dante, published the following recently in the Evening Transcript:

Shakspeare! whoever thou mayest prove to be,
God save the Bacon that men find in thee!
If that philosopher, though bright and wise,
Those lofty labors did in truth devise,
Then it must follow, as the night the day,
That "Hamlet," "Lear," "Macbeth," and each great play
That certifies nobility of mind,
Was written by the "meanest of mankind."

Original Essay.

RELIGION AND REASON.

When religion and reason shall join hands and go forth in the advocacy of that true religion which shall be founded upon the brotherhood of man and the final salvation of all through works, then will have commenced that era of religious freedom and thought which will awaken the consciousness of man and arouse to action the nobler faculties of his soul. He will then go forth in the investigation of that which pertains to his immortal life with naught to hinder him from coming to just and honest conclusions with reference to the same. And when man, without bias, without prejudice, with no preconceived ideas in his religious belief, shall step out upon the broad platform with enlightened reason as his guide, he will perceive that he and all humankind hold the same sacred relation to God, or the Great Infinite Cause; and that he has not the right in religion to claim any superiority over his brother man only so far as he lives a purer and better life; and then, if the horizon of his mind is bounded by that charity which wisdom dictates, he will see adequate cause why his brother man exists upon a lower plane, and will cast no reproach upon him in consequence of his condition, but rather strive to awaken in him a consciousness of his real state, and show him the true road which must be traveled by all. It will be apparent to him that none have superiority in God's kingdom only in and through works, and those works must harmonize with God's plans, which are universal plans, and open alike for all.

And further, all will find, when a true religious belief shall have become universal, that each and all hold the same relation to God, or the Infinite Cause, and that that relation can in no way be severed; that the highest work man can perform is for the elevation of human kind, and that to first inform himself with reference to God's plans for the salvation of all of human kind is a duty he cannot ignore, and the one paramount duty he owes to self, to God, and all of human kind. Learning that duty, his religion will be one wherein enlightened reason will be his guide, and he will go forth true to his highest convictions, ever ready to take a step in advance if, through a higher unfoldment of his soul, he should perceive a new truth of which he had not had cognizance before.

True religion is that which elevates man, and, as a consequence, means progression; for the elevation of man is progression, or soul-growth, and he who will work best for God is he who understandeth best himself, and, understanding, realizes the fact that the underlying principle in true religion is a love of God, which will elevate self to higher kingdoms of love for humanity as essential to a true love of God. When that true religion shall have gained such a foothold upon earth, in the mind of man, that he readily perceives the true basis upon which rests man's salvation, man's progress, he will arise and go forth from day to day with no fear of a revengeful God in his heart, but his God will be one of love for all humanity, and one in which there can be no desire to punish any human being only so far as it shall work reform, advancement toward a higher unfolded life of the soul, that germ of intelligence which came from God, and as such will ever progress when it truly understands and comprehends self and its vital or true relation to God.

That life which is in us all is there by virtue of our inherent relation to God, the great, overruling Cause, and by no mode of reasoning can any man make that relation different in one from what it is in all others, for it is the self-same in all; and although the manifestation in one seemeth higher than in another, and there appears to be no explanation of why one human soul should give forth a manifestation above another, still it is inherent in the physical form, and is clear unto him who is developed in wisdom sufficient to comprehend the true functional relations existing between that immortal spark and the physical body.

Driven Out of Spain.

THE EXPULSION OF THE JEWS BY KING FERDINAND.

[In our issue for July 21st we noted the controversy now going on between Mosessohn, Joski and others, in regard to the Jews of this country entering politics as a unit—M. Mosessohn advising them not to think of such separate action, and reminding them of the fate that overtook the Hebrews in Spain when they had reached the highest point, and [under the famous and skillful Don Isaac Abrabanel] actually held the reins of government (financially) in that country. As some interest is being aroused on this topic, we take the present occasion to put before our readers the following extracts from a lecture delivered awhile since in Boston, at the Temple Adath Israel, by the gifted Rabbi Solomon Schindler, in which this expulsion of the Jews was the principal topic.—ED. B. OF L.]

The history of mankind is by no means a book the pages of which have been kept scrupulously clean. All the great events in the life of the colossus called mankind have been accompanied by more or less misery and suffering of individuals; all great innovations have been ushered into the world not without the most excruciating labor-pains, or—to quote the words of Marat, the great revolutionist of the last century—"Revolutions are never perfumed with rose-oil." It seems almost as if historians had found nothing worth recording in the life of the human race other than the miseries through which it has passed and the blunders which it has made. Surprising as this fact may appear it is quite natural that it is so. We forget easily the good days through which we have passed, and, as a rule, we love to dwell complacently upon the misfortunes which have beset our way. We are quick to observe wickedness, but very slow to recognize virtue. A crime committed somewhere is not only minutely recorded in the news columns of a daily paper, but the facts are eagerly read and still more eagerly discussed by the public, while comparatively less attention is paid to the good that is constantly practiced by the many. Virtue loves secrecy, though it need not fear publicity, and the one criminal action of which we occasionally hear is a hundredfold counterbalanced by the honorable deeds of which we are not informed at all.

The horrors of the inquisition and of the expulsion of the Jews from Spain, which occurred in the year 1492, two days previous to the departure of Christopher Columbus on his adventurous but world-famed voyage, are facts which we could hardly believe were not the authentic proofs of their reality in our hands. During the last two centuries the Jews in Spain had been tossed about like a ball between the two contestants—the advancing northern Christians and the receding southern Moors. A great many of them had allied themselves to the conquerors and had embraced Christianity, but so lax had they been in their allegiance to the Church, and so much were they still attached to their former co-religionists, that they were not only suspected by the dignitaries of the Church on account of their rationalism, but feared on account of their skeptical tendencies.

The inquisitory tribunal felt, therefore, that Christianity could never take root in Spanish soil unless the Maranos, the pseudo-Christians, were cut loose from the Jews, through whose influence they were still kept from a thorough amalgamation with the conquerors. Hence the desire to expel them, to obtain by brute force what could not be reached by arguments.

King Ferdinand, who was always pinched for money, thought that he would improve the state of his finances by the sequestration of the wealth which the Jews were said to have accumulated during centuries of toil and labor. That his policy was a mistaken one, that he was ignorant of the very first financial law that money is of value only as an agent of exchange between commodities, is so well known that I need not reflect upon it. On March 30th, 1492, he issued the famous, or, rather, the infamous, edict, that after the 31st of July no Jew should be seen upon Spanish soil. It is a lengthy document, and it has been preserved so that we can scrutinize it to the letter, but what do we find? Were the Jews to be driven from the country on account of any immoral or criminal action on their part? Had they been rude, riotous or ungovernable? Not a word is said about that, not the slightest allusion is made to any improper or unlawful conduct on their part. Were they accused, as they were frequently in other countries, of being usurers or money-grabbers? Not with a word does King Ferdinand refer to avarice or ill-gotten wealth. He brings only one accusation against them, and upon this he dwells at considerable length. Their only crime was that they opposed the Catholic faith; that they induced others to do the same; that they held fast to the laws of Moses, and that they seduced others to join them in their religious practices.

In the second paragraph of the edict he allows them to depart in peace during the three months given to them, and apparently permits them to take their wealth with them. A clause, however, upsets his good will, and shows the real inwardness of his plan. He prohibits them to export gold, silver, jewels and all such articles, the export of which was interdicted before. Thus they were not allowed to take anything with them. In the third paragraph he finds it necessary to threaten with severest punishment all those of his subjects who should aid, protect or assist any of the emigrants after the time appointed for their departure had elapsed. Two days of grace were afterward added to the three months, so that the Jews left Spain on Aug. 2d, 1492, while Columbus set sail on Aug. 4th of the same year.

The misery by which the departure of the Jews was accompanied has been narrated repeatedly. The fact remains for us that the Jews had been innocent, that their suffering was intense, and that Ferdinand, instead of gaining, had lost by the transaction.

But there are several points which we ought not to overlook, and which, though they do not palliate the crime, reduce it to a truer measurement. With the exception of some ruffians, the people of Spain do not seem to have been in sympathy with the king's decrees. Although the Jews lingered to the last day, they were not molested by them.

The expulsion of the Jews from Spain broke the spirit not only of the exiles, but of all the Jews, wherever they lived. Reason, furthermore, was suppressed for some time, and the night of ignorance began to rest heavily all over Europe.

PEOPLE GENERALLY BELIEVE that if the Blood is pure, the health will be good. The purity of the blood is guaranteed only when the kidneys are naturally active. The fluids may flow freely, and yet the kidneys fail to keep the blood clean. This will be indicated if you have MALARIA, STOMACH TROUBLES, RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, SCROFULA, SKIN DISEASES, IMPOTENCY, HEADACHES, LAME BACK, NEURALGIA, CARBUNCLES AND BOILS, ABSCESSES, WEAK EYES, NERVOUSNESS, POOR APPETITE, and in women FEMALE TROUBLES. These disorders show that your blood is full of uric, kidney, acid poison, AND YOU CAN NEVER GET WELL until you clean out the blood with the only recognized scientific blood tonic,

VERMONT.

Report of the Quarterly Convention of the State Spiritualist Association, Held in "Grand Army Hall," Newport, Vt., June 29th, 30th and July 1st, 1888.

The Convention was called to order at 10:30 by our esteemed President, Mrs. Abbie W. Crossett, and was opened by a Conference participated in by Mrs. S. A. Wiley, who led with an appropriate invocation; the spirit of Thomas Middleton was seen by Mrs. A. P. Brown standing by sister Wiley during its delivery.

She was followed by A. A. Wheelock, of Boston; Dr. Dean Clarke, Dr. Charles Woodhouse, of Rutland (an ex reverend), and Sabin Scott, of Eden, Vt. Dr. E. A. Smith, of Brandon, explained the origin of this meeting, and the efforts he had made to bring it about.

Others followed, all speaking with great power and effect. Mrs. Crossett closed the session with very appropriate remarks. Adjourned.

Afternoon.—Called to order at 2:10, the President in the chair. Beautiful song and music by the choir, which was composed of the following array of talent: Prof. Ober of Waterbury, Vt.; Mrs. Florence Ely of Wallingford, Vt., Mrs. Carr of Boston, Mass.; A. A. Wheelock of Boston; with Mrs. J. E. Thompson of Brandon, Vt., as organist. Their fine singing throughout the Convention richly deserved the hearty applause given by appreciative audiences.

Conference of thirty minutes, opened by Dr. S. N. Gould of West Randolph, who spoke earnestly and well, as did Drs. Clarke and Smith, who followed him. Conference was followed by a vigorous and timely lecture by A. A. Wheelock. After a brief discussion of a subject concerning the movements of the Convention, the meeting closed with music and song.

Evening.—Came to order at 7:15. The choir gave us "When the Mists Have Cleared Away" in a pleasing manner. Conference opened by Mr. Clement, followed by Dr. H. B. Storer of Boston, who recited in his forcible way some of his experiences, and also warmly conveyed his fraternal greetings to his many friends in Vermont. Music. Lecture of the evening by Mrs. S. A. Wiley of Rockingham, who spoke to the satisfaction of the large audience. The choir sang: "We are Bound for the Evergreen Shore," and at the close of the remarks by Mrs. Crossett, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," after which we listened to the most pleasing and refreshing speech of the Convention——but I forgot, I was not to tell who made it, nor anything about it, and I will not, only I hope to hear him again. Adjourned.

Saturday Morning.—Called to order at 9:35 by one of the managers, Mrs. S. A. Wiley. Conference opened by A. A. Wheelock in a vigorous manner, followed by Dr. Geo. Dutton, of Rutland, Dr. H. B. Storer and others. An interesting conference. Mrs. A. P. Brown, of St. Johnsbury Center, gave us a fine lecture, followed by Mrs. Abbie W. Crossett, who, in her loving and tender manner, gave us words of comfort and wisdom. Music and song: "We Will All Meet Again in the Morning Land." Adjourned.

Afternoon.—Called to order at 1:40, the President in the chair. Mr. Joseph D. Stiles, of Weymouth, Mass., was then introduced, and gave a fine inspirational poem. Dr. Geo. Dutton read an address on "The Science of Health." The Doctor goes deeply into his subject. Music and song.

Dr. H. B. Storer being introduced read a poem and gave a fine address, after which Mr. Stiles held a platform test séance, interspersed with interesting remarks by his control. The numerous tests he gave were nearly all recognized by friends present. Mr. Stiles fully sustained his high reputation as a powerful test medium and genial good fellow, as well as a help in times of need. Twenty-four names were spoken and spirits described at this time. This séance closed the session.

Saturday Evening.—Came to order at 8:10, Mrs. Crossett presiding. Music; recitation of a poem by Dean Clarke, who, I should judge, has fine elocutionary powers. This was followed by a highly satisfactory test séance by Bro. J. D. Stiles, who named forty-two spirits, who were nearly all recognized. A fine address by Dr. Clarke closed the session.

Sunday Morning.—Came to order at 9:30, the President in her place. Music. A rousing Conference was indulged in, participated in by Sabin Scott, Mr. Clement, Mrs. A. P. Brown, Dean Clarke, Miss S. Lizzie Kwer, of Portsmouth, N. H. (who spoke beautifully), Dr. E. A. Smith, L. O. Weeks, Dr. Gould, Charles Woodhouse, and several others. Music and song. A. A. Wheelock then gave a fine discourse. Dean Clarke followed in his usually interesting way, as did Mrs. Crossett and S. N. Gould. Music by the choir closed the session.

Sunday Afternoon.—Session commenced at 2:15. Splendid music. Mr. Stiles being introduced delivered an inspirational poem, and then gave in his rapid manner seventy-four names, with a great deal of description and items of interest about each one. Nearly all recognized.

Music, after which Mrs. Fannie Davis Smith was introduced as the speaker of the session, and nobly did this gifted lady sustain her high reputation as a speaker. She was followed with the closest attention throughout. Music and song concluded the meeting.

Closing Session.—Met at 7:40, the President presiding. Music. Conference opened by Mr. Clement, followed by Dr. Smith, Mrs. Crossett, Mrs. Brown, Mr. Crain, of Hyde Park, Vt., Mr. Thompson—who acknowledged the correctness of a test given by Mr. Stiles that afternoon, saying that the medium could not by any possibility have had any knowledge of the incidents related by "Swift Arrow." Conference closed by Bro. Stiles in interesting remarks.

Dr. H. B. Storer then gave an earnest and eloquent address fitted for the closing of the convention. Music and song. Mr. Stiles then took the platform, much to the satisfaction of the large audience, and gave us an excellent poetic talk, after which he gave the names of fifty-nine spirits who presented themselves for recognition, and but few were disappointed. A fine poem from Mr. Stiles closed the séance.

Resolutions of thanks to all who had in any way aided us to enjoy this convention in this lovely spot on Lake Memphremagog—especially to Dr. Smith and his associate managers for their successful efforts in getting up the excursion—were read by the Secretary and adopted by the convention, after which we adjourned to meet again in October at Waterbury, Vt., if satisfactory arrangements can be made there with Messrs. Barrett and Son, of the Waterbury Hotel.

This convention was very harmonious; a progressive spirit was manifested by all the speakers, and I for one went away feeling strengthened anew to meet the many trials of life here on the earth-plane, or primary department in the school of human progress.

LUTHER O. WEEKS, Sec'y.

MY OWN SHALL COME.

BY JOHN BURROUGHS.

Serene I hold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, nor tide, nor sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time nor fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No winds can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it has sown,
And garner up its fruits and tears.

The waters know their own, and draw
The brook that springs on yonder height;
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delight.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

July Magazines.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—The remarkable art collection of William T. Walters of Baltimore is the subject of the opening article, illustrated with engravings of five paintings contained in it, the subjects of which, though skillfully treated, are not of a very pleasing nature. An admirable story of Southern life is "T'other Miss Norie." An interesting account is given of the National Asylum for Disabled Soldiers, Dayton, O., where nearly five thousand defenders of the Union in the late war are fed, lodged, clothed, taught, nursed and amused by the government. "Ecuador and Her Cities," "Early New England Choirs and Singing Schools," are among the remaining contents. New York: 749 Broadway.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.—The editor, who at the time of the issuance of this number was in New Mexico, reports incidents of his experience and something of his labors for the diffusion of light amid much darkness. A correspondent argues forcibly and at some length that "If Man is Mortal his Creation is Crime." Many other articles are creditable to their authors, and fully sustain the good reputation this monthly has acquired as a stanch advocate and promoter of liberal and progressive thought. Waco, Texas: James D. Shaw, editor and publisher.

THE GNOSTIC.—The principal articles are "The New Religion," by George Chainey, Answers to Questions, by W. J. Colville, and a "Rosy Cross Sermon," by F. B. Dowd. San Francisco: 17 Flood Building.

THE VACCINATION INQUIRER condemns the practice of outrages on emigrants in the name of vaccination, only tolerated because the victims are too helpless for resentment. That steerage passengers upon arriving in New York are vaccinated by one man at the rate of five hundred and fifty an hour, at a dollar a head, it justly deems a cause for shame and loathing. Rather than that the New York press fill its columns with sensational, and for the most part fabulous, reports derogatory of mediums, would it not be more commendable and beneficial to do something to terminate, as the Inquirer suggests, the career of those "who with virus in hand practice this brigandage on humble folk" who seek to better their forlorn condition in this "land of the free."

Judge Dailey on "Bibles."

As elsewhere mentioned by our special correspondent, we are in receipt of the full text of the discourse delivered Sunday, 22d—at the opening of the Lake Pleasant Camp Meeting for '88—by Judge A. H. Dailey, which we shall place before our readers next week.

Prisons and Prisoners.

As all our readers are apprised, the National Prison Association, of which ex-President Hayes is president, held a prolonged meeting in Boston last week, at which were discussed all the various questions relating to the condition of the prisons of the country and the moral improvement of the prison population which they contain. Preliminary to the gathering of this timely congress of experts and philanthropists, the leading clergymen of Boston preached discourses from their pulpits, pertinent to the occasion, on the Sunday morning previous. That of Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Trinity Church, is conceded to bear off the palm, being in all respects a truly comprehensive, thorough and noble production, in which the only right attitude was assumed toward the class usually termed outlawed, and so regarded even after the expiation of their crimes and misdemeanors. Dr. Brooks vigorously presented to his hearers the responsibility as well as the right of the punishing power, and discussed all sides of the subject from the standpoint of humanity, justice and progressive spirituality. His main design was to illustrate the true position in which the criminal stands to the State which holds him prisoner. "It is," said he, "man held by humanity, held at arm's length, but held with an arm through which still runs the electric human current which can make him more truly man."

Dr. Brooks began by stating that a meeting of a national prison association would have been an impossibility a few short years ago. The elements which were necessary to produce it did not exist. The sense of responsibility and the human sympathy needed to ripen. The final object of the Prison Association was that prisons should contribute to their own extermination, instead of their own perpetuation and increase. All reform and progress come healthily about by a return to the ideas which lie at the heart of institutions and give them their vitality. All reform which does not come about thus is superficial and spasmodic. You cannot reform a man until you feel freshly and deeply what the true glory of human nature is. When Christ said to his hearers, "I was in prison and ye came unto me," he meant that he had lain in the prison of humanity, awaiting the visitation of pitiful and sympathetic hearts. He felt himself into the fate of every wretched prisoner. He claimed the man in prison for a brother of his own humanity. He said: "I, the true humanity, am there with him. You visit me when you step across the threshold of his dungeon. Nothing can destroy our human nature. The prisoner has not ceased to be a man." That is Christ's key to the whole matter. And prisons have been such dark and hopeless places because that key has so often been lost or thrown away.

The man in prison, said Dr. Brooks, is the man on whom the hold of the aggregate humanity which is in all men has for a certain time and purpose tightened; and all the problem of his life lies in the question, first, how that hand shall hold him, and then how it shall gradually open to let him loose again from its extraordinary to its ordinary restriction. For there is restriction everywhere. No man living among men is what he would be if he lived alone. Only the character of the restraint is continually advancing as the man grows better. The normal loyal life is always passing into the power of a higher and finer law, which exists in the essential spirit of the community, the state, the humanity with which it is in ever deepening sympathy. We call ourselves free, but who is free? The prohibitions and commandments of the whole, of which we are a part, are all the time around us. They are never loosened. We do not feel them because we are in sympathy with them, but they are always there. So we live, each in the splendid prison of his environment. We are free by the cordial acceptance of our restrictions. Our necessities give us inspiration, and not paralysis, because we are in sympathy with them and not in rebellion against them. The prisoner in his cell is held in the same great hand, but held differently, held tightly, violently, indignantly, because he is out of sympathy with the hand which holds him. When the law is unrighteous, the cell is full of spiritual honor to the prisoner and the scaffold is glorious; but when the law is righteous and the prisoner unrighteous, his punishment is simply the tightening grasp of the same great hand of corporate humanity which has been about him from his birth.

Once it may have been that society dealt only with its inconveniences, and swept into the waste-heap of its prison or over the precipice of its scaffold all that made it uncomfortable, or hindered the execution of its plans. But modern society and modern law demand a moral element. There must be wickedness in the criminal as well as inconvenience to the State, before punishment becomes the latter's right. Modern life has no prison for the inconvenient man who is not a wrong doer. There are three purposes of punishment: the first two are deterrent, and the third is educational. The first two are repressive, and the third is constructive. The first two are negative, and the third is positive. The first is easy, the second is harder, and the third is very hard. It is easy so to deal with the prisoner that he cannot repeat his crime, since we may kill him or keep him in perpetual imprisonment. It is harder so to deal with him that others shall be less inclined to crime on his account, since it demands deep study of human nature and of its wayward impulses. It is very hard to deal with him in such a way as to bring about his reformation. This is not done without sympathy, tireless devotion, and quenchless faith. Yet this third purpose is the only real one, and if it be left out there will be little need of prison reform. The scaffold, the guillotine and the fire will answer all purposes, as they formerly did. But make the third purpose supreme, and keep the other two in the background as its ministers—let the great purpose of imprisonment be reformation, the immediate prevention of crime being only the subordinate necessity, and the figure of the tightening hand becomes absolutely true and clear.

The same grasp which has held him in the sunshine now shuts the culprit in the dark. First, that he may not do mischief; second, that others still in the sunlight may be taught and warned and frightened by his disappearance; but third, and most of all, that in that tightened grasp and that undisturbed darkness the healthy pressure of the healthy whole may round this diseased, distorted portion into symmetry and health. It is fantastic and absurd when judged by the past, but it represents the true and growing prison standard of to-day. These are the conditions and feelings with regard to imprisonment which are really fundamental to its best work, and must be cordially recognized before imprisonment can both satisfy our consciences and do its best and proper work. Five such conditions furnish the normal or healthy aspect of the prisoner's life. The first is the combination of the natural and the unnatural, the prisoner to be made to feel both of these elements in the prison. His manhood is undestroyed, honor and hope fill the prison atmosphere, and yet he has broken loose from the true life of manhood, and so forfeited its first right, which is liberty. The struggle for recovery begins when it comes to seem very dreadful that a man should lose his liberty and energy and character. When it seems possible to be redeemed, then it seems horrible for him to be as he was. The second condition is the education which a true prison ought to give to the prisoner's sense of the quality of pain. That which causes the prisoner's suffering must change as his manhood is more and more developed. Being the mere discomfort of his lot at first, afterward, if he becomes more noble, it is the nobler suffering of the loss of liberty. The prison influence is poor which does not bring forth the capacity for ever nobler, deeper pain—which is also the ministry of this prison life in which we all live.

Third, the prison life is valuable from bearing constant witness to the fact that principle and interest are identical, that goodness and happiness, wickedness and unhappiness go together. The prison is the stony conscience of the town. It stands there, with its blank, unqualified assertion that sin brings misery. Its sharp, clear voice has its perpetual testimony to bear amid the confused sophistical standards of human life. Fourth, the prison's influence is impersonal. A private prison would be abominable. The prisoner is no man's slave. No private grudge has put him where he is. No private whim may dictate how he shall be treated. It is the grasp of the State that is on him. We are not to lose sight of the value of that largeness and impersonalness of treatment which shall make the prisoner feel that the State is his true jailer, as the public school boy feels that the city is his true teacher, and so make him look for perfect justice and indiscriminating fairness, and the simple recognition of his rights as a man. And fifth, the prison is to emphasize defect as the source of the prisoner's trouble, and so to insist upon supply as the means of its relief. The criminal is what he is, not primarily by reason of what he has acquired, but of that which he has missed; not that he has become a criminal, but that he has not become, in the full sense, a man. All that he has been is but the vicious exhibition of that which he has failed to be. Therefore develop torpid powers and tastes by exercise. The ambition is to be awakened by chances; the new experience of life is to be set in the middle, rather than at the top or bottom, of the prison scale, where the two great human motives—the hope to rise and fear to fall—may seize it; productive trades are to be taught; and in each man his own peculiar character and capacity are to be brought out. These will all minister and combine to make the criminal less a criminal by making the man more a man.

Employing a strikingly felicitous illustration for the case, Dr. Brooks said that the rebellious child, shut out by his rebellion for a time from his true household place, losing his share in much of the best household life, yet never so truly a part of the household and of your fatherhood as now in his rebellion, never so held and pressed on by the family vitality, never so drawn back with constant attraction into its bosom—what is he but this same prisoner, the meaning and hope of whose exile and captivity lies in his unchanged manhood? Man never ceases to belong to God. God's life is ever flowing into him through the very processes of his punishment. The hand that smites him is reclaiming him. He is not given over to the devil till he finds his own way back to God. The God from whom he wanders, and to whom he finally returns, is holding him all the way between. And the incarnation of Christ is only the assertion of all this, the claiming of the human life for this perpetual belonging to divinity.

It is indeed a strange sight, man holding his followman in prison. If we can once see the real significance of such a situation, we shall better understand how to obviate or mitigate its evils, and how to bring it to its best result. But hardly less important or less difficult than the holding of men in prison is their release from prison, and their restoration to the ordinary life of man. The great problem of many processes is their stopping. It is plain to see that the release of prisoners, and their restoration to their normal life, to be natural and healthy and complete, must be gradual. The closed hand must not be opened all at once. It must open little by little to replace the returned life in its true atmosphere of liberty, keeping a true connection between the prison life and the life outside, between the closer and the freer prison.

The question which has been the great study of all prison-reformers during this past century, since prisons began to be reformed, is—how shall the prisoner be once more made a part of the free community? How shall the frozen mass be once more melted into the fluid stream? The State has not done with the prisoner when she gives him his paper of discharge and his freedom clothes, and bids him go. The transition cannot be so abrupt as this. A serious responsibility cannot be thus cast aside. We blunder when we try to make those great transitions which must necessarily take time, because they are spiritual and involve character. This problem has been carefully studied. Men have been trained within the prison-gates for freedom, and outside the prison-gates the State has tried to follow the enfranchised prisoner and make his new entrance into liberty less hard. This was the better meaning of the experiment of transporting criminals beyond the seas. It was thought that it would change the mind as well as the sky of the transported ones. This it is that has tried to proportion isolation and companionship in prisons; this is the true inspiration of the religious work in prisons; this is what is meant by systems of indeterminate sentences, of mitigated restraint, of Irish probation schemes, of ticket-of-leave devices, and of discharged prisoners' aid societies. It is all only the slow opening of the closed hand. The latter organizations were characterized by the speaker as the most hopeful and interesting. In that society has lain the sole resource of many a poor creature, standing in the most forlorn and desperate condition which civilization has to offer to a human being.

Without such a society, said Dr. Brooks, there would be little hope. Even with it the condition of the discharged prisoner is the bewilderment and almost the despair of prison philosophers. Yet such a society is good for nothing unless it utters a real living soul behind it in the whole great world of men; unless it expresses a hopefulness, a tenderness, a determination, a faith in God, a confidence in man, a pity, a willingness to give the worst man a new chance, a sense of the universal weakness and sinfulness, which altogether make the real warmth and openness of the hand which, after having held the prisoner in constraint, would now welcome him back into the world of character and self respecting work. These positions and views may be said to rest on sentiment. The great human sentiments are the only universal and perpetual powers. Creeds, schemes of government, political economies, philosophies, are local and are temporary; but the great human sentiments are universal and perpetual. Upon them rests religion, and the progress of mankind is contained in their broadening movement. The world is so absolutely one utterance of the nature and the will of God, that sentiment, duty and safety always go together and reënforce each other. They make the threefold cord that draws the world along. Never have they combined in greater harmony and strength than in the wonderful regeneration of prison life which has marked the last hundred years. The time will come, is coming, when the preciousness of every human soul shall be no longer a mere doctrine of the churches and the schools, but shall become the sole and shaping power of our softened and humanized institutions.

"The Story of a Great Delusion."

To the Turks we owe little, and in that little is the practice of inducing smallpox artificially, says the author of the valuable work bearing the above title.* The practice was first brought to the attention of the English in 1713 by Timoni, a Greek physician, who at that time said it had been practiced in Constantinople for forty years. This information was conveyed in a letter to Dr. Woodward, who read it to the Royal Society, in whose Transactions it was published in 1714. Cotton Mather, of this city, notorious in the history of that period for his efforts to "extirpate witchcraft, shrinking from no atrocity, until the frightful Salem tragedy of 1692 shocked the colony into mercy and commonsense," may be credited as the father of the disgusting and infamous practice in this country. Having read the Turk's description of a short and easy way of dealing with smallpox, he was determined to adopt it—at least try the experiment whether compelling the people to have smallpox by inoculation would prevent them from having it from contagion or other cause; "he who had hanged warlocks and witches with sublime assurance, was not likely to have scruples about inoculating the community" with a loathsome disease, "when inwardly satisfied it was for the public good." But as there had been no smallpox in Boston for nineteen years, a fact, remarks our author, worth noting by those who imagine smallpox was an omnipresent ailment until the advent of Edward Jenner, the prospect of putting his purpose into practice was discouraging.

An opportunity, however, presented itself in 1721. In October of that year the deaths were one hundred a week in a population of fifteen thousand. With all haste Mather called a meeting of doctors, and stated his plan. They immediately condemned it. One of their number tried it on two of his slaves and two sons, aged five and six; he was arrested, and severely reprimanded. Though thus opposed by the State, he was supported by the Church, and he continued until in December he had inoculated two hundred and fifty. The Justices of the Peace and the Selectmen met in the town house, and having summoned the physicians and surgeons, questioned them concerning inoculation—and finally among the conclusions arrived at were the following:

"It appears by numerous instances, that it has proved the death of many persons, soon after the operation, and brought distempers upon many others which have in the end proved deadly to them.

"That the natural tendency of infusing such malignant filth in the mass of blood is to corrupt and putrefy it, and if there be not a sufficient discharge of that malignity by the place of incision, or elsewhere, it lays a foundation for many dangerous diseases."

Among the victims of inoculation in New England was Jonathan Edwards, the famous Calvinistic preacher. There was an epidemic of smallpox in New Jersey, and to protect himself from it, Edwards was inoculated. The result was the generation of smallpox in a severe form, of which he died, March 22d, 1758.

A very full account is given of the various fortunes that befell the inoculation theory and practice in both New and Old England, and of its finally being superseded by vaccination—a history that is of no great credit to the medical fraternity, but fully as much as its present adoption and employment of the latter for a like purpose will appear in the generation which is to follow this.

Edward Jenner was born in 1749. He was the son of a clergyman, and, says Mr. White, who proves the truth of his statement as he proceeds, "as ordinary a character as was ever thrust into greatness." When a boy he was apprenticed to an apothecary, and in 1770 began a two years' course with Dr. John Hunter of London, who cared more for his menagerie at Brompton than for his patients, and when Capt. Cook, on his return in 1771 from his first voyage of discovery, assigned to him his collection of specimens of natural history for arrangement, Dr. H. set Jenner to work upon them. After an apprenticeship with the apothecary and the stuffing of bird-skins in London, Jenner went to practice as a surgeon at Berkeley in Gloucestershire, a dairy country, where the milkmaids believed that if they caught cowpox in milking they could never afterward catch smallpox. Jenner's attention could not fail to be attracted to this prevailing belief, but he gave it no credence for what he thought sufficient reason, and from what he learned inferred that cows, infected with grease from the heels of sick horses, supplied a sure protection against smallpox. In 1798 Jenner published his famous "Inquiry," setting forth his chosen prophylactic, horse-grease cowpox. But his effort to introduce it was a failure; it was, we are told, "summarily and ignominiously rejected.... He said not another word about horse-grease cowpox; and as the public were eager at any price to escape from the nuisance of smallpox inoculation, and disposed to substitute cowpox as a harmless substitute, he resolved to go in for cowpox (though he had once set it aside as valueless) and pose as its discoverer and promoter."

While the publication of the "Inquiry" was in progress Jenner was in London. There he became acquainted with Henry Cline, a teacher of surgery in St. Thomas's Hospital, who has the honor, if such it be, of performing the first vaccination in that city. There also he was confronted with facts tending to show that his theory was incorrect. Dr. Ingenhousz, an electrician and chemist, cited several instances of sickness and death resulting from the practice, and suggested to Jenner further inquiry before venturing finally to decide in favor of "a doctrine which may do great mischief should it prove erroneous."

In 1802 Jenner petitioned the House of Commons for largess, for having, as he said, to use his own words, "discovered a disease which occasionally exists in a particular form among cattle, known by name of cowpox, admits of being inoculated on the human frame with the most perfect ease and safety, and is attended with the singularly beneficial effect of rendering through life the person so inoculated perfectly secure from the infection of smallpox." Here the "great delusion" made its first grand triumph, securing for its pretended discoverer ten thousand pounds, and later (1807), twenty thousand pounds, on a claim based, as its claims from that day to this have been, on falsehood and misrepresentation. For Jenner was by no manner of means the "discoverer"; it was a notion of the dairymaids of Gloucestershire, and when he discussed the plausibility of their "notion" with his medical acquaintance in Berkeley, and they said to him: "We know that such is the dairymaids' faith, but we also know that it is untrue; for we know dairymaids who have had cow-pox and afterward had small-pox," he was convinced of the correctness of their position, and publicly admitted that the doctors were right and the milkmaids wrong, and so betook himself to what he called "horsegrease cowpox," which, when he endeavored to introduce, was scouted at as intolerable.

The persistent efforts of Jenner and those who recognized in his scheme to operate on the fears of the people a means of great pecuniary profit, by introducing what was asserted by them to be an assurance of immunity against a much dreaded disease, resulted in making the inoculation of cowpox fashionable among busybodies. Cobbett relates: "Gentlemen and ladies made the beastly commodity a pocket companion; and if a cottager's child were seen by them on a common (in Hampshire, at least,) and did not quickly take to its heels, it was certain to carry off more or less of the disease of the cow."

Cobbett, as may be inferred from the above, had no faith in vaccination. Alluding to a notorious outbreak of smallpox in a thoroughly vaccinated population, he said: "It [vaccination] has failed, and it is vain to endeavor to prop up its reputation, for in a few years it will become proverbial as humbug," a prediction that, unfortunately, did not find its verification in fulfillment.

We cannot follow to any greater length the course of this book, invaluable as a history of one of the greatest inflictions of evil that has befallen the people of earth. If any one has a doubt that vaccination was begotten in selfishness, cradled in ignorance, and grown to robust stature through pride of opinion, avarice, and a hankering for personal aggrandizement, let him read this volume, and, our word for it, he will doubt no more. We can close in no better manner than by commending its reading to every one, for the reason that, as its author remarks, there are few subjects among educated people upon which opinion is so absolute and yet so ill-informed as vaccination.

*THE STORY OF A GREAT DELUSION in a Series of Matter-of-Fact Chapters. By William White. 12mo, cloth, pp. 627. London: E. W. Allen, 4 Ave Maria Lane.

FRED EVANS writes us from San Francisco that he leaves that city Aug. 23d, accompanied by his wife, for Brisbane, Queensland, having been sent for by some of Australia's best people, among whom are Sir Thomas McIlraith, Premier of Queensland, George Harris, U. S. C., and members of the Psychological Society. He will visit, beside Brisbane, Sydney, Adelaide, Melbourne, etc., and points in New Zealand.

Spiritualism in England.

Of Spiritualism in England, a correspondent of the Tyneside Echo, published at Newcastle, says: "Its disciples are numerous and active, and their number increases. In most centres of population throughout the country Spiritualist Associations, with lecture-rooms and means for propagating their opinions, exist and flourish. Spiritualism can also boast of a literature of no inconsiderable dimensions, which includes a number of weekly and monthly magazines, the most of them ably conducted. The staff of itinerant lecturers is large, and a fair number of those are men and women whose abilities would enable them to make their mark in any other department of human inquiry."

The writer proceeds to say that meetings of Spiritualists in Newcastle are held in Cordwainer's Hall, which on such occasions is "inconveniently crowded by an apparently well-to-do and most intelligent audience." Mr. W. Victor Wyldes, a resident of Birmingham, was at that date, June 30th, filling an engagement of some duration. He is thirty-four years of age, and was, when his attention was first directed to Spiritualism, a teacher in a public school, with every prospect of a successful career. The earnest advocacy of Spiritualism by Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten led him to an investigation of its merits, with the result that, we are told, "he is now one of the clearest and most understandable exponents of the science before the public."

Mr. Wyldes is said to be a psychometrist of very clear and convincing power. At one of his recent public psychometric séances, after having given an illustration of his gift of that order, and, in connection, the name of a spirit to whom articles brought by a lady once belonged, Mr. Wyldes gave the following interesting description of his experience:

"The séance you have just witnessed was exceptional, inasmuch as, physically and mentally, I experienced the connective influences of an ordinary psychometric experiment, and what I, as a medium, realized as a spirit control. In an ordinary séance I am not conscious of the direct control of an excarnated spirit, but rather of a throbbing, thrilling sensation from head to foot, in which I experience an affinity of sentiment and feeling with the former possessor of the articles experimented with, which enables me absolutely to identify his or her individuality. Holding, as I do, that every object any human being has been associated with becomes permanently associated with his or her individuality, and that as all embodied and excarnated spirits having mutual sympathy have an irresistible attraction for each other, it follows, granting the psychometric faculty, that a connecting link can be established between them. This was my primary experience at the commencement of to-day's séance, and by the connection, or association, formed, I was able to realize the relationship of the possessor of the pocket book and glove to the lady seeking information, but nothing further. Realizing, however, the presence of my spiritual attendants, you will remember my audible request for help and guidance. Immediately I experienced an overshadowing of a superior intelligence, and my right hand was impelled to move without conscious premeditation, and in this condition the words 'Alfred, your son,' were written. The sensitive condition governing mediumship differs from the state of so called control, for in the latter there is a sense of the actual presence of an excarnated spirit, and often clairvoyant vision or converse with the controlling spirit. This last condition supervened, and enabled me to describe the spiritual attributes and home sphere of the communicating spirit, and also a message intelligently understood by the lady. A brief season of unconsciousness next ensued, when, as I was afterward informed, an intelligence, purporting to be an excarnated spirit, spoke through my lips, and the séance came to an end with satisfaction to the inquirer and myself, as a medium, and I trust with real scientific interest to you."

To Proclaim the Truth.

The explanatory statement of Mr. Luther R. Marsh, of New York, published in last week's BANNER, which was made by Mr. Marsh to a World reporter, afforded interesting reading for Spiritualists everywhere. No sensible person can peruse Mr. Marsh's account of the manner in which a certain picture was taken on the interior leaf of a glued pad of writing sheets, without a voluntary and full admission that it was the work of spirits. If testimony like that offered by Mr. Marsh is to be rejected, then is all human testimony worthless. Poohpoohing will not weaken nor dissipate it. It is on such clear and positive knowledge as Mr. Marsh adduces that he bases his personal convictions. What wonder that neither ridicule nor malignity is able to shake them. Of what value would such a man's word be to others, if from prudential reasons, in other words from timidity, he was induced to suppress what he positively knew to be absolutely true, and to convict himself of convenient hallucination? He might in that case well conclude that he was incapable of forming a belief on any matter, even with the help of ocular demonstration.

But the point to which we were coming, in remarking on this case, is that the spirits have chosen wisely in calling a man like Mr. Marsh from his profession and clothing him with all needed authority to publish as widely as possible the great truth of this modern age—the close and constant relations of the invisible world with this external world which we inhabit. That is the momentous truth in which mortals are everywhere interested, and by the full acceptance of which the nations of the earth are certain to form a united fraternity. The spirit-world is naturally striving to lift up the human vision to a point where it will embrace a larger view of the universe than ever before, and to make one brotherhood of all people. And though existing organizations named churches, restraining their growth in accordance with the injunctions of tradition and the command of creeds, may avail to obstruct and hinder for a time the progress of this most desirable accomplishment, it is none the less certain that the purpose of the angelic world will be steadily advanced to its final completion.

It is by the selection of such men as Mr. Marsh that the spirits work, and work most effectually. They are best able to discover the human agents who are capable of serving their high purpose with the greatest success, and they choose their own good time and way to call such agents to their chosen work. Mr. Marsh evidently recognizes the summons in his own case, and openly avows his purpose to give the remainder of his days on earth to a close and scrutinizing study of the spiritual phenomena and their true significance and value, and the widest dissemination of the great truth of Modern Spiritualism.

☞ We wish that the friends in all parts of the country, who may in their reading of the daily and weekly press see articles of interest bearing on Spiritualism and cognate matters, would as a personal favor mail us a copy of the paper in which such is found, marking the item. We shall highly appreciate the kindness.

Woman and the Law.

Nothing has been better said than Mrs. Lucy Stone has uttered editorially in a recent issue of the Woman's Journal, apropos to the proposed execution of Mrs. Robinson, of Malden, who was convicted by a jury of murdering one or more persons by poisoning. This is the way she presents the argument for woman suffrage, while not seeming to urge it either. Says Mrs. Stone:

"The property, the liberty, and even the lives of women are taken from them, while they are denied any voice, or right, or power in the matter. The awful helplessness of the position appeals anew, when a woman who had no voice in making the law is sentenced to be hanged by the neck until she is dead. How great is the guilt of men who subject women to such unjust conditions. It is appalling to think that the majority of men in these United States, after having handicapped women by disfranchisement, consent to the existence of laws by which the very lives of women may be taken from them—men alone her judges, men her jury, men her executioners; men to make and execute the laws."

Could the case for woman suffrage be more pointedly put? Here it is in a paragraph. The foundation of our rebellion against Great Britain was that taxation and representation should go hand in hand; but here we are today, refusing to let one sex participate in making the laws under which they are not only taxed but executed.

A Suggestion.

A gentleman residing in Washington, who has given much thought to spiritual matters, writes us, in the course of a private letter, the following, as his idea of the true course to be pursued in séances for materialization, in view of the present public pressure exerted upon them:

"It strikes me mediums will have to adopt some more stringent plan as to who they admit to their séances. And being driven to adopt that course for protection, I deem it advisable that no publication be made of what may have occurred at any séance, as to manifestations. By doing so it excites in many who are personally uninformed on the subject a curiosity to witness for themselves, declaring in advance 'it is all fraudulent,' and as we know invites the conditions which generally result in raids.

If the doors are kept barred and the manifestations private, as people hear of them they will be the more anxious to enter the séances, and will be the better prepared to judge and more circumspect. I have about made up my mind never again to publish what I have witnessed at a séance. If people wish to know, let them find out as we have done."

Friendly Calls.

We held a pleasant interview at our office last week with Mr. Eulogio Prieto, of Cuba, proprietor of a sugar plantation there. He is a firm Spiritualist, and a highly honorable gentleman. He previously visited Boston in 1881.

Dr. William A. Knight and wife, of Worcester, called upon us Saturday last. This was the first time we have met the Doctor for many years. The very first spiritual manifestations we witnessed were given in his presence in this city before the commencement of THE BANNER, at which time we were a strong skeptic. He was then a rapping and writing medium, although only a few of his friends knew the fact.

STUART CUMBERLAND, who, in this and other cities a few years since, undertook by a misapplication of his natural gift of clairvoyance—and, we may add signally failed—to explain away spirit phenomena, at one time assuming to "expose," and at another to admit his belief in mediums, has started a new enterprise in England whereby to gain notoriety, pounds, shillings and pence. Refering to it The Two Worlds says:

"We have received from various sources copies of papers containing Stuart Cumberland's version of his experiences in séances. We are not apologists for fraud, but believe that wherever fraud exists it should be exposed, and the shameless impostors denounced. We do not, however, deem Mr. Cumberland's mere assertions to be evidence; we see no reason why the boasts of a man whose business it is to get himself talked about, and to amuse the ignorant public by conjuring and other tricks, should be believed before the serious testimony of thousands of sane, honest and capable witnesses."

☞ We want the New York Sun, and other sensational dailies, to understand fully one thing, namely, that psychomaniacs are not Spiritualists, whether they "conduct a so-called 'Church of Nature,' or anything else." Spiritualism per se has load enough to carry, in consequence of the opposition of the bigoted priesthood and the slanders of the secular press, without having forced upon it the sayings and doings of the class referred to above.

Mrs. Ada Hoyt Foye

Will leave San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 17th, for an extended tour throughout the Eastern States. She will probably visit England ere her journey is done. She will give lectures and tests from the platform, as her guides in spirit life urge her to do.

Any societies in the Eastern States desiring her services for the fall and winter months can address her immediately at Chicago, Ill., P. O. Box 517. She will be in Chicago during September.

Mrs. Foye is a reliable medium—one of the veterans in the ranks of the spiritual workers—and deserves a full and extended hearing by the friends hereabout, and wherever she may journey.

DECEASE OF MR. CHARLES DAWBARN'S FATHER.—Services attending the funeral of Robert Dawbarn, J. P., father of our friend and fellow-laborer, Mr. Charles Dawbarn, are reported in the Wisbech (Eng.) Advertiser of June 13th, introduced with the remark that "There have been few occasions of late years when so large a following has testified to the loss of a valued citizen." Nearly all the shops and many private houses were partially closed, and manifestations of regret marked the route of the procession, which was an unusually long one, composed of relatives and friends, the Corporation and other public representatives.

At the time of his decease Mr. Dawbarn was in his 90th year. He was in religious faith a Nonconformist and Baptist, strongly attached thereto, and very active in efforts for its dissemination. "Yet he had," says the account, "a large heart, a heart that could see beyond all creeds and sects." Into that larger field upon which he has entered he will find a wider scope for his vision, and we congratulate him that he can now see otherwise than "through a glass darkly."

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.—Belva A. Lockwood filed, July 16th, with the Secretary of State at Washington, D. C., a letter with regard to the establishment of an international court of arbitration, in which that official is requested to instruct Minister McLane to consider any overtures in this matter that may be made by the government of France. There were submitted with the letter a similar request from M. Charles Lemmonier, President of the International League of Peace and Liberty at Geneva; a petition signed by the Presidents of the five Peace Associations of France, and one hundred and twelve members of the French House of Delegates, and a letter from Alfred H. Love of Philadelphia, President of the International Peace Union.

Learning that the dynamite cartridge which was to kill the Czar, recently, was shaped like a book, leads the Texas Siftings to remark: "This would indicate that the Emperor's troubles are increasing in volume."

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

While attacks all along their line are periodically to be expected by Spiritualists—and further, while base pretenders to mediumship are ever on the alert to put on the robe of the angels, that they may thereby be aided in serving their own evil and speculative purposes—we maintain that the indiscriminate assaults made on our mediums ever and anon, by prejudiced parties having no practical knowledge of the subtle laws of development and condition, are outrages of the most indefensible nature.

An old Quaker said: "I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there be any kindness I can show, or any good I can do, to any fellow human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it, for I shall not pass this way again. Let this be my epitaph:

What I spent I had;
What I saved I left behind;
What I gave away I took with me."

Maryland is the latest State to curse itself with a "Doctors' Protective Law." We presume that now the Allopathic fraternity will apply itself to a practical outworking on the part of its disciples of the State's motto: "Crescit et multiplicamine." [Increase and multiply!]

A Harlem Christian has just had a neighbor arrested for cutting grass for his cow on Sunday. In the police-court the judge turned sharply on the policeman who made the arrest. "Suppose," said his honor, "the man's cow had fallen into a loathsome pit; would you have arrested him for pulling the beast out on the Sabbath day?" "I would not," said the officer, and he hung his head to escape the fiery glances of the indignant judge. "The prisoner had as much right to mow grass to feed his hungry cow as he would to have rescued her from a pit into which she had fallen," continued the justice. "The prisoner is discharged."—Truth Seeker (N. Y.).

On the arrival of the German squadron at Cronstadt, July 19th, the Emperor William was rowed to the Russian imperial yacht Alexandria, on which the Czar awaited the arrival of his visitor. The two Emperors met at the gangway, and embraced and kissed each other several times. Afterward they had a long talk. No toasts were offered at the state dinner given in honor of Emperor William at Peterhof. Emperor William went for a drive, in company with the Czarina and the Duke and Duchess Vladimir. The whole Russian press are convinced that the meeting of the Emperors will inaugurate a new era of peace, and feel hopeful that Russian interests will now be considered.

The Baptist denomination having taken the lead in defense of the American free educational system, the Methodists on "Denominational Day," July 16th, at the Lake View (Framingham, Mass.) Assembly, debated the question of the "duty of Methodists to Romanists," the gist of the result being that of full accord with their Baptist brethren, to the effect that all aggressions upon our public schools must be stopped.

In writing to the American press from London, Eng., Louise C. Moulton takes occasion to criticise Spiritualism, while admitting that she knows nothing whatever in regard to its philosophy, because, as a writer, she wishes to be on the popular side of things, "you know." The "drivel" she speaks of emanates from her own bigoted brain rather than "through some medium in a back street," as she writes.

Ex-Congressman John F. Finerty, on being interviewed regarding the letter of the Pope explaining the rescript on the Irish question, said:

"I can only say what I said when the rescript was first discussed, it is an interference in Irish politics. If the Irish Bishops of the nineteenth century had had the backbone of the English Bishops of the thirteenth century, they could easily have brought Leo XIII. to terms. As it is, the fight falls on the people. The issue is made at last. The Pope of Rome has no power to damn me or any other Catholic. His latest utterance is an outrage on Irish Catholic manhood and womanhood. The Pope of Rome, the head of the Catholic Church, is in all matters of religion supreme; but the Pope of Rome, an Italian Prince, with an Italian policy to carry out, at no matter what expense to the other Catholic people, is a fair subject for Irish criticism, and it is from this standpoint I criticise him. I am a Catholic, I am a believer in the Catholic Church, but I am an Irishman and not an Italian, and I am not to be sacrificed for the needs of Italian diplomacy."

Belford's Magazine for July has among its contents a poem by Sarah M. B. Piatt, wherein the following neat tribute is paid to Mrs. Cleveland. After referring to the queens of other lands Mrs. Piatt says to this "Lady Shining in the West":

Go, if you will, among them all, and stand
With just a mountain wild flower in your hair,
With just the wedding-ring on your right hand
The nation bids you wear.

Then from the Elysian fields call Paris back:
"Say who shall have the golden apple—who?"
Though Europe armed should follow in his track
He 'd throw it straight to you."

A New York daily for want of sensible articles wherewith to fill its columns, tells its readers "How girls buy their clothes!" It should give its patrons a better class of reading matter.

Since 1879 there has been in the South an increase of 15,000 new industries, 15,000 miles of railroad have been built, while iron production has increased from 397,000 tons to 876,000 tons. The amount of coal mined has grown from 6,000,000 tons in 1880 to nearly 14,000,000 tons; cotton mills have increased from 180 to 370; cottonseed oil mills from 40 to 150.

Natural Gas at Newburg.

We have had another splendid evidence of spirit power and communion through the Occult Telegraph, and the cause of Spiritualism is making great headway here in Cleveland in consequence—and, in fact, throughout Ohio, where it is so well known. Two leading dailies, the Leader and Plain Dealer, have given the matter good prominence in their columns, bearing witness to the value of the gas-well recently located here (on the Jewett farm in Newburg) "by W. S. Rowley, by means of his 'occult telegraph,' through which he obtains messages, as is claimed, from the spirits of those who have lived and passed away from earth."

Numerous wells have been drilled here, located by "guess" or by the "divining rod," but none of them have amounted to anything of account. When Jabez Fitch, ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Ohio, Nathan Payne, Randall P. Wade, Amaza Stone, and others who have passed over to the other side came and told us, through the instrument, that there was an immense reservoir of gas at a certain point in the suburbs of the city, we thought it too good to be true, but as they had always told us the truth in other matters we believed them in this. The original parties who received the communication were Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Strong, Mrs. Rowley and myself, and we really formed a nucleus of what will prove one of the largest companies extant. Through the untiring efforts of Mr. Strong, Cleveland capitalists were interested, and among the rest Mr. George Howe, a firm believer in the spiritual phenomena. After encountering many difficulties the gas was struck just as they—the spirits—told us it would be, and at the very depth. Almost daily interviews were had with them, and instructions given how to proceed. The all wise unbelievers laughed us to scorn, and among the rest our erudite State geologist, who solemnly declared to us that it was impossible to find high pressure gas in this vicinity. Very truly yours,

W. S. ROWLEY.

A TRUE MEDIUM.—Mrs. Albert Morton, one of our noblest women and mediums, is of such a retiring nature and does her work so quietly that the wonder-seeking public lose sight of her. And in fact she is not a medium that would gratify that taste. But for those who seek for purely spiritual intelligence and the enlightenment which tends to their higher welfare she is a grand instrument. Her spirit medical guides are unexcelled in their line of work. Through her they can diagnose disease from letters or a lock of hair, as well as by the patient being present. This is a part of her work—to advise and administer to those suffering from the ills of the flesh. She has also a bright little control, Milly, who is always a sweet spirit to meet; and through her the way is opened for converse with your own spirit-friends, and many a ray prophetic is carried to those in the material plane, which enables them to steer through the breakers and billows of earthly conflict, by this same faithful spirit. We always receive a spiritual feast with Mrs. Morton and her noble band, and after sitting a "golden hour," or less, in their presence, we come away feeling it was good for us to have been there.—Golden Gate, San Francisco, Cal.

THE SHAWMUT SPIRITUAL LYCEUM will be well represented at the forthcoming camp meeting to be held at Verona, Me., during the month of August. The party will consist of Mr. J. B. Hatch and wife, C. Frank Rand and wife, Miss M. T. Shelhamer, Mrs. Carrie L. Hatch, and Masters Eddie and Charlie. On Sunday, Aug. 12th, Miss Shelhamer will occupy the platform, and at different sessions will answer questions. Through the kindness of Dr. C. F. Ware "Silver Star Cottage" has been secured for the party, and much pleasure is anticipated by all. On the door of the cottage will be found the banner of the Shawmut Lyceum; the latchstring can be easily found, and all upon entering will find a hearty welcome.

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

[Notices under this heading must reach this office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.]

J. Frank Baxter spoke at Parkland, Penn., Camp last Sunday, 22d inst., and will lecture in Hanson next Sunday, the 29th. Sunday, Aug. 5th, he will speak at the Mantua (Ohio) Station Yearly Meeting. He then will come East, filling appointments successively at Cassadaga Camp, N. Y.; Niantic Camp, Conn.; Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass.; and Etna and Madison Camps, Me. His Sundays are secured over fourteen months ahead. Week evenings at liberty.

Prof. J. M. Allen lectured in Peoria, Ill., July 1st; in St. Louis July 8th; in Vicksburg (Mich.) Camp July 15th, 16th, 18th, 22d and 24th. His address for two weeks is Vicksburg, Mich., care W. S. Wardell.

By a private note from Dean Clarke we learn that he recently had a fall, fracturing one of his ribs upon the right side. He says he shall be on hand to fill his engagement at Lake Pleasant, Aug. 15th and 19th, nevertheless.

Mrs. H. S. Lake speaks at Niantic Camp Meeting (Conn.) next Sunday, July 29th.

Dr. H. F. Merrill has been engaged to give tests at the Temple Heights, Me., Camp Meeting, and will be pleased to meet his friends at this camp. He is now making engagements for the fall and winter; would like to correspond with societies—especially in Massachusetts—for engagements. Address Bucksport, Me.

Albany, N. Y.—We pen these few lines to let our friends know what is being done here for our beloved cause. The society has adopted a new and very simple constitution recently, and has elected officers as follows: President, J. D. Chism; Vice-President, George McDonald; Secretary, J. D. Chism, Jr.; Financial Secretary, Samuel G. Payn, Jr.; Treasurer, Marcus Carl. The above five officers constitute the Board of Managers, together with the following elected by the society by ballot: Mrs. Fero, Mrs. Carl, Mrs. Chapin, Mrs. Payn, Mr. Fero, Mr. Briggs, Mr. Pierce and Mr. Payn, Sr.

Our lecture season closed July 8th, at which time Mrs. Holmes, of Brooklyn, lectured in the morning and evening. We will begin in the first part of September with renewed vigor, and a determination to increase the interest in the cause in this vicinity.

Mrs. C. E. S. Twing is engaged for September; Professor Peck for January; J. Frank Baxter for February, and Mrs. H. S. Lake for June next. The other months are not provided for as yet, and we desire to communicate with speakers and mediums relative to engagements. The terms must be moderate, for we are not in shape financially to guarantee large salaries, but hope in the near future to have more funds at our command.

Mrs. Lake filled our platform most acceptably during June and the first Sunday in July. We as individuals, and collectively as a Society, are more than pleased with Mrs. Lake. She has given us food for thought and reflection sufficient to last through the vacation months. We have not had any one upon our platform that we consider her superior. Mrs. Brigham lectured once during June for us, and will be with us once every four weeks during next season. We could scarcely be induced to give up this most talented and pleasing speaker. All unite in urging her to continue her regular lectures in Albany.

The cause is prospering here continually, and we trust the time is near at hand when a person can acknowledge his convictions without being liable to the scoffs and ridicule of an ignorant rabble.

Fraternally, J. D. CHISM, JR., Secretary.

A FEW WORDS

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Distant Patients Successfully Treated.

In reply to numerous inquiries in regard to "OBESITY CURE," I would say that it is a safe, harmless and effectual combination of roots and herbs, mostly imported from Germany and the Orient, and prepared under my personal supervision for each patient.

We are not cast in one mold. We differ physically even more than in our faces. All stout people have not the same tendencies and dangers.

Obesity Cure is adapted by me to meet differing conditions—for those who suffer from indigestion, or, as it is often termed, "gas"; those who have no appetite; those who have too much appetite—and a special combination is indicated for those who are stout in the abdomen only.

Fees for medicines and medical services will in all cases be named as low as is consistent with accomplishing desired results in each case.

Reduction in weight is invariably accompanied with general beneficial effects—labor-power is increased; a sense of ease and freedom in moving comes immediately. There is joy in living when one is relieved from the weary burden of undue flesh.

In no case have wrinkles or an aspect of age been induced.

Medicines sent by mail everywhere.

Send stamp and report your own case to receive terms and FULL PARTICULARS.

Treatise sent on application.

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held May 29th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

The heavens declare thy glory, Lord, and the earth responds in smiles, in blooms and perfumes. Thy children recognize thy power as it is displayed on every hand. We read the lesson of the stars, and realize that in their majesty is displayed thy skill and wisdom. We turn to the springing blade beneath our feet, and watch the opening of the tiny bud, believing that there is also a manifestation of thy great law, of thy tender and divine love.

Oh! our Father God, we gather up the aspirations and the thoughts of our human souls, that are to our lives like buds and blossoms, blooming forth in richness of spiritual perfume; may they be acceptable in thy sight; may they prove to be indeed bright blossoms of love and sincerity. We ask the spiritual helpfulness of thy angel hosts. We believe that thou art the grand omnipotent over-soul that doth embrace all humanity, and so we lean upon thy love even as the little child leans upon its mother's breast to receive a smile of encouragement.

We ask the association and coöperation of angels at this time. May our hearts expand under their divine ministration. May our minds be imbued with new thought and our souls become enlarged with a higher conception of life, so that we may go forth from this place thoroughly imbued with the idea that we are here to do our part in life, to fill a mission, and assist our human brothers and sisters in doing their part and in fulfilling their mission. We ask thy blessing and the blessing of all pure and angelic souls to rest upon us now and forevermore. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—Your questions are now in order, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By C. H. K.] Cannot a refined, educated and eloquent speaker (who has passed to spirit-life) control a medium who is not so educated?

ANS.—If the medium or instrument employed be adapted to the use of the spirit who desires to communicate, and if such medium possesses the requisite power and medial quality of magnetism to be operated upon by the intelligent spirit who desires to manifest his thoughts, then will that instrument be able to respond to the vibrations of brain power from the spirit, and give forth to the world that which is desired. But if the medium is not fully developed in his mediumship, or if he be not adapted nor magnetically assimilative with the spirit who desires to manifest, then that intelligence will be unable to clearly manifest his thought through his instrumentality. A medium who is crude and ignorant, undeveloped in mental ability, may yet possess in incipiency much of mental power, which, of itself, may be operated upon by invisible intelligences.

The child who is ignorant and unformed can be taken in hand and trained by an intelligent person, and be so cultivated as to be able, in time, to send forth through his own organism that which is grand and beautiful in the realm of intellect, so a medium who is unformed and ignorant in many ways may yet possess a fine spiritual power, which can be utilized by attendant intelligences. These attendant guides, directing their influence not only upon the brain but upon the entire organism of their subject, may so surround him with their superior influence and magnetism as to assist in drawing forth that which is best and sweetest within his being. Consequently the medium grows into harmony with those spiritual forces, becomes educated through his association with the inhabitants of the spirit-world, and may be able to send forth through his organism sounds and strains, utterances and ideas which are grand and glorious.

A.—"The power of concentration" is that power brought under control of directing one's thought or purpose to one especial end, in order that certain results may ensue. One who brings the power of concentration to bear upon any idea or plan that he has in mind, brings the full bent of his positive will force upon that idea, pursues it closely to the end, concentrates his mind in that line, so that no external side issue shall attract his notice. In thus bringing all the force of his energy to bear upon his idea or plan, it receives the most powerful magnetism of his being, and consequently will, without doubt, grow and expand under his notice to a fulfillment.

On the other hand, we shall take one in intellectual life who pursues some literary employment; he is noted for his power of concentration. What does this mean? That the expression of his thought is terse and lucid, crisp, so that he easily makes himself understood by simple words, yet in an intelligent manner; he is not diffusive, does not spread over his subject, but confines himself to the thought and manifests it in the simplest language and the clearest manner.

Q.—[By a correspondent, Brockville, Ont.] To what degree, if any, are the Orthodox religionists correct in their belief that Jesus the Christ was specially endowed with divinity?

A.—To that degree that every child of God, every human being in the universe, is endowed with divinity. Being an offshoot or offspring from the great Eternal, the divine source of all life itself, each human being must, of necessity, be endowed with some degree of that divinity from which it sprung. Yet, you say, there are many, many human beings who give no signs of that divinity within them, who are crude, uncultured, and even debased and degraded in their habit and appearance. Very true; and there are those in human life who are refined and cultivated, spirituelle in manner and appearance, and such seem to exhibit a large spark of the divine nature, since they manifest their character in helpful, serviceable ways.

The man Jesus, the Nazarene, was endowed with a spark of divinity; yes, and that divinity seems to have been fanned into a gentle flame, under the influence of attendant spirits, who held the child and the man in their keeping.

Surrounded as the Nazarene was, by friends on both sides of life, it afforded a condition for the approach of the highest, the purest magnetic forces. It is not to be wondered at that he, gentle in mien and kindly by nature, loving, tender and sympathetic in his own being, received within himself those influences that brought to light and life the purest, sweetest manifestations of the divine in the human.

And so Jesus, the Nazarene, lived his unselfish life, working for others, and assisting man to understand himself as best he could, according to the times and the age, and passing onward through tribulation and the anguish of martyrdom into another world, there to continue his helpful unselfish labors for his race, in association with those bright spirits who had attended him in times past.

We recognize Jesus, the Nazarene, as a man and a brother, a tender humanitarian, who desired to bless his kind, to lift humanity out of the bondage of error and of ignorance, unto a high plane of knowledge and of wisdom. We recognize the man, not as a special incarnation of the Godhead, but as a human being, subjected to the laws and influences of material life while he remained on earth, but with the power to so far overcome them in his own person as to live, at times, almost indifferent to those limitations, because the spirit within soared above the material, recognized its kinship to the divine and to all high and holy spiritual influences, lived in harmony with the pure and good of angelic life, and sent forth through his mortal existence an influence and a peace which proved a blessing unto others.

Q.—[By a Subscriber in Utica, N. Y.] What is the object of employing a perfectly dark enclosure, termed a cabinet, at a séance for the materialization of spirit forms?

A.—We believe this question has been discussed at various times and places, but we will consider it briefly from this platform. There are spirits as well as mortals who do not believe it necessary to employ a cabinet or darkened closet for the purpose of receiving either physical manifestations from the spirit side or the production of materialized forms, and there are a host of spirits, as well as many mortals, who believe it highly necessary that, in the production of these phases of Spiritualism, such an enclosure should be employed. We believe that it is necessary with certain mediums possessing a large surplus of physical force, of magnetic emanations, which may be utilized by returning attendant spirits in manifesting their presence and power physically and unmistakably to humanity on earth, to employ a cabinet for the medium, or, at least, to surround the medium with darkness, because the atoms, the emanations, the elements which are required, and which are passing off and surrounding the medium, can be best gathered and utilized in darkness; since light produces agitation of the elements, the atoms are constantly changing form when light, natural or artificial, is present, and are not easily gathered by the operating spirits. This is one reason why the guides of certain mediums demand a condition of darkness for their operations.

And again, the mind of such a medium is frequently more passive in darkness than when surrounded by light; he or she is not then affected so much by the minds and the glances of those sitters who are present and desire to witness the manifestations. Such a medium will most frequently sink into a quiescent state, under the manipulations of the spiritual guides, when surrounded by a condition of darkness, and therefore the work is made more easy to those spirits who come to manifest their presence.

We affirm that it is possible to receive highly convincing evidences of spirit power and presence in a darkened room, or when a cabinet is employed by the medium. It is for mortals, investigators, all those who desire to receive the truth, to study into the laws of spiritual phenomena, and to do their best to afford the highest conditions for the grandest results. It will not take long, if such investigators come into council with the spirit guides of honest mediums, to discover how evidences may be given that prove the genuineness of the medium, as well as the potency of the spirits who operate through such a subject.

Q.—[By Mrs. Seth T. Davenport, Hopedale, Mass.] Are we not spirits now as really as we shall ever be—ourselves and intimate friends a spirit band—and every act of ours a spirit manifestation?

A.—We take no exceptions to what your correspondent offers in this direction. You are all spirits; whether good spirits or not you must decide for yourselves. Your thoughts, your motives and your conduct bear witness to what class of spirits you belong. Every individual, whether on earth or in other realms of space, must be a spirit, since the material is only clay acted upon by unseen but potent intelligence, and a human being on earth must be governed by this potent intelligence, must exercise his individuality and develop his own personal identity, through the operations of mind in contact with matter; therefore you are all spirits; your thoughts are the thoughts of spirits, the operations of spiritual intelligence.

But there are spirits who are high in power, well developed in thought and activity, whose works are wise and displayed in goodness; and so down through gradation after gradation, until we come to the poor, ignorant, uncultivated spirit, that expresses itself in crude ways and unlovely manifestations. Such a spirit is incarnated in a certain form that appears repulsive to you, and yet he is not only a human being but an immortal spirit; and if you exercise toward him love and charity, giving to his life sympathetic helpfulness, you may be doing much in assisting that immortal spirit in rising above the limitations and crusts of materiality that hedge and surround it, and in putting forth exhibitions of a more beautiful and refined character.

Q.—What are your views in regard to the text commented upon at the Catholic Apostolic Church, at 57th street, New York, a few Sundays ago, namely, "Is there any true preaching of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ?"

A.—We have not been in strong rapport with the utterances expressed, to which your correspondent refers, and therefore cannot give you a just criticism upon them; yet we may give our own opinion concerning the question whether there is any true rendition of the life of him who was called the Lord Jesus Christ—of his life and works. It seems to us, as we review the history of humanity, and trace so-called Christianity from its early incipiency to the present day, that much, ay, very much that has been put forth in the name of Jesus the Christ, and has claimed to be his word and his teaching, has fallen far short of that experience. It seems to us that if we look abroad in the world, seeking for human helpfulness and sympathetic love, as expressed in unselfish ways to man, irrespective of creed or dogma, indeed independent of all that savors of theology and of so-called Christianity, we shall find the strongest evidences outcropping of the living out of the word of Jesus, which came from above, poured through his instrumentality by divine and intelligent beings, which said unto the world; "Do ye unto others as ye would be done by." To our mind those who have followed this golden rule, and have tried to help their neighbors, friends and associates, and even their enemies, to a happier condition of life, to find relief from suffering, to be uplifted to grander thought and higher effort, have accepted the word of Jesus and lived it out in their lives. But we find so much of creed, of dogma, of theological assumption and affirmation, so much that has been given forth in the name of Christianity, that we lose sight of the word and example of Jesus the Nazarene, the humble human being who desired simply to bless his kind, and can perceive only ceremonial, the form and the empty letter. Every individual on earth and in other worlds who desires to bless his kind, to make life brighter and more beautiful because it has been his portion to leave behind him an influence of peace and sympathy and love, is doing the will of our Father in Heaven, such as our brother Jesus desired to see take its place broadcast throughout the land. We have seen poor, untutored red men, and also those of the dusky race who never knew of the "word of God," so called, who never learned of the existence of Jesus of Nazareth, who had no information concerning the Biblical history of humanity, exhibiting signs of tenderness, of helpful assistance to their kind, giving that which they had to give, even at the sacrifice of self, unto others, and these were practically living out the divine word, which may ring down through the ages unto man, calling upon him to be kindly forbearing unto others, helpful and loving, which Jesus and every reformer in every age must send forth as the word of truth and righteousness.

Q.—[By Joseph E. Baldwin, Topeka, Kan.] To what are we to attribute the difference in statements made concerning conditions of mankind in spirit-life by Swedenborg and those communicating to us through our own mediums?

A.—We consider Swedenborg to have been a medium for the transmission of spiritual intelligence to earth, and for his time a very finely developed medium for such work. We understand that the seer was brought under the direct influence of a band of spirits who desired to use his organism for this purpose, and that, to the best of their ability, they did utilize his powers in sending forth to the world intelligence concerning certain portions of the spirit-world. But Swedenborg was not fully unfolded in his mediumistic faculties; also, being a man of strong positive predilections and opinions, it was his custom to weigh and to judge that which he received through his own instrumentality, and as far as possible to mold it after his own ideas. Knowing that he was acted upon by some spiritual power, and yet not realizing its identity, the man felt himself inspired to give that which the world has received, yet it was his desire and his will to send such information forth according to the bent of his own mind, and therefore, although the writings and productions of Swedenborg were highly imbued with spiritual intelligence and with truth, they did receive the impress of the material, and did flow through the channel which Swedenborg's own mind had prepared for them, consequently we find them somewhat crude in certain directions, and strange and mystical in others, strangely like unto the spiritual communications received through mediums in this age in certain directions, and strangely at variance with them in others. We try to reconcile the discrepancies and to understand why these things have been.

It is easy for us so to do if we consider the age, the time and the bent of public thought and opinion when Swedenborg lived on earth. He was a man superior to his surroundings and his associations, open upon one side to the material, and grandly open on the spiritual side to that invisible world which is peopled by spiritual intelligences.

Let us also keep in view the fact that Swedenborg came under the direct influence of a certain band of spirits who had ideas of their own; they believed it wise to teach humanity in certain directions only, and not to open out to mortals the full extent of that spiritual information concerning the higher life which they were qualified to give; so these spirit attendants opened before their subject such visions and fields of knowledge as they desired to give, and none others; therefore what has been produced in the name of Swedenborg furnishes an idea of only a very small part of the states, conditions and surroundings of the inhabitants in the invisible world. There are minds in the spirit-world, spirits themselves, in whose existence may be traced the likeness of those scenes and influences described by the seer, and no doubt many invisible intelligences can be found who, if they should communicate to you an account of their own life and its conditions, it would clearly be seen that the scenes and visions which Swedenborg has described are not so far at variance with the real, tangible life of personal spirits as they may seem to be to those who do not understand.

Warren H. Cudworth.

Mr. Chairman, I am attracted to your Circle-Room this afternoon, not only because of the spiritualizing influence that is here, but because of the beautiful magnetic influence that is going forth at this time from all quarters of the land, reaching up from human hearts on earth and rising like a veil of glory unto the spirit-world itself. I refer to the tender, affectionate thoughts and sentiments that are at this hour rife in the hearts of all mankind in this land, the gentle memories that are awakening to life and finding loving expression.

It seems to me that a halo of peace and glory surrounds our country at this time, because human differences are being put aside, and those even who have frowned upon each other during the year, who have scarcely exchanged a civil word because of misunderstandings and misrepresentations in commercial or social circles, do at this time lay aside all such inharmonies, and are putting forth the sweetest, loveliest portions of their natures; they are even coming together in friendly association and kindly thought, because they are weaving their garlands, preparing their floral mementoes of those who have gone on to the higher land.

This is a beautiful thought to me, Mr. Chairman; and as one who, in the years that have gone, when this country was plunged in civil war, and we felt it our duty to stand forth and be counted in some capacity that would make us of service to our land, and to our common humanity, who took his place and went forth, having been sometimes known as "the fighting parson," I may return to you to-day, and speak my word of good will and kindly cheer to the friends and comrades who remain on earth.

