"Well, gentleman," said Mr. Brown, "I suppose you will agree with me that we all have an influence, silent though it may be—silent though it may be," he repeated, as if liking the sound of his own voice.

"Certainly," they both replied.

"Now the question with me is this: Does Mrs. Carroll exert the right kind of an influence over her pupils?"

"They all seem to like her. We have had no complaints from pupils or parents," said Mr. Tibbitts.

"When I say influence I refer to a religious influence," and Mr. Brown folded his hands as if in devout supplication.

"What's the matter with Mrs. Carroll's religion?" asked Mr. Tibbitts.

"I am sorry to say I fear she has none."

"But she was brought up in Dr. Packard's church," said Mr. Closson, as if that ought to settle the matter; "and you know the Doctor personally recommended her."

"Very true," replied Mr. Brown, opening his hands with a quick movement, like an abrupt "Amen" to his silent petition. "Very true; but you know we sometimes drift away from our early moorings—drift out to sea, as it were," waving his hands outward as if an imaginary bark were disappearing. They waited for him to continue.

"The fact is, Mrs. Carroll has forsaken the faith of her ancestors and has embraced Spiritualism!"

He pronounced the word as if it were a dynamite explosive.

"Spiritualism!" echoed Mr. Closson: "that is really a grave charge."

"Does she talk Spiritualism to her pupils?" asked Mr. Tibbitts suddenly.

"Really, I never heard her. I never heard that she did," stammered Mr. Brown, a little disconcerted by the question.

"Then I don't see why we need to worry over it. I am not a Spiritualist myself, but I have no objection to her being one as long as she does not intrude it on the school."

Mr. Brown was hardly prepared for this reply from Mr. Tibbitts. He turned toward Mr. Closson, as if more sure of his sympathy and approval.

"You know, gentlemen, I reminded you at the beginning of our conversation that we all have a silent influence. Mrs. Carroll's influence over the school is great. I put it to your consciences, gentlemen, whether she ought to be allowed to retain her position."

"But if we dismiss her it will be difficult for her to get another position, especially in this State," said Mr. Tibbitts.

"I hope we shall feel an interest in the religious training of the young everywhere," said Mr. Brown, rolling up his eyes as if he expected to catch a glimpse of heaven on the ceiling.

"What church are you a member of?" asked Mr. Tibbitts.

"Really, I am not connected—that is, I am not a member of any church," he answered confusedly.

"Oh! I thought you must be a church-member, you seemed so anxious for the welfare of the children's souls!"

It was easy to detect the sarcasm in Mr. Tibbitts's words and tone.

"Really, now, I am disposed to agree with Mr. Brown. I have conscientious scruples about allowing Mrs. Carroll to remain," said Mr. Closson.

"And I think you are quite right." Mr. Brown settled himself complacently.

"Very well, gentlemen. Of course you will take what steps you may think proper; but I say here, and now, I will not be a party to any such transaction. So long as the school prospers as a school ought, it makes no difference to me whether the teacher is Protestant, Roman Catholic or Spiritualist. I stand for Mrs. Carroll."

There was a pause after Mr. Tibbitts's declaration of liberalism; then Mr. Closson said:

"Perhaps we will talk the matter over again soon."

Mr. Brown, though foiled for the time, did not despair of achieving his purpose. Here and there he met certain members of the school board, and so skillfully manipulated his skeleton, Spiritualism, that finally Mrs. Carroll was formally requested to resign her position, with no offer of a letter of recommendation to any other school.

She knew it was hopeless to ask for one. She felt all her conscientious and faithful labors in the school were lost. She recognized Mr. Brown as the mainspring in all these movements. It was with a sorrowful soul she told her mother of the result.

"Now I know what Sidney meant, mother," said Doris, as she held her letter of dismissal over the glowing open fire. "I just wish I could send Mr. Brown as far out of my way."

Tears were running down her pale cheeks.

"Well, dear, something good will come to you, I know," said Mrs. Carroll comfortingly.

"Perhaps so, but this is hard to bear for the time."

Just then Lydia came in.

"Unless you feel too much disturbed I wish you would come down for a few minutes." Doris went down to the apartment where Lydia held her séances.

"Here are some people for whom I have written a communication. They say it is satisfactory, but they wish very much that I should describe the spirit. Will you try?"

Doris seated herself at once. She was soon able to see and describe the spirit who gave the message. It was the daughter of one of the ladies sitting there. She wept freely as Doris gave many particulars of form, features and characteristics, and the mother departed comforted.

Lydia was very thoughtful for a time after she went to her room. Then she called Mrs. Carroll in.

"Mother, I have a plan in view concerning Doris." Mrs. Carroll gave her attention.

"It is not likely Doris can obtain another school, unless she goes away; and we cannot spare her, can we?"

"No. I must have Doris with me. I depend on her greatly."

"Now I have been wondering if she cannot employ her mediumship as I am doing. For instance, one of those ladies who called this afternoon was so pleased with the description Doris gave of her daughter. Now, you know, I can only write. She can see and describe. If she were to receive with me, it seems to me the séances must be more satisfactory. And as to the money earned, we can divide the profits."

"Well," said Mrs. Carroll, after a pause, "if you and Doris think it best I suppose I must approve it."

"I have not consulted her yet."

"Suppose we call her in now and propose the plan."

Doris came in directly, and Lydia repeated all she had said.

"I am really quite in favor of it, Lydia. Spiritualism took my bread and butter from me in the school, and I don't see why it should n't provide some for me in some other way. I have only one objection."

"What is that?" asked Lydia anxiously.

"It will reduce your profits, and that does n't seem right."

"But I shall still earn enough to support myself, and that is all I want; while you will earn as much as you did in your school."

"All mediums do not earn as much as you do, Lydia; I think you are very fortunate," said Mrs. Carroll.

"You are very generous to propose this to me, Lydia, and at present I see no alternative but to accept your offer. It is something to be thankful for that we can work so well together." And then she added, laughingly:

"If Mr. Brown really thinks he is going to suppress me by taking me out of the school, he will be mistaken, for he has thrust me more fully into the work."

CHAPTER XVII.

THE OLD FRIEND.

The next morning there was a caller, and a card was given Doris. "Thomas Tibbitts," she read. "I wonder what has happened now?" She went down to learn.

"I have called to say I regret the action of the school board in your case very much. I protested at the meeting, but I was in the minority."

"I thank you for using your influence for me, Mr. Tibbitts. If they had complained of my management of the school, I should have felt they were excusable."

"Now, I do n't wish to seem impertinent, but I should really like to know how you happened to become a Spiritualist. You seem to be a sensible woman."

"It was through my personal experiences, Mr. Tibbitts. I did not refuse to investigate the strange occurrences, and I could not help becoming one finally."

"It is something I know nothing about."

"Have you an hour's leisure this morning?"

"Yes, two, if I can serve you."

"Then I wish you would come with me for a little while."

He followed her into the séance-room. Doris called Lydia and introduced her.

"Now, Mr. Tibbitts, I have no personal acquaintance with you beyond seeing you in my school. I know nothing of your family or friends. I propose to give you a séance this morning, if you have no objection."

"None at all. I would be pleased, if it is possible."

In a few moments Lydia began to write. She wrote rapidly. Sheet after sheet was covered in an incredibly short space of time. As for Doris, it seemed as if the very windows of heaven were opened to her. Many of Mr. Tibbitts's family and friends gave proof of their presence. She described one after another, and Lydia instantly wrote their names.

Mr. Tibbitts was an Englishman, and many of these people were never in America.

For one, two, three hours he sat there and heard all they had to say. At the conclusion he exclaimed:

"Mrs. Carroll, to say that I am amazed does not express it. I do n't know what to say or what to think. I truly believe you both to be honest." He began to gather up his written messages.

"I want to consider this, and I wish to come again. I thank you for this interest in me. I can only say that after what I have seen and heard to-day, I shall not rest until I have thoroughly investigated these strange facts."

Doris and Lydia were thankful for this result.

"Was n't it really wonderful, Lydia?"

"Yes. I think it was a good beginning."

Mr. Tibbitts went again and again, and in one year he had joined their ranks.

A year passed. Morris had finished his studies and gained an honestly earned diploma. He began his practice among some of Dr. Carroll's former patients. Practice came slowly, but increased surely. He was faithful to his patients, and was soon as fully employed as he cared to be.

And then the question of his marriage came up, and in the summer they were quietly married.

Lydia did not give up her mediumship. She gave a great number of free séances; but she felt the world needed her gift, and as all home affairs ran smoothly, there seemed to be no reason why she should not continue in the work.

Four years passed. They had all been very comfortable and happy. Morris obtained a new lease of the house, for they could not bear to leave the dear old place.

The anniversary of Doris's birthday returned. The three preceding ones had developed no startling or unhappy incidents, thus proving the truth of Dr. Carroll's words, "it only happened."

Doris had spent a part of this day with Lucy. She returned home a little earlier than usual, because it was raining quite hard. Mrs. Carroll was passing through the hall as she entered.

"There is a caller in the parlor who has just been inquiring for you, Doris."

She laid aside her wraps, and entered. A well-remembered form was standing there. It was Mr. Brooks.

Doris gave a glad exclamation, and then sank on the sofa in a fit of uncontrollable weeping. The sight of Mr. Brooks recalled old memories. It seemed more than she could bear.

"Doris, do n't cry so." He took her hand. She could not speak. He knew she could hardly bear the thoughts that thronged upon her.

"I will go now, and come some other time, if you had rather—sometime when you can bear it better."

She only clung to his hand in a way that assured him she had not forgotten him—that she was still his friend. After a little time she became more calm.

"Your coming was so unexpected to me I could hardly bear the sudden thought of all that has occurred since you went away. But I am very glad to see you once more."

"I only arrived last night, and came here directly this morning. Of course the occasional letters have kept me informed of some of the more important changes. I have often wished to come back, and have given myself a couple of months' vacation, which I shall probably spend in this city."

"That will be very pleasant for us all. You know we have always considered you quite as one of the family."

"For which I am thankful. Morris has kindly given me an invitation to be his guest, which was seconded by Mrs. Stuart and Mrs. Carroll."

"And I shall add mine to theirs. You really belong to us, Mr. Brooks."

A pleasant room was given him, and he soon felt quite at home among them. There was much to relate which had not been spoken of in their letters. He watched their mediumship with increasing interest.

"It is really wonderful. You are doing a great deal of good. It would be well for every family to develop its source of mediumship."

"There are very few families in which a medium may not be found by a little search for one," said Mrs. Carroll.

"As for me, I can only preach it, and I do that wherever I go. My Sundays are generally occupied, and a good many evenings. I am happy in my work. It does n't look as if I should ever get rich in it," he added laughingly, "but as I have no family I can manage to get along. I am content to live simply, if I can do a little good in the world."

The words, "I have no family," struck home to Doris strangely. She felt that it was because of her that he seemed so much alone in the world. She knew he had not forgotten her, and she felt a sadness that she should be a blight upon the life of any one. The time of his stay had nearly passed, but he had not alluded to those particularly unhappy times.

He had endeared himself very much to them all since his coming among them. Morris and Hugh were trying to persuade him to locate permanently in the city with them.

Mrs. Carroll had just been talking with him about it, when Morris came in, pressing his request also.

"You are all very kind. I should like to do so much. But I shall say to you frankly that I think I could hardly bear to do so. You all know the feeling I once entertained for Doris. I have never changed; and my visit here has made her still dearer to me. You see that I must go."

"I am sorry," said Morris. "I wish it were otherwise; and I cannot help feeling it will be yet."

Doris came down to the parlor a little earlier than usual on the day upon which Mr. Brooks was to go away.

"I wanted to say my farewell to you alone, Doris," he said. "You have helped to make my stay here a pleasant one—so pleasant that I hardly know how to go away."

Doris politely said something about coming again.

"I wish I might; but not until I can bear our meeting better than I can this parting." He held her hand for a moment.

"Doris, I have never changed toward you. If in the future you should change toward me, will you be frank enough to give me an encouraging word?" He waited for her to speak.

"Yes, I will think of all you have said."

There was a hopefulness in her voice which made his heart throb. He could only look his thanks.

His words rang strangely in Doris's ears all through the breakfast hour.

"I wonder if anything has happened between Doris and Brooks," said Morris to Lydia; "seems to me he has brightened up wonderfully."

"I do n't know," said Lydia; "but if there has n't, something will. I am sure of it."

Another hour and his baggage was in the hall. The carriage was waiting, and he was saying farewell to those he had learned to love so well.

"We shall look for you again next summer, Brooks," said Morris.

He turned to Doris.

"May I come then?"

She knew all the question implied. She laid her hand in his as she replied:

"Come!"

The early summer found one more added to the happy family, and Doris was given a new name—the name of one whom she had long respected and had learned to love; and it read—"Doris Brooks."

THE END.

The Spiritual Rostrum.

OUR FOES WITHOUT AND WITHIN.

Continuation of a Discourse having Especial Reference to Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane's Recent Denunciation of Spiritualism, given through the Mediumship of

MRS. R. S. LILLIE,

Before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society—in Berkeley Hall—Sunday, Nov. 4th, 1888.

(Reported for the Banner of Light.)

EVENING DISCOURSE.

This morning we made the statement that one discourse was not sufficient to do anything like justice to the subject we were considering. We then only touched upon the enemies found without, mostly in the religious element and in the churches. As has been said, there are exceptions, many of them, individual exceptions, minds ready to receive the teachings, when they are presented aright. But as Modern Spiritualism rests upon a belief supported by indisputable evidence of continued existence in another state of being, we should naturally expect it would have been heartily welcomed, and that anything claiming to bring substantial proofs of what they already held as a faith they would have hailed with delight. On the contrary, we find them to be our bitterest opponents, following eagerly every one who claims to expose Spiritualism, no matter how flimsy the guise, or how transparent the trick brought forward to disprove its facts.

Why is this? It is because they are holding on to idols, in the form of dogmatical doctrines, by which they measure all things; and if anything comes in opposition to these doctrines it will be rejected. For this reason it was found early in the movement that the bitterest opposition and antagonism to Spiritualism came from them. Spirits, on being questioned, invariably gave answer that all were by nature provided for; eventually saved from error by growth in a knowledge of the truth, and not by resting upon the goodness or merits of another.

This touched in such a radical manner an essential point of their doctrinal belief that they who stood guard over it immediately rejected Spiritualism, and became our antagonists. Vituperation, anathema and misrepresentation have been their weapons, and they have assailed us on every hand. Without asking what is truth, and with little or no knowledge of the subject, they have allowed prejudice to govern them, and have taken floating detrimental rumor as the basis of sermons which they have given the people in the name of or under the pretext of teaching them what Spiritualism is.

There have been individual exceptions where heart-hunger, and an ever-unanswered inquiry as to the other life, have led them gradually to the truth. These have come from the ranks of every denomination of Christendom, almost, we might say, of the world, Jew and Gentile, Catholic, and every denomination of Protestants.

Many in timidity and fear to cut loose from or loose their hold upon the old, have asked the question eagerly, Can I become a Spiritualist, and still remain a church-member? The answer has been, Certainly; just as long as the church is of any use to you; just as long as it feeds or satisfies you in any way, spiritually, stay there. Get all the good you can anywhere and everywhere. When it no longer satisfies, and you find yourself more spiritually fed and nourished outside, you will leave it, because you are no longer in need of it.

This is a matter of natural growth; for this reason we have had within our ranks people of all shades of belief adding to it their Spiritualism according to their experiences, which are greatly diversified.

Spiritualism comes to mankind a silent, unseen power; it enters the homes of Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, in short those of every denomination. Our mediums have been chosen from all these classes. Endowed with their gifts they have become bearers of the messages which spirits have been able to give in this age. Gradually these ministrations of newly revealed truths have led them out of errors, changing their views until at last they have said, "We are Spiritualists."

The Church, as a body, finding that the teachings given by spirits had a tendency to gradually lead from an adherence to their tenets, waged a persistent warfare against them. Ministers have berated them in the pulpit, and the press always, with few exceptions, on the side of the larger number, have aided these assailants, assisting them in every instance, at the same time denying us a hearing. It has, therefore, been thought by some that we ought to have made a strong point this morning of the fact that the Roman Catholic Church was the power behind the scenes with Margaret Fox Kane, instigating and aiding by money and influence. We do not doubt that this is in a measure true. That there are Catholics to-day doing and ready to do all in their power to overthrow Spiritualism we know, as all who are familiar with the history of Spiritualism know that Margaret Fox went into the Catholic Church with pomp and ceremony thirty years ago. Spiritualists knew all the time that she was a Catholic, and her Catholic advisers knew that she was a Spiritualist medium; knew that she went to our meetings, affiliating with us and giving at times these demonstrations. If they held such an influence over her, why was it not exercised over her thirty years ago, or even twenty, to prevent the spread of Spiritualism, instead of waiting till this late day to strike it a blow, after by the life she has led she has lost prestige and influence with Spiritualists almost entirely, and therefore her power to do the cause anything like the injury that might have been done years ago? She tells The World in her confession that she has practiced deception and fraud these forty years. She also says that the priest who baptized her told her to keep on in the business for a support. Did she tell her Father Confessor at that time that she was practicing deception? and did he advise her to keep on, knowing that she was doing this? and did he grant her indulgence in this kind of sinning? We know there are plenty of Catholics who would do all in their power to prevent the spread of Spiritualism, but we believe also in placing responsibility directly with the individual—that each person is individually responsible for his or her acts. We believe that any number of priests advising her to turn from and deny the truth, would be no reasonable excuse for such an act as she is guilty of, after having received the light she has received from her childhood, having spirits about her as she has, knowing by every sense that she possessed that they were spirits. Any honest woman, if asked to deny, could only have said: "No, I cannot deny what I know to be true."

It was after patience and forbearance had ceased to be a virtue that the Spiritualists (in such cases as the letter read this morning, where the Spiritualists appealed to felt no certainty whether she would use the money in coming to them and for a good purpose, or otherwise,) declined to aid her, that she, angered and chagrined that she was no longer supported in her course, her power withdrawn, her self-respect, pride and principle gone, turns and says, "I will have revenge! I will denounce the whole thing as a fraud, and I'll have money!" Thus she becomes a willing tool in the hands of mercenary and unprincipled men.

Some will say: Why did n't spirits prevent her taking this step? We might as well ask: Why does not God prevent all evil? We do not know: we may find she did not leave Spiritualism a day too soon. My only fear is that she will yet return when she finds she is not to reap the pecuniary harvest she expected, and then she will say it was an evil spirit that tempted her to do as she has done. No, I would not lay the blame at any of these doors. A combination of causes has weakened the woman and she has fallen. But Margaret Fox has received too much light. She is responsible, and she will meet the consequences of her acts. Sometime, somewhere, she will find herself alone with her conscience; it will awaken surely, and that will be punishment enough.

One of the difficulties which we find within our ranks is that so many enter the work and call themselves Spiritualists who have no knowledge of the philosophy or principles of Spiritualism as yet, and no love of the cause. They know little and care less. They find themselves by some means possessed of some degree of mediumistic qualities, and they rush before the public with those gifts undeveloped, while the investigator and the cause must take the consequences. This is becoming, in a sense, a Spiritualist without becoming spiritual. To become a true Spiritualist and a spiritual medium requires slow growth in development, with a sincere love of the truth and of the cause at heart, and aspirations to be and do the very best that the human organism is capable of becoming and doing. Another thing: there are too many advertising developing circles; and as developing mediums, those who are not half developed themselves, are thoughtlessly throwing upon others many times conditions which they have no knowledge of how to control or govern, and could not counteract or throw off if they found it necessary. We do not underrate this phase of mediumship, and do not mean to be understood that we think some who are already well surrounded by wise intelligences who understand the use of those subtle powers, cannot be of use in the development of others. But it is our belief that all should be very cautious as to whom they permit to exercise such power over them.

To speak of those who only pretend mediumship and who steal the livery of the spirit to serve their own mercenary ends, is only to speak of what you all know is true.

It is the counterfeit which follows the genuine. And it is one of the conditions which Spiritualism is obliged for a season to endure.

It carries its own remedy in the barefaced assurance with which those who make use of it flaunt it in the face of the seeker after truth, which is gradually having the effect to drive the investigator to those phases of mediumship which give indisputable evidence and leave unquestionable results.

With all this, we have the noble, true, earnest and unselfish workers, who value the truth, who are ever found on the side of right, who ever keep before them the grand ideal of manhood and womanhood toward which they are aiming; who count no sacrifice too great, no pathway too rugged for them, if by it the truth may be advanced, and good accomplished.

With our foes without of superstition, bigotry and intolerance; with the combined efforts of Catholicism and Protestantism; with the amount of dishonesty and want of candor that is at times found within the ranks; with the weakness and vacillation of some who cannot wait for the work gradually to assume a condition of permanency, and who in their impatience are turning some one way and some another to find conditions and positions that no religion ever gave its laborers in the first forty years of its history, and that can only be attained by self-sacrifice, labor and devotion to principle, and is weakened by just so much by all who are able to do and yet allow themselves to falter in well-doing—still with all this there is a persistency in Truth which keeps it moving irresistibly forward.

Good and true men and women from all classes are coming into the movement, admitting its truths, being touched by its teachings. The power that brought all who are now with us, is still at work. There is a gradual growth in spiritual things; a quickening of the mind in this direction, and none need fear for the future of our cause.

New Publications.

READINGS FROM THE WAVERLEY NOVELS. Edited for School and Home Use. By Albert F. Blaisdell, A. M., author of "The Study of the English Classics," etc. 8vo, cloth, pp. 264. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

A belief that the thoughtful reading of an invigorating and wholesome author, like Scott, must foster in the minds of the young a taste for good literature, has led to the compilation of these selections from the best of his twenty-nine novels, and these are intended as the basis of a more extended study of the entire works of one whose style is simple and graphic, the thought healthful and stimulating, and the events described of real interest and permanent value.

MANNERS; Happy Homes and good Society All the Year Round. By Mrs. Sarah J. Hale. 12mo, cloth, pp. 377. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

In a very attractive and substantial form this standard work is issued in time for the holidays. It is adapted to persons of all ages, and cannot fail to be as acceptable as it is useful to every one who has the good fortune to receive it. It is marked with a sturdy common sense and is a true guide to the courtesies and amenities of an honorable life.

MISS PARLOA'S NEW COOK BOOK. By Maria Parloa, Principal of the School of Cooking in Boston. 4to, paper, pp. 56. Boston: Estes & Lauriat.

Only a limited edition of this work is published, one that, doubtless, the reputation of the author and the popularity of her other books of a similar character will cause to be soon exhausted. Miss Parloa's aim in this has been to make the directions and descriptions clear, concise and complete, and she has hit the mark.

LE REVE. A Novel. By Emile Zola. Translated by Geo. D. Cox. 12mo, paper, pp. 290. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson.

There is a purity of subject and a refinement of treatment in this strongly in contrast with the author's previous books. A poor girl, deserted, is saved from perishing by the Huberts, who give her shelter from a severe snow-storm and eventually a home. The characters are finely drawn; many of the scenes are deeply pathetic; the language at times poetic, and throughout beautiful.

A START IN LIFE. A Story of the Genesee Country. By J. T. Trowbridge. 16mo, cloth, pp. 163.

BIDING HIS TIME; or, Andrew Hapnell's Fortune. By J. T. Trowbridge. 16mo, cloth, pp. 190. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Nothing more is needed than to announce new books by Mr. Trowbridge to create a general demand for them among young readers, and that such a demand exists indicates the growth of good taste and an appreciation of teachings directly opposite to those that, unfortunately, have prevailed to a great extent in modern popular stories for the rising generation. For boys nothing is better suited than these new volumes, each of which is finely illustrated.

THE RAINBOW FESTIVAL. For Church, Sunday School and Charity Festivals, and THE RAINBOW PRINCE. A Novel Children's Entertainment, en tableau. With Complete Directions for Performance. By Mrs. A. G. and Leo R. Lewis. 16mo, pp. 37. Brattleboro, Vt.: E. P. Carpenter Co.

THE GYPSIES' FESTIVAL. A Musical Entertainment for Young People. By N. Earle. 16mo, pp. 28. THE COURT OF KING CHRISTMAS. With Simple Incidental Music. By L. A. Higgins. 16mo, pp. 26. New York: H. Roorback.

The above are well adapted to the use of the Children's Progressive Lyceum and for public and private entertainments.

PRIMARY METHODS IN ZOÖLOGY TEACHING. By W. P. Manton, M. D., F. R. M. S., F. Z. S. Illustrated. 18mo, cloth, pp. 61. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

A practical help in the study of natural history, giving useful points and methods, and an outline showing how they may be utilized by teachers.

Sin in the Name of Purity.

THE UNWISE EFFORTS MADE BY MISTAKEN FANATICS.

Sermon for the Sermonizers—Modern Society no Worse than Its Predecessors—A Purity that Lacks Modesty—Charity of a Kind that Works Social Mischief.

The present generation, says the editor of London Truth, is privileged to witness an imposing demonstration of militant purity. You meet the evidence of this movement everywhere—in Parliament, at church, on public platforms, and in the magazines and newspapers. It has also, of course, two or three societies devoted to its furtherance. For this is the age of associated virtue. Temperance, charity, thrift, humanity and all the rest of them have long ago been taken under the special patronage of opulent associations, each with its apparatus of hired offices and salaried officials, noble presidents and ignoble advertisements. In the nature of things poor purity could not long escape the fashion, and accordingly, in the fullness of time, there came into existence a Church of England Purity Society. I know not how many more there may be, but at any rate no other has yet learned to blow its own trumpet so loudly, or beat the purity drum so vigorously; no other has evinced such a confident determination to take the Minotaur by the horns and save society at any cost; no other, in my humble opinion, promises to do such an infinity of mischief in so short a time, or to become such an unmitigated curse to all sections of society.

I have been favored with a circular from the Secretary of this Association, enclosing a manifesto from the two archbishops and my old friend the bishop of London, which in its turn introduces to my notice the report of the Pan-Anglican Committee on Purity. It starts with the assumption that modern society is universally honeycombed by "sins of impurity," that a state of things prevails so terrible that "we dare not utter all that we know." It next formulates, in the language of the pulpit, a set of platitudes of which no man or woman of average respectability needs to be reminded. Finally, it proceeds to sketch out the programme of an exhaustive discussion of sexual vice in all its possible bearings, to be undertaken by the clergy and "the faithful laity." This savory compilation is intended as a sort of plan of campaign for the purity forces, and is to be sent by the Church of England Purity Society, kindly assisted by the purse of an anonymous M. P., to every clergyman in the United Kingdom, and to "about six thousand laymen of influence"—of whom, I presume, I may congratulate myself on being one.

I regret that my influence, such as it is, cannot be cast on the side of the C. E. P. Society. Like the late Benjamin Disraeli, I am anxious to be on the side of the angels, but then it is, unfortunately, not always possible in these days to tell an angel at a glance. You see something like the outline of wings dimly overshadowing a rapturous face and a pair of upturned eyes, and next moment upon the brow you detect what looks like the ghost of a pair of horns, and, casting down your eyes, you observe a deformity of foot, which might very well be explained by a cloven hoof within a patent leather boot. It is not my business to question the motives of persons blessed with such exuberant virtue as our purity friends, or to suggest that any apostle of chastity, male or female, lay or clerical, has any earthly desire but to make all the rest of the world as virtuous as himself. But I, too, have my anxiety on the score of virtue. I claim to have had every bit as much experience of the average moral condition of contemporary society as any archbishop or bishop on the bench, and to be just as competent a judge of what is, or is not, conducive to public and private purity. And I say, without doubt or qualification, that these reverend and other busybodies are wrong from beginning to end—wrong in their premises and a thousand times more wrong in their conclusion. It is not the fact that any class of modern society is in the foul condition at which the episcopal Mrs. Grundy lifts up her horrified hands. I grant there may be an unusual amount of dirty linen washed in public in the present day; but it is only because the conditions of modern life lead to publicity, and because there is a larger population to wash for. If the bishops and the C. E. P. Society would give a little of their valuable time to investigating the private washing bills of the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, they would find that the quantity of soiled apparel per head is very much what it always was.

In respect of all the matters which the C. E. P. S. has at heart, we are every bit as good as our fathers, and many degrees of virtue above our ancestors in the time of James I., Charles II., or any one of the four Georges. If this be so, the excuse for a special purity mission to the present generation fails utterly. And what remains? An agitation as repulsive as it is groundless, and in its probable consequences as pernicious as it is repulsive. It is time to speak out plainly to these purity fanatics. By their own confession, some of them know the danger they are incurring. For the flimsiest delusion, the delusion that the present is an age of abnormal sensuality, these official custodians of public morals deliberately elect to incur the danger. For no better reason than this they are ready to let loose on society all the horrors of a purity crusade, fortified by whatever inflammatory accessories modern sensationalism can lend to it; ready, not only in their own language, to familiarize the young with the details of sin, but to debauch every age with prurient disquisitions on vice; ready to strip lust of the veil which even the most shameless throw over it, and accustom virtue to feast her eyes on the naked abomination; ready, in a word, to break down every barrier which nature and modesty have raised for the protection of innocence. I am willing to treat some few leaders in this abominable movement as no better than misguided enthusiasts; but heaven forbid that I should give this credit to every individual who flourishes the white cross of chastity in my face. Take him for all in all, the modern Galahad is the most pestilent of contemporary humbugs. He is a priest—generally of the Ritualistic persuasion—who gloats in the pulpit, or better still in private confidence, over the phases of sexual sin, and revels in detailed exhortations against impurity until young girls are ready to weep and every decent listener is sick for shame. Or he is a social philosopher, and in the name of purity must see with his own eyes the modus operandi of the vilest forms of depravity—must even set in motion with his own hand the criminal machinery which ministers to lust. Or he is a schoolmaster, and in the name of purity poisons the mind and debauches the imaginations of children with circumstantial admonitions against vice and suggestive pictures of depravity. Or he is a journalist, and in the name of purity loads his columns with unexpurgated divorce reports, with every loathsome tale of vice that the industry of the penny-a-liner can gather or his own imagination aggravate, with the sensational details of every story of private immorality of which his greedy ears detect a whisper. With the cant of virtue on his lips and vile and filthy imaginations in his heart, he poisons the springs of innocence, uproots modesty and sows broadcast the seeds of vice in the sacred names of purity and chastity.

It is to men like this—ay, and to women every bit as bad—women who batten on the contemplation of sexual immorality, feminine pseudo-philosophers who delight to handle in public the most risky social questions with a frankness from which men shrink, unsexed females who like nothing better than to stand up before a mixed audience and parade their familiarity with the most loathsome aspects of vice—to men and women such as this it is that we are bidden to look for the reform of manners and the regeneration of society! Heaven save us from them, and from all their works! I am no stickler for prudish propriety, no opponent of plain-speaking where plain-speaking is at once necessary and expedient. But of this I am sure, that, if decency and modesty be thrown to the winds, purity and chastity will very soon follow them. Where there is no shame there will be very little virtue. Thank God, there are still men enough among us who know how to cultivate purity without sacrificing decency, and women who have managed to remain chaste without ceasing to be modest. With such it rests to silence the pestilent prophets of prurient purity, and prevent them from working a social mischief a hundred times more insidious and deadly than any of those which they profess to deplore.

THE "DEAD" POET.

BY JAMES M. ROGERS.

He is not dead! but joined the throng,
In higher life and sweeter song;
He swells the choir and sweeps the keys
To more ecstatic harmonies;
The soul that dwelt in beauty's bowers
And drank, through transient, earthly hours
The songs of birds and fall of floods,
And choral anthems of the woods,
Has passed beyond these confines dim,
And hears a far diviner hymn
From hallowed hills and vales of rest!
In bright assembly of the blest
His voice has found an ampler sweep,
A richer tone, a theme more deep:
He sings of splendors full that rise
From fairer fields, sublimer skies,
Of raptured noons, that know not sorrow,
Night of unrest, nor gloomy morrow:
He, far above this common earth,
Has met the dawn of spirit birth,
And interchanged those fleeting lays
For sonnets of eternal days.

Banner Correspondence.

New York.

BUFFALO.—J. W. Dennis writes: "It is reported that certain Christian people have of late made a great effort to bring a combined force of the enemies of spirit communion together for the purpose of attempting to destroy it, and when I hear of the raids that have been made in Chicago and other places against mediums, and also that the Fox sisters have been taken by these enemies of ours and placed upon the platform to denounce Spiritualism, I begin to believe there is some truth in the report.

Let that be as it may, would it not be better policy for such people to attend to their own system of religious faith, which all signs go to show is fast proving a failure?

Says the Springfield Union: 'The Methodist General Conference came out $20,000 short of paying its expenses, and now the women who were not admitted as delegates will probably be asked to get up fairs, festivals, sociables, etc., and raise the money to make up the deficiency.'

In a paper read before the last Church Conference of England, Canon Taylor astonished his associates by expressing grave doubts whether the results of Christian missionary enterprise were sufficient to justify the prodigious efforts expended upon it. He has since said:

'Leaving out Thibet, Borneo, and other regions of which the the population is unknown, the most recent estimates make the non-Christian population of Asia and Africa upward of 920,000,000, of which the natural increase by the excess of births over deaths must be more than 11,000,000 annually. Dr. Maclear, who is the principal of a training college for missionaries, and "perhaps the greatest living authority on the subject," estimates the annual increase of native Christians due to missionary efforts at 60,000. At that rate, then, it would take the missionary societies 183 years to overtake even this natural increase of the non-Christian population in a single year. In spite of our advance, instead of overtaking the work, the work is overtaking us. It is like the tortoise racing with a railway train; the longer the race continues the further the tortoise is left behind. Something like $10,000,000 is spent annually on Protestant missions, and there are about 6,000 American and European missionaries, with about 30,000 native agents, and yet there are to-day upward of 10,000,000 more heathen and Mohammedans than there were a year ago. If the population remained stationary and all the converts steadfast, it would take more than 330,000 years to convert the world, or nearly a million years if the relapses are taken into account. In China, the number of adults baptized by the Church Missionary Society last year was only 167 out of a population of 382,000,000, with an annual gain of at least 4,580,000 by the excess of births over deaths. At this rate the Society would have to work 27,000 years to come up to the natural increase of one year, and more than 1,680,000 years to convert China, even if the population remained stationary. The expenditure is enormous; in any other department of effort it would be called wasteful. In China the cost of the 167 conversions was about $75,000. In Ceylon last year 424 agents of this Society spent $55,000 in making 190 adult converts, out of a population of nearly 3,000,000; and yet the relapses were more numerous than the conversions, for there was an actual decrease of 143 in the number of native Christian adherents. In Northern India it cost $170,000 and the labors of 715 agents to make 173 converts. In Egypt, Persia, Palestine, and Arabia, the Society employs 119 agents, and has expended over $117,000 in the last two years, with absolutely no conversions.'

Canon Taylor quotes, to show the character of the converts, the English Vice-Consul in the Cameroons as reporting that after twenty years of labor the missionaries in many important districts can scarcely number twenty sincere converts; and in other parts of Africa the religion of the nominal Christians is discredited by numbering among its adherents all the drunkards, liars, rogues, and unclean livers in the colony. In the oldest of our West African possessions all the unrepentant Magdalens of the chief city are professing Christians, and the most notorious one in the place boasts that she "never missed going to church on a communion Sunday." After a quarrel in a nominally Christian village, three years ago, the victors proceeded to cook and eat the bodies of the slain. The Vice-Consul says that, with rare exceptions, the native African pastors, teachers and catechists whom he has met are 'more or less bad men.' A missionary reports the same.

In view of the above statements, made by a leading man in the Christian Church, would it not be better that those trusting in that Church should attend to their own affairs before attempting to crush out the only truth that is known on the face of this earth in regard to the future life?"

FLUSHING, L. I.—A. E. Hempstead writes: "The first private séance for full form materializations was given in this place Oct. 14th, by Mrs. L. S. Cadwell of 244 Lexington Avenue, Brooklyn, she being an entire stranger to the house and cabinet an hour before the séance. Eighteen full forms came and were recognized by their friends. Materialization and dematerialization took place outside of the cabinet in full view. Spirit-voices in the cabinet, often two at a time, joined us in singing, and tests were freely given. All were satisfied of the truth that our 'loved ones gone before' were able to come and make themselves known in a visible, tangible form. Mrs. C. has fully recovered her health, which adds much to her wonderful powers in the hands of her glorious band of angel-workers."

New Jersey.

NEWARK.—A. C. Stickle writes: "I have read considerable lately about these Fox women endeavoring to make people believe that Spiritualism is all fraud and deception, and have concluded that instead of doing so they will awaken the people to investigate for themselves, and indirectly do the cause much good. The best lecture that has appeared in your columns for some time was in THE BANNER of Nov. 10th, upon 'The Science of Immortality'; it is simply grand. The story, 'Bars and Thresholds,' is also splendid. I had Eleanor Martin of Columbus, O., answer a sealed letter, and can say that any one who engages her services will be more than pleased, as I can testify to her genuineness as a first-class medium.

THE BANNER is growing better with every issue, and although I am a poor man, eking out a miserable existence, I will send my mite now and then to help along the cause in my humble way, knowing it will be appreciated. Long may it wave to dispel the heavy darkness and bring light to many an aspiring mind, to comfort and console in grief and sorrow."

VINELAND.—Riley M. Adams writes: "In the autumn of 1854 I lived in Burlington, Vt. Joshua Doane, about seventy years old, was a near neighbor. Being taken ill, I took care of him three or four days prior to his passing to spirit-life. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

After his funeral loud raps were heard in my bedroom at midnight. Again, in the second night after, I was awakened and was told by them that a spirit was present. Mistrusting the source of the phenomena I took my horse and drove to Williston, four miles, and, sitting with a medium, I got the name of my neighbor Doane before I had asked a question. On inquiring what was wanted, my friend said he had come to let me know he was a Spiritualist. This was a surprise to me, as he had kept it a secret from me.

Mr. Doane then said that three or four days before he left he went to Col. Brown's and played dominoes. He also told me of having dissolved his connection with the church. As these statements were news to me, I inquired and found they were true, and that he had given them to me as tests.

In the fall of 1859 I was invited to attend the New Hampshire State Fair, at Dover, and stopping at my friend Langmaid's, I was invited to the cemetery to see the monument of Capt. Parker, former husband of Mrs. Langmaid.

In the evening I was invited by Mrs. Elkins to her house, to sit for raps. The first that came spelled out the name of Elder Elkins, and I recollected of seeing the name on one of the gravestones that day. There next came a short message to the medium's husband, who was at the table, addressing him by name, and he remarked that he had never seen anything like that before.

After the séance Mrs. Elkins told me not long before she had a brother, who died; and that soon after the burial of his body loud raps followed her from room to room, until it was learned by them that he wished his body taken from the cemetery and placed in what was once his own land, which being done, they were no more heard."

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Solomon W. Jewett writes: "I have made frequent visits to California. Was conveyed over the waters three times out and back before railway accommodations existed, commencing in 1859. This is my ninth journey to this land. I once made my home in Kern County for a term of six years, mostly alone, my children out on the plains and hills in charge of sheep, back one hundred and sixty-six miles from our business post-office—Los Angeles. Six weeks was about the time required to obtain news from New York. Being thus secluded from society, on the banks of a fine, broad stream of ever-sparkling waters, rushing out from a stupendous cañon, and living on an abstemious diet, my thoughts ran mainly upon religious subjects and prepared the way for a development of advanced mediumship, which I have reason to believe I attained. A healthy physical development is essential to good mediumship, and I believe good angel-friends had a hand in my removal from the cares of a mundane world, to the better prepare me for the spiritual."

SANTA ROSA.—J. V. Aldrich writes: "Spiritualism is growing steadily but surely on this coast. We are having fine meetings in San Francisco. I had the pleasure of meeting with that excellent test medium, Edgar W. Emerson, of Manchester, N. H., at the Camp-Meeting in Oakland last June. It also carried me back East to meet with and hear Mr. Colville and Mrs. Lillie. I think they are both fine inspirational speakers.

The BANNER OF LIGHT is truly a light to me and a great many others. May it continue to spread the gospel of light and truth so long as bigotry, injustice and oppression remain in the world. The good cause is steadily growing here in this little city of roses. True, a great many investigators here have not yet the courage to come out openly, but they will get over that in time. There are many private circles held here the public know nothing of, but for all that they are doing their work."

Michigan.

ADRIAN.—M. L. Sherman writes relative to the Fox-Kane matter, remarking that, even admitting her explanation to be true—which no one having the slightest knowledge of the phenomenon could possibly do—that explanation is very far from accounting for the intelligence the raps manifest. He further says that the same intelligence accompanies other phenomena, and establishes their claim to spiritual origin, and gives one instance of his own experience in table-tipping, a phase that was coëval with the raps in point of appearance, as follows: "I sat at a table with a medium I never saw before, and she had never seen me. Being informed my father was present, I then asked if he would tip the table as many times as he lived years on earth; the table tipped sixty-three times, which was his age, and then he tipped the number of days he lived over sixty-three years. I did not know at that time whether the number of days was correct, but found out after that it was. Some will say the medium read my mind. That could not be in the number of days, for that I did not know myself."

Ohio.

CLEVELAND.—J. A. Bidwell writes: "Dr. A. J. Symes, of 43 Richland Avenue, recently graduated from one of your schools and as yet has not a very large practice. He is trying very hard to keep the wolf from the door by selling his little book, 'Gleanings,' which I see advertised in THE BANNER of Oct. 20th. Of this book I am fully of the opinion of a writer in The Better Way, who says 'it merits a place on every honest minister's study-table, and a close perusal by the minister. Those who are in search of truths cannot fail to find such in these unorthodox sermons. All Spiritualists desirous of lending blind friends a good eye-opening, faith-killing work, should purchase "Gleanings." The author has passed through the crucial fires and comes out purified.'"

Rhode Island.

NEWPORT.—John C. Peckham writes: "I fully endorse all THE BANNER has said in reference to the Fox girls. If in Bible times Peter was led to deny his master, who was the representative of truth, why need we be surprised that some in this day deny Spiritualism, which is truth itself?"

Pennsylvania.

WASHINGTON.—Mrs. Katherine Charlton says there are no mediums where she resides, and she is desirous of corresponding with some reliable ones in regard to the subject-matter of spirit-return and communion, in which she has an abiding interest.

MODERN HEROES IN EVERY-DAY LIFE.—Even now we think of the men of the chivalric days as of a race more heroic and loftier in aim than the drudging, dollar-earning American. Yet there is not a grimy engineer who puts his hand on the lever of an engine, that does not feel that his duty includes the risking of his own life, if needs be, for his passengers; and not once in a thousand times when the emergency comes does he shirk that duty. How many doctors, nurses or clergymen, shrink from perils of a great epidemic?

It is a significant fact that, since the organization in 1871 of the Life-Saving Service that guards our entire coasts, there have been but two instances in which a man refused to risk his own life to save a ship-wrecked crew. There is no elan, no passion, no fervid clutch at glory in this kind of courage, which is becoming a marked feature of American character. It is the quiet, calm, obstinate performance of duty—however commonplace—once undertaken, in the teeth of death itself.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Everett, Mass., July 25th, Mr. Edward Grover, aged 83 years 9 months and 15 days.

His generous effort to enlighten those who came to receive, will long be remembered by many who obtained communications through his brother-medium—who, with an aged sister, still survive in the old homestead. Essence and Substance:
A TREATISE ON
Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.
BY WARREN CHASE.
Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies—although evidently of much longer duration.

THE NEW CRISIS. By GEO. W. BELL. In his preface the author says: "We have reached a crisis in our national development. We have rushed to this pinnacle of greatness with a mad impetuosity unparalleled in the annals of the world; ignoring social adjustments, essential to the symmetry and stability of a state.
My purpose being to prove the existence of a class-conspiracy, the design of which is to subvert the principles of our government by a monopoly of all wealth, I have discussed the merits of no measure further than to prove the centralizing tendencies."

SECOND EDITION.
A REVIEW
OF THE
Seybert Commissioners' Report;
OR,
WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.
BY A. B. RICHMOND, ESQ.,
A Member of the Pennsylvania Bar; Author of "Leaves from the Diary of an Old Lawyer," "Court and Prison," "Dr. Crosby's Calm View from a Lawyer's Standpoint," "A Hawk in an Eagle's Nest," Etc.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as a writer, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.
Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experience there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.
After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism; Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

THANKSGIVING AT THE FARM.

The Absentees Return and Enjoy a Good Time.

The chilly winds blow o'er the moor,
And whirl the leaves about the door,
But on the hearth the faggots roar
With sparkling cheer;
The oven in the chimney glows,
While pies along the shelves in rows
The appetizing fact disclose—
Thanksgiving 's near.

The goodwife, skilful in her art,
Gives to its practice all her heart,
And frosts the cake and fills the tart
With busy zest;
Upon the circumambient air
Sweet smells, pervading everywhere,
The genius of the hour declare
And manifest.

The children chuckle in their glee,
As preparation wide they see;
The goodman smiles benignantly—
No time to lose—
And straightway on his mission hies
To consummate the home supplies,
And scans his brood with careful eyes.
The best to choose.

"To-morrow is the festal day"
(One can imagine him to say),
"And Tom and Jack, and Kate and May,
Will soon be here.
From far away they hither come
To meet—God bless them!—at the home,
And test, beneath the homestead's dome,
Thanksgiving cheer."

The monarch of the barnyard flock,
Undreaming of impending shock,
Is seized and hurried to the block
(Quite lost his head);
And hens and chicks and ducks galore,
Soon mingle in the dust their gore
With his, the monarch, gone before,
Their mission sped.

True sacrifice is theirs confest;
Their latest ministry the best,
Revealed in dark meat, wing or breast.
Or merry thought;
And did the bipeds only reck
The province proud they were to deck,
They would have volunteered their neck,
And slaughter sought.

Now twilight o'er the landscape steals;
The listening farmer hears and feels
The sound of hurrying wagon wheels
Far down the lane;
"Hurra! they 're here!" the younger fry
In one emphatic chorus cry,
And run to meet those hastening nigh
Their home again.

Soon comes exchange of smiles and tears,
Of retrospective hopes and fears,
And subtle thought that home endears,
Tender and true;
The mother's eyes with joy benign
Out through her gleaming glasses shine,
Fraught with an effluence divine,
Her sprouts to view.

Now forth a myriad questions race,
The answers hardly keeping pace,
While fond affection's beaming grace
In bliss obtains,
Till, hardly knowing, steal away
The hours that crown the close of day;
And night assumes its grateful sway,
And slumber reigns.

* * * * * * *

The morning opes with bounteous glee,
And every heart beats merrily,
The sun, such happiness to see,
Seems doubly bright;
The trees stand round as ancient friends,
The brook its liquid welcome lends,
And the old pump its hand extends
In grave delight.

E'en the house-cat imbibes the cheer,
And Pomp, the dog, with antics queer,
Laughs with a grin from ear to ear.
In conscious sort;
While the old bird upon the perch
Darts here and there with frantic lurch,
As if of opening in search
To join the sport.

* * * * * * *

Then timely met about the board,
Piled high, in plenteous accord
With the glad season to afford
Gustation meet,
Where taste and appetite, aglow,
Will such profound repletion know,
That effort cannot further go
And be discreet.

With the rich bounties round him spread,
The good old father bows his head,
And humbly prays for "daily bread,"
Then warmly pours
His thanks for benefits conferred;
The day, the smile, the happy word,
The union blest, all hearts have stirred
Within his doors.

His trembling voice his joy bespeaks,
The tears run down his furrowed cheeks,
The while a smile of pleasure reeks
In mouth and eye;
The signs, far more than words, convey
His feelings that have sovereign sway!
Words were deficient to portray
His heartfull joy.

* * * * * * *

Then, given the after hours to mirth,
With old companions round the hearth,
The song, the tale, the jest has birth,
And all elate,
Lend to the passing moment wings,
That, as it speeds, harmonious sings,
And broadcast rare enjoyment flings
On those who wait.

On rolls the time when comes the dance,
The "best room" fitted in advance,
A fiddler not "brent new from France,"
Controls the floor;
And tribute to the genial time
Is great in act, if not sublime;
May not with great assemblies chime,
But pleasant more.

There in the dining-room, apart,
Great "Copenhagen" thrills the heart,
Or "Twirl the platter"—magic art—
Gives halcyon bliss;
And improvising many games,
Urge on the hour with potent claims,
Consonant with that best of aims,
The "forfeit" kiss.

On with the dance—on with the game—
Light up the scene with merry flame,
Let no endeavor meanwhile tame;
With keen delight
Open to pleasure all the gates,
Improve the season that awaits,
Give mirth the rein, with giddy pates,
And fill the night.

* * * * * * *

Good-bye! Good-bye! 'T is time to part;
Glad laughter thrills, warm tear-drops start;
Quiet returns upon the heart,
In tranquil rest.
The festive day is with the past,
And all the joys around it cast,
But love of home will ever last
To warm the breast.

Back to their tolls the dear ones are,
The homestead and its treasures far,
But fond affection, like a star,
The wanderer cheers,
And blest Thanksgivings at the farm
Will rise in recollection warm,
To be an elevating charm
In future years.

☞ We shall print next week the verbatim report—prepared especially for THE BANNER columns—of a lecture delivered Nov. 18th, before the First Society of Spiritualists of New York City, by Lyman C. Howe. The discourse, which is pertinent to current events, (the action of the Fox girls included,) and which called out general expressions of pleasure and appreciation at the time of its delivery, has for its theme:

"MODERN SPIRITUALISM:
ITS PURPOSE AND SCOPE IN THE ECONOMY OF NATURE IN THIS PART OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY."

"Spirit Phenomena through Mediumship."

The discussion of this highly important subject before the American Spiritualist Alliance, which holds its meetings fortnightly at No. 219 West 42d street, New York City, is commanding general attention. We published in THE BANNER of Nov. 17th the report of the Corresponding Secretary, Mr. J. Franklin Clark; we now publish a later report from him, which may be found upon the eighth page of this issue.

The subject of "spirit phenomena through mediumship" is one that requires the closest study by the best and most experienced minds in our ranks. We are well aware that the esoteric laws of Nature are but little understood; but, like the invisible agency, electricity, they are within the grasp of the human intellect. It is therefore well that The Alliance has this great subject under consideration at the present time. There are already Psychical Research Societies in existence, in this country and in Europe; but what have they thus far accomplished? Nothing. Why? Because they have been instituted by men who have had no (or very little) experience with spiritual mediums.

It has been a subject of earnest discussion for many years, by skeptics as well as by believers, why some spirits could communicate with earth's people, while others could not. Our view of the case is, after an experience of a third of a century, that it is because of lack of adaptation between the spirit's and the medium's brain. The law is extremely nice in this particular. We have conversed on this topic many times with Spirit Theodore Parker, who, as our readers well know, was the chief control of Mrs. J. H. Conant—one of the best trance-mediums of her day—and he stated that when his medium on circle-day came to the office, they (the special spirit-band) kept her under guard, allowing no spirit to approach the inner circle. When the time had arrived for a spirit to give a message (and there were a host of them always present, he said,) the controlling intelligence for that particular day and hour would first examine the precise condition of the medium's brain—as constant changes of thought were going on, until she was fully entranced—and then, after coming to a definite conclusion in this respect, the officiating spirit would enter the outer circle and select one to speak whose brain was en rapport with that of the medium's, and so on with the next spirit who was in a condition to use the medium's organism independent of any volition of her own.

No doubt the same holds good in regard to the independent slate-writing phase of mediumship; and that in each case is the reason why so many spirits, who earnestly desire to communicate, are kept in the background for an indefinite period. Another thing should be taken into consideration, and that is this: The will-power of a spirit has much to do in this respect. We have known a very sensitive spirit, while in control, to utter a few sentences, when another powerful spirit, who was assigned to speak next, got full possession of the medium, through his anxiety to communicate, thus summarily dispossessing the other spirit. This episode took place because the control in charge of the séance allowed two spirits to enter the inner circle at one and the same time, which he should not have done. This was a lesson, even to the intelligent presiding spirit. No more errors of this description occurred afterward.

We thus allude to this particular circumstance, as it goes to show the fact that decarnated individuals, no matter how intelligent they may be, are liable to err as well as those in the flesh.

If, then, trance-mediumship requires such nice conditions as we have merely hinted at, how much more careful should materializing mediums and their mundane agents be in order to give their regular controls the power to present spirit-forms so characteristically and truthfully as to satisfy every beholder?

A female spirit once informed us that she had been in constant attendance at our public free circles for three years, trying to communicate with her earthly friends—having promised before her demise that she would if possible. It would astonish the reader could he have seen how delighted she was when her message appeared in THE BANNER. Subsequently it was verified to the letter, our correspondent stating that she had been waiting for three years to hear from her spirit-friend according to promise.

Thus it may be seen how exacting the law of control is, and how little it is understood by even a large majority of Spiritualists themselves. And the most important feature of all in regard to direct spirit return is, in our view, the necessity of the utmost harmony between the sensitive negative medium and the positive sitter.

No wonder during séances for materializations that so much dissatisfaction exists among the sitters, and that so many different views respecting them are held by the public at large when we take into consideration the requisite condition—which should be fully impressed upon the managers of these séances, and invariably enforced, namely, that, in order to acquire the necessary harmony for the spirit-chemists to do their work thoroughly, none should be allowed in the circle-room except honest investigators—those who attend with only one purpose in view, that of meeting their spirit-friends.

When we had a sitting on a Sunday evening at Mrs. Sawyer's in New York City, two years ago, the circle contained among those present but two skeptics, yet the manifestations were not as satisfactory as usual. On the following evening (by invitation) we attended another materialization séance at Mrs. S.'s residence, which, being a private one, was composed of Spiritualists exclusively, when the manifestations were very powerful, showing what satisfactory results can be obtained under the proper conditions.

We trust that The Alliance will investigate this momentous subject in the most thorough manner, to the end that the Truth, which we all are seeking for, may make our pathway plain.

The Catholic Church and Spiritualism.

An elaborate editorial article entitled "Modern Spiritism" recently appeared in the Catholic Union and Times of Buffalo, which challenges special attention just at this time for the relations which it proceeds to set forth as existing between the Catholic Church and Spiritualism. The article referred to opens with an allusion to the so-called "exposure" by the Fox sisters, characterizing it and them in the following language: "The fact that they were active agents for the last thirty-five years in the promulgation of Spiritualism, suggests the thought that their change of purpose has been too long delayed to vindicate their own integrity, and leads to the inference that their project is to bring themselves more prominently before the public than they have been for the last few years."

The Union and Times says it does not mean to imply that "Spiritualism is all a delusion arising from ignorance and superstition, or that there is no truth at the bottom of it." "Without genuine coin," it explains, "there cannot be a counterfeit; without light there can be no shadow." The writer does not hesitate to admit the verity of the spiritual phenomena, confessing that the Bible is full of accounts of them from beginning to end. Looking at the phenomena, he says we must admit that "there are intelligences in another order of existence who can communicate—have communion with—intelligences in this our order of existence." Unless we do admit this, he insists that we must reject the credibility of human testimony. This universe, he says, "is larger than we can see or even imagine." He admits the belief in a future or continuous life that is found everywhere among men. This faith he holds to be the result of an original and direct revelation, made "in the beginning," and consequently needs no proof or verification, having been received at first hand from God.

The writer rejects the Spiritual Philosophy as only a system of dogmas in another form and wholly unreliable. He declares that the Catholic Church through its tenets recognizes the communion of saints, and by its exorcising prayers acknowledges the active influence and power of the devils—thus establishing spirit-communion as a fixed fact in the Church's belief. "That these purely spiritual beings," he says, "good and bad, can and do have communication with beings in our order of existence, is an ineradicable belief of the human race." This belief is unchanged in the history of man. But the writer would account for it on the supposition that it is the result of an "original revelation" in some form. Then he traverses the Bible books to illustrate his statement from the pages of sacred history. All through the Old Testament the events, he admits, "show an intermingling of the two worlds of intelligence." "That good angels can intervene in our behalf," he says, "is evident from the doctrine of the communion of saints; and that evil spirits can torment and afflict man, is shown by the prayers of exorcisms used by the church." Citing a list of writers who have made this subject a study, among them Robert Dale Owen in his "Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World," he asserts that "all these supply indisputable testimony to facts, and demonstrate that communications with extra-mundane intelligences are of as frequent occurrence to-day as in any former time."

But, says this Catholic writer, the works of Spiritualism are done by the devils; hence the Church prohibits her children having anything to do with it. Why by devils? Why not good spirits as well as bad? Is there not a tremendous religious conceit in the assumption that there can be no "communion of saints" outside the pale of the Church? that not only are there no saints outside, but that all those who are inside are saints? It certainly would appear so. The Church, it seems then, while it concedes and even accepts the facts which establish the belief in spirit-communion, nevertheless chooses for itself to reject the belief in the communion of good spirits with mortals, and prefers to believe that only evil spirits are privileged to return and to work uncontrolled mischief. How or where it derives its authority to discriminate after such a fashion is by no means clear. This writer, while accepting the facts, refuses to respect what he styles the deductions; but he claims for the Church that we shall accept its deductions, and call all returning spirits evil and none good.

The only attempt at reasoning, in the article under consideration, is that made to disprove the claim of Spiritualism that spirit communion establishes the fact of immortality. The argument offered is this—that the mere fact that a human spirit can be shown to have existed up to the present time does not prove that it will never cease to exist. To our view, with no intended disrespect, this is pretty fine wire-drawing. It is a simple negation of an ascertained fact by the negation of its continuity. It is a refusal to accept any proof at all respecting the future, simply because we cannot embrace eternity within our always limited comprehension. It is idle to talk about a "revelation from God" on the subject if we deliberately and stubbornly refuse to accept the clear revelation which God's facts are offering to us on every side. To assert, as this writer does, that "no finite being can experience an endless experience," seems like trifling with a subject which he admits he is incompetent to master. To receive the proofs of a continuous life after what we call death, ought to be enough to satisfy the deepest and most earnest longings of the human soul.

Upper Story Life.

We all are tenants of mansions that contain many stories, though we may not occupy the whole of them at the same time, and some of them not at all. Rev. Mr. Savage discoursed with point and eloquence on this theme just before going off on his summer vacation, taking for his text—"Friend, go up higher." Some families, he remarked, live entirely in the kitchen, all the rest of the house being closed and dark. Man, he said, may be called a structure of stories, upper and lower. While the kitchen is a necessary part of every home, and no work in it has any necessary touch of degradation or disgrace, yet the man who is content to have only a kitchen and to live in it all the time, is hardly up to the standard of our highest thought. The lower stories of human nature, in themselves considered, are not to be found fault with. To neglect or despise them is to suffer in the higher. But to live in them alone is to miss the best of one's life, and never to know what it is to be wholly and completely a man.

There are thousands of men who lead a simple animal life. They are said to "know life," whereas they know but the smallest fragment and the worst side of it. They are devoted to the grosser appetites of the body. A little above these are persons who live only in and for what is fashionable. On about the same level is the purely selfish business man who labors only to make money, or because the excitement of it has become habitual to him. A story above this is the intellectual life, the region of family and friendship loves. He who lives here is rarely gross, and he tastes some of the sweetest joys of life. But it is permitted him to go higher yet. To be all a man may and ought, he should climb up the stairway and occupy and furnish the chambers of his brain. He who does not learn to think can hardly be called a man. But the ranges of truth and right and duty—what is called the moral—are higher even than mere intellect. Character is nobler than knowing. Above all the rest, and crowning the whole structure of humanity, is the crystal dome of spirit. Here is the observatory; open to all sides of the wide-round heaven; from which are visible the eternal stars of the divine firmament, which is the visible garment of the invisible God. Here the dignity and grandeur of life are seen, hope finds her wings, and man inhabits eternity.

These are the hints, said the speaker, that indicate the several stories in the structure of human life. By going up higher, into the upper stories, we become happier. If you are not happy, you may know that something is wrong. The way to find happiness is by climbing into the upper stories of life. The higher the faculty, the higher the pleasure. Pleasure is only the satisfaction of natural desires. The higher the hunger, the higher the satisfaction. The "man of pleasure" does not know what pleasure means. The basement pleasures of life, being gross and selfish, bring surfeit and shame, and always leave a sting and sense of degradation behind. The loss more than balances the gain. They are likewise brief and evanescent, while it is of the very nature of the higher things of life to abide. They last as long as life itself, and can be taken away only when the soul itself can be annihilated.

And it is further true that only as a person ascends can he gain any wide outlook, and so have any just estimate of the relations, proportions and values of things. To the man who lives in the basement of his being all the higher stories are only dreams of folly; while he who has gone higher knows that only the contented dweller below is the fool, ignorant of what he slights and despises. And the man who lives in the upper ranges of the universe is able to estimate his own sorrows and disappointments, and so is not overwhelmed by them. He learns that loss and tears and pain are the common lot of man. Instead of selfishly nursing his own sorrow he will be moved to go out and help some other suffering spirit.

Finally, only he who lives in the upper stories of his being can do much toward lifting up the world. Life is worth little that is not lived so as to help others. The helpers are the ones whose names mankind remembers with love and gratitude. We each one help as we lift somebody higher. If we would climb, we must first find the stairways. We must give ourselves to thought, and then we must do. Only by employing our faculties can we develop them. The heart, the brain, the moral life, the spiritual, can be kept alive only by exercise and use.

The Lyceum Fair.

Remember the Fair in aid of Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, of Boston, which is to be held in Berkeley Hall the week commencing Dec. 10th. Contributions of fancy articles for the tables and of food for the lunch-room are solicted by the Committee.

☞ We shall print next week No. 21 of the Spiritualistic Experiences of Prof. J. W. Cadwell, Mesmerist—the theme being Maggie Fox and her "exposé."

Another Daniel to Judgment.

Mr. Monoure Conway opens fire on behalf of the Fox sisters in the Open Court, and after giving a dramatic description of the "exposure" in New York, allotting such a portion to comedy and such a portion to tragedy and citing the exhibiting sisters as having pronounced the faith in the phenomena of Spiritualism "an imposture and delusion," he sums up the "confession" of the "impostors" as this—that "the whole Spiritualist movement proceeds from a cultivated abnormality in the big toe." That, then, says he, was the Rochester rap. In the forty years since, he freely admits, "Spiritualism has gained more converts than Christianity gained in three centuries." He compares it to the conflagration of a prairie by a spark applied by children, and he reasons that the religious growths must have been "dry and combustible."

For all that has been said, Conway declines to believe that this toe power is a sufficient explanation of the spiritualistic career of these sisters. He credits Katie Fox (Jencken) with having "deceived" the English men of science, especially Varley, the electrician. He cannot suppose "that the Fox toe is capable of multiplying itself into the fifty simultaneous hammers which Cromwell Varley heard in the presence of Catharine Fox, or of emitting the blue lights seen by him and others coming from under her dress, or of shaping itself to the aerial hands seen by Mr. Livermore." Hence he thinks the confession of these sisters is incomplete. He calls for the whole truth from them. He wants Mrs. Jencken to explain how Mr. Home managed to "levitate and elongate"; how burning crystals appeared on his head; and how that gauzily draped figure passed to and fro, imaged on the wall which had become luminous.

Speaking of miracles, Mr. Conway feels obliged to say: "What are the people to think of miracles of a pre-scientific age, reported only in the century following their occurrence, by tradition from unlearned witnesses who could not be cross-examined, when here, in our time, the very experts of testimony—lawyers like Judge Edmonds, Mr. Jencken and others; scientists trained in experimental investigations, like Varley, Hare, Crookes, Wallace—are found at the feet of vulgar tricksters, where the fraud is veiled with unctuous sentimentalism?"

Yet Mr. Conway asserts that the materializations reported in Mr. Crookes's book—"The Phenomena Called Spiritual"—"are not verifiable," while his discovery of the metal Thallium, and his latest discovery of the dynamical force of light, are verifiable by any and every man. He admits, however, that the position that the unbelievers had not, for verification, gone through the exact and patient experiments which led Mr. Crookes to his discovery in materialization, was practically impregnable. But the medium who convinced these English scientists of the reality of the phenomena avows herself an impostor, and that, with Mr. Conway, outweighs the phenomena themselves.

Cremation Again.

An English clergyman, Rev. C. J. Street, according to the Sanitary News, recently read a paper on the subject of cremation at Croydon, in which he openly championed what so many Christian preachers strongly oppose. He said that death was the source of life, and that the dissolution of one generation was necessary for the health of the succeeding one. All dead bodies resolved themselves into their constituent elements. But the present system of burial was as effective a hindrance of this process as possible, especially where lead or oak coffins are used. Cremation distributed the elements composing the body in a single hour, and without any of the accompanying dangers of the present system. Recent science, he said, showed that the most devastating diseases were due to living organisms which feed upon the victim. These diseased germs continued to live in the air long after the body ceased to exist.

Exhalations rose from graves that were opened. It was known that paupers' graves had been opened and the bones taken out and burned, the graves being again used for the same purpose. Soil taken from a graveyard and sprinkled over a garden thirty years after infection, is reported to have been the means of creating disease. There are eleven thousand cemeteries in England and Wales, a fact that sufficiently accounts for the continual scourges of epidemic diseases in those countries. It transpired in 1874 that the entire drainage of a cemetery discharged itself into the river Wandel, from which some of the people of Tooting were in the habit of taking their water. Some people, said he, oppose cremation because it would prevent the Lord's raising them at the last day; but this view was of course based on ignorance. The day is past for men seriously to maintain that the actual body that died would be raised, particle for particle, on the resurrection day. Such a view is condemned by some English Bishops whom he named, and indeed by all right-thinking men.

Cremation, he added, would prevent two things: the robbery of the grave and the possibility of being buried alive. If by chance a live body should be cast into the furnace, death would be almost instantaneous, and unlike the slow torture from burial.

Married,

In this city, Nov. 22d, Mr. C. P. Longley and Miss M. T. Shelhamer. The nuptial knot was tied at the residence of Mr. J. B. Hatch, Jr., by Rev. Mr. Lewis of South Boston, the ceremony taking place at 6½ o'clock in presence of the bride's immediate relatives with one or two exceptions. The reception was from 8 to 10 o'clock, when the residence of Mr. Hatch was filled with a joyous company of invited guests. The presents were numerous, elegant and of great variety. A collation closed the very pleasant occasion. May love, peace and prosperity abide with this wedded pair through a long life of usefulness, so that when they are called up higher they will feel assured that they have not lived in vain.

In harmony with the above announcement it will be seen, by reference to our 6th page, that we have (asking pardon for the seeming anachronism) changed the name of the medium at once to Mrs. M. T. Shelhamer-Longley, without reference to the time at which the messages reported were delivered.

☞ The City of Boston, through its representatives, intends laying the corner-stone of the new Public Library on the 28th of November, 1888.

☞ The New Thought, heretofore published by Moses Hull, at Des Moines, Ia., will hereafter be brought out by him in Chicago, Ill.

Kate Makes Her Debut.

We noted last week that Mrs. Kate Fox Jencken had it in mind to enter the field as an "exposer" of Spiritualism, as an adjunct to C. W. Starr—a noted "Professor" in that line. The initial entertainment (?), we are informed, came off in the manner which might have been expected, and Spiritualism has nothing to fear from her further performances.

Regarding this debut of Mrs. Jencken in a new rôle, a correspondent writing from Rochester, N. Y., under date of Nov. 23d, states:

"The Kate-Fox-Jencken 'exposé' in Rochester was a failure. A small audience attended, and the receipts could not have paid expenses. Starr himself is too well known here by Spiritualists and other people, and scarcely any one had faith that Mrs. Jencken could expose anything. She performed, I suppose, in about the same way as did Maggie in Boston and New York.

Mr. Starr told his slim audience that he judged Rochester people had rather be humbugged by Spiritualism than to come out to hear him tell the truth and expose it. Himself and Mrs. Jencken left the morning after the performance——for some more inviting field, I suppose.

The statements published in New York are, as you know, false from first to last. Mrs. Underhill's book is correct. I was familiar with all the early facts and investigations. E. W. Capron is strictly accurate in his relation of the early proceedings."

Another correspondent reports as follows:

"Kate Fox Jencken and the renowned C. W. Starr gave a painful exhibition in Rochester, on Thursday night, Nov. 15th; in the Lyceum Theater. I say painful. I should perhaps substitute the word pitiable. But it was both painful and pitiable to see a woman stand before an audience and make the confession that for forty years she had been engaged in trifling with the tenderest, holiest emotions of the human soul. How utterly flat their efforts are falling. Scarcely a ripple of interest was created in Rochester by Kate's effort, and Margaret's in Boston ended in a fizzle."

A Time-Lock Suggestion.

A fresh new idea has been suggested by an ingenious writer, that we inherit traits and conditions from our remote ancestors, as well as from our immediate ones, and that they descend to some people with what may be called a time-lock attachment. For instance, at seven years say the time-lock suddenly turns, and the traits of a child's father rapidly show themselves, and take strong possession. After another seven years the priggishness of a great-uncle, the stinginess of an aunt, or the dullness of a rural grandfather appear and assert themselves in the character. Then, at the next turn of the lock, he falls in love with every new face he sees, marries early, and becomes the parent of a large family. For continuous years he is upright and honorable in all his dealings with his fellowmen; when suddenly the time-lock of a thievish ancestor is turned on, and he finds temptation too strong for the force of habit of a lifetime. He is just as much shocked and pained at the result as other people are, and possibly more so. He cannot account satisfactorily for it at all. He knows he has not lived the life of a thief, though a self-controlled one; he knows temptation never before took that form with him; he knows the impulse was irresistible, but cannot tell how or why. He seemed to be powerless to overcome it. The time-lock of a remote, perhaps unknown, thievish ancestor was turned, and his hour had come. And so, too, with a good many other unaccountable traits of human character.

Woman at Harvard.

The so-called "Harvard Annex" is a standing appeal, though outside the University grounds, for the education of woman on the basis of an equivalent to the education of the other and more favored sex. The Annex has been a part of Harvard University scarcely more than ten years, and to-day counts a membership of fully one hundred, with a constant increase. Both the originators of this liberal movement in education and the faculty of Harvard are entitled to sincere and grateful praise for having brought this institution along to its present condition. As it stands, it may be called a side-institution belonging to what claims to be the first educational institution in New England. Mr. Arthur Gilman, its earliest and most active promoter, has recently rendered its ninth annual report, showing both a large amount of work performed and the laying of foundations for an extended future. Cornell, too, admits women to its course of instruction, and so does Michigan University, and Columbia is making ready to follow their example. The Harvard Annex continually grows in popularity. Its women students admirably sustain its character, both intellectually and morally, and have come to exert a very potent influence on the women teachers of Massachusetts.

The Spiritualistic Meetings

In various localities in this city are well attended every Sunday, and the two Children's Lyceums are very successful, while the various mediumistic meetings also are a noted feature, going to show that a deeper interest than ever pervades the minds of our citizens in regard to direct spirit-communion—notwithstanding the periodical efforts of the enemies of Spiritualism to cast obloquy upon our Cause. This in itself is sufficient reason why all true Spiritualists should persevere in the good work vouchsafed them from the denizens of the spirit-world. In other parts of the country, too, the cause is prospering, as the reports of meetings each week in our columns fully attest.

☞ The widow of the late Ed. S. Wheeler has, we are informed, again entered the estate matrimonial, her husband being an official on the business staff of the New York Herald. This lady while in Boston, during the last days of Bro. W. on earth, made many friends among those who witnessed her tender sympathy and love for the stricken invalid, and such will join with us, we know, in good wishes for her future.

☞ One of our New York friends, in the course of a private letter, informs us that in company with a Bostonian he recently attended a séance held by Mrs. Moss—the visitor from "the Hub" being much impressed with what was witnessed: "Mrs. Moss," says our correspondent, "is certainly one of the most unpretentious of mediums, and is also one of the best."

To the Managers of Spiritualistic Meetings:

The proprietors of the BANNER OF LIGHT desire to increase more extensively than ever before the circulation of their paper in all parts of the country, and earnestly ask that the managers of Spiritualistic meetings everywhere will do all that lies in their power to promote this end.

As THE BANNER publishes from week to week notices of meetings free, it behooves the friends who are interested in this branch of work to reciprocate the kindly action, and assist in adding to its circulation among their audiences.

Speakers, too, whose professional movements are printed without charge in THE BANNER, should lend us a helping hand.

It should be understood that our expenses are very large, in consequence of our meetings, held twice a week, which are free to the public, and we need all the aid we can obtain to keep these meetings and our establishment in working order.

Dividing Up Europe.

The map of Europe, as it is to be after the Triple Alliance has attained full success, says The Pittsburgh (Pa.) Despatch, is sufficient to set the remaining powers of Europe to furbishing up their war material with the intention of fighting till the last gasp. According to this, as sketched by M. de Lavelaye, Russia is to be shorn of her Eastern provinces, in addition to being deprived of her hopes in Turkey. The old kingdom of Poland is to be recreated, Roumania is to take a slice out of Russia and get Bulgaria. Austria is to have the whole of Turkey. France is to be shorn of territory for the benefit of both Italy and Belgium, while Germany is to swallow up both Holland and Denmark on the North Sea and a large slice of Russia on the Baltic as far as St. Petersburg, with a large share of Russia's northwestern possessions handed over to Sweden.

This is a great deal like selling the lion's skin before the hunt. A great deal of trouble—military and political—will have to be encountered before these proposed changes can be transferred from the domain of paper to that of fact.

Gerald Massey.

Spiritualist or other societies that may be desirous of utilizing the services of Mr. Massey on this his farewell visit to the United States should send him their applications for engagements at once, in care of Colby & Rich, office of the BANNER OF LIGHT. We trust that the friends of the cause will see to it that this gifted orator and whole-souled Spiritualist is kept busily employed during his present stay in America. Mr. Massey will speak in Berkeley Hall, Boston, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9th.

☞ Mrs. Carrie Grimes Forster writes as follows from Baltimore, regarding the recalcitrant Foxes:

"I commiserate the poor girls, knowing the repentance that is before them. I passed an evening with Katie in London, and there received most unmistakable proof of her power to act as a medium between the two worlds.

Among other communications that appeared was the writing on a piece of writing-paper that was placed under the table, perfectly clean, with a pencil thereon; when the paper was taken up from the floor there was a prophecy made to Mr. Forster by Judge Edmonds, to the intent that he would yet lecture in a distant country, which was accomplished by my dear husband filling an engagement in the city of San Francisco. Wonderful toe-joints to produce such manifestations! Poor Katie! if her powers had been successful in leading but one mind into the investigation of the truth—the arisen Thomas Gales—in view of the good he accomplished her mission was grand.

I apprehend not the least detriment to our beloved cause. Spiritualism will rise from this attack, as it has from all others, purified and blessed."

☞ A correspondent writes us from Washington, D. C.: "Mrs. Fox Kane may yet repudiate her present course of action, and penitently confess her shame. Peter was repentant after his open and forcible denial of his Master, and Mrs. Kane may yet live to forswear her falsity. If she should, it would of course have no effect upon the great question involved, though it would serve to solace her mind and help to mend a broken conscience ere she becomes an excarnated spirit."

The Council Fire, a monthly magazine devoted to the interests of the Indian, will resume publication the present month. Dr. T. A. Bland, 1121 10th street, N. W., Washington, D. C., will give full particulars, on application.

Demonstrations in Medford.

What is known as the Rock Hill estate in Medford is a locality to which public attention is being directed by a report given in The Herald of this city last Saturday, the purport of which is that the former occupant of the house, John Burke, as he himself states, was while there disturbed constantly by strange noises, generally sounding like the tramp of a person upon the stairs leading from the attic to the cellar, and, although he was not of a specially superstitious nature, the sounds did not add to his comfort during his tenancy of the place, and he was glad to get away, especially as he could not discern the cause. The house is at present occupied by John T. Hurd, and Mr. Burke states that a report has come to him that Mr. Hurd has been troubled in a similar way, with the addition of raps upon the doors, generally three at a time. It appears from The Herald's account that raps not produced by dislocated toes are heard there, and other manifestations of spirit presence occur.

"Forty Years on the Spiritual Rostrum," by Hon. Warren Chase.

This valuable book of 324 pages, which every Spiritualist ought to have, will soon be out of the first edition. It contains a perfect picture of the author as the first and oldest lecturer on spirit-intercourse in this country and worth half the price of the book, and about forty pages of select poems, written mostly by spirits through mediums. It has much reference to the early history of spiritual manifestations, with persons and places, important for reference, and a very valuable chapter of what he has learned about life in the spirit-world by forty years' intercourse with its inhabitants, including sexual life in that sphere. No reader or inquirer of our cause should be without this book. Price one dollar, and ten cents postage, to be had only at BANNER OF LIGHT office and of the author at Cobden, Ill.

List of Lecturers.

THE BANNER publishes from time to time a list of Spiritualist Lecturers with their post-office addresses attached without charge, and in consideration of our so doing it seems to us they should be more particular than many of them are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Attention to this request is earnestly desired, and should be attended to at once.

A MOTHER'S WISH.

Long years ago the heart of a king
Was carried in state, like a royal thing,
Toward the Holy Land, where he longed to go.
Did living desires round his dead heart cling;
And could they be satisfied so?

* * * * *

Come, yellow-haired little boy of mine;
Let me see your face, where your young hopes shine,
You 're loving, my darling, and strong and true;
You 'll journey, while I vainly long and pine,
So my heart I will send with you.

For I yearn to follow your life, my sweet;
'T is a long hard way for your eager feet.
And I can go only a little part;
But, dear, till your pilgrimage is complete,
Will you carry your mother's heart?

—Bessie Chandler, in Harper's Bazar.

How truly, remarks an exchange, does the groping after the dark spots in human nature degrade and make miserable. If the citizen, friend or relative offends in one little particular, he or she is at once condemned without stint. Any amount of good that may exist in the offender is at once obliterated by the one little black spot. Keep the good of every person or thing in view, and the offences of persons and many of the ills of earth will cease to be; cured by the increased light and knowledge within yourself.

That so-called Spiritualists should join in this degrading medium-hunting, and persuade themselves that they are doing it in the interest of truth, passes my comprehension. To these and their allies, the self-centred ones, who claim the prerogative of settling off-hand the delicate and profound problem of materialization, is due the well nigh extinction of this class of phenomena.—William Oxley, in The Two Worlds.

There 's not a joy this earth can give
Like that it takes away,

SHARP!—It is told of a book publisher of Toronto, Canada, that he wrote to an American author whose book he proposed to republish, offering him a cent a copy if the author would furnish the stereotype plates. The author replied that he wanted ten cents a copy, whereupon the Canadian wrote that he would rather make new plates, and that the book would be out about Sept. 8th. The author kept quiet until Sept 6th, and then wrote to the Canadian publisher saying that he ought perhaps to tell him that the book that he proposed to pirate had been copyrighted in England. As the English copyright holds in Canada, the Toronto man has a set of plates that he will sell cheaply.

Some one has called attention to the fact that eloquence in prose is closely akin to poetry, even as to measure of lines, and has given the subjoined arrangement in blank verse from the celebrated speech of Robert G. Ingersoll at the grave of his brother, as proof of the same: The words in the sonnet are all as used by Mr. Ingersoll, the breaking into lines being done by the party citing it as an illustration:

"Life is a narrow vale between the cold
And barren peaks of two eternities.
We strive in vain to look beyond the heights.
We cry aloud; the only answer
Is the echo of our wailing cry.
From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead
There comes no word; but in the night of death
Hope sees a star, and listening love can hear
The rustle of a wing.
These myths were born of hopes and fears and tears
And smiles; and they were touched and colored
By all there is of joy and grief between
The rosy dawn of birth and death's sad night.
They clothed even the stars with passion,
And gave to gods the faults and frailties
Of the sons of men. In them the winds
And waves were music, and all the lakes and Streams, springs, mountains, woods, and perfumed dells
Were haunted by a thousand fairy forms."

DULUTH, MINN., Nov. 23, 1888.—The Indians of the Grand Portage reserve are almost starving and have sent in a pitiful appeal for aid. There is a reserve fund of $1200 available, which will be devoted to the purchase of provisions. The recent storms have cut off their fishing.

Hence, gaunt apology for man!
Take hence thy hungry leaden eyes,
That all my choicest morsels scan,
And half-reproachful seem to rise,
And stay me with unspoken ban!

Thou thought'st of foodless ones at home—

While thou must watch a feeding throng.

Deaths from yellow fever in Jacksonville, Fla., still continue.

The Howard Athenæum Star Specialty Company at the Boston Theatre is the largest and best specialty and novelty organization ever placed upon the stage in this country. It was organized by Managers Rich and Harris in Europe for first class theatres only. In addition to the long list of remarkable performers already announced, the managers have added "The Whirlwinds of the Desert," a troupe of Arabs. It is a novel and pleasing performance.

NEW MOTTO FOR THE AMERICAN NAVY.—In the old days the shaving boxes, etc., of the U. S. tars used to have inscribed upon them as a legend the dying words of the gallant Lawrence: "Don't give up the ship!" If a paragraph now going the rounds of the press be correct, Admiral Porter is credited with another motto, to the observance of which, added to a temperate life, he ascribes his present seventy-seven years of age. It is this: "NEVER GET WET"!

SANITARY.—Set a pitcher of water in the apartment, and in a few hours it will have absorbed nearly all the respired gases in the room, the air of which will have become purer, but the water utterly filthy. The colder the water the greater the capacity to contain these gases. At the ordinary temperature a pail of water will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and several pints of ammonia.

At one of the cross-roads in Brazil, an idol carved from the wood of an orange tree was placed for the Indians to worship. It has now been satisfactorily established by a series of observations made throughout France since 1884 by means of the Engineer Corps, under selected officers, that what is called a secular depression is taking place from south toward the north, and particularly toward the northeast. The depression is about three times greater toward the northeast than it is due north. It is calculated that, if the rate of depression should continue, France in a few centuries will encounter a calamity similar to that which at the end of the thirteenth century befell the Netherlands.

☞ The Pittsburgh (Pa.) Dispatch of Nov. 12th gives a report occupying a column and a quarter, descriptive of a séance in that city held by Mrs. Bliss, the well-known materializing medium, at a residence on Beaver Avenue, the number present being about fifty. Some very remarkable and convincing phenomena occurred. The writer says:

"At 7 o'clock the guests were asked by the host to form in circles in the double parlors, all facing a handsomely-draped cabinet, placed in a corner. This cabinet was then thrown open for inspection, and a careful survey inside showed nothing but a chair, in which the medium was to sit. The walls were bare, and the ceiling and floor as solid and smooth as good carpenters and calciminers could make them. The audience was a well-dressed and intelligent appearing one, about equally divided of ladies and gentlemen. . . . Fathers, mothers and sisters were called up to kiss and embrace those whom they invariably claimed to be their dead relatives, and many of the ladies returned from the cabinet weeping bitterly. One of the prettiest things of the whole evening was a song by a spiritual quartette in the cabinet, there being at least four sweet voices heard. In the course of the evening fully twenty-five men and women, totally different in face and stature, emerged from that little cabinet and returned to it, some so rapidly that no 'lightning change' could explain it."

The writer expresses no opinion, but giving his report, quite full in detail, very fairly, leaves it to the reader to form his own conclusion as to the nature of the phenomena.

Message Department.

Spiritual Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and FRIDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER-LONGLEY occupies the platform for the purpose of answering by her spirit guides such questions as may be introduced for consideration.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH, trance medium, under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. M. T. Shelhamer-Longley.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 16th, 1888.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[By R. G. Dawson.] Agassiz asserts, geologically, that species of animals now living have been in existence thirty thousand years, and have not undergone the slightest change in that time. Does not this fact controvert somewhat the theory of unfoldment or evolution?

ANS.—It does not seem so to our understanding. Undoubtedly Prof. Agassiz made his statement concerning the existence of animals, in the same guise and general appearance, thirty thousand years ago that may be found in portions of the earth at the present day; but that does not, to our mind, militate against the theory or belief, whichever you may be pleased to call it, of evolution, because we do not look upon this earth as the production of thirty thousand years, or of three hundred thousand years, but as a planet that has been in existence for many millions of years, that has produced various stages of animal growth and development. So far as we understand the subject, it seems to us that there have been hundreds of thousands of years of development of the animal creation, and that this creation has unfolded type after type, form after form of animal life, each gradation of unfoldment being an improvement or advancement, in some degree, upon that which preceded it, possibly in general appearance and formation. The animals of thirty thousand years ago, some of them, may have been the same as those of the present time, yet we should judge this to be in appearance only, as could be determined through the examination of fossilized remains. We believe that there must have been advancement in some essential respects, in those very forms of animal life which are present with you at this age, and we have no doubt Prof. Agassiz would grant this were he able to speak to you at this time with his own mind. We believe practically in evolution, for, so far as we understand the evolution or development of this planet and its various forms, of not only human but of animal life, it appears to us to be the only theory or satisfactory conclusion that the intelligent mind which studies the subject can come to. From our examination and study of the remote past, and especially of those forms of human life which existed upon this planet, it seems to us that there has been a slow, gradual, but steady growth and development of life from one grade or condition to another. So far as we can learn, the earliest types of humanity represented themselves but very little in advance of the animal creation, and therefore it seems a natural and a beautiful conclusion to reach, that man has slowly but perfectly developed from the lower forms of life, in accordance with the unfoldment and march of the planet itself. We have not time to enter into a discussion of this subject, because it calls for an exhaustive treatise, but those who have studied it closely cannot fail to find much to challenge their attention, and to awaken thought within their minds.