It seems fitting to me that something should be said from the spiritual side of life in behalf of those ascended hosts who are marching onward to grander heights and more glorious campaigns. We are battling for truth, in the name of the Most High: we are sending forth our forces and our influences on every side against the citadels of error, and in the name of justice. We remember with kindly feeling the dear ones who still toil along the mortal pathways; we send to them our heart's best thought and affection; we wish them to know that we understand and appreciate their loving thought and their tender memory, and while they lay their garlands upon the lowly mounds, and bedeck the lofty shafts of marble with their floral offerings, we recognize the fact that it is not to the dust these are given, but there are memories and gentle recognitions of the spiritual which have gone forward to gain brighter victories on high, and so we appreciate and are thankful for the day that brings such loving recognitions, and we wish our friends on earth to realize that this is so.

The garland of peace rests upon the brow of the country at this time. The Goddess of Liberty may proudly lift her head to the heavens above, and feel that, for one day at least in the year, there is perfect union of heart and sentiment and soul from the South to the North, from the East to the West, and that the perfumed blossoms which send up their rich fragrance to the skies of springtime, bear aloft with their odors the prayers, the glowing, thoughtful remembrance of millions of human souls.

We, as members of the great spiritual army of life, recognize this fact, and so we send forth our united affection and sympathy to the friends on earth.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to give my personal remembrance to my friends in this city, and assure them that I am pressing forward to the best of my power, for I desire to receive that which is grandest and holiest from the storehouses of knowledge and truth, not altogether for my own welfare, but that I may, perhaps, be counted in as one worthy to send forth unto others such food as I may receive from on high, to feed, nourish and strengthen the struggling souls whom I love. Warren H. Cudworth.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Warren Hunter.

With the permission of the guides I feel I shall be able to give out a few words to the mortals. You may place me as Warren Hunter, of Montague, Mass. I have tried several times before but have always failed. It was nothing new to me to find I could return to earth and be able to give a few words to loved ones when an avenue was open, ready for me. I well remember when in the mortal hearing people speak like this: "Why, it must be a very easy thing to come and just speak your names and leave a few words with them." I find on making the attempt it is not so easy, for we must get control of the organism, then get permission of the guides that we may speak, and to-day I am thankful that the avenue was open for me at the present time. I looked forward to the coming of the good BANNER OF LIGHT when dwelling in the mortal more than for my food. It was meat and drink for me—I enjoyed every word.

I would like them to know in camp that I am not absent from them in spirit, although they do not behold the mortal form. I am happy, and feel that I have made a little progression in spirit-life. Father, mother and loved ones are waiting the coming of others.

Nancy B. Doolittle.

My home, when dwelling in the mortal, was South Boston. Nancy B. Doolittle. There are many attractions in earth that draw me here to-day. Many times, while suffering in the mortal form, have I felt that I held sweet communion with the angels, and I felt grateful to the dear ones that were so kind to me while lingering in the old distressed body. I often said to Benjamin: "How kind the friends are to do so much for me."

I was connected for a long time with the Ladies' Aid Society. I have no regrets, only that I could not do as much as I would have liked to do, but now, since leaving the old mortal, oh! I have prayed earnestly to the Father and to the angels that the dear ones who were so kind, and who are trying to do so much for each other here, may be blessed and prospered in their work.

Dear old grandma, God bless her, came with outstretched hands to receive me in the spirit home, just back of the veil, which is all that closes you mortals away from us, or we from you. I would like them to learn all they possibly can while here, for we find, on entering spirit-life, it is a school where we learn something we do not learn here.

Nathan Chase.

You may place me in Lynn, Mass.; Nathan Chase. I tried once before to come, but I got rather mixed up with another spirit. Now I guess I 'll say what I have to, and not interfere with anybody else, that is, with your permission. I find since leaving the old mortal form, I had all of this world's goods to make me happy, but I was n't all right, after all.

Lyman is with me, and so is father and mother. I have felt hurt in spirit to see so much contention among the children after I passed out. There was enough for all of you. For the dear one that was so kind, and did so nobly for me in the last hours, I did what I thought was right. It was mine to do with as I pleased, and you find, after all, Nathan's word stood for all the rest of you. I am glad Emma got what I wanted her to have for the kindness she had shown me.

What is the happiness of money unless you get something for it? Now I feel as if I had put considerable emphasis and strength into a few words, but I've got to be Nathan Chase and nobody else.

I am happy, and I am satisfied with the home I have, but I found I could build it up considerable after I crossed over. I would not ask to come back to stay, but I would like them to know I am not dead.

I would like to say to Emma (there are two Emmas—Emma that 's a kind of relation like) there was enough for you all, and what I did for the other Emma is all right. I have not seen one moment that I was sorry for it.

Helen M. Currier.

I have gained permission from the dear spirit guides to-day to say a few words. You may place me in Clinton, Mass. Helen M. Currier. I have tried before to speak, but had not gained as much power as I needed. I was happy in the mortal and I am happy in my spirit home. Before my spirit took its flight I saw a beautiful heavenly vision that came before me and said: "Mother, father, sister, it is sweet to know I shall live again," and before the services were through I was able to make them know I was present.

Oh! how sweet it is to feel that the dear ones will open the door and allow us to come in and commune with them, for father and mother had taught me to know and to feel that the dear angel spirits did come around us.

I was but fifteen when I passed away from the mortal, and as near as I can reckon mortal time, it will be five years coming fall since I left, but I have not been silent these five years. Oh! no; and one and another has come, of the relatives, to join the happy number.

I loved music. It was sweet when in the mortal form, but oh, how sweet in heaven! The flowers are so real, so tangible in spirit, more so than yours can be on earth! I feel I have not been forgotten in these five years of mortal time. I know they will remember Helen Currier.

Raymond Dodge.

I would like to send a letter to my dear papa and mamma. I passed out in Southern California, but my dear parents live in Northbridge Centre, Mass. I know they will get the letter, if you just put that down. My name is Raymond Dodge, and I do want them to know I can send a letter as well as the dear girl who has just spoken. I was not quite as old as she. I suffered a great deal with my hip before passing over, and to-day dear mamma cannot feel that I am dead. No; but I passed away so far, it seems to you in the mortal. Yet how quick we can go there! They felt they could not leave the mortal form there, but I said: "Dear mamma, I can come to you just as easy away from there as if you took the body along with you."

Uncle Joel asked me to say that he was present. Mamma will know who that is. I am so happy in my spirit-home! Dear mother, talk with me privately when you can. I know you will say: "Raymond, I would rather, than to come in public"; but as the privilege is denied me now I seek this channel to speak a few words, that it may reach my dear, dear parents and brother Harry.

Grandfather Fay and grandmother are here to-day. I am so glad I did n't die! Harry said: "Raymond, would you like to come back to stay?" I said: "No; not even if we could go duck-hunting; I would not want to come to stay."

I know, mamma, Uncle Sydney has tried to come to speak with us, but did not get permission from the medium, as they call them; I suppose that 's right, aint it? I have been trying many times in this meeting to send a letter, that papa and mamma might know I came here. I said to Grandma Dodge I might get close up to this guide and get in; so I came just as close as I could while the lady was singing so sweetly, and I stood near; but you see there were some others to speak first; I had to wait till they gave me my time.

Mother, I am ever so happy in my spirit-home; not so far away from you but what I come to Northbridge often, and I sometimes go with Harry to hear the music in the concerts.

Papa, I know you have been trying of late to come into communication with me privately, but did not succeed; in a little time you will, and we will talk together just as real as we have done before. Papa and mamma, your Raymond lives in heaven, and you will have me back again; we 'll all be together, and Grandma Fay says that not one link will be left out of the chain.

Uncle Joel says that in time he will be able to send a message, but not just yet. Uncle Joel is Dr. Fay. They will know when he comes to give a message himself.

Will you please, Mr. Chairman, send this letter to Northbridge Centre? My father's name is Marcus Dodge.

Aaron Cilley.

My home was in Andover, N. H. My name is Aaron Cilley. I have been in the spirit-land, as they term it, for quite a number of years, but I think I have been on earth about as much, for we are not confined to one place by any means. Abbie is here to-day, and mother, and also Gracie.

George, Abbie says as soon as the channel is opened for her she will do her own talking to you. George, I know you have had some disappointments of late; but take courage; these disappointments are only for a day in the mortal; in spirit-life we have none, only when we return to earth many times and cannot make mortals understand we are with them; these are the greatest disappointments we encounter.

I am happy in my spirit-home. I often take a look around old Andover and wonder: Have they forgotten old Squire Cilley? Well, some have and some have not, and some have crossed the boundary since I passed on. I am glad to-day to even give out a few words, for I know I shall be remembered by some of the old town's people.

George, go on and learn all you can in this life; but let reason work, do your own thinking, and you'll come out all right at last.

Miranda Gleason.

I would like to speak a few words. My home was in Manchester, N. H. You may place my name as Miranda Gleason. Many long years have passed since I passed on with others. I would say to the dear ones that are left, Edna and George, that I would like them to read the few words that mother leaves to-day. I, too, have tried many times to give out a little to the children, but have always failed till now. Father, mother and Eben are with me to-day. Edna, Warren is with me part of the time, but is saddened sometimes when he comes to earth to feel that he cannot come into communication with you or the children; but he says that if he does not make you understand that he lives and is able to speak to you on this side you may have a great deal to learn on the other. He often speaks of you, dear Edna, and the children. George, I have felt many times that if mother could only leave a message for you you would be comforted and consoled when trials overtake you, for your pathway of life has been rough and shadowed; not all shadows, for some sunny spots, dear boy, have come to you at intervals. Gracie is here, but not the little child you laid away so tenderly. She often says: "Grandma, papa thinks I must be small." She has grown to womanhood in spirit-life. How beautiful, dear child, to know we shall all come together and there will not be one missing. I am happy in my spirit home; but, George, father and myself are not together all the time, any more than you would be all together here, but we separate and go wherever the spirit dictates. I leave my blessing upon you, dear child.

Ella Poole.

My home was in East Boston. You may place my name as Ella Poole. I have before tried to speak, but have failed. I would like father to know I am happy, and have understood all the changes that have been going on in the home. Mother is with me to-day. Laura, I know, dear sister, you are not feeling well, but in heaven we have no aches, and no ills can find us. Mother is happy and so is grandma, and many dear relatives, and friends that are not relatives; we are together, but not all the time. Father, I wish you would open the door a little and feel that mother and I do come to the home. Dear brothers, we often come so near we can place our hands upon you. Father, mother asked me to say that she is pleased with the change you have made of late, and she will be in the home with you often. We have met Uncle John many, many times since he passed out so suddenly.

My father is William Poole, of East Boston.

Charles L. Brown.

My name is Charles L. Brown, and my home was in Seabrook, N. H. I suppose they will term me a soldier. I have not been able to manifest before, but it has not been because I was not here. I have failed in the attempt, the same as many others. I am thankful in spirit that the Government has done a little something for Sally. Sylvester has lately joined the happy number beyond the veil, and to-day I am glad there are channels provided for us who have crossed the boundary, but are not dead men by any means. I've not met any dead people. I think your dead people are on this side of the veil, not ours, for we are all active, all willing to do the work we have to do, and I assure you there are no drones over here. I am happy. I am satisfied with the home provided for me, although I find I can build it more beautiful every day through progression.

The soldier boys, if I do say it, came up and did their duty.

I am glad that the Government is doing a little something for those that are left to finish fighting the battle of life. It is right that they should do something for them; when we've laid down the old mortal for the country's sake, the least they can do is to care for or remember those that are left. I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the privilege of speaking, although we got the privilege before we came.

SPIRIT MESSAGES

TO BE PUBLISHED NEXT WEEK.

THE MESSAGES ON HAND,

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

ANDREW LYLE.

For a long time I have wished we might hear from a resident on the other side, who, while in the material, might have been a resident of Barnet. At last my wishes in a measure have been gratified. I notice in the BANNER OF LIGHT, of July 14th, a communication from ANDREW LYLE. Fifty-six years ago I came to Barnet a boy. At that time there was a tract of land up on the side of the mountain contiguous to this village, which went by the name of the "Lyle lot," Andrew Lyle having occupied it years before. In conversation with an elderly lady I gathered the following in relation to "Aleck" mentioned in the communication. She told me she was a girl six or seven years of age, and recollects very distinctly the shudder that came over her when she first saw this horridly deformed Aleck. We were hoping to hear from those we were acquainted with, but take great pleasure in reporting the verification and truthfulness of what we are favored with from the land of spirits. E. B. CLEMENT.

Barnet, Vt., July 18th, 1888.

ANNIE GRIEVES.

I take pleasure in acknowledging the communication published in the BANNER OF LIGHT July 14th, signed ANNIE GRIEVES, as being all correct. This communication was promised me through Mrs. Smith about ten days before it was given at your circle-room, and I have been anxiously waiting for it ever since. And now one is promised me from my father, and I shall look for that also in due time.

Thanking you for this means of communication, I would say, go on with the good work until the light of this great truth shall illuminate all dark places.

Yours for the truth, from whatever source,

Haverhill, July 16th, 1888. R. A. GRIEVES.

ELLA DOWNS NEAL.

I am happy to acknowledge that the message from my wife, ELLA DOWNS NEAL, given through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, is true in every way. Thanks to THE BANNER and the angel-world that they can communicate with us.

With thanks, J. W. NEAL.

75 Court street, Boston, Mass.

LILLIE KIMBALL.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of July 14th my attention was attracted to the message of LILLIE KIMBALL, which I fully recognize as coming direct from my dear sister. MRS. CHARLES A. WILMAN.

Lewiston, Me., 1888.

"TRUSTS," AND THE PEOPLE.—Thus, in these times, we see the ablest lawyers, the ablest chemists, the greatest inventors, the most ingenious mechanics, the most competent business managers in the pay of great corporations, combinations and trusts, doing obediently the unscrupulous will of the aggregated and selfish capital which employs them. Thus we see more and more even our public men the servants of trusts and corporations.

Thus we see growing in this country a great, unscrupulous, powerful plutocracy, banded together more and more closely, resisting by the help of its hired agents every attempt to reform abuses and to reëstablish liberty, crushing out opposition, more and more greedily grasping power, and bribing the best intellect of the country into its service.—New York Herald.

"SUMMER DAYS AT ONSET," by Miss Susan H. Wixon, is a very pleasant pamphlet of fourteen chapters, and the last is an interesting story of a famous Indian chief who flourished in that region a long time ago. A number of incidents, historical, amusing and sentimental, are described in the excellent manner of the well-known and admired writer, and her pretty little pamphlet is also illustrated with pictures of Onset Bay, and the Indian chiefs Waccosta and Tuscawo, and a handsome Indian young woman by the name of Awanee. A charming pamphlet to read in these summer days when one takes a sail in a steamboat, a ride in a car, or sits down under a tree in his garden on a Sunday afternoon. 84 pages. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.—The Boston Investigator.

☞ Prof. Phelps, of Andover, having endeavored to inaugurate a new crusade on the old-time "Satanic" plane, thinking people will do well to read that pertinent work by Allen Putnam, Esq., entitled, "WITCHCRAFT OF NEW ENGLAND EXPLAINED BY MODERN SPIRITUALISM"; Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston, have it on sale.

Prof. Kellar Again.

SIDNEY KELSEY, late Secretary of the Spiritualist Society of Erie, writes us as follows from Williamsport, Pa.:

"I notice in THE BANNER of July 7th, 1888, an editorial article under the heading 'Mr. Kellar as an "Exposer,"' which, among other items, contains an extract from a former letter written by Kellar himself, in which he distinctly asserts that after having witnessed spiritualistic phenomena, his 'inability to explain or account for what must have been an intelligent force that produced the manifestations, which, if my senses are to be relied on, was in no way the result of trickery or sleight-of-hand.'

This same 'wonderful Mr. Kellar' penned a column article, that appeared in The Erie Sunday Morning Gazette of June 24th last, in which the writer relates some of his early and latter exploits as a Spiritualist and 'exposer.' I myself am an Erie man, and know that the 'wonderful Kellar' lived there during his boyhood days, and that his parents still reside in that city; and that the city still clings to him as her 'favorite son' is evidenced by the editor's caption to the article in question: 'From Our Own Kellar.' The great magician announces with a grand flourish of self-importance, 'There are any number of amiable and soft-headed old ladies and gentlemen flourishing throughout the land, who, blessed with well-lined pocket-books and credulous dispositions, have ardent cravings for communications with the spirit-world.' That to satisfy this demand there are a 'liberal supply of professed Spiritists who keep the "spirits on tap" and furnish intercourse "with the élite of spookdom,"' etc. 'Verily,' says K., 'who shall say this is not a noble age for the professed Spiritist?' 'My experience,' he adds, 'with professed Spiritists began very early, extending over a period of more than twenty years, and I can most truthfully and most emphatically declare that I never witnessed a so-called "spiritualistic manifestation" that I was not enabled, after careful investigation, to brand as a deception and a fraud.'

Then he proceeds to relate his adventures with the famous Davenport Brothers, showing their success in the old world before crowned heads, scientists, and lordlings of various degrees, he himself, with others, believing such results to be produced by supernatural agencies. But, as time moved on and he grew older, he 'watched and waited,' until at last he found that 'Brutus could start a spirit as soon as Cæsar'—in other words, that he himself could, without the aid of any other spirit outside that in the Kellar bosom, duplicate any and all of the Davenport marvels. Then he separated from the brothers and went to Mexico, a full-fledged, 'professional Spiritist,' where he was charged with 'being in league with the devil.' Next he went to India, studied magic, jugglery and legerdemain of various kinds, such as he could pick up in the countries of the Orient. It was soon after this that he met the world-renowned slate-writer, Dr. Henry Slade, and after trying his skill to reproduce the slate-manifestations admitted that he could not, and that 'there must be something besides trickery in Spiritualism.' The learned 'deceptionist' also alludes in his tirade to his connection with the 'Seybert Commission,' at Philadelphia, claiming that through his agency and cleverness that wonderful body was enabled to report slate writing, and the whole range of so-called spiritualistic manifestations, to be humbug and deception—describing how such feats were accomplished, etc.

Of course this great manipulator of illusions and effusions has not read Hon. A. B. Richmond's book replying to the Seybert Commission, and declaring its conclusions to be drawn from false premises. Not he! That would be beneath the dignity of the great Fakir of the East, learned in all the arts of the Egyptians! When he was a child he was a Spiritualist, but after he got his eyes open he saw that it was like the baseless fabric of a vision—a seeming, without a single foundation in fact! Still, in the face and eyes of this great knowledge—this indescribable something—which leads him to pronounce Spiritualism a humbug, and its votaries 'amiable soft-heads,' he refuses to reveal the manner of duplicating such manifestations, except by an explanation that rather mystifies than elucidates anything.

Kellar has said once that certain so-called spiritualistic demonstrations were beyond his reach or skill; now he avers that he 'NEVER YET witnessed any spiritualistic manifestations that he could not brand as deceptions.' Which of these statements would he have us believe?

This wonderful two-tongued prophet of the prestidigitational dispensation characterizes Spiritualists as 'amiable, soft-headed old ladies and gentlemen!' So be it! For if to believe in immortal life; if to say that I expect to be reunited to my spirit-wife in the better land; if to hope that my dear friends in spirit-life will continue to bless my earthly pilgrimage, and greet me finally on the other shore, be an evidence of a mellow cranium, then like Paul I shall continue to 'glory in mine infirmity.'

We who have attained through actual personal experiment a knowledge of the verity of spirit communion, need have no fears of what men of the Kellar stripe may have to say in the premises. Secure in truth we can afford to wait, knowing that

'The false alone need dread delay,
For time will only strengthen right!'"

Passed to Spirit-Life.

Dr. M. was formerly a resident of Gilsum, N. H., but of late years of this city. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his material presence, although they feel it is well with him. He was a staunch believer in Spiritualism, and a good magnetic healer. The funeral service was held at his home in this city July 3d, Rev. S. H. McCollester officiating. He paid a high tribute to the memory of the artisan brother as being a man of true principles and sterling worth. M. M. HOLT.

Keene, N. H., July 14th, 1888.

Mrs. Draper had for many years taken much interest in the phenomena of Spiritualism and in the Spiritual Philosophy. She was a kind-hearted, benevolent woman, with strong domestic sympathies and aspirations. Having but few intimate friends, she was devoted to them and to her few relatives with much affection. COM.

THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of Spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocketbooks. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health,

HOW TO LIVE A CENTURY AND GROW OLD GRACEFULLY. By J. M. PEEBLES, M.D., author of "Travels Around the World," etc.

In preparing this work, while avoiding technicalities and Greek and Latin phrases, the author has aimed to be practical—rigidly practical—rather than original or elegant; aimed to bring to mind and clearly present the vital importance of air, food, clothing, drink, sunshine and sleep in such varied ways as to inspire the reader with a proper and persistent use of them that the number of years upon earth may be many—even a hundred!

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and ingenious defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1888.

The Spiritualist Camp-Meetings.

Onset Bay.

Monday afternoon, July 16th, at the conference-meeting, Dr. Richardson presided. Tuesday's lecture by J. Clegg Wright, under control of William Denton, was pronounced one of the best delivered from this platform.

Dr. T. A. Bland, of Washington, D. C., lectured Thursday morning on the Indian question, "The Origin and Work of the Indian Defense Association." Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Worcester, was controlled by the spirit of Helen Hunt Jackson, who made interesting remarks in behalf of the Indian.

Fact meeting in the afternoon, conducted by L. L. Whitlock.

Mr. E. Bach, an extensive lumber-dealer from Aberdeen, Dakota, has come among us for the investigation of the various phenomena, and will probably stop through the meetings.

L. L. Whitlock and Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock have rooms at Union Villa.

David Brown's séances are well attended.

Dr. B. M. Lawrence has left Wickett's Island and is now at Prairie Cottage, East Central Avenue. Mr. Lawrence gave a lecture Monday evening, assisted by vocal and instrumental music.

A series of "hops" are being held in the dining-room of Hotel Onset. Music by the Boston Orchestra, under direction of Louie Poole. Dancing in the Glen Cove House Wednesday evening. The Temple dances have commenced, the Middleboro' orchestra furnishing the music. These popular dances under the management of ladies will be continued every Saturday night till further notice.

Hon. Sidney Smith and wife are the guests of Dr. E. Y. Johnson.

Sailing parties every afternoon after the meetings. Quantities of bluefish are coming to camp. A party of men, women and children who had been out fishing Thursday, passed our office with long strings of scup and other kinds of fish, as many as could conveniently be carried.

Thursday a large party of ladies and gentlemen from Boston, Philadelphia, Brockton and Sandwich, who are stopping at Onset, visited "Aunt Hannah's Farm" for a day's picnic, and enjoyed a good time generally. There was a dinner and supper on the lawn, dancing in the big old barn, also in what is called "Aunt Hannah's room." Mr. Chubbuck, the genial and accommodating host, who is "monarch of all he surveys," in his usual kind hearted way tried to make every one feel at home and happy, and all left in the best of spirits, feeling it had been a day long to be remembered. Mr. Chubbuck enjoys making others happy, hence the secret of the good times at "Aunt Hannah's Farm."

At the Fact Meeting Thursday remarks were made by the Quaker control of Dr. Paxson, followed by Mrs. Stevens, of California, Mrs. Morse, of Minneapolis, Mrs. Stiles, of Worcester, with a poem, Mr. Haines, under control, Mrs. Whitlock, under control, and Mrs. Pennell, as "Prairie Flower," making the meeting a very interesting one. The Facts Convention will take place Thursday and Friday, Aug. 2d and 3d.

Saturday afternoon Miss M. T. Shelhamer delivered an eloquent lecture to an interested audience on "The Work of Spiritualism as a Factor in the Progress of Human Civilization."

Mrs. Beste is holding very successful séances at her cottage on South Boulevard every Wednesday and Saturday evening. Mrs. Cadwell's séances on Fourth street are also well attended, and very satisfactory.

The committee on music has obtained a new organ for the auditorium from the Smith American Organ Co.

As engineer Edw. Stanton was coming from Onset Station Friday P. M. with two cars loaded with passengers, he espied ahead of him a team on the Onset bridge whose horse was prancing, and seemed to be almost unmanageable. Quickly comprehending the situation, he whistled for brakes and stopped his train until the horse could be got to a place of safety before proceeding. The driver proved to be a gentleman from Red Brook Club House, whose profuse thanks showed a keen appreciation of his narrow escape and the timely forethought of the engineer.

The Berry séances, held each evening, are well attended.

The Old Colony affords good facilities for reaching Onset, there being six trains daily and three on Sundays.

The second Temple dance, under the management of Mrs. Eva Cassell, Mrs. Minnie Pierce and Mrs. Mabel Smalley, took place last Saturday night, and was largely attended. At these dances ladies have the same privilege of selecting partners as the gentlemen, making them social and pleasant for all who attend.

Aug. 4th a grand Masquerade Ball will take place. No dancer will be allowed on the floor without being masked. It is the object of these lady managers to make their entertainments first class in every particular.

Thursday evening a large company assembled at a reception given to Mrs. C. E. Gilbert, of Washington, D. C., at Harmony Lodge, which proved a very enjoyable occasion.

Saturday's trains brought many people to the grounds. Sunday morning we were awakened by the gentle patter, patter of the rain on the roof, which increased to copious showers, watering the thirsty ground and plants, and forming in great pools and rivulets along the streets and avenues. This continued without ceasing through the day, making it necessary to hold the meetings in the Temple. The morning lecture was delivered by Miss M. T. Shelhamer, her subject, "Shams," followed in the afternoon by A. A. Wheelock on "Organization." Mr. Edgar W. Emerson gave tests after the lectures; he is a favorite platform test medium.

Mrs. J. J. Whitney, of San Francisco, whose public tests at Onset have been the admiration of all who have heard her, is winning golden opinions from her sitters by the excellence of her private tests and spiritual communications. California may well be proud of their representative. Mrs. Whitney intends to visit Lake Pleasant Camp the last two weeks of August, and will give tests in New York City in September.

The following are some of the names registered at headquarters the past week: Elisha Morse and wife, Minneapolis, at Glen Cove House; E. Bach, Aberdeen, Dakota; T. A. Bland, Washington, D. C., at 74 Pleasant Avenue; John R. Morse and wife, Walpole, Mass., at "Our Home at Onset," South Boulevard; E. Byfield, Toronto, Canada; Emma J. Nickerson, Boston; Mrs. C. E. Gilbert, Washington, D. GUSTIE F. HOWE.

Col. William D. Crockett and wife are pleasantly domiciled at the Greenleaf Cottage; they are enjoying themselves at séances and the theatre nightly. Col. Crockett is a man of business, and cannot well leave it even for recreation, being engaged in looking after the State printing most of the time. He is a man of deeds not words, hence does not make many preliminary remarks in introducing speakers. I learn his business engagements are such that he will employ Mr. Fairchild to act for him as Chairman.

There are some thirsty individuals at Onset from St. Louis, Mo., and Nashville, Tenn. The most of them come yearly. The expense of coming and returning, in fare, is some $25 each, beside their expenses while here. The party has three cottages, and other places where they get entertainment. The most of them are very much interested in the Spiritualistic Philosophy. John Lumsden, Esq., formerly a banker, and now a merchant, leads the party in making arrangements for the trip, etc. They enjoy Onset as a seaside summer resort, and gain strength thereby.

Nelson Powell and family, from near Rochester, N. Y., are spending the season at Onset. Mr. Powell is a well-informed Spiritualist, also has a powerful healing gift, and often has exercised it to great advantage to the sick.

James J. Brooke, residing near Philadelphia, has been at Onset, investigating the materialization phenomenon. He relates some grand tests that he received at Mrs. J. J. Whitney's séances in the mental phase. It is interesting to hear him relate his experience while here.

Mr. Elisha Morse is making his yearly visit from Minneapolis, Minn., to the Eastern spiritual camp-meetings, and well does he enjoy them; nothing seems to disturb him or his equilibrium. He is a man of wealth and takes his ease. This season he is looking more cheerful than ever, as he has taken to himself a life-partner and traveling companion, Miss Cora A. Ellison, of San Francisco; they have been united in the bonds of wedlock since his last year visit. Mrs. Morse is a very pleasant lady, a fine medium, and has spoken several times at conferences with acceptance; she has a very pleasing address, and gains friends at once. She has been engaged in the healing art several years in California with good success. They intend to visit most of the Eastern camp-meetings on their tour this season.

Judge Amos Adams, of California, is staying at Vaughn Cottage. He is ex-President of the California camp-meeting and a solid, sensible Spiritualist, also a good business man.

William Johnson, of Haverhill, Mass., is here for a short time. He has had much satisfaction in independent slate-writing, and takes his proofs with him.

E. J. Hayward, of East Braintree, Mass., is staying at Onset. He is one of the full fledged Spiritualists that could not be shaken in his knowledge of the same if all the mediums should say they have been imposing at times, as he has received abundant evidence that is beyond trick and deception to produce, that his loved ones still live and can and do return to him with greetings.

Simeon Snow and wife, from Cambridge, are staying at the Glen Cove House. Mr. Snow takes in all the mediums in his investigation, and enjoys it, and takes life easily.

Hon. John Low, of Chelsea, is staying at the Washburn House. What he does not receive from the spirit-world but few do, as he has all faith and confidence in spirits.

Mrs. Townsend Wood opened the meetings for the season of 1888, dealing largely on the material side of Spiritualism and life, making some broad statements concerning the best way to live. Mr. J. Clegg Wright followed in the afternoon in his usual eloquence, and on Tuesday of last week Mr. Wright gave an address that identified him with the lamented Professor Denton. He talked slowly and in an entirely different manner from what he did on Sunday, and reasoned on the historical side of the question.

Miss M. T. Shelhamer is the guest of Mrs. Ricker. She spoke on Saturday last to an appreciative audience on Spiritualism in its broadest and most comprehensive manner, and many lessons could have been gathered thereby by investigators and those interested in the philosophy of the subject. Miss Shelhamer and A. A. Wheelock were the speakers last Sunday, July 22d, and Edgar W. Emerson gave some satisfactory tests. In the morning it rained severely, which prevented many from leaving home. Mr. Wheelock speaks earnestly and with much force. He is one of the oldest mediums before the public, and still retains his zeal and enthusiasm for the cause.

There are some fifteen mediums for full form materialization upon the grounds. The two days' Facts Meetings of last week took the form of a conference more than relating positive facts. Subjects relating to human life were discussed by able exponents, many strangers entering into the different issues. The question is often asked why so much time and space is devoted to so-called "Christian Science," under different names, if the adherents know nothing, and care less, of the spiritualistic philosophy? Spiritualism thrives better when it is advanced pure and simple rather than on the "higher sphere" plane such as common people cannot grasp or understand.

We cannot ignore first principles as a human being, while on the earth plane of life. Cause and effect is the order of things, not only for the past, but in the present, and will continue on into the future, whether mortals desire it or otherwise.

Mrs. Howe, your agent and correspondent, is one of the most active individuals at Onset, and needs to have an assistant, as she cannot be omnipresent, taking notices of the proceedings at the auditorium and attending to duties at the headquarters. She has done a good work in securing names of individuals, residents of Massachusetts, to the medical petition for the purpose of allowing the citizens of the State to retain their constitutional rights to employ any mode of eradicating disease, or any individual that they have confidence and faith in, when disease comes upon them.

All who come here should first visit headquarters, and register their names, for obvious reasons; one is that friends may know where to find them.

The hotels are filling up quite rapidly. The Washburn House has all it can attend to, giving two hours' time for dining; many cottagers take their meals there. Several other hotels and restaurants are doing a good business in furnishing meals.

Luther Colby, Esq., veteran editor of the BANNER OF LIGHT, has again arrived, and is staying at Hotel Onset. He is looking quite well and active, and takes great interest in mediums; being one himself, he is quite sensitive to the different influences he meets in a promiscuous audience. This, doubtless, is the reason, in a great measure, he is not seen more frequently at camp meetings, and various gatherings of the Spiritualists.

Mrs. Lewis and Dr. Tryon, of Brooklyn, N. Y., have been extended an invitation by Major Griffith to occupy his Mediums' Retreat free of charge; a generous act on the part of Major Griffith. Mrs. Lewis has given some fine tests, and especially one to Mr. Haines, of Cambridge. Any one patronizing her will gain much satisfaction, and aid Mrs. Lewis to sustain herself and children until her suit at law is decided.

Rev. James N. Sherman, East Providence, is making his annual visit, staying at the Hartshorn House. Mr. Sherman was formerly an Elder, or teacher in the Second Advent denomination, but he now looks upon the doctrine as referring to a spiritual coming instead of a material one, and has embraced the natural spiritualistic theory of the second coming of Jesus and all other spirits as being the only solution of life on earth-plane and spirit spheres. He receives satisfactory proof of his convictions in his latter rendering of the Bible, from loved ones gone before, and enjoys the same.

Mr. P. S. Briggs, of Charlestown, is here. He has a nice cottage at Burlington Camp-Meeting, and is one of the oldest Spiritualists of Massachusetts.

J. H. Cotwell has arrived from Marysville, Kansas. He makes yearly visits to the Spiritual Camp-Meetings; has great healing power, and has done any amount of healing free, as he is well-to-do in the material things of life. He gets great satisfaction in spirit manifestations.

At the Washburn House, during the week ending July 22d, ninety four guests registered their names. Among the guests is Mr. A. B. Plympton, of Lowell. S. Davis, wife and daughter, of Kingston, Mass., who are yearly visitors, are among late arrivals.

Hon. Sidney Dean and wife, of Warren, R. I., are at Dr. Johnson's, where also are Mr. and Mrs. Webb, of New York, Mrs. Barnes (Dr. J.'s niece), and Mr. Matherson; the latter, an artist, is making views of Onset Bay.

FACT MEETINGS AT ONSET.

These meetings commenced at Onset Thursday afternoon, July 19th, and were opened by Col. Wm. D. Crockett, the President of the Association, who introduced Mr. L. L. Whitlock as their manager, in an address in which allusion was made to the wide scope of his investigation of Spiritualism, the time spent by him in so doing, and the fact that he had conducted these meetings for a period of six or seven years. Mr. Whitlock responded, welcoming all to the meeting; by invitation a number of prominent Spiritualists, lecturers and mediums sat upon the platform, and, so far as time would admit, were called upon to speak.

The Facts Convention will take place Aug. 2d and 3d, the morning session of each day to be devoted to the discussion of phenomena and theories, and held in the grove. Thursday afternoon the Spirit Congress will meet at the Temple. It is hoped this will prove to be an interesting and instructive occasion. Thursday evening, at the Temple, music and mediumship. A séance by Mrs. J. J. Whitney, the celebrated test medium of California, has been promised. A light physical séance by Horatio Eddy, one of the original Eddy family of Vermont. Dr. D. J. Stansbury, of San Francisco, Cal., has kindly consented to give one of his marvelous exhibitions of independent slate-writing. Dr. Henry Rogers, the medium through whom the picture "Amarona" and others have been given, has also promised to be present and do what his guides may dictate. Mrs. Whittemore, one of the finest inspirational singers of Boston, Mr. Harry Stratton and others will furnish vocal and instrumental music. Miss Emma J. Nickerson, and many others whose names are not yet announced, will assist in making this an interesting occasion. Friday evening a concert from 8 to 9 o'clock, and dancing until 12. ***

The Fifteenth Annual Camp-Meeting of the New England Spiritualists' Association opened here today. All through the week people have been arriving, which aggregates the largest number upon the grounds that any July has seen. The Worcester Cadet Band came yesterday and gave their opening concert last evening to a large and appreciative audience. It was a marked success. The morning opened fair, with a pure and invigorating atmosphere, all Nature being at its best. The band gave three concerts, morning, noon and night, the selections being with taste and well rendered. Lake Pleasant has always been particularly fortunate in having good instrumental music, and this year will be no exception to the rule. The vocal music, in charge of Mr. J. R. Billingham, of Saratoga, will be a special feature of the meeting.

An audience of several hundred were gathered at the auditorium for the opening service. The band rendered "America," and President Beals extended a cordial welcome to the people in a brief address, in which he feelingly alluded to the first camp meeting held here in 1874. He said that there were but few remaining who first met here; many had passed on, but though absent in the physical must be present in spirit. He trusted that all upon the grounds would be happy in some way or another, and thus the session of 1888 would be a success.

Hon. A. H. Dailey of Brooklyn was then introduced, who gave something of his experience as a poet, and upon the present occasion instead of an address would give a poem. Judge Dailey then interested the audience for a half-hour in the rendering of the poem entitled "The Visitation." The poem is the finest given at this place. Mr. Fred Crockett of Boston then came upon the platform and gave several exercises in mediumship.

The afternoon session was held in Association Hall, consisting of an address by Judge Dailey upon the topic "Bibles," which will be published entire at a later date.

First Concert—9 A. M.—Priests' March, Mendelssohn; Overture, "Morn, Noon and Night," Suppe; Casino Tanze, Strauss; Selection, "Falka," Chassaigne.

Second Concert—Noon.—Overture, "Ungarisch Lustspiel," Keler Bela; Concert Polka, "Fioctonian" (performed by Mr. Pilete), Casey; Grand selection from Mozart's operas, arranged by Godfrey; Concert Polonaise (introducing solos by Mr. Morrissette, Mr. Amelotte, Messrs. Pilete and Lalone, Mr. Valva, and Messrs. Powell and Dalbec), Bessig.

Third Concert—Evening.—Reminiscences of Meyerbeer, Meyerbeer; "Mill in the Forest," Ellenberg; Polaca de Concert (by Mr. Valva), Ch. La Thiere; Hallelujah Chorus, Handel.

Lookout Mountain Camp, Tenn.

The third week has been one of special interest in the holding of a memorial service to the memory of Mrs. S. A. H. Talbot, on Monday night.

This lady was engaged to lecture here this season, as she has been previously, but passed to spirit-life a day or two before the camp convened.

The services were very impressive. Dr. Samuel Watson presided. Addresses were made by Mrs. Kates, Mrs. Glading, Dr. Fuller, Mr. Kates and President Albert. Mrs. Richmond gave an improvised poem.

The Committee on Resolutions made the following report, which was adopted by a rising vote:

Whereas, In the due course of nature, our beloved sister in the cause of spiritual culture has been born into the higher life; and

Whereas, We shall miss her ministrations in the flesh, that have been so full of a divine inspiration, pointing ever to a higher and better unfoldment of all powers, mental, moral and spiritual; and

Whereas, Sister Talbot was a willing and favorite speaker and medium at all the camp-meetings previously held by this Association, and was engaged to give of her inspirations at the present session; therefore be it

Resolved, That we do not deplore her departure from the earthly tabernacle as a blow from the hand of Providence that shall be to our misfortune, but rather look upon such a ripe birth into spirit life as a blessing to her, which will also be an added source of inspiration from whence to draw at our spiritual gatherings.

Resolved, That we look upon death as a white-robed messenger of eternal life, and regard such epoch in our lives as a blessed period—when time has granted us a proper earthly experience—which expands our opportunities for usefulness, and advances us to better opportunities for a progressive unfoldment.

Resolved, That we found in Sister Talbot such a worthy character and nobility of soul that we shall truly miss her genial greetings and familiar presence in the form of earth, but realize that her hallowing influence will ever rest upon us, and that the ministry of spirit will be realized by us in the familiar form of our beloved evangel.

Resolved, That we extend to the husband left behind, our earnest assurances of sympathy for his loss of an earthly companion; and that he will meet her again ere long in a more blessed realm, where she will have prepared a mansion for him eternal in the heavens.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be furnished the husband of our co worker, and to each of the spiritual journals, and that a page of record be devoted to her memory in the official books of the Association.

SAMUEL WATSON,
G. W. KATES,
JERRY ROBINSON,
Committee.

Wednesday and Thursday were devoted to business meetings of the stockholders.

The meeting of special interest on Friday was for the colored people. Quite a number of them were attentive listeners.

Dr. A. W. S. Rothermel has arrived and commenced holding physical séances in the light.

Mrs. Anna Cissna is giving much satisfaction with her slate-writing manifestations.

One more week will close this Camp. FIELD.

On a pleasant morning of a recent date, we left our home by the lake-side, to essay what we had for several years been contemplating, a visit to that "narrow neck of land, 'twixt two unbounded seas," known as Cape Cod. This time the reality exceeded the anticipation. We had read Sally Pratt McLean's "Cape Cod Folks" with interest, and we had loved some of her characters for their native wit, their sweet simplicity, and their true nobility of character.

On the way thither we were joined by a friend, to whose charming companionship, intellectual accomplishments and kindness of soul we are more than indebted for the interest of the occasion.

Arriving at Harwich station we were met by Mr. Taylor, who took us to the grove, a ride of two miles, through a village of cottage homes, where thrift and good taste were exhibited. We took dinner at the headquarters, and though among strangers, it required no extended study to see that they were friends. Dr. H. B. Storer, of Boston, President of the Association, greeted us with an emphatic cordiality, and used every effort to promote our happiness during our stay. In passing we would say that the Doctor is held in the highest estimation by every member of the Association; and that he annually leads that flock into "green pastures, and by the side of still waters," is not an idle tale. Space forbids a detailed description of Ocean Grove: We will only say umbrageous oaks and healing pines extend to the broad Atlantic. In the centre of the grove rises a staff upon which proudly floats the flag of our country. Upon its silken folds there came to my vision pictures and legends innumerable. Fields of carnage and death were there, with victories of peace and moral triumph.

Above all was that important, magic word, "Freedom," expressive of equality of rights, of sex, of action, a mental freedom without which we would be poor indeed.

The address of the afternoon was by Mr. A. E. Carpenter, of Boston, upon "The Capabilities of the Soul." It was an able effort and worth listening to. The service was concluded with inspirational singing, with organ accompaniment, by Miss Emma J. Nickerson, of Columbus Avenue, Boston, the subjects being selected by the audience and improvised by the medium, the principal one being "Ocean Grove." The audience expressed their appreciation of the lady's talents in this direction by hearty applause. We were most hospitably entertained during our stay at the cottage of Mrs. M. H. Handren, on Ocean Avenue, a lady whose courtesies were of the noblest order. We formed many pleasant acquaintances, which must be lasting. We cannot enumerate names, but they will know, and will please accept these notes.

The best and most enduring pictures are those that hang on "Memory's walls." We will mention but one: The hour, twilight; the scene, a sea beach; the background, a forest; in front, old ocean, with Luna's beams diffusing o'er earth and sea and sky; a lady who has most bravely buffeted the adverse winds, is now a cultured elocutionist, and whose pure soul beamed in every lineament, reciting this poem:

And, changing from the lofty diction of Byron to the finer sentiment of Tennyson, closed with this:

"The stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill,
But oh! for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."

The visible audience was small in numbers. Was the invisible large? Who can tell? It may have been.

We left Ocean Grove with this thought: There are some things that neither time, nor space, nor cruel fate can ever efface, one of which is the memory of happy hours.

Our benediction to Ocean Grove shall be: Long may you remain a Mecca to which pilgrims on life's uneven journey may turn for spiritual culture, a spot where flowers may bloom in springtime, and in autumn the wings of ocean sing sweet requiems to summer days; a place where age may calmly contemplate the sunset of this life in the anticipation of the sunrise of another; along whose shady walks youth and beauty may ever tell that story whose origin was Eden, and whose finis is Heaven. Notes from Niantic Camp.

Monday, July 5th, was opening day, and devoted to making arrangements for the comfort of campers and visitors. July 8th was a lovely day, though cool for the season. Mrs. B. W. Banks was our speaker. After the opening exercises by E. R. Whiting and his inspirational poem, all seemed to catch the spirit and thoroughly enjoyed an intellectual feast. Mrs. B., in summing it up, called it the happiest day in her spiritual work.

Sunday, 15th, we had two good intellectual discourses from C. Dawbarn. Those who have heard him know his worth. We wish he might have stayed longer. In the audience were G. W. Burnham, Mrs. J. Robinson, E. Ripley of Willimantic, Mr. Platt of Waterbury, Gad Norton of Bristol, Mrs. Pearl of Hartford, and many more familiar Connecticut friends. Those who are here are enjoying to their utmost a pleasant season of communion with visibles and invisibles.

Mrs. White of New London, our sick friend, has so gained as to sit at her table, the first time in nine months, if I am correctly informed.

A new cottage is going up in the vicinity of the Military Camp Ground this week; also one for Mrs. Kelly, of East Lyme. Hope more will be constructed.

The Ladies' Sewing Society met July 18th at the pavilion to repair certain property of the Association, and then all were invited to a nice supper gotten up by our genial friend, Herbert Stearns, of the restaurant.

The new lamps (bought out of last season's proceeds of the Ladies' Aid Society) have arrived, and have been put in place.

The Bidwell cottage has opened its doors.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Whiting, of New Haven, have returned; their pleasantly located cottage will be the resort of many congenial friends.

The ladies are alive to the coming fair, and though business has to be attended to by many of us, yet we find an occasional hour to spend with our invisibles, who we feel are with us helping us in our work. Often we are happily surprised to greet them through some new channel, showing that mediumship is permeating the masses of humanity.

Louis Daniels and family, of New London, have returned again to camp life. May they long live to enjoy it, for more honest out-and-out Spiritualists are not met every day.

"Oh! what beauties," two strings of big fish caught just outside, off the river, but——that's nothing, a fishing party made up of the female portion of our camp is an every-day occurrence, and Mrs. J. D. Eager is not only a good fisherman in the spiritual realm, but also a good one in the watery element.

July 22d opened up a drizzling morning and a rainy forenoon; inclement weather in the afternoon necessitated meeting our speaker, A. E. Tisdale, in the pavilion, and though the elements outside were not favorable to the numerous friends who hoped to greet him, yet we who attended were made justly proud of our own Niantic medium; we feel that he has not been idle by the way in the two years past and gone. His remarks were good, deep and logical. After the afternoon exercises, by request, he entertained the audience with three vocal selections.

MRS. N. H. FOGG.

Elmira, N. Y.—The First Spiritualist Church of Elmira, N. Y., was organized last winter, with F. M. Chase, President, and Mrs. Ira Perrin, Speaker. We meet in Odd Fellows' Temple every Sunday evening, and much good has been done for the cause by our meetings. Mrs. N. J. T. Brigham spoke for us in May. Our cause is growing. We keep Soul Communion every month. P. R. KNIFFIN, Sec'y.

BIBLES.

BY A. H. DAILEY,

Of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Bibles have been the blessing and curse of mankind. They are the work of men — have never been dictated nor inspired by anything higher than man or by the spirit of man as he has developed after leaving this sphere of action. In saying this of a book that is so much revered by millions of persons now living, intelligent, religious and sincere, as well as by millions of those who have passed from the realms of time to the eternity which is beyond, I do so with no desire to cause pain to any heart or provoke contention which is needless, and if possible should be avoided.

I am not unaware of the good that has been done by the book which is known as the Christian Bible, nor blind to the influence which it exerts over the lives and actions of millions of persons who look upon it as the only word of God given to man, which defines his duty to his Creator, to mankind, and points the way and only way to salvation in the life which is to come. I can well recall the time—and the period is not remote—when I revered this book as containing the only revelation of the Word of God to man; it would illy become me to fail to respect those who occupy the same position in this regard that I have occupied, and I respect the sincerity with which others defend this book from the assaults that are being made upon it.

The influence of early training and education is hard to be overcome, and we need not wonder that men are loth to break away from the associations, trainings and educations of early life, to form new relations with those who stand in antagonism to lifelong friends and companions, upon matters so important as those affecting our temporal and spiritual welfare. It may seem strange for me to assert that any man of strong intellectual powers, of strong religious nature, a man who is magnetic, a natural organizer and leader, could to-day, in almost any portion of the civilized globe, enunciate that as coming from God, which originated with himself, gather around himself disciples and believers, and become the head of a new religious sect, the stability, permanency and influence of which would depend largely upon the amount of practical common sense which should be interwoven with his theology: This has been done and is being done to-day; and I am thankful that this age is being characterized by that wealth of scientific knowledge, profound philosophical research, freedom of thought, speech and action, which enables us to discern that which has at least the semblance of truth from that which is absurdly false, which enables us to gather here and there integral truth from the mass of chaff with which the world is afflicted.

Previous to the year 1827, in the central part of the State of New York, a person with literary attainment whiled away his leisure hours by composing a strange romance in which one of the tribes of Israel was made to figure in the North American Indian as being its descendant. Into this work were woven portions of the ancient Jewish law, and the ingenuity of the writer was such as to enable him to put in to his remarkable narrative that which might lead unsuspecting minds to give credence to the idea that he was seeking to inculcate for the simple purposes of a story. These writings had never been published; fortunately a copy was preserved, but Joseph Smith, ignorant of that fact, chanced many years afterward to get possession of what he supposed to be the original, and in 1827 he commenced to preach and proclaim to the world that an ancient work, written upon tablets of gold, in ancient characters, had been revealed to him; that, by angel guidance, he had been led to the place where this remarkable record had for thousands of years been concealed; that it was his mission to establish a new church, that of the Latter Day Saints; and from this beginning came the book and religion of the Mormons—a religion which now numbers among its adherents men and women of unquestioned attainments, and you well know that I am only uttering that which is the history of the times when I say to you that the religion of the Mormons has hundreds of thousands of followers; and that the number is constantly increasing. The book of Mormon was substantially the work of the writer of the romance of which I have spoken. Mormonism had its birth and its outgrowth and owes its power and influence to-day to the circumstance I have related, and to the religion of the Jews; and polygamy is sustained by the practice of the patriarchs of the olden time who were God's servants, and by alleged authority from God to the Mormon prophets who were the recipients of personal visits from Him and who held frequent intercourse with Him, through His angels who came upon special missions when He was supposed to have been otherwise engaged!

A few hundred years after the foundation of the Christian religion, Mohammed claimed to have had a vision, and to have witnessed in an incredibly short space of time, things which were hidden from the rest of mankind, and he became and proclaimed himself a prophet; he wrote, and what he wrote is studied as part of the education of great nations in the Eastern Countries, and his followers are as numerous upon the face of the earth as are the followers of Jesus Christ to-day. What is true of Mohammedanism is true of the teachings of Confucius, of Buddha, of Chrishna and of their followers.

At about the close of the seventeenth century Emanuel Swedenborg was born, and in the early part of the eighteenth century he promulgated to the world that which has now become the foundation of the religious sect which bears his name. Swedenborgians—they who are firm believers in the truths of his teaching, in the divine nature of his inspirations, and credit him with having held communion directly with God—may be numbered by hundreds of thousands. His teachings are largely supplementary to those of Christ, and he goes on to express more fully than had theretofore been given to the world, something of the nature of the spiritual realms into which sooner or later we are to be consciously ushered. This remarkable man possessed a wonderful spiritual nature. He was gifted with what is known as clairvoyance and clairaudience, and he gave to the world proof of these powers which, to people of those days, were regarded as supernatural, and a gift from God himself. He who is able to supplement his teachings with evidence of powers such as Swedenborg possessed, will command the faith and confidence of certain classes of minds, and the age in which Swedenborg lived was well adapted to the inculcation of the doctrines which he gave to the world as coming from the divinest of sources. That much of his teachings were true, those who are familiar with the teachings from the spiritual realms of to-day will not deny; that they have been instrumental in preparing the way for the coming of a larger number of seers is certain.

Within the past few years a book, claiming to be a new Bible to mankind, has been written through the instrumentality of a man in our very midst, and those who have read it, who have carefully studied it and who are familiar with its character, conceive it to be a very remarkable production. In it you will find expressions used which indicate that an individualized God, or Jehovah, is speaking or has spoken; and the writings which were given to the Jews by Moses as having come from Jehovah himself, claim no greater authenticity than those in this book, which is known as Oahspe.

That this book contains much that is instructive—many valuable lessons which it would be well for every one to learn and understand—that it is sufficient to guide people into the proper paths for the attainment of higher spiritual perfection, will be apparent to those who impartially peruse some of its pages. But having said this much of this and other books, are we to reverence them as containing the positive mandates of God to his children? Is it or is it not true, that Jehovah has spoken directly to any mortal, commissioning him with the promulgation of divine truths to the exclusion of others? Can we not, standing as we now do, fearless and impartial observers of the workings of the human mind, of the power that one individual is capable of exercising over another, understand how proselyting has been conducted, and how effectual it has been in swaying and controlling the thoughts of people, causing them to become confederated into sects and denominations? and that what parents have believed they have taught their children, and that infants' minds have grown, formed and matured to harmonize with the teachings they have received? Thus it is that we find so many people ready to assert their religious belief and convictions, and to flatly declare that anything which does not harmonize therewith is untrue.

Here and there, as if to thwart and overcome the pernicious effect of this tendency in the human mind, from time to time, free thinking men have been born to directly challenge the truth of these teachings, and to demand proof of their authenticity. The hardest and most powerful opponents that religious teachers of the past and of to-day have to contend with are those men who deal in every-day, practical common sense, and apply the ordinary tests of reason to the religious doctrines being promulgated through the various churches and religious organizations. For one I am willing to concede that it would be pleasant to know that there is a personal Being who can comprehend this vast universe; who can and will control its stupendous forces, its majestic and to us incomprehensible systems; and who, at the same time, with all the love and affection that a mother has for her own child, is holding each and all of his children in constant remembrance; who, notwithstanding the misfortunes, bereavements and sufferings they are passing through, notwithstanding the storms and clouds which are breaking upon them, is by such means annealing them to a more perfect comprehension of their relations to him, and to a more perfect enjoyment of that eternal life which we believe to be ours. That there is something beyond us, a power that is greater than man can comprehend—that he will never be able to grasp—the Infinite Forces which have set in motion the innumerable worlds above and around us, which cause the sun, as it were, to mount into the heavens by day and to sink beneath the ocean at night, that cause the snow to come in winter, the flowers to bud and blossom in spring, that give to us plentifully of the fruits of the earth in their season, we do know. That there are intelligences above us which are further advanced than we are, who comprehend more of these wonderful things than we do, I believe that most men feel; but whether there is One who comprehends the whole in the sense that we comprehend the little within the grasp of our mentality, who controls these wonderful forces and commands them at his will, we do not know, and no man by any possibility can know; he can simply conjecture, and the right of conjecture can be denied to no one.

We are speaking to-day of Bibles; I am speaking of them as the work of men, as I believe them to be the work of men, aided by the intelligences who, like ourselves, have been born of the world in which we live, or of the worlds which are circling around us. Mysterious things become exceedingly simple when the key of knowledge has unlocked the closet. When communication between the mortal and the spiritual realm has become so well established that the system is distinctly understood and its operations perfectly comprehended, much that is mysterious will be solved, stumbling-blocks will disappear, and burdens be lifted from the shoulders and hearts of innumerable beings who are suffering from a bondage from which they cannot be too soon set free.

It now seems to be most thoroughly established that man is a descendant from an ancestry no more conspicuous than the first germ which sprang into being at the close of the Azoic period or Age. Assuming, then, as I before have said, that man is the descendant of this remarkable ancestry to which I have referred; assuming, then, that Nature has her spiritual side; assuming that man has his spiritual nature, and his soul is his spiritual undying counterpart—when that soul is released and passes into the spiritual realms above and around us—wherein, I ask, does our reason teach us, as a spiritual being, is he wiser and better than as a mortal? Where, I ask, would such a being look for wisdom and knowledge except to the very sources of knowledge afforded by his changed condition? If the broad and swelling Atlantic, if all the seas of the world have their counterpart in the spiritual realm; if the islands and continents which make up the dry land of our earth, rise in grandeur in spiritual counterparts; if in our refined and spiritual natures we shall be capable of comprehending a thousand beauties, a thousand wonderful things which were invisible to us here, surely here are avenues of knowledge, here are fields for study and exploration; and how natural it is that those possessing undying affection for those who are left behind—the denizens of earth—should desire to come back, if possible, to rend the vail which separates the two realms, and bring to the hearts of loved ones the good tidings of immortal life, of joy and happiness beyond.

This we can understand as what would naturally be the result of this change to us, educated and enlightened as we are; but let us go back in the history of mankind to those ages and periods when human life was sacrificed upon the slightest pretext, when man was emerging from a barbarism which was the natural concomitant of a development from a brute ancestry, from which man has certainly descended: When these men died (as we have been led to term the phenomenon of death) and passed into the spiritual world, if in those ages men or any one of them possessed any of those powers which we denominate clairvoyance or clairaudience (as we understand they certainly did), what would naturally be the character of the communications such spiritual beings would give back to mortals left behind?

It cannot naturally be supposed that the mere advent into another state of existence would have at once transformed them into beings of transcendent wisdom; and it certainly must have required the lapse of vast periods of time for them to accumulate a fund of knowledge, if the process of obtaining it is the same there as here. Then, again, it does not necessarily follow that the knowledge obtainable there can be perfectly comprehended by those upon a lower plain of life. If we are developing, we may naturally expect that each successive stage of our existence will unfold to us much that we were not adapted to receive upon the lower plains of life. And certainly those who are familiar with spirit communications have already learned that it is difficult to transmit to us the conditions by which our friends upon the other side are surrounded, so that we can comprehend them. And this ought to lead us to understand that it may be equally difficult for those upon the other side to advise us upon the ordinary affairs of our own lives. How can it be supposed that those who passed from this world ten thousand years ago could give any greater information of the formation of the world, of the creation of that which it contains, than we ourselves can obtain by making proper researches here.

It is conceded that before Moses commenced his writings the Egyptians were a great and civilized nation; they were well versed in many matters of science, their astronomical calculations have been found to be wonderfully correct; they were far superior to the Jews, and the vision which Abraham saw, the communications which he received, seem strangely to have been fulfilled; but have we considered the means which were employed to consummate so great a result? Was there anything more in this whole prophecy than could have been deliberately planned by great spiritual forces, to be consummated through the lapse of ages? Are we not to-day foretelling that which we propose to accomplish? and having laid our plans for the future, we proceed to bring around the desired result, even though years of patient toil, study and care may be required! In youth we lay out the plans of our lives, and set about to work for the accomplishment of these purposes. So can we understand how it was planned that Abraham should become the founder of a great people; we can also comprehend that the angel world, knowing his peculiar adaptability as an instrument in their hands to accomplish their own purposes and ends, should desire that his should be an exclusive and peculiar race, a race adapted to the education and development of the peculiar religious ideas of those who were his immediate inspirers. For this purpose they forbade his descendents from commingling with the heathen nations by which they were surrounded, but Moses was developed and educated as an instrument peculiarly adapted to be a Lawgiver to his people. How easy it is for us now, from the position we have obtained, to picture the convocation of spiritual beings who, of harmonious minds, having a unity of purpose, were preparing the way for the formation of the Jewish nation, with an evident purpose that it should control eventually all the nations of the world; that it should conquer nation after nation, and establish upon earth a religious empire which they designed should be a kingdom without end. They knew and comprehended the superior wisdom and intelligence of the Egyptian people, and knew that the Jews must receive schooling from nations further advanced than themselves to enable them to accomplish the purposes had in view. To that end Joseph was made the object of special affection from his father; the jealousy of his brethren was created; the conspiracy for his destruction was formed, and then he was sold and carried into Egypt, while his brethren pierced the heart of Jacob with a living sorrow, causing him to lament Joseph as destroyed by wild beasts. That I am correct in my conclusions, is the more forcibly shown from the fact that Joseph, when once amid the civilization, the pomp and power of the Egyptians of that day, soon became conspicuous above the necromancers, astrologers and magicians by whom he was surrounded, by having visions which were strangely verified, by being a remarkable interpreter of dreams, and possessing those powers which the great Patriarch Abraham had given to Isaac, Jacob and their descendents.

The long sojourning of the Israelites in Egypt familiarized them with the customs and habits of the most remarkable nation of those times; and the adoption of Moses into the King's house secured for him an opportunity for education which was afforded to no other Israelite; and being a Jew himself, of the chosen stock, he too was an interpreter of dreams. He surpassed all other magicians in the production of phenomena, which were as much sought after by the people of those ancient times as they are by the advanced students and philosophers of our own day. Thus Moses became wiser than the people of his own race; he was influential at the court of the Pharaoh, and his remarkable powers commanded the respect and consideration of the learned men of Egypt and the fear and reverence of the Israelites. So we find him prepared, after the lapse of nearly four hundred years, to lead the Children of Israel through their long journeyings in the Wilderness, which may well be said to have been a wilderness of sin, and it required from Moses constant vigilance and care to keep this people, whom God is said to have characterized as a "stiff-necked people," under control and subject to his will. Encamped under the frowning summits of that range of mountains known as "Sinai," amid the thunders from the clouds above, the Lord is said to have traced with his own fingers, upon the tablets prepared by Moses, his law to the Children of Israel. Surely no better instrument for such a work than Moses could have been found in those times; and the law itself, as we read and understand it to-day, is about such a production as we would look for from that age and for the guidance of such a people. That God himself, as a personal Infinite Spirit, wrote the law of the Jews, is a belief which each age is tending to destroy, and at no time since it was promulgated to the Jews has it been so little credited as it is by thinking people of to-day. It is a mixture of that which is good with that which is barbaric in the extreme. For a man to say: "Thus saith the Lord," is no proof that that man speaks the truth, and we are safe in saying that anything which is promulgated as coming from such an Infinite source, which savors of the imperfections of poor humanity, bears in itself the unmistakable evidence that it is false. How reasoning and thinking people could have so long accredited it to a Divine source, can only be accounted for from the fact that their minds had been trained to believe that it was almost an unpardonable sin to question its authenticity, and the further fact, that for at least eighteen hundred years it has been the general belief that no possible means could be found to prove that the Bible was not true. There is no falsehood so dangerous as one which is mixed with truth; and it certainly is true that this book which is so much revered contains a great deal that is of great value, and has wrought noble results in the hearts and lives of men. The writing upon tablets of stone and large mastic plates and columns, was learned by the Jews from people older than they, and the literature of Assyria and of Egypt was contained upon these tablets as well as upon the leaves of the papyrus which are found preserved with the mummied remains of the men who, like ourselves, regarded death as an incident in human life, but which did not terminate or destroy it.

The law commanding sacrifices and burnt offerings surely cannot be commended by wise people of to-day as the work of a wise God; and we certainly cannot assume that a Being of perfection was lacking in wisdom in the days of Moses, and is wiser to-day. That the law of Moses was not a wise law is evidenced from the fact that it has been rejected by him who came in fullfilment of a prophecy, and established upon earth the great truth that the Kingdom of Heaven is within, and very sensibly taught that God is not pleased with burnt offerings and the sacrifices of blood, but rather with contrite hearts, followed by pure lives, worthy and noble actions. That those who were inspiring Moses, presenting him with visions, represented themselves as being God, may well be accounted for upon the hypothesis that they believed that had they made themselves known in their true character as being but angels or advanced spirits of the men of former ages, Moses would not have revered them, would not have obeyed their commands, and hence he was purposely kept in ignorance of their real character; but how different were the inspirations and teachings of Jesus! A few thousand years in spiritual realms had been productive of a vast improvement in those who came back to enlighten mankind, to guide them in the ways of truth and happiness. No longer do we hear the proclamations of war, of havoc and destruction, of the extermination of tribes and the putting to death of individuals at the command of the Most High; men whose lives were characterized with butcheries, extortions and licentiousness were not commended for those things; and what is more conspicuous than the teachings and gospel of Jesus Christ as they stand in contrast with the law of Moses and the lives and characters of the men who were commissioned with its enforcement?

This much then for the bibles of which I have spoken, and their teachings to mankind. We have come now to a period when bibles of a different character are being written. They are made up of the very times in which we are living. Every discovery in natural science is the unsealing of a page in the Bible of God as he has written it in Nature itself. When Hugh Miller made his discovery and bore to the world the testimony of the Rocks, when he pointed to the footprints on the boundaries of time, he was pointing to tablets which bore a Testimony which as much transcended that which was given by Moses to the Children of Israel as the light of the sun transcends the borrowed light of the planetary worlds. Here we find transmitted through a series of ages which man has not yet been able to calculate, the origin of the species and the descent of man, and this testimony is placed in bold contradiction with the record of the special creations of the species which inhabited the earth at the time Adam is said to have been formed from its dust. That the sun was not specially created to give light to this little world by day, nor the moon and innumerable hosts of stars to give it light by night, none but the most ignorant at this time will contend; yet there the record stands, still forming a part of the Bible of Christian nations, and which in our own country we are asked to salute with a kiss to make the oath we are taking more binding upon our consciences.

I have not thus spoken of the bibles which have been given to mankind to lessen the respect which every one should feel for the truth that may be contained within them, but because I desire to lead the minds of people to look upon all things which are given free from bias, free from prejudice, free from the trammels of early education, that the mind may seize upon, grasp and convert to its use that which is true, and which is for the benefit of all who shall learn the truth. I would not lessen the reverence which all should feel for the word of God; if possible, I would increase it; but I would not have that which is the work of man longer hold such powerful sway as the word of God; as the work of man give it just that force and respect to which it is entitled and no more. Can it be possible that Nature is false? That the testimony which is written all over the material world is untrue, and that the works of men called the Word of God are to control this testimony, which was old ere man began to consider from whence he came and what his destiny? It is contended by many religious minds—by public teachers—that God is above Nature, and only has relation to it when, for His own purpose, He desires to interfere and control the forces which otherwise would be continuous, unchanging. Yet we have been instructed that at the command of Joshua the Lord caused the sun to stand still upon Gibeon, and the moon in the Valley of Ajalon until the Israelites had avenged themselves upon their enemies; and the record says "Is this not written in the Book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day. And there was no day like that before it or after it that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man: for the Lord fought for Israel."

Here is presented the spectacle of the great central orb of this universe, which is 800,000 miles in diameter and 93,000,000 of miles away from the scene of battle; of the world, which was revolving upon its own axis at the rate of a thousand miles an hour; and of the moon, which is 245,000 miles distant, and making her tremendous circuit around our earth, traveling at the rate of 1,470,000 miles in twenty-eight days—all standing still for the space of a day, that Joshua might exterminate a few more human beings, and this at the command of a Being who, while he was fighting for Israel, might as well have caused the earth to open and the offending heathen to be swallowed up, and thereby have saved a good deal of unnecessary exercise on the part of Joshua and the Jewish army.

While we are considering these remarkable records, we should not forget the picture presented of Joshua marching around the great and walled city of Jericho, and the priests blowing the rams' horns, and the people shouting, and the walls falling flat to the earth. Of course, we cannot prove that these things did not occur, but that they are stories similar to the mythologies of the Greeks and Romans, and have about the same foundation in fact as the story of the part which the gods took in the wars of the Athenians, as related by Homer in his wonderful Iliad, is apparent to unprejudiced minds which consider all these things as they are corrolated to each other.

The tracings upon the tablets recovered from the ruins—the sites of ancient cities—containing the literature of the people of those early times, is most instructive, and affords a ready key to unlock the mysteries surrounding much that is contained in writings yet extant of people of ancient times. The works of Dr. Le Pongeon and his estimable wife amid the ruined cities covering an immense area at Yucatan, have brought to an unappreciative public the history and character of a people which we may well believe were as old, if not older, than the Egyptians; he claims, with much evidence to sustain his position, that the Egyptians owed much of their civilization to a powerful nation of which those residing in Yucatan formed a part, and his discovery of great libraries containing the literature of that people—much of which is in the identical characters of the writings of the Egyptians, and which gives an account of that great convulsion in Nature, by which the archipelagoes, lying between the American and European continents, were submerged and their inhabitants utterly destroyed, leaving but a remnant south of the Gulf of Mexico—is really one of the greatest value to archæologists, and actually authenticates the story of the lost Atlantis, and the traditions of the Assyrians and of the Jews of that period of the great destruction, when the fountains of the deep were broken up and the waters prevailed upon the earth. That these convulsions of Nature should be attributed to the anger of God, may readily be understood, when we consider the superstitious character of the people of those days, and their lack of scientific knowledge, which is now lifting humanity from the ills that flow from ignorance and setting them free from the bonds of superstition.

We do surely know how prone we are in the lapse of years to exalt the virtues of men of great and noble deeds, and illuminate their characters far beyond their actual merit. It is well that we are coming to a condition in which we can better understand the character and motives of the great men who have made their records in the history of nations and religions, and weigh them as they justly deserve in the balances of impartial judgment, not forgetting that they, like ourselves, were human beings, the victims of human frailties, and that God in his relations to man—the spiritual world in its relations to humanity—are not likely to have changed by the lapse of time, except in the advances which naturally have been made in the upward and onward growth of the human soul.

The Bible, then, which is being written today is not the work of any one man, but of humanity at large. It is not a Bible dictated from the lips of an austere God to any favored prophet, priest or seer. It is contained in the civilization in which we live. Man is learning the possibilities of life from precept and example as well as from the experience which each day brings. Man, in his intellectual growth, is breaking the narrow limits by which his ancestors were environed, and is aspiring to and obtaining positions from which he can look out, with a broader vision and keener perception, upon the limitless universe, which is and ever must be before him. The efforts, which are being crowned with a greater or less degree of success to rend the veil which separates the material from the spiritual world, and to authenticate the fact that communion is established, is the crowning and glorious work of the declining century of this age. What grand and noble work is this! How far it transcends all efforts which have hitherto been made by particular sects and denominations to point yearning humanity the way to heaven, of which they themselves were ignorant. If it be true that salvation is conditional upon a belief in and the acceptance of the atonement made through the death of a murdered God, of which so many in the midst of Christendom have the gravest doubt, how important it is that these doubts should be removed, and that we should all prostrate ourselves before the throne of him who requires this at our hands, and stop our mouths from giving utterance to thoughts in our protesting hearts against the justice of this plan of attaining eternal life.

The New York Sun gives this report, written by a missionary in Japan, on the effect of the Orthodox gospel on the natives:

"They grieve over the fate of their departed children, parents and relatives, and often show their grief by tears. They ask us if there is any hope, any way to free them by prayer from that eternal misery, and I am obliged to answer there is absolutely none! Their grief at this affects and torments them wonderfully; they almost pine away with sorrow. They often ask if God cannot take their father out of hell, and why their punishment must never have an end. I can hardly restrain my tears at seeing men so dear to my heart suffer such intense pain. Such thoughts, I imagine, have arisen in the hearts of all missionaries in all churches."

If this, being true Orthodoxy, is untrue as a matter of fact, what fearful responsibility rests, and ought to rest, upon the souls of the men who promulgate such a horrible doctrine. To go among a simple-hearted and simple-minded people, possessing human affection and love as strongly implanted as in ourselves, and to teach them that their offspring, their parents and friends who chanced to be born in that part of God's world to which he had not vouchsafed to impart this requisite to salvation, must forever and forever be in unending torments, caps the climax of the horrible.

Standing therefore to-day upon this plane of life, and considering how few we are compared to that immense majority who have gone before us, is there a higher and nobler duty which man can perform to himself and to his fellows than to unseal the mysteries attending his relation to the spiritual world, as he is unlocking the secrets of the physical world and reading its history as it is written in Nature itself? If it can be with reasonable certainty established by satisfactory evidence that man has a soul; that that soul survives the destruction of a physical body; that he enters into a spiritual realm which he finds to have been the abode of all spiritual beings since the advent of man upon the earth; and that a system of communication can, by patient research, be fully established, we have certainly taken a step in advancing the cause of truth, in bestowing knowledge where before ignorance was most profound, which is of the utmost importance to all who now live and who shall come after us.

That the work which we are doing is not confined in its blessing to us alone, is asserted a thousand times in the communications received in thousands of households in our own land and all over the world. The work of the salvation of the human soul may well commence here; and as we lift up and exalt ourselves, so are we taught, do we deliver others in the spiritual world, who are concentrated around us, to finish an incomplete work of life, which seems to be an absolute requirement to those who would make advances after passing from here into the spiritual realm. They are teaching us as we were never taught before of the Christ-spirit and how it may be attained, and the blessings it brings to those into whose hearts and lives it finds its way. It is not given at the whim of a capricious Deity, and no amount of faith or credence in any story is required to enable us to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. We are taught, as Jesus taught, that the Kingdom of Heaven is within, and this supplement which is given to humanity through the lips of ten thousand angel messengers, is making clear to Christendom and the civilized world, that which was so poorly comprehended before, and to which man by his foolish interpretation has added so much. New chapters to the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth have been added, and the world is commencing to appreciate their beauty and value. From the sum of all this, man will learn the value of life upon the earth; he will seek to lengthen his days and increase his usefulness! The upward and onward growth and development which he is making, through each and every avenue of knowledge which is now being opened to him, is uprooting and eradicating the numerous tares which have been sown in the broad fields of truth, and the accumulated bibles of the past will each contribute that which is of value, whilst that which is erroneous will be utterly expunged.

That human hearts may be cheered, death lose its terrors, and the labors of life be crowned with blessings which shall bear eternal fruits, should be the object and purpose of our lives; and to that end we humbly crave the blessings of the Infinite One whom we can not comprehend, as well as of those whom we know to be ever with us, sympathizing with us in our misfortunes, lifting us up when we have fallen, and cheering our souls when they are depressed!

Missionary Work in Spiritualism.

MRS. MARY F. LOVERING is an old resident of East Boston, and a member at the present time of the (Congregationalist) Maverick Street Church.

Some seventeen years ago she was living in Charlestown, Mass., with her beloved husband and two children. Affliction came to her in the removal of her little daughter by the change called death; then followed her husband to the life in the beyond; then her little boy followed his father and sister, leaving her alone to meet the battles of life. Soon afterward she removed to East Boston and took up her residence with her mother, who is a Congregationalist church-member.

Soon after the departure of her husband and children she commenced to write, impressionally or "inspirationally," in the form of poetry; then she wrote a letter which purported to come from her spirit-husband; this being in the year 1871. She followed on in this way, and wrote communications to the number of more than forty, from spirits who had been members of the church to which she belonged, but who had passed the border line within twenty years. She was also influenced to write "memorlams," numbering one hundred, on cardboard; in some instances these were framed and hung in the parlors of the afflicted families. She has written five thousand verses, including those in the "memorlams."

In 1875 a band of spirit workers, as they styled themselves, came to her and told her that she was called to do a public service; at this time she was a constant attendant of her Congregationalist Church. She worked in this manner until the year 1879. On March 17th, 1879, a lengthy account appeared in the BANNER OF LIGHT entitled "Orthodox Séances," her name at the time being designated by the writer "Mrs. A." JAN. 3d, 1880, her name in full appeared in the same paper.

She held social meetings in the winter months at her mother's home during three years, many of the church members attending; sometimes the parlors contained sixty or more individuals, who had come to hear of the "new doctrine."

August, 1880, she visited Lake Pleasant Camp-meeting; this was her first appearance among the Spiritualists. She then continued on to Saratoga Springs, and held social meetings once or twice per week for nearly one year. She has composed, under influence, upward of one hundred pieces of music, some of which have been published, during the time she has been in the field. She at one time gave music lessons as a calling. Her music was written between the years 1877 and 1880.

She returned to her mother's home again from Saratoga and held her social meetings during two winters. In 1883 she visited Saratoga Springs again, and remained some six months; from thence she went to New York City and vicinity, and from ten platforms gave her experiences as a medium, and read messages obtained from her band of spirit workers.

She visited many prominent towns in Massachusetts, continuing the peculiar work which belonged to herself alone. While in New York she delivered or read two lectures before the Society presided over by Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham. One of them was printed in the BANNER OF LIGHT June 16th, 1883—the other in July, 1883, in the Olive Branch.

In July, 1883, she commenced her work for the new Temple Society under the supervision of Mr. Ayer, laboring with her pen, also conducting the playing and singing for two years; this was at the parlors of Mr. Ayer, before the Temple was erected.

April 9th, 1884, she read, at the laying of the corner-stone of the new Back Bay Spiritual Temple, an address that was given to her by her spirit band of workers, which was printed in several secular and spiritualistic papers at the time. She finished her labor with that society May, 1885.

She commenced her work with the Boston Spiritual Temple Society March, 1886, and the following October was appointed Secretary of the Ladies' Industrial Society—the same being connected with the above mentioned organization—and remained two years as such. She was also appointed Corresponding Secretary of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, and finished her work with these two latter named societies at the conclusion of the meetings for the year 1888.

Mrs. Lovering keeps a record of all her work, and the writer had the pleasure of perusing it recently, gathering therefrom the account here presented.

In her writings there is to be found a link in the chain which is clear in the results, as witnessed months and years after being written by her band of workers—thus rendering her compositions prophetic in their tendency. Her spirit guides lead her in mysterious ways in her experiences in Spiritualism, quite similar to those of Mr. Murray in Universalism, and John Wesley in Methodistism. She is informed months in advance what she is going to do, and at this time she is on the Pacific coast at the approval and suggestion of her spirit guides. Many families have opened their homes to her, and have greatly enjoyed her spiritual experiences. She seems to be more led than controlled, and but few would have sufficient confidence in their spirit guides to go out on such missions as she does, with nothing more than the written directions of her spirit helpers.

She has accomplished a good work for the cause of Spiritualism in the "Island Ward" (East Boston). Many of her communications have been printed in the local secular paper, and she has the full confidence of her church at the present time. She has in the past been influenced to go from house to house and read to the most influential citizens of East Boston the communications she writes without any exertion or thought on her part.

Her self-devoting labors for the cause entitle her to high appreciation on the part of its friends everywhere. PROGRESS.

In Memoriam.

Benjamin King passed to spirit-life from his late residence in Somerville, Mass., on Friday, July 20th, aged 58 years.

The deceased was the father of Mrs. John W. Day, who is well known to the attendants at the Banner of Light Free Circles as organist and vocalist at these meetings. He was born in New Hampshire—where his early years were passed—but made Massachusetts his residence most of the time until his transition.

He was for eleven years engineer at the New England Glass Works in East Cambridge. He was known throughout the community where he resided as a loving husband and father, a faithful employé and a worthy citizen.

About the year 1863 Mr. King, his wife, Lydia B. and his daughter became prominent in public mention through their singular experiences at the "haunted house" in Watertown, where they then resided, and where for some five years many singular phenomena were presented of a directly spiritual character. Thousands of visitors came—some from great distances—to behold what was there to be witnessed, and were always freely welcomed by Mr. King and his estimable wife. Full accounts appeared in the press at the time, also an illustrated article in Harper's Magazine, in which the author vouched for the entire honesty of the family and the verity of the occurrences, and designated Mr. King as "a man of iron nerve" by reason of the fearless efforts which he put forth at all times and in the face of the most violent and startling midnight alarms, to discover the cause of the disturbances, and the reason, if any, for their production. Mediums who came to the house finally described the spirit personages to whom the noises, etc., were due, and stated that their recognition and the beneficial effect to be produced by it upon them (the spirits) were the objects sought for by the invisible operators.

Mr. King's last sickness (from pneumonia and heart failure) was but about fourteen days' duration. In the latter hours of his illness, his interior sight was, without question, opened, and he became cognizant of the presence of a sister who preceded him to spirit-life, and a Spirit Indian, who told him at midnight to give directions to his wife as to his treatment the following day—i. e., to the effect that the medicines were mainly to be omitted, and the attention of all centered in giving him as much nourishment and sleep as was possible under the circumstances. It is remarkable that, though nothing of the kind was mentioned to the doctor who attended him, that gentleman on arriving next morning gave just these identical orders for the treatment of his patient—showing himself to be (though ignorant of the fact, perhaps) an impressional medium of the first order.

Just previous to his demise Mr. King talked earnestly of a "door" which was closed so tightly that he could not open it, and wondered why "Jane," the sister in spirit-life, spoken of above, and who he saw, without doubt, on its thither side, did not open it. Spiritualism gives to the lonely widow and daughter the assurance that he was welcomed on his change of worlds by the sister who waited by that door till it was opened by the kindly hand of the angel Death.

Largely attended funeral services were held at his late residence on Monday, July 23d—Rev. Alfred K. Glover officiating. Ponemah Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, and Garfield Council, Order of United Fellowship (of which Societies he was a respected member), were represented by delegates; many of his old associates at the Glass Works were present. The floral display was profuse, and bore witness to the kindly sentiments entertained for him by many hearts. The interment was at Cambridge Cemetery.

EVANS'S MENTAL CURE, VITAL MAGNETIC CURE.—The so-called Christian Science, or the no-disease theory, is proven to be a mortal error by the philosophy inculcated in the two treatises above mentioned.

The philosophy in the Mental Cure Book illustrates the utilizing of the mind and subtle healing elements, in the form of a self-cure process, and acts as an auxiliary to all modes of eradicating disease extant, and harmonizes the ancient record with the progressive age of to-day. Original Essay.

"THE GREAT CRYPTOGRAM."*

BY GEORGE A. BACON.

This work, issued about two months ago, is creating a lively discussion both in this country and in England and which is sure to continue indefinitely; it not only gives substantially the collateral argument going to prove that Sir Francis Bacon wrote the immortal plays of Shakespeare, but it also gives the partial result of a word-cipher running through the Plays, disclosing a secret history incorporated therein.

The Shakespeare-Bacon controversy is some thirty years old. On both sides it has been waged with signal ability—the unpopular side probably showing the greatest research and brilliancy.

Strange as it may appear to those not conversant with the subject, and they constitute the great majority, several hundred books have been called forth, for and against the theory, while some of the ripest thinkers, scholars, writers, poets, as well as some of the most hard-headed and practical men of this country and Europe, have, after investigation, openly acknowledged their conversion to the Baconian claim. Nothing therefore can be gained by seeking to belittle or misrepresent the minority.

Literary men, for the last 300 years, have never been able to satisfactorily account for the seemingly impossible chasm existing between the man Shakespeare and his glorious productions—knowing that that was not an age of miracles.

If it can be proven beyond peradventure that the Plays do actually contain, in mathematical order, an inside or double history of particular doings of that day, statements showing that Shakespeare, while connected with the Globe and the Blackfriar Theatres, was secretly supplied with plays by Bacon, it settles this mooted question once and forever, though there will always be numberless thousands who will not accept even a demonstration!

Those who looked through Galileo's telescope and saw the circling worlds in space, unhesitatingly declared against the fact all the same. Such in all ages, though their name be legion, count for nought.

"The court of the competent," says Dr. Buchanan, "consists of those who honestly love truth and who with earnest zeal either devote themselves to its search or hold themselves ready to give it a fair welcome, and who with sound judgment make a fair and full investigation. All such in matters of demonstration come to a substantial agreement."

The author of "The Great Cryptogram" is the first to have discovered, not as "between the lines," but literally in the very marrow of the lines themselves, a second story no less marvelous than interesting, supplemental to the drama, and which sheds a world of light upon matters heretofore enveloped in darkness.

Mr. Donnelly can either substantiate his claim or he cannot. He has either found a cipher or he has not. If not he is the monumental fraud of his age. If he can make his claim good, his book—The Great Cryptogram—is the most important contribution of the century to the literature of the world. It is like unto the discovery of a new world all peopled with living beings. He has put forth his volume in evidence of the verity of his claim. What does it show? He recites the various steps that led up to his discovery, how in common with thousands throughout the world he had for years, questioned the authorship of the Plays of Shakespeare; how by chance, as it were, he found an English book belonging to his children, which contained a chapter on "Cryptography" or cipher-writing, and therein read these words: "the most famous and complex cipher perhaps ever written was by Lord Bacon"; how with what discernment he read in the De Augmentis and in The Advancement of Learning, what Lord Bacon had written on the subject of ciphers; what Spedding, his biographer, says of Bacon in this connection, that the Earl of Essex had correspondents, in his intercourse with whom, Anthony, Lord Bacon's brother, was a sort of under-secretary of state, receiving all letters, which were mostly in cipher, and transmitting them generally through the hands of Francis, to the Earl, deciphered, &c; how a cipher is hinted at in Bacon's first draft of his will: "I leave my memory to the next ages and foreign nations, and to my own countrymen after some time be passed," and as though this might prove too suggestive he afterwards changed the expression "to men's charitable speeches and to foreign nations and to the next ages." After much more to the same purpose, he pertinently reasons, what more natural then that Bacon, the cipher-maker, living in the tumultuous times when ciphers were required for security sake, being the author of the Plays, should place in the Plays a cipher-story to be read when those troublous times had passed away.

"So the life that died with shame
Would live in death with glorious fame."

He proceeds to explain how certain words in the Plays arrested his attention and aroused his suspicions by bringing in close juxtaposition such words as "Sir Nicholas," "Francis," "Bacon," "Son," "Gray's Inn," "St. Albans," "Shakes," "Speare," "William," "&c.; how in The Merry Wives of Windsor a whole scene, which has nothing to do with the plot, is introduced seemingly for the purpose of inserting these very names; else why the nonsensical 4th scene, Act 2, in 1st Henry IV., if not to bring in the name of "Francis" twenty times in less than a column? Five times it is in italics! Well and forcibly does Mr. Donnelly ask, "are not these twenty Francises on page 56 of the Histories, and the Shakes on page 56 of the Comedies, and the peere on page 54 of the Comedies, and the Bacons on page 54 of the Histories, and the Bacon on page 53 of the Comedies, and the Nicholas and Bacon on page 53 of the Histories, and the William eleven times repeated on page 53 of the Comedies, all linked together, and simply so many extended fingers pointing the attention of the sleepy-eyed world to the fact that there is something more here than appears on the surface? These are the indices, the exclamation points, that Bacon believed would sooner or later, fall under the attention of some reader of the plays.

He proceeds to explain how the cipher count works, following his formula, which grows out of the paging, the italicized and hyphenated words in the original folio of 1623. "The central point upon which the cipher turns," he says, "is the dividing line between the two plays, the First Part of Henry IV., and the Second Part of Henry IV. The essentials of the rule are found on the last page of the former play and the first page of the latter play".

Certain root-numbers out of which the narrative grows, are the keys that unlock that part of the cipher story in the two plays, 1st and 2nd part Henry IV. They are all modifications of one number.... Here was a puzzle the solution of which depended upon putting together the two ends of two plays. Neither alone would give the rule or solve the problem. Bacon published Part I. of Henry IV. in 1598, and Part II. in 1600. Why? Because he was not sure that the artificial character of the text might not arouse suspicion in that age of ciphers, and he desired to test it.

The author in explaining the machinery of Bacon's great cipher says, as we proceed with the explanation of its workings, the wonder of the reader will more and more increase, that any human brain could be capable of compassing the construction of such a mighty and subtle work.

He illustrates the principle of the cipher thus: Suppose the reader was to find in an article, referring to the cipher-writings of the middle ages, a sentence like this: "For there can be no doubt whatever that if it be examined closely, there is reason to believe that a cunningly adjusted and concealed cipher story, and one not of alphabetical signs, but of words, may be found hidden not only in books, but letters of those ages, of which the very intricate key is lost. It may be revealed by some laborious student in the future but for the present age all the great stories told therein, in cryptogram, are hopelessly buried." The reader might suppose this sentence to be just what it appears to be on its surface. But if we read only every fifth word, we will find that they form together this sentence: No; it is a cipher of words, not letters, which is revealed in the Great Cryptogram.

Now the Cipher in the Plays is on the same principle, only more complicated—the internal words hold an arithmetical relation to the external sentence, and you have but to count the words to eliminate the story.

The root-number in the cipher is the product of multiplying a certain number with another, this number in turn having various modifications. As a sample of how two root-numbers with their modifiers, evolve the secret narrative, he applies them to one column of the play of Henry IV, (see page 74 of the Folio) which gives twenty-nine consecutive instances without a break, and asks, can any one believe that order can thus come out of a chaos of words by a coherent rule if there is no Cipher here? Twenty-six of these words (the page is divided into two columns) originate in the first column and are found in the second column of the same. One might as well suppose that the complicated movements of the heavenly bodies resulted from chance, as to believe that these words, together with all the other words previously given, could have occurred in the second column of page 74 by accident, and at the same time match precisely with the same root-numbers which have produced coherent sentences on all the pages of those two plays. In other words, to deny the existence of the Cipher, the incredulous reader will have to assert that one hundred and five words out of two hundred and forty-eight in that one column, did, by accident, cohere arithmetically with each other, and with certain root-numbers, to make the connected story which is given! It will require a vaster credulity to believe this than to believe in the Cipher.

On page 690, the Cipher history relates how "These plays are put abroad at first upon the stage in the names of Morelow, a woe-begone, sullen fellow," and the story proceeds to give an account of his life, which exactly tallies with history. (Christopher Marlowe a well-known play-writer of that day, to whom some of the Plays of Shakespeare have been attributed, was killed during a quarrel, by Francis Archer in June 1593).

The following account of Shakespeare is revealed by the Cipher, as found on page 697:

"He goes one day and with ten of his followers did lift the water gate of the fish pond (belonging to Sir Thomas Lucy) off the hinges and turns all the water out from the pond, froze all the fish and girdled the orchard."

And on page 719 et seq.:

"Cecil said that Morelow or Shak'st spur never writ a word of them... He is but a veil for some one else... Many rumors are on the tongues of men that my cousin (Francis Bacon) hath prepared not only the Contention between York and Lancaster and King John and this play, but other plays which are put forth at first under the name of Morelow and now go abroad as prepared by Shak'st spurre".

These words follow mathematically certain regular root-numbers and their modifiers, a fact which would be absolutely impossible if no cipher narrative existed. To prove the identity of this text with the key numbers, he instances fourteen cases where the words Shak'st matches with spurre, from fourteen different counts. If there is no Cipher here, he says, surely these three pages, 74, 75 and 76 of 2nd Henry IV, are the most marvellous ever seen in the world... While it may stagger the credulity of men to believe that any person could or would impose upon himself the task of constructing such an unparalleled piece of work, it is still more incomprehensible that such a net-work of coincidences could exist by accident.

Applying the same root-number as before, the cipher story as to Shakespeare reads:

"He is the son of a poor peasant who yet followed the trade of glove making, in the hole where he was born and bred, one of the peasant towns of the West. And there are even rumours that both Will and his brother did themselves follow that trade for some time before they came here."

The "brother" here referred to was Shakespeare's brother Gilbert, born in 1566, two years after Shakespeare's birth. If S. came to London in 1587, Gilbert was then 21 years old. Very little is known of him. Halliwell-Phillipps thinks that he was in later life a haberdasher in London. The fact that he came to London accords with the intimation in the cipher narrative.

At a point in the Cipher story where Sir Robert Cecil is expressing his opinion to the Bishop of Worcester, that Shakespeare did not write the Plays, we extract the following:

"I ventured to tell him my suspicions that Master Shak'st spur is not himself capable enough and hath not knowledge enough to have writ the much admired plays that we all rate so high, and which are supposed to be his, and which, ever since the death of Morelow, have been put forth in his name. And it is rumored that every one of them was prepared under his name by some gentleman."

"His purse is well lined with the gold he derives from the Plays.... they draw great numbers, and yield great abundance of fruit, in the forms of groats and pence. It is thought he will buy all the land appertinent to New Place. . . . We know him as a butcher's rude and vulgar 'prentice, and it was, in our opintons, not likely that he writ them; he is neither witty nor learned enough. The subjects are far beyond his ability. It is even thought here that your cousin of St. Albans writes them."

"A glutton, rather over-greedy than choice—With his quick wit and his big belly, weighing two hundred pound. He is extraordinarily fond of the bottle. But I must confess there was some humour in the villain. Indeed I made use of him, with the assistance of my brother (Anthony) as the original model from which we draw the charnoters of Sir John Fallstaff and Sir Tobie. . . . It draws together to the playehouse yards, such great musters of people far beyond my hopes and expectations, that they took in at least 20 000 marks. . . . It pleases Her Majesty much more than anything else in these Plays. It seems indeed to grow in regard every day. It supplies my present needs for some little time. He (Shakespere) was wise enough to save his groats and buy an estate of lordship."

And so the cipher story goes on, making revelation after revelation, cumulative and overwhelming, and all, be it remembered, cohering inflexibly by rule. One marvels not that the painstaking author should say: "I weary of asking the question—can all this be accident?" Let any one apply these same root numbers, discovered by Gov. Donnelly, or any other, to other plays, for instance, to Bulwer's Richelieu, or Byron's Manfred, or Goldsmith's She Stoops to Conquer, and no sense follows.

In view of what these quoted fragments reveal, and there are many more of yet greater significance, all in harmonious and continuous accord, the author justly declares that the Cipher is there, and that he has found it; and that the narrative is real, no one can doubt who reads this book to the end.

These truths now first made known, can not be ignored. The disbelief of the investigator yields to the cumulative evidence which confronts him at every step, as darkness yields to the morning light. Sneers, nor abuse, nor prejudice can cope with the multiplication table.

What the Cipher is yet to unfold when applied to other portions of the Shakespeare drama, is of course unknown, but without question, "it will be the inner story of the most important era in human history, told by the keenest observer and most powerful writer that has ever lived."

Gov. Donnelly says, "If I had not fallen upon the Cipher, some one else would. It was a mere question of time, with all time in which to answer it. And this material and practical view sets aside that other and profounder conception, in which the operations of the minds of men are but the shadowings of an eternal purpose, and all history and all nature but the cunningly adjusted parts of a great external and spiritual design."

A book that will command the attention of every thinker interested in the liberal and progressive advancement of this nation in politics, religion and social and domestic life. In a chapter upon "The Church of Rome" the writer says the first thing that strikes a foreigner in this country is its great strength, evident to him as being greater than in any country in Europe. The reasons for this he states, and enters upon a consideration of the relation of the Vatican Council of 1869 and the spirit of civilization. Other matters of vital import to our nation's stability and the prosperity and happiness of its people are cogently treated upon. At the close of what is said upon the labor question occurs this sentence, which will convey a good idea of the spirited style of the writer:

"Oh! workingmen, legislate unto yourselves that of ten saloons nine must be closed, and of nine tobacco shops nine have to become bankrupt, and the triumph of your cause will be hastened by twenty years. I look at the American business men as they walk along briskly, with quick eyes, set lips, determined look, and think what excellent soldiers capital has got. Oh! soldiers of labor, remember, no lasting triumph has ever been conquered but by virtue and intelligence. Be severe to yourselves if you want to have the world just to you. This is the secret of true success in art, in literature, in politics everywhere."

PHYSIOGNOMY ILLUSTRATED; or, Nature's Revelations of Character. A Description of the Mental, Moral and Volitive Dispositions of Mankind, as Manifested in the Human Form and Countenance. By Joseph Simms, M. D. Illustrated by Upward of Three Hundred Engravings. Eighth edition, 8vo, cloth, pp. 600. New York: Murray Hill Publishing Co.

To say that the contents of this book will fully meet the expectations of any one who may read its title page, as given above, is to say a great deal in its praise; and the fact that this is its eighth edition is sufficient proof that they do. The author is a diligent student of and a popular, interesting and instructive lecturer upon a science that is of great practical value; and he herein gives the result of more than twenty years of research and observation made during professional travel throughout the world. As a science, physiognomy ranks among the highest that are of practical benefit to mankind; whatever information any one can acquire of it cannot fail to be of advantage to the individual as well as to the community at large—for it is of that order which, in benefiting one, benefits to some extent all with whom he associates.

The subject of this book is one that will never grow old, says Mr. Hopps, and many into whose hands this book may come will feel to deeply thank him for the hopeful, encouraging and practical manner in which he treats the subject, and for the clearer view he imparts to them of the reality of a life beyond their present. In one chapter he elucidates that the future life is foreshadowed by the law of evolution, quoting the words of another, "Nature shuts the door after everything that passes, and pushes life onward in more perfected forms." The succeeding chapter sets forth a scientific basis of belief in a future life, and this is followed by a rational view of man's destiny in that life as elicited from many sources.

EUREKA.—G. P. Bissell writes: "I have been lately re-reading that old conflict between conservative and progressive thought concerning the source of life as exhibited in matter, and it occurs to me that a few words from a purely spiritualistic standpoint may not be amiss.

We Spiritualists are very closely in accord with the most progressive, scientific thought. We hold that; there is nothing 'supernatural,' nothing above nature but that all that is, is a part of nature, and merely a particular phase of her expression.

Life is obvious in matter: the question is as to the origin of that life. We say that life inheres in matter. If it did not inhere, it could never be injected. Or it may be stated the other way, that matter inheres in life; if it did not inhere in it, it could never be injected. There are many gradations of life, precisely as there are many forms of matter. To address ourselves to those materialists who proclaim themselves as such, and to those others who obscure their thought under the fogs of theology, we say that there is animal life exhibiting itself through its highest form which is thought in man—down through instincts of the highest animals, through the automatism of the lower, through vegetation, through crystallization, through the forces of unsentient matter to the molecule wandering in space; and that through all this gradation of life each phase is but an exhibition of force inherent in matter. This statement agrees best with the light in which the question is viewed from a lower standpoint.

But as the point of view is higher the statement must be varied to accord with the different light from a changed position of view. As we see wider, deeper, clearer, matter itself and its forms recede more and more from view, and forces come clearer and clearer to the front. The statement then becomes more like this—that matter inheres in force, and that phases of force become what we know and recognize as life.

The whole question may be summed up thus: that all matter is alive; that it always was and always will be, for it can never be separated from force. Or the statement may be reversed—that all force is joined to matter; that it always was and always will be. When this view is taken the foundation of philosophy is broadly laid, upon which can forever be built the superstructure of thought; and all theological questions of life, of supernaturalism, of inharmony, fade away into the darkness of superstitious puerility and the night of barbaric ignorance."

CHICAGO.—A correspondent writes that for the past five months Mrs. J. W. Still of New York State has been doing good work in this city. Her controls are sensible and easy of comprehension, and the tests given by her convincing and gladly recognized in the majority of cases: "Her engagements have mostly been at the meetings held at 517 West Madison street—Dr. Norman McLeod, President, an earnest and untiring worker. Mrs. Still will receive engagements for Michigan or any points South or West. Address her 58 South Carpender street, Chicago, Ill."

SPRINGFIELD.—Charles H. Freitag (611 East Jefferson street) writes: "In justice to a good medium I deem it my duty to make mention through your valuable paper of a work of spirit art I received, as executed by an ancient spirit artist through the instrumentality of Mrs. A. L. Davie, of 343 Howard Avenue, New Haven, Conn. It is deserving of great praise for its fine touches, etc. I am informed the medium's hand is controlled and performs the drawing while she is in a normal state. The specimen above referred to is composed of seven different ancient plants and fruits said to be three thousand years old. I would be pleased to hear of interest being attracted to this most worthy medium of spirit drawing, and hope the good sister will meet with success in her undertaking. Her art work is highly appreciated in this city by all who have examined the specimens."

NEW YORK CITY.—"H. B." writes: "By birthright I am a Friend, consequently am not considered orthodox by many so-called Christian churches; nevertheless, I am a Christian, being a firm believer in the living Christ. I also believe in the intercession of the saints; see Matt. xviii: 10: 'Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.' Whose angels? Why, yours and mine. My guardian angel is my dear mother, who is ever about my path, and when I am tempted to turn aside, she looks in the face of my heavenly Father, and swift messengers fly to my relief; then the light shines so brightly that I do not fall. My faith, though small, carries me far beyond earthly mists, even to the gates; but one thing I know is that when in communion with God, even in the darkest closet, the light shines as the day, and I meet the dear ones who are waiting and watching. No earthly aid is necessary to put me in communion with them; they are only too willing to come when my faith looks up. I talk to them as a friend talks to friends, and then I leave, refreshed and strengthened for the battle of life.

What I wish to impress upon your readers is that true Spiritualism needs no earthly interpreter. When we are in communion with the Great Spirit our own spirit will receive the answer direct and in an unmistakable manner."

BOSTON.—A correspondent writes: "The recent cremation of the prominent Free-Thinker, Courtlandt Palmer, has called out renewed interest in this mode of the disposal of the bodies of the so-called dead. The discussion once entered upon, victory is sure in the end for this improvement in mortuary affairs. I feel confident that the cremation movement will triumph. It is right. It is honest. It is clean. It is quite as sentimental as burial in the ground. It is right, because it would remove from millions of the poor a great load. It is honest, because the soil contains only a small percentage of the precious materials which can be appropriated by our bodies. To withhold these precious atoms from general circulation for thirty or forty years, is not honest. Through cremation, these atoms are all returned at once to the atmosphere, and quickly reach the soil. It is clean, as every one knows. Graveyards have long been a detriment to the health of the living. Water circulates through the earth as blood circulates through the body, and the impurities of graveyards find their way into this general circulation."

ST. PAUL.—Morris S. Liden writes, testifying to his enjoyment recently of the inspirational utterances and improvisations of Mrs. R. S. Lillie and the choice singing of Mr. Lillie. "There was," he says, "some disappointment in regard to the place of her holding her lecture; they were promised the People's Theatre, but the manager was unable to grant it on account of a change in the theatre programme. From three to four hundred congregated in the foyer of the theatre and waited patiently from half-past ten to twelve, when they adjourned to the G. A. R. Hall, where Mrs. L. lectured; she also spoke in the evening. It is unnecessary to comment on her lectures, as she is too well known." Our correspondent also speaks highly of John P. GIRARD'S WILL

BY RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D. D., LL.D.,

Author of "Marriage and Divorce," "The Bible—Whence and What," "Man—Whence and Whither," etc.

The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.'

The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."

LIFE AND LABOR

In the Spirit-World:

Being a Description of Localities, Employments, Surroundings, and Conditions in the Spheres.

BY MEMBERS OF THE SPIRIT-BAND OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER,

Medium of the Banner of Light Public Free Circle.

When one becomes fully convinced that friends who have passed from existence on earth still live, the questions naturally arise, How do they live, and what are their occupations? The purpose of this book is to answer these inquiries, and, so far as the language of a material life is capable of describing a spiritual one, it does so. These descriptions are not mere theories and surmises of what may exist beyond this state of being, the acceptance of which depends mainly upon the faith of the individual to whom they may be presented, but statements of facts made to those who live that life, and are familiar with the scenes and experiences of which they write.

In one volume of 426 pages, neatly and substantially bound in cloth. Price $1.00, postage 10 cents; full gilt, $1.50, postage free.

An Edition of Life and Labor in the Spirit-World has been issued by COLBY & RICH which is embellished with eight illustrations representing scenes in spirit-life. The titles of the illustrations, which are very suggestive of the scenes portrayed, are as follows:

At Home in the Summer Land.
Little George and his Spirit Mother.
Lucy Allen and her Band Ministrations.
Beulah, a Spirit Missionary.
Up upon Spires, What we Sow we shall Reap.
Fannie Davis Dies for Spirit Children.
Little Bertie, "For Mamma."
An Excursion to Sunny Island.

The price of the Illustrated Volume, which in all other respects is the same as the edition above advertised, is $1.50, postage 10 cents.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away. Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its whole variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To Day; or, Spiritual Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate relation of the spirit-world and the world of matter between the pros. and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

Another Pulpit Pop-Gun.

Some of the ministers, quite as often those of the callow kind, essay to make their mark before the congregation they serve by having a drive at Spiritualism.

They direct their attacks advisedly and advertisingly. In the case of a very young pulpit occupant, it strongly suggests the early efforts of the crescent cockerel to crow. We have a recent illustration of this right at hand. It is furnished by Rev. Mr. Dixon, of the Dudley-street Baptist church in Boston. The subject of his tirade, as reported by the daily press, was "Ghosts," by which of course he meant beings without a being, and hallucinations of the human brain. By assailing and beating these existences of straw, whose habitat is only in brains like his own, he assumes to assail Spiritualism, and to demolish the vast array of facts on which it rests.

Mr. Dixon said he believed in ghosts, but not in all ghosts. Which means, if anything, that he accepts only such kinds of ghosts as he has a mind to. Not in all ghosts, said he, and "certainly not in Modern Spiritualism with its clap-trap mediums." In this slur at Spiritualism by one who conceitedly claims the right to choose his own ghosts, he evidently had in mind the recent Kellar-Bridge combination, the pecuniary signification and aim of which is quite apparent to intelligent observers. While quoting Kellar as saying that he could duplicate or explain by natural laws all the mediumistic phenomena, Mr. Dixon asserted that "there is nothing inherently impossible in the alleged phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, for we accept the miracles recorded in the scriptures. As to these so-called modern miracles, it is of course only a question of evidence." And so on to the end of his discourse. "The only light upon the darkness of life's mysteries shines from the cross of Christ," is the conclusion he comes to. Which is nothing more than the enunciation of an old meaningless superstition—blank and blind utterly so far as it sheds any light upon life's mysteries.

This magnetic and highly oratorical young pulpit occupant protests that he certainly does not believe in "Modern Spiritualism with its clap-trap mediums." It would clearly be discourteous to intimate that there are a great many people of superior intelligence and sober judgment who do not, either, believe in dogmatic religion and its clap-trap preachers. But one assertion being just as good as the other, the two may fairly be allowed to stand together. Perhaps, however, he may be interested—though more likely not—to know of some of the men of distinction the world over who do believe, or when in earth-life certified to their belief, "in Modern Spiritualism and its (clap-trap) mediums." Let us invite him to run over a list of their names with us, that he may see how much wiser a person he is himself than all the rest of them together. We need hardly explain to him that they are all men of character, of talents, and of moral and social standing:

Among Scientists are—Alfred Russel Wallace, Naturalist; Professor De Morgan, Mathematician; C. F. Varley, Electrician; William Crookes, Chemist; Professor Wagner, Geologist, University of Russia; Professor Zöllner, Leipsic; Professor Von Esenbeck, President of the Royal Academy of Sciences, Germany; Alexander Von Humboldt, Naturalist; Professor Mapes, Agricultural Chemist; Professor Hare, Chemist; Professor Gunning, Geologist; Professor J. R. Buchanan, Anthropologist; Professor Denton, Geologist; Professor Challis, late Plumierian Professor of Astronomy, Cambridge, England; Baron Von Reichenbach, Physicist; Professor Thury, Geneva, Switzerland, and a great many more of the same class whom we could readily name.

Among Philosophers and Metaphysicians, we may mention Von Fichte, a celebrated German philosopher; Franz Hoffman, Professor of Philosophy in Wertzburg University, Germany; Archbishop Whately, Metaphysician; Dr. Yowkevitsch, Professor of Philosophy, University of St. Petersburgh; Prof. S. B. Brittan, Mental and Moral Philosopher; and Dr. Bray, the great philosophical writer.

Among Statesmen and Philanthropists, we may mention Gerritt Smith, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, George Thompson, Lord Brougham, Garibaldi and Mazzini, Castelar, Victor Hugo, Abraham Lincoln, Andrew Johnson, Benjamin F. Wade, Henry Wilson, Joshua R. Giddings, N. P. Talmadge; Senators Simmons and Anthony, of Rhode Island; Robert Dale Owen, Salmon P. Chase, J. L. O'Sullivan, Lord Lyndhurst, Mr. Francis Guizot, and a long list beside.

Among men of Literary and Artistic distinction, we may name such as William and Mary Howitt, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Robert Chambers, Thackeray, Tennyson, the brothers Trollope, Bulwer, Dumas senior, W. W. Story, Epes Sargent, Grace Greenwood, Prof. Henry Kiddle, Bayard Taylor, Oliver Johnson, Joseph Jefferson, Dr. Kane, Don Piatt, Bishop Clarke, and a long list more.

Among Jurists and Counsellors we may mention Judge Edmonds, Judge Lawrence, Judge Ladd, Serjeant Cox, Jencken, Dumphy, Massey, English Barristers, and many more beside.

Among Crowned Heads and the Nobility, we may mention Emperor Alexander of Russia, Emperor Napoleon III., Queen Victoria of England, Prince and Princess Metternich, Sir Charles Napier, and a long line whose repetition would only weary Mr. Dixon's attention, if he has had the candor to follow us thus far.

And the above list might easily be expanded so as to include a whole host of names of men and women, of more or less distinction, but of acknowledged superiority of both intellectual and moral character, any one of whom, we undertake to say, would instantly be ranked as the peer of Mr. Dixon in both respects, and to whom he would at once and instinctively pay the personal respect which their qualities deserve.

Now it will not fail to strike everybody as ridiculous and preposterous for a preacher like Mr. Dixon to occupy his pulpit for the purpose of casting slurs on people who accept the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism as well established facts that compel belief, and who are of the character above described. He is only beating his one head against a universe of mind, and it will come away from the unequal encounter a good deal bigger on its outside. Here are people of the very highest grade of mental capacity, who openly accept the phenomena which this very young minister is pleased to characterize as the production of "clap-trap mediums." They do not rest themselves on any mere faith in what somebody else has told them of the phenomena of Spiritualism, but on their actual knowledge. If human testimony on any subject is worth anything, surely their testimony is worthy of acceptance on this. They believe in what they know, and the grounds of that form of belief can never be shaken. It makes what Carlyle said impressively true, that "a fact is a divine revelation, and he who acts contrary to it acts against God." If it is the truth that we love, we must accept it as it is offered to us, and not pick and choose as Mr. Dixon does his "ghosts." We repeat to him for his private meditation the oft-cited remark of Lord Brougham: "But even in the most cloudless skies of skepticism I see a rain-cloud, if it be no bigger than a man's hand: It is Modern Spiritualism."

And we further commend to his thoughtful consideration the following words from Alfred Russel Wallace on this subject: "The phenomena of Spiritualism in their entirety do not require further confirmation. They are proved, quite as well as any facts are proved in other sciences, and it is not denial or quibbling that can disprove any of them, but only fresh facts and accurate deductions from those facts. When the opponents of Spiritualism can give a record of their researches approaching in duration and completeness to those of its advocates; and when they can discover and show in detail, either how the phenomena are produced or how the many sane and able men here referred to have been deluded into a coincident belief that they have witnessed them; and when they can prove the correctness of their theory by producing a like belief in a body of equally sane and able unbelievers—then, and not till then, will it be necessary for Spiritualists to produce fresh confirmation of facts which are, and always have been, sufficiently real and indisputable to satisfy any honest and persevering inquirer."

Spirit-Life; Its Nature and Employments.

In a discourse by a spirit guide of Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond, on a recent Sunday in Chicago, on "The Nature of Spirit-Life; Its Employments and Pursuits," it was stated at the opening, as a basis of what was to be further said, that spiritual manifestations convey a wrong impression to those who desire to form an opinion of the true spiritual state; they are simply designed to appeal to the senses of mortals. But it is useless, said the speaker, for any one to claim there is naught in existence but that which can be apprehended by those senses. To do so would be "to take the standard of the dwarf for the stature of the world, and suppose the limited vision of babyhood is to be the ultimate scope of manhood's vision, or if you are to believe that even the few vibrations of light possible to the human eye or if sounds that reach the ear constitute the standards of measuring life, when chemical and spectroscopic analysis clearly show thousands of vibrations that man cannot see, and beyond these thousands that he cannot even imprison by any mechanical process; if you are to judge of spirit sight by what you see, of spiritual perception by what man understands through the senses, you may as well put on the grim pall of past ages and either accept the theological heaven and hades, or turn unto materialism as the only solution of the physical and mental universe."

It was claimed, and with reason, that all science is a perpetual and constant denial of the supremacy of sensation and material organisms. As an illustration of this:

"Mathematics is a mental science, and, beyond the counting with the blocks of wood or fingers to make the infant understand the basis of arithmetic, all mathematical problems must be solved in the realm of the mind; no one can ever bring a million of things to illustrate a million units, and if you can conceive of a billion as a mental speculation, measure planets well enough to calculate their distances and periods of revolution by figures that you could not count if you lived to be a thousand years old, it proves the supremacy of man's mind over his body, and that he can not only give propositions which cannot be proven by the senses, but they would be utterly valueless if they could be proven by the senses, for there is not enough time in any generation or race of men to prove them by the senses."

Explaining by this process that the state of spirit-life differs in every essential particular from that of earth, it was said that the man who passes to that life anticipating to find and enjoy material objects has all his anticipations realized, but the forms and objects are of his own creation. The subjective becomes the objective state of his life; that which friends, kindred spirits, those in sympathy, may enjoy or deplore with him must depend upon their sympathy or rapport with his state; but the mountains that tower in the distance, and the valleys that fill the earth with their verdure, are not heights and depths in spiritual states, are not essentially real; the reality in spirit-life is from within.

The employments in spirit, said the intelligence controlling Mrs. Richmond, are such as are the result of the condition when in mortal form:

"If it is that of a spirit that is so wedded to the making of watches, for instance, that he cannot be happy without making watches in eternity, he will still be found working with a carefully adjusted lens, the intricate mechanism by which he was accustomed to construct the chronometers of earth. But if, as is the case in thousands of instances, his earthly employment is not his mental pursuit, but is only the employment of the hands to which he was driven by the dull necessity of poverty and want; if, as is the case with millions of human beings whose labor of the hands daily is because the daily bread must be won for the children, wife, family or friend, and for self, and if there were time other pursuits would be sought, mental improvement would be desired, aspirations that extend in a thousand ways would be fulfilled, then the difference between spiritual employment and spiritual pursuit is just the difference between what the drudge and the hireling does on earth and that which the man of genius, or letters, or poesy, in any direction may do without thinking of his daily bread. And herein," continued the speaker, "constitutes the whole difference between the conception of the reality of earth and the reality of spiritual existence; the reality of earth, so called, is its drudgery, that necessity for toil which is organic, that great burden that is heaped upon humanity, the burden of the physical form and the nature of human selfishness; albeit if the selfishness is not outgrown, when the human form is outgrown the burden is borne into the other world."

The more of selfishness we possess on the earth the heavier the burden, and the more irksome the task of ridding ourselves of it in the world of spirit. Men are slaves to it here, and passing on they carry their chains and fetters with them. The immediate necessity of every individual upon realizing that he is a habitant of a new state of existence is that "the overweening selfishness of human life shall be wiped out, vanquished, and each one finds him or herself praying continuously that there may be some way to do this." And each individual thoroughly in earnest to find a way, finds one; the very spirit with which man conquers the material world proves that when he is in the spirit-world he will conquer whatever is necessary to be conquered there.

Summing up the whole subject, and anticipating the objections that may arise in the minds of some to the views advanced, the guide of Mrs. R. says:

"Say what you will of this kind of spirit-life being beyond human understanding, until you know it, until you use the faculty from within your spirit that is given you to understand spiritual truths and apply them to your spiritual state here and hereafter, you will have no adequate knowledge of what spiritual life is.

"Vain are all compromises; if human intelligence and spirituality mean anything, they mean that in that larger, broader comprehension man is to understand the uses of spiritual qualities, and that they have adaptation here and now; he must begin his spiritual pursuits while he is still here, surrounded by the senses, but still an immortal spirit or soul now as ever.

"Feed your spirits with knowledge that begets understanding, give encouragement to spiritual perceptions with which you know of things that are spiritual. It will not be long before this added comprehension, this higher faculty, this better awakening, will fill all human life and pursuits; man will not seem to be occupied and employed on the earth with things merely, but he will pursue as the artist does the divine glory of art for its own sake; as the poet does the singing of songs because the songs are there and must be sung; or as prophets do, speaking of things divine, he will know the nature of that which is divine because it comes from within."

Seances with Mrs. Moss.

On the evenings of July 22d and 23d, my wife and myself were privileged to attend two séances held by Mrs. Effie Moss in her room in the Hotel Onset. A curtain across a corner of the room formed the cabinet, so that the possibility of collusion with confederates was out of the question. The medium, after being entranced, took her seat behind the curtain. A song was sung by the party of fourteen persons, and at the close a form appeared, claiming to be Lucille Western. The light was quite good, and members of the party who had seen Lucille were sure that this person resembled her strikingly. She was much taller than the medium, and much more slender in form. After shaking hands and exchanging greetings with each one present, she retired behind the curtain and then sang her favorite song, "Beautiful Star," as only a musical artist could sing it. Miss W. was followed by other forms, at short intervals, to the number of twelve or thirteen. Five of these purported to belong to the medium's staff, and the others were recognized by members of the party to whom they came. Mr. McElroy, of Pittsburgh, said that he recognized perfectly his wife and daughter, whom he introduced to the audience. A beautiful girl, of apparently fourteen years of age, with fair skin, golden hair and eyes of heaven's own blue, announced herself as Lillie, the spirit-daughter of Mrs. M. E. Wallace, of New York. (I note here that the medium is a decided brunette.) Lillie has recently joined Mrs. Moss's band and become an expert in materialization, and she gave us by far the finest exhibition of the sort I have ever seen. She asked for more light, and in a light strong enough for a person of ordinary sight to read the time on a watch, she made the circuit of the room, greeting each person present and talking freely with them. Retiring for a moment, she reappeared at the opening of the cabinet in full form, and asked that the light be turned on full, which was done and the shade removed. Thus exposed to full and perfect view, she stood for a minute or more, and until every one of us mortals took in every detail of her graceful form and beautiful face. Her mother stood beside her, and the likeness they bore each other was most striking indeed—allowing for difference of ages, it was almost perfect. As she retired she kissed her finger-tips to the audience in a playful and most charmingly winsome manner.

After Lillie retired, a voice from the cabinet announced Granny Brooks, and a woman, of apparently great age, walked out of the cabinet, and repeated the introduction by saying "I 'm old Granny Brooks, an English woman. I was ninety when I died." She asked that the light be turned on full, and in the blaze of bright light she walked about the room, greeting, shaking hands with and talking freely with the various persons present. That she presented the physical appearance and other characteristics of a woman ninety years old all were agreed.

The English sailor, Jack, who seems to be the chief of the medium's staff, now came out. Jack is six feet high, and every way a stalwart and jolly Jack Tar.

The séance on the next evening was in part a repetition of the first, but there were new and interesting features. Mrs. Sarah R. Stevens, the well-known Boston medium, had the pleasure of a greeting from Starlight, her beautiful Indian control, who performed some wonderful feats. She asked a skeptical doctor present to place his heavy boot upon her naked foot, and throw his whole weight upon it. After some pressing he did this, and Starlight laughed with glee instead of screaming with pain, as any mortal girl would have done. She is, in size and appearance, scarce more than a child, yet she caught the doctor in her arms and tossed him up as though he had been a little boy. She then asked another somewhat skeptical gentleman, who said his weight was two hundred and twenty-five pounds, to let her toss him up. He submitted to the test, and she tossed him up with apparent ease. He said, "That is the best test I have had personally, for I do n't believe that medium could lift me." The beautiful and soulful spirit-daughter of Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Worcester, the well-known medium, appeared on this occasion, and held sweet communion with her mother, and was introduced to the other members of the party. Mrs. S. recognized her perfectly, and was made very happy by her visit. Comment would be superfluous; the facts are all I need to give.

On our arrival at Hotel Onset, last week, we had the pleasure of an introduction to Mrs. Effie Moss, the materializing medium, of New York, whom several of our Gotham correspondents have endorsed in THE BANNER. We accordingly arranged for a private sitting with this lady in order to test her mediumship ourself. Her cabinet spirit controls were announced as "Jack" and "Ben," in the earth-life, sailors; "Granny Brooks," as she called herself, an English woman, who passed to spirit-life at the ripe age of ninety years.

The persons present were Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. M. E. Wallace, Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Petersen of Boston; Messrs. John H. McElroy and D. H. Stoner of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Dr. T. A. Bland of Washington, D. C., and Dr. George Dutton of Boston. It was some length of time ere the cabinet controls could gather power sufficient to manifest as they desired, and we feared at one time the séance would be a failure. But we were agreeably disappointed, when an Indian maiden appeared, manifesting great physical strength. She lifted several gentlemen bodily from the floor. Subsequently other spirits took on the mortal garb for the time being, and were welcomed by their earthly friends. But the most convincing exhibition of spirit-power was the appearance of "Jack" in full light. We examined his features carefully, when called up, and he looked the sailor to perfection. We were then requested to examine "Lillie," who next appeared, in a strong light, and saw as plainly as if in broad daylight the features of a young girl with blue eyes, light complexion and golden hair.

After other spirits had manifested, "Granny Brooks" signified a desire to show herself to us, when "Jack" observed that she would soon have an opportunity of so doing. She finally made her appearance in a strong light, the wrinkles upon her face indicating that she must have been a very aged woman. She said that she had a son John in the earthly life, who is the object of her constant solicitude; that she was still at work, as of old, endeavoring to do all the good she could; that she loved everybody, and hoped everybody loved her. To us the séance was a very satisfactory one, as its conditions precluded the possibility of confederacy—the cabinet being nothing more than a screen in one corner of the room at the hotel.

We subsequently had a sitting with Mrs. M. E. Wallace, whom we consider a most excellent trance medium. She is evidently a lady of refinement and an honor to our Cause. We also listened to remarks by Mrs. Stevens while entranced, which were highly appreciated. The spirit in control gave us to understand that our mission was a holy one, and although we should encounter many obstacles in our work, we would be protected by the angels until the completion of our earthly mission.

☞ A writer in the Boston Herald of Monday last says: "Perhaps it is none of anybody's business, but people are beginning to ask why the American Society for Psychical Research does not show some of the results of its work. It started in to investigate the matter of thought transference, hypnotism, somnambulism and kindred phenomena alleged to exist, but so far it does not seem to have made much progress, so far as the public is informed. Of course, it cannot be expected to find what does not exist, and if it has been diligent in its search, and has found no evidence of the existence of any such phenomena, it ought to say so, because that would go far toward freeing the minds of many persons from what, under such circumstances, might reasonably be rated as a delusion. No one supposed that it could explain any phenomena that it chanced to find. The first thing to do is to determine whether they do or do not exist, and it does seem as though they had been at work over the subject long enough to have some views on that subject." The fact is, these Researchers know nothing of the occult laws governing phenomena, and are too self-important, or bigoted, to apply to Spiritualists, who have had much experience in such matters. They refuse to consult medial instruments: This is what they said in their published card years ago. There is the name of but one Spiritualist in the long list of members in their published circular.

☞ The relations between the spirit-world and our own are becoming closer and more harmonious than ever before, whether mortals realize this fact or not: That is, between all truly spiritual Spiritualists. Those whose irate instincts lead them in another and a different direction must suffer remorse when their better natures realize their past shortcomings. But they, too, in God's own good time, will dispense with the evil and rise to a higher and holier plane where peace holds sway. The time cannot be very far distant, with the knowledge they possess, when mankind will more fully assimilate one with another, and thus be enabled to work in accord to a greater or less extent. Then peace will take the place of war, and humanity become blessed indeed.

☞ Jacobs, the celebrated French conjurer, in comparison to whom in his profession the public performers hereabout are but as farthing candles to an electric light, wrote as follows in regard to the Davenport Brothers, to the Revue Spirite of Paris, in 1881:

"As a prestidigitator of repute and sincere Spiritist, I attest that the mediumistic facts presented by the two brothers were absolutely true, and belonged to the spiritual order in every acceptation of that word. Messrs. Robin, and Robert Houdin, in trying to imitate those performances, have never given anything but a childish and ridiculous parody of the phenomena, and only ignorant and obstinate people have seriously regarded them."

Onset Bay.

The Spiritualist Camp-Meeting at this delightful grove is in the full tide of successful operation. The regular Sunday meetings are well attended, and the week-day conferences are also very interesting. There is only one drawback, and that is the dilapidated condition of the pier, which the severe storms of last winter rendered useless. But we are pleased to learn that efforts are being made to remedy the trouble by putting the wharf in condition, so that steamers may land their hundreds of passengers who make it a point of visiting Onset from New Bedford and other ports in the summer season.

We were somewhat surprised, on our visit last week, to find so many people at Onset from distant localities—men of means and of the highest respectability—and nearly all of them BANNER OF LIGHT subscribers. They are from Chicago and further West; from California, from New York and Pennsylvania. One gentleman from Illinois said he had been a subscriber of THE BANNER eighteen years. Massachusetts is also well represented.

As our own reporters have given in these columns the names of the visitors, it is unnecessary for us to repeat them. The days are spent in the multitude listening to spiritual topics from talented normal and trance speakers at times, and at other times sailing in the bay when the weather permits, and holding socials in the evening. There are many mediums on the grounds, and all seem to be fulfilling their respective missions.

Mrs. Williams is at Wickett's Island, holding materializing séances, one of which we attended, some fifteen ladies and gentlemen being present. It was of the same tenor of those we attended in New York some time ago. Little Bright Eyes (a cabinet spirit) was as bright as ever, while Father Holland, the presiding genius, delivered a moral essay, as is his custom at these circles, inculcating the purest morality. A very delightful episode on this occasion was when a little lad, six years of age, was called in front of the cabinet to meet little Bright Eyes. There they were—mortal and spirit—holding converse with each other. Father Holland took on the inspiration of the moment and remarked how wonderful it was, in the order of Divine Providence, that little children on both sides of life could meet and hold communion with each other. Spirit Prof. S. B. Brittan materialized, and gave us to understand that he was as active as ever, and in fact more so, in promulgating the grand truths inculcated by Modern Spiritualism. Spirit J. M. Roberts, Ella Simpson, the Indian maiden "Springflower," and others also manifested.

At the Island we met Mrs. N. E. C. Hill, an old-time medium, of Philadelphia. Messrs. C. S. Stoner and J. H. McElroy, of Pittsburgh, Pa., were also present at the séance we attended, and were fully convinced of the genuineness of the manifestations.

"Thou Shalt not Suffer a Witch to Live."

The teachings of some who hold influential positions, that the manifestations of spirits are attributable to an indefinable art called "witchcraft," and their quoting of an Old Testament commandment, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live," are beginning to bear their legitimate fruit as they did in 1692—though, fortunately, not to such an extent. An instance of this is reported in the New York Herald and other papers as recently occurring in Wisconsin, where some very forcible physical demonstrations took place in the house of William Roberts, a wealthy farmer. It became fixed in Mr. Roberts's mind that an old German lady living opposite was a witch, and the cause of the disturbance that infested his house. He gave her on two occasions due warning that she must cease casting her "evil eye" over him. The manifestations did not stop, and so the other day he took his gun and started out to kill her. He insisted that her death alone could dispel the evil charm. It became necessary that Mr. Roberts be placed in custody before he murdered the supposed witch, and he was therefore arrested.

Standing for their Rights!

The Sioux tribe is at present making a gallant rally against the tyrannical "land in severalty" business, and its members are being honored by the public prints with the titles of "stubborn red men," "savages," etc., as is usual in such cases. Gall, their chief representative, summed up the whole matter succinctly, when he said recently at the Standing Rock Conference that "Every previous treaty has been misunderstood by the Indians or violated by the whites, and it is time the Indians keep what land they have left, or their children will grow up poor and call their fathers fools."

"California's Camp-Meeting."

An article from the pen of J. J. Morse, descriptive of the recent Oakland meeting, will appear in our columns next week.

A POSER FOR MIND-READING THEORISTS.—A correspondent of the Medium and Daybreak writes that at a meeting in South Shields, Eng., Mr. J. J. Corry gave to a gentleman a minute description of a spirit form, with full name, and characteristics when in earth-life, telling the gentleman that it was the spirit of his uncle. In reply, the gentleman stated that to his knowledge he never had an uncle of that name, but said he would ask his father for particulars. He accordingly did so, and next day corroborated everything that had been told him by the medium.

COURTLANDT PALMER (of New York), well known for his sympathy with liberal thought in politics and religion, passed to spirit-life, July 22d, at Lake Dunmore, Vermont. His remains were cremated, according to his desire. An agnostic, or Comteian, in his views of the outcome of human life, he has now practically solved the problem of existence, and has, we feel confident, already become cognizant of the verity of the Spiritual Philosophy.

DR. CHARLES E. TAYLOR.—An interesting sketch (translated specially for our columns) of the life-experiences of this bold apostle of medical freedom in the Island of St. Thomas, will appear next week.

☞ W. G. Haskell, Ph. D., of Philadelphia, called in at our office on the 31st ult., from Lake Pleasant Camp, where he was to lecture next day.

"Unanswerable Logic."

Our regular patrons will need no reminder of the claims upon public recognition of the above named book, which is a specimen collation, and an enduring one, from the platform work of the late Thomas Gales Forster, one of the most gifted trance mediums of this or any other age: But at this time, when the Camp-Meetings are in full operation, and THE BANNER is being read extensively by many visitors who have not yet achieved a knowledge of immortal life through spirit communion, it seems only just that we revert to this superb volume, and recommend it to the consideration of all inquirers regarding the Spiritual Philosophy. Truly has the Baltimore (Md.) American characterized it in the past as "the work of a cultured, thoughtful and eloquent man," adding: "To those whose hearts feel the truth of his teachings it must be an unspeakable comfort; to those who do not accept his views it is still a finished piece of literature." Colby & Rich, the publishers, have this work on sale at the Banner of Light Bookstore, 9 Bosworth street; it may also be obtained of their agents at the various Camp-Meetings.

Read, and Ponder.

Three hundred and sixteen deaths of infants under one year old, medically certified to, are recorded on the books of the Registrar-General for England, from 1881 to 1886, under the heading, "Cowpox, or other Effects of Vaccination." And this, too, when it is known that medical men avoid, when it is by any means possible, to report vaccination as a cause of death.

Peace Meeting.

The twenty first annual grove Peace Meeting will be held at Mystic, Conn., Aug. 15th, 16th and 17th. Mrs. Delia Stewart Parnell and leading peace advocates of the country will attend. Dr. T. A. Bland, of Washington, editor of The Council Fire, the exponent of Indian questions, will speak on the wrongs of the Indians and their redress.

☞ We regret to learn from the Golden Gate that Mr. J. J. Morse has suffered from an attack of malarial fever. He, however, sufficiently surmounted its effects to keep his engagement at Washington Hall on Sunday evening, July 15th; and as if, says the Gate, to illustrate the power of the spirit-world to produce excellent results under extremely unfavorable conditions, Mr. Morse's control gave an able and exhaustive discourse, his theme being "What Has Man Done for God?" At the close of the lecture evidences of the presence of spirit-friends of many of the audience were given by Mr. J. W. Gill.

☞ The Fall Term of the Belvidere Seminary will begin Wednesday, Sept. 19th. Stenography, Type-writing, Book-keeping, Penmanship and all business forms are thoroughly taught. $150 will pay for a full course in this department, board and washing included. PRACTICAL OCCULTISM.—This work—embodying a series of six lectures through the trance mediumship of J. J. J. Frank Baxter last Sunday, 29th inst., was in Hanson, Mass. On account of most important work East, he will not fill his calls next week in Middlefield and Chagrin Falls, Ohio, but will be in Ohio in time to attend the grove meetings in Mantua Station; and there on Sunday, August 5th, he will lecture in Atwater's Grove during the day and in King's Opera House in the evening. Mrs. Ada L. Ballou has left California and was reported by last accounts to be in Paw Paw, Mich., engaged in speaking in place of Mr. W. J. Colville.

A San Francisco correspondent writes that John Slater's tests given by him to large and closely attentive audiences each Sunday afternoon and evening are awakening much interest, leading many to investigation, and convincing many that there is more in Spiritualism than they have hitherto surmised.

Mr. W. J. Colville is to speak in Portland, Oregon, August 5th. He is to go from there to Chicago.

Emma J. Nickerson can be addressed during the month of August at Lake Pleasant, Mass., by those desiring to engage her services for the season of '88-9.

J. Clegg Wright lectured to good acceptance on Sundays, July 15th and 22d, in Court of Appeals Room, Town Hall, Saratoga, N. Y.

Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant (inspirational trance speaker) and husband are occupying the Park-street tent, near the Spiritual Temple, Onset, Mass.—their present address until Aug. 8th, when they will visit Lake Pleasant Camp. Mrs. C. is now ready to answer calls to lecture and give psychometric readings for fall and winter. Societies desiring her services can address her at Lake Pleasant, Mass., until further notice.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Boston.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Sundays, at 10½ A. M., 2½ and 7½ P. M. Eben Cobb, Conductor.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The usual meetings were held at this place last Sunday, morning, afternoon and evening.

The afternoon session was opened with music by Mrs. Eudora Case, followed by Mrs. A. E. King with interesting remarks, tests and an inspirational poem. Dr. J. R. Cocke then addressed the audience in an entertaining manner, and introduced a new medium recently developed under his instructions, Mr. Osgood F. Stiles of Lynn, who gave some clear and recognized tests. Psychometrical readings and tests were given by Miss A. Peabody and Mrs. Nellie Thomas. Interesting reminiscences of Spiritualism's early days were related by Mrs. Bella Brown, she recounting the manner in which the subject was investigated in her childhood days by her parents, in New Brunswick, they being the only ones interested for miles around, and which culminated in her being developed as a medium. Mr. Aaron Toothaker followed with tests, and the services closed with an invocation and convincing messages by Mr. Rose, a young medium who has recently come to the city.

SHOWING THEIR TEETH.—The phrase used by the new Emperor in referring to himself in his recent manifesto to the German army has puzzled the translators. They have made it "chief" and "ruler of the army," and a lot of other things, but have finally decided that the nearest English to it is "lord of war." In the Emperor's line of thought, the North German Gazette, Berlin, referring to the rumors of disarmament published in French papers, says: "Such childish and absurd lucubrations could never be ventured upon among reading people in Germany. The idea is so silly that the inventor must have supposed himself writing for the veriest tyros in politics." Despite this savage exhibition of German molars and incisors the ball is rolling on, and a meeting of French deputies and English members of Parliament has been arranged for Oct. 22d, at Paris, to stimulate public opinion in favor of French, English and American arbitration.

A resident of Newport, Kentucky, is said to have invented a smelting furnace by which he can produce aluminum from common clay at a cost of one dollar a pound. Aluminum now sells for one dollar an ounce.

Yes, it's the little things that hurt. A common every-day measley little fly will make an orthodox Christian swear forty strokes to the minute, while if the same man had his head taken off by a July tornado he would n't say a word about it.—Philadelphia Call.

Don't you see it does n't scare me any?" Six year old (sobbing)—"It won't—scare me, either, auntie, when—when I've heard it—th-thunder as many summers as you have."

A STRIKING PARAGRAPH.—In Massachusetts, in the six years from 1881 to 1886, according to the labor report of Hon. Carroll D. Wright, there were 995 strikes, of which 351 were successful, 457 partially so, and 187 were failures. The loss to the workmen is estimated at $4,200,489, and to the employers, $1,970,881. The largest number of strikes occurred in the building trades, 492; boots and shoes coming next with 171.

The Hartford Times has an article headed "Raising a Calf on Eggs." We understand now why so much chicken salad is made of veal.—Record.

"Bellite," a new explosive, has been invented by Mr. Lamm, of Stockholm; it seems destined to "lamm" dynamite and perhaps melinite out of the field. The stuff resembles sulphur and smells like pitch, and is made up in capsules which look like thick wax candles and are covered with glazed paper. It is composed of about four parts of nitrate of ammonium and one part of a mixture of benitro and trinitro-benzine with saltpetre.

"In the dawn of the morning when Nature 's awake,
And calls up her chorus to chant in the brake,
'Mid the voice of the echo, unbound in the woods,
Midst the warbling of streams and the foaming of floods,
Then pour out thy spirit in prayer."

Monday morning, the 23d, opened clear and cool, with a delightful breeze from the southwest, and all Nature looked refreshed by the copious showers of the day previous. Mother Nature had succeeded in restoring harmony to all her surroundings, and peace hovered on the wings of the morning. But through the changes, the warring of the elements of the previous day, there was no chance; nothing is left to chance; every part of Nature stands in a certain relation to the whole, and the law of correspondence holds good in this as in everything else. We must have one in order to appreciate the other.

Conference was held in the grove at 2:30 P. M., Mrs. Eva Cassell presiding. Addresses were made by Dr. Sara E. Hervey, Mrs. Stiles, Dr. Dutton, Mrs. Wallace of New York, Mrs. Twing, Mrs. Shirley, under control of I. P. Greenleaf, Mrs. Pennell in tests, Dr. Paxson of Philadelphia, and others. Much interest is manifested at the conference meetings; they are well attended and good, and so progression does its work.

Mrs. Campbell, of New Bedford, has a class in mesmerism at Scott's Cottage, Union Avenue, every morning at 10 o'clock.

A fair will be held at the Washburn House Thursday, Aug. 2d, the proceeds to be used for the improvement of Longwood Park and its surroundings.

Mr. Charles W. Sullivan is continually adding curiosities of antiquity to his collection of relics. Strangers visiting Onset for a day's pleasure can pass an hour very pleasantly as well as profitably at the Relic Room.

Mrs. N. E. C. Hill, of 1102 Girard Avenue, Philadelphia, is stopping at Wickett's Island; also Mrs. Senator Morrill of Amesbury. Mrs. M. E. Williams is holding very fine select circles at the Island, getting most wonderful manifestations. Mrs. Kate Irving, author of "Clear Light from the Spirit-World," is also stopping at Wickett's.

Mrs. Nash has nice rooms and a cottage to let at 30 South Boulevard.

Tuesday afternoon's lecture was delivered by Mr. A. A. Wheelock, his subject, "The Bible the only Book of Authority." Mr. Edgar W. Emerson followed in tests which were very fine, and all recognized.

Mr. Jones, the spirit artist, arrived Tuesday, and has taken rooms at former location on West Central Avenue, where he is prepared to receive his patrons.

Bro. Colby is again with us for a few days. His genial and friendly presence is always gladly welcomed at our office. He has long been in the spiritual ranks, and is indeed a martyr to the cause he loves so well.

Wednesday's conference was well attended, and interesting, E. B. Fairchild presiding. Mr. Fairchild will continue to preside at the meetings in Col. Crockett's absence.

A masquerade skating party was held in the Rink on Wednesday evening.

Sailing parties every morning and afternoon.

The Fact Meetings of Thursday and Friday were very interesting. We have some of the best spiritual mediums with us this year from all parts of the United States, and our fact and conference meetings are exceedingly interesting in consequence.

Thursday morning an essay was read from the platform by Mrs. Helen Walton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., on "The Relation of the Sexes."

Mrs. Wallace, well known as being identified with the Parker Fraternity in New York City, is stopping at Hotel Onset, also Mrs. Effie Moss.

The People's Theatre continues to occupy the Temple another week. A dance social is an added attraction to the entertainments.

Mrs. E. M. Shirley, of Worcester, is located at "Robins' Nest."

The Washburn House is always full. Union Villa has a select company of guests. Good meals are furnished at Bullock's Restaurant. For a clam-bake go to Belmont Café.

Mr. Julius Carroll, wife and grandson, are at their summer home on Pleasant Avenue. They have been called to part with a beautiful daughter during the past winter, but these good people know there is no death and that spirit return is a fact, hence mourn not as the world mourns.

Horology and astrology: Prof. Basford is again at Aquarian Cottage, on Park street, and will repair your watch by the art of one and predict your destiny by the science of the other.

The "Three Old Maids," as they call themselves, are stopping at "Owl Cottage"—Capt. Thomas Harris, well known as High Sheriff of Barnstable County, eighty-four years of age, his wife, eighty-one, and his sister, eighty-two years of age.

Quantities of bluefish of large size were caught in the bay after the rains of Sunday last, and each day many are taken.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Whitney go to Lake Pleasant August 10th.

A party visited "Aunt Hannah's Farm" Wednesday evening, taking their music with them, and had a social dance by moonlight.

A trim little steam yacht from Boston, in the United States service, lies at the dock, looking after the light-houses and life-saving stations along the coast.

We have in our possession a meteoric stone owned by J. Lendall Basford, the astrologer. It was purchased by him from Mr. R. K. Jordan, of Roxbury district, Boston. It weighs about half-a pound, is of a porous texture and peculiar odor. He claims this to be the only aerolite in the world that can be proved by two witnesses as coming from the heavens. He says that it is composed of iron and sulphur. As Mr. Jordan with a friend was passing through a strip of woodland in West Roxbury between 11 and 12 P. M. July 9th, 1883, they were startled by a rushing noise through the trees only a few feet away, where this meteorite was immediately found. Professor Basford thinks it came from the moon. Prof. Ball's theory is that meteors came originally from the earth, and were due to great volcanic eruptions in ages past, when the meteors were thrown beyond the earth's attraction and sent revolving about the sun, and when the earth in its orbit comes near one of these meteors it is attracted and falls to the earth. He says that a stone thrown at the rate of six miles a second would go beyond the earth's attractive powers, but in the course of time must enter the earth's orbit and, of course, return again to it.

On account of the rain Friday the Fact Meeting was held in the Pavilion, which was well filled, all the standing room as well as seats being taken. Mrs. J. J. Whitney gave some excellent tests.

We have in our office a beautiful independent crayon spirit-picture, from the mediumship of Dr. Henry Rogers of San Francisco, Cal., who, with Mrs. Rogers, is located at his mother's summer home on West Central Avenue, where he has many fine spirit-paintings in colors on exhibition.

Saturday forenoon conference was held in the Pavilion, the Temple being engaged by the People's Theatre. A very harmonious meeting was enjoyed by all who attended. The lesson of the morning was, "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and despitefully use you." Bishop Beals opened the meeting of the afternoon with a prayer. He afterward sung "The People's Advent," by Gerald Massey. His subject for the lecture was "The Transfusion of Blood, and the Transfusion of Intellect are two Important Subjects of our Age." The Pavilion was filled.

Those interested in the Whole World Soul Communion met Friday, 27th, at Dr. Sara E. Hervey's, and enjoyed a pleasant and harmonious meeting.

Prof. Cadwell, the mesmerist, is again with us, giving his exhibitions and showing the power of mind over mind, every morning at nine o'clock in the Skating Rink.

Sunday, the 29th, the morning dawned clear and cool. The service in the grove opened with a concert by the celebrated Middleboro' Band. Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes was the speaker of the morning. Her subject was: "The changes through which we have passed, and the changes going on about us in the world." It was grandly eloquent, and listened to with rapt attention. Mrs. Byrnes, as a woman and as a speaker, is a credit to the cause she represents. Over two thousand people listened to the lecture of the morning.

A band concert commenced the exercises of the afternoon. Hymn, "Beautiful Hills," followed by an invocation; afterward the song "Let us Speak of a Man as We Find Him," by Bishop A. Beals: The subject of his lecture was, "The Dependence of the Church on Modern Spiritualism." Mr. Edgar W. Emerson followed the lecture with tests, many and good. Mr. Emerson was gladly welcomed here from his trip across the continent. We read from time to time, with a great deal of satisfaction, the words of commendation and praise from those on the Pacific coast who have had the pleasure of listening to his controls for the first time. He leaves here next week for Sunapee, and afterward for Cassadaga Lake, all his time being engaged until July, 1889.

J. Milton Young, of Lake Pleasant, made us another flying visit this week. He came on business connected with Lake Pleasant.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum held its session in the Temple Sunday, at 3 P. M., D. N. Ford, Director. Recitations by Alice Cummings, Howard Wendemuth, Lulu Morse, Lukie Word, Frances Gardner, Sarah Roberts, Eloise, Lillie and Ethel Wendemuth, Henry Campbell, Cora Campbell and Maud Woodward. Song, by Mabel Allen.

Sunday evening an entertainment was given in the Temple by Mrs. J. J. Whitney, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing and Dr. Stansbury.

The double number of The Soul, for June and July, will be issued in a few days, containing a full account of the slate-writing in the Temple Sunday evening, July 29th.

It has been voted by the directors to continue the Camp Meeting till the 1st of September, the Middleboro' Band to be in attendance.

Manifestations in the North-West.

A revival of a deeply religious character has been of late proceeding among the Indians at one of the Hudson Bay Company's settlements, in consequence of a remarkable apparition testified to beyond the possibility of doubt or question. The Company's steamer, "Otter," from Forts Wrangle and Simpson, brings word to Victoria of an extraordinary apparition which has startled not only the Indians but the white missionaries at Metlakatlah. The mission there was started some years ago by Mr. William Duncan, under the auspices of the Church Mission Society of England. The village has a population of eight hundred belonging to the Tsimshaen nation of the Pacific Indians. Situated north of the fifty-fourth parallel, the spot is not an attractive one, an Arctic climate prevailing the year round. Mr. Duncan is assisted by Rev. Mr. Collinson and Rev. Mr. Hall, the former taking charge of the Indians on the Queen Charlotte and adjacent islands.

The story told by the officers of the Otter is as follows: One Sunday night several Indians entered the Mission Church to pray. While engaged at their devotions a bright light arose at the altar, and soon spread over the whole chancel. Presently five figures, clad in long white gowns, appeared in the chancel and knelt at the altar as if praying. The Indians left the church and gazed awestruck upon the spectacle. Among others Mr. Hall, Mrs. Collinson, and about ten of the whites and domestics of the Mission and neighboring houses saw the wonderful apparitions, which soon afterward faded away. Mr. Hall at once opened a prayer-meeting. The whole settlement attended, and much religious fervor was manifested and since continued, prayer-meetings being held at all hours of the day and night, and the spirit of revival holds full sway over the village. Messengers have left Metlakatlah for the surrounding tribes, to relate the extraordinary manifestations, and the revival is spreading rapidly up and down the coast.

The officers of the Otter add that Mr. Hall also told his story to the officers of the United States revenue cutter, Oliver Woolcot, which was cruising on the north-west coast of British Columbia. Hall was asked bluntly if he had played a trick on the savages to induce them to flock to the revival services. He answered indignantly that he never trifled with the Indians in that manner, and said that he was ready and willing to make oath to the facts. Mr. Duncan and Mr. Collinson were absent at the time, but the latter's wife, a refined English lady, was a witness to the sight. Mr. Hall, it may be added, is an earnest and faithful missionary, who went to that country from England a few years ago. He is a young man of thirty, of iron nerve and great determination, and a superior scholar. Some of the Indians report that the same apparitions have been seen twice since, and the excitement is rapidly increasing.—Cor. Two Worlds, July 20th.

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

The Free-Circle Meetings

At this office have been suspended for the summer. They will be resumed, as usual, about the middle of September next.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held June 5th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Our Father who art in heaven, in earth and everywhere, we approach thee at this hour, and send forth the aspirations of our souls, asking light and understanding from thee and the angel ones. We behold the divine revelation of life in the springing blade and the blooming flower; we behold the manifestation of thy love in the gleam of sunshine that falls upon our way. Oh! our Father, God, may we realize deeply that in these things thou art ever expressing thy law, thy tenderness, thy infinite care. We send forth to thee the burden of our souls' desire, even as the flowers send forth their fragrance to the summer air. Oh! may it be received, that we may gather a blessing from thee and the angel ones. We would, at this time, come into deep communion with the wise ones of diviner life, to receive from them instruction, words and thoughts of wisdom that will apply to our own minds and stimulate them to new effort and grander achievement. May we all come into harmony and sympathize in spirit, one with the other, and send forth a growing desire to live and to learn, and endeavor to become more like the angels of heaven. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By C. A. Whitaker.] Do similar differences of opinion prevail among individuals in spirit-life as in this life?

ANS.—There are differences of opinion upon the various subjects of life of human importance in the spiritual world similar to those which exist on the earth; and this must of necessity be so, since all minds are not cast in one mould, nor are they bent in the same direction. Human reason and judgment must apply themselves according to the training and the tendencies of the mind which employs them. In the spirit-world each difference of thought or opinion has its own advocates and followers, who are attracted to each other, and who band together in social circles, somewhat similar to your societies upon the earth. We do not desire that all spirits should think alike upon every subject that arises for human consideration, since out of the agitation of thought and the ventilation of opinion one may be able to gain glimpses of higher truth, to see more deeply into a subject than he has before, to examine it from a different standpoint, and thus perhaps may he gain something of immeasurable importance to his soul. Let us remember, however, that although two or more spirits may differ in opinion upon a certain subject, it by no means follows that they will be inharmonious toward each other; they may be perfectly sincere and honest in their differences, but if intelligent and advanced they will be ready to accord each to the other the same right to judge and form opinions as he or she claims personally; therefore, by this very difference of thought, new ideas may be evolved, a grander conception of the subject brought forth, and, consequently agreeing to differ in harmony, each one may be blest and uplifted by this very condition of things.