Q.—[By Edwin Chenery.] Is the time far distant when cremation will be the universal method of disposing of the deceased body?

A.—It depends upon what your correspondent terms a "far distant" time. We do not look for a universal adoption of the custom of disposing of human remains by cremation in the present century, and perhaps not in the century to come. The system of cremation will undoubtedly gain ground in various quarters during the next twenty-five or fifty years. It is coming into favor quite rapidly with certain minds. Still, many persons who are ready and willing to have their own bodies cremated when the physical decease shall come, are not willing to see the bodies of their friends cremated; therefore there is a certain prejudice, a shrinking feeling, to overcome before the thought and practice of cremation shall extend very widely; however, we believe that it will prove acceptable to intelligent people at no distant day—that is, looking at the passage of time from a spirit's standpoint, for we do not dwell upon the passage of days, weeks or months, as mortals do. We believe that within another century cremation will have become widespread. Not that it will be the universal practice of disposing of the dead bodies, or that it will be in favor with all classes of humanity; but that it will be practiced by whole communities, perhaps, and that it will be recognized as a sanitary measure for the disposal of effete, decaying matter, and at the same time as a beautiful removal from the earth of those vestiges of remains which are left after the spirit has taken its flight. In our cities, undoubtedly, this practice will spread to a greater degree than among smaller communities, as it will be found essential with them to employ some means of disposal of the dead which will not affect disastrously the living. This is an important thought—one that should be studied closely by those who are called upon to attend to these things. Moreover, there is nothing to dread, nothing to shrink from in the thought of cremation. The purifying influence of fire is one that should be valued; it seems to take up all that is corrupting and corruptible; it leaves only elements and gases which are purifying to the atmosphere, which are useful in every respect. To think that the mortal form of a friend is not laid away to pass into corruption, to yield up offensive gases and effluvia that may perhaps contaminate and destroy some other life; to feel that the form is not given up as food for worms; that it is laid aside and yielded to that intense heat which shall consume without parching, without charring the remains, until there shall be left only a handful of dust, which may be as precious to your sight as could the entire form have been were it left to you, is to our mind a beautiful thought, one that will gain in favor, and eventually will so press upon the human mind as to lead it to the adoption of cremation.

Q.—Is the phenomenon known as materialization any more open to simulation than that of the trance?

A.—One must judge carefully and reason closely upon the various phenomena of Spiritualism, as they are presented to his mind. He seats himself in the presence of a trance-medium, passively waiting for that which shall be given to him, and as the matter is passed through the brain or hand of the medium for his own inspection, he must reason upon it and judge whether it comes from the operation of the mind of that medium, or whether it be foreign to the medium's mind, and is produced by some outside, intelligent spirit. Generally, what is given in this line may be reasoned upon thus: If coming from a spirit-friend of the sitter it will contain something that shall be a matter of evidence to his own mind, something that will identify itself as the production of a spirit-friend; if it be merely the operation of the medium's mind, then will it bear the stamp of the mentality which produced it and bring to the sitter no satisfaction, no identifying mark which he can recognize, or which will be of use to him.

In materialization, also, the sitter must be of a discerning nature. Not that he is to be captious, fault-finding, or in any degree over-critical; it is only necessary that he be passive, patient and honest in his investigation, not wishing to be misled or deceived, yet desiring to be self-sustained and on the alert for that which is to come. Whether it be deception or truth depends a great deal upon his surroundings. If there are no so-called test-conditions; if the medium has the cabinet and all the arrangements at his command and disposal; if this medium, whoever he is, does not afford to his sitter any opportunity for making proper investigation, and if the surroundings and atmosphere are so darkened that he cannot readily perceive the lineaments and features of those who come to him, then are the conditions such as may the more readily deceive, or overcome the incredulity of the sitter, than are those which surround a trance-medium. It depends altogether upon the circumstances of the case, of the medium and of the sitting.

We do not advise any investigator to become so credulous in his sittings with mediums of any class as to accept without question that which is presented to him. We believe in every man and woman exercising personal judgment, and also in exercising that right which belongs to the individual in judging, reasoning upon those things which are presented, and drawing their own conclusions from such reasoning.

Granting that a materializing medium is honest, and desires to present to his sitters only the truth, he will not hesitate in affording to any honest, candid-minded person those opportunities for making proper investigations and examinations which are calculated to ward off suspicion. On the other hand, if such a medium, although possessing rare and undoubted powers of mediumship, sometimes simulates a manifestation, gives sometimes that which does not come from the spirit-world, he will perhaps not wish his sitter to investigate, to make any examination whatever, and will not afford to him any conditions for satisfying himself of the verity of the manifestations, and therefore such a sitter will be justified in regarding the medium with proper suspicion, until time is given him for such examination and investigation as he can make consistently with his own regard for justice, truth and honor, with all concerned.

Q.—Does an individual retain in spirit-life a remembrance of all the events of his earthly experience?

A.—There comes to every individual who has experienced contact with the material earth, at some time after his passage from the physical body, an hour when there passes before him clearly and distinctly all the events and circumstances of his life—that is, they rise up in his memory, and so clear are they to his perception that it really seems as though they stand out before him in objective form. To every spirit this experience comes; he sees distinctly, notes and understands every event and circumstance and experience through which he has passed or with which he has been concerned. Indeed, it is memory reasserting itself, that is all. Memory does not die. You say you are losing your memory, sometimes, when you cannot recall circumstances that have taken place in days past. You do not lose your memory; that memory will ever be a part of your nature—still with you, still alive, although it may not exercise itself to your satisfaction because of physical disturbances within your system. Let these physical disturbances be removed, as they will after you have parted with the outward body, and by-and-bye—it may be sooner or later, that depends upon the condition of your spiritual nature, whether it is alert or whether it is in a slumberous condition—there will come to you a reassertion of this faculty called memory; then, as events and circumstances arise clear and plain before you, if they be good they will bring you enjoyment, peace and comfort; if they are not good, but unlovely and discordant, then will you be disturbed and unhappy in consequence. As man advances in spirit-life, becomes more and more free from the elements and environments of earth and physical conditions, his memory becomes less clouded, is more active, and he will have no difficulty in recalling at any time such circumstances and events as he desires to see and read clearly.

Q.—Does food taken to sustain the earth-body affect the spirit-body?

A.—All your environments and every element that comes into your life on earth has something to do with the building up of your spiritual body; therefore the food, as well as the atmosphere, and its mental, moral and physical surroundings, has an effect and a place in the formation of your spirit-body; there is an element, or whatever you may call it—for we are troubled sometimes to find in mortal language terms to define our meaning to every particle of food you take into your systems that is not of the material, the spiritual part of the food, and this enters into the composition of your spirit-body. You partake of fruit, and a portion of that fruity substance taken into the system goes into blood, bones, tissue or marrow, as the case may be, supplying nutriment to your physical system. The waste substance is thrown off through the natural orifices; but that which is retained and goes into the physical system to supply it with nutriment, has also a portion which is not utilized by the physical, a portion so refined, so attenuated, it may be, that it can find no place in the physical, and this, being nutritious, is of use and taken up into the spiritual body, there finding its place and office. The more refined your food, the more refined will be the elements which it imparts to your spiritual body; the more coarse, crude and animal-like the diet you feed upon here, the more coarse and crude will be the elements it sends forth to enter into the formation of your spirit-body. The man who lives largely upon animal food, who partakes of what is coarse and crude, finds his physical system of a coarse, strong nature; is not likely to be refined in instinct and in aspiration; his pursuits and his pleasures are found in external life among the lower scenes of existence. Exceptions may be found to this rule, as to every other; but this is the general law. If a man is uncultivated, not only in his mental faculties, but in his moral perceptions and his physical nature, the elements that go from his surroundings and from his life will be coarse and crude; therefore the spirit-body will partake of this aspect, since it will be of the earth earthy, and belong more to the animal than to the spiritual side of life.

Q.—[By A. J. Hollingsworth.] Can a spirit stand off, as it were, in space, and see this world, or any planet, revolve on its axis?

A.—Spirits who have passed beyond the limitations of this planet, who have risen above and beyond its atmosphere and are no longer confined within it through any law of association, or because of any necessary experience which must be acquired in contact with this earth, may pass out into space, but they cannot do so independent of law; they will only pass out into space as they are attracted or gravitate to some other planet or spiritual world; and he who thus passes out into space, undoubtedly, if his spiritual vision or perception is highly unfolded, will be able to see this earth, if he directs his mind to it, revolving in space and revolving on its own axis. We see no reason why an advanced, intelligent spirit should not, even if he so desires, perceive the movements of planetary bodies, and perhaps study them closely; indeed, we know that this is the case. We have, in the spirit-world, intelligent astronomical minds, who give their time and attention to the study of planetary bodies through their own observation, and who are reaping a large fund of information, which they impart to their students and friends who desire to learn of worlds and systems, their formation and movements, and many other things connected with planetary life.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 2d, 1888.

Thomas Harding.

It is with the greatest pleasure that I come into this meeting to-day, feeling that it is also a privilege granted from the spirit side, to convey a few words to loved ones yet dwelling in the mortal. In Chelsea, in East Boston, and in Boston proper, and in many other directions, I shall be remembered, although it is a long time since I left. Others come to fill the places in the world of those who have passed on, yet we know that in the hearts of the dear ones we may still find a home.

The question will be asked if I was surprised on entering the spirit-life. Yes; happily so, as I saw one and another coming toward me, some relatives, some friends, some soldier boys who had passed on. I passed out in a skirmish at Bull Run, Va., and very suddenly, too.

I am so glad there is a channel for us to speak through, and we appreciate it, dear mortals, to a degree that you never can until you have thrown off the mantle of the flesh, and come to dwell with us; then you will be as earnest to speak to some loved one as we are. Nearly twelve months before I left home the angels came very near taking me away, but I was given a little time longer, and I see now it was that I might go for my country's sake. I never had any regrets for going, although my dear wife felt she could not part with me at that time. As the angel world again came near and nearer still, I felt there must be communion between the two worlds; and I find it is a truth. Mortals, while you dwell here learn all you can, for you cannot gain too much information in regard to spirit return.

Scene after scene of beauty presents itself to our vision in spirit-life, which we fail in words to picture to you. No; I would not ask to return to stay, but I would ask to come into communication with the dear ones left. Dear old grandma, as she reached her hand out to me, said: "Thomas, come up higher; all things are ready." I am satisfied with my home in spirit, but trust I shall be able to make it more beautiful all the time.

My name is Thomas Harding, and my home was in Chelsea, Mass.

William B. Dodge.

Many miles intervene between where I passed away and your little circle-room, although I have been here many times in spirit before I laid off the mortal form. Oh! it is a source of happiness to be able to speak to-day. Long before the pale boatman came for me it seemed as though I could almost look into that beautiful land of Canaan, and I conversed with my dear wife and daughter before passing over, as composedly as I would if I was only going to step into the next room.

Death! there is none, dear friends, and that which you term Spiritualism takes away all fear of what is called death: only happiness comes to the soul to feel an exchange is to be made for the better. As we look back from the other side, but a thin veil comes between. We look here among you all, and see that some are nearing the spirit shore rapidly. I was a young man, comparatively—fifty-eight—when I left the form.

Sarah is with me to-day, and the old grandsire who walked so long in the mortal said: "William, there are many things for you to learn yet in the spirit-life." We find a life of activity, and no idlers; all are willing to do their work.

Oh! how glad we are for that is the strongest expression we can use—to know that there are channels open for us to speak to you in mortal life. Often do we come so near to the dear ones who are left that we can lay our hands upon their shoulders, and at times they sense our presence; then again they do not, owing to the conditions which happen to be around them.

I shall be remembered in Jamestown, Dakota. My name is William B. Dodge.

Lucretia Fulham Weston.

I possessed much of what is termed mediumistic power. I feel now that I might have done more with that power, but while dwelling here we are apt to think we do what we can. Seventy-three years I dwelt in the flesh, and it seems a long time to mortals, but when I look back I think how quickly it flitted away, and now, as I have left earthly life, I am looking forward to meeting one and another as they come into the spirit-life. We come to greet them and give strength.

I heard Sister Weeks ask why Lucretia did not come. Sometimes little children have been anxious to give out a few words; at other times I have not had permission, so you must understand we are governed and held by conditions and circumstances, and we come whenever there is a channel opened for us.

I met Sister Wilder as I entered spirit-life, and gladly did she greet me, and very earnestly thank me for what I had done for her dear ones after she was called up higher. You will ask me if I was cognizant of what was passing at the funeral. Yes; I understood it all, and I know of the sympathy and kindly feeling from heart to heart; also of the flowers. I well understood the feelings not only of the dear ones, but the neighbors. I have much more to learn. I thought I had learned a great deal, but I find, on entering spirit-life, a great deal more to learn; it is a life of learning, of usefulness. My work is not finished; I can do much by giving out to the dear sister mediums. I know they need it; they require such sympathy and aid as we in spirit are only too glad to give. Mortals, be patient, be lenient, be sympathetic with your mediums, for you know not how much value is placed on our side upon these instruments—you cannot know.

I think I shall be remembered in Plymouth, Vt., for that is where the spirit took its flight, and I have listened to much that has been spoken since. I am happy, but would not ask to return to stay. I do love to come to your meetings, where mediums are instrumental in giving communications to mortals. To-day I would thank the Spirit-Chairman for the privileges you grant by opening your doors to mortals and spirits. I am satisfied with the home, but knowing so much of progression as I do, I am looking forward with hope, knowing that I am to press onward forever. My name is Lucretia Fulham Weston.

Lavinia W. Lawner.

I have long desired to give out a few words to a dear one. I made a partial promise to do so before my spirit took its flight. I have been helped by some mortals and by some spirits. I felt at first I should fail, but as they come to the rescue, I may be able to reach the dear ones far away. I have often been in such meetings, but never attempted to speak. Long does it seem that I have been gone, dear husband, although really but a little while; five months have been like five years to you, and you have watched and waited for some sign that I have kept my promise in coming to you.

Dear husband, I want to thank you from the depths of my soul for what you have done for me since the form was laid away. I see the pains you have taken in what you have done to the lot. I want to thank you for the stone, and for the iron fence, for I know it is because of your own spirit reaching out to mine that you have done it.

Oh! I ask the angels to come to you every day. I send forth an earnest petition for their guardianship over you. I ask that you may at last be permitted to come up higher, and is it wrong if I ask that you may come soon? I know, in God's own good time, the angels' time, you will be permitted to find me again. I am waiting patiently for that moment when I shall clasp your hand once more.

I come to you in the still hours of the night, so softly and gently that you feel me. I know we talked of these things before the angel came and bore me away.

I want to thank the kind friends for what sympathy they gave out to you—for the flowers, and for all they did, for the kind words that were spoken, for I was there as one of the company, and not only I, but many invisibles.

I would like my friends to know I have spoken here, and as your good paper goes all over the land I trust they will.

In California, away upon that far-off coast, I know I am not forgotten by many. I feel grateful that these channels are open, not only for me but for others. I passed away at Virginia City, Nevada. My name is Lavinia W. Lawner.

Paul Dillingham.

I know there will be many who will remember me as passing away from Pawlet, Vt. Father could not be reconciled to my going, and he asks why they took me away. We cannot answer the question, but I find now it may have been a help to them that we left. Aunt Mary says it was all right.

Somewhere near twenty-five years did I dwell here. I have been here before, but have not been able to speak. I have listened, as many do, to hear what others might say, for it helps us to gain power in controlling other instruments nearer home. I would like them, when such instruments are there, to seek them and see if I cannot give them some words of cheer, for that is what all mortals want; they are ever reaching after something more.

I would like to thank Dr. Vosburgh for the kind words he has spoken to father, for I know it was a stepping-stone for him to learn a little more in regard to spiritual things. It is only a few years since I left the mortal form. A part of our family yet remain on earth; a part are with me to-day. Grandma sends greetings to them all. We often come into the earthly homes and make some tiny raps that they may know it is invisible power and that we are there for a purpose. I think if they will only listen closer they will be able to converse with us through the sounds.

Oh! how gratifying it is to feel that we are welcome in the homes we have left, and also to feel that we shall all meet again. What a grand reünion there will be in spirit-life! I am happy, and I would repeat it over and over again; I am happy in my spirit-home, but I find there not all that is to be desired, because it is a life of progression. My name, Mr. Chairman, is Paul Dillingham.

Willie Petersen.

I want to say to father and mother you did behold the spirit form, and what I said to you, father, was correct. I know you proved it so, too. Don't think because I was a little boy when I passed away, that I have not been learning since. I have been learning, for I was placed in a school in spirit-life, and I feel that I have gained a great deal on the spirit side. When the angels came and bore me away dear mother felt she could not let me go. But she has learned much of spirit return since her Willie went away, and she has felt, many times, and so has father also, that I come into the home, and have been seen. It is true, I have, and I've done it perfectly, too. Why do you let the doubts creep in? Push them back, and have no room for doubts.

I know I shall not be forgotten in this city. Father takes much enjoyment in coming into communion silently. We can't always do it perfectly; but sometimes we can, and it depends a great deal upon the conditions of the people that sit in the room, for we must draw from them to help make up the forms. So do not blame us. We will try and do our part right, and you must yours.

I am so thankful that materialization is true, and that communion between the two worlds is true. Father and mother, it has been a great source of happiness to feel that what I have said to them has proved true. Grandma often speaks of mother, and looks back to the time when mother understood little of spirits coming to earth. You see, mortals, you all have to learn how to come into communication with us.

In the materialized spirit-form, I have heard mortals say, "Why! the hands are warm." Do you not know they are made up in part of material substance drawn from you, and must partake of your warmth.

I know this will reach father, who will be glad to know I have not forgotten my promise, and would try in every way to make them know I did return to the home. We are glad to make ourselves known. I lived in Boston. My father is Dr. Petersen. I am Willie Petersen.

Daisy Bell and Sweet Brier Felch.

As a little child I passed away, and now come to-day a grown woman. I have no remembrance of earthly life. My dear spirit sister stands beside me, and together we send love and sympathy to father, mother, and each loving friend. We have received an education on the spirit-side. Never have we been permitted to use the terms mother and father, as we were little infants when we passed over.

Father will understand when he sees our names that they belong to his daughters in spirit-life. It is true we have grown in form, and you will not find us as the little girls you doted upon when here.

Father, remember we have come to you in other places, through other instruments, and shown ourselves together, in materialized form as perfectly as we could. What is more beautiful or grand than to know that the cord of affection cannot be lost or broken? Many will remember my father. The name given me in spirit-life is Daisy Bell; my sister's name, Sweet Brier Felch. Grandma sends greetings, too.

Ed. Crosby.

How many times are these words uttered: "Pure as an angel." And surely these sweet spirits who stand here are pure as the angels, never having been permitted to know of the wrongs and of the temptations that come to mortals. As I look back I feel like saying I wish I never had known them. But it is too late, and as I come here as a spirit I am only too glad to be able to speak. There is one thing I do want to ask of mortals: Do not speak your thoughts always, for we hear them as they are spoken, and how they do crash upon our spirits, which are so sensitive. After I passed out, even before the body was consigned to mother earth, I heard one say, "He owed me a hundred dollars." Gladly would I have paid it if I could! But how little did he think that I was listening to the conversation! He must know I would have repaid him every dollar if I could. I would say to him: You cannot take your gold with you here, for it is counterfeit; you will not need it. I know money is a necessity on earth, but not with us, and little can you understand, little can he know how it wounded my feelings when I heard those words. If you mortals could realize for a moment how sensitive we are in the spirit, many things that are now spoken would be withheld.

I come not to find fault, but I do say: Be careful what you speak, for you know not who may be close beside you. Be lenient, be patient and sympathetic with one another. I know while you dwell in the mortal these feelings will come many times when you do not think what is to be spoken until the words have passed.

It is some three or four years since I passed away, and since I heard that conversation; and I've heard it since. That is why I say, Be careful, mortals, what you say of those who have passed on before you. He little thought Ed. Crosby was right there. A hundred dollars! A hundred thousand would I have given if I could if they had not been spoken! It made me feel as if I had gone away without doing what I might have done. Gladly would I have repaid it all if I could.

I lived at South Hadley Falls, Mass. Ed. Crosby is the name by which I was best known.

Seward Hulse.

I am permitted, Mr. Chairman, to enjoy the opportunity of saying a few words through your medium for the first time. I will be brief this time and give but a few words.

Addison, you have been looking forward to a few words from us, and when our mother was able to speak to you it was a comfort worth more than gold. I did not know much about spirit-return. I had other things to absorb my attention; many things connected with law occupied my time, therefore I troubled myself very little in regard to what would be after passing over. Spiritualism simply means spirit-return, and the time is coming when this subject will be more widely considered—when you will hear of it from the pulpits of the day, and it will not be kept out of sight as it has been.

I know many times, away in Kansas, the theme of Spiritualism has come up, but, as I said, I did n't concern myself with it. I find now I have only so much the more to learn. There are degrees of advancement: the better you live here the more beautiful, the more satisfactory will your home be over yonder. You may ask me if those who do wrong on earth will enter heaven. Yes: but their heaven would be none to you.

Addison, mother is present to-day; George is not here. Enos wishes to be remembered. Aunt Patience says in due time she will be able to give out some things that will be of benefit to those that are left. She well understands what has been passing—of the trials that have overtaken you. And let me say to you, dear brother, not one of us forsakes you; through all the trials you have been called to pass you have had the help of the angel-world. Trust them, then, to-day, for they will keep their promises to you. I wish to be remembered to the dear ones. I know father will be glad to get a word from his boys. Seward Hulse, of Douglas, Kansas.

Sophia Griffith.

I trust that the few words I shall speak will reach my dear daughter. I know how much she has mourned for her mother, how many times she has asked: "Why did they take her away in a moment?" Dear child, do not feel that I am far from you; I am so near that I can come into your own bed-chamber. My child, learn a little about this matter of communication between the two worlds. You have often wondered if I wished to stay longer? At that period I would, but after the sudden exchange I could not wish to return to stay. If you will learn a little from what Lydia may say to you it will help you a great deal. I would like, Jeanie, for you to learn how to come into communication with mother. I would like you to sit by yourself, and see if I may not give you some manifestations that you may know. I saw that at first you were so sad you could not be reconciled to my going, but when it was said that I was happy, you tried to be reconciled. Yet, to-day, dear child, it comes freshly back to you. Darling child, it will be but a little time, a few years, and you too will join the happy spirit band. Father, and each one of you, learn a little concerning this spirit return, while the golden opportunity is yours. You will say, perhaps, "Mother, you did not learn of these things." No, my child, I did not learn as much as it was my privilege to, because the family was not broken. Now, since a vacant chair is in the home, I feel differently. Cast away your doubts, and think perhaps that mother does come, and it will help you much.

Nathaniel, learn all you can, but use the reason God has given you; for reason is worth something, or else it would not have been given.

I have met many dear ones in spirit-life: William, Sally, Henry, and others, and we all come to help those in this mortal life. Think for a moment how great must be the attraction that draws us to earth.

My child, I did not doubt your love, you doubted not mine, and to-day I come to you with a blessing, and all the affection that a mother can bring to a child. I know I shall not be forgotten in Groveland, this State. I wish, Jeanie, you would go and see Aunt Lydia, whenever there is an opportunity, for she needs sympathy and companionship through her trials in this life. My name is Sophia Griffith.

Annie Mitchell.

I want to tell you of the pretty flowers where we are. And we go to school. The teacher learns us to sing and to speak pretty pieces, just like what you have here.

[To the Chairman:] I think you're a nice man; you did n't speak cross to me.

I want you to tell my mamma I come right back again, just as soon as I could after the people went away from the house. There was lots of people came there. They did n't know I did n't be dead. I was n't dead, at all. I want mamma and papa to know that I come right home, and Willie comes with me sometimes, but not every time.

Oh! oh! oh! I'm goin' to bring you some flowers, some day—real ones—would you like me to? Truly? [Yes.] What you can smell hard? I will if I can. And when you come our side, I'll bring you lots of flowers. Grandpa is here. He had a little doggie, and that doggie is truly alive where we are. His name is Rover. It is Grandpa Gould.

I lived way up in Vermont, in Thetford. My name is Annie Mitchell. Aunt Jeanie is calling me, and I must go. Good afternoon, peoples.

Minnie Ackley.

When I lived on earth, Mr. Chairman, I had many times trouble with my head, and I feel a little of the old sensation as I endeavor to talk with you, yet not to a painful degree. It is seventeen years since I dwelt in the mortal form, and many changes have been taking place during that period among my mortal friends. The time has sped quickly with me; I hardly feel that I have been away, and I know that I shall be remembered in Old Cambridge by some.

As I was passing out of mortal life guides came beside me to help me, and they led me over what is called "the river," which seemed to me to be only a green and flowery way to the beautiful land beyond. I looked at the grass, and at the flowers, and they seemed as real and tangible as any I ever beheld, while the perfume was delightful to the sense.

The child spoke of the little dog in spirit-life. Yes; I find animals there, dogs, horses, and even cats, and the sweet songs of birds greet my ear. I am glad to know that the pets we have loved have not gone out into nothingness, but that we may claim them again. As we loved them once, we love them still, and if the spirit reaches out for them they will be given back to us.

I am very thankful that I have been able to speak to-day. My name is Minnie Ackley.

(Published in advance at spirit's request.)

Bela H. Gardner.

I would like to speak a few words for certain reasons, Mr. Chairman. A little difficulty has come up in the home, and I feel that by coming here and assuring them they are in the right channel, and it is not wise for them to make any changes, it may do some good. They are nearly on the verge of making a change, and should they do so, it will not be as well. We see a little further, a little clearer than they can in the mortal.

I would be very glad, Mr. Chairman, if you would send this letter right away. I am in haste to have it reach them. I know, sir, they will understand my meaning when they get it. I would also feel very glad to have them know that I live. I passed out in Sunapee, N. H.

I was only fifteen when an accident came that sent me across the line to the other shore. They always call me dead. I wish they could understand a little more of the life beyond the veil. I knew nothing of it, only as I had heard people talk some on the subject. I think I shall be recognized. Bela H. Gardner. Nov. 16.

As the "BANNER OF LIGHT Establishment" is not an incorporated institution, and as we could not therefore legally hold bequests made to us in that name, we give below the form in which such a bequest should be worded in order to stand the test of law:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto Luther Colby and Isaac B. Rich, of Boston, Massachusetts, Publishers, [here insert the description of the property to be willed] strictly upon trust, that they shall appropriate and expend the same in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient and proper for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression."

A Missouri paper says: "The holiness outfit are putting up a church at Hoover. But the people of that place will lock their coal houses this winter just as they always have done."

SECOND SIGHT.

(A FACT.)

"Nay, do not sail to-day, my lads," he said,
The tall old fisherman with hoary hair,
Standing upon the beach where lay the boat
With her flag floating on the sunny air;
While at the rocky headlands guarding Staithes,
The flowing tide broke with a hollow roar,
And the three fishers, tossing nets aboard,
Paused for a moment, listening on the shore.

"I've had a vision, lads. Thou know'st my race,
Father, and grandfather, and backward still,
Have had the cruel gift of second sight,
And known of coming doom against their will.
I had the vision just before the dawn;
I saw, where Huntcliff towers grim and gray,
I saw you men all struggling in the foam,
I saw you drowning; do not sail to-day!

"Oh! ay, I know the glass is firm eno',
And sky and sea calm as a bairn asleep;
And not a warning posted on the cross,
And not a sign of danger on the deep,
Yet, changeful as a woman in her mood
Is our North sea, I've heard my father say.
But that is neither here nor there, my lads,
I had the vision; do not sail to-day!"

"Mebby we'd better humor him," said one,
Whose twelve-year boy was clinging to his hand;
But his mate turned upon him with a laugh,
That woke a mellow echo down the strand;
"Humor him! with the fish as rank as aught,
And neither food nor fire up there!" he said,
And pointed to his cottage on the cliff,
And shook, in merry scorn, his curly head.

A moment yet the father lingered there,
"See, here's a penny, Bill, bide thou at home;"
But the boy pushed the kindly bribe aside,
And clamored willfully that he "must come."
And so, they leapt aboard, and pushed her off;
But, as the coble danced across the bay,
They heard the old man, left upon the sand,
Shout sadly to them, "Do not sail to-day."

Anxious the women, who had shivering heard
Old Peter's warning, watched the sunny waves;
Telling, as slow the sad hours wearled by,
Old tales of crews long laid in ocean graves.
Anxious they saw the black squalls sweep across
The great blue waters and the purple down;
Till midnight closed upon the deepening dread,
And ne'er a coble beached below the town.

Next day, upon the sands 'neath Huntcliff Head,
Lay the dead father, with his stiffened arm
Round the dead boy, as if in doom and death
He still was fain to keep him safe from harm;
And with her helm unshipped, her timbers stove,
The coble lay amid the bowlders there,
But the sea kept in her mysterious depths
Young Jack with his bold eyes and curly hair.

Men guessed her rudder struck on sunken rock,
Just as a squall had ta'en her sail aback,
And shook their heads, and muttered o'er the glass,
"He allis wer too venturesome, our Jack."
But the old seer listened to all unmoved,
"When death must come, small heed to reck the way,
I had the vision sent me at the dawn,
Before, despite the bode, they sailed that day."

—All the Year Round.

Diet.

Cornaro, of whom many have read, was of an infirm constitution till about forty. Up to that time he had, as he said, given rein to his appetite. But, beginning to feel the ill effects of intemperance, he stopped short, and entered upon an entirely new course of life, putting himself under restrictions which he obstinately persisted in to the end of his days; and he lived to be over one hundred years old. He was severely temperate in eating and drinking, and not only regained what he had lost by his indiscretions, but he actually built up a good constitution in the place of the old and broken-down one. He first learned by experience what kinds of food were proper for him, and made choice of such meats and drinks only as agreed with him. He observed as an inviolable law always to rise from the table hungry. Besides these dietetic rules, he carefully avoided all extremes of heat and cold, excessive fatigue, late hours, broken rest, and too close and intense thinking. He also cultivated a calm, even disposition. Upon this last point he attached very great importance. Here is what Cornaro wrote when about ninety-one years old:

"It is really a surprising and sad thing to see reasonable creatures so ready to swallow the most dangerous absurdities. For how, in the name of common sense, can the life of a glutton or a sot be a merry one? If men could eat to excess, drink to silliness and rust in sloth, and, after all, suffer no other harm than the abridgment of ten or a dozen years of life, they might have some little excuse for calling it a merry life; though surely it could appear so to none but persons of a sadly vitiated taste. But since an intemperate life will surely sow in our bodies the seeds of such diseases as will, after a few short years of feverish pleasure, make life a burden to us, with what face can any reasonable being call this a merry life? Oh! sacred and most bountiful temperance! How greatly am I indebted to thee for rescuing me from such fatal delusions; and for bringing me, through the divine benediction, to the enjoyment of so many felicities; and which, over and above all these favors conferred on thine old man, has so strengthened his stomach, that he has now a better relish for his dry bread than he had formerly for the most exquisite dainties."

The American wants "three square meals a day." In other words, he must "fill up" morning, noon and night. If as a laborer with his hands he works hard, he might safely do that; but if his employment is easy and not wearing physically, his breakfast and lunch should be light and his dinner reasonably hearty, for late in the day is when he needs most the restorative effect of food.

Doubtless Americans, taken as a whole, indulge in meat twice a day, and not a few do so at every meal. None should eat it oftener than once a day, and the majority would be in better health if meat but three times a week was the rule. The laborer "with the pick and shovel" works hard, and he is able to dispose of a quantity of meat and other hearty food which would soon settle the future of the man of letters. And yet, without doubt, the former would get on quite as well with less meat, and if he did it would certainly cost him less to live. Our middle and wealthy classes may be set down as eating altogether too much meat.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

EDWARD W. SEABURY.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Nov. 10th there is a communication from EDWARD W. SEABURY, of New Bedford, which is correct in every particular, so far as his communication is concerned, and in regard to his wife and son, but the types make his name Edward W. Seaburn. Respectfully yours,

GEO. Y. NICKERSON.

P. S.—I have talked with Mr. Seabury many times since he passed to spirit life, also seen him and his wife materialized in full form.

IRA LAKE.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Oct. 20th, 1888, the spirit-message from IRA LAKE of Norwalk, Ohio, is fully recognized by his friends, also by me, as I was intimately acquainted with him in Ohio before he passed over. Let the good work go on.

Decatur, Neb., Nov. 14th, 1888. W. S. PAGE.

Since W. S. Page wrote you yesterday about the communication of IRA LAKE, we held a circle, and we got through raps the following: "Tell THE BANNER that I used to be a Baptist, but came to be a Spiritualist through instruction of Hudson Tuttle." We write you this just as we received it. It seems as though he wanted this to go with Mr. Page's letter.

Very truly yours, A. C. ABBOTT.

Decatur, Neb., Nov. 15th, 1888.

MINETTA I. HOMER.

Again I am glad to testify to the reliability and beneficence of THE BANNER'S Message Department. Mr. Frank P. Homer, husband of the above-named spirit, whose communication is published in your paper, lives at No. 14 Bennet street, Boston, and he is overjoyed in the full recognition of his wife's message, and so highly does he appreciate the message that he says he shall henceforth be a subscriber to your invaluable paper. Truly the mourners are comforted by the revelations of to-day more than by all the Bibles of the past. DEAN CLARKE.

POLLY HAMBLETON.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT bearing date of Oct. 27th, 1888, is a message from POLLY HAMBLETON, of East Hamburg, N. Y. I was much pleased to read a message from my mother. We have kept watch of THE BANNER for over three years, as we much desired to hear from her through that paper. Hoping great good may result, and also that she may be able to communicate with her daughter on earth, I send my thanks in behalf of the other sisters and friends through THE BANNER. I remain yours respectfully, E. MONTAGUE.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

Works by Richard B. Westbrook, D. D., LL. B.

Girard's Will and Girard College Theology.

The author in his preface says: "The publication of this book is a matter of conscience. The author, as a theologist and lawyer, thoroughly believes that the present system of religious instruction in Girard College is in palpable violation of the conditions of the Will of the Founder, and not well adapted to promote 'the purest principles of morality.' The chapters which make up this book were originally delivered, in substance, as popular lectures in the last spring course of The Westbrook Free Lectureship in the hall of our City Institute, and attracted considerable public attention at that time. The lectures were delivered before different audiences, and hence certain points were purposely repeated."

Spiritualist Meetings.

THE BANNER forms going to press one day in advance (as announced last week) we have space but for a resumé of the reports of meetings held at various places on Sunday last, which came to hand on Monday afternoon:

Boston Spiritual Temple.—Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a fair audience assembled in Berkeley Hall on Sunday morning last to attend the services held in memory of the late Joseph L. Newman. Mrs. Lillie, Dr. H. B. Storer, and Dr. A. H. Richardson, in eloquent and well-timed remarks paid glowing tributes to the memory of our arisen brother. Miss Emma J. Nickerson read a fine original poem written for the occasion. The singing by Mr. Lillie, with Mr. Frank Crane as accompanist, was beautiful and impressive.

Berkeley Hall.—The mediums' meeting in Berkeley Hall was well attended. Mrs. Lillie, Miss Nickerson, Capt. Holmes and Mrs. Florence K. Rich (who conducts these meeting) participated. These services will be continued every Sunday immediately after the morning lecture. All mediums are cordially invited.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Sunday, Nov. 25th, the guide of Mrs. H. S. Lake delivered a sterling lecture upon "The Discipline of Life."

The musical selections were finely rendered and much enjoyed.

Next Sunday Lyman C. Howe, of New York, will be the speaker.

School for children convenes at 10:30 A. M.

Wednesday Evening Social at 7:30 P. M.

Meeting for Women every Friday afternoon at 2:30 in the Library Room. Seats free; all cordially invited.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Boston.—The Lyceum held its regular morning session at Paine Hall. In the absence of the Conductor, Mr. Sidney H. Whitney conducted the exercises, while the Assistant Guardian, Miss Amy Peters, led the calisthenics. The banner march had sixty-seven in it. One little lad with bright eyes and rosy cheeks told Secretary Torrey that he had walked way from East Cambridge all alone, and it would "take a bigger storm than this" to keep him at home. The entertainment was very interesting and varied.

HENRY O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street, Boston.—Last Sunday three services were held in this hall. Although the day was stormy, a good attendance was present, and the exercises were interesting, the usual talent participating. Next Sunday Mrs. Loring, of Braintree, will occupy the platform, assisted by Dr. Mathews and others. F. W. M.

Norwich, Conn.—"Uncas" writes that J. Frank Baxter closed his series of lectures in Norwich, Conn., on Sunday, the 25th inst. The theme of the afternoon was "Spiritualism and Morality," and that of the evening was a sort of resumé of the work of Modern Spiritualism the past forty years. The séance was interesting and attractive as usual.—Mrs. Lillie is the speaker next month.—The Helping Hands' social of last week was a "crowded and crowned" success.

People's Spiritual Meeting.—The sessions held at Columbia Hall, New York, on Sunday, Nov. 18th' were well attended and replete with interest. Dr. John C. Wyman of Brooklyn was to deliver an address in this series on Sunday, 25th.

Haverhill and Bradford.—"E. P. H." informs us that Mrs. E. Clark Kimball, of Lawrence, addressed the audiences at Brittan Hall, and gave some very convincing tests. Mrs. Kimball will occupy the platform again next Sunday.

Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference.—F. W. Jones reports that the sessions held at Preparatory School Hall, Johnston Building, Flatbush and Fulton Avenues, Nov. 17th and 24th, were well attended and of marked interest to all present. Dr. E. V. Wright is expected to make the opening address on Saturday evening, Dec. 1st.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Miss Jennie B. Hagan closed a very successful engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of this city on Sunday, Nov. 25th. The 2 P. M. lecture was prefaced by a special reference to the life-work and passing to spirit-life of JONATHAN STEVENS, of Haverhill, who has been an earnest and consistent worker in the cause of Spiritualism for the past forty years. [Memorial notice of Mr. Stevens will appear next week.]

Rev. E. B. Fairchild will occupy the same platform next Sunday.

Topeka, Kan.—F. P. Baker, Esq., editor of The Capital-Commonwealth, puts us in possession of the following facts: The lecture delivered by Mrs. S. R. Stevens at Spiritual Temple on Topeka Avenue Sunday evening, Nov. 18th, was a model of conciseness and strength. Her words came fast and she was never at a loss for the proper sentence, and left no loop-hole for criticism on the part of those who either agreed or disagreed. As a literary effort it has not been surpassed on the rostrum of this city for many years. Her theme was, in part: "Inspiration of the Bible." She agreed in that inspiration, and also in all other inspiration. There was not a word in it which believers in the Bible could find fault with. The work to be done by Spiritualists was to spiritualize mankind. Mrs. Stevens is evidently doing good service in Topeka.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Ladies' Aid of Philadelphia gave a reception to Mrs. Ada Foye at the home of Mrs. A. McCahan, on the evening of Monday, Nov. 19th. A large number of the friends were present. Addresses were made by Mrs. Sarah Benner, (President of the Aid,) Mr. B. P. Benner, Mr. Thomas Locke, Capt. Keffer, Mrs. Lena Hoffman and others, Mrs. Foye followed with a short address, encouraging the ladies in their work, and wishing them every success. The Ladies' Aid intends giving a series of sociables this winter, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the Building Fund. JULIA R. GALLOWAY, Sec'y,

Chicago, Ill.—The Chicago Spiritual Fraternity holds public meetings every Sunday at 3 and 7:45 P. M., at Kimball Hall, No. 245 State street, corner of Jackson. J. Clegg Wright, the well-known eloquent inspirational speaker, will conduct the services the five Sundays of December. Subject for Dec. 2d, at 3 P. M., "Normal and Abnormal Mental States," and at 7:45 P. M., "Man, Magnetism and Spirit."

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P. M.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead"; therefore all Spiritualists are cordially invited to become members—either resident or non-resident—and to take an active part in its work.

NELSON CROSS, President.

J. F. JEANNERET, Secretary,
44 Maiden Lane, New York.

American Spiritualist Alliance.

The Alliance held its regular fortnightly meeting on Wednesday evening, Nov. 21st. After the routine business, and the election of three new members, the subject for consideration, "The Manifestation of Spirit Phenomena through Mediumship," was resumed.

A photograph of a pair of slates which had been covered on one side with writing by the independent process was shown, and the statement as follows made concerning the writing:

A lady, who was very skeptical as to the fact of immortality, one day entered the room where her father was seated with a piece of brown paper, a pencil and an envelope in her hand. Approaching him, she said: "Father, it is probable that you will die before I do; therefore I wish you would take this paper, pencil and envelope and privately write something upon the paper, put it in the envelope, seal it up, and give it to me. Then if, after you die, you should visit a medium and tell me what you have written, and I, on opening the envelope, find that you have done so, I shall then know that you are still alive and able to return and communicate with me."

The father did as requested, and soon afterward passed away.

During a period of some eight years following, this lady visited many mediums, always taking the sealed envelope, and asking for her father to come and state what was written therein; but no response came.

Finally she visited a medium for independent slate-writing, and presented the letter and request. The control wrote that he could not tell what was in it, but would try and look up the party named and have him meet her at a day named for the next week.

At the appointed time she was there, and her father reported himself as present. He said he did not remember just what he had written, but he did recollect this much: That he wrote his name, and age, 84, and that he wrote with pen and ink and on writing paper. This communication was in the illiterate style of the old gentleman; and when the daughter opened the envelope it was found that he had used pen and ink instead of pencil, and had used writing paper instead of the paper handed to him by her, and had written his name and age, 84.

The Cor. Secretary then related an incident of a spirit reporting after an absence of twenty-three years, Dr. Flint, of 55 W. 24th street, New York, being the medium. The greeting that came was—"God bless you, Doctor!" He then stated that it was the first time he had been able to redeem his promise made twenty-three years before, at the time he was passing away, to the effect that if there was such a thing as a spirit returning to the earthly friends, he would come back and say, "God bless you, Doctor!" This man was a captain in the army, and under Dr. Flint's charge at the hospital in Lexington, Ky., at the time of his decease in 1864.

Dr. Flint assured me that the incident had entirely passed from his mind, and that he had not thought of the man in all those years, until his words recalled the incident.

The writer here pointed out that in one of the cases before The Alliance there was a constant and prominent desire, on the part of the sitter, to get a certain test, and, in the other case, an entire absence of all thought concerning it, and yet, in both cases, years elapsed before the promises made were redeemed, and in both cases the spirits asserted that the delay was because of their inability to find favorable conditions.

It was suggested that the question thus presented should be made the particular point of inquiry for the evening. It was discussed by various members, but no satisfactory conclusion was reached.

The next meeting will be Wednesday evening, Dec. 12th, at 219 West 42d street, New York.

JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

In Memoriam.

JAMES SARGENT passed from this life at his home in Newport, N. H., Oct. 31st, in the eighty-sixth year of his age.

He was the son of Capt. John Sargent, of Grantham, N. H., who was one of the early pioneer settlers of that town. The deceased devoted most of his life to agriculture in his native State. He early became interested in the investigation of Spiritualism, and eventually one of its most intelligent and firm believers. His belief was neither narrow nor bigoted; it was based upon an extensive reading of modern thought and a careful study of the Bible.

He has been a constant subscriber of THE BANNER for almost twenty years, and a regular attendant of the Spiritualist Camp-Meeting at Lake Sunapee since its establishment.

In his life and character we have a remarkable illustration of the truth of that divine revelation of the Great Master: the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man!

His delight was in the help and service of others, and the memory of his kind acts and noble deeds will remain longest in the minds of those who knew him best and loved him most.

He leaves a son and two daughters to mourn the loss and cherish the memory of a life full of love, truth, and usefulness. From his nephew, F. O. CHELLIS.

SARATOGA, N. Y.—Some forty members of the First Society of Spiritualists and friends met at the Circular Street House, Thursday evening, Nov. 22d, to initiate the social season for the winter. Dr. W. B. Mills, Mrs. Emma L. Paul, Peter Thompson and others related some of their experiences. Dr. Mills and other mediums gave interesting tests, and some others favored the company with music and recitations. Altogether it was a very enjoyable and pleasant occasion. A committee of three was appointed to arrange a programme for the next sociable, to be held on Thursday, Dec. 6th, with James P. Allen, No. 70 White street. After that time the socials will be held weekly.

Memorial Service.—There was an unusually large audience in the Court of Appeals room on Sunday morning, Nov. 18th, at the memorial service for CHARLES E. CLEAVER and his two children, who passed to the life beyond, from diphtheria, in September last. Mrs. Emma L. Paul was the inspired speaker of the occasion.

After an interesting and feeling invocation she took for her theme a part of the twenty-first verse of the first chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Philippians, "To die is gain," and portrayed the disappointments and failures of attaining our desires which come to all.

We are not born to stay for a brief period on earth alone, and then to pass away entirely, but for eternity, and it is not given us during the short time spent here in this life to reach the apex of our ambitions. No man can be as wise, as true, morally or spiritually, as he aspires to be during the time he dwells here.

To die is gain in that it brings us face to face with the loved ones who have gone before, and will welcome us, and open to us avenues of knowledge and progress undreamed of, and which we cannot anticipate. Materialists are yet inquiring whether if a man die he shall live again, with the evidences of the fact that he will coming up all about them, in the life which follows the change called death, and the decay in everything of nature, from the smallest plant to the largest tree. Beautiful flowers and luscious fruits follow the most complete and seeming wasting of living forms, and can we think that man, endowed with so many faculties and powers not given to inferior forms of existence, is denied the hereafter of life and beauty which plants and trees have? Love is its own guarantee of immortality. No person who sincerely loves fails to come into a knowledge and experience of the truth that there is a hereafter for all.

The person who cultivates a contented spirit is the happiest individual in the world. But who does?

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

The meetings the past month, under the highly intellectual and educational character of Mr. J. C. Wright's ministrations, have attracted great public attention, and led to an increase of attendance. Mr. W. discourses on a variety of subjects, and seems ready to grapple with most any problem in the wide range of spiritualistic, physiological, historical or literary knowledge. He is an enigma to the professors and literati who have given him impromptu subjects to treat upon.

The Debate previously announced between Rev. S. S. Bartlett of Chardon, O., and Mr. Wright, will not occupy four nights, as agreed on, owing to the uncertainty of Mr. Bartlett's ability to be in Cleveland, through a serious accident his wife has met with. The gentlemen will meet in Memorial Hall Thursday and Friday evenings, Nov. 29th and 30th, for discussion on the relative merits of Spiritualism and Orthodoxy.

Phrenology in the Lyceum.—Mr. Wright gave an interesting talk to the children on Sunday, the 18th, on this subject, and several character-delineations of boys and girls, which proved highly interesting, instructive and humorous, as well as novel to many of the little ones.

A Trip to Berlin Heights.—Your correspondent had the recent pleasure of taking Mr. Wright on a visit to the well-known spiritualistic author and poetess, Hudson and Emma Tuttle. These bright luminaries and exponents of our growing philosophy had never met, and the meeting proved a very pleasurable one to all; both being farmers and mediums a wide range of subjects was discussed, from English and American standpoints, and from "land ownership" to "titles in the skies." In order that Mr. Tuttle's neighbors might hear Mr. Wright, Mr. T. arranged for a public lecture at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening (Nov. 21st), the subject treated being "The Signs of the Times," political, social and religious. It was a masterpiece of eloquence.

Watson—Elliott.—Married, at the residence of the bride's parents in Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 31st, 1888: The bridegroom, Mr. Chas. E. Watson, is a graduate of the Children's Progressive Lyceum in this city, and his marriage to Miss Helena Elliott is the outcome of Cupid's dart fired from among the classic hemlocks at Cassadaga camp-meeting two or three years since; they will be at home, 67 South Bell avenue, after Dec. 1st, and pleased to receive their numerous friends, whom I have occasion to know rejoice in their anticipated happiness. Love's gondola is fairly launched; may it glide smoothly and safely over the billows that usually characterize the sea of matrimony.

"The Weeping Willow"—how often the branches of this symbolic tree entwine that of "orange blossoms"; how inseparably joy and sorrow, health and sickness, life and death seem connected:

"Yes! it is so! We come and go,
They hail our birth, they mourn us dead;
A day or more the sorrow's o'er,
Another takes our place instead."

Tears.—Our esteemed friend, Mr. Isaac Snook, of this city, has been sorely tried, through the loss of his wife Mary, who passed to spirit-life Wednesday, Nov. 14th. The separation from the loved one to whom he was so long and happily united, requires all the consolation our beautiful philosophy affords to assuage the deep grief felt by our sorrowing brother at her transition. Though formerly members of the Presbyterian Church, they had for some years enjoyed the light of the Spiritual Philosophy lived its highest teachings, and showed consistency at death in having spiritualistic funeral services—Mr. J. Clegg Wright officiating. Supplementing this service, Mr. W. officiated conjointly with your correspondent at the grave in Woodland Cemetery of little Gladys Gay Prentice, who after being severely burned by gasoline, fell a victim to "membraneous croup," and passed to spirit-life Nov. 16th. She was a bright child, a scholar of the Children's Progressive Lyceum, and leaves a foster father, and a brother who is yet suffering from the effects of the same accident that hastened her death.

Mrs. Ada Foye.—This world-renowned "rapping and platform test medium" commences her lectures and séances Sunday, Dec. 2d, and continues every Sunday evening during the month at Memorial Hall, 170 Superior street. Mrs. Foye will also hold a public séance one night of each week, will accept parlor engagements during her stay in the city, and can be engaged for séances in towns not too far from Cleveland by addressing Yours fraternally, THOS. LEES, 105 Cross street.

First Independent Club.—Last Sunday afternoon, notwithstanding the violent storm, some hundred people gathered in Berkeley Hall to hear Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker. The advertised subject, "Why I Became a Spiritualist," was moved forward for next Sunday, and Mrs. Hooker spoke for an hour and a half upon her own personal experiences, which commenced during her stay in Paris in 1874. She graphically narrated many reminiscences never before publicly announced, and great interest and attention was manifested by her auditors.

On Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 21st, an interesting séance was conducted by J. W. Fletcher. In the evening Miss Emma Nickerson read a poetic legend in which the wooing of her Indian guide, Tonsolusa, was pictured in words. Under inspiration she delivered a vigorous address upon "Personality," which was heartily applauded. Mr. F. C. Algerton, Dr. J. L. Dennis of Buffalo, and Mrs. J. W. Fletcher each contributed to the enjoyment of those present by presenting characteristic thoughts upon matters of interest. The Club's series of Sunday lectures have been favored with excellent patronage, and the effort to present representative speakers upon the higher aspects of Spiritualism will be continued. Mr. Massey has been reengaged for Dec. 9th, upon request of many who admire his sturdy and exhaustive researches for truth.

At a recent meeting of this organization the Secretary was directed to prepare the following resolutions bearing upon the transition of Mrs. H. P. Griffin:

Whereas, Our loved sister and esteemed co-worker, Mrs. H. P. Griffin, has been suddenly called upward from our midst; and

Whereas, The loss we have sustained in our sister's decease, and the far greater loss sustained by those nearer and dearer to her, should be placed upon record; therefore,

Resolved, That it is only a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that in regretting her removal from our midst, we are sensible of the loss of the presence of one in all ways meriting our regard and respect; a true woman, a genial friend, and a valued member of the Independent Club; one who often added us by her elocutionary talents, always responding cheerfully to our calls. Although not wholly accepting the teachings of the Spiritual Philosophy, her mind was ever receptive to the truth as she perceived it. Though beyond the pale of our physical senses, we feel that she is at times near us, and cognizant of our grief at her departure, and joy at her new birth.

Resolved, That the sympathy and condolences of this Society be extended to the husband and relatives of the deceased, who were with so short warning called upon to bid her an earthly farewell and perform the sad rites of burial.

Resolved, That a copy of this sincere testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be forwarded for publication in the BANNER OF LIGHT, and also to the husband of the deceased.

Boston, Mass. F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The interest in our Philosophy seems to increase in this city through the excellent work of Mrs. Ada Foye and her spirit band; our hall is packed with intelligent, interested and orderly audiences; her tests, mostly for skeptics, are many and convincing, and, strange to say, are recognized almost involuntarily by their recipients. Facts, hard facts are in this city, and at this time, giving a quietus to the "toe" theory. The First Association will have platform test mediums at every session, if possible.—Our local mediums are also doing good work. What the people want are facts of spirit return. T.

Concord, N. H.—A correspondent writes: "Mrs. E. B. Craddock is prepared to meet engagements to speak or give sittings to parties or Societies desiring her services. She is doing a great work in New Hampshire, and is highly appreciated by the people."

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

Other Tales and Sketches.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM:

Its Purpose and Scope in the Economy of Nature in this Part of the Nineteenth Century.

A Lecture Delivered Sunday Evening, Nov. 18th, 1888, before the First Society of Spiritualists, New York City,

BY LYMAN C. HOWE.

Reported especially for the Banner of Light.

There is a time for everything: a time to laugh and a time to weep, a time to sing and a time to dance, a time to rejoice and a time to be sad, a time to be born and a time to die, and everything happens in time. Time is measured by infinite duration and it is measured by phases of experience. It used to be a patent objection against Modern Spiritualism that it had not come sooner. If it be true that spirits live right on, that death does not interfere with the continuity of our consciousness, and communication be possible between the seen and the unseen, why have you not known it before? Why has it been so long in coming? Why did not the world find it out ages ago? To this last the natural answer is, "It did, spasmodically, conditionally, locally; but it was reserved for the advent of what is called Modern Spiritualism to meet the modern need, to adapt itself to modern circumstances, to work in the mental and moral atmosphere that has been evolved through long ages of natural incubation."

Modern Spiritualism—its purpose and scope in the economy of nature in this part of the nineteenth century! But Modern Spiritualism has been claiming a hearing for the last forty years, hence it covers a large part of the last half of the nineteenth century. Why call it modern? That implies that there was or is a Spiritualism that is not modern. In what is it different? Spiritualism in some form has existed, and been more or less manifested to man in some localities, under some atmospheric influences, as far back as there is a history of the race. But ancient Spiritualism was naturally clouded with superstition, as was everything else. Ancient religion shuddered under the shadow of that horror that rained blood and fire from the clouds, and superstition stood with its weapons over the best of humanity, to strike down every broad-thinking, reasoning soul. Everything gathered from the advancement of the ages has been steadily preparing the human mind for the advent of Modern Spiritualism. We can answer the question as to why it did not come before, in the Yankee way. Why did not Christianity come before? Why was not Jesus before Moses? Why are not mammals before mollusks? Why was not man before the lowest brute? Why are not men before babies? Because there is a time for everything, and nature ordains that everything shall take its place in the order of time for processes of growth.

Modern Spiritualism had its advent about forty years ago—why, how, where, in what did it consist? Shall we answer, "In the rap"? Then you answer, "But that is all exploded. The original mediums have declared that Modern Spiritualism is a falsehood, mediumship a humbug, themselves frauds." Does that make them so? Supposing every telegraph operator should swear there is no communication over the lines; that all the pretended messages received and sent had been frauds, manufactured at either end of the line but never transmitted over it: would you believe it? Would that make it so? Supposing Jonah should say he had never been swallowed by the whale. If you had been there and seen it done, and seen the whale, after a while, vomit him up on the shore, would you not insist that it was a fact, though Jonah turned round and said he had swallowed the whale? Having witnessed the process of swallowing, you would be inclined to doubt it even though you read it in the Bible. Now the fact is, the denial of one medium, or of a thousand mediums, makes no difference. Spiritual manifestations do not rest on the testimony of one medium, or of two mediums, or of a thousand mediums either. They do not rest on the character of the mediums through whom the manifestations occur. They rest upon those demonstrations, experiments and communications, established not in one, but in thousands and tens of thousands of instances, through mediums, but under the most close observation and delicate scrutiny, and in every way tested, so that all forms of manifestation have no dependency upon the character of the medium for truth, veracity, accuracy, morality or anything else.

The purpose of Modern Spiritualism is to meet a modern need, fulfill a modern demand, adapt spiritual volition and agency in impressing itself upon the world to the present age. And what were the conditions preceding this advent to which you date? The world had slumbered for ages under the cloud of superstition when the inductive processes began to disseminate intelligence, when scientific investigation began to take on the inductive method and strike out into new paths of discovery, and submit everything to the processes of scientific investigation. When these things came they made progress against the old methods of accepting things on trust, because deductively some brilliant genius had struck down from a theory into its effect without any demonstration of its truthfulness. The result was the development of intellectual skepticism, because it was found the old systems of religion, of faith, the old ideas of regeneration, the old claims of miracles could not endure the test of experiment, they would not bear the scientific method of induction, they could not support themselves under the scientific system, and had been relegated to the realm of faith. Faith has gone into the crucible of scientific experimentation, and when that fails it follows that faith has declined, faith must wane. And just in proportion as intelligence and scientific skepticism grew, faith and all the superstructure of religion builded thereon necessarily waned.

Such were the circumstances at the advent of Modern Spiritualism. The world was growing rapidly skeptical, verification was applied to all discoveries in science, everywhere proving or disproving, and compelling everything to stand the test. The test could not be applied to religion, could not be applied to revelation, could not be applied to miracles, or to the ideas of immortality. Therefore it was declared, if there is an immortal soul in man let us see it. Science said: Let us put it to the test, analyze the human body, test it, put it into the crucible, analyze it, find the soul, evolve it if it is there. If there is a thinking mind in the brain, the brain ought to reveal it; we ought to be able to find it; if there is a soul in the body, the knife and scalpel and microscopic observation in dissection ought to find it. But they did it and could not find any soul at all could not find any memory; could not find any thinking part; could not find that anything had gone out when the body was dead; every organ remained there complete, they had simply ceased to act. Their functions had ceased to manifest, but there was nothing apparently gone; the body weighed the same until time had had opportunity to work changes. Everything was just as large, every characteristic and peculiarity, from the tips of the hair to the ends of the finger-nails, was there just as complete, and nothing appeared to have gone out, but the machinery seemed to have stopped. And when, therefore, it was declared the man had gone out, the soul had gone out, science in demanding verification could find no answer, religion could give none, theologians could offer none. They could refer you to the Bible, to the miracles, could refer you to the authority of olden times and tell you to believe or be damned; and the scientific thinker said: I will be damned if I do. And he would. It is damnation to a scientific thinker to believe without evidence, to accept by faith when experimentation and observation fail to satisfy the demands of his reason, because it is untrue to the instincts of his judgment—it is infidelity to his scientific reason to believe without proof. And this tendency was rapidly growing—growing just in proportion as a broad civilization was unfolding out of the many shadows of the long, dark ages of superstition, growing just in proportion as reason refused to be subjugated to the dictates of blind idolatry, growing just in proportion as manhood and independent thinking and a rational interpretation of nature and life were gaining ascendency over the slavery of religious authority and sectarian dictation. Therefore there was war between reason and religion. Even Paul recognized that when he said: "Carnal reason is at enmity against God, is not subject to his law, neither indeed can be." And the world had been taught in the interests of religion to subjugate reason, to refuse to reason on religious subjects. You might reason on material things, provided your reasonings in no wise brought you in conflict with religious authority.

But unfortunately for religion the study of the natural was inevitably to lead the mind directly up to confront the mandates of faith and the authority of religious dogmatism, and if allowed to reason on natural things that reason would not stop at spiritual things. And therefore when we found nature ruled by a system, for every effect a cause, that nothing happened by chance, that there was no absolute independent sovereignty of the will, and that nature moved steadily forward like clock-work, and that the stars and planets held their places under a fixed order—when it was found these things were true, and the operations of human life in the organisms of the body were determined on fixed order as completely as the rolling stars or the resting granite, the question came: What, then, is not natural; what, then, is not subject to the eternal order of cause and effect that is below it? And the rational mind could find nothing. When told God was above nature—nature was everywhere; when told that God instituted nature, there was no rational conclusion to be drawn unless God was manifested through nature, and therefore the reasoning mind unfolded it and declared if there is a God he is in nature, a part of nature, nature's self. And then when asking of human immortality the same idea arose. If man is immortal he must be so naturally; if by accident, it counts for nothing; if by a miracle, it is of little value and has no evidence, for a miracle is foreign to nature. If man is immortal at all, that immortality must inhere as a birthright in his constitution, and it must be governed by laws as fixed and eternal as those which rule the body. Theology could make no answer to this kind of reasoning, and it laid its heavy hand even upon the geological student, who attempted to solve the mysteries of creation by the historic record left upon the rocks; it attempted to paralyze the astronomical reasoner with worlds for his proof and with his telescope for his authority, by insisting that we should not accept anything contrary to the dictates and authority of revelation. And the same spirit held you a prisoner in the old ideas of science. And when it was claimed that Jupiter had four moons that had actually been seen, the old Ptolemaic school of astronomers rejected it and used the profound argument (about like most theologians' reasoning against nature) that since the human head had seven apertures—two eyes, two ears, two nostrils and a mouth—that therefore the planetary system could have but seven bodies in it. That was scientific argument, not religious; that was the Ptolemaic astronomers against the Copernican system and the discoveries of Galileo; showing you that the prejudices, authority and acts of the schools, tending in a given line for a long series of generations, become as intolerant in science and in philosophy as they do in religion. And this, too, is another evidence of the great need of a universal solvent, and we claim that Modern Spiritualism is that solvent; that is its purpose; and the purpose and scope are what we are to consider.

It is to dissolve all the old shadows of superstition, to dissolve all the dread miasms of empirical science, and melt them in the crucible of immortality, to bridge over the chasm, to adjust the testimony and mechanism of the outward man, and that immortal part which leaves the body at death. Does it do it? We cannot claim for Spiritualism any purpose in the economy of nature that it cannot fill. To claim it would be to claim what is not true. Can it fulfill this purpose? Does it fulfill this purpose?

First of all, then, it came with scientific phenomena, or with raps. No matter if made with the toe-joints, if those toe-joints gave intelligent answers from the spirit-world, not within the medium's consciousness or knowledge, it was a demonstration from the same. And through those raps of the Fox girls—in spite of their recantations—demonstrations and communications and intelligences were received, independent of their will, their authority, their power; independent of all efforts of trickery, and no matter how they have tried to cheat, no matter what they believe, they have given communications through the raps that came—facts which gave knowledge which was absolutely beyond their reach—beyond any snapping of the toe-joints, no matter how much apparent trickery followed in their wake. To illustrate: You who are familiar with their history know that one of the first communications came from one who claimed to be the spirit of a man murdered in the house, and by searching evidences were found that a body had been buried in the cellar. Had those girls, those little girls, deposited a corpse in a corner of the cellar, several feet under the ground, in order that they might play this trick upon the world, and be deceivers for forty years before the whole human family? But another thing: it is a well-known fact that they could count—count the ages of friends unknown to the children by raps. Put your hand in a bag of shot, and the raps would tell you correctly how many you had. Did the girls do that? If so, they were marvels of intellectual, intuitive judgment, or else miracles in guessing. Nay; intelligence was behind them, and it matters not what. Phenomena may be independent of intelligence, they may be no sure evidence of immortality. But when the intelligence lies behind the phenomena, when these facts are tested by scientists who observe them critically and narrowly, when the inductive process of thought is carried on, thus bringing in fact after fact, experience after experience, demonstration after demonstration, analyzing them, and relating them to the common claim, to determine whether they absolutely read with the authority of truth, they verify the claim of human spirits behind them. And the testimony of all scientists who have followed them up and studied them has verified the claim that it is an expression of the spiritual. But this was only the beginning, the beginning of a new era—the beginning of Modern Spiritualism. And it was not alone with the Fox girls. Scores of mediums in different parts of the country simultaneously appeared, as well as at Hydesville, with similar manifestations, and came to the conclusion that these communications came from immortal beings who once lived in the flesh, that they came from our common kindred over the line, and all over the country the truth sprang up like the seed in a mighty harvest over the whole field of humanity. They declared, "We are from the spirit-world, we are human beings without flesh and blood, we were once physical like yourselves, and we come to tell you that we are alive, and that you will live; and we bring to the world and to scientists demonstration by induction through a thousand different methods and tests, that shall satisfy the most conservative and thoroughly scientific skeptic.

They have been doing it for about forty years, and they have established a branch line to carry out the conclusion, until to-day Modern Spiritualism is proving—has proven—as a conclusive and inductive scientific verity, the fact of spiritual reappearance. So in the physical sciences, after Harvey had established upon facts the circulation of the blood, he was mocked at, and declared visionary by the profession, but to-day it is entirely accepted, and supposed to be demonstrated beyond all possible doubt, but with no better proofs than we have of the communication of the denizens of the other world with those of this. The law of gravitation, discovered by Newton, and the immortal laws of Keppler, are supposed to be established beyond a doubt, but they are no better proven than to-day are the demonstrations of spirit communication throughout the earth.

But this is not all its purpose. This is but one of its purposes. Its purpose is to meet the growing need of the children of earth. It is not only the demonstration of immortality, (though this is one, and a very important one,) but it includes a great deal more. It holds the demonstrations not only of immortality but of the conditions of that immortality, the relations which the unseen world sustain to yourselves, the relations which our lives in the body sustain to their lives out of the body, the possibilities and realities beyond the grave. But that is not all we need to know in making up our habits and affections to-day. We are governed largely by what we know, expect or believe upon evidence will result from our conduct. We would never sow if we did not believe there would be a harvest; prepare for a winter if we did not know from experience there would be a winter; never build if we did not believe that we might benefit from that building; never attempt to educate our children if we did not think they might grow up and utilize the influence thus imparted profit by the education. We would never build ships if we did not believe they could sail over the sea; never build railroads if we did not believe there would be a use for them in the commerce of the country; never do anything unless from the anticipation of something which it led to. So here and now, if we have no evidence of a life beyond the grave, if death ends all, if we are only great material machines, matter in motion, and all goes down in oblivion forever, then what is there to inspire our spiritual nature? What is the use of this wondrous aspiration, which reaches beyond the grim misery of the grave to stimulate and encourage us that the parting is for a short period only, if oblivion ends all? Nothing. It is a very weak support, and those who fully live it feel it grow cold, weak and inefficient in every department of the soul's growth. But when we can feel that not only what we learn is ours forever, but that our experiences, our habits, our moral status, our spiritual purity, our higher nature, are ours to carry through the shadow of death to help to do our work in the future, then there is some energy imparted, some vigor and stimulus to inspire us to make the best of to-day. If, on the other hand, we are made to feel, as the world has been through the generations of theological darkness, that our future rests upon the caprice of a God who has no government, law or divine order in his character; whose promises are not binding; who will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and that the best and most noble characters, if they happen to fall below the line marked out by the capricious will of that divinity, are lost in depravity and darkness, what is there to inspire and encourage us to make the best of ourselves for the life that is to be ended thus? Nothing. But we must lean on faith and trust to the virtue of mercy and grace, and believe, and through these we may inherit eternal life; but our good living, our virtuous thoughts, our intellectual purity, our private life—all these count as nothing, if we fail to fill the demands of faith and the caprice of God. And yet the barrenness and depravity of a lifetime can all be brushed away in a dying moment, by believing in the power of an unoffending atonement to snatch us like a brand from the burning and carry us to Abraham's bosom; while those whose lives have been one perpetual development of virtue and goodness, failing in faith, go down into utter darkness. This does not make the world better; does not give the sensitive soul strength to rise and struggle, and strive to overcome temptation, conquer inherited evils and vices, to make virtue and honor and truth and intelligence a perpetual effort to unfold, because we can carry them as certainly as mind goes on. But all these go out at the birth of Modern Spiritualism. It comes to strike an eternal death-blow through the theological errors that hang like a nightmare over humanity. But not to strike a death-blow at religion; not to strike a death-blow at worship; not to strike a death-blow at revelation; not to strike a death-blow at Infinite God, whose loving presence warms you through the darkness; but to help humanity forth to its own qualities, to raise before them the inspiration to stand up in the nobility of manhood, conquering and opening their way to eternal pastures, through the assurance that we shall have what we earn and no more, we shall receive our just deserts and nothing more; and if we would be happy in the future we must make our conditions for happiness as our ultimate birthright beyond the grave, and we can take it in defiance of any and every power.

In order, therefore, to accomplish this result Spiritualism was compelled to make war upon much that was held sacred in the past, to make war upon the sacred institution of hell, to make war upon the sacred authority of an infinite fiend, to make war upon the sacred justice that robs man of his birthright, of his experiences, and gives him glory when he deserves damnation, and when he deserves glory, eternal woe. It was to take all these out of the world, but not to leave the world blank, without faith, without anything on which to lean—having taken the error to leave nothing in its place that was beautiful and true, but to put these in their place; that is, to put in the place of hell heaven. Heaven and Hell stand as antipodes in the old theology; to shun Hell and gain Heaven was to gain the goal of ambition. That is not the idea of Spiritualism, but we have transformed Hell into Heaven. You know there may be an accumulation of energy by which a force may disappear in one place and appear in another; by which certain conditions may fade in one place and appear in another. Nothing lost, only transformed. So Spiritualism begins gradually to mold Hell into Heaven, and gradually the narrow bondage and slavery and limitations of human life die. In a word, it puts nature against superstition, makes nature our groundwork, equips nature with a divine spirit instead of a fiendish one, and thereby enables nature to serve all the demands of our being.

Hence the proposition of our theme is the purpose and scope of Modern Spiritualism in the economy of nature. It was not before, because the world had not reached an intellectual and spiritual development that could take it, because the only professed spiritual power was from the ancient Hindus, from the ancient Mosaic revelations. But scientific observation, by relegating these to the domain of reason, by realizing the distance between the seen and the unseen, and bridging over the chasm that separates matter from spirit, opened man's higher nature. And this is still going on to convince every man, woman and child, the wide world over, against the shadows of superstition, that those out of the body are as real as those in the body. They have been regarded as ghostly, dangerous, and to be dreaded. But those out of the body are your friends still, loving you still; they can advise and communicate with you still, through your entire life. This has been done and is being done as the result of intelligence in spiritual things, of reason with revelation, mortality with immortality, the seemingly miraculous and unnatural with law, order and system. Spiritualism, in its purpose and scope, seeks to bring religion, divinity, immortality, revelation, everything, under the atmosphere of reason, and relegate them to a long communication of cause and effect under the infinite government of God. And, having gone in this line, it has revolutionized not only the world of fact but the realm of feeling as well; not only revolutionized the understanding of man in regard to the spirit-world and immortality, but at the same time and by the same process taught him to realize the realities of truth, and to recognize spirit-life.

In the discovery of the third law of Kepler, which cost him seventeen years of severe labor and study, he had a supreme object. He saw that there must be some law of universal relationship that should bind all the worlds and systems of worlds in one common family by a bond as accurate as any in mathematics, and he discovered that bond at last, a bond overshadowing the universe of worlds. Now Modern Spiritualism sees and feels how universal is the bond between our human souls, and how impossible is the eternal death or damnation to any part of the human family without eternal violation of the whole order of nature and of God. It is as hard to establish as a universal rule as it was for Kepler, after he made his discovery of the third great law, to convince the world of it.

The advent of Modern Spiritualism came proclaiming peace on earth, good-will to man. "Well," said one, "that is what Jesus did. That came eighteen hundred years ago." Yes; but it was a peace that came through the sword, and Jesus is reputed as saying: "I came not to bring peace, but a sword; for I came to set a man at variance against his father, and a daughter against her mother, and a man's foes shall be of his own household." And the law of the Christian religion and its development has abundantly displayed this purpose, for tears and groans and blood and fagots have marked the path of its evolution. But this never was the purpose of the Nazarene, never showed the beautiful spirit of the golden rule, but it was simply the evolution and growth of human nature; in its conflict with itself it would naturally build these barriers and develop these rivers of gore. Now Modern Spiritualism comes with its bright promise, and it comes to bring it not merely as a priestly mandate, as a supernatural authority, not with the assumption of a God or the Son of a God, in an unnatural sense; but it comes to appeal to human reason, human consciousness, human affections, human hopes and human desires, by the recognition of the glories of eternal progress, whether it shines through the portals of geological lore or from the stellar landscapes shines down in recognition of this law of progress. We are the children of evolution and growth; no matter what our educational condition, what our outward birthright or our ancestry of lineage, no matter what our religion or anti-religion, we are children of one common parentage, one long, long struggle, and we therefore all belong to one common family—man, whose birthright is immortality and whose tendency is eternal progress in truth and righteousness.

But we may say Spiritualism to-day verifies this claim, for though we read and hear of scandals and jealousies and counter-interests between mediums, and public denials of public teachers, they are not as much divided as churches and religions. Very likely Spiritualism to-day is in its time of childhood, and in these conflicts we are all learning to grow. We are learning through pain; by the wants unfolded by our conflicts and personal limitations and our passions, we are learning that every man, woman and child has a right to interpret facts by his own judgment and investigation. We may dif-for on religion, on social history and on social progress, yet we are children of God, and in all divine rights we are but fellows of one infinite family, and should recognize each other's wants. This is one of the greatest needs at the present day, and Spiritualism is doing, and has already done, more than all the churches in this one direction, and developed this broad generosity of feeling and mutual good-will between the children of men. Notwithstanding we have our separate opinions, and our various forms of development, and though we cannot all see alike, and think alike, and feel alike, we do not need to. It would be a greater calamity if we did. Therefore let us remember we are benefited, rounded out, enlarged, as the grand family is correspondingly raised by civilization, as progress moves us onward.

It is, then, the scope and purpose of Spiritualism, after having demonstrated the continuity of life beyond this world, having left the flesh here; after establishing this beyond a doubt, (and it still needs to be done; hundreds of thousands more, many millions more must be convinced, and the work must go on,) not only to establish itself upon the eternal verities of investigating science, not only to bring to its support every materialistic, scientific authority on the earth, but to bring religion as well within its broad scope and make religion serve its uses. How can it do that? It will bring into one organization scientific and rational intelligence and religion; bring religion into sweet and sacred harmony with reason, scientific fact and judgment. It has that power; it can unite and harmonize carnal reason with God, with immortality, with the dominion of worship and religion. It will stimulate and purify the affections, not crucify them. It does not come to blight your feelings and seal your soul in sin forever, but it would unfold you continually, that you may attain your birthright of fellowship and companionship in the infinite future —the birthright of divine life and judgment as displayed in Nature. When Modern Spiritualism is perfectly established, there will be no broken families, no broken hearts, no broken affections, no lost ones that go down in the grave of oblivion, or, infinitely worse, in the grave of eternal despair. But the family circle will continue right on, and those who have preceded you will still continue to blend in a common companionship of thoughts and sentiments and feelings. And as the scope and purpose of Spiritualism advance and unfold, they can come together and clasp in each other's arms as physical, tangible and real a substance as was the body that was laid away. The great scope of Modern Spiritualism is to give the heart of humanity more scientific reasons, authority, organizations, institutions; more to love, purify, exalt and influence the sacredness of human love in all the relations of the family, the home and the immortal life. One of its objects and purposes, one of its ideas and most far-reaching expressions, is to be found in its influence upon childhood—born and unborn; not only in teaching lessons that give a new life and consciousness to impart to children from parentage, but in seeking to develop the higher soul to unfold it. It seeks to inspire the atmosphere of home with that immortal spirituality, that perpetual sweetness in harmonizing the quality of justice in the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, brother and sister, and of the whole family with the world around them. And in this the scope of Modern Spiritualism is more potent than in any other. Not in the expression of fact and phenomena, not in its intelligent rationale, not in the authority of public exhibitions, not even in private circles, but in the proper development and higher reality of the soul through the family relations, by which this spirit of humanity is made heartfelt and real. "But," says one, "I thought Spiritualism was a destroyer of homes, broke up families, separated man and wife, and was a destroyer of order and of society." You did? What made you think so? Some pulpit orator told you so? Perhaps he had been reading the words of Jesus: "If any man leave home, and friends, and wife, and children, and father, for my sake, and the gospel, he shall receive a hundredfold now, in this time, and in the world to come life everlasting." Perhaps that pulpit orator had applied this to Modern Spiritualism; but if you will compare the statistics, you will find there are quite as many divorces and separations, and family conflicts and discords, among the people of the church as there are among the Spiritualists. But we, as Spiritualists, include many people—men and women, drawn from the different churches and from the world outside the churches, who have had David and Solomon and Abraham as examples for their observation. And Modern Spiritualism must necessarily partake of these in its own evolution to protect and uplift and exalt mankind; and the relations of family and home must partake of them also: But by the education of children, by its efforts to purify marriage, to purify society, that grows out of homes, and give to the world a more exalted conception of the relations of man and wife, a more exalted conception of the sanctity of home; then by-and-bye you will find these things as realities that Spiritualism will have established, and the world will look reverently on and say a glad amen.

But Spiritualism is only forty years old. People say, "What advance have you made? Why have you not builded churches?" We have, some. "Why have you not endowed institutions of learning? institutions of charity? Why have you not builded these and endowed them, and delighted the world with your works of righteousness and your manifestations of good?" Well, how many churches had Christianity built when it was forty years old? How many institutions of charity and learning, how many asylums had been built, missionaries established, when forty years had passed after the birth of the child of Nazareth? Can you count many? Can you count any more than Modern Spiritualism does? But the works of Modern Spiritualism, like the primitive works of Jesus, are not so much in gilded domes and strong temples of idolatry, but in the still, small voice, in the perpetual and far-reaching whispers that go far into listening hearts, and breathe the truths that banish pain and conquer death, that walk in the hospital, glide into the sick-room, and carry healing in the hand of the medium, that come even to the bedside of insanity with the healing love of immortal spheres whose music soothes the heart and brain. This is the influence, purpose and scope of Modern Spiritualism. And who can measure its healing, quieting, peaceful influence at the hour of death? Thousands and tens of thousands have felt and enjoyed its promises, its revelations and its truths.

But we wish to record one important thought. As yet Spiritualism in its scientific aspect is in an imperfect state; it has not reached its full development. What science ever has within forty years? How far had astronomy gone in forty years? How far had geology gone in the first forty years? How far had chemistry gone in the first forty years? How far had physiology gone in the study of the bones, and muscles, and nerves in the first forty years of its growth? How far has any science gone in forty years? But Spiritualism carries along with it, through all the débris of materialism, of the olden wall of theories, its system of facts and scientific data, of close and critical observation and appreciation of these facts, until it has brought them to the attention and deepest analysis of many of the best scientific thinkers and observers in the civilized world.

What may we not expect in the next forty years? Every physical science will have accepted its phenomena, and more or less relegated them to the order and system of the demonstration of the continuity of life. In the next forty years we expect the different religious societies, even the active Mother Church, will accept Modern Spiritualism as a divine revelation, given in this afternoon of the nineteenth century, adapted to the natural unfoldment in the order of nature, in the economy of nature, to the needs of humanity; in which every church shall share, every religion bow. The Mother Church accepts spirit-communion, it acknowledges spirit-communion, but denies its authority except under the leadership, government and domination of the church. But plainly the purpose of Modern Spiritualism is to break this assumption and religious monopoly forever in the world. The influence of Spiritualism is against the monopolist, and it is reaching to all spheres, it is reaching through the most powerful church of Christianity, which trembles before the light of its superior reasoning power.

To-day the influence of its subtle life is laboring everywhere, extending its activities through the different departments of the churches, Protestant and Roman Catholic alike. We do not expect to destroy the churches, we do not wish to destroy them, but in a liberal, expansive sense to unfold them. The Mother Church is yet needed as one of discipline. She is needed as part of the economy of nature in working out the religious problem, to be slowly solved, analyzed and relegated to its place without any shock of moral or material revolution. If to-day the whole authority of the Mother Church, with all its riches and its pent-up energy, were swept away without preparation of the people for something better, it would be a most terrible calamity for the civilized world. Therefore it is not desired on the part of the spirit-world; it is not the object or scope of Spiritualism to strongly shock old systems and institutions, but slowly to educate to a knowledge of the future, to solve the problems and reduce them separately, through education, to a reasoning, liberal, generous, universal religion, whose name shall be Modern Spiritualism.

There is much more that might be said in this connection, but we are wearying you, and must let your minds and bodies rest. Let us say, in conclusion, that the influence and scope of Modern Spiritualism in this part of the nineteenth century came in answer to a natural, moral and religious need—came as quickly as they could come, as quickly as they could be received, as early as scientific verification was possible to the development of the human race. If you doubt it, look back a little to the hanging and drowning of the martyr mediums, called witches, under the dogmatism of that old superstition brought down from Moses and Abraham, and then say whether it was possible for Spiritualism to come any sooner than it did, ere science, reason, culture, philosophy and everything had grown to that extent that men had cast aside these old superstitions and drifted to the other extreme, so that they were prepared to listen to the raps, to the tests, to the declarations, to the shadowy thoughts that presented themselves were prepared to listen, to analyze, to accept, to reject upon a normal, natural analysis, and not upon the authority of ancient revelation or of the modern dictum of a tyrannical fiend in the spirit-world. In order to establish this we must remember that Spiritualism came with its facts, but said: "Take not the dictum of any spirit, of any revelation, of any declaration of either God or man as authority that your immortal conscience and reason does not approve." That was one of the leading principles, its first note of warning at the coming of the spirit-raps, and from that day to this it insists upon that in the development of Spiritualism, through every range of thought as it moves with eternal force throughout the length and breadth of the land. Individual sovereignity, reason and conscience have been supreme against the world below and the heavens above.

In conclusion we would say, just as religion does not contain all of truth, just as the Bible does not contain all of truth, just as spirit-communion is not all of truth, so no one authority contains the whole revelation of truth. But you yourself, working in unison with nature, God and the universe of your environments, are sure to grow and enlarge the scope of Modern Spiritualism in this afternoon of the nineteenth century. It will stand out as one of the most glorious, beautiful and spirit-saving powers that ever controlled the world.

So may we rise, so may we live and grow
Out of dark error—reaping as we sow.

December Magazine.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—An exceptionally fine specimen of etching is given in the frontispiece—that of one of Meissonier's most successful works, "The Painter," etched by Gery-Richard, a young artist of great promise. In "The Liverpool Corporation Collection" E. B. Dibdin, after describing its origin, rise and present status, dwells chiefly upon "The Walker Art Gallery," erected at his own cost and presented to the town by A. B. Walker, and opened to the public in 1884. Engravings of five paintings contained therein accompany the article. This is followed by the first of papers upon "The Portraits of Dante Gabriel Rossetti," by W. M. Rossetti, giving those of that artist and poet at the age of six, eighteen and twenty-five years, and two others. Of the remaining contents of this excellent periodical are: "Wells and Its Cathedrals," by Elizabeth R. Pennell—five illustrations, "Insignia of Royalty," by Lewis F. Day, four illustrations, and "Old Arts and Modern Thoughts; The Bow of Iris," by J. E. Hodgson, R. A., four illustrations. A general fund of current events is given in "The Chronicle" and "Monthly Record of American Art." New York: Cassell & Co., 104 and 106 Fourth Avenue.

☞ In the time of the French and English wars the claims of the Indians in regard to American lands were entirely overlooked by both the French and English. It is said that a celebrated Indian Chief remarked: "The French claim all land on one side of the river, and the English all on the other side, and now," he asked, "where are the Indian's lands?" They told him "beyond the hills." He said slyly in reply, "if the Indian's land which lies there is as big as white man's lies, then the red man owns all the country."—Pipe of Peace.

LET IN THE LIGHT.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Delivered by him at the laying of the Corner-Stone of the New Public Library in Copley Square, Boston, Nov. 28th, 1888.

Proudly, beneath her glittering dome,
Our three-hilled city greets the morn;
Here Freedom found her virgin home—
The Bethlehem where her babe was born.

The lordly roofs of traffic rise
Amid the smoke of household fires;
High o'er them in the peaceful skies,
Faith points to heaven her clustering spires.

Can Freedom breathe if ignorance reign?
Shall Commerce thrive where anarchs rule?
Will Faith her half-fledged brood retain
If darkening counsels cloud the school?

Let in the light! From every age
Some gleams of garnered wisdom pour,
And, fixed on thought's electric page,
Wait all their radiance to restore.

Let in the light! In diamond mines
Their gems invite the hand that delves—
So learning's treasured jewels shine
Ranged on the alcoves' ordered shelves.

From history's scroll the splendor streams,
From science leaps the living ray;
Flashed from the poet's glowing dreams
The opal fires of fancy play.

Let in the light! These windowed walls
Shall brook no shadowing colonnades,
But day shall flood the silent halls
Till o'er yon hills the sunset fades.

Behind the ever-open gate
No pikes shall fence a crumbling throne,
No lackeys cringe, no courtiers wait—
This palace is the people's own!

Heirs of our narrow-girdled past,
How fair the prospect we survey
Where howled unheard the wintry blast
And rolled unchecked the storm-swept bay!

These chosen precincts set apart
For learnèd toil and holy shrines,
Yield willing homes to every art
That trains or strengthens or refines.