Q.—Is the veil which rests on the grave equally dark when viewed from the other shore? or is it possible for our spirit-friends to know how it fares with us in the earth-life?

A.—The veil, so-called, of death, falling as it does between the mortal and immortal life, does not seem dense and sombre to the advancing spirit. There are undoubtedly spirits in the other life who view death as the means of separation from their loved ones on earth, who are rebellious because of its infliction on them: but such spirits are not advanced or progressive; they are closely allied to the physical life; care more for the material things of time and sensation than they do for the spiritualities of existence; therefore they have learned but very little of the true spiritual life, and their entire desire is to remain in contact with earth and with mortals, in order to experience those things which belong to material life alone. But the majority of spirits who are at all intelligent or informed, view death as a blessing rather than as a curse: even though it has borne them, physically speaking, away from their earthly haunts and from material association with former friends, yet it has opened to them grand avenues of opportunity and of progress, through which they may rise to higher fields of knowledge, of effort and achievment than were attainable on earth. Such spirits will be able to return in contact with matter and view the doings of their mortal friends, that is, those friends with whom they are in the deepest sympathy, those whose affections call them back, and for whom their own affection flows forth in tender love. Such spirits as these will walk frequently by the side of their earthly friends, exercising an influence over the loved ones to make their pathway more bright and peaceful, and to help them to bear the burdens of mortality unto the very end. Such spirits will also be able to receive from the higher life instruction and truth, which, under favorable conditions, they may impart to their friends of earth, thus assisting the latter to grow in harmony with their own growth and progress.

Death, when properly viewed, is not an evil but a blessing to humanity, since it opens to mankind higher conditions of life, which will elevate it, give it strength and vigor for the coming time, deliverance from the encroachments of age and time, disease and suffering, uplifting the immortal part, the spirit of man, unto such planes as will afford him the grandest and best developments of life. By-and-bye man will come to view death not as that which deprives him of all sensation, hope and existence, but as simply a change which brings to him the finest and the sweetest improvements and unfoldments of his being.

Q.—Is there any law of compensation by which an untimely death in the earth-life can be made right in heaven?

A.—Most certainly; since it would be most deplorable to believe that what is called an untimely death on earth should bring to the spirit who suffers it such a deprivation of life, opportunity and culture as would forever keep him stunted and in ignorance. To believe that the Infinite God would permit such a condition of things as this would be to believe that the Infinite Father of all love and life is not omnipotent, is not all loving, all tender and wise; but, so far as we know anything of this subject, we feel safe in the affirmation that to every life eventually comes compensation for all the ills, the sufferings and privations it has undergone. True, a spirit early deprived of its mortal experience and discipline, is cut off from the enjoyment and advantage of much that may be important to its unfoldment, but even though the physical organism is lost to him, it is possible for him to be swept into such lines of experience, even in contact with material existence, as will afford him the opportunity of gaining knowledge and new discipline concerning the things and experiences of earth.

Under the great law of spirit-return, and of vital contact and communication with mortals, such a spirit may gain the information and the assistance he requires for his spiritual unfoldment; and again, even apart from the material things of this earth, a progressive, energetic, vitalized spirit—one who desires to learn, to grow and to advance—may find opportunities and conditions for such attainment in contact with the spirit-world and its inhabitants. Therefore, we say there is compensation for all suffering, all privation. Life is infinite in its possibilities; God is eternal, ever just and wise, and his provisions are made so unerringly that a human soul cannot fall outside of his kingdom of love.

Q.—Is there any evil in the universe except what has come through the violation of natural law?

A.—We know of no evil in existence save that which has come to humanity through the violation of law, and all law must be according to nature and belong to the universe. True, man has erred through ignorance; because of his uninformed mind and his undeveloped spiritual proclivities he has stepped aside, age after age, and thus perpetrated wrong and perpetuated the tendency to do wrong in his posterity. The law of heredity has stepped in and declared itself surely and without mercy, and so we find human beings, year after year, and age after age, born into this world of matter with inherited tendencies to step downward instead of to rise upward in the moral grade of life; but the tendency of the race, of humanity at large, is onward and upward, and therefore while individuals err, we find humanity growing in strength and knowledge and wisdom.

True, there are many and varied signs of wrong or evil throughout the earth; even in this enlightened age the instances of wrong doing multiply on every hand, because mankind continues to violate the laws of its own being and to disregard the laws of this natural universe, yet through bitter suffering and sorrow the race gains experience, becomes disciplined; and what is true of humanity at large is true of individuals, so that the hope of the future is that man shall so learn of the past, so study the records of his race, so learn of the histories of life, that he will become informed concerning the true, the natural laws of his being, and will seek to apply his knowledge in all wisdom to his outward conduct, his daily thought and habit. Thus do we anticipate the approach of "the golden time," when man will become freed from error—not through the intervention of any superior power, but through his own great efforts; through the struggles he himself makes to rise above the mire, and to gain the grand and beautiful light of heaven.

Evil, so-called, may after all be looked upon as for a purpose, for an unfolding evolutionary work; and we may clearly trace, through the history of mankind, evidences of where the grandest thought and highest effort have been the outgrowth of those very mistakes, failures and missteps which man has made in times past. Oppression, injustice, persecution, reign in various quarters of the earth, yet they are the heavy clouds which, even though foretelling the storm and bursting around humanity, may also betoken something higher. The convulsions of Nature, the storms of the atmosphere, are produced to cleanse the air, to sweeten and purify it for the advent of the glorious sunlight of day; and so even these convulsions in human life—disasters and painful miseries—may betoken this one truth, that humanity is to be purged of its dross, and that its impurities shall be swept away before the oncoming light of eternal love and truth.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held April 27th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Alpheus B. Hoag.

You may place me in Sandwich, N. H. My name is Alpheus B. Hoag. I went out rather suddenly, but it makes very little difference in regard to that. My favorite topic here was music. "The Beautiful, Beautiful Star"; oh! how many times have I drank it in when it was sung. Sometimes when music was given out through mortals, of which I was only too glad to do my part, it has seemed almost as if we had crossed the portal. Music hath charms, but, oh! how beautiful is the music of heaven.

Frank J. and Frances, I do n't forget you during the trials that come into your home; but be patient; in the angel world the red men are doing all they can spiritually for you. Frank J., never do I come by your bedside but I find from two to four of the red men there to give strength and power to you. I have also found the physician in spirit beside you, and I feel that they have more power than those in the flesh.

I am happy in spirit. I would like you to sing often in your home, "Star, Beautiful Star," for it was sweet to me while dwelling in the mortal. Frank, I have often promised myself, in all these many years since I left you, that as soon as possible I would endeavor to give a message, but I know you will think I have been a long time getting it here. No; not a long time getting here, but a long time before I was able to speak. Father and mother mourn me as dead. Oh! no, I am not dead. We in the spirit all deny it; we are not dead, we are live people. Hold your little circles in the meetings at your home, Frank, and we promise to come and do all it is possible for us to do. We know the dark sides will turn up occasionally, but turn the leaf over again and see if there is a brighter side to the leaf. Frank, I promised you some time since as soon as I found the channel open that I would pen you a few lines.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for putting down what I have said, although not more than half what I could say face to face with the dear ones.

John B. Morrison.

I took up considerable room, Mr. Chairman, when in the mortal, but I guess I don't want quite so much now. You may place me, as formerly, in Farmington, Maine. My name is John B. Morrison. I have always failed when making the attempt to speak in meeting. I was not much used to it. In your meeting I saw one of our old townspeople, Dr. Dyer, and I did want to get hold of his hand and give it a shake, but as I could not quite do that I trust he will take the will for the deed.

I can see now that while dwelling in the form I had a great deal of spiritual power. I didn't like to own it to mortals, but I'll tell you one thing: when anything was lost I could find it. I had help, you know, from the other side, and I can see now where that power came from. I didn't know when here.

Father, mother and Emma are here to-day, but say I can do all the talking for them. Emma has only very lately joined the number—as near as I can count it up, perhaps two or three weeks since. Can't just reckon your time now. Joe D. is here; he must wait and attend to his own business. I would say to Lenora that I am happy. Emma is with me now, and we will try to make you know we are here together to day. I'll try to give directions so you'll get the letter all straight.

To Adelaide I would say that I have kept my promise pretty well, but I can't say more than half what I would if I could get an instrument and sit down and talk right to you. Your father and mother say that as soon as there is a channel open they, too, will send a line direct to you and Sadie. Yes; we are happy in our spirit-home, and are glad to be able to make ourselves known. Sometimes we think we can, but fail when we make the attempt.

Lenora, I would like you to talk a little with the doctor, and I think he will help to open your eyes a little in regard to spirits coming to earth and talking. He knows how to talk to you; listen to him; it won't do you any harm; he will be honest in what he tells you.

Will you please, Mr. Chairman, send this letter to North Chesterville, Maine. I'm in something of a hurry for Lenora to get this; she don't know about my coming back.

Alonzo Glidden.

Will you please, Mr. Chairman, register my name as Alonzo Glidden, from Prospect, Maine. Finding the channel open I have made bold to ask the privilege from the guides, and with the answer coming in the affirmative, I have started out to say a few words to the dear ones left.

Jane, I know the trials that have overtaken you since I passed on. John, don't be so despondent; cheer up, this life is only a shadow, ours is the real. Father and mother are with me to-day; yes, and Carrie and little Ralph; and coming so near, Carrie says to me: "Uncle Alonzo, say to father I am with him much of the time. He is not in the store alone, for I never go by him but I find some dear one there." I often visit Adelbert, and I am glad to say that he seems to be in very good spirits, although many miles are between you, Adelbert is away in Southern California.

John, as I said before, cheer up. This shadow will soon pass away and you will come to join the happy number. You will find us all again, even your darling daughter Carrie, that loving child who does not forget father, mother and the loving ones that are left on earth. George and the children she watches over by day and by night. She glides into the home, anxious to make all know and feel her presence with them. Dear brother John, I know you will ask me if Freeman is not here. No; not today; there are attractions that draw us into different surroundings, but quite a large number are here to day.

Jane, dear wife, I know you will ask if I watch over our own dear ones, the children. Yes; but I love you all. I would advise you to take the journey this season, for it will be a benefit to you.

I have many dear ones in different surroundings, and some within a stone's throw, in the city of Boston. Allie, remember all is but a shadow in this life; you'd better take a little rest, and not put out your strength so much for the ornamental in the home. I know you will ask, "Does it not look beautiful and please the eye?" Yes, dear, and I am glad you take comfort and pride in it. Dear child, I am happy in my spirit-home, and I would ask each one to learn what they can in this life. John, you have been a little disappointed of late, but it won't last long, and you will be able to converse with us again through a channel privately; and Hannah also.

Sarah G. Emery Dyer.

My home was in Provincetown, Mass. My name is Sarah G. Emery Dyer. If I did n't add the last, mother would think it a little strange. Mother understands much of spirit communion, for she has been given a great deal of the power herself. Father often smiles, and looks a little strange when mother tells him that Sadie is there. But, father, you are the one that is looking through the smoked glass, and not mother. Dear mother and father, Will is here with me—my husband. He was glad to join me in spirit life when he passed out suddenly, through the water.

I am happy, dear mother. I would not ask to come to stay. No matter if father can't see just as you do; in spirit-life father will understand a great deal more than he thinks he will while dwelling here. Mother, when we see you sit down passively by yourself and try to come in rapport with us it makes us feel happy in our spirits.

Will often says: "Sadie, I would not have believed, when on the earth, that I could have come into communication with you," although he tells me he always felt I was not a great ways from him. Oh! how many times do we flit in and out; in old Provincetown, Wellfleet and the surrounding towns do we love to go with the dear ones we know so well in the mortal. But I see with some of the dear friends who are yet left here there have been hard trials; heavy burdens have come into the home. Frank, I have pitied you so much when I have seen so many wrongs that have come in life, and I have asked the angels to help each member of your family, for we were good friends, Frank, not relatives. I have understood the trials that have come to you, and your dear mother, too, has had so much to bear; but in heaven there will be one more star in her crown for what she has tried to do for each one of you.

Mother, look well to the angel-world and they will help you; they will carry you safely across the bridge, and then will we all come together again. Grandma wants me to tell you that she often visits the home.

George Holbrook.

My home was in Charlestown, Mass. My name is George Holbrook, and John, my brother, is with me. I wish to say to our friends that we are not dead by any means. Father, mother and Josie, learn a little this side and you will be just so much further advanced in the school when you cross over. John and I are together a good part of the time, but not all the time. Grandma Holbrook is with us, too, and we are very happy in our spirit home; but don't think for a moment we have not been able to know of the changes you have made.

Father, I see you have got out of that home, up a little further into Somerville. I like it tip-top. I think you made a good swap. Although you've got a good many more conveniences, still you think of the old home up the hill.

Father and mother, we don't see you very often in any meeting, nor Josie. I mean this kind of a meeting. We see you in the others. Josie, you know you used to open the door once in a while and let us speak to you, but we haven't found it open very lately. Now, open the door and we will make you feel happier by talking a little with you, for it is the sociability of the spirit that attracts us back to earth, and we are anxious to come into communication with you, more so than you can be with us. We would not have you think we wish to come to earth because we are not happy there; we are; and it is only a veil that comes between us.

Mother, do try and learn a little more, and see if you can't hear some sounds. We don't come to harm you or frighten you, but we come to talk through sounds, to let you know we are there.

I know it was a hard stroke for you all when we both left you so suddenly and so near together. But, father, John says he is glad you have done just as you have in regard to the property. It is all right. Get all the happiness you can out of this life. Mortals wont get any too much I assure you while they stay here. We are satisfied with the home we have, and not only that, but the desire to return to earth to stay is taken away when we change the old mortal for the immortal. I would rather have staid here longer while I was in the mortal, because I was but a boy, yet after the change I had no wish to come back and stay.

Dear ones, watch and wait our coming, and we will be there to meet you when you cross the portal called death—which ought not to be so named.

Daniel Sanborn.

My home, Mr. Chairman, was in New York, and my name is Daniel Sanborn. I have often tried to speak in your meetings, but have failed. I felt that if I could give a word perhaps it might reach my brother, David Sanborn, in Somerville, Mass. I am happy, and I would not come back to stay.

Linnie is here and mother, too, to-day. I had considerable to do with railroads, but I find in spirit life that we need no railroads nor anything of the kind. I am glad to send a few words to-day, hoping it will meet some of the dear ones. I have some relatives in Chicago, some in Manchester, and some scattered in different surroundings. Mary is here, also; to-day Warren is not here.

Manson Gore.

I once lived in Canaan, Me. My name is Manson Gore. I wish to say to Aunt Clara that father is with me, and we are very happy together. Mother is here, sister also, and the family is made whole. Father has lately joined the happy number, and was just about to join us at the time I made an attempt to speak in your meeting before and failed.

I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that to-day the privilege is granted and the power given that I may speak for myself and father, too. Aunt Clara, I know you feel, day by day, that we live and come to you. Cousin Ella says that your little circles are all right so far, but be careful, as Uncle Charlie says, that they do n't cheat you at last. There is a great deal I would like to say to Aunt Clara, but I'd a little rather say a part of it privately, when there's an opportunity. I felt I could not have this meeting closed without finishing my work which I commenced in your last meeting.

I would thank each one that was so kind to me. Nellie, take care of the darling little pet, for it is tender, and how easily the stem would be broken. I come to you so often, dear wife, so often, watching over you, and I am glad that you know in your soul that father would find me. You feel it, but you do n't understand as much of spirit return as I would like you to learn.

Aunt Clara, do send the paper to Nellie. I know you will, after you read it. I am happy, and so glad that father is with me, but I know you 'll say that you all miss him. Yes, Uncle Hartson will miss him much, I know, and Aunt Lydia.

TRUTH UNDEFILED.

BY BELLE BUSH.

Let the good in thy brother be dear to thy heart;
With his vices and follies the truth has no part;
It will live and will triumph the most through Love's art.

Men cannot defile it, though sunk in the mire;
'T is the jewel of heaven that mortals shall tire
Of striving to tarnish or burn in the fire.

They may try it as dross in the furnace of pain,
But pure as when given the truth will remain,
And show not to angels one scar or one stain.

Oh! learn, then, the lesson Love bears to the earth:
All truths that exalt thee are jewels of worth,
And none the less holy though lowly their birth.

But remember, Love never works ruin or ruth
To any who toil in the kingdoms of truth—
For behold! Love herself is the holiest truth,

And when born in the spirit, then sink to repose
All the passions that add to humanity's woes,
For Love hides the secrets that hate would disclose!

Every heart knows its weakness, its burdens of sin,
What need to reveal them? Love says, "Look within,"
For God and each soul there 's a witness between.

He shall judge thee and others, fear not, for the scale
Of justice and mercy He holds shall prevail
In the triumph of truth, though its teachers be frail.

Oh! sing, then, in gladness the songs of the heart,
And the joys that they bring thee to others impart,
'T is the Christ-love alone giveth peace to the heart.

A Good Test of Spirit Identity.

John Tiffany, his wife and two boys, are passing a few weeks at Onset Bay—staying at the Washburn House. Mr. and Mrs. Tiffany were anxious to investigate independent slate-writing, and as an aid in that direction visited the drug store and purchased two slates, putting two screws into them and fastening them together firmly. They called upon Dr. Stansbury, who placed a small bit of pencil between the slates and threw some pellets with names of spirit friends on the paper that covered the slates—when the following words were written:

"God bless you." "Aunt Sarah."

This was in response to a question asked upon the pellet, and Mr. and Mrs. Tiffany are confident that no human hand touched the pencil to do the writing—also that they heard the pencil writing before opening the slates. There could have been no collusion or deception practiced by the doctor, or any one in the room connected with him.

They then called upon Dr. Henry Rogers for a séance, but did not write upon pellets or ask any questions; two slates were placed together, having a small piece of pencil enclosed between them, the slates being in sight all the time, both firmly holding them—and soon the pencil was heard writing. On opening the slates the following communication was found:

"My Dear Son John: Cast all your doubts aside and trust in us. Your mother and I are trying to get nearer to you. Don't have anything to do with those people that tell you that it is all false.

Your spirit father, JOHN TIFFANY."

Here is a man who is not known to Mr. Rogers, and no intimation is given as to what he desires or who he is; and yet his father in spirit-life writes out his name and signs his own (father's) name properly. The father passed on to spirit-life in England some two years ago; the son has been in this country some twenty years.

If it was not the spirit father who wrote the name, who did? Will some member of the Psychical Research Society please give the world a consistent, sensible solution of the problem from any standpoint different from that claimed by the spiritualistic philosophy? A. S. HAYWARD.

August Magazines.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—"Thoughts on Our Art of To day," is the title of a paper that leads the contents, and will attract readers from the fact that it is by so excellent a judge of art as Sir John Everett Millais, Bart., R. A. Two portraits of Millais are given in connection with it, one from the picture by Holl in the diploma gallery of the Royal Academy, the other at the age of twenty-four. "Current Art" has four illustrations, one a fine portrait of Sir Arthur Sullivan, whose fame is world-wide through his connection with Gilbert, and another a full-page engraving of a production of E. J. Gregory, A. R. A. "A Painter's House-Boat" describes a floating studio that for several years was a familiar object on the Cornish coast. Half-a dozen engravings show the peculiarities of the craft. Three engravings illustrate Part II. of "Dickens and His Less Familiar Portraits," and eight "Five Centuries of Domestic Art." New York: Cassell & Co.

ST. NICHOLAS.—Though no reports of the appearance of the Sea Serpent have been made this season, the story of what has been said of his performances in the past is told on the opening pages of this month's St. Nicholas, and several engravings given in illustration. In "Mr. Crowley," an interesting account is given of the ways and doings, displaying several human traits, of the children's hero, a Chimpanzee, in Central Park, New York City. Mr. Crowley's portrait is given and two other engravings. An exciting story of a little Indian boy is told by Col. Iiges; a recital of the oddities of "Little Ike Templin" is commenced by Mr. Johnston, and Lucy G. Morse contributes "The Bell-Buoy's Story." Directions for an evening's entertainment are given in "Shadow Pantomimes," and other stories, a number of poems and a profusion of engravings complete the contents. New York: The Century Co. For sale by Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

JOSIAH WILSON.

I wish to say that it gave me great joy to see in the BANNER OF LIGHT of July 21st the name of JOSIAH WILSON among the communications on its sixth page. He was a very dear cousin of mine, but left his body many years ago, as he says. He also left a son Joseph in Haverhill. I was both surprised and pleased to hear from him, because in earth life he was doubting the truth of another state of existence, as thousands are all about us who have had no later news from the other shore than that which is eighteen hundred years old. I hope we shall hear from him again soon. He has many friends in Claremont, N. H., who will hail his message with joy. MRS. H. J. SEVERANCE.

South Royalton, Vt., July 22d, 1888.

WHITNEY AND LUCAS.

The message of MAHALA WHITNEY, Chelsea, Vt., is recognized by relatives and friends in Tunbridge, South Royalton and Chelsea, as in every particular correct; likewise the communication from JAMES LUCAS of Thetford, Vt. Many here in Royalton knew him well. These were in THE BANNER some time in April and March; as I have not the papers at hand I cannot fix the date, but both are true, as friends here testify. I wish this published to the world, that mourners everywhere may be comforted with the knowledge that there is no death. H. J. SEVERANCE.

A Camp-Meeting Idyl.

THE LEGEND OF THE PINES.

Long ago, before man's morning dawned upon the world, the ocean rolled and beat its mighty breast against the yielding sands. It swept their shifting, golden masses into hills, and hollowed them in dales. It sang in grand, full tones, as it worked: "This is God's will, and this," and moved the sands upward, onward.

Thus it worked, singing, until ages passed away. The ocean had done its work among the sands. Early one morning a storm arose. First came a wind, whose wild wings swept the crested waves, and bore the foam far on into the upper air. The ocean, lashed to fury, beat on the sandy ridges, rolling the shifting sands hither and thither. It surged through the valleys with resistless power, sending up a voice to mingle with the wind, that echoed far away in the clouds of mist that arose in the east. But, at sunrise, the storm fell, the wind passed on, and the ocean voices sang alone.

The sands lay still and shining under the blue waters. They could listen to the song, and answer in their listless way by surging back and forth, shifting to its changes. At last the waters were hushed, and a far distant voice rising from the deep came near and spoke. It was from the very heart of the ocean, this tender, loving voice, and it spoke to the sands:

"Farewell!" it said. "Farewell!"

Then, as the sands were silent, spoke again: "We go, never to return. Farewell!"

Then cried the sands in one long entreaty: "Do you leave us? We must lie here, then, until eternity, without motion, without sound. How shall we live without thy grand voice, singing at morn and eve, telling us we are all a part of the Eternal?"

But the ocean was already drifting further, urther away.

"Farewell!" it cried, "Farewell!"

"Wait," said the angel, tenderly. "The voice you mourn shall return to you. It shall live forever in the trees that grow from these sands the ocean waves have washed. The voice will sing and chant from morn till eve. It is God's will. Be patient, then, and wait."

The sands lay lifeless, waiting; their golden masses waste and desert, their hills and dales quivering under the rays of the sun. At last they felt there was life among them. Something stirred within this sandy waste and covered it with green. Years passed by; the green things grew up and up toward the sky, becoming in time stately trees.

Then came the voice.

One day a wind swept inland from the ocean. It lingered in the branches of the trees that grew out of these sandy ridges, and swayed them back and forth.

"The voice has come," cried the sands.

"The tide is coming in," cried others. "Listen to its roar; soon one will see the crested waves break over the hill-tops, and our valleys will be full of water."

But the voice is ever with them.

Thus they wait and listen. The tide of ocean to them is ever coming in, and the passing winds bear tidings of the rolling waters they have left behind in their flight.

And the Pines sing on. Their songs are always of the ocean; the grand roll of the coming tide; its power; its strength.

ARE THEY GLAD?

If she were here
To take my hand, and ask, "What is it dear?"
She would not see the wrinkles on my face,
Nor note the silver where the gold had place;
Upon my faded lip she'd leave a kiss,
And whisper, "Darling," and she would not miss
The vanished rose; or, if she did, would say,
How you have ripened since I went away!
The blemishes that others might despise
Would still be beautiful to mother's eyes.

If she were here,
She would not mind the changes; if a tear
Should fill my eye, I know that she would see,
And give sweet consolation unto me.
Yet, in her heart, some things would little heed,
Knowing how much their discipline I need.
And so I think, though heaven be not far,
And friends can see us even as we are,
They may be glad, like loving motherhood,
Because they know how all things work for good.

—Julia May in the Congregationalist.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From the home of Mrs. Bronson, on Seventh Avenue, New York City, June 1st, Mrs. Louisa Wooley, at an advanced age.

Mrs. Wooley was a remarkable lady, highly sensitive and refined in her entire being. She was of English birth. Some twenty-five years ago she was seen at the spiritual meetings quite frequently with her devoted husband, who several years ago preceded her to the better life. She was born a lady in all her bearing, and grew up a refined, beautiful spirit, more suitable for the spirit-world than in contending with the material things of earth existence and surroundings. She was genial in her conversation, and remained young and happy in spirit until she passed the change called death. But a short time before her exit she would laugh and talk in her usual way—death had no sting with her—and she passed on a happy spirit, notwithstanding material reverses in her earth-life for many years. She had a desire that Mrs. M. E. Wallace should officiate at her funeral exercises, which was complied with, Mrs. Wallace speaking fitting words on the occasion. A noble, good woman has gone to her reward, and the world is the better for her having lived in it. COM.

He was born in the above town Sept. 21st, 1820, and in the three-score-and-seven years he lived with us he won the esteem of many by his rare social qualities, and his fearless advocacy of spiritual truth. His circle of acquaintance was extensive in the State, and many will sorrow that they will see his face no more. He was an ardent Spiritualist for many years, and a faithful worker for the cause; a genial, kindhearted neighbor, a devoted husband, father and brother; and may his bereaved wife, two daughters and five sisters enjoy the same comfort he did. He had been in failing health for several years, and possessed wonderful impressions of spirit presence, especially within the last few weeks of his earth-life. He was enabled, by the help of his guides, through the instrumentality of Lizzie S. Manchester, to announce to the many relatives and friends present at his funeral that to him death had no sting and the grave no victory. We feel a brother is taken from our midst.

East Randolph, Vt. S. A. HEATH.

From the residence of his son, in Simonsville, Vt., July 17th, Joel Stannard, aged 86 years and 4 months.

He was a subscriber to the BANNER OF LIGHT from its first publication, and a firm Spiritualist for thirty-five years. He was active to the last, and read his paper with as much interest as ever two days before his transit. He went to sleep to awaken in the morning on a glorious shore in the Summer-Land, a land not dimmed with night or sorrow, but crowned with rejoicings and purity. Old age and youth alike must pass into the inevitable, and in the case with him as with all, "when we are in the midst of life we are in the midst of death." Funeral services were ably conducted by A. F. Hubbard of Tyson.

THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of Spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocketbooks. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health.

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

BY HERBERT E. CHASE.

The Literary World says of this work: "We do not know what 'a hypnotic romance' may be, unless it be one which tends to produce sleep in the reader. But whatever else this book will do, it will not make the reader go to sleep. It is distinctly a book of the waking-up sort. It is a SHAKER, A ROUSER, an EYE-OPENER, and, having got the reader wide awake, it proposes sufficient excitement for his senses to keep them on the go for one while. Oh, no! the reader may laugh at this book; it may make his flesh creep; but he will not go to sleep over it." Again this same paper says: "It is as fanciful as a fable, as extravagant as Jules Verne, as rational as the phonograph, as philosophical as Piazzi Smith, as coherent as a dream, and as credible as electricity."

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that

Headquarters Office, Onset, July 30th, 1888.

ONSET BAY WHARF.—Hearing much controversy over the wharf question at Onset—pro and con.—I thought I would try to get at the "basic facts" in the matter and see if any good reasons existed as to why the Onset Bay Grove Association did not make the repairs necessitated by the action of the ice and high winds during the severe storms of the past winter.

I learned from various sources that men stood ready to partially pay for said repairs, provided the Association would allow them to do so—these volunteers thinking that they would be benefited by the improved condition of the wharf during the present season.

I also learned that a steamer on an excursion sailed up to Onset recently, and would have landed her passengers had the wharf been suitable or the condition such that her officers could have done so safely.

I have seen various reports in the secular papers condemning the officers of said Association for not allowing the wharf to be repaired; hence for the good of Onset and in justice to all concerned I called upon those officers and asked why they did not repair the wharf or allow others to do so at their own expense. They seemed perfectly willing to answer my queries, and made a very plain statement, which, in brief, is as follows: We have ascertained that the portion of the wharf which remains intact is unsafe to "patch up" in the way proposed, and that the Association would be responsible for damage to human life in case an accident should occur.

They did not wish to "patch up" such a dilapidated wharf; they had requested and received an estimate from reliable parties, and the report was that the lowest price at which it could be repaired to be made safe would be six hundred dollars. The Association had not the money to spare to invest in a wharf which had not in the past realized for it much profit or benefit, but its representatives were willing that the shattered structure should be rebuilt if it could be done in a satisfactory and substantial manner. They had intended to rebuild it ere this time with the money that was to come from the disposal of four lots of land which they advertised, but had been prevented from selling by an injunction from State officials at the request of interested parties in Onset.

I was further informed that the officials were working under legal advisement for the interest of Onset, and the stockholders as well as cottage owners.

I was given to understand that the resources of Onset Bay Grove Association—received from taxes and privileges—were not sufficient to pay the necessary expenses, to say nothing of repairs of the wharf, and until something could be done to the wharf that will make its use safe, and remove all danger to human life, the officers would allow the wrecked landing-place to remain in its present condition. Allusion was made in our conversation to the recent accident on the Fitchburg railroad wharf, where life was destroyed, and the statement made that they did not propose to run any such risk of life and property without having some responsible guaranty for damage in case any accident occurred.

From what I gathered from them I have not the slightest doubt that they would be willing the old wharf should be repaired provided a bond could be given that would protect the Association from any damage that might occur; but thus far none has been offered, and all that has been done has been the utterance of promises to pay certain amounts to put the wharf in shape for what they regard as temporary use; no guaranty being presented to the Association for the safety of the public, or that it shall be held harmless in case of damages arising from accident.

Readers can draw their own conclusions as to whether the representatives of the Association would, under such conditions, be justified by the stockholders or the public in borrowing money to rebuild the wharf at this time. I have the best good of Onset at heart, although I have not a dollar of financial interest in it, hence can have no object in misrepresenting the case as it now stands. COM.

Mrs. C. E. Gilbert, of Washington, D. C., has been staying at the Pratt Cottage, Onset, for the past few weeks. She is a prominent worker for and among the children and various societies engaged in the temperance reform—speaking on the subject in various places. She is a lady of much mental calibre, and speaks with ease and to the purpose. The following resolutions were unanimously passed, and tendered to Mrs. Gilbert, at an informal social of the friends held at the cottage of Mrs. M. S. Wood, on the evening of the 19th of July:

Resolved, That we welcome Mrs. Gilbert to Onset with our warmest sympathies, and trust she will feel "at home" among us in the true sense of those words.

Resolved, That in the great mission of temperance reform we recognize a work which lies at the foundation of all good and true society, and which calls forth the largest and best sympathies of all who have felt and enjoyed family ties; and we trust that the heart, the brain and the tongue of Mrs. Gilbert will be touched with spiritual fire while pleading the cause of purity and temperance.

The Register at Headquarters shows that people from all portions of the United States are visitors at Onset.

Jennie R. O'Brien, Passadena, Cal., and Sarah M. Sawyer, Omaha, Neb., are among the attendants at this camp. Annie C. Macauley, from Nova Scotia, is also at Onset.

Capt. Wm. A. Atkins, of Provincetown, having "screened" his fine cottage against the mosquitoes, now takes comfort in reading the news. He says he commences reading the BANNER OF LIGHT at the beginning—and goes all the way through it—and greatly appreciates it.

James U. Johnson and Henry White from Springfield, Mass., are spending some time here, and appear to enjoy the place.

In my report concerning the thirty persons from St. Louis, Mo., and Nashville, Tenn., I should have said the railroad fare for all of them combined was $2,500. This makes quite an expensive trip, but they seem to enjoy it, and are circumstanced in such a manner that they do not count the cost.

Mr. J. Milton Young, correspondent and agent for the BANNER OF LIGHT at Lake Pleasant Camp-Meeting, also editor and proprietor of the Wildwood Messenger—which is circulated at Lake Pleasant—came to Onset last week and remained over night, but left the next forenoon for Harwich camp-ground. He had not been at Onset for some eight years, and hardly a soul upon the grounds ever saw him before. He was made acquainted with Col. Wm. D. Crockett, President of the Onset Bay Grove Association, Mrs. Howe, your agent and correspondent at this place, and others; but was so active and busy in looking over the village that he did not become familiarized with the rest of the officers of the Association. Doubtless he would have had courtesies extended him by the officials if they had known he was with them for the night. Mr. Young is one of the most active men at Lake Pleasant, being Secretary of the Association there. Together with his other duties he is also agent for the Associated Press. He has been an experienced newspaper reporter and correspondent for some years, and is a sound Spiritualist.

Edgar W. Emerson returned from the Pacific Coast in good condition, and has given some remarkable spirit-tests. One of them was to the Hon. Sidney Dean of Warren, R. I. Mr. Dean had the courage to say to the audience that what was given by the spirit was correct; this act on the part of a man who has preached the gospel, as has Mr. D. for forty years, shows the drift of the times.

Mr. Joseph D. Stiles frequently gives more than one hundred tests at one meeting, and holds his reputation as a grand platform medium for this order of development.

Mrs. J. J. Whitney gave some remarkable tests last Friday at the Facts Meeting in the Pavilion. Mrs. Whitney says she is perfectly unconscious, and while in this state full names are given of spirits she has never had any acquaintance with.

Mr. Peter C. Thomson of Philadelphia, Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Moss of New York City, Mrs. Raymond of Boston, Mrs. Whittier of Onset, and several others, were willing "to stand up and be counted" as being satisfied and delighted at having the full names of their spirit-friends given to them by and through the mediumship of Mrs. Whitney.

Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Hill have been staying at Onset. Mrs. Hill was formerly Mrs. Stafford, the medium.

Mr. Tucker, of the firm of Craig & Tucker, made a flying visit to Onset Sunday last.

Miss Rose Burnett, of Mendon Centre, N. Y., is spending a few weeks at Onset.

Mrs. Lita Barney Sayles, an annual visitor at Onset, is pleasantly domiciled at the Glen Cove House. She has accomplished a good work for the spiritualistic cause with her pen, being a contributor to several spiritual papers.

On Sunday evening, July 29th, the Temple was well filled with an intelligent audience, called together to witness spirit manifestations by and through the mediumship of Mrs. J. J. Whitney and Dr. Stansbury of California, and Mrs. Twing, the writing medium. The occasion proved of great interest to all present.

Major Griffith has opened his séance room this season on Friday evenings, for a series of social gatherings, having in view inquiry regarding spiritual topics and the exchange of medial and other experiences. These meetings are presided over by Mrs. Stevens, and are well attended.

Mr. A. Wyburn is at Onset for the season. He has had much experience as a manager of séances for spirit manifestations, and is satisfied of the genuine character of the phenomenon of materialization.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Wood are at the Burnett House; both are mediums and enjoy Onset.

Mr. E. B. Fairchild, acting Chairman of the Camp-Meeting, received Friday, July 27th, a call to officiate at the funeral of Mr. Washburn, father of L. Washburn, of Wareham, Mass.

Mrs. E. P. Raymond, of Hoosac Falls, Mass., is at Hotel Onset.

J. D. Chism, President of the Spiritualist Society of Albany, N. Y., is devoting a short time to Onset.

Mr. W. A. Tallman, of Boston, is at Hotel Onset.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Abbott, of Henry, Ill., are making their yearly visit to this Camp.

Mrs. Samuel Kidder, of Almont, Mich., is staying at the Florence Cottage.

Mrs. Thomas Gales Forster, and her sister, Miss Grimes, are guests of Mrs. Townsend Wood.

Mr. and Mrs. Kimball, of Providence, R. I., are at the Pratt Cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark are at Hotel Onset. Mr. Clark is the present owner of this hotel. COR.

[MR. J. MILTON YOUNG is our authorized agent at Lake Pleasant, and will be pleased to receive subscriptions for the BANNER OF LIGHT. Mr. Young also has a full line of our publications for sale at his bookstore. He will conduct the correspondence for THE BANNER from this Camp-Meeting.]

The week closes with the largest attendance ever known at this camp-ground in July. Every train brings campers, and there are no departures. Baggage men are having all they can do, and rooms are eagerly sought for. The opening has been a decided success, and the evidence of an increase of interest in the philosophy is seen on every hand. There are more mediums here than ever before, and they are having plenty of business. Spiritualism is being reduced to a science.

The morning of Sunday opened fair and with Nature at her best. At the auditorium gathered an audience of about one thousand. The following exercises were rendered: Singing by quartette, under direction of Prof. J. R. Billingham, of Saratoga, "Beautiful City." Invocation by Prof. W. G. Haskell, of Philadelphia, followed by address upon this topic: "The Mission of Spiritualism." This was supplemented with an address by Dr. T. A. Bland, of Washington, D. C., upon "Organization."

The afternoon exercises were preceded by the rendering of a programme by the band. Prof. Billingham then sung the solo, "Just as I am." The address was by Prof. W. G. Haskell, upon "The Religions of the World" and "The Relation of Spiritualism."

Platform descriptions of much interest were given by Dr. Fred Crockett, of Boston. A. E. Tisdale and Fannie Davis Smith will speak next Sunday.

This organization is in much favor with the people here.

The matter of mediumship is being discussed with more interest than ever before at this camp.

People are arriving from all parts of the United States, and the predictions of a few weeks ago are being fulfilled.

Mr. Watkins, the slate-writer, is having quite an amount of business.

The first grand illumination of the grounds will be on Saturday evening, Aug. 11th. Several special entertainments are being arranged for that date.

Lake Pleasant, Mass., July 29th, 1888. J. M. Y.

Ocean Grove, Mass.

Sunday, July 29th, proved an auspicious occasion at the Harwich Port Camp-Meeting. The heavy rains of the previous days served to make the driving perfectly free from dust, the air was cool, the sky clear, and nothing was wanting to make the day successful.

There were thousands of people to enjoy the cool sea breeze. J. D. Stiles, of Weymouth, delivered the morning address.

The afternoon services opened with choir singing, followed by an address by A. E. Tisdale, of Springfield, who closed with a solo.

The conference meeting in the evening closed the Camp-Meeting.

Sunapee Lake Camp-Meeting.

The meeting opened auspiciously on Sunday, July 20th. A fairer day never dawned upon the beautiful lake, and the excursionists coming from Concord, Claremont, Peterboro' and intermediate stations, enjoyed the perfection of sailing upon the two splendid boats, "Edmund Burke" and "Armenia White." These boats, belonging to different companies, compete honorably for the business of the camp, and both are well patronized. The season of travel, owing to cool weather, has been backward, but now the hotels and cottages are rapidly filling up.

The meeting opened with a song by the Fraternity Quartette, composed of the well-known professional artists of Boston, Mrs. N. W. Osborn, J. G. Osborn, W. H. Stedman and W. N. Griggs, under direction of Mrs. Nettie Wentworth. The singing was admirable, and marked decided progress in musical rendering at Sunapee.

Dr. H. B. Storer, President of the Association, in its behalf, welcomed all to a participation in the varied exercises of the meeting, estimating the platform as its nucleus, where with candor and sincerity it was proposed to consider the principles of Nature and her divine revelations in a philosophical spirit, and where the great truth of the continuity of human life beyond the grave would receive practical demonstration through the psychic power of our mediums, of whom were now present Mrs. M. A. Chandler of Boston, Madam Snow of Springfield, and Mrs. Eunice K. Morgan of Vermont, all test mediums, and others would soon be here, as announced on the programme. He called attention to the BANNER OF LIGHT, the Alcyone, and the World's Advance Thought, copies of which were on sale, together with the books and pamphlets published by Colby & Rich, at the book table near the platform.

After an invocation by Mrs. Juliette Yeaw, Dr. Storer delivered an address which held the close attention of the audience, upon "The Identity of the Principles of Life, and Evolution in the Material and Spiritual Worlds." The address was fertile in illustrations drawn from human experience in both spheres of being, demonstrating the absolute dependence of all races and individuals upon the contributions of each, and all upon the conditions of external Nature.

An increased audience assembled in the afternoon to greet Mrs. Juliette Yeaw, of Leominster, always a favorite here, and after the fine musical service of the choir, she gave an excellent discourse upon "Destruction, Construction and Instruction, the Method of Nature and of Spiritualism."

Madam Snow of Springfield then exercised her mediumship, describing several spirits, giving names and former residences, all of whom were recognized. The Quartette sang "Sweet and Low" without accompaniment, and the first Sunday's exercises were closed.

Louis Poole, violin soloist, and Fred Bennett, cornetist, both well known in Boston musical circles, are here to participate in the Saturday night entertainments throughout the meeting.

The steamboats will run special excursions from Lake View and Sunapee Harbor to the camp for the dances on Thursday nights, and the entertainments on Saturday evenings.

Thomas Burpee and wife were among the first to occupy their pleasant cottage on the hillside.

Morrill, the jovial barber, has attained to the dignity of a cottage, and the barber-shop is a lively institution.

Landlord Nelson, of the Forest House, sets an excellent table and all guests are satisfied. Miss Wright, formerly of Boston, has no superior as a pastry cook.

Richardson's company of Fancy Glass Blowers give daily free exhibitions, and their fragile wares find ready sale at their cottage, opposite the hotel.

That piano has safely arrived from Boston, and the Concert Troupe are happy.

Director W. H. Churchill and wife are at their cottage, near the wharf, where a developing circle will be held throughout the season, in charge of Mrs. Churchill, always faithful to her mission.

Harmony pervades the Camp and peace is within our borders.

Director G. H. Whitney and wife, of Franklin, N. H., arrived on Saturday, and became at once busy with the interests of the Camp.

The mistake in the excursion tickets from Franklin has been corrected, and they are now for sale at advertised rates.

Madam Snow will receive at the Red, White and Blue Cottage.

The favors received from the Boston & Lowell Railroad and the two steamboat companies are appreciated. We will all pull together, gentlemen, and Sunapee shall boom.

Secretary N. A. Lull and wife of Washington, and Mrs. Addie M. Stevens, have arrived at their cottage, and their efficient services will be welcome and helpful to the meeting.

Mr. E. J. Durant, formerly active in Sunapee matters, and with whom we parted in tears, fearing from his severe illness that we should never see his genial face again, successfully made the trip to Passadena, Cal., and has not only entirely regained his health, but made a fortune as well. Mrs. Durant, if this is the outcome of the mind-cure, give us plenty of it.

Aunt Fellows sits in the doorway of her cottage, while the flowers bloom around her. Her floral contributions to the platform are always welcomed and appreciated.

On these cool evenings the ladies appreciate the fire in the parlor.

Mr. Stedman's magnificent rendering of "The Lost Chord" was a fine feature of Sunday's exercises.

All the latest dance music will be performed at the dances.

A pleasant incident occurred on Sunday, being the unexpected visit of a Boston party who are summering at Sutton, seven miles from the camp, among whom was Prof. Longley, of musical fame, Miss M. T. Shelhamer, the distinguished medium of the Banner Circles, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hatch, Jr., and Mrs. Billings, daughter of Col. Crockett, President of the Onset Bay Grove Association. SUNAPEE.

Lookout Mountain, Tenn.

On the morning of the fourth Sunday (July 22d), Dr. Samuel Watson was the speaker. He gave his audience a discourse upon "The Harmony of Spiritualism with the Bible," which for depth of thought and an earnestness of expression has not been surpassed by any one who has addressed us. He claimed Spiritualism to be a practical demonstration of Bible truths in their strictest and purest sense. Every one who heard him appreciated his remarks, and gained a vast deal of instruction. The clairvoyant exercises of Mrs. A. M. Glading that succeeded the lecture were of a superior quality, and held the deep attention of the audience throughout their continuance.

In the afternoon George A. Fuller was introduced by the presiding officer as "the talented silver tongued orator of the spiritual platform," a compliment that his effort that followed to interest and enlighten the audience upon things spiritual proved him entitled to receive. Previous to the lecture Mrs. McCann of New Orleans sang in a very creditable manner a song which served to harmonize the assembly. Mr. Fuller announced as the theme of his discourse the promise of Jesus: "And I will send you another comforter, and it shall be the light of truth." Following the lecture Mr. H. F. Merrill and Mr. Rothermel gave clairvoyant descriptions, in the course of which Mr. M. addressed a stranger in a distant part of the audience, gave him the names of and messages from his wife and children in spirit-life, closing by saying to him: "I see you as you are coming to the mountain, and I see you stoop down and pick up a bright red leaf and put it in your pocket; and then a little further on I see you just before you get to the incline station, and there a little child has dropped a small package, and I see you pick it up and put it into your pocket, and I look into that package and I see that it contains five snow-white shells. Am I right, friend?" At this juncture the party addressed arose and took from his coat-pocket articles answering precisely the descriptions, and at the same time telling Dr. Merrill that he did not wish to hear any more to convince him of the truth.

In the evening the platform was occupied by Mrs. A. M. Glading as the speaker. She fully sustained the good reputation she has established here as an able expounder of the truth as it is in Spiritualism, and supplemented her lecture upon "Resist the devil and he will flee from you," with excellent tests.

Monday morning, July 23d, the mediums held the closing meeting of a series which has from the first proved of great interest and spiritual profit to them, mutually developing their various gifts and recuperating their mental and physical energies. Mrs. Glading, Mrs. Claney, Mr. Merrill and Mr. Rothermel participated in the exercises. In the evening Geo. A. Fuller spoke on "The Resurrection," imparting to his hearers views thereof, as may naturally be inferred, altogether different from those of popular religious teachings.

Tuesday, July 24th, a conference was held in the morning. Mrs. Glading occupied an hour in giving an account of how she became a Spiritualist and medium, after having been for years a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Rothermel described his experience with the Seybert Commission. In the evening Mr. G. W. Kates spoke finely on the Spiritual Philosophy. He was followed by Mrs. Kates, who, under spirit-control, gave an excellent lesson on the mode of living here so as to procure the greatest happiness in the other life.

This morning, Wednesday, July 25th, a conference will be held; and this evening an address will be given by Dr. Watson, questions replied to by Mr. Fuller and Mrs. Glading, closing with tests by various mediums. On the morning of Thursday, 26th, Mrs. A. M. Glading will deliver the last week-day discourse. In the afternoon a meeting for colored people will be held. At night an address by Dr. G. A. Fuller. On Friday morning the Southern Spiritualists' Association will hold its annual meeting, with Dr. Samuel Watson presiding. At night Dr. Rothermel, Mrs. Cissna, Mrs. Glading and Dr. Merrill will give public séances in the pavilion. Saturday morning, July 28th, the ladies will hold a conference which will be presided over by Mrs. Samuel Watson, and at which many topics relative to woman's work and general welfare will be discussed.

The closing week reaches us all too soon, and the general expression is, as said by the Evening News, that the constantly increasing interest and attendance indicate that the meeting might be prolonged a month with profit, spiritually and financially.

Mrs. Glading leaves for home Monday, the 30th. Her departure will be regretted, as she has made hosts of friends, while on the platform and off.

Mr. Geo. A. Fuller, the new Secretary, will establish his home here in January.

Mr. Rothermel has held a large number of séances for materialization, to the satisfaction of many and the wonderment of all.

Mrs. Cissna, the independent slate-writing medium from Cincinnati, has been overwhelmed with patrons and accomplished great good. X. Y. Z.

July 25th.

Thursday night a concert and literary entertainment. Friday night a grand séance in the Pavilion by Dr. Merrill, Mrs. Glading, Mrs. Cissna and Dr. Rothermel, proved a great success. Mrs. Cissna obtained writing in closed slates before a committee under strict test conditions. Dr. Rothermel's light séance was enjoyed by all. He is certainly a most excellent medium.

The Camp closed on Sunday, July 29th, with three sessions. The meetings have been enjoyed by all, and the Association has made progress toward achieving greater success in the future.

A perusal of the following, from the writings of Theo Katandri to The Evening Post of Cincinnati, will give some idea of the grandeur of the mountain trip to this camp-ground:

"A mule-car takes you at a lively gait from Chattanooga to the foot of Lookout Mountain. There a three-line incline with two cables takes you up the mountain side till you are as high up as the top of Price Hill, Cincinnati (four hundred feet); then, without stopping, it snakes you up twice as high as Price Hill; then, without stopping, it snakes you up the mountain till you are three times as high as Price Hill; then, without stopping, it drags you up two hundred feet higher yet. You step off the car fourteen hundred and sixty feet above the level of the Tennessee River, which winds very circuitously through the valley at your feet. You look off across half-a dozen mountain ranges. Chattanooga and the Tennessee River lie at your feet. Missionary Ridge confronts you across the valley. The cloud scenery, especially on a day of storms, is grand and impressive beyond description. A modern hotel with three or four verandas around all four sides, its most enjoyable feature, occupies the point of the mountain and is making money at three dollars a day transient, or fifteen dollars by the week. A little narrow-gauge train every forty minutes takes you along the brow of the mountain to Sunset Park, and a walk of half-a-mile further through the woods and over the rocks takes you to the Natural Bridge and the Spiritualists' camp-ground."

The same correspondent of The Post writes as follows to that paper of a later date in regard to an interview held with Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond concerning the "claims and effects of Spiritualism":

"'Suppose that we concede to Spiritualism,' said I, 'all that its advocates and professors claim for it, the question continually arises, What is the good of it? What good does it do the world?'

'Why,' replied Mrs. Richmond, 'it removes to the realm of demonstrated fact that which heretofore has existed only in the realm of faith. Many have believed that there is a world of disembodied spirits. We have demonstrated it and know it. Many who have steadfastly refused to accept it in faith have been constrained to accept it on our actual demonstration.'

'Then Jesus was wrong when he said that they who will not believe Moses and the prophets will not believe even though one should rise from the dead.'

'Let 's see; it was Abraham said that, was n't it?'

'They both said it. Jesus said Abraham said it.'

'Well, that was Abraham's theory. But the facts are against his theory. There are multitudes of people now living who believe in the future state upon the demonstrated evidence of Spiritualism, who had previously refused to credit its existence upon the announcements of faith.

'That is one good thing Spiritualism is doing. It also assures us that our state and condition in the other world will depend upon our truthfulness or falsity, our self-denial or selfishness, our love or hatefulness in this life. Hence it offers inducements to lead worthy lives. It also assures us that we are watched in all our thoughts, words and deeds by a company of disembodied spirits, and it urges us to do good deeds by this powerful consideration.'

'What Scripture texts do the Spiritualists claim and most dilate upon?'

'"Try the spirits, whether they be of God." The incident of the woman of Endor, falsely quoted as "the witch of Endor," who brought up the spirit of Samuel; those passages in Paul's epistles in which he speaks of spiritual gifts and describes just such exercises as the Spiritualists of to day have, such as the speaking with unknown tongues, the interpretation of tongues, the gifts of healing, the gift of prophecy, which phrase as used in the New Testament you, of course, know does not mean foretelling, but inspirational speaking. The appearance of Jesus to the disciples after the doors were shut was a case of materialization. The angel which wrestled with Jacob, the three angels which appeared to Abraham and even ate with him, are instances of materialization.'"

Cassadaga Lake, N. Y.

The ninth annual meeting of the Cassadaga Lake Free Association opened Saturday, July 21st.

The attendance is larger than ever before at the same time of the season, and the prospects are that this year will surpass all previous ones in every way.

There is great activity all over the Camp, and many noticeable improvements have been made.

The celebrated Northwestern Band, of Meadville, is engaged for the season, and its excellent music enlivens the meetings and brings a cheerful atmosphere to the Camp.

Congregational singing has been introduced, under direction of Prof. W. F. Peck, of Boston, and is proving very beneficial in giving unity of feeling and sentiment to the meetings.

The Children's Lyceum is in charge of Mrs. C. W. Tillinghast, and the work is going on nicely, to the great benefit of those engaged. Friday morning is to be given to the children.

Thus far lectures have been given by Walter Howell, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, J. C. Street, and Miss Jennie B. Hagan. Various phases of mediumship are represented on the grounds, and the opportunities for investigation of the phenomena were never better than at present.

W. A. Mansfield is giving séances for slate-writing, and has all the visitors he can attend to.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond held a reception at the Skidmore cottage last evening. The parlors were filled with appreciative listeners to the wisdom and poetry of the controlling intelligences. Questions were asked and satisfactorily answered, and a number of poetic character delineations were given by "Quina."

If natural scenery has any effect upon the development of spiritual powers, the dwellers at Cassadaga ought to attain a high degree of spiritual unfoldment. Nature has done all in her power to give the teachings promulgated from the platform their highest potency. The beautiful lake, on which rest the shadows of the clouds, seems a symbol of the pure waters of truth. The air is as pure and sweet as a breath from heaven. The cool aisles of the woods, with the sunlight streaming down through the tree tops, seem a very paradise, and the reverent soul can hear the voice of God in the rustling of the leaves. The very air seems vibrant with the presence of spirits, and there is an exaltation in simply breathing the sweet breath of the woods. When the natural charms of such a favored spot are considered, in connection with the excellent programme of lectures and other exercises, it is difficult to imagine how any one who believes in the principles represented here can be persuaded to remain away a single day of the season. GRAPHO.

Parkland Camp, Pa.

Mr. J. Frank Baxter came to Parkland Camp on the evening of Saturday, July 21st, and was welcomed on every hand. The next day, Sunday, dawned rather dubiously, as the weather was lowering, but the fog "went down" instead of "up," a "sure sign," the local weatherwise said, of a clear day; and so it proved, for after nine o'clock a lovelier day never was. A brass band on the "Camp Lawn" discoursed beautiful music for an hour, while the people assembled from near and far, by carriage and by trains. At 10:30 the camp-bell sounded the service hour, and a large audience assembled in the shady auditorium as another band, an orchestra, from the platform sent through the grove its melodious strains.

At 11 o'clock began congregational singing, followed by a rich poem and solo by Mr. J. Frank Baxter, after which the Chairman formally introduced him as the lecturer. Mr. Baxter announced his theme as "Spiritualism and Morality vs. Spiritists and their Morals," a most timely subject, and, in view of the recent criticisms of the New York and Philadelphia press, incited by the late Diss Debar trial, and the tirade of a local clergyman, the occasion was most opportune. The position was manly, the arguments conclusive, the thoughts trenchant, the manner vigorous, and the influence powerful. We could but think how deplorable it is that public prejudice is so great, that such thoughts as Mr. Baxter's and other of our lecturers and writers cannot stand side by side with those of a Talmage and his like, that all who read may see and judge. But, as Mr. Baxter remarked, "There is no body of people who can better afford to wait than the Spiritualists."

The noon trains brought loads more of visitors, and a vast company listened to the music and lecture of the afternoon. Mr. Baxter's afternoon subject was "Axiomatic Truism vs. Theoretical Dogmatism," and went to show on what Spiritualism was founded—practically knowledge and facts—as beside the groundwork of theology, viz., speculation and faith. It plainly showed, also, why the Spiritualists' position was a positive one, and why the teachings of Spiritualism must necessarily be more or less independent. It was a brief, comprehensive and lucid discourse, and could but be lastingly effective.

Mr. Baxter's séance following this lecture was every way a success, and bore strong proof at every move of spirit-power. Tests after tests were given and recognized. It did seem as though the spirits were bent on accom

The Spiritual Rostrum.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF DEATH.

BY WILLIAM DENTON.

Higher than our proudest steeple soars a California cedar; for two thousand years it has been building its gigantic pillar, in defiance of the rocking storms and the lightning's stroke. A thousand cities that earth bore proudly on her bosom when it was a sapling, are now unknown. Yet there it stands in its majestic pride. But death reaps the forest of two thousand years with no less certainty than it cuts down the waving grass and the blooming flower of a season.

The broad-based Pyramids have looked down upon a hundred generations, as they marched to their destiny before them. But even they feel the tooth of time—and a mound of undistinguishable desert sand will lie where rest the enduring Pyramids.

But here are the cloud-kissing, the everlasting mountains; yes, they, too, must perish. These winds that howl around their frosty heads are chanting their funeral dirge. Yea, the great globe itself, million-centuried, rock-ribbed, fiery-hearted, the mother of myriads, she, too, must be gathered, when her hour comes, into the arms of the burning sun, from which she sprang, and the heavens know her no more; for worlds have their time to fall, and suns to perish, and bright stars decay, and all things the universe contains bow before the sceptre of the all-conqueror, death. But, after all, it is only the turning of the kaleidoscope; the old forms have departed, but that which composed them remains, enters into new combinations, in like manner to pass and be succeeded by others, in the eternal possession of all things. The old cedar falls; but out of its dust springs the young one, more vigorous for the ashes of its predecessor, and waves in time its lordly crown as high as those who went before it. The mountain decays; its last atom is borne upon the sea's troubled breast; but out of the ocean depths spring new mountains, higher and fairer, and enriched with the spoil of the ocean beds from which they were elevated. Death is interwoven with the very constitution of the planet; it swam with the primeval monads in the steaming waters of the early seas; it lurked in the groves of the carboniferous swamps; it swept off the successive hosts that reproduction pushed upon the globe, through the ages; and it came to the first man, as it had previously come to all living—and thus it comes to us.

There is not a particle of this planet that has not belonged to worlds unnumbered, before this. And this is true of humanity. There goes the grand life-procession over the planet: The old man, the young maiden, and the little children. They march continuously—dropping their bodies as they go; bodies that had served the soul's purpose for a while, and are seized by the law of decay and change, and by the subtle alchemy of death are transformed into grass and flowers, to feed those who are to follow when all those who are present have gone.

Death is no curse, it is perfectly natural; it is a part of the order of the universe. In the natural world all things are subject to the dominion of death. Death follows us everywhere like a shadow. It is best that it should be so. Were it otherwise, all progress would be impossible. Were it otherwise, we could not take a forward step.

Let us be thankful that we live in a world where there is death; it is one of the greatest blessings. All stories that tell you that death is a curse, are false. All books that say so are false. Just as soon as life came, death came. More beings have died on the planet than there are drops in the ocean or sands on the shore. More blood has been shed than there is water in the sea. Our mountains are in many respects monuments of the world's dead. But that is not all. We do not see at a glance all there is of this planet. Men looked at this planet a hundred thousand years before they dreamed it was round. When they began to think there was somebody on the other side of the planet, they thought those people must of course walk heads downward; and there are many people who do not get the right idea through their heads to-day. It takes a long time to get ideas through people's heads. How long did men look at the sun before they had any conception of its gigantic size? Millions of times they looked at it and thought it no bigger than the trenchers they ate their dinners from, or the shields they wore. Who can tell the astonishment of those who first learned that it was a million times larger than the earth?

We are of necessity born ignorant. 'T is a a long time before we get out of the pride of ignorance. Many people fancy they know it all—and the know-it-alls are the most hopelessly ignorant persons on the planet. They say there is no such thing, because they have not seen it.

Now we say the cedar is dead and gone—burned up, nothing left but its ashes; but I don't think so. I believe the cedar that is burnt to ashes is not gone. You say the pyramid that is decayed is gone. But I say there is nothing of the kind. "Do you mean to say that they exist?" Yes; I say that a pyramid that has been decayed, gone, blown away in dust—I say it is still there. All the trees that have lived on this planet are living somewhere. There are persons endowed with certain senses—the psychometric sense—that can cognize them; that have eyes to see things that existed in the primal ages; that can listen to winds that blew millions of years ago.

Sir John Herschel, in his scientific lectures, says, "I had been witnessing the demolition of a structure familiar to me from childhood, and with which many interesting associations were connected: a demolition not unattended with danger to the workmen employed, about whom I had felt very uncomfortable. It happened to me at the approach of evening—while, however, there was yet pretty good light—to pass near the place where, the day before, it had stood; the path I had to follow leading beside it. Great was my amazement to see it still standing, projected against the dull sky. I walked on—keeping my eyes directed to it—and the perspective of the form, and the disposition of the parts, appeared to change, with the change in the point of vision, as they would have done if the structure had been real."

Psychometry explains this most satisfactorily. It was not fancy. What was it? I say it was the building. I say there is something to everything that death cannot touch. My experiments in psychometry demonstrate that everything has a spiritual counterpart. We have interior senses by which we can recognize it. A specimen from Egypt calls up to the eye of the sensitive, when placed upon the forehead, life-like scenes of the Nile valley, long ago. I give to the sensitive person a little fragment, it may be, from a rock, a wall, a tomb, a ruin—it is a specimen; I do n't tell him (or her) what it is, or where it came from; I do n't even know myself where it came from—and only ascertain, afterward, by looking at the printed number pasted on it, and then looking for that number in my written catalogue, which will tell what the fragment is—where it came from. But the sensitive goes on, without being told anything about it, and describes, perhaps, the scenes of the populous banks of the Nile in Pharoah's time, or the rocky hillsides of the valley, and describes the rock hewn sepulchres, and the artists there at work, with chisel or with brush, carving and decorating the wonderful figures cut out of the rock, in the heart of Egypt, three thousand years ago.

The sensitive goes back, not only to the gigantic tree ferns, unrolling their fronds in the world's primal ages, but sees reptiles rushing through the waters or lying dead on the shore. These experiments, and others of a similar nature, I have tried by thousands.

You say these statements are extravagant. But there are hundreds of extravagant things that are true. I know these to be true. People say you should n't tell such extravagant things; the world is n't prepared for them yet. But what is ever going to prepare the world if the truth is never told it? The world would be babes forever if people acted upon that principle. If nature is bold enough to teach me a truth, I ought to be manly enough to tell that truth to my neighbor. There are depths infinitely deeper, and heights infinitely higher, than any that have yet been explored. We all ought to look at and attempt to sound this great ocean, whose depths can everywhere be recognized by the clear thinkers of the world.

I hold that nothing dies absolutely. I hold that everything that exists has an existence in the spiritual world. That building is not only a house; it has its spiritual counterpart.

The more I investigate this subject of psychometry, the more clearly this theory is impressed upon my mind. But when we have gone so far as that it is very far from satisfying the human soul. We want proof positive that we, our individual selves, shall still live as individuals, when the monuments we have reared and the mountains we now see are alike levelled under the universal law of decay—change, death. These desires of the human spirit are to be met. Nothing is given to mock us. We do not have these immortal aspirations without some possibility of their being satisfied. I do not know all that follows the death of my body; but I know well that whatever is really me shall LIVE just as before. I suppose I am to be eligible to visit the stars in my time. I suppose that I shall have myriads of new experiences, and that the experiences of this earth will prove only one out of myriads. How can the real body ever die and be buried?

When I go into a cemetery, as I did to-day, and see on a tombstone the assertion, nobody lies but the tombstone! Nobody lies there. All the notions people have about our dying and becoming food for worms, till some great trumpet blows, are errors. What is going to hear the trumpet, when the ears are gone?—when the very particles are gone—eaten up by the apple trees? Every man has been eaten five thousand times. If they were all to rise, at the sound of a trumpet, what a scrambling there would be for their bodies! thousands of bodies being contained in as many different bodies since. It is the wildest of all fancies—and could never have been accepted, only for our ignorance.

What a grand thing that we can lay off this body when the time comes.

There is the old man, feeble and worn out. His eyes are dim and his ears heavy; sounds can hardly make their way to the indwelling spirit. He wants to sleep a long sleep. Come, oh Death Angel, to the old man. Give him new eyes to see with, new ears to hear with and new legs to walk with. He has a new body now. Does he want that old one any more? You could n't hire him to go back into it. You might as well expect an eagle that is soaring in the sky to come back and get into his old shell. There is a dead man, as you call him—but there is no man there; there is the eye, but no seeing; the ear, but no hearing; let it go back to the earth—let it go back to the bosom of our universal mother, and help to make material for the new men and women that are still to come.

There is a dying man; his eye is dim, his cheek pale, his friends stand weeping round, as they look upon what seems to be the death-agony of the departing. But there is something we do not see—a radiant spirit doing its best to rid itself of the old body. This struggle seems terrible. But there is the radiant spirit, calm as the morning. It looks down and smiles sadly to see them weeping over what is no longer a man, but a corpse. My sister, Anna Denton Cridge, was a clairvoyant. I have heard her describe the spirit departing, as she saw it with her spiritual eyes. She saw every step of the process by which the spirit passes from the body—then putting on the perfect form. . . .

A description of the spirit's departure from the body was given by Myra Carpenter, in a letter to Mr. Joseph Baker. She was treated by mesmerism, and became a good clairvoyant, and a seer of spirits:

She writes: "My mother and I had often talked of death and immortality. She frequently magnetized me when she was in health, and I was in the clairvoyant state, by her assistance, when the spiritual sight was first given me. She had often requested that I would, at the time of her decease, put myself in that state, and carefully notice the departure of the spirit from the body. Her failing health admonished her that her end was near; but she viewed it with calmness, for her thoughts were full of the life to come, and her hopes placed on her Father in Heaven. Death had no terrors for her. When she felt its approach, she sent for me. I came, and remained constantly with her, until she left us for a better home. Her last words were addressed to me. Perceiving that she was dying, I seated myself in the room, and was soon in a state of spiritual clairvoyance. With the opening of the inner sight, the painful scene of a mother's death was changed to a vision of glory. Beautiful angelic spirits present watched over her. Their faces were radiant with bliss, and their glittering robes were like transparent snow. I could feel them as material, and yet they communicated a sensation I can only describe by saying it seemed like compressed air. Some of these heavenly attendants stood at her head, and some at her feet, while others seemed to be hovering over her form. They seemed so pure, so full of love, that it was sweet to look at them, as they watched the change now taking place in my mother.

"I now turned my attention more directly to my mother, and saw the external senses leave her. First, the power of sight departed, and then a veil seemed to drop over the eyes; then the hearing ceased, and next the sense of feeling. The spirit began to leave the limbs, as they died first; and the light that filled each part, in every fibre, drew up toward the chest. As this took place, the veil seemed to drop over the part from whence spiritual life was removed. A ball of light was now gathering just above her head; and this continued to increase until the luminous appearance began to assume the human form; and I could see my mother again! But oh! how changed! She was light and glorious—arrayed in robes of dazzling whiteness; free from disease, pain and death. She seemed to be welcomed by the attending spirits, with the joy of a mother over the birth of a child, and they seemed to carry her away through the air. I attempted to follow them, in the spirit; for I felt strongly attracted, and longed to go with my mother. I saw them ascend, till they seemed to pass through an open space, when a mist came over my sight, and I saw them no more.

"After this I awoke—but not to sorrow, as those who have no hope. This vision, far more beautiful than language can express, remains stamped upon my memory. It is an unfailing comfort to me in my bereavement."

That is a beautiful revelation. If we had read that in a book that had been handed down to us, stamped with the sacred seal of authority and the churches, how the people would have welcomed it! But why should n't we receive it to-day? Is God dead? Are there no revelations to this nineteenth century? You know Thomas wanted to put his fingers into the prints of the nails, and he had the chance. There are ten thousand Thomases in this city. Has n't a man a right to ask for proofs to day? Why should not the Infinite Spirit give his children light in this nineteenth century? Are we to go back two thousand years to learn geography? A man who should try to palm off upon us a map of the world that was made two thousand years ago, and tell us it was a true map, would be hooted at. Why is n't religion just as much subject to law as science? Why have n't we as good a chance to know what is true in religion, to-day, as we ever had? I claim that we have. It is our business Whatever comes, carefully scrutinize it, but do n't throw it away because it differs from what you were taught in your childhood.

Temple Seance at Onset.

On Sunday evening, July 29th, over four hundred people witnessed one of the most interesting séances ever given at this camp-ground.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, after reading, in an impressive manner, the touching poem: "He and She," was controlled by "Ikabod," and made a prayer full of good sense and uplifting sentiment—though couched in quaint language.

Dr. Stansbury then invited those who had come with test slates to walk upon the platform. Some eight people came forward with slates which they had previously cleaned and sealed, tied or secured together with screws—each person sure that his pair of slates was "fraud-proof."

Dr. Stansbury paced back and forth upon the stage, placing his hands upon each pair of slates while they were held by their owners.

Soon he was seen to start—throw up his arms and pass his hands rapidly over his head. Then he pointed to one pair of slates and said: "Open it." This was done by the owner, and a message was found inside.

A little more walking and handling of the slates by Dr. Stansbury, and the others opened their slates, when messages were discovered to be written inside.

Remember, these slates had never been touched by the doctor till he put his hands upon them in presence of the audience.

The message upon the pair of slates held by John W. Free was written in four different crayon colors—although Mr. Free declared that nothing was placed between the slates, not even a bit of slate-pencil.

On one slate was a message in German, on another were several messages addressed to different people in the audience. Some six pairs of slates were written on.

Mrs. J. J. Whitney next (under control) gave a number of spirit messages, which were intensely real, and were listened to with close attention. She gave full names and incidents that enabled the listeners to easily identify the spirits described.

A vote of thanks was passed to these three mediums. It was the universal verdict that the séance was the most remarkable ever given at Onset, as no slate-writing medium especially had ever before exhibited such varied and superabundant power before a public audience in this place.

Mrs. J. Whittemore and Mrs. J. Gobe rendered some choice selections of music—their sweet and cultivated voices adding a refining harmony to the occasion. B.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE.

BY MRS. E. MEHORNAY.

CHAPTER I.

Mrs. Lindsey and her daughter Edith, an amiable, beautiful girl of nineteen years, were sitting in their dingy, comfortless attic in a tenement house in New York City. The clock struck twelve, midnight, yet their sewing, which had to be delivered at the store at nine o'clock the next morning, was not finished. Mrs. Lindsey exclaimed: "I do not think that I can endure this way of living much longer; my health and strength are failing me."

"I think," said Edith, "there surely is something better in this life for us than to sit in this dreary place and stitch, stitch, from daylight until midnight."

Mrs. Lindsey replied that she could see no other way to make a living. "If your dear father had lived," she said, "it would have been very different with us now. But we should not murmur at the decree of Providence. I suppose God sees and does all things for our eternal good."

To this Edith responded: "My dear mother, you have had much more experience in the world than I have, but I cannot believe in a providential fatality. The philosophy of Nature teaches that we are creatures of circumstance, and governed to a great extent by our surroundings. I would think it very unjust in our Infinite Father to create human beings and then bring such fearful calamities on them as we hear of almost every day. It was misfortune, and not a decree of Providence, that destroyed my father's vessel, and himself and his crew with it. We have tried to live right and to do the best we could. Does it seem just that we should live in this gloomy place, deprived of everything that is pleasant in this life, when the earth is filled with an abundance of that which would make us comfortable and happy? Yes, there is a better way for us to live, and we must make an effort to find it, as Providence will blame us for not trying to obtain some of the earth's productions, placed here for the benefit of the human family."

"My daughter, your father was a good man, but I am afraid he is unhappy in the other world, because of his strange, superstitious ideas of God and Nature. He even imagined he could see and hear his friends who were dead. He took Nature as his guide, instead of the divine book, and his doing so was a source of great trouble to me."

"Well, mother, I hope I will be able to convince you that Providence is not so selfish as you think; and I do not believe my father is punished for believing what seemed reasonable to him."

"I think," rejoined Mrs. Lindsey, "you accuse me wrongfully. I believe Providence overrules our destinies, and does all for the best. You are much like your father in your ideas."

"Do you think, "asked the daughter, "that God snatched Grandfather Blakemore suddenly from this life to keep him from making the provision for our maintenance he always said he intended to? Agreeable to your ideas he must have done so. If Providence overruled his death you should be reconciled and not murmur, or you will disprove the truth of your own doctrine."

When the clock struck two their work was ready for the store. When Mrs. Lindsey delivered it the merchant told her he was sorry to say he would have no more work for her for two weeks. She returned home very sad, for she could not afford to lose so much time.

Upon hearing the report of what her mother looked upon as ill luck, Edith said, "I prayed while you was gone that you could not get any work for a few weeks. I have taken a notion to visit Blakemore Mansion, the home of my childhood. My memory is associated with many scenes of my early days there, and I feel that you and I must visit that dear old place again!"

"But how strange you talk," said Mrs. L. "Do you not know it is utterly impossible for us to do so? We have but a few dollars in the house; Blakemore Mansion is several hundred miles from here; we have no interest there, and it is folly for us to think of going thither."

Edith replied that she could easily arrange that. "We can," she said, "borrow money on your wedding ring, and I assure you that sometime we will be able to redeem it. Three times last night I either dreamed or had a vision, that Grandfather Blakemore came to me and told me to go to his home where we had lived. I said, 'Grandfather, I have no money, I can't go.' My father then appeared; bright and luminous rays seemed to pervade the room. He held up a ring, which seemed to be your diamond one, and motioned me to go. Then I seemed to emerge from a cave of darkness to where everything was grand and beautiful; and while surrounded with all that splendor, there came to me poor, sad-looking people, and I was distributing gifts among them. Then I awoke, and these gloomy old walls greeted my sight."

Mrs. Lindsey was distressed about her daughter. She thought she was losing her reason. She prayed for her, but Providence did not answer her prayer. Her daughter was her dearest treasure, and her ring the next. Late that evening Mrs. Lindsey went to a loan office and borrowed money enough on her ring to pay their expenses to Blakemore Mansion and back home; thinking a change of surroundings would help her daughter and dissipate her mental trouble.

Early the second morning after their conversation they took the train for Blakemore Mansion, in the southern part of Virginia, in a rich valley of the Blue Ridge mountains; it had been one of the most beautiful villas in the State. They arrived at the nearest station, one mile from their destination, late in the afternoon. Edith told her mother, as they were walking along the pike, that they must not make themselves known until she indicated a proper time. When they came in sight of the mansion it was quite late. They turned in to a new farmhouse and engaged lodgings for the night. The family consisted of an old man, Captain G., who was a retired sea-captain, a widowed daughter with a grown son and daughter. The grandson preferred a retired life, and hence located in this beautiful valley. The old Captain was quite talkative. Edith asked him who lived at that mansion, near there. He replied that it was not occupied; that it was said to be haunted, and no one would live there. Edith remarked that she would like to visit a haunted house; perhaps she could get a good plot for a story. The Captain replied that he would go there with her in the morning, if she desired to visit the place. She thanked him, and said she would if her mother would go with her. It was agreed that they should visit the haunted house in the morning. Captain G. said if it would interest them he would give them somewhat of the history of the family who had owned the house and lived in it, as it had been told to him. He had been there only two years, and knew nothing save what had been told him by the neighbors. Edith replied that she would be delighted to hear the history of so strange a place and its occupants.

CHAPTER II.

"The former proprietor of that deserted mansion, and large tract of land which surrounds it, was named Sir Robert Blakemore, but better known as Grandfather Blakemore. He was a Scotchman by birth. His parents died when he was young, leaving him a large estate. When his education was completed, he started traveling, and in Richmond, Va., met a lady who filled his idea of woman, and they were married after a short acquaintance. The young bride was not willing to go to Scotland to live. This place was an inheritance of hers; so they settled here, and Sir Robert bought and added more land to his wife's estate, built that beautiful mansion, made improvements, and it became in their time one of the handsomest residences in this country. Sir Robert and Lady Blakemore were famed for their hospitality. Their home was noted throughout the country; many wayfarers have traveled hard to reach Blakemore Mansion before night overtook them, for there they knew they would get shelter and food.

"They had five children, and some grandchildren, all of whom preceded them to the other world, unless it be their youngest child is living, a little two year-old-girl, who was stolen by the gypsies near forty years ago, or drowned, they did not know which. Their grief was distressing. After Lady Blakemore had seen the earthly form of the last of her children laid away, she left her tenement of clay to join them in the better land.

"Grandfather was left alone, but tried to make the best of life. Soon after his wife's death he saw an advertisement in a New York paper of a widow lady with a small child who wanted a situation in the country to keep house for some family. He corresponded with the lady, and she was soon there with her little daughter."

Mrs. Lindsey said, "Oh, yes!" but a look from Edith silenced her.

"When the widow arrived, he was happily surprised to learn that they were the widow and child of the much lamented Captain James Lindsey, who had perished with his own vessel at sea, and whose grandfather he had often met in New York City."

Again Edith had to check her mother.

"Grandfather B. treated Mrs. Lindsey like a child, and was devoted to her little daughter Edith. His neighbors thought that he intended leaving his property to them, but he dropped dead while sitting talking to them."

Edith had to suppress her mother's excitement again.

"That was twelve years ago, and there have been three different parties claiming to be legal heirs to the estate. Two of these came from Scotland, and claimed to be relatives, but could not substantiate their claim. They rented the house and moved into it, but they did not stay long. They said that the place was haunted. They could see an old man walking through the house, and there were many strange noises—furniture would be moved, and there was an upsetting in general.

"About two years ago there came two young men, who claimed to be the sons of the lost daughter the gypsies stole, and I think they will prove their heirship. They have sent after their mother, who is expected here soon; these young men moved into the house, but could not stay there."

Edith remarked, "If grandfather keeps up such a racket what good will the property do them?" Mrs. Lindsey said he was too good a man to haunt any one, but Captain G. was too much interested in his narrative to notice the remark. Closing his narrative, Captain G. said the State would have control of the estate until it was decided who it belonged to; that all the perishable articles had been sold, but the furniture—which was elegant in its time—was still there.

Edith asked the Captain if he ever knew Captain Lindsey. He replied that he did very well; that he retired from the ocean just before Captain Lindsey made his first trip on the vessel he perished with. He said that they were together the same day he started on his first voyage with it, and it seemed Captain L. had a warning that some accident was to befall him. He said his father's spirit appeared to him and told him to leave the water, or he and his vessel would be destroyed, with all of the crew, in a storm. Mrs. Lindsey said he never told her that, but the Captain did not notice her remark.

Mrs. Lindsey commenced weeping; and Edith said to the Captain, whose attention was attracted to it: "Mother is so sympathetic; please excuse her."

The next morning Captain G., with Mrs. Lindsey and Edith, visited the haunted mansion. Arriving there Mrs. Lindsey sat down in one of the vine-clad arbors to give vent to her feelings, while Captain G. and Edith promenaded the long-neglected gravel walks, partly overgrown with grass and weeds, while vines swung their shredded banners from the matted mass of foliage which overshadowed them. To add to the scene of dolefulness that reigned there, of an evening the bass voice of the owl seemed to keep time with the plaintive notes of the lonely whippoorwill and katydids. "A fit place for ghosts!" Edith exclaimed.

CALIFORNIA'S CAMP-MEETING.

BY J. J. MORSE.

(Special to the Banner of Light.)

A certain poet assures us that

If camp-meetings be substituted for empire, the above quotation gains a point descriptive of the progress of our Cause, as it flows from East to West. Five years ago and such a thing as a Spiritualist Camp-Meeting in the State of California was unknown, I am informed. Less than ten days since the fourth annual camp-meeting closed! I do not know by name all the pioneer workers in the matter, but it is a fact of history that, like all new organizations, the "California Spiritualists' State Camp-Meeting Association" has had its vicissitudes and struggles.

The situation of the camp was in a lovely little park-like peninsula, on the easterly shore of Lake Merritt, Oakland, Cal., within easy reach from all parts of that city, and about an hour's distance from San Francisco.

The arrangements regarding talent in every department were the most elaborate and extensive of any made for either previous gathering, the determination of the Board being to secure the best. The grounds were well filled with snowy tents, ranged in four somewhat irregular rows, on either side of the entrance being tents as the headquarters of the Carrier Dove and the Golden Gate, the two Pacific coast spiritual journals.

Numerous mediums occupied tents, and their various signs showed that a wide variety of the phenomena was presented to inquirers.

In the centre stood the large pavilion, whose canvas roof was supported by three stout and towering masts, and whose floor-boarded interior was supplied with seating accommodations for upward of one thousand listeners. An excellently constructed platform was erected at the north side of this tent, at the rear of which, worked in letters constructed of evergreens, was the appropriate motto, "Life is Eternal." A committee of ladies, Mesdames Cowels, Thompson and Clark, liberally—not to say lavishly—supplied the platform with floral decorations during the entire month, without subjecting the Board to one cent of cost in any form. The flowers were unstintedly admired, and the generosity of these ladies unreservedly praised, as was just and proper. At night the tent was brilliantly illuminated by gas, as were the grounds by the powerful aid of the electric light.

In the matter of music a new departure was made by securing the services of the San Francisco Cornet Band, under the leadership of Mr. S. J. Tully, which discoursed sweet music every Sunday. The vocal exercises were under the capable and excellent direction of Mrs. Eugenia Wheeler Clark, a cantatrice too well known to San Francisco Spiritualists to need extended notice here. The invaluable assistance of Mr. J. T. Lillie was available all through the season, and his services met with universal and undiminished favor from first to last.

The oratorical department presented as goodly an array of talent as could well be desired, local and imported. First and foremost was Mrs. R. S. Lillie, a veritable host in herself—always with a sunny smile, ready at every call, full of sympathy and inspiration, manifesting a womanly dignity untinged by arrogance. Alike in set lectures, answering questions, and in impromptu poems, her guides were ever apt, eloquent and instructive. Then came Edgar W. Emerson, whose hand the writer was pleased to clasp again out here—an earnest, modest and gentlemanly servant of the spirits, whose public work and personal merits won for him troops of friends. His "tests"—or "sunbeams" rather—were most wonderful, in some cases deserving of being described as marvelous. Names, dates, minute details of family history, personal and private reminiscences, all flowed forth from his control, affording comfort and food to many a distressed and hungry heart. Edgar W. Emerson will be long remembered in the hearts of hundreds hereabouts.

The other speakers hired for the work were Mr. W. J. Colville and the writer, concerning whom the well-known reputation of the first—and the impropriety of self-description concerning the latter—leave nothing that need be said, except that each was well received. Among the other speakers who addressed the regular lecture meetings were Mrs. Julia Schlesinger, Wm. Emmette Coleman, Dr. W. W. Mackaig and J. J. Owen.

In addition to the regular platform services there were conferences and fact meetings nearly every day. These meetings are admirable institutions, acting as a means of ventilating many and varied ideas. They were well attended, quite attractive, and afforded sincere gratification to the many earnest folks that availed themselves of them.

In addition to the tests given by Mr. Emerson, the managers were fortunate enough to secure the invaluable services of Mrs. Ada Foye, the truly marvelous and justly celebrated "ballot" test medium, who appeared on two occasions, each time being greeted with a packed house. Various communications in French, Spanish, Italian and German were given, to alike the astonishment of believers and the confusion of skeptics.

"With his characteristic generosity of heart, John Slater, who is an immense favorite out here, volunteered his services on three occasions, two of which were for the benefit of the Association, and the third on behalf of the mediums' day. Mr. Slater received an ovation, filled the tent, scattered tests in prodigal profusion, and earned the hearty good-will and gratitude of all.

A marked feature of the season was the weekly social and dance, held each Friday evening of the session. These were well attended and highly enjoyed. Excellent talent assisted, among whom were Mrs. Eugenia Wheeler Clark, Miss Valerie Heckethier, Miss Florence Morse, Miss Oxford, Mrs. Stringham, Mr. J. T. Lillie, Fred Emerson Brooks, Dr. Thos. L. Hill, who, in each case, ably contributed to the success of the entertainment portion of the evening. The dances were under the direction of the sprightly and spirited Wm. Emmette Coleman, who, as floor manager, came out strong, for which all were greatly pleased.

Classes in "Spiritual Science" were held by W. J. Colville, and a developing circle by the writer, these meetings assembling on alternate mornings. They were largely attended, and satisfactory results were arrived at in each case. Each gentleman donated half the proceeds to the funds of the Camp-Meeting Association, the amounts thus donated being within a few cents almost identical.

During the entire season Dr. J. V. Mansfield was upon the grounds, and was consulted by a large number of anxious souls desirous of a glimpse of light from the dear land beyond. He was well pleased with the cordial reception accorded him on all sides.

Taken all-in-all the meeting from a spiritual and intellectual point of view was quite successful. Much seed for future garnering was sown, and there is no doubt that when it becomes grain it will prove of the finest. All concerned worked amicably and harmoniously through the season; party prejudices were subordinated to public good.

The actual close of the season was at Metropolitan Temple, on Thursday evening, July 5th, when upward of eight hundred people assembled to bid adieu to the Eastern visitors. Speeches were made by John Slater, I. C. Steele, J. J. Owen, W. J. Colville, Mrs. J. T. Lillie, Mrs. Ada Foye, Mrs. Mozart and Edgar W. Emerson; songs were sung by Mrs. E. W. Clark, J. T. Lillie, Miss Florence Morse and Mdme. Fries Bishop, and a general jubilation was indulged in, over which the writer had the honor to preside.

The officers of the Association deserve every credit for their assiduity and devotion in carrying out their several responsibilities, and, without doubt, they can now look back with the full consciousness that they did their duty to the full, as indeed some did more. So ends this brief sketch of the late camp, for it lays no pretentious claim to be accepted as a report in full—but is offered for what it is—an outline, unofficial, sketch sent from the West to inform the East how the brethren of the Golden State carried out their camp-work under the sunny skies of California, hard by the Golden Gate, where the blue waves of the Pacific ocean make music all the long year round.

In the Spirit-World.

What Mrs. Fallon Saw in a Trance—A North Side Woman Who Remained in a Comatose State for Two Days—She Relates Her Experience in the Unknown Country.

One of the strangest and most mysterious experiences known in the annals of Chicago medical practitioners was brought to light yesterday, on the North Side. Mrs. Clara Fallon, widow of the late John H. Fallon, residing at 289 Illinois street, after a quiet life of more than forty years, fell into a trance on Monday evening last, from which she could not be aroused until Wednesday morning. She says she felt herself under some strange control on Monday afternoon, but resisted it, and divining what it was, being a devout Christian woman and a member of the Episcopal Church, resorted to prayer. She prayed God, she says, to drive the spirits away from her and free her from their presence and power, but her prayers were not answered. Yielding to this "spirit-power," as she puts it, she disrobed herself and retired to her bed on Monday evening early, probably not later than 8 o'clock. Before consigning herself to this strange power that had taken possession of her faculties, she lighted the gas in her room, and prepared for a forty-eight hours' retirement from the world.

She had been, she says, notified that she was wanted on an important mission in the spirit-world for two days, but she was given but a few hours to prepare for the departure. At 9 o'clock on Monday evening she wrote to her daughters, under spirit-control, the following note:

"MY DEAR DAUGHTERS—Do not disturb me for forty-eight hours. I have gone to be with my husband and dear friends. I will return about Thursday morning."

She was not discovered until Tuesday evening, after she had been in the trance just one day. Mrs. Fallon resides in an elegant flat, where she has three lodgers. She is a very quiet sort of a lady, and is of a rather aristocratic and retiring disposition. Hence her lodgers seldom visited her parlors except for business purposes.

On Monday evening when they went in they found the doors all open, but took no notice of it, thinking that Mrs. Fallon was in her rooms, and was anxious to admit as much of the lake breeze as was possible. They retired to their rooms without making any inquiries, and the transported widow remained in her unconscious condition all Monday night and during the following day before she was disturbed by earthly visitors.

On Tuesday evening, about five o'clock, one of her married daughters, Mrs. B. Meuser, was passing her residence, and observing that the gas was burning at full flame, she hastened in and found her mother lying in bed, speechless and apparently unconscious. She screamed so loudly that she attracted the neighbors, but, even with their assistance, Mrs. Fallon refused to respond to the most anxious entreaties. They could see that she was alive, and, so far as outward appearances went, was resting easily, but they could not induce her to open her eyes or utter a single word.

Mrs. Meuser, leaving her mother in the care of neighbors, sought her husband, who is employed in the business department of one of the daily newspapers of Chicago. With him she ran back as quickly as possible. They took with them Dr. Montgomery, who resides at the corner of Dearborn Avenue and Huron street. He made a hurried examination of the prostrate woman, but was unable to determine at first her ailment, and without delay called in a second physician. The two doctors then made a careful examination of the body, but were seriously puzzled as to the nature of her sickness. Before 10 o'clock another married daughter, who had been sent for, arrived, and she remembering that her mother was well acquainted with Dr. T. A. Clark, of 241 West Congress street, at once sent for him. It was 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning before Dr. Clark reached the bedside of the strangely afflicted woman. When he arrived she was surrounded by her two daughters and two physicians, but all were unable to determine what the difficulty was. Dr. Clark, who has for thirty-seven years been in practice of medicine in Chicago, and who has known Mrs. Fallon since her arrival in Chicago, sixteen years ago, was not long in coming to a conclusion. He found her pulse at sixty-two, her respiration natural, and after turning up her eyelids, said: "Gentlemen, this woman is simply in a spiritual trance. She is not in a dangerous condition. Just let her alone; she will come out all right;" and the doctor walked out, jumped into his carriage and was driven away before he could be further questioned.

Later in the evening Dr. Clark called, accompanied by his wife, who was also a friend of Mrs. Fallon, and found the lady still unconscious. There were present Mrs. Curtis, Mrs. Meuser and Dr. Montgomery. Mrs. Fallon could not be aroused in the slightest degree, except on one occasion, when Dr. Clark succeeded in forcibly arousing her, when she opened her eyes and said she was with her husband and "Charlie," and did not wish to be disturbed. It was a pitiful sight to see the woman lying there, apparently in perfect contentment, while her two daughters sat beside her weeping frantically in the belief that she was dying. The doctors were puzzled. The lady was not a sufferer. Even a child could see that, but she could not be aroused. She was dead to this world.

The Herald reporter called at the house, but as the woman could not be aroused, he withdrew to await developments. He called later, and then Mrs. Dr. T. A. Clark and Jennie Moore, the well-known Chicago medium, were present, and her two daughters and Dr. Montgomery were also at the bedside. This was the morning of the third day. Mrs. Fallon had not tasted either food or drink of any kind since Monday night, and there were grave apprehensions on the part of her friends that she would not revive, while her daughters had given up all hopes of her recovery. Mrs. Dr. Clark then said: "Let 's rub her out of this, whatever it is," and the rubbing was at once commenced. They chafed her hands, arms, her body and her limbs without stint. When she came to her senses she cried because she had been disturbed. She said she would rather live one day with such experiences than a thousand years on earth.

"Are you not hungry?" Mrs. Fallon was asked.

"Hungry? Oh! bless you, I feel as if I do not want to eat again in this world. The fruit over there is so delicious! I could not eat half what I should have eaten. Oh! such fruit! It is beyond description. It is heaven itself. Hungry? Oh, no, I am not hungry."

And yet she had eaten nothing since the Monday evening previous.

When the reporter met Mrs. Fallon some two or three hours after the "resurrection," she looked pale and weak, but was thoroughly composed. She had just been out to the meat market.

"I was not a bit hungry this morning," she said, "when they got me up, but I am now beginning to feel as if I could eat. What do you wish, please?" she asked, while a pleasant but cold smile played over her face.

"Please excuse me. Will you tell me what you saw while you were in the trance?"

"Oh, yes," she said, indifferently, "but it will be unintelligible to you. At first I was taken by my husband. I always loved my husband and he always loved me. Our greeting occupied some time. I was quite content to be with him and to see him without looking at anything else for awhile, but he told me that my time was short and I must see for myself. He told me he would have come sooner, but the spirit-world was a world of progression, and that, although he had been there more than fourteen years, he had only just obtained the power to come for me. He said he could not reveal himself to me as perfectly as he hoped to be able to do in the future. I saw him, and I kissed him, and I knew him just as perfectly as I ever did when he was with me."

Then the little woman stopped and covered her face with her hands and began to cry.

"Who else did you see?"

"The first minister I ever knew. I was born in Ireland and came to America when I was a child. I had forgotten the parish pastor I had known. That was not strange. But he came to me with an open book and placed it before me. I read in it, but I will not tell what I read.

"I'll tell you, though, about the music, and the flowers and the fruit," she added, after a moment's pause. "Now, about the music. It came from all sides. I can't tell how, but it was unlike earthly music. It pealed out sharply, and all I could do was to cry. I could not stand it, and I begged my husband to have it stopped. Then I saw the flowers. But I cannot describe them. The flowers were bright. They looked at me, and seemed to talk to me, and I loved them, but I can't describe them. They were beautiful, but you can't understand it. All this is foolishness to you. But the fruit! They told me to eat of it, and I did. Such glorious fruit! but I can't tell you about it. It was lovely, glorious, and every bite I ate gave happiness and joy and peace."

"Did you receive any important communication?"

"No. Understand me. I do not pretend to be a medium. My husband was a Spiritualist. He came to me because he loved me. Because I loved him. Because we were children together. Because I raised our children and did for them so well, so much better than I could have hoped. He came to teach me the way to him, and I am learning that. I do not wish to go beyond that; I had been opposed to his views of Spiritualism while he lived, and he came to open my eyes, and he has done it. I dare not deny the truth. He is by my side now and he will guide me to the end."

"Did you suffer while you were in the trance?"

"Suffer? I was too happy to suffer. They should not have disturbed me. I would have seen, and heard, and understood much more than I did, had they not come and disturbed me."

"Did you write a letter, before you went into the trance, to your daughters?"

"No; but my husband, who controlled me, told me to write a note, and I did so. I asked not to be disturbed for a certain time."

"Do you expect to go into another trance?"

"Oh, I do not know. I will never again pray not to. It is too good and noble and educating to be avoided. But I was taken out of this one so quickly that I did not have time to make any arrangements for the future."

"Did you see any one you knew besides your husband and the minister you spoke of?"

"Oh, yes, I saw and talked with a large number. One lady whom I knew well here in Chicago was with me a long time. We had a good time. And my father—he was with me and talked to me nearly all the time."

Mrs. Clara Fallon has three daughters, all married and residing in Chicago. They are Mrs. Curtis, Mrs. Campbell and Mrs. Meuser. The husband of the latter has been for years in the newspaper advertising business, and resides at 188 North Clark street. Mr. Curtis, the husband of the second daughter, is the picnic and fair-supply man, and Mr. Campbell has been a bank clerk, but is at present out of employment. Mrs. Fallon was originally Miss Clara Halpin, of Brantford, Ont. While scarcely past sixteen she married John H. Fallon, an architect, who was much her senior. She has resided in Huron, Ont., and Indianapolis, and came to Chicago after the great fire, because her husband thought there was a good opening for architects in the rebuilding of the city. Her husband died three years afterward, and Mrs. Fallon opened a fashionable boarding-house and did a prosperous business. Some five years ago she retired from business and removed to her present location on Illinois street. She was born in Ireland, but came to America quite young, and was reared an Episcopalian. Although her husband was an ardent Spiritualist, and attended their meetings, she did not sympathize in the slightest degree with his belief, and when he died she imagined she had heard the last of it.

She has recovered from the effects of her long sleep and lack of food, and is attending to her daily affairs as though nothing extraordinary had happened to her.—Chicago (Ill.) Herald, July 27th.

ILLIBERAL LIBERALISM.

BY A. E. NEWTON.

"Harvard Reminiscences, by Andrew P. Peabody, D. D. and LL. D., Preacher to the University, and Plummer Professor of Christian Morals, emeritus," is the title of a book recently published in Boston. It purports to give the distinguished and venerable author's recollections of the various college officers with whom he was associated some sixty years ago—among whom was the late Allen Putnam, well known to Spiritualists of this city and throughout the country.

Dr. Peabody has for many years not only held an honored and responsible position in the oldest University in our country, but has been a prominent clergyman and exponent of the Unitarian or "liberal" faith, and regarded as an exemplar as well as professional teacher of Christian morals of the most enlightened and liberalized type. I was therefore not a little surprised, not to say shocked, on turning to his notice of our lately deceased friend Putnam—his former college associate and brother in the ministry—to find him indulging in such language as that quoted below. After briefly mentioning Mr. Putnam's career as a proctor in the Harvard Divinity School, and subsequently as a teacher, clergyman and man of business, he proceeds to say:

"Of late he [Mr. Putnam] has been a hierophant among the (so-called) Spiritualists, a frequent speaker at their meetings, the author of a commentary on the Gospels in accordance with their theories, and, if not the author, the editor, of very numerous letters, purporting to be communications from distinguished men, no longer living in this world, containing self-accusations for their willing blindness, or for conduct opposed to their unwilling convictions, with reference to divers manifestations of necromancy. While I am not disposed to receive these documents as authentic, and yet am unable to solve the curious problem in psychology which they present, I still believe Mr. Putnam to have been an honest man, self-deluded, and free from all conscious wrong in his assaults on the fair fame of the dead and the credulity of the living. Just as I was preparing to write this notice of him I saw the announcement of his death."

Aside from the studied contemptuousness of this language, as exhibited in the use of the words "hierophant," "necromancy," etc., its inaccuracy, inconsistency, and covert insinuation of dishonesty, are characteristics which could hardly have been expected from an eminent "preacher to the University" and "Professor of Christian Morals, emeritus."

The notice is inaccurate in speaking of Mr. Putnam as "author of a commentary on the Gospels, in accordance with their [the Spiritualists'] theories." In the first place, Mr. Putnam published no work with such a title. Probably the work intended to be referred to was that entitled "Bible Marvel-Workers," which, instead of being a "commentary on the Gospels," was an attempt to rationally explain the marvels, or "miracles" so-called, set forth in all parts of the Bible—a minor portion only having to do with the Gospel narratives; and instead of these explanations being in accordance with anybody's "theories," they were based on facts of spirit-intervention which Mr. Putnam had for the most part himself witnessed. This instance of conspicuous inaccuracy is important mainly as showing that probably our distinguished "Professor of Christian Morals, emeritus," had never read Mr. Putnam's able book, and therefore did not know what he was talking about.

But the most unworthy and shameful feature of this "notice" is the artful insinuation of possible fraud or falsehood on Mr. Putnam's part, conveyed in the words "if not the author"—referring to the "Post-Mortem Confessions" of former officers of Harvard College, published by Mr. Putnam in his late years, and with which readers of THE BANNER are familiar. Dr. Peabody here adroitly hints, what he does not venture to affirm, namely, that Mr. Putnam may himself have fabricated these "Confessions"! In view of Mr. Putnam's well-known and admitted character for probity and honesty, a more outrageous "assault on the fair fame of the (so-called) dead" was never concocted. Is this an exemplification of the "Christian morals" taught in Harvard University?

I would fain believe that the offensive insinuation above quoted was a slip of the pen, or a phrase whose full meaning was not duly considered by the writer. It is surely inconsistent with what follows; for if Mr. Putnam could be considered as by any possibility the "author" of those "Post-Mortem Confessions," he could not have been the "honest man" which Dr. Peabody says he believes him to have been. It is inconceivable that Mr. Putnam could have been "self-deluded" into supposing that other persons were the authors of those productions when they were his own! This namby-pamby talk about being "honest" but "self-deluded" is sheer nonsense. An honest man may be deceived by others, but not by himself. If he deceives himself he is not honest, any more than if he deceives others. It is your dishonest men who shut their eyes to unwelcome or unaccepted truth, and refuse to examine its evidences—as do the opponents of Spiritualism in general—who are self-deluded.

Dr. Peabody admits that he is "yet unable to solve the curious problem in psychology which they [those posthumous Confessions] present." For aught he can say, then, Mr. Putnam's view concerning them may be correct. The latter, surely, had the better means of judging. Certainly, it ought to be true that men who have made such grievous mistakes and committed such wrongs as did those Harvard Professors in their earth-lives, should have both the disposition and the opportunity to make some amends when they have arrived where they can clearly see their errors. That they should have attempted to do so, in the manner alleged, and through the aid of Mr. Putnam, is but reasonable, and is creditable to them; and it furnishes a rational (I may say, probably, the only rational) solution of the problem of the production of those remarkable writings. Instead of being, as Dr. Peabody says, an "assault on the fair fame of the dead," those Confessions, if genuine, tend to remove serious blemishes from fame that otherwise would be fair.

What Dr. Peabody means by Mr. Putnam's "assaults on the credulity of the living" is not clear. One would suppose that to assault the credulity of people is to attack or oppose their over-credulousness; and to do this is surely a matter for commendation rather than a "wrong" which needs to be palliated. In fact, such was the real tendency of Mr. Putnam's writings, notably in his treatises on "Bible Marvel-Workers" and "Witchcraft," in which he labored, and with good success, to show that the supposed miracles and marvels of all ages, usually attributed by credulous Christians to immediate Divine or Satanic agency, are rationally explicable by reference to such human psychical and spirit-agencies as have been found to be active in our own day. But Dr. Peabody evidently intended no compliment in his language. Very likely he meant to say "appeals to credulity," instead of "assaults upon" it. But this would have been notoriously untrue, since Mr. Putnam was well known to be a remarkably cool, cautious, logical and level-headed investigator and reasoner, especially free from tendency to either credulity or fanaticism; and free also from that discourtesy and unfairness to opponents which so often characterize even "liberal" assailants of Spiritualism.

That the atmosphere of Harvard University has been intensely hostile toward Spiritualism and its advocates has been apparent ever since the days of Profs. Felton and Eustis. It would seem that even the venerable and genial Preacher to the University, the Emeritus Professor of Christian Morals, who has long been esteemed the very coryphæus, not to say "hierophant" of "Liberalism" in this country, has not been able to rise above the atmosphere of his surroundings, as is shown in the flippant, illiberal and discourteous tone of the above-quoted notice. What, then, can be expected of the thousand and more students which that University is training for the country? Let fair-minded parents think twice before they send their sons to be educated in such an institution.

THE CENTURY.—George Kennan's Siberian papers become intensified in interest as they proceed. This month he describes "Meeting with the Political Exiles." The frontispiece is a portrait of Mr. Kennan in his study, and in the letter press is some account of his life by Miss A. L. Dawes, daughter of Senator Dawes. The author of the "Ivory Black" stories gives the first pages of an ingeniously constructed story, entitled "A Mexican Campaign," and Prof. Holden of the Lick University, an astronomical series that give promise of being thoroughly entertaining in the information to be given and the thoughts suggested of infinite space. The Lincoln History treats of Tennessee and Kentucky, and of President Lincoln's relation to early military movements in the West. "A Home of the Silent Brotherhood" is an illustrated description of the Abbey of La Trappe in Kentucky, the disciples of which order have taken a vow of life-long silence, their tongues, except when confessing sins and singing church offices, being superfluous. John Burroughs contributes "The Heart of the Southern Catskills." "The Pulpit of To-Day," is discussed by Lyman Abbott. "The Experiments of Miss Sally Cash" are related by Col. Johnston. As a midsummer number this will fully meet the expectations of all who in their days of leisure look for recreation in reading as in all else. New York: The Century Co. Boston: For sale by Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY introduces an entertaining table of contents with: "The Mistress of Sydenham Plantation," a tale of South Carolina, by Sarah Orne Jewett; "H. W. P. and L. D." treat in "A Bishop of the Fifth Century," of the beginnings of Papal Rome; E. H. House brings to a conclusion—to the regret of all who have followed it—his sterling Japanese creation, "Yone Santo"; "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove" (Craddock) still holds its interest; Horace E. Scudder writes thoughtfully on "Literature in the Public Schools"; President Eliot of Harvard considers technically the query: "Can School Programmes be Shortened and Enriched?" Helen Gray Cone and Lucy C. Bull furnish the poetry, "Ivo of Chartres" and "Sonnet," and other matter of value, not here mentioned, will be found in addition to the regular departments. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, Boston, Mass.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.—Her Majesty the Queen of Roumania is the author of the first article, "Decebal's Daughter," translated by permission by Mrs. E. B. Mawer, of Bucharest. In "Some Irish Industries," the "Poplin Weavers of Dublin" and the "Knitters of the Rosses," are described by Dorothea Roberts. In "Children's Dress in this Century," by Constance Wilde, very good advice is given, and in the illustrations strong contrasts are shown between the costumes of children fifty years ago and now, much to the credit of present styles as to both æsthetic taste and hygienic demand. In view that "most people are in such deadly earnest now-a-days," M. R. Lacey gives "A Plea for the Indifferent." M. C. Wentworth contributes an illustrated sketch of "The Home Arts and Industries Association," and Mary C. Tabor one on "The Working Ladies' Guild," both very beneficial institutions. New York: Cassell & Co.

WIDE AWAKE.—The bright and attractive story of "Plucky Smalls" is continued, and a picture given of the event of "a mighty proud and happy day that came for Plucky." The frontispiece is a Canadian winter scene, "The Crisis," in illustration of a story of peril and heroism, "Saved on the Brink," by Macdonald Oxley. There is a delightful amount of light and amusing reading in this number, of which are "The Rewards of Industry," a witty Chinese story, and "A Neck-tie Party." A beautiful parable, "The Temple of Music," is contributed by May Kendall, its lesson being that he who loses his life in the path of duty shall find it in a tenfold increase of happiness. Mr. Hale's continuation of the early days of Boston Common is illustrated with an engraving of Bacon's picture of a large delegation of Boston boys calling on Gen. Gage for him to countermand the order of the British soldiers that forbade them coasting on the Common. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN.—A wide field of observation is included in "Glimpses of Religious Conditions," a state of deep-seated revolution, or one bordering upon it, being plainly indicated, fanaticism and misleading being the chief factors. Portugal is shown to take the lead among nations in many things which it is inevitable that others must adopt soon or late, in an article upon Progress in that country, by Bertram Sparhawk, late Consul at Zanzibar. An interesting review of "Inspiration in Art, as Shown in the Past," is given by A. G. Marshals. The editor having submitted to the test of psychometry the presidential candidates gives the result in this number. Other matters of interest are treated upon, and minor articles compacted in a department of Miscellany. Boston: 6 James street.

JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN AKADEME.—"The Resurrection of Jesus Christ," is the subject of a paper by C. Staniland Wake, of England, which, with a conversation following its reading at the meeting of the Akadémé June 19th, and articles upon the same topic by Miss Lizzie Jones and Mr. Alexander Wilder, form the main contents of this issue. A "postscript" by the editor intimates that this number, the closing one of the fourth volume, terminates, for a time at least, its publication. Orange, N. J.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—Dr. Helen Densmore commences "The History of Mind Cure; An Analysis from a Physiological Standpoint," with a sketch of her own experience, which gives promise to be of much interest. The articles that follow, original and selected, impart much information of value to all. New York: 266 Broadway.

THE STURDY OAK contains with much profitable reading an essay on "Labor, Business and Fortune," by Edgar E. Barker. Attleboro, Mass.

THE THEOSOPHIST.—[July.] Mr. Olcott gives in the opening article, "Precipitated Pictures in New York," his view of Mrs. Diss Debar's mediumship. An account is given of the celebration in Ceylon of Buddha's birthday—the Full Moon day of May. Of the remaining contents are "Heredity and Karma," "The Vedas, a Divine Revelation," "The Revival of Hinduism," and the opening chapter of "The Creed of Christendom." Madras, India, Boston: For sale by Colby & Rich.

Life-Experiences of Dr. Taylor.

Dr. Charles E. Taylor, F. R. G. S., member of the Colonial Council of the Danish Antilles, was born in London in 1843, of an excellent and well-known family.

At an early age he entered the pensionnat Beaulieu at Guimes, near Calais. Being under the direction of competent teachers he progressed rapidly, became acquainted with the greater part of modern languages, and acquired the elements of a complete and liberal education. He distinguished himself by his remarkable intelligence, and obtained the first prize. Much to his sorrow he quitted school to return to Great Britain, where he learned his parents had destined him for the bar. Through reverses of fortune, however, he was obliged to discontinue his studies, whereupon his father sent him to Canada, to enter a commercial establishment. Taylor being talented, particularly in music, found it most difficult to become interested in commerce, particularly as his desires were to travel, and so acquaint himself with and study the world.

Finally he quitted Quebec; traversing Canada, visiting Niagara and passing through the United States, he found himself in Mexico. Arriving in New Orleans he remained until a short period before the outbreak of the civil war. From New Orleans he decided to visit Havana. Remaining in Cuba he passed two years, adding to his store of languages the Spanish.

After five adventurous years Dr. Taylor arrived in St. Croix, where he became married and settled in business. After having remained on the island three or four years he crossed to the neighboring island, St. Thomas, where he definitely settled and became the owner of a library. Soon after his arrival he published the St. Thomas Almanac and Commercial Advertiser, the first publication of its kind in the Danish Antilles.

Without special technical instruction he designed, and even engraved on wood, illustrations of books which appeared later on. The Almanac mentioned above contained an interesting description of the island of St. Thomas, together with an ethnographic study upon the Caraïbes, and elicited much favorable comment in the English and American press.

Being well instructed and persevering he devoted his time to the study of medicine. The "old school" was the chosen one on the island—homeopathy not having the right to be practiced. Taylor declared himself a partisan of the latter school. He believed homeopathic treatment to be more economical, as well as more successful and better adapted to the sensitive constitution of the Creole, and therefore courageously undertook, at his own peril, to write articles in favor of his convictions, obtained by study; also recognizing the success of massage and the application of electricity. He devoted much time to the fathoming of hypnotic phenomena, for which he predicted a future.

Having found that hygienic medicine was of more use than the abuse of drugs, he resolved to practice the Hahnemann system. At the same time he published a series of studies upon therapeutic electricity in the Medical Tribune of New York, of which Dr. Robert A. Gunn was director. The originality of ideas gained for Dr. Taylor numerous congratulatory letters. Unhappily the jealousy of the local physicians, to whom the use of homeopathy, massage, hypnotic phenomena and application of electricity was strange, was roused, and Dr. Taylor was accused of illegal use of medicines. The tribunal fined him most severely, and in lieu of payment he preferred two weeks' imprisonment. However, the people of St. Thomas relieved him of this, paying the fine as he was about to enter prison. A few days later the people of St. Thomas presented him, together with a felicitous address, a sum of money wherewith to complete his medical studies in the United States, and in this way enabled him to obtain legal permission as practitioner.

A petition was sent the King of Denmark in the hope of gaining permission for Dr. Taylor to practice in the Danish Antilles.

In 1885 Dr. Taylor visited Europe, his object being to meet learned members of the Anti-Compulsory Vaccination League, of which he was a member. He was present at the Fourth National Congress of the League, upon which occasion he made important written and verbal statements relative to the medical and sanitary condition of the Antilles.

In Paris he ascertained the actual condition of medical science, and prepared himself for another examination. Owing to family affairs, he was called to London, where the Geographical Society invited him to join as honorary member.

Before his departure for St. Thomas his biography and portrait appeared in the "Medical Advocate." His scientific fame having spread rapidly throughout the United States and Antilles, the majority of scientific, literary and artistic societies had conferred marked distinctions and honorable titles upon him.

Having arrived in England he put himself in communication with the eminent William Tebb, the recognized chief of the anti-vaccination movement in Great Britain. He applied himself closely to medical studies, and before the Faculty of London passed a second brilliant examination.

Upon his return to St. Thomas he was received with great enthusiasm. His professional persecutions recommenced at the instigation of his Danish colleagues—not against homeopathy, but against his life. Dr. Taylor having gained his title twice, they were at a loss to know how to attack him. Being English by birth he was attacked on that ground. However, they received from the King permission to prevent him from practicing, which right had been accorded him some years previous by the formal request made by the people of St. Thomas. It was exacted that the doctor should undergo an examination before the faculty at Copenhagen. Almost at the same time he was elected, by an immense majority, member of the Colonial Council of St. Thomas. Rightfully he claims St. Thomas to be a cosmopolitan island, being inhabited by French, German, Spanish and English, so if desiring a physician of one of these nations, the people had the right to do so. Dr. Taylor most vigorously responded with his pen to the attacks against anti-vaccination, followed by an address given at a meeting of the Colonial Council, in which he was indefatigable and resolute.

The last work of the doctor, upon which he devoted two years, is entitled, "History of the Danish Antilles."

Being young, enjoying perfect health, thanks to his sober and temperate habits, and surrounded by a charming family, Dr. Taylor promises to live sufficiently long to see the triumph of the sane and rational ideas in whose defense he has thus far devoted his life.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT; or, The Conflict Between Man and Alcohol. By Henry William Blair, United States Senator from New Hampshire. 8vo, calf, pp. 583. Boston: William E. Smythe Co.

The period of the discovery of vinous fermentation antedates all history, but the twelfth century brought to us the art of distillation, whereby the potency of alcoholic drinks was greatly increased; and a few centuries later the process was appropriated by all civilized nations. Thenceforth, says the author of this work, intoxicating beverages assumed an importance and asserted a destructive power in the affairs of mankind, that have grown with the progress of civilization and spread with enlightenment, until now they fill the world, and no problem of superior consequence or difficulty confronts those who desire the welfare of mankind, than how to dislodge them from their well-nigh impregnable position. No one will fail to admit that the human race has in all its past been cursed by alcoholic intemperance, or that its whole future is threatened with increasing calamity, unless efficient measures are adopted to put a stop to its ravages. The object of this book, says its author, is to arrest public attention by showing the nature of alcohol as a poison to the human system; its destructive effects upon the body and malignant influence upon society; and to discuss remedies, spiritual and physical, prominent among which is the enactment and enforcement of laws that shall have for their object the extirpation of the monster evil.

Alcohol is defined from scientific analysis, and shown to be a product of putrefaction; never of any life-generating or life supporting process. "Neither plants nor animals in any of the mysterious processes of appropriation or assimilation from the soil or the air extract or use it. It has no part in the economy of life, save only as it is forced there by the art or the unnatural appetite of man." An inquiry is made into the action of alcohol upon the physical organism and upon the moral and intellectual nature of man, in which is given an account of the experiments of Lallemand, Perrin and Duroy, and those of Parkes and Wallowicz on a healthy man, showing how his heart was affected by alcohol. Startling disclosures are given in a report of the studies and experiments of several physicians regarding the effects of alcoholic liquors even upon those who are termed "light drinkers." The results of Dr. Richardson's researches, commenced in 1864, are said to be "the most careful, profound, advanced and important ever made." A number of colored illustrations, showing internal organs in a healthy and an alcoholic diseased state, are given with what of his reports are presented, and his verdict, as follows: "If this agent does really for the moment cheer the weary and impart a flush of transient pleasure to the unwearied who crave for mirth, its influence, doubtful even in these moderate degrees, is an infinitesimal advantage by the side of an infinity of evil for which there is no compensation and no human cure."

To the close of the thirteenth chapter Senator Blair treats upon alcohol as the creator of disease and shortener of human life; the views of eminent physicians regarding its use as medicine; its identity with pauperism and crime; its bearing upon the labor question and its destructive effects on the wealth of individuals and of nations. In a consideration of "The Remedies," it is claimed that chief among them are total abstinence and prohibition. Of the latter it is said that the Emperor of China, 2207 years B. C., forbade the manufacture and drinking of intoxicating liquor, under the severest penalties, and renounced its use himself. Similar prohibition was maintained in Sweden at two different periods, in Massachusetts in 1637, and in Virginia in 1676. The right to fight the rum traffic by legislation is argued at some length, and the objection against prohibition reviewed and replied to. The manufacture and sale of liquors in the light of an "inalienable right," is ably discussed. "Is there an unlimited right," it is asked, "to create facilities for destruction? Has any man personal liberty to poison the air? Has he any more right to manufacture any poison, whether in one form or another, which, like the corrupted air and like the plagues of Pandora's box, once out will go everywhere and destroy every green thing? . . . Is there, or should there be, personal liberty, in this or any other country, to make or to sell powder and dynamite, arsenic, strychnine, aconite and prussic acid, for any but uses which are beneficial to society? Can you sell them or give them away, without responsibility, which is regulated by law?"

Following a strong argument in favor of prohibition, of which the above sentence is a part, Mr. Blair asks whether any of the articles he has mentioned are intrinsically more dangerous to individuals or to society than alcohol, the nature, power and inevitable effects of the use of which he eloquently portrays as follows:

"It enters at the lips and is at once in the brain, burning, raging, destroying. By some horrible alchemy, some inscrutable, mysterious and awful demonism of affinity, it interpenetrates and possesses the whole threefold nature of man. What there is in him which yields at once to the dictates of this spiritual and physical poison, we cannot tell; but alcohol can conquer every human organism. It mounts to the brain. It captures the citadel of thought. Reason hath no power over it. It delights while it destroys. It becomes a second nature. It creates a desire for continuous use which is as imperious, and often as unconquerable, as the appetite for food. The man becomes possessed. The brain, the stomach, the blood, the tissues, everything craves, with unutterable, unappeasing longings, more poison, more delirium, more death. Once fully formed, this appetite becomes permanent. It descends with the blood and murders in the third and fourth generation. The hereditary taint is developed and reënforced in the child by continued use, deepening as it descends; and thus the evil, which might be eliminated by abstinence, is continually growing wider and deadlier from generation to generation, so long as the supply comes to the increasingly voracious demand. What alcohol inflicts others may tell—of madness, idiocy, starvation, crime, death—but we have the character of the agency in this summary of qualities. . . . Is it right that personal liberty be exercised to create an agency like this, for the express purpose of being sold or given away? If so, there is 'personal liberty' to commit every crime, and murder is a legitimate occupation."

In the nine chapters that follow the above, the principles underlying the license idea, and the relative merits of license and prohibition, are discussed, the conclusion being reached and maintained that national prohibition will alone supply a permanent remedy for the evil. Lengthy consideration, including statistical information and historical facts, is given to woman suffrage and temperance reform, the forces engaged in the temperance movement, prominent among which is rated the Catholic Church, which, the writer believes, will, with its followers, eventually demand prohibition. The volume closes with a strong appeal for unanimity of action, to the end that in 1890 a prohibitory amendment to the Constitution be submitted to a vote of the people, the adoption of which shall make America the temperance leader and redeemer of nations.

The book, which is the most thorough and complete presentation of the subject contributed to the cause it advocates, will prove a valuable work of reference for those who desire facts and arguments that will meet every point of discussion. It is illustrated with a map of New York City, showing the location of all drinking places from the Battery to Central Park; diagrams showing the comparative length of life of employés of the brewing trade with other crafts; the longevity of Sons of Temperance with members of non-abstaining organizations; the relative cost of drink and of the necessities of life in the United States, and the expenditures for drink compared with the amount paid for wages; a number of colored plates of various stages from health to incurable disease of the internal organs, and fifty-six finely executed full-page portraits.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From Leominster, Mass., July 25th, Jacob Davis, aged 72 years.

Mr. Davis, with his companion who survives him, had accepted and practically illustrated the inherent principles of Spiritualism from its very earliest inception. They have been residents of Leominster many years, and have in a cordial, unpretentious manner, welcomed and ministered to all friends of the cause so dear to them, never "forgetful to entertain strangers." Unmindful alike of praise or blame, they have lived harmoniously, and consistently expressed the truths so dear to them, and which cheered their united lives in many an hour of sorrow. Through great suffering our brother dropped his mantle, which sufferings were tenderly ministered to by his faithful wife, devoted son and sympathizing friends. In feeble health the mother, guarded by her son, patiently waits until her life-work shall end. The funeral service, brief and appropriate, was held in the Unitarian Church parlor, the Rev. Edward M. Payne officiating, assisted by the writer.

JULIETTE YEAW.

The deceased was a firm believer in a life beyond the grave, but accepted no Orthodox creed. His health had been gradually failing for several years, and to those who knew and loved him best there comes a sigh of relief that his bodily sufferings are over. While they mourn his absence in the mortal form, they have the happy consciousness of his nearness to them in spirit.

No one is better qualified to place on record reliable information regarding the early history of Modern Spiritualism and of its early advocates and defenders, than the author of this volume. There has been scarcely a worker for the cause he has not known: scarce a city or town in the Union he has not visited; and no place he has visited whose people have not enjoyed greater mental freedom and a better understanding of this life and assurance of a future one from his having been with them.

BY E. A. BRACKETT.
This work is in two Parts; the first containing carefully-prepared narratives of the author's interesting observations and experiences in the investigation of the phenomena of Materialization; the second, opinions and theories concerning the same. The investigation appears to have been pursued in a truly scientific spirit, by one possessing more than ordinary qualifications for the purpose, and with unusual facilities—the results being correspondingly positive and overwhelmingly conclusive regarding the reality of the phenomena in question. Aside from its positive testimony, the work affords many valuable suggestions to investigators as to the proper manner of proceeding in order to attain the best results. The following is the table of

Lecture by "Phœnix."

We shall give our readers next week the pleasure of perusing the full text of a trance discourse—setting forth some

"APPROPRIATE ANSWERS TO SUPERFICIAL QUESTIONS"

—which was recently delivered in Chicago, Ill., by "Phœnix," one of the guides of

MRS. CORA L. V. RICHMOND.

Not Destroyed, though Invisible.

The chemists tell us that although matter is often lost to sight in consequence of chemical operations, it has become an axiom of science that it can never be actually lost or destroyed, but merely passes into other forms or conditions of existence. Its possible changes are many and various, and in numerous instances it disappears altogether from our recognition; yet it either appears, or can be made to appear, again as plainly to our sense as before. The Popular Science News illustrates it in this way: if a piece of silver be put into nitric acid, which is a clear and colorless liquid, it is rapidly dissolved and becomes invisible. Mix the solution with water, and apparently no effect is produced. Thus fifty dollars' worth of silver may be dissolved in a pail of water, and not a particle of it be seen. The chemist himself could not tell that it was there, unless he applied certain tests to detect its presence. And other metals can be treated in the same way with the same result.

When charcoal and other substances are burned, they disappear just as completely, not even any ashes remaining visible from the combustion. And so, in fact, every material that is visible can, by certain treatment, be rendered invisible. Matter which in one state or condition is perfectly opaque, and will not permit a ray of light to pass through it, will in another form become perfectly transparent. It is in vain to try to discover an adequate explanation of the cause of this. If philosophers and scientists assert that it is due to some alterations in the position or arrangement of atoms or molecules, the reply is that atoms and molecules, however confident we are of their existence and the laws which govern their mutual attractions and repulsions, are absolutely beyond the reach of our senses. We may see the substances they form, and conjecture the changes they undergo, but we all the same cannot see them, and can only guess what they really are. We only know that matter is indestructible, or at least we have no evidence that it can be destroyed.

What are dissolved in water or burned in the air are not annihilated or lost. By certain well-known means they can be recovered and restored to sight, some in exactly the same state they were in before becoming invisible, others in some other state or condition in which they are just as surely recognized. On the brightest and sunniest day millions of tons of black charcoal in an invisible condition are floating in the air, and millions of plants are at the same time restoring it to visible form by the chemical processes going on in the tiny laboratory of every leaf that expands in the sunshine. In the course of time, the leaf, or the wood it elaborates by its subtle alchemy, may be burned. And this cycle of chemical transmutation may proceed without end, the matter becoming alternately visible and invisible again and again.

To what purpose do we cite this familiar but too little thought of chemical illustration? Not for the interest contained in it for us all merely, but as a demonstration of the great fact in the universe that the process of change in all created things is an unbroken one, and that annihilation by no means occurs because the visible changes to the invisible. Hence the spiritual, which is at once the essence of all existence and the power that controls and guides the whole of creation, and which is far more elusive to the sense than any atoms or molecules can possibly be, exists above and outside of the conditions which are its visible limitation, and can no more suffer annihilation than the universe of matter can be destroyed. To reason from created matter to the causative spirit on this line should be overwhelmingly satisfactory to all intelligent minds that are open to the reception of truth. If the atoms and molecules which enter into the constitution of matter cannot to our searching knowledge be destroyed, much more is it an impossibility to annihilate the force to which matter is acknowledged to be subservient. Merely because it dissolves its visible yet inexplicable connection with matter, as in the human form which for a time is its tenement, is no reason whatever for concluding that it has perished or is perishable.

Thus we are abundantly able to infer from the proofs supplied by common things and the every-day life around us that the doctrine of annihilation for the spirit is utterly untenable, and that the change or transmutation which we call death no more destroys the essential life than atoms and molecules are destroyed when they merely clothe themselves in other forms to appear and reappear as long as an inspiring, ever-living Creator shapes their transmutations according to the laws of the universe. In the plain view of this illustration of immortality which the material world itself furnishes, how superficial and hasty it is to conclude that when the body of man dies and decays, the animating spirit, endowed with a consciousness far above the conceivable reach of atom and molecule, dies and decays also; that because it disappears it is therefore destroyed; that annihilation can overtake conscious existence, while the unconscious atom or molecule cannot be destroyed; and that immortality was given to matter, as the scientists so confidently affirm, but was denied to spirit which alone is capable of the increasing enjoyment of so priceless a gift. As mere reasoning it is preposterous, illogical, and contradictory. If there were any comfort derivable from such a cheerless doctrine, colder than many of the cruel dogmas of ecclesiasticism; if it served to nourish and strengthen the divinely bestowed qualities of the human soul; if it deepened the impression of a common fatherhood or broadened that of a common brotherhood; and if it enlarged and elevated the conceptions even of the life that now is, without regard to that which is to come; it might have a standing-place in the soul of humanity which now revolts at its harsh assumptions and instinctively refuses to be satisfied with its blind and dumb encouragement and consolation.

An Actual Spiritualist.

The Cincinnati Enquirer had a long article in its Sunday issue, some months ago, descriptive of a well-known citizen whom it rightly styled "a representative Spiritualist," but without giving his name, which we gratefully take the present opportunity to supply. It is Joseph Kinsey, a successful business man of that enterprising city, who of late has succumbed to the sudden attacks of disease, and to whom go forth in silent utterances the sympathies of a widely extended circle of friends to whom his benevolent deeds have been a true blessing. Mr. Kinsey, as stated, is a sincere and consistent Spiritualist, and aims to prove his belief by his works. He does good for its own sake and from the love of doing it. The poor and destitute, the sick and suffering, he makes his friends from preference. The Enquirer recites a number of his characteristic deeds of benevolence, done only that human happiness may be extended through his willing agency.

Wherever he finds an opportunity offering to help on the cause to which he is devoted, he never fails to improve it to the extent of his ability. Learning that a certain sum was yet needed to assist us in bringing out the last book written by Mr. Putnam, he promptly supplied it from his own resources, and thus placed in our friend's hands the complete right to the enjoyment of the profits from its publication, which proved a timely help to the author in his declining days. This is but one among many illustrations of the truly spiritual temper of his life and character. On meeting this or that person in the streets whose visible depression betrays his true condition, his habit is to give him a cordial grasp of the hand as the pretext for leaving a generous bank-note within it.

As The Enquirer says, he ministers to the spiritual wants of his friends after providing a foundation by caring for those physical necessities which are imminent and for the time all-absorbing. To secure the highest results from mediumship, he has regularly assisted sick and destitute mediums in Boston as well as in the State of his residence. Now that he is an invalid himself, he is sure of the living sympathy of a host to whom in days gone by he has been a most generous benefactor. He practices in strict accordance with his belief, that is, so as to forward the work which the invisible world is doing for humanity. No better preaching of one's faith can be produced than this. He not only helps the needy in the time of their need, but he forgives his debtors by assisting to start them again in business, when most men, who would only revile Spiritualism, would seek to punish them for their misfortune.

Thus does this good man and truly representative Spiritualist exemplify his belief by his works, not on one day only in the seven, but on all days of the week alike. His life is inspired by love, which he rightly regards as the greatest power in the universe. He makes every day illustrate afresh his love for humanity. Each day, we are assured, he receives communications direct from the angels that guard and guide him, and is secretly conscious of the loving support of those with whom he is at all times ready to coöperate. Such a man could not regard himself as afflicted when stricken with disease, for his priceless compensation is the deepened sympathy and love of every one, far and near, whom he has so freely blessed.

Photographs.

We are in receipt of a cabinet photograph of the bronze statue of JOSIAH BARTLETT, the first signer of the North American Declaration of Independence, from our personal friend, Mr. J. R. Huntington, of Amesbury, for which we tender our sincere thanks. Also we have on our desk a cabinet photograph of Mr. Jonathan M. Roberts, late of Burlington, N. J., presented by W. L. Jack, M. D. It is an excellent likeness of Mr. Roberts.

☞ A circular from Cincinnati states that the initial anniversary celebration and four days' convention of the First New Spiritual Church of that city will be held at Murch's Hall, 278 West 6th street, from Sept. 1st to Sept. 4th, 1888, inclusive.

Doubtful Doctors.

A reporter of the Boston Globe has been investigating of late the "regular" "diploma" doctors of this city, and the conclusion he has arrived at thus far is not a very encouraging one, to say the least. He gave them to understand he was anything but a healthy man (a myth), and then he goes on to show that each one prescribed an entirely different medicine for his alleged disease. Of course several of the doctors applied to subsequently endeavored to explain the "why" of the "wherefore"; but what they said did not invalidate the reporter's position in regard to "doubtful doctors."

And now we find a column communication in last Sunday's Globe, from a "regular" M. D., who says he got his education in Europe, which is to the effect that "he is astonished at the blindness and bigotry of the old school, which permits the grandest treasure of the curative art to lie unrecognized before them." He further says, "I feel assured that the physicians, with two exceptions, did the best they could (the best their kind could do), but the kind is an awful bad one," and he adds, with a good deal of common sense:

"They ought to be pitied more than blamed; they did not know any better. They had too much bigotry, too much onesidedness. Had these doctors done the same as I did, investigated other schools or systems, picked up what grains of truth were to be found and formed them all into one perfect whole, rejecting that which seems unreasonable and clinging to any and everything which cures, and thus forming an individual system, so to speak, I am certain that their treatment would be very much alike, at least to a certain degree, for I most emphatically believe that the schools of medicine have little or nothing to do with the making of physicians. It all depends on the amount of real solid common sense that the man has naturally got in him. The more common sense and less school-bigotry a man has the better physician. I make two exceptions to the above, because I noticed two 'blind' prescriptions among the list. For the benefit of readers not acquainted with that term, I will explain that a 'blind' prescription is such an one as a doctor writes to a certain druggist, using certain private terms, words or signs not understood by anybody else, so the patient will be obliged to go to that druggist to have it put up. Such business is not professional, honorable or gentlemanly, and any doctor who is not a gentleman is a fraud, never mind from what school he graduated; there is no other way out of that."

Put Him Down by Law!

Mr. John Beard, of Kentucky, described as "a rough-looking working man, thirty-five years of age, who has spent all his life in farming, uneducated, simple and retiring," recently discovered that he possessed a wonderful power to heal by laying on of hands. It is reported that a number of responsible persons have seen his operations and testify to his wonderful powers. A Bowling Green, Ky., correspondent of a Boston paper says: "He operates by tapping the affected parts gently with the back of his fingers, or slightly rubbing with his hands. He seems heavily surcharged with electricity, so much so that a mere touch shocks the patient and causes a burning pain in the affected parts, but as the soreness of the affection goes away, the pain ceases, and his touch no longer shocks." The writer mentions several cures equaling in their remarkable character those that in past ages have been termed miraculous, men and women, who have been helpless for years, being restored to health and activity. Now the "diploma" Allopaths will undoubtedly endeavor to put down this "uneducated" healer who goes up and down the country curing in such an "irregular" fashion suffering people whom the Regulars cannot restore to health.

To be Avoided.

We are reliably informed that a young man, who claims that his name is "James Copeland," has been for a month or more hocussing the people of Providence, R. I., in a manner not at all creditable to himself or the cause he assumes to represent. While evidence exists that he possesses in some degree mediumistic gifts, his inclination to "supplement" them when deemed necessary lessens all value in this respect. All sincere Spiritualists and every lover of truth should give him and his ilk a wide berth.

Another individual, "Henry Cummings"—or so calling himself—is now in Massachusetts, we are informed, claiming to hold séances, and referring to the BANNER OF LIGHT as his endorser, etc. Now we have never met with said Cummings personally, neither have we had any dealings with him whatever to our knowledge. If, after the issuance of this disclaimer on our part, he still continues to refer to us as his endorser, we desire that such action may be recognized by the public as proof positive of intended deception.

W. S. Rowley, Occult Telegrapher,

Whom we stated in THE BANNER of July 14th would soon visit Boston and Onset Bay, arrived in town with his wife last week. We had a very pleasant interview with him. At a private sitting we were fully convinced of the genuineness of his medial powers. He went to Onset on Saturday last. It is understood that he will give a public demonstration of his power at the Temple on Thursday evening, August 9th.

☞ Some thoughtful author has recorded that "The pleasantest things in the world are pleasant thoughts, and the great art in life is to have as many of them as possible." Yes, indeed! But how few there are, even among respectable people who pride themselves upon their probity, that keep "pleasant things" in mind. Spiritualists have come into a knowledge that our lives on earth are continued throughout eternity, and as they live here so will be their compensation hereafter; knowing this, why are any of them setting "pleasant thoughts" in abeyance, and quarreling with each other as some of them are from day to day, from year to year? This class of "hypercriticals" is becoming almost as bad as are the theologians of the present day. Why do they not heed the warning: "He who taketh the sword shall perish by the sword"?

☞ We see that some one has been writing to the Boston Journal that Col. Wm. D. Crockett, President of the Onset Bay Association, has declined to any longer preside at the meetings there, and that he refused the office of President another year—in all which there is not a word of truth. As Col. Crockett's business keeps him in Boston during the week, he called upon Mr. E. B. Fairchild to preside in his absence. Those papers which were swift to print the Journal's false statement, are requested to contrast it with the facts before them.

☞ It is announced that a Universal Spiritual Congress is to take place in Barcelona, Spain, Sept. 8th.

Alleged "Witchcraft" Case.

We made brief mention last week of the singular belief of William Roberts, a farmer in Wisconsin, in whose house physical manifestations of spirit-presence had taken place, that an elderly German woman living opposite was the cause of them, and concluding that for that reason she must be a "witch," he loaded his gun and with the Scriptural command as his warrant, was about to start out and kill her, when he was arrested and brought to trial. A full account of the trial has since been received, from which we learn more particulars.

Being called to the witness stand, Mr. Roberts said that the "queer things" began to occur last Christmas. He first noticed spots having the appearance of blood on his bed, and though the sheets were frequently changed, the spots as frequently appeared. One time a pool of "blood" was found underneath him when he arose after having lain down at noon waiting for dinner. He took off his clothing, but found no blood-marks or cause for there being any. Writings in blue ink mysteriously appeared on the walls. Many times his wife had placed food and dishes on the table and stepped to the door to call the rest to dinner, and upon returning found the table nearly stripped of its contents. What so suddenly vanished would afterward be found in out-of-the-way places, under the wagon-house, in the corn-crib, in some cases not found at all. Mrs. Roberts and the children testified to occurrences of similar nature, the former that no one beside herself was in the house when the dishes disappeared, and the latter that they had seen dishes come from the cupboard and settle gently upon the floor; clothing thrown from the beds, coats and dresses pulled from the walls and hurled across the room with no person near them. The daughter Anna did not believe that the German, Mrs. Albright, was a "witch" or in witchcraft. Anna's ring was one time taken from her finger. Later in the day they took a pail, picked berries, and in sorting them at night found the ring at the bottom of the pail.

The parish priest is of the opinion that supernatural agencies are at work, and proposes to consult the Bishop and obtain the interposition of the church! The lawyers are nonplussed; the judge who held the trial is equally so, and has adjourned the case three weeks. The case is not an unfamiliar one to those who are informed of the history of spiritual manifestations, and were a proper course of investigation taken it would, in all probability, be found that Mrs. Albright, the German woman, is wholly innocent of any agency in the matter, and that the means by which spirits are doing these things exist in Mr. Roberts's own household, and that all is for some wise purpose of which neither he nor they have at present the remotest conception.

Impressions of Onset.

In the Boston Globe's account of Onset Bay and the tests publicly given by one of the many speakers in that popular camp, in the presence of an audience numbering twenty-five hundred persons, the writer remarks that he was particularly struck with the speaker in uttering the first sentence of his discourse—"I am a spirit," and that before the exercises were over he was quite ready to take Addison's words literally, that "all the regions of nature swarm with spirits, and that we have multitudes of spectators when we think ourselves most alone." And speaking of the assemblage about him, over which he ran his eyes in unaffected surprise, he indulges in the following confession:

"So magnificent-looking an assembly one seldom sees. Intelligence and good breeding were marked and stamped on every face; and if any were there who did not believe as the Spiritualists do—Materialists or any others—they certainly had the good manners not to belie it. There were old men leaning on the stick which invariably supports old age, whose looks indicated that neither hopes nor joys had yet ceased. Women were there whose serene and beautiful looks would have been called by Richter a 'beautiful bloom.' There were youths and maidens there who are guests at the hotels and cottages in this charming place, which was described so admirably by an irreverent guest at the Glen Cove to-day, that risking the censure of some pious person I must repeat: it Some one asked him how he liked Onset. He replied, 'God has done a good deal for Onset.' Certainly the Creator lavished his choicest gifts down upon this little nook, where earth and sea combine to make it attractive to man. The cottages and hotels are nestled in among the trees—all oaks—which extend as far as the eye can see."

New Edition of "The Voices."

That sterling poetical volume, "THE VOICES," from the pen of Warren Sumner Barlow, Esq., has ever since its first appearance maintained a firm hold on the public favor. As witness of this fact, Colby & Rich have just brought out the twelfth edition of the work!

So much has already been said in favor of this book, that it is unnecessary to add aught to the words of appreciation which have been called out in the past: Those who wish to satisfy themselves of the justice of these encomiums are reminded that "The Voices" may be obtained at the BANNER OF LIGHT Bookstore, also at the news-stands of the Onset and Lake Pleasant camp-grounds.

☞ We are informed that after being re-engaged for next winter in Chicago (her thirteenth year there), Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and Mr. Richmond left the "Garden City" in time to be at Lookout Mountain July 1st, where they remained three weeks amid the picturesque and grand scenery there to be found, and were charmed both with the people and the surroundings. Mrs. Richmond feels sure that this camp will be successful. Herself and husband are now enjoying the Cassadaga (N.Y.) Camp-Meeting very much.

☞ We have given ourselves, and raised from generous friends, several sums of money for the medium, Mrs. Dimond. She needs more. So many calls of late have been made upon us for assistance by needy Spiritualists that some of them have to take the will for the deed, as there is a limit to everything.

☞ A recent private letter from Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, Manchester, Eng., informs us that she is still actively engaged in the platform work of the spiritual dispensation, in that country, and that the health of her husband is considerably improved, both of which items of intelligence are pleasant to us.

☞ Our good Dr. Storer seems to be an omnipresent camp-meeting Spiritualist—almost! He is an eloquent and cogent speaker, and it is no wonder he is wanted to lecture everywhere by the friends of the Cause.

☞ By reference to a paragraph elsewhere, it will be seen that the Cleveland (O.) friends have arranged for a visit to Cassadaga Lake Camp-Meeting, N. Y.

THE HOLLIS STREET THEATRE, Boston, will open for the season Saturday evening, Aug. 18th. A grand production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be the attraction, Mr. Clay M. Greene's version being given for the first time on any stage. Milt Barlow, Frank Mordaunt, Frank Losee, Harry Webber, Mark Price and Alice Harrison are in the cast. This will be a marked event in the history of theatricals in this city.

☞ It is expected the Spiritualists of London will observe their "Annual Outing" in Epping Forest next Sunday.

SERVED HIM RIGHT.—Ottawa, Ont., dispatches for July 31st state that Rev. Dr. Horne, who had been holding revival meetings at the town of Fallowfield, so worked upon the sensibilities of his congregation that over twenty of those who attended his meetings were made ill from nervous prostration, while it is said that three of them may spend the remainder of their days in a lunatic asylum. He was ordered to leave the town!

W. I. Bishop, the alleged mind-reader, arrived in San Francisco, August 4th, from the Sandwich Islands, said to be greatly improved in health. His stock in trade is simply "cheek."

The custom inspectors of New York have caught on to a smuggling parson by the name of J. V. Dundos, of Minnesota, who said he had no dutiable goods; but he had, as an inspection showed. His smuggling consisted of a crape India shawl, a quantity of new cutlery, a lot of prayer books, an assortment of ladies' fine underwear, a lot of linen towels and fine white handkerchiefs, an aneroid barometer, a silk umbrella, a large quantity of men's underwear, a sealskin cap, a Japanese cabinet, boxes of toys and bottles of perfumery. He denied having any more dutiable goods; but his trunk had a false bottom, and in it were discovered 5,000 cigars. Now we wonder what Rev. Mr. Talmage will say in regard to his erring brother, we wonder?

The Globe man said in last Sunday's issue—and he is evidently on hand when young ladies go in bathing—that "it is the unusual that attracts people, and it is certainly unusual to see a party of young ladies bathing together, and all good swimmers. Perhaps this is no uncommon sight in the resorts of the ultra-fashionable world, but in Onset it is. The bevy of maidens in question here, took their dip in front of the Glen Cove House the other day. They were led by Miss Butler, the youngest daughter of W. S. Butler of Boston. Miss Butler resembles her mother very much in general appearance (the Spiritualists all know 'Maggie'), and she sports a well fitting bathing dress, and floats and swims very gracefully."

There are many women in these modern days who live by their wits. They are simply adventuresses. Lippincott's Magazine shows up this class of characters to perfection.

William Jacket, of Islington, Eng., who was gathered in in 1787, made a sensible will, even if it was in rhyme:

"I give and bequeath,
When I'm laid underneath,
To my two loving sisters, most dear,
The whole of my store,
Were it twice as much more,
Which God's goodness has granted me here.
"And that none may prevent
This, my will and intent,
Or occasion the least of vain racket,
With a solemn appeal
I confirm, sign and seal
This, the true act and deed of Will Jacket."

The largest shop in Paris, Au Bon Marché, is kept by a woman, Madame Boucicault, who is as generous as she is wealthy. She has bestowed $1,000,000 on her employés as a pension fund for the sick and superannuated, besides library and reading-room funds, and she gives them all shares in the profits of her business. In her native town she has built a $200,000 bridge across the Saone, and she has distributed more than $1,500,000 to relieve the sufferers from the phylloxera plague.

An Albany physician says Americans suffer more generally from Bright's disease and nervous complaints than any other people, because they sit down so persistently at their work. While Englishmen, Germans, Frenchmen walk and exercise, an American business man will go to his office, take his seat in his chair and sit there all day without giving any relief to the tension of the muscles of the back. The result is that these muscles surrounding the kidneys become soft and flabby. They lose their vitality. The kidneys themselves soon become weak and debilitated. If business men would walk more, and stand instead of sitting at their desks, their health would be much improved.

All intellectual power is held back, when we endeavor to conform ourselves to the methods of other people.

Some people never get accustomed to the bustle, whirl and tremendous throbbing pulse of the healthy city of New York. Aunt Billings, of Durham, N. H., was over here the other day with her little niece, and conclusively proved the truth of this assertion. She took a Belt Line car at the Battery, rode around the city four times, and just as the sun was setting remarked to the conductor: "'Pears to me this town 'll never stop growin'. If we don't git ter Macy's soon they 'll be shet up."—Time.

A most brutal prize fight occurred in New York, August 2d, which, after the brutes had pummeled each other almost to a jelly, was declared, after "forty-nine rounds," to be a "draw." THE GREAT SERPENT MOUND.—Says a Hillsboro', O., letter: "Some unexpected developments have been made at the Great Serpent Mound in Adams County, fifteen miles southeast of this city. Such works have not been supposed to be burial places, but the men employed in excavating and examining a small mound near the Great Serpent have already unearthed ten skeletons in a good state of preservation. These have been boxed, and forwarded to Peabody Institute. At the base of what is supposed to have been a stone cairn, and but about a foot beneath the surface, was found the skeleton of a female and child, the former being almost perfect, except the feet, which it is thought have been plowed up, as the ground has been under cultivation for several years. The skeleton of the child was all gone except the skull.

The Spiritualist Camp-Meetings.

Onset Bay.

[MISS QUARTER F. HOWE is our authorized agent at Onset Bay. She will receive subscriptions for the BANNER OF LIGHT. She also has a full line of our publications for sale at Association Headquarters, and will conduct the correspondence for THE BANNER from this Camp-Meeting.]

There was a large and interested audience at the conference meeting, Monday afternoon, July 30th. Mediums' meeting of the Tuesday morning following was well attended. In the afternoon, Sarah A. Brynes delivered a deep and logical discourse to a large audience, taking for her subject, "Spiritualism, A Religion of Woman. Where would the church be without her?" At its close, Edgar W. Emerson gave tests many and convincing. He left immediately after the meeting for Sunapee, taking with him the good wishes of all.

Wednesday evening an entertainment was given in the Temple for the benefit of the Onset Lyceum, under the direction and management of Carrie E. S. Twing. A large number of people were present, and the affair was a success financially. The opening remarks by Mr. Fairchild were apropos. The exercises that followed were: Instrumental music by Mrs. Whittemore. Song, "Out on the Deep," Mr. Hopkins. Recitation, Lulu Morse. Violin solo, Ralph Rosseau. Dance, "Fisher's Hornpipe," Jennie Bigelow. Song, "Waiting," Mrs. Whittemore. Reading, "Nora Murphy's Visit to a Medium," Harold I. Smith. Song, Mrs. Gove. Remarks in behalf of the Lyceum and poem, Mrs. M. E. Thompson. Declamation from Shakspeare (Cassius and Brutus), Mr. Frank L. Union and Mr. Edward Bullock. Song, "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," Mrs. Whittemore. Reading, "There is No Death," Harold I. Smith; Recitation, "Extract from A Bad Boy's Diary," Lulu Morse. Poem, "The Children," Carrie E. S. Twing. The entertainment closed with remarks from Mr. D. N. Ford, the Lyceum director, thanking the audience for their kind attention and patronage.