Here shall the sceptred mistress reign
Who heeds her meanest subject's call,
Sovereign of all their vast domain—
The queen—the handmaid of them all!

THE SPIRITUALISTIC EXPERIENCES OF PROF. J. W. CADWELL, MESMERIST.

NUMBER TWENTY-ONE.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

An "exposé," that to many may be considered of great importance in the history of Spiritualism in Boston, was attempted in Music Hall, this city, on Sunday evening, Nov. 4th, 1888. It had been extensively advertised to be given by "Margaret Fox Kane, Founder of Modern Spiritualism"—a lady who claims to be the widow of Dr. Kane, the Arctic explorer.

In the newspaper advertisements she was announced as "One of the originators of the rappings in Rochester, N. Y." In this "holy mission" she was to be assisted by "Dr. C. M. Richmond, in his Science vs. Spiritualism." And it was proclaimed in heavy type that this was to be the "Death of Spiritualism."

The first intimation that I had of any change, leading to this "exposé," was a letter over her signature, in the New York Herald, to its editor, dated London, Eng., May 14th, 1888; which was evidently the result of deep-seated jealousy, simply because manifestations other than her own were more sought for by people who, like the writer, have become satisfied of late that for good and sufficient reasons her mediumistic powers have nearly or quite forsaken her.

The last sitting I had with her was at Lake Pleasant, Mass., August, 1887; and the raps were so unlike those of former years that I have often since expressed my belief that they were not genuine. In her letter in the New York Herald she says: "Spiritualism is a curse. God has set his seal against it." If so, what a pity that he did not set that great seal before Spiritualism, as stated in a late Boston daily, perverted "the minds of eight millions of people." Continuing her letter, she deals in heated vituperation of those who "ignore the rappings (which is the only part of the phenomena that is worthy of notice,) and rush madly after the glaring humbugs that flood New York. But a harmless message that is given through the rappings is of little account to them; they want the 'spirit' to come to them in full form.... All they will ever achieve for their foolish fanaticism will be loss of money, softening of the brain, and a lingering death."

In her letter there is no denial of her mediumship, or hint that she has played the rôle of a "heartless person" for forty years; but, on the contrary, as positive a statement as would be necessary to convict a criminal, that the rappings are not only claimed by her to be genuine, but "the only part of the phenomena that is worthy of notice."

The Boston Daily Globe of Nov. 4th, 1888, devoted nearly a column to an interview of her, by its reporter, in which she says:

"I never cheated in my life, never, never! I never claimed that the raps or any other phenomena that I produced were caused by spirit-power. On the contrary, I had printed on all my cards the explicit statement that I did not undertake to explain the cause of the raps."

No longer ago than Aug. 1887, my wife and another lady had a sitting with Mrs. Kane, at which I was present, and she positively claimed then that spirits did the rapping; and also independent writing on a sheet of paper that she placed underneath the table. I can prove by scores of reliable witnesses that she both publicly and privately claimed to get spirit-rapping, until since writing that letter to the editor of the New York Herald. There has recently been published, I think simultaneously in the Boston Globe and New York World of Oct. 21st, 1888, what is claimed to be a "Confession of Margaret Fox Kane," prefaced by a statement that, "Within the last few days the Fox Sisters have been induced to make an exposé of the secrets of the alleged spirit-rappings."

In this confession Margaret says:

"My sister Katie was the first one to discover that by swishing her fingers she could produce a certain noise with the knuckles and joints, and that the same effect could be made with the toes."

In another place we are informed that "Katie"—the original discoverer—was then only six and one-half years of age, and Margaret only eight. Speaking of what transpired just previous to that discovery by Katie, "Margaret" says:

"At night when we went to bed we used to tie an apple to a string, and move the string, causing the apple to bump on the floor,... to terrify our dear mother."

She must have been a very "dear" mother, and that a very remarkable "apple," that could be "tied to a string." Occasionally strings are tied to apples, since that bumping apple played hide-and-seek with the Fox girls.

In her "Confession" she says: "My eldest sister, Mrs. Underhill, has gone to the country, and this exposé will be a severe blow to her, and perhaps kill her"! It may not be generally known that Mrs. Underhill—one of the Fox Sisters—some time since published a book detailing the incidents occurring at the home of the Fox family, wherein she described many marvelous events, in which the younger children, Margaret and Katie, took no part whatever. The title of the book is: "The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism"; it is on sale at the Banner of Light Bookstore, and is one of the most interesting books extant. No one can read it and afterward have any faith in the statements of "Margaret" or in her "exposé." She tells us in another part of her "Confession" how badly she frightened her "dear mother," who, with all her efforts, "was unable to understand it"; and that "at last she called the neighbors in and told them about it." They must have been very smart children indeed, or have had a mother who lacked the ordinary measure of perception.

In her "Confession" Mrs. Kane says:

"The rappings are simply the result of a perfect control of the muscles of the knee, which govern the tendons of the foot and allow action of the toe and ankle bones that are not commonly known. Such perfect control is only possible when a child is taken at an early age and carefully and continually taught to practice the muscles, which grow stiff in later years."

If that is correct, who taught those little children "carefully and continually to practice the muscles of the knee"? And what kind of "muscles" are in the "knee"? Further on in her "Confession," she says:

"When Dr. Kane came into the room at Philadelphia, I told him that I hated this thing; that I had been pushed into it. I explained to him that it was a trick; that I had been forced into it and did n't want to go on with it."

At which time does she tell the truth? When she says that she was the "originator," and commenced it for fun to frighten her mother, or when she said that she was "forced into it?"

She evidently believes in Spiritualism, for in her "Confession" she says: "I know my dead husband is looking on me now, and blessing me for my work." She says that "He wanted me to forget... spirit-rappings." And adds: "When I was poor, after his death, I was driven to it again." "Driven to it"? Honest women can live without stooping to deception, and continuing it for years.

Further on in her "Confession" she says she is a Catholic, baptized in the Roman Catholic church, and that her confessor had said to her that as long as she was "in this business, and did not believe in it," and to support herself, she should charge very high prices, so that it would at least limit the number of her patrons: "that I should not give any free exhibitions, and never claim supernatural powers."

If she did not so claim, the advice she avers to have been thus presented would never have been given! Her statement represents her priest as a joint partner in her guilt——which few, if any, will believe.

I have digressed somewhat from my subject (the Music Hall fiasco) that the reader may the more fully comprehend how much reliability there may be in anything that she can say against Spiritualism.

I made a special trip to Boston expressly to attend her "exposé"; for if I had been deceived all these years, I wished to know the honest truth for myself. I attended the Spiritualists' meeting in Berkeley Hall in the forenoon, where I listened to an earnest and eloquent lecture by Mrs. Lillie on the "exposé." Every seat in the spacious hall was filled long before the time for the services to commence; and the hearty responses to many of her pointed and truthful utterances indicated that Spiritualism is not dead in Boston. At the close of the services some one expressed a hope that the Spiritualists would not attend the exposé that evening, to thereby aid the exposers, as probably money was their only object. Believing that representative Spiritualists ought to be there, to take part as committee, and insist on a fair and honest "exposé," if that be possible, I called on L. L. Whitlock, editor of The Soul, and, although he had decided not to attend, he accompanied me to Music Hall. On our way we called at the office of the Chief-of-Police to make inquiry as to the proper course to pursue for the arrest of "Margaret Fox Kane" for obtaining money under false pretences, either at one of her séances at Lake Pleasant, which my wife and another lady wished me to attend with them, and where, as before stated, she positively claimed that the rapping and other manifestations were accomplished by spirit power—or for obtaining money under false pretences now, while claiming that she never pretended that it was spirit power. I hoped to have her arrested before she left Boston, but learned that I must commence action in the County in which Lake Pleasant is situated; and we left the police headquarters for Music Hall, where was assembled an audience of ten to fifteen hundred people.

The Boston Herald of the following day contained nearly a column, descriptive of the exposé, headed "Inventress of Spiritism." And of the exposé says: "Dr. Richmond helps her to prove this with doubtful success." Also:

"The sympathies of the spectators were very strongly with the doctor, and throughout the evening any attempt to interfere with him was most decidedly resented.... He endeavored to give an exposé of spirit-painting and slate-writing, and in this he was scarcely successful.... He invited a committee of investigation to come upon the platform. Among those who accepted the invitation were L. L. Whitlock, editor of Facts, Prof. Cadwell, and Mr. McEvoy. The doctor said that he had detected twenty-five different kinds of slate tricks in twenty years. He had a check of $5000, offered by a gentleman of Philadelphia to any one who could make a mark an inch long on the slate. The doctor then attempted to reproduce on a slate a name that had been selected out of twelve written on as many pieces of paper, but the lynx eyed Whitlock detected him in the act of purloining one of the pieces, and caused the collapse of the doctor as far as that trick was concerned.... Mr. Whitlock advanced to the footlights... and said: 'I pronounce the statements of Dr. Richmond not correct' (applause).... Amid a storm of hisses Whitlock tried to keep on. He said, 'This trick is as old as the hills; we all understand it.' A voice broke in: 'Let that hat be examined.' But the doctor would n't have it, for it was a silk hat that had a flap in it."

Dr. Richmond had requested that the pieces of paper (with name written on) be folded but once, for the slate-writing exposé; but Mr. Whitlock folded his several times, as is customary at all genuine slate-writing séances. When Dr. Richmond returned from the ante-room, hat in hand, to perform the trick, he purposely knocked off that folded paper; and Mr. Whitlock asked why he rejected it. Dr. Richmond replied by saying: "What is the use of taking that, as I can see what is written on it already?" It was this that caused Mr. Whitlock to advance to the "footlights" and "pronounce the statement of Dr. Richmond not correct." He boldly challenged the doctor to tell the name, or stand before that audience a self-confessed falsifier. It was this that caused the "applause" from every honest investigator; and the "storm of hisses" that followed came from the other party. The Herald goes on to say:

"Prof. Cadwell stepped forward by permission of the doctor, but was prevented by the hisses from saying a word. The doctor begged for silence, and the Professor said:... 'each wrote on a piece of paper and rolled it into a pellet. The pellets were mixed so that they could not be distinguished from each other.... Mr. Cook said that he could distinctly hear the pencil scratching on the slate.' 'That will do,' said the doctor. 'We know what that means. One pellet was stolen,' and the professor was compelled to retire before the storm of hisses."

After obtaining permission to make a statement, I was at first "prevented by the hisses," and until "the Doctor begged for silence." I then related briefly the statements made by the Rev. Joseph Cook (which were listened to attentively) of the slate-writing which he obtained from his deceased grandfather, Warner Cook, in the parlor of Epes Sargent, as related by himself at one of his Monday noon lectures a few years since in Boston—Charles Watkins being the medium—and who, according to Mr. Cook's statements (which appeared in the BANNER OF LIGHT, 1881), did not touch any of the pellets. I had proceeded to where Mr. Cook stated that he heard the crumb of pencil writing between the slates, when Dr. Richmond stopped me (as reported in The Herald) by saying: "That will do. We know what that means. One pellet was stolen." Thus deliberately accusing Mr. Watkins of deception.

With a false surface slate he (Dr. R.) then very bunglingly performed Prof. Hermann's trick, almost precisely as described in my "Experiences" in the BANNER OF LIGHT July 28th, 1888, of which the Boston Herald says: "He then went on to show tricks in slate transference practiced in New York." That audience did not come to see "slate transference," but an exposé of Spiritualism, of which Dr. Richmond evidently knows nothing. To that last quotation The Herald adds: "And showed how the Diss Debar canvas paintings were accomplished." I have seen many of her paintings; know something of her mediumship; and of the three—Richmond, Kane, Diss Debar—believe the latter the most truthful and honest of the lot.

His effort to expose the Diss DeBar paintings was a perfect failure: The worst I ever saw. I am personally acquainted with many who have had paintings executed in her presence; and in every instance the pictures have been seen forming by ten to thirty spectators. Dr. C. M. Richmond, who "left a practice of over twelve thousand dollars a year in New York," to help expose "frauds," stated that Mrs. Diss DeBar never allowed but one person in the room with her while pretending to get a spirit-picture. He said that she always had the painting executed in advance; that she had it laying bottom upward on the table, and covered with a large cloth; that when her customer entered the room she would lay a card-board or piece of prepared canvas on that cloth, and then have her visitor sit with the back to the table; that she would then simply turn the things over, bringing the painting uppermost, and claim that it had just been painted by the spirits. He then went through the ceremony of a "presto-change" act, to the great delight of that audience, which cheered long and loud; not realizing that possibly they had just been deceived a hundred times as badly as those he claimed to have fallen victims to the arts of the medium.

When he closed his misrepresentations of Mrs. Diss De Bar—whose moral status I have for many years considered at least equal to Mrs. Kane's, and who unquestionably has genuine medium powers—he called for physicians and members of the press to come and hold the feet of Mrs. K. while she produced the rapping with her toes and ankles. As no one responded for some time I stepped forward, and so loud that all heard me, earnestly requested that a number come at once, as I was very anxious to thoroughly establish the fact that the exposer, Margaret Fox Kane, was a self-convicted deceiver, whose testimony no intelligent person would accept, either for or against Spiritualism. By commencing my request apparently in the interest of the performance I was able to say all I cared to as a farewell shot at the "exposer." When I closed my remarks several gentlemen came forward and held her feet while a few raps were made, but unlike and not near as loud as when she was in a small cabinet near the footlights. I think that she has a mechanical device secreted beneath her clothing with which to produce the loud raps. Mr. Richmond stated that Mrs. Kane always had on her cards an explicit statement that she did not undertake to explain anything, and never claimed to be aided by spirits. She reiterated his remarks, and a lady got up at once and held a card aloft, saying that she had one which Mrs. Kane gave her recently, on which she did claim to be aided by spirits. There was not so much as an effort to deny the lady's statement, and the promised "expose" came to an end.

Thomas Beals, of Portland, Me., who was present, said to me later, at the hotel, that he purposely lingered near the door as the crowd went out, and that the universal expression of the people was that the "exposé" was the most flimsy affair ever seen in Boston.

I witnessed manifestations in the presence of this woman (who claims to be the widow of Dr. Kane) years ago that I yet believe were genuine. In her confession, to which I have referred before, she says: "I have been poor and ill"; and further on says: "I now am very poor." Poverty, jealousy, loss of mediumship, or hope of great financial success, rather than a "holy mission," as she calls her present work, probably "induced" her to engage in it. If what she now claims is true, she can only expose her own turpitude; for the rappings have long been considered of no more importance than many other phases of manifestations. The Daily Globe (Nov. 5th) closed a half-column description of the "exposé" by saying: "But Spiritualism still lives."

I resided in Rochester, N. Y., nearly two years—1853-4—and became personally acquainted with Mr. Post and others, who for two or three evenings tested the Fox girls at public exhibitions in the largest hall in the city (Corinthian Hall), where their bare feet and ankles were watched with the utmost scrutiny by a dozen pairs of eyes, as raps came on the floor, table, chairs, etc., independent of a muscular movement of their feet.

I was converted from Methodism to Spiritualism, by spirit-rappings, in the city of Rochester, in 1854. I called on business at the house of a gentleman in the westerly part of the city one afternoon, and found the lady of the house in tears. She very reluctantly informed me that she was a rapping-medium, and that a half hour previous to my calling she had learned by the raps that her father, who resided with her sister, seventy miles away, had died, and that a letter had just come to the post office containing particulars, and that she had sent her daughter for it. As she finished her—to me—seemingly foolish, absurd and ridiculous statement, a loud rap on a table in the corner of the room sent a chill over me, such as I had never experienced before. There was no one near the table, and the lady asked: "Has Mary got the letter?" Judge of my surprise, as three loud raps responded "Y-e-s." She said that three raps were "yes," two "no." I talked with that unseen intelligence nearly half an hour. I learned the date of his birth, and his age, which was rapped out as seventy-four years, eleven months and twenty-nine days; and also the time of his decease: thirty minutes past seven P. M. of the previous day, with other points, of which I made a memorandum, and still retain as a memento of my conversion. While yet talking with some invisible intelligence the door opened, and the daughter, a young lady of about eighteen years of age, came in with an open letter in her hand, and before she saw me, exclaimed: "Mother, it 's too true; grandfather died last night, at half-past seven." I heard her read that letter to her mother, in which the sister informed them that: "He will be buried day after to-morrow, the day he would have been seventy-five years of age had he lived till then." I have seen more than a hundred rapping mediums since that time, and obtained as good tests, scores of times, as any the Fox girls were ever able to give.

"Spiritualism still lives," and will undoubtedly carry on its beneficent work for humanity long after Margaret Fox Kane, and the sensational press of the country—that in her name is now seeking to proclaim a new crusade against it—are alike forgotten.

W. J. Colville in California.

Sunday, Nov. 18th, Mr. Colville began a four weeks' engagement in San Diego, Cal. Lectures were delivered at 2:15 and 7:15 P. M. in D. Street Theatre, which was comfortably filled in the afternoon and almost crowded in the evening.

The afternoon lecture dealt principally with recent alleged exposures of Spiritualism. The Maggie Fox fiasco was shown up in its true light, and much valuable advice given to avoid the perpetration of many past blunders in future. The poem following the lecture called forth much appreciation.

In the evening, "A Spiritual View of Great Political Questions" proved a fruitful theme of discourse, giving opportunity for a forcible presentation of spiritual ideas in their bearing upon the leading topics of this time. The greatest good of a majority, never the private interests of a few, is the goal aimed at by spiritual teachers, therefore protection, free trade and all kindred issues cannot be considered spiritually, except in relation to the well-being of humanity at large; but so intimately interwoven are the interests of each with all, that anything like a searching analysis of the subject proves that what is permanently beneficial for one class or race, can never be really detrimental to another. A reduction of tariff and various other reforms were pointedly referred to as inevitable in the near future, and the speaker was emphatic in saying that not the party but the principle in power must ever be the determinator in all issues.

On Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each week, at 7:30 P. M., in the South-West Institute, Third street, Mr. Colville is lecturing on a variety of spiritualistic subjects, under the general caption of "Theosophy"; and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, at 2:15 P. M., he is teaching a class in Spiritual Science. Attendance is large on all occasions and great interest prevails. Hall rent is reasonable in San Diego, and the managers of the meetings have wisely decided to sell admission tickets to any twelve lectures for $1.00, and 10 cents for a single admission, thereby placing the instruction within the reach of the masses, and entirely avoiding the appearance of monetary speculation.

Mr. Colville is very comfortably located at 1144 Grape street, where all communications should be addressed. He will spend Christmas in Los Angeles, and then proceed directly to San Francisco, where his work begins Saturday, Jan. 5th, in College Hall, 106 MacAllister street. He enjoyed his trip East exceedingly well, and also the journey West, and gives it as his opinion that there is little really to choose between one part of the country and another. He reports very favorably concerning the status of Spiritualism in every place he has visited.

GALVESTON.—Mrs. Sue J. Finck sends us a cutting from the Galveston Daily News, of Nov. 21st, containing an article by a correspondent, in which, after stating that he is not a Spiritualist, he says: "Having attended a private séance where table-tipping, rapping and independent slate-writing were the order of the evening, I naturally felt interested in the proceedings, and as I would not accept the theory of the Spiritualists, I was advised to try my own fireside, which I did immediately after returning home. We had not remained sitting at the table ten minutes when it began to rap and tip. After my surprise began to subside I began to investigate to find the cause, without any material success. For a test, I would think of a name, then call off the alphabet. When I came to the letter corresponding with the name it would rap, then I would commence with A again, etc., and there was never a mistake occurred. I would be very careful of involuntary motions on my part. The strangest part was that my presence at the table was necessary to produce the raps. The others could make it tip, but not rap. I discovered that by actual test, and I did not have to crack my toe-joints or any other joint to produce them. I invited investigation, but never could get any one but a Spiritualist to express an opinion. The latter's theory I would not accept; therefore I am still in the dark. The more I experimented the more I was drawn into the vortex of mystery, and at last gave it up in despair. I hope some one will give me another plausible theory for raps."

Commenting on the article in The News, of which the above are its essential points, Mrs. Finck writes: "It certainly is cheering to know that prejudice has not blinded the eyes and clouded the reasoning faculties of all who do not accept the manifestations as coming from immortals who once walked the earth. All Spiritualists with whom I have exchanged views express no fear of any injury accruing to our grand philosophy by the late pretended 'exposure,' but they lament that it should come through those who originally suffered much persecution and ostracism on its account. Who that possesses any knowledge of sensitives called mediums, and how they more than all others are affected by their surroundings, will fail to weep over these two who are being used by designing men? I trust the palpable failure of this will close the hitherto profitable business of exposing Spiritualism. The true and false are found in every phase of human life. We find both in the spirit-manifestations of ancient times: Aaron's rod was said to have turned to a serpent; so did that of the magician. Moses could command the plagues of Egypt; so could the magicians, yet had not the power to remove them. Aaron's serpent had the power to swallow up that of the magicians. When all live so purely that they will cease to attract fraud they will not be attracted to that atmosphere wherein it exists, and spiritual frauds, like all others, will die out for want of patronage.

The writer of the above article should receive the warm thanks of every lover of truth for his candor expressed in this public manner."

Massachusetts.

NEWBURYPORT.—F. H. Fuller writes, Nov. 26th: "The Spiritualists' Independent Club gave a social entertainment, including supper, on the evening of Nov. 20th. It was enlivened by our genial Bro. Ramney, of Newton, who told some of his experiences with different mediums. At eight P. M. we held our usual circle, and received messages from our departed loved ones who came, convincing us that they are as much alive as when on earth, and take as much interest in us as ever.

It is about settled that Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther will lecture here in Fraternity Hall, Tuesday, Dec. 4th, and Thursday, Dec. 6th. If not on those dates it will be between the 4th and 7th.

Mr. C. W. Hidden has resumed his position on the Daily Herald, having recovered from his late illness.

Mr. William Woundy, a member of the First Society of Spiritualists, is being developed as a test medium and healer by laying on of hands. He, to my own knowledge, is gifted with great healing powers."

BOSTON.—"Heath" reports that F. C. Algerton, of Chicago, occupied the platform of the Phenomenal Association Nov. 25th. Of the questions submitted to and answered by his guides were the following:

Ques.—Do all spirits know the fact of communication between the two worlds? If not, what per cent. know of it?

Ans.—Ninety per cent. know of it. Many understand spirit-return but do not return themselves. Some are so glad to be freed from lives of suffering and misery here on earth that it has no attraction for them, and they do not have any desire to return. Others know of it but work against it; do not endorse it on account of creeds, etc., which held them in this life, and still do. All are working according to their own desires and development.

Ques.—What was the origin of the Christian Scriptures?

Ans.—Man always had a desire to know regarding the future life. Death was looked upon with dread and gloom, and something that would light up the pathway and reveal the future was a necessity. Much of the Bible originated among so-called "heathen nations," more especially the book of Job. You will notice that remarkable phenomena occur from Genesis to Revelation; angels speaking to men, prophets and seers under spirit control revealing the future, and answering the demands of man's nature.

At the evening meeting, Mr. Algerton's control said, in the course of his remarks: "This country has long been preparing for the development of spiritual truth, and the time is coming when its form of government will be universal. People will learn war no more, and all things shall be made new. Spiritualism is the grand motor power toward the accomplishment of these results."

Maine.

AUGUSTA.—A correspondent writes, Nov. 27th: "Mrs. Emma Miner, of Clinton, Mass., (author of 'Bars and Thresholds,') has been with us for a short time; lecturing once in Union Hall, and twice in the parlors of Mrs. Lathrop, the last meeting being held at Dr. Merrill's. The stormy weather and bad traveling prevented her holding meetings in Hallowell and Sidney, as anticipated. Mrs. Miner is a refined and most excellent lady, and has made many warm friends in Augusta, who hope to see her here again under more favorable conditions."

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—"S." writes: "Despite the inclemency of the weather, there was a large attendance at all the services of the First Spiritualist Society on Sunday, Nov. 25th. Lyman C. Howe was the speaker; in the morning, on subjects selected by the audience, and in the evening on 'The Genius of Modern Spiritualism.' The subjects were treated with Mr. Howe's usual ability, and, as the audience indicated by their applause, to the entire satisfaction of his hearers. This ends Mr. Howe's present engagement here. He has won many laurels, and made friends that will always be glad to greet him on his return to them upon any plane of the great avenue of life in which they may chance to meet. On the evening of Nov. 24th a reception was given him at the residence of Henry J. Newton. It was a very enjoyable affair, and attended by a large number of representative Spiritualists of New York City.

The Meeting for Manifestations on the afternoon of Nov. 25th had the largest attendance of the season. It was opened with a piano solo by Miss Ella F. Porter, a song by Miss Maud F. Pleasants, and whistling solos by Miss Mamie Horton. Mrs. H. J. Newton read poems by John G. Whittier and John W. Storrs. Few can read a poem with better effect than Mrs. Newton. M. M. ('Brick') Pomeroy discoursed on the 'Divinity of Spiritualism' in a manner new and instructive to the audience. He revealed Spiritualism in a new light, as so closely connected with and a part of divinity that there was no line of demarcation over the change men term death. Mr. J. W. Perkins, of Michigan, related how he became converted to Spiritualism through materialization. Mrs. E. A. Wells gave tests that were fully recognized, and applauded for their correctness.

An engagement has been made by the Society with Miss Lily Runals, 'the Queen of Song,' to sing for the winter. This will make the musical talent compare favorably with the finest church music in the city. The affairs of the Society are in a prosperous condition, and the attendance is constantly increasing."

PECONIC.—S. D. Corwin writes: "The Spiritualists of this place were fortunate in making an engagement last winter with Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham to deliver two week evening lectures here. She was not enabled to do so until the month of May. All friends of the cause were greatly pleased with the grand teachings she voiced in sweetest eloquence. We were much encouraged with the favorable result, and deemed it wise to engage this willing and efficient instrument in the best cause that man ever knew to again come to us. Her second coming was in June, during its wealth of bloom; though so sweet the sensuous flowers, the spiritual flowers of truth utterances, given through a mind inspired, far surpassed their great beauty. Two other engagements have followed, the first, Nov. 19th and 20th, with further good results. The other is for Dec. 17th and 18th, to which many are enthusiastically looking forward. We know of many noble, efficient workers in our cause, but believe none amongst them are filled in a greater degree than Mrs. Brigham with a desire for the advancement of Spiritualism, or one who would make more effort or personal sacrifice to that end."

Michigan.

GAYLORD.—Mrs. O. H. Carpenter writes: "Mrs. Baade, of Capac, an inspirational speaker, delivered two lectures on Sunday, Nov. 18th. Her subject in the morning was 'Spiritualism vs. Christianity'; in the evening, 'Immortality; and, Is Spiritualism Taught in the Old and New Testaments?' Questions submitted in the evening were answered satisfactorily, and the subjects handled with credit to Mrs. Baade and her guides. Monday evening she gave a temperance lecture, it being one of the grandest we ever listened to. Mrs. Baade is the finest inspirational speaker in Michigan. The entertainment was enlivened by beautiful musical selections by the inspirational singer, Mrs. E. E. Carpenter."

Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD.—Mrs. Beach writes: "Our people have been favored with the presence of the test medium, Mr. C. J. Barnes. His labors here have been productive of much good to the cause, and increased the number of those who have come to a knowledge of its comforting truths. Such mediums should find constant employment, and I trust Mr. Barnes may."

THE MYSTERY OF THE AGES. Contained in the Secret Doctrine of all Religions. By Marie, Countess of Caithness, Duchesse de Pomar, author of "Old Truths in a New Light," etc. 8vo, cloth, pp. 541. London: C. L. H. Wallace, Oxford Mansion, W.

The author of this is well-known to those familiar with the literature Modern Spiritualism has called forth. The present volume relates more especially to Theosophy, a term compounded of two Greek words—Theo, God, and Sophia, Wisdom, meaning the Science of Divine Wisdom. At the outset the author says that "to ask what is truth is but to ask what is God; for God is the essence of truth, and truth is the essence of God;" they, therefore, being one and the same thing, the oft-repeated inquiry, Who and what is God? is identical with What is Truth? and this Theosophy professes to answer.

The idea that seems to predominate in all books of this class is that truth is a secret held by some power—an intelligent one, of course—that is loth to reveal it, the word "secret" in its fullest sense implying a studious concealment of some thought or act; when the fact is there is no secret doctrine or truth; all truth is open and free to whoever has sight to see, or capacity to comprehend it.

The Countess defines Theosophy as being a "knowledge of the deific, the supreme and eternal principle." She claims that it has been the Saviour of all ages, and asks why it may not be of the present; and further, that it is not only Saviour, but salvation. She then proceeds to elucidate its theory and practice, and to treat upon Hermetic, Oriental, Buddhistic, Pagan, Semetic and Christian Theosophy, in the latter including "The Theosophy of Christ," following with a "Theosophic Interpretation of the Bible," in which the more she studies the more she sees that "the symbolism of the East was a perfect language, written and understood by those who had learnt or were inspired to trace the unvarying similitudes to the realities of the interior or spiritual realm, which is the world of causation."

Theosophy as diverse from Spiritualism is shown in this paragraph. After stating that "The Soul-force is the Supreme force in Nature; the Cause of all Causes," and that "the manifest Soul stands in direct communion with the Cause of Causes," it is said:

"This possibility of the One becoming the All, and the All becoming the One, is not pleasing to earth-bound spirits, who would assume themselves to be 'our Guides,' while they again have 'Guides,' and their Guides are guided by other Guides, and so on. Theosophy and Spiritualism, therefore, are not yet reconciled on this subject, for Theosophy acknowledges only one Supreme Guide—the Divine Soul."

The ignoring of all intermediaries between mortals and "the Cause of all Causes," is a view of the orderly course of nature that is not likely to be adopted by Spiritualists at an early day, if at all. It is not in harmony with what they know of the operations of the laws of Nature, and they cannot conceive of its being any more so with those they do not know. A spirit coming to earth to teach its people concerning worlds beyond, doing so from its own knowledge gained by its own experience, and likewise from the knowledge and experience transmitted to it by those further advanced on the road of eternal progression, is far from being what Spiritualists term an "earth-bound spirit"; and the reason why the "possibility of the One becoming the All, and the All becoming the One" is not pleasing to those spirits who come to guide and teach us, is, that it is as unreasonable as to suppose the finite can become the infinite and the infinite become the finite.

The book contains a photograph portrait of the author, and though in her preface she says she considers herself "the least learned in Theosophy," and "humbly and diffidently takes up so ponderous a subject," she will receive the thanks of many for the clear elucidation she has given of what is at present attracting the study of a large number of thoughtful minds.

WHEN AGE GROWS YOUNG. A Romance. By Hyland C. Kirk. 12mo, paper, pp. 281. New York: Chas. T. Dillingham.

There is a fascination about the theory upon which this story is based that will attract to it all who have a penchant for speculative views of human life—this being that of the immortality of man in his earthly form. Whatever of truth there may be in it, the fact—if it is a fact—is so far in the future the extent seems almost illimitable; and it is a question whether, as society is now organized, any person desires such a state, or will shed tears of regret that it is so far in the distance. An immortal life has no beginning nor ending; man is an immortal now, and it is idle to assume that he is to be during his immortality confined to this or any other world. The story has for its hero one who is supposed to give palpable evidence in himself of the truth of the author's proposition.

THE LOVER; and Selected Papers from "The Englishman," "Town Talk," "The Reader" and "The Spinster." By Richard Steele.

A work too well known to require any introduction. Steele was a co-worker with Addison in the production of the famous "Tatler" and "The Spectator," and gave to the reading public of the last century the writings more exclusively his own, named above, of which "The Lover" is thought to be the best. The present edition is included in the publisher's series, "Good Company."

Passed to Spirit-Life,

On Saturday, Nov. 24th, N. B. Outhank, a portrait painter, of Boston.

His decease, which was sudden, was caused by apoplexy, and occurred while calling on a friend at his store on Washington street. He had followed his profession for some fifty years, and was widely known as a successful artist.

Mr. Outhank was born in Holliston, Mass., sixty five years ago. He leaves a widow, two sons and two daughters.

In the early days of Spiritualism he embraced it as his faith and knowledge, and enjoyed it, having implicit faith in its teachings, also in the fact of spirit-form materialization—he having had mediums for that phase of spirit manifestations in his home for considerable spaces of time.

Mr. Outhank had the respect of all individuals with whom he had dealings for his integrity of character and honesty of purpose.

His family recognize the verity and value of the Spiritual Philosophy; though they sadly miss the genial bodily presence of husband and father, they look forward to a future when they will all be united in one unbroken family, where separation does not exist. ***

From Leominster, Mass., Nov. 19th, Mrs. Elmira, wife of Isaac Bruce.

Mrs. Bruce was cheered and sustained for many years, under the weight of suffering and sorrow, by a firm belief in Spiritualism, and when she became aware of the fact that she was soon to be released, she joyously and triumphantly met the great deliverer. She was a devoted wife, mother, sister and friend, and filled with the spirit of kindliness and charity. The funeral service was held at her home Friday, Nov. 23d, and was largely attended. Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes was present as a friend of the family, and assisted the writer in the service, beautifully voicing the inspirations of her guides. The last time the departed left her home was to be present at the funeral of Mrs. Fannie Wilder. The same singers on that occasion rendered some fine selections. Surrounded by beautiful flowers, loving tributes of children and friends, lay the earth-form, with a heavenly smile upon the face, as though the passing spirit caught the sight of angel loved ones. Already has her husband been blessed with a vision of her. So also may she bless the sister who watched her onward progress. JULIETTE YEAW.

From Bristol, Conn., Oct. 28th, 1888, of typhoid fever, Mr. Albert Warner, aged 62 years.

Mr. Warner was a manufacturer of clock trimmings, having a factory. His trade was among wholesale dealers throughout the country and Canada, and he also sold for exportation. He was a thorough business man, and his note was considered as good as his word. He was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him as a man of honest integrity and honorable dealings with all men. He leaves a wife and married daughter, beside other relatives. A daughter passed on in infancy some thirty years since.

Mr. Warner united with the Congregational Church years ago, but it was his wish that Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham should conduct his funeral services, as he had for years been a firm believer in Spiritualism. Mrs. Brigham officiated as desired at his residence on South street. The burial was in West Cemetery. Mrs. Warner will miss her husband, but Spiritualism will be a comfort to her, as she knows of its truth. ***

LIFE AND LABOR

IN THE SPIRIT-WORLD:

Being a Description of Localities, Employments, Surroundings, and Conditions in the Spheres.

BY MEMBERS OF THE SPIRIT-BAND OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER,

Medium of the Banner of Light Public Free Circle.

When one becomes fully convinced that friends who have passed from existence on earth still live, the questions naturally arise, How do they live, and what are their occupations? The purpose of this book is to answer these inquiries, and, so far as the language of a material life is capable of describing a spiritual one, it does so. These descriptions are not mere theories and surmises of what may exist beyond this state of being, the acceptance of which depends mainly upon the faith of the individual to whom they may be presented, but statements of facts made by those who live that life, and are familiar with the scenes and experiences of which they write.

In one volume of 426 pages, neatly and substantially bound in cloth. Price $1.00, postage 10 cents; full gilt, $1.50, postage free.

An Edition of Life and Labor in the Spirit-World has been issued by COLBY & RICH which is embellished with eight illustrations representing scenes in spirit-life. The titles of the illustrations, which are very suggestive of the scenes portrayed, are as follows:

At Home in the Summer-Land.
Little George and his Spirit-Mother.
Lucy Aiken and her Kind Ministrations.
Beulah, a Spirit Missionary.
Unhappy Spirits. What we Sow we shall Reap.
Fannie Davis Under Spirit Control.
Little Bertie. "For Mamma."
An Excursion to Sunny Island.

The price of the Illustrated Volume, which in all other respects is the same as the edition above advertised, is $1.50, postage 10 cents.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle-Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organism of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages, the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away.

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and as its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day, or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presention of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world, and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

"THE GENESIS OF THOUGHT."

Spiritualism the Only Reformer.

It was said with profound truth by Mrs. Richmond, in one of her inspired discourses of the current year, that the basis of all trials and tribulations is within the individual. The source of selfishness and tyranny must be in the individual, or it could not express itself in the collective form of institutions and laws. Hence the only way to remove the evils that exist in the world is to overcome the evils or ills of life from within, instead of from without.

There is an external attempt to alleviate poverty, hunger and material suffering by the subterfuge of outward gifts called charity, whereas there ought really to be no poverty for charity to bestow its gifts upon. The civilization that can afford to expend untold millions in institutions of charity, ought to afford the expenditure involved in applying those millions to the root of the tree of which poverty is the fruit. Where there is the largest number of charitable institutions there is also the deepest degradation of poverty. The wealthiest nations have the poorest people. These contradictory conditions seem to go hand in hand.

But if those who have accumulated all this wealth from the labor, bone, sinew, life-blood, moral weakness and spiritual stagnation of generations, would see to it that this wealth—before it becomes accumulated tyranny, before it becomes oppressive, before society at its foundation gradually weaves human lives themselves into its thralldom—is so applied as to gradually unravel this tangled thread, leading humanity to a higher level, and, while making them participants in their own production, gradually unfolding to them the knowledge of mental and spiritual things, and aiding them in gradual growth to the stature of men and women in the increased light of that prosperity which should be for all the people, then the right would be attained. From labor comes the fruition of labor; a strong iron wall separates man from his fellowman fortified by the line of prosperity.

Charity itself differs from endowed institutions as pure spring-water differs from the stagnant pool or the polluted stream. Charity differs from that which pays the privilege of elegant ease and thoughtless pleasure as distinctly as the spirit of Christ differs from that ceremony which is but the verbal pronunciation of his name. The spirit of true charity prevents, goes before, prepares the way for the tender feet, anticipates the want, provides in advance for the hungry, and wisely sees to it that, while people are not made weak by this provision for them, they are made happy and full of intelligence to bear it, receive it, and enjoy it. We must not only feed and clothe the poor, but we must gradually provide that there shall be no poor, and that this poverty shall not be the one canker that gnaws at the roots of civilization. Therefore that must be destroyed which produces poverty, inordinate selfishness, the concentration of enormous wealth in few hands, and setting up wealth as the standard of power in all civilized nations.

Christendom has been trying to bring about the kingdom of heaven by violence. The Christian religion has been popularized as Christian mammon. The Sermon on the Mount, the Golden Rule, the Lord's Prayer, the ministration of spiritual gifts, have all been overlooked and forgotten as the only light and guide to the world. The Church has taught that these are the standards, and then turned in the other direction and bade men to follow. It is well, and it is profitable, to have societies formed of earnest men and women who do active work in some direction against the existing evils; but spiritual truth solves the problem in another way. And Spiritualism in its present form is the spiritual truth that is in the world. People, however, seek it by every other avenue than its own name.

Spiritualism meets the existing needs by showing men their mutual duties and obligations under the quickened impulses of human life, and that the ties of humanity bind to those intricate relationships that belong to the soul instead of the body, and by making man stronger to bear the ills that seem inevitably to come. In both these ways it meets the needs of the world. All these pressing questions that are harrowing the minds of philanthropists are met by the knowledge that the circumstances and conditions of mortal life do not constitute the real status of the spirit, many who are freely condemned as criminal on earth having less of the spirit of darkness than many who are praised as virtuous and exalted. And while there is condemnation for none, in the light of the angels, those who are condemned of men are dealt with even more tenderly, since they have not only their own infirmities to bear, but the assaults, censures, condemnation and frequently the persecution of their fellowmen.

Beginning at the foundation, Spiritualism would root out of our lives the thought that this world is everything—would take away the present incentive to toil and put a better one in its place. There is really but one incentive that should come to the moral and spiritual enlightenment of this age, to stimulate it to toil and build up anything: that is the preservation of humanity—the preservation of others. People assert that self-preservation is the first law of life, but it is not true; the first law of human life is the unfoldment and preservation of man's moral and spiritual nature. Life is a barren, desolate and destitute thing without it. Of what value can human existence be if it is only to eat one's bread and take one's meat as a dog, and keep off all who come near to share it? The spiritual truth of the world meets the sorrows and the crime, the bitterness and the warfare of nations, and all contentions and complications of commerce, at the very root of the evils; meets them right where they spring up in the selfishness of human life; and declares that our treasures in spirit are so much more important than the material treasures that we really cannot afford to sacrifice, day after day and year after year, the labor, toil and happiness of any human being for our own prosperity, no matter what we may purpose to do with the wealth thus created.

The world is in need chiefly of spiritual light. It needs that faith, and strength, and hope, and love to feed upon until it shall grow large in the wisdom of the angels, until the eyes are cured of their blindness, the ears of their deafness, the understanding is quickened, the lame and feeble in purpose are strengthened. Happy are they who in paths of humility, with few wants, with no worldly aspirations, with no sordid ambitions, with no heart-burnings for the great, unsatisfactory, uncertain world, turn steadily unto paths of peace; who do their duty openly yet quietly every day, and, knowing that the ministering powers are above and within, build their houses for eternity instead of time, and look out of the windows placed heavenward.

Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten on "The Fox Confession."

Under the significant caption, "This is the Time to Try Men's Souls," Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten in The Two Worlds refers to "The Fox Confession" made in public as a "disgraceful and humiliating scene, gotten up expressly with the idea that it would crush and annihilate Spiritualism." She reviews all the past of the Fox Sisters in their connection with the phenomena, remarking that "for twenty years no names were so dear to those who had found in Spiritualism the true light of immortality as those of the two children whose artless prattle with the invisible knocker at Hydesville gave the clue to the telegraphic communication which now exists between spirits and mortals." This period passed, Mrs. Britten alludes truthfully but tenderly to the shameful career that followed, mentioning that Mrs. Col. Kase, of Philadelphia, and other ladies, who have sheltered and taken Kate and Maggie into their houses in states of helplessness, testify that at such times loud rappings have surrounded their unconscious forms, which when questioning was made proved to proceed from their father and mother, who gave by those means pathetic messages imploring pity and protection for their wandering, sadly misguided children.

Of the present state of these who were once happy, truthful children, and those who, for the sake of adding to their earthly wealth, have led them to their last act of self-abasement, Mrs. Britten says:

"How soon the unhappy dupes, and the conspirators who have goaded them on, will wake up to the consciousness that Spiritualism, and its immense array of witnesses, have long since drifted away from them; and all through its vast and serried ranks retained only the phantom presentment of two little children long since dead, and holding no relationship to the degraded wrecks that bear their names, it is needless to inquire. It is enough to know that the awakening must come, and woe betide the hour of its visitation to all concerned. Meantime, whilst the war dance of jubilation is proceeding in press and pulpit over the supposed collapse of a much dreaded foe, the spiritual meetings are going on, the genuine mediums are multiplying their tests of spirit presence; the Lyceums are singing and reciting with redoubled spirit, and all true well-wishers to the cause of Spiritualism are rejoicing that a long-festering canker is removed from their midst, and a fresh and powerful impulse has been given to renewed investigation."

Mrs. Britten, in closing, says of the effect upon the cause, and the present duty of Spiritualists:

"As for Spiritualism, we can only feel thankful for any and every act in the great drama that will help to bring its realities to the tribunal of proof—clear its pure garments from the soil of infamy and imposture, and challenge investigation into the corner-stone upon which the temple of the faith stands. Once more we may cry to every Spiritualist that these lines may reach, 'This is the time to try men's souls!' Are you afraid that the soil of others' guilt may stain you? Is there aught in your life, faith, or dealings with the cause that cannot bear the light? Then and then only have you reason for faltering and shrinking back in the day of trial. Retreat if you will!—the sooner the better—the cause needs you not, and God and angels will take care of their own. If you know and feel that this thing is of God; that the good, the true, the mighty of all ages are at the helm, and that a spirit captain, pilot and crew are sailing the noble ship Spiritualism, and guiding her into her heaven-appointed port, then can you afford to say, 'I will never give up the ship! and though I may stand alone and forsaken of my fellowmen, I will trust in God and the right, and proclaim the truth of Spiritualism with my last breath on earth, and my first in the land of the hereafter.'"

Woman's Place with Man.

In the course of an exceptionally clear and able discourse on "Theological Sociology," by Rev. A. J. Sullivan, of Willimantic, Conn., preached before the Windham County Conference of Congregational churches, the preacher gave utterance to the following views and sentiments relative to the condition of woman which are well worthy of being reproduced. In spite of the declaration in Genesis that God created mankind in his own image, and made them male and female, "priest and prophet, minister and membership in Christ's church have acted as if God had made men only. During the ages of militancy, the largest factor, almost the only agency in social legislation, was man. The personality of woman was practically denied, and her immortality was a doctrine branded as superstition. And all this time, during all these ages of the subjugation of woman, and of the degradation of woman, and of the brutalization of woman," the old Bible rang out its grandest note for social amelioration by declaring that "He made them, male and female." The age of the masculine element alone in society, said the preacher, is passing away, and the age of industrialism is fast approaching, with its separation of Church and State, with its recognition of the personality and the immortality of the babe and of woman, too; with its reverence for the masses and its respect for the classes; with its honor for the corporation and its hosanna for the individual conscience, the individual reason, will, feeling and emotion. The age of industrialism is here. The reign and the rule of man with woman—woman with her refinement and her purity, her motherly instincts and her intuitions—is here, and here to stay. The kingdom of the common people is at hand. Its heralds are here. The Christ is coming, and John the Baptist is baptizing near the Jordan. All Judea and those about Jerusalem are coming out to hear the doctrines of this herald of the Christ of Industrialism.

"No persecution for religion to-day. Why? Because the feminine forces are gaining the ascendant; because the logic of the head is all right in its place, but there are times and places where it is all wrong, and where the logic of the heart, with its undisturbed middles and its non sequiturs and its suppressed premises, proclaims the conclusions, and we accept them, even though we cannot go behind the returns of the parish.... Yes, Christian theism is coming, with its working principle—that God in creating mankind male and female blessed mankind; and with its negative doctrine—that any type of human society which does not allow the operation of the masculine and the feminine agencies and principles and differentiations, that society God has blessed, but the society has turned its blessing into a curse."

Industrial Education.

This most interesting and important of practical subjects receives greatly increased attention in consequence of the gift of the truly munificent sum of twelve millions of dollars by the venerable Philadelphia philanthropist, I. V. Williamson, in trust for the establishment of a great Industrial School for Boys, to be located in Philadelphia, and to be named "The Williamson Free School of Mechanical Trades." Its avowed object is the education of white boys in the old-fashioned trades. Its provisions will not restrict its obvious advantages to orphan boys, but throw them open to all boys alike, with or without parents. A Board of seven Trustees has already been selected, and the plans for the establishment and operation of the school have been discussed with the aged philanthropist, the details of which will soon be made public. The Trustees will have charge of the entire project, the advanced age of the benefactor rendering it impossible for him to lend his personal assistance to the work beyond making financial provision for carrying it out.

This munificent, more than munificent deed, will unquestionably stand forth in the sight of future generations as an imperishable memorial of a life nobly ended on earth by the freest bestowment of its material fruits for the clearest and most substantial good of those who are to come. The name of Williamson will become as deservedly renowned in the wide and extending circle of mechanical industry as that of Washington long ago became in the field of patriotism. But it evidently is for far higher than merely memorial purposes that the venerable donor has thus dedicated his superb gift. He freely devotes it to the cause of human industry, which is the acknowledged mother and perpetual nurse of civilization. He intends it as a means of helping others to honestly and efficiently help themselves. It is not to be received as a charity for any class, but as a means of assistance by supplying practical instruction and training at the beginning of responsible life. No man can presume to predict the nature and the extent of the good which so intelligent and timely a benefaction, the evident suggestion of the angel world, is to work in the years that are to come.

Magnetic Healer.

Dr. J. A. Shelhamer, of 8½ Bosworth street, this city, is one of the finest magnetic healers in the country. His success in treating cases of chronic disease or disability has been a marked one, and those suffering from the ills which flesh is heir to will do well to secure his services.

$1 For Four Months.

By reference to the Prospectus of its publishers, on our third page, it will be seen that those so desiring can now obtain THE BANNER OF LIGHT for four months on payment of one dollar.

☞ Writing to London Light, Marian Aydon Noakes claims to have been the first medium in England for spirit-manifestations on the physical plane. She says the rappings occurred in her presence immediately following the death of a sister. There was a suspension of them until about ten years ago, when they were resumed and continue to be heard whenever she sits for them. So far as being the first medium for these demonstrations in England, the claim can only hold good in the history of Modern Spiritualism, since, as we have lately had occasion to show, rappings and other physical phenomena have existed in Great Britain (as elsewhere) for centuries.

☞ The Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, promises to be one of the largest and most successful of the World's Fairs held in recent years. It will open May 5th, and close Oct. 31st.

☞ The Medium and Daybreak, London, is to commence the new year at a penny a copy, any deficiency that may occur by the reduction in price to be met by a guarantee fund.

The Banner of Light

Is all that it claims to be. It is a true exponent of the Spiritual Philosophy of the nineteenth century.

It has outlived calumny both from within and without our ranks. Its nearly thirty-two years of existence is proof of this. It circulates in every civilized country.

Since its advent quite a number of other papers devoted to the Cause have sprung up and ceased to exist, while THE BANNER has continued, after passing through multitudinous vicissitudes, because of its faithfully doing the work for the denizens of the spirit-world, who planned its publication. This is well known to our older patrons; but as a new generation of readers has come upon the stage, who are not conversant with the facts, we feel to briefly advert to them now, and to further say that the MESSAGE DEPARTMENT, which was inaugurated by a band of devoted spirits—(the free meetings at which the spirit-messages are given were established at the same time)—has been continued consecutively from the issuance of the first number of this paper to the present.

Thousands of decarnated individuals have at these meetings and through this Department reported—men, women and children, the great majority of whom we never knew or heard of—nineteen-twentieths of which messages have been verified, proving beyond doubt the direct return of the spirit, under proper conditions—thus establishing the fact, through demonstrable proof, of the immortality of all mankind.

All true Spiritualists should become personally interested in the Message Department, knowing as they do how anxious their spirit-friends are to have this Department continued. The friends of the Cause, therefore, are earnestly invited to render this establishment all the pecuniary aid within their power.

Practical Interest in the Cause.

Colby & Rich desire at this time to express their grateful acknowledgments of the receipt from the executors of the will of the late ABRAHAM FULLER, of Somerville, Mass., of a donation of $300, bequeathed by him.: The amount being given in trust, to be appropriated and expended in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression.

Mr. Fuller deceased in Somerville some five years since, at the age of seventy-three years, leaving his property for the life-use of his widow: She passing to the spirit-land in May, 1888, his executors have paid out the legacies (including the above mentioned) to the parties enumerated in the will.

The testator was a man held in high respect and esteem by all who enjoyed his acquaintance. He was known in community as a thoroughly upright and honest business man. One who knew his interior life writes us that he "was exceedingly kind in his home; I do not know of his ever having an enemy; he was always cheerful, and as generous as his means allowed him to be.

THE BANNER OF LIGHT was for years a welcome visitor to his family. Though he was not given to much discourse on his belief concerning the present and future stages of being, and their recognized interblending in this modern day, he had the practical interests of Spiritualism at heart, as this legacy testifies."

Would that others—realizing the care and perplexity that necessarily surround the material side of the work of annunciating the grand revelations of the New Dispensation—might be led to emulate his generous example.

Gerald Massey,

It is announced, will give his positively last lecture in Boston for the present on Sunday, Dec. 9th, in Berkeley Hall, in the Independent Club Series. The admission will be fifteen and twenty-five cents. The subject treated by Mr. Massey in this instance will be "The Coming Religion," which is considered by many his best lecture. No doubt exists that Berkeley Hall will be crowded (as it should be) on that occasion.

Spiritualists or other societies desirous of utilizing the services of Mr. Massey on this his farewell visit to the United States should send him their applications for engagements at once, in care of Colby & Rich, office of the BANNER OF LIGHT. We trust that the friends of the cause will see to it that this gifted orator and whole-souled Spiritualist is kept busily employed during his present stay in America.

Our Patrons

Will no doubt be highly gratified to learn that we have made arrangements with the well-known authors, DR. F. L. H. WILLIS and MRS. L. M. WILLIS, to furnish for publication in THE BANNER a series of articles from time to time of deep interest to the Spiritual Cause—the subjects of which will be given hereafter.

The Lyceum Fair.

Remember the Fair in aid of Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, of Boston, which is to be held in Berkeley Hall the week commencing Dec. 10th. Contributions of fancy articles for the tables and of food for the lunch-room are solicited by the Committee.

☞ We understand that a new plan has been set on foot by the Allopaths of California, to obtain from the incoming Legislature of the Golden State the passage of a "doctors' plot" law of a very unique character, which if enacted will be (they hope) a "death-blow" to all "irregular" practice thereabout. "Equal Rights" will have something to say on this topic in next week's BANNER.

☞ Those who have attended séances held by D. D. Home will confer a favor upon Madame D. D. Home, whose address is Post Restante, Geneva, Switzerland, by sending her an account of their experiences at them. The request is made not to Spiritualists only but to all who love the truth for the truth's sake.

☞ A. Shuman & Co., manufacturing retailers of clothing, at their superb quarters, 440 Washington street, Boston, have an announcement in another column concerning "The Glendenning," which parents will do well to read.

☞ A card elsewhere announces two rooms to let in the Banner of Light building. The apartments offered for rent are desirable, and worthy attention.

Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker at Berkeley Hall.

On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 2d, this talented lady spoke under the auspices of the Independent Club. On the previous Sunday Mrs. Hooker spoke of her experiences chiefly from a spiritualistic standpoint; but on the 2d inst. her address was intended to especially reach the church people, inasmuch as it was an effort to prove that the Bible was permeated with spiritual phenomena, and that they alone truly explained its meaning.

She said in part: True Spiritualism is the faith once delivered to the saints. Those studying spiritual science must be prepared to spend years upon it, comply with the conditions and study faithfully in their homes; then public mediumship will become unnecessary, for light will shine upon all alike. We have schools for training nurses and people for all conditions of usefulness; give me the management of a developing college for mediums, and such a crop of prophets would be turned out as were never before seen in our history.

"Why am I a Spiritualist?" Because all the religion and science of the world has taught me to be one.

I ask you to go with me to the Bible—yet the noblest book if interpreted by the light of the angels.

Mrs. Hooker cited Heb. i: 14 to show that angels were ministering spirits, and stated that the mission of Christ was to save souls and establish the reign of righteousness. The Bible is filled with allusions to angels, from Genesis to Revelations, as those appearing to Joseph, Lot and Moses—and in Judges it is written that angels appeared to all the children of Israel.

In the New Testament an angel appeared to Zachariah while he was burning incense, and he was dumb. [In the same way she (Mrs. Hooker) had been thrown into a speechless condition, and continued so for half an hour.] An angel appeared to Mary and to the shepherds. John in the Isle of Patmos held communication with an angel in brilliant white—just such a one as we may become if we do right. With whatsoever desires and instincts we leave this world we enter the other. The speaker presented biblical arguments to show that character is the same there as here.

The question of salvation is now viewed differently than in the old Sunday School days: all are children of God's creation and heirs of salvation, but you must persevere and work out your own. The same manifestations given and obtained in Christ's time are obtainable now.

Mrs. Hooker drew freely from the Scriptures to illustrate her position, and frequently made sharp little side thrusts which received hearty applause from her auditors.

The hall was closely packed with an intellectual audience, many presumably from church centres.

During her stay our gifted sister has been tendered several receptions, and received at her residence many visitors interested and seeking for the dawning light.

Soul Readings.

Or, in other words, Psychometrical Delineations of Character, given through the mediumship of Mrs. A. B. Severance, of Whitewater, Wis., are wonderfully correct. We have in past years tested her many times, and have always been satisfied with the result.

The late Dr. H. F. Gardner, who was well known in this city as an efficient worker for the promotion of our cause, assured us that he felt it to be his duty to fully test Mrs. Severance's alleged psychometric powers, and accordingly sent her a slip of paper upon which he had written a few words, so disguising the chirography that she could not know it was from his pen. In due time he received a wonderfully characteristic missive. But in order to further test her powers he prepared a year afterward another missive, spelling his name backward, which he sent to her address, when, to his surprise, he found the answer of the same tenor as the first, although couched in different language—thus fully establishing in his mind the science of psychology beyond a doubt.

Mrs. Ada Foye,

So we are informed, will, by direction of her guides, turn her steps eastward again; having already made an engagement with the "Phenomenal Association" of Boston for the month of January, 1889. She will remain East from January to June of that year. Societies desiring her services Sundays or week evenings can secure engagements, provided they correspond with her immediately, directing to Cleveland, O., 105 Cross street, care of Thomas Lees.

The Holidays

Are coming, and those who wish to make presents of absorbing interest and abiding value, are invited to peruse the announcement of "Gifts for the People" made by Colby & Rich, on our fifth page.

☞ So much interest has been awakened in New York City by The World's recent exposure of the wretched misery, degradation and sorry plight of the poor working-girls in their bonds of slavery to capital and monopoly, that a reporter of that paper called on COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL to ask his judgment of what remedy, if any, he could suggest. The Colonel replied in part as follows:

"The average girl is so helpless, and the greed of the employer is such, that unless some newspaper or some person of great influence comes to her assistance, she is liable not simply to be imposed upon, but to be made a slave of. Girls as a rule are so anxious to please, so willing to work, that they bear almost every hardship without complaint. Nothing is more terrible than to see the rich living on the work of the poor. One can hardly imagine the utter heartlessness of a man who stands between the wholesale manufacturer and the wretched women who make their living—or, rather, retard their death—by the needle. How a human being can consent to live on this profit, stolen from poverty, is beyond my imagination. The exposures made by The World will do good. These men, when known, will be regarded as hyenas and jackals. They are like the wild beasts who follow herds of cattle for the purpose of devouring those who are injured or those who have fallen by the wayside from weakness."

☞ THE BANNER for December 1st contains a lengthy poem on "Thanksgiving at the Farm," from the pen of our old friend, B. P. Shillaber, of Chelsea, Mass. It appeared originally in The Boston Journal, for which paper it was written; and due credit to that effect should have been given. The poem was a grand production, an ideal of old-fashioned New England life, and more than one admirer of Burns has already compared it favorably with his world-famous home lyric: "The Cotter's Saturday Night."

☞ "The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism," by Leah Underhill (one of the Fox Sisters), is for sale at this office. It is a highly interesting work, and just at this time will richly repay a careful perusal, as it successfully controverts everything that has recently been said by Margaretta Fox and Mrs. Jencken. For price, see advertisement.

Notice.

Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Longley (Miss M. T. Shelhamer) are now ready to make engagements within one hundred miles of Boston for platform Sunday work. Mr. Longley—whose musical abilities are too well known to the public to require mention—will render his own compositions, and those who know of the beautiful songs this gentleman has given to the world will no doubt desire his services in connection with those of his wife for their Sunday meetings.

Mrs. Longley, under the influence of her spirit guides, will lecture Sundays upon "Life in the Spirit-World," "Mediumship," "Spiritualism," and kindred subjects. She will also answer questions from the audience, in a like manner to those answered in our Free Circle-Room through this lady's organism. Address care BANNER OF LIGHT.

☞ It is prophesied by The Better Way that within twelve months there will be such a revival of Spiritualism as the world never saw or dreamed of, and such a revolution in old systems of ethics as will turn their mouldiness up to the light of the sun, and give abundance of work to those moral scavengers whose duty it is to clear away that which is outworn, useless and rotten. It also says active work should be more thoroughly systemized, and Spiritualistic literature have a more extended circulation, the latter consideration being of the first importance. To all which THE BANNER fully subscribes.

Mrs. M. E. Williams,

Of New York, now in this city, would be pleased to meet her Boston friends at the Crawford House, Scollay Square. She informs us that during her brief stay she would be pleased to give a few séances if desired.

☞ It is highly desirable that the Spiritualists of the United States concentrate their forces by joining THE AMERICAN SPIRITUAL ALLIANCE, whose headquarters are New York City. The time has come for action. Our enemies are extremely active in their endeavors to crush out mediumship and cast obloquy upon our Cause. Branch associations should be inaugurated at once all over the country. We should like to hear from the friends upon this highly important matter.

The World's Arbitration League,

Organized in this country nearly ten years ago, for the purpose of securing the final settlement of international differences by arbitration in place of war and its attending evils, has labored incessantly to popularize just and harmonious methods to that end. Its latest public move is to invite representatives of all the various religious sects to meet in Washington Sept. 1st, 1889, for a mutual exchange of thought and the establishment of such reformatory measures as will hasten the reign of universal peace and harmony on earth.

As chief of the means to the result arrived at will be the adoption of a practical method of educating the people to a full comprehension of the fact that a benefit beyond all human power to estimate the value of would accrue to mankind by the inauguration in 1892—when a convocation of philanthropists from every nation will assemble at Washington—of a general gradual disarmament. The call has been cordially endorsed by a large number of the Fiftieth Congress, and there is every indication of its ultimate success.

The League proposes to send a delegation, led by Bishop J. P. Newman, its Treasurer, to the different religious organizations for the purpose of inspiring with an interest in the Conference, and solicits contributions to defray the expenses of the same. The officers of the League are: Leland Stanford, President; James F. Wilson, Vice-President; Lee Crandall, second Vice-President; D. S. Curtiss, third Vice-President; Robert McMurdy, Corresponding Secretary; L. J. Du Pre, Assistant Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. J. P. Newman, Recording Secretary; Mrs. E. T. Charles, Assistant Recording Secretary; S. M. Baldwin, General Secretary; J. P. Newman, Treasurer.

Removal of "Light."

On account of the inadequacy of the premises occupied by our London contemporary, Light, a removal has been made to more suitable apartments at No. 2 Duke street, near Charing Cross. In addition to editorial and business rooms, a large one adjoining these is to be utilized for meetings of members of The Alliance.

We congratulate our friends upon their acquirement of more eligible quarters, and wish them success in every effort they may make in their new location in behalf of the Cause in which we are mutually engaged.

☞ As a seeress, trance and prophetic medium, Augusta Dwinells, at 20 Bennet street, this city, is highly spoken of, and those who have consulted her upon health and business, or employed her services for interchange of thought between themselves and their spirit friends, express themselves as having been well satisfied.

CHRISTMAS DAYS.

Thanksgiving Day is past and gone,
And many turkeys are forlorn;
But Christmas days are drawing nigh,
When watered mouths will munch mince-pie,
When earnest children, full of glee,
Old Santa Claus will hope to see;
If they do not they will be flocking
To the omnipresent stocking,
Whence presents rare, and not a few,
Will speedily be brought to view.
And adults, too, in happy mood,
Will strive to do a world of good:
So shall each Christmas Day impart
A blessing to the human heart.

Walter Howell, the well-known spiritual lecturer, has gone into the Unitarian Church—in order to spiritualize it, we suppose.

"I have a poem," remarked the rhymester, gliding into the office and quietly approaching the editor's desk. "Well!" exclaimed the editor, with a look and tone intended to annihilate. "I have written a poem on 'My Father's Barn,' and—" "Oh!" interrupted the editor with extraordinary suavity, "you don't know how relieved I feel. A poem written on your father's barn, eh? I was afraid it was written on paper, and that you wanted me to publish it. If I should ever happen to drive past your father's barn I'll stop and read the poem. Good afternoon."—Detroit Free Press.

If people, says the Youth's Companion, only knew how much better they would sleep by going out of doors, just before retiring, and taking five or six or a dozen deep, strong breaths, they would no more omit it than they would their supper.

A peripatetic wit has discovered that the man who makes puns is not a pundit; neither is he who plays in the band a bandit. From whence, by natural sequence, it will be seen that the man who plays trumps is n't a trumpet, the soldier who carries arms is n't an armpit, and the boy who steals peaches is n't a peachpit.

City man: "Is this locality healthy?" Countryman: "Healthy? You bet we're healthy. There aint a doctor within forty miles."

Frenchman: "Yes, Miss Dash, in the Mediterranean I sailed through schools of sardines." Miss Dash: "Nonsense! How could they swim in those heavy tin boxes?"

Soliloquy of an unrecognized genius: "There is no doubt that I am a great genius and yet not understood. Now, the only thing I do n't know is whether my time is to come, or whether it is past."—Fliegende Blätter.

All the States this year kept our Yankee Thanksgiving on the same day—Nov. 29th. Besides, Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, recommended the Catholics of this country to also observe it.

Corn is a maize and a dance is a maze, which is pretty conclusive proof that there is a bond between dancing and corns.—Binghamton Republican.

J. C. Duff's Comic Opera Company begins a short engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre next Monday, in an English adaptation of Charles Lecocq's "Les Princesse des Canaries," under the title of "The Queen's Mate." The opera is said to be scored with much of this composer's characteristic brilliancy, and in the matter of melody it has many numbers that linger in the memory and are tangible for whistling purposes. The English book is the work of Harry Paulton. It tells a bright story. Manager Duff's Company includes many lyric favorites. "The Queen's Mate" is likely to surpass in elegance of setting even the famous "Dorothy" production which is remembered here so pleasantly.

WHEN THE LADIES VOTE.

I.

What will the country be
When the ladies vote?
Still the land of liberty,
When the ladies vote!
They will govern town and state,
Lift the poor and curb the great,
Do their duty—never late—
When the ladies vote.

NOW, AND THEN.—By the will of the late John Huntington, of Amesbury, Mass., $300 is bequeathed to the Amesbury Particular Meeting of the Society of Friends, the income to be used to defray the expenses of the annual meeting, and to improve the Friends' burying-ground. The above calls to mind the time when religious bigots hung Quaker women on Boston Common for being Quakers, put others in the Boston jail, and subsequently banished them to the West Indies. The donation of Friend Huntington goes to show that Progress has taken the place of Bigotry in the State of Massachusetts, although the latter feature crops out every now and then among a class of self-righteous individuals—we are ashamed to be obliged to admit.

The gods of the people are many, but the God of nature is one.—Antisthenes, B. C. 426.

The season of presentations and surprise parties is at hand. One of the most satisfactory of these affairs is to surprise a poor family with a barrel of flour, a ton of coal, or the like. Reader, if your means will permit, suppose you try the experiment.

A NATIONAL RELIGION.—The moment any religion becomes national, or established, its purity must certainly be lost, because it is then impossible to keep it unconnected with men's interests; and if connected, it must inevitably be perverted by them.—Jenyns.

Narrow arguments and jumped-at conclusions certainly seem very small and contemptible when we turn to those great thinkers who have devoted their lives to pursuit of truth.

The fact is, the Fox girls wanted both notoriety and money. Among the Spiritualists they could get neither, so they went to where they belonged. The church, not on account of its love for the girls, but in consequence of its hatred for Spiritualism, will patronize them well. Kate Fox told us, in the house of Fire Marshal Baker, in New York City, in 1868, that Barnum had offered her a large salary to give the same manifestations she was now giving, under his management; all he wanted was to advertise it as an exposé of Spiritualism.—New Thought.

But Showman Barnum did get the notorious impostor, H. Melville Fay, instead, to injure our cause, if possible, but it proved a fizzle, and the fellow was soon dropped.

No more the sun our faces fries,
No more we mop the brow,
And, best of all, there are no flies
On any of us now. —Boston Courier.

But 'roaches in our food do get,
In spite of all our care,
Which makes the housewife often fret,
To.... hear her husband swear.

Bad news spreads as rapidly as butter spread on hot bread. Good news is like a lump of loaf sugar. It is nice, but it does not circulate itself.—Picayune.

A special to the Wichita, Kan., Eagle from Oklahoma, says that the settlers who had lately gone there held a convention Nov. 31st, and, after a thorough discussion of their interests, as affected by the pending congressional legislation, unanimously resolved to abandon the Territory and improvements until they had full legal warranty to occupy the same.

Forty-four baby boys have already been named after Gen. Harrison. We feel sorry for every Harrison of them.—Rochester Post-Express.

The slang paragraphs which often of late years appear in the weekly newspapers as well as the dailies, recall to mind the old saying that the shallows murmur while the deeps are dumb.

LIGHTS FOR JAPAN AT NIGHT.—Every one carries a paper lantern when he goes about at night, and at least five million of them are used throughout the streets and roads of Japan.

The first Frenchman to found a printed newspaper was Dr. Theophrastus Renaudot, who obtained the King's privilege for the Gazette de France in 1631. Before that, Paris was the centre of the world's news; even the discovery of America was heralded in verse by these gentlemen. The only printed newspapers that got into France in those days were the scraps from Guttenberg's press, secreted by some religious reformer, who brought in his saddle-bags or secreted in his doublet some printed scrap in the Latin tongue, telling how it fared with the good cause in the country he was leaving. These dispatches from France, secreted in this way, give the accounts of the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

In nature everything lives upon something else. Life feeds upon life. Something is lying in wait for something else, and even the victim is weaving a web or crouching for some other victim, and the other victim is in the same business—watching for something else. The same is true in the human world: People are living on each other; the cunning obtain the property of the simple; wealth picks the pockets of poverty; success is a highwayman leaping from the hedge.

The smallness of soul of some created beings is something which cannot be measured except by a more powerful microscope than has yet been invented.

From statistics just published, dealing with the richest men living, we learn that there are about 700 with over five million dollars, of whom 200 reside in England, 100 in the United States, 100 in Germany and Austria, 75 in France, 50 in Russia, 50 in India and 125 other countries.

Wife (to unhappy husband)—I would not worry, John; it does n't do any good to borrow trouble. Husband—Borrow trouble? Great Cæsar! my dear, I aint borrowing trouble; I 've got it to loan.—Scranton Truth.

EUROPEAN TROUBLES.—M. Hertenstein, President of Switzerland, who recently underwent the amputation of his right leg, because of disease of the arteries, died last week, and all Switzerland is in mourning.—Under the influence of the present "war" scare, French and Italian governments are asking for increased loans for defensive purposes.—The English government is worried by the continued revolt in the Soudan; and it looks as if both Germany and England were about to strike hands in "putting things to rights," according to their ideas, at Zanzibar.—Though carefully covered from the public, it has at last leaked out that the Russian Czar and Czarina were seriously hurt in the recent railroad accident, wherein the terrorist element is said to have had a hand. The Czar's trouble has resulted in a case of what is known as a "railroad spine," resulting in many instances to employés and passengers after a severe shock on the rails.

THE BANNER OF LIGHT, published by Colby & Rich of Boston, is attracting a great deal of attention in the religious world. Subscription price, $3 per year.—Sunday Herald, Columbus, O.

A male child with only one arm was recently born to Mrs. Emil Schwartz of Bridgeport. The child is otherwise perfectly formed. Six months ago the woman's husband, who is an employé of the Barnum and London show, had his arm badly lacerated by a lion, and his wife worried greatly for fear he would have to submit to amputation. Can Science explain this queer freak of Nature?

☞ Among the many marvelous cures perfected by DR. ELLEN R. FRITZ, 1441 North 16th street, Philadelphia, mention may be made of the recovery from Typhoid Pneumonia of Robert Patterson, 1618 Brown street. Without the aid of a drop of medicine, in eleven days from date of delirious prostration he is thoroughly convalescent, and expects to resume his daily work in a week's time. The treatment given in this and all cases is based on sound physiological principle. Those who are suffering from disease may rely upon certain cure from this source when all other means fail.

Message Department.

FREE SPIRITUAL MEETINGS.

These highly interesting meetings, to which the public is cordially invited, are held at the Hall of the Banner of Light Establishment,

ON TUESDAYS AND FRIDAYS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK P. M.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these meetings) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely.

MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER-LONGLEY will occupy the platform on Tuesday afternoons for the purpose of allowing her spirit guides to answer questions that may be propounded by inquirers on the mundane plane, having practical bearing upon human life in its departments of thought or labor. Questions can be forwarded to this office by mail, or handed to the Chairman, who will present them to the presiding spirit for consideration.

MRS. B. F. SMITH, the excellent test medium, will on Friday afternoons under the influence of her guides give deparnated individuals an opportunity to send words of love to their earthly friends—which messages are reported at considerable expense and published each week on this page.

☞ It should be distinctly understood that the Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them to the life beyond the characteristics of their earthly lives—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the mundane sphere in an undeveloped condition, eventually progress to a higher state of existence. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers for our table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. M. T. Shelhamer-Longley.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 23d, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou everlasting God, thou supreme and eternal spirit, whose law changes not, who art the same ever, and forever shall be through time and eternity, thou soul of all love, wisdom and power, we approach thee in spirit at this hour, reaching out toward the infinite depths of thy tenderness, to receive from thee that which shall uplift and strengthen and bless our lives. We know the sun of thy truth rides high in the heavens, and that it will eventually illuminate the entire universe; no clouds can remain when the light of that blessed orb extends throughout all space, and no shadows will affect the human life when it receives thy truth, understands it and makes it its own. Oh! may we profit by the lessons which are given, and may we grow in spirit, gaining strength and endurance to meet with that which is to come. We praise thee, oh! our Father God, for all these things; for the shadow as well as the sunshine; for the rain and the storm as well as the pleasant hours of peace and prosperity; for we believe that all are designed by thy will for a wise purpose and useful end. We ask thy blessing to rest upon all. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We will now attend to your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—An honest inquirer seeks light. When a medium inspirationally prophesies with regard to certain events which are to take place, and as time passes on the prophecy is not fulfilled, how are we to reconcile it?

ANS.—In one of two ways: either that it has been the medium prophesying, insufficiently under the influence of a wise spirit to give forth correctly matter upon which she speaks, or else that the spirit himself who gives utterance through his medium has not been sufficiently informed upon the subject under consideration to give a correct prognostication.

All spirits cannot predict human events. Many, even, who have passed from the body and have the power of coming into contact with and exercising a watchful care over their friends, do not sufficiently understand the movement of events to predict correctly concerning that which is to come. A spirit who reasons closely upon causes and their effects, who scrutinizes carefully the events taking place in which he is interested, passing from one chain of sequences to another, will learn to prophesy, at least to himself, that which is to come, that which is naturally to be the outgrowth of any event or line of events which arise. Such a spirit, if he comes into close contact with a medium adapted to his use, and can bring her organism into subjection to his own mental power, will undoubtedly be able to prophesy clearly and correctly concerning events in the life of that friend in whom he is interested, but not unless the spirit himself has closely watched the life, career, events and circumstances of his friend.

Wise spirits seldom predict that which is to come to individuals on earth. They may prophesy of what will occur in the life of a community or the experience of a nation; they may do this because they have watched the movements of the nation or of the community, and can properly reason from that which has been to the outgrowth which shall be; but they seldom think it well to predict important events which are to come to individual lives. It is best for each one to meet his experience, day after day, as it comes to him, and make the most of it, and profit so far by it that he will regulate his conduct, avoiding mistakes for the future, and at the same time developing the very best amount of spiritual and mental force from that discipline which it has to bestow.

Q.—[By A. A. Walker.] Some years ago at a Banner of Light séance a spirit communicated who said he was a Roman Catholic; that he passed out of the earth-life so suddenly as not to receive the last rites of his church, and had a lost feeling upon entering the spirit-world, but that he soon found a priest to shrive him, when he was made all right. Are the rites of the Roman Catholic Church practiced in the spirit-world?

A.—The rites of no special church are practiced in the spiritual world proper; but there are bodies of spirits divested of the mortal flesh, who yet hold closely to the old opinions and ceremonials which they entertained and practiced on earth. Such bodies of spirits are not what we call highly progressive; they are not seeking and reaching out for new unfoldments of mentality and of spirituality, hence they are held somewhat in bondage, passing their days more in contact with the earth and its people than in direct association with advanced and intelligent spirits. These intelligences of whom we speak associate together in bands and exchange thought and opinion between themselves, and very often mingle with those of earth who follow the same customs and practices of religious worship which they followed when in the body; they also practice ceremonials, and many of them realize but little of the practical change which has come to them. True, they understand that they have sloughed off the mortal garb, but they do not know that it is possible for them to rise above material life, its conditions and its people, to other scenes of study and employment; they seem to think that their life must be spent here in contact with those mortals who attract them, at least for a long period of time.

We have no doubt that the spirit who manifested at the Banner Circle and made this statement came in contact with some such body of spirits as we have mentioned, and that he really did pass through the ceremony spoken of in connection with some spirit who had served as a Roman Catholic priest or bishop when on earth. We have ourself seen spirits who once filled the offices of priesthood and bishopric going about among ignorant classes of spirits who still cling to their old ideas and ceremonials, and extending to them such offices as they seemed to demand or crave. The question naturally arises, then: Are these priests and officers of the Roman Catholic Church to continue their labors and to remain in their old positions through all time to come? and are these classes of ignorant spirits, who understand so little of life that they cling to their old ideas and demand shrivement and masses, to remain in this condition forever? We say no, for there are ministering spirits, highly intelligent, self-sacrificing spirits, who have the good of such classes as these in view, who are seeking earnestly to afford to such spirits helpfulness and strength, as well as knowledge, to rise above their darkened state of ignorance to one of information and of spiritual progression.

There are constantly going forth to the spirit-world human beings who are ignorant of the laws of life here, as well as those of the spiritual existence. Such must be taught. At first they come in contact with spirits who have preceded them, who have not advanced out of their former condition of subservience or of ignorance; but they are shortly brought under the dominion of bands of wise and exalted intelligences, who work for their welfare. No spirit need remain in bondage who desires to rise above it; only those who are arrogant and self-sufficient, who believe that their own opinion is the best and wisest that can be entertained, remain in a condition of darkness; but those who are thus held in the chains of superstition and arrogance must remain so until the light of magnetic love and protection can pierce the darkness, permeate the clouds of ignorance, and reach their inner natures. When this is accomplished the work of progression goes steadily on, and it is only a question of time when they will rise above all thought of ceremony, all need of ministration from public officers, and be a law unto themselves, spiritually and mentally.

There is no established church in the spirit-world. The spiritual world proper recognizes only the religion of humanity, which is the love of man for his brother man, and as the love-element in human nature is cultivated, as the love-principle is allowed to flow forth unto all creatures, the human heart grows and expands, the spiritual nature becomes broadened, it increases in power and knowledge, so that wise and good spirits associate together to worship God, not by servile speech, on bended knee, not by the practice of senseless ceremonials, or the indulgence of superstitious ideas, but by sending forth a kindly, loving, uplifting thought, feeling and assistance, to all of their kind who in any way require such helpfulness.

Q.—[By O. S. P.] What percentage of the clergy who preach dogmatic religion as essential to salvation, really believe in the doctrine they preach? and can the spirit controlling approximate the number?

A.—We have not come in contact with all the clergymen who preach what is called "the gospel of Christ," but we have come en rapport with a large number of so-called ministers of the gospel who express their religious opinions and teachings, week after week, from the pulpit and the rostrum. We should judge that about five per cent. of those who still continue to preach the old ideas of the life hereafter and of the destiny of the human soul, really believe and are confident in their utterance of that which they give forth to the world. We do not mean by this that the other ninety-five per cent. are dishonest or insincere, but we do mean that perhaps about ninety-five out of every one hundred clergymen of the religious world have sometimes grave doubts concerning these utterances which they give forth from the Sunday pulpit, and serious fears lest that which they preach is not the very best means of spiritual guidance to those who listen to their teachings. We believe that the majority of the clergymen of the age desire to teach only that which is true and right. We know that in this profession, as in every other, there are certain insincere members those who care more for their popularity, for the influence they may create, than really for the spiritual effect of their labors. But we are glad to think that this number is small, and that the greatest number are honest in their convictions, sincere in their purpose; although, no doubt, most of them have grave doubts and fears concerning the reality and the truth of those lessons which they teach mankind.

It is plainly apparent to every observing mind that the pulpit is becoming strongly liberalized, and, in fact, spiritualized. The utterances given forth by the clergy of the present day are very far in advance of those which were promulgated a half century ago, or even a quarter of a century. We hear more now of the love of God and less of his wrath; more of his divine pity and tenderness, his desire to lead the human soul onward and upward out of the darkness into the light, and less of that terrible penalty which is to come to the erring, weak and ignorant spirit, unless it follows the rules of guidance set down by an angry, vindictive Jehovah. These are signs of progression such as we are glad to behold, and it is a matter of congratulation for every earnest humanitarian to realize this truth: that man is expanding in his spiritual nature, so much so that he breathes in the very love-element itself from the atmosphere of heaven, and cannot help sending it forth in kindly feeling toward his fellow-creatures, whether he stand foremost in the religious pulpit, or in whatever arena of life he may walk.

This is encouraging to those who desire to see humanity growing in knowledge, rising above the shackles of ignorance; therefore, we say, it is well to believe that ninety-five per cent. of the clergymen doubt; for when doubt comes there will be agitation of thought, and when this arises in the human mind it will not down until it receives a satisfactory solution. If the clergymen of our times begin to doubt and question concerning that which in the past centuries has been considered the infallible word of God, and if they begin to agitate thought upon all those doctrines and exhibitions of religious life which in former times were accepted as undeniable truth, then most certainly will the error which may be contained within those doctrines, principles and teachings begin to hide its head, for it cannot bear the light of searching scrutiny, and when that appears, truth is very sure to follow. We are glad to know that so many of the clergymen of the present day do doubt and question, that they are asking themselves: What is true and right concerning man; the destiny of the soul and the religious influences of the universe; what is it to be hereafter, and what the condition of man in that hereafter? These are questions that must be answered, and every honest, sincere mind in the pulpit will not allow these questions to escape it until it becomes satisfied of their true solution.

Q.—[By R. G. Dawson.] Are there not some ancient philosophers in the spirit-world who still maintain the theory of special creation or spontaneous generation?

A.—Oh, yes! there are still those who perhaps claim to be ancient philosophers in the spirit-world, who maintain the theory of special creation, who do not believe in the development of humanity, but believe that the human race has been especially created as a distinct type of existence, apart from all others. Why do these minds retain such an idea if it is not in accordance with truth? we may properly ask. Why have they not informed themselves concerning its truth or falsity, since there is in the spirit-world opportunity for investigation and study in every realm of knowledge and development of science? Simply because these minds have not desired to grow; they have not advanced out of the old conditions of existence, but have remained in contact with other minds that have succeeded them, held on to the same ideas, and taught and expounded them in public and private life. You may ask: Is it possible for a spirit to pass centuries of time, holding on to a false idea, a vagary, not reaching out and expanding into the light of knowledge concerning any subject which it entertains? Yes, this is possible.

Some spirits do not recognize the lapse of time in any degree. To them a year is but a day, a century but a few years at most; they do not realize how time is passing, and how humanity as a whole is learning, growing, progressing out of its former state of ignorance; thus they cling to the past, and hold to that which they have entertained, being unwilling to admit that they have been in the wrong, or that it is possible for their learned minds to be mistaken upon any theme which they have passed judgment upon. This is possible, because it is true—we have known instances of the kind.

And yet a spirit who earnestly desires to know and understand the truth, and is willing to admit himself mistaken when proven so, and is willing to let go of the old when something new, better and more adaptable to the needs of humanity is offered in its stead, grows, expands, and increases in knowledge very rapidly; although time is not irksome to such, they recognize its existence, and try to make the most of its passage. Such spirits as the latter may, within a few days or years, gain greatly, not only in knowledge and understanding, but in the power of expression, in sending forth their own thoughts and conclusions, not in arrogance, but with the humble desire to add some thought of usefulness to the world and contribute something toward the investigation of truth.

Q.—[By a Subscriber, Utica, N. Y.] Is there a liability of a person entranced not being able to regain control of the earthly body? If so, what course would you advise to avoid such a casuality?

A.—There is a possibility that a medium, unconsciously entranced, who has passed out from contact with his physical body and yielded it to the control of some other intelligence, may not be able to resume his own control of the body, and to again enter into contact with outward life. Such a case has happened, and it may happen again, but it is not usual; it would be a very rare instance that perhaps could not be provided against. A medium passing into a state of entrancement must of necessity come into a passive condition; yield his hold of the physical, withdraw his mind from the contemplation of the outward life, and so float into the spiritual atmosphere of the other world. Perhaps the magnetic link binding the spirit to his outward vestment might become weakened, or so separated as not to admit of the return of the spirit who had possession of the body; and in this case, as soon as the physical instrument had been yielded up by the controlling intelligence, death would ensue. But this magnetic tie is not easily severed; it rarely becomes so weakened that the spirit possessing it is unable to so utilize his power as to hold complete sway over his physical body. Should one, however, discover a difficulty in the spirit of the medium reanimating his mortal form, it would be wise to instantly apply magnetic treatment, and possibly electricity. This would set the vital forces of the body in motion, and perhaps strengthen the magnetic cord between the spirit and the physical form, and thus assist the spirit in regaining his hold upon the outward organism. This we believe is all that could be done should such a catastrophe occur; but it is something one need not especially fear, as it occurs so seldom in the experience of mediums and of mediumship.

Q.—[By Freethinker.] It is recorded in Scripture, as expressed by Paul, that man is a dual being, having both a spiritual and physical body. If such is the case, would not too much exercise of the spiritual—the religious element—cause the physical, at times, to fully control the person and cause unspiritual conditions?

A.—We do not think so. We think wherever the spiritual proclivities in the nature of any individual have the ascendency, then will the life be most essentially a spiritual existence. It seems to us that one whose desires, aspirations and tendencies are of a spiritual character, will put forth more beautiful expressions, will practice more beautiful habits of life, and will, indeed, be more pure and good than one whose physical nature has the control—and we think we reason logically upon this subject. It is true, we have seen individuals highly mediumistic, at certain hours, under certain conditions, exercising a most glorious influence, and expressing the most beautiful and even divine ideas for the guidance of the people. At other times, these human beings seemed to have been let down from their high estate and exhibited only signs and tendencies of a more carnal character. One might ask: "What is the reason of this great change in the individual?" But it depends entirely upon the question whether this person is expressing the spiritual ideas and moral qualities of some influence or intelligence that has a strong possession of his organism, or whether, at the time, he is manifesting his own spiritual nature and characteristics. If the former, then it may be easily understood that when this high spiritual influence and intelligence is withdrawn, the instrument returns to his own normal and habitual condition, and at such times expresses only that which belongs to his own life and nature, which has no part in the life and character of other intelligences, spirit or mortal; but if the instrument is at such times, when the spiritual is in the ascendency, expressing only the higher qualities of his own being, then we must conclude that when he manifests those lower qualities and baser desires, he is under the strong psychological influence of one or more other intelligences. It may not be that these intelligences are decarnated spirits; it may be that there are circumstances and individuals surrounding the sensitive on earth that sweep him under the law of psychological attraction, and control and permeate his entire organism with their own gross elements, and thus he is obliged to give expression to that which has the strongest hold of his organic nature.

It is very safe for one to believe that the more spiritual his character, the more elevated his aspirations and outward tendencies, the higher will be his condition and the more safe will he be held against temptation and moral danger. He will be surrounded by a guardianship that will never desert him, for the emanations of his own life will be so pure and beautiful as to shield him with a mantle of light, while this very mantle or atmosphere will attract to his side wise and good spirits who can easily mingle their own influence with his, and who will be glad to assist and guard him at all times. It is safe to conclude that the more carnal-minded an individual is, the greater leash he gives to his baser passions and physical appetites, the more likely he will be to generate an influence dark and depressing, one which will bind him down to physical things, which will retard his progressive movements and will attract to his side spirits not of a high order—those who will delight to gratify their own personal tastes and inclinations of the grosser kind, by coming into association with his life.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 9th, 1888.

Robert Sulley.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to speak a few words to my dear ones. Many times as I have been in the home the thought has come to them, "Why is it that father has not made himself known during all this long period?" They have watched and waited for some tidings from me. My dear wife has been anxiously desirous to know if I have found the life of the spirit as beautiful as it has been represented. Yes; and more so, dear wife. I desire to be remembered to all friends and neighbors, as well as relatives. How much happiness it gives us to come into communication with you in mortal life.

To my dear boy, who is carrying on, in part, the business I left, I often come to bring him my influence, and I know he must feel that I am not far away. I find the work in the spirit-life far more grand and beautiful than that of earth.

While dwelling in mortal life I realized the companionship of dear spirit friends, and it was a great comfort during a period of thirty years or more. I lived on earth sixty-five years. There are many across the water who will be glad to hear from me, and in Buffalo, N. Y., I shall not be forgotten. I was the proprietor of a public house situated on the corner of Michigan and Carroll streets. My name is Robert Sulley.

Alice Stacey.

I am glad to embrace this opportunity of speaking, Mr. Chairman, although I would much prefer to come in private to my friends. I would like them to know that my daughter Nellie and myself are together much of the time, and that we are happy in our spirit home. We are not confined there; we drift away at times, according as the spirit dictates, or as we are attracted to loved ones of earth.

I have come to this place many times, hoping to gain a knowledge of the laws of spirit control. I hope in time to materialize my form. I want John to know of a surety that materialization is a truth. Nellie sends greetings to her father. John, go whenever you can where they make up these forms, for I shall still persevere in trying to show myself in order to give you a convincing proof that I can and do come to you.

My husband knows very little of spirit-return, Mr. Chairman. He has learned something, and will be able to learn more, I think, after receiving this message directly from me. Alice Stacey. Please send the message to John Stacey, of New York.

William Henry Ford.

I lived in South Boston, Mr. Chairman, and I would like my friends there to know that I come to visit them. How sweet it is to spirits to realize that one is not forgotten. As I go from one house to another, I hear my name spoken, and it is very pleasant to me. Mary, my dear wife, is with me to-day, and we are happy in this beautiful life, yet are we ever looking forward to reünion with dear ones who still remain on earth. I knew very little comparatively of spirit-return, and I find much to learn in the higher life

The children are connected with the Lyceum, and I am very happy to say they are growing in knowledge on these subjects. We often speak of the dear girls being educated in your Lyceums, and feel that it is a grand thing for them, and for adults, too. My name is Capt. William Henry Ford.

Sylvester W. Brown.

I hardly know how to take control of the instrument, especially in public. But once have I spoken since they said I was "dead," that is, so they could hear my voice. Addie, my dear wife, I feel that it is a privilege to be able to acknowledge to you and to mortals that I find it true we can and do return to earth. I talked with you of these things many times. Doubts would come to us, because we had been educated differently; the old theory would come up, and we could not believe that spirits did return to earth. You remember of our speaking of Frank and Frances. Now I see that they understood more clearly than we did.

I have been aware of the changes that have been going on since I passed out of the home. Passing away so suddenly, at last, it seemed very hard for you to bear. When they called me up higher, dear wife, I caught a glimpse of the beautiful beyond, before the spirit was freed from the mortal form. You remember the Monday morning before I passed out, how eagerly you looked, how tenderly you watched me. I did not suffer in passing over, but my thoughts flitted away to you—how lonely you would be.

I think in one way the change is for the better, but I cannot feel that your father and your mother will be contented: going from the old home and breaking up there, all will be so strange to them. I know you would say to me: "There is room enough." Yes; but they must leave their old associations and neighbors. They little know the feelings that will creep over their spirits after the change is made.

Do try, Addie, to come into communication with me somewhere. I would be so glad to assure you of the truth of our coming to earth, and of the fact that we can communicate with you when right conditions are given. I know it is different from what we called belief when I dwelt here. To-day I see that there is no belief worthy the name without investigation.

I thought once this would be wrong, and so do you to-day. But you must learn that the power is given us to come to earth by the Great Father. It is no provision of man. God himself has seen fit to open these channels of communication between the two worlds.

I understood all about the proceedings at my funeral, for I was there. I was satisfied with what the Rev. Mr. Howard said. How little he knew that I was so close by. I knew, dear wife, that Lewis Bunker took the whole proceedings into his own hands.

I have as yet learned but very little on the spirit-side, as it is only a few months since they said Sylvester W. Brown was dead. I lived in Pittsfield, N. H., and was forty-five years of age, and a little more, when I was so suddenly called away from earth. I speak of all these things so particularly that my dear wife may feel assured that it is indeed myself who is speaking, and can be none other. I was a member of the Catamount Lodge.

Bernie Shaw.

I would like them to know in Cleveland, Ohio, that I do come into the Lyceum. I was a member there, and I have joined the Lyceum beyond, for we have them on the other side, only not just like yours of earth. And I find, as I go into the Lyceums in your city and other places, that each one is conducted differently.

Mr. Thomas Lees will know who has been speaking, as a lady came with me that they knew very well in the Lyceum. I am so happy to be able to speak! although I would a little rather come to my own dear ones privately. I want them to understand that we are in the work on the spirit side just as really, and more so, than we could be in mortal life, and that when they meet in their Lyceums the old scholars who have been transported, meet with them. My name is Bernie Shaw.

Henry Munson.

One reason that has brought me here to-day is the fact that I opposed this truth which you advocate. I could not believe it. I thought if a man was dead he was dead, and there was no more of him. Another reason for my coming is, I want to do what I can to prove the immortality of the soul; that we are alive and active in this other state of being. To acknowledge the truth now is all I can do.

How many times, in Chicago, have I heard them speak of Spiritualism and the meetings. I thought it was all a fraud—a got-up sort of a thing. Now I find I have been looking through a smoked glass: and pretty well smoked, too. I know I should have been happier if I had gained more knowledge of what it was my privilege to learn. I dwelt in the mortal form a long time, and I can offer no excuse for my neglect.

To-day I am happy in my spirit-home. Maria is with me, and Susan, who passed away a long time ago.

How surprised I was, upon entering spirit-life, to see people walking about as you do here. I lived seventy-seven years on earth, and I can look back upon a good deal of what seems to me lost time, because I lived in ignorance of spiritual things. Still, I am not discouraged, because opportunities are before me. Henry Munson.

Minnie F. Lord.

I lived nineteen years upon earth, and it is only a few months since I passed away. All through the winter months previous to my departure I felt that the angels came very near to me. I did not understand then that these were my spirit-friends, who came to help me in my suffering.

It was very hard for father and mother to give up their last child. My dear sister was called away four years before, and then, in the early springtime, they came and took their Minnie also.

Mother and father, oh! how gladly would I tell you of the beauties of spirit-life. I have longed many times, as I have seen you so sad over the loss of your children, that you might understand that we can return to you. It is so sweet to know that we can converse together.

When they laid me away mother felt she could not let me go. Oh! mother, do go to some place where we may talk with you, and go into the meetings where you may learn of this great truth. I know you have not so many opportunities as those who dwell in the cities, but sometimes there are channels opened in your vicinity.

I am happy. My sister came to meet me and told me about the flowers, the music and the beautiful things of spirit-life. We are very anxious to come into communication with you, because we know it will add greatly, not only to our happiness, but to yours.

I lived in Parsonsfield, Me. My name is Minnie F. Lord. My mother's name is Rose E., and my father's Edwin E. Lord. My mother felt that the house was swept clean when I was taken away.

Charlie Bristol.

I think I shall be remembered at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. I am colored, but that makes no difference, my spirit is just the same. You will find, in spirit-life, the colored people amount to as much as the white people. It is the life that makes the man or the woman.

I am pretty happy. I would like them all to know I am in the meetings a good many times, and I guess Dr. Vosburgh knows I am round sometimes.

I would like them to know, also, that we meet together, not only the colored people but the white people, and we do have a first-rate time. I am very well satisfied with my home, and I don't want to come back to stay.

My name is Charlie Bristol. I used to whitewash. It was a good occupation, and I had a name good enough for white people. I'll come again, and I shall be a colored man every time.

Sarah White.

I would like to have Elias know that I come into the home, and also William. I have been very anxious for them to understand that those whom they have thought dead are not dead, but alive, and we hold a stronger affection for the dear ones. The law of attraction brings us back to them; and we see they need the strength and influence we can give to them. How pleased I was when I found I could drift back into the homes again. I knew of the sickness.

It is not a very long time since I left the form, and found things very different, but more beautiful. I have been in the city when meetings have been held.

I have been in Minneapolis and Terre Haute, thinking perhaps I would be able to control some instrument, but failed to do so. Coming here will help me to control some medium nearer home. I may be able, through one channel or another, to reach some dear one. My home was in Lafayette, Ind. My name Sarah White.

Mrs. Ada Foye at the "Forrest Home."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

We were yesterday more than gratified by receiving a visit from the charming lady and wonderful medium whose name heads this article. Mrs. F. out of the generosity of her heart gave us a séance which was thoroughly satisfactory, and the more appreciable in that it was entirely unexpected. It was indeed a perfect feast of soul!

Mrs. Foye is brimful of love for the beautiful—of delicate, artistic taste, and expressed hearty admiration of our vast libraries, fine paintings, marbles, and quaintly-carved antique furniture, which once graced the home of our dearly-loved benefactor, Edwin Forrest.

We never had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Foye before, but she will henceforth hold a large place in the hearts of "the old folks at home." If she has been as blest in giving as we have been in receiving, then all indeed are truly blest. The writer of this called Mrs. F.'s attention to one or two items relating to her in the last BANNER OF LIGHT, which I informed her was the generous gift of Messrs. Colby & Rich.

Ada Foye! God bless and prosper her in the noble work he and his angels have appointed her to do. DORA SHAW.

Forrest Home, Philadelphia, Nov. 25th, 1888.

The following signatures attest the satisfaction of the ladies who were benefited by Mrs. Foye's fine medial powers:

LINES TO MRS. ADA FOYE.

Suggested at a Séance Given by Her at the "Forrest Home."

Oft glowworm's tiny lamp discloses
The perfumed space where bloom the roses;
The depths of silence oft are stirred
By sudden song of some sweet bird;
So angel-guided, light in hand,
Thou hast revealed "the better land,"
And all my being thou hast stirred
With sweeter things than song of bird!
Through tear-dimmed eyes I now behold
Life's sunset all a-tinged with gold!
My days sometime will bloom as June,
Be set, like song, to some sweet tune;
Shorn of earth's sharp, incisive pain,
No more I'll chant its sad refrain.
Oh! when "the change" to thee doth come,
When thy heart beats as funeral drum,
Then, in the brightest, highest heaven,
Mayst thou receive as thou hast given.

DORA SHAW.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

STELLA P. PINNEY.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT Nov. 24th, I find a message from my dear daughter, STELLA P. PINNEY, in which she says she has many times been near me, and breathed into my heart that she was not far away, and that she often causes her presence near me to be felt, which is true. She was very dear to me, and is now, and I am thankful that she is able to approach me, and that I can realize her presence. She was a great sufferer, yet patient through it all, and had no dread of the change that was to close all her pain and weariness. I had often expressed my wish that some one would come to me through THE BANNER, and she was the first to do so. God bless your mediums, and the dear BANNER. I would not relinquish my knowledge of spirit-return for all the world.

MRS. MARY PINNEY.

Stafford Springs, Conn., Nov. 25th, 1888.

SAMUEL CARMAN.

I received a spirit-message from my husband, SAMUEL CARMAN, through the mediumship of J. W. Fletcher, in an issue of your paper of February last, but neglected to recognize it at the time; it was correct.

I also received one from him in your paper of Oct. 27th, which was correct in every respect. I was much pleased to hear from him.

MRS. MARY A. CARMAN.

Oakford P. O., Bucks Co., Penn., Nov. 2d.

OLIVE CUMMINGS.

Mr. James G. Cummings of Hallowell, Me., has requested me to write you and verify the message of OLIVE CUMMINGS, his wife, published in THE BANNER, and given through the mediumship of Mrs. Smith. The message is very correct, even where the spirit speaks of materializing and in connection with his family. DR. H. F. MERRILL.

Augusta, Me., Nov. 27th, 1888.

DORINDA HORTON.

THE BANNER of Aug. 25th contained the message of DORINDA HORTON, which we recognize as coming from our dear mother from the beyond. We sincerely thank both spirit and mortal who were instrumental in giving the same. We hope to hear from dear father and brother and sister through the same source.

A Pleasant Surprise.

The Boston Ladies' Aid Society, of which Mrs. J. Frank Baxter has for some years been a favorite member, gave the lady, at the residence in Chelsea, on Thursday evening, Nov. 22d, a royal surprise. At eight o'clock in the evening an attendant announced to Mrs. Baxter that a lady would like to see her in the hall. She stepped thither to be greeted by the lady president of "The Aid," followed by some seventy or more members, ladies and gentlemen, all laden with packages, gifts and flowers. Mrs. Baxter, while joyous in her surprise, was overcome, but, soon recovering herself, she welcomed them as they one by one came into her presence, having deposited their goods in the dining-room and disposed of their outer garments. A social entertainment followed, during which Dr. A. H. Richardson, in behalf of the Society, presented in an appropriate speech a basket of exquisite cut flowers to Mrs. Baxter, who briefly thanked the Society, in accepting, when J. Frank Baxter responded pleasantly to the Doctor's remarks, and followed with an interesting speech of welcome and good will to all. Mrs. L. L. Whitlock spoke pleasant words, and songs by Mrs. Anderson and Mr. Baxter varied the exercises.

At ten o'clock the company, distributed in dining and sitting-rooms and hall, were invited and did justice to the cake, fruit and viands which ladened the tables spread before them.

Tied, as most were, to steam or horse-cars, the company, at eleven o'clock, broke up, having spent a most enjoyable social occasion, and, grasping individually Mrs. Baxter's hand, each left with her a word of good intent, and bade her an affectionate "good night."

Original Essay.

THE TEACHINGS AND REQUIREMENTS OF SPIRITUALISM.

BY JAMES M. ROGERS.

It is not the province of Spiritualism to erect costly temples, reared with the ill-gotten wealth of grasping capitalists, or the hardly-spared pittances of the poor, but to create an individuality of thought—to build on earth a dwelling for the soul, which shall fitly lodge it now, and be its glorious habitation hereafter. It is not the spirit of its teachings, or within the scope of its divine revelation, to found a creed, or to prove a dogma; but to disseminate—for each and every one who will turn his eyes toward that ethereal radiance—the light that is just dawning upon our world, and will fill with brightness the world everlasting. It matters little to us—who stand aside from either group—the throng who still wear the voluntary badges of moral servitude to arrogant theologians, or boast of an ignorant freedom in the ranks of materialism; it matters little to us what may be the tone of the ever-changing voice of mortal opinion; but it concerns us nearly what the myriads of immortal lands will think of our deeds, and how they will judge them.

We learn from the teachings of Spiritualism not to rely upon the good deeds and blameless life of another—however elevated that example may be—for the retrieving of wrong-doing, but upon a selfhood of better actions, induced by higher aims and more ennobling inspirations. Its lessons imbue us with the sentiments that true repentance is only achieved by hourly watchfulness, and a constant course of dealing justly; and that a brief final renouncement of an evil life-time will not ensure present or lasting happiness.

It is nothing to us what others may think of our knowledge and our hopes, it is everything to us how we may come some day to regard the record of our lives; for there will remain in the imperishable archives of memory a silent evidence for or against us, whose decision must be final and conclusive. The ephemeral praise or censure of a transitory hour is as valueless as the volatile thistle-down; each changing breeze may blow in a contrary direction. The soldier who falters because some weak comrade has turned traitor is unfit to bear the colors of the army of Progress; and he who quits his place in the ranks, because he doubts the issue of the battle, can never share the rapture of that victory of victories, or listen to those harmonies unspeakable.

Spiritualism comes not with a sorrowful face; not to tell a doleful tale of a fallen manhood and a fallen womanhood, or of an earth cursed through all its inanimate kingdoms for human trangression; but it made its advent with the lofty sonnets of the stars, swelled by the innumerable songs of happy birds, and the sweet ripples of laughing waters, until the mighty measures filled the universe with rejoicing. It led no crusade against the fair and the beautiful, for every leaf that spread its graceful shade, and each flower that unfolded its rich tints of incarnate beauty, was an outward symbol of that spiritual universe, whose every form is clothed with beauty ineffable. It does not hush the innocent laughter of the gleeful child, lest sanctity should be shocked, for the expression of nature is happiness, and happiness is not sin.

Spiritualism has never inculcated the incontrovertible doctrine that the worship of a Spiritual Being must be spiritual, and then denied spirit communion and the innumerable offices of spirit influence. It has spoken—with no uncertain voice—through the many loving ones on the further shore; it is not that they do not speak to us, but that our ears are too dull to catch the celestial evangel. Prophets, seers and poets dwelt ages ago in that translucent atmosphere, but the world heeded not their illumined utterances. The snail, that slowly crept from wall to wall of crumbling faiths, mocked the princely eagle, who swept the ether on undaunted wing and gazed with open eyes upon the central sun of Truth.

Some seem to dread to be called Spiritualists, but it is an eternal honor—being right now and right forever—to own the name by which we shall be known through all the unfoldments of eternity. A cowardly trust will never redeem us or the Cause from scorn. Such Spiritualists as those are far behind the Christian of centuries past, who pinned the cross upon his breast and drew his sword for the martyr of Calvary. Times have changed, and Spiritualism asks not for the material sword of the trained soldier—the breath of inspiration is far greater than this—but it does demand that our voices shall be heard and our pens respond in unison to the highest truth and grandest cause that has ever touched our mortal shores. If neither the beatified trance nor the inspired pen are granted us, let us at least own the name by which we are called, and not swear, like so many nineteenth century Peters, "We know not Him of whom you speak."

Salem, Mass.

Gone Home.

Jonathan Stevens, of this city, passed quietly to spirit-life from his home, No. 7 Grove street, at 9:30 P. M. Thursday, Nov. 22d, after an earthly pilgrimage of 83 years.

Mr. Stevens espoused the cause of Spiritualism in its early days, and at a time when it cost a man his reputation not only among the church-goers but among his friends and townspeople to take such action. He found the reality of spirit communion through his own experience in mediumship; he had remarkably strong healing powers, which he was ever ready and willing to exercise as occasion required. He believed in making his Spiritualism practical, and for years opened his home for public investigation on the part of its friends or foes.

It was at the home of Mr. Stevens that the late Katie B. Robinson, so well and favorably known in this city and Lowell, Mass.—also in later years in Vineland, N. J., and Philadelphia, Pa.—held private and public séances, giving comfort and consolation to many.

For nearly forty years Mr. Stevens has been a worthy and consistent Spiritualist, working shoulder to shoulder with the late Isaac P. Greenleaf, and with Bro. N. S. Greenleaf, now at Lowell, this State, also James M. Palmer, of this city—all of them bold and true defenders of Spiritualism in its early days. Mr. Stevens was a regular attendant at meetings of the First Spiritualist Society of this city until the infirmities of his years compelled his absence—always wearing a smile and ready with a word of cheer for all his friends. We shall miss his encouraging words and ever-welcome presence in our midst, but feel sure of his present happiness among his kindred and family, the majority of whom preceded him to spirit life. W. W. C.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES. Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

The Boston Spiritual Temple—Berkeley Hall.—Last Sunday morning Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther addressed a crowded house on "The Necessity of a Better Unfoldment." "In the city of Boston prayers have been made millions of times. Instead of prayer let us commence a labor for a better intellectual and spiritual unfoldment. In all ages the intellectual qualities of man have been on the ascending scale and man's intellectual powers ever unfolding. With all this intellectual growth there has been a want of spiritual unfoldment. Without doubt there were never so many dark deeds committed in the city of Boston as at the present time. Little use is it to peer into the realms of the future while we neglect to strive to improve the conditions of the present. We have no right to expect much from the minister who to-day talks of the immaculate conception; no man is so dangerous to human society as the one who tries to induce the people to believe what he does not believe himself. None but know that if you want morality and spirituality to grow you must remove the obstacles that lie in the way of progress. Let the voice of the people be heard, and war, bloodshed and poverty will cease. Allow us to be ignorant and we are ready to be criminals; allow us to be enlightened, and we will be baptized with the realms of justice and build for ourselves a wall grand enough and large enough to encompass all."

Evening.—Mrs. Colby-Luther continued the subject of the morning: "As time chases itself along new ideas are presented to thinking minds. A few thousand years ago few men knew how to read and write, and all through the ages ignorance reigned. Few of the bishops who attended the celebrated Council were able to write. It is not strange that the people were fettered with superstition; they could not comprehend the questions of the time. I am satisfied that many years before what is called the Christian era man was a scientific being. Give him the liberty to do so and he will grow intellectually. The world has been sustained by the tidal wave of ignorance. A thousand years ago no one dared to express his best thought; but time, the great betrayer of all things, has in its age been writing page after page; each age has made its record. Genius has gone forth with the conditions of life as minds become absolved from darkness. Each time a necessity has come to suit the age. Now and then an individual steps forth in science and gives grand thoughts in advance of the age. All that the Bible ever taught that was of any importance was on a parallel line with spiritual thought. The church has never been called to demonstrate any new thing, no test-conditions have been expected of it. To its adherents the voice of the priest is all in all; nobody stops to ask anything of him, and the one who claims the highest pay is the poorest to fill the position.

Spiritualism was expressed many ages ago, long before the birth of Jesus, yet when it came no one was ready to meet it. You are surprised at the condition of the Fox girls, who years ago, in the innocence of childhood, were so unfolded. Those three little girls were made to feel their spirit visitors were demons. Wise men and fools alike denounced those children, and in the city of Rochester they would have been mobbed but for the protection of Amy Post. Mrs. Kane is known to have been exposed to bad conditions and untoward influences. You ask, why do the spirits allow it? and I answer by asking, Why do you not stop the crime and misery of to-day?

There is only one step from you to the lowest sphere, and one who may have been a spirit many hundred years cannot protect you unless conditions are favorable; we cannot control the law unless we are skilled in understanding it. I know of no realm that law does not govern organic life. The philosopher in your time never struggles for power, but in his own wisdom dedicates himself to his calling. Every phase of mediumship is governed by a power outside of the mediums themselves, and they should be protected. Bend your energies to help the oppressed, and we will ask humanity to come up higher."

Mrs. Luther will speak in Berkeley Hall every Sunday during December. Subject Sunday morning, December 9th, "Social Life in the Spirit-World; and The Reunion of Families." O. L. R.

The Ladies' Industrial Union, connected with the Boston Spiritual Temple, met at the home of Mrs. C. N. Mellen, 112 West Chester Park, on Thursday evening, Nov. 22d, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. A. A. Torrey; Vice-President, Mrs. O. E. Holmes; Treasurer, Miss Martha L. Moore; Secretary, Miss Emma J. Nickerson; for the several committees: Mrs. Helen S. Flint, Mrs. H. C. McInnis, Mrs. L. Scribner, Mrs. Charles Chittenden, Mrs. M. A. Davis, Mrs. Thayer.

Sociables, under the auspices of this Union, will be continued every Tuesday evening during the season at Langham Hall, Room No. 4, Berkeley Hall Building.
A. F. RING, Sec'y pro tem.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday Lyman C. Howe spoke on several questions from the audience, among which were: The source and nature of human responsibility. What causes the halo to appear around the Saviour's head, and what relation do colors bear to spiritual thought? How long since man first appeared on the earth? Does Adam and Eve mean the single man and woman, or are they expressions for a race of men and women? What of the flood? Is the Bible authentic or traditional in its early books?

The discourse was chiefly devoted to the first question. "Responsibility," he said, "depends on development and relationship. Everything is responsible to all with which it is in correspondence. Where there is no communion there is no responsibility. The closeness and completeness of relationship determine the nature and degree of responsibility. A tree is responsible to the soil, air, sunlight, and all environments upon which its life and growth depend; yet having no intellectual consciousness it cannot respond to the mental sphere, but to the laws that govern its physical nature it is responsible, and must answer to every demand.

The beast in the jungle is in correspondence with the physical world around him, having a measure of mentality to answer to the lower mental environments; but having no moral perceptions there can be no moral compact, no correspondence with superior sympathies, no appreciation of obligations, and hence no responsibility to moral laws. In the lower human types the dawn of moral perception appears, but so dim and weak as to exert little force upon character, and the spiritual correspondence is so feeble that many ages of discipline are required to awaken the feeling of full responsibility. Whatever insulates the spiritual nature destroys its responsibility, for it cannot answer to a sphere of causes or conditions with which it has no communication. In the proportion that our moral sympathies are developed will be our correspondence with the sphere of moral demands, and this is the necessary moral responsibility. The physically blind have no correspondence with light, color and the charms of natural beauty; and the morally blind have no correspondence with moral light and beauty, and therefore are not responsible to moral causes or demands. In the ratio of our reciprocal relations and close communion with every sphere of causes and every plane of environment must be our responsibility; and the extent of responsibility is the measure of character and the index of happiness.

The halo represented around the head of the Nazarene is the artistic expression of a common fact, not limited to any age or person. All heads and all bodies have an aura which represents character and conditions. Colors are manifestations also of conditions and activities of spirit and substance. All thoughts, to the spiritual eye, present a shade of hues indicative of the scale to which they belong. The superior thoughts of cultured minds are invisible to inferior natures, and transparent, though visible, to superior angels; but they all have a hue characteristic of their nature.

We cannot give exact dates of the order of creation, but from the best data we have we place men on this planet at least five hundred thousand years ago. Adam and Eve are mythological concepts of primitive development; Adam, organized earth, and Eve, the supplement thereto; not limited to one pair, nor one race, but to all races derived from the earth. The spiritual man was 'the Lord from Heaven.'

There have been many floods, but the Noachian flood as narrated in the Bible is clearly a fiction, though doubtless derived from a fact, as all other fiction is.

The Bible is both authentic and traditional. It teems with evidences of spiritual truth corroborated by modern experience, but bears the unmistakable proof of human ignorance and imperfection, and a mixture of fact and fancy, truth and error, as do all other ancient records. If we use it wisely, we can draw much from its treasury of experiences and moral axioms. If we let it use us, it is a bane instead of a blessing."

Mr. Howe speaks again next Sunday in the Temple at 2:45 P. M.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Last Sunday was Mediums' Day. Mrs. Maggie F. Butler, accompanied by several children from the Children's Progressive Lyceum, was present, adding very much to the interest of the occasion. The afternoon exercises opened with singing by Mrs. Mary Nickerson, Prof. Milligan accompanist. President Lewis spoke a word for the BANNER OF LIGHT, urging upon all the importance of subscribing for it. Dr. A. H. Richardson said: "Spiritualism is fast advancing, while old theology is falling backward, and the time is coming when we shall be as conscious of the presence of our spirit friends as we now are of our mortal. When we look over the world and see the sorrow and suffering in it, we ought to rejoice in the fact that there is no such thing as death, and all the churches must accept these truths or go back into materialism." Miss Eva Morrison sang very sweetly. Dr. W. S. Eldridge diagnosed disease for several persons in the audience very correctly. Miss Mabel Waite sang very finely. Mrs. Butler said she was very much attached to her spirit-guide, "Wildflower," and was determined to do the work laid out for her by the spirit-world, especially for the children. We want mediums that are taught from infancy, and then we shall have no need of prisons to do the work of reform. Mrs. C. F. Loring, of East Braintree, said she wished to do her part toward demonstrating the truths of Spiritualism. Spirit Henry F. Gardner controlled her, and urged upon all the importance of earnest effort to spread the grand and holy truths of Spiritualism. Fine tests of spirit presence were given, closing with a poem. David Brown remarked that we should each one of us consider ourselves a part of this great machine of life, a grand Sisterhood and Brotherhood. The living—for there are no dead—are all around us, and glad to give words of cheer. Several tests of spirit presence were given.

At the evening session Mrs. Eudora Case sang at the opening. Dr. Richardson spoke of the general truths of Spiritualism. Miss Gracie Scales sang, Bertie Newton gave a fine piano solo, Mrs. T. J. Lewis gave tests which were well received, and Mrs. Loomis-Hall psychometric readings, which were recognized as correct. Mrs. Maggie F. Butler said she had toiled seventeen years as a medium, and done much for the children, because she was a mother, and she could trust the children; she also trusted the angel-world, and for the past few years had talked with the spirits just the same as with mortals. Mrs. Butler gave tests to several skeptics, who acknowledged their correctness. Miss Maud Fitzgerald gave a song, as also did Mrs. Case, both being much appreciated. Dr. W. S. Eldridge gave diagnoses of disease, and Miss Emma Russell a recitation.

Mr. Joseph D. Stiles will occupy the platform next Sunday, and the usual Thursday evening test circle will be held, to which all are invited. HEATH.

First Independent Club.—There were fine audiences all day, and the various exercises were followed with great interest. Mr. J. W. Fletcher gave the afternoon lecture upon "For What Shall We Give Thanks?" in which he held that we were not to thank heaven for increased numbers or extended power alone, but rather for our advance in the cause of truth. Wealth of knowledge is the only true wealth, without which the king, with all his earthly power, is poor indeed. Several questions were asked and answered in an instructive and interesting manner.

In the evening there was a large increase of numbers, and after musical selections by Mrs. Case, who is hereafter to conduct the musical exercises, Miss Emma Nickerson delivered a stirring and impressive address, followed by Frank Algerton, the boy medium, who was surprisingly apt in his concise and appropriate remarks.

Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker was next introduced, and in her entertaining and inimitable way held the closest attention of the audience. In speaking of Col. Ingersoll, she said: "The day when he was my guest, and he was declaring that ministers were all either stupid or wicked, I said: Well, Colonel, I think you are the most bigoted liberal, and I am the most liberal bigot in the world. 'Why?' he asked. Because I have seven brothers who have been ministers, and my father was one; they were all good men in their way, and you must think I am very liberal or you would never dare in my presence to so speak of them."

She regretted that all the Spiritualists could not come together in some common place of worship, and, while doing their separate work, labor to a common end. There ought to be some grand temple—full of pictures and music and all that is beautiful, as in the Old World, and open all the time, so that those who are weary with the world could run in, if only for a moment, and get in harmony with themselves from the perfect harmony that would everywhere abound.

It is needless to say that Mrs. Beecher Hooker was repeatedly applauded.

Mrs. Fletcher, in a speech of great intensity and power, followed, and Mrs. Chandler, one of our oldest and most successful mediums, made the closing remarks, endorsing what had been so eloquently said, adding that nearly all those who consulted her were members of the church and apparently deeply interested in the truth.

The next meeting will be held on Friday at 2 P. M., in the Berkeley Hall Building, when a short address will be given. At 6 o'clock supper, and at 8 o'clock a fine entertainment. F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall.—Last Sunday the children who participated in the exercises were as follows: Readings by Gracie Scales, Alice Cummings, Emma Russell, Rosa Wilbor, Lillian Rich, Lottie Giles, Lulu Morse, Annie White, Addie Hazeltine and Hattie Dodge. Singing by Mabel Waite, Louise Barlow, Flossie Waite, Maude Fitzgerald and Eva Blanche Morrison.

To the Spiritualists of Boston and vicinity I would say that there is to be a Fair held in Berkeley Hall this month, commencing the 10th and continuing one week, by the members of the Association for the benefit of the Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1. Mrs. Wm. S. Butler and her assistants have been hard at work for weeks. Contributions have been sent from far and near, and thus far they have been almost entirely from people who are not Spiritualists, but are attracted to Mrs. Butler by knowing of the good work she is doing for the children. To all who have contributed to this Fair we wish to extend our sincere thanks. As this Lyceum is sustained and supported by a few people who realize the importance of having such an organization in our midst for the improvement of the young, and as it takes a considerable amount of funds to carry on such a Lyceum, will not the Spiritualists of Boston and vicinity help the members of the Lyceum in their good work by attending the Fair and contributing what they can without injury to themselves or their families? A fine programme will be offered every evening, of which due notice will be given. Spiritualists of Boston and vicinity, come and help us; and like the bread cast upon the waters, what you give will in some form return to you after many days. H. O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The three services held at this hall under the auspices of Mr. and Mrs. Eben Cobb last Sunday, were instructive and interesting. Mr. Cobb opened the services in the morning with an invocation, and then took up the Rev. De Witt Talmage's sermon as printed in the secular papers last week, and "diagnosed" his remarks in a common sense manner. A short address was then given by the spirit-guides of Mrs. Lull, which was well received. The usual talent for tests and psychometric readings followed interestingly. Mr. and Mrs. Cobb constitute an organization themselves, and manage their meetings in a harmonious manner for the benefit of their audiences.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society, 1031 Washington Street.—The regular meeting of this Society was well attended, and the interest manifested by its members seems unabated, as a large number of new members are being taken in weekly. On Friday and Saturday afternoon and evening, Dec. 7th and 8th, the annual sale of aprons and fancy articles will be held, the sale to conclude Saturday evening with a dance; fine music will be provided, and we hope to see all our friends on this occasion. Refreshments will be served both days, and a good time may be expected. ALICE P. TORREY, Sec.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Sunday, December 2d, three meetings held at this place were highly interesting. Mr. McKenzie, Mr. Eames, Mrs. J. T. Lewis, Mrs. Robbins, Dr. E. H. Mathews, Mrs. Loring, Dr. Thomas, Dr. Barker, Miss Florence Spence and Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Whitlock participated. Mr. W. spoke very highly of the meeting in Eagle Hall and its management. F. W. M.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualist Meetings were held here Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. Large and interested audiences were in attendance throughout the day; and the usual programme was presented. M. H. HOLT.

Arcanum Hall, 57 West 25th Street, N. E. corner 6th Avenue.—Meetings of the Progressive Spiritualists are held every Sunday at 3 and 8 P. M. Reliable speakers and test mediums always present in spirit phenomenal gifts. Prof. G. G. W. Van Horn, Conductor.

Meetings for Spiritual Manifestations will be held at Adelphi Hall, corner 7th Avenue and 52d street, New York, every Sunday at 2½ P.M. Tests given by Mrs. E. A. Wells of New York.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A.M. and 7½ P. M. Admission free.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke in the morning upon several subjects, among them: "Do spirits of other planets communicate with us through our mediums?" "What kind of a body does a spirit occupy?" "Do not advanced spirits know for a certainty whether reincarnation is a fact or not? If so, why is it not given to us to know?" She also considered several subjects for poems. Mrs. Brigham spoke in her usual easy manner, as though the fountain of inspiration was increasing and would never go dry.

Mrs. Brigham discoursed in the evening upon the text: "Fear God and keep his commandments. Fear God and love Him. Perfect love casteth out fear."

Next Sunday evening, by request, her subject will be: "The uses of light and shadows, prosperity and adversity, in our human experience."

At the Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon there was a very large audience, that listened with great attention to the very instructive and entertaining programme, which consisted of a piano solo, "Mignon," by Charles Tyshesy, and beautifully rendered by Miss Ella F. Porter; a solo by the "Queen of Song," Miss Lilly Rumals; "Just a Song at Twilight," by "Malloy"; a whistling solo, "Flower Song," Lange, by Miss Mamie Horton, (encore, "Alma Schottische.")

Mrs. Henry J. Newton read a spirit message that had beautiful expression of sentiment. Mark M. Pomeroy gave an original view of "the cranks"—original thinkers who have lived as mediums and benefactors of mankind. It was listened to with profound attention. Mrs. Annie C. Henderson gave several satisfactory psychological readings. Miss Mamie Horton whistled a second solo, "At the Meadow Bars," by W. G. Smith. Congregational singing closed the pleasant entertainment.

Next Sunday afternoon there will be the usual musical service by the same artists, who have been engaged for the season. M. M. ("Brick") Pomeroy will lecture next Sunday afternoon on "What I Saw in London." Mr. Pomeroy never fails to interest his hearers. S.

People's Spiritual Meeting.

Topics of interest are constantly being presented for investigation and inquiry at these sessions. Last evening the Conductor, Mr. Davis, Mrs. Spencer, Mrs. Morrell and Miss Viel (lately from Onset) participated.

Our afternoon sessions are given for mediumistic exercises and development, and they often prove profitable and pleasant. F. W. JONES.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Brooklyn.

Johnston Building, Flatbush Avenue, near Fulton.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock. F. W. Jones, Conductor.

Brooklyn Progressive Conference.—Dr. E. V. Wright, now of Brooklyn, spoke instructively before the Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference Saturday evening, 1st inst., and the Conference exercises were participated in by C. L. Harris, Mrs. H. M. Walton, D. Ellsworth and Dr. J. C. Wyman. Mrs. F. M. Holmes, inspirational speaker and writer, will give the opening address, Saturday, 8th inst. Mr. W. W. Sargeant will speak the 15th, and Mrs. H. M. Walton will give an inspirationally-written essay on "Benedict Spinoza" Saturday evening, Dec. 22d. The 29th is set apart especially for the mediums. All these exercises will be held in Preparatory School Hall, Johnston Building, Flatbush Avenue, near Fulton, services to commence at eight o'clock. Bro. Samuel D. Greene is always on hand early, with a good supply of spiritual papers and magazines, and the friends are requested to patronize him early in the evening.
FRANK W. JONES, Conductor.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Prof. W. F. Peck began a month's engagement with most encouraging successs. He spoke in the morning, detailing his evolution from Methodism to Spiritualism; and in the evening upon "The Science of Immortality," to an audience that crowded the large hall.

His lectures were received with many demonstrations of applause. The cause is experiencing a genuine revival in this city. L. R. C.

2139 Uber Place, Dec. 2d.

G. W. Kates and wife have established their home in Philadelphia, where they intend to hold meetings when they are not filling engagements at other places. Columbia Hall, corner Columbia and Park Avenues, has been rented for their use. The first meeting was held Sunday night, Dec. 2d. Mr. Kates gave a practical address upon Spiritualism, which outlined its utility and prospects. His address was well received. Mrs. Kates rendered an improvised song, and gave a number of spirit tests and descriptions, which were generally recognized. She impressed all that she is a medium of superior attainments. Excellent music and singing graced the exercises. The hall was well filled by people of evident culture. Mr. and Mrs. Kates will find a grand field of labor here, and we trust that our friends will give them a generous support. FIELD.

New Philadelphia, O.—Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings has just finished a course of three lectures on "The Ethical Teachings of Spiritualism." The lectures were free, by the liberality of many of our people who are not "to the manor born" contributing to a guarantee fund. Mrs. R., in addition to being an excellent inspirational medium, is also a finished elocutionist and vocalist, and entertained her large audiences each evening with songs and recitations, in which she seems thoroughly at home on the stage. She also gave several wonderful psychometrical delineations of character which were endorsed by a majority of the audience as being correct. At the close of her course she gave a select séance or circle, at which several deceased persons well known to the circle were reported present. Considerable interest was manifested at the meetings, and some who had never given the subject any thought are beginning to investigate.

Lecturers going from East to West over the Panhandle Railway can reach this place and stop over without much delay. Address, C. H. Matthews, New Philadelphia, O. Yours fraternally, M.

Albany, N. Y.—Frank T. Ripley has finished his November engagement with our society, and his work has been highly successful in attracting large audiences to our hall, and many persons have been enlightened spiritually by the efforts of himself and guides. "Jim," the guide for tests, was very accurate and truthful, and gave many details that served to convince skeptics that "there is something in it."

Mrs. E. Cutler begins a month's engagement Dec. 2d. She comes among us a stranger; we trust her efforts may be successful in convincing many seekers after the truth which brings tidings of great joy to all the world.

THE BANNER is a great favorite with our people, and I would not do without it under any circumstances. My father began to take it in 1864.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Sunday, Dec. 2d, Mrs. E. Clark Kimball was again before the Brittan Hall Spiritualists, and the day being exceptionally fine, she was greeted by great audiences, whose members were deeply impressed by what they were listening to. There were many long communications given by invisible intelligences, containing elements of interest to friends. The spirits speaking represented various localities, and a large portion of them were recognized.—Next Sunday Miss Jennie Rhind of Boston, the Scotch seeress, will occupy the platform.
E. P. H.

Springfield, Mass.—J. W. Fletcher addressed large and interested audiences on Sunday. In the afternoon he spoke upon "Christian Science," which he designated as milk-and-water Spiritualism, very useful to those who had not the moral courage to bear the odium of an unpopular truth. The evening found the hall full, and many of the tests that followed the lecture were acknowledged to be true.

THE BANNER OF LIGHT is on sale at all these lectures.

Fitchburg, Mass.—J. D. Stiles, of Weymouth, Mass., lectured and gave tests for the First Spiritualist Society Nov. 25th and Dec. 2d. On the last named date we had a large audience, and the people responded readily to the names given—a hundred and forty-five; all but seventeen were recognized. The 9th and 16th of the present month Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock speaks and gives readings. E. S. LORING, Sec'y.

The Debate in Cleveland, O.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The first night of the debate between J. Clegg Wright and Rev. S. S. Bartlett, a Campbellite clergyman, came off on the evening of Nov. 20th, upon the proposition "That the mental and physical phenomena of Modern Spiritualism can only be explained upon the hypothesis that they are produced by decarnated men and women, called spirits," Mr. Wright affirming, Mr. Bartlett denying. It was a marked triumph for our Cause, though great credit was due the clergyman for his bravery in "boarding the lion in his den." Mr. Wright won new honors by the highly intellectual manner he treated his side of the subject. Mr. B. brought all the old arguments he could against Modern Spiritualism, and some new ones, and at times became eloquent, but Mr. W. met him at every point and showed himself a master in polemical contests. All declared that the debate should have lasted a week instead of two nights. T. L.

Haverhill, Mass., Unity Hall.—E. B. Fairchild, of Stoneham, Mass., occupied the platform before the First Spiritualist Society of this city Sunday, Dec. 2d. Good audiences were in attendance. The subject of the two P. M. lecture was "Belief and Knowledge." How much we believe and how little we know, said the speaker, regarding the great questions of immortal life and the possibilities of this life. Human experience was ever demonstrating the fact that the more we learn the more we see there is to be learned; the mental horizon was ever widening.

The evening lecture was founded upon the legend of the manna in the wilderness; as the manna was to be gathered fresh every day, so the spiritual food to satisfy man must be fresh every morning. The things of day before yesterday cannot serve the appetite of to-day.—Miss Emma J. Nickerson will occupy the same platform next Sunday. W. W. CURRIER.

Buffalo, N. Y.—I would like to place before your many readers the fact that Buffalo has at last reached the point when she can claim the existence of a Spiritual Society.

Since the close of our Cassadaga Camp-Meeting, Sept. 1st, Mrs. R. S. Lillie and her husband, with Edgar W. Emerson, have filled an engagement of a month; Walter Howell has been with us for the month of October. Walter has accepted a call from a Unitarian Church at Erie, Pa., and he will not be often heard from the platform spiritual in the future. He is a good Spiritualist and a good speaker.

Bishop A. Beals has just closed his engagement for November with us, and J. Frank Baxter will occupy our platform for December; Frank Algerton will be here in January. So you see that we are getting a feast of good things, and the work is progressing finely.
J. W. DENNIS.

Port Huron, Mich.—It was my good fortune to be invited, with J. H. Haslett and others, to spend Sunday, the 28th Oct., at Pine Lake, as guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Potter, where we enjoyed a pleasant day, smiled on by the sunlight of nature in one of its quiet November days. During the time we were there arrangements were perfected for the holding of the THIRD ANNUAL CAMP-MEETING AT HASLETT PARK, beginning July 25th, and ending Aug. 26th, 1889. Everything seems to point to a larger gathering than ever. The warm interest of the friends will make it a success. Good speakers were selected, whom all will be pleased to hear. J. H. WHITE.

Lynn, Mass.—Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., lectured and gave tests for the First Progressive Spiritual Society, at Exchange Hall, Sunday afternoon and evening. The audiences were good and appreciative. Numerous tests and messages were given, which were nearly all recognized. Dr. Merrill will occupy our platform Sunday, Dec. 9th, at 2:30 and 7 P. M.
COR.

Providence, R. I.—GERALD MASSEY lectured for us last Sunday on "The Devil of Darkness," and a good audience greeted him. The Sunday previous he spoke on "Man in Search of His Soul." The few people who braved the severe "blizzard" that prevailed on that occasion were more than repaid by the remarkably fine discourse. His lecture in Music Hall on "Shakspeare and Bacon" on Saturday evening was pronounced by the best Shaksperean scholars to be a most capital essay. The Free Religion Society here is endeavoring to secure Mr. Massey for a Sunday lecture.

Next Sunday Mrs. Isabella Beecher Hooker speaks for us. E. H. WHITNEY.

Ada Foye in Cleveland, O.

This distinguished medium from San Francisco made her first bow before a Cleveland audience to-night. The hall was thronged. She is truthfully able to say, "veni, vidi, vici." She continues here throughout the month.

The Ghosts,

AND OTHER LECTURES.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear, beating against the shores and rocks of time and fate, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as Love kisses the lips of Death.

This work treats upon various subjects, viz: The Liberty of Man, Woman and Child. Liberty sustains the same relation to Mind that Space does to Matter. The Declaration of Independence. One Hundred Years Ago our Fathers Retired the Gods from Politics. About Farming in Illinois. To Plow is to Pray; to Plant is to Prophesy, and the Harvest Answers and Fulfills. The Grant Banquet. Twelfth Toast—Response by Robert G. Ingersoll, November, 1879. Rev. Alexander Clark. The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream. Extract from a Speech delivered at the Soldiers' Reunion at Indianapolis, Sept. 21, 1876.

This work is elegantly bound and printed in clear, bold type, on heavy, tinted paper.

The author takes the ground that man belongs to himself, and that each individual should at all hazards maintain his intellectual freedom.

Original Essay.

THE GENESIS OF THOUGHT.

BY A. E. NEWTON.

In Two Parts—Part I.

"Whence come our thoughts?" is a problem which, in some of its phases, has puzzled the mind of many a thinker and writer, from the earliest days to the present hour; and various answers have been essayed by mental philosophers of different schools.

The more ordinary and commonplace grades of thought are perhaps sufficiently explained as being the results of the stimulus afforded by the perceptions of the senses, as they take cognizance of the facts of external nature, and of the expressed thoughts of other minds, acting upon that subtle something in ourselves which is called mind. These ordinary mental activities result in the production of certain ideas, comparisons, conceptions, deductions, opinions, etc., which make up the staple of common thought.

But many people—perhaps most people—are conscious at times of flashes of thought, or gleams of interior perception, which they can in no way trace to any external source, or connect with any sensuous mode of communication. These in some cases are attended by imagery and symbolism of the loftiest and most poetic character, and are capable of being expanded into essays or poems of greater or less length, and embodying consecutive ideas often of great beauty and value. Not only poems with all their glowing imagery, and expositions of philosophic truth, but also the plots of noted works of fiction with their multitudinous and artistic details, and conceptions of great inventions, by which the subtle forces of nature have been subdued to human service, have been seemingly injected into the human mind by this extraordinary process.

Sometimes these flashes or visions come in dreams, in the hours of natural sleep, leaving vivid impressions that remain on awakening; again they come in passive moments between sleeping and waking; and still again, in many instances, in full wakefulness, but in times of mental quiet, abstraction, perhaps in partial seclusion, and always doubtless in states of receptivity or of yearning desire for something yet unattained.

The problem of the source of this order of mental phenomena—these injections of thought, commonly called inspirations—finds an adequate and rational solution alone in the philosophy of Modern Spiritualism; while such a solution, to be wholly satisfactory, necessitates the recognition of invisible intelligences of some order, as having access to the human mind and ability to communicate to it under certain conditions.

Many of the prominent thinkers and writers of our time have recognized their dependence upon and indebtedness to some invisible or spiritual agency, distinct from and foreign to themselves, for the highest and grandest thoughts they have given to the world, and even for framing the fitly chosen sentences in which those thoughts have been expressed. Some seem to have but vague and confused notions of what that agency is, at times using language which might imply that it is merely "automatic, unconscious action," or some occult and mysterious power pertaining wholly to themselves; and others again clearly acknowledge the dictation of an intelligence "ab extra," i. e., outside of themselves. The following remarkable passage is cited from Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, in his essay on "Mechanism in Thought and Morals." I take the liberty to italicise some lines:

"The more we examine the mechanism of thought, the more we shall see that the automatic unconscious action of the mind enters largely into all its processes. Our definite ideas are stepping-stones; how we get from one to the other, we do not know: something carries us; we do not take the step. A creating and informing spirit which is with us, and not of us, is recognized everywhere in real and in storied life. It is the Zeus that kindled the rage of Achilles; it is the Muse of Homer; it is the Daimon of Socrates; it is the inspiration of the seer; it is the mocking devil that whispers to Margaret as she kneels at the altar; and the hobgoblin that cried, 'Sell him! Sell him!' in the ear of John Bunyan; it shaped the forms that filled the soul of Michael Angelo when he saw the figure of the great Lawgiver in the yet unhewn marble, and the dome of the world's yet unbuilt basilica against the blank horizon; it comes to the least of us, as a voice that will be heard; it tells us what we must believe; it frames our sentences; it lends a sudden gleam of sense or eloquence to the dullest of us all, so that like Katterfelto with his hair on end, we wonder at ourselves, or rather not at ourselves, but at this divine visitor, who chooses our brain as his dwelling-place, and invests our naked thought with the purple of the kings of speech or song."...

"There is," he continues, "a Delphi and a Pythoness in each human breast.... The poet always recognizes a dictation ab extra; and we hardly think it a figure of speech when we talk of his inspiration. The mental attitude of the poet while writing, if I may venture to define it, is that of the 'nun breathless with adoration.' Mental stillness is the first condition of the listening state; and I think my friends the poets will recognize that the sense of effort, which is often felt, accompanies the mental spasm by which the mind is maintained in a state at once passive to the influx from without, and active in seizing only that which will serve its purpose."...

"And so the orator... only becomes our master at the moment when he himself is surprised, captured, taken possession of by a sudden rush of fresh inspiration."

Such is the testimony of Dr. Holmes himself the most honored poet, philosopher and physiologist in one, of which our country at present can boast. It is to the effect that poets, orators, and men of genius in all time, in their grandest and worthiest achievements, are the subjects of a genuine influx of thoughts from a source beyond themselves—"a dictation ab extra"—and it is this alone which gives them commanding power.

In this connection it is worthy of note that Dr. Holmes gives utterance to a weighty opinion on the subject of plagiarism by inspired writers, which has a not less important bearing on the doctrine of plenary inspiration as held by one class of theologians. In describing the mental experiences accompanying the rush of inspirational influx, he says:

"It is not strange that remembered ideas should often take advantage of the crowd of thoughts, and smuggle themselves in as original. Honest thinkers are always stealing unconsciously from each other. Our minds are full of waifs and estrays which we think are our own. Innocent plagiarism turns up everywhere."

This being so, as an obviously necessary result of the constitution of the human mind, not only is the liability to unconscious and innocent plagiarism apparent, but it follows that the extreme notions of verbal infallibility with which some religionists are wont to invest the writings of ancient inspired men are extremely improbable, if not impossible. At all events, the numerous discrepancies, faults of memory, errors of quotation, etc., which a careful criticism detects in these ancient inspired writings are readily explainable on the principle suggested by Dr. Holmes. The "remembered ideas" of the writers (correct or incorrect) sometimes "took advantage of the crowd of thoughts, and smuggled themselves in." This shows the folly of accepting as absolute truth the words of any inspired writer, ancient or modern, merely because they are inspired.

But to return to our main topic. Thackeray, the novelist, by many considered the prince of recent English fiction-writers, bears similar testimony to the origin of his ideas largely in a source outside of and beyond himself, over which he had no control. In one of his "Roundabout Papers," "De Finibus," he takes his readers into his confidence, and after describing his "Pegasus" (or power of authorship) as a most stubborn and intractable animal, which he could never compel to do his own bidding, but which would go its own way in spite of him, he says:

"I have been surprised at the observations made by some of my own characters. It seems as if an occult Power was moving the pen. The personage does or says something, and I ask, How the dickens did he come to think of that? Every man has remarked in dreams the vast dramatic power which is sometimes evinced; I won't say the surprising power, for nothing does surprise you in dreams. But those strange characters you meet make instant observations of which you can never have thought previously. In like manner, the imagination foretells things. We spake anon of the inflated style of some writers. What also if there is an agitated style—when a writer is a Pythoness on her oracle tripod, and mighty words, words which he cannot help, come blowing, and bellowing, and whistling, and moaning through the speaking pipes of his bodily organ?"

This brings to mind the remarkable testimony, in the same direction, of that prince of modern philosophers, Ralph Waldo Emerson, who in his essay on "The Oversoul" gives us the following glimpse of his personal experience as a thinker and author:

"Man is a stream whose source is hidden. Our being is descending into us from we know not whence. . . . I am constrained every moment to acknowledge a higher origin for events than the will I call mine. As with events, so it is with our thoughts. When I watch that flowing river [of thought], which, out of regions I see not, pours for a season its streams into me, I see that I am a pensioner; not a cause, but a surprised spectator of this ethereal water; that I desire, and look up, and put myself in the attitude of reception, but from some alien energy the visions come."

Mr. Thackeray, in connection with his own experience as quoted above, cites that of Dumas, the great French novelist, which, though presenting a somewhat different phase, yet points in the same direction. It recognizes the value of mental quiet, seclusion, abstinence, or the attitude of receptivity, as the condition requisite for the ingestion of a plot for a work in his own mind:

"Alexandre Dumas describes himself, when inventing the plan of a work, as lying silent on the deck of a yacht in a Mediterranean port. At the end of two days he arose and called for dinner. In those two days he had built his plot. He had molded a mighty clay, to be cast presently in perennial brass. The chapters, the characters, the incidents, the combinations were all arranged in the artist's brain ere he set pen to paper."

Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, reputed author of that singular psychological creation entitled "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," which has recently caused such a sensation in literary and theatrical circles, gave to an interviewer the following curious account of its origin:

"On one occasion I was very hard up for money, and I felt that I had to do something. I thought and thought, and tried hard to find a subject to write about. At night I dreamed the story, not precisely as it is written, for of course there are always stupidities in dreams, but practically it came to me as a gift, and what makes it appear to me the more odd is that I am quite in the habit of dreaming stories."

It is well known that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, whose story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has been probably the most widely-read and effective work in the line of moral fiction ever produced in this world, has always declined to be regarded as the real author of that work. She has insisted that it was dictated to her mind from an invisible and superior source, and that she only acted the part of an amanuensis. Recently she is reported as saying, rather bluntly, to a gentleman who congratulated her as the writer of the book: "I did not write it!" "Who did, then?" asked the gentleman, in amazement. "God wrote it," she replied. "I merely did his dictation."

Precisely what idea Mrs. Stowe entertains of the method of divine agency in her case—whether she conceives that God, as a limited personal being, actually came to her, and put into her mind the ideas embodied in that entertaining work, word by word, and sentence by sentence, through the weeks and months occupied in its production, thus making it a plenarily inspired book in the Orthodox sense—or whether she merely regards God as the Infinite Spirit of Good, pervading the universe, and acting in and through all finite intelligences who love good and desire to do it, and thus in a large sense may be said to be the author of all good acts, by whomsoever performed—which of these conceptions Mrs. Stowe entertains, her language does not indicate. If the former, it is to be feared that many of her Orthodox brethren and sisters will solemnly protest against their God being presented in the rôle of a novel-writer—the immediate inventor of the tricks of Topsy, the barbarities of Legree, and all the details of that ingenious story! But if she adopts the broader conception, then there is no difficulty in recognizing finite spiritual beings, or ministering spirits, as the actual personal agents in executing the Divine Will, and hence the messengers employed in inspiring human minds on earth. These angelic messengers are doubtless the real, personal forms in which the Infinite Spirit presents himself to the children of earth. But these divine messengers have each an individuality of his own, and a sphere of personal freedom, within the limits of which individual peculiarities and individual genius have their full play, and hence may readily be conceived of as the inspiring authors of useful works of any class.

All the distinguished writers above cited agree in attributing their best productions—the highest and grandest creations of genius through their agency—to an origin outside of, above and beyond themselves. Many more testimonies to the same point might be quoted; and doubtless were all men and women of genius equally frank and equally clear-sighted, they would, with Emerson, humbly confess themselves "pensioners—not causes, but surprised spectators" of the tide of thought which "at seasons out of regions they see not, pours its streams into them." Small minds, narrowed by egotism and self-conceit, are often disposed to claim that all the higher creations of intellect and flashes of genius that may be exhibited through themselves are the exogitations of their own unaided minds, or perhaps the product of some occult power wholly within and of themselves, working subtly and unconsciously; and they are wont to claim credit and honor accordingly. But the highest merit is always modest; true genius is attended by humility, while egotism necessarily closes the avenues of the highest inspiration.

The God Idea.

As long as mankind form their ideas of God from the Bible they will clothe him with attributes unworthy of a perfect being. Thomas Paine asks the suggestive questions:

"Is man ever to be the dupe of priestcraft, the slave of superstition? Is he never to have just ideas of his Creator? It is better not to believe there is a God than to believe of him falsely. When we behold the mighty universe that surrounds us, and dart our contemplation into the eternity of space, filled with innumerable orbs revolving in eternal harmony, how paltry must the tales of the Old and New Testaments, profanely called the word of God, appear to thoughtful man? The stupendous wisdom and unerring order that reign and govern throughout this wondrous whole, and call us to reflection, put to shame the Bible! The God of eternity and of all that is real, is not the God of passing dreams and shadows of man's imagination! The God of truth is not the God of a fable; the belief of a God begotten and a God crucified is a God blasphemed—it is making a profane use of reason.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.—For four hundred years the human race has not made a step but what has left its plain vestige behind. We enter now upon great centuries. The sixteenth century will be known as the age of painters, the seventeenth will be termed the age of writers, the eighteenth the age of philosophers, the nineteenth the age of apostles and prophets.

To satisfy the nineteenth century it is necessary to be the painter of the sixteenth, the writer of the seventeenth, the philosopher of the eighteenth, and it is also necessary, like Louis Blanc, to have the innate and holy love of humanity, which constitutes an apostolic, and opens up a prophetic vista into the future. In the twentieth war will be dead, the scaffold will be dead, animosity will be dead, royalty will be dead, and dogmas will be dead, but man will live. For all there will be but one country—and that country the whole earth; for all, there will be but one hope—that hope the whole heaven. All hail, then, to that noble twentieth century which shall own our children, and which our children shall inherit!—Victor Hugo.

PROFIT-SHARING—No. 2.

BY GEORGE A. BACON.

Recently in these columns, under the above heading, the writer briefly referred to a very commendable case of profit-sharing on the part of an extensive flour-mill firm in the great Northwest, Messrs. Pillsbury & Co., Minneapolis, Minn. It was but one of many of a like character, though the latest the particulars of which were known to us. Every additional case of this kind manifests a growing disposition on the part of employers to meet more than half way and recognize at its proper worth the service rendered by their employés.

While the economic relations of life are struggling, with more or less success, to settle themselves upon a basis of equity, it is no less a duty than a pleasure to make public record of each and every instance where the principle of profit-sharing has been practically adopted, knowing that this process of adjustment between labor and capital, between employer and employé; that this form of mutual partnership, this comprehensive scheme of practical coöperation, has every consideration to commend it.

Briefly outlined, profit-sharing presents itself as follows: Allow current rates of interest for capital invested. After paying fair salaries, necessary expenses, etc., divide the surplus pro rata among those who assist in producing it, adjusting wages to the relative value of each employé.

Our industrial system is founded upon profits secured through rivalry. By competition but few can succeed, and then only at the expense of others. In profit-sharing, on the contrary, all being reciprocally related, each assists the other and the whole are benefited. A direct pecuniary interest stimulates industry and increases responsibility. A sense of personal ownership creates a conserving power in every community where it exists.

In a system of profit-sharing, "strikes," "lock-outs," etc., become unknown. The relation of boss and laborer, instead of antagonizing, becomes harmonizing. Instead of war, peace reigns. Under a well-devised scheme of profit-sharing, the conflicting interests that grow out of competition no longer exist; they become merged into one accordant, harmonious whole. The most simple-minded realizes that his own interests are directly increased in proportion as he faithfully works for others; that he becomes a part owner in the labor and material furnished by his fellow-associates. The result is that self-respect, self reliance and self-improvement naturally follow.

The following instances where profit sharing has been adopted came to our notice during the past year. Doubtless there are many more that have not found special mention in the daily press. About two years ago the firm of Norton Bros., Chicago, having voluntarily offered to divide a portion of their profits for the year among their two hundred and fifty employes who worked continuously for six months, subsequently divided the sum of $13,275 among them. Each employé received over seven and a half per cent. on his year's earnings, which ranged from $500 to $1500. This extra amount was from $38.50 to $77.70.

A Cincinnati firm (Messrs. Proctor & Gamble, manufacturers), toward the beginning of last year, proposed to their help that every six months an investigation should be made of their business, and that after allowing six per cent. on their capital and reasonable salaries to members of the firm, the remainder should be divided among the employés in proportion to the capital and the wages earned. This offer was received with thanks, and a promise was given that no outside influence should disturb the cordial relations between them and their employers.

When the late new proprietor of the Detroit Evening Journal, W. H. Brealy, Esq., took possession of that paper, a year ago last May, he announced that at the end of each year his intent was to divide a percentage of the profits among his employés in addition to their usual salaries. And here is a case where the capital is represented by a corporation! President Ashley, of the Toledo, Ann Arbor & No. Michigan Railroad Co., not long since submitted the following proposition: That all officials and employés of the Company who shall have been continuously in its service for five years or more, shall, in addition to the regular wages paid to each, receive an amount which shall equal the proportion hereinafter named of such dividend on the capital stock as may be declared by the board of directors of the Company in any one year.

Here is the case of the great dry-goods merchant of Philadelphia, John Wanamaker, Esq., recently mentioned as likely to become a member of President Harrison's cabinet. Having resolved to divide the profits acquired by the combined unification of capital and labor with the employés through whose assistance he was enabled to accomplish such satisfactory results, he called together four thousand of these employés last spring and distributed among these men and women $59,158.66, arising from monthly dividends, from April, 1887, to March, 1888; and in addition to this $40,281.02, covering annual dividends, was divided among "seven-year employés," those who have performed an unbroken service during this period of time; a large sum was also paid over to trustees as a pension fund, the total amount aggregating $109,439.68. But why go away from home? Boston itself furnishes at least three notable instances of this beneficent scheme for the amelioration and encouragement of those in their respective employ. Foremost, the Boston Herald, to its credit be it known, has adopted this worthy plan. It can well afford to do it, as it is a very successful concern, but this exceptional action is none the less commendable.

A popular dealer in fancy goods, on Washington street, gave notice to his help last year that it was his intention to divide the profits of his extensive business with those who have been in his employ one year, each January in future. He will divide one-half of the net profits over a certain sum reserved for himself, this to be based on the previous year's business. The employés are to be separated into three classes: those in the first class comprising all who have been in his service five years or upward; the second class, those from three to five years; the third class, those from one to three years.

Personally I would go out of my way to trade with such a merchant.

The Workingmen's Coöperative Bank of Boston is also practically run on this basis. It has proved to be a very successful institution—and justly so.

In these days of gigantic "trusts," "corners," "combines"—heartless monopolies of every kind and character—no one expects that the element of selfishness in man is to be eradicated. Implanted for a wise purpose, it only needs to be wisely directed. But in the economies of life to seek to substitute more righteous and equitable relations for those that generally prevail, is always in order. Hence the emphasis given to the foregoing instances of practical coöperation in profit-sharing. Let these examples become multiplied a thousand fold. The relief that is born of confidence, and which brings legitimate increase, moral and financial success, awaits all such economic action.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 1888.

THINGS WORTH RECORDING.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A letter lies before me which probably expresses the question asked by many at this time. The writer says:

"I knew the compiler of Dr. Kane's letters. She was a woman of much power, and had done her part in the literary world forty years ago. I had confidence in her desire to do justice to a young woman. If it now that Margaret Fox has acknowledged to forty years of fraud and deceit, must we not infer that her declarations in regard to her alleged personal matters were also false? And did not Mrs. Ellett take upon herself a task that had better have been left undone?

We all honored Dr. Kane for his courage and his power. We do not wish to associate his name with deceit or trickery. Will Miss Fox relinquish her claim to his name as readily as she has to the respect and confidence of those who met her long ago, and have not followed the devious ways of her later life?"

Are not these questions pertinent?

And this makes us anxious to turn back to the pages of the worn, battered diary which represents the past. How yellow the leaves are! how poorly they represent the thoughts that once sought to fix themselves there! We will not quote from these pages chronologically, but as subjects suggest:

"NEW YORK, May, 1856.—To-day met a friend on Broadway, who said, 'Come, let us go in and see Katie Fox. It will cost you nothing; good show, cheap.' How my mind revolted from this business-like presentation of what is at least claiming the attention of earnest men and women. But I had a good share of curiosity, and said, 'Why for nothing? must people not live? and hiring rooms takes money, as I have sadly learned.' 'Oh! a rich man pays all expenses, and lets us poorer mortals partake freely of what he calls a feast. See, there is Charles Partridge going in. Let me introduce you.'

'Not now,' I said, holding back my name as if it might possibly be read by a table.

The room we entered was like many up-stairs Broadway rooms. A common table was in the centre. A half-dozen fine-browed men sat reverently near, and Miss Fox held her hands lightly on the boards. Her smile of welcome was beautiful to look upon. Her face bore a radiance and a confident serenity that claimed attention at once. I was charmed with her. I longed to put my hand on hers and respond to her gentleness. But a kind of awe filled me, for amid the roar of Broadway there was distinctly heard the delightful rap. I say delightful, for I know of nothing that holds one, mind, ears, eyes, in expectancy and hope, as do those proofs of a power outside of human control. Sweet messages were being spelled to the sitters, simple words of love; 'trite,' my friends say; but what words of love are not just as old as the English language, and just as oft repeated as human hearts feel the thrill of life? But, alas for my hope! I got no words, but was nevertheless satisfied. That fair young girl seemed like a priestess to me. I could not prove that she was all she seemed—one called to a great work. I looked at her reverently; I called her beautiful, and I felt that back of her was a power as infinite as the universe.

I liked the self-possession of Charles Partridge. His manner seemed to say, 'What have I to do with sentiment? Here, in this great world, I seek for facts, and when I find one I hold on to it. He will have a hard tussle who tries to wrench it from me.' He invited me most cordially to call at the office of the Spiritual Telegraph, 342 Broadway, and I shall go. I want to see a man in the midst of his work who has wealth and power and position and yet devotes all to an unpopular fact."

This inspires me to turn over the pages of my journal for a later impression:

"May, 1868.—To-day I called at a fashionable house on 30th street, and learned that dinner had just been served, and most of the participants had left. Among those present were Katie and Margaretta Fox, they still remaining at the table, and the hostess also. Would I go down and see some wonders? The extension table was spread from end to end of a large room. The crystal and delicate china of the after-courses were still on the table. While still standing three feet from the table a tremendous noise, as of a sledge-hammer, came apparently upon the table. The table then vibrated so that the glass rattled, and it perceptibly raised from the floor. Then the ordinary raps, clear and distinct, came, and [by aid of the alphabet] gave short messages of love and hope. What are all these phenomena except what they purport to be? I have an acquaintance in Washington who professes that she can make sounds with her toe-joints. We had a trial. Thin, snapping sounds there were, much like the sounds from finger-joints displaced, but no ringing, electric sounds. This one sledge-hammer rap was the loudest I ever heard, and seems to me to be proof of a force simulating currents of electricity; a concussion, as it were."

Now, twenty years later, the toe-joint theory is promulgated. It seems not best to waste valuable space in criticising such puerile efforts to set aside a great power.

As early as 1661 Mr. John Montpesson of England had a "knocking drummer," who answered questions by distinct knocks: as, for instance, "If So-and-so, give five knocks," which request was responded to at once. Also the Rev. John Wesley requested the knocks to respond a certain number of times, and was answered. But to "little Katie" have we always attributed the first inspiration to receive an answer by calling the alphabet. I think Leah (Mrs. Underhill) in her book gives to Katie this credit.

Even in our spiritual aspirations we partake of the fast character of the age. Could we fully digest the simplest of the communications that we receive we should be better prepared for the higher.

Let me turn to the last entry in my Diary:

"Nov. 5th, 1888.—Went to-day to visit a friend who receives communication according to earliest methods, by table-tipping. For twenty years this little stand has served as a learned physician, giving daily diagnoses and prescriptions, as called upon, with marvelous accuracy; so much so that a talented and well read M. D. availed himself of its knowledge in all cases demanding insight and skill. Sometimes raps responded instead of tips, but there was always a decision and an unhesitating response. The remedies were always according to Hahnemann's theory, and purported to come from the band of spirits in his sphere. How many hundreds have been blessed by this ministration, and how far-reaching is the influence of that simple table! To-day it was a message of love that was sought, and it was given, and the test of a name. There was no toe-joint here; there was no collusion. Beautiful prophecies, that only a future can declare true, came letter by letter. Among other communications was this from a spirit recently passed over: 'You think you know something of the glory of the spiritual world, but you can form no adequate idea of its beauty, of its rest and its peace.'

Shall we turn away from this consolation that we find in the outer temple of our aspirations, because, perchance, the money-changers have been there, or because some have sold their right to serve in this temple for a mess of pottage?"

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements. —Publishers B. of L.

OLD AND NEW PHASES OF MATERIALIZATION.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I have long desired to give your readers a few of my many experiences since I first became a Spiritualist in 1872, and now feel that in justice to a good and reliable medium for independent slate-writing and materialization, I must do so.

The medium to whom I refer is Mrs. M. S. Mayer, of No. 16 St. Mark's Place, New York, who has but recently removed there from Chattanooga. I have had the pleasure of being acquainted with Mrs. Mayer since 1873, when her first development as a medium began in Chattanooga. Her husband I have known since 1865. In this communication I describe but one séance, the last before their departure for the East, though I have attended a hundred or more, from the time of the showing of a first hand at the cabinet aperture.

The séance was held at the house of Mrs. Mayer on Sunday night, Aug. 26th. Myself and family, consisting of my wife and daughter, and four others of Mrs. Mayer's oldest and most intimate friends, had been invited.

The visitors being seated, Mrs. Mayer entered the cabinet, simply two heavy dark curtains hung across one of the corners of the room, and took her place in an ordinary chair. After a few appropriate remarks by Mr. Mayer, and an organ prelude, followed by singing, the curtains were dropped, Mrs. M. in the meantime having become deeply entranced.

Scarcely had this been done, when the voice of what seemed to be an Indian gave orders as to how the light was to be regulated, which during the séance was sufficiently strong to read THE BANNER.

No sooner had the voice within the cabinet expressed satisfaction in regard to the light, and even before Mr. Mayer, who arranged it, had resumed his seat, a materialized form walked out, and approaching me was immediately recognized by myself and wife as a stepfather, who passed away in 1875. Every lineament of the face was perfect, the figure was the same as in life, the gesticulation a complete repetition of his in earth-life. He had been, while on earth, extremely fond of music, and recalled this fact to us by walking to the opposite side of the room, where stood a piano, on which he struck a few chords, then came to us and attempted to speak, but failed to do so. He then greeted every one in the circle, and placing his hand in mine, as a token of farewell, walked to the cabinet, and with a bow to all disappeared. This spirit remained in view fully six minutes.

Hardly had he disappeared, when another stepped out, much taller, wearing a gray beard and rather long white hair, crossed over to the mantel and taking from it the picture of E. V. Wilson, walked to the sitters and handed it to each to compare it with himself. It was a perfect fac simile, and certainly established the identity of our beloved pioneer worker in the cause of truth; but I had the pleasure of knowing Bro. Wilson in earth-life, and should have recognized him without the aid of the photograph. Bro. Wilson conversed with us quite audibly and fluently, though not as distinctly as I had previously heard him speak. In fact, on some occasions, Mr. Wilson would give us quite a little address as to what work he was doing for the cause; how and what we should do on our side, etc. But he said he was not as capable of using his voice now, as he was looking more to the details of a perfection in his make-up.

It would take up too much space were I to describe every spirit that came, and what they did and had to say. Suffice it, that there were from thirty to forty appearances during the sitting of two hours and a half. There were many surprises to the sitters. One of those present as a visitor was the family physician of Mr. and Mrs. Mayer. This gentleman has been intimately associated with the latter for eight years, and, though at one time a hard skeptic, has through what he has seen with Mrs. Mayer become a confirmed believer. This doctor had a friend—his partner—who passed away several years ago, and who while in life perpetrated many jokes at the expense of what he believed to be his duped senior. I had often argued with him, and had mediums give him private sittings; but all was of no avail. He pooh-poohed the arguments and explained away the tests. Since his passing away, the members of Mrs. Mayer's band told us that this young physician was now repentant, and wished to make atonement by returning to earth to be recognized. Not having him at the time in mind, imagine our surprise when, immediately after Mr. Wilson's disappearance, there stepped out briskly one whom all in the room simultaneously recognized as the once doubting physician. When it is known that the last spirit was a small and slightly-built man, that Wilson was a stout and heavily-built man, and Mrs. Mayer as stout and heavy as both together, that she is a middle-aged woman, Wilson an elderly man, and the doctor but one of twenty-six years, the idea of personation by the medium would be simply absurd.

But certain manifestations given by the band themselves were more astounding than any I have before seen or read of. Mrs. Mayer has a number of Mrs. Hollis's former controls, among whom are Nolan and Ski-wau-kee. Captain Jack, former chief of the Modocs, is the head of the band for these demonstrations, and it is by his untiring work and patient application that he has made Mrs. Mayer so perfect an instrument. Nolan remains outside of the cabinet ten to fifteen minutes, or more, moving about, speaking or singing all the time. On this occasion he came out and told us to prepare ourselves for a surprise. He then stepped to the middle of the room, and, asking us to look closely, but to keep singing, he turned his back upon the sitters, but immediately facing them again, all saw transformed from a rather tall, slender and bearded man, a small, but plump boy, without a sign of beard on his face, who ran to Mr. Mayer, and was recognized by him as his little son Eddie. Thereupon the boy faced the cabinet and again turned, and there was the familiar form and features of Mr. Nolan. Smiling and bowing to the circle, he again turned from the sitters, then back again, and behold! another transformation had taken place. All of the male vestures seemed melted away, and there stood in the centre of the room a stately female figure, robed in white apparel with a long white train. Another transformation took place, in that the raiment began to assume a dark hue, the train of white seemed to fade out from the floor, and there stood before us the familiar form of an Indian squaw, in full Indian costume, recognized by those in the circle as one of Mrs. M.'s controls, Ki-wa-nee. She danced about the room and touched every one in the circle, looked each one in the face to make sure it was herself and none other, and then disappeared within the cabinet. At these most marvelous manifestations the circle began loudly to applaud, when Mr. Nolan stepped out and thanked us for manifesting our gratification, telling us that this was but a beginning of some of the band's experiments, which, when perfected, would astonish the world. Nolan further stated that it was one of their objects in order to accomplish this that they had arranged for a removal of Mrs. Mayer to New York.

I hardly think your readers have ever seen such transformations, and they must be seen to be realized. Remember, there were five transformations made, all outside of the cabinet, and that from the time Mr. Nolan first appeared and spoke to us until the time when Ki-wa-nee disappeared, none of the materializations entered or even approached the cabinet, and that the features differed from that of a boy to a wrinkled old squaw. Captain Jack, the chief operator, was the last one to materialize. He but rarely comes out of the cabinet, as his work is "behind the scenes." He spoke a few words of affectionate farewell to the old friends of his medium, and thanked them for having stood by her and her husband in the time of trials and disappointments; and the séance ended.

I must add that there were materializations of babes, children, men and women of various ages and sizes; that several voices could be heard in dialogue at the same time, and that a quartette of voices from soprano to bass often joined in the singing. Many dematerializations also occurred that were startling.

Mrs. Mayer's manifestations for slate-writing and materializations require no test conditions, as the manifestations themselves are all tests of a high order, and stand undisputed and indubitable.

In conclusion, I will say that while I have not told a tithe of what has been my experience with this gifted lady, I would recommend her to all of our friends in the East as an honorable, truthful and amiable exponent of our faith, and trust she will receive the encouragement she so richly deserves.

Fraternally yours, P. R. ALBERT,

MATERIALIZATION SEANCES BY MRS. BLISS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

With your kind permission I crave sufficient space to make brief mention of an interesting séance I had the pleasure of attending, the medium being that highly gifted lady, Mrs. C. B. Bliss of Boston. Some two years ago Mrs. Bliss visited our city and gave a series of interesting séances, but was unexpectedly summoned home on account of the illness of her little boy, and not a few were disappointed at her sudden departure. But we have strong hopes that she will be able to sufficiently prolong her present visit to afford all who so desire to become convinced that there is beyond doubt a possibility of locating the spirit after death.

The séance I wish to refer to was held at the residence of Bro. Wm. Creighor. The spacious parlors were comfortably filled an hour before the séance commenced, and a number of friends failed to gain admittance for want of room. At precisely eight o'clock Mrs. B. announced her readiness to enter the cabinet. Singing was engaged in until the medium became entranced, and the guide, "Billy the Bootblack," announced the first visitor from the realms of the unseen—a gentleman attired in military costume. As he stood at the opening of the cabinet he saluted the circle, then beckoned a lady, who, upon approaching, immediately recognized him. The spirit remained for a few seconds and then dematerialized in full view of the circle. Nearly at the same moment the curtains parted and the familiar figure of Dr. Hostetter greeted the circle. A lady was summoned to the cabinet who was personally acquainted with the Doctor. She pronounced the manifestation perfect, as also did several others who knew the Doctor in earth-life.

I fear I would occupy too much of your space were I to describe the personal characteristics of each individual spirit that appeared; suffice to say, from the opening to the close of the séance, they came in rapid succession, and mostly recognized. Several spirits appeared and warmly greeted their fellow Masons, while many others came and satisfied the anxious desires of their friends, giving them undoubted evidence of the immortality of the soul. "Billy" endeavored to keep the circle in good mood by his humorous remarks, boy-like and natural; he incidentally made the remark that his wit to some would appear rather gross, i. e., his interpolations might appear to be a passing "from the sublime to the sacrilegious," whereupon he explained how foreign and unnatural it would be for him to return in the saintly guise of a priest. "Why, no one would recognize me," he said; "people acquainted with me or my life on earth would say: 'Why, that is not Billy the Bootblack!'" The unique little Indian guide, "Blue Flower," was ever present, as well as "Mrs. McCarthy," "Daisy," and several other cabinet spirits. The guide manifested but little, apparently for the purpose of giving way to the friends of the circle.

In conclusion I will say the séance was thoroughly enjoyed, and all expressed themselves as feeling better, spiritually and physically, for being present. The séance was under strict test-conditions; not that it was deemed necessary on the part of the medium, for Mrs. Bliss's mediumship stands unquestionable, but simply to escape the comments of those who are bent on seeking fraud.

Yours for the truth, L. V.

"SERMONS FOR OUR DAY," by John Page Hopps, published semi-monthly in London by John Heywood, reach their twenty-first number in a bright and hopeful discourse upon "Trust in the Living God." We are, says Mr. Hopps, living in a remarkable period of transition; and "some historian, fifty years ahead, will probably refer to these as the days when we came clearly in sight of the parting of the ways. The great Established Church is notoriously harboring teachers of every variety of opinion; and not only harboring them but encouraging and glorying in them." As evidences of the great changes in progress he mentions the Wesleyan Conference as deliberately taking Hell out of its catechism for the young; the Congregational Union, seeking opportunities to show its sympathy with a free spirit of inquiry and research, and Mr. Spurgeon, finding it necessary to "banish himself from the Baptists, who once laid their hands on their mouths when he spoke"; while the old, closely-guarded Presbyterian Churches of Calvinistic Scotland are giving to the world some of the freshest and freest sermons of our day. Following this scanning of the unconsciously growing field of free thought he says:

"Even the modern and near theological questions are becoming like a husk around the fresh grain. The Trinity, The Fall, The Atonement, Natural Depravity (that blasphemy against man), Eternal Punishment (that blasphemy against God), are all receding from the living interests: and, in place of these controverted doctrines, the one mighty question is becoming urgent—Is there anything to rely upon? Is there any guide—to truth for to-day and to hope for to-morrow?"

He says we are pointed to the Bible! and he responds to this: "Alas! behold its endless incapabilities," and calls it an inconsistent book; that its ideal of God varies from book to book; that even in the very same book we seem to have glimpses of different deities; that it is a witness to "a method of search, not a record of infallible results." Still less, he says, do we find a sure ground of reliance in a holy Pontiff or an authoritative church; and asking, "Where, then, is our hope?" he replies, "Here: 'We trust in the living God.' We are all borne on by the steady flow of his providence. Nature is the sphere of his activity; and in nature we find the 'living God.' We have an inspiring God in him in whom we all 'live and move and have our being.'" And to this he adds: "Inspiration does not involve infallibility. God's inspiration, like his fresh morning air, is not partial; does not stop at this gate or that, and ask, Who lives here? But it only enters as it is able; and it mingles with what it finds. Here is the deep truth for the religious consciousness of to-day." To those in search of God, he says:

"Find your God where you find your conscience; find him where you find the mother's love, the father's heart; find him in the grave duties, the urgent needs, the daily blessings of our common life; and you will not go far wrong."

We have given these few points from one of the latest of these "Sermons for Our Day," to show that their breadth of thought and liberal progressive spirit render them worthy of a wide circulation, and the appreciative perusal of our readers. Their publication is to be continued another year.

CHAPTERS FROM JANE AUSTEN. Edited by Oscar Fay Adams. 12mo, cloth, pp. 364. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Jane Austen was one of five English women who in the first decade of this century held high rank as novelists, and the only one whose works still find interested readers. She was born to this life in 1775 and passed to another in 1817. Her writings are characterized by an absolute fidelity to the truth of things, and to this is ascribed her superiority to her cotemporaries. The chapters in this collection are from her six novels. Connecting links of explanation are given by which the main features of each plot can be traced. The introduction gives a brief sketch of Miss Austen's life, followed by estimates of her literary skill by various persons, including Lord Macaulay, G. W. Curtis, Mrs. Thackeray-Ritchie and Col. T. W. Higginson. The book forms one of the "Cambridge Series of English Classics."

TAKEN BY THE ENEMY. By Oliver Optic. With Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, pp. 344. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

This is the first of a new series of books by a popular writer of literature for the young, to be issued as "The Blue and the Gray Series." It, though a complete story in itself, is an introductory one to the five that are to follow, presenting many of the characters whose history is to be more fully set forth in them. The aim of the writer has been to deal fairly with all, so that it will be equally acceptable on both sides of "the line."

THE LAST OF THE HUGGERMUGGERS. A Giant Story. With Illustrations. By Christopher Pearse Cranch. Sq. 16mo., cloth, pp. 70.