Meetings in Grove and Temple were held Thursday and Friday. The phases of the phenomena were many and varied. There was an exhibition of a spirit-drawing in crayon by Louis F. Jones, which was recognized as being the sister of Mrs. J. T. Lewis of Brooklyn, N. Y. Phrenological examinations by the control of Mrs. George Conklin of Worcester, Mass., who was said to be an English professor of Phrenology in earth-life; spirit-rappings, loud and distinct, by the controls of Mrs. Parker of Providence, R. I.; physical manifestations in the light by Horatio G. Eddy; remarks by "Ikabod," the favorite control of Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing; remarks on and exhibitions in mesmerism by Prof. Cadwell and his subjects. Thursday evening a large audience was attracted to the Temple by the announcement that Mrs. J. J. Whitney and Dr. D. J. Stansbury would give tests and slate-writings. Mrs. Whitney after relating her first wonderful experience as a medium, submitted to the control of her guide, and for upward of an hour, in an unconscious state, presented test after test, giving full names and incidents to entire strangers that were wonderfully convincing and fully recognized. Mrs. Whitney is indeed a grand instrument. Dr. Stansbury then came forward, and after making some remarks upon the necessary conditions for obtaining the best results, invited all who had brought slates to come forward and take seats upon the platform. Eight or ten persons responded, most of whom had sealed slates. A committee had previously witnessed the tying and sealing of a pair of slates, and hung them upon a screen in plain view of the audience, and when opened they were found to contain between forty and fifty autographic signatures of spirits, which have all been recognized. Dr. Stansbury, while under partial control, held each pair of slates a few seconds with the owners never once leaving the platform. Nearly all distinctly heard the writing, and upon breaking the seals six pairs were discovered to have something in them. Those held by Dr. Gould contained a long message, fully identified. Those held by Gen. F. J. Lippitt had upon them a crayon sketch of an Indian chief, in colors, a few bits of crayon having been placed between the slates before sealing. Another pair owned by Dr. Paxson had a face upon one of them. The other pairs contained only marks. This is considered the most wonderful exhibition of independent slate-writing ever given at Onset.

Friday evening's exhibition commenced by music on the bells, which were skillfully and dexterously handled by the Williams Bell Ringers, followed by the audience singing "Sweet By-and-Bye," while the platform was being prepared for Dr. Rogers's exhibition of spirit painting. The Doctor stated that he was not in the habit of exercising his gift before a public audience, but out of courtesy to Mr. Whitlock, and to convince those who otherwise would probably not have the opportunity of witnessing the phenomenon, he consented to do so. Those who had prepared slates were then invited to bring them to the platform, when seven or eight stepped forward and were given seats, the Doctor passing in front of each and placing his hands lightly on the slates as each one held his own, tied and sealed by himself. He told one gentleman that the slates he was holding were not for him, and turning to the audience, after a moment's hesitation he pointed out a gentleman and said: "These slates are for you, sir." The gentleman addressed stepped to the platform, taking the slates, while the owner retired. After sitting a few minutes, the Doctor asked each in turn to stand up and place the slates on the table, not, however, letting go of them; afterward each held them against his own breast, the Doctor at the same time holding his hands on each slate in turn. In about five minutes, the audience quiet and almost breathless, he pronounced the work finished, when the slates were opened. Four of them were found to contain pictures, and some a message in writing also. Mr. McElroy (chief engineer of the gas works at Pittsburgh, Pa.) first stepped forward, he being the gentleman who was called to take the slate from the owner, and holding up a very beautiful picture of a lady, explained that he was a member of the "Sun Angel Order of Light," and this was his spirit-guide, who had promised to surprise him before he left the grounds. Mr. McElroy was so pleased and overcome with emotion that he could say but little. The next who was favored with a picture was Captain Atkins of Provincetown, who explained that this—as he held it up to the audience—was the picture of his angel wife, who passed from the body a little more than a year ago. The next was Mrs. Carrie Grimes Forster, who had asked her husband to give her a picture of his spirit-home. Mrs. Forster had already—a few days previous, at a ten minutes' sitting—obtained a very good picture of her husband.

Mr. Whitmore, of New York City, then stepped forward and exhibited his picture, which he said was that of a lady who passed out about six months ago from New York City, and whose earthly body was cremated. She had said when she had come to him previously that she wished to be known as "Forget-me-not," and on the bosom of the picture was painted a beautiful bunch of forget me-nots.

Mrs. Rogers sat beside her husband on the platform. No one, it seems to the writer, can witness manifestations of such a nature as were exhibited Friday evening, without being convinced of the power of spirit over matter, and the continuation of life after what is called death.

A song, finely rendered by Miss Cushing of Boston, was next in order, followed by a recitation from little Lulu Morse, a child remarkable in grace and gesture. The floor was then cleared for dancing. A great number joined in the grand promenade, displaying many handsome toilets. In point of deportment, intelligence and wealth, this gathering could be said to compare favorably with that of any other watering-place.

Saturday forenoon, Aug. 4th, showers drove the people to the Pavilion to hold their meeting. The afternoon lecture was given in the grove by Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Boston, her subject, "The Aims of Life," followed by tests from Joseph D. Stiles. Mr. Stiles arrived at Onset in the morning, and was welcomed to the platform with enthusiastic applause.

Dr. DeWolf and wife, of Englewood, a suburb of Chicago, are here for a short time.

Mrs. Eaton, of New York City, is a guest of Dr. Larchar, at Plymouth Park.

Mr. A. S. Hayward, magnetic physician, of Boston, has made some very remarkable cures since his arrival on the grounds. He seems to be possessed of wonderful endurance and vitality; always cheerful and seemingly nearly everywhere at once.

Dr. Richardson returned Tuesday from the Harwich Camp-Meeting, which closed the 29th. He reports a pleasant, harmonious, and enjoyable season.

A beautiful, independent spirit-picture was received through the mediumship of Dr. Henry Rogers, of California, by Mrs. Carrie Grimes Forster, of her late husband, Thomas Gales Forster, at a ten minutes' sitting, on the 31st ult. All who knew Mr. Forster in earth-life pronounce it a good likeness. It was in oil, and the paint moist when received by Mrs. F. [Additional particulars are given in this issue regarding this matter, by an occasional correspondent.] Dr. Rogers is meeting with marked success at Onset as an artist for spirit-paintings.

Mr. J. Q. A. Whittemore, of Boston, has purchased the two desirable lots running from South Boulevard to West Central Avenue, Nos. 26 and 23. Mr. Whittemore intends building a nice cottage.

It is said a day's wages of a skilled mechanic in Astoria, Oregon, will buy a barrel of flour. Would it not be well for some of our people, who find it hard to obtain a daily loaf, to take the late Horace Greeley's advice and "go West."

Judge Charles H. Wood and wife, of Chicago, are stopping at Wickett's Island Home; also Mr. A. Mitchell, of Chicago.

Tuesday evening Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant gave an exhibition of her mediumship in the Pavilion.

Mr. Robert T. Jackson, of Harvard University, is now at Dr. Larchar's place, Plymouth Park, investigating the growth and development of the oyster. Dr. Larchar has now probably one of the most convenient and best adapted places for the study of the bivalve in this country, having a salt water pond enclosed, with a substantial dam to hold a proper amount of water.

Thursday, Aug. 2d, a Fair was held at the Washburn House; proceeds to be devoted to the improvement of Longwood Park. Many were in attendance. The "Donkey Party" in the evening was an amusing feature.

☞ The Omaha Bee relates that the wife of Joseph Browning, an engineer on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railroad, awakened her mother, Mrs. P. H. Roche, about 11 o'clock at night by crying out in terror, "Joe! oh, Joe!" at the same time springing out of bed. Mrs. Roche at once arose and said, "Lula, what is the matter?" to which the young wife replied, "Oh, mamma, something terrible is going to happen. Just now Joe came and stood by the bedside and his face was so pale and sad, and I know he is dead." Mrs. Roche tried to soothe her, but to no purpose. A moment after she again exclaimed, "There, there he is now in the doorway." At 1:20 the next morning the following telegram was brought to the house:

"MOBERLY, MO., July 14th.—Phillip Roche, Omaha: Joe died at 11 o'clock. Come on first train and bring Lula."

Mr. Browning's death was caused by falling from his engine. Though at first he did not suppose himself seriously injured, and took his place on the engine the next day, he was obliged to lay by, and died on the night of the second day.

GERALD MASSEY, so he informs us, purposes visiting America on a lecturing tour the coming autumn. He announces the following as the subjects for a course of six new addresses which he will deliver: "Zoötypology as a Primitive Mode of Representation"; "Mythology as a Primitive Mode of Representation"; "Totemism as a Primitive Mode of Representation"; "Fetishism as a Primitive Mode of Representation"; "Sign-Language: From Gestures to the Alphabet"; "Thought Without Words, in reply to Prof. Max Müller."

☞ Our thanks are returned to Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Rockland, Me., for the gift of a cane brought by him from the Chickamauga (Tenn.) battle ground. It is made from the branch of a tree, and contains a minié rifle ball embedded in the handle.

Wonderful Spirit Phenomena.

I will give you a few items of interest, which are vouched for by some of the oldest and most prominent Spiritualists at Onset. I have not had any personal experience with the mediums in question, hence only give the news that is going the rounds of the camp-meeting, from reliable sources, as being truth.

The first case is that of Mrs. Thomas Gales Forster. She has a painting in oil colors which is said to represent her late lamented husband, but to me it is far from being recognizable as a true likeness of Mr. Forster, except in the formation of the head; this is said to have been taken through the mediumship of Dr. Rogers in fifteen minutes, between two slates; but the likeness itself is a fine piece of work, let it be designed for Mr. Forster or some other spirit, and is a mysterious production, to say the least.

Mrs. Forster further desired to have a picture representing the spirit-home of her husband, and it came from the same source and medium, between two slates, the same as the other two had come. It is a fine piece of work, and it does not seem possible that such a grand sketch could be produced in ten minutes at the simple request of Mrs. Forster.

Capt. Atkins of Provincetown, Mass., at the public séance at the Temple last Friday evening, received a satisfactory likeness of his spirit-wife. It came to him between two slates, and he is confident that he recognizes her as she was when they were married some thirty years ago. Her sister Rebecca also recognizes it as a good likeness of her as she was at the time mentioned, and not as she was when she passed to spirit-life over a year ago. She wrote out the following words:

"My Dear Husband—I have made an effort to give you my picture. I have done my best under the circumstances. Tell Rebecca I will give her something else; give her my love. And now, as the power is weak, I will close with love. Your loving wife, JANE F. ATKINS."

Capt. Atkins is so delighted with the likeness and the words, that money would not purchase them. He is a man who is not easily deceived, and above reproach.

What can be done with these things unless we accept them as being what they purport to be?

Mr. L. L. Whitlock had a likeness in colors given upon the slate, in the manner described, while the slates were held by General Lippitt, of Washington, D. C. This picture was asked for on the ground of wishing something for public use, and doubtless it will be given by General Lippitt in The Soul. The likeness is of an Indian in full paint and feathers, as far as the face and head are concerned, and under the likeness are the following words: "The soul shall live forever," signed Grey Eagle. The likeness is a very prominent one, taken in ten or fifteen minutes; the crumbs of colored pencils placed in the sealed slates were all used up in making it.

Mr. Simeon Snow is highly pleased with an oil painting of his daughter, who passed to spirit-life when but four years of age, but is painted when much older in appearance. The pictures were delivered by Dr. Rogers while the paint was yet moist. In the case of "Grey Eagle," Mr. Whitlock and several clairvoyants, who claim they have seen him, declare it is much like him in appearance. I do not know what will come next; but if these pictures and writings emanate from the source designated, as claimed, we may expect greater things in the near future.

Movements of Mediums & Lecturers.

[Notices under this heading must reach this office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.]

Miss Knox will not attend the camp-meetings this season, but will be in her office, 31 East Springfield street, Boston, daily, to treat the sick and give communications from spirit friends.

E. B. Fairchild—the present presiding officer at the Onset Bay Auditorium—is a man of intelligence and education. He is desirous of entering the field of labor as a lecturer on Spiritualism, and will respond to calls addressed to him at Stoneham, Mass.

Dr. T. A. Bland, General Agent of the N. I. D. A., spoke on the Indian question at Cassadaga Lake Camp, N. Y., on Monday, Aug. 6th, at 2:30 P. M.; he will discuss the same important subject at Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass., on Aug. 13th—same hour.

On Sunday, August 5th, J. Frank Baxter lectured, on a fourth annual engagement, before the convention of Spiritualists and friends in Eastern Ohio, at Mantua Station. He left there the first of the week for Cassadaga Camp, N. Y., and as we go to press is filling his appointments in the latter place, and will give his concluding lecture there on Sunday, August 12th. On Sunday, August 19th, he will lecture and delineate spirits at Niantic Camp, Conn., and from there will go with his family to Lake Pleasant Camp.

Frank T. Ripley has just closed a successful engagement at Montreal. He can be engaged for the month of September for lectures and platform tests. Address him at 156 West Brookline street, Boston, after Aug. 16th.

George A. Fuller, M. D., of Dover, Mass., has just filled a most successful lecture engagement at Lookout Mountain Camp Meeting. He has been elected Secretary and Manager for the next year; also Secretary of the Southern Association. He has been engaged by the Chattanooga, Tennessee, Spiritualists as their regular speaker, and will commence his work in that city the first Sunday in January, 1889. He will lecture at Sunapee Lake Camp-Meeting August 7th to 9th; at Temple Heights, Maine, from the 12th to 19th inclusive; at Verona Park, Maine, from the 20th to the 26th; and at Queen City Park, Vt., Sept. 11th to 16th. Dr. Fuller has Sept. 2d and 9th, also Dec. 2d, 16th, 23d and 30th unengaged. There will be only two Sundays for which he can accept engagements East for one year. [We understand that Mr. Fuller is to remove his paper from Dover, Mass., to the South.]

Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, inspirational trance speaker, arrived at Lake Pleasant Camp Friday, Aug. 3d. Mrs. C. is now ready to answer calls to lecture and give psychometric readings with spiritual tests, for fall and winter. Societies desiring her services can address her at Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass., until further notice.

Dr. E. B. Russell, late of Minneapolis, is now making engagements for the fall and winter. Desires to correspond with societies (especially in Massachusetts) for lecture engagements. Address, Ashland, N. H., box 85.

G. W. Kates declined reëlection as Secretary of the Lookout Mountain Camp-Meeting, desiring to give his whole time to lecturing, with his wife, who is also a successful test medium. They were billed to conduct a grove meeting at Hicksville, O., Aug. 11th and 12th, thence to Clinton, Ia., Camp for the balance of the month. They will spend September and October in the West. Address them at Greenville, Darke County, Ohio.

While most of the mediums of this city are at the Camp-Meetings, Mr. J. R. Cooke, 474 Shawmut Avenue, holds a circle every Sunday, at 11 A. M., and at 8 P. M. gives psychometric readings and tests.

Meetings are held at the Ladies' Aid Parlors, this city, on Sundays at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M.

Mrs. Mary F. Lovering is located during the month of August at No. 404 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, Cal., where she can be addressed.

Dr. J. K. Bailey spoke in the month of June at St. Louis, Mo., Wheeling, West Virginia, Irwin, Pa.; in July, at Stroudsburg, Pa., New Haven and Niantic, Ct., Attleboro and North Attleboro, Mass. He desires engagements for the fall and winter for Sunday and week evening lectures. Address him P. O. Box 123, Scranton, Pa.

Mr. Baxter in Plymouth County.

J. Frank Baxter's long-anticipated and last visit, for this season, to Plymouth County, was made on Sunday, July 29th, and notwithstanding many had gone to Onset, large audiences crowded the capacious Town Hall at Hanson.

In the forenoon, Mr. Baxter read a capital poem, "The Unbeliever," and delivered a lecture on "The Spiritual Platform: Its Catholicity and Necessity." Everybody was elated and generous in praise freely expressed during the noon intermission.

In the afternoon, the lecture was on "Materialization." Mr. Baxter admitted the facts on which materialization is founded, and showed the process as claimed by spirits to be natural and demonstrable, and the same exemplified by historical facts, including particularly the biblical records, and the experiences of individuals. Notwithstanding this admission, Mr. Baxter took occasion to severely criticise the position of some as to the phenomena of materialization and mediums for their production. Although an hour was spent in delineation, and some thirty-five spirit names were given, he could not, through disturbed conditions, become passive, nor get en rapport with the spirits fully to be truly receptive. The result was he could not, and did not, enter into that characteristic detail of description and action which generally marks Mr. Baxter's work, but with labor he described his sensations, impressions, etc., and voiced a few messages. It was far short of failure, however, for it was a wonder to many that, under the circumstances, the success was so decided. OLD COLONY.

ANCIENT Pagan and Modern CHRISTIAN SYMBOLISM.

BY THOMAS INMAN, M. D.,

Author of "Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names," etc.

Revised and enlarged, with an Essay on Baal Worship, on "The Assyrian Sacred Grove," and other allied symbols. By JOHN NEWTON, M. R. C. S. E., etc.

This book contains in a nutshell the essence of Dr. Inman's other publications, and for the reader of limited means is just what he requires. The subject of Symbolism is as deep as human thought and as broad in its scope as humanity itself. The erudite thinker finds it not only worthy of his best energies, but capable of taxing them to the utmost. Many pens have been employed upon it, and it has never grown old. Dr. Inman's views are somewhat peculiar: he has concentrated his attention to the ideas which he believes to underlie the symbolism of the most ancient periods, and can be traced through the autonomy of the Christian Church. He finds the relation which exists, and the antiquarian likewise, between Asshur and Jehovah, the Baal of Syria and the God whom Christians worship; and the mysteries of the Sacred Grove, of which the Old Testament says so much, are unfolded and made sensible to the common intellect. Scholars will welcome this volume, and the religious reader will peruse its pages with the profoundest interest. The symbols which characterize worship constitute a study which will never lose its interest so long as learning and art have admirers.

Third edition, with two hundred illustrations. One vol. 8vo, cloth, $1,50; former price, $3.00.

ANCIENT ART AND MYTHOLOGY.

The Symbolical Language of Ancient Art and Mythology.

AN INQUIRY.

BY RICHARD PAYNE KNIGHT,

Author of "Worship of Priapus."

A new edition, with Introduction, Notes translated into English, and a new and complete Index. By ALEXANDER WILDER, M. D.

"Not only do these explanations afford a key to the religion and mythology of the ancients, but they also impart a more thorough understanding of the canons and principles of art. It is well known that the latter were closely allied to the other; so that the symbolism of which the religious emblems and furniture consisted likewise constituted the essentials of architectural style and decoration, textile embellishments, as well as the arts of sculpture, painting and engraving. Mr. Knight has treated the subject with rare erudition and ingenuity, and with such success that the labors of those who come after him rather add to the results of his investigations than replace them in important particulars. The labors of Champollion, Bunsen, Layard, Rououl, the Rawlinsons and others, comprise his deductions so remarkably as to dissipate whatever of his assertions that appeared fanciful. Not only are the writings of Greek and Roman authors now more easy to comprehend, but additional light has been afforded to a correct understanding of the canon of the Holy Scripture."—Extract from Editor's Preface.

ANCIENT FAITHS AND MODERN.

A Dissertation upon Worships, Legends, and Divinities in Central and Western Asia, Europe and Elsewhere, before the Christian Era. Showing their Relations to Religious Customs as they now exist.

BY THOMAS INMAN, M. D.,

Author of "Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names," etc., etc.

This work is most aptly expressed by the title, and the author, who is one of our most learned and accomplished modern writers, has done ample justice to his subject. He prefers boldly to utilize the results, rather than to speculate whether he should find a ghost, skeleton, or living being; and he tells us very plainly and explicitly what he has witnessed. Several years since he gave to the learned world his treatise on Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names, in which were disclosed the ideas underlying the old-world religions, and the nature of hieroglyphical symbols employed in the East. The present volume complements that work, elaborates more perfectly the ideas there set forth, and traces their relations to the faiths, worship, and religious dogmas of modern time.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF EXISTENCE.

THE REALITY AND ROMANCE OF HISTORIES. IN FOUR BOOKS:

I. History of Deities, or Theism and Mythism. II. History of Heaven, or the Celestial Regions. III. History of Demons, or Demonism. IV. History of Hades, or the Infernal Regions.

INCLUDING A HISTORY OF ANGELS AND PURGATORY.

BY E. O. KELLEY, M. D.

The work, as a whole, is particularly adapted to the general reader, not only because of the special interest that the subject has, but from the variety of its characters and incidents, its visions and revelations, its narratives and its marvels. The sentimental charm of the most admired poets, the highly-wrought romance of the novelist, find at least their counterpart here. The objects embraced have inspired the greatest of ancient poets—Homer and Virgil; and Milton and Dante have not been less devoted to the themes of the histories.

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held June 5th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[By an earnest inquirer.] Do the spirits always have their eyes shut when they materialize? and how and where can they dress? Was it their style of dressing when on earth or when dressed for burial?

ANS.—All these matters may vary with different mediums, or at different séances. We are presuming, now, that your questioner intends us to consider those materializing séances where genuine, reliable manifestations of spirit presence and power occur, where there is no sign or thought of trickery of any kind, but perfect honesty existing in the minds of the medium and all concerned; therefore, we may take such a medium and consider the work of her spiritual guides and attendants. It is possible that such a medium possesses a large surplus of magnetic aura, yet physical force, which is useful to the purpose of her spirit-guides; they collect this magnetic aura, and combining it with certain emanations from those sitters who approach her, attempt to build up a temporary form for the use of some returning spirit. Well, grant that this is accomplished, and then the drapery is formed which enfolds the figure about to appear. This drapery may be formed from the same magnetic aura of which the body is composed; it may not at all resemble the clothing that the spirit about to manifest wore when on earth, nor have any likeness to the garments in which the physical form was interred. Usually the clothing, the drapery which these spirit-operators produce, is formed or woven from those magnetic particles of which we speak; it appears lace-like and gauzy, white and shining. If rudely handled (and now we speak of genuine productions of spirit power), or at any length, this drapery would dissolve and disappear, even as a mass of snowflakes would melt away in your grasp. It is very often the case at a materializing circle, where all the manifestations are perfectly honest and reliable, that the drapery which is produced or woven by the attending spirits at the opening of the séance, is made use of for every form which presents itself; that is, new drapery is not produced for each manifestation of spirit-presence. And again, let it be said that there is only a certain amount of nerve-force and magnetic physical emanations from the medium or from the sitters that can possibly be used by the attendant guides. To extract more of this aura from those present would be only to injure their health, possibly their lives; consequently those spirits who are operating upon their subject, producing this work, must be careful not to exhaust their medium or those who are present. Collecting this especial quantity of material, the spiritual workers make use of it, as far as possible, in building up their form and clothing it in such drapery as they require, presenting it to their spectators as a manifestation of spirit-power. The same material may be used a number of times by those attendant spirits, and sent forth under special manipulation, again and again, to claim resemblance to some spirit-friend of a person present, and then to pass into the cabinet under the management of the operators, to be again sent forth in new guise as some other spirit.

But some may say, if this be the case, then it is not my spirit friend who comes to me. It may be almost any one who may present himself and claim to be my beloved. And looking at it from a material sense, this is so; but turning to the spiritual side, we may consider the matter in another light. It is true the material sent forth, which composes the form claimed as your friend, is not your friend; it is the clay-matter, or form, built up from the emanations of those present; you, yourself, may have supplied a part of them, therefore this form is, in reality, part and portion of every mortal who is present, but acted upon by spiritual influence, power and intelligence. Now, then, we take this form, produce it as best we can, but it must be animated by some spiritual intelligence, and if a friend of yours can come in such contact with the form as to give it expression, to give it movements and signs of life, and this friend of yours, who desires so to manifest, brings the form out before you, and claims that it is a presentation of himself, then you may truly accept it as such, since behind the clay form stands the spirit whom you love, who desires to bless yourself.

It is not always the case that these forms are present with closed eyes, but it is usually so, because the spirit operators desire to simplify their work as much as possible, and they often find it very difficult to produce a representation of the human eye, therefore when the form is sent out to you with the lids folded over the sight, where the eye should be, you may believe, if the manifestation is a genuine one, that it has been so produced in order not to exhaust the power of spirits or mortals, but to make the grandest representation possible with the means at command.

By-and-bye, friends, this phase of spiritual phenomena will be better understood. We are ready to predict to-day that within another quarter of a century there will be developed in our spiritual circles, in private home-life, generally speaking, mediums for this particular phase, who will be tenderly guarded, not only by the spirit-world but by friendly association and mortal companionship on earth, and under the pleasing, helpful influence which will be supplied to them, these mediums will be able to unfold their powers and to present to the operating spirits the very best opportunity and condition for the development of such work; and not only is this promised in the development of materialization, but it is also promised in every other department of mediumistic labor. It seems to us, after the lapse of another five years, we shall find new strength and vigor coming to the spirit-world from earth, and a higher stimulus sent from the immortal state to earth, in the pursuance of the work of Spiritualism, which is as broad as the universe and intended to bless mankind.

Q.—[By Arthur B. Pierce, Athens, Pa.] Does the spirit which becomes attached to the embryo exert any influence in the conception, formation, growth and sustenance of the same?

A.—The spirit which is about to take possession of the new-born child, and which attaches itself magnetically to the prospective mother in the incipiency or first formation of the embryo, does not—so far as our observation and learning on this subject go—exercise any special influence upon the formation or the birth of the mortal form. Such a spirit must detach itself from the associations or the environments which have formerly surrounded it; it must cut itself off entirely from all that is past when it attaches itself, in the magnetic state, to the prospective mother. What is the result? The spirit sinks into what may be likened to a semi-slumber or dreamy condition, so that it takes but little cognizance, if any, of the scenes which are passing around; it lies in a comatose state until the time approaches when it is to take full possession of the mortal form. Under such a condition the spirit enters new environments, forms new associations, becomes fully possessed with the work or the life it is about to undertake, and consequently its own vital action or influence is but dimly felt. Should such a spirit lose possession or become detached from the magnetic state of the mother, it would not be able to reattach itself, but would be swept out into the universe from which it came, into the same lines of travel which it had formerly traversed, and would be obliged to await other conditions and unfoldments for its birth into matter, if it is desired, or if the law of its being should sweep it again into contact with earth; while the form or organism in the embryo would, under the development of time, be born into the earthly condition, cold and lifeless.

Q.—Is it true, as has been said, that some who in this life became deeply imbued with the doctrine of a literal resurrection, have, upon passing to spirit-life, lingered about the place where their earthly bodies were deposited, waiting for the time to come when they should again occupy them?

A.—It is very true that a spirit who becomes imbued with any certain idea, so much so that he grows morbid upon it, that it takes a vital hold upon his life and becomes a part of himself, grows into an unbalanced condition, and may properly be called insane upon that topic. Such a spirit, grasping firmly the idea which held him so strongly, whether it be that of bodily resurrection or any other theme, need not of necessity lay it aside because he has become dispossessed of the material body. If, then, he believes deeply that he must sleep within the grave, or close by, until the last trumpet shall sound, he will, through the law of psychological association, be held in contact with that physical body, perhaps, and be unable to break away from its locality for a time. Possibly there are magnetic elements within the mortal form which are necessary to the spirit in the development of its spiritual body, and it may be held somewhere in contact with the physical until the clay has gone entirely to decay, or has dissolved so fully that these elements may be set free to pass out to their proper channel; and if this be so, as is sometimes the case, in addition to the thought which sways the spirit, then doubly will he be attracted to the scene of his bodily rest, and await there such new events as he believes will come to him; but it is only a question of time when these psychological laws belonging to matter, belonging to positive opinion in contact with physical life, will be overcome by the higher laws belonging to the spiritual. The time must come, be it sooner or later, when the spirit will arise to a sense of his condition; will look around him and discover his locality; learn that there is a broader, a freer atmosphere for him to explore, and, seeking to try his powers, will find that he can break away from his trammels and rise to higher things. Such a spirit will also have the ministration and assistance of good and wise intelligences who desire to help the unfortunate, and who, through the exercise of their magnetic influence and love upon his nature, will find opportunity, and the result will draw his thought away from its old contemplation, directing it into other channels, giving him new objects of thought and study, and setting before him new work which shall claim his attention, thus helping him break the bonds and escape from that thralldom which has held him down.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held May 4th, 1888.

Humphrey Titus.

My home was in Brattleboro', Vt. Humphrey Titus is my name, and I was but just entering manhood when the angels came and bore me away to the beautiful Summer-Land. Oh! how hard it was for father and mother to be reconciled to my being called up higher, for only twenty-two years of mortal life had I seen. I would rather have stopped longer in the mortal, but after the exchange came, no, oh, no! I would not ask to come to stay, but I would love to come into communication with the dear ones that are yet left.

In passing from the mortal into the immortal I felt that it was all right, and I was willing to go; but father's and mother's grief held me to the earth for a time. As the angels came around me so closely before my spirit took its flight, I felt assured that dear ones, not only relatives, but friends, had come to meet me, and so it was. I saw not only many whom I used to know, but also many strange faces, for we form acquaintances there (I should say here, for it is only a veil, and a thin veil, between us) as real as you do in mortal life.

I know my friends often wonder why I have not made myself known since passing over. As nearly as I can reckon time, from three to four years have elapsed since I left the mortal—not since I left earth, for I have been a constant visitor here with you all, dear ones—and I know of the changes that have come in the home. Do not place me so far away, but bring me close beside you when the thought of the "dear boy," as you called me, comes to you.

I thank you, sir, for the privilege, for I have tried to come before and have failed.

Catharine S. Wing.

You may place me in Somerville, Mass. My name was Catherine S. Wing. I shall be remembered there. I would like father, mother and the dear ones to know I am not dead, only changed from the old suffering mortal form into a new one. Before the body was carried away from the home, manifestations were given there, even around the casket, which statement I know will be corroborated by others. The spirit-band that was there was able to give out some little sounds, although but little time had elapsed since they said "Catherine is dead."

Father and mother understood very little of these things, but they will try to learn more. I know they said at the time that they heard the little taps, even at what is called a funeral. I was glad in my soul when, with the help of the spirit-band, I was able to give out some little sound that they might know I was not dead. No, there is no "death," only a change from one form to another.

Forty-two years, as you reckon mortal life, I lived here, and I learned very little to what I ought while in the mortal. It has been said by many spirits that what we do not learn here we must learn on the other side, for life is a school.

I want to thank Brother Cobb for the words he spoke over my mortal form, although he felt he was en rapport with me at the time.

I am happy, and would not return to stay; but I would like all to know that we live beyond the veil. I would much enjoy coming into communication with the dear ones here. Grandma says that she is also present to-day. Father's name is Charles, and mother's Catharine.

Marinda Ladd.

My home was in Bradford, Mass. Marinda Ladd. I have tried before, but have always failed. Father, mother and sister Lucy are with me to-day, but all of the family are not here at this hour. I would like to say to dear sisters and brothers yet left in the mortal, that I do come often, and so do the others that have passed the boundary.

Byron, I understand all the changes that have been going on in the home. I understood it all when you went to Vermont. I knew well the business, and that is to prove I am not dead, but am as able as when on earth to know what is transpiring. I am satisfied with the change you have made. I would say to Louisa that I am satisfied with what she has been trying to do. Let there be harmony, love and peace in the homes; it holds us stronger there. When we visit the homes and find inharmony, it repels us, and we cannot stay as long as we would if things moved smoothly and quietly.

I would like Clark, Lucy and Ellen to know I have been able to speak at last, for there is but one that will open the door for us. I think there should be a new word substituted for "death." Just beginning to live, is what I would say. Aunt Sarah said to me that she had sent a message and felt much happier; therefore I have been in every meeting trying to do the same, but we cannot always do just what we would like, or even what we think we can do.

I would like to have this letter reach Byron Ladd, of Bradford, Mass.

Dr. James Howarth.

[To the Chairman:] Good-morning. I also have tried to speak in these meetings, but have made a failure of it. To-day I have the floor. You may place me in old Andover, Mass. You understand where that is; that's where they make the ministers, and you may place my name as old Dr. James Howarth. I am very glad to announce my name. Old Theology did not disturb me in the least, neither does it to-day. I am satisfied with the home I have, and I do not know but I have just as good a one as any of those who have been brought up in the college there.

I feel as happy in announcing my name as any who have been here to-day, or any other time when I have been present. I have visited these meetings, and I thank the angel-world for this institution. I am not going to thank the mortals, although I suppose the instruments whom they see fit to use ought to be.

I would like all to know that Dr. James is not dead. The dear wife, Sarah, still dwells in the mortal form, although she has reached fourscore years, and wonders sometimes why she stays a little longer! The angels know. Mary, I am glad you are with grandma, for it is a comfort to her, and I know it will be better for you. I often wonder, as I step into the old home, if they know I am here? No, although sometimes they think of it. I would like to be remembered to Mr. Hardy's people and to Mrs. Miller's family. The others need not feel slighted if I do not speak of them.

I am happy in the spirit-home—the Summer-Land—and truthfully has it been called the bright and beautiful "Beyond." I sometimes take a little trip across the water—but it does not take me long. We go now without boats or steamers, and we go easily.

I would like to come into communication with the dear ones, when there is an opportunity. Father and mother are with me to-day. All send greetings to those that yet dwell in the mortal. I am satisfied with the home they gave me, but am trying to make it more beautiful than it was at first. I find that while living a life here we are building homes there; and as we live, so will our homes be. So, mortals, be careful how you build, because if you do not build right, you will have to fix it over when you come to our side.

Caleb Marvell.

I would like to say a few words—as we find when the channel is open we must take the accepted moment. My home was in Lowell—Caleb Marvell. I would like to say that another one has just joined the happy number—Mary. The dear boy, Brady, is with us, and we are happy together. Mary wishes me to say that so little time has passed since she left the mortal life that she is unable to send a message, but she desires to be remembered to the doctor and Susie. All was done that could be, but the angels called her up higher. She has often said to me, "Caleb, they did not tell me that Ann and Abby had passed out." No, dear Mary, because you were so nigh the gate yourself they thought it best to hold it from you. Then the surprise came as she entered spirit-life, to find them there, not knowing they had crossed over but a few days before her.

Happy we are together in the home, for her family are all there now. She was the last to make the chain whole of her mother's family. Mary is with me and we are happy together. I would like them to know that Caleb Marvell is not dead, but just commenced to live. I am happy in my spirit-home, for since the dear wife has joined our number, I feel that there is not so much to call me back to earth, although some friends yet remain there.

Sarah Sager.

You may place me in Peru, Ind.—Sarah Sager. I have many loved ones on the spirit side, and very few left on earth. I would like to say for Alma that I often come into her home, and fully realize the trials she has to endure.

I knew not of spirit return when I passed through the portal called death, and I must acknowledge that I was very much disappointed, but, oh! how happily, when I found the home so beautiful, and was told that we had the privilege, given us from our Father in heaven, to return to earth and speak to mortals.

I have never controlled but once before, and I find it a little difficult, but I will try to do the best I can. John is with me, and Joseph, also little Minnie, the little bud that was transplanted so young. I am happy in my spirit-home. I often visit earth, but am sometimes disappointed, because I know they do not sense my presence in the earth-homes

Jane Baldwin.

My home was in Fisherville, N. H.—Jane Baldwin. I have tried several times to speak in these meetings. At one meeting William was sending a message, and I felt when he was through I should be able to send one also; but I failed in the attempt.

I would say to Amba that Freeman is here, and also Lucy and Mary; but they cannot all speak to-day. In time they will be able to send a message, as others have done, but we must wait until our own turn comes.

I know, dear sister, you thought I suffered much in crossing over. No, I realized no suffering whatever. I suffered before, but as the spirit was taking its flight I felt that I was gaining far more happiness. Father, mother and all are together in spirit-life, but not together all the time, no more than you are all the time together in the mortal world. I am happy and satisfied with the home I have, but I know on our side of life it is progression; we go on from one state of happiness to another.

Dear sister, think not because you do not hear from us often that we do not visit you. We come in the stilly hours of the night, and we know the trials you are under; but you have had some good friends that have stood by you. Sister, remember that I will come often, and, with others, will try to help you, through good influences.

Judge Calvin Morrill.

You may locate me, Mr. Chairman, in St. Johnsbury, Vt. Calvin Morrill, or Judge Morrill, as I was familiarly known. I have made the attempt to speak in your meetings, but have failed.

I find, on entering the spirit-land, that the experiences of spirits are as varied as are those of mortals. I must confess that I was disappointed, and also surprised, on finding that old theology had nothing whatever to do with our lives there. Old early teachings cramp us a little, but I now find what I did not learn in the mortal existence, that I must commence as a little child going to school, and learn on our side of life.

I would say to Benjamin that it is best to learn all he can on this side, or he will say as I am saying, "It would have been much better for me if I had gathered some of the treasures lying before me," for I often heard it said by one and another that spirits did return to earth. I made the same reply that so many make, "If they come to earth, why not directly to their own people, instead of coming through strangers?" Now I understand spirit law, and I know that we are governed, held and led by spirit law as much—I might say more—than you are by earth law.

I am satisfied to learn, for I find on the spirit side that it is progression. I am happy, but I know I can build my home over a little better still. Father, mother, we are all together at times. Nancy and Lucy are here, and wish to be remembered. We are happy in our spirit-home, but it is termed different spheres, as you term it in your schools, different grades. Now I find that I might have made some progress here if I had been willing to investigate a little. Since entering spirit-life I have often heard mortals say, "Oh, no! I do not believe anything in spirits coming back." They will find that nine times out of ten those people have never investigated at all, but are the ones that are first to speak thus. I found it so in my own case while dwelling in the mortal, and I have heard it spoken many times since coming to spirit-life.

I know this letter will reach some of the loved ones, because it comes so near to them that they cannot help hearing of it; then there is a little curiosity to read it.

Mary Eastman.

I have tried three different times in your meetings to speak. To-day the guides gave me permission to come, and I am only too glad to avail myself of the privilege. My home was in Weare, New Hampshire. Mary Eastman.

Dear children, I wish to speak to you all. I know you will say, "Mother, why have you not spoken before?" I have tried, dear daughters and my dear boys, but have failed. To-day I have gained strength enough to speak. The passing out of the mortal form was sudden. That, I know, has been part of a hindrance to my controlling easily.

Frankie, the angel world has seen fit to give you powers that the others have not, so go on, learn all you can, give out to mortals, dear boy, and mother will be a guardian spirit to you all. I will say to Frankie and Kirk that mother does not forget one of them. I tried to be a good mother to Frankie, but when he used to say to me, "Mother, spirits do come to earth," I could not understand how the dear boy should be able to know they came when I did not, nor his father nor any of the rest of the family. Abbie is here, and Juliet is with me, too. The others are not here to-day, but father stands a little way back—Langdon is his name. I should be so glad if I could have a private conversation with you, dear child, when there is an opportunity. I am with Minerva often, and with each one of you. I would not single out any one, but as they come before me and I think of them, I speak their names. Annie tried in the last meeting to speak, but failed. She now says, "Frankie, I feel that at another time I shall be able to send a message to you, and will also be able to speak a few words to Lane." Freddy is with her most of the time.

Frankie, do sit often and let the spirits use your organism to communicate with the world, for you know they have chosen you as an instrument, although some of the family do not understand it. Do not feel sad or grieved, dear boy, for the angel world will stand by you. I well understand a little trouble you have had with your hands, but I will try, through every channel that I may gain, to send good influences around you, that they may help to make you whole again. Your Uncle Hiram bids you "Go on, dear boy, and do all you can for the outside world; for we find, in looking over the fields, that they are white, but the workers are few. Give out, dear boy, to the sisters and brother Kirk; speak to them as it is made known to you."

My dear children, never will I lose sight of or forsake you; and I will ask the Father and the angels to come nearer, nearer still, and bless you day by day, and at last we will all be gathered together, when not one link will be missing in the chain.

James Paul.

You may place me in New Bedford, Mass. James Paul. I was in these meetings years ago, but finding I did not make any headway, I left for a certain time, but of late I have commenced again. Now I find I am repaid for all my perseverance.

I would like brother John to know that I send this letter. Father is with me, and so is Charlie, who went away but a little bud; he is now grown into manhood. John, I know the many trials you have. I know the hardships you have to endure on the railroad—but we have no railroads here. You need not think you will have a section to take care of on our side. We do not have to take care of the roads. They are all right, and our home is beautiful. Grandmother Paul says we don't find the streets paved with gold, but that it is a beautiful home. You have often thought, John, as you have been overseeing a gang of men, whether you would do so on the other side. No, John, no; don't trouble about that idea. It will be all right when you get on our side. Father has lately joined us. Mother is yet left in the mortal.

I am going to bear rather hard on you, Olive. You ought to open the door when you can, and give out a little comfort to John, instead of hiding your talent all this time; but it has got out, and John knows it now. I told of it, and I meant to. When I had the conversation through a medium, I "let the cat out." Now, Olive, you can't hide it any longer. When John was away you would occasionally let the spirits speak; but when John came home you never knew anything about it! Olive, your angel mother wants you to be willing to open the way, and give what the spirits want to say to mortals. I should not have said anything about it, but I knew if I did not the girls would. Now, Olive, this is all offered in kindness, for I love you, as the faithful wife you are to John, only you have hidden this spiritual food away from him. John is coming nearer the spirit side than you think; therefore, do sit down when he is in the home, and let us give out a little through your organism. I know you will ask what does James know about you? I should be a pretty poor scholar if I did n't learn something by visiting the home.

Frances and Lucy have tried many times to have you let the spirits speak for a few moments, but with a shake of the head you have said, "No." Olive, you know you are happier when you give way to the spirits; do let them use you as an instrument, and when you are in heaven you'll feel glad you did.

Will you be kind enough to send this message to John Paul, Springvale, Me.? Much obliged to you, sir. When you come to our side, I'll make it all right with you.

Samuel Willard.

My name is Samuel Willard, Springvale, Me. I am in hopes to reach my son George, for I know if he could only feel that his father could send a message, he would feel a little different than he does now.

Roanna, you have been a good, faithful wife and mother, and I am sorry to see you suffering so much physically; but be patient, and by-and bye you will be called up higher. Little Belle, as they called her before she went away, is here with me. I know the anxiety you have had over the one still left of the same name, for she has suffered much and is not free yet. She came near joining us in spirit-life. Roanna, I always will speak a good word for you.

George, are you doing right? In spirit-life you will look back and say, "Father, you were in the right of it." I know it will be so, for I can see clearer and further than you can here. I know there has been considerable said about the books. There is another to leave the mortal form, and then things will be made plain. I know of all the ill-feeling that has existed, but, thank God, none can be with us on our side. You have got to leave it all here; you can't bring it with you if you try.

Now I would say a little further, that I was with you, Frances, when the trial came into the home, or when the suffering that has been brought on the dear companion; but I know Reuben has been a constant attendant, and I guess I'll give him a little more credit than I did, because he has done you good.

Now, children, when there is an opportunity, grasp it, that we may come into communication with you privately. Some things we break off from saying which we get started to say, that we should say if we were alone.

I am happy to be able to make you know I live. I think that in old Springvale they will know very well who Uncle Samuel Willard was—or is, for I am still alive, and I have not met a dead person since I went away. I am thankful that it is more like just beginning to live—not death—as that word has brought a great deal of sadness into homes. I am happy, and trying to progress onward. We shall all meet in God's good time.

Corbin Gould.

I have been standing here some time, thinking that perhaps, through the goodness of the guides, I too might have the opportunity to speak. I lived in this old city—Boston. You may place my name as Corbin Gould. I think I shall be remembered by that name. I have not got a great deal to say, therefore it won't take me very long.

Mother, Sarah and Caroline are here, but they only wish to say they are present. Sarah has been here before. I often walk up and down the streets here. I now see several in the audience that I knew, and I think they haven't forgotten Corbin Gould, on Myrtle street. I think I shall be remembered by some of them.

I am glad to be able to even speak my name, for I did not understand when in the mortal just how spirits got back here; but I know it pretty well now, although I can learn a good deal more. Do n't think for a moment that we are not learning all the time on the spirit side. Sarah speaks to me for a moment, because she was rather of a Methodist when here; but it makes no difference. We have no sects. Creeds have nothing to do with us there. All you mortals here are aiming for one country, and what is the use of wrangling about the way to get there? I am not going to say anything about the churches. It is the people that can't agree. As I have said to father a good many times, they all want to be boss—that is the way it is.

I shall be much obliged to you, sir, if you will just announce that Corbin Gould has been here.

Sarah Churchill.

My home was in Lynn, Mass.—Sarah Churchill. I was, oh! so tired when I passed out; but many years have elapsed since they used to say "Sarah has passed away." Mother is with me, and Brother Horace. We are happy together, but there are a few yet left in the mortal, and I feel that they would like to hear from us. Edward, as little John used to say, "Glad we are to be together." I would not ask to come to earth to stay, and I have never met a spirit who will say so. We are satisfied with the spirit-home, only we are trying to make it more beautiful than it was to us on entering spirit-life.

Many years, as you reckon mortal time, I should say nigh on to twenty years, have elapsed since they said that Sarah had passed over. I have tried to learn and to progress from one sphere to another, and I feel that I have met with successful efforts in spirit-life. I found on entering there that we form acquaintances as real as you do here. If we are not on earth when a dear one passes over, we know nothing of it until we meet them as suddenly as we met in mortal life on the streets, and often the exclamation comes, "I did not know you were here. When did you come?" as real to us as it is in mortal life. Often mortals think we should all find each other on entering spirit-life. Oh! no. Sometimes it is a long while before we meet with some dear ones, and sometimes we meet them immediately. Therefore, you see there is much you will have to learn when you enter spirit-life. Often I have heard the question asked, Why cannot spirits come and commune with us and make themselves known, and even make themselves seen? The veil is across your eyes, not ours! We can see you when you cannot see us. But the question comes up again, Why? The dear Father knows why. When you enter spirit-life you will understand then, by learning that there is a spirit law that governs you there more perfectly than earth law can here. If spirits did return eighteen hundred years age, they do to-day. God's laws are unchangeable and cannot be broken.

I have felt so grieved when I have heard mortals make the remark so sarcastically, "Spirits do not come to earth." Let me ask you, dear ones, where the spirit is? God is a spirit everywhere present; and you will respond that the spirit goes to God who gave it. Then why can we not stand right by the side of you, if the spirit goes to God who gave you? He permits us to visit you according to the dictates of our own spirit. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me this privilege.

Clarence Smith.

I once lived in Salem, N. H. Clarence Smith. I have tried before to speak here, but failed. I came pretty near speaking at your last meeting, but the time closed and I had to give it up.

Mother is with me to-day, and sends greetings to father and Elma. Be careful, for you are building your home every day, and build it a little better. Clarence loves you, dear brother, and I tell you in all kindness. I would not upbraid you, but I would like you to know I am watching over you, dear brother.

Father, I know you are lonely since mother left the home, for it is not as it was when she was there. Sometimes we turn away in sadness because you give very little thought to our being on earth, for spirit-land is but a step from you. Father, I know the trials you have had, and I know the sufferings you have had physically, but you are a little better now; do try and learn a little here, for the sands of life are fast running out. I can see that the threads are breaking, and you sometimes say in your soul, "Will I find my Clarence again?" Father, I know you loved me and doted on me, and I'll come to meet you as I did my own dear earth-mother. Grandmother is here, and grandmother Smith is here to-day, but mother says I can do the talking, and tell you she does n't leave nor forget you. Father, do try to come into communication with us if possible.

Elma, this life is not all. I know you will wonder what I know about you. If I did not visit you, dear brother, I should not know anything of you. I know mortals often say that if we come to earth we should be very unhappy. It is no worse for us to be unhappy just while we linger around you than it is for you, but the great Father in his wisdom knows how to make this wise provision, and we cannot take away earth affairs; if we did, there would be no more heaven there than you get here. Do right, dear brother, and we will all meet again with mother—our mother—as good a mother as God ever gave.

THE CLAIRVOYANT.

BY JAMES M. ROGERS.

The secrets of the Past are his,
He sees the Future—face to face!
Clear in his soul there mirrored is
The deed—the man—the time—the place.

Crime like a startled vulture flies—
Quitting its prey in craven flight:
Truth stands revealed to other eyes,
And falsehood falls as fades the night.

From zone to zone his starry way
Leads on with footsteps echoless—
He meets the dawn of endless day
On purple hills the angels bless.

Beneath his gaze those splendors rise—
The glorious shapes—the deathless flowers—
Lands where immortal sunshine lies,
And Homes in rapture-lighted bowers!

In others' aid he treads those fields—
Beyond the cities of the dead—
For them each form its glory yields
Like dreams around a prophet's bed.

Dreams which have shape, and shores that lie
Without the boundaries of earth;
These shall his soul all dauntlessly
Rehearse as tales beside the hearth.

His recompense, those scenes sublime—
The spirit's wondrous ecstasy—
The hopes that throng all space and time—
The life illumed—the vision free.

The communication purporting to come from NATHAN CHASE I recognize, and all the parties mentioned I knew well, including the two Emmas—one a granddaughter, the other a Miss Emma Langley of Salem, N. A MASTER TRUE.

There came to earth a Master true,
No love of self had he!
Most freely giving of his life
That earth true love might see.

To casual sight but slight would seem
The difference, these loves two;
But vast indeed the gulf that yawns
When we their contrasts view.

In serving self we stand alone,
No angel by our side;
But when we seek another's good,
Heaven's gates then open wide.

Now if unselfish service thus
Heaven's guiding hosts array—
When all shall seek each other's good
Most bright will gleam earth's day.

ADRIAN.—M. L. Sherman writes: "Was matter created? If so, by whom and from what? The Christian mythology answers: By an infinite God; and says He created it from nothing. The definition of infinite is unlimited or boundless in time and space. If this is correct, an infinite being was under no necessity to create from nothing, for he comprehended all within himself, that was or ever could be; there was no space outside of the infinite whole, for he was omnipresent. Then to say their God created matter enough in six days from nothing and from nowhere, to make unnumbered billions of suns with their planetary families revolving around them, is too ridiculous for a rational mind to admit. But such are the teachings of the stereotyped mythology of the ancients—endorsed by Christianity. If their God is, as they say, omnipotent, all-powerful, omniscient, all-knowledge, omnipresent, filling all space, everything must exist in-side of him, for he has no out-side, and must so remain in the eternal future, as all have in the eternal past, a part of himself; an infinite being and finite beings cannot exist at one and the same time, for it takes everything to make an infinite being; nothing can be added to or taken from the infinite whole without destroying infinity. If, as they say, their God has had an eternal existence, so has every atom in the broad universe, and the word created is a misnomer, (according to Webster's definition of infinite.)

Who is God? I answer, He is life, the soul of every atom, and lives, moves and has his being in every particle of substance in the unbounded realms of Nature. Matter is a combination of the unprogressed elements existing in Nature, and contains within each atom the soul-life, which has and will exist eternally as a part of divinity. Each soul-entity is a microcosm, a little world within itself, having inherent the God-life soul; or, in other words, the leaven which will leaven the whole lump. All substance in a primitive condition existed in the universal sea of atoms or entities; each one existed an infinitesimal oneness in the lowest form of life's progressive unfoldment. There in the soul's garden grew the tree which bears the fruit of good and evil, which the primitive divine soul forbade being partaken of, for the reason that it would bring sin and misery to each one who transgressed the divine soul law, called conscience. Conscience admonishes all in their progressive unfoldment to do unto others as they would others to do to them. The representation of a tree bearing the fruit of good and evil is a beautiful allegory of man's progressive unfoldment. It demonstrates the fact that the immortal soul was born into an earthly body in order by experience to distinguish good from evil. When we gain this knowledge, it will convince us that good is positive, and that what is allegorically termed evil will ultimate in good.

What is called evil is not eternal. It exists only in a falsely-educated mind. There are no real things in nature but what are good and exist for a wise purpose, and when the ignorant learn the truth that all things work together for the ultimate good of all, they will be willing to dispense with priestly superstition. All positives in nature have their negatives; destroy one, the other will die; also, were it not for repulsion and attraction, worlds could not move in their orbits; the great machinery of the universe could not continue without both. In my opinion, there was no God, man, woman, or devil, who created matter, or had anything to do in bringing death into the world; for matter, death, or change, has eternally existed, and will continue to. The formation of matter before and since this pretended creation flatly contradicts the miserable twaddle of saying a certain being called God created the earth, and untold billions of worlds, in six days, out of nothing, and from nowhere. That a woman, who did not know good from evil, brought death into the world by partaking of fruit that grew in a garden, is too ridiculous to be believed by any sane mind."

New York.

DEAN'S CORNERS.—Elizabeth H. Dorland writes: "The question is often asked, of what use are Spiritualism and spirit-return? I can only answer for myself: In my younger days I suffered, not from wrong-doing, but from fears of an angry God, and queried in my heart where should I look for light and comfort—as I could not accept that which I heard. I felt as one who is lost in a wilderness, groping blindly. I was uneasy in my own mind, until a few years ago a neighbor lent me some BANNERS to read. I was almost afraid to read them. I prayed earnestly, asking my spirit-friends that if it was in their power they would help me see my way. I dreamed I was standing on this earth, and beautiful clouds of golden color were rolling around; and I took this as a sign or answer to my prayer, viz: that I need not fear, but search for the truth. I did so, reading all the spiritual works I could get, and as I read I know my spirit-friends helped me to understand. When your paper spoke of the spirit-board, we fixed one, and after trying for awhile it began to move so we could get messages from our spirit-friends. At this time I had a vision of my husband's sister. She was self-illuminated; she came to help us understand these things. After a while the spirit-friends wrote through my hand, and now I can sit and talk with them. I know it is neither my own mind nor spirit, for they have taught me that of which I was ignorant; they have demonstrated to me that our spirit-friends love and cherish us. I know our spirit-friends stand ready and willing to help us if we will only rid ourselves of foolish fears; if we would but ask ourselves the simple question, who loves us best—our own or strangers? Each and every person has the right to investigate these things for himself; if not, where does the power come from? Those who would hinder this spirit light seem to forget that they and every individual have friends on the spirit-side. Let people sense these things and the truth shall make them free. God is love, and his spirits and angels are working for peace on earth and good will to humanity."

New Hampshire.

CONCORD.—A correspondent writes: "Few women actively engaged as agents for the spirit-world in its efforts to assist the dwellers upon earth to the attaining of health and a knowledge of truths of the most value to them as mortals, surpass Mrs. S. B. Craddock of No. 9 Prince street, in this city of Concord. She came here some years since upon invitation to speak before the Spiritualist Society. Soon after she commenced holding séances, and from that time to the present has been constantly engaged in giving clairvoyant tests and examinations, healing the sick and lecturing. Her clairvoyant powers are remarkable, as evinced by two instances of denoting the spot where were found the bodies of two persons drowned, and the frequent calls she has by detective officers and others seeking information on a multiplicity of matters. In 1881 Birch Island, in Sunapee Lake, was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. Craddock, and fitted up so as to be an additional attraction at that Spiritualist resort. A pavilion for public speaking was erected, where Mrs. Craddock has since held religious exercises. This resort has been named Liberty Island. A commodious house, built there by Mr. and Mrs. C., is frequented by larger and larger numbers every year."

Canada.

MONTREAL.—John Withell writes us that Frank T. Ripley has just closed a highly successful engagement, and accomplished a good work in this city: "Now that the ice is broken, we hope for further success in advancing the spiritual cause hereabout in the future."

THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of Spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocketbooks. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health,

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

Finely executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

The Editor says in the preface: "Another book for children! Yes, another. Why not another, and still another? Little folks see the world in books. Very likely they know that the future has something for them to do, so the little dears are trying hard to see and to hear what the full-grown world is doing to-day."

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

SECOND EDITION.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Prescriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

Mrs. Moss, of New York, held a select circle each morning at 9 o'clock at the Glen Cove House.

Mr. W. S. Rowley, the spirit telegraph operator from Cleveland, arrived on Saturday evening with his wife, and is located at Hotel Onset.

The steamer Island Home landed one hundred and seventy-seven passengers Sunday morning, and immediately started out again with one hundred and twenty-eight passengers for a little excursion.

A concert is held each morning and evening on the Bluff by Lindall's Band, of Boston. The early morning of Sunday, August 5th, gave promise of rain, but a breeze sprang up later, clearing the sky and freshening and beautifying all nature. The cars came in loaded with passengers. The favorite Middleboro' Band was on hand at the auditorium at precisely 9:30, discoursing sweet music. A selection was played by each band in turn till 10:30, when Colonel Crockett, the President, introduced the speaker of the morning as Mr. E. B. Fairchild. His lecture—subject, "What is Spiritualism?"—was listened to by a large concourse of people with earnest attention. J. D. Stiles followed in tests. In the afternoon Mrs. Sarah A. Brynes held the attention of a large congregation for one hour. Mrs. Brynes is too well known to need any words of commendation. To say that she is to lecture is enough to bring together a large and appreciative audience. Her subject for the afternoon was "The Struggles of Life." Its delivery was followed by numerous tests from Joseph D. Stiles in his happiest mood.

Headquarters Office, Onset, Aug. 6th, 1888.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Hon. ex Senator Davis, of Rhode Island, is at the Glen Cove House.

Mrs. E. A. Wells, the materializing medium of New York City, has arrived.

Prof. Willis, the Phrenologist, makes his usual visit to Onset, staying at the Washburn House.

Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes gave another of her sensible characteristic lectures on Sunday afternoon last.

Dr. A. H. Richardson has returned from Harwich Camp meeting, and will soon be on his way to Lake Pleasant.

Mrs. Fay, the psysical medium, has arrived, and is a guest of Major Griffith. Thus far she has not given public séances.

Dr. H. W. Gould, San Diego, Cal., has arrived at Onset, and is enjoying the seashore resort, and the mediums and their manifestations in particular.

Dr. J. L. Newman of Boston made a flying visit to Onset last week. He seems to enjoy life and the camp, also Spiritualism.

Resolutions have been passed by the Fact Convention in high endorsement of Dr. Rogers, Dr. Stansbury, and Mrs. J. J. Whitney.

Mr. Edwin Wilder, ex postmaster of Hingham, Mass., also ex President of the Massachusetts Spiritual Association, is located at the Washburn House.

Mr. Jeremiah Tanner, of Providence, and Mr. Alvin Buffington, Warren, R. I., are spending a few weeks at the Bay. They are yearly visitors and true Spiritualists.

Mrs. S. Jones, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Nellie Dawes, all of Washington, D. C., are at the Union Villa. They all are highly mediumistic, and are in company with Mrs. Cabell.

Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. Searle of Northboro, Mass., are staying in Onset for a short time. They are delighted with the place. They are old subscribers to the BANNER OF LIGHT.

Ichabod Carver, Esq., of Plymouth, made a flying visit to Onset Sunday. He is one of the old workers in the Spiritualistic Society and Children's Lyceum in the early days of Spiritualism.

Col. Wm. D. Crockett, president of the O. B. G. A., came here on Saturday and remained over until Monday, his business being such it was impossible for him to be absent from Boston longer.

Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Soule, of Northboro', Mass., have been here for the past week. They are delighted with the place and the people, and intend to come again another year, if possible.

Mrs. L. L. Whitlock gave an interesting lecture to an appreciative audience, Saturday afternoon. Mr. Joseph D. Stiles followed with some fine tests of spirit-presence, which were recognized.

A. S. Hayward, magnetic physician, of Boston, has been making quite a stay at Onset, and appears to enjoy the place and the people. He stops at the Washburn House, but anticipates leaving next week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Q. Whittemore have purchased the two lots of land adjoining the Sturtevant Cottage, extending from the Boulevard to West Central Avenue, and will build a cottage for their own use in the near future.

M. B. Little, Esq., Glens Falls, N. Y., has been staying at Hotel Onset for some days. He is one of the veteran Spiritualists, and seems to enjoy Onset and what he comes en rapport with in spirit manifestations.

E. G. Goddard, Esq., of East Saginaw, Mich., is at Hotel Onset. Spiritualism has done much for him and he has done much for Spiritualism in return. He is a man of mature years, highly intelligent, and a confirmed Spiritualist.

Col. Wm. D. Crockett introduced to the audience Mr. E. B. Fairchild, who gave the Sunday morning lecture, his theme being "What is Spiritualism?" He made some telling points that were well received by a large and appreciative audience.

Charles W. Sullivan will give one of his highly enjoyable entertainments at the Temple on Friday evening of this week. He will be assisted by able talent in musical and other modes of entertainment. Do n't fail to patronize Bro. Sullivan on this occasion.

Two interesting young ladies, Miss Annie R. Kerwin and Hattie Jackson, of Waltham, Mass., have just returned home after two weeks' stay at the Washburn House. This is their second season, and well do they know how to enjoy Onset, even if they are not fully convinced of Spiritualism being a fact.

Louis F. Jones, spirit-artist, is located at the Doane Cottage. He is quite successful in getting crayon pictures; some of them the sitters recognize as their spirit-friends. Mr. Jones is no doubt moved upon by an intelligent power to sketch the pictures he takes, and is honest in what appears, whether recognized or not.

A fair was held on Thursday, August 2d, on the Longwood Park, the proceeds going to improve the same. It was a unique affair, having a "donkey party" in the evening. Charles W. Sullivan aided in singing; others did also. The Washburn House proprietor and guests did much to help the matter along. They realized quite a sum, which will go to develop the park in front of the Washburn House.

Mrs. Thomas Gales Forster has received, through mediumship, a fully executed picture of what purports to be her lamented husband, from an independent source, taken between slates, the same as the independent slate-writing is done. The oil was moist when she received it, and the style is precisely like those taken by Mrs. Diss Debar. Mrs. Forster also received a lengthy communication in independent slate-writing, through the mediumship of Dr. Stansbury.

The members of the Onset Business Club have subscribed sufficient money to have a band of music the balance of the season, and commenced last Friday evening to play. This will make two bands on Sundays; one is furnished by the Association for Sundays, while the other will work in harmony with the Association Band in a manner that will be under the dictation of the Association, as far as controlling the playing when services are being held.

Mrs. Flora B. Cabell of Washington, D. C., has arrived and is pleasantly domiciled at the Glen Cove House. Several other persons were in her party. Mrs. Cabell has been at Onset several seasons. She is a lady of culture, a good Spiritualist also. Mr. James H. Foss and wife, from Needham, Mass., have been staying at the Greenleaf Cottage, Onset. Mr. Foss is ex-Deputy Commissioner of the United States Department of Agriculture. He spends his winters in Florida, dealing in lands.

The Fact Convention Thursday and Friday of last week took the form of the initial steps in the investigation of Spiritualism. Some of the veteran workers requested raps and tipping of tables, which were produced in earnest. The last day was devoted to some extent to mesmerism; and skeptics who had not seen an individual controlled by a spirit in the material form were surprised to see the power that one person can exercise over another. But to many present it was not as interesting as it would have been had excarnated spirits been the ruling power at a spiritual fact convention.

Mr. P. C. Tomson, of Philadelphia, has charge of an hour séance in the parlors of the Glen Cove House every morning. He was formerly a Methodist. Mrs. Tomson, Mrs. Moss, Mrs. Wallace, Mr. Haines, and several others officiate at these séances. A spirit of a lady, who has been in spirit-life seventy-five years, related her experience in the gift of healing in the old country, and how she was treated by the authorities at that time, her method having been similar to the present one of healing by the laying on of hands. Mrs. Tomson is a most wonderful medium. She has various controls who speak in many different languages. They can also use her organism to sing quite well, and give tests of acknowledged reliability.

Lake Pleasant.

[MR. J. MILTON YOUNG is our authorized agent at Lake Pleasant, and will be pleased to receive subscriptions for the BANNER OF LIGHT. Mr. Young also has a full line of our publications for sale at his bookstore. He will conduct the correspondence for THE BANNER from this Camp-Meeting.]

The session has commenced in good earnest, and with an old-time attendance. The meeting of Wednesday was a session of much interest. The address by Prof. W. G. Haskell was suggested by the expression "Nothing but leaves." It was an able effort. Mrs. E. C. Kimball, of Lawrence, then gave several platfrom descriptions, remarkable in detail, nearly all of which were recognized.

On Friday the service opened with singing by Prof. Billingham of "Only a Thin Veil Between Us." The address was by A. E. Tisdale, upon the theme, "Shall I live again?" It was an able and logical effort. Mrs. Kimball then gave a large number of spiritual tests, which were received with interest.

A Grand Fair will be opened in Association Hall, under the auspices of the Ladies' Lake Pleasant Improvement Society, on Monday, August 13th, to continue one week.

On Saturday a conference was held at the auditorium, with speaking by Dr. Beals, Dr. Temple, Mrs. Conant, Dr. Dutton and Mrs. Dr. Cook.

The conferences are seasons of much interest, and largely attended.

The trains Saturday evening brought in additional numbers, making fully two thousand people in camp.

On Sunday the audience was augmented to fully twenty five hundred people. The Worcester Cadet Band gave concerts morning, afternoon and evening.

The morning services opened with singing by Prof. Billingham. The address was by A. E. Tisdale upon the general subject of Spiritualism.

The service closed with a solo by Prof. Billingham.

The afternoon address was by Mrs. Fannie Davis Smith, of Brandon, Vt., who prefaced her remarks with an invocation.

The subject of the address was "The Spiritual Promise of the Hour." It was an able and earnest effort and well received. The service closed with platform descriptions by Mrs. E. C. Kimball.

The excursion trains will begin on next Sunday, which will bring an old-time attendance.

Lake Pleasant, Mass., Aug. 6. 1888.

Dr. E. A. Smith writes us from Lake Pleasant, Aug. 6th: "I have been here for nearly one week, and have never seen so many people here before so early in the season, or things looking so promising for a large and successful meeting. The cottages now being built are more elegant and expensive than those formerly erected upon leased land. Lake Pleasant is bound to prosper.

The meetings of Sunday, Aug. 5th, notwithstanding the extreme heat, were well attended, and the audiences were highly appreciative.

I should like to say one word more about my excursion tickets. I have left a few of them—numbers one, two, three and four—with A. F. Briggs, 35 Congress street, Boston—headquarters of the Poland Spring water—where they can be procured by parties wishing to come from Boston to Queen City Park, Burlington. When I leave here, I shall leave some of my Lake Pleasant tickets with the station agent.

I expect to return to Queen City Park on Thursday, Aug. 9th. I shall be back again at Lake Pleasant, Aug. 12th, 13th and 20th; also Sept. 2d; and on Sept. 3d, I shall start with a large party from here for Queen City Park; this excursion costs only $3.00—the cheapest trip that was ever gotten up in New England. I shall have two special cars for the party."

Parkland, Pa.

The opening of the regular Camp-Meeting at this large and popular camp-ground and pleasure resort occurred Sunday, July 1st, speaker, J. Clegg Wright, with a fair attendance.

On Thursday, Saturday, Sunday and Tuesday, July 6th, 7th, 8th and 10th, the favorite improvisatrice, Miss Jennie B. Hagan, spoke to large audiences, followed by Mrs. Brown Cutler Anthony and Mr. Wallace with spirit delineations.

On Saturday and Sunday, July 14th and 15th, Dr. H. P. Fairfield of Rockland, Me., gave us several of his characteristic lectures, replete with Bible facts and proofs of Spiritualism. He held the large audience almost intact, frequent applause being awarded his many happy, humorous, and sometimes pathetic, points.

J. Frank Baxter, the scholar and songster, gave two interesting lectures, with music and splendid tests of spirit presence. The tests were very convincing, and the large gathering much pleased, their pleasure manifesting itself by applause.

The pleasing lecturer, Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, was with us Sunday last; he was greeted with a large and appreciative audience.

The managers have provided a very fine orchestra, under leadership of Mr. Rudolf Thaler, who, with the choir of the First Association, render charming and delightful music. Mr. Smiley, cornet soloist, and Prof. Silberman on the zither, being very attractive. Our quartette with their sweet songs cause us to forget awhile the cares of life. During week-day evenings, the large pavilion is used for hops. Several fancy dress hops and entertainments have been held. Mr. Benner is director of amusements.

The managers have also a Cornet Band, which plays every Sunday.

Free public circles have been and will continue to be held during the camping season.

The Trenton Association, as also Eureka Association, hold circles every Sunday. Mrs. Faust, medium for the latter, is very satisfactory.

About one hundred families are now encamped here in cottages and tents.

Bro. John Barisly has elaborately painted his West View Cottage with the national colors.

Bro. Bronson has had several neat cottages erected at the West End for accommodation of new comers.

Bro. Coles's handsome brick cottage "Ida May," also Hudelburger's "Luray" Cottage, present a beautiful appearance.

Evergreen Cottage of Bro. Morel is being enlarged.

Sister Doll's cottage has been elevated and enlarged.

Mrs. Danforth has had erected a neat cottage and resides here.

Mrs. Nevins has also a new cottage.

Bro. Zeigler beautifies his pretty cottage during leisure hours.

Pine Cottage has changed hands, and appearance also.

Sister Hewer's new cottage is very fine and comfortable.

The alterations in Bro. Hand's and of Bro. Wilkinson's, as also Bro. Shumway's cottages, are marked, presenting great beauty.

Bro. Lanham and family are summering in Elwood Cottage.

Parkland Cottage has always the latchstring out for campers and visitors.

Mr. Moore and family now occupy Woodbine Cottage.

Bro. Dubois has metamorphised Ivy Cottage, a noted and pleasing change.

Fern Cottage is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Wainwright.

Mrs. Cutler looks very cozy in her new cottage, Lily Cottage.

Sister Wisdom has had a new porch built, presenting a neat appearance.

Bro. Bronson and family occupy Germantown Cottage. It is very fine, large and comfortable.

Capt. Fulmer are still with us, in Rose Cottage.

Bro. Odgen are in their new cottage on East End.

Bro. Marler and wife are at East End in their neat cottage.

The Alva Boat Club have made attractive improvements.

The managers, Bronson, Benner and Thompson, have made great improvements for the comfort of campers and visitors, and being their first year have succeeded in a wonderful degree. If they continue in the same manner, Parkland will soon bloom like a flower garden. May they succeed and keep the grounds for a spiritual camp, the cause of Spiritualism and the cause of humanity, is the desire of a COTTAGER.

Aug. 6th.

Verona Park, Me.

On Friday, Aug. 3d, I left Boston by Steamer Penobscot for Bucksport, and from thence took coach to Verona Park. The panoramic view in passing up the Penobscot River was most beautiful, and was much enjoyed. On arriving at the ground, although one week previous to the opening, I found many early campers already occupying their cottages, and a most cordial reception was received.

Verona Park is situated directly upon the bank of the Penobscot, and in all respects I think it is far superior to any camp-ground I have ever yet visited. The cottages face upon the water, and as all eastern steamers connecting with Bangor, Rockland and other localities are continually passing to and fro, the picture formed is one long to be remembered. These grounds were opened by the Verona Park Association in 1882; at that time, Dr. C. F. Ware was chosen President, and has continuously occupied that position up to the present. He is greatly interested in the prosperity of the organization, and devotes much time and money to make the meetings held at this place a grand success. As an able second he has the services of Mr. R. H. Emery, who works with much ardor to make it pleasant for all visitors.

The season for '88 will open on Sunday, Aug. 12th, with a lecture by Mrs. J. Wentworth, of Knox, Me. She is reputed to be a very clear and pleasant speaker.

In the afternoon Miss M. T. Shelhamer will occupy the platform; as this is to be her first appearance in the Pine Tree State, we bespeak for her a warm reception, together with a large audience to listen to the words offered by her spiritual guides.

The evening will be devoted to conference.

On Sunday, Aug. 19th, Mrs. A. M. Glading, of Philadelphia, will speak, both morning and afternoon. She is a great favorite at this Park—as also is Geo. A. Fuller—both of whom have lectured here upon previous occasions.

Mr. Fuller will deliver two lectures on Sunday, Aug. 27th.

Upon these grounds is an auditorium capable of seating twenty-five hundred people; there is also a fine restaurant, presided over by Capt. Ryder and his estimable wife, who are ready at all times to provide for the wants of the "inner man."

Entertainments will be furnished through the week under the direction of Mr. Geo. Francis, of Manchester, N. H.

A dancing pavilion is another of the many features, and is much enjoyed by the younger portion of the community.

The water that is to be found here in great abundance is pronounced by all to be superior to any in the entire State. One flowing spring, by attaching a hose, will elevate a stream of water fifty feet, and will be utilized in case of fire among the cottages.

The cottages already occupied are the "Forest Home," by Dr. C. F. Ware and family; "Pioneer," by R. H. Emery; "Red, White and Blue," by O. C. Eddy; "Maple Leaf," by Mrs. Stubbs; "Little Linwood," by Jas. Emery; "Augusta," Mrs. Pishon; "Shady Nook," by E. S. Wardwell, editor of the Eastern Star and the Bucksport Clipper (who has many kind words for the BANNER OF LIGHT); "The Latch String," by Levis Tapley; "The Bijou," by J. B. Wheelden; "Elge Cliff," by J. P. Ames; the "Banner," by Mrs. Colcott; "Bay View," by S. Leighton; "Vine," by Henry Hawes.

Mr. Smith of Rockland, A. Colby, Mrs. Colony, Hiram Hathorn and many others have also secured cottages, and will be present.

On Saturday evening a very pleasant company of ladies and gentlemen, comprising R. Emery and wife of Bucksport, Miss Lottie Folsom, Miss Lizzie Emery, May Fifield, Maurice Hervey of Belfast, Milton French of Boston, and E. P. Berthoff of New Jersey, paid a visit to the camp and remained over Sunday; during their brief stay they entertained the campers with fine vocal and instrumental selections. Our wish is that they will come again.

Regrets are expressed that owing to the pressure of editorial duties Luther Colby will not be able to visit camp; but let me assure him that if he should come East he would find warm friends. Many are the kind words I hear whispered of the flying visit paid by the business partner of THE BANNER, Isaac B. Rich.

In closing allow me to say that your humble servant, J. B. Hatch, and C. F. Rand, with their wives, are occupying "Silver Star" Cottage, through the courtesy of Mr. Emery; on Saturday evening, Aug. 11th, it will be formally dedicated, after which they will be glad to receive a call from everybody. The banner of the "Shawmut Lyceum" will be thrown to the breezes that blow from Prospect Mountain, and the latch-string is ever out.

During the services held at Verona I will endeavor to place the State of Maine fully before the readers of THE BANNER—in a camp meeting sense. H.

Niantic, Ct.

The campers are still coming to fill their old places.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Lyman, of Springfield, were here for over Sunday.