KOBBOLTOZO. A Sequel to "The Last of the Huggermuggers." With Illustrations by C. P. Cranch. Sq. 16mo., cloth, pp. 96. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Together or separate, both of these will be very acceptable to young readers who delight in the wonderful and improbable. The present is a new edition; and the works having already won a reputation, they will, in this tasty and substantial form, find many purchasers during the holidays.

A Collection consisting of seventeen pages of easy pieces for class and home practice; forty of anthems, four-part songs and glees; fifty of choruses, and nineteen of new songs, with accompaniments for parlor and concert. A BIRD'S SONG.

BY MATTIE DAVIS.

A tiny bird sang gaily,
One morning long ago,
He sang of joy and pleasure,
Without one note of woe;
He warbled forth an anthem,
So joyous and so gay,
It seemed as if all happiness
In his voice imprisoned lay.

He sang as if to banish
All sorrow far away
From the weary hearts of mortals,
And his song, as blithe as May,
Was heard by a weary woman;
With earth's burdens bent was she,
But she paused to hear the bird sing
From his home near the glittering sea.

And out from the throat of the songster
Poured such a flood of song
That into the heart of the woman
Past memories did throng.
She thought of many a loved one
Now sunk 'neath the ocean wave:
Of the true and bonnie laddie
Lying deep in an ocean grave.

No thought of a spirit-lover
Who through the sweet bird-voice
Was trying to say unto her:
"Be happy, and rejoice!
For soon the fetters that bind you
To earth will be rent away,
And then in a happier country
We'll part no more for aye."

But she smiled, looking up at the songster
For into her heart there'd fain
Come comfort and strength and gladness
To battle with life again.
And there, 'mid the flower-crowned glory
That the winds of summer bring,
Came back the old, sweet story
From the history of her life's spring.

Oh! earth-friends, with your burdens
And sorrows that life still brings,
Try to grasp all happiness offered,
And only a bird that sings
May offer homely comfort;
Still look with believing eyes
To a Heavenly Father's kindness,
Who sent him from the skies.

Diphtheria.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In some sections of the country the disease designated diphtheria has become epidemic—so prevalent, in fact, that it baffles the skill of the so-called "regular" physicians, many children and those of older growth becoming victims to the terrible scourge.

Some three years ago a proprietor and editor of a paper in Boston had a young daughter, of some six years of age, who was stricken down with the above-mentioned disease. The family physician had some thirty patients sick with it, and he informed some one that three of these patients were past cure—naming them. The information reached the ears of the father of the child who was fated, and instead of going to the doctor to consult with him further, he at once purchased some oil of tar and turpentine, according to a prescription printed in the papers at the time, and which was reported to have been very successful in making cures. He took his child's case into his own hands and was successful. He informed the writer of the modus operandi he made use of in her cure—which was as follows:

He obtained a saucer, and put in it one tablespoonful of the oil of tar, also one tablespoonful of spirits of turpentine, and then placed the saucer in a large pan, to prevent damage, and ignited its contents. The pan was placed some distance from the bed where the little girl was suffering. Immediately the fumes of the burning ingredients extended to the child, causing her to cough, thus breaking or destroying the false membrane generated by the disease, and giving relief at once. This was repeated three times. The attending physician himself watched the results of the last two operations with great pleasure and satisfaction. The child was soon on the road to health, but the two other "fated" children alluded to are numbered with the majority in the spirit-world.

In making use of the above ingredients, due care should be exercised; everything in the apartment that the thick black smoke which results would be likely to injure, should be removed.

I have also been informed that a policeman in an adjoining city heard the lamentation of the mother of a child who was afflicted with this disease, and who had been informed that it could not live, by the family physician. The policeman made the application of this remedy in a simple form, and the child recovered.

If parents, as a last resort when informed by the family physician that the case is beyond his skill and medicine, would not give up the patient as incurable until this simple remedy is fully applied, I believe a large saving of mortality would be effected.

Should such really successful treatment be prevented by statute laws, on the ground that the cure made is by an "irregular" method?

AN IRREGULAR PRACTITIONER.

Dean Clarke in Connecticut.

A correspondent of the Willimantic (Ct.) Chronicle gives in that paper the following summary of Dr. Clarke's afternoon and evening lectures in that place Sunday, Nov. 25th:

"Dr. Dean Clarke, a noted inspirational speaker from Boston, is giving a course of rather unique but very interesting lectures on Sundays, at 2 and 7 P. M., to continue through December. Last Sunday, Nov. 25th, he spoke upon the relations of spirit and matter in general, assuming that spirit is the ante-type and cause of all organization in the vegetable and animal kingdoms; and that all organizations are but 'materializations' of preëxisting spirit forms. He said: 'God's life is the indwelling, quickening force of all matter, as the human spirit is the animating and controlling power of the mortal body; thus "God is all in all," as was said of old. That the universe is alive is the deduction of the highest science as well as the most advanced Theism; therefore physical science and spiritual religion are but the inductive and deductive methods of "thinking God's thoughts after him," as Kepler said.' In the evening lecture the speaker claimed that there is a striking analogy between the Christian and the present Spiritual Dispensations. That the 'spiritual gifts' are identical, and that a knowledge of these occult phenomena and of their modus operandi is the key of all ancient mysteries, and that it is the duty of all religious teachers to 'add unto their faith knowledge,' for all thinkers demand 'a reason for the faith' held as a dogma. The incentive to seek for truth and spiritual enlightenment and unfoldment is as great now as ever; for it is truth that makes us free from morbid fears and superstitions that originated in the childhood of humanity. There is not, nor can there be, any quarrel between true religion and true science, for truth, in all relations, harmonizes, and physical science is the handmaid of rational religion; whatever dogma in the latter is irrational cannot be true, and should be discarded as soon as discovered. Unfortunately many religionists are 'making the truth of God of none effect by clinging to the traditions of men.' They should have the courage and fidelity of St. Paul to 'put away childish things' and think as enlightened men, accepting the newest truth of their own day and generation.

To those 'having eyes to see and ears to hear' God speaks, and he inspires men to-day as much as ever; and the same signs and wonders anciently attesting the presence of His 'ministering spirits,' and that were the means of divine manifestation, are now vouchsafed to attract human attention to divine realities. Who shall mock at sacred things or commit the 'unpardonable sin', of attributing them to the devil, as of old?"

J. J. Morse in Brooklyn, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Spiritualists assembling in Conservatory Hall, corner Bedford Avenue and Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y., had the pleasure yesterday of welcoming again to their rostrum J. J. Morse, the eloquent English trance speaker.

Since Mr. Morse was with us during the month of June, 1886, he has visited our far Western brethren, and he returns to us rich in power and health as the result of his work among them.

In the morning a very large audience assembled to greet our brother, whose guides devoted their attention to answering questions propounded by the friends present. As usual a wide variety of subjects was presented, the answers to which were apt, eloquent and exhaustive.

In the evening every seat in the hall was occupied by a brilliant audience of earnest and intelligent men and women, from whom a spirit of soulful enthusiasm radiated. Upon Chairman Delerce introducing Mr. Morse a hearty burst of applause greeted him upon his rising. Mr. Morse prefaced his labors by a brief eulogy upon Col. Aug. Morse, who had recently passed to the higher life from "failure of the heart." The gallant Colonel was a well-known attendant at the meetings.

Afterward Mr. Morse read, with his accustomed finished elocution, Lizzie Doten's poem: "The Rainbow Bridge," at the close of which his daughter, Miss Florence, Morse, sang, with fine effect, "Life's Story," being warmly applauded.

Then, under control, Mr. Morse, proceeded with the subject of the evening: "The Social War in the Light of the Spiritual Philosophy," an address of superior ability, which elicited the closest attention of all present, and frequently called out loud bursts of applause.

The meeting was brought to a close by a series of very excellent and accurate psychometric readings by Mrs. Henderson, after which the large audience dispersed, evidently much pleased with the various events of the evening.

Mr. Morse and Mrs. Henderson will be with us every Sunday morning and evening during the remainder of the present month, and as this is Mr. Morse's last appearance in Brooklyn prior to his return to England, it is to be hoped his many friends in this city will utilize the opportunity now presented.

Resolutions of Commendation to Lyman C. Howe.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

At the close of the lecture, on Sunday evening, Nov. 25th, one of the Trustees remarked that the First Society of Spiritualists desired to express its appreciation of the earnest work performed by Mr. Howe, and presented the following:

Resolved, That we recognize in Mr. Lyman C. Howe one who occupies a position second to none, as an expounder of the beautiful truths and philosophy of Spiritualism.

Resolved, That we fully appreciate the sacrifices he is called upon to make in depriving himself of all home comforts, by being separated for many weeks and even months from his family.

Resolved, That we wish him Godspeed in his good work, and most earnestly recommend him to kindred societies who desire an able lecturer.

Luther R. Marsh arose and said he would with pleasure second the Resolutions offered; he had practiced law for fifty-two years, and one of the requirements of that profession is public speaking. He had paid special attention to oratory, had listened to all the most noted speakers of his time, and had been personally acquainted with many of them—mentioning the names of a large number, among them Henry Clay, and Daniel Webster, who was formerly his law partner. He said none of these could have done what Mr. Howe had accomplished this evening, and, indeed, he did not believe there was a person living who could of himself, unaided by a power outside, take the platform, without knowing the subject on which he was to discourse and treat it as had Mr. Howe. If a month had been spent upon the theme it could not have been more clearly presented in all its bearings, or more logically handled in detail. He considered it a "miracle."

The President, Henry J. Newton, said that before putting the Resolutions for adoption he would like to add a few words to the tribute so justly paid to Mr. Howe by Mr. Marsh. He had been acquainted with Mr. Howe for many years, and could testify that he lives up to what he preaches. He is thoroughly good, and you can say nothing better of a person than that.

The remarks were greeted with applause and the Resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Tribute to Mrs. Foye.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A complimentary séance having been tendered to the members of the Board of Trustees and their wives, by Mrs. Ada Foye, of San Francisco, Cal., the same was held at the parlors of Mrs. Hamer, North 10th street, above Spring Garden, Nov. 28th. A very enjoyable time was the result. Every one present received some message of love and encouragement from spirit friends. Mrs. F. left us after the séance. All regret her departure, for, aside from her mediumship, she is such a cheerful and kindly person. Those present at the séance were Mesdames Hamer, Hines, Wisdom, Whitman, Benner, Misses Julia R. Galloway, E. Bronson, Mr. F. Keffer and wife, Mr. Bronson, Mr. Benner and wife, Mr. Pray and wife, Mr. Huber, Mr. Thompson and wife, Mr. W. Jones, Mr. Hand and wife.

On Sunday evening, Nov. 25th—it being the final service by Mrs. Foye—the hall was full to overflowing, although the weather was chilly, rainy, and generally unpropitious.

Among many recognized tests was one by a German from a spirit who wrote a message to him in his own language. Mrs. Foye could not read it, but several Germans present did so. Groups of three and five spirits came, and gave their names. Certainly the phase of mediumship possessed by Mrs. Foye is wonderful as exhibited in such a crowded hall—with no mistakes. Even our most bitter skeptics admit that there is something in it.

Let us all now feel encouraged to work with even more zeal for the good cause. T.

Spiritualists' Camp Ground in Wisconsin.

A movement is being made to permanently establish a camping ground for Spiritualists in Wisconsin. A location has been thought of in Wonewoc, that village being nearly in the centre of the State, accessible from all points, as the C. and N. W. R. R. runs through it. Of its general features and advantages a writer in the Wonewoc Reporter says:

"It consists of twenty acres of table land belonging to Ambrose Kent. The locality for miles around abounds in romantic interest. There is no healthier spot in the State. The town contains first-class schools, and churches of various denominations. There is a good Opera House where excellent entertainments of all kinds are given, and a Spiritual Hall, where J. L. Potter, the well-known trance speaker, has held forth many years. In whatever light the ground spoken of is viewed, it exhibits all needed natural advantages. It has good shade trees and a fine spring of water. All that is needed is for the right steps to be taken to bring the attention of the proper parties in this and other States to a knowledge of its existence, advantages and possibilities, and Wonewoc can possess one of the most attractive camp-grounds in the country."

THE "BEST" PEOPLE.—The minister who preaches the best sermon, the lawyer who knows the most law and how to apply it, the doctor who has the most skill in his profession, the mechanic who understands his business, works hard and saves money, the storekeeper who gives full measure and does not put all the large apples on top, and so on down to Bridget in the kitchen who can keep the most tidy house—these are our "best" people.—Springfield Union.

Banner Correspondence.

Ohio.

ELYRIA.—James Hulburt writes: "The Fox exposé and explanation of the raps appear silly and foolish to those who have been in circles and heard genuine raps. In 1854 I was a member of a circle where raps were loud enough at times to be heard at a far distant point. When a little tardy in going to the circle I frequently heard them thirty rods off. These manifestations were in a farmhouse in the country. During the time our circle was in existence a cherry table was broken by the force of those raps, and this in broad daylight, when but the medium and three others were at the table. The invisibles first obtained the consent of the owner, and then by one prodigious rap away went the end rail and two legs, completely separating them from the balance of the table. The table was repaired by a skillful mechanic, and is now in existence, and its owner is still living and will attest to the truth of what I have written.

The next day we had a circle in the afternoon, to accommodate some investigators who lived several miles away, and who proved to be mediumistic and aided in giving more powerful manifestations than those of the day before, as every rap was as the stroke of a heavy hammer upon the under surface of the table, and every stroke lifted the end of the table at which I sat, although I had both elbows resting upon the left-hand leaf, whilst the owner of the table which was broken the day before sat with his elbows upon the opposite leaf doing likewise, the medium being between us; still the table was raised at every rap, although it was a heavy one, and two of us were applying a pressure of at least fifty pounds each to keep it down. At about this time the father of the medium came riding into his yard upon a gallop, and came up to an open window and requested us to leave the table, as he feared such powerful manifestations would injure his son. The father said he heard the raps when sixty rods away. The medium was about sixteen years old. The genuineness of these manifestations was never questioned by the most Orthodox in the community. The materialist attempted to explain them by electricity, and the Orthodox by that scapegoat the devil, who has always had a big load to carry in order to screen man from the legitimate results of his own way of thinking.

The raps in our circle were so loud from the beginning, and the circles all in the light, that no question of fraud was ever raised or the genuineness of the manifestations disputed. Our rapping circle met two or three times a week for six or eight months, when a writing medium was developed, and we gave up the slow process of getting communications by the raps. I could add much more, as the manifestations were remarkable from the beginning, and yet not a word has ever before been published with reference to them."

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Mary E. Kase writes: "Horatio G. Eddy, who has within the past week been our guest, gave a series of séances, the audiences of which were composed of believers and skeptics, also a number of strangers.

My study served as the cabinet. At nearly the same moment Mr. Eddy entered this, peals of laughter rang out from a corner of the room in which we all sat—seeming to issue from the carpet, from behind a little pair of curtains. We turned and perceived, curling on the floor at the base of the curtains, a mass of white mist, through which, as it ascended to the height of a human being, the cheery voice laughed and talked incessantly. Another instant the substance condensed, and in our midst stood materialized Spirit Mrs. Eaton. She walked past us to the cabinet, where the medium lay entranced; there she disappeared through the curtains, and soon returning poured out sallies of witty conversation peculiar to herself, giving in poetical rhyme tests and prophecies. While she stood her voluminous draperies sometimes disappeared almost entirely, appearing again by a few manipulations.

Scarcely had she bade us good-night, and while she could still be heard talking, a young Indian sprang from behind the curtains from whence Mrs. Eaton came. He bounded into the middle of the room, and silently, two or three times, high in the air. He was unlike the medium and every one present, and a marvel of individualized materialization.

One of the interesting events of the seances was the return of the East Indian, Sattay, who, while visiting this country, passed to spirit-life in New York City only the week prior. He was identified by gentlemen with whom he had sojourned while in this city.

The little musical spirit, 'Mayflower,' chose the isolated spot distant from the cabinet to first make known her presence, and from a diminutive cloudlet of white mist on the carpet before the curtains she formed repeatedly. She is the 'conductor' and fascinating little control of Mr. Eddy's dark musical séances.

Mr. Eddy's séances in this city made many converts to Spiritualism."

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Chas. Duckworth writes: "While talking with a friend in Chicago, he related an experience he had with Eugene Stevenson of 922 South 5th Avenue, Minneapolis, a medium for answering sealed letters. My friend was so profuse in his praises, I concluded I would show him how completely he had been duped. You must understand that I had been a very rabid materialist for twenty-five years. I took no stock in Spiritualism, having written several sealed letters to medium, with very unsatisfactory results. Hence, it was with a satisfied feeling of success in my undertaking to show my friend the duplicity of the medium he so highly extolled, that I prepared a letter to send him. After writing twelve questions that none but the deceased relative to whom they were addressed could answer, I cemented the edges together with white furniture glue; then after stitching it around the edges inside the glue, I placed it in an opaque envelope, which I also glued. I then had the seams well covered with sealing wax, and on the wax made eight impressions of my seal ring, and the end of a trunk key. All this I enclosed in a large envelope, with a substituted name and address, and mailed it the first day of October.

On the 26th of that month I received my letter and a reply, which I did not open until I had the audience of my friend. Upon opening it in his presence, judge of my surprise upon finding each of the questions not only correctly but minutely answered. For example: question No. 3 was, 'Where and of what disease did you die?' Ans.—'I died in Augusta, Me., Dec. 27th, 1859. I died of no disease, but from wounds made by the accidental discharge of a shot-gun. I died the fourth day after the wounds were received, at the house of my Uncle Andrew.' This was correct in every particular. The other questions were as satisfactorily answered, and, as there was nothing else for me to do, I dropped my materialism and became a firm believer in Mr. Stevenson's spiritualistic phenomena. Since coming to Minneapolis I have had several independent slate-writing sittings with Mr. Stevenson, and the genuineness of his accomplishments is beyond question, as the writings came between slates held by myself."

Michigan.

GRAND RAPIDS.—Perry Alma writes: "Mr. C. A. Barnes has been holding séances at the residence of Mr. C. Winch, No. 54 Bostwick street. They were attended by ladies and gentlemen of high moral standing, some of them members of the First Methodist and Baptist churches in the city. Upon taking our seats around a table, upon which were placed a harp, a small music box, a tea bell, a trumpet, a tablet and pencil, all, including the medium, joined hands, and the light was extinguished. The harp was immediately placed in the lap of one of the sitters, and played on; then placed lightly on some one of our heads, and a familiar tune played in perfect time and harmony. The bell was taken and sounded in time with the tune played on the harp. Written communications were received by several, with the name in full at the bottom; frequently pertaining to business of much importance, and in every case subsequently proved correct, showing beyond a doubt that our spirit friends enter into and coöperate with us in all laudable undertakings. Through the trumpet familiar voices talked to us as in bygone days. Charles Brown, one of Mr. Barnes's controls, in this way talked twenty minutes at a time, and answered questions of a scientific nature. He also sang tenor in a familiar song with one or more of the company. John King, another of Mr. B.'s controls, gave us words of good cheer and encouragement, and dismissed the circle with blessings for all of earth's inhabitants. Honto, another of Mr. B.'s controls, came in her own beautiful way, giving readings in business and other affairs. I recommend Mr. Barnes and his controls as strictly reliable. Mr. Barnes is now (Nov. 22d) in Springfield, Ill., and will be in Grand Rapids again about the 10th of January, 1889."

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—James A. Anderson writes, Nov. 28th: "About two months ago I visited your city on business, and the subject of Spiritualism came up between an old friend and myself, and he advised me (on account of my being a non-believer) to visit Mrs. F. K. Rich, 175 Tremont street, and see if she could not tell me of what I did know and of what I did not know. I called upon the lady, and during the sitting, which lasted about half an hour, I was told of many occurrences which had taken place during my life; but the strangest of all was regarding my sister, who was living in Toledo, Ohio, and in the best of health. The medium informed me that my sister would pass out of this life before seventeen days. I could not believe this, but alas! on the thirteenth day she passed away on account of a paralytic shock and apoplexy. I cannot help now being a firm believer. I take your very valuable paper, the BANNER OF LIGHT, regularly."

WORCESTER.—J. B. Robinson writes that he was one of the first who embraced Modern Spiritualism, and has been a subscriber to the BANNER OF LIGHT most of the time since its publication.

GENEVA.—Mrs. Julia H. Abbey writes: "Last autumn while breaking an egg on a plate, a strange-looking object was found, resembling a worm. The thick white substance which is often found in eggs clung to it. On examination with a magnifying glass, by a doctor, it was proved to be a tape-worm, head and joints plainly visible. Even before placing it under the magnifying glass, the head and joints could be seen quite plainly. It was two and one-half inches long. Others have found them, and one is preserved in alcohol in Waterloo, near by here. It would be well to examine the nucleus of white often found in eggs."

NEW YORK CITY.—"S. H. T." writes: "By the date on the wrapper of my copy of THE BANNER I see that a renewal of my subscription is in order, and today send check for another year. Thank God! enough faith remains, despite recent untoward experiences, in the solid truths of intercourse with our dear ones beyond the veil to make us unspeakably happy. It is only that now, in the spirit of your note appended to the report of the American Spiritualist Alliance proceedings in a late number of THE BANNER, we are disposed to try the spirits whether they be from God or not, before believing all they say.

In this narrowing of our faith the BANNER OF LIGHT comes week by week as a kind and faithful friend, bringing always words of comfort and cheer. It stands firmly and ever at the front, battling for the true and against the false, in this great and grand spiritual movement of the nineteenth century. I cannot do without it. Long may it so stand, and long may Colby & Rich be the standard-bearers."

California.

LOS ANGELES.—Ella L. Merriam forwards the following, addressed to her spirit-mother. While as a personal address to a spirit related to herself, under general principles we might hesitate to publish it, yet as the production voices the aspirations of the hungry hearts of thousands who are reaching out to their beloved in spirit-life, we give it place:

"I would pay thee a loving tribute! Not thy memory alone, as in the mistaken past I was wont to do, but with a clearer knowledge of thy spiritual existence, a consciousness of thy immediate presence, a joyful recognition of thy loving attentions and faithful care, I address thee, my mother!

Oh! glorious truth, whose bright rays have shed over my lonely pathway this new and most radiant light, that has penetrated the innermost recesses of my heart, and revealed to me my mother! Oh! with what joy do I repeat that sweetest and dearest of names, mother! Angels can repeat nothing more divine. The most enraptured strains of heavenly music, methinks, can produce no sweeter melody. Thy presence is to me an unceasing and joyful reality.

My heart receives thy loving demonstrations and for the first time is satisfied. Oh! my mother, would I had the wisdom of sages, the eloquence of Cicero, the inspiration of angels, to bestow upon thee one tithe of the love and admiration that fills my heart to overflowing but has no appropriate vent. Day and night does thy sacred presence comfort and influence me, and impart an inexpressible peace to my soul.

With an eager longing do I await the day when the veil that death places between us shall be withdrawn, and thy dear face, radiant with heavenly brightness, reflecting the tenderness embodied within thy soul, shall be revealed to my spiritual vision.

Oh! bright star of my earth night, shine on in thine eternal brilliancy and illuminate my future pathway, guiding me safely through its numerous and intricate windings into the eternal brightness of the Summer-Land, where we may roam at will among its inexhaustible delights, never, never more to be separated."

Colorado.

DENVER.—H. J. Ford writes: "Having been a reader of THE BANNER for some years, I trust you will grant me space to report one of the strangest and most convincing exhibitions in spiritual phenomena ever produced.

I chanced to meet upon the street in Denver very recently a gentleman of my former acquaintance whom I knew to be a genuine spiritual medium. After much persuasion he consented to call at my room and give me a sitting—he by the way remarking that he was developing a new and wonderful phase, which he would astonish me with.

He came at the appointed time, and after a social chat, turned the gas partially down and took his seat in one corner of the room. Presently his face and features became perfectly dark and unrecognizable; then appeared instead of his own, the outline of a female face, which gradually developed into the face of a very beautiful young lady with large, dark eyes and black hair. The next moment this face gradually became dark again, and soon appeared the face of an aged man with iron gray whiskers long, and covering the lower part of his face, also his hair was quite long. Then appeared the medium's natural face again, which he vigorously rubbed with both hands, declaring he could hardly bear the tickling sensation produced by the transfiguration. He sat again and it was transfigured several times, producing strange faces to me, but they are all known to him, being his materializing band of spirits."

Connecticut.

NORWICH.—Mrs. J. A. Chapman, Secretary, writes: "Sunday, Nov. 25th, J. F. Baxter concluded his month's successful labor for our Society. Mr. Baxter has ever at hand a store of useful facts and figures, which, combined with his scholarly productions, his excellent songs and descriptive tests, cause his work in the broad field of Spiritualism to be of marked value.

Some very remarkable tests were given by him in his late series—notably the following: A lady who passed to spirit-life a year ago, in manifesting described some peculiar experiences of her earth-life with the double—also related the experience of passing out of the body as a very strange one. A lady in the audience said: 'Mr. Baxter, it is perfectly correct, as I had the story from the lips of the nurse who attended her at the time of her transition.' Others equally correct were given, thus demonstrating the truth of spirit communion."

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—L. L. Whitlock writes: "For a few weeks past Frank C. Algerton has been stopping in Boston, and on several occasions I have had the pleasure, both in public and private, of listening to his guides as they taught the higher truths, or gave poems from subjects suggested by the audience. His test séances are convincing and his mediumship as a whole is of a surprising quality.

His developing classes have been very interesting, and I understand he intends to resume them on his return to the city in January."

UNANSWERABLE LOGIC:

A SERIES OF

SPIRITUAL DISCOURSES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

THOMAS CALES FORSTER.

These lectures, in a remarkably clear and comprehensive manner, give a very complete presentation of the phenomena and teachings of Modern Spiritualism, comparing them with those of the past in respect to life here and hereafter, and showing most conclusively that they are identical with the foundation facts and principles of primitive Christianity.

The arguments in support of a natural religion are strong and impregnable to all assaults that may be leveled against them, and commend themselves, by their reasonableness, to the common sense understanding of every honest-minded person. The views presented of a future life—the undeniable proofs given of the reality, naturalness and immortality of that life—will be consolatory to those who mourn the seeming loss of friends, and inspire them with courage to meet the trials and duties that attend their present form of existence.

The thousands who have listened to the eloquent discourses of Thomas Gales Forster, when in the prime of earth-life, and wished that the truths he uttered, and so ably enforced under the inspiration of his exalted spirit-guides, might be put in a form available for the enlightenment of the world of mankind now and in future years, will welcome this volume with heartfelt gratitude.

The book as a whole is true to its name, and many who might be disposed to combat the author's positions will find that he has fortified them with "Unanswerable Logic."

THE

Eleusinian AND Bacchic Mysteries.

A Dissertation, by Thomas Taylor, Translator of "Plato," "Plotinus," "Porphyry," "Iamblichus," "Proclus," "Aristotle," etc. Third edition. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Emendations and Glossary, by Alexander Wilder, M. D.

In the Mysteries, the dramas acted at Eleusis and other sacred places, were embodied the deeper thoughts and religious sentiment of the archaic world. The men and women initiated into them were believed to be thenceforth under special care of God, for this life and the future. So holy and interior were the doctrines considered which had been learned in the Sanctuary from the two tablets of stone, that it was not lawful to utter them to another.

The reader desirous of getting the kernel of the doctrines of Plato, Orpheus, Eumolpas, and their fellow laborers, as well as of the Alexandrian Eclectics, will obtain invaluable aid from this treatise.

The Record of a Ministering Angel.

BY MRS. MARY J. CLARK.

The ministry of angels is a subject that will always possess a deep interest for serious, thoughtful minds. There is nothing for which the hearts of humanity long with more pathetic yearning than for a resumption of fellowship with the loved and lost. What mother does not long for one sound of the voice of her son who has crossed to the further shore? What would not fathers give for one more smile from their daughters passed all too soon away? And what is more reasonable than to hope that the loved and lost have joined the ranks of the angels, and are busy in tender services for those whom they have left behind, love still the more? This book is written with the view of stimulating such hopes, of lifting sad hearts out of the darkness of despair into the sunny region of hope and courage and faith.

SPIRIT WORKS: Real but not Miraculous. A Lecture read at the City Hall in Roxbury, Mass., on the evening of Sept. 21st, 1853, by ALLEN PUTNAM.

This lecture, delivered in Roxbury, Sept. 21st, 1853, and repeated at the Melodeon, in Boston, Nov. 1st, same year, though preceded by several addresses by Laroy Sunderland, A. E. Newton, J. M. Spear and others, in smaller rooms, and on more private notice, was the first Lecture on Spiritualism in this vicinity to which the public was invited through the press and by posters, and the first to be printed and issued in pamphlet form. Though the author says that it seems crude now, and contains some allusions to local and transient events, it is interesting and valuable because of its connection with the introduction of Spiritualism.

ZÖLLNER.

An Open Letter

TO

PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.

BY C. C. MASSEY,

Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his seances with Dr. Henry Slade.

CONSOLED.

BY ANTOINETTE BOURDIN.

This work is intended as a message of consolation to bereaved and sorrowing spirits. As it lays no claim to literary finish or scientific depth, it does not crave or expect the favorable mention of such critics as admire solely purity of diction and grandiloquence of style; at the same time for genuine depth of thought and true insight into the realities of the spiritual world and life, this humble brochure has few equals and fewer superiors.

Much additional matter of general interest will also be presented.

Who Is a Spiritualist?

Generally speaking, a Spiritualist is one who cherishes a firm faith in the existence of a spiritual world, and in the ability of its occupants or citizens to hold communication with spirits still in the flesh; yet, as has well been said, this description fails to give any idea of the believer's character, or of the significance and value of his creed. Among such believers may be classed the Shaker Celibate, the African Obiman, the Hindu and the Christian. Thomas Brevior observes in a suggestive tract, published in England, and entitled "What is Religion?" that Spiritualism is something more than a theme for the exercise of the intellect and the gratification of an intelligent curiosity. He alone is a Spiritualist in the full and true sense who strives to bring his life into entire harmony with the great truths which its facts demonstrate; in whom these are outwrought in the character, and their effects made visible in the home, in business, in social intercourse, in times of trial and of suffering, and in the daily affairs of common life.

Such a one, says this writer, so far as he realizes Spiritualism, as it is embodied in him, is all of a piece, of the same web and woof throughout. He is not the creature of time, but the heir of all the ages to come. He knows that the life that now is shapes the life that is to be, and that is to endure through the evermore, and he cannot regulate his conduct by merely temporal considerations. He has a higher ground of action than worldly prudence. He subordinates desire to duty, his lower, perishable appetites to the nobler spiritual faculties, which alone are his true, permanent endowment. The true, consistent Spiritualist is thus Christ-like, working out his highest ideal through all the varied uses of a well-ordered life.

And while, therefore, Spiritualism, in its elementary sense, is simply the recognition of a spiritual world and of the facts of spirit manifestation, it has, to the truly comprehensive mind, if followed out to its consequences, important lessons in science, art, philosophy and history to teach; and in its ultimate issue and crowning development it coincides with the highest Christian aspiration and endeavor. It is the life of God in the soul of man. To realize this, to aspire after this communion and blending with the divine, is to be a Spiritualist indeed—a Spiritualist of the truest, noblest type. And here Spiritualism, in its moral, religious, divine aspects, in its lesson and its influence, is open to all alike; the lowliest as well as the loftiest minds may be taught, consoled, strengthened, purified by it, made fitter not only for the present life but for that which is to come.

To judge by present appearances, at least, the newspapers and the public at large think that Spiritualism chiefly consists in "spirit-rapping," and have little or no other conception of it than is conveyed by this cheap term. Even among Spiritualists themselves there are some who regard it as only a somewhat wider range of phenomena—the direct manifestations of spirits through human media. To others Spiritualism means attending séances, witnessing spirit-manifestations, and receiving communications from spirits. To still others it means the doctrines and the supposed general scope and tendency of the body of teachings put forth by spirits, or by those who believe in the reality of communion with them. And still again to others it means not only the outward phenomena of spiritual agency, but the facts of spiritual influx which belong to the inward consciousness, and whatever conclusions are fairly deducible from those phenomena and these experiences, and which they deem to cover a wide field, are of great significance, and admit of varied application in relation to subjects of momentous interest.

Thus Spiritualism is variously regarded by individuals according to their several characters and states. The one accustomed to regard things from the external will see and will care to see only the outward manifestations of spirit; while the philosophic thinker will look beyond and seek to discover the truths and principles to which they lead. To the student of human nature and human history Spiritualism, regarded as a body of facts, will show a new element in some of the difficult problems and obscure passages which these studies present, and which may go far to their solution. To the physician, the jurist, the artist, the theologian—all who dare to see—it opens up wholly fresh fields of knowledge and of thought, illuminating and inspiring where all was comparatively blind and barren before.

More Ministerial Freedom.

We have at hand published reports of two addresses by Rev. Drs. Kerr and Thomas in the Rockford, Ill., Register, on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of the Christian Union Church, the broad and liberal spirit of which challenges the approbation and sympathy of all progressive natures. The Church, as Dr. Kerr stated, one day found itself outside of the prescribed limits of religious institutionalism. He was himself pronounced a heretic, not for anything he had said, but for what he had not said. That was eighteen years ago, and his congregation followed him to a hall in which he held Sunday service. The congregation in a few weeks organized as a church and society. As the new liberal church gained new experience the characteristic thought and inquiry that mark the present day began to be discerned and understood generally. These new methods of thought, he observed, are working now through all Christendom. Such a movement could not go on without influencing and entering into religious thought. It was diffused in the churches as well as outside of them.

The new thought, he said, yields a larger and broader conception of humanity in its various relations, and of the things that enter into the economy of personal character. These larger conceptions take us outside the limits of institutionalism. He admitted that for eighteen years past he had been fully occupied in taking care of this continued and steady influx of ideas, facts and suggestions that were coming from the activity of minds to which he had been in the habit of looking. He finds the world of to-day but an outcome, an evolution of that which preceded it; so that religious ideas, instead of having any particular revealed origin, are only historic knowledge, and no religious conception has any other source than the religious consciousness of the human heart and soul. The manner of religious conception and idea is one of evolution. In the consciousness of man is the germ of what he can be and shall be. What once were essentials, foundations, sacred, and an essential part of our lives, have gradually melted away and disappeared; and in their place is a larger, clearer, brighter, broader, more beautiful, more practical and spiritual consciousness of life, its duties and its fundamental principles.

Rev. Dr. Thomas of Chicago said that these temples and churches are for the spirit of man. "You did n't have to go to Rome or to a synod, to build this church," said he; "you went to your conscience and to your reason.... Dr. Kerr had just as much authority to build a church as had Martin Luther and John Wesley. Thank God we live in a country where we have such a right." The current idea among the churches, said the Doctor, is that some one must look after your religion for you. There is a kind of law-suit in heaven over it. Salvation comes through certain channels, and they have got hold of the channels. The idea is that something must be done for you. The Pauline idea, on the contrary, is not that religion is something done officially for you, but rather something, done officially on your own part. It is a religion of what you are, a religion of character. For himself, he liked to shake hands with the clergy founded on brotherhood—the brotherhood of man. We have gone as far as we can, he added, holding on to the old truths. We need organization to hold on to the new truths. He looked for a new church—the great living church, through the right of the great spirit of humanity.

The Holidays

Are coming, and those who wish to make presents of absorbing interest and abiding value, are invited to peruse the announcement of "Gifts for the People" made by Colby & Rich, on our eighth page.

☞ The Two Worlds (Manchester, Eng.) commenced the second year of its publication with its issue of Nov. 16th, and we are pleased to note in the editor's review of its rise and progress, that all concerned have reason to be thankful for a good measure of success, and to be encouraged to continue in the good work. Our earnest hope is that greater success may attend it in the future, and that Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten as its editor may find the generous reward for her labors to which she is fully entitled as a faithful servant of the spirit-world.

☞ None of the ancient Pagans were as hostile to the Hebrews as the disciples of Mohammed have been to the Greek Christians. But not even the Mohammedans have been so intolerant to those whom they call infidels as Christian sectarians have been, and still are, to persons they dogmatically adjudge to be heretics.

☞ The United Hospital and Dispensary, situate on Charter street, Boston—No. 20—is a noble charity, and richly deserves support at the hands of a generous public. Albert C. "The Coming Religion."

On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9th, the ninth discourse in the Independent Club Series in Berkeley Hall, Boston, was delivered—the lecturer on that occasion being the world-famous author of "The People's Advent"—GERALD MASSEY! His theme was "The Coming Religion," and his remarks were replete with gems of crystallized thought, which were ably and eloquently enunciated. His illustrations were rendered with a pointedness which was quickly appreciated by his attentive auditors.

Those who have been fortunate enough to hear the lectures previously delivered by him in this course do not hesitate to say that Mr. Massey excelled himself in this latter one. It abounded in evidence of studious labor and patient research, combined with comprehensive thought. It is a matter of regret that his whole series of lectures cannot, upon his present visit, be placed before the thinkers of Boston. The following synopsis from the Boston Post of Dec. 10th gives a good outline of his positions taken in treatment of the above quoted topic:

Orthodox Christianity, he said, is mainly built up of outworks or scaffolding. The ordinary worshiper stands outside, and mistakes the scaffolding for the real building, and looks upon it, as it rises tier above tier, like so many landing-stages on the upward way to heaven.

The so-called "revealed religion" is simply unrevealed mythology. A spurious system of salvation was proffered to those who would accept the ancient mythology transmogrified into historic Christianity, and be bribed into changing their old lamps for new ones. Orthodox preachers will go on asserting in the name of God any number of things which their hearers do not believe, only they have heard them repeated so often that their sense is too outwearied to rebel. They have taught us to look for God in the wrong way. They have based religion on erroneous grounds, and have made us the victims of false beliefs.

The fact must be faced that these teachings are not true. The meek do not inherit the earth, and are not going to. We are not forgiven because we are forgiving. Nature does not keep her book of accounts in that way. No death of Jesus can save us from ourselves. It was taught that he came to abrogate certain Jewish laws, but no Jesus can upset the natural law of development. No blood of the Lamb will wash out one single internal blot. Nothing but life can work any transformation of character here or hereafter; death does not, cannot do it.

It is not in sorrow but in joy that we can attain the greatest unconsciousness of self and live the larger objective life for others. We are often told that our civilization is infinitely indebted to Christianity; but it is a fact that the redemption preached for eighteen hundred years has failed to save the world, and it must now give way for other workers with other methods, applied to such matters as the problems of poverty, the distribution of wealth and the ownership of land.

What is going to take the place of the cast-out faith? It is not going to be established by the blood and fire of the Salvation Army, nor by presenting our cast-off clothes to the aborigines. It is being rejected at home faster than you can give it away abroad. Nature works by transformation, not by repetition. Her changes imply growth as the outcome of a new life. It is not possible for us to swap creeds, or formulate a new religion. Religion is not a set of precepts or a mode of worship. It is not what we believe or profess, but what we are.

Nothing avails but the life lived. Our past deeds must and will make our future fate. The only way of showing love to God is in working for humanity. The Lord does not want your long and loud laudations or offerings of false money. The coming religion must be founded on knowledge, and the phenomenal Spiritualist stands level-footed on the only ground of fact that is or ever has been offered by nature for human foothold in the unseen.

Spiritualism alone reveals a bridge on which we can get any bit of actual foothold for crossing the gulf of death. Spiritualism is going to be a mighty agent in carrying on the work of this world, in producing loftier souls for the life of another world, of which it gives us glimpses on the way.

My coming religion may suggest a coming revolution. We mean, for one thing, to rescue our Sunday from the sacerdotal ring. We mean to try and rescue this world from the clutches of those who profess to have the keys and the keeping of the other. We mean to show that the wage system is a relic of barbarism; we mean for women to have perfect equality with men, social, religious and political. We will have a sincerity of life in place of pretended belief; a religion of joy instead of sorrow, of work rather than worship, a religion of life life actual, life here, life now, as well as the promise of life everlasting.

Mr. Massey will remain in this country several months longer, and expects in that time to deliver lectures in the principal cities of America, and also to make arrangements for the publication of a new American edition of his works. His lectures have been privately printed, and are on sale at the BANNER OF LIGHT Bookstore, 9 Bosworth street, by Colby & Rich.

Is it a Re-embodiment?

The Duke Confucius, lineal descendant of China's greatest sage, is one of the most noted personages in Pekin. He is about twenty, and of singularly aristocratic and prepossessing appearance. His nose is of a kind very uncommon amongst the Chinese, being of the type known as the Roman, but small and finely chiseled.—Ex.

This reminds us of what was said twenty-two years ago, through Mrs. J. H. Conant, at a private séance held at her residence in this city by a spirit while a discussion was going on in regard to Allan Kardec's theory of the reincarnation of spirits, the intelligence taking the ground that he was aware of the fact of reincarnation; that in two years from that time, Confucius, the Chinese philosopher, would be reëmbodied, and under another name give to his people great light on spiritual topics; but that the new form in the flesh that he would take on would not be fully developed or understood until he had arrived at middle age. May not the young man alluded to in the above extract be the coming Confucius predicted by the spirit at the aforesaid séance?

"Our Foes Without and Within."

The two discourses delivered in this city with reference to Margaret Fox Kane's denunciation of Modern Spiritualism, by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and bearing the above name, have been issued in a pamphlet of twenty-four pages for general circulation. The matter is treated in a courteous and forcible manner, and is destined to do much good service in placing it in its true light before the public. This, together with the low price at which it is supplied, should prove strong incentives to its distribution. For fuller particulars see the advertisement in another column.

"The Bubble Burst,"

Was the caption of THE BANNER'S article, published Nov. 17th, wherein Margaret Fox-Kane was so fully exposed in this city. But it now seems, although deserted by her theatrical managers, a new party has taken her in tow, as the following paragraph from the N. Y. Clipper (a sporting sheet) of Dec. 8th shows:

"Signor de Vivo is announced to direct the tour of Margaret Fox-Kane, the Spiritualist. Alfred Joel has been engaged to assist him."

Give these humbugs a wide berth.

☞ Miss Nettie M. Holt, test and business medium, 40 Russell street, Charlestown, is considered an excellent instrument through whom the spirits communicate; séances Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, at 8 o'clock.

Form-Materialisations.

Mrs. M. E. Williams, of New York City, recently gave two séances before the Fraternal Union of Boston (having been engaged by that society for the purpose.) All the arrangements for the séances were attended to by Dr. O. H. Wellington, at his residence, 123 Concord street. Below is the account of the first séance:

The writer states that shortly after Mrs. W. entered the cabinet the friends were greeted by little "Bright Eyes," who gave the names of many spirit-friends whom she saw in the audience. Dr. Holland and Mr. Cushman, the chief controls, greeted cordially the eighteen persons present and gave some directions regarding the formation of the circle, when the spirits came out, one after another—in several instances two appearing at the same time—giving their names and calling on friends to come up to the cabinet. In every instance the spirits were recognized.

A notable feature was the appearance of the Cary Sisters, who informed a lady in the audience that they had given her written messages, which proved to be true.

One of the most striking features of Mrs. W.'s séances are the male forms, which come with perfect ease, walk out and talk in their usual manner. Men, boys and little girls appeared and walked out into the room. Spirit Dr. J. R. Newton presented himself, called Dr. Wellington up, walked out with him, addressed the circle, and asked Dr. Mayo to come forward, which he did, and held an animated conversation with him in regard to relieving his patients of pain, mentioning an anæsthetic to be given—all of which the Doctor was delighted to hear. Dr. Mayo then advanced with Dr. Newton. The spirit raised his hands and said, "Keep the mind and soul in harmony with Nature, and you shall overcome all disease."

Dr. Holland then invited questions, which some of the friends presented, and they were intelligently responded to by the spirit.

A most convincing manifestation was that of a boy about twelve years old, who came with "Bright Eyes"; both could walk out into the room, and they did so, several feet from the cabinet, and talked to each other, and to the audience. The boy then retired into the cabinet, while "Bright Eyes" dematerialized outside, and materialized again in plain view of the sitters.

In the presence of these facts are we not called upon to render the conditions as harmonious as possible, in order that our spirit-friends may manifest so tangibly that all who knew them in the earth-life can fully recognize them when they return?

The séance closed with appropriate words of wisdom from Dr. Holland, the entire audience expressing their satisfaction with what they had seen and heard.

The second evening séance, which occurred at the same place, and under the same auspices, also proved successful beyond peradventure, we are informed, and great desire was manifested on the part of her patrons that the lady remain over Sunday for further sittings. Previous engagements, however, necessitated her return to New York.

It is to be hoped that Mrs. Williams will, from time to time, visit this city, thus giving our people an opportunity to know more of the occult laws that govern her mediumship.

Receptions to Lyman C. Howe.

On an evening just previous to his leaving New York to fulfill his present engagement in Boston a reception was tendered Mr. Howe at the residence of Henry J. Newton, Esq., 128 West 43d street. It was a very fine affair, and comprised among its attendants many representative Spiritualists of that city. Such gatherings tend to the cultivation of unity, harmony and good feeling among Spiritualists as individuals, beside being in the direct line of brotherhood laid down by the Spiritual Philosophy.

On Thursday evening, Dec. 6th, a congratulatory meeting in honor of Mr. Howe was held at the residence of Mrs. M. A. Pope, 375 Columbus Avenue, Boston.

The company was select and representative, and the occasion was a pronounced success. Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock presided; remarks, in brief or otherwise, were participated in by Mr. Dowling, M. S. Ayer, Mrs. Pope, Capt. Richard Holmes, Mr. Algerton (of Chicago), Mrs. King, Dr. Street, Dr. Wilder, W. H. Randall, Dr. Harding, L. L. Whitlock and J. W. Day; Adolph Lowinsky greatly enhanced the interest of the occasion with choice selections on the violin, being skillfully accompanied upon the piano by Mrs. Nellie M. Day; Miss Maria Falls, a promising pupil of Miss Lucette Webster, gave evidence of great talent as an elocutionist; Mrs. L. C. Clapp and Mrs. Day sang very acceptably; and Mr. Howe gave a very interesting relation of some of the early trials which came to him as an advocate of Modern Spiritualism.

"The Science of Immortality."

This lecture, delivered by W. F. Peck at Cassadaga last summer, and which attracted great interest and elicited much favorable comment upon its publication in THE BANNER of Nov. 10th, has been issued in a neat and attractive pamphlet form by Colby & Rich. It is a scholarly production, eminently adapted to circulation among thoughtful, educated classes, as it is a presentation of facts in science which no one can gainsay or dispute, but which in the conclusions to which their admission naturally leads, though possibly not apparent at the time, fully sustain the spiritualistic theory. It should have the wide circulation and the attentive reading it deserves.

☞ Felix Adler at Chickering Hall, New York, last Sunday, took for his text Tolstoi's "What to Do?" He said:

"Who is Tolstoi? He is certainly one of the grand figures of the age, a unique genius, a giant who knocks at the gates of the world's selfishness and makes them ring and ring again under his powerful strokes. He denounces wealth and rejects culture, yet he is read and respected by the rich and cultured. Tolstoi is a member of the Russian aristocracy, who, having seen worldly life in all its phases, has tired of it, and he struggles to find a meaning in life. He turns from philosophy which cheated him, from human reason which gives him no answer, from exact scenes which are no longer exact when they touch the problem of life, rejects superstition, and turns at last to the law of conduct and finds his answer in the instinct of the masses, who know that the true meaning of life is to labor. The only science is the science of life, the only scientist is the laborer."

When he says "the only science is the science of life, and the only scientist is the laborer," Mr. Adler expresses a thought that will live for all time.

"THE GROWING YOUTH."—The contents of the December number are enriched by a fine Christmas Story by Mrs. H. M. Rathbun, entitled, "How Clarence Merton Earned his Christmas Dinner." Mrs. Rathbun is a devoted Spiritualist, and a noble woman. F. B. Hawkins, publisher, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

☞ The New Thought has left its former home at Des Moines, Ia., and established itself at 675 W. Lake street, Chicago, Ill., where it will continue to bravely fight medical monopoly, clearly explain spiritual topics, and judiciously treat of the labor movement, as of old. Moses Hull, its editor, has had extended experience in the journalistic profession, and the wider field now opened to him will be of advantage not only to himself (as a publisher) but to his readers as well.

☞ The December number of the North American Review contains a grand essay upon Modern Spiritualism, from the pen of A. E. Newton—the appearance of which is of special import and value at a time when so much misrepresentation of the cause is being foisted upon the public attention by the sensational press of the nation. We are glad to note that one, at least, of the leading magazines of the country is willing to open its pages to a writer in defense of the New Dispensation.

☞ We specially recommend Mr. C. J. Watkins, who is located at 107 Falmouth street, Boston, as one of the best mediums extant. Honest investigators, therefore, who desire to learn the truth for the truth's sake, should visit Mr. Watkins. All others—of the spirit-grabber genus—are not fit to commune with the angels, and had better keep away.

San Diego, Cal.

W. J. Colville's engagement in San Diego has proved this season even more successful than on former occasions; the audiences have several times severely tested the seating accommodation of the halls. On Thanksgiving Day a beautiful service was held; the gifted soprano, Miss Drake, was in her best voice, and the entire exercises were in harmony with the true spirit of the day and the teachings of the spiritual philosophy. The lecture was pronounced a remarkable effort by all who heard it, for, though the advertised topic was "Special Reasons for Thanksgiving in Southern California," the speaker dealt with the theme for the most part so universally, that the spiritual and moral lessons conveyed were of cosmopolitan import. The Golden Gate presented its readers with an extended report, and the press in San Diego noticed it favorably. During the service a collection was made of $20.55 for charitable purposes.

Sunday, Dec. 2d, the services in Lafayette Hall were largely attended afternoon and evening. Mr. Colville's subjects, by request, were "The Rich Man and Lazarus," and "Why Does Not God Kill the Devil?" Both discourses went far toward presenting a rational solution of the ever-perplexing problem why there is suffering and seeming evil in this state of existence or the hereafter? Mr. Colville's lectures on Theosophy and Metaphysics have been very largely attended and given great satisfaction. His engagement in San Diego closes Sunday, Dec. 16th. He will speak in Los Angeles Dec. 17th, and every following day until Jan. 3d inclusive. His work in San Francisco commences with a public reception in College Hall, 106 McAllister street, Saturday, Jan. 5th, at 8 P. M. Sunday services commence Jan. 6th, at 10:45 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. In addition to San Francisco engagements he will speak regularly in Oakland and Alameda, and expects to visit San José, Stockton, Sacramento and other places in Northern California. He is definitely located on the Pacific coast until June. Address until Jan. 1st, 640 S. Hill street, Los Angeles; after that date, 106 McAllister street, San Francisco.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—The thirty-fifth volume of this popular monthly closes with the present number, and the thirty-sixth year of its publication commences with the January issue. It has thus far ably advocated the maintenance of good health by good living, and has spoken fearlessly in defense of truths old and new, scorning to set aside the latter, though unpopular, or to cling to the former though by some looked upon as sacred and infallible because of age and general acceptance. Its editor announces it will follow the same liberal and progressive course during the coming year. In the current number Dr. E. D. Babbitt writes upon "Mind Cure Matter," S. H. Preston upon "What to Eat," and of other subjects in addition to those on health and diet treated upon, are "Psychometric Power," "A Soldier Somnambulist," and the Fox-Kane affair. New York: 206 Broadway.

"THE THEOSOPHIST," Madras, India, for November, introduces its contents with a chapter from Madame Blavatsky's recent work: "The Secret Doctrine." Following is "A View of the Universe and the Nature of Man," by a Prince of Siam. An interesting article upon "The Gypsies" is contributed to the remaining contents, among which is an "Evening Hymn to the Sun," said to be of extreme antiquity, in an English version by Mary Frances Wright, F. T. S. The series upon "Nature's Finer Forces" is continued in a consideration of "Yoga; the Soul," and a thrilling sketch is presented by Helen Fogg, "The Phantom Virgin." Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. Ada Foye, by her pungent tests and varied mediumship, has called out the largest audiences of any speaker for several years. [A press report of one of Mrs. Foye's séances, sent by our correspondent, will appear next week.—ED. B. OF L.] The phenomenal success that has attended her everywhere since leaving San Francisco, follows her in Cleveland, and her mediumistic gifts are much sought after both in public and private. For want of room many have been unable to gain entrance to her public meetings in Memorial Hall. Week-day meetings are to be held by Mrs. Foye at Memorial Hall Friday, Dec. 14th, Thursday, 20th, and on Friday, 28th, a grand farewell reception is to be tendered her, which occasion will be the event of the season, from the fact that Miss Clair Tuttle, the youngest daughter of Hudson and Emma Tuttle, will make her début in this city as a dramatic reader. This prepossessing and talented young artist is extraordinarily gifted, and her many friends in this city are confident of her success.

Miss Tuttle's costume reading will occupy one hour, Mrs. Foye's marvelous séance one hour, and the balance of the evening will be devoted to social enjoyment.

The friends of Lorain, O., have invited Mrs. Foye to give a lecture and séance, which will probably take place Thursday or Friday, Dec. 27th or 28th, and perhaps both dates. THOS. LEES.

California Medical Laws.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I notice in your latest issue that you allude to a movement on the part of the Allopathic physicians of California for a new medical enactment of a unique character, and remark that "Equal Rights" will have something to say in your next issue on the subject. This was my intention when I sent you the article which I thought would meet the issue, but certain friends of medical freedom in that State have just communicated to me their desire that the matter be held in abeyance (as to details published) until further developments of the plans already culminating for the defeat of the proposed scheme. I owe this explanation both to yourself and your readers.

Acknowledgments.

Since my last acknowledgments of receipts toward my cottage, I have received from a helper in Massachusetts (name reserved), $15; from E. R. Reynolds, of Rock Island, Ill., $5—total $20—making in all received to date $174 toward the $500 needed.

The materials are being collected, and the spirits still assure me the means will come, but they come slowly, and may leave me under a lien or mortgage at last, something I have never given and hoped never to be obliged to. WARREN CHASE.

Cobden, Ill., Dec. 7th, 1888.

☞ Our men of science do not seem to have learned, even after forty years' experience, the simple fact that misrepresentation and the suppression of evidence will not kill out Spiritualism. Such biased reports as that of the Seybert Commission only stimulate the curiosity of outsiders to witness for themselves the wonderful phenomena, and the zeal of Spiritualists to bring the truth before the world. Indirectly, therefore, they promote the cause of truth, and only leave the schemers to be laughed at by posterity.—H. S. Olcott, in the Theosophist, Madras, India.

"MRS. M. E. JOHNSON, 123 Concord street, Boston, is the second best medium I ever saw, and I have had sittings with many," said an eminent lawyer. The Fraternal Union endorses it, and advises her to refund the fee to any one dissatisfied.

A Choice Holiday Gift,

"ECHOES FROM AN ANGEL'S LYRE."

A handsome book—sheet music size—containing twelve choice and beautiful songs from the repertory of that well-known composer, C. P. Longley. This book bears upon its title-page a finely executed engraving, representing the composer seated in the valley playing upon a harp; around the musician are rocks, and grasses, and flowers; while from above streams a golden light breaking through the clouds of heaven, amid which is seen an exquisitely shaped female hand, playing upon a golden lyre, surrounded by the title of the work: "Echoes from an Angel's Lyre."

This scene and the title were depicted and given to Prof. Longley, by Dr. S. B. Brittan, many years ago, as the representation of the title-page of the first book of songs the composer should issue from the press, and is now embodied in external form for the first time.

The work contains an introduction by Miss M. T. Shelhamer—now Mrs. Longley—which of itself will challenge attention from the public, and one which if read will be appreciated. This musical work of Bro. Longley's is one that has long been demanded of him, both by the angel-world and by his music-loving friends on earth. Its contents are nearly new, only three of its songs having before been published, and these three, the well-known favorites: "We'll All Meet Again in the Morning Land," "In Heaven We'll Know our Own," and, "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," will meet with favor in their new appearance. The nine new selections are: "There are Homes Over There," "Mother's Love Purest and Best," "Open those Pearly Gates of Light," "They'll Welcome Us Home To-morrow," "All are Waiting Over There," "On the Mountains of Light," "Glad that we're Living Here To-day," "The Angel Kisseth Me," and "We'll All be Gathered Home." This book is number one of a series of song-books soon to be published by the same author, and as an earnest of what may be expected by the music-loving public, will, we have no doubt, meet with a warm reception. Reference to the advertising columns will inform our readers that this work is on sale at this office at the low price of one dollar.

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

We should all remember
That this is December,
When destitute ones need our aid;
That if we would be blessed
We should help the distressed,
And thus by Jehovah be paid.

Liars, backbiters and slanderers, who possess the least grain of intelligence, must, in their moments of reflection, consider themselves despicable creatures! Why God allows such pests of society to thus injure their fellows is a greater mystery than anything else.

When the Catholic church bore sway in Mexico ninety-three per cent. of the people could not read or write. In Italy, with 22,000,000 of people, 17,000,000 could neither read nor write. In Spain, in 1860, 69 males in 100, and 91 females in each 100, could neither read nor write!

"THE QUEEN'S MATE," at the Hollis-Street Theatre, should be seen by all those who desire to while away a pleasant evening. It is a gorgeous spectacle, with splendid music, and an abundance of fun.

Bold burglaries are becoming altogether too prevalent in this State. The law against those who commit them is not half severe enough. It ought to be amended when the next General Court sits. These men, when caught, ought to be imprisoned for forty years.

Rev. Phillips Brooks, of this city, says religion has no place in our public schools.

The Berkeley Temple, Boston, gave a farewell reception recently to the Rev. William H. Noyes and wife, prior to their departure for Japan, where they will serve as missionaries. The sending out of a missionary who is not directly under the control of a missionary organization is an entirely novel feature in the annals of Congregationalism, and may be regarded as we have before said in relation to the case of Mr. Noyes) as one of the direct fruits of the present widening of religious opinion.

The Canada annexation scare was the worst fizzle the N. Y. World ever got off. Now it says "not a living soul in the United States cares a fig about annexation." That map was a cute "Yankee trick" to simply introduce the World newspaper into Canada.

A fire broke out about 11:20 o'clock on the night of Dec. 7th in the transfer boat Maryland, used for conveying passengers from the Pennsylvania railroad station at Jersey to the New Haven and Hartford station at the Harlem River. It is said to have caught in the kitchen of the boat. The boat was a total loss, and the four cars on board were burned down to the running gear. There was a severe panic among the passengers, and all the baggage was destroyed, but no lives lost. The pecuniary loss was heavy.

"Oh! Mrs. Watts, you should join our literary society." "Should I?" "Yes, indeed. We study and learn so much. Last evening we took up Carlyle's quarrels with his wife." "It must have been interesting." "Very. Next meeting we shall investigate the private life of Goethe and his love affairs." "How instructive!" "Yes. And we have found out everything about Poe's dissipation and disreputable conduct, and purpose soon to thoroughly investigate the immoral actions of Voltaire." "Indeed!" "Oh! there's nothing like a literary society to increase one's culture. You ought to join."—Time.

Hygienists have been claiming for a long time that tea, coffee and cocoa impair digestion, and that their use on this account is harmful. Too many doctors, however, have encouraged their use, or at any rate have failed to discourage it. Dr. J. W. Frasier has recorded, in an article published in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, the result of a large number of anatomical experiments, which go to show that both the stomach and intestinal digestion are interfered with by all three of the mildly stimulating beverages in common use—tea, coffee and cocoa.

WHEN THE LADIES VOTE.

II.

Will conductors pull their bells,
When the ladies vote?
While the fair exchange farewells,
When the ladies vote?
Will they start their cars and go
As they do just now, you know?
No, they will not dare do so
When the ladies vote.

LATE FOREIGN NEWS.—The Liberals have just won a victory in the London School Board elections.=Severe fighting in East Africa continued at the latest dates, the rebel losses having been heavy. Munkacsy's celebrated paintings, "Christ Before Pilate," and "Christ on Calvary," have been reproduced in their original colors, each on plate paper, 21x28 inches. The original paintings were exhibited in all the chief cities of this country and Europe, and finally purchased by Mr. Wanamaker of Philadelphia for $245,000, and are now in his possession. Each painting consists of from forty to fifty figures and heads, displaying varied expressions of hate, fear, curiosity, compassion and reverence. These reproductions are issued by the Phelps Publishing Co., Springfield, Mass.

Waltham, Mass.—A large number of friends of Mrs. Warren Wetherbee called upon her last Wednesday at 3 o'clock, at her home on Moody street, where a few hours were passed in communion with the spirit-world. Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, of Boston, was present, and her little control, "Sunflower," gave us all some very remarkable spirit communications. At the close of the meeting arrangements were made for a séance to be held at the same place on Thursday, Dec. 13th, at 3 o'clock. XXX.

FREE SPIRITUAL MEETINGS.

These highly interesting meetings, to which the public is cordially invited, are held at the Hall of the Banner of Light Establishment,

ON TUESDAYS AND FRIDAYS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK P. M.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these meetings) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely.

MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER-LONGLEY will occupy the platform on Tuesday afternoons for the purpose of allowing her spirit guides to answer questions that may be propounded by inquirers on the mundane plane, having practical bearing upon human life in its departments of thought or labor. Questions can be forwarded to this office by mail, or handed to the Chairman, who will present them to the presiding spirit for consideration.

MRS. B. F. SMITH, the excellent test medium, will on Friday afternoons under the influence of her guides give decarnated individuals an opportunity to send words of love to their earthly friends—which messages are reported at considerable expense and published each week on this page.

☞ It should be distinctly understood that the Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them to the life beyond the characteristics of their earthly lives—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the mundane sphere in an undeveloped condition, eventually progress to a higher state of existence. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers for our table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. M. T. Shelhamer-Longley.

Report of Public Séance held Oct. 30th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! thou Spirit of Love, whose divine tenderness is spread abroad over all creatures, who can embrace the entire world of humanity within thy divinity, and send forth unto each beating heart streams of force and influence from thy own omnipotent life, we, thy children, recognize thee as our parent of good at this hour, our tender and beautiful mother, from whom we draw all our sustenance and power from day to day, our benign and wise father, from whom we receive strength and guidance as the years roll on, and we acknowledge thee as the sum and substance of all things, the great over-soul, from whom comes forth every pulsation of being which we, as human children, feel and receive at all times. We acknowledge thee as the parent of all good, and recognize that thou art indeed all that is and all that ever shall be necessary to the sustenance of life, here and beyond.

Oh! we would imbibe of thy wisdom and drink deeply from thy fount of love; we would grow into likeness with thee, so that sympathy, tender feeling, and all that is sweet and comforting may flow forth from our hearts unto the souls of our fellows, so that we may know what it is to live in peace and concord with our kind, so that we may be uplifted in spirit and draw nearer to the great spiritual life itself, where angels dwell and do thy bidding in ministering unto each other and unto humanity.

Oh! our Father and our Mother God, receive from our souls the aspirations that flow forth and rise upward; and may we draw from thee glimpses of truth that will illuminate our minds; may we quaff wisdom and that which will sustain, which will perish not, but which will elevate our souls and our thoughts unto thee and thy divine creatures.

We ask thy blessing to rest upon all mankind, and we would have it descend into every life, bearing with it that which will inspire, uplift and strengthen, so that not any one shall bow the head in sorrow or bend beneath the weight of woe unknowing of thee and thy great love. May all receive this understanding and look up to thee, now and forevermore. Amen.

S. B. Brittan.

Once more, Mr. Chairman, I stand upon what has become to me familiar ground, and I am proud to take my place with the valiant souls who from week to week guard this portal of the spiritual world. I say I am proud to stand here, because it does me good to occasionally send out my word and my thought to mortal life, and to bring unto those friends and earnest souls who care to hear from me, the tidings that I still remain firm and faithful in the cause of Spiritualism. This is something to say in these days, because I find, as I look abroad on both sides of life, that there is a spirit of disaffection permeating many classes, and many minds, who have been interested slightly in our cause. This disaffection does not trouble me in the least, nor do I think it will any sincere and earnest Spiritualist on either side of life. Perhaps it is to be expected, since in every age, and undoubtedly in every class, there always has been and always will be found those vacillating minds who cannot hold fast to any one opinion or cause, but who are swayed by whatever breeze of thought happens to blow around them; therefore, in Spiritualism, as well as in other quarters, and in other worlds of thought and conviction, we may expect to find such minds, and we should not be disturbed, however vacillating their utterances may prove to be.

I come to-day, Mr. Chairman, happy to receive and to avail myself of the invitation extended to me by Bro. Pierpont, to send forth my greetings, my spirit of good-will to my friends wherever they may be found. I am especially interested in sending out a wave of spiritual influence toward the city of New York, since there are those in that city who are at this time about to make special investigation and experimentation in the department of mediumship relative to the manifestation of the power of spirit over material things. I am attracted in sympathy with the body of friends interested in that work, and I desire to give them my God-speed and good will, and also to assure them that any earnest effort made to come into harmony with the spirit-world, sufficiently to assist that world in giving its demonstrable evidences of spirit presence and power, will indeed be received gladly by those ministering spirits who desire to aid and encourage humanity. Such work must of necessity win my approval, and I am pleased to believe that this will be gladly received by my friends on earth, and that they will not disdain my influence, and my assurance of sympathy and of helpfulness, because I feel that they are one with me, as I am with them, in all good works.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot enumerate my many friends, nor express a special word for each one, but I would like all to feel that I am in harmony with them, that I hold each dear name and each dear heart close in my memory, and that there goes forth from my soul a wave of fraternal feeling and affection, which I trust will reach each one, and make him feel that he is my brother, and make her feel that I hold her as my sister still, in the spiritual world.

Your good Spirit President has once more requested me to take his position to-day, and to respond according to my ideas to questions which you may present, and therefore I am happy to do the best I can. S. B. Brittan.

Questions and Answers.

QUES.—[By O. S. P.] Will the Lick Telescope recently erected in California enable the astronomers to make any important discoveries as to the condition and inhabitancy of physical beings on any of the nearest planets?

ANS.—I have no doubt that the production of this telescope will result in some very interesting discoveries for mankind. It seems to me that as science advances in her work, and as human invention and ingenuity also progress, devising means and ways for the better instruction of mankind in any department, so will humanity be blessed in consequence, and, so far as I have learned concerning the construction of the latest telescope at the Lick Observatory, it seems to me that the adjustment of this delicate instrument of far-reaching capacity will be a matter of great interest, and afford wide opportunity for study to those scientific minds engaged with it. I have, also, no doubt that it will bring into closer observation the planets against which it is directed, and possibly it may reveal to those who seek it information concerning various conditions of existence upon those planets. I do not know as this may prove so, but I am sure that the time will come when human ingenuity and invention will have so far advanced as to enable the mind of man to come into close proximity, by means of various instruments and apparatus, with other planets, so that those marching orbs will not seem so far away from the earth as they do to-day, so that all which pertains to them will not be so mysterious to mortal understanding as it is just now. The human mind is expansive; it grows from year to year, and I hold that it is capable of taking up many great deeps of knowledge not yet explored, and making them its own.

Q.—[By Edwin Cheney.] Are convents and nunneries just and sound institutions to be tolerated upon American soil?

A.—Individually I am not highly prepossessed in favor of these institutions, and I have no faith in their good effects. It seems to me that American soil is not calculated to nourish and support them. The day has gone by for the maintenance of nunneries, monasteries and the like; what we want is free education for the masses; what we most essentially need is a system of instruction that will bear the closest, most open inspection. This is not provided in such schools and such institutions as are governed and directed by old superstitious priestcraft, and, consequently, I think these should not have any part in our American system whatever.

I am not despondent over the outlook of things and institutions in this fair, broad, beautiful country of yours. I have large hope in humanity, and faith to wait until the day shall dawn when universal education, together with a grand disciplinary influence, will be provided liberally by our communities, by our governments, for all who have need of such discipline, of such instruction. I believe in the growth of liberal sentiment. I also believe that liberty of thought is making its way all over the world, and that the American soil is especially calculated to nourish and sustain it, therefore old superstitions must die; they cannot always cling and hold to this earth and its people. In the meanwhile I find much that is in need of correction. I find many who are really at a loss how to formulate or to express their opinions; there is a necessity for guidance for many minds, there are those who require to be trained concerning the situation of affairs, looking to the best interests of your people, and I ever like to encourage expression and exchange of thought on this and all other subjects which appeal to humanity. I believe the day is not far distant when all institutions founded by bigotry, superstition and error will be razed to the ground, will be swept from the earth; not by violence, not by physical force, but because of the spread of public opinion, because of the growth of liberal thought, there will be no means of maintenance for such institutions. I believe the time is coming, and is not so very far away, when all that is ennobling and uplifting in the human heart will express itself more fully and clearly than it can just now, and when this time comes there will be a grander, more glorious disciplinary power; there will be less of restriction, in that form which makes restriction unholy and unbeautiful; there will be more of advancement for the human race, because our communities, our officers of government, our teachers at large, will have been educated for their positions, will understand something of humanity and its needs, and will seek to apply the most proper remedy to any evil which afflicts the race. We must expect opposition, we must expect old institutions, old forms and forces of religious superstition to put forth every effort to hold their own ground, to keep their place in the world; but in spite of this effort the world is moving, humanity grows day by day, liberal thought expands and extends in all directions, and it will most certainly make its power felt in such ways as will give greater breadth and freedom and happiness to the race.

Q.—[By A. J. Hollingsworth.] Are the denizens of the spirit-world subject to the law of gravitation as are those of this?

A.—The denizens of the spirit-world are subject to laws, just as surely as are the inhabitants of earth, but they may inform themselves so fully as not only to come into obedience with them, but to act intelligently in connection with them. There are spirits in the other life who have so thoroughly studied the law of gravitation as to almost make it subservient to their will; in some respects they have done so; they can rise above it by merely exercising their own positive power, and therefore they are not dependent altogether upon this law of gravitation and its results. The law of gravitation, however, does exist in the spirit-world, and there are thousands of spirits who never make any movement or effort to act in opposition to it; they do not understand how to rise above, but they must follow the law of gravitation, wherever it operates. As we have said, there are others who can rise above it, merely by exercising their own will, and thus they may elect to travel from point to point in space, independent of the operations of that law, because by their study and intelligence, and by the exercise of their positive will-power, they have brought themselves under the dominion of a higher law, which holds that of gravitation in its embrace, and may act in opposition to it.

Q.—[By Mrs. Mary W. Jayne, Homer, N. Y.] So far as is known of the primary condition of all human beings prior to their being influenced by the mental characteristics of their earthly parents, are they of one grade of intelligence?

A.—I believe in the law of heredity, and that it operates unerringly and without distinction. I believe that this law can be traced by intelligent study, through one change after another, and that it reveals itself here and there and in unexpected places, where perhaps one would not look for it, yet while it seems to me that the child or the descendant is governed to an extent by this law of inheritance, and that this government is one from which it cannot appeal, it also appears to me, in another direction, that the individual entity itself can, under certain environments and conditions, rise above this law of heredity, and express its own individuality and personality independent of it. We are certainly wonderfully made, and we are governed by law in every department of life. We have an intelligence of our own, which it is our duty and our right to exhibit and to cultivate. It is the duty of every person to develop his own individuality, and to make it as distinct as possible from all other personalities.

He has inherited, perhaps, some special quality which displays itself throughout his organism or in the operations of his mind; on the other hand, he has brought into this life his own marked individual powers, and these must express themselves if he gives them a fair opportunity of doing so. As the man marches along in life, giving to his own personal being the opportunity and power for expression, he will find himself unfolding in new qualities and powers, such as did not belong to his family or to his ancestors; these he has brought with him direct, as an intelligent spirit, from the world from which he came, and these are his to do with as he desires. By-and-bye, when he has reaped his experience on this earth, and has passed on to other scenes of pleasure or of employment, the man will find these marked inherited tendencies are growing less conspicuous as his own individual characteristics and soul-powers put themselves forth into active expression; and so, while I believe in the law of heredity, and know it is unerring in its operations, yet I believe in the supremacy of individual personality and will. I believe that in the fullness of time and the development of human nature, each soul shall stand erect and distinct by itself, a marked individuality, a marked spirit, exercising its own powers, exhibiting its own forces and energies, and making out for itself a distinct career which none others can effect.

Q.—[By A. D.] Are there not spirits who hesitate not to do anything to disprove to mortals the truth of the phenomena, ignorantly supposing they do so "for the glory of God," and do not such aim chiefly at the materialization phenomenon, leading the mediums for it into acts having the appearance of intentional fraud?

A.—Well, I suppose materialization, so-called, is an established fact. I presume it is true, since so many candid, earnest and intelligent minds have investigated that phenomenon for themselves, and accepted its demonstrations as truth. I did not very strongly believe in the materialization of physical forms by returning spirits, before I passed from the body. I am not now altogether prepared to say that I fully believe in such a material demonstration, for I yet have much to learn. I do not think that any honest spirit will return to earth willingly to deceive mortals. I do not think that any spirit, or class of spirits, will conscientiously come back into contact with mortal life, and wish to draw over the eyes and the minds of those with whom they come in contact, a delusion and a snare. It does not seem to me there can be many spirits who have learned anything concerning the laws of life, and the law of retribution, as well as that of compensation, who will dare to come back, day after day, and evening after evening, to deceive those who honestly desire to know the truth. There are mischievous spirits, of course, many of them, who perhaps will be pleased to hoodwink the public; there are mischievous spirits, a few of them, who might wish you to believe mediumship altogether a baseless fraud, but I have not come in contact with many such intelligences, and some of those whom I have seen have been under such restraint in the spirit-world that they have not the power to effect the mischievous work they would like to do.

This materialization, so called, is something not to be dismissed with a few idle words; it is not to be easily set aside; it is something which one should hesitate to declare for or against, until he had given it earnest, sincere investigation. I know that it is possible for scientific minds in spirit-life to so utilize their knowledge as to produce wonderful manifestations of a material character on earth, provided they are given proper instruments for their work. I know it is possible for such scientific minds to arrange and collate material, certain particles from the atmosphere and from mortals, that may be utilized in the formation of a hand, or some other part of the human body, which portion presents a close resemblance to those members of your own physical forms. I know this is possible, for I have experimented with it and have seen the results. Then the thought comes to me: If it is possible for a hand to be formed, why—given material and power sufficiently—is it not possible for an entire body to be formed? I think this can be done, but I am not yet satisfied that it requires so much of material as to build up a solid, substahtial body of flesh, blood, bones, sinews and nerves, such as have been sent out of your materializing cabinets many times during the last decade of years.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, I am only expressing my own opinion, not that of any mortal—certainly not that of any other spirit. I am open to conviction. I feel that I have opportunities for investigation on the spirit side not easily provided to mortals, and I have taken advantage of some of those opportunities in seeking the truth. I have seen a few things that mystify me, just as the mortal investigator sometimes meets with that which is mystifying. I have seen many things to convince me that much is perpetrated in the name of mediumship which does not properly belong to that domain; other things have given me satisfaction, have awakened my devoted interest. I see here a wonderful field, not only for investigation but for labor, and any earnest medium, sincere and reliable, who can find himself possessed of these occult forces which may be utilized by returning spirits, will find much to repay him in his research and his labors by being faithful to the spirit-world.

I do not think that the present day is the time for the settlement of this question; there is much of conflict, of strife, throughout the country; there is much of the heat of passion and acrimony abroad upon this very subject, and the atmosphere is full of smoke and of din, spiritually speaking, arising from these combating forces. In ten years from now, perhaps, when much of this discord has ceased, when earnest minds have taken up the subject reverently and sincerely, and followed it to their own conclusions, we may, perhaps, formulate not only an opinion but establish an incontrovertible truth which cannot be gainsayed. You may be able to prove by the phenomena of materialization that a hand—that indeed an entire body—can be formed out of seeming nothingness which may bear resemblance to one that has departed this life, but yet that is not material, inasmuch as it cannot remain, inasmuch as its elements must be dissipated and return back to the atmosphere again. I think the time is coming when civilization will prove to mortals, in private homes as well as before the public, that man lives beyond the grave and that he possesses a body in human semblance, strong and beautiful and well adapted to his use.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 9th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Obadiah Brown.

We are all glad to speak here, Mr. Chairman, hoping, through some channel, our words will reach some of our dear ones, as of course we would rather reach them than strangers or even neighbors. I promised Sophie that if possible I would send her a message from this platform, and now I find it is possible.

Langdon is here, also her own dear mother, and Ella; we all send greetings, and wish to be remembered. I am satisfied with my home, but I don't stop there; we have a great deal to do to make our homes more beautiful than we find them in passing over.

I have very few relatives left on earth, but am none the less grateful for the privilege granted me of speaking. I passed away in Laporte, Ind. My name is Obadiah Brown.

Mamie Ford.

[To the Chairman:] I know your good paper goes to my dear father, and he will be glad to see that his little angel child, as he called me when they placed me away, has been able to speak.

Father, your darling child lives and has been growing to womanhood in spirit-life, although but a little girl when she passed away. Father, the flowers are so beautiful in spirit-life! and when you come to see them you will think yours in the hot-house very different—only like shadows compared to them.

I know you often wonder why little Mamie does not come. Grandpa Worcester says we can only speak when the channel is open for us; we cannot take another's time. After passing out I well knew that my dear father felt he could not leave me where they made the mound, but realizing so much as he does of spirit return, he must feel that it is all right.

I know, dear father, that many clouds have overtaken you on your earthly way, but in spirit-life, as grandfather says, there will be nothing to mar our happiness; all will be harmony and peace. I have been in the grove when meetings have been held, and I have also stepped into the Lyceum meetings, where my father has an interest. I have often been there with the spirit children, for I feel like a child to-day, although somewhat older, and I have enjoyed them very much.

Dear grandma, do not mourn for the dear ones that have gone; not a day or hour passes but that some loved one comes to you. Grandfather Worcester sends greetings. When loneliness creeps over you, think that the loved ones are very near.

I passed away not far from this city. My father is D. N. Ford, of Onset Bay, and he will know very quickly who has been speaking.

Mary Chase.

I have spoken here before, Mr. Chairman, three years ago. To-day there are some things drawing me closely to the dear one who yet dwells in the mortal form. He is entering his seventy-fifth year. These attractions are stronger, and they draw me to earth. I have been cognizant of the scheme he has in mind, of the home he is trying to build. I have been one of the invisibles with him, and many impressions has he taken from us on the spirit-side.

His angel-mother often stands beside him, and also sends greetings. I am very thankful that I am permitted to give a few words. He will understand why I have been attracted here to-day, and have spoken of the home. Dear one, you will be able to accomplish what you desire. Yet the home beyond is waiting for you, and it will be more beautiful than what you may erect in the mortal. These few words, Mr. Chairman, are to my husband, Warren Chase. Mary Chase.

Augusta H. Bigelow.

Spiritualism was very dear to me while dwelling in the form, and I possessed a great deal of mediumistic power. My home is beautiful beyond the river, and I am waiting patiently for dear ones to join me there. I left a beautiful home, but I am permitted to visit it. Friends, as well as relatives, grieve not for those who have crossed over, for only too glad are we to be freed from the mortal form. How delightful it is to know that we are able to visit you again.

Lambert and myself have conversed many a time of those who had gone before—father, mother, brothers and sisters, who were waiting to grasp our hands so warmly and to welcome us to the heavenly home. To-day, when you come to learn that it is only a transition, a change, you will not mourn the dear ones so much, but will understand a little more of what is termed Spiritualism. I am proud to say I was a Spiritualist; I did love the truth that name represents, and I loved the spirits returning to me.

I am happy, and trying to use my influence for the benefit of mediums. Be sympathetic with the mediums, for you know not how much they have to bear in serving as instruments for dear ones returning to earth. I have often heard such words as these: "Why, if spirits come to earth, can they not come direct to me, and not through a stranger?"

God does not give to all the same talents; we know not why. In the present age, even as he told you in the past, he gives to some one talent and to some five; let it suffice.

I lived, Mr. Chairman, in Shrewsbury, Mass. My name is Augusta H. Bigelow, and my husband is Lambert Bigelow.

Loyal Lovejoy.

I have been a silent listener here, Mr. Chairman, and there is deep gratitude in my soul for these channels that are given us to speak through. I have been in the halls also, and sometimes have approached so near that I thought some one would understand I was there; at other times I hardly think they knew it or even thought of me. They will remember me in Shawmut Avenue. Loyal Lovejoy.

True French.

Eighty-one years I dwelt in the flesh, and I was glad to throw off the old mantle and put on the new, although, Mr. Chairman, I understood not of spirit return, for I had been taught in early life to look forward to a final day of judgment. I find the judgment day to be every day, and that by our lives we build our homes beyond the river.

I want my friends to know that I am happy. Very few of my dear ones are left upon the earthly shore. I have been in the home, but oh! how little they knew it. No more did I understand of my dear mother's visits, until after passing out. She said to me: "My dear child, you were not to blame for the prejudices instilled into your mind in childhood, which are very hard to cast aside."

As I look around I see that in religious ideas people are far more liberal than they used to be. I well remember when they would not allow a Universalist to go into the church and preach. I rather think it would have been worse still for a Spiritualist.

I lived a long time on earth, and I heard Spiritualism and mediums talked of, but I passed it idly by, not wishing to meddle with it. I find now it would have been better if I had learned a little while here. I lived in Candia, N. H. My name is True French.

Harriet Metcalf.

It makes very little difference, Mr. Chairman, where our homes were on earth, but it is of great consequence what homes we have on the spirit side to-day. I desire to send a few words of greeting to my dear ones, who are quite a distance away. I feel confident that the spirit band is strong enough to make some manifestation in the home. I have often thought, as we have been there, that Mary, having so much power herself, must have felt our presence, but still I could not be sure.

Now I will ask George to sit down with the others—you three in the home—and see what we may do. We ask you to willingly take whatever we may give, for that will enable us to do better than we otherwise could.

Hannah is with me to-day, and sends greetings to Lucy. In spirit-life it will all be made plain why your path was a little more rough than some others'. William, let me say to you it won't always be so dark, because you will learn a little of spirit return, and it will help to lighten the burdens of life. I do not say that all will be smooth, for some burdens seem to be placed upon your shoulders. I want you to feel that Harriet comes to you and the others in the home. I am very thankful for the few moments allotted to me. Harriet Metcalf, Pittsburgh, Penn.

Sarah E. Johnson.

I would like to send a message to Columbus, Ohio, Mr. Chairman, and for reasons I am particularly anxious it should reach there.

Joseph, do not trouble about the little affair; it will soon blow over, as it don't amount to much, although it looks heavy to you. I have been working with the angel-band to lighten things a little; and they will be lighter by-and-bye. I have been anxious for you, for I knew how despondent you were.

Look up, Joseph, you are not alone. I often come to you, and often ask the angels to help you in your trials through the mortal life, which I know have been many. Remember that you are not alone, because the invisibles come to you with much power to sustain you.

A little while ago you almost sank under the load, but soon rose again. You may ask where the assistance comes from. The angel-world. The higher intelligences came to you and lifted you up. Seek to know more of us in spirit-life. Think not because we have gone out of your sight we do not visit you, for we come often: especially when trials are heavy we are attracted most frequently and stay the longest.

Sometimes we come to earth, and flit away, as it were, in a moment; then again we are held here, feeling we may be of service to mortals.

My name is Sarah E. Johnson, and my home was in Columbus, Ohio. I have friends in Portland, Me., and also in Cleveland, Ohio.

Annie Hague.

I've been in this meeting a great many times. Grandma comes with me, and she says I must sit just as still as a mouse. Now mice don't sit still; they run. She always tells me that. We have the most beautiful flowers over here; they grow on the hillside where the green grass is, and oh! the birds sing so sweetly!

[To the Chairman:] Wouldn't you like to come there sometime? [Yes, I should.] You're coming, sure. And when you come I'll run right up to you and tell you I was the little girl that talked in the meeting and that spoke of the pretty flowers.

But I suppose some other children do that. The children sing, too; they sing "Sweet By-and-Bye," just like you do here, only better. I am so glad I got in this chair! the spirit chairman said I could come, but must n't talk too fast. I always did talk fast when I was here. When I went away my throat did ache so! Where I live now it do n't, and I do n't be sick.

A beautiful lady came and took me by the hand, but mamma did cry so! I suppose she did n't see the lady when she came after me. She came and talked to me, I suppose, so I would n't be afraid. And who do you think I saw in a few minutes? Grandma. And she said, "Annie, come, now. I am going to have you live with me all the time."

Then I went to Washington. Aint that a nice city? Grandpa says that's where the peoples go when they want an office. I suppose they do n't go there without they have some business. That's where I lived sometimes. I used to go to Baltimore, too. My name is Annie Hague, and grandpa is Grandpa Hague. Grandma says: "The Lord bless you." She's a lovely grandma; she's never cross. I don't like cross grandmas.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

LUCRETIA FULLAM WESTON.

We were made glad by the very characteristic message from this dear friend. All is correct as may be. I shall take care that many to whom she has ministered unto in her long and useful life may read her words of kindly greeting. I have said many times that I wondered she did not communicate through the "Banner Circle." I am very grateful for her remembrance. She was a most excellent medium. Many, very many times has she given us unmistakable tests of the identity of our near and dear ones just out of sight.

She and her dear sister, Mrs. D. P. Wilder, were such willing workers for the good of all; always unselfish, always kind, making "Wilder House" a delightful home to visit. Such "good times" as we have enjoyed under its hospitable roof, when darling Nellie Kenyon and many others used to greet us there in the old happy days. But one by one they have been called higher, and the spirit and life have gone out of the place that knows them no more. But how cheering, how uplifting to a poor weary child of earth, to feel that truly angels from the higher pathway have stooped to shed a beautiful radiance over our earthly road, giving us assurances of their undying love, and that they are waiting for our coming by-and-bye. I hope dear Sister Weston will favor us always as she has opportunity, and ever be assured of our loving remembrance. MRS. LUTHER O. WEEKS.

Proctorsville, Vt., Nov. 30th, 1888.

BETSEY N. COOK.

With great pleasure I acknowledge the truthfulness of the message published in BANNER Nov. 17th from BETSEY N. COOK of Provincetown, Mass. She is a dear sister of mine. The message is correct in every particular. She was an invalid for years, a good medium, and through her organism have many weary, tired ones of earth found comforting words to cheer them over the rough road of life. Come again, dear sister; we welcome, thrice welcome you. Tell my beloved Angie I am looking, oh! longing for that promised message.

I also recognize the message from J. J. PENNINGTON, Henryville, Tennessee, published in BANNER Oct. 20th, as being characteristic of him. Many thanks to the medium, and may the BANNER OF LIGHT continue to wave joy and comfort to the souls of earth, is the wish of your sister in truth,

MRS. C. A. HASKELL.

Menomonie, Wis., Nov. 30th, 1888.

WILLIAM CHANDLER.

I wish to verify the communications published in the BANNER OF LIGHT a few weeks ago of HIRAM, NEWTON and WILLIAM CHANDLER. William was father of a large family, and owned a farm near the Tyngsboro' line, but crossed the river of death from Tyngsboro'. He has children now living here, and as I am informed, they say that the statements are true.

Yours truly, GEO. D. DANFORTH.

SAMUEL L. TOWERS.

The communication of SAMUEL L. TOWERS was acknowledged to be true by his stepson, who is a live Methodist. We have no mediums here, and we fail to get any words or exchange of thoughts.

The door seems open to you in the North, but we in the South are denied this glorious privilege.

Yours truly, J. K. DEARTH.

South Lowell, Ala.

THE CHINOOK WIND.—Under this head the Governor of Washington Territory remarks as follows upon a singular provision of nature met with in that region:

"The Chinook wind is so called by the Indians, because it came to them from the direction of the country of the Chinooks. This is a balmy wind, coming from the great Japanese current of the Pacific Ocean. In the summer it is a cool wind, and tempers the heat of summer so that nowhere in Washington Territory do people fall down with sun-strokes. In the winter it is a warm, moist wind, and is sometimes slightly odoriferous, as if spice-laden from the tropics. It is so gentle upon ordinary occasions that its presence could not be noted by its motion, and it is almost miraculous in its effects. Snow and ice disappear before it with rapidity, and it seems to be able to blow for long distances between walls of colder air without parting with its heat. Sometimes it constitutes an upper current, in which case the remarkable spectacle is witnessed of snow melting from the mountain-tops while thermometers in the valleys register below the freezing point. At other times it is the surface current and follows the valleys and gorges as a flood might follow them. It seems to bear healing upon its wings, like Sandalphon, the Angel of Prayer, and it is not difficult to conceive that the Indians would wish to personify it in order to fix upon it their devotions."

MAKING HOPKINS'S LAST MOMENTS EASY.—Chaplain—"So poor Hopkins [a soldier] is dead. I should have liked to speak to him once again and soothe his last moments; why did n't you call me?"

Hospital Orderly—"I did n't think you ought to be disturbed for 'Opkins, sir, so I just soothed him as best I could myself."

Chaplain—"Why, what did you say to him?"

Orderly—"'Opkins," sez I, "you 're mortal bad."

"I am," sez 'e.

"'Opkins," sez I, "I do n't think you 'll get better."

"No," sez 'e.

"'Opkins," sez I, "you 're going fast."

"Yes," sez 'e.

"'Opkins," sez I, "I do n't think you can 'ope to go to 'eaven."

"I do n't think I can," sez 'e.

"Well, then, 'Opkins," sez I, "you 'll go to 'ell."

"I suppose so," sez 'e.

"'Opkins," sez I, "you ought to be wery grateful as there 's a place perwided for you, and that you 've got somewhere to go. And I think 'e 'eard, sir, and then 'e died."—The London Hospital.

Truth is too simple for us; we do not like those who unmask our illusion.—Emerson.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Groton, Mass., Nov. 27th, Mrs. Jane Sawyer, wife of the late Silas Sawyer of Clinton, Mass., aged 74 years.

Mrs. Sawyer outlived her husband and children, but was sustained in her bereavement by a firm, unfaltering faith in Spiritualism. She was much loved and respected by all who knew her. About six weeks before her release she left her home in Clinton to reside with her brother in Groton, realizing that her cancerous disease, which was sapping the fountain of life, must soon terminate fatally. In this beloved family she was tenderly cared for, while she patiently bore her sufferings, calmly looking forward to a reunion with her loved ones. The funeral service took place from her late home in Clinton on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day. Many relatives and friends gathered there to look once more upon the face lighted with its wordless greeting, and comfort one another with the thought that far away from earthly pain the beloved sister and friend was keeping Thanksgiving in the family circle, made complete by her entrance to the higher life. JULIETTE YEAW.

Leominster, Mass., Nov. 30th, 1888.

From Stoughton, Mass., Nov. 25th, after suffering thirty years from a chronic affection, Mr. Hiram Fogg.

He embraced Spiritualism as a fact many years since, and enjoyed communing with loved ones who preceded him to the better sphere. He was patient during his long and sometimes severe suffering, the result of an accident that happened to him when a young man. He was a great reasoner in his mode of living, not only with regard to the earth-plane but to the beyond, and but few could hold an argument with him on the objects and aims of human life. He leaves a devoted wife, who was his constant attendant during his sickness. She will sadly miss his earthly form and presence. With his knowledge of spiritual laws, he will soon be able to return with blessings and gratitude for the care he received at her hands, and will also assist in all possible ways to lighten her pathway along earth's pilgrimage. He was a man of sterling principles and moral integrity in all his dealings with his fellow-men, and those who knew of his sufferings will rejoice with him in his bodily release.

From Cazenovia, N. Y., Nov. 23d, Mrs. Kate Dunham, aged 81 years.

She was ready for the change. The door to the spirit realm has stood ajar for her for many years. She wrote a letter to a friend, saying: "I have passed in my resignation; I am waiting for it to be accepted." She became a Spiritualist nearly forty years ago. To her spirit communion was a fact and a feast. She was first and foremost in the reforms of the day, anticipating the time when woman will obtain her rights. May the rising generation appreciate her many good qualities and imitate them.

Mrs. Dunham commenced the journey of life with Samuel Chesebro, who passed on rather early in life. Her second marriage was with Mr. Fosdic, and after his demise she married Frederic Dunham, who passed on twenty-five or thirty years ago. Ere this the union of all is complete. Mrs. Dunham was a subscriber to the BANNER OF LIGHT for many years. M. CARPENTER.

From Fitchburg, Mass., Mr. William Carter, formerly of Jaffrey, N. H., aged 72 years. CATHERINE B. CARTER.

EYES AND VOICES.

I.

If I could look with gently perfect eyes
On this strange human world, as one who fears
No duty and no task, and who reveres
Truth more than any dream that minds devise:
One who can trace the false, the weak, the wise,
In each new day that dawns and disappears;
Who, through some wild, heart-breaking clamor, hears
Hope singing sweetly in the earth and skies:

Then I should be what men and women are
When they are wholly just and wholly brave;
Then I should speak from life and from the grave,
From every ashen globe and throbbing star;
No word of mine would be a word of wrong,
And there would be no discord in my song.

II.

There are two voices in a human life—
One, the sharp cry of passion, hissing hot;
The other, calm and sweet, as though begot
Of perfect peace in some heaven-hallowed spot;
One is the cruel, mocking voice of strife,
Which falls to every heart, to every lot
And one the voice that whispers to the clot,
"Rise to thy living spirit; Death is not!"

Hearing these voices, there are men who hear
No message to their souls; they lust and plod
Under the flashing menace of a rod;
But there are natures, touched so deep and near,
That, like the seed of beauty piercing sod,
They break their flesh and crave the thought of God.
—George Edgar Montgomery, in Collier's Once a Week.

December Magazines.

THE CENTURY.—Geo. Kennan continues his thrilling narrative of Siberian exile life, a vivid one of injustice to those who have had the hardihood to express themselves in favor of truth and right. Nicolay and Hay in their Life of Lincoln treat upon the "First Plans for Emancipation." A number of original Lincoln MSS. are given, including one endorsed by Lincoln as follows: "The Emancipation Proclamation as first sketched and shown to the Cabinet in July 1862." A fac-simile page of the last manuscript of Henry Ward Beecher is accompanied by an account of the paper of which it was a part. There is also a paper relating to "Beecher in Liverpool in '63," by J. M. Buckley. The first of a series of stories of Irish-American life, is contributed by G. H. Jessop, and an interesting illustrated paper by Henry James on "London." Want of space compels us to omit mention of the numerous literary and artistic attractions of this number, of which are the second of "Strange Stories of Louisiana," "The Reorganization of the British Empire," "Another Side of the Woman Question," and poems by well-known authors. New York: The Century Co. Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street, Boston.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—The closing number of the year brings to a conclusion the admirable serial stories, "For the Good of the Family" and "Comrades Once." It also contains a pleasing story in two chapters, "One Good Turn Deserves Another," the third paper of "The Love Affairs of Some Famous Men," and "A Trip to Dutchman's Land," described by James Baker. Of the remaining contents are "Some Romances of Trade," "Preparing to Face the Winter," "Divers Ways of Cooking Apples," "How to Knit a Stocking," several poems, a profusion of engravings and an illustrated record of invention, discovery, literature and science. New York: Cassell & Co.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—The approaching centenary anniversary of the inauguration of Washington as the first President, April 30th, 1789, has brought into the contents of this issue an interesting collection of papers relating to that memorable event sufficient to give it the distinction of being, as it is called, the "Washington Number." Fine portraits of George and Martha Washington, made by the artotype process from Rembrandt Peale's paintings, never before engraved, precede a deeply interesting illustrated account of the inauguration, occupying twenty-eight pages, by the editor, Mrs. M. J. Lamb, written by special request, and read before the New York Historical Society last October. A number of minor articles in reference to the same subject are given on subsequent pages. Of the remaining contents are, "Holidays of the French Canadians," "French Colony of St. Domingo," "Original Documents," "Notes and Queries," and "Historic and Social Jottings." New York: 743 Broadway.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY has a fine table of contents, among which may be noted "A Flight in the Dark"; "A Devil's Passage"; a fine sketch of the late William Warren's histrionic career, (by Henry A. Clapp) the usual reviews, etc.—the whole constituting a fitting close for the year. Among the good things to come in 1889 may be mentioned the following: Three Serial Stories, "The Tragic Muse," by Henry James, "The Begum's Daughter," by E. L. Bynner, "Passe Rose," by Arthur Sherburne Hardy; also literary, social, historical essays, stories, poems, travel sketches, papers on education, politics, art, etc., by the foremost American writers. The January Atlantic will contain an entirely new steel portrait of the Poet Whittier. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, 4 Park street, Boston, Mass.

HERALD OF HEALTH.—"Important Facts Concerning Consumption and Kindred Complaints," "Seasonable Hints upon Colds," and "On the Proper Nursing of Children," comprise the general articles. The "Household," "Nursery" and other Departments are well filled. This number closes the thirty-eighth year of publication. New York: P. O. Box 2141.

FREETHINKER'S MAGAZINE.—In the leading article Nelly Booth Simmons asks for the laboring classes, "Justice, Not Charity." J. W. Dare criticises Lyman C. Howe's statements regarding Spiritualism; but millions of witnesses attest to facts that prove Mr. Howe's statements true. It cannot be presumed that Mr. D.'s knowledge without experience should be superior to that of these millions with. Portraits and brief biographies are given in this number of Horace Seaver and W. S. Bell. Buffalo, N. Y.: H. L. Green.

THE FOLIO for the current month—White, Smith & Co., publishers, 516 Washington street, Boston—has for pictorial illustration a full-page likeness of Wilhelm Gericke, and contains a good variety of professional news, together with twenty-four pages of musical compositions, vocal and instrumental.—We have also received from the same publishers the following new music: For pianoforte, "Chanson des Alpes" and "Dreaming of Flowers Waltz," for four hands, C. D. Blake; "Nation of Honor Grand March," Paul Keller; "Glad Hours," C. C. Stearns; for organ, "Contemplation," C. C. Stearns; vocal, "A Lark's Flight," A. C. Andrew; "Jacqueminots" (for contralto or baritone), and "A White Rose" (soprano or tenor), Max Eliot; "All the Earth is Glad Again," (Christmas anthem,) C. A. White.

THE BIZARRE, NOTES AND QUERIES.—The chief contents are "Women as Actresses," "Sayings of the Seven Sages of Greece," and "Biblia Sacra Nova." Interesting facts are given in Questions and Answers, supplemented by a Mathematical Bibliography. Manchester, N. H.: S. C. & L. M. Gould. Boston: For sale by Colby & Rich.

OUR LITTLE ONES.—The usual quantity and variety of stories, verses, merry jingles and attractive pictures are brought this month for "little bits of children," with all of whom this monthly is a favorite. Boston: Russell Publishing Company.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER.—The application of electricity to street railways and other service is the subject of the leading editorial. Electric lighting in England is considered, and a large number and variety of collateral subjects discussed in correspondence and contributed papers. New York: 11 Wall street.

BOOK NEWS.—The Christmas number of Book News (John Wanamaker, Philadelphia, 112 pages,) is the crowning issue of the year. It contains a descriptive price-list of over three hundred of the holiday publications, and is illustrated with about fifty representative pictures taken from the most attractive books of the season.

ST. LOUIS MEDICAL JOURNAL.—Wm. Tebb, in the opening article of the November number treats upon "The Question of Vaccine Diseases in Parliament." Mr. Wollner has become associated with Mr. Field in the conducting of this monthly, and with a view of extending its circulation and usefulness, the subscription price has been reduced from two dollars to one dollar a year. St. Louis, Mo.: Field & Wollner.

The Writing Planchette.
SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

The Boston Spiritual Temple—Berkeley Hall.—Last Sunday morning, after singing by Miss Alice M. Black, Miss Ellen F. Burnett accompanying, Mrs. Colby-Luther, under the influence of her guides, announcing as her subject "Social Life in the Spirit-World," said: "Everything in the universe shows sociability. There is something in and around life that requires a counterpart; something to be social with. Humanity demands sociability, and the demand and supply are not confined solely to your physical life. You do not pass into the spirit-world leaving the social element here. Destroy the sociability of the people of earth and the human race would run out in fifty years. In this particular you will not change when you leave this life. The social conditions of spirit-life are exact counterparts of those of this life. When you enter the spirit-world there seems to be a balancing power. You there exist in a world adapted to you. When you enter spirit-life friends will care for you; they will instruct you in that you do not know, and unfold to your minds an understanding of the laws that are henceforth to govern you; naturally you will gravitate to your own sphere. Social life in the spirit-world advances the individual to the most advanced realms.

Evening.—Following the usual preliminary exercises Mrs. Colby-Luther proceeded to speak upon the reünion of families in the life beyond. She alluded to the strong ties that bound families in a social compact in this life, especially of the strong and persistent love of a mother for her child, as indicative of a continuance of the family relations in the spirit-world. Death, she said, does not destroy your love. Family relations are the most perfect of the conditions of earth-life; you go into the spirit-world, and eventually all members of your family follow, and you will find that the ties that exist here cannot be broken by death.

Subject next Sunday, "The Locality of the Spirit-World." O. L. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Last Sunday the services opened with "Gates Ajar," finely sung by Mrs. Mary Nickerson. After an invocation and remarks by President Lewis, J. D. Stiles gave a poetical address of welcome and remarked that it was pleasant to turn from the excitements of our daily life to our friends from the spirit-world. So long as there are any who desire to know something of those who have passed on we must meet to do what we can to inform them. Our religion is not the result of forty years' experience; centuries have been passed in the search after truth. We may talk fluently of another life, so that our rhetoric will dazzle you, but that does not convince. We may bring testimony upon testimony, but you must see and know for yourselves. Demonstration of the life beyond is given in the phenomena of Spiritualism. The speaker urged upon all the cultivation of charity and the doing of good to others, that their lives may be rounded out, and, living in conscious immortality, we may, upon passing to that higher life, "know as we are known." The Indian control of Mr. Stiles then gave tests of spirit presence in his usual rapid manner, giving nearly fifty names, all of which were recognized. The controlling spirit remarked in closing that all the so called exposes of Spiritualism cannot kill it; it still lives, and will live when creeds shall have been forgotten and theology is a thing of the past.

Evening.—Mr. Stiles said we all have our battles to fight, and if we keep our banners afloat success will crown our efforts. Anything that opens the door to the angel-world should be welcomed. We need to study ourselves, and make our bodies fit temples for the indwelling of the immortal spirit. Unless the body be pure the spirit will be impure. Let us then begin our eternity here, and happiness shall be ours here and hereafter. After a song by Mrs. Nickerson, Mr. Stiles's Indian control said he was glad to know that people are opening their eyes and ears to receive the truth. Remarkable tests were given; among the names were those of Theodore N. Foque, and others, well known in Malden, especially in Mount Vernon Lodge F. and A. M. Nearly all the spirits announced were recognized by evidences given of their identification.

Next Sunday is Mediums' Day in the Association. Fine talent may be expected. Several children from the Progressive Lyceum will take part in the exercises. The Thursday evening circle will be held as usual.

HEATH.

Independent Club—Berkeley Hall.—The Club has changed its quarters, and there was a large increase in the attendance on Friday (7th). The short lecture by the guides of Mr. J. W. Fletcher stated the purpose of the Club to be to study spiritual phenomena from an unsectarian point of view, to sustain a platform upon which speakers not allied directly with the movement can be heard, and to suppress scandal because of the fact that unkindly criticism is unspiritual and unprofitable. A collection was then taken up for an unfortunate medium.

At supper the tables were crowded, and in the evening the capacity of the hall was tested. The Grand Master opened the meeting by relating that recently he was in a room where there was a Methodist minister, a Universalist clergyman and an Infidel. Theologically they were enemies. Soon, music being proposed, they all began to sing, and then perfect harmony prevailed. What we need is to leave theology behind and enter into the realms of art and music where all can find accord. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles gave an address upon "Speak It Out," in which she held that it is not necessary for us to really speak aloud, but to feel our truth so deeply that it will be heard and realized though no word is uttered. Her remarks, which were of a truly spiritual character, were attentively listened to and highly appreciated. Miss Emma Nickerson spoke of the power of the mind and thought-transference. Mrs. Burnham emphasized the same thought. Miss Green rendered several recitations in costume, and was applauded. Miss Jennie Rhind also favored the audience. Mr. Holmes closed the meeting with a poem of his own.

Mrs. M. E. Williams of New York has offered her services to give a public séance for the benefit of the Club at an early date. There were many applications for membership. The musical efforts of Mrs. Case are highly appreciated, and the BANNER OF LIGHT and Better Way cordially thanked for giving reports of the meetings. F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society held its regular session Dec. 4th. In the afternoon the business meeting was called to order by the President. The Secretary made a financial report for the year, which was approved, and it was voted that Mrs. H. W. Cushman receive two dollars per week from the Society during the winter. The Society has decided to hold Social Circles at four o'clock each Tuesday afternoon, instead of sewing, as heretofore, five cents to be contributed by each one present; its object will be mutual development and spiritual culture. Gentlemen and ladies cordially invited.

In the evening, after supper, remarks were made by Lyman C. Howe, on "True Mediumship," followed by a song written for the occasion by George C. Paine, set to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." Spirited remarks on "Woman's Era" were made by Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, and J. William Fletcher, Capt. Richard Holmes, Dr. Brown and L. L. Whitlock vied with each other in their tributes to woman and her power. Recitations and music made the evening one long to be remembered. EMMA J. NICKERSON, Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The regular services were held at this hall on Sunday last—the sessions (three) being well attended, and the tests, delineations, remarks, etc., of the usual talent being well received. Mr. Cobb, Conductor, aims to make these meetings not only attractive but instructive, in which direction his own eloquence and tact go far to reinforce the work done by the excellent mediums to be found at each session at College Hall.

American Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' meetings were held here Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. In spite of the disagreeable weather, large and appreciative audiences were in attendance throughout the day. Interesting remarks were made by the Chairman, also L. L. Whitlock, Jacob Edson, Mrs. A. E. Cunningham, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mrs. I. E. Downing, Dr. Eldridge and Mr. Ridell, which were instructive and well received. Mr. Whitlock spoke highly of the beautiful hall and the harmonious management of the meetings, as also did Mr. Edson.

Convincing tests of spirit-presence were given through the organisms of Mrs. Cunningham, Miss Holt, Mrs. Downing, Dr. Eldridge, Mrs. Wilkins, Mrs. Rich and the Chairman, which were all recognized as correct. Services throughout the day were interspersed with beautiful music—Miss Campbell and Miss Grace Holton acting as pianists, and Dr. Hale as organist.

Next Sunday Dr. W. S. Eldridge will be present and give some of his spirit-communications (written), which are said to be truly wonderful by those who have received them. Other able test and speaking mediums will also attend. M. M. HOLT.

Chelsea.—Mrs. Clark Kimball, the well-known test medium, will occupy the rostrum at Pilgrim Hall Sunday, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M. XX.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Sunday, Dec. 2d, J. Frank Baxter made his début in Buffalo, N. Y. He did not know how great the press, pulpit and public prejudices are, and much less, how they are brought to bear. Mr. Baxter's fame as a medium, a lecturer and a gentleman had preceded him from Cassadaga Camp and North Collins yearly meetings, and it was astonishing to many of the First Society of Spiritualists to see so many people out that they little thought to see. Every available seat was secured in the hall, many stood, and numbers could gain no admittance at the evening session. The meetings of the day exceeded in interest the most sanguine expectations, and many believe Mr. Baxter has cracked the hard conservative shell, and that a precedence has been established whereby a heretofore unexpected many will listen to lectures, investigate phenomena, and unite with the Society. Resolution and back-bone are all the requisites necessary to make Spiritualists in Buffalo a power, and Spiritualism acceptable.

Mr. Baxter did unflinchingly a noble work last Sunday, and has laid out a most admirable course of lectures and work for four Sundays to come. His singing was inspiring, his lectures were logical and magnetically delivered, and his mediumship most singularly interesting and convincing.

At a business meeting on Thursday evening, Dec. 6th, officers were chosen for the year ensuing, and Mr. Baxter's services accepted for a benefit entertainment to the Society, to be given Friday evening, the 14th inst. Mr. Baxter is to speak in Lockport, N. Y., three evenings of next week. VIDEN.

Willimantic, Ct.—A correspondent writes of the lectures of Dr. Dean Clarke, that they are of the very best ever heard in this place. The Chronicle and the Journal (both local papers), have given good reference to his work: "To our sister societies allow us to say that if you wish to learn of the Spiritual Philosophy, engage Bro. Dean Clarke, and you will make no mistake, and the longer he stays with you the better thought he will give you. He has devoted a life-time to the cause, and evinces much study and thought in his lectures. He remains with us during December. Miss Jennie B. Hagan has been engaged for a course of six lectures on week-day evenings. [She was to commence on Tuesday, the 11th inst.—ED.] Our Lyceum meets every Sunday at 12:15 with a good attendance of both old and young, and much interest is manifested in the exercises.

One of the prominent branches of our cause here is the semi-weekly 'Baked Bean' Social, so called. On these occasions a supper is furnished of baked beans and brown bread, and biscuit provided by its managers, and every one carries a loaf of cake, or a pie, etc; after the 'inner man' is provided, then a good time is passed by story-telling, jokes, and not infrequently by some ex members who step in to make known that they are near us, though unseen! The next 'Bean' Social will occur on Thursday, the 20th inst." •

Philadelphia, Pa.—In spite of the rain large audiences gathered to listen to Prof. Peck's lectures upon "The Age of Reason vs. The Age of Faith," and "The Philosophy of Spirit Manifestations." In the evening especially the large hall was filled with a most enthusiastic and appreciative audience. Mr. Peck keeps his hearers "wide awake" with his sound logic and apt illustrations. We are greatly pleased with him. L. R. C.

G. W. Kates and wife at Columbia Hall, Sunday night, attracted an audience that nearly filled the hall. Mrs. Kates, entranced, spoke upon questions proposed by the audience relating to the phenomena produced by East India Fakirs in contrast to that of Spiritualism—also the Fox Sisters "exposé." Mr. Kates followed, treating the same subjects. Mrs. Kates then gave numerous tests, descriptive and incidental, which were generally recognized. FIELD.

Norwich, Ct.—Sunday, Dec. 2d, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lillie, of Melrose, Mass., began their month's work for our Society. Good audiences assembled in G. A. R. Hall both afternoon and evening. Mrs. Lillie requested the audience to present subjects for the afternoon address and improvisation, and the evening theme was in relation to the late so-called "exposures": "Can Spiritualism be Exposed?" which topic was satisfactorily considered.

Mr. Lillie's excellent songs were heartily applauded.

Sunday, 9th, in spite of the severe storm good audiences listened again to the inspired utterances of this gifted lady upon subjects taken from the audience.

The good work goes on. I heartily wish that the Spiritualists all over the land would give mediums and speakers so much work that they would not feel to leave our ranks and go into the churches for lack of remunerative employment.

Mrs. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Miss Emma J. Nickerson, of Boston, commenced an engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of this city, Sunday, Dec. 9th, speaking at 2 P. M. upon the subject, "What Woman Has Done." Miss Nickerson is an easy speaker, at once getting the attention of her audience, and holding it to the close.

The 7 P. M. lecture was an argument for the equality of the sexes—statistics being given on the advance of woman in all of the departments of life, with a comparison of ability displayed in her public vocations, as compared with her brother man.

At the close of the evening lecture Miss Nickerson gave an exercise in mediumship, reading for persons in the audience very satisfactorily. She will occupy the same platform next Sunday. W. W. CURRIER.

Worcester, Mass.—A stormy Sunday and a good audience (considering the storm) greeted Mrs. Emma Miner's first appearance before a Worcester audience. Her subject in the afternoon, "Foundation and Surface," was full of deep thought and sound reasoning, commanding the strict attention of her hearers and eliciting well-merited applause at its close. She also favored us with several inspirational poems of more than ordinary merit.

Her evening subject, "The Demand for a New Theology," was equally meritorious. Mrs. Miner, who has but recently entered the lecture field, seems at once to step into a position which but few attain in so short a time. S.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday Miss Jennie Rhind, of Boston, whose peculiar style of address and interesting visions are an attraction, lectured and exercised her gifts as a seeress before the First Spiritualist Association in Brittan Hall, drawing large audiences both afternoon and evening. Miss Rhind gave illustrations of her gift of seeing both afternoon and evening, but in larger numbers on the latter occasion; all were of a very satisfactory character. E. P. H.

Lynn, Mass.—The Independent Spiritualists of Lynn on Sunday, Dec. 9th, held the third of their meetings of the season at Cadet Hall, the platform being occupied by Prof. George Chainey, who gave us two of his eloquent discourses. He is to be with us again next Sunday, the subjects to be announced during the week. L. S. K., Cor. Sec'y.

I hope we shall have pleasant weather and a full house for this his last and best lecture. E. H. WHITNEY.

Portland, Me.—A correspondent writes: "We have had a large attendance here of late, to listen to C. Fannie Allyn's ministrations. Excellent music has lent additional interest to the services. We have a lively Ladies' Aid Society among us, and the cause, in all respects, is 'marching on.'"

Meetings for Spiritual Manifestations will be held at Adelphi Hall, corner 7th Avenue and 52d street, New York, every Sunday at 2¾ P. M. Tests given by Mrs. E. A. Wells of New York.

Adelphi Hall, corner of 52d Street and 7th Avenue.—The First Society of Spiritualists holds meetings every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7¾ P. M. Admission free.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham discoursed in the morning on the following subjects given by the audience: "Why Does Man Claim Immortality?" "Sleep and Death; What Is the Difference?" "Do I Dream I Live, or do I Live to Dream?" "Life—where Does It Begin, and when and Where Shall It End? If I have a Beginning, will there not be an Ending?" etc. The speaker said: "The subjects show a unanimity of thought on the part of the audience which I am glad to see. Man claims immortality, I might say, because he cannot help it. As in the egg, just before the life within breaks the shell, the eyes and feet and embryo wings tell of the little bird, so man's thoughts and aspirations here are proofs of his immortality. Poems upon subjects from the audience followed the lecture. The subject of the evening lecture, "The Uses of Light and Shadow, Prosperity and Adversity in our Human Experience," was handled with great ability and was loudly applauded.

The Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon was well attended considering the inclemency of the weather, and the services interesting and instructive. The meeting opened with a piano solo by Miss Ella F. Porter, song by Miss Lilly Runals. The applause that followed Miss Runals's singing indicated the high estimation in which her abilities are held. Whistling solos by Miss Mamie Horton elicited merited applause. Mark M. Pomeroy followed, giving a brief history of London as a great metropolis, and what it has done to accumulate material with which to make the coming of the Salvation Army a necessity. Mrs. Henry J. Newton read a notice of The Society of Mercy, organized for the purpose of establishing an unsectarian Home for the aged and indigent of both sexes, and spoke earnestly in its behalf. Mrs. Tingley (formerly Mrs. Parent) one of our most reliable mediums for psychological readings and other tests of spirit presence, is one of the founders of this great work. Mrs. A. C. Henderson gave twelve satisfactory psychological readings, that were fully recognized.

Mrs. Brigham will occupy the platform of the First Society next Sunday morning and evening. M. M. Pomeroy will open the Meeting for Manifestations with a lecture on "The Mistakes of Spiritualists."

New York, Dec. 9th, 1888. S.

The Arcanum Hall Progressive Spiritualists' meetings, held Sunday, 9th inst., at 57 West 25th street, were well attended. Horatio G. Eddy held a light seance at 3 P. M., for physical manifestations. Musical instruments were played upon; a materialized spirit-hand in view of the audience wrote messages to many that were recognized. George Dix, a spirit, showed his hand with a missing fourth finger. The medium has no blemish to his hands. Other remarkable manifestations occurred while the medium was in sight of all. This seance was a convincing success.

Dr. Cetlinski and J. F. Jeaneret related their remarkable experiences at the Eddy Brothers' seances, held several years ago. Prof. Van Horn gave many fully recognized spirit-tests. Mrs. E. Benwell gave the closing benediction.

At the evening session Mrs. Benwell delivered, under spirit-control, an able discourse. The Conductor for one hour gave mental and spiritual messages, names, etc. COR

New York Specials.

At the meeting of THE ALLIANCE Wednesday evening, Nov. 28th, excellent speeches were made by Dr. Hicks, Mr. Morse, Mrs. Coleman, Mr. Jeaneret, Dr. Cetlinski and Mrs. Wallace. Mr. Morse gave an account of his meeting with Maggie Fox in London, years ago, saying that the raps came for the asking. Then we had our usual sitting, as a body, for the physical manifestations; when some five or six mediums present were used by the manifesting spirits.

Mrs. Diss Debar will be free about the 18th inst., and will lecture immediately after she gains her liberty, it is said.

Mrs. Moss, the excellent materializing medium, is forming a private Friday evening circle of six persons only.

Passed On.

From Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 6th, Edmund Gage, aged 86 years 6 months and 26 days.

In the very early days of what is termed "Modern Spiritualism," Mr. Gage, who was then residing in Cincinnati, O., became interested in the subject, and in connection with other gentlemen—several of whom have since become noted as Spiritualist lecturers and investigators—pursued the subject until he became fully satisfied of the truths of immortality thus revealed. Through all the years since that time he has continued his investigations, thereby constantly obtaining additional and satisfactory evidence of the truth of immortality, and of our continued conscious active and progressive life after the dissolution of our physical bodies.

Mr. Gage's home was ever open to mediums and investigators. He was connected with the First Spiritualist Society of this city, and, until the infirmities of age, and an accident which confined him to his house for nearly two years prior to his decease, was an almost constant attendant at its meetings, and always furnishing substantial aid in carrying them on. He was an active and prominent business man during his life, and for some years was a director in the First National Bank of this city, and was also quite efficient in securing the incorporation of the Five-Cent Savings Bank. He was a man of marked personality of character, and firm and tenacious in the expression of his opinions, after satisfying himself of their truth. Dr. P. L. H. Willis officiated at his funeral on Tuesday, Dec. 11th. J. M. P.

Haverhill, Mass.

From Boston City Hospital, Dec. 4th, from a complication of diseases, John H. W. Toohey, aged 66 years and 5 months.

Prof. Toohey was born in Fermoy, near the city of Cork, Ireland, July 5th, 1822, and was educated for the ministry. For years he was a friend and supporter of the late Wendell Phillips, and his voice had often been heard on labor matters, which gave him a wide reputation.

Mr. Toohey years ago became convinced of the truth of spirit-communion, and labored for the cause with eloquent voice and erudite pen in nearly every part of the United States. He also gave his attention to medical practice, lecturing at times upon the subject of health and disease. He has often appeared before the Massachusetts Legislative Committees as a defender of equal rights before the law in matters remedial. It was his intention, had he remained in the form, to meet the next Legislature with a petition for the repeal of the compulsory vaccination law. The latter years of his life have been devoted to literary research and the occupations naturally flowing therefrom.

He leaves four children. The funeral took place Friday, Dec. 7th, from the residence of Mr. William James, 305 Columbus Avenue. •••

The American Spiritualist Alliance

Held its regular meeting on the evening of Dec. 5th. The meeting opened by Dr. Cetlinski stating that at a séance a few days previous with a medium for independent writing, he received a message purporting to have been written by the Emperor Nicholas of Russia. The Doctor said that at the time he did not believe it was authentic, but that what had transpired later led him to believe it was. The statement was as follows: Mr. Jeaneret, who is a clairvoyant medium, described to him (Dr. C.) a spirit whom he averred he saw standing by the side of the Doctor, and said, "He stamps his foot, and pronounces a Russian word that I don't understand the meaning of." "Well," replied the Doctor, "I know what it means. It is not very complimentary to me. It is the Russian word for stupid, and you have described the late Emperor Nicholas."

"Now," said the Doctor, addressing the chair, "the question that I wish The Alliance to help me answer is this: Why should the Emperor Nicholas come to me, while I not only have no love for him, but on the contrary hate him with an intense hatred, and have hated him for years, for the injury that he inflicted upon my country, Poland, and upon my family in confiscating our estate, and sending my brother to Siberia? Why, I ask you, should that man—now decarnated—whom I hate intensely, return and give me the message he did? I feel sure it was him, for that was a way he had of stamping his foot, and calling those he disliked stupid!"

Mr. Jeaneret stated that the spirit he saw standing by the Doctor looked and acted like a man who had always been accustomed to command and to be obeyed without any questionings, and impressed him as being one accustomed to rule with absolute authority.

The Rev. Dr. Hicks, being present, was asked by Dr. Cetlinski to give his views upon the question, and the latter did so at some length. The conclusion arrived at was that there was a law of equal and exact compensation which was operative throughout the realms of being, and that if emperor, noble or peasant wronged any person while living on this mundane plane, the time would come when from their homes in the supermundane world they would be compelled, how much soever they disliked to do so, to seek out such persons wherever they might be, either in the mundane or supermundane spheres, and secure the forgiveness of such person or persons for any wrong done them before they could make further progress.

Dr. Hicks then made a powerful appeal to Dr. Cetlinski to stretch forth his hand and grasp the spirit-hand held out to him in humble supplication for forgiveness for the wrong and injury done him and his, and which the spirit now fully realized and deplored in deep contrition, and to greet him as a brother man in distress, and by a full and free forgiveness help to remove the bars of the prison that held him in bondage; and thus, by this Godlike act of forgiveness and the changing of hate to love, and a strong desire to help a fellowman in distress, be the means of setting this penitent prisoner free.

Dr. Cetlinski replied that while he did not know that his reason had been convinced as to the cause of Nicholas's coming to him, yet a chord in his heart had been touched by the Doctor's appeal, and had banished fully and forever the hatred that he had harbored for long years; and that henceforth he should have none but feelings of kindness for him and a desire to aid him in his spiritual advancement.

Mr. J. J. Morse, who was also a guest of The Alliance, spoke upon the same question, and while fully endorsing all Dr. Hicks had said, added that persons were often attached to each other through psychologic influences of which they themselves might be wholly ignorant; and it was to these psychologic attachments that we were to look for the explanation why, in seances, persons had spirits come to them with whom they not only had no personal acquaintance, but of whom they had never heard.

Many others also addressed The Alliance upon the question, the consensus of opinion being as above expressed, and a number of incidents of personal experience bearing directly upon the subject, and tending to confirm the opinion expressed were related.

The next meeting of The Alliance will be at 8 P. M., Dec. 19th, at 219 West 42d street, New York.

Original Essay.

THE GENESIS OF THOUGHT.

BY A. E. NEWTON.

In Two Parts—Part II.

But whence come the streams of thought that surprise our greatest thinkers? What is the "alien energy" which generates these grand visions and creations? That energy must be intellectual, or mental, and not the chance-play of blind, unconscious, automatic forces. For its products often display the highest order of intellectual action; they exhibit plan, connected thought in orderly sequence, together with imagery of the highest beauty and significance, and above all, in notable cases, a worthy purpose of good. These qualities must originate in MIND and that mind must be akin, even though superior, to human minds. What mind conceives, arranges and projects these grand surprises?

Both Holmes and Thackeray, in the quotations previously given, intimate an identity of experience between modern inspired writers and ancient Pythonesses. "There is a Delphi and a Pythoness in every human breast," says the former. No doubt this is true. But the ancients—even the most intelligent and cultivated among them, such as Plato, Socrates, Xenophon, Hesiod, Herodotus, etc., firmly believed the Pythonesses and Sibyls to be the mouthpieces (or mediums) of "the gods," that is, the ancestral spirits of the race, who were regarded as the real authors of the poems, prophecies and instructions delivered through these instruments. Emerson finds the source of his inspirations in what he terms "the Over-soul," which is the transcendental word for Deity; while Mrs. Stowe piously attributes her grandest work to the dictation of "God." But she has in her earlier writings strongly affirmed her belief in the "ministration of spirits" and the immediate presence of the spirit-world, of which she has said:

"It lies about us like a cloud—
A world we do not see;
Yet the sweet closing of an eye
May bring us there to be."

And again, addressing her deceased son, in the touching poem entitled "Only a Year," she wrote:

"Not dead, not sleeping, not even gone;
But present still,
And waiting for the coming hour
Of God's sweet will."

Believing thus in the nearness of spiritual beings, and their employment as ministers of the Infinite Spirit, she can hardly be supposed to mean otherwise than that such beings were the actual agents employed in dictating to her mind the details of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Charles Dudley Warner states that "The Vision of Sir Launfal, one of the most exquisite productions of the genius of James Russell Lowell, was composed in a sort of frenzy, lasting about forty-eight hours, during which the poet neither ate nor slept." This fact is very significant.

Of Longfellow, one of the chief of our modern poets, it is stated by his biographer (Underwood), that "His first conceptions came like inspiration, and his first draughts of poems were done with exceeding rapidity." This corresponds with the "fine phrenzy" so usually ascribed to ancient Sibyls and Pythonesses in delivering their utterances, and more or less common to all poets in all times and countries. Longfellow's poems abound in recognitions of spirit-presence, showing a consciousness on his part, more or less clear, of intimate relations to the realm of spiritual being; and in the following lines of one of his later productions he distinctly indicates a perception of the immediate source of suddenly injected thoughts:

"It may be
The thoughts that visit us, we know not whence,
Sudden as inspiration, are the whispers
Of disembodied spirits, speaking to us,
As friends who wait outside a prison wall
Through the barred windows speak to those within."

Can any more reasonable explanation of the source of many of our thoughts, both ordinary and extraordinary, be suggested? In fact, in view of the established principles of material science, as set forth in President Hitchcock's treatise on "The Telegraphic System of the Universe,"* it seems unavoidable, granting the existence of invisible minds or spiritual beings anywhere in the universe, and especially if near at hand and surrounding us, that their thoughts should, to some extent, act upon and awaken corresponding thoughts in the minds of mortals, and vice versa. President Hitchcock shows, from the known laws of electric, optical, odyllic, chemical and mental reaction, that thought or emotion cannot take place in any mind without producing vibrations which are limitless in extent and endless in duration. He says:

"Through the subtle agencies that have been named, we may be sure that an influence goes out from every thought and volition of ours, and reaches every other intellect in the wide creation. I know not whether, in other worlds, their inhabitants possess sensibilities acute enough to be conscious of this influence; certainly, in this world, it is only to a limited extent that men are conscious of it. Yet we must admit that it exists and acts, or deny the demonstrated verities of science."

He adds the further important statement, that

"There are certain facts in the history of individuals in an abnormal state, which show that one mind acts upon another, independent of the senses, or any other material means of intercommunication discoverable by the senses."

It would seem, then, that the only thing requisite to the actual enjoyment of mental communication between minds in and out of the body, is, the possession of sensibilities acute enough to perceive and interpret the subtle vibrations caused by mental action. But poets and persons of genius, of all classes, are known to be possessed of especially acute sensibilities; and hence their ability to feel the mental activities of invisible minds that surround and are in rapport with them, even though they be wholly unaware of the source of these activities.

This law of sympathetic vibration has many illustrations. One is the well-known responsiveness of a stringed musical instrument, as a violin or a piano, to the notes of a flute or other wind-instrument, and even to the human voice, when the right chords are sounded. The atmospheric vibrations produced by the one are propagated to and repeated by the other—provided the instruments are attuned in harmony. So, doubtless, the thoughts and emotions of every vigorous mind, wherever in the universe it may exist, in the physical body or out, set in motion vibrations in the mental atmosphere, which extend to and affect indefinite numbers of other minds, sympathetically attuned, within the radius of its influence. This furnishes a scientific basis on which to form a rational conception of the source of our thoughts and inspirations—often so mixed, incongruous and inconsequential, and again so grand, uplifting and surprising as these are. And it shows the necessity of keeping our souls attuned to the high, the noble, the holy, if we would be sensitive to vibrations from the higher realms of being—the loftier planes of intellect.

Concerning Longfellow, a little incident within the writer's remembrance will illustrate the manner in which poets may be sometimes acted upon in the production of their works. It was my privilege to be present, many years ago, at a social gathering at the house of Allen Putnam, Esq., then residing in Roxbury. It was shortly after Mr. Longfellow's remarkable and peculiar poem of "Hiawatha" had been given to the public, and while it was attracting general attention. Among the company were several clairvoyants and other mediums of various gifts, and a host of invisibles were reported as honoring the occasion with their presence. Among others, a band of North American Indian spirits, of an obviously intelligent and elevated character, presented themselves, unsought, and were seen, if I mistake not, simultaneously, by two or three of the clairvoyants present. These spirits proceeded to surprise and greatly interest the company by the declaration that they were the real authors of the poem of Hiawatha—that they had banded themselves together and brought their united influence to bear upon the poet, for the purpose of producing through his instrumentality a work which should awaken a more just and kindly feeling toward their race on the part of the white people of this nation. They seemed greatly pleased with their success, and the general interest which the poem had aroused, and for this they expressed the warmest gratitude. Whether Mr. Longfellow had any consciousness of such action upon his mind in that production, I have no means of knowing, nor is it material to the purpose now in view—which is that of illustrating the origin of thought.

Great orators are doubtless acted upon in a similar way, in the production of their most effective forensic efforts, as Dr. Holmes has intimated. Take an illustrative instance: The writer had the pleasure of forming one of the vast audience that assembled in Tremont Temple, Boston, in the year 1860, to celebrate the first election of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States. The chief speaker of the occasion was Massachusetts' "silver-tongued orator," Wendell Phillips. By my side sat one of the clearest-visioned clairvoyants I have ever known, but without any expectation of any exercise of her gift on that occasion. Mr. Phillips was at his best. As he stepped upon the platform the clairvoyant turned to me in surprise, and said in whisper: "I see in the rear of the platform (the walls have disappeared) a vast assemblage of spirits, in the foreground of whom I recognize the familiar forms of many of the founders of the republic. I wonder what it means! Now," she said, as Mr. Phillips was about to speak, "I see the tall form of Washington stand forth, as if he is to address the assembly, but his language seems to consist of symbols and imagery of the grandest character." She proceeded to describe to me, as well as she could, the grand and significant imagery which the Father of his Country seemed to project in some way before the vision of his spirit-audience. Listening to her description, I at the same time had my ears open to the words of the visible orator on the platform, and was interested to note that Mr. Phillips followed closely, a little way behind, the exact line of thought and imagery already portrayed to me by the clairvoyant as expressed by Washington, save that often Mr. Phillips's language, grand and stirring as it was, gave but a meagre idea of the glowing and resplendent symbolism projected by the (to me) invisible orator. This continued throughout the discourse. It appeared evident that Mr. Phillips was but giving utterance to thoughts and ideas impressed upon or projected into his mind by a master-mind behind him. Probably his conscious experience was not different from that in his other great efforts, or that of other great orators on grand occasions in general; but the incident at least illustrates and enforces the statement of Dr. Holmes, that "the orator only becomes our master when he himself is surprised, captured and taken possession of by a sudden rush of fresh inspiration." Orators are often conscious of sudden electric thrills pervading their whole being, accompanied by gushes of fresh thought which are a surprise to themselves.

But not only poets and orators, philosophers and novelists, sculptors and other artists, are recipients and not creators of their best things, but inventors have similar experiences. Mr. Edison is reported as having acknowledged that he has received some of his most valuable and wonderful inventions while in the state of trance. A successful inventor of cotton machinery, to whose ingenious devices the public is indebted for probably millions of dollars saved in the cheapening of cotton fabrics in this country, once said to me, in describing his experience: "When I see that some new invention is really needed, I go to my room, darken the windows, throw myself upon my bed, and lie there in quiet seclusion until the thing desired is shown to me, in all its parts and relations. Then I go to my shop and work it out." The same inventor stated that he had once been a thorough materialist, an utter disbeliever in a future life, but had been startled from his skepticism by the statement of a clairvoyant, who, one day, passing his shop, stopped outside and described to him an invention that he (my friend) was then engaged in constructing in secret, and of which he was sure no human being but himself knew anything. The clairvoyant further described to him a spirit, who claimed to be interested in the invention, and to be aiding in its completion, giving some valuable suggestions for its perfection. This spirit he recognized, from the evidences given, as a fellow-inventor, his former partner in business, then deceased, and who, he supposed, had utterly dropped out of existence; but here was proof that he still lived, and had not ceased to be interested in his former work. The result was a course of investigation, which fully convinced this skeptic, not only that life continues beyond the grave, but that useful inventions, like other good gifts to humanity, "come from above," through the beneficent ministration of those who have passed to a higher plane of life.

In thus tracing the origin of much of human thought to the agency of invisible beings, acting directly upon impressible persons by either suggestion, inspiration, or forcible control, I do not intend to deny or ignore another probable method by which thought is generated in human minds. No doubt there exists what may be called an atmosphere of thought, of various grades or stratifications, lower and coarser, higher and more refined. As the common air is known to be charged with the germs of innumerable animalculæ, or microbes, and almost constantly in vibration with various sounds, so this thought-atmosphere may be supposed to be pervaded by thought-germs of various qualities, or by the vibrations peculiar to different orders of thought—perhaps by both; and these thought-germs or vibrations generate corresponding thoughts in minds that absorb or become immersed in them and are capacitated to be affected by them. These mental vibrations or germs of thought no doubt proceed from the combined action of either united bands or perhaps vast numbers of coöperating minds pertaining to the specific grade or sphere of life whence they emanate, instead of coming from merely individual minds—personal spirits—as in the case of direct personal communication, by impression, or control.

The existence and action of mental atmospheres of different grades pertaining to earth, is sufficiently proven by the experience of sensitive persons in daily experience. Almost every one realizes the difference between the atmosphere of a church and that of a playhouse, or that of a school-room and of a political assembly, as regards the kind and order of thoughts and emotions they give rise to.

Persons who in the way suggested absorb thought from the atmosphere around them may be quite unconscious of the action of any mind but their own, and hence may imagine that all originates within themselves; or, if aware of any sudden and marked influx of ideas, may attribute them directly, as does Mrs. Stowe, to "God," or Emerson to "the Over-soul," recognizing no intermediate agency. And, indeed, as already intimated, all such inspiration may be counted as truly "divine," in so far as it expresses truth and tends to good.

The practical lesson of this inquiry into the genesis of thought is, that the grade, quality and value of our thoughts and inspirations, whether they be injected by individual or associated minds in the invisible world, or generated from a spiritual atmosphere which we inbreathe, depends upon the elevation and purity of the minds with which we are nearest in sympathy and rapport, in this world or the other; in other words, upon the degree of personal elevation, mental, moral and spiritual, which we have ourselves attained. Mere inspiration, of itself—whether ancient or modern, whether given through prophets, apostles, sibyls or pythonesses—no matter how startling or surprising its methods or its products, or how lofty soever the source it may claim—is of no worth beyond its intrinsic power to enlighten, to elevate, and to energize for good.

LOVE, THE EVOLVER.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

BY MRS. LOVE M. WILLIS.

It was November—past the middle—and one of those Novembers that cheat the New Englander into a temporary belief that the winter will not be a test to his faith and hope, but will stimulate his trust. All seasons are beautiful in the Divine order of the universe to a person in vigor and strength, when the breath is a true inspiration, and the hands and feet respond to the heart. But November means forecasting and calculating, and denial of the Eastern injunction, "take no thought for the morrow."

Far off over the valleys a soft, gray mist was gathering, and the hills were purple in the distance. The forests had lost their glory, but they had taken on the serenity of gray and brown. The sky, too, was gray, but a gray that suggested repose and not death. "A symphony in gray," Whistler would have named a picture of the scene, or a representation of the day. An occasional belated robin called from the trees, and a flock of swallows asserted their persistent courage by chirps and flutters, giving life to the scene.

On the hillside overlooking the valley were sitting, on shawl-covered bowlders, three fine specimens of New England womanhood. Not robust types to the eye, but in figure and movement full of the aspiration and endeavor that make even sallow cheeks suggest endurance and thin lips express latent power. They had come in the horse-cars to the limit of their route, and had wandered off to this location for a last glimpse before the coming of snow and ice of Nature, pure and simple.

"Don't look much like winter, does it? and yet only five weeks to Christmas," said the elder.

"How can you mention such a disagreeable subject in the midst of this rest and comfort? It means hurry, bustle, confusion, restless nights, weary days, fear, anxiety, debt, perhaps insolvency," said the second of the three; and she gave her head a toss and her body a shake as she rose to her feet, and cast a look of appeal to the far-off, delectable mountains.

"I say so, too. I am weary past endurance of the present order of things. We are all deluged with pincushions and bags and bric-à-brac; and I saw Mrs. Fellows fold that lovely embroidery I designed myself, and spent weeks and weeks on until I was half blind, and put it in camphor and tar and every horrid-smelling combination, and lock it in a great trunk, as much as to say, You are too good to use, too good to be eaten by the moths: you are simply a useless encumbrance. I could have cried from vexation."

This was spoken by the light-haired, gentle-faced maiden, Hope, who had brought out her colors to try a bit of sketching, but had given up the last hour to pure enjoyment.

"Well, I must say," answered Prudence, "that bags and pincushions are a little overdone, but then there are the charities: the newsboys, the hospitals, the Sunday schools. We must not forget that what makes us tired makes others happy."

"Now Prudence," said Marianna, "you have not read Mills in vain. You know that doing for people do n't help them one jot. I do n't forget how the pretty things I made for those back alley girls and boys were out in the ash-barrel in a week, and that doll I dressed——"

"Oh! do n't mention that doll again," said Hope; "we have had it in monthly installments to illustrate political economy ever since January last. There, dear, do n't be angry; I did not mean that we were bored. It was dreadful, but no worse than my pretty gown that I wanted myself, and gave to——"

"Oh! stop, girls," said Prudence. "Let us give one look at this grand November, and bury the future in a mist like that on the far-off valley."

"I know but one way out of our tribulations, and that is to seek wisdom," said Marianna. "I have just been thinking of our great-great-grandfather, who would not have a mince pie in his house at Christmas time because it savored of popery."

"Yes, wisdom is a good stand-by if one can bear it," said Prudence, "but I am thinking love comes first."

"Philosophy is horribly chilly," said Marianna; "let us have a run, and imagine we are girls again."

A month later and the same trio sat in a snug parlor that opened by its rear windows to the stretch of Charles River. The lights on the long bridge and the mill-dam were gleaming in eye-enticing brightness. The sunset glory had scarcely died out of the west, which seemed like a transfusion of heavenly and earthly light. The three sat quietly gazing. The pleasant chatter of an hour before had given place to a seriousness quite unusual to this sisterhood.

Presently Hope began to sob in apparent forgetfulness, and Prudence, who had borne the pain of her pet's unhappiness in quiet as long as she could, at last arose, and taking the fair head between her hands, laid it tenderly on her lap. The long quiet that followed was at last broken by Prudence.

"Something is wrong, girls. We are all unhappy, and life does not look as it used to look; suppose we make clean breasts, and see where the remedy lies, if remedy there is. Come, Rose, begin."

"Oh! girls, don't say I'm silly, but I saw Ben when I was out this morning, and he did not seem to notice me, and he has been here but once in a fortnight, and not at all since that talk we had on good works, when I said I was sick of hearing about the poor and their sufferings, and I guessed God knew about how to take care of His own. Tell me, Prue, do you think he will come again? and did n't he know that I only tried to be smart because—because he said so much about Sue Amory's charity, and we all know she has five thousand a year? You can see, Prue, you know; tell me."

Prudence was silent; she seemed like one dreaming; at last she said: "Do you believe in the handwriting on the wall? For over there, just where the darkness decreases and light begins, there are golden words. Let me read them to you: 'Those who seek wisdom must first find love. Through suffering and compassion men grow together and are lifted nearer the Divine. It is not by good deeds, but by the impulse that prompts them, that men are inspired and represent angels.' Can you not see this vision with me? All the despised pincushions, the monotonous bags and the labored stitches have their network of life worked into them. This network, so delicate that human eye cannot behold it or human touch feel it, is visible to the inner eye, and is like a bond of life, linking the hearts of men to each other. Tracing those delicate cords from their beginning, in the love that prompted the deed, to their recipient, I see them winding about the giver and receiver, and lighting up little flames of life that glow and scintillate, and really illumine a world. Why! Christmas time is like the burning bush—aglow with God! Every little thing seems to bear more and more of this life and light, until one hardly knows where heaven begins and earth ends."

There was a moment's hush, when Marianna said: "Prue, are you in real, dead earnest? honor bright, no foolery?"

"Oh! do n't,' said Hope. "I know it 's all true, every word. I feel it."

"Well, then, girls," responded Marianna, "our duty is plain before us. We are simply throwing away opportunities. Ten yards of satin ribbon, two pounds of Shetland, six bunches of embroidery silk. I 'm in for it all. Put on your coats and let us off; stores open to-night. I 'll work until midnight at least the week."

"Oh! please do n't trifle," said Rose; "it seems to me I can never laugh again."

"That 's just what I intend you shall do, and at once too. Holy visions make me merry as the morning: I feel as if I was just sixteen, and ready for a time. Do n't look so sober, Prue; of course I believe every word you said, and what 's more I am ready for the action after the word. Let us off like good children of the dear mother who gave the vision—for really and truly and seriously who else could have told us that pretty story of golden chains, and united heaven and earth?"

And the three donned their cloaks, and like merry children went out across the Common to the busy streets where the shops were open these days in the evening. Just as they turned the corner of Winter street, they met a rush of eager men and women, and in the midst was Ben Hastings. One eager, glad glance, and he was with them.

"Oh! I 'm so glad that I met you," he said. "I thought you did n't mean Christmas this year, and I am so busy with all it brings. Come, Hope, let us talk it over, while Prue and Marianna take the shopping off of your hands."

And this is the little story Ben told Hope:

"You see, Hope, I felt real sorry for what you said about good works, for somehow I knew it was n't so, and that we must show God to the world just by our works, and so I left you, and went away just a little bit angry; but I soon recovered, and asked only to know the best. And this is what I found out. Going out of town on the cars we were crowded, and I sat beside a forlorn-looking woman. She was evidently German. She held a heavy basket in her lap to give me room, and I was so much of a boor that I did not offer to take it. At last she wished to get off, and she seemed hardly able to rise, so then of course I roused my chivalry, and lifted her basket, and carried it to the door. I handed it to her, and all at once it seemed like a thing of life, and to drag me after it. I could not but follow. She, with a true instinct of independence, almost refused to burden me, but I kept a strong hold, and followed her, it seemed to me a mile or more. She took from her pocket a key as we ascended the stairs of a tenement house. She held it with an eager tremor, and as she placed it she said: 'You have done me a good turn; may the Lord reward you.' This was intended for dismissal, but I could not go; something seemed to tug at me from the basket still, and I almost forced my way inside the door.

"The darkness was too intense for my vision, but I heard a thin, faint, child's voice say: 'You 're back, Mame. I've held the match for you just one hour by the clock; and tell me, did ye see or hear of the Christ-child?'

"'Ah! yes, dear; he 's surely everywhere, and so he can't miss you and me.'

"'But will he truly come, and shall we have our lights and plenty of wood?'

"'Hush, dear; here 's a fine gentleman that brought my basket so I could give yer some blocks and build a fire, and we can stay here till after Christmas.'

"There was a silence; the match was touched to a candle, which threw a dim light over a room which I need not describe to you, darling." How Hope's heart beat at that tender expression.

"There was simply nothing there but a bed, a little stove, and one geranium, with a few yellow leaves, in the window. But that bed! oh! their angels! Do they always behold the face of our Father? The deep-set eyes, the eager look in them, the thin hands—I could not speak from pity and love. Little by little I learned this: Some years from fatherland, the husband buried from a hospital, the child down with fever, which, subsiding, left an ugly sore, threatening permanent lameness. No money, no friends except among the poor; little work, a great deal of pride, and an abiding faith in Christ and his tenderness, a vivid imagination, which peopled the little room with saints, angels, and, brightest image of all, the Christ-child.

"Say, Hope, for what are we responsible if we destroy these beautiful fancies? Ah! the rich and prosperous can do with law and science, but what remains for the poor if you take away their imagery? Let us go home and talk with Prue about it. I could do little but rush out and get some substantial food and some fuel, and examine the boy's leg, which had been badly treated, for the poor woman thought the hospital meant death, and kept his injury as much to herself as possible.

"After I had done this I held the boy's thin hand for a time, and when a little sense of companionship had made us akin, the feeble voice said, 'Did the Christ-child tell you to come here?' and I said 'Yes, now go to sleep.' 'And if he tells you again shall you come?' and I said, 'Yes, I surely shall.' Did I do wrong, Hope? You know we said that Santa Claus, and all that, was an imposition, and——"

"And I said," replied Hope—"oh! do n't make me repeat what I said. I believe in everything, if only, oh! Ben, you forgive me. And let us take the little boy home to-morrow. You know we have that snug room, and you can be his physician."

"But then," said Ben, "where will be the beautiful faith in the Christ-child? Will any help compensate for the loss of that? But let us consult Prue."

Practical Prue, who had seen a vision and read its golden meaning, seconded Ben in his thought, and it was decided that the hospital must be the ultimatum, but until after Christmas the messengers from the Christ-child must bestow their blessing.

What a Christmas Eve it was! First of all, bright lights and warmth; then a rug, a reclining chair, a pretty bowl and pitcher, and a bright dressing-gown and soft bedding. All this was placed in the twilight while the boy slept. When he awoke, it was all as a vision of beauty, a real transformation scene.

The mother-heart could scarcely be said to be thankful, for she accepted all in faith. Who should she bless when God did all? And the little boy, whose brain had been half stupefied with pain and hope long deferred, had but one idea—the Christ-child had done it all.

"Will you see him and tell him I will soon be well?" he said to Ben, "and then I 'll always be just so good, and save all my pennies for him;" and turning to Hope he added, "Are you the Christ-child's mother, and will you tell him I 'm good and do n't cry much?"

Christmas day with its bountiful dinner and its surprises was not celebrated that year in the quiet home, but the betrothal of Ben and Hope. And Prudence and Marianna resumed the weaving of that beautiful web of fancy which spreads its many-colored fabric over so much of the grime of this lower world.

On one of the holidays following, Prue said to Marianna: "To cherish faith is to bring heaven near. Does it matter so very much by what that faith is represented, if only it is pure and simple? What do you suppose was meant by the ancient seer, who told of the gemmed gates of the holy Jerusalem, the pearl and the jasper, the onyx and the chalcedony? Are they not the aspirations of the human soul through its idealized protectors, whether named God or angels, Christ, Mary, or the Christ-child, or the protecting love of a father, mother or beloved one who has passed through the gates of pearl into the land of perpetual day?"

"Prue," said Marianna, "you and I are most likely to be genuine New England old maids, for when the younger depart first, the older remain. But to what an army, ten thousand strong, we belong! Surely our time will come for love and hope, if we keep faith alive." And she gave a glance at Prue, remembering the heart-history that lay enshrined in that sweet, practical nature, and not wishing to open any old wound afresh. But there was a serenity on Prue's face and a clear look to her eye that made free speech possible, and she continued: "After all, I can see it makes but little difference how life goes on, if only the best be outworked in us. You, Prue, won heaven long ago; as to Hope, she just inherited it, and as for me——"

"Stop, darling." Marianna opened her eyes wide, for Prue never addressed her by this tender word before, bestowing it always on Hope. "Well, you know every woman must have at least one darling, and as mine has been transferred to a higher sphere," pointing to Ben and Hope, who were planning for the beautiful hereafter in true optimist fashion, "I bestow the title anew, and when you need it not, it shall belong to the wide world, sinners and all. Sit closer, Marianna; which is better, pride or love?"

"Who gave you a right to catechise me?" said Marianna, flushing.

"I took it when I called you darling, and I add, let me write to Arthur to-night and just say: 'Come, all is changed'; for what if he is a little bit of a bigot in his ministerial garb, and thinks he knows a great deal about God's will, he is solid gold through and through, and his heart is so much in advance of his head, that you will forget in a month whether he contradicted the scientific fact of evolution, and will only remember that love is the great evolver of higher conditions. I often wonder if Darwin could tell just how the variations in Nature came about. I have tried to think it out, and it 's every time through love. So, darling, let your sweet love story begin again, and your science be confirmed in evolving your happiness out of present struggle."

"Oh, Prue! for me, me to do this thing?"

"No, not you, but for me. I have the letter all written. I will run and post it to-night, if only you say yes. If you can't say yes, then just press my hand ever so lightly—I shall know. My cloak is on the stairs and my arctics are on my feet, and Hope shall never know; and, oh! it will be such a Christmas-tide of love, darling! I wait."

But she waited not long, for Marianna let the shadow of a pressure be felt on the tender hand that held hers, and a moment after the door closed and Prue was out with the stars, and her sweet spirit looking up exclaimed:

"'Oh! God, thou art the life and light
Of all this wond'rous world we see!'

And thou, too, art its love; my heart shall repose in Thee!"

THE PRESENT OUTLOOK IN PARIS.

BY HENRY LACROIX.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A village, recalling the old style of living, habits and customs, as well as architecture, of Brittany, is being built at the Trocadero for the Exhibition. It will be enclosed by a wall, in a middle-age style. The museums of Brittany and amateurs there will contribute to it by loaning their collections of paintings and archæological curiosities. That village, beside, will be inhabited by real Bretons, who will offer for sale the products of their country. It is not generally known that Welshmen and the Bretons understand one another—their idiom being the same. The people of Brittany are a hardy race, hardheaded and queer in many ways. They are born sailors, and no better exist, and as soldiers they stand to the last.

For some time past, every Sunday afternoon, there is to be seen sailing in the air over Paris a long line of balloons, varying in size, but all large and carrying adventurous passengers. They start from the square of the Tuileries, and engage in races for prizes. It was on the 9th of August, 1884, that Commandant Renard started upward—toward the "heavenly shore"—from Chalain, near Paris, in a new-styled balloon of his own make, which he managed at will on the ethereal waves, with as much facility as a ship is steered at sea. That inventor is now engaged in constructing another air vehicle at the same place, which will bear the name of la France. It will, it is said, sail against the wind; its motor, of twelve hundred pounds, producing a fifty horse power, will attain the speed of seventy-five miles an hour, which, as a rule, is superior to the force of any wind.

The Parisians live on sensations—the latest, that of Prado, the presumed murderer of Marie Aguettant, has engaged for over a week the lively attention of Parisiennes especially. During the trial the court-room was filled with every specimen of the beau sexe, from the lowest kind to the highest in the social grade—all eager to follow the details of that intricate and sombre case—all interested in the prisoner at the bar, who confounded judge and jury with his boldness and ability in defending himself. The press even went so far as say that the judge was several times cornered by Prado on technical questions, and put to shame by the accusations from the prisoner, which could not be rebutted by the first—and which brand him in the way of an Inquisitor of the time of Charles V., of Spain. Legal procedure in France is wanting in many ways; it is still what it was centuries ago. First and foremost, it stamps an accused as a criminal until he proves himself innocent—just the reverse of what we consider right and just. A prisoner is subjected to every sort of inquisitorial means to compromise himself, before and during his trial, not only by the subordinates, but by the highest officials of the court. Circumstantial evidence, and no direct proof, has served the jury to condemn Prado as guilty, in the first degree, and the court has applied the penalty of death by the guillotine.

The government of Floquet is hounded with energy by its adversaries. Accusations of every sort are brought forward against him and his confrères, and also against the members of the House of Deputies. Corruption after corruption is laid bare, and it would seem, indeed, as if such was the case. A coup d'état is expected against Boulanger and those who favor his plans of Revision of the Constitution and of the Dissolution of Parliament. The government seems to be playing its last cards. Its bungling and fretting, and desperate efforts to maintain its position, indicate it. What unrest, what instability on this continent! That state of things cannot last long, surely. A crash will come sooner or later. It is unavoidable. Even the bones within every one are taxed to keep up armies. The sooner the revolution the better, I would say. It used to be a rare thing to hear of dishonesty in France, in the high professions, but now-a-days it is quite common. Bankers, brokers, notaries, and who not, leave, all of a sudden, for parts unknown, loaded with the money of their victims or after having squandered it. Notaries, especially, were regarded as pinks of honesty, but, alas! their reputation is now at a discount. In politics it is a matter of grabbing, of personal interest. The final hushing-up of the Wilson affair in a high court was significant. It was scandalous! Public opinion was enlightened by it. The members of government, of Parliament, or at least many of them, were as steeped in iniquities of the same kind, and Wilson, having in his possession the proofs of their misdemeanors—which he threatened to reveal—it became necessary, in order to save the Ship of State—after throwing Jonas-Wilson overboard to fish him up and leave him free. He became a whitewashed sepulchre. He was almost forgotten, but now he turns up with a formidable list of peculations committed by persons high in state positions, which he is ready to publish. Another, a député and Mayor of Nimes, but known as an honest man, named Numa Gilly, has been battering the government and its aids, lately, by offering to prove most dishonest proceedings committed by State officials. A mock Court of Inquiry was instituted, and its session, of a few hours, took place at Nimes (in the South of France), and the whole thing was quashed—as in the Wilson affair. But the stanch accuser, Gilly, is not to be browbeaten so easily. He has commenced publishing from his file some scandalous feats of prominent Members of the House, with photo-autograph letters as proofs of wholesale swindling of the public money. That is the state of things here at present.

The fact (so stubborn) of Gen. Boulanger having been elected in five departments indicates the sentiment of public opinion, as being hostile to those in power. A canine will run after the stone which is thrown at him—and so it is with the ministry here and its followers. They vow a deep grudge and vengeance to Boulanger. Nothing short of his utter destruction would satisfy them. He is the medium who writes on the wall of the Palais Bourbon or Chamber of Deputies: "Thou art weighed, and found wanting!" There is no doubt in my mind but what Boulanger is the medium chosen by the spirit-world to introduce a change or reform in this country. Like other kinds of mediums, he may not be a pink in a certain sense; but, as we all know, mediumship does not spring from nor rest on morality nor on fine training—but on material organization. The pink, however, is the General's emblem. He wears it continually, and so do his friends in public demonstrations made in his favor.

I went, a few days since, to No. 11 bis rue Dumont d'Urville, where Gen. Boulanger resides. It is in the West End, close to the Trocadero, and the United States Square. The General's love for the Great Republic is well known, and he thus shows it by electing his domicile in that quarter. The number of his residence should have been, as it was, No. 13—which was also the number of the Corps d'Armée which he commanded before his dismissal, but he was prevailed upon, as I hear, to change it—it being an unlucky number. The reception days of the General are Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, from 9 to 11 A. M. I met there a crowd of at least fifty visitors, waiting in two side antechambers. The ceremonial of reception and ushering has a formal character, at first look, but not so in reality. A crispy-headed boy in a sort of uniform receives the visitors' cards, and hands them to a Secretary in waiting, who inscribes the names, etc., in a book or journal. The waiting-rooms on the first floor are tastily adorned—the prevailing color of everything almost is red. The mantel-pieces have each two vases filled with red pinks; the walls of both rooms are covered with large embroidered panels, with red velvet borders. The carpets and furniture are quite becoming, not gaudy. A fine marble bust of the General, in full uniform, rests on a pedestal in a corner of the first room. A large table is piled with illustrated and other periodicals, that serve to amuse the visitors while waiting to be called up stairs, where the reception-room is situated. Among the visitors I noticed some country people, who, I was told, came as delegates; they were received in a body by the General. Most of the other visitors, several ladies among them, seemed to be people of rank; all courteous and free and easy. I waited and waited for my turn till near noon, and left, without having accomplished my purpose. I should have gone before, but delayed the call until now, when it becomes too late, as in a few days I still leave Paris, to spend four months in Brussels. It 's no great loss to me, as I care not for self-prominence nor that of others; but then as correspondent, I have failed, some would think, in doing my duty.

To finish, I give here the very latest sensation. Daniel (Wilson) made his unexpected appearance at the Chamber of Deputies a few days since. Every one scampered away, leaving him a wide berth or a great deal of elbow-room. Skulking became at once the order of the day. The bravest stood aghast at that Hamlet-like apparition. None dared face that dreaded ghost, who might open his lips and reveal some terrible secret. Daniel sat still and unconcerned in his seat, which dismayed the devouring ones around him. They and not he felt scared. It was an appalling scene indeed, an upsetting of scales, which crashed through every conscience. Who among the terror-stricken ones would that ghost call up to be weighed? Who was he going to accuse? And still those trembling members of one family—all within the same den—are not cowards, in the usual sense. They are accustomed to the use of arms, and a duel they fear not. But the bare idea of having to face Daniel was too much for them, which shows that conscience, however much it may be imbedded under the ashes of oblivion, will spring up under favorable circumstances.

A recess of one hour was proposed and carried—as a subtle way of saving appearances—to allow the Deputies to go out in a body and get cooled.

Only one member, Andrieux, was bold enough to extend his hand to Daniel. He will live in that history.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

SEANCE WITH MRS. SAWYER.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I wish to relate to your many readers a recent experience of mine at a spiritual séance held in New York at the residence of the noted materializing medium, Mrs. Carrie M. Sawyer, 785 Sixth Avenue. I will first state that the medium, Mrs. Sawyer, is a total stranger to me, and that I never saw her previous to the circle held on the evening of Dec. 2d.

When I went to the séance-room there were several persons already present. The medium gave any or all present permission to examine the cabinet; nearly all (myself included) availed themselves of the invitation, and made a thorough examination. We found the cabinet to be made of common ceiling and grooved together, beside being nailed.

Mrs. Sawyer then took her seat in the cabinet, myself sitting within six feet of it, and nearly in front. In a few minutes a form clad in white seemed to rise up out of the floor just in front of me, and close to the cabinet. The spirit-form seemed to float by me, and held out its arms to a lady sitting on my right. The two stood and talked for perhaps a half minute in a low voice; then the form moved swiftly away and disappeared in the cabinet. The lady claimed it to be her sister.

Then there came to the opening of the cabinet a little girl, who said her name was Maude. She seemed to be a child of perhaps seven or eight years of age. She spoke to me, and said there was a lady in the cabinet who was trying to get strength to come to me. I remarked that I should be most happy to see her, when the form of a lady emerged from the cabinet and came directly to me, held out her hands and said: "Brother, I am your sister Mary." I inspected her features very closely, and all the doubts I ever had in regard to full-form materialization vanished then and there, for I knew that it was the spirit-form of my sister. She talked to me of my father, who is also in spirit-life, and of relatives in earth-life, calling them by name—which neither the medium nor any one in the room or in New York could have done, as I was an entire stranger in the city, having never been there before but once in 1883, and then only for four hours. My sister then, while holding my hand, began to sink down at my feet. I held her hands until there remained only the arms to the elbow, then they went out of sight. I grasped the hands tightly, but they seemed to dissolve on the carpet. It is needless to say that I was completely mystified.

Little Maude then came to the cabinet door, and asked me why I did not wear the little knife on my watch-chain, instead of keeping it in my pocket? She then gave a perfect description of a small knife that I had in my pocket, even describing the person who gave it to me, giving her birth-place, etc. I asked Maude if I might go into the cabinet and hold the medium's hand. I did so, and while holding both her hands a spirit form materialized at my side, and walked out of the cabinet, in plain view of the whole circle, while immediately another spirit commenced to form at my side. The latter was a gentleman, and looked as though he was a native of Italy. He also walked out of the cabinet, and stood talking to a gentleman in the circle. Several forms materialized after that for others, and then the séance closed.

A gentleman and lady present made an arrangement with the medium to come to their house and hold a séance, and said that if the medium could get the manifestations in their own house they would pay her well for it. The writer asked permission to be present, which was granted. In fact, I wanted to apply one more test that to me would not leave the remotest possible chance for doubt. The séance was arranged to take place at No. 59 East 11th street, and I was on hand, secretly prepared to apply my test. I, at the moment of the medium entering the closet, (for that was what was used for a cabinet) proposed to place upon her wrists a pair of Tower's detective handcuffs. They are the latest patent, and have double tumbler locks. The medium submitted to my thus making use of them. The closet used for a cabinet is simply a clothes-press, having only the one door. The medium entered the closet, and sat down, and in less than two minutes two forms came out to different ones in the circle, and were recognized by them. The séance was very satisfactory, and all present were more than convinced of the truth of spirit-return.

CHRISTMAS, 1888.

BY MRS. M. T. LONGLEY.

An Angel cometh to the land,
A being fair to view,
With gifts of kindness in each hand,
And heart both warm and true.
His face is bright as morning skies,
His eyes with gladness shine;
He cometh from that Paradise
Where Life is all divine.

An Angel in white robes arrayed,
As pure as drifting snow,
No darkening clouds his spirits shade,
For streams of goodness flow
From his dear soul, to all the earth—
His bounty he displays,
While joyful songs and sounds of mirth
Rise loudly in his praise.

An Angel, beautiful and bright,
He cometh from above,
When Winter drapes the earth in white,
His tender name is Love.
He comes to plant good will and peace
In every home and heart;
He comes to bid all discord cease,
And every foe depart.

An Angel cometh—lo! the bells
Ring on the silent air;
Their tuneful music floats and swells
In triumph everywhere;
And hearts once cold now warmly beat
Toward their fellow-men,
As fond affection, pure and sweet,
Stirs them to life again.

And lo! springs forth from heart and hand
The Christmas Gifts of cheer;
From tongue to tongue o'er all the land,
Pass greetings warm and dear.
The poor are blessed by kindly deeds,
And comforted, the sad;
Each little child on plenty feeds,
The whole world now is glad.

For lo! the Christmas chimes ring in
The reign of Peace and Right:
Forgotten is all wrong and sin.
The earth is robed in light;
For unto us is born a king,
An Angel from above,
Who comes to quell all suffering
In God's sweet name of Love!

Jessie Benton Fremont's Vision.

How the Wife of Gen. Frémont Knew that He was not Starving on the Plains.

I was so used to his safe returns from every danger that I had become fairly reasonable about Mr. Frémont's journeys, and my wise, loving father took care I should have my mind and time usefully filled. We could not look to hear from Mr. Frémont on the unoccupied line of country he was exploring that winter of 1853-54; he must first reach the close at San Francisco, and our first news must come by the Isthmus route of Panama: at the earliest, midsummer. But in midwinter, without any reason, I became possessed by the conviction that he was starving; nor could any effort reason this away. No such impression had ever come to me before, although more than once dreadful suffering, and even deaths from starvation, had befallen his other expeditions.

This time it came upon me as a fact I could not turn from. It fairly haunted me for nearly two weeks, until, young and absolutely healthy as I was, it made a physical effect on me. Sleep and appetite were broken up, and in spite of my father's and my own efforts to dissipate it by reasoning, by added open-air life, nothing dulled my sense of increasing suffering from hunger to Mr. Frémont and his party.

This weight of fear was lifted from me as suddenly as it had come.

My house was near that of my father, and the younger part of his family, when returning from parties, often came to me for the remainder of the night, that the elders might not have their sleep broken. In this way one of my sisters and a cousin came to me after a wedding ball at General Jessup's. The drive home was long and over rough, frozen streets, and it was nearly one o'clock when they came in—glad enough of the bright room and big wood fire waiting them. As girls do, they took off their ball dresses, and made themselves comfortable with loose woolen gowns and letting down their hair, while I, only too pleased just then to have an excuse for staying up with others, made them tea, as we talked over the evening and the bride.

The fire was getting low, and I went into the adjoining dressing-room to bring in more wood. It was an old-fashioned big fireplace, and the sticks were too large to grasp with the hand; as I half-knelt, balancing the long sticks on my left arm, a hand rested lightly on my left shoulder, and Mr. Frémont's voice, pleased and laughing, whispered my name. There was no sound beyond the quick-whispered name—no presence, only the touch—that was all. But I knew (as one knows in dreams) that it was Mr. Frémont, gay, and intending to startle my sister, whose ready scream always freshly amused him.

Silently I went back into the girls' room with the wood, but before I could speak my sister, looking up to take a stick from me, gave a great cry and fell in a heap on the rug.

"What have you seen?" called out our cousin, Mary Benton, the most steady-nerved, even-natured of women then as now.

I had not yet spoken; this was all in a flash together. When I said it was Mr. Frémont—that he touched my shoulder for me to "keep still and let him scare Susy"—then the poor child screamed again and again. We crushed her ball dress over her head to keep the sound from the neighbors, but it was difficult to quiet her.

The girls had been distressed by my fixed idea of danger to Mr. Frémont, and knew how out of condition it had made me. Their first thought now was that my mind had broken down. They soon realized this was not so, as we discussed the strange fact of my knowing—knowing—and so surely that peace came back to me—that whatever he had had to bear was over; that he was now safe and light of heart, and that in some way he himself had told me so.

We talked long and the girls were too excited for sleep, though the unreliable little French clock chimed three. But a blessed rest had fallen on me, and I went off to "a sleep that sank into my soul," deep and dreamless, from which I did not wake until ten the next day, when my eyes opened to see my father sitting by my bedside. He had been guarding my sleep a long time—in fact the whole household were protecting it as the crisis of a fever.

The girls had watched near me until morning, when they went over and told my father, who had in our family physician, Dr. Lindsley, to look at me. But both recognized it to be healthy, refreshing sleep; my color had returned, and the strained, anxious expression was gone—more than any words this told to practiced eyes that some electric change had restored "the peaceful currents of the blood."

With sleep and appetite strength soon returned, but the true "good medicine" was my absolute certainty of safety for Mr. Frémont.

My father's first words to me had been, "Child, you have seen a vision?" and lawyer-like he questioned and cross-questioned me thoroughly (as he had already the two girls). This vision, as he named it, interested him deeply. He knew me to be soundly healthy; he had seen the sudden genuine fear holding and altering me as an illness would, and now, as suddenly and completely as a northwest wind clears the air and leaves it fresh, cool and life-giving, this "vision" had swept away all clouds of fear and brought me new life.

We all talked it over with friends, often. There was no way to verify what Mr. Frémont's part had been during those two weeks. We must wait until, his journey over, by summer at the earliest, he should reach San Francisco, and then the only mail was nearly a month, via the Isthmus.

But in early April there came to Washington, overland, a Mormon elder named Babitt, from the settlement of Parowan in (now) south Utah. Mr. Babitt brought us letters from Mr. Frémont written at Parowan, and added many details of personal intelligence.

The winter had been very harsh, and much snow falling drove off the game. Mr. Frémont had in his party but few of his old companions—men whose experience and nerve gave them resource and staying power in emergencies. The new men became nearly demoralized under the trying ordeal of cold and hunger, and were almost given out when, after forty days of increasing want, they reached this small Mormon settlement. There they were taken care of with a true hospitality and kindness which none of our family ever forget. One good man, Fuller, had died the day before, but they brought him in fastened on a horse, and Christian burial was given him, while men and women, with true Christian kindness, patiently nursed back to life those nearly exhausted.

Most of the party were unwilling to go further, and remained there, for whites and Indians agreed that no one had ever been heard of again who had tried to cross into California on that line.

As Mr. Frémont persevered, Mr. Babitt aided him in all ways to refit, and cashed his personal draft on a San Francisco bank, a trust never before shown a Gentile by a Mormon.

Now the fact was verified that there had been a starving time; that it had lasted through January into the next month; that the last fortnight had been desperately, almost fatally, exhausting—quite so to poor Fuller.

This fortnight was the period during which I knew of their starving.

The relief came to them when they got into Parowan—the evening of the 6th of February—when I was made to know that also, that same night. Every family took in some of the men, putting them into warm rooms and clean, comfortable beds, and kind-faced women gave them reviving food and pitying words. Mr. Frémont's letters could not say enough of the gentle, patient care of these kind women, and of his own "great relief of mind."

After this we heard no more until the 25th of May, when he telegraphed from New York as his steamer got in from Aspinwall, and by set of sun he was again at home.

Soon he was told by my father of what I have been telling you here. His lawyer habit of mind had made him minutely verify what we three women had to tell, but there was a point beyond on which the geographer-astronomer-mind fastened—the point of Time.

As nearly as we could settle it, 2 A. M. was the hour I had the flash of information that all was well again.

The girls had stayed out later than usual, as it was an assembly of family friends for a marriage festivity, and the long, rough drive over frozen mud of the old Washington streets was necessarily slow. Our old coachman objected to being out after twelve, and we saw with a little quake that it was nearly one when they came in.

After that came the undressing, the leisurely hair-brushing, the long gossip over the evening as they took their tea, and this brought it to about two o'clock. Time did not enter much into our former easy-going Southern lives, and we were three young women, amused, comfortable and what did it matter, an hour more or less?

After the shock we were too deeply moved to do other than feel. Properly, we should have looked at the clock, made a minute of the facts, signed it, and put it on record. But we did not know about all that those days.

We only knew it was "nearing one" when the girls came home, "about two" when the fire grew low, and "quite three" when overpowering sleep sent me off to bed.

Next morning, when the baggage came, the journal of that time was taken out, and we read the entry for the night of their arrival at Parowan, the bringing up of the journal to the latest waking hour being a fixed habit. We read:

"Parowan, Feb. 6th, 11:30 P. M.," and the brief record of the arrival, their safety and comfort, and the goodness of every one to them. He had been around to each of his party for a thankful good-night, and had seen them each in warm beds; he wrote of the contrast to the bad days just past and of his own quiet room, with its fire of logs and "the big white bed" waiting him, to which he must go now, for he was "fatigued" and it was near midnight.

Then followed the wish that I could know of this comfort and of his mind at ease.

And, at that moment, I did know.

For the difference of longitude makes Washington two hours and twenty-three minutes later than Parowan, so that 11:30 P. M. there would be in Washington 1:53 A. M.—about two o'clock.

December Magazines.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—As a Chrismas number this is of superior excellence in letter-press and illustrations. The opening article, by W. H. Ingersoll, descriptive of "National Types of Christ," in its numerous illustrations includes the finest and most satisfactory representations of the great medium we have met with, and embody a spiritual idea seldom seen in pictures familiar to the American public. Nearly all the articles are richly illustrated; of them are "Carmen Sylva, Roumania's Poet Queen," and "The Metropolitan Museum of Art." Specially for the holidays are "In Sierra Valley," "Poh Yuin Ko," "Salvette and Bernadon," "Makar's Dream"; Western, Chinese, French and Russian Christmas stories; "Christmas in the Northland," and a poem, "A Lover sends Christmas Roses." Several fine poems are given: "The Blind Indian Girl," by W. H. H. Murray, "White Petals," by Ariel Siegfried, and "The Chalice Bearers," by Elizabeth S. McChesney. New York: Cosmopolitan Pub. Co.