Dr. Fisk's cottage is open.

Mrs. Webster is placing her tent in readiness for the accommodation of her friends.

Mrs. J. D. Eagir has several friends with her this week from New Haven.

July 28th the day opened with fine weather; we had a good speaker, and quite a crowd in attendance—a boat having come in from Norwich.

Mrs. Lake in the morning gave us for thought, "The Evolution of Spirit"; in the afternoon, "The Value of Faith"—two splendid discourses. We had a conference in the evening, Mrs. Lake and others participating.

August 1st the Ladies' Aid Society met at Mrs. Dorman's on Pine street; and afterward many of us met at the supper table of our genial friend, Herbert Stearns.

Every Saturday eve is devoted to music and dancing, and for the last two weeks we have greatly enjoyed the musical ability of Mrs. Medbury, who is stopping with our Secretary, R. Stanton.

Sunday, the 5th, the grounds being still damp from recent rain, we met in the pavilion, and J. Clegg Wright discoursed with much eloquence in the forenoon. In the afternoon we journeyed to the grove and heard a lecture from Mr. W. on the "Growth and decay of man's religious beliefs." The subject was handled with intelligence and power. The boat Osprey from Norwich, having brought many passengers, and other strangers being in the camp, it is evident that quite a number heard their first lecture on the spiritual platform on this occasion.

Jehial Williams, the veteran of many years, is here occasionally; he tells us his loved companion is on the border land, nearly passed over. He puts a cheerful face in the foreground, but we know how dear she has been to him, and can read his sorrow behind its gentle mask.

Leroy Whiting and wife, from Winsted, Ct., are at his father's cottage; and in company with him Waldo Curtiss, wife and daughter, and an old acquaintance of ours whom we did not expect to greet here.

[For Aug. 6th—evening—an entertainment of readings and music, conducted by Miss Bidwell, Mrs. Medbury, Miss Newcomb and Mr. Jennings, of New London, was announced.]

In mediums we have Mrs. Case, of Berlin, Ct., stopping at the Alden Jones Cottage; Mr. and Mrs. Congdon, and others.

Dr. Fiske's family are sitting for full form development, and have, it is stated, some striking physical manifestations. MRS. N. H. FOGG.

Sunapee Lake Camp-Meeting.

Tuesday, July 31st, 2 o'clock P. M.—Dr. Storer in Chair—session opened with song by quartette, followed by an invocation by Mrs. E. B. Craddock of Concord; a solo by Mr. Stedman of Boston, and a lecture by Mrs. Craddock; closed with a song by quartette.

7:30, Evening Conference. Meeting opened by singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," joined in by the congregation; the speakers were Dr. Storer, Mrs. Yeaw, Mrs. Chandler, under control of Father Murray. The name of Hannah Blodgett was given by Mrs. Chandler; Francis Goward was described by Mrs. Kelser; the name of Zephaniah Goward was given, and both recognized by Dr. Storer; the names of John Holbrook, Ephraim Chase and Mary Clement, formerly Mary Cutter, were also given and recognized. Further remarks were made by Mrs. Waite, session closing with a song.

Wednesday, Aug. 1st, 2 o'clock P. M., exercises commenced with a song by the quartette; reading of a poem entitled "The Way to Heaven," and an invocation by Mrs. Yeaw, followed by a solo by Mrs. Nettie Wentworth; Mrs. Yeaw then gave a fine lecture—her last for the season. A song by the choir closed the exercises.

Wednesday evening, at 7:30 P. M., conference was opened with a song, followed by the reading by Dr. Storer of communications written through his hand during the day. The names of Sarah and Bela Nettleton, Newport, N. H., were given by Madam Snow and recognized; Achsa Sprague and Thomas Gales Forster were given by Mrs. Chandler; remarks were made by Mrs. Addie M. Stevens, Mrs. Waite, Colonel B. P. Burpee, Mrs. Yeaw and Dr. Storer. Closed with a song by the choir.

Thursday, Aug. 2d, 2 o'clock P. M., President Storer in the chair; singing by the quartette; reading of a poem, composed by Achsa Sprague in spirit-life, by Dr. C. H. Harding, of Boston, followed by a duet by Mr. and Mrs. Osborne; a lecture by Dr. Harding, who gave also several psychometric readings, said by the parties to be correct. Closed with a song by the choir.

On Thursday evening the weekly dance at the Pavilion was well attended.

On Friday, Aug. 3d, at 2 P. M., a Fact Meeting was in order; opened with a song by Quartette; the speakers were Dr. Storer, Mrs. Waite and Dr. D. N. Brown; another song, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," was followed by Mrs. L. A. Sturtevant of Lebanon, N. H., and Mrs. Chandler, relating very interesting facts.

Evening, 7:30, Conference opened with a song, followed by remarks from Dr. Storer, Mrs. Waite, Mrs. Sturtevant, Mrs. Chandler, Mrs. Addie M. Stevens and J. S. Sanders.

Saturday, Aug. 4th, the use of the grounds was given to the Grange for a picnic. In the evening the regular entertainment took place and was well patronized.

Sunday, Aug. 5th, 10:30 A. M., the session opened with a song by the quartette, followed by the reading of a poem by J. William Fletcher; a duet by Misses Stedman and Johnson, and a fine lecture by Mr. Fletcher. After a song by quartette Mr. Fletcher gave the names of fourteen spirits presenting themselves to his vision, most of whom were recognized by the audience.

Afternoon, 1:30, meeting opened with a solo by Mr. Johnston, followed by a poem by Dr. George A. Fuller, of Dover, Mass., entitled "Progress," and an invocation; a duet by Mr. and Mrs. Osborne was next in order, when Dr. Fuller gave the lecture of the afternoon—a splendid and practical discourse. After a solo by Mr. Stedman, Edgar W. Emerson took the platform and gave the names of twenty-one spirits—mentioning also eleven other spirits attending a lady present, without giving the names of all.

The attendance to-day has been very much larger than that of last Sunday. The weather has been fine for the past week and the meetings interesting.

It is expected there will be a much larger attendance the present week. N. A. LULL, Secretary.

Cassadaga has had good seasons before, but this year the camp is surpassing all its previous records. It is believed that there are more persons here for the purpose of investigating the phenomena than ever before. The slate-writing mediums are kept busy. Mr. W. A. Mansfield and others being in especial demand. Hon. A. B. Richmond, author of "Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report," has been here several days. He will write an appendix to his late book, and is collecting material for it now. Several gentlemen of the legal profession have come here through the influence of Mr. Richmond, and are deeply interested in what they have witnessed. A man who has tried ninety three murder cases must be an expert in sifting evidence, and when such an one declares in favor of the phenomena of Spiritualism his opinion has weight with those who know him.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan is very popular here. At a gathering held to give the servants at the Grand Hotel an opportunity of learning something of Spiritualism, Miss Jennie was presented with a purse of thirty dollars by admiring friends.

Library Hall, a very pleasant building, erected during the past year, was dedicated with appropriate exercises last Wednesday evening. A. B. Richmond, Esq., was chairman, and addresses were made by Cora L. V. Richmond, Jennie B. Hagan and Walter Howell. The occasion was much enjoyed by those present. The building contains a library, lecture and séance rooms, and meets a want long felt by the Association.

Friday evening there was an entertainment in the amphitheatre, given by the Children's Progressive Lyceum. There was a good attendance, and the programme was highly interesting.

Everybody is having a good time. There are hops on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, participated in by young and old. The best of order prevails at all times. No liquor is sold on or near the grounds, and there is nothing for the marshal to do.

The practice of holding outdoor meetings is becoming very popular, and deservedly so. The fresh, free breezes that sway the tree tops are symbolic of the fresh breath of inspiration that comes to men when assembled in Nature's temple. In these quiet woodland places one feels that the God of all spirits is indeed present, and we are moved to say with Bryant:

> "Thou art here. Thou fillest
> The solitude! Thou art in the soft winds
> That run along the summits of these trees
> In music: thou art in the cooler breath
> That, from the inmost darkness of the place,
> Comes, scarcely felt.
> Here is continual worship. Nature here,
> In the tranquility that thou dost love,
> Enjoys thy presence."

Haslett Park, Mich.

Friday morning we opened our camp with a fine conference meeting.

In the afternoon we all marched in a body to Mrs. Knapp's cottage, and dedicated it. Mrs. Baade, of Capac, delivered the address. She was followed by several others, and the occasion was one of great interest.

Saturday evening we dedicated Mrs. Merrill's new tent. Mr. and Mrs. Lillie had arrived. Mr. Lillie sang, and Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Davis (of Chicago) assisted in the interesting services.

Sunday dawned bright and clear, and with it came a large crowd of people, all intent on being present at the dedication of the Auditorium. The opening speech was made by G. H. Brooks, the presiding officer, who reviewed the work of the past camp, announced what was intended for the present season, and welcomed one and all to the ground and its privileges.

Mrs. Lillie (under control) then proceeded to dedicate the auditorium in the most practical way——and that was by ra

Appropriate Answers to Superficial Questions.

BY PHŒNIX.*

Delivered at Chicago, Sunday, June 3d, 1888, through the Medial Instrumentality of

MRS. CORA L. V. RICHMOND.

When Jesus was asked if they should render tribute unto Cæsar, he answered according to what would seem to be the greatest wisdom in a worldly sense: "Render under Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

In every instance where the Jews, whether Scribes or Pharisees, sought to ask him questions for the purpose of entanglement, he either answered them in parables, or answered in such a way that they could take no exception to what he said. The reason of this was evident: the purpose of the questioners was to make him amenable to the law; and when the final hour came it was absolutely without offense that he stood condemned before them. The truth is always so treated in whatever form it appears, whether in the person of Jesus as a sacred life, or whether in Socrates as a leader in philosophy, who, on being asked by one who was listening: "Why may we not all have demons?" replied: "If you all had demons, would you listen to those demons?" The demon in that instance was the spiritual or prompting power—the communing angel. It is easy to ask why every one may not have an angel, but is it easy, think you, to answer the question? Would you listen to the voice if it was yours?

Spiritualism is no exception to this rule. From the number of questions that are asked by the thoughtless, superficial minds, even by those who seem to have some perception of things, one would think that the only object in presenting Spiritualism to the world was just to answer these idle questions. I call them idle, because the slightest thoughtfulness would make their answers apparent.

Why may not all be mediums? one asks, as though that were an argument against or concerning those who are mediums. I cannot tell you why all may not be mediums, but I know that all are not manifestly so; because all are not, it makes more valuable the gift when it does come; nor is it because any are especially favored, for the gift comes to all classes and conditions. That all are not mediums must be for some wise and just reason that we may not understand; but because all are not mediums shall we deny that any are? As well deny that there are musicians, artists, poets, philosophers. Why are not all successful? Why do not all have the gifts that I have named? If one may sing and another is silent, is that any reason why we shall not listen to the singer? Or if one may paint a picture and thousands of others have no conception of color, is that any reason why we should not look at the picture or recognize its beauty? When there are diversities of those gifts—as they are termed—when there are different degrees and qualifications of humanity everywhere, if a power aside from man expresses itself through an individual, independently of that individual, it is not the province of men nor spirits to always declare why certain ones have a gift and others have not; the important question before that question is answered is: does the gift exist at all? When found to exist it should be investigated. The true investigator, instead of turning away because he or she has not the gift, seeks more studiously to discover what the gift is intended to bring. Shall we stop our ears and not listen to the nightingale because all birds are not nightingales? Shall we fail to discover beauty in the lily or the rose, because all blossoms are not lilies or roses? Assuredly not. Nor is the gift so rare of spiritual mediumship that one need think that it is a choice treasure bestowed only upon the few; or like the orthodox plan of salvation only for the elect. Certain mediums are chosen; but they are chosen very impartially. Sometimes mediumship is a pathway not of roses, but of thorns. In all instances there are difficulties to overcome; things that beset the way, trials and adversities that ordinarily people would not usually encounter, unless, indeed, they are devoted to a cause.

A lady in extremely fashionable life once said to the speaker while he was still a denizen of the mortal form: "Why cannot I see spirits?" I said, "Madam, did you see the glory of the sunset-sky last evening?" "No, I was making calls." "Did you observe the beauty of Jupiter last night, quite late; it must have been when you were driving home from the opera?" "No, I was too sleepy." Later I asked her, "Have you not a longing to see that beautiful picture from Italy, painted by an American artist?" "No, I have no time; in fact, I do not love art." I was no longer in doubt as to why she did not see spirits. Certainly there could be no time in the giddy whirl of fashionable life; there could be no vision to eyes that were sleepy with dissipation; there could be no perception to a mind not touched by the beauties of sunset, the glory of the stars, or even of human art. And then I thought, supposing she could see spirits, would she know what it meant? And yet there have been people in superficial life, there have been kings mid the glitter and possessions of kingdoms and thrones, who have suddenly seen spirits, and to whom it brought no import of good save that of an awakened conscience; though they had eyes and conscience to see, they were unwilling to see. The lady of the world and the king upon his throne are not under the control of human beings; but according to their state and their needs so must they receive.

Another lady was in deep despair because her only daughter had passed from her mortal sight and had not received the sacrament of the church—had not confessed acknowledgment of the saving grace of the blood of Christ. The mother was nearly wild, almost to madness; in the hour of her deepest agony this child appeared to her, clothed in the raiment of the spirit life, white as an angel—because her life was pure; there was no need to tell that she was not lost (the mother was nearly insane, fearing that her child was lost). When this vision came, her heart and mind were healed. I understood then that the gift is according to the greatest need.

Another superficial question is: "If Spiritualism is true, as it is claimed, why do not the great men of the world—the learned, the wise—receive it? especially why does it not come to the clergy, who are teaching spiritual things?" And this question is asked in all seriousness by those who have read the history of the church and the history of the world. My dear sir, or madam, who ask this question, have you ever known the truth, manifestly new in its presentation, to be accepted by the great in either science, literature, art or religion? If so, Christ should have been received in the temples, instead of being derided, scorned and finally put to death; if so, Galileo should have been welcomed to places of power, instead of being persecuted for the announcement that "the world moves"; if so, each inventor should have been the favored of kings and princes, and the great of the land, instead of starving in prison cells and leaving the earthly life unrecognized, while perhaps a century or a thousand years later the world is benefited by his invention; if so, every principle in scientific research and every accepted truth in ethics should have had no struggle; there would have been no martyrs recorded upon the scroll of history, no blood-stained crosses, no terrible prisons to reveal their secrets of woe, and no horrors of the inquisition.

The great? Why, they are too busy with their own greatness, and having crystallized the thought of their own portion of truth, worship it, how can they turn to see another thought, that will disturb the lines of light and rays of that surpassing crystal which they call truth? Even if what they worship is true, minds are not so manifold in quality or diversified in gifts as to turn readily in many directions of investigation. If a man is an astronomer, he is no better qualified to judge of spiritual things because he observes the planets; if a man is a good mathematician, he cannot, therefore, tell any better where the spiritual world may be located, or the geometrical distance between two thoughts; nor, indeed, if one is successful in his experiments in chemistry, can he any the better analyze or know the qualities of the human mind or thought; the subtle essence of the power which man calls spirit, and which no chemist has ever been able to claim to analyze. If a man is a close observer or student of nature in physical phenomena, he is not any better qualified from that fact to judge of the manifestations of spirit power; they are of an unusual kind; he is thrown off his guard if he is not in his own realm; while he may be a thoroughly scientific man in the direction of his own pursuit, he is a babe in spiritual things, in occult force; if a man is a good lawyer, he is no better judge of what constitutes spiritual evidence from that fact; quite the reverse, I should think, would be true; the very atmosphere of the usual, so-called, courts of justice, and the usual experiences of those active in judicial tribunals, do not qualify one to judge of the fine qualities of spiritual things, nor of the nature of psychological thought. If the fact of being a skilled lawyer gave man preëminence in the matter of judging of evidence, then trial by jury is a sublime farce (unfortunately it is many times); but the average human being is better able to judge of the average kind's of evidence than the judges in your courts. This is why trial by jury was instituted in England. If it were carried out in the same spirit here, unquestionably every man could be tried by a jury of his peers. If the question before the court is a point of law, the judge must decide; but if it is a point of evidence, the less a man knows about law the better he is qualified to judge of the evidence, for he will not judge upon technicality, but from the standpoint of humanity.

This is precisely the reason that Spiritualism reaches more minds among the average human beings; while there are a sufficiently large number of professional and scientific minds, in acknowledged intellectual pursuits, who have investigated Spiritualism, it properly reaches the masses of the people because they are better prepared to judge, better qualified to receive it, are not hedged around with a wall of egotism, they have no professional reputation to preserve, nor anything that in itself excludes the light of testimony. As for the clergy, unfortunately the gift of inspiration has passed out of their vocabulary; they have been instructed, and they instruct others, to believe that the gifts of the spirit have ceased; that nearly two thousand years ago was the last evidence of spiritual gifts upon earth. What they do with the gifts that have accompanied the Reformation and other great religious struggles, you must ask them. It is asserted as a fact that they do not believe in the inspiration in the pulpit, yet the only successful clergy throughout the length and breadth of Christendom are those who are inspired, and whose congregations believe them to be inspired by the spirit of God. Manifestly there is inconsistency somewhere. May it not be true that the gifts of the spirit in this modern work come outside of the temple for the same reason that truth always does? If the righteous are within the temple they do not need it; it is the ungodly and those who do not confess righteousness that need the gifts of the spirit. If those in the temple, are hedged around with bigotry, are too much clothed in denominational raiment to perceive or confess the gifts of the spirit, then it is well that they shall come outside of any temple or any denomination, that all in turn may perceive them; every one may turn from his shrine and altar of especial worship, and perceive how universal a truth becomes that is not in its inception hedged around with denominational protection. Supposing Spiritualism had come to the Baptists, then what would the Methodists have done? Or had it come to the Presbyterians, what would the Episcopalians have done? Had it come to any denomination less orthodox than these it would have been ostracised as it has been. So the power governing the movement knew that the crystallized lines of theological thought are not the place for a new truth. As well expect the Vatican will suddenly advocate the freedom of individual conscience as to expect the lines of denominational creeds will be sufficiently set aside to admit that which has been denied for hundreds of years. When it shall be forced into the churches from outside pressure, as many scientific truths have been, there will be acknowledgment, never fear. Like the tide, which does not suddenly flow into the low lands in one great sweep, as it does upon the seashore, but gradually creeps in through the bayous and marshlands until the water backs up slowly to the places that need the high tide, so this truth, from the great surging in of spirit-life, will probably find its way at last into the strongholds of theology; but that is not material, if the whole world is suffused with it beforehand; if mankind perceive it as a whole, if it is broadcast among the populace, then these fortresses of spiritual strength will yield at last. Your speaker thinks that such is the intention of the powers that guard and govern the movement, that it shall not come to these theological strongholds at first, but with the testimony of many people, of simple hearts, lives and minds, who need it in their daily walks, who have individual experiences, and predicate their belief upon those instead of upon authority.

But, says one: "Why cannot those who are free in religion, yet whose names are eminent and would be accepted in the world as authority, acknowledge their belief, and then the world would have some authority?" The answer is contained in the question. Spiritualism wants no authority. If it is to be accepted at all it must be on the basis of its truth; it neither requires the hoary head of age, nor the greatness of a powerful name, nor the upbuilding of honored institutions, nor the propagandism of organized and crystallized strength to prove its truth. As said before: the greatest chemist is not so well able to judge whether your child, who has departed from your sight, gives you a message from the spirit-world as you are; he has nothing in his crucible, however closely he may question, that makes answer concerning the dead; he has nothing that will reproduce your darling with golden hair and laughing eyes, or show the ringlets of shining hues and the starry face; love alone, and that supreme alchemy that conquers death, can do this, and between your life and her's there is but one interpreter; it is this intelligence and consciousness that constitutes between you two the sign of recognition, whenever and wherever and under whatever circumstances you may meet.

If the chemist has any power whatever he can only say such and such are the atomic vibrations, but how they are produced I cannot tell; and never, from the days of the ancient Hermetic philosophers, has the essence of the mind, the element of the power of thought and purpose of absolute intelligence been analyzed, nor even then. The substances of the earth may be traced to their very last verge, and there man may pause upon the borders of that land or realm where matter becomes nothing. but of spirit chemistry and alchemy have no knowledge. A man may be eminent as a naturalist; his nature reaches from man, in his physical organism, down to the molecule, or primordial cell; but he never presumes, as a naturalist, to tell you the difference between spirit as embodied in man and an excarnated spirit; and he may be a naturalist for a thousand years, and, as a naturalist, he will never be able to tell you more; but if he shall have added to his knowledge something of spiritual truth and the evidence that comes from the spiritual world, he may be as well able as any who have received that evidence to declare concerning it.

Every man is authority concerning what he knows, whether he be an eminent astronomer or whether he be a day laborer whose every hour is precious because he must win him his daily bread; and as to man's being a daily laborer, why, there are many minds among the daily laborers that have better observation, are more close students, their judgment more perfect, they are more critical, and their intuition fresher and purer because they have not the superficial education that blinds men's eyes. Your speaker has been brought in contact with a great many men who were struggling with some invention, but had not, perhaps, the requisite skill essential to its arrangment, but in thought and principle were so correct that no man trained in ordinary mechanics could possibly fail to discover it when the inventor explained it; yet I venture to declare that no man trained in a professional way could have perceived the principle, if it was not born of his intuition. I have had many of these men laboring with me who would attempt to explain to me some principle which, perhaps, had been revealed to them in the night in a dream, or which during the hours of labor they had felt trembling for expression; with a few questions I could arrive at their meaning, and lo! there would be an invention. It is true a little more skill, a little more learning might have enabled them to know the meaning of what they dreamed and formulate it; but I dread that kind of skill and education which formulates intuition out of mind; I dread that kind of eminence which places a man in so exalted a human position that he is beyond receiving the impressions of the sky; therefore, of the two I should say take the testimony of the man who is not conscious of being eminent; it is worth a great deal more.

Then we come to still further questions: these, of course, are among Spiritualists as well as among skeptics, and, because they are, I speak of them freely. "If spirits can do this, why can they not do that?" one says. "If they can move a table or a chair, why can they not move a house?" There is no evidence to show that they cannot. If it were necessary, important, or for the benefit of the world, undoubtedly they could; but the moving of a chair, table, musical instrument or a human body is not to show what they can do, but it is to show that they do something, and the object is they wish to attract your attention for that which shall follow. The knock on the door of your dwelling indicates that a friend is there; he does not take a sledge-hammer because he does not think it necessary; but if your house was on fire and he wanted to get in to save your lives he would probably break the door down. If it became imminent, as it might be if spirits were all of an orthodox turn of thought, they would break the doors of your human mind down, violently enter and take possession, and you would most likely see your dwellings moving and such singular things occurring; as it is, there have been strange things going on, haunted houses and other tokens (many houses are haunted now that were not haunted once). The fact of haunted houses seems to have become epidemic, and breaks out in unusual times and under unusual circumstances; this is only an indication of an independent power; but if it came to order, if you could command the spirit-world and they obey, would it not prove what our friends the Theosphists claim—that the spirit-world is under human government, instead of Spiritualism being under the government of the spirit-world? Because no human being has been able to declare to a table: move, and it inevitably moves for him; because no one has ever been known to prove that he could individually control these manifestations in any of their many phases, is proof of the independent nature of the intelligence guiding them. While a man, or a woman, or a child, may be a medium, none of these ever know to a certainty that any manifestation will occur. Say what you will of doubting because the intelligence will not do as you say; we know the nature, and you do, of the human mind sufficiently well to know that the intelligence may once or twice manifest a response to your intelligence, but should it always echo your thought, always obey your command, always fulfill your desire, there would be no evidence of an independent power. Instead of this, a table moves in response to your question; if you command it, it stands still; if you request it, it may rise; if you desire it to be heavy, it will be light; if you desire it to be light, it will very likely be so heavy that it cannot be lifted; proving utter independence of the will or wish of those present; setting at naught all theories concerning the power of magnetism, of the human will, of mind-reading, or, that which people do not in the least understand, electricity, psychic force, odylic force of any kind. Acting separately and independently, yet always yielding where there is need, that intelligence governs. The spirit-world expresses itself at such times and places and under such circumstances as are usually unexpected, and because unexpected cannot be amenable to the charge of being governed by the will, volition, or individual wish of mankind.

But deeper and with causes far more spiritual than these, humanity like a vast nursery of children wishes something to-day, another thing to-morrow, grows weary of the flowers and casts them aside, of the toys and playthings that amuse but for a moment. Spiritualism as a movement only gives that which answers the present need. Planchette was the wonder of a day, but as it soon became evident that it was only used as a pastime, as an amusement, the spiritual power was withdrawn from it. Other phases, like knockings, moving of tables, moving of chairs and other bodies, had been for a time a source of amusement and the entertaining of a company. To a certain extent this was allowed, but when it became evident that it was only for frivolity all this was withdrawn, and reserved only for those who sought earnestly for the gifts of the spirits. So of every gift, and all toys and playthings you may have; but if toys and playthings become the serious business of life, they will be removed a little beyond your reach, carefully preserved as a treasure that you may one day grow to attain. The daily needs meanwhile will not be neglected.

Some one says: "Well, it seems to be only the sorrowful, and the aged, and the infirm, and the peculiar, and the idiosyncratic, who are Spiritualists." And is that a serious charge? If it were true that the sorrowful, and the infirm, and the peculiar, and those having idiosyncrasies were absolutely its only followers, should it not be worshiped and praised by all mankind: that the sorrowful should find comfort, and the infirm could find healing, and that the peculiar could find something to answer their needs, and those who have idiosyncrasies could find that which sustains; ought not man to perpetually bless that which blesses the unfortunate of the world? But it is not true; for we see little children as gladly turning to the light of Spiritualism as the gray-haired sire: in fact, were it not withheld from them, if the parents who are believers did their duty, if they breathed it in the daily prayer and teaching, children in their very nature would be found to be Spiritualists from the beginning; to them death would have no terror; to them the spirit-world and the messages from the spirit-world would be their native atmosphere. If you do not find it so in your households, it is because you have been afraid and have not trusted your children with the messages they should have received from the skies. Then it is true, also, that the young invariably recognize the truth of Spiritualism; but alas! the young are sensitive to ridicule. If it is a fact that in school, in society, in the various places where the young people meet for enjoyment, Spiritualism is mentioned with aversion and ridicule, of course these young people will feel it. It is your duty to make society, to afford opportunity and entertainment, and to see to it that they are not obliged to meet with this rebuff, and scorning, and have opportunity to enjoy their religion. But if the young do not need it, if those in full strength pursuing life in daily ways do not need it, if the vigorous man prosperous in all pursuits of daily life does not need it, if the woman whose life is in her home, or in society, or in charitable enterprises, does not need it to-day, there always comes an hour when the man of the world is bereft, when a child is taken from his dwelling when the companion of his life may be received, when some one dear to him may have crossed the threshold that divides him from the other world; he needs Spiritualism then; and though he may have fought against it for years, openly or secretly he seeks the shrine of communion and wishes to know where his loved ones have gone.

Happy people are not so numerous, people having no cares are not so abundant that one can afford to despise a truth that brings comfort to the sorrowful and joy to those who are unhappy. All hail the light of Spiritualism! If it be the religion of the unfortunate; if it supplies a place for those who are dead; if it removes the sadness from the eyes of the mourner; if it turns the agony of any sufferer toward the realm of spiritual strength, all hail! Then shall it prosper, then shall the light be that which is most needed in the world, therefore it must prevail, and then all superficial barriers will melt away, for the sneer must fade from the lips that are mourning, and the heart of the strong man must melt when he finds that his loved ones are restored.

As a last and final question, when one meets you face to face who have knowledge and inquires: "What can I do to become a Spiritualist?" What do you do to become anything? If you want to be a mathematician you study arithmetic first and then the higher mathematics; but unless you are a genius there is no power in earth or heaven that will force the mathematics into your mind, or give it to you without corresponding growth or effort. If you are a genius you already possess it. If you want to become a Spiritualist there are two ways, and one is the correct way. The false way is to seek, or to claim to do so, in the spirit of captiousness; to go everywhere and see nothing that convinces you; to hear everything and hear nothing that satisfies you; because, of course, as you wish to become a Spiritualist you must criticise everything that is said or done, and must see to it that you are not deceived (above all things that is important). That is the false way. He who places himself in antagonism to a truth and then declares that he wishes to believe it, unconsciously falsifies, for he prevents the very evidence which he seeks from entering his mind. I ask no one to investigate Spiritualism unless he or she is able to bring to that investigation a fair mind, an honest and sincere desire for truth, as great a trust in humanity as he or she would bring in any ordinary pursuit of life. I ask no one even to receive a message unless one is able to receive it with at least the same degree of impartiality that one would receive a message from a stranger. I know that under the peculiar claim of being a spiritual message there is a new appeal made. I also know, what you must know, that the whole line of human history is filled with evidences of spiritual power; and the very fact of the question, the seeking, the wishing to know, is in itself almost an answer to its question. But if a man be so constituted that he cannot receive the ordinary evidence, then it is no wonder that he is perplexed, bewildered, and rendered dissatisfied. Then he must wait, for time is long. Years are nothing compared to eternity, and the truth that is in the world, that which is as plain as daylight to many people, cannot always remain to you unknown. Have patience; do not force your minds to endeavor to understand, nor even to endeavor to receive the evidence; such evidence as is needed must be somewhere, and, indeed, with patience and growth from within, that evidence will come to you. I claim that if you are so constituted that you can be an impartial investigator, you may be able to investigate and receive this truth at once; but if you are not so constituted, if the mind differs from those who are ready, wait until the message comes, until a great sorrow prepares the way, until, like the rock that was smitten in the wilderness, something has overtaken you that makes the mind more ready to receive, or until by gradual unfoldment of perception and growth the spiritual power becomes more and more evident to your mind, then this truth will be clear to you. No one sees all the colors in the sky at once. The artist is gradually educated to perceive the tones and tints though he may have seen them before; he has spiritual perception, but is not capable, mentally, of declaring them except with long training, and although there are thousands of different shades he will simplify them and tell you their constituents and arrange them in accordance with their belongings. Not at once do the variations of different sounds greet the ear, the consciousness of the constituent parts of music cannot be attained at once. The child may readily understand the simple melody, but when it comes to the complicated harmony, and vast numbers of the musical scales, only the skilled ear can detect the differences in sound. In that mysterious little clicking of the telegraphic instrument, which to an unskilled ear has no meaning, the operator in the next room can hear a message and can declare it to you; his ear is accustomed to hear and his mind readily understands.

To you who are untutored in spiritual ways, I would say: lean toward the spirit-world if you would know of it, turn your thoughts thither, and as surely as the tints and tones in the sky and earth will yield to the understanding of one who is an artist, so will the knowledge of the skies open to your understanding. It is there, the evidence is there, the truth is all around you and the manifestations are upon the earth. It may not rest with the human mind whether the time shall be brief or long; whether it shall seem as years or be but as a day; whether the pathway shall be arduous or simple by which one reaches the height; but so potent and all-powerful is the truth that it not only contains the answer in itself to all these questionings of the human mind, but it is continually declaring itself and leaving you to adjust it to your daily needs and daily pain, and all the time, like the light of the sun, shining upon you, ready for your acceptance whenever you are ready to receive it.

THE DIFFERENCE.

They stood at the door of Justice—
Two women with heads bowed down;
And one was dressed in rustling silk,
And one in a tattered gown.

One clad in the height of fashion,
The other one ragged and torn;
The former inspiring sympathy,
The latter contempt and scorn.

"And why are they here?" I questioned,
"Why are they in such disgrace:
The shrinking form in the tattered gown
And that in the silk and lace?"

"They are here," said the grim policeman—
And a frown his visage wore—
"For stealing whenever they get a chance,
In a fancy dry goods store."

The one in rags was sentenced
To a year's incarceration
In the common jail; the one in silk
Was "taken on probation."

"Now, why should this be so?" I asked;
The answer was terse and brief:
"The lady's a kleptomaniac,
The one in rags a thief."

Mount Pleasant Camp.

A pleasant trip up the Mississippi from St. Louis landed me Saturday morning, 28th ult., at the foot of this tree-covered hill (not by any means a mountain) in the city of Clinton, Ia., the business part of which is about one mile from the camp-ground, which is included in the city limits and under municipal control—hence, as a property, to be sometime very valuable.

The Camp lies west of the city, which is on the west bank of the river, hence we have no water on the grounds, except from the wells and sky, from both of which it is good when it comes. The company, or camp stockholders, own about twenty acres, and most of it studded with trees, but many of the oaks dying out are being replaced with elms and maples.

There are about fifty cottages now built—and more going up—and twice as many tents. A large and convenient pavilion, suitable for dancing, (and for meetings in bad weather,) is to be found in this camp, and it is well patronized by the dancers from the camp and the city, who take advantage of coming under the instruction of Prof. A. B. Severance, of Milwaukee, who is one of the best teachers of this art.

On Sunday, the 29th of July, our meetings opened with an able and eloquent discourse by Prof. Loveland, the President of the society, followed in the afternoon by Warren Chase, who seemed to be known to nearly all of the old campers and Spiritualists, although he had never been here before.

In the evening Moses Hull dissected T. DeWitt Talmage and his sermons, with the Bible for a scalpel, and left him in fragments, as may be supposed. Moses could do it if any one could.

The first three days the weather was intensely warm here, and little could be done, so that I sighed for Onset and its cool breezes, as the heat affected me seriously, but Wednesday brought us a windy thunder shower; we all felt better, and I was glad to be here to meet once more many old-time friends, and see this new location, as I have those of New England.

It is a place of promise, with good prospects of success, especially financially; but I cannot say I like it for a camp-ground, as I do those of New England, located on the beautiful and useful bodies of water that supply bathing and breezes for the campers—as are Onset and Queen City Park and Sunapee, and the two on the Penobscot; even Lake Pleasant is beautiful when compared with one where there is no body of water in sight.

We have excellent meetings here; the best of speaking, and audiences and earnest souls anxiously seeking for more evidence and knowledge of the spirit-life; but the speakers need no praise, especially from my pen.

If I should live and visit any camps next year, it must be in New England, where my childhood's home was (if I had any), and where my heart still lingers in its yearnings. WARREN CHASE.

Original Essay.

"EARLY INSPIRATIONS."

BY A. E. NEWTON.

This is the title of an address of more than ordinary interest and significance recently given before the American Institute of Instruction at its annual meeting at Newport, R. I., by Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth, of Boston. Its significance is enhanced by the fact that Mr. Butterworth is editor of the Youth's Companion, probably the oldest and most widely circulated publication of its class in this country—it having attained, according to common report, a weekly issue of upward of four hundred thousand copies. It is, moreover, perhaps the least exceptionable in its moral tone of any caterer to juvenile taste that is before the public, while its general aim evidently is to keep in substantial accord with the popular religious sentiment of the time, as might be expected from the fact that its original founder and conductor for years was the venerable Deacon Willis, of the Orthodox persuasion, and former editor of the "Boston Recorder."

The object of Mr. Butterworth in this address is to set forth the importance of heeding, cultivating and developing the inspirations of youth. The notable thing about it is that, in opposition to the notion of the popular theology that divine inspiration was a miracle of a past age, and wholly ceased eighteen hundred years ago, this address recognizes its perpetual existence as a law of life, and its high value as "a revelation of heaven to youth." The address furnishes a fresh illustration of the extent to which the ideas of Spiritualism are permeating the general mind of the cultured classes. The definition given by Mr. B. of the nature and method of inspiration, to be sure, is somewhat defective and confused; but its possibility, its reality, its value, and its need, are strongly portrayed.

"Inspiration," he said, "is some inborn faculty of clear sight, the consciousness of the soul's calling and mission, and is the revelation of heaven to youth. The world itself received it in childhood, when poets and prophets, the creators of palaces and temples and blossoming marbles, beheld the chariot of a goddess in every drifting cloud. Every youth is conscious of special impulses to worthy action, as of the visit of an unknown power to him in his receptive moments, when the soul rises superior to itself. He begins to be haunted by ideals of a better life."

Instead of being "some inborn faculty of clear sight," or "the consciousness of the soul's calling and mission," inspiration more properly is, to quote the definition of Worcester, "the infusing of influence or ideas into the mind by a superior power." This definition is evidently correct, from the derivation of the word—in and spirare, meaning literally to breathe in. The faculty or capacity which enables one to be inspired, should not be confounded with either the ideas or truths that are inbreathed, or the "clear sight, the consciousness of the soul's mission," that may result from such inbreathing.

However, the important points presented are, first, the reality of inspiration, as a common human experience, attainable in our day, and accessible to every youth; and secondly, the value of that inspiration as a guide and incentive to noble living, and as "the revelation of heaven to youth"—in other words, its real divineness. Both these are unmistakably recognized by Mr. Butterworth, though counter to the popular theology.

After citing a number of historical examples of youthful inspiration, and its outworking in enterprises and institutions promotive of human good, Mr. Butterworth justly affirms:

"The men who have led and enlightened mankind have been those who have seen the value of their early inspirations and held them as crowns, and placed them above every other consideration in life. The great eras of history have been the creations of such inspired minds, and the great teachers of the world have been those who have taught the youth to follow their early inspirations.

"The mind of youth, like the shepherd on Mount Latmos, is a temple haunted by ideals of a noble life. Coleridge says that 'All men are Shakspeares in their dreams.' Ideals, if followed, are new creations; they are life. Every grand structure of art was once a dream. The Cathedral of Cologne is but a crystallized thought. All achievement is but the following of a divine picture of the soul, as we may believe all matter is but the thoughts of God in the past. The whole of life is spiritual, and, as Alcott says, the soul contains the body, and not the body the soul.

"The inspiration of youth, if fostered, becomes reality, and the decisive period of the soul is that of its early impulses. 'What the child admired, the youth desired, and the man acquired,' is the common history of all leaders of beneficence and progress."

This is excellent Spiritualism, and excellent practical philosophy as well; and the speaker proceeded very properly to point out the true office of the teacher:

"It is the sacred office of the teacher to guide inspiration, to foster it, and help make his every pupil to become his ideal self. No other calling has such opportunities, influence and responsibility. The true teaching of the school life is: 'Put your inspiration above every other consideration of life, and follow it—it is the only way of true success.' As Schiller makes Columbus say: 'Trust in the God that made thee and follow the sea that is silent.'

"He is the best teacher who inspires others to follow their ideals and to crystallize their best lives; all other teaching is secondary. Said Prospero in 'The Tempest,' 'Have I, thy schoolmaster, made thee more profit than other princes can?'

"The teacher, to inspire others, must first feel the inspiration of his own calling. His taper of life was given him to light a thousand lamps.

"The inspired men of the world have usually come from inspired schools. The biographies of the past often begin: 'He was a pupil of such or such a man,' and the inspired teacher and the inspired scholar alike share the honor of the scholar's achievement."

When it is reflected how few of the schools or teachers of the past or the present can be called "inspired"—how in general our schools of both science and religion have repudiated the possibility of modern inspiration in the higher sense—it is easy to understand why the progress of the race has been and is so slow and sluggish. The scientific mind has of late somewhat emancipated itself from this incubus, and hence the marvelous progress in that department within the past century; but the religious or theological student, for the most part, has been taught to feel himself utterly dependent for truth on the inspirations of men of remote times, far less competent, it may be, to be channels of a broad and pure inspiration than himself. When this incubus shall have been completely removed, and men come to feel, with Mr. Butterworth, that the Divine Spirit of Truth is as near and as ready to teach as ever in the past, and when the laws and conditions of a pure and truly divine inspiration shall be taught and supplied in our schools of both science and religion, then may we expect such an advancement in all that concerns human welfare as the world has not yet seen. Mr. Butterworth touches upon one of the requirements of inspirational nurture as follows:

"Early inspiration is tender; if nourished it will grow; if discouraged it may become perverted; sympathy builds men.

"The highest inspiration is often found in what the world regards the most unfortunate young lives. Genius is often a compensation for defects or very hard circumstances: the exaltation of one faculty to the loss of another. 'Dunce you are, and dunce you will ever remain,' was the decision of one of the teachers of Sir Walter Scott. The hand of love can alone lead the child of genius and special inspiration.

"Herein lies the teacher's great opportunity. The teacher who truly studies life will never disbelieve the prophecy of any young inspiration, however unlikely it may seem. All history is but a book of the fulfillment of young inspirations."

Yes! "the hand of love can alone lead the child of genius and special inspiration." Too often such children meet with only ridicule and rebuke, or neglect and inappreciation. Great is the need of teachers who have enough of inspiration themselves to recognize and aid its development in others. Mr. Butterworth expresses a hope that we trust may be realized:

"I hope that I may live to write a book one day on young people who were laughed at; I have come to believe that such are geniuses all, and I would rather have the companionship of such young, unappreciated inspiration than any other in the world."

The following stirring passages, near the conclusion of this significant address, are worthy of reproduction entire:

"Inspired men are the need of the nation, men who place their inspiration above every other consideration. And to develop such men society demands inspired teachers and schools. The voice of the school and college needs to be that, not the pursuit of wealth, fame, or any mere qualification, but to follow one's inspiration is the highest good and honor, and that to develop one's early inspiration is the chief concern of life. Having learned what a pupil's inspiration is, it should be the care of the teacher to make that pupil's environment as much as possible in harmony with his purpose. No work of life can equal this.

"We are standing upon the threshold of a new era in our national life; generation after generation of inspired men are gone, and there is a tendency in our life toward materialism. We are told the pulpit is losing power, that the political standard is becoming lower, and that the poetic voice is becoming low and silent. The readers of a 'Paracelsus' and a 'John Inglesant' are few, and of 'He,' 'She' and 'It' are many. Wealth is the quest of the multitude, and when attained it is often used for mere selfish purposes. Even the schools teach the art of money making as life's great end.

"It is the highest mission of the school to produce inspired men, and the teacher may well enter upon this mission with hope. Never was there a nation that opened to its youth such a field for inspired work. 'When American emigration shall reach the Pacific coast,' said an old writer, 'her period of literature, art and glory will begin.' The march of America has reached the Pacific. To-day we are sixty millions. To-morrow we shall be one hundred millions, and our art, our voice in music and song, and what we may hope will be greatest in our literature, is yet to come. We may reasonably expect that the poor passion for wealth and material display will pass, and that a period of splendid inspiration in intellectual and spiritual achievements is at hand.

"The age of physical struggle has gone; the age of genius and spiritual things is coming."

I trust these worthy and progressive sentiments will find due expression in the columns of the Youth's Companion; and will venture to suggest that one momentous subject on which the aid of a higher inspiration is urgently needed, is that of the guidance of our nation out of the competitive and unbrotherly civilization which now prevails, into the reign of brotherhood, justice, equality and peace.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE.

BY MRS. E. MEHORNAY.

When Captain G. unlocked the massive hall door and it swung back on its rusty hinges, Mrs. Lindsey gave one scream and fell on the settee. Edith said, "Mother, have you seen a ghost?" An impressive silence brooded over that once magnificent structure. Where splendor and hospitality had characterized the mansion in former days, now gloom and desolation reigned supreme.

They traversed room after room. The most impressive one was the picture gallery, where the full-length portraits of all the Blakemore family hung. The most interesting of them was one of their little two-year-old daughter whom the gypsies stole, taken with a blue dress, and embroidered around the bottom of the skirt with white flowers—golden hair hanging in ringlets; around the neck she wore a chain and locket.

When they entered grandfather's chamber Edith stood aghast for a few moments, then went to a panel of the wainscoting and gave it a quick push; it opened and revealed a private press, which had some boxes in it. She then pressed against the back; another door opened, and it proved to be a double press, which contained a tin box. She exclaimed:

"I saw grandfather put some papers here in this box the day before he died; yes, it is all plain to me now. That dear, good old man! how often have I sat on his lap while he rocked me in this chair to sleep."

Captain G. looked at Edith and said: "What do you mean? It seems you have been here before this time."

She replied: "Captain, I will not keep you in ignorance any longer. I am Captain Lindsey's daughter, and my mother, here, is his widow."

"Can it be possible?" he exclaimed.

"It is true," Mrs. Lindsey replied.

The Captain clasped one of each of their hands, saying, "How glad I am to know who you are. Why did you not tell me last night that you were the widow and daughter of Captain Lindsey?"

"We were not ready to let ourselves be known," replied Edith. "I was impressed to visit this mansion, the home of my early childhood, in a dream, or vision, which I had two nights before we came here, and I have often had similar dreams and heard strange noises which I could not understand; but the last dream or vision I had was so plain to me I felt that we must visit this mansion once more. I feel that I have been led here by the power of the spirit, as St. Paul was led, but do not know for what purpose."

Edith then opened the tin box she had taken from the private press, and which she had held in her hand from the time that she first picked it up.

She took from the box a large envelope, stained with age, and handed it to Captain G. He opened it, and found it contained Grandfather Blakemore's, or Sir Robert's, will. He read it to Mrs. Lindsey and her daughter. By it he left his entire estate to Mrs. Lindsey and her daughter Edith, provided his own daughter Beulah, who was supposed to be stolen by the gypsies when two years old, twenty-eight years previous to the date of the will, or her heirs, never made their appearance. But if they did appear, and sufficiently proved their identity, they were to have one-half of the estate, and Mrs. Lindsey and her daughter the other half. The will was witnessed by two prominent men of the neighborhood, and one of them appointed Edith's guardian. They had both died a few days previous to grandfather, with an epidemic which was raging in that community; but their signatures were substantiated. Mrs. Lindsey was here deeply agitated by a mysterious influence, which impressed upon her the feeling that she herself was the lost Beulah; and could not repress the impulse to speak of it to her companions.

The Captain, naturally excited by these disclosures, said he hoped she would prove to be the lost child. Even if they could prove that they were the widow and daughter of Captain James Lindsey they would be entitled to half of the estate. Mrs. L. replied that she could easily do that. They returned to the Captain's home, and there Mrs. Lindsey gave him her history, so far as she knew it. She at once telegraphed to New York City for Lawyer Dean, her husband's friend.

CHAPTER III.

When Captain G. communicated their discovery to his family, Mrs. Lindsey was congratulated upon her prospective good fortune. She then related her history as follows:

"I was raised by a poor but clever family in South Carolina, but where or how they got me I don't know. When I was, as I supposed, about fifteen years old, a busy old woman in our neighborhood told me I was not Mr. and Mrs. Cirtus's child. I did not believe but that I was, and telling Mr. and Mrs. C. what Mrs. S. had told me, I asked them if they were not my parents. They were too honest to tell me a falsehood, and acknowledged that I was only an adopted child; that they had got me from some poor people who were passing through that part of the country, and that was all they knew about my origin. They were kind to me, and sent me to school until I could read and write. Soon after I learned this sad news I went to New York City in the capacity of waiting-maid with a wealthy gentleman and his wife. Captain Lindsey was boarding at the hotel where they stopped. He saw and admired me, and after an introduction at his request and a brief acquaintance we were married. He placed me in school, and then started on a long sea voyage. I remained in school three years. Then I traveled one year with him; after that I settled down to housekeeping, shortly after which my daughter was born, and two years after her birth Captain Lindsey was lost at sea. Since grandfather's death we have suffered the pangs of poverty in its most hideous forms. It seems that an unseen hand guided my daughter here. I thought strange that grandfather made no provision for us by will. After diligent search for one, and none being found, there came a man and woman saying they were the legal heirs from Scotland. They gave me money to pay my expenses to New York City. Since then I have seen in the papers that a third party claimed to be the heir."

Mrs. Lindsey closed her narrative by saying she would immediately send for her adopted parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cirtus.

In a short time Mrs. Lindsey's adopted parents and Lawyer Dean were at Captain G's. The former testified that the two before him were the widow and daughter of Captain James Lindsey. Captain G. told Mrs. Lindsey's foster-parents that they must tell all they knew about Mrs. Lindsey.

Mr. Cirtus said that about thirty-eight years ago a company of gypsies camped near where he lived; he was frequently at their camp. They had with them a beautiful child about two years old, and he determined to rescue her from them. One night when they were all asleep he stole the child and a satchel that he had seen them take some of her clothing from. "Here," said Mr. C., "is a picture I had taken soon after I took the child, and here is the dress and locket that were in the satchel, and which we put on her, thinking it probable that sometime she might be identified by them." He said that the gypsies were gone the next morning after he rescued the child. Then he advertised the child, but no one ever claimed her. He had been married but a short time, and they were devoted to the child, and kept her in ignorance of her origin until she was near grown, when a busy old woman told her she was not their child. She then went to New York City and married Captain James Lindsey, who perished at sea.

Lawyer Dean, while examining the locket, pressed the inside and it opened, revealing the pictures of Sir Robert and Lady Blakemore, with this inscription: "Sir Robert and Delia Blakemore, to their daughter Beulah, on her second birthday."

Captain G. exclaimed: "And this picture is exactly the same, dress and all, that hangs in the gallery at the mansion." He sent for the portrait at the mansion, compared them, and they proved to be the same.

The identity of Mrs. Lindsey was then regarded as sufficiently established; and Captain G. congratulated her on the good fortune, brought about through the inspiration of Edith, and her own.

Mrs. Lindsey's adopted parents wept for joy—embracing her. Lawyer Dean congratulated them, also offering his services to establish them in their rights of the estate. Captain G., Lawyer Dean, Mrs. Lindsey and Edith went the following day and had the will recorded.

Mr. and Mrs. Cirtus, Mrs. Lindsey's adopted parents, returned to South Carolina, sold what little they had, then went to Blakemore Mansion, where they will spend the rest of their days in luxury and ease. Lawyer Dean is Mrs. Lindsey's agent, and has a beautiful retired home in the neighborhood of the mansion. The long neglected park which surrounded the mansion soon resumed its former beauty. The mansion was renovated in modern style and refurnished.

Mrs. Lindsey and Edith settled quietly down in wealth and luxury. Edith had grandfather's chamber handsomely furnished, and no room in the house was so attractive to her as that. She was there one evening, when she heard loud raps on one of the wainscotting panels. She examined it, and by pressing it it flew open and revealed another private press, containing treasures of value. Their sympathies were aroused for the four poor familes whom they had left in the gloomy tenement house in New York City. They sent for them to come and live on their farm and cultivate it, giving them a bountiful support, and pleasant, happy, sunny homes.

Grandfather's chamber is kept sacred, and when Edith wishes to hold sweet communion with himself and other spirits, she goes there; and two evenings in every week, Captain G. and his family, Mrs. Lindsey and her adopted parents, meet therein to hold converse with their loved ones who have passed to the summer-land. Edith's experience as here related is an evidence of spirit power, controlling mortals of earth, giving counsel, and comforting them when in distress.

The goodness of heart and simplicity of manner which distinguished the ancestor, his daughter and granddaughter still remain. Having been children of sorrow, they feel for all who are such, and their charity is at once bestowed upon them as a tribute of gratitude to the Guiding Hand that so mysteriously led them to competence.

Sense and Spiritualism.

The Truth Seeker (New York) for June 16th contains a lengthy essay by "McARTHUR," in which the writer states in advance that he does not propose to attempt any labored defense of the Spiritual Philosophy, but to give his views as based on his earnest study of the subject from a business man's standpoint—an inquiry in which he brought to bear every resource he was capable of, and which ended in his being compelled to accept the spiritual teachings. The following generous extracts will serve to show the outspoken character of this article, which is throughout to the point, and full of interest:

I claim that it is hardly necessary to argue as to the existence of mediums. Physiology teaches the existence of sensitives, and any one who has witnessed a mesmeric entertainment knows how fully the subject is under control of the operator.

So to properly appreciate the operation of the psychological law through and by which the medium is controlled, it is fair to presume that one must understand somewhat the status of the next world, if there be one. Here evolution, twin sister to Spiritualism, steps in and gives us an insight.

As we have come from the lower, so we ascend to the higher. All nature's laws, as far as we know them, are fixed, unchanging. Our friends, when they leave us, simply advance one round on the ladder of progress. They have become neither gods nor angels, but remain women and men, with the same likes, dislikes and prejudices that they had when here. A murderer may have died even in the arms of Jesus himself, but he is still a murderer in heart, and will remain so till he has evoluted out of that condition.

This is the simon-pure teaching of evolution, and I doubt if any scientist can successfully dispute it.

Now if this be a fact—and it looks reasonable to me—then this great psychological law has opened a way, free alike to saint and sinner, and the great cry about the immorality of mediums is "a tempest in a teapot"; for, he being operated upon by unseen forces, any act of the poor sensitive should be viewed with charity.

I do not pretend for one moment to defend immorality, whether in a medium or any other person. That there are moral and immoral mediums, none can deny; but I claim that, as far as my experience goes with that class, the latter are in a very small minority.

Morality and mediumship are no more synonymous than morality and religion, than morality and Infidelity. Most Infidels are moral; none are religious; and the few immoral ones do not detract from the morality of the many.

In viewing these matters, I prefer the optimistic side. With our present surroundings, we are just as good as we can be; and if one man be better than his neighbor, it is due to his opportunities, and to them alone. So, if my proposition be true, we must, as a certain philosopher held, commence the education of a child "a hundred years before its birth"; then we will have more morality.

There is another and very important fact in connection with mediums. Of the many thousands, public and private, no two seem to be developed alike. So if it be "thaumaturgy," as some intimate, then Spiritualism most certainly has demonstrated that fully twenty-five per cent. of humanity are unconscious prestidigitators.

But various people have widely different experiences with any given medium, and under circumstances which seemingly tend to the suspicion of fraud. I am now speaking of genuine mediums.

Well, what of it? Are our experiences here always the same? I opine not.

A few years ago, in the Crawford House, Boston, I was attracted to a group of gentlemen gathered around an old soldier, who was giving his experience in the battle of Fair Oaks. I followed his recital with great interest, as I was a participant in the same fight. Finally he reached a point in his recital where he touched on the fact that a handful of our men, at a critical juncture, seized on a small log house, and from that vantage-ground so distressed the enemy that they retired, and thus the battle on that part of the field was gained. After he was through, one of his listeners announced that he also had been present at the same battle, and while he admitted that some of the points were correct, yet he held that in the main they were wrong. The argument lasted over an hour. Each was certain of the correctness of his account. Yet I know both were wrong; at least I think I do, for the simple reason that I was the officer in command of the men referred to.

Now let us suppose that mediumship be true, and that these two gentlemen and myself were in turn communicating through a medium, and on the above subject. These gentlemen would each insist on the correctness of his statement—and here I wish to say that I believe each one honestly thought himself correct—and I would give an altogether different version. What would be the position of the medium? How about her character for truth?

Of the teachings of Spiritualism no true Spiritualist need be ashamed. There is nothing in the Philosophy but of the most ennobling nature. There is no savior. Each works and builds for himself. And I will add, it is the only system that grants, nay, insists on woman's occupying that position which nature intended her to fill.

I had the pleasure of many sittings with John Pierpont, who has "passed over" many years. Most Bostonians know him by reputation—a sturdy truth-seeker; an honest man.

We conversed on many philosophical subjects, and I gained much valuable information from him in the two years I was thus privileged. When the time for my departure arrived, I naturally felt grateful for all his kindness, and so expressed myself, asking, at the same time, what I could do to prove that I was grateful. "My son, live up to your highest aspirations," was the answer. This is the embodiment of the Spiritual Philosophy.

But many are so constituted that a philosophy will not commend itself to them. They accept evolution because they have been laughed out of their old theological views. For these there are the various phenomena. Now, I do not mean to claim that all these manifestations are genuine. There are frauds, undoubtedly. All Spiritualists admit it. Just so long as the almighty dollar is more highly valued than truth, just so long fraud will exist. But it should be remembered that most of the frauds are exposed by Spiritualists.

And even if only one manifestation in a million be true, science should investigate that one and demonstrate it to the public. But science says Spiritualism is a humbug. Let us see.

Every one knows that Sir Isaac Newton was made a scientific saint, not only for the discovery, but for the demonstration, of the law of gravitation. That law is too well known to be discussed here. But come with me into yonder séance-room. We find a plain deal-table, and neither springs, cords nor confederates. The investigators sit around it at a distance of, say, six feet, and, without any physical contact, it moves, and by its actions answers mental questions and delivers communications from those who have crossed the mysterious river.

Will science investigate this uprooter of the Newtonian theory? No. The big-wigs are as much wedded to Newton as a Catholic to his patron saint.

Again. The law of acoustics is equally as well known as that of gravitation. Listen. That same inanimate deal-table gives forth sounds sharp and clear. There is no physical contact.

By the regulation of the sounds answers are given to mental questions, thus showing not only a power, but also an intelligence.

Will science investigate this and add to its knowledge of acoustics? No; for experience has taught science that those who investigate become convinced, and the more scientific the investigator, the surer he is of becoming convinced.

Not many years ago Spiritualism was making great headway among the upper classes in England. The London Times came out in a "leader" denouncing it, and finished by saying it was a shame and disgrace that, with a learned society in their midst, composed of the most brilliant minds in the country, such a humbug should be allowed to take so strong a hold on the people, and called on the learned professors to "explode the fraud."

In consequence, this society appointed a committee with full power to investigate and report. On this the Times became jubilant, and assured its readers that the humbug would be exposed within thirty days.

But the thirty days passed, as also did several other thirty days. The professors had become interested, and when they did make their report announcing the phenomena to be facts, and all that Spiritualists claimed for them, the Times merely said, "Three more fools!" Yes! three more fools.

Wallace, the peer of Darwin.

Here, in America, we have a sample of the same class of work in the action of the Seybert Commission.

No one can reasonably doubt the existence of the phenomena. Each one is fully entitled to determine their worth. As you justly remark, Brother Macdonald, "Spiritualism should not be made a religion. If true, it must be in conformity with the laws of nature, and as such must come in the domain of experimental and demonstrable science."

This is simon pure Spiritualism. But if science will not investigate, what then?

I claim, and, if necessary, think I can prove, that the phenomena have been known to all nations as far back as we have any record. None know the truth of this better than the higher ecclesiastics of the Catholic Church, and I here boldly say that the majority of her so-called holy men and women were merely mediums.

Take St. Theresa, for instance. She was canonized because angels, unseen, of course, were in the habit of levitating her, and the stigmata would appear on her arm, taking the shape of a cross.

Now, not many years ago, the medium Home, while holding a séance in the upper part of a private house, was lifted and carried out through one window, and back into the room through another window. This is attested by some of the highest nobility in England. Moreover, at the house of Alvin Adams, at that time President of the Adams Express Company, a piano was elevated and carried through his parlor. I merely mention these instances, out of many hundreds, as they are, to some extent, public property.

As far as the stigmata are concerned, Charles H. Foster, the well-known American medium, seldom, if ever, gave a sitting in which the stigmata did not appear on his arm, either in the form of the name of his unknown sitter, or of one of his departed friends.

Theresa is a spirit while Home and Foster are accounted humbugs! One might go on for an eternity reciting instances, but what would it avail? My experience could be of no possible use to another, only just so far as it corroborated his experience.

But, Brother Macdonald, you advocate a scientific inquiry. Cui bono? These investigations seldom, if ever, "pan out." I could recite many. Let me give another at the risk of tiring you.

A little over a year ago a society was formed in England for this purpose. A medium was summoned, and a number of sittings were held. The sitters made their own conditions and the phenomena took place. They were dumfounded. It would not do to admit the fact, as any ordinary fellow could attest to an "effect," but they were searching for the "cause." So, one who had read the current report on the knee joints of the Fox girls, bethought him of a still more novel idea. "These phenomena are caused," said he, "by the circulation of the blood in the medium's arm," and on the medium declining to be bled, he was denounced as a fraud, and all Spiritualists as cranks.

And so wags the world.

The Spiritual Philosophy agrees with the editor of The Truth Seeker that all its claims should be carefully, closely and scientifically investigated. If true, it has nothing to fear. If false, I for one want to know it, and want that knowledge as soon as possible.

But how are you to investigate? Are you going to say, as many do, "If my dead friend wishes to tell me anything, he knows where I am and he can give it to me personally"? If so, brother Infidels, do n't start in. Remember there is nothing supernatural about this philosophy. If true now, it has always been true. It is as old as the hills, and as easily demonstrable. Only go about it right. There are no ghosts in it, either holy or otherwise; only those who have gone before. And, believe me, if you give them a chance they will be too glad to come to you.

If you want to send a telegram, you go to the telegraph office. Then go to the spiritual telegraph office. Keep your eyes and ears open, and, mark me, you will receive evidences. Commence, as I did, at the lower rung of the ladder; for I had thirty-six sittings in my own house, with a private medium, before I fully accepted even the raps and table-tilting.

Avoid the higher phases, such as materialization, till you have seen and heard enough to satisfy you that such a thing as materialization is possible. Go on slowly, carefully, and I will guarantee success. I never knew it to fail.

FAITH IN GOD.

BY HENRY C. CALL.

If I were told that I should pass from earth
To-night, to join the throng of loved ones gone
Before; if through the windows of my soul
Should flash a gleam from the eternal Sun,
And all within should shine resplendently
With new-born glory; while the angels bright
And fair, with music sweet my raptured heart
Should fill, it would not add one feather's weight
To the calm faith I have in thee, oh! God.

When lone I sit, and at sweet intervals
My spirit wanders in the dreamland dim,
There comes upon my inner sense a calm,
A sweet and all-pervading restfulness;
And this, to me, eternal Father, is
Thine own approving voice—as speak the stars
In an unceasing chorus, telling man
The wondrous story of Creation's dawn.

Father all glorious! Being's Central Sun!
Thou of immeasurable space—to thee
My yearning spirit fain would mount and bask
In thy transcendent brilliancy and power;
Thou fill'st my heart with aspirations high,
And biddest this immortal soul of mine
Put on the garments of eternal day.
Nor faint nor falter till the goal is won!

SHE GOT THE PASS.—"Look here," said a stern-visaged lady, as she marched into the office of one of our railroad magnates, "I want a pass to Portland and back. Be sharp, and give it to me." "I don't know, madam," meekly replied the railroad man, "what claim you have upon the company that entitles you to a free pass." "Claim!" said the lady. "Claim! Claim, is it, you're after? Did not your railroad break my leg at Red Bluff? If you don't believe it, I'll show you the break."—S. F. Post.

ERIE.—Irvin Camp writes: "One hour preceding my sitting with Mr. Watkins at Cassadaga, I had a sitting with Miss Jennie B. Hagan, at which I heard from my mother, from whom I was parted nearly seventy years ago, from my cousin George, who died quite suddenly while we were classmates at Geneva, now Hobart College, N. Y., nearly fifty eight years ago, and from one still younger, a niece of my then step-mother, living near the college, and whose home was largely and pleasantly a kind of a second home of my own during my whole collegiate course. The names of these parties were not given me, but I felt quite sure of their identities from her descriptions and incidents referred to in our joint lives, the recalling of which, dating so far back in my life's years, and so unthought of and unexpectedly brought to mind, made my séance with Miss Hagan one of the most strange and pleasing incidents of my life.

From her room I went, at the appointed hour, to the Watkins Cottage, at the door of which he met me with the startling announcement, 'Willie, your son, has been here, and told me to tell papa that he is coming to write for him to day, and tell him when he writes his call for him to put nothing on it but his name.' I then repaired alone to the séance-room, selected two new slates, washed them clean, wiped them dry, and placed them underneath my left elbow as I sat down at the side of a small, two-leaved table, to write on the small slips of pad paper the five calls I had determined to make for loved ones gone on before me to their spirit homes. Three of these calls were to the unexpected visitants of Miss Hagan's séance, viz., my mother, my cousin George and the niece of my step-mother, to each of whom I wrote these words: 'Were you with me this A. M., at my sitting with Miss Jennie?' The other two were to my daughter and to 'Willie,' as per his order.

I then called Mr. Watkins into the room, and resumed my seat, with the double slates under my left elbow. When Watkins entered the room he stopped midway between the table and the door and said: 'Colonel, I shall not come nearer to you than I now am, for my duty calls for it, as an estopple to the vulgar and false charge that I somehow get the seeing and reading of those little pellets,' which were then laying on the table before me. I was directed by Watkins to touch in due order the pellets with the tip of my pencil, and when so directed, I picked up each of the first three pellets and placed the same immediately inside the clinched palm of my left hand, and held each one there till it was most satisfactorily answered by a hearty and glad 'Yes,' with other words given orally, automatically written and by personation, which rendered my prior assurance doubly sure—the name given being in each case the one written on the pellet then being held in my clinched hand, and the added words were characteristic of the respondent spirit.

Then followed in the usual way so well described by A. B. Richmond a double-slate communication from my daughter, with her filial affection manifest in every line, and referring to conditions at my home and to our long conference scarcely an hour previous at Miss Jennie's room; all of which could only have been known and feas described by one personally cognizant of the facts and a participant, as a still living soul. In the feelings those incidents would naturally evoke from a loving daughter's heart. Then there remained but one pellet on the table—that of my son Willie, who died thirty nine years ago. I then laid my daughter's slate on the upper side of the other slate, with a bit of slate pencil between, both slates having been up to this time, either under my left elbow or in my two hands. The first event was a clairaudient order received by Watkins to take away the top slate. This order I obeyed, resuming my hold of the side of the single clean slate. I was next told to throw away the pencil, which I did. It was then written, 'Give papa the slate.' Watkins instantly relinquished it to me, and said, 'I don't know what Willie would be at.'

I was next told to hold the slate under a leaf of the table, and prove willing to do so had about pushed it under, when I was startled by a sudden spasmodic movement and utterance of the medium. 'Take it away!' I obeyed the order under the impulse of the moment with a celerity my hand had never before exhibited during an active life of seventy five years. When my eyes rested on the upper surface of the slate I read the following message:

MY DEAR FATHER: I know that you believe I come back again, if mother does not. Now, father, whenever you doubt that we live, remember I wrote this quick as a flash. WILLIE.

At the end of the sitting I asked Watkins if he had ever before had such a manifestation of spirit-power (the rapidity of the writing being referred to) in the exercise of his wonderful mediumship; he answered that he never had, and appeared as much surprised thereat as I had been myself."

CLINTON.—Reporting the proceedings of the Mount Pleasant Park Camp Meeting, A. B. S. writes: "Tuesday, July 31st, a conference was held in the forenoon, and Mattie Hull gave us a lecture which was admired by all. At 4 o'clock Prof. A. B. Severance organized a class for physical and mental culture and general deportment, including terpischorian. This class is to meet three times a week. Wednesday, Aug. 1st, conference in the forenoon, with Warren Chase in a lecture in the afternoon. Thursday, 2d, conference. Lecture by Moses Hull in the afternoon, in which he showed what the Bible and Christianity had done for women.

In the way of amusements, Tuesday night a public dance for the people of Clinton with some of the young people of the camp. Wednesday night, a dance for the campers, in which all took part.

The intention of the management of this camp seems to be to make it educational in every respect, and the prospect is that Prof. Loveland will teach a class in the philosophy of mediumship, so as to enjoy its uses and avoid its abuses. All subjects are discussed in conference and in lectures, and so far perfect harmony has prevailed.

Saturday, Aug. 4th, Mattie E. Hull gave a very fine lecture. As Dr. Juliet H. Severance was expected on the seven o'clock evening train, and the campers desired to give her a reception, the President invited all to meet at the grand stand at half past seven. When Mrs. S. arrived she was taken to the stand by telling her that Moses Hull was to speak, which was true, but his time was not until eight o'clock, so that when the President stepped forward to make a speech of welcome she was taken completely by surprise, and so overcome with emotion it was with difficulty she could reply. A beautiful bouquet was presented to her in a neat little speech by Moses Hull. Fine music was rendered by the choir, assisted by Kreyer's orchestra, making it a very interesting occasion.

Moses Hull was then introduced and gave, by request, a non-partisan lecture on 'Free Trade.' It was listened to very attentively by a large audience, and judging by the applause, must have been well received.

Dr. Lyon has arrived in camp, and is, I believe, one of the first lecturers on the spiritual rostrum.

Sunday, August 5th, was a beautiful day, and a large number of people began to arrive early and continued to come through the day, giving us grand audiences at the meetings.

At nine o'clock in the morning, all met at the Hall to form a Lyceum; great interest was taken in it, especially by the children.

Half-past ten o'clock Warren Chase gave us one of his solid, argumentative lectures. At one o'clock a mediums' meeting, in which several took part. This meeting was held in the Hall, and an admission of ten cents charged, the receipts to be given to the mediums. It was a great success; many strangers and skeptics received good tests.

At three o'clock Moses Hull gave us a good lecture on 'Science versus Christianity.' A large audience listened to him with marked attention.

In the evening, Dr. Juliet H. Severance gave a lecture on 'Practical Spiritualism,' in which she laid out a large field of work for the Spiritualists.

Dr. Monson runs the eating house to the satisfaction of all. He has a large patronage.

Our sweet singers, Mrs. Frankie Cole and Mrs. Hulser, give universal satisfaction to all.

Prof. Kreyer and his family of boys furnish the music for the dancing, and on other occasions. They are favorites in the camp, having been here many seasons."

New York.

BYRON.—A correspondent writes: "On the 2d of August there passed from this place to the higher life, Mrs. Dr. Lucina M. Tuttle, who for about forty years has been actively and very successfully employed as a clairvoyant physician. Her first knowledge of the possession of spiritual gifts was upon being mesmerized in 1846 for the purpose of rendering painless the removal of a tumor from her shoulder. She had been mesmerized only a few times, when she proved to be an excellent clairvoyant, examining and prescribing for neighbors and friends, thus very soon unexpectedly becoming quite famous in that direction, so much so that after a few months nearly all her time was in demand to meet the calls of the diseased upon her. While thus in the clairvoyant state she gave what was probably the first authentic communications of modern times from individual inhabitants of the spirit world in the summer of 1847, previous to the publications of A. J. Davis or the manifestations through the agency of the Fox sisters. Her clairvoyant medical practice continued almost uninterruptedly for nearly forty years, during which she examined and prescribed for tens of thousands of patients. She possessed a warm hearted sympathy, benevolent disposition, kind, efficient and helpful in sickness to such an extent that she was in demand by a large circle of loving friends, and was a welcome guest in all departments of society. She held a diploma from the Eclectic Association of Physicians. Her funeral service was conducted Sunday, August 5th, by Lyman C. Howe."

Massachusetts.

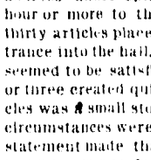
ONSET.—E. B. Fairchild writes August 6th: "Last Tuesday evening, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, the well-known psychometric reader and test medium, celebrated the fifth anniversary of her work in the field, under the direction of her spiritual guides. A large number of her friends gathered in the pavilion to greet her, and were rewarded by a remarkable demonstration of spirit-presence and power. Mrs. Conant opened the meeting by an invocation and short address under spirit-control. She then devoted an hour or more to the psychometric reading of some thirty articles placed upon the table before her entrance into the hall. All to whom she gave readings seemed to be satisfied of their correctness, and two or three created quite a sensation. One of the articles was a small stone wrapped in paper; from this circumstances were very minutely described, and the statement made that the present owner received it many years ago from a young lady friend, a school teacher, now in spirit life, name and description being given—all of which was pronounced correct by the owner. Another reading was from an article preceded by a young lady only recently arrived from Europe, giving correctly facts in her experience known only to herself and the family who were with her.

Mrs. Conant has now gone to Lake Pleasant, and I do not hesitate to commend her mediumship to any investigator who may be influenced by my statement."

Oregon.

PORTLAND.—C. A. Reed, Esq., writes, under a date line of science of Mr. W. J. Colville's arrival: "All the good people of Portland seem to be awaiting his coming. And we have no doubt that on his advent he fully met the expectations of the First Society of Spiritualists, by which coming he is so escorted.

"Portland, [continues our correspondent with its subjects, has a population of some twenty thousand people. I should think some of the best materials from the East might venture this way with comfort and safety. Spiritualism is growing in popularity very fast, and as it never takes a backward step for half a century, may not 'The great time coming' be here directly?"



LOG CABINS were the most prominent feature of the Presidential Campaign of 1840. At the opening of the campaign, the opposition strongly proclaimed "Tippecanoe" Harrison a log fellow," born in a log cabin." His friends at once made the Log Cabin the emblem of the most enthusiastic of campaigns. Warner's Log Cabin Remedies and "Tippecanoe" stomach bitters received enthusiastically received by the American people to day, because they are the remedies of the common people—simple but effective.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From her home in Marlborough, Mass., July 15th, Mrs. Esther B. Sherman, aged 67 years, 2 months and 25 days.

She had been a member of the Methodist Church for many years, and had many friends who will bear witness to her kind and good works. She passed from this life with a firm belief in a blessed immortality beyond the grave, and her last days were spent in active preparation for the change which she knew was coming. She has been an instrument for the spirits to use for about thirty-five years, and has been a medium for many years. She was a sister of Mrs. Mary A. Rogers, who has always been ready with other kind offices of work for humanity.

From Boston, Mass., July 14th, Mrs. Mary A. Wentworth, aged 67 years. Funeral services at the house of her daughter, Mrs. Belle Hart, who will have the sympathy of many friends in her sudden bereavement. Mrs. Wentworth was a medium for the spirits, and had many tests, with "precious little tokens," of the fame she will be left by the world.

From Belmont, Mass., Mrs. Mary A., widow of Bernard Morse, aged 54 years 7 months and 7 days.