ST. NICHOLAS.—The packing of this number must have been done by Santa Claus himself—at least by some one who knows well how to please the young people. The frontispiece is a picture of "The Little Christmas Spy," of whom the story is told in verse by Helen Gray Cone. "The Curious History of a Message" is related by Frank Stockton, a writer who never fails to please. A tribute is paid to the faithfulness of St. Bernard dogs by Mrs. Hunt in "The Silver Heart; or, Faithful Leo." A glimpse of how the season passes in a foreign land is given by Prof. Boyesen in his account of "Bleeps Grimlund's Christmas Vacation." "A Sixteenth Century Christmas" is the subject of a play adapted to the dramatic talent of children. In "Ten Weeks in Japan," with its many illustrations, is given a vivid description of that unique country and its people. In "Novel Christmas Presents," some good ideas are given in the line of home gift making. The author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" commences a new story, entitled "Little Saint Elizabeth." These and other attractions render this a capital number. New York: The Century Co. Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

WIDE AWAKE.—This Christmas number's contents are in keeping with the season, chief among which in this particular is Katharine Lee Bates's charming poem, "Goody Santa Claus," with its dozen excellent illustrations, showing how the old lady had her way in accompanying Father Christmas over the housetops on his annual gift-dispensing journey. A story to run through the year is commenced by J. T. Trowbridge, that promises to be one of his best, "The Adventures of David Vane and David Crane"—one of real New England Yankee life. Margaret Sidney begins a new Pepper Story, "The Peppers Midway." "Yum-Yum; A Pug," is a good story by J. S. Winter. H. H. Boyesen contributes a dramatic ballad, "Ingé, the Boy-King." Of special interest among the remaining contents are, "On the Great Sledge Journey," by F. Schwatka; "The Toddléthwaite Prize," by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; and "Concerning Minks," by Grant Allen. A new department is commenced, entitled, "Men and Things." Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

THE SIDEREAL MESSENGER.—With very valuable general articles, reports of current celestial phenomena, editorials, etc., is given a map showing the path of the moon's shadow in the total eclipse of the sun Jan. 1, 1889. Northfield, Minn.: W. W. Payne.

The number of weddings that have been celebrated of late is sufficiently large to warrant the assumption that the customs which are popularly supposed to belong to leap year are a help rather than a hindrance to matrimony.

WILLIAMSPORT.—Sidney Kelsey writes: "Last summer I attended the session of the Spiritualistic Association at Cassadaga Lake, N. Y., and, as I took notes of the platform tests given through the mediumship of J. Frank Baxter and Edgar W. Emerson, I herewith jot down a few which were given.

Mr. Baxter having taken the platform said, 'A man comes bearing a strange name, Isaac Ro-s-enz-weig, Isaac Rosenzweig. He says, "Tell my friends here that I passed out from Erie, Pa., but I am not 'dead,' as the folks say, but am more alive than I was ever before."' Recognized by Col. Irwin Camp. The spirit then said to the Colonel, 'Do you know Louie, my son, the lawyer' (of the law firm of Allen & Rosenzweig)? 'Yes,' replied Mr. C. 'Well, then,' said the spirit, 'tell him that I came here to-day. Yes, tell him, if he kicks you.' The nub of this is that the said 'Louie' is a cripple, and could not 'kick' any one very well if he tried ever so much. The spirit was a great wag in earth-life.

Upon another occasion, Mr. Emerson being the medium, he said, 'A rather stout man comes, and says, "Judge Babbitt is here, and wants to let the people of Erie, Pa., and the regions round about, know that he still live after his so-called death, not a very great while ago." He says, "I was over ninety years old when I went out, and find my surroundings in spirit-life all I could ask for. I see many in this audience who will recognize me. I am Elijah Babbitt."'

Mr. Babbit was never a judge. He was placed in nomination fo the President Judgeship of Erie County, Pennsylvania, many years ago, but was defeated by Hon. John Galbraith. Since that time Mr. B.'s friends (particularly Hon. J. B. Johnson, now in spirit-life, and whom I suspect was the 'stout man' who introduced the spirit) called him 'Judge.'

Mr. Emerson next said: 'A middle-aged man who has progressed a great deal, bids me say: "I see my wife and child in the audience. God bless you both. Anthony Henderson. I shall be known in New Castle, Pa., Cleveland, O., and at Erie, Pa., and I want to say to my wife, Your father, James Sherrett, and brother of the same name, send their love to you."' Fully recognized, and regarded as a most satisfactory test.

The medium next turned to a lady sitting near, and remarked: 'You are a kind of a shooter; no, not that quite (hesitating), a kind of a Gun—a Gun-l-son! Well, you are my wife, at all events, and I want you to go on with affairs as you have been doing—all will come out right. A. B. Gunnison.' Recognized by Mrs. G., as being unquestionably her husband.

Then followed a gentleman, according to the medium, who displayed a pair of forceps or pincers. Mr. E. said, 'He tells me to say, "I used to pull teeth in Erie, Pa., and was engaged there for years as a dentist; and I want my friends over the country to know that I did not die when it was so stated, and was never more alive than now. I am O. L. Elliott, that was, and is."'"

Maine.

MONMOUTH.—Ella L. Frost writes as follows upon "Our Life's Work": "There is a work for each one of us to perform—a mission to be fulfilled by each to whom life has been given. We are all workers together in the great field of life, and are now sowing the seeds which by-and-bye shall spring up, and when the harvest time comes will yield to us a measure of pain or pleasure according to the nature of the seeds we have sown during the earthly life. Oh! that I could awaken in your minds the necessity that great care should be taken in choosing the line of work which you sometime must engage in, and to which should be devoted your best and noblest efforts. If we do our duty faithfully and well, even though our work be of the humblest, we have nothing to fear when death shall come, and the time of harvest draws near. Then each one shall have his own, and if on earth he has been unappreciated, and has obtained no reward, all his labors will be made right there, for the spirit-world is a world of justice; there no one can claim what has not been earned by untiring and unselfish labor.

In the earthly life a great many of the weaker class of humanity are crushed down and trampled upon by those who have the power of ruling the people—power obtained through the influence which wealth can give, and not as it should be, because they are especially adapted for the high position they occupy. But when death, with its cold, stern hand, draws aside the curtains of life, all this becomes changed; no longer is the weaker man held in bondage to the authority of the law-maker, but he at once finds himself upon an equal plane with his precentor, and in the sight of God and the angel-world is more to be honored than he whose life of selfishness has repressed all the higher qualities of his nature, and in spirit stands poverty-stricken simply because in his earthly career he never gave any thought to spiritual matters, but confined his attention entirely to the material wants of his nature. Therefore I say to you, if your life here be a humble one, and you sometimes feel that God has not dealt justly with you, remember that you have but obtained a glimpse of life as it really exists; that all the painful experiences which come to us here are but for our good; that time will make all things right, and that by-and-bye we shall awaken to find ourselves in a world of truth and beauty, and surrounded by the many blessings bestowed upon us by our Heavenly Father, if we have done our duty, and been true to ourselves and each other."

New York.

ELYRIA.—J. H. writes: "Man's every action is based upon the idea that out of it there is to come some enjoyment; but, contrary to his expectations, that action did not give soul-satisfaction, because in violation of some law of his being which he did not understand.

The world, with all its religion, is groveling in gross materialism; its religions are mostly made up of forms and ceremonies based upon external worship of God throughout endless time, or the worship of a material God, with body and parts the same as physical man. All such ideas of God must be banished. If man is immortal he must possess some inherent relation to that power or cause which brought him into being, and it must be a relation that always will exist by virtue of its unity with that power or cause. Man's study should be his relation to God, which shall unfold his mind in reference to the grand problem of life.

Some, through deep thought and power of concentration of the mind, are beginning to realize that there is a significance in bringing into action the interior functions of their being, and striving to unfold that which pertains to immortality, or that germ within which is the intelligence, the light, the life of man as a conscious, individualized entity. All true knowledge is from God, is of God, and must be the saviour of the world. It is that which will elevate and ennoble man, and he, when he is in possession of a true knowledge of himself and realizes his true relation to God, will stand up a noble specimen of humanity, one which will be ever true to self, to God and all humanity. He will be one in whom love and good will for all humanity will beam from his eye, permeate his soul, and fill his being to overflowing with that magnetic life which shall endear him to all who are in harmony with his unfoldment.

All true knowledge is from God and of God, and will redeem the world as fast as the children of earth shall, by means of it, see clearly their spiritual relation to God, and seeing it, live up to its light, which in due time will redeem the world from its materialism, and develop a true religion upon earth, in harmony with God and His just and wise laws. Inspiration and revelation will be accepted facts, that the world will believe in, for all will be recipients of knowledge in and through their interior faculties."

Massachusetts.

FAYVILLE.—Mrs. E. Barrows writes: "THE BANNER is truly a lamp unto all who, like the writer, live far away from all meetings and lectures, and therefore highly prize its full-freighted pages. Long life to the faithful editor and his noble work. I have a certain number of back copies of THE BANNER and the Facts magazine, which I will forward gladly to any who choose to send for them."

BOSTON.—In reply to inquiries W. S. Ripley writes: "The plant called 'red root,' said to be a cure for cancer, is known to botanists as 'Ceanothus Americanus.' The local or common names are 'New Jersey Tea,' 'Wild Tea,' 'Red Root.' It was used instead of tea from China during the American Revolution, and the manufacture has been recently revived in Pennsylvania. This may be of use to people desiring to obtain the root from the druggist."

TAUNTON.—James M. Rogers writes: "In the contemplation of the crusade now being made by a majority of the newspapers of this country against Spiritualism, it may comfort somewhat those Spiritualists of faint hearts and feeble knees to understand of how much weight and value are the opinions of the press. In its widest sense, the press does not lead public opinion—it does not even express public opinion—but simply reflects that faction of public opinion—political or otherwise—which is represented on each individual paper's subscription list.

Is such to be a teacher to instruct us in the wonderful psychological workings of the human soul here, or to anticipate its boundless developments hereafter? In other times and other lands, men hopelessly blind have not posed as the great masters of painting, nor have men born totally deaf been the world's teachers of music; but here has arisen a priesthood of the press, whose members not only do not need to have given the most subtle subject offered to mortal mind to unveil one hour of study, but who may be, for lack of spiritual perception, for the time debarred from comprehending the first principles of its sublime philosophy! But this very want is why they so consistently abuse it. For ignorance is ever the father of intolerance, and intolerance usually takes the form of abuse.

These savants are admirable in their nice distinctions of criticisms in the delicate subtleties of a dog-fight, and even—by dint of close application and much expenditure of time—win laurels as base-ball historians; but their touch upon the boundaries of the spirit-world is as palpably clumsy as would be the hand of Caliban striving to stay the flight of Ariel. It were far better for all if men were content to denounce what they know is fraud, or if they knew what they denounce. But, in the thick of this Babel of vulgar noise—this intellectual club-throwing, which would disgrace an African desert—let none forget that he is a poor creature who allows himself to be laughed out of the argument, when he knows himself to be in the right; doubly poor and doubly weak when his heart fails and his hand looses its grasp upon a belief—the most true and ennobling in the present, the most glorious in its eternal future.

To thoughtful students of that which underlies the surface of passing events, this constantly urged attack upon Spiritualism is not a mere question of more or less fraud in the tipping of a table, of a real or simulated rap, but the entire system of the grand Spiritual Philosophy that is assailed. So, unless he knows whereof he speaks, let no one call himself a Spiritualist; for, unless the gathering sounds are misleading, there is going to be 'good fighting all along the line,' and none should enlist except for the war, or join the ranks unless perfect in the manual of arms."

Iowa.

FORT DODGE.—H. W. Prindle writes: "This place has a population of five thousand. We have an organized Society and a good hall, but no regular speaker or medium to give tests, and greatly desire one to spend the entire winter or a part of it with us. Such a one would do well, and by writing to me I think satisfactory arrangements can be made."

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE—W. G. Wood writes that he recently attended a séance for materialization held by a lady at her residence near the old Town House in Pawtucket, who is finely developed as a medium for that and for tests, and that the manifestations were to himself and others quite satisfactory.

[From The Cleveland Leader, Dec. 30.]

A Western Medium.

Last evening Mrs. Ada Foye, announced as a Spiritualistic medium from San Francisco, gave an exhibition of her mediumship in Memorial Hall before a crowded house. Skeptics and investigators were especially invited to be present.... In opening she gave a sermon on the faith of Spiritualism in its application to moral living. She defended it against the charge that it made its believers crazy by saying that a great many things made weak-minded men crazy—love, money and religion, for example. She had herself been a medium since she was twelve years old, and aimed to so live that she might become more and more perfect each year. Spiritualism was only forty years old, but was credited with eight million believers. What would it be when it had, like Christianity, eighteen centuries in which to strengthen and develop itself? The speaker announced that the spirit phenomena at her command were rapping, hand-writing, writing in the air, and spiritual sight and hearing. The conditions for manifestations present were unfavorable, owing to the size and contradictory sentiments of the audience. She had no wish to proselyte, but only to be the humble instrument of spiritual power. All she asked was investigation first and acceptance or condemnation afterward. Many denounced Spiritualism on general principles.

Coming to the séance, Mrs. Foye seated herself behind a small table at the front edge of the platform. Slips of paper were distributed, and every one present was invited to write on one of them the name of a departed friend, fold the paper, and return it to the desk. When all the folded papers had been emptied on the table there was a half bushel of names stacked up. Mrs. Foye began by touching the folded slips, which she did not open at any time during the evening, before she had announced the names written on them. While doing this, she repeated the question: "Is this spirit here? or this? or this?" Presently the "control" began to work, and she announced, "Sarah Anne Bateman is here."

A lady arose and said: "I wrote that name. She is my mother."

"Would you like to ask her any questions?"

"I would like to ask how old she was when she died."

"Well, then, call some number, and she will rap once for 'no' and three times for 'yes.'"

Fifty, sixty, forty-five, etc., received negative answers, raps being distinctly heard from a part of the platform a short distance from Mrs. Foye, where, however, no one was sitting. When seventy was called, the triple affirmative rap was heard.

"That 's correct," said the lady.

"Do you know me?" asked the medium of the lady in the audience.

"I never saw you before this evening," was the reply.

Similar raps and dialogues ensued on the announcement of the names of John Bird, Harriet R. Beckwith, Isabella Bell, Eliza Higby, John Levin, John Barney and John Beaumont. Suddenly the medium cried:

"Why, here is a military man right by my side—Gilmore, General Gilmore. Who wrote that name?"

"I did," answered a woman in the rear of the hall.

"He writes," continued the medium, looking off into space, "that he knows all the trials you have to endure, and promises aid and sympathy. He says his whole name is Quincy Adams Gilmore. Would you like to ask him any questions?"

"I would like to have him tell when he passed away."

"Was it months or years?"

"Months."

Nine raps sounded.

"Is that right?" asked Mrs. Foye.

"Yes, he died last March."

"Allyn Cook Loomis," was called by the medium, and she observed the peculiar spelling of the first name, and a person in the audience had the middle name spelled out by raps by repeating the alphabet.

At 9:30 o'clock the séance closed, and the lecturer thanked the audience.

Dyspeptics may, as a rule, eat the following:

Thin soups, made from meat, without stock; beef tea; broths. Oysters, raw only; fish only which have white meats. Beef, rare; mutton chop and boiled mutton, roast mutton and lamb when cold, chicken, game, venison, meat pulp. Eggs poached and soft boiled; when raw they are well borne by many, but distress some. Bread, pulled, toasted or baked a second time. Corn bread, rice cakes, macaroni, sago, tapioca, cream crackers and water crackers.

UNANSWERABLE LOGIC:

A SERIES OF

SPIRITUAL DISCOURSES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

THOMAS GALES FORSTER.

These lectures, in a remarkably clear and comprehensive manner, give a very complete presentation of the phenomena and teachings of Modern Spiritualism, comparing them with those of the past in respect to life here and hereafter, and showing most conclusively that they are identical with the foundation facts and principles of primitive Christianity.

The arguments in support of natural religion are strong and impregnable to all assaults that may be leveled against them, and commend themselves by their reasonableness, to the common-sense understanding of every honest-minded person. The views presented of future life—the undeniable proofs given of the reality, naturalness and immortality of that life—will be consolatory to those who mourn the seeming loss of friends, and inspire them with courage to meet the trials and duties that attend their present form of existence.

The thousands who have listned to the eloquent discourses of Thomas Gales Forster, when in the prime of earth-life, and wished that the truths he uttered, and so ably enforced under the inspiration of his exalted spirit-guides, might be put in a form available for the enlightenment of the world of mankind now and in future years, will welcome this volume with heartfelt gratitude.

The book as a whole is true to its name, and many who might be disposed to combat the author's positions will find that he has fortified them with "Unanswerable Logic."

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presention of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world, and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

☞ We shall print next week a discourse delivered by MRS. NELLIE J. T. BRIGHAM before the First Society of Spiritualists of New York City, on Sunday morning, Dec. 2d. The address was founded on subjects furnished by the audience, and was specially reported for the BANNER OF LIGHT.

Welcome, Christmas!

Christmas, observed with joy and reverence as the birthday of Christ by every people on earth that take his name, is the accepted beginning of the Holiday Season. The customs and sentiments of the centuries have clothed the day and the season with meanings wholly unrelated to the original significance of the event they were designed to celebrate, and are very largely perpetuated, at times in a strange combination, in the inherited traditional observances of to-day. There is no day in all the year that so generally melts the frost that lurks in the human heart as does Merry Christmas. Our busy, hurrying, competing American life pauses to snatch a flower of innocent pleasure and a sprig of evergreen delight from its generous bouquet of sentimental reverence, in as different a spirit from that which marked its commemoration through the Middle Ages down to the dawn of the day of Modern England as if it were but in an imaginary sense the same sacred and social yearly festival. The years roll on; the generations come and go; the centuries are born and die; and Christmas returns with a fresh and new meaning for men, albeit it will remain the same world's event to the end of time.

The day has once more come round to us. It quickens the pulsations of old and young alike. All welcome it with the hearty familiar greeting. All lips instinctively fashion themselves to express to others the old Merry Christmas wish. All look forward to the enjoyment of a momentary pause in work and business, that the inner social feelings may have full and free play. It is a sort of green oasis in lives that might be threatened with barrenness without its blessed presence. In one place is reverential worship, with its appropriate offerings; in another is a shower of surprising gifts; here are the gambols and pretty frolic of joyous childhood, with parents and relatives and loving friends to make the containing circle; there are sincere exchanges of feeling among those whom the hardening experiences of the world have made mature; everywhere the social atmosphere sparkles and warms with the new elements that seem to suddenly enter into the time, and fills the hearts of old and young with the intoxication of the prevailing spirit. We all secretly wish it were possible to keep life up to such a standard of enjoyment for the whole year. We think with ourselves what a different, what a beautiful world it would be, if this atmosphere of love and good will were the only one breathed by us all.

Blessed indeed is the day, and deserving to be greeted with the heart's profoundest welcome, that contains the magic by which such a happy transformation of feeling is made possible for our otherwise poor social state. And so let us freely shower good wishes over the lives of those around us, and give generous gifts as the heart's poorest expression of its gratitude, and pour out sunshine around the young and those dependent on us, and burn out every vestige of the rubbish of prejudice and hatred and uncharitableness that remains to deaden and corrupt and destroy our lives. Christmas, if it has any meaning in particular for us, commemorates the birthday of incarnate, divine Love. Unless history and tradition are both at fault, the appearance of the man Christ in the world was the appearance of that heavenly spirit, named Love, which includes, informs, illuminates and inspires the entire universe of God the Father and Mother. It is the grandest phenomenon which the pages of human history record. It was the full and perfect example of the actual divinity of love in humanity, whose living lessons have found their obstructed way through the ages since, and appeal far more powerfully to us of to-day than to the generations of the past.

Let us not fail to think of this great central truth when we are exchanging the greetings and giving the gifts and offering the adorations of the season. Let us not forget for even a moment that it is the birthday of divine Love that we celebrate—the Love from and by which we were created and sustained, that fills this and all other worlds with life and light, that maintains all things in active order of which we have or can have any knowledge, that is the alpha and omega, the beginning and the end. Whatever the most advanced and expanded science may be able to tell us of the inconceivable and innumerable wonders of this stupendous work of creation, it never can and never will disclose either to mortal or angelic ken the fathomless mysteries of that boundless ocean of Love—the all-containing, the all-creating, the all-sustaining, the irresistible—out of which we became living beings, and on whose measureless bosom we are borne onward into the eternities. Christ taught and practically exemplified the nature of that Love. The world celebrates Christmas as the day of his birth. Let us do our little parts worthily, that Love may continue to do its perfect work.

"Poor Luck of the Psychical Research Society."

The above is the heading of a lengthy account in the Boston Globe of the 13th inst., of a business meeting held the evening previous by the American Society for Psychical Research, at which two committees read reports of what had been accomplished by them during the year soon to close. Nothing would be more gratifying to us than to avail ourselves of any opportunity that might present itself to place before our readers some solid, practical results of the Society's labors; but we fail to find a solitary vestige of any such opportunity in what these committees have to say. They, evidently, as the Globe states it, have had "poor luck," and this is easily accounted for.

The Society was formed in January 1885, and the first public announcement of its existence and of its plans and purposes was accompanied by a distinct and emphatic disavowal of having any connection with Spiritualists, because, as it was stated, "of the dangers to which the new Society" would be exposed by such an alliance. It is difficult to conceive what danger the Society would be exposed to by accepting the services of the only persons who could be of any practical benefit to it in the pursuance of the investigations it was ostensibly instituted to make, unless it were that of being forced to admit the existence of facts it had prejudged had no existence. Its statement was that it did not wish to have "the energy of the Society" made "a helpmate of any of the vague and unsettled enterprises of Spiritualists."

This, in view of the fact that the purpose of the Society was supposed to be to define "vague" things and determine "unsettled" ones, failed to be accepted by most people as the real reason for declaring it would give no active place to the most desirable, and to our way of thinking indispensable, element of success in its investigations. Be the reason what it may, this action at the outset of its career hindered its progress, and its persistent adherence to it led the Popular Science News, edited by Dr. Nichols, to say as late as 1885 that "the American Society appears to hold a position at almost infinite distance from the practical work it started to perform." It began to recognize its paradoxical attitude toward the subject about this time, and in April of 1885 issued a circular in which it said it would be grateful to all mediums who would come to its assistance, even to any one who would place it in communication with such. But after two years and three months of turning its back on Spiritualists as unworthy its notice, it was a natural sequence that the Spiritualists and the mediums did not go to its aid with any great degree of alacrity. Mahomet might call for the mountain to come to him, but his calling was not of sufficient potency to have it come. A feeling had grown prevalent among the most sensitive of mediums that the Society was more in search of evidence to condemn the phenomena as fraudulent than to follow the lead of what might take place; that the "conditions" it sought to impose upon them were such as, if submitted to, would be a tacit acknowledgment of their dishonesty.

The report of Dr. Joseph Warren, Chairman of the Committee on Mediumistic Phenomena, as summarized in The Globe, shows how incompacitated the Society is at the close of its fourth year to prescribe conditions. He states that the Committee was informed of "one well-known trance medium, who is reported to have given to many prudent sitters names and communications of such accuracy and fullness that it is supposed such results could only be reached by some occult agency or by some mental process which is not exactly recognized as yet."

True; the "agency" or "process" has not been recognized by this Society, whose members, however learned in other matters, do not exhibit any great degree of knowledge of this; but as far back as 1856-7, at a Roman Catholic Convention held in Baltimore, it was publicly stated that the number of persons in the United States who then recognized the "agency" was eleven millions. This must have at least trebled since that time in the country alone, and when to this is added the number in foreign countries, the aggregate must very nearly approach fifty million!

The medium alluded to was found willing to comply with the conditions—not, however, strictly so, as we infer from Dr. W.'s remark: "The desired conditions were reasonably fulfilled." How else could he have them? Did he at first propose to have them otherwise? He is not very exact in his statement of the number of sittings with this medium; he says, "thus far we have been able to have only eight or ten." He then avers, as though it was an entirely new discovery in the field of psychical research, that "the phenomena with which we are concerned appear to be of a very delicate nature," (!) and proceeds to explain matters in a way that shows what slow advance the Society during the past four years has made in acquiring the first rudiments of a knowledge of the requirements of the séance-room:

"It would seem that not merely the physical condition of the medium is of importance, but that the personality or frame of mind of the persons present has a marked effect on the sitting or on the trance conditions. On this account several sitters were altogether unsuccessful, and some four or five sittings had to be abandoned. Two members of the committee also proved to be a hindrance to the manifestations (weakening the power of the medium, it was said, and making her tired), and their services had to be dispensed with."

And yet this only seemingly so. "It would seem," says the chairman. How very fearful of admitting a fact the committee's own experience abundantly proved! But that is a prominent feature of these Societies. Said a writer in Light (London), "I believe there is nothing they dread so much as to be forced to decide and to proclaim their decision." The report makes an approximation toward an admission, but true to the instincts that govern the committee adroitly avoids it in this passage:

"That the character of the surroundings, the temperament, disposition and frame of mind of the persons present may not be important elements in every trance or similar manifestation, your committee is not at present prepared to say."

Why not "prepared to say"? What evidence do these committee-men want other than their own experience palpably proving the fact? and, in addition to that, were it admissible to their deliberations, the irrefutable testimony of tens of millions to the same?

Of other phenomena the report says:

"Individual members of the committee have also visited other mediums of varied powers and have witnessed occult manifestations with a view to determining the desirability of bringing them to the attention of the committee. No less than five such persons of considerable reputation have recently been publicly exposed or are 'under a cloud.' So that at least seven materializing or etherealizing mediums (nearly every one of whom had been highly recommended to our special attention) have come to grief here in Boston during the past two or three years."

This Society, pandering to its desire to prove the greatest proof of immortality a fraud, puts in its official paper such allegations as the above, based not upon any of its own researches, but upon sensational newspaper reports. Why should it take these? Was not the Society itself organized to test such matters? The world looks to it to give a matter of such vast importance its unprejudiced judgment, and yet it is publicly condemning what it has evidently very little knowledge of, instead of giving to it calm, patient, studious investigation.

The Society has spent four years in reaching the conclusion that certain conditions "seem" to be required; could it not have spent one-fourth at least of that length of time in studying the most stupendous phenomenon of this or any age? Would it not have been more in keeping with the scientific standing of some of its members had it adopted such a course of action before making any report pro or con. upon it, instead of, as it evidently has, catching at straws of disparagement floating on the turbid stream of sensationalism and a rabid hostility to an unpopular truth?

Says The Globe:

"Dr. Warren explained, in a half apologetic way, the lack of satisfactory results obtained by his committee. He said the work involved more time than is generally supposed, and that the English Society for Psychical Research had waited ten years before reporting on Spiritualism."

Why the failure of the English Society to accomplish anything within a reasonable length of time should be an excuse for the shortcoming of the American, it is difficult to see; and more so how the "English Society for Psychical Research" (if he means what he says, and it is really the society bearing that name he alludes to) could have waited ten years, since it has been established only six (Feb 20th, 1882).

"Prof. James then said that the laziness of the members of the society was the reason why so few satisfactory results had been obtained. He called on the members to brace up in their contributions of time and money."

We surmise that the Professor is mistaken in this as in other of his conclusions; that the reason of so few unsatisfactory results is that the Society of which he is a distinguished, active member, is on the wrong track: It is searching for fraud, and finds so little that it has scarcely any success to report. It makes the most of what it ferrets out, but that is so infinitesimally small it has to go to outsiders for a supply, and accepts even that grudgingly; but rejects all that savors of sustaining the truth. What different results can be expected from such a course, since proofs of the truths of Spiritualism, and of the genuineness of its phenomena, "hang about us like a cloud"?

The second committee report was presented by Prof. Royce on Phantasms and Presentiments. It consisted in the main of letters from various persons describing their experiences, but as nothing specially new was given, either in facts or theory, than what has been known and freely discussed for centuries, though more fully developed of late, we refrain from reference to it in detail—the leading subject under consideration, and about which the greatest degree of interest centred, being Spiritualism per se.

Not until it makes a radical change in its tactics, gets down from its high stilts and works out its mission with the people and for the people, rather than for a class of self-inflationists, will there be any other record of labors performed than this: "Poor Luck of the Psychical Research Society."

Reception to Lyman C. Howe.

The Spiritualists of Boston will tender Mr. Howe a public reception at the First Spiritual Temple, Newbury street, Wednesday evening, Dec. 26th. All are invited to attend.

"Robert Elsmere."

This suddenly famous book, marking the occurrence of an epoch in religious thought if not in consequent religious life, promises to do in its way a service such as "Uncle Tom's Cabin" did for arousing and concentrating public sentiment on the subject of slavery. It is a novel written by an English lady, Mrs. Humphry Ward, the niece of the late Matthew Arnold, and aims to impress upon the public mind, already thoroughly prepared to receive and respond to such impression, the necessity of reconceiving the Christ. The blindly superstitious exaggeration of the person of Jesus, which Emerson asserted to be "noxious," and what Dr. Channing called the "swollen way of talking about Jesus," have combined to remove him beyond the reach of hungering human sympathy, and made a divinity to be worshiped and adored in place of an elder brother to whom to go for help to bear earthly burdens and endure with patience the sorrows of mortal existence.

The attention that has been awakened by "Robert Elsmere" is so general as to entitle it to be called universal. No one book of recent times has excited at once so wide and so profound an interest. The pulpit and the press alike represent the depth of the impression it has made on the popular mind and heart. It would be no easy matter to select individual discussions of it by either, to which to make particular reference, in the midst of such a surging sea of reflection and rhetoric. The special point to be noted, however, is that every attempt to demolish the structure of its lucid thought and destroy its web of indestructible logic, has undeniably resulted in the discomfiture of the one making it. By its larger and freer standard of measuring the divine in the human, it measures also the vital deficiencies of those who rashly assume to dispose of it with their criticism. In fact, it seems to be fast becoming a living test of the value of creeds, and a trier of the spiritual forces with which they profess to be informed. It is this quality which stamps it so readily as a book of revolution in religious thought.

Coming to the sermon, among others, of Rev. Heber Newton, of New York, in which he admitted that he had read the book with a thrill, and that it seemed to him a great book, which had revealed the secret thoughts of many hearts, he advised those who had no trouble with the older forms of belief to let it alone. He said it was accurate in pronouncing this an age of doubt, and subtly true in its delineation of the struggle of the Christian heart. Robert Elsmere is described as a student busy at the origins of human society. He learns that the plowshare of inquiry must be run through all letters alike, and that the so-called sacred writings must be weighed by the same test with the rest. So he learns to doubt. The doubt of Christendom is one that questions directly the authorities of Christianity. The doubt of the age is the questioning as to what is the nature of the documents on which Christianity rests. Literary criticism has become biblical criticism, which searches and doubts. Dr. Newton said the sacred books must be regarded as human, not superhuman; not written by one person, but by many persons; reporting upon the facts surrounding Christianity, but necessarily impregnated with the superstition of the age.

No one disputes their historical accuracy, said Dr. Newton, but these books are not infallible. This is the result of modern criticism. Then arises the question, can an infallible church rest on fallible books? The tendency is away from the traditional theory of dogma, because it is away from the books on which that dogma rests. It is these questions with which Robert Elsmere wrestles; he is in danger of intellectual suicide if he refuses to consider them. The conclusion of the whole matter with Dr. Newton being, that we are first of all to believe in God. No question about any book is able to disturb this belief. Grant that the errors revealed by criticism have destroyed the traditional Christ, this is simply a call to us to reconceive Christ.

Perhaps, on the whole, the most thoroughly appreciative discourse to be met with on "Robert Elsmere" is that of Rev. John W. Chadwick of Brooklyn, which abounds with reflective passages illustrating the tenor and real purpose of the book. He denies that it is an argument for "anti-supernaturalism," though it is generally treated so. Its main purpose, he maintains, is to show us a man who brought his action into conformity with his thought in spite of the most terrible temptation that could obstruct his path; namely, the temptation to say, for the sake of the love he bore his wife and the love he feared to lose, "Falsehood, be thou my Truth." Elsmere himself says: "Imagine standing up Sunday after Sunday to say the things which you do not believe, using words as a convention which those who hear you receive as literal truth, and trusting the maintenance of your position either to your neighbor's forbearance or your own powers of evasion." This is by no means a difficult thing for any English clergyman to imagine, says Mr. Chadwick, for it is a thing which is frightfully common in the Established Church. Men of great ability and the highest standing in that Church affirm their right to believe precisely what Elsmere believed and still to enjoy all the honors and emoluments of that Church, as well as to go through all its motions. In our American Episcopal churches, says Mr. Chadwick, we have a very similar state of things, and by no means in these alone.

Mr. Chadwick's view is that "Robert Elsmere" was written to blast this sort of thing. It is, says he, "a summons to young men and old, tempted as Robert Elsmere was to make their lives a living lie, to be strong with his strength, true with his manly truth." And he cannot but think that it has already struck home to many a wavering conscience with accusing and invigorating power. No word is more needed than this in our time. Better, he thinks, that Orthodoxy should hold its own another century than that we should have a race of preachers keeping up a miserable pretence of belief from which the reality has forever fled. The final outcome of Elsmere's religious thought, as Mr. Chadwick regards it, is to be found in his famous sermon to the workingmen of London, for and with whom he formed his new religious organization, after having renounced the traditional creed of his inheritance. "Granted," he says, "that the true story of Jesus of Nazareth was from the beginning obscured by error and mistake; granted that those errors and mistakes which were once the strength of Christianity are now its weakness, and by the slow march and sentence of time are now threatening, unless we can clear them away, to lessen the hold of Jesus on the love and remembrance of man. What then? The fact is merely a call to you and me, who recognize it, to go back to the roots of things, to reconceive the Christ, to bring him afresh into our lives, to make the life so freely given for man minister again in new ways to man's new needs."

And the story goes on to say that "Elsmere's thought knew nothing of a perfect man, as it knew nothing of an incarnate God." And he proceeded in his utterances to his London workingmen, whom he named a New Brotherhood of Christ: "It is your urgent business, and mine, to do our very utmost to bring this life of Jesus, our precious, invaluable possession as a people, back into some real and cogent relation with our modern lives and beliefs and hopes." Adding this: "Let combination and brotherhood do for the newer and simpler faith what they did once for the old—let them give it a practical shape, a practical grip on human life. Then we, too, shall have our Easter. We, too, shall have the right to say, 'He is not here, He is risen.' Not here in legend, in miracle, in the beautiful outworn forms and crystallizations of older thought. He is risen—in a wiser reverence and a more reasonable love; risen in new forms of social help inspired by his memory, called afresh by His name."

At length we come to Mr. Chadwick's own discussion of the subject. He thinks that to try to gather a New Brotherhood of rich and poor into a religious organization on the basis of such a reconception of the life and character of Jesus, would be an endeavor to make a part, though a very great and glorious part, do service as the whole. He thinks that the task for those in search of a religion that shall be adequate for mind and heart is much more serious than any reconception of the life and character of Jesus. It is to reconceive the Universe and God and Man; to represent it as being coëxtensive with the realization of the true work and character of Jesus is a very pitiful and painful misconception of the work requiring to be done. Nor does he consent to hold that such realization necessarily brings with it the ability and disposition to make the personality of Jesus central to one's religious work. While, for himself, it has been an unspeakable delight and blessing to conceive Jesus in a purely human way, he has felt no stronger inclination since this reconception than before to make Jesus central to his presentation of religion. He feels sure that the human Jesus will do us a more real service if we do not try to isolate him, but allow our reverence and love to play about him with spontaneous sympathy.

The whole of God's lesson to us is not to be learned from Christ. In fact, there is so much that we cannot learn from him that we simply have no right to isolate him in our reverence. He has for us, says Mr. Chadwick, no word of science or of art; no word of political or social help; no word for our domestic life. Living as he did in the expectation of a great world-catastrophe, he did not address himself to the shaping of a social order. Even if it had been otherwise, the conditions of his life were so different from ours that the wisest legislation for his time would not have suited ours. To reconceive the Universe and Man and God—this is a greater, grander task than to reconceive Christ.

This is the task which we think he rightly asserts to be the one appointed for our time, and he regards it as on the line of science rather than on the lines of literature and philosophy. In other words, actual knowledge and experience is to supersede speculation and dreams and dogma. Our real choice in this immediate matter is not between the human Jesus and the divine Christ, but between the human Jesus and none at all. It is simply a question of documents and testimony whether there ever was any such being in the world as a miraculously born and risen and ascended Christ, of one substance with the Father, of coëternal majesty. And in examining the documents and the testimony they are found to be wholly insufficient for the purpose which they have been made to serve. By far the greater portion of the Bible proves to be anonymous, and much of it proves to be pseudonymous, or having a pretended authorship which is not real. And there is nothing in the character of what remains to make an incredible statement in the least degree more credible than it would be in the Koran or the Avesta. The certainties of revealed religion must ever share in the uncertainty attaching to the origin of the Bible's various parts.

A Reminiscence.

The statements which have of late been resurrected by the learned (?) doctors of New York City to the effect that the spirit raps were and are made by manipulating the toe-joint, is so silly to Spiritualists that it would be entirely superfluous on our part to even notice the charge, were it not that many good, honest people not Spiritualists might come to believe in the nonsensical theory of our opponents. Why, the very first knowledge we had, many years ago, that convinced us of the fact of immortality, was by and through spirit-raps—and that, too, in a Catholic family where we resided. It took a long time, however, before we were—through evidence beyond the power of "toe-joint" or any other skeptical theory to explain—convinced, and felt obliged to acknowledge, for the truth's sake, that spirits had anything to do with the peculiar sounds we from time to time heard in the presence of a particular friend of ours who possessed the divine gift of mediumship.

Many years afterward, when Mr. Redman, one of the finest mediums we ever saw, was located in this city, we took, after much persuasion, an outspoken infidel to Mr. R.'s residence. Although this visitor had no faith whatever in anything of a spiritual nature, to his utter astonishment there were raps upon the floor as loud as though some one had struck it with a sledge-hammer, Mr. Redman remarking: "Gentlemen, you bring great magnetic power with you this morning. Please be seated." Then the right hand of the medium was made to involuntarily write the name in full of our friend, as also the name of the powerful spirit who had given us welcome.

Later we had hundreds of just such experiences, and therefore know whereof we speak. Should the whole world combine to force us to recant, we would reiterate the fact that the raps are caused by decarnated individuals, who take this and other methods, by and through the esoteric laws of life, to prove that they still live, and can hold communion with their friends and relatives in the mortal.

The Alaska Indians.

Mrs. E. B. Voorhies writes to the New York World, in response to numerous inquiries put her in relation to the character and condition of the Indians of Alaska, that those of them who have been overtaken by Gen. Sherman's "march of civilization" are a spiritless, pale-faced, red-eyed, and generally dilapidated looking set. They cannot find it in their hearts to thank God and the white man for existence, robbed as they are of the birthright which belongs to every child, that of health, a name, and paternal care and protection.

Mrs. Voorhies declares that, as our national sin against the negro soaked the land in blood and tears, so the wrongs and injustice done the poor Indian will most certainly sometime rise in judgment against the nation. She says that she found numbers of missionaries of every denomination in Alaska, but in the face of what the churches at the East are doing to Christianize the natives, and to teach them how to live and to prepare for a happier future, the government allows "the march of civilization," as embodied in the persons of traders, sailors, soldiers, miners and outlaws, to overpower and destroy them, morally and physically.

Recent reports of a perfectly authentic nature make it unquestionably certain that no description of the condition of the natives of that distant locality can very well exceed the dreadful character of the reality. A state of affairs prevails socially for which it is difficult to furnish an adequate conception. It fairly surpasses belief. Not only is it impossible for the government to ignore it, but the inference is too plain to admit of successful denial that it becomes a real party to these nefarious transactions by pretending not to see the acts for which its own chosen officers and agents are directly responsible. Thus is it in league with the robbers and worse who are inviting a sure visitation of vengeance for guilt upon our heads!

Sunday Recreation.

Felix Adler, of New York, whose good work men of all denominations commend, lately touched upon this question, saying:

"When shall the common people have leave for recreation if not on Sunday, seeing that they must work for their living on the other days of the week? Nature, which is not puritanical, opens her arms to receive the city's multitudes during the summer Sundays, but think of the Sundays of the winter? What is then offered the poorer people in the way of refined and elevating pleasure? If you have music in the parks in summer, then why not have music in the halls in winter? Where can the poor man turn for recreation during the bleak and gloomy Sundays of winter? The Public Library is barred; the Art Museum shuts its doors; our boys, who work during the week, are not allowed to play their innocent games in the parks, and instead of being a day of joy, Sunday is to them a day of gloom."

The Holidays

Are coming, and those who wish to make presents of absorbing interest and abiding value, are invited to peruse the announcement of "Gifts for the People" made by Colby & Rich, on our eighth page.

☞ From the Pittsburgh Leader we learn that Rev. J. T. McCrory recently delivered in that city a sermon on Spiritualism that naturally aroused the Spiritualists to respond. The attention of Geo. W. Kates being directed to the matter, he addressed him with a request that he appear in a public debate, Mr. Kates affirming and Mr. McCrory denying the truth of Modern Spiritualism. The clergyman declined, giving as his reason that he had not time "to devote to so unprofitable a subject." Considering the fact that Mr. McCrory had substantially declared Spiritualism to be a rank delusion, leading its votaries to destruction, deceiving even "the very elect," the want of time to use his influence in an effort to save the perishing, even the very elect, from perdition, seems to many a very frivolous and unsatisfactory excuse; but some animals, and also men, when cornered will escape through a very small hole.

☞ The Chicago Tribune recently contained the following letter from Lord Tennyson, dated Farringford, Freshwater, Isle of Wight, May 7th, 1874, to a gentleman who communicated to him certain strange experiences he had had when passing from under the effect of anæsthetics:

"I have never had any revelations through anæsthetics; but a kind of waking trance (this for lack of a better name) I have frequently had, quite up from boyhood, when I have been all alone. This has often come upon me through repeating my own name to myself silently till, all at once, as it were, out of the intensity of the consciousness of individuality, the individuality itself seemed to dissolve and fade away into boundless being; and this, not a confused state, but the clearest of the clearest, the surest of the surest, utterly beyond words, where death was an almost laughable impossibility; the loss of personality (if so it were) seeming no extinction, but the only true life. I am ashamed of my feeble description. Have I not said the state is utterly beyond words?"

☞ The Boston Globe, which has evidently no fear of the medical fraternity "before its eyes," records that "Nelly Bly," one of the New York World's most enterprising reporters, recently feigned illness and poverty, and went to one of the free dispensaries to see how they do things there. She narrowly escaped having half a tonsil cut out before she had time to think about it. This calls to mind, it says, the experience a Globe reporter had not long ago: "He was perfectly healthy, but went to ten different physicians, told them each the same story, and received from each a different prescription! The doctors are good fellows, but they do n't know everything."

☞ M. Victorien Sardou, to whose spiritualistic tendencies THE BANNER has taken occasion to revert appreciatively at various times, in a letter to the Gaulois says that thirty years ago he was laughed at by men who refused to believe in magnetism, but who have now accepted it under a different name; while hypnotism and suggestion, with all the psychic forces now recognized by eminent doctors, are only reproductions of the phenomenal somnambulism, ecstasy and second-sight which were known but not utilized a century ago.

It is said that abnormally small waists are never to be admired, as in eight cases out of ten they are a great injury to health and comfort.

How is it that the speech of certain fallen angels seems at present so "satisfying" to some secular editors, when the sayings of their days of innocence are of no account? Blessed are the pure in heart, etc.—S. R. D., Woburn, Mass.

"Are you ill?" asked the physician; "let me see your tongue, please?" "It's of no use, doctor," replied the patient; "no tongue can tell how bad I feel."

In view of the suffrage amendment adopted by the State of Rhode Island last spring, steps are now being taken for the erection of a monument to Gov. Dorr, who forty-six years ago paid the penalty of seven years' imprisonment because he levied war on the aristocratic element in that commonwealth, (?) and took forcible grounds for the establishment of the "equal right" of every American citizen to the ballot, etc. The cause he stood up for in the "Dorr war" is now triumphant, and he deserves a monument, surely.

The best skill of the physician availeth little against a disease which hath once laid hold on a man. WHEN THE LADIES VOTE.

Oh! we 'll all see better days
When the ladies vote;
We will walk in wisdom's ways
When the ladies vote;
Every kind of trade will hum,
And the happy time will come—
Yea! the grand millennium,
When the ladies vote!

It seems that all, or nearly all, the Governors of the several States have been interviewed in regard to the purchasing of votes in order to carry elections. Their answers invariably were in condemnation of such a course, they favoring a stringent U. S. law against such practices.

LINES TO MY BED.

Oh! when the rosy-fingered hours of dawn
Touch with prismatic colors all the sky,
How do I love thee! When the night is gone
How sweet upon thy restful heart to lie,
And nap and doze and snooze till, peal on peal,
Rings the third bell for morning's cheery meal.

Ah! then, how can I leave thee, gracious bed?
Health, peace and quiet rest I find in thee;
Wrath and defiance hurl I at the head
That would pronounce divorce 'twixt thee and me:
My love for thee, cold as the stars——at night,
Burns like the August sun at morning's light.

Denver, Col., dispatches under date of Dec. 12th, state that Colorow, the White River chief, died at his camp, near the mouth of the White River, a few miles above the Ouray Indian Agency, on the 11th, of pneumonia. Colorow was prominent in the Ute troubles some time ago. Since the attack upon his camp, near Meeker, by Sheriff Kendall, he has never passed east of the reservation line, and has always accused—and with every reason for correctness—the settlers of White River of hypocrisy and betrayal.

Umbrellas were in great demand in Boston last Monday.

"Boston baked beans" are played out. They are not at all palatable. Reason: Modern cooks do n't know how to prepare them for the table. It 's a lost art now. "In ye olden tyme" they were a great luxury, as the mothers of New England knew exactly how to cook them. Besides, the pork used to-day is simply atrocious, whereas in the past it was solid and good, as the hogs were fed on healthy food.

THE SUNDAY PRESS.—Rev. B. F. Da Costa of the Church of St. John the Evangelist in a recent sermon in New York City created quite a sensation by attacking the Sunday newspapers as opposed to the genius of Christianity, as public nuisances, and as responsible for much immorality and even insanity. He declared that they should be suppressed for the same reasons that houses of ill-fame should be suppressed. The week-day press in general he thought was as good as could be expected. He made an exception, however, of a certain New York afternoon paper, which he said printed Bible texts at the top of its columns and sporting news in them, and was "a loathsome and hypocritical thing." He analyzed the contents of the Sunday papers to support his assertions. The Reverend gentleman has commenced his tirades against the Sunday press too late. It has come to stay.

Dr. B. F. Brown, 6 Rutland Square, Boston, will receive a few more pupils for spiritual development.

☞ Much interest is at present being awakened in practical mesmerism: The Sunday Critic, of Lowell, Mass., recently devoted a column to describing the powers of Prof. J. W. Berry, and what he has recently accomplished in Mystic Hall, in that city.

☞ The Meadville (Pa.) Tribune-Republican of the 7th inst. makes pleasant mention of a recent discourse delivered at Psychological Hall, Richmond Block, in that place, by Miss Jennie B. Hagan—to which account we shall more fully revert next week.

REMOVAL.—The well-known clairvoyant and test medium, Mrs. Augusta Dwinels, has taken rooms at No. 18 Indiana Place (off Washington street,) Boston, where she can be found by those who need her medial services.

☞ Dr. B. F. Brown, recently of Philadelphia, Pa., is now located at 6 Rutland Square, Boston.

MAGNETIC SHIELDS.

FIRE AND SMOKE BLAZE AWAY.

YOU can't make any smoke around our camp. Magnetic Fire makes no noise or smoke. But Dr. Thacher's Genuine MAGNETIC SHIELDS make such attacks upon all forms of sickness as fire makes upon wood and coal—that is, burns and destroys sickness. MAGNETIC SHIELDS are the product of a studious mind coupled with scientific acumen, and the result is the creation of a NEW OLD healing agent, the like of which never was known to the world, even in ancient times.

Dr. C. I. Thacher is a live man, has been a close student, and possesses a thorough knowledge of science and understands the therapeutics of mind, drugs and other agents. When he says MAGNETISM is the quickest curative agent known, he expects learned men will controvert it; expects to be met in the future, as in the past, by the old-fogy notions of superannuated brains. He has fought too long to expect a full surrender of these false teachers at once, but he is convincing the world of these immortal truths quite as fast as the education of the age will permit. Hidebound, mossback skeptics cannot believe, but thinking minds will read our literature and judge for themselves whether the new method excels drugs in curing disease.

If you want to test MAGNETIC FIRE to warm your blood, get a pair of our FOOT BATTERIES. They speak to you through the vital warmth they create in feet and limbs. $1 gets a pair; $3 brings three pairs to you by return mail.

Message Department.

FREE SPIRITUAL MEETINGS.

These highly interesting meetings, to which the public is cordially invited, are held at the Hall of the Banner of Light Establishment,

ON TUESDAYS AND FRIDAYS,

AT 2½ O'CLOCK P. M.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these meetings) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely.

MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER-LONGLEY will occupy the platform on Tuesday afternoons for the purpose of allowing her spirit guides to answer questions that may be propounded by inquirers on the mundane plane, having practical bearing upon human life in its departments of thought or labor. Questions can be forwarded to this office by mail, or handed to the Chairman, who will present them to the presiding spirit for consideration.

MRS. B. F. SMITH, the excellent test medium, will on Friday afternoons under the influence of her guides give decarnated individuals an opportunity to send words of love to their earthly friends—which messages are reported at considerable expense and published each week on this page.

☞ It should be distinctly understood that the Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them to the life beyond the characteristics of their earthly lives—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the mundane sphere in an undeveloped condition, eventually progress to a higher state of existence. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers for our table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. M. T. Shelhamer-Longley.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 6th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! Holy Spirit, whom man may worship and adore in tenderness and truth, because thou art all divine; thou whom we may approach with confidence and with trust, feeling that we will be received, even as is the child received by the most loving parent on earth, we offer up to thee our thanksgiving and praise, for life and all things that belong to humanity in this present age. We praise thee from our soul's depths for the enlightenment and advancement of this century, that truth is pressing in upon the human soul, and knowledge is becoming broad and free unto all seekers. We thank thee, oh, our Father, for the blessings and the privileges that are ours; although we recognize much at the present time, even, that is dark and puzzling to the human mind, much in thy law that is mysterious, because we do not understand; although we feel that there is a great deal of sorrow yet on earth, still we know that human kind is pressing onward and upward, daily throwing off something of its perplexities, gradually unfolding to light and understanding, and becoming receptive, more and more, to thy teachings, and to a comprehension of thy vast and wondrous plan of existence.

William Lloyd Garrison.

This is a great occasion, one that forcibly draws me back from the spirit-world, friends, and makes me take my place now among men on earth, even though they may think of me as but a shadow, as one who has gone out from the activities of mortal life, whose power has been dissipated and whose voice is silent. One may be silent as far as verbal speech is concerned, and yet use a potent influence for some chosen work or in some particular field of action. Motives and thoughts are the moving power of deeds, and sometimes these motives and thoughts may pass off from mind to mind and permeate the atmosphere, moving others to deeds and to expression, the silent force of which is unseen and unnoticed by the world at large. Influences of this kind, I am glad to say, go forth from the world of spirit, each one directed to a special use, and each one intended to move upon some active being for special results.

I am not here, Mr. Chairman, to enter into a political harangue. I am only here to give my greetings and to express my sympathy with friends still occupying a plane of life which is filled with conflict and with activity. I am here to say that my heart is filled with the thought of human progress, and that my very deepest sympathy goes forth to those who are in need of elevation and recognition by others in power.

I am very glad to feel deeply within my soul, as I approach the earthly atmosphere, that there is less of conflict and less of real vital difference of human thought at the present time than I have seen in the past. I behold that humanity is advancing in spiritual growth, unconsciously, perhaps, to the world at large, and yet actually growing spiritually, becoming more harmonized in sentiment and in thought, although there is much divergence of expression, even in these days.

I have great hope for my race. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the world is steadily to grow and unfold in spirituality until the earth shall present upon its bosom a race of individuals who are so harmonized as to live in concord one with another, and to send out a sweet and ennobling influence which will take effect upon all mankind. And when this time has come, we shall find the spirit-world itself larger and nobler and sweeter in its associations, its localities and personalities, because there will come to that spirit-world grander intelligences from earth, who have been fitted here to take their place in high circles beyond, and who can thus generate and send forth a power, an uplifting influence, for themselves and for their kind.

I am interested in the nation at large, in its government and in its people. I believe in the government of the people, by the people—the intelligent masses, who are constantly growing more intelligent, studying life and its problems for themselves, thus rounding out their own characters, and informing and enlarging their own minds.

I have great hopes for the future of this country. I believe that we shall yet see it something more than an independent nation in name, for there is much yet within our country that does not savor of the name of independence. We have sometimes crawled before and served other powers, and even the opinions of other nations, rather than our own; we have not always stood forth in an independent position, and declared our thought and our conviction in spite of all other opinions, but we have stood forth boldly and bravely through the years that have gone, and have done the best we could, no doubt, under the circumstances which have surrounded us, and I believe that the time is coming when all servility of every kind—that of mind and spirit as well as of physical life—will be thrown off from the country at large, and we shall indeed prove to be what we claim.

I believe also, sir, that the time is not far distant when slavery, of every kind, will be abolished from this fair land, for there is plenty of it now, in all departments of life. I could not enter into the details of that servility and slavery to-day, which we may find, if we search for it, in every portion and part of our great civilized structure; but the time is coming when freedom shall indeed soar aloft, not only upon our banners but in every home. Freedom, not riot; liberty, not license; all that is ennobling and free and sweet, allowing the human heart and mind to expand and grow and develop in those parts which it contains and which it should send forth for its own enrichment and elevation of its kind—these are coming to our race, and every year and every four years, bringing in their train experience, discipline; and all that is the outgrowth of their passage will only bring to man larger knowledge and grander unfoldment.

I send this out, sir, only as a few words of greeting to friends who may have thought my voice long silent, who may have believed that I have ceased to take interest in freedom and its advocates, in humanity and its affairs or concerns. I wish them to know that I have the largest thought and deepest sympathy with all and for all that affects human life.

I am only one of many. I only come, humbly and sincerely, to speak my word, for I am proud to be associated with a large band of spirits who, like myself, watch the events taking place in human experience, and who are ready and willing to give a little thought and such influence or magnetic strength as they may possess to the furtherance of any good work which may be of use to our kind. William Lloyd Garrison.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We will now consider your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By F. W. Baker.] Will you give advice in regard to the treatment of spinal disease, which affects the use of speech and hearing?

ANS.—All spinal disease, of whatever variety, is undoubtedly produced by a disorganization of the nervous structure, and usually develops serious qualities; therefore one who suffers with spinal disease of any kind should make haste to consult a scientific specialist in that department of physical ailment. It is not to be tampered with, nor should a physician of any class lightly pass judgment upon such disease. Many times a spinal derangement is produced by an unequal distribution of the nervous forces throughout the system. Whatever will tend to equalize this distribution, so that no one part of the system shall either draw to itself an overabundance of nerve-force, or be depleted of its necessary amount and quality of the same, will be efficacious in the restoration of health; therefore the application of vital magnetism to the spinal column and to the various nerve centres of the organism, if imparted by some healthy, congenial healer, will undoubtedly be very useful, not only in giving strength to the patient, but perhaps in assisting nature to remove those impediments in speech or hearing, or in the vital action of other senses of the body, which have accrued through the progress of this disease. We should most certainly advise the application of such vital magnetism, and in many cases, also, the use of a galvanic battery will prove very beneficial, as the electrical fluid, when properly understood and applied, will undoubtedly assist in restoring the equilibrium of the nervous forces and in equalizing the circulation of the blood. We do not generally advise narcotics, stimulants or drugs of any kind in disease of this character, for in many instances these will do far more harm than good. Vital magnetism, either with or without the application of electricity, will undoubtedly prove the very best agent which can be employed in the treatment of such a disease.

Q.—[By H. H. S.] Is life, wherever found, a part of Deity?

A.—So we believe. We can conceive of no form of soul, no expression of activity, no manifestation of thought or of energy, mental or physical, but is drawn from the great soul and centre of all existence. This great soul and centre of all life is to our mind Deity; it is the All-one, the Divine, that which is omnipresent, omnipotent and eternal—it is life itself. It is hard for the human mind, finite in its capacity, to understand or to define Deity, God, the Supreme Eternal. We may embody the thought of such a deity to our mind, and clothe it with form and parts, that we may the better grasp and understand the idea, and we may thus hold it to our heart as the grand supernal being, the great beneficent parent of all good; and there should be no objection to the human mind doing this, inasmuch as it may bring to that mind a clearer thought, a more tender expression of the great over-soul, the supreme intelligence of life. We believe that all human thought, human energy, life itself, as embodied in universal humanity, is but an offshoot or expression of this great sum and substance of all being, the supreme spirit of intelligence; and we believe, also, that every form of life, every manifestation of activity and of energy, however it may express itself in objective existence, in whatsoever form it may appear, draws its sustenance, its energy, its life-principle, from this over-soul called by man Deity, and that without thus drawing vital energy from God himself, life could not exist, there would only be void and chaos forevermore.

Q.—Is there anything in the universe that has not life? or is there, in reality, any such thing as inert matter?

A.—We know of nothing really that can properly be called inert, although man employs that term to express his thought in connection with matter that does not express vital energy or potential power; yet, to our mind, every atom, however infinitesimal it may be, every monad possesses life, is endowed with activity, which we might perceive and study, could our senses become fine enough to behold and understand them. Life must exist, even in the grain of dust which is so dry beneath our feet or within our hand, as we cannot possibly conceive how anything, in this world or any other, can find a place and be imbedded with the elements, the particles and atoms of earth or of the atmosphere, which is not endowed with life. Therefore, in reality, there can be no inert matter, although matter may come to such a condition as to appear inert and dead to your understanding or your inspection. Matter is continually changing in form and in quality. That which appears to you to be dead is only dead—useless—to the form which it once expressed, but its atoms and its elements may pass through such changes as to again be made useful in other forms and for other purposes; therefore the great activities of life are continually going on in the monad and the atom as well as in the sun or the star.

Q.—Is it possible to "break" a law of God?

A.—We suppose not. We suppose that it is not possible for one to do anything outside of the will of God, although man is, to an extent we believe, morally responsible for his life and his deeds. There is that placed within the human breast which may prove a guide and monitor to those who listen and who pay attention to it. We believe that God, or Infinite Goodness, the Over-Intelligence of Life, has set up in humanity, individually and collectively, an unerring guide, a sure monitor, who will, if attended to, instruct and lead man on higher and higher as he ripens in experience; and it rests with man himself, when he emerges from the stage or condition of ignorance, which is like that of infancy; when he gains a knowledge of himself and his conditions, and comes to know that he is made happy when trying to do right and miserable when he does wrong; when, as we say, he emerges from ignorance to reason upon things and pass judgment, it rests with himself whether he shall develop the best qualities of his nature or those which are lower and debasing; therefore he must be morally responsible, in a measure, for that which he does and for that which he omits to do. Yet we do not see it possible for one to break a law of God, since the entire universe is ruled by law, and one law, although perhaps controverting your ideas of another, yet must ever remain true to itself, and operate with unerring judgment.

The law of God, however, is not fully understood, nor perhaps can it be with the present stage of undevelopment of the human mind and heart; that which seems to be an avoidance of law may perhaps only be the mind or the man being under the arbitrary control of some other law in the universe, and therefore man remains a creature of law, even though he does seem to violate that which he understands to be the supreme law.

We do not think it possible for man to do that which is against God's will, since God must be omnipotent and eternal. Were it possible for man to break the will of God, to do that which is against it, then could not the will of the so-called Supreme Being be omnipotent; man's power itself would be more strong, more high in operation than this will of which we speak; therefore we say, whatever man may do must be in accordance with the will of the divine spirit, however strange it may appear to our weak understanding. But man has need of instruction, and he must grow through gaining knowledge and understanding; and if he makes mistakes, if he does wrong, it may be that the will of God is in direct operation, even through such experience, for the man may require that discipline, hard and bitter though it prove, for the development of his best powers. We believe all things have their uses in life, and even sin itself; the bitter experiences of wrong-doing and debasement of the soul's best powers may be necessary evils to lead man out of ignorance and bondage, that he may throw off selfish and debasing chains that would weigh him down to carnal life, and that he may learn, through his own bitter and painful experience, that it is wisest and best to follow the guidance of that monitor within, which ever points upward to truth and to duty as leading lights.

Q.—What is the principal cause of the incongruity of dreams?

A.—Some physical disturbance of the organic system, we should judge. Many dreams are but the outgrowth of physical disturbance or some derangement of the nervous system. Perhaps the dreamer has exercised his body too much during the day, or exerted his mind in ways not beneficial to the maintenance of a fair degree of health, and physical derangement ensues, not enough to make the man appear on the sick list, not enough to warrant him to call in a physician to prescribe for his ills, but sufficiently so to set the machinery of his system, mentally and physically, into active operation, so that he dreams dreams which are incongruous, which are absurd, which he cannot reconcile with any reasonable thought that he may create.

Dreams are sometimes special spiritual inspirations, brought to the dreamer, either because he has become for the time receptive to truths and to the encroachments of spiritual life and its denizens, or because during his hours of slumber his spiritual attendants and guides can bring to him their influence and their magnetism, which may be of use to him in other times.

It is sometimes the case that one who dreams has really and for all practical purposes separated himself from the physical body, and during his hours of slumber wanders with spirit-friends in the world of souls, gaining experience and knowledge of that life which his friends inhabit. But it may not be, when he returns to the body and takes up again the cares of daily life he will remember these experiences and scenes which he encountered during his hours of sleep; only fragments of them may recur to his memory, and so they seem distorted and incongruous; he cannot understand nor piece these fragments together, so as to make of them a complete picture to his mind. This will also explain somewhat the incongruous appearance of dreams to those who are sensitive, who know they have been in contact with spiritual intelligences who can make nothing of the memories which recur to them in dreams which have been theirs.

Q.—Is there any definite order or system of what are called "spheres" in spirit-life? The usual number said to exist is seven, but in a published message from a spirit he says he has "risen to the ninth sphere, where all is light and brightness."

A.—There seems to be a strange confusion in the human mind, especially among Spiritualists, concerning the definition of this word, sphere. Many look upon the term as meaning a location, or perchance a world, while others consider it only as defining a state or condition of the human mind. To our comprehension, this sphere or atmosphere belongs entirely to the intelligence, be that intelligence in mortal form or as a decarnated spirit, the atmosphere being the element or the aura surrounding the intelligence belonging to the spirit, and arising from its own interior life; therefore there may be any number of spheres, or gradations of atmosphere, through which the spirit may pass in its advancement, or which the spirit may generate from time to time, as it rises in knowledge and power in spiritual life.

We do not think the word sphere should apply to a location at all; therefore a spirit who is very low and crude in its ideas and its knowledge of life, who is undeveloped in spiritual quality and power, may be described to you as a spirit occupying the first sphere or plane of spirit experience. Such a spirit will express itself only through very materialistic tendencies, and may find its life in close rapport with the physical surroundings and localities which belong to this earth itself. That same spirit may, after awhile, loosen its hold somewhat upon materialistic tendencies and characteristics, become a little better informed on life itself and things in general; it may put forth a desire to learn, to grow and to cultivate itself more fully; and so it begins to generate a little more refined magnetic aura, which constitutes its sphere or atmosphere, and makes it somewhat higher in perception and in expression, as well as in capacity for receiving impressions, than when it occupied the first plane or sphere of spirit experience; and, as time goes on, the intelligence develops greater power, stronger intellect, brighter spiritual capacities—it becomes a little more refined, higher in expression, somewhat more keen in moral perception and in spiritual sensibilities; and so you may be told that it has come to the third sphere, and so on. A spirit may rise through self-effort, through self-improvement and instruction, with the aid and the teaching of higher, grander intelligences, through grade after grade of unfoldment, sphere after sphere of intelligence.

So a spirit may very well say, perhaps, "I am in the ninth sphere, counting from those classes of spirits whom I have seen at different times during my experience, from the lowest plane of life up through those more refined and still more informed and inspired, to the plane which I occupy, and which others of like tendencies, characteristics and aspirations as myself do occupy; and there are spheres after spheres of unfoldment, of information, experience and spiritual growth far beyond that which I now understand, but through which I hope to pass, and from which I trust to receive development and knowledge as the years roll on."

Q.—[By Helen M. Reckard, San Francisco, Cal.] If there is no personal God, and we live under laws that control this universe, who made the laws? Who or what Intelligence holds in equipoise all things terrestrial or all things celestial?

A.—We do not recognize a personal God in the image of mankind, although we do acknowledge a Supreme Intelligence, that is infused throughout the universe, that permeates every department and condition of life, that holds all systems and worlds in their place, and that in every place and in every conceivable manner governs and controls all things. This Infinite Intelligence it does not seem to us can possibly bear the image of mankind, and yet we believe that humanity is constantly developing a likeness unto that Divine Spirit, a likeness, we mean, in spiritual qualities, in humanitarian principles, in the love-element, the controlling, dominant power which, through love, desires to learn, to understand and to control, for wise and noble ends and purposes.

To our mind, humanity is growing in likeness, we may say, to the Infinite Spirit, and we do not know what we may become as the eternal ages roll on; yet so far as we can learn anything of this great supreme intelligence, it manifests itself as light, as motive power, as electrical, impulsive force, and it moves and acts upon all outward things, as the vitalizing spirit which comes from within.

We do not claim that there is no God, therefore we do not say that nothing exists but law, and that there is no ordainer of law, none to control that law. What is law but the expression of the infinite mind; but the manifestation of the supreme will and power, operating in its own way throughout the universe, for the accomplishment of its own vast ends, and for the perfection of its work? Therefore we recognize law only as a term by which we may conveniently express the thought of infinite intelligence, only as the operation of power coming from the supreme mind itself, and through its direction bringing to the universe and to humanity, to all life, a grand and perfect result, which keeps worlds in motion, and brings forth the hidden things of existence.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 16th, 1888.

C. O. Benton.

We are only too glad, Mr. Chairman, to send a few words of comfort to the dear ones yet left in mortal life, who are anxiously seeking a word from those that have gone beyond. How little do you understand, dear mortals, how hard we have to work to come into communication with you privately, for there are many spirits who would much rather make themselves known in your home circles than to speak in public, but often we fail in making you realize or even sense our presence there, so we seek other channels. I understood when on earth something of spirit-communion. I would ask my dear ones to visit places where spirits make themselves known, and go to the meetings and the Lyceums, that they may gain something.

I know I shall be remembered in Cleveland, Ohio, by many. It seems only a little while to me—three or four years—since I threw off the mantle of mortality. I often step into the Lyceum. It is a place to which my spirit is attracted, and I gain knowledge from the spirits who gather there. C. O. Benton.

W. A. B. Wilson.

It is not long since I passed away, Mr. Chairman. I have friends in Hyde Park, Mass. I was a member of Company I, Thirty-Third Mass. As I look in the meeting I see the familiar face of one who I think will recognize me. It is sweet to feel that we are not forgotten by mortals. How many times has my dear wife looked upward and wondered if I was near. I want her to learn all she can of spirit-return. How many times has my spirit gone out in a desire that I might come into communication with my dear wife and child.

Many trials have been hers since I passed away, of which I have been cognizant, for I have visited her often. I have come into many, many places where I have seen her go, but still I could not make her hear my voice. I would have her feel that she is not alone, that I am with her often, especially in the still hours of the night. I would like her to know also that Sarah comes with me many times, and the dear grandma also who thought so much of her in the mortal.

I would say to all, you cannot learn too much of spirit-return while here. I used to call myself a firm believer before I passed on.

I well remember speaking to one of the soldiers on this subject. He laughed at me, and turned away almost with a sneer, unwilling to continue the conversation. Now he has made the change, he is only too glad to acknowledge he was in the dark, and should not have spoken as he did.

I have thought many times as I have stood here, and listened to one and another speaking, how grand it would be if we could draw the veil aside, and you mortals could behold the multitude of invisibles crowding in, eager to make themselves known. Dear friends, we ask you to meet us half way. We can come to you, but we cannot manifest unless you do your part. My name is W. A. B. Wilson, of Hyde Park.

Elizabeth Robinson Burnell.

My dear daughters will be very glad to learn that mother has been able to send them a few words. I lived many years of mortal life—ninety-two. You will think that was a good old age, and so it was. I was glad to throw off the mortal form.

Everything that willing hands could do was done for mother. My darling daughters, I did appreciate all your kind acts, and even the looks that you gave me. I knew that I was welcome in the home that was provided for me while I staid here, and when the angel messengers came for me, I know they did not mourn me as they would if they had not understood something of spirit-communion.

Oh! how many times did I realize that my own dear mother was standing beside me, seemingly ministering to my wants spiritually. I used to hear mortals speak of heaven. There are a good many, but they are different heavens, as I look at it, according to the life you live here.

Do try and come into communication with your dear ones; sit down by yourselves, and converse with them. You know not how much happiness you may give to them, as all come eagerly watching for a channel to be opened that we may make you know we are there.

Oh! so many times did I commune with the dear angels, and get a response through my own spirit that they were there. It was knowledge with me. I did love to hear of one and another who had been privileged to give a few words.

Often, as my dear daughters would come to me and say, "Mother, how do you feel, to-day?" I used to think, "Don't ask me, children, for I am almost home." It seemed as if I could almost catch a glimpse of the Canaan beyond the vale.

I was ninety-two years of age. You younger people will think I must have been an old lady, yet the remark was often made that I seemed young and cheerful. Let me say to you, dear mortals, that you can make yourselves younger by being cheerful. Be happy; give out to each other; do not live as if you were the only one in this life.

I am thankful that I could come and speak through this channel. For more than twenty years did I take pleasure in learning what the dear BANNER contained. Truly I was spiritually fed.

Father and mother and loved ones all came with extended hands to welcome me to that beautiful shore. I stepped into the boat and was rowed safely across to where loved ones were waiting to beckon me up higher. My home was in Claremont, N. H. My name is Elizabeth Robinson Burnell.

Sarah E. Clark.

In the streets of Boston I have walked many times, Mr. Chairman, and still they look familiar to me, although it is some four years since I passed away. I know of one in particular, yes, two, who will be glad to get a message from me, and they will not doubt that it is Sarah speaking. How delightful to know there is a life beyond the veil, where we shall dwell together, walk and talk and even sing together.

I have heard mortals say: "Your stories are too beautiful to be true." Let me assure them that we cannot tell half the truth—only draw a faint outline, but not fill out the picture.

I am happy in my spirit-home, yet the law of attraction still draws me to dear ones on earth. Something has come up in the family of late, and I have made a great exertion to speak to-day, that I may let them know I am interested in the affair. Dear ones, let it pass idly by; it will soon blow over and amount to very little. It looks dark to you now, because of the wrong-doing of others. Do not think you are alone in the matter. We of the spirit means more than one, and we often visit you, and we come for a purpose—to help you fight the battle of life, which is the hardest battle that is fought.

How many times have you wondered if we knew anything of the trials and troubles that you encounter here. Yes, William, we do know, and come into sympathy with you when we come to earth, but we cannot take earthly affairs away with us; if we did, we would have no more heaven than you possess here, but the sympathy we give you helps you more than you can fully realize.

I have often stood beside you. Lizzie is with me to-day and sends greetings to you all. She also spoke once, a number of years ago, and felt that she gained by so doing. My name is Sarah E. Clark. My home was in Boston. Elizabeth, who is with me, is my daughter.

Edwin W. Havens.

A gentleman in spirit-life said to me: "Try to throw off the feelings that come to you that you passed away with, for they are very disagreeable." I appreciate the kindness that has been extended to me from the spirit side; yes, and from the mortal, too, Mr. Chairman.

I have spoken once before—not in your meetings, but in a hall—just a few words. I am not satisfied with that, as there are dear ones who would like more than a word or two. I am satisfied with my home, although I hope by progression to make it more beautiful. If you should ask me if I knew anything of spirit-return before passing out, I should say, No, sir, emphatically. When the subject was spoken of among us boys, the thought would come up: "If it is true, it is a pretty good thing." Now I have found that it is true. We do return to earth just when we wish to, but we cannot make our friends know we are present.

How hard it was to them when they learned of my passing out in Andersonville Prison. I cannot tell you what I suffered; it is impossible. I need not say I was glad to be freed from the mortal bones. The one who had charge of the prison has also passed over, and I have met him in spirit-life. He also suffered much before he came to spirit-life, and has suffered doubly since, for he had it in his power to do differently by the boys in blue. I don't like to recall those times, because of the dear ones who are left, who have never known how much Edwin suffered—and, thank God, they never will know.

It has been told me that by coming here and speaking a few words it would give me strength, and also enable me to give proof of the life beyond, where, I am glad to say, all that we need is provided for us, without money and without price.

When the country called us out, my dear mother felt she could not let her boy go, but I said: "The boys are going, and I must go." I have never regretted giving my whole life to my country. I went from Stowe, Vt. Some of my relatives are yet left. Although nearly a quarter of a century has passed since that time, yet it seems only like a few months to us, so quickly does the time flit away. My name is Edwin W. Havens.

James Gould.

God bless the soldier boys who helped to save the country. When I see one coming in spirit form to speak, I will do all I can to help him. When I heard the young man speaking, I remembered him as having been connected in the same surroundings, or nearly so, as myself; and not only him, but many others that we would call young boys, who were called out.

Now I have a word to say to Sarah in the home. Paulina is with me, and wishes to be remembered to the dear ones at home. Millie is here, too, and we all send greetings. I know I shall be remembered. I lived in Duxbury, Vt., not far from where the young man went from. I would ask them at home to see if they cannot find, by sitting by themselves, that we keep our promises and give out some manifestations to them. We cannot always do it, but we try to do it, and will endeavor to make some sounds which they may know are not made by mortals.

Oh! how grand it is to feel you are not forgotten. I have often stepped into the meetings, and even into the halls, thinking perhaps some dear one might be there and I could give them an assurance of my presence through some channel. Never yet have I been able to, but I am not going to give it up. I shall still visit the halls, thinking they may speak of us, for there are many who have crossed the boundary. Paulina wishes them to know that only three evenings back she was present. My name is James Gould.

Verification of Spirit-Message.

PAUL DILLINGHAM.

In THE BANNER of Dec. 1st there is in the Message Department a communication from the spirit of PAUL DILLINGHAM, formerly of Pawlet, Vt., which is strictly true, and one of the many positive evidences occurring to-day in proof of the return and communion of our departed friends.

As I am referred to in the message I will state, briefly, the circumstances: I was called to Pawlet to treat the sick, and while there made the acquaintance of this young man and his father. Paul took a decided interest in Spiritualism, and was the prime mover in organizing the first meetings held in the Town Hall at Pawlet. He was a thorough and active Spiritualist, and therefore I felt very much interested in him as an earnest worker in the field of spiritual reform.

Shortly after my last interview with him I was pained to learn of his sudden illness, and departure to higher scenes. Later in the fall of 1884, I think, Edgar W. Emerson appeared before the Society in this city, and among the many tests given through his organism in the evening was the following: "There comes walking in here the spirit of a young man. He is active and quick in his movements, and is looking through the audience to see if there is any one here he knew; he now moves over to where Mr. Vosburgh sits, and says, 'Doctor, you know me; my name is Paul Dillingham, of Pawlet, Vt.' I replied, 'Yes.' 'Well,' he said, 'Vosburgh, I want you to be kind enough to write my father, and tell him of my return to you. My father is very much weighed down and unreconciled over my departure, and I fear unless something is done to avert it he will follow me soon. Tell him, Vosburgh, that I want him to go right on with his business, that I am still with him, and will continue to aid and assist him. Tell him I still live, and want him to rise from his gloom, and accomplish his work, and in a few short years we shall be reunited again.'"

I wrote him as directed, and the effect was to reconcile the father's mind. Now this spirit son returns again through Mrs. Smith at the Banner of Light Circle-Room, and gives thanks for the kindness done him. I will state that I never met Mrs. Smith, and, further, know Mr. Paul Dillingham never met Mr. Emerson while in the body; therefore neither of them ever knew anything of the above facts.

Very respectfully yours,

W. H. VOSBURGH, Magnetic Physician.

THE KING OF THE GOLDEN RIVER; or, The Black Brothers. A Legend of Stiria. By John Ruskin, M. A. Illustrated by Richard Doyle. Sq. 16mo, cloth, pp. 68. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

The name of the famous art critic as the author and of the equally famous artist as the designer of its illustration guarantee an excellence for this fairy story that will commend it as a gift book for youth. It was written in 1841, at the request of a young lady, solely for her amusement, without any thought of its reaching the public; now that it has done so, at the suggestion of one in whose possession the manuscript for a long time rested, it is finding a large circle of admiring readers.

THE STORIES MOTHER NATURE TOLD HER CHILDREN. By Jane Andrews, author of "Seven Little Sisters." 16mo, cloth, pp. 161, illustrated. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

The youngest of children will be interested in these stories, and from them will obtain instruction in natural history they will never fail to remember. They relate to "Amber Beads," "Sea-Life," "What the Frost Giants Did," "Sixty-Two Little Tadpoles," "The Under World," "A Peep Into One of God's Storehouses," etc.

LITTLE MISS "WEEZY'S" BROTHER. By Penn Shirley. 16mo, cloth, pp, 154. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

A baker's dozen of attractive short stories, abounding with smart sayings, and describing cute ways and funny adventures, for young children.

KATHLEEN. A Charming Love Story. By Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett. 12mo, paper, pp. 212. Philadelphia: T. B. Peterson & Bros.

One of the earliest written and best of the talented author's stories. It is included in the publishers' twenty-five cent series of popular novels.

A CHEAP HEKTOGRAPH.—A German method of making a convenient and inexpensive hektograph consists in soaking four parts of best white glue in a mixture of five parts pure water and three of ammonia, until the glue is thoroughly softened; this is warmed until the glue is dissolved, when three parts of granulated sugar and eight of glycerine are added, this being then well stirred, and allowed to come to the boiling point. While hot, it is painted upon clean, white blotting paper, with a broad copying brush, until the blotting paper is thoroughly soaked, and a thin coating remains on the surface; after drying for two or three days it is ready for use.

The writing or drawing to be copied is done with ordinary hektograph or aniline ink upon writing paper; before transferring to the blotting paper, the latter is wet with a sponge or copying-brush and clean water, and allowed to stand one or two minutes, after which the written side is placed down, and any air bubbles stroked out, the whole being now submitted to gentle pressure for a few moments, and, on removing the written paper, a number of impressions can be taken in the ordinary way; when the impressions begin to grow weak, the surface of the hektograph is wet again. No washing off is required, but simply laying away for thirty-six hours.

Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, of England, declares that it is sufficient to constitute conspiracy if two or more persons combine by fraud or false pretences to injure another, and that it is not necessary in order to constitute conspiracy that the acts agreed to be done should be acts which if done would be criminal; but that it is enough if the acts agreed to be done, although not criminal, are wrongful, namely, amounting to a civil wrong.

THE LION OF THE NILE.

A MYSTERY OF CHAMPIONSHIP.

Whelped on the desert sands, and desert-bred
From dugs whose sustenance was blood alone—
A life translated out of other lives,
I grew the king of beasts; the hurricane
Leaned like a feather on my royal fell;
I took the Hyrcan tiger by the scruff
And tore him piecemeal; my hot entrails laughed,
And my fangs yearned for prey. Earth was my lair;
I slept in her waste places without fear;
I roamed the jungle depths with less design
Than e'en to lord their solitude; on crags
That cringe from lightning—black and blasted fronts
That crouch beneath the wind-bleared stars, I told
My heart's fruition to the universe,
And all night long, roaring my fierce defy,
I thrilled the wilderness with aspen terrors,
And challenged death and life.
Still near to man—
For to his miracles and teeming proofs
I felt my presence kindred—'round his homes
In the hushed dusk I prowled, and harmed him not...
I came by night to where Cephrenes' slaves
Had left their tools, building his pyramid—
The deposition of immortal longings
Against the fate of change—not less of those
Who served the guiding mind and found therein
Their own accomplishment.... I saw red lights,
And horses numberless—the world was won!
The world was late: Hephæstion he was dead,
And stars regretful crossed the revelry
Of Alexander, drunk in Babylon.

Hid in the musky shadows, above Thebes,
I heard the stoutest of the truculent three
To whom the knives of Brutus and the rest
Triparted Cæsar's world, with Ptolemy's daughter
At midnight on the low and loitering Nile,
Cry "Kiss me, Egypt!" there beneath the stars—
And cry "All else is but an interlude
To the great play of Love!" I heard her gibing:
"She smiled—Octavio, when you told her this?"
The fighter bit his lip: "Thou namest our wife
And Cæsar's sister: less we wish her not,
Nor will not for the earth—nay, not for thee!"—
I might have sprung upon them as they passed,
Yet would not, but the low and luted waves
And amaranth boughs to the far Nubian hills
Resounded the uproar of my approval;
A shout replied, lights gleamed, and hurrying feet
Romped the low deck, urging the barge ashore.
I lingered, for the spell was on my being;
A horse charged on me, and a barbed spear
Stung in my flank; I leaped on the tame brute
And clutched him quivering till he fell and died,
Entranced as of the greatness that effaced him;
Then, with my fore foot spurning, back I glared
(While all the sprites of Art took note of me),
Till a quick shaft out of the fated hand
Pierced eye and brain, and, all my sense confused,
I breathed my heedless force into the ground—
Yet not, at last, until the cygnus down
Of a queen's palm lay soothing on my side,
And a queen's lips had sighed reproachfully,
"Were I Antonius I could name a name!"—
"Julius!" he murmured; and they mused apart.

Aye—I had many names, and many forms.
'T was I that, upright, helmed in beaten brass—
My beard half-reft, plucked of my trenchant claws,
And in their stead a weltering cut-and-thrust,
Strode through Coriolì gates and heard them clang
Between me and all aid—one taunt I breathed
Toward Tiber's spawn without, who failed my leading,
Then single-handed fenced the Volces back,
And cut my way to Rome. And other time:
Human I stood upon the raked arena
Beneath the pennants of Vespasian,
While serried thousands gazed—strangers from Caucasus,
Men of the Grecian Isles, and Barbary princes,
Who saw not that I fought the counterpart
Of that I had been—the raptorial jaws,
The arms that wont to crush with strength alone,
The eyes that glared vindictive. Fallen there,
Vast wings upbore me; from the treacherous peaks
Whose avalanches swirl the valley mist
And whelm the Alpine cottage, to the crown
Of Chimborazo, on whose changeless jewels
The torrid rays recoil with ne'er a cloud
To swathe their blistered steps, I rested not,
But preyed on all that ventured from the earth,
An outlaw of the heavens. But evermore
Would death release me to the jungle shades,
And there came forth my Samson locks again
In the old walks and ways, till 'scapeless fate
Won me as ever to the haunts of men,
Luring my lives with battle and with love.

Was that in dream? Nay, rather this the dream:
That these of ancient heart and widest mold,
And deepest life and patience, now conspire
To make this reminiscent verse a phase
Of the world's championship. Let be what may.
The gods are dreary as the worshipers;
As the wide cycles tire they too have changed.
Faint 'neath its newest garb of charity
Flutters the heart divine in these last years.
And lo the purple trails, and justice stoops
To mercy weaker than the sin forgiven;
Yet the patrician pride, the red disdain
Self-sustenant—more gracious in its scorning
Than e'er, alas! Christ-love in piteous tears.
Remembers me on the Judean banners,
O'er lands Levanthe rampant without peer:
The shuddering wilds grew firm; the haggard cliffs,
Where conscience flings her troubled victims down,
Caught peace from my sane eyes; e'en vulgar life,
That knows no other beast, was great through me.

And still my worship lives in longing hearts.
Human or brute or bird—for these are one
In love and longing, as my sphinxes know
That couch beside the brooding of the river.
Many are the altars, but the flame is one,
Of every hell the misery is fear,
And every heaven is mockery but mine.

Is thy tongue blunter than the Spartan mob's—
Thy thick breast-muscle hungry for hot blows?
Feelest thou in crowds the catamountain crouch
That longs to leap among the heads o' the throng,
Or worst thy way through threatening contumely?
Doth thy pulse, rushing through the pose of Ajax,
Confront the lurid blood of the strong gods
As one with them at last—and one with Him,
The longest wing in heaven, the deepest crown,
Who, ever vanquished, fighting as he falls,
Still proves himself immortal with the good?
Lo! It is I—the Lion of the Nile:
The mystery of the winged human brute
Couchant—the CHAMPION spirit of the world.

Miss Addie Herndon, of Erin, Tenn., dreamed recently of digging up $560 in gold, and the next day she went to the place visited in the dream, and did it in fact.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Springfield, Mass., Dec. 9th, Elisha Stocking, Esq., aged 89 years.

Mr. Stocking was a pronounced Spiritualist, being converted soon after the commencement of the Rochester knockings, and was universally respected by all who have ever known him. He resided in Springfield all his life, and in the house where he died for nearly sixty years. He leaves a wife, whose strong trust in the angel-world will help her during the remaining years of earth-life, and a brother, Alexander Stocking, of Worcester. A large number of friends attended the funeral service, which was conducted by the guides of the writer.

JOHN WILLIAM FLETCHER.

From Stoneham, Mass., Nov. 26th, Mrs. Rebecca P. Binsley, (widow of the late Austin Binsley of Auburn, Me.,) aged 81 years 6 months and 20 days.

Her earthly form was taken to her former home for burial. She was one of the first members of the "Ladies' Union Circle," and for many years had found a solace in Spiritualism. Although deprived of her sight for the past three years, she was tenderly cared for, and her last days were made as comfortable and happy as affection and kindness could render them. She leaves near relatives and many friends, by whom she will long be remembered. Funeral at the residence of her brother, Thomas Howard.

From Augusta, Me., Oct. 8th, Fred A. Waterman, aged 36 years and 11 months.

He leaves a wife and child, father and mother, who are sustained by a strength imparted by a confidence in Spiritualism, and who expect to meet him again in a fairer country and under better conditions. The body was taken to East Auburn, his former home, the funeral service being held at the residence of the wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. Hall, who also find consolation in spirit communion. May its light broaden, until all the world shall feel its warmth.

East Turner, Me. MRS. L. M. LEAVITT.

From New London, Ct., George H. Dart, in the 69th year of his age.

Mr. Dart was a public man in New London for many years. He was a strong advocate of the Spiritual Philosophy, and in his long and lingering illness his faith wavered not. That he was an esteemed friend, a loved companion and one who held the respect of all was evident by the character of the people who came to pay their last respects at his funeral. The services were held in the Universalist church—Mrs. R. S. Lillie officiating. H. P. M.

The Writing Planchette.
SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.
DIRECTIONS. Place Planchette on a piece of paper, printing or writing will answer, then place the hand lightly on the board. In a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.
The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.
PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.
NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES. Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES can not be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

The Boston Spiritual Temple—Berkeley Hall.—Last Sunday morning the guides of Mrs. Luther discoursed to a large and attentive audience upon "The Moral Unfoldment of the Human Spirit, and the Several Spheres of Spirit-Life." For many ages an element had prevailed on earth to such an extent that philosophers were not surprised when Spiritualism came. Had its coming been ushered in by scientific people it would have been more readily accepted. Around you is the great spiritual realm. That you live in individual forms, and that all space is filled with matter, are established facts. Not all spirits who leave this life stop in the first sphere they reach. When you go from the physical body you take just what you spiritually possess.

The second sphere, calling this life the first, is a sphere of divested burdens. In the third sphere there are different conditions. When you reach it you become divested of burdens, and meet with refined intellects. It is a sphere of unfoldment, or sanitary sphere. We cannot enter higher spheres unless we divest ourselves of crudities, and this is not always done in a decade of time.

In the sanitary sphere you are treated by people who know what they are about; treated by love, you will acquire conditions in harmony with your unfoldment.

Evening.—Continuing the subject of the morning the speaker said: I feel your doubts, your demands, your desires for more knowledge regarding the moral and intellectual development of the spirit. Having passed from the third sphere, sociability demands the highest relations in the next.

The fourth sphere is educational. Here science is illustrated; no matter what we have previously studied, here we are students. This is the great sphere of life, where we must investigate on and on. The science of culture beckons us forward; everything here pertains to advanced education. The world here is beautiful. Here are the great chemical schools, the great laboratories. It costs something for a spirit to come from this fourth sphere to mingle in the scenes of life on earth.

The next or fifth sphere is the highest from which spirits have returned to earth. Thomas Paine is an occupant of the fifth sphere; he was a scholar and grew rapidly.

The guides of Mrs. Luther will speak next Sunday, morning and evening. Subject will be announced in the secular papers of Saturday. The Ladies' Industrial Union connected with this organization meets every Tuesday afternoon and evening at Room No. 4, Berkeley Hall Building. All friends are invited.

O. L. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Good audiences were present on Sunday last, and the spirit intelligences were warmly welcomed. The afternoon session opened with "Something Sweet to Think Of," finely sung by Mrs. Mary Nickerson—Prof. Willis Milligan accompanist.

After an invocation by Mrs. C. F. Loring, the President spoke of the friendships formed in these meetings, with the hope that they might last through life, to be more enduring in the great hereafter. Mrs. Loring was then introduced as the first speaker, and discoursed upon "Spirit Return." In the course of the address her control gave his experience when passing into the life beyond: First a mist seemed to cover everything, then, slowly but surely, over the mortal body arose a vapor, which became thinner and thinner as it passed from the mortal form, finally partaking of the present spirit-form and surrounded by faces well known when in the earth-life, only separated from the worn-out body; saw the friends around the mortal body when the last sad rites were being performed; was conscious of the tears shed, the kisses given the inanimate face, yet unable to make the presence known. Now the desire to reach these loved ones permeates every spirit, and there are many around us who have reached that higher life. We are, indeed, as much in the spirit-world as we shall ever be, and could the thin veil be removed we should know and be known, and our lives would run parallel with the lives of those whom we call dead, making the world better and better as the days go by. Friends here are not alone, but are constantly accompanied by friends who are upon the other side. May the pathway of the spirit-world be made plain, and may we realize that its occupants are cognizant of our joys and sorrows, and would come into our lives if we would open the door.

Miss Mabel Walt, from the Children's Lyceum, then sang, very sweetly, "There's a Light in the Window for Thee."

Dr. W. S. Eldridge then took the platform, and remarked that if there was any one book of the Bible which he read and pondered upon more than another it was the Book of Job, where certain persons desired to render comfort to the afflicted man of Uz: his desire had also ever been to give comfort to the living. He then gave diagnoses of diseases for several persons in the audience, which were pronounced to be correct

Miss Emma Russell gave a recitation, which was very fine.

Mrs. Chandler was then presented to the audience, and after giving thanks to Spiritualists who had sent out their best thoughts and wishes to assist herself and other mediums in their work, her controls presented some very fine tests of spirit presence, which were recognized. One control remarked that there had been a mighty change in human thought during the last half century: woman's work had been received, and her power felt for good, as was not possible for it to have been fifty years ago. As we grow and expand our natures by the law of progression, so shall we live more in harmony, and receive more and more from the spirit-world.

Mrs. Loring again took the platform, and described many spirit-friends, convincing all present of the truth of spirit-return.

The evening session opened with singing by Mrs. Nickerson.

Mrs. Lovering gave some very remarkable tests to several persons in the audience which were recognized.

Mrs. T. J. Lewis was then introduced and said that Spiritualism was the grandest religion ever given to humanity. We speak from knowledge, and not upon faith or in accordance with any church creed. Several names of spirit friends were given, and among them George W. White and Willie Morgan who desired recognition. Doctor John Morgan, lately of Somerville, also made himself known and was recognized.

Mrs. Loomis-Hall, under control, gave several psychometric readings from articles handed her by persons who were strangers and most of them skeptics—which were generally recognized.

Dr. Eldridge gave several descriptions of disease that were pronounced correct, and the meeting closed with "Shall We Gather at the River?"

Mrs. Bagley and other well-known talent will occupy the platform next Sunday; and the Sunday following Mr. Edgar W. Emerson will be present, followed by Mrs. Ada Foye of California, so well known and remembered. The usual test circle Thursday evening. All invited.

HEATH.

Independent Club—Berkeley Hall.—The usual exercises were carried out on Friday. At 2 P. M. Mrs. J. W. Fletcher lectured upon "Spiritualism vs. Christianity," in which the salient points of difference were clearly portrayed; as the advantage of knowledge over faith, the expansive teaching of eternal progress as compared with the theory of special judgment and damnation, etc.

The usual tea followed, and in the evening divers ones assisted in carrying out an interesting programme, including Dr. Street in forcible remarks, Capt. Holmes, Miss Emma Mckerson and the Grand Master.

Next Friday afternoon Mr. Fletcher will lecture upon "Obsession," and all are invited.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 16th, Mrs. Colby-Luther delivered a powerful and comprehensive discourse upon "Thomas Paine."

Thomas Paine, said the lecturer, was connected with the thought of one hundred years ago, and his wonderful utterances have stood the test against all antagonism, error, superstition and bigotry. He gave to the country all the powers of liberty. He was not the originator of liberty or of infidelity. We could go back to the Grecian philosophers, who declared against angry gods, fighting devils, and everlasting punishment. Other great liberal minds followed, Socrates, Byron, Burns, Voltaire, Franklin and Lincoln. All uttered the same sound, and it forced its way through the corridors of thought. Man's reason had become the bulwark against religious and political bigotry.

He belonged to no age—all along the ages the progress of civilization was marked by the thought of this great man. He wrote in defense of morality, of loyalty to justice, of fealty to human rights, and all his thought was in the direction of the unfoldment of society. The history of Thomas Paine and his literature was pregnant with thought. The American people had to thank him for political principles and religious ideas of the most wonderful character. I believe that the Declaration of Independence originated with him, and not with Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Paine saw into the future, realized the power of justice, truth and honor, saw the claims of woman, and his aspiration quickened into life and being a mighty nation.

He proclaimed liberty for all the world, and it is having its effect to-day. His voice did more to give America its liberty than even the sword of Washington. He fought bravely against the powers of aristocracy in religion and politics. He was head and shoulders above the church and the authorities of his age.

If it were possible to sweep away the truth proclaimed by Thomas Paine, and the thought he engrafted in the literature of the nation, we should go back to the times of the Inquisition, and all Liberty and Truth would be overthrown in the land.

Mrs. Luther lectures again next Sunday, the subject being "Spiritualism as a Warfare."

F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—On Sunday, Dec. 16th, Lyman C. Howe spoke on eleven subjects presented by the audience, the most important being, "What is Spiritualism, what is it to be a Spiritualist, and what may be expected of one?" "What about an animal or lower spontaneity in contradistinction to the higher intuitions? How may we become unconsciously attractive and salutary? What about the influence of sacred music?" Ans.—Spiritualism is the conception of spirit as the source of all substance and all phenomena. In a special sense it is the recognized immortality of man and established communication between the denizens of earth and excarnate souls. It embodies the science of life and the highest concept of religion. To be a Spiritualist theoretically is to believe in such communion. To be a practical Spiritualist is to live the moral teachings and spiritualize the individual character. Few as yet exemplify the religion of Spiritualism; but this may be expected of every Spiritualist when time and discipline have done their perfect work under the tutelage of the angels.

Animal spontaneity is the primary phase of the higher intuition. The instinct of hunger and thirst that prompts to effort to supply the demand for the body is akin to the "thirst after righteousness," which inspires to moral effort. The hunger of the heart is higher and deeper than the cravings for physical food, and the desire that seeks a supply is as natural and spontaneous in the spiritual as in the physical instinct. When we become habitually pure, gentle, generous and just, by continual conscious effort and self-discipline, we shall naturally and unconsciously represent these attractive qualities both in habitual conduct and the sweet aura distilled from the secret laboratories of a cultivated character; and this can be nothing less than salutary to all who come within the personal sphere and share the inspirations of a life thus sanctified. Sacred music, by its subdued and tender appeals, impresses and inspires the superior faculties, and softens emotion into loveful reverence and spiritual susceptibility.

Mr. Howe speaks at the Temple again next Sunday, Dec. 23d, at 2:45 P. M., which closes his present engagement in Boston.

America Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were held here Sunday last, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. Unusually large and interested audiences were in attendance both afternoon and evening. The Chairman, Thomas Beals, of Portland, Me., Jacob Edson, Mrs. I. E. Downing, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Dr. C. H. Harding and Dr. Eldridge presented remarks which were deeply appreciated by their hearers. The brief address of Bro. Beals was well received, and it is the sincere wish that this veteran from the "Pine Tree State" may, in the near future, be with us again.

Excellent and recognized tests and spirit delineations were given through the organisms of Mrs. Downing, Miss Holt, Dr. Harding, Mrs. Wilkins, Mrs. Conant, Dr. Eldridge, Mrs. Rich, and Dr. Hale. The fine music rendered by Miss Kimball, pianist, and Dr. Hale, organist, added much to the harmonious influence which was prevalent throughout the day. Next Sunday Eugenia Richardson Bunnell will be present, with other good speakers and test mediums.

M. M. HOLT.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall.—Last Sunday the exercises of the morning consisted of readings by Gracie Scales, Mark Abrams, Alice Cummings, Annie Frank, Bertha Engler and Lillian Rich. Singing by the whole school and instrumental selections by the orchestra.

Next week we hope to give an extended report of the Fair, with names of Boston contributors. It was a success.

The Sewing-Circle connected with the Lyceum meets every Wednesday afternoon and evening at 1031 Washington street, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to attend. No admission fee is charged. Supper is served at 6 P. M. for the moderate charge of fifteen cents. When we say that this department is under the management of Mrs. S. J. Peters, a veteran in Lyceum work, it is understood that it will give full satisfaction to all.

H. O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The three services last Sunday were well attended throughout the day, and were very harmonious and interesting. The afternoon exercises were opened by the guides of Dr. Drisko. Subject "The Beauties of Spiritualism"; he was followed by David Brown, Mrs. Nellie Thomas, Mrs. Burbeck, Dr. Mathews, Mrs. Lewis and Miss Knox with remarks and tests which were well received. The evening exercises were opened by Mrs. Milligan, who stated that she had been converted to Spiritualism in Eagle Hall in the afternoon by a test from her spirit husband, and said she felt it her duty to proclaim it before the world. Dr. Mathews, Mrs. Burbeck and Mrs. Conant also participated in remarks and tests. Mrs. Dr. Bunnell for the first time on a Boston platform diagnosed diseases; all were acknowledged to be correct.

F. W. M.

The Ladies' Industrial Society of the Boston Spiritual Temple held its regular meeting on the evening of Dec. 11th. A circle was formed, and Dr. Street explained the method of development for independent slate-writing, trying some interesting experiments, after which the guides of Emma J. Nickerson controlled.

After several interesting manifestations from Mrs. Mellen and others, the meeting adjourned with music, to visit the Lyceum Fair and pay respects to Mrs. W. S. Butler. A social hour of profit followed, when all said "good-night." EMMA J. NICKERSON, Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The three services held at this place on Sunday, Dec. 16th, were well attended, and of marked interest. In the morning, after the singing, Eben Cobb, manager of the meetings, ably considered the relations of the soul and mind. Miss Peabody followed with some fine tests—also Mrs. Chandler; Mrs. Forester, Dr. Eldridge, Mrs. Conant, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Downing, Mrs. Shackley and others spoke and gave readings and tests in a successful manner. The services were varied and gave satisfaction to all present.

Chelsea.—Sunday, Dec. 23d, Miss Emma J. Nickerson will speak and give tests at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M.

Worcester, Mass.—Dr. Geo. A. Fuller again addressed our Association on Sunday, the 16th inst. His subject in the afternoon was "The Religion of the Future." Dr. Fuller called the attention of his audience to some of the highest thoughts from the various religions of the past as contributions to the future religion of the world, and of which, also, the Spiritual Philosophy would be an important part. In the evening he took his subjects from the audience, the principal one being "Can a Man be a 'Christian Spiritualist?'" For himself he preferred the word "Spiritualist," without any adjective to qualify it. Let it stand alone, without qualification, as embracing the highest and broadest ideas of the Spiritual Philosophy. Dr. Fuller carries with him to his new field of labor in the Southwest the best wishes of his many Worcester friends.

S.

Fitchburg, Mass.—Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock, of Boston, has been with the First Spiritualist Society meeting in G. A. R. Hall, the past two Sundays. Her lectures were of a high moral and intellectual standard, and her readings were almost without exception correct, and afforded good satisfaction. [Mrs. Whitlock was to give this Society a benefit on Tuesday evening, Dec. 18th.] Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes is to be with us the 23d and 30th.

A General Conference will be held Monday evening of each week at 230 West 36th street, at the residence of Mrs. M. C. Morrell.

The First Society of Spiritualists.—Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham discoursed in the morning upon the following subjects given by the audience: "A Curse; is it as effective as we read it is?" "The Triumph of Truth." "Is the Orthodox religion as now taught and understood by its votaries, detrimental to human progress, or otherwise?" "What is the method of rectification between those who are ill-born and those who are well-born here?" "Is there not at least a lifetime lost in refinement and personal comfort to those who are born in very humble conditions and who do not succeed in rising above them?" Remarking upon the first question the speaker said: "A curse is the utterance of anger or hatred. It is effective to a certain extent, but the greater part of the injury is inflicted upon the person who curses. If we think good and pure thoughts we are protected against the curses of others. The Orthodox religion is of use so long as it helps and comforts a single soul; until it fetters the thought of a person it is of use to him. Those who are ill-born are learning their lessons of life. Many whom the world look upon as evil are laying up pearls in heaven by their failures. God looks at the attempt and not at the failure. We should look with contempt upon no one, however low or degrading he may seem. Mrs. Brigham improvised several poems after the lecture.

There was a large attendance at the Meeting for Manifestations in the afternoon. The exercises were piano solo by Miss Ella F. Porter, song by Miss Lilly Runals, whistling solos by Miss Mamie Horton. Applause followed each piece, showing that the largely increasing audiences appreciated the musical talent employed by the Society. Mr. Henry J. Newton spoke of other attractions that would soon be added. M. M. Pomeroy is doing a good work for Spiritualism. He is one of nature's noblemen, and prides himself on being a Spiritualist. His discourse on "The Mistakes of Spiritualists" to-day was the best of the season. Broad, deep and progressive, it was listened to with the greatest interest, and opened a new field of thought. It alluded to harmony as an essential to mental and physical growth, and showed where Spiritualists make mistakes in joining privately to cavil or to quarrel, to answer attacks, to engage in discussions, or to doubt the outcome and outgrowth of their God.

Next Sunday afternoon he speaks on the "Benefits of Spiritualism." Mrs. Brigham lectures morning and evening; speaking in the morning on subjects given by the audience, and in the evening on one by her guides.

New York, Dec. 16th, 1888.

The People's Spiritual Meeting.—Quite a revival of interest was experienced in our pleasant little Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, on the 16th inst. The harmonious and kindly feeling which was manifest throughout both sessions was quite marked, and rendered the sensitives more susceptible to spirit impressions than is usual in promiscuous gatherings. As the afternoon session is usually given almost entirely to the mediums and their spirit-bands, the invisibles generally manifest themselves through their willing coöperators. Mrs. L. Fox gave several good tests of spirit presence; Mr. Hamilton, Miss Viel, F. W. Jones and others, profitably filled up the time of the afternoon session.

The topic of the evening was "To What Extent do Spirits Interfere in our Earthly Affairs?" Mr. J. F. Snipes led the speaking by a short address, and was followed by Mrs. Goodwin, Dr. Henry Slade, Mrs. Daniels, Mrs. Morrell, Miss Viel and others.

Mr. Wm. C. Bowen will be the speaker for next Sunday afternoon, followed by a mediums' séance, and in the evening Dr. Henry Slade will give a narrative of his trip to South America.

F. W. JONES.
230 W. 36th street, New York, Dec. 17th, 1888.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

As an evidence of their appreciation of the devotion of Mrs. Effie Moss to the duties that her mediumship imposes upon her, and of her honesty and singleness of purpose in the strict obedience she yields to her spirit band in the discharge of those duties, a few of her friends united in purchasing for her séance-room a fine cabinet organ, and a few days since had it sent to her rooms, at 265 West 38th street.

This generous act on the part of her friends was highly appreciated by Mrs. Moss, and also by the spirits who act as her guides, and those who come via her cabinet to meet their friends; for heretofore there has been no instrumental music at her séances, and the singing could not be classed as artistic.

On last Sunday evening Mrs. Morrison presided at the organ, and as all the voices that joined in the singing proved to be harmonious, the music was appreciated both by the spirits and mortals present as a great improvement upon what had been heretofore provided.

The séance was good throughout. Many forms were presented, and, as is usual at her séances, they remained and conversed for some time. One feature of the evening was the coming from the cabinet of a lad, apparently about ten years of age, clad in a Knickerbocker suit, who gave his name as George, and came to his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Morrison. While he was out, "Lillie," the child control of Mrs. Moss, was talking, and was asked if she could not come with George. "Of course I can," said she, and soon they both came out together, clasping hands, she apparently a little girl of about five years; and there they stood for some time, both talking to us. It was a very pretty as well as convincing manifestation.

Earnest seekers for this phase of the phenomena will find Mrs. Moss's séance-room a good place to visit. Her séance evenings are Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, and Friday afternoon.

Mr. Baxter in Western New York.—On Sunday, Dec. 9th, J. Frank Baxter continued his successful work in Buffalo, N. Y., the house being inadequate to seat the many who sought entrance in the evening. The lecture of the afternoon recounted wonderful experiences, replete with interest, and, accompanied by Mr. Baxter's running comments, made very effective results. The address of the evening placed the church tête-à-tête with Modern Spiritualism; everybody—and most were non-Spiritualists—was surprised with the power of argument and apt illustration from Bible and present history. For an hour after the lecture the audience sat, seemingly in reverent silence, as description of spirit followed description.

On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, Dec. 11th, 12th and 13th, Mr. Baxter again appeared in Lockport, N. Y., and was greeted with select and good-sized houses. Several lawyers and doctors and one minister were conspicuous, and at the close declared forcibly in Mr. Baxter's favor. Certainly the lectures given, the songs rendered and the mediumship exercised, gave intense interest and puzzled scholars. The daily papers, unsolicited, gave extended and favorable accounts of the proceedings, and earnestly recommended Mr. Baxter's matter and mediumship as worthy the attention of the thoughtful and fastidious.

On Friday evening, Dec. 14th, Mr. Baxter gave a brilliant entertainment of songs and readings, in the "Library Hall" of the Mechanics' Institute in Buffalo. It was given gratuitously for the benefit of the management maintaining spiritual meetings in the city.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday was a very interesting occasion to the First Spiritualist Association worshiping in Brittan Hall, and large audiences were in attendance. The speaker was Mrs. M. Louise Chase, of Merrimacport, formerly of Charleston, S. C., who then appeared for the first time as a public speaker. It is some time since her mediumistic gifts were developed, since which she has been before private circles and gatherings, giving great satisfaction. As yet she has given only short addresses, which were concise, intelligent and interesting. The platform tests and messages from spirits in her presence are very interesting and convincing, and a large number were given, both afternoon and evening. Mrs. Chase is a medium of much promise, and her advent upon the Brittan Hall platform was a fine success. This is the second new medium to whom the Brittan Hall Spiritualists have extended a welcome hand in their entrance upon public work in this, among the noblest of all causes.——Next Sunday the platform will be occupied by Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester, of West Randolph, Vt.

Haverhill, Dec. 17th, 1888.

New Haven, Ct.—John E. Schoepflin, President of the First Spiritualist Society, writes us that though from various reasons the work for advancing the cause in New Haven has been arduous, he is not discouraged but rather inspirited by the results attained to. On the evening of Dec. 16th the meeting was well patronized—twenty mediums being present among those in attendance: "We have our circles Sunday and Wednesday evenings, and conference Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock, at No. 148 Orange street. Any mediums or Spiritualists visiting this city are welcome, as our doors are opened to all."

Gone Home.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

There passed to spirit-life from New York City on Wednesday, Dec. 12th, MR. WILLIAM ROGERS, eldest son of Mr. Rogers of 242 Madison street, where the ascended had been tenderly nursed by wife and parents during the past nine weeks. Mr. Rogers, sr., has had a more than remarkable experience in Spiritualism and mediumship in his own person, as well as with his wife and various members of his family. The son above referred to was also quite a medium, and just previous to his transition gave startling proofs of the presence of our departed friends through his entrancement and clairvoyance. At the time he was taken sick he held a responsible situation in a large factory, and had a number of associates of both sexes under his direction. A very pleasing feature of the funeral exercises was the presence of a large delegation of these young people, who also contributed a very handsome floral device in the form of a broken column surmounted by the usual white dove. The young man's parents have for many years waged a long-continued fight in favor of Spiritualism in their immediate district, in which a large Catholic population predominates, and it was their desire, as also that of their son, that the exercises should be in accordance with the teachings of our philosophy, so that friends and neighbors should see that Spiritualism was equal to even that great trial under which simple faith often succumbs.

The funeral was fixed for eight o'clock on Thursday evening last, at which time the residence of the parents was crowded to suffocation with relatives, friends and neighbors. The writer had been retained to conduct the service, which was performed in his usual simple method: music, a poem, a prayer, and an address under control. The consolations of our facts and teachings, and their applicability to every incident in our lives, were earnestly presented, suitable remarks being applied to the departed, who bore a most estimable character for gentleness, courtesy and honor in every relation of life, as well as to the widow, left with three children, the parents, and other members of the family, and the visitors then present; the service concluding with an appropriate benediction. The concourse then slowly dispersed, and the next day the mortal remains were interred in the Lutheran Cemetery on Long Island, at the desire of an aunt of the widow.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 15th, 1888.

GEO. H. KEITH passed from mortal life on Saturday morning, Dec. 15th, at his residence 293 Lenox Avenue, New York City, at the age of 48. Modern Spiritualism found in him a valiant and consistent exponent. Endearing himself to a large circle of friends by his qualities of heart and mind, he was preëminently a man of strong affections, while his dislikes were few and tempered by the mercy that only the noble soul contains and extends.

An estimable wife, to whom he was joined twenty-six years ago—after an acquaintance from childhood—with two sons and a daughter and her husband, Fremont Wilson, whom he esteemed as a son, comprise the surviving family, which has ever exemplified the highest type of a happy home.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Miss Emma J. Nickerson closed her engagement with the First Spiritualist Society of this city on Sunday, Dec. 16th, before large and appreciative audiences. The subject of her 2 P. M. lecture was "The Responsibility of Mediumship"; in the evening she spoke upon "True and False Mediumship."

Both lectures were well received, being replete with sound logic.

Joseph D. Stiles will be with us next Sunday.

W. W. CURRIER.

New London, Conn.—On Wednesday evening, Dec. 12th, Mrs. R. S. Lillie spoke for the first time before a New London audience—when she addressed the Spiritualist Society in Pierpont Hall. A large gathering of the friends greeted her. Mr. Lillie very effectively opened the services for the evening with a song: "The Island of Sometime." After an invocation by Mrs. Lillie, and the song: "Childhood Recollections," by Mr. Lillie, questions from the audience were treated by her with an absorbing interest, seldom witnessed.

H. P. M.

Lynn, Mass.—Dec. 16th Prof. George Chainey delivered two lectures entitled: "The World a Living Being," and "Through Day to Night, and Night to Day," both of which were full of great thoughts, eloquently presented. Next Sunday we have with us Miss Lucy Barnicoat, the test medium from Boston.

L. S. K.

Philadelphia, Pa.—G. W. Kates and wife attracted an audience that filled Columbia Hall, Sunday evening, Dec. 16th. Mr. Kates gave a lengthy and lucid treatise upon "The Evolution of Spirit." It was a fine effort. Mrs. Kates was, as usual, successful in giving tests.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Gerald Massey gave us a very able and scholarly essay, last Sunday, on "The Historical Jesus." His views were given in good voice, in an impressive manner and in eloquent words.——Mrs. Juliette Yeaw of Leominster is our speaker for next Sunday.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by

MRS. NELLIE J. T. BRIGHAM,

Before the First Society of Spiritualists of New York City, on Sunday Morning, Dec. 2d.

FOUNDED ON SUBJECTS FURNISHED BY THE AUDIENCE.

(Reported for the Banner of Light.)

A correspondent of the BANNER OF LIGHT writing from New York says, "old Spiritualists should grow out of first principles, and adopt and practice advanced teachings." Question. What are the first principles to be rejected and new ones to adopt?

We are often called upon to criticise or explain difficulties and errors in the writings of others, or to explain that which is not always clearly understood. Those who write sometimes take it for granted that those who read will understand the particular standpoint from which they reason. It is true that a correspondent has said old Spiritualists should grow out of first principles, and adopt and practice advanced teachings. To tell you what the writer meant we should have to read his mind, and that would involve some peculiar unfoldment of mediumship which we do not possess, so we cannot tell you exactly what he means, but we will tell you what we mean.

We accept and adopt the idea that old Spiritualists should grow out of first principles, and adopt and practice advanced ones, yet we would not leave the statement in that way; it needs qualification, otherwise it is likely to be misunderstood. What are the first principles, the very first teachings? We mean, of course, of Modern Spiritualism. The first given to the world were some phenomena—the impression of sound without visible cause. The sound was not wonderful because of its volume, but because of the intelligence it revealed. The rap, whether it comes as lightly as the dropping rain of the springtime, or as heavily as it is possible for sound to be, however it may come, is comparatively of no importance unless there is something back of it, that impels it, that makes it worthy of our attention and investigation. There are those in public to-day who, without any deep thought of Spiritualism, reject it, saying it is all exposed; that the world knows what the raps meant, and just how they were produced. But, friends, it is not the tone or volume of a sound, but the intelligence that comes by means of it, giving messages of love and affection, proving to those who do not believe that there is another world, and that those beyond may manifest through it, and give proof of their presence, which is of importance.

You have a letter from a friend. You read that open letter; you do not hear the salutation of your friend, you do not feel the close clasp of the hand, the endearing tone of the voice that is dear to you; it is only a piece of paper with some irregular black lines and marks upon it. How do you know it came from your friend? You do not hear his voice. But you say: "I know by the thought that is expressed; I know by the ideas that are in this letter, by the proofs of the individuality of my friend, that it is from him. I am not deceived, I cannot be, in the letter." But, friends, when from the other world there claims to come a communication to you, the public say you do not hear the voice, you only see the movements that come through the phenomena; it is not from your friends; the phenomena can be explained—at least, some of them can be explained—and all will be in some way. But you say: "It is not that which I have heard in the sound merely, it is not that which I have seen in the motions merely, but it is the intelligence and affection it brings to me from beyond, that tells me I cannot be mistaken in it." So old Spiritualists adopted as their first principle the belief that the man lives after death, and that he lives as himself and not as some one else; and not only that he lives, but that his memory and love will drift him back to you, and that, in suitable ways and under certain favorable conditions, he can communicate with you still. These are the first principles of Spiritualism which led, step by step, to other things. The fountain of communication was concealed, but it had not ceased to flow. They taught that heaven and hell were spiritual conditions; that God was an Infinite Spirit; that the law of love and justice and harmony prevails through the universe, and though it may not blossom to-morrow or in the spring, though it may take decades and centuries, it will bloom sometime and fill out its fruit for every soul. These are first principles.

Spiritualists are taught that just as man leaves this world, morally, intellectually and spiritually, precisely so he will awaken in the spirit-land. He will be no further advanced except in the added experience of dying. And so upon awakening, with a broader horizon, with less clouded perceptions, the soul commences to reach upward and learn to understand itself, and it blossoms and grows and ripens. So the teachings of Spiritualism advance. These are first principles.

Now, friends, though we say old Spiritualists should grow out of first principles, do not misunderstand us. When we say grow out of a thing, we do not mean we should hate or reject it, though it may be no longer valuable to us.

For instance, much in that which is called Christianity has grown out of Paganism—Pagan customs and ideas. But, friends, there was so much nourishment for truth in mythology and Paganism that Christianity gathered it and simply reconstructed it. It grew out of Paganism as man grows out of youth and youth out of childhood and childhood out of infancy. Do you not see that it is bearing forward all that is best, leaving behind all that it needs no longer, not with bitterness and hatred, not with condemnation, but only reasonably and in accordance with the spirit of growth and evolution. Spiritualists may grow out of a church, out of some creed; but, friends, do you suppose that a good one becomes acidulated, as one might say, and utterly bitter in condemning and hating that which he has grown out of? Such a person is not spiritual or reasonable or large in any way. Mark the rose that grows out of the soil. There was nourishment there, which it lifted through its tiny rootlets into the bud and blossom. It unfolds thus from the earth that is beneath it—it grows out of it and is lifted above it. But it is not with scorn or condemnation, rather only the harmony and evenness and beauty of natural progression. And so when a Spiritualist grows out of a church he says, "I hold in my Spiritualism everything true in my old church; everything beautiful in my old religion, I have it yet." When Jesus taught, he grew out of the old Jewish church, but he had in his religion all the good and beautiful and true there was in the Jewish religion. He had grown out of the old, but he carried with him the best and noblest and the truest. So it is that the Spiritualist stands and looks back at old superstitions, the old errors crumbling and dissolving, and says, "These are errors, but they concern me no more than the dead leaves of the tree concern the tree when it is green and fresh and bright with the mantle that June has bestowed upon it."

So, friends, we believe that a Spiritualist, an old Spiritualist, as you would say, will rejoice in and love and retain all that is best and most practical in all the past religions, and receive all the nourishment he can from the old as he grows out of it, just as the rose grows out of the bud, just as this beautiful day has grown out of the early morning with all its promise of rose and gray blended together. Thus when we look upon the faith of a Spiritualist we will never ignore the true in the phenomena; we will always recognize the good in the phenomena of Spiritualism and in the physical manifestations, sifted and separated from delusion and wrong. When we look at them we will see the lower rounds of the ladder of progress reaching to the higher truths, to the grander unfoldment of spiritual conditions. When we know that we are spirits, that we will live in eternity, that we shall never die, then we turn and say, Let us make life beautiful; let us adorn it with all that is lovely, all that is noble, for only the good, the pure and the true are eternally beautiful. Since we are not to die, let us make life so beautiful that any one shall find the answer to the question, "Is life worth living?"

When you have climbed above the lower rounds of the ladder it does not mean that you should remove them or say to others, "Take one bound and stand with us." Remember that we learn little by little. Spiritualism is not to be held merely as a beautiful theory, a dream of grace and loveliness; but it is first the bud, out of which the higher blossom shall come, and the fruit shall grow and ripen.

In what condition upon entering the spirit-world is a man who has committed premeditated murder?

A person whose nature has been so disordered, so dissolute, a person whose nature is so depraved and hardened as to commit murder cannot find himself in peace and happiness by thinking that he has been saved by the blood of the Lamb. If in any man or woman the spirit of hate finds lodgment; if in your lives a desire to injure another takes root and grows until it blossoms and has its fruitage in that which is baseness, why, friends, the evil deed that springs from the evil thought is natural enough. But the injury that is done, the world says, is done to the victim—the injury is inflicted upon the murdered man—or on the friends who loved him, and who suffer a grief that is deep down in the heart. The injury is partly to one who is so suddenly and unwillingly sent from this world into the world that lies beyond before the lessons here have been learned; but the injury lies deepest, and darkest, and saddest upon the one who inflicts it. So one who does murder enters into our land in darkness, his nature bound and fettered by the bonds of hate, all discordant, all full of those tones that make the music of life impossible until this state shall have been passed.

Now in this mental disquietude, in this anguish—the overwhelming, unutterable anguish of regret, which deepens as consciousness awakens—no soul can remain constantly. He must suffer, and in suffering for the wrong he has done he will begin to improve. If you take an ivory ball and throw it upon some hard substance it will rebound. There is in the ball the great power of elasticity, an expression of this strange element which bids it rise. Do you suppose the human soul is harder in its sin and iniquity than the ivory ball? Do you suppose God has given the quality of elasticity to this substance so that it shall rebound, and none to a human soul? Why, friends, there is such a thing as moral elasticity, and when any soul is dropped by the hand of justice, as one might say—when any human soul falls into the darkness of mental anguish—as it reaches the lowest depths it rebounds, it is lifted up by the suffering and pain and anguish it endures. So pain is a process of purification, and all regret only dredges the harbor so that it may be deepened, and the ships of heaven may ride in and lie at anchor there.

Be sure these words are true: "The Lord loveth whomsoever He chasteneth." That word "whomsoever" is like a beautiful ceiling under which people of different natures may congregate; a beautiful sky, under which the sinner whose sin crushes him may stand side by side with the saint. The same sky arches over them both, and covers the person whose offences are slight and the willful murderer as well. "The Lord loveth whomsoever He chasteneth." It is not the spirit of hatred that God loves; it is not the spirit of selfishness; it is not any element in your lower nature which has unfolded so that crime has become possible that God loves. Look at the earth when the winter is beginning to die away; all the seeds and flowers and roots and bulbs are frozen and covered over—dead. No; not dead, but sleeping. And so when we look at a human soul under the icy winter of its selfishness and wickedness, we say, "There is no leaf or bud of promise there." But God knows that underneath the winter's cold the seeds and bulbs and roots are waiting for the by-and-bye. Surely, if the earth can awaken from its winter cannot the human soul awaken from its winter, even though it be the frozen soil of hatred? God does not love the wrong; the Infinite Spirit of good is not in harmony with the degrading and depressing; but under the fog and mist of evil the element of good is waiting until the way shall be clear enough, waiting until the awakening of the soul; and then afterward it shall find peace.

Does it necessarily follow that intelligence, to be effective, must be embodied?

Friends, there is one intelligence which is invisible, the intelligence of God, which some people say is not embodied. But it is embodied; an intelligence to be effective must be embodied. That intelligence is embodied in the universe, in every particle of matter, in all there is in space, and everywhere where the methods of divine operation reveal themselves. It is the intelligence of an embodied Infinite Intelligence. We answer, then, that wherever intelligence is effective it must be organized and embodied; it cannot be expressed otherwise. Following this we have the question:

What kind of a body does a spirit occupy?

This question arises from what we have already said, and it is naturally asked, "Men and women, while in their bodies, have a certain effectiveness, but when they die, how is it then?" When you die you will find yourself as perfectly embodied as you are to-day, only it will be a spiritual body, not a body of this gross substance. Did not Paul express this when he said, "But some will ask, 'How are the dead raised up? and with what bodies do they come?'" And then he proceeds to explain it as well as he can, choosing various illustrations, all tending to show that each has a body after his own kind, and all will be identified in the spirit-world as perfectly as the different kinds of grain are identified, or as the stars that differ one from another in glory. He says that there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. That should not read just as it does, because the spiritual body is just as natural as anything else. There is nothing that is not natural in the wide universe. If this be true, then that text should read, "There is a material body and there is a spiritual body." That expresses it better, for your spiritual bodies are natural. Do not suppose for a moment that your spiritual bodies are not in your possession now. Do not imagine that there is some wonderful wardrobe in heaven, so that when a man or woman or child dies some master of ceremonies or some angel takes down one of these spiritual bodies and says, "This is warranted to fit." No; your spiritual bodies are here, within you; it is that wonderful form on which these particles of matter centre and round out, and from which they take their shape. This is a difficult thing to explain to you. Suppose you take a magnet and go into a room where the air is filled with steel filings. On passing it through the air it attracts to itself the steel atoms, and is perfectly covered with them, and the particles take the form of the magnet. It is clothed with that which it has taken from the atmosphere. Take a globule of mercury and place it where there is fine silver, and it will take on, not the dust of the rock, not the particles of earth or gross matter, it will gather to itself the particles of silver until it has all that it can carry. Then you cannot see the mercury, but only the silver with which it is clothed.

Now it is true that every child has a spiritual body, a spiritual organism. It is the divine idea. And when the little body grows it shapes all the unseen particles. Feeble at first, they grow and unite; they are gathered in the various ways that nature understands, and so the garment of the little life is formed by this divine ideal. So, as you are sitting here to-day inside of your material garments that you wear, are your physical bodies. Inside of your physical bodies, which partly express you but more often conceal your real self, are your spiritual bodies. When you die you simply are removed from these externals. How Shakspeare, with that wonderful power that belonged to him, speaks of shuffling off this mortal coil. You drop the dust of the earth just as the quicksilver, when subjected to certain chemical conditions, drops the silver which clothed it. You drop the earthly bodies, and stand spiritual bodies. What kind? Why, bodies that look like your material bodies, only expressing your real self far better. Oh! friends, if you knew how beautiful some of you are to-day to the vision of the spirit, you would not mind the fading eyes, the stealing away of the bloom from your cheeks and lips, if you knew that that which is eternal, the loveliness of your life, was visible to the spirits. Would you know the secret of beauty? We would not give you the preparations of the chemists, but tell you to think good thoughts, loving thoughts, pure thoughts; speak words that spring from the seeds of such thoughts; do deeds that grow like fruit from such thoughts and impulses, and the spirit will grow unto such loveliness that angels will come to look at you in order to see what lovely flowers can grow in earthly soil.

The affinity of male and female spirits—is it a chemical compound? When they meet in the spirit-world and become one in thought, do they then receive their instructions through revelation or otherwise?

You do not realize the meaning of this question or the answer to it until you reach the spirit-world. We will tell you just a little. It is not necessary that you should dwell largely upon these subjects. There are so many that belong to your life here and your practical relations to each other, that we are glad when we find few of such questions.

In the other world, when you have passed from your material bodies, you will find your friends. Your friends, we say, with special emphasis. Some whom you have thought your friends here you will find you have misjudged and overestimated; and in that clear, white light of eternity all the particles of earth drop away as though they had never been. When you find the reality then you understand the truth, and there may be a moment of bitterness, perchance. Yet, after all, you will find that you have only been mistaken in the outside, and you will find in the lives of others such blossoms of friendship that everything will be made up to you. There will be no great grieving in heaven.

But, friends, if you go down into your own soul here, you will find a something that speaks of the reality of friendship a something that cannot be mistaken. It is that which endures through all storms and trials; it is that which grows broader and better in all states of affliction. There is in the world friendship; there is a wonderful spirit of usefulness; there is a something that speaks of the kindness and love that dwell in God the giver. Now, in the spirit-world you will find that its homes have no discordant element. When the singer's voice, a little while ago, vibrated through the room with those words, "Home, sweet, sweet home," what were you thinking of? Why, friends, you know you were thinking of home, not of the voice and face of the singer—of home, as you knew it long ago, when you lived with your brothers and sisters, before the links began to break and the dear ones began to scatter. Or you were thinking of the place you are living in now, or of the place where mother is? Perhaps some of you were thinking of your eternal home, where death can never come; or your thoughts flashed from one to another, for, after all, the human mind is cosmic. Let us tell you that in the spirit-world, in your dear home beyond, you will find an outgrowth of the old; all the elements of sweetness regulated. You will find a home with no jar, no discord, and when first seen there, perchance some memory of your singer to-day will come back to you, and you will say: "Truly, 'Home, sweet, sweet home'!"

In that world it is true you will find in your home the sweetest and the purest of all the relationships of life; but you will not find there those unions which here on earth you express in the word marriage. Let us assure you of this, that all earthly passions, all of earth that belongs to the lower life and not to the higher, will be wanting. Out of that will grow the diviner, the holier, the sweeter, the purer, which is now underneath, but which belongs to the highest and noblest forevermore. Then thought answers thought, mind communes with mind without the gross vehicle of earthly speech, and in that better world it will not be by practical revelation, but by that which comes to the love of man by the blending of intuition and revelation.

Do spirits of other planets communicate with us through our mediums?

We would not say it is an impossible thing for spirits of other planets to communicate with us. We do not know. But we know this, that it is much more probable that the communications you receive come from spirits who have gone from this planet. They are nearer to you in sympathy, parallel to you in most things, and so they are most naturally attracted to you. Those who come from other planets would be attracted to their own.

Do not advanced spirits know for a certainty whether reincarnation is a fact or not? If so, why is it not given us to know?

Yes; advanced spirits know for a certainty, and we should tell you that they know there is no such thing as reincarnation. But there is that assertion of reincarnation, and if we say advanced spirits know there is not, you might question their truthfulness. We cannot make you understand a thing simply because we know it. The doctrine of reincarnation is built up on assertion, and of course we have not time to show you much about it. There is no argument, but only assertion. It seems to us a useless doctrine; that identity is the one glorious thing that should be carried on forever; it is something so precious to us, and precious, because those we love we love forever. How can our child be the child of some other mother and father? or our mother, the dearest and truest of women, the mother of some one else? Why, friends, these ties of relationship, these links of identity, are dear to us and we hold them so; and we tell you that the doctrine of reincarnation is like a mist, in which if it is thick enough you will lose your way, and we pray for clear weather.

The Spiritual Facts of the Ages.

A Series by Dr. F. L. H. Willis.

NO. 1—INTRODUCTORY.

The object of the series of articles to which this is introductory, is to prove the truth of our oft-repeated assertion that Spiritualism, or the faith in man's vital connection with an unseen world of spiritual forces and entities, is, when divested of ignorance and superstition, when divorced from sense and materialism, the natural faith of the human soul in all ages and climes, and has been ever since that soul had a place in the economy of the universe; and that all the great systems of religion without an exception, Brahminism, Buddhism, Judaism, Mohammedanism, Roman Catholicism, even Protestant Christianity, are based upon this one foundation: an open communion between the spheres.

Spiritualism declares that spirit is the central, primordial power of the universe; that this spirit is infinite; that all human spirits are expressions of it, and are bound together by it into one grand fraternity of souls, united by a subtle spiritual chemistry to the Divine Spirit, rendering it absolutely impossible that there should be any dividing space over which influences from either side cannot pass.

Spiritualism, like nature, has two sides, the practical and the ideal. On the practical side we have facts by the million; facts which make their appeal to every possible condition of human development from the lowest to the highest.

It challenges the attention of the Materialist with its surprising physical phenomena, demonstrating the presence of an invisible force with an intelligence behind it.

To the scientist it presents a new science, or rather we should say a new chapter in the science of Physiology, entitled Psychology.

To the deep thinker, who allows his intuitions to guide his reason, it offers spiritual ideas of the most exalted type; a theology the most profound; a religion and a philosophy the most transcendent. Hence its infinite scope and power, reaching out as it does toward the whole world, and promising to fold within its embrace every inhabitant thereof.

What, we ask, can there be outside of a philosophy that pertains to every power and attribute of the soul of man, and reveals to him all those capacities and capabilities that permit his attainment to a condition that demonstrates the power of spirit over spirit, and proves to him that within his soul lie infinite progress and unending attainment.

This, we affirm, the Philosophy of Spiritualism does, and hence we claim it is a sublimely religious philosophy, and in demanding its recognition as the basis of all the great religious movements of the ages, we do not fail to recognize the fact that it has always had a variety of phases, a diversity of moods, all adapted to the demands of the different ages, and the changing conditions of the human mind in its various degrees of development.

How wonderfully and beautifully do we find it adapted to the saint and to the sinner, to the savant and to the savage, to the rudest barbarism and to the highest civilization; coming now in one form, now in another; manifesting itself in signs and wonders to one, to another in the still, small voice, to another through beneficent gifts of healing, to another by prophecies, to another by the power of discerning spirits, to another by the divine gift of inspiration, under whose influence his brain thrills with the exalted ideas of the poets and seers, the philosophers and sages, the great, grand souls of the past and the present who open up to him the infinite realms of eternal life.

Yes, it is indeed the source and reality of religion. It is the vital power of faith, and by as careful study as we have been able to give to the history of all religions, we have learned that each of them originated in the development of man's spiritual nature, so that one or more individuals became revelators of religious truth through the awakening of their own powers and perceptions, so that they became what are termed in the present day mediums. They were known in the past by the various names of prophets, seers, sybils, inspired men and women, magicians even—for magic among the ancients was not trickery, but a profound science that had schools and academies and learned professors, and among its students were enrolled many of the finest minds of the past. It was to past ages what science is to the present, and its teachers were men whose exalted aim it was to develop new truths and to prove their facts by universal laws.

In going far back as we propose into the dimness of the past we shall have but comparatively few guides to aid us, but I think we shall be astonished at the distinctness and clearness with which they point to the grand fact that all truth has come into the world through man, and that all revelation comes through human channels. Also that no remotest nation is without its spiritual facts and its Spiritual Philosophy, which is the seed of its religion, and from which springs up the tree of knowledge whose leaves are for the healing of the nations.

We shall attempt to prove that the spiritual facts that have marked the progress of Modern Spiritualism rest upon the same basis with the spiritual facts of all ages and all nations, and he who would ignore the manifestations of to-day must, if he would be logical and consistent, ignore also those of the past, for one grand law runs through the whole, binding them indissolubly together into a science sublimer far than that which traces the pathway of the majestic planets that whirl through space; a science that traces the pathway of the immortal soul, reveals its marvelous powers and attributes, and maps out and defines its glorious destiny.

It must be borne in mind throughout these articles that we base our faith in spirit-communion precisely where all science is based, namely, on the eternity and immutability of law, and that nothing can transpire above or beyond or outside of law.

Not the wisest man living can point to a single trace in all the universe of a dead law, or a law that ever has or ever can cease to operate under favorable conditions, or conditions like to those that produced its first manifestations. All science rests here, and hence the man who learns to-day how the sun or moon becomes eclipsed, knows just exactly how they became eclipsed six thousand years ago, and he who in his insane folly attempts to deny the scientific facts of to-day concerning that phenomenon, assails equally the demonstrated facts concerning all the eclipses that ever occurred.

As with material facts, so precisely with spiritual. If in Hindu, Egyptian, Jewish and Christian records we find testimony clear and direct, proving that men and women possessed spiritual attributes and faculties, through which they could hold communion with departed spiritual beings, through which they could discern spirits, heal the sick, make the blind to see, the lame to walk, cleanse the lepers, make the deaf to hear, and bring back the nearly-departed spirit to the body made to glow with a new life, then to all eternity these must be, through the immutability of law, gifts and powers of the human spirit, and he who denies that it is possible for men and women to-day to see spirits, hold communion with spirits, heal with the touch or speak with tongues, extends his denial to every such fact that has ever been testified unto throughout the world wherever recorded.

We shall be compelled to make these articles as brief and concise as possible, although the testimony is so abundant that we could easily extend each into a volume.

We shall consider in our next Ancient India.

MIND: WHAT IS IT?

BY WARREN CHASE.

Most persons speak and write of the human mind as a unit, and always separate it from the person and the brain in which it dwells while incarnated. Notwithstanding our custom of treating it as a unit, we all speak of making up our minds, as if they were composed of parts; we use the possessive case, as if the mind was not the individual, the ego, but something owned and controlled by the ego.

What we are or should be without a mind is demonstrated by the newborn or the unborn infant: A body without a mind, but we have abundant evidence that it is not without an ego, or more properly a soul, for our spirit friends assure us that such as die at birth, or even before, do put in an appearance in that life and grow up there.

That there are no two human minds or bodies exactly alike in this life has long been accepted as a fact. By this it would seem that each was made up of parts and particles, and differently constituted. That the mind of each individual, as made up and developed in this life, remains an entity, or a property, of the soul that made the body and brain for its use here, is fully and completely established by Modern Spiritualism as it never was as a scientific fact before; and now we may analyze the human being and find the mind as one of its parts, and not an effect, as is a motion of the arms or feet.

It is plain that the brain does not produce the mind, but the mind uses the brain as it does the several parts of the body, always in proportion to the quantity and quality of the organs, as in the case of muscles and nerves of the arms or legs.

That the ego or soul is back of and superior to both body and mind, seems plain to me. The body evidently belongs only and exclusively to this world, notwithstanding the Christian absurd theory of a resurrection of it for a future and superior state. The mind evidently begins its identity and organic existence here, however its particles, like those of the body, had existence before: those of the body in substance, and those of the mind in elements. It is now clearly demonstrated that the mind goes out of the body at death intact as an organic entity, and if we take the evidence of dreams, and the multitude of testimonies of our spirit-friends, it builds up, possesses and controls a form there largely resembling the body out of which it passed.

Whether this spirit form is the work of the ego, or soul, as the earthly body evidently is, or whether it is the work of the mind, is not yet settled in any theory. Whether the mind retains its organic entity through other and future changes and transitions is not yet clear to us, but that the soul which knew enough to make this body, and make up the mind, has eternal existence, seems a settled fact in nature, although in conflict with Christian theology.

DEATH.

BY HELEN HAWTHORNE.

Death is the door that opens into light,
The darker hour that ushers out the night,
Is but the pall, so grim and dark,
Spread o'er a secret—won—
Is but the milestone, set to mark
One stage of Life's great journey done.
For Life is more than breath that warms this clay,
And Death is but a passage through which Life
Goes its unending way.

Banner Correspondence.

Tennessee.

MEMPHIS.—Allie Lindsay Lynch writes: "I notice in THE BANNER of Dec. 1st, a letter from Cleveland, O., wherein the writer quotes from my recent letter, written in praise of the book, 'Gleanings,' and published in The Better Way, and also speaks of the author as a recent graduate struggling bravely while waiting for practice. As my letter to The Better Way brought me a letter of inquiry as to where the book could be purchased, and seeing it advertised in the last issue of THE BANNER, I to-day replied, and wishing again to speak in its praise, I pen this letter. I am not paid or even invited to do this. Dr. Symes has perhaps never heard my name, but he is a brave Spiritualist and 'Gleanings' is a grand tribute to a natural religion. From its pages I quote a few passages:

'We find that there is in society a super-silly class who fancy and even confess that they know all—a band of intellectual finishers, so to speak—persons who have an unhappy conceit that they are "thoroughly posted." These last named persons are accustomed to read Orthodox monthlies and trans-Atlantic quarterlies, but are not at all accustomed to think upon the practical and progressive questions as now discussed from the private and public platform. And yet these self-same persons have a conceit that they cannot be further informed.'

'In certain prudential minds are dwelling doubts respecting the utility of a consideration of these sacred themes. Most persons are educated to regard religion as too holy a matter for debate. We think that anything is too holy for an angry debate, but nothing is too sacred for a calm investigation!'

'The plea that religion is too sacred for public discussion appears absurd when it is recollected this subject is publicly debated in every pulpit in Christendom.'

A la Talmage!

'The progress of scientific discovery is carrying the war into the very heart of biblical authority. The positive and unavoidable deductions of astronomy, of ethnology, of archæology, of hierology, of physiology, stand in startling opposition to all the assumptions of Bible theology pertaining to infallibility.'

This is true, and yet as the author further says:

'Sometimes we hear them preach thus: "The Bible has stood the test of ages; no closeness of inspection, keenness of investigation or stricture of criticism, has been able to defeat its claims. Moses's account of creation is simple (admitted!) and sublime. (?) The volume of destiny is suddenly thrown open; time is proclaimed; creation arises; and a new race of intelligence appears on the scene. Nothing can shake the plain narrative of Moses. The Bible is perfect in all its parts—full of excellencies—and, taken as a whole, is without contradiction or inconsistency."'

Yes, but a few months since an intelligent friend writing me made a similar statement. Less than a week ago this same friend, a church-member, wrote me as follows: 'If I were perfectly satisfied that the broken ties of love and affection will be reunited in another world; that the parted shall meet again, and live and enjoy each other's society eternally; that there is a world beyond for poor struggling humanity, then would I be happy. But what a mystery! Who can forecast the future?' I have been at work scattering good seed in that ground, and I can detect in those words wee sprouts appearing. To return to 'Gleanings,' I must give you one more good excerpt:

'Regarded as a record of physical events, the Mosaic history cannot be sustained, hence many minds are driven into symbolical interpretations. The creation of the world, the garden of Eden, the temptation and fall, the deluge and tower of Babel, are received by many as symbolical relations—as types of spiritual experience and events—referring equally to nations and individuals. . . . Every figure symbolized some particular idea. Thus a beetle did not stand for a beetle alone, but also for the world; an asp corresponded to royalty; an eagle to courage; the lion to strength; a raven's head to intellect; a duck to a doctor of medicine; and a goose to a doctor of divinity.'

The wasp stings with its tail, and this is a good hit at the goose. I could go on selecting gems from this rich casket of truths, but THE BANNER will be kind if it permits me space for thus much, and I will only add. Friends, Spiritualists, investigators, preachers, purchase, read, grow."

PITTSBURGH.—J. H. Lohmeyer, Secretary of the Pittsburgh Society of Spiritualists, writes: "Edgar W. Emerson closed a very successful season with our Society Dec. 10th. The members and their friends, a great many of these church-members, filled our hall to overflowing, and at least two hundred persons were unable to gain admittance Sunday evening, that being the last of the engagement. Those who came to the hall and did not gain admission were very much disappointed.

The tests given through Mr. Emerson were perfectly marvelous to all present. We often hear the questions asked, how is it possible for him to know all these things? who gives him the power, and how can we do otherwise than accept it when he tells us a truth? and many more questions to this effect. There is an acknowledgment to the fact that the Spiritual Philosophy has come to Pittsburgh to stay.

The ministers of the different denominations denounce us from their pulpits, the press ridicules the return of our friends from the spirit-world as nonsense, and Spiritualists, and all others who are trying to investigate, as deluded; but all these denunciations only give oil to the flames of the fire of truth, and if any one will take the trouble to come to our meetings he will see that Spiritualists are not what these ministers and editors are trying to make people believe they are.

Mr. Emerson, during his short stay with our Society, has given some remarkable proofs of spirit return; numbers of these tests were given to members of churches, and as Mr. Emerson's guide gives them very clearly, the recipients had no opportunity to deny the messages that came from their friends, and at the same time it gives these people food for thinking, and they will soon find that the church and the Christian religion cannot satisfy them any longer; their eyes are opened, and they gain the knowledge that the so-called dead can return and speak, and give them the assurance that there is no death, no Orthodox hell nor heaven, and no devil to torment them if they fail to believe as the church and the Bible teach; but to the contrary, that their salvation depends on themselves, and as they live here, doing good wherever they can, so will their home be in the spirit-world, bright or dark, just as they make it.

I can record hundreds of names given and recognized by the friends. Mr. Emerson gave a test séance at Newcastle, Pa. This town has a recognized name for puritanical ideas, and there seems to be great consternation among the ministers; they are afraid some of their flock may stray from their fold. Mr. Emerson had a very fine audience, and was much pleased with the conditions given him. He also held a very satisfactory séance at Chartiers, a few miles from Pittsburgh, for a few railroad officials and employés, a number of whom were skeptics. They were so pleased at the results they wanted him to give another, but he was unable to comply with their wishes for want of time. As it was late before the séance closed, Mr. Emerson was anxious about getting back to Pittsburgh, but to his surprise they had a special engine and parlor car waiting, and he was returned to the city in fine style.

Mr. Emerson is without doubt one of the best test mediums in the spiritual ranks. We wish him a long life on this planet, and whenever he is ready to leave this earth-life we are satisfied the dear ones from the Summer-Land will take him to the beautiful home that is prepared for him. Mr. Emerson will be with our Society in January, 1890. We hope the dear angels will keep him in perfect health, that we may have the satisfaction of seeing him often in our midst as an ever-welcome friend and brother. Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn will follow Bro. Emerson with a five weeks' engagement."

GORHAM.—J. Valentine writes: "In the winter of 1851 I received a letter from Dr. M. A. Cushing of Glens Falls, N. Y., informing me he had engaged Maggie Fox to hold a number of sittings at his rooms, and requesting me to attend. I accepted the invitation, and arriving there was placed next Miss Fox. I held her left hand; she rested her feet on mine. I was requested to watch and detect any movement she might make. After the circle was connected by taking hold of hands, five raps were heard. Miss Fox informed us it was a call for the alphabet. A gentleman repeated the letters, and messages were given to different individuals, the recipients usually acknowledging the friend or acquaintance, but expressing wonder that Miss F. should know anything about them. Nearly all received a message. I watched as closely as I was able, and could detect no movement of foot or toe, or even a muscle. To our questions of how she made the sounds she replied she knew no more how they were made than we did; they were as much a mystery to her as to others; they were claimed to be given by spirits who once lived in earthly bodies, and she thought they were, and it was the only explanation she could give.

During the investigation the sofa feet were set on glass dishes a distance from the wall. She who is now known as Mrs. Margaret Fox-Kane stood on the sofa; the raps continued as before, on the floor, on the wall, doors, overhead, and in any place requested. Now, it appears, she claims it was all a fraud; that she made the sounds with her toes. I think it will require something more than her assertion to convince intelligent persons she made those raps with her toes, and require a great deal of credulity in any one to believe it. Her say-so will never disturb the faith of any one who has become a Spiritualist from investigating the phenomena; it will only stimulate investigation, as has been the result from the time the Rev. John Murray first proclaimed a more liberal gospel in Potter's Church: every attempt to arrest the truth results in a more rapid progress of a knowledge of it among men."

NEW YORK CITY.—John F. Bassford writes: "The most convincing séance for materialization I have witnessed for many months was held at the residence of Mrs. Effie Moss, 265 West 38th street, Dec. 12th, three ladies, one gentleman and myself being present. Forms illuminated with crosses, stars and other emblems came from the cabinet, two and three at a time, the medium accompanying them, and passed around the circle. My spirit wife and daughter came together, approached each, and conversed fully ten minutes, to the satisfaction of all. Such a séance was enough to convince any skeptic. The conditions were very favorable and satisfactory to all. Mrs. Moss is a grand medium. Let us encourage the good work, and reap the reward that is in store for all who promote it."

Missouri.

ST. LOUIS.—J. D. Stillman, M. D., writes: "Perusing the letter of Tennyson calls to mind an episode in my own spiritual or trance-waking experience some twenty years ago. Naturally a skeptic, I was induced to attend a few spiritual séances in Memphis, Tenn., in 1867, without any convincing effect upon me until at one of them I suffered myself to relapse into mental concentration, which I might have denominated a stupor, when I became physically and mentally transported into a condition of activity that took me away from the séance to the residence of an old physician, who was in a comatose state from an attack of cholera and sunstroke. In this condition I remained with him for two days and nights, and succeeded in restoring him fully, to the great surprise of all concerned. After this I went to my office, where I became perfectly absorbed in writing; I know not for what purpose, as I took no particular interest in what I wrote. I know, also, that I was equally engaged in chemical compounds, the data of which were afterward to me perfectly blank, and I have now no remembrance of them. I only know that there was fixed upon my mind, as though graven in stone, a method of preparing a condensed liquid compound which I had placed in a bottle in my office, to use in cholera.

I continued for a long time chained to my writing by the ecstasy of seeming to be in a sea of unbounded elements of life, harmony and contentment. I awoke occasionally, as business or necessity compelled me to, from this reverie, but at the first opportunity relapsed into that waking trance to note common occurrences, much as a balloon voyager would view the receding panorama of earth as it faded from his sight. I seemed as in this atmosphere of condition for nearly a year, like a floating cloud on the horizon of time, that had no beginning, and was never to end. The stern realities of life, however, and the philosophic effort to break these chains, persuaded me that no practical purpose had been served, as the manuscripts which I conceived were not for me were taken away by those interested in what they considered supramundane intelligence, as they insisted that I was constantly in a semi-trance condition. I deemed it prudent to return to my professional life with such energy and purpose that I might be free from the entrancement.

The features of this condition seemed to be unconsciousness of personality, an universal sea of principles and powers, that produced life by their scintillations of contact with matter, all forms of life. From that day to the present, however, I have never believed myself the same individual that I was before, as my subjective life seems above the considerations of selfishness. I am seemingly carried along in the realm of progress, to which I feel myself in some way to be an important factor in future time, and life seems to me a dream of the great possibilities that are to dawn upon man by the advent of truths, facts and philosophies that will make the inhabitants of this earth as changed in character and condition as though it were a new earth and a new heaven united, as man approaches the summit of human grandeur, and the earth is transformed into a paradise of bliss."

Illinois.

PEORIA.—J. Madison Allen writes: "In a late issue of Die Sonne, a German paper of this city, I find the following question and answer, taken from a Berlin spiritualistic journal:

'Frage.—Hat der Spiritualismus wirklich eine Zukunft auf Erden und sollte es wahr sein, das zum ende des Jahrhunderts die intelligente Welt von ihm überzeugt sein wird?

Antwort.—Zu welcher zeit der Spiritualismus von dem grössten Theil der Gebildeten anerkannt sein wird, können wird nicht sagen, glauben aber, dass es in einem Menschenalter geschehen wird. Die Zukunft gehört unbedingt dem Spiritualismus, der selbe ist von den Jenzeitigen in seiner jetzigen Form sozusagen den Menschen aufgedrängt worden, und die Geisterwelt wird auch dafür sorgen, dass er bestehen bielbe. Wir erblicken in ihm die einzige Rettung des Menschengeschlechts aus den unhaltbar gewordenen Zustanden und das einige Mittel, die Menschen auf höhere sittliche Bahnen zu führen.'

The above may be thus translated:

Question.—Has Spiritualism a future on the earth, and is it likely that by the end of the century the intelligent world will be convinced?

Answer.—At what time Spiritualism will be recognized by the greater portion of the civilized world, we cannot say, but we believe that it will be brought about in a generation. The future unquestionably belongs to Spiritualism. The same, in its present form, has been forced upon man, so to speak, from beyond; and the spirit-world will also see to it that it remains permanently. We discover in it the only rescue of the human race from its deplorable present condition, and the only means by which man can be guided to the higher moral plane."

Massachusetts.

LOWELL.—"Prevorst" writes: "Prof. Cadwell has been entertaining and instructing our people. On the evening of Dec. 8th, Dr. Folsom, one of our principal dentists, was present, when some interesting experiments were made. A boy the normal beat of whose pulse was 80 had it reduced to 60, then increased to 70, then back to its normal condition of 80, so it was declared by Dr. F., who with watch in hand timed the pulsations. Prof. C. then rendered insensible certain parts of the body, Dr. Folsom stating that no preparation known to the medical profession would render one part senseless without affecting other parts, but Mr. Cadwell had by mesmerism done this."

Kansas.

TOPEKA.—A correspondent writes: "There are about two thousand Spiritualists in this place. The First Society of Spiritualists has from fifty to sixty members. It holds a Conference or Fact Meeting every Sabbath afternoon and one in the evening, at which one or more of our resident mediums or others give their services. In our hall we hold fortnightly socials, and quite frequently socials and circles at private residences. Among our mediums are Mrs. Kelley, Mrs. Emma E. Hammon, Mrs. Norton and Mrs. J. Hatch. Mr. Markley is the President of our Society, and the prospects for its growth and extended usefulness are quite encouraging."

Vermont.

WILMINGTON.—John F. Bassett writes: "Spiritualism is on the gain here. We have been fortunate in making engagements with that gifted medium, Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, who has lectured for us about a dozen times within the last three years, and the hall is always well filled. All the friends of the cause are pleased with the grand teachings she utters, and I think it is safe to say that every one within sound of her voice receives ideas of Spiritualism that lead them to believe there must be something in it."

The Spiritual International Congress in Barcelona, Spain.

(Translated specially for the Banner of Light from the French Revue Spirite, Paris, by C. G. Helleberg, Cincinnati, O.)

The 8th of September, 1888, at 9 o'clock in the evening, various representatives of the different nations assembled in a large hall beautifully decorated and brilliantly lighted. The hall contained over two thousand people and official functionaries, who enjoyed the pleasant place of meeting and the perfume of beautiful flowers, which were disposed everywhere. The following countries were represented: Belgium, Chili, Brazil, France, Holland, Italy, Algiers, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Mexico, Germany, Russia, Turkey, Peru, Columbia, the Argentine Republic, the Islands of Balcares, Corfu, etc.

At an open space between the public and the rostrum were placed four large tables for the journalists and stenographers. Unanimously were elected one honorary President and four effective Presidents; six Vice Presidents; four Secretaries. All these functionaries were people of high culture and standing in various sciences.

Barcelona is beautifully located in a plain, dominated by high mountains, and has a population of nearly four hundred thousand. The new part of it has wide streets, ornamented with palm trees and beautiful flowers, and is splendidly lighted with electricity and gas. During all the sessions the throng of highly intelligent people in the hall was so great that many had to be refused entrance. The periodical press of Spain took great interest in the proceedings, and spoke well and respectfully of this undertaking. It was agreed that what had been said and done at the Congress up to the 15th of September should be printed in three languages, namely: Spanish, French and Italian; and that another more extensive Congress should take place in Paris the 1st of September, 1889, to which all spiritual societies and people interested in spiritual science from all parts of the globe should be invited. It was decided that the following affirmations and propositions should be made from the Spanish and Franco-Belge-Italian school, each separately. The Spanish affirmations and propositions, which were unanimously adopted, were:

The First International Spiritual Congress affirms and proclaims the existence and importance of Spiritualism as an integral progressive science. Its fundamentals are: the existence of God; the infinity of the habitable worlds; the preëxistence and persistence of spirit; the experimental demonstration of survivorship of the human soul through mediumistic communications with spirits; the infinite diversity in the permanent life of each being; recompense and pain as consequences of the nature of acts; infinite progress; universal communion as with a bond. The actual character of Spiritualism formulates itself in this way:

1. It is a science positive and experimental.
2. It is contemporary with revelation.
3. It is an important step in human progress.
4. It gives solution of the most profound problems morally and socially.
5. It heightens the reason, sentiments, and satisfies the conscience.
6. It imposes no creed or belief, only invites study.
7. It realizes a great aspiration which is the consequence of historic necessity.

In consequence of the principles enunciated, the Congress has the understanding that all the societies and all adepts ought, by the legal means at their disposal, to lend their help and coöperation to individuals or assemblies who occupy themselves in civilizing mankind; therefore the Congress advises:

A. A complete study of the spiritual doctrines.

B. Their propagation incessantly by the proper means.

C. Their realization by the constant practicing of private and public virtue. To attain this result the Congress understands that every society and all spiritual adepts should consider all men of good will as brothers and sisters in their struggle of life and combat with vice and error, and further advises:

D. To respect all investigators and propagators of virtue, even if they are not Spiritualists.

E. To have in view the constant effort to secularize society in every sphere of life.

F.—To try to obtain absolute liberty of thought, and equal instruction for both sexes embracing all social relations.

G.—Federal Autonomy of all Spiritualists and adepts in one constitutive Society; each Society ought to maintain a constant relation with the center of its locality, all the local centers with the national center, and each national center with the other nationalities. Finally the Congress observes it is not proper to accept without examination any doctrine, either individual or from a society. It is also necessary to observe that Allan Kardec has shown in his works the danger of excessive belief in medial communication, and he says: "You must submit what you receive to sound logic and reason, for death alone gives no progress."

From the many excellent speeches of learned orators, I will make only a short extract from that of Mr. Jean Hoffman, Doctor of Philologie at Rome:

"All are invited to love and help each other; this is a necessity to progress, and for that purpose we must open our hearts to all the great and noble aspirations of the soul. Reason and interest proclaim that we stand in need of each other, and good deeds must bind us together. Oh! what a beautiful tableau, when the adversaries of our doctrine are mocking our efforts and aims, to see Spiritualists of good will and different nationality shake each other's hands in sincere association—all promising from this time to faithfully work for the same noble purpose: to proclaim truth to the needy; lighten the present way and the future for those who see only misery, darkness and trouble! Such is the task which ought to decide us to step out from our isolation to form ourselves in solid groups and to work continually with love and confidence, without feebleness and fear.

Our work does not attain its perfect development until the day when all our forces, which now are scattered, shall be associated, and work pursued with a united accord to the same great aim. . . .

In the struggle of progress against ignorance, superstition, skepticism, pride; the assertions of the institutions from the Middle Ages; the dogmas of the official science; the intolerance constituted by the churches; the invectives of the adversaries of the liberty of conscience; the mockery of the ignorant and envious, the obscure arts of those who propagate mistrust and hate between nation and nation, between brothers and brothers: We answer with the sublime example of our fraternal bond of sentiments, our tolerance, our constant love for all that is true, good and beautiful!

Among true Spiritualists there is no nationality; there are neither Spaniards, Frenchmen, Germans, English, Russians nor Italians, etc.; for Spiritualists there are not even savages. The aim of our work is to leap with one bound over the political frontiers, those obstacles to the great humanitarian work which our true brethren in France for a century have sought to remove. We are all brothers and sisters in the great universal nation which, in its turn in the great whole of life, is only a humble and small part of the sidereal republic. . . .

Brothers and sisters, do you know what Spiritualism is in relation to humanity's improvement? It is the centre of moral gravitation toward which the terrestrial humanity, through patient research, makes an incessant march toward universalization and the communion of souls, in divine harmony and eternal concert with all beings of the universe."

SPIRITUALIST LECTURERS.

[THE BANNER publishes from time to time a List of Spiritualist Lecturers, with their post-office addresses attached, without charge; and in consideration of so doing it seems to us interested parties should be more particular than many of them now are in notifying this office when they change their localities, or when they retire from active labors in the field. To be useful the List should be reliable. Immediate attention to this request is earnestly desired.]

Banner of Light.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1888.

What Shall be Taught?

In a recent Sunday morning lecture, the able and eloquent Rabbi Schindler made the above question, in its application to the public schools, the theme of his discourse. He opened with the remark that history is full of the narratives of enthusiasts who have spent their means and their lives in the vain endeavor to abolish poverty, and its field is strewn with the débris of schemes and enterprises which have exploded, one after another, carrying death and destruction into the camp of their instigators and friends. Socialism, said the Rabbi, was one of the different schemes proposed that found the greatest favor among the masses. In our time it has become a by-word, an epithet, denoting an element dangerous to the social welfare. Yet the Socialistic philosophy has not retrograded, but has seen so successful a realization as no prophet of old has ever predicted for it.

The army and navy of a nation were pronounced the very first socialistic success. Our mail system is another. Finally it took form in the public schools. The state compels us to intrust our children to its guardianship. Every member of the state is taxed for the support of the public schools, on the ground that the community at large is benefited—if its members are well disciplined and educated. Every parent consequently has the right to demand that his child shall receive not only a proper education but the best that can be obtained. Its foremost duty is to prescribe such a course of education as will fit the child into the system of civilization of which it is to become a part.

What shall the public schools teach, becomes then a question of the first importance. To-day it absorbs the thoughts of all. We have hitherto, said the Rabbi, trodden the road of utility too much, and the curriculum of our public schools must sooner or later break down under its own weight. The true philosophy of teaching the young is this, that every human being stands in a relation to the world outside of him, while he is himself the representative of another world within. These two worlds, the inner and the outer, crave communication by means of the senses and the mental forces. Man gives and takes, receives and disburses. Hence he should be schooled in childhood so that his brains may allow of an easy and quick transit of thought: his thoughts should be liquefied, and his organs of speech properly trained to give expression to his thoughts through sound, or his hands properly educated to communicate the dictates of the inner world to the outer one by means of visible or tangible tokens.

The supporters of this view claim further that it must be left to the individual taste and energy to enter afterward upon such a course of studies as will enable one to gain a livelihood. Pestalozzi, who lived at the end of the last and the beginning of the present century, was the representative of this doctrine. The results of his method of instruction were so marvelous that teachers from all over Europe flocked to him in Switzerland to learn from him, and they afterward spread his method over Europe. Pestalozzi cared nothing for any particular branch of science, but merely endeavored to develop the mental capabilities of the child. He liquefied the thoughts of his pupils to such a degree that they were able to think and express themselves in a proper manner upon any subject that attracted their attention. While, said the Rabbi, we may accept the theory represented by Pestalozzi, we might just as well at the same time use such studies as the means for mental development as would be profitable to the future citizen.

As Rabbi Schindler has, since the delivery of this discourse, been elected by the united suffrages of both parties in this city to a place on the Boston School Board, we trust that his influence may prove a powerful assistance in the direction he here so strongly emphasizes—and which to our mind embodies the whole sum and substance of the office of the public school i. e., the following out of a course of instruction and training which shall best fit the future citizen to take his proper place, the one most advantageous to the whole, in all that concerns true life in the great republic.

Jennie B. Hagan in Meadville.

Miss Hagan has of late been very successful in her labors in Meadville, Pa.—as noted by us last week.

The resident Spiritualists were pleased and instructed, and skeptics were surprised by the exercise of her wonderful gifts. On the last evening of her engagement—that of Dec. 6th—Miss Hagan spoke on several subjects handed to her from the audience, her effort being well and candidly spoken of by the Daily Tribune-Republican of the 7th. The first of the themes considered was, "How does it happen that those who do not investigate Spiritualism are wiser in their opinion than those who do?" She replied in a very able manner, in the course of her remarks saying that Spiritualists who have studied the subject deeply will tell you that while they believe in the power of spirits to return to earth, and the many other phenomenal manifestations, they realize that life in this world is far too short to complete investigation. The investigator who is deep and anxious never makes a loud noise, but the little searcher goes through the world shouting.

Two orthodox clergymen were present who manifested great interest, especially when in reply to questions of a personal nature Miss Hagan said, "I think very little while I am speaking. I scan the faces of my audience; sometimes I think of my home, or some pleasant event of the day passes through my mind. I have only a common school education, and do not claim any special gifts of my own. The thoughts come to my mind and the words to my mouth without effort."

A Clergyman's Experience.

Rev. Joseph Wild, D. D., pastor of a Congregationalist Church in Toronto, Canada, to whose far-seeing views of spiritual truths we have previously alluded, related in a recent lecture an interesting experience of his own. He said:

"A short time ago a couple came to me to be married. I called in two witnesses who were visitors at my house, to subscribe their names. After I had married them I asked the witnesses to sign the certificate, which they did; and then I put it aside whilst I filled out the rest of the documents relating to the ceremony. When I came to the marriage certificate I could not find it, though I hunted for it high and low, and was a little confused. However, I recalled the two witnesses, told them I had misplaced the certificate, and asked them to sign another, which they did. The next morning these two visitors went to their several homes, both wide apart from Toronto. In the afternoon of the following day I had the certificate returned to me, and it was pointed out that I had put the wrong name for the man. It was an important wedding, involving considerable property, and the persons wished the certificate corrected at once. I sat down to think about it. Here were the two witnesses on their ways home, and what could I do, I worried myself for a few minutes, and then I heard a voice which told me I had put the other certificate in a book in the parlor; and sure enough, there it was where the voice directed me. I filled it out, and sent the parties away rejoicing with a clear and good certificate."

This experience started a train of thought in Dr. Wild's mind regarding the reason of his having asked them to sign the second certificate, and he intimates that some good angel may have foreseen that he would make the mistake he did and be placed in the dilemma he found himself, and so led him to the duplicate act. Had it not been for it, it would have been quite a long time before he could have given the married couple a certificate according to law, which would necessarily have put them to great inconvenience. After citing instances of a like nature—one of President Lincoln and one of President Garfield, showing spiritual guardianship and guidance—Dr. Wild says:

"My own idea is that there is a medium like our atmosphere, but of a different kind, in which these thoughts can be felt and seen, because we are spiritual beings. As out of the vagaries of astrology has come the beautiful science of astronomy, and as out of the uncertain alchemy has come the science of chemistry, so out of these experiments will come some science to us some day."

DOWN ON DONNELLY;

OR, CRUSHING THE CRYPTOGRAM.

"The Sonnets present evidence for Shakspeare's authorship like the links of chain-mail in an armor of proof. And the man who wrote the Sonnets must also have written the Poems and Plays. This can be established by those principles of scientific demonstration that have been applied to both in the present work. The same unlearned man wrote both! Then the secret history in the Sonnets is in agreement with the public history of the time, and both are in antipodal antagonism to the Great Cryptogram."—Mr. Gerald Massey, in his new edition of "The Secret Drama of Shakspeare's Sonnets.

A Poet on the Poet! That should herald
A real Champion's advent. Go it, Gerald!
Punch puts it pleasantly in the vernacular,
For only owls and humbugs ape the oracular
Ignatius now, the "Moon-Raker" gone frantic,
Who hunts for mare's-nests under the Atlantic,
And Shakspeare's text, is naturally stilted,
But under Massey's mace he must have wilted
Like the pricked bladder that he is. Yes, go it!
A poet, sure, should understand a poet.
You show 't was Shakspeare, he who sweetly sonneted,
Who wrote the Plays—and Donnelly is bonneted!
Your monumental book 's a trifle bulky
(Five hundred pages turn some critics sulky,
My massive Massey), but 'tis full of "meat,"
And sown with Song as masculine as sweet.
Mellifluous echoes of the master-rhymes,
Whose music filled the Great Armada times,
Three centuries since, and still moves heart and brain
More than the pageantries of Drury Lane.
"Tush! none but minstrels' like of sonneting,"
Sings Shakspeare's self with an ironic ring.
Minstrels at least will thank you; for the rest
Who have not time or heart for the Great Quest
After the Secret of the Sonnets, these
May dip and taste where there 's so much to please
Both student bee and social butterfly;
Whilst all will track with grateful heart and eye
Your slaughtering of that colossal Sham
Egregious Donnelly's Great Cryptogram!

SERMONS FOR ALL SECTS. By Caleb D. Bradlee, Senior Pastor of the Church at Harrison Square, Boston, Mass. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, pp. 283. Boston: W. B. Clarke & Co.

We have in this volume twenty-eight discourses largely imbued with spiritual thought, and liberal and progressive views of the past, present and future of mankind. Among the subjects are "Holy Trifles," "Failures and Anticipations," "The Mount of Transfiguration," "The Importance of the Present Hour," "Everything Uncertain," and "Death Impossible." We can in no better way convey to our readers an idea of the author's general style and trend of thought than by quoting from his treatment of the subject last mentioned a few passages. He says:

"There is no such thing as death; and the greatest mistake of our age, and of all ages, has been the very thought of the possibility of death, the admitting for a moment that anybody or anything could be destroyed, the inherent falsehood that says, He, or she, or it, is dead. For, when God created the world, He shut out the possibility of decay; the very name of God is life, and we dethrone our God the moment we allow of extinction. Change, transition, promotion—anything, everything, except an end."

Continuing, Mr. Bradlee instances himself standing by a body from whence the spirit that once gave it life had fled. There is no light in the eye, no smile upon the face, no grasp of the hand, no motion; all is stillness—oh, how still! and then follows this passage:

"The light in the eye is gone; but was it the light in the eye we loved, or behind the eye, shining through the eye, using the eye simply as a servant, a medium, and a transmitting power? No smile on the face? Yes; but was the smile on the face, or did the face reflect the smile? No grasp of the hand? Yes; but did the hand make the grasp, or a personality behind the hand that willed the salutation? No motion? Why, of course, no motion, for the motion was not in the body except by the order of the person that has left the body, and taken another and a better form, and given up the old form that through its aid more life may come to the ground, trees, flowers, air and everything. It is all life; life given to nature, a higher life gone to God, and nothing really lost, only changed, and changed for the better evermore. . . . In this way of looking at the matter, funeral services become salutations to heaven in behalf of the new-comers that are entering, one by one, into the city of our God; and congratulations to Nature that all the time rich donations are poured into her treasury, by which the earth is perpetually renewed, enriched and glorified."

The author argues that even nations, though they seemingly disappear, do not; they are on earth still in new, better and holier form, and the races of to-day are the great-grandchildren of the races of the past. "You and I," he says, "have something in our bones and blood of Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Judea, Phœnicia, India, and Persia. . . . So that, in a certain philosophical sense, I am not only an American, but a Roman, a Grecian, a Persian."

His belief in the immortality of all things is finely expressed in an allusion to Nature:

"Nature changes all the time. Yes: but Nature never dies. Do those leaves that you tread under your feet on an October or November day, perish? Are they annihilated? Is their work done, and is our farewell to them a finality? Oh, no! they will go into the hungry earth, and through many changes, at last will fall into your hands in the shape of a luscious peach or rosy apple or juicy pear, or else as a violet or rosebud or japonica will bless your eyes, cheer your heart, and somehow spiritually say, 'We do not die, we have never perished: We are blessing the world forever and ever; and like you, oh mortals, we are immortal.'"

The truth set forth in this, the closing passage of this discourse, our readers will fully endorse; it is an idealism with many, but with a Spiritualist it is an ever-present and enduring fact:

"We all of us have dear ones watching us from the other side of the river; and to-day let them come at our summons, in holy troops, to receive our salutations, invisible, but real; absent, but present: removed, but promoted; called dead on earth, called angels in heaven; loving us better than ever before, caring for us more than they ever could in the flesh, praying for us all the time, and waiting to carry our souls up to the new home, when the bell of heaven rings, and our names are selected! All hail, beloved spirits—all hail, now and forever!"

A STRANGE CONFLICT. By John M. Bachelor. 12mo, paper, pp. 298. New York: J. S. Ogilvie.

No one who reads this book will question the propriety of giving it the title it bears. In a long-unused part of an old castle two men proceed by the light of a lantern, discovering concealed doors, removing stones from dust-begrimed walls, till they reach a doorway in front of which they pick up a scrap of paper directing them to press the palm of the hand on the middle of the fourth stone, and should the hand get cool, substitute the other so as to warm the stone. Following this order the heavy door swings open and reveals a long passage, along which they advance until they come to a massive iron-bound door, bearing marks of great age. Speculating upon how they shall open it, they hear a noise on the other side and knock. Immediately it swings open and reveals a small, luxuriously-furnished chamber, lighted by a rose-colored lamp suspended from the ceiling. Seated in an easy chair is a man, who, having asked them to be seated, says: "Gentlemen, you liberate a prisoner who has occupied this cell two hundred and forty years." He then states why he was imprisoned, by what means he had acquired the ability to live without food or drink, to pass through stone walls and associate with mankind when he chose, to repel all approach, and to instantly vanish from any place at will. He further says that the powers he possesses can be attained by any human being, and gives his reason why they are not.

With this as the basis the writer builds up a remarkable story, abounding with phenomenal events.

DAYS SERENE. Illustrated from the Original Designs of Margaret MacDonald