For six years Mrs. Morse has been a resident of Belmont, and lived on the Common road. She is the mother of eight children, six of whom are living. She was a believer in Spiritualism. Lived to be over seventy years of age, and received an honorable discharge. Mrs. Morse has been a Spiritualist for thirty-three years. Her every-day life, kind and affectionate disposition, and love for humanity to the inmates, has a tendency to lead to regard and love them, and to the higher life, as she nears a world that angels will welcome her to. The funeral services, held by Mrs. M. J. Wentworth, were held at the home of Mrs. W. Morse, who lives on the homestead. COM.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the Organism of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam. A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skilful hand arranged in this volume, in complete cyclopedic fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soul-inspirations scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is therein. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may learn its demonstration of the divine presence within, drink of its waters of spiritual healing and recover; and the desolate mourner can surprise, through its universality of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Vol. LXIII

Of THE BANNER is gradually drawing to its conclusion. We trust that those of our patrons whose subscriptions expire with that volume will do us the favor of renewing; and speak thus early as a hint to awaken reflection.

We shall begin Vol. LXIV with several new attractions and improvements, of which due mention will be made hereafter.

Lecture by W. J. Colville.

We shall print next week a thoughtful and practical discourse wherein the guides of W. J. Colville give their views on the following questions: "WHY ARE THERE CONTRADICTORY TEACHINGS THROUGH MEDIUMS?" "WHAT IS THE TRUE STANDARD OF AUTHORITY?"

The Other Side.

A sermon was preached in Grace Church, Elmira, N. Y., not long ago, by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Herrlich, which was fully reported in the New York Telegram, and in its prefatory remarks pronounced "remarkable." Its theme was The Other Side of Life, meaning the invisible. After making the statement that we live in an age of progress and investigation, the drift of many writers being in a psychological and preternatural direction, the speaker said they had set many people to thinking that there is a vast realm of mental, spiritual and psychological powers and possibilities lying yet unknown and unexplored, but within whose boundary lines advanced thinkers had now entered.—Humanity, said he, is ever asking the question: "Have we heard from the Other Side, and what is the proof of it?" What is to be our condition there, and how do we know it? The Old Testament scriptures all through tell us of the nearness of the spiritual to the material realm; that they do not lie leagues apart, but border upon one another. Does this contact continue in the present day? The preacher unhesitatingly answers: Yes, if it ever did; and he appeals to his hearers not to be deterred in examining or investigating this subject as a great Bible fact and a sweet and holy consolation.

Because we do not see a thing is no proof of its non-existence. Because we do not hear a thing is no proof that it may not be heard. Because we do not feel a thing is no proof that it may not be felt. Because we do not understand a thing is no proof that it is beyond the grasp and comprehension of others more spiritually refined or more strangely gifted. But these strange and unusual things are said by some to be against the laws of nature. Who, then, assumes to determine what the laws of nature do or do not permit? Does any individual presume to know it all? Or has God revealed to any cold, ungifted materialist the whole range of mental and spiritual powers and possibilities? What mean those occasional instincts, intuitions and flashes of wonderful capabilities, unless to show that the soul and spirit now are only in their budding infancy? There may be sounds, sights, existences all around us, which, for want of power to see or hear or feel, may go unseen and undiscovered by our ordinary senses. The mere fact that conditions are such that we do not see or feel a thing does not militate against its reality or existence. A change in atmospheric conditions enables us to see what was totally obscured from our sight an hour before. So all through the material world, invisibility does not prove non-existence.

We may lay it down, said the preacher, as a fixed fact, that in moral, spiritual and intellectual things, that which has taken place in the past is possible in the present and future. All through the Scriptures we read of angels and ministering spirits. We cannot see the human spirit, with its powers of love and hate, of thought and sympathy, only as it plays upon the face and features; but who ever doubted its existence or separate identity from the human body? The mind now reigns in the material body; it controls matter by will-power, and is conscious in itself of its separateness from and superiority to inanimate matter. The human being sees intuitively beyond sense, and recognizes the unknown which the seen and known predicts and indicates, and so he lives in the enjoyment of what he expects as well as what he possesses. If we did not have the faculty to perceive truths and facts beyond the sphere of our senses, we should be little better off than the brutes that perish. The simple fact that man reasons and infers beyond material things is itself proof positive that his mind is not material, nor a merely material product. By process of reasoning we get a glimpse of all the reconciling possibilities which we so much need to explain to us our present mysterious and often incongruous existence, the apparent inequalities, the inconsistencies with divine love, wisdom and justice.

What we do not know now, we may know hereafter. Facts present are intimations of facts in the future. Reason and intelligence predict what the love and wisdom and justice of God must work out for us in a realm beyond this. Existence must run on a line of the higher analogies of life; and every just expectation, fairly founded on present experience, is in the nature of a true prophecy, because in harmony with those laws by which all things are wisely ordered. Everything demonstrates that the soul possesses powers and endowments which the senses could not confer on us. Our senses are constituted for this world, and we are to enjoy it; but our undeveloped spirits are constituted for a still higher realm of existence and achievement; and if our very natures are not false in themselves, we must in all fairness realize those promises and expectations which God has placed within us—just as instinct and intuition were not placed by the Creator in birds, animals, and insects to mislead, but to direct and guide them. God would not deceive; therefore there must exist the things predicted. Reason and aspiration both prophesy the future, and the prophecy must be a true one. We now see through a glass darkly.

If so much has been newly discovered and made known in the material realm, is it not even more true of the intellectual and spiritual? asked the speaker. Who does not at times feel the pressure of narrowness and limitation? Who does not feel that he is now not all he could be? Who does not feel powers and possibilities struggling for growth and expansion? This higher knowledge is bestowed just as the race or individual is prepared to receive it. The world has been advancing upward through its various grades and stages, and God has dealt with humanity just as a wise schoolmaster deals with his scholars. He has promoted it according to its fitness and attainments; and now, in this age, the best scholars are being advanced to the highest grade—the last class, the preternatural and spiritual.

We shall again revert to this admirable discourse, as it is replete with points that show this talented gentleman to be—although he may not himself apprehend the fact—in direct "contact with the spiritual realm."

An Editor's Work.

Very few persons outside the ranks of the press brotherhood have any practical conception of the real work devolving upon the occupant of an editorial chair. The Kansan of recent date crystallizes this matter so clearly that we feel to give its succinct summary a place in our columns:

"Some persons seem to think that editing a paper consists merely of writing articles for publication therein, while in fact the mere writing has nothing to do with it. Editing a paper consists of carefully considering what is written, eliminating therefrom all that is pointless, useless and unfit for publication, and making more prominent such matters of interest as are improperly and imperfectly stated. One paper may be filled with 'original' matter and another with 'clippings,' and the latter be much the best edited paper. If any editor finds that another has placed in type well-expressed thoughts and sound opinions upon any of the questions of the hour, there is no harm nor inability, but rather the reverse, shown by the man who 'clips' it with proper credit."

The Black Race.

Mr. C. R. Beal, of Everett, Mass., has published a statement in which he says it is generally conceded that the black race cannot live and prosper in the New Northwest, which is erroneous, he avers, because it is based on a false hypothesis. Some of the most prosperous and wealthy colored men in the nation are found in Dakota and Minnesota. Charles W. Mason's aggregate wealth in Dakota and Minnesota is estimated at $75,000. He can name a score of colored men in the Northwest worth from $20,000 to $100,000. J. P. Montgomery, of Fargo, Dak., is one of the most successful farmers in Cass County. Mr. Beal further says: "We have selected a site for our colored settlement near Elrod, Clark County, Dak., on the line of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad."

☞ Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Rowley of Cleveland, O., who made us a flying visit last week on their way to Onset Bay, have been taking quite an extensive trip from Cleveland to Niagara Falls, Toronto, Canada, through the Thousand Islands and the rapids of the St. Lawrence to the city of Montreal, Canada, from thence via the White Mountains to Portland, Me., and Old Orchard Beach. They spent a few days in Boston, seeing the sights at the "Hub," and are now, we understand, at Lake Pleasant. Mr. Rowley did not expect to do any work at Onset as a "telegraphic" medium, but he was besieged on all sides to such an extent that he finally decided to have his instrument in operation during his stay there.

☞ Hon. Richard S. Spofford has passed to spirit-life. He was a genial as well as a very intellectual man, and, like his wife, Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford, a writer of note, though in a different field. He had been ailing for a long time. At heart he was a Spiritualist. Whenever we met him of late years his first inquiry was in regard to the progress of Spiritualism, saying that many of his warmest friends were Spiritualists, and that he took a great interest in the subject: "I am fully satisfied," said he, "that there is something in it, and I wish I knew more about it."

☞ The long continued matter of opening the Sioux reservation, under the terms of the "land in severalty" law, was virtually settled at Standing Rock, Dak., on Tuesday, Aug. 7th, when Chief John Grass informed the commissioners that the Indians would sign neither paper, and that they would now return to their farms, regardless of what the commissioners might say. The Indians applauded the declaration, and the conference adjourned. The Sioux prefer to retain their tribal relation.

Occult Telegraphy.

Mr. W. S. Rowley, occult telegrapher, while at Onset related his experience in regard to the gift of telegraphing from the spirit-world, at the auditorium; it was quite an interesting recital. He said the spirits were questioned upon various topics, when the raps first came on his shirt collar and cuffs. Mr. Wade, who is connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company, also others, investigated the manifestations, and became satisfied that there was an intelligence from some invisible source acting upon the instrument which was entirely different from what is obtained on the regular telegraphic instruments in public use.

It was gathered from Mr. Rowley's remarks that Spirit Dr. Wells, a physician while on the earth-sphere, desired to diagnose and prescribe for the sick as a specialty. As far as his expressed views were understood, Mr. Rowley stated that the esoteric intelligence obtained is neither more nor less than what the spirit of Dr. Wells had gained in earth and spirit spheres. The results obtained in this manner are the same as those of the spirit controlling the organism of a medium. The novelty is that the information comes in the form of telegraphic raps, or ticks, without the presence of a visible operator.

"Spirit Photographs"—Once More.

We have heretofore, in the interest of honest mediumship, warned the public against persons claiming to be spirit photograph artists. We have made enemies in consequence among professed Spiritualists. Having investigated the subject, from Mumler's time to the present, we have become familiar with the modus operandi of how these pictures are made, and once again say that many such photographs are counterfeits. Therefore we feel it our duty, in the responsible position we occupy, to caution the public in this matter.

☞ The Investigator, (Boston) of Aug. 1st, 1888—which says it is "an old and circumspect paper"—contains on its fifth page a communication with the heading, "A Half Materialist." Now what sort of a thing is a half Materialist? (the word being used as a personal pronoun.) The writer (anonymous) who claims to be "A Whole One," says: "There was a time when man did not exist." If matter "always existed," as he claims, how does he know that man did not always exist as well? And then, after setting up his man of straw, he fires away by saying, "therefore, mind is a product of matter," etc., etc. We can't understand such reasoning. Perhaps our good friend, the editor, will aid us in this respect, as we are after the truth.

☞ We still live in an anti-Christian age, more or less, as the late death by hanging of culprit Maxwell at St. Louis fully demonstrates. There he hung choking for fully fifteen or twenty minutes before life became extinct, or, rather, ere his spirit was forced out of his body into the eternal world. What a horrid spectacle it must have been to the spectators to see a man thus dangling and squirming at the end of a rope while a stream of blood poured down the right breast from his nose! He passed on denying that he was a murderer, and will return in spirit with vengeance in his soul—a devil!—to get square on a community that sent him prematurely to the spirit-world.

☞ It is well to remember that the cause of Spiritualism is not to be judged by the character of those who profess to believe in it, says The Better Way, but by the truths which it demonstrates and emphasizes to the comprehension of humanity; by the light it reflects in the dark places of the world; by the millions of souls it has raised from despair and triumphantly introduced into the vestibule of a better life and a holier love; by the soul progress of its adherents and their earnest work to make themselves and their associates better men and better women.

☞ A very pious deacon of a church in Bristol, Ct., recently chopped off his wife's head with an axe and then nearly severed his own head from his body with a razor. If he had been a Spiritualist instead of a church deacon, the press of the country would have set up an awful howl. Is it not about time that the ruffianism of the daily sensational press against us and our cause took a different turn?

☞ We had the pleasure of meeting and greeting our friend, Judge Nelson Cross, at our office on Tuesday last. He informed us that he was on his way to Lake Winnepesaugee for rest and recuperation.

☞ Mrs. Effie Moss returned to New York from Onset on the 9th inst., and on Sunday evening last resumed public séances at her apartments, 265 West Thirty-eighth street, when, as we learn, she was cordially welcomed by her friends. She gives séances on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and Friday afternoons. Mrs. Moss made many friends while at Onset among those who were so fortunate as to be present at her séances.

☞ At Oakland, Cal., the meetings of the Spiritualist Association in Fraternity Hall are largely attended. Mrs. Ada Foye gave tests there for the last time prior to coming East, Sunday, July 29th, and last Sunday Mrs. Crossett, of San Jose, was to lecture, and Mrs. Miller and Mme. De Roth give exercises of their spiritual gifts. The late Camp-Meeting at Oakland has awakened a widespread interest in Spiritualism in Oakland.

A GREAT SUCCESS.—Under this heading The Daily (N. Y.) Graphic for Thursday, July 19th, says: "The Wendell Phillips Memorial Industrial School connected with Belvidere Seminary, New Jersey, is proving a success. A new department of stenography, typewriting, book-keeping and penmanship has recently been added to it, and is now daily educating pupils of both sexes for a practical business life."

☞ A new weekly publication, entitled "The Tattler," to be edited by Mr. W. Eglinton, is announced to appear in London every Wednesday. It is to be "an illustrated journal of gossip, society, humor, fact, sport, fashion, fiction and the drama," and to "always contain something of interest to Spiritualists."

☞ Dr. J. D. MacLennan, of San Francisco, whose fame as an excellent magnetic healer is not wholly confined to the Pacific coast, and who has recently returned from a long and successful professional trip, can now be found at his residence, 1410 Octavia street, in that city.

☞ We are informed that several of the remarkable paintings, independent writings, etc., obtained at Onset Bay, will soon be brought out by pictorial reproduction in The Soul.

At the Antipodes.

"The Glacial Period in Australia" was the subject of a lecture before the Melbourne Lyceum at its last June meeting. The Harbinger gives us to understand that the Lyceum is progressing favorably.

Mr. C. H. Bamford gave the first of his second course of lectures at Melbourne, June 10th; his subject was "The Spirit World: Its Location, Conditions, Inhabitants, etc." Mr. W. H. Terry presided. June 17th he lectured upon "How to Investigate Spiritualism and Develop Mediumship." Mr. Bamford's last lecture was upon "The Good Time Coming." Of some of the features of that time he said, as reported in the Harbinger of Light:

"The theatre will play an important part in the inauguration of the good time coming. It is educative as it is, but whilst it is worked on a pecuniary basis, its usefulness is limited. There should and would be national theatres, which, combining amusement with instruction, would be powerful educational institutions. Shakspeare will be understood more generally by-and-bye; it takes a Spiritualist to understand him now.

Music will play a great part in the good time coming. All the music of the great composers speaks to the soul; it is soul-stirring, and as man becomes more susceptible to spiritual influence, he will be more readily educated and refined by music.

Science will be one of the great regenerators of the world; the rapid intercourse and interchange between nations which already exist, and will be still further accelerated by science, has an influence tending to universal brotherhood and perfection. Science will enable us by-and-bye to control the weather and modify the climates."

A high-flavored bigotry has recently exhibited itself in what The Harbinger records of Mrs. Attenborrow, a Spiritualist, who having advertised in the Hawkes Bay paper that "Divine Service" would be conducted by her at the Athenæum on Sunday, a correspondent, signing himself "Consistency," takes exception to the use of the word "Divine," and another suggests that the law ought to step in and prevent such blasphemy, which, to his mind, "should be regarded as at least as great a crime as robbery."

The New South Wales Association of Spiritualists entering upon a new year will hopefully continue its work. During the one just closed a number of circles have been successfully conducted under its auspices.

The editor of the Harbinger of Light has been shown some spirit drawings and etchings obtained recently at a private circle in South Melbourne, in the following manner, viz: A small sheet of paper, after being carefully examined, is placed upon the table and covered with the investigator's hat; he then rests his hands upon it to keep it from being disturbed; the light is turned down, and the medium rapidly touches the crown of the hat with a lead pencil for about a minute. The light is then turned up, the hat removed, and a well executed drawing found on the paper. One of these represents the Scandinavian Prince, Eric, his galleys, a pine-covered coast (supposed to be America), an American Indian, coracles, etc. Another represents a Roman soldier, with his helmet and baton. On the same sheet is an etching of a very fine male head, which The Harbinger is informed was executed in less than a minute, ad fing. "Our informant under whose hat and hands the drawing was received, is thoroughly reliable; we have known him intimately for years."

Mrs. Richmond at Lake Cassadaga.

Is the subject of a lengthy article in the Cleveland Plaindealer of August 6th, from a correspondent at that popular camping-ground, who met her at a reception tendered by her to a select company, at which, under the influence of her spirit guides, she replied to questions propounded by her auditors. "There were," says the writer, "several scholarly gentlemen present, well versed in the philosophies of the schools and familiar with the different phases of modern scientific thought. The questions related to the profoundest themes of life and thought. The nature of the soul, its relations to matter and organized forms of life, the relation of individuality and immortality, were discussed in a manner that struck amazement to the hearts of the company."

Mrs. Richmond's personal appearance while thus engaged is described as of one who "stood erect, well poised, and with the dignity of a queen. Her face shone with an unusual light of intelligence, and one could almost imagine a stream of celestial fire descending upon her head."

Next came "Onina," who gave a brief sketch of her life on earth, and delineated in verse the characteristics of various persons. Of what she accomplished, the correspondent of the Plaindealer—which, by-the way, is to be commended for giving space to so just a notice of Mrs. Richmond's work—says:

"Poem after poem was given, some of them occupying fully five minutes in delivery; and yet in all these was not the slightest inaccuracy in delineation, nor the slightest jar or roughness in their rhythm. How a mortal woman could stand before a company of people and extemporize such poetry for an hour is a mystery. If, as claimed, it is given by an excarnated spirit, we shall be obliged to believe the words of Onina, who said: 'Poetry is our natural language over here.' If it is not given by such a spirit we have people living to-day who are possessed of powers never before known in the history of the world; for although the Greek oracles were delivered in verse, it was without rhyme, being simply rhythmical, like the meter of Longfellow's 'Evangeline.'"

Reception to President Beals.

The Wildwood Messenger, Lake Pleasant, Mass., issued every Saturday by the New England Spiritualist Camp Meeting Association, J. Milton Young, editor, is a nice little paper. The number before us gives an account of a complimentary reception to President Joseph Beals, on the occasion of the sixty-seventh anniversary of his birth. Mrs. Maud Lord Drake was the first speaker; Mrs. Sue B. Fales gave a poem; Mrs. Clara A. Field spoke briefly; Mr. W. R. Tice, Dr. E. A. Smith and other speakers made appropriate remarks—to all which President Beals responded in a very feeling manner.

He said he did not consider that he alone had managed the affairs of the Association. There had been grand, good business men upon the board of directors, and upon the various committees, and in other official capacities. Fourteen years ago a few earnest souls came to Lake Pleasant to spy out the land and to establish a camp meeting. Miss Moody had predicted a grand success, and the years had proved the prophecy more than true. The movement had extended far and wide all over the earth, and its influence would never die. The spiritualistic press had extended a mighty power, and should be widely circulated. He would express his thanks for the gifts of to-night, assuring the friends present that their kind words would long remain in memory. It was a red-letter day for him, and an occasion of solid satisfaction. His efforts would ever be for the cause, and he felt like renewing his interest. The speaker closed with wishing the assembly a pleasant stay at the Lake, and again emphatically expressed his thanks.

The Southern Association.

The annual business meeting of the Southern Association of Spiritualists was held on Lookout Mountain, Friday, July 27th. It was presided over by Rev. Samuel Watson. Mr. Geo. P. Colby read a report of what had been accomplished by him the past year as an agent of the Association. It was attentively listened to and gave much satisfaction. Light on the Way, now published at Dover, Mass., by Geo. A. Fuller, was adopted as the official organ of the Association; its office of publication will be on Lookout Mountain after this year. An election of officers for the ensuing term of twelve months resulted as follows: President, Dr. Samuel Watson, Memphis; vice-president, Jerry Robinson, Charleston, Miss.; recording secretary, Dr. George A. Fuller, Dover, Mass.; corresponding secretary, G. W. Lewton, Crescent City, Florida; treasurer, J. Seeman, Chattanooga, Tenn. The old board of trustees was reelected, except in the case of Jerry Robinson, who, having been elected to the vice-presidency, caused a vacancy, which was filled by electing G. W. Kates, of Atlanta, Georgia.

☞ A. S. Hayward, Magnetic Physician, of Boston, anticipates visiting Lake Pleasant Camp-Meeting the coming week.

Mr. William Warren has concluded his visit to Joseph Jefferson at Buzzard's Bay, and is now with his sister, Mrs. Rice, and her family at Onset Bay.

Greene's version of the piece will be presented for the first time on any stage. It will be given with every attention to the most minute detail. Brand new scenery, a large chorus, special music arranged for the production, and a star cast, ought to make the representation a memorial one in the history of Mrs. Stowe's work. Manager Rich will open the box office of the Hollis for the advance sale of seats on Thursday morning, and it will remain open for the balance of the week. The usual scale of summer prices will be the rule.

A correspondent inquires if we don't think that God sent that tornado that wrought havoc with the grand-stand on the base ball grounds, as a mark of divine disapproval of our offer of the free use of the grounds on Sundays, for the boys? Well, no; we had n't looked at it in that way. The fact is, we don't take much stock in that cruel, quick-tempered, revengeful God, who is constantly seeking occasions to play it on us poor mortals; and besides, the boys would n't have any use for the grand-stand on Sundays. And then again, if God wanted to prevent ball playing on the Sabbath, he ought to have sense enough to send an earthquake to swallow up the grounds, or else enough bears to swallow up the boys. —Marlboro Times.

Letter from W. J. Colville.

It seems a very long time since I last wrote to THE BANNER. I have been so busy I have really had no leisure; but now that I am again in the Eastern States I feel I must let my numerous friends in Boston and elsewhere who read your excellent paper, know that I have not forgotten them. My experiences in California, on the whole, have been so pleasant that I am hoping to repeat them at no distant date. San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda, Los Angeles, San Diego and San José have been my six principal centres of work during eleven months (from September 3d, 1887, till August 2d, 1888) and I can say with deep sincerity that I was genuinely sorry to say good-bye to so many kind friends on the occasion of my departure for Portland, Oregon, on the latter date.

I think the Oakland Camp-Meeting this year was a great success; many breaches were healed and friendships established. The president, Hon R. I. Steele, was a most excellent and harmonious chairman. The attendance at all the meetings was very large; great general interest prevailed, the after effects of which were abundantly seen in the greatly augmented attendance at all spiritual gatherings in the vicinity after the camp closed, and in the large sale of spiritual literature.

In San Francisco I lectured in Metropolitan Temple the last three Sundays mornings of my stay, to large audiences. Mr. John Slater, the test medium, occupied the hall afternoon and evening. The grand organ in that building is a superb instrument, and the talented organist, Mr. O. A. Eckman, played it gloriously. In Oakland my most recent lectures were given in the Synagogue, which was so crowded at last that extra seats had to be brought in on Sunday afternoons.

The Spiritual Science College at 106 MacAllister street, San Francisco, was the scene of many very pleasant and successful gatherings. The work there is now being efficiently carried on by Mrs. Sara Harris, Mrs. Josephine Wilson and others, whose names appear frequently in the Golden Gate.

On Wednesday, Aug. 1st, at 8 P. M., a grand concert was given in the spacious lecture-room, when the attendance was so large it positively overflowed into the street. Madame Marie Bishop (formerly of Boston) and other celebrated artists took part, including Mr. R. H. Whiting, a highly cultivated young gentleman of great talent and promise, whose exquisite performance on the cornet renders him a prize to all concert-givers wherever his services can be secured. Another interesting feature was the violin performance of four little girls, whose ages varied from four to eleven years. They are known as "The Beasey Babies," and for such very youthful artists their skill is really remarkable.

I could easily write long articles of considerable general interest concerning California, but in this brief note I must hastily pass on to Portland, Oregon, where I spent delightfully Aug. 4th, 5th and 6th. Friends there were very hospitable, and the seven meetings which I addressed were all largely attended by very fine people; though it was the off season, most of the influential citizens and their families being out of town, my audiences could hardly have been larger at any time, unless another hall had been secured. Extra chairs were needed in a large Grand Army Hall on the Sunday evening, and the financial results were highly satisfactory, though the expenses were considerable and the terms of admission small.

Some of the scenery on the Northern Pacific Railroad, between San Francisco and Portland, and between Portland and the Yellowstone District, is extremely fine; much bolder and more imposing than any I have passed through further south, though I hear the Canadian Pacific passes through still more romantic regions.

On Saturday, August 11th, I reached Chicago, and was entertained by Dr. and Mrs. Congar, who are warm friends of Mrs. Richmond. On Sunday, August 12th, I had three excellent meetings in Martine's Ada street Hall, which is now undergoing renovation and enlargement. Though the hall was in an unfinished state the large audiences were comfortably accommodated; the hall will present quite a beautiful appearance on Sunday, September 1st, when the First Society of Spiritualists will assume regular meetings. As Mrs. Richmond will then be in Cincinnati I am engaged for the month, and expect to enjoy a great deal with old and new friends in this large and enterprising metropolis of what was formerly the West.

Monday, August 13th, I left for Cassadaga, N. Y., where I now am, and I shall hope to continue this letter next week with items from this charming summer resort. I trust I may be able to snatch the time to pay Boston a flying visit in October, and with kindest regards to all friends, believe me as ever your sincere friend and co-worker, W. J. COLVILLE.

A Scientific Test of Spirit-Power and Intelligence.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mr. Henry B. Foulke, real estate agent, 1039 Walnut street, Philadelphia, has been staying at Onset for a short time. He was anxious to have the "endless rope" test of spirit-power demonstrated to him, and to this end called at the postoffice grocery store and obtained a small cord some six feet in length, and tied the ends together with thread, so that it was impossible to untie them without its being known. Harold J. Smith, an Onset citizen, sealed the knot with paraffine, heating it so that if removed it would show it had been. In this way prepared the rope was taken to Horatio G. Eddy's séance, and while the manifestations were going on in his dark séance, two solid knots were tied in it in a manner that would be impossible without the aid of spirit force or power—or, at any rate, it seems so to the writer, who has never seen a knot tied as this was, unless there was a loose end to the cord. If any think they can tie a knot in a cord that has no end, let them try the experiment! It is simply a physical impossibility without some way being devised to separate the cord for the time being.

This endless-cord tying has been accomplished in the presence of Dr. Slade, as Professor Zöllner narrates.

I was called to examine the knots above mentioned after they were tied, and in justice to the cause of Spiritualism and the medium, I will say I could see no possible chance for the practice of deception.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Boston.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Sundays, at 10½ A. M., 2½ and 7½ P. M. Eben Cobb, Conductor.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Sundays at 2½ and 7½ P.M.; also Wednesdays at 3 P.M. Dr. E. H. Mathews, Conductor.

Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington Street.—Sundays at 2½ and 7½ P.M. F. W. Mathews, Conductor.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The services at College Hall were well attended during the day and evening, on the 12th inst.

Mr. Eben Cobb opened the exercises with an invocation, after which he spoke upon the following questions: "Does it matter very much what we believe?" "The Soul, is it immortal?" His remarks upon the questions were well received. He took the ground that it did matter much what we believed, but belief was one thing and knowledge was far superior to it.

Mrs. Forrester then gave some fine psychometric readings, after which Mr. Redell spoke in a religious strain of thought of God and personal responsibility. Miss Peabody followed with some fine tests of psychometric readings. Mr. McKenzie spoke briefly of the duty of Spiritualists, and then gave some readings. Dr. Eldridge closed the exercises by relating a vision of a spirit; he also spoke a good word for Onset.

In the afternoon Mr. Cobb spoke briefly on General Sheridan's death, saying that Sheridan, the man, was not dead, for the man is the soul, and the soul never dies. Proofs of immortality are not wanting to those who look for them, and the fact of spirit-return no longer needs demonstration.

Miss Peabody gave readings which were well spoken of; Dr. Eldridge diagnosed the physical condition of persons in the audience; Mr. Toothacher gave tests of spirit presence, and Mrs. Thomas and Mrs. Forrester presented some psychometric readings; Mr. Rose also made remarks, and gave tests under control.

Social Meeting.—Friday evening, Aug. 10th, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Whitney, and Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Stansbury and son, were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Whitlock at their residence in Boston. Several prominent Spiritualists were present, and a hearty welcome was given to the friends from the Pacific coast. Mr. W. C. Tallman, Col. W. D. Crockett, Capt. Richard Holmes, Mr. E. W. Smith and others, made appropriate remarks, which were responded to by the California friends. Dr. Stansbury and family, we understand, intend to return to Boston in September.

* * *

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The afternoon exercises were opened by the Chairman, followed by Mrs. Merrifield with able remarks for the cause; Dr. Thomas gave a brief address; Dr. McKenzie, Mrs. Forrester, Mrs. M. W. Leslie and Mrs. Litch made cogent remarks, closing with psychometric readings and spirit descriptions, all of which were recognized. Dr. Mathews concluded the exercises with psychometric readings.

In the evening Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham was the speaker—subject "Spirituality." She was listened to by an appreciative audience. Mrs. Leslie and Mrs. Robbins gave fine tests; Mr. Cartell closed the meeting with appropriate remarks. F. W. M.

Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington street.—Mrs. Townsend opened the exercises with remarks on the subject of "Inner Life," closing with tests. Dr. McKenzie and Mrs. Burnham participated. In the evening the platform was occupied by Mrs. Townsend, Dr. Thomas and Mrs. White. F. W. M.

DR. EDITH BERDAN

(LATE DR. EDITH HALE)

Desires to notify friends and patients that having removed from Boston, Mass., she will continue practice in the city of Paterson, New Jersey.

DR. BERDAN has opened exceedingly commodious offices, centrally located, at 111 and 113 Ellison street, Paterson, N. J., where she may be consulted personally or by mail in all Chronic Diseases.

SPECIALTIES: Obesity in its varying forms, including abdominal Obesity. Remedies safe, harmless, pleasant to the taste; no starvation diet required.

Labor power is increased as weight is decreased. Relief in breathing, a sense of ease and freedom in moving about, comes immediately. It is like an elixir of life and youth to be released from the bondage of undue fat.

Terms and full particulars sent by mail. Enclose stamp.

INCREASE OF FLESH: the physician who is competent to reduce excessive weight can even more easily and readily increase the flesh and weight of Thin People—the entire secret lies in due regulation of the Trophic Nerves (nerves of nutrition) by harmless, natural means. The subject is exceedingly fascinating to the deep student of Nature's secrets, and is most satisfactory in its results.

HEART DISEASE—If not advanced to its late, fatal stages—can always be alleviated and often wholly cured, and life made easier and prolonged by means of a new remedy approved by English and German Scientists, and brought under direction by Dr. Edith Berdan from the Continent. This remedy is aided by new Magnetic Pads.

SCROFULA.—This scourge can be eradicated by a Vegetable remedy imported from the Orient—long tested. It can be supplied in Powder, and made into a pleasant drink in the patient's own home.

Parents, foresee the evil and protect your children. Scrofula can be eradicated.

PARALYSIS.—Dr. Berdan controls this disease by a positive Specific. Confirmed paralytics must not count too surely on relief, but that vast army of overworked men and women who go about suffering occasional numbness or dizziness, confusion of thought, sleeplessness or despondency—Nature's warnings that the sword, Paralysis, hangs above them suspended by a single slender thread—THESE CAN BE SAVED.

INDIGESTION.—Nervous Dyspepsia cured by new German Fonte Powders—can be sent by mail.

KIDNEY DISEASE in all but its final stage, whether complicated with Liver difficulties, or not, positively yields under the faithful use of a new Internal Food, or Herb Cure.

CANCER.—Dr. Berdan's early practice has been in Cancer, having studied in the dissecting rooms, Colleges and Hospitals over twenty years ago, and having since had four years' training under celebrated Foreign Physicians, and becoming versed in all modern advances in controlling this dread disease. Dr. Berdan will accept only an occasional case of cancer [either internal or otherwise], but when consulted may be relied on to render an honest and reliable opinion as to possibility or probability of cure, and the means to be pursued. Self cure at home is in some cases entirely practicable. Letters desiring an opinion in cancer must enclose Consultation Fee—$2,00. Enclose stamp for Treatise and references.

In conclusion Dr. Berdan can unhesitatingly refer to a long line of patients who have been successfully treated in Chronic Complaints all over the Union.

No remedies used for invalids which would injure those in perfect health. Let Nature be justified in "the house of her friends."

Sexual Physiology and Hygiene;

OR, THE MYSTERIES OF MAN.

BY R. T. TRALL, M. D.

This work was first published in 1866. Its success has been very great, and it has had a sale in every part of the world where the English language is read, and has become an authority on the subject of which it treats. In England, in Australia, in New Zealand, in this country, it has been in constant demand, and was the first work of the kind ever published in this country. The author has in this work stated all facts in a clear, delicate and yet graphic and perfect way, using everything plain and clear, carefully revised and enlarged edition.

SPIRIT WORKS: Real but not Miraculous. A Lecture read at the City Hall in Roxbury, Mass., on the evening of Sept. 21st, 1857. By ALLEN PUTNAM.

This lecture, delivered in Roxbury, Sept. 21st, 1857, and repeated at the Melodeon, in Boston, Nov. 1st, same year, though preceded by several addresses by Leroy Sunderland, A. E. Newton, J. M. Spear and others, in smaller rooms, and on more private occasions, was the first lecture on Spiritualism in this vicinity to which the public was invited through the press and by posters, and the first to be printed and issued in pamphlet form. Though the author says that it seems crude now, as developments are added to its facts and thickened events, it is interesting and valuable because of its connection with the introduction of Spiritualism.

APPENDIX.

Prophecy of Cazotte—Frequency of Prevision—Destiny of the Young.

The author, in his preface and introduction, says: "This volume has been prepared to fulfill the promise recently made to the public of a MANUAL OF PSYCHOMETRY—a work to introduce the subject to the general reader—not an elaborate memoir for scientists, which need not be offered until it is called for. As a science and philosophy, Psychometry shows the nature, the scope, and the modus operandi of those divine powers in man, and the anatomical mechanism through which they are manifested, while as an art it shows the method of utilizing these psychic faculties in the investigation of character, disease, physiology, biography, history, paleontology, philosophy, anthropology, medicine, geology, astronomy, theology and supernal life and destiny. Granting, as this volume will show, that Psychometry gives us the command of all these sciences, it is apparent that the introduction of Psychometry must prove the dawn of a new era in science, philosophy and social progress, more important as to human enlightenment and elevation than all the arts and sciences heretofore known to the skillful and learned."

ISIS UNVEILED: A Master-Key to the Mysteries of Ancient and Modern Science and Religion. By H. P. BLAVATSKY.

This work is divided into two Volumes, one treating exclusively of the relations of modern sciences to ancient theurgic science, and the other of the ancient world-religions and their offshoots in various ages. The theogonies, myths, symbology, rites, emblems and theologies of past and present generations are all passed in review. The analyses of the myths of India, Babylonia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Phœnicia, Mexico, and the Germanic peoples, are extremely interesting. The origin of modern faiths is patiently traced, and the points of resemblance carefully marked.

In the Second Volume the various views of scientists respecting the universal ether, the imponderable known and unknown forces and their correlations, cosmogony, geology, astrology, chemical action, alchemy, &c., are reviewed, criticised and compared. The relations of man to the universe, including his control over its phenomena, are viewed from the side of the ancient Magians. The philosophy of gestation, life and death, is treated after a novel and vigorous fashion, and the mystical domain of psychology is traversed.

Message Department.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

The Free-Circle Meetings

At this office have been suspended for the summer. They will be resumed, as usual, about the middle of September next.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held June 12th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Eternal Spirit, thou friend and father of all humanity whom men call God, and whom thy children recognize as the spirit of all goodness, love and truth, we turn to thee, seeking light and knowledge of thy tenderness. May we see thee in spirit, as thine angels do, face to face, in thought and aspiration, and within our hearts feel a sense of thy divine presence, and be inspired to press on anew in the pathway of life. We would be drawn into holy communion with angels, and receive from them influences of an elevating power, which will stimulate our lives and make us nearer unto thee. Oh! may these returning angels, who desire to bless humanity by the instructive word, the sweet, encheering influence, receive the coöperation and sympathy of hearts on earth; and may we, who are seeking to know the truth, and to understand thy word and law, accord to these angels our tender love and the spirit of our divine harmony. May we all be drawn together in sympathy and affection that will bind every heart in one circle, until the whole world shall ring with joy, because of thy goodness and an understanding of thy love. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—Your questions are now in order, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—"Any one familiar with the history of this city for the last two hundred and fifty years knows that God performs his great works only when, with the materials they possess, men do the best they can."—Rev. Dr. Herrick. What does the reverend doctor mean by that statement? Does he ignore Bible miracles, or what?

ANS.—We should judge, from the expression made by the reverend doctor in question, that he is a progressive mind; that is, one who can see the divine in humanity, however much that divinity may be clouded by external circumstances and conditions. We should presume, from the statement made, that Dr. Herrick can come into sympathy with the weak and the forlorn of mortal life so thoroughly as to understand something of their experience and the difficulties which they have to contend with in making progress. He realizes that men do the best they can, and humanity advances just as far as possible under the conditions and circumstances surrounding line; and we believe it is a truth that God himself, the Great Creator and Overruling Providence of Life, works with means and through ways in accordance with general law.

To our mind, and unbodily it is the will of God that man is not created perfect, since it seems to be a natural law that whatever develops slowly and gradually, evolves finer principles and more enduring qualities than that which blossoms into beauty and perfection in a day. The race may evolve its finest qualities and principles through struggle, contention with adverse forces and external circumstances, such as are, perhaps, to the casual sight, depressing and evil; but as we watch the progress of the race we discover that man is in reality throwing off the bonds of error and working out of the conditions of evil and growing up from ignorance through experience and trying discipline unto a plane of knowledge, of greater wisdom and grander efforts than the past has shown. Undoubtedly, then, Dr. Herrick is one who perceives intuitively these truths and breathes them into his soul, and perhaps is inspired by unseen intelligences to utter them and to call the attention of his hearers to the eternal law of progress.

It does not of necessity mean that the reverend doctor ignores those laws which proclaim, and justly too, that if a man errs willfully or in ignorance he must suffer the penalty; if he violates law, he must condone for the violation at some future time. Undoubtedly the gentleman realizes this fact, but yet he would, perhaps, call for a larger sympathy, a greater degree of charity from society and from the race toward those who are struggling amid the temptations and difficulties of time and matter, so that they may receive these kindly feelings and qualities, and be blessed in consequence.

We do not know whether the gentleman ignores the Biblical teachings concerning the production of miracles or not. Perhaps, and we think it true, he is one who accepts the Bible, not as an infallible work to be strictly followed to the letter, but rather as an historical record of the Hebrew people, and of the various nations coming in contact with them, and undoubtedly he finds much inspiration and truth in those old records. Probably the gentleman recognizes the New Testament as a compendium of moral truths and philosophies, which may be taken as the guidance of our spiritual lives to a certain extent, and can thus extract much of truth from its teachings, expunging that which undoubtedly has been brought into the work through the misunderstandings or the unskillful labors of minds not directly connected with its first production. We must only give our own interpretation of the reverend gentleman's mind on this subject; our hearers may take it for what they consider it worth.

Q.—Ought a person to sit for spiritual unfoldment who is afflicted with any special disease?

A.—That depends upon circumstances and general surroundings. We should hesitate about advising an invalid to sit for the unfoldment of medial powers, since it might be by so doing the invalid would attract to himself a band of influences who did not understand how to conserve his natural forces through operations upon his system, and might exhaust and prostrate both his physical and mental powers. Yet if one, even, who is an invalid—surrounded by gentle care and congenial associations on the mortal side, and himself harmonious and sympathetic by nature—should attract to his atmosphere spirits who are wise and exalted in character, who understand how to apply their magnetic forces through and upon his organism so as to operate beneficially upon it, it might be that his mediumistic powers would be unfolded to such a degree that he might enter into vital communication with the unseen world of spirits, and voice or send forth messages or manifestations of spiritual power which would be a blessing to his kind. To such a question as this, we cannot give a specific answer, since each case must call for consideration by itself; and what might be highly advisable or beneficial for one, (even bringing to the invalid a certain magnetic power from the unseen world to strengthen his physique and stimulate his mental forces with that which perhaps the material world could not give,) might, in another case, prove quite the contrary, and bring to the other person only exhaustion and debility.

Q.—It is often the case that a person, weary with the contentions and trials of daily life, and having some mental problem to solve, retires into seclusion, and finds rest and assistance in what he terms communion with his own thoughts. Is not this, in fact, seeking the companionship and communion of spirits?

A.—Undoubtedly a person who is weary with the struggle of life and sensitive by nature, receptive to external influences, and easily acted upon either by mortals or spirits, will be very likely to withdraw himself at times from the turmoil and din of material existence and to retire into seclusion, where he may commune with his own thoughts, or with whatever inspirations and influences may press upon him. He may not understand anything of intelligent spirit communication; he may not realize that the dear friends who have been called away from him in the mortal have the power of returning to his side to manifest their love and watchfulness over him; nevertheless, his sensitive nature, his receptivity of spirit, will attract to his side friends and helpers from the world beyond, and in such hours of silent communion as your correspondent mentions, those unseen friends will exercise over the forlorn one of earth a spiritual magnetism and influence which he must receive within his being, and which will undoubtedly stimulate and strengthen him for the duties which lay before him. One who is thus sensitive is most certainly mediumistic, and can be drawn within the atmosphere of the spiritual world and made to reflect at many times and in many places, even when he has no idea of it, influences and attractions which come to him from the other world.

Q.—[By J. H. W.] In the line of progression is Modern Spiritualism to the human race an improvement over Orientalism? If so, of what benefit is so-called theosophy now to the western hemisphere other than historic?

A.—To our individual mind Spiritualism is far in advance of Orientalism, so-called; inasmuch as Spiritualism comes to humanity with a clear and distinct sound, there can be no mistake concerning its significance and its work, while Orientalism is shrouded in mysticism, that which cannot appeal to the common understanding, but which requires to be studied closely and deeply by studious minds, who must, in their study, take upon themselves much of cloudiness, so that their minds become more or less befogged. We speak thus advisedly, because we have somewhat looked into the subject and come in contact with those who consider themselves adepts in theosophical subjects, and we know that if this Theosophy or Orientalism were stripped of its vagaries, its mystical terms and meanings, it would stand forth clearly and distinctly only as an exponent of spiritual communion between man and man.

Orientalism may declare to those who understand its terms that the human soul can communicate with its kind, even though it be still enfolded in the mortal form; and Spiritualism teaches the same great truth, that the spirit is itself the man, and that the outside form is merely the covering of the man, for temporary and convenient purposes. Then if man is the spirit, it is that which communicates thought, which exercises intelligence and displays reasoning powers. And Spiritualism affirms that it is possible for man, encased in the mortal flesh, to communicate with his kind, near or at a distance, without the aid of external speech, or any of those material appliances which science affords for your convenience. Thus theosophy teaches that the theosophist may claim that his belief, or science, is far in advance of Spiritualism. We declare it is not so.

Theosophy claims that its adepts and followers—those who have been qualified to practice its teachings—have the power of making certain spirits or certain beings in the universe, subject to their will. Spiritualism claims that those spirits, whether in the mortal form or decarnated of the flesh, who have studied the laws of nature and come in contact with the spiritual laws of life sufficiently to understand them, can gain dominion not only over other spiritual intelligences, if they so will, but over certain laws and forces of the atmosphere, so as to make them conform to their own personal will or direction. Thus we do not find theosophy in advance of Spiritualism in that direction.

Theosophy claims that man has an astral body, and that this astral body—or astral spirit would be the better term—communicates with mortals after the flesh is laid aside. What is this astral appearance? we may ask. To our mind it is nothing more or less than the spiritual body, which Spiritualism claims exists for mankind; and this may appear under certain circumstances to mortals, and may manifest itself not so much by any power of its own as from being under the direction of the indwelling spirit, the vital force and potent power which controls and animates it—the intelligence itself.

So Spiritualism, divested of the vagaries and mysticism which Theosophy or Occultism pleases to wrap around it, does not claim that only a few adepts may be practiced in its teachings and qualified to spread its truth; but it claims that humanity at large may learn of its glorious laws and come into communication with them. Spiritualism claims that it comes to teach the world, and does not despise any one human being, however low or humble he may be; it is all embracing in its love and power; it takes up every child of humanity, and enfolding it within its heart, bears it on to higher progress and understanding. It comes to simplify life and law, so that man may understand himself; and learning to understand himself physically and spiritually, he may come to understand his own kind as well as his God. Thus we claim that Spiritualism, when properly advocated and properly comprehended by man, will prove itself to be far in advance of all the religious theories and assumptions of the past in whatever direction they may turn, and far in advance of mysticism, and all that is called occult, whether found in the Orient or the Occident, it matters not.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held May 11th, 1888.

Martha Noble.

My home, sir, when in mortal life, was in Paterson, New Jersey. My name is Martha Noble. I would like very much to have my dear ones know that I found the new life more beautiful than I can express it in words. When the "death-angel" came—I change it to an angel-usher, for he beckoned me up higher—there was great sadness and sorrow among the dear ones at home, although they understood the fact of spirit-return, for Spiritualism was no strange subject in the family. Joseph and I had talked matters over, and we felt that the parting from mortal life would not be long, and that it would only be a parting from the mortal form.

Nearly the last words I said that he could understand were: "I am not afraid to die; the parting will not be long." I felt that they were coming for me, and I was happy in the thought of the change that was so near. I knew how much the dear, darling child, and the three darling grandchildren, would miss me; but I feel that they will understand in time, more fully, about my coming back into their home. I am happy.

I have been cognizant of many changes that have taken place in the home in the short space of four years. I cannot tell the exact day, but it is near four years, as I have tried to count it. I would like to come into private converse with the dear ones whenever there is a channel open.

Dear mother beckoned me up higher, and how happy we are together! Many of the dear friends I knew in mortal life I have found; and, oh! how glad they were to receive me. We form acquaintances in spirit life as real as we did in mortal life. I am thankful that there is a channel open so that we may come and speak with the dear ones left in the mortal.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this privilege of sending out a few words.

Isaac C. Abbott.

It makes very little difference where the spirit takes its flight. I will say to you that when I passed out from the mortal form I was in San Francisco, Cal. I am Isaac C. Abbott. I have dear ones left there. I have relatives in Salem, Mass., whom I know will get the letter in due time; but at the period when I passed away they knew very little of spirit return. That was nearly four years ago. I went out of this mortal form through an accident—from firearms in the hands of a dear friend. Oh! how sad all were when they found what had happened; but it was an accident. I have no regrets, for it has only given me a more beautiful home than I could have had in earth-life, although I had many dear friends, aside from my relatives.

I was studying a little into materialization, and what little I did learn has helped me much since I crossed over. I find that materialization is true, but I have nothing more to say about it. I will leave it with mortals to use the reason that God has given them.

I am happy; I am satisfied with the home I have in spirit-life. How many times I have visited a medium and talked with my own dear angel mother. I know now it was all true. Often did I hold sweet communion with that dear, angel mother, and other loved ones that had gone before.

Dear ones, how little you understand the happiness it brings a spirit when you open the door of your own spirit and let us come in and commune with you. Open the doors, and let us come in and commune with you. It has been handed down from age to age, and I find that Spiritualism is making an inroad that no other ism of the day has been able to make.

I am happy and satisfied with the home I now have; and I thank the angel world and you mortals who have been instrumental in providing these channels, that spirits may come and send out a word to the dear ones yet left here.

Elbridge Currier.

Announce me as Elbridge Currier. I passed out of the mortal at Enfield, N. H. Many long years have since passed. I would like Belle to know I visit her often. Poor, dear wife, how sad you have been; how many lonely hours have come to you since they said Elbridge was dead—more than one score of years. I know you ask why I do not manifest so you may know when I come. I will try in every way possible to make myself known in your little room. Dear Belle, I often find Emma and your own angel mother beside you. Horace is here to-day. I would like them all to know we come often to visit them. Emma now asks me to say that she is present. We are often together by the ties that bind us, the relationship, not blood relatives, but by the coming into the family.

I know you will ask me if I were with you four evenings ago? Yes, dear one, close beside you. I want you to know you are never alone, for so many that have crossed over, of the dear ones, often come to visit you, but not all at the same time. Belle, mother Hill sends greetings to you. Emma asks me to say that she will send a message as soon as possible. We are doing all we can from our side to help you mortals here.

Although a score of years have passed since they said that Elbridge Currier was dead, yet I have found no death, thank God. It is just commencing to live when you throw off the mortal and put on the immortal. I had just stepped into manhood when they called me up higher.

Belle, dear wife, be patient; in God's own good time will you come to join the happy number. I know the many trials that have overtaken you; I know the loneliness you have felt; but, dear wife, look a little higher and ask the angels to help us to come nearer and nearer still.

I thank you, sir, for granting me this short space of time.

Samuel Colburn.

I would like to send out a letter from this meeting, for I have been here before. You may place my earth residence as in Champlin, Minn. Samuel Colburn. I have been very anxious that these words might have been given out before, for I know Mary has looked the paper over many times, thinking perhaps she might see a few words from me.

I lived long in the mortal form, and it is only some three or four years since I laid off the old mantle and put on new garments. Never have I met a spirit who has told me he wished to come back into the mortal again.

I will ask Mary to learn all she can, for I know she is trying to learn a great deal here.

I wish to thank the lady for singing the sweet words, for I know it came from the spirit, and music attracts and draws us here. I loved music when in the mortal; I love music to-day. We have sweet, beautiful music in heaven.

Thanks to you, Mr. Chairman.

Newton Chandler.

My name is Newton Chandler. My home was in Oakland, Cal. I went out—I do not like to say it—by my own hand. There was a reason for it—but I'll lose that feeling in a moment. Sometimes the dear ones have thought that my going out in that way was the reason I have never manifested before. No, that was no reason whatever, although when we take what we cannot give—that is, life—we are found down in bondage for a period of time until helped by some good spirits to break this bondage.

Father and mother are with me to-day, and send greetings to you, George and Jane. I know of the trials that have come to each one, and I know also of what has been transpiring in the few years that have elapsed since I left the mortal form. I am happy now, for I have progressed away from those feelings that held me on first entering spirit-life. In an unguarded moment I stepped out of the mortal; but I am satisfied with the home I have to-day.

I am trying, dear brother and sister, to make some progress, and I will do all I possibly can to help lift the burdens of life. Father says it will come right eventually. I will try and come nearer to each one of you on earth, but I know you will say that I can't get very near to Jane, as she has got the doors locked and the windows pasted; but she can't keep out the spirits. Jane, we come so easily that no locks or bolts have any effect upon us.

I bring love to you all, and I will try to help smooth the pathway of you both.

Abbie A. Spinney.

My home was in Boston, and my name is Abbie A. Spinney. I would like Parker to know that I found it more beautiful than I can find words to express. I am happy in my spirit-home, but do not think me selfish and wishing to remain there all the time. Oh! no, dear ones. I often go into the home. I understood the fact of spirit return when in the mortal, but I find on entering spirit life that it was merely the outlines that I knew.

Father is here with me to-day, and also many dear friends that I have known. I tried to be patient through my mortal suffering, and when the veil was lifted from my eyes, how beautiful was the vision that came before ever my spirit had taken its flight!

I am trying to help the dear ones in spirit that need help, for it is a part of our work. I often step into the meetings. I have been in College Hall, and I have heard them speaking, one after another. I have also visited the Temple. I feel better for coming in and hearing you mortals speak, but I often feel how few mortals understand how many invisibles are present. We in spirit have a work to do, for we are not idle there, by any means. Our work is as varied as yours on earth, but we are all attracted back to the dear ones for some purpose. I am happy, and I send love and greetings to them all.

Annie Beals.

You may place my former home in Great Falls, N. H. Annie Beals. I would like them to know that I often come to earth. The question has been asked why I don't come. I do come, dear ones, but have not been able to make myself known until to-day.

Poor Maria! In heaven you will see as clearly as we do. Although the beauties of earth have been closed from your eyes, in spirit you will behold the beauties there. How many times have you felt your way along, and wished within your soul that you could see as others do. Be patient; we will help bear you swiftly across, for the boatman will not fail, but will safely row you; then we will be together. Mother often speaks of you. We are happy in our spirit-home.

I would like Frances to know I often visit her; and she asks the question: "I wonder if Aunt Annie is here to-night?" We hear and feel the question. I know the anxiety and the trials that have come into your home of late. I know how much you have worried over Belle. I know much care has been required for Frank; I have been in your home so much that I have understood it perfectly.

Lucy, take care! This life is not all. Do take care of the physical part, that you may avoid a part of the suffering here.

Our home just beyond the veil is beautiful, dear children. Your mother is often with me, but not all the time, for sometimes, as I drift into your little cozy home, I find her there. Other times I find your father, brothers and Minnie there. I am happy; for I have been promising myself for a long time that I would try to give out a message here that might reach you.

Olive Hill.

I formerly lived in Springvale, Maine. My name is Olive Hill. I have often tried to send a message to my dear children. I love them all, and what name to them is dearer than mother! I have thought as I have come into this council-room how good it was that we could send a message through a paper, when we could not come in contact with dear ones and speak through some other channel.

Roena, I understand how much you have suffered in mind, and know you are not physically well, and of all the trials that have overtaken you in the home. Little Belle, as we called her, is with me, but grown to womanhood in spirit. Dear children, try to come into communication with us whenever you can. Your father, Joseph, is here, and says, tell the children we are all here. My dear children, how many times have I asked the Father and the angels to take care of you when trials have overtaken you, and the clouds have come thick and dark around you.

I do wish in my soul, Olive, that you would open the door and let us speak through your organism. I ask you, dear child, to tell mother why you close the door God has given you for mediumistic power. We would gladly speak through that channel, but if you close the door you know not how much you grieve us in spirit.

Freeman sends greetings, and says that Thomas is not here to-day, but has gone to visit Reuben.

I am happy dear children, and I would ask each one of you to try to come into communication with us, for it gives us as much happiness as you receive yourselves—yes, I feel even more. Never will you know until you lay aside the mortal and become a spirit how much happiness it gives a spirit to come into communication with you.

Lucy, go visit Olive and Roena as soon as you can conveniently, for I know it will be well for you to take the rest.

I thank you, sir, for your kindness, and the guides for permitting me to speak to-day. I have been here before and failed.

Sally Emery.

I would like, sir, to give a few words, with your permission. My name was Sally Emery, and my home was in Methuen, Mass. I have been here a good many times, but I did n't get quite in. Now they tell me I may talk a little while.

I want to say to Susie that I have been in the home, and I see all the changes that have been made. I was there when your mother was there, and I knew what you said to her, that perhaps sometime grandmother would send a letter; but she looked at you so wise, to think that Grandmother Emery would write a letter, when she was blind in this life! Now I have got eyes that I can see you all with, and I guess I can write as well as anybody.

I want to say, Sarah, that your eyes are getting a little better, but you were afraid you were getting into the same pew I was in. No, no; I know the medicine you had—but you did n't have any. I knew it all the time. Now I want to say, Benny is here and Julia. We come often into your home, Susie. I am going to talk more to you. I suppose the girls will say, "A little partiality," but you know, Susie, I always had a different feeling for you, because you stayed with me more. I want to say I love you all, but I guess I may about as well own it up—Susie was my pet.

Levi is here and Sumner is coming. He is too late, and won't get in to-day.

Ettie, you are coming out all right. Don't bother about William. Now, Susie, I want this letter to reach you. [To the Chairman:] How often is this paper printed? every day? [Once a week.] I know I see her looking it over to see if grandma has said anything. I want her to know that I was there when Aunt Mary was carried down the stairs. She was n't dead. They said so, but she and Caleb was right there. I saw it all myself. First a wedding, then a funeral—that is what they call it—but not together, I don't mean. I went to both, without any invitation, and I want them to know that I felt just as well when I sat down in the easy chair as the rest of them. Susie, don't think grandma is getting a little weak-minded, but I can see all that is going on now. I have asked the angels every day to help the doctor, that he could get better and stay with you a while longer. I should be so happy if I could come and sit down and talk with you, just as I used to; but now I must have an instrument. I could not get near enough just now, so I have taken this opportunity to send a few words through this newspaper. [To the Chairman:] Will there be anything to pay? No. Much obliged to you. I'll do as much for you. I know they get this paper, because Susie takes it.

James Dickey.

You may place me, sir, in Manchester, N. H. My name was, and is to-day, James Dickey. I think I shall be remembered there. Many long years have elapsed since I passed away; were I to undertake to reckon it, I should say it must be more than forty years, although it seems a short time to me. Mary and Robert are here, and Peter, too. [To the spirits:] Don't hang back, for I shall tell of you all.

I am satisfied with the home we have. I should have been a pretty poor scholar if I had n't made some progress in all these years. My own dear angel mother reached out her hand to me, and beckoned me up higher, as she called me her own darling James. I never can forget those prayers, never forget those blessings of my mother, but I do see and understand things very differently than I could in the mortal. I find now that creeds, sects, dogmas and isms have nothing to do with us there. It is the life you are living here that builds your home yonder, just back of the veil.

I would say to every mortal within hearing of my voice (although you may say we are entire strangers, yet we are all God's children, and he had a large family), I want you to know that when we come to earth we are not always attracted to relatives, for there are often others who are no kin, whom we gladly help. Oh! let me say to you all in the mortal, Be ye charitable; be ye charitable; for I know not one in the mortal who is perfect. We in spirit see things so differently as we enter earth than we did when in the mortal form.

I would ask that this might reach Ellen Leland, Derry, N. H. I know if she sees the paper she will have a desire to read it. There is much obstinacy there in regard to these things, but I want her to know it is God's truth, and if grandfather comes, grandmother, father, mother and sisters also can come.

I thank you, sir, for listening to me for a few moments. Although so many years have passed since I left the mortal, I have not been able to manifest before.

Jason Barton.

You may place me (I was just feeling to see if I had the other arm) in Fort Schuyler, New York. I was a soldier, and my name was Jason Barton. (No, they did n't forget to put on my other arm.) I also have tried to speak in your meetings, for I have many loved ones in spirit—father, mother, sister, brother—and many dear ones left in the mortal, some in Philadelphia, some in East Hampton, and others scattered in different directions.

Mother, Clara and Lawton are here with me to-day. I never had any regrets that I gave my life for my country's sake, although the arm was taken, which I suppose had to do with my passing over. But I am happy, and I would like each one of the dear ones to know I often visit them in their homes. Sister Mary, Walter and Worcester say to me this moment to please announce that they are with you in the home often. I am satisfied with the home I have, and would not ask to return to earth to stay, although there are many dear ones here, and the ties are strong that attract me to earth.

Sister Adeline, I know you will see the message from your brother in the good BANNER—for it is meat and drink to her. She watches its coming more than she would the rising of the sun, and often has she scanned the pages to see if some dear one had not given out something to her. Elijah, I know you will say I am charitable. I am trying to be, but I can't see it just as some of the others do. I know you will say: Jason, I feel, dear brother, you are not dead, but you are looking forward a little too far, thinking, perhaps, there must be a Judgment Day. The Judgment Day, as I look at it, comes every day. Now, let me say to you, dear brother—let me add, brothers and sisters—I often visit you, and father and mother send greetings to-day. I know that when our dear mother was called up higher the parting was hard; but, oh! how blessed will be the meeting, the reunion there.

I often come to visit some of the boys that wore the blue, and I find some have their trials in this life. As we in blue in spirit-life are permitted to go wherever we will, we come often around you, boys, and try to lift, or help to lift, the burden of life, which is heavy.

Learn all you can in this life, dear ones, for it is but a shadow. I was ready to come, but still life was sweet to me here. Dear sister Mary, I know how lonely and sad you are; but look a little higher, for the dear ones that come so often to visit you will never leave nor forsake you. Frankie, grown to manhood—not the little babe you placed away so tenderly—will be given back to you in heaven, where no parting is known.

Jenie Warren.

I would like to send a message, for I have tried three different times. You may place me as from Montreal, Canada. Jenie Warren. I stood so close when the gentleman went out that I came right in. I find that the only way we can do is to take the accepted time. If we wait, somebody else gets it; then we wait until next time, and of that we are not always sure.

Jenie is with me—the granddaughter—(for the name was handed down) John is also with me, and the little babe that was laid away years ago—more than half a century, as you reckon mortal time. I am happy, and satisfied with the change that came to me, although I felt as I threw off the old mortal that there was much that held me to earth. I felt they needed me here, but I find now they can get along without me in the mortal. Hannah is here, too. I want to say, also, that she sends greetings to William. We try so hard to make ourselves known in the home surroundings. There are but very few left in the mortal; the larger part has passed the boundary called death, but which is only change—a starting out in life, as it were.

I am happy in my spirit-home. Gladly would I come into communication with the dear ones privately, if I could, for there has been some little trouble in some property, which we do not care to speak of publicly. There should not have been any, but I could not help it.

William Seavey.

My name, sir, is William Seavey, Portland, Maine. I have been anxious, very anxious to reach Clara and Nellie. I know Clara does not understand anything of spirit-return, but, Clara, learn a little this side. It is like a school; what you learn here advances you so much further when you cross the boundary. I am happy in my spirit-home. I am only waiting for you to join us there. I know you have said so many times in your soul, "William, why did you leave me?" I had no voice in the matter. They called me up higher, but I am often with you, dear wife. I know you will say, "if I could only see you, I should believe it." Now let me say to you, dear Clara, if you could see me you would say, "William, don't go again." The second parting would be harder than the first. No, it is right that you can't see me with mortal eyes.

I often visit you in the home, and I want you to listen for some little sounds; for we must speak through sounds now, dear Clara. We cannot make you hear spirit voices just yet, although you have some power, but try to listen for some sound. I promise you in the home I will keep trying to make you feel my presence there. You say, "It is a long time, Willie, since you left me." Long it seems to you, but not to us.

Nellie, it did me a great deal of good just coming into communication with you once. Now, open the door as often as you can and we will come in and commune with you. I know you are troubled a little about the hearing, but be patient; in spirit you will not be troubled. I know it worries you a great deal for fear your hearing will leave you entirely. No, it does not grow on you. We see plainer and clearer than you can. I ask the angels every day to bless you in your efforts, for you have done so much for Hattie, and I know you are still doing. I am satisfied with what you have done. Do not think for a moment that William leaves you. I often talk with father, mother and Aunt Olive, but we cannot always make you sense our presence.

Charles Rhodes.

Good morning, sir. You may place me in Hyde Park. I have come in to speak a word or two to let mortals know Charles Rhodes is not dead. I deny it emphatically. I am not dead, neither have I seen a dead person since I left the town of Hyde Park. I felt a little disappointed, Charles, when I found how things were going. I would not have you think for one moment I am mixed up with the old material affairs, but when we enter earth's atmosphere we feel the mortal as much as you do; we feel of earth, earthy.

It is but a short space of time since they said Charlie Rhodes was dead. No, dear wife, I am alive to day, and gladly would I come into conversation with you if possible, and Charles also, although many miles, as you term it here, intervene between you and the dear boy; but, oh! I can go so easily, so quickly. Let me say, dear ones, I will never leave nor forsake you. I am watching over you all, and I promise, with the help of the angels, that I will be ever watchful by your side.

Ollie Seavey.

Grandpa said I could come. I want you to tell mamma I was right close here, and I am Ollie Seavey. I lived right where Uncle William did, Portland. I aint going to talk any more.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

AARON CILLEY.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of July 28th I find a message from AARON CILLEY, of Andover, N. H., to George. It is thought by some that it was for me; if so, many thanks. It is true that Aaron Cilley lived in the town of Andover many years as his home. I knew him well as a neighbor and friend. He passed away some fifteen years ago or more. I also knew his mother, and Abbie, his own sister, who said she would do her own talking as soon as the channel is opened, which I hope will be in the near future. No, I have not forgotten 'Squire Cilley, and there are many here in Andover who remember him well.

Always for the truth, GEORGE SLEEPER.

West Andover, N. H., Aug. 6th, 1888.

DR. ALFRED MILLER.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of July 21st the message from DR. ALFRED MILLER, of Fitchburg, I was very glad to read. I knew him for a long time in the towns he spoke of. He was our family physician for several years. Oscar, he speaks about, was my son, and he attended him the last few days before he passed away, and a few weeks after he went very suddenly, as he says in his message. MRS. R. C. EATON.

Ashburnham, Mass., July 27th, 1888.

ALPHEUS B. HOAG.

I desire to recognize a message from ALPHEUS B. HOAG, of Sandwich, N. H., given through the mediumship of Mrs. B. F. Smith, in THE BANNER of Aug. 4th. Very truly yours, FRANK J. PEASE.

Lawrence, Mass., Aug. 4th, 1888.

From the Facts Convention.

The undersigned, appointed a committee by the Facts' Convention Aug. 4th, to report upon the fact of the production of pictures through the mediumship of Dr. Henry Rogers—upon cards held between closed and sealed slates, which were held by persons upon the platform in the Temple at Onset before a large and intelligent audience on the evening of Aug. 3d, 1888—would respectfully report that they find from the evidence presented that there were pictures in colored oil paints and crayon produced upon cardboards, with writing upon some of the slates, as well as the pictures; and that all were produced without "fraud or collusion," upon the part of the medium or sitters. It was clearly proven that the medium had never (before the picture was shown) seen the inside of or handled some of the slates, or what was therein contained.

We also find, and so say, that the pictures thus produced were such in point of excellence and finish that no artist need be ashamed to claim them as his own: and that we not only commend the beauty of the pictures, but their life-like likeness to those whom they purport to be; and that there was a celerity of action in their production impossible for human art to attain.

We also congratulate the people of Onset on having in their midst such gifted mediums as Dr. Henry Rogers and his accomplished wife.

We each and all believe Dr. Rogers to be a gentleman, and would recommend him to all persons as a medium, the superior of whom, in our judgment, the world has never seen: And we owe him our thanks for thus publicly giving through his instrumentality the proof that friends who have gone before do live and can make their presence known to us.

(Signed)

JOHN H. MCELROY, Chairman, Pittsburgh, Pa.;
REV. E. B. FAIRCHILD, Stoneham, Mass.;
DR. H. W. GOULD, San Diego, Cal.;
MRS. THOS. GALES FORSTER, Baltimore, Md.;
MR. E. S. WETMORE, New York;
L. L. WHITLOCK, Boston, Mass.

At the Facts Convention held at Onset, August 6th, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That our hearty thanks are given to Mrs. J. J. Whitney of San Francisco, Cal., as we feel that the success of our meeting has been largely due to the services of herself and spiritual guides—which have been so freely given. We are glad to welcome her to Onset, and heartily commend her to all Spiritualist inquirers and investigators.

Resolved, That our thanks are returned to Mr. Horatio G. Eddy, who gave such satisfactory physical manifestations on our platform under strictly test conditions. To Mr. Louis F. Jones, through whose mediumship was produced a remarkable crayon portrait, before a large public audience in broad daylight, which was at once recognized, making the demonstration a wonderful evidence of spirit-power. To Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, for her invaluable services, which added so much to the interest of the several meetings of the convention. To Dr. B. M. Lawrence, who gave an exhibition of spirit-pictures by the aid of the stereopticon. To Mrs. Lizzie Whittemore for her inspirational singing, which was heartily appreciated; and to one and all who have assisted in making this the most successful Fact Convention ever held at Onset.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are also due to our President, Mr. L. L. Whitlock, for the conclusive proofs afforded of the great fact of spirit-return, through the public manifestations obtained and organized by his exertions at the present encampment.

At an adjourned meeting of the Facts Convention, held in the Auditorium at Onset, Aug. 6th, the following committee—Gen. Francis J. Lippitt (Washington, D. C.), Mrs. Thos. Gales Forster (Baltimore, Md.), Mr. William A. Atkins (Provincetown, Mass.), Dr. H. W. Gould (San Diego, Cal.), Rev. E. B. Fairchild (Stoneham, Mass.), Mr. L. L. Whitlock (Boston, Mass.)—appointed at a previous meeting to prepare suitable resolutions in reference to the manifestations through Dr. D. J. Stansbury, made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That after a full presentation of the evidence relating to the phenomena of slate writing (including that of the picture of an Indian chief appearing on one of the slates) which occurred at the Temple, before an audience of between three and four hundred, on Aug. 2d, through the mediumship of Dr. D. J. Stansbury, we deem the genuineness of these manifestations to be established beyond all possible doubt.

Resolved, That from the statements of persons in our midst whose credibility cannot be questioned, and who have had sittings with Dr. Stansbury for independent slate writing, we are satisfied that his mediumship for that phase of spirit phenomena is of such a character as to afford the most conclusive evidence of both spirit-return and spirit identity.

Resolved, That we desire to express not only our satisfaction with the remarkable manifestations presented on the platform of our convention through the mediumship of Dr. Stansbury, but also our appreciation of the genial and intellectual qualities of the Doctor and his estimable lady, who have done so much to add to the enjoyment of such visitors at Onset as have been so fortunate as to make their personal acquaintance.

August Magazines.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—The leading article treats of "Roscoe Conkling and His Home in Utica," a portrait, as the frontispiece, and views of his home accompanying it. An interesting description of Philadelphia in 1750, is given by the editor, Mrs. Martha Lamb. We are told that then everybody wore wigs, their variety being designated as "tyes, bobs-majors, spencers, foxtails, twists, têtes, scratches, full-bottomed dress bobs, cues and perukes," and "walked the streets in bright-colored and highly-decorated coats, three cornered hats, ruffled shirts and wristbands, knee breeches, silk stockings, low shoes and silver buckles." Charles K. Tuckerman contributes "Personal Recollections of General Grant," and "Incidents of Border Life in Ohio" are related by Louise Welzell. A continuation is given of "An Englishman's Pocket Note-Book in 1828, of What He Saw in America." "A Frenchman's Estimate of Washington in 1781" is accompanied by a portrait, the original of which was made at a reception of Washington on the back of a playing card, which the artist suddenly availed himself of as the only thing at hand adapted to his purpose. New York: 743 Broadway.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—Whether political subjects should be discussed in the pulpit is the theme of a paper in the "Review Section," by Dr. Howard Crosby, his closing words being, "The pulpit should ever be the representative of God's truth (not man's) to the needs of the soul," as though all truth was not God's truth and equally needful "to the needs of the human soul." Dr. C. endeavors to make a distinction where there is no difference. The effect of recent criticism upon Christian Evidences is considered at length by Dr. Warfield. The usual compend of sermonic literature fills the remaining pages. Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—The fourth of Dr. Hutchinson's series of illustrated papers descriptive of a jaunt "Along the Caribbean," leads an interesting variety of contents, prominent among which is C. H. Crandall's sketch of "Where Burgoyne Surrendered," with a detailed account of the monument that marks the spot where it occurred, and portraits of Burgoyne, Gates, Schuyler and others. Trebor Ohl tells of "Six Story-Tellers for Children," and gives pictures of them. Of the remaining articles are "A Summer Episode in Washington," "Aristocratic Paris," by Jesse Shepard, "Father-in-law," "The American Arctic Savage," and "The Country in Mid Summer." American Magazine Publishing Co., New York.

ELECTRICAL ENGINEER.—"Trans-Atlantic Electrical Litigation" and "Overhead Wires in New York," are the subjects of editorial remarks; "Physics in Public Schools" among contributed articles, the "Abstracts and Extracts," "News and Notes," etc., reporting a broad field of inquiry and research. New York: 11 Wall street.

THE FREETHINKER'S MAGAZINE.—James W. Dare makes a weak attempt to discredit the truth of spirit phenomena by bringing in witnesses whose pretensions to duplicate the manifestations have been time after time proven to be of no account, when tested by the conditions the mediums are subjected to. Buffalo, N. Y.: H. L. Green.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED.—Instructions are given for the treatment of plants in August. Something is said of native orchids and new geraniums, and the departments of "Foreign Notes," "Pleasant Gossip," and "Our Young People," are well filled. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE following characteristic letter, from the pen of Lyman C. Howe, the veteran speaker and writer for the noble cause of Spiritualism, speaks for itself. Mr. Howe has worn our Shields for more than five years, and has had large experience with them among his friends. The readers of THE BANNER have implicit confidence in the integrity and good judgment of Mr. Howe. He always writes and speaks what he knows to be TRUE. Write him for further evidence about our Shields, and he will give his experience:

DR. THACHER:

Dear Sir—Your Magnetic Shields have some merit, but on the whole I am inclined to call them a fraud. They soothe and vitalize the nerves, put new life into the blood, warm cold feet, build up the debilitated and consumptive, create a row among the old sinners in the constitution, and keep stirring them until they enter upon a war of extermination, or commit suicide to escape; put neuralgia and rheumatism hors du combat, make a weak man vigorous and saucy, and cure family quarrels where they originate in bad blood or depraved nerves; but they don't mend cork legs nor glass eyes, nor cure warts on an evil temper. They should be a specific for total depravity, alcoholism, and especially for debilitated pocket-books. Here is where they fail. If you can improve them so that you can guarantee a perfect cure for financial fits, consumptive bank accounts and religious hydrophobia, your fortune is made. Then, as your best advertising card, I would advise you to cover the Brooklyn Tabernacle and its pastor, and if you cure him you need waste no more printer's ink. Yours for health,
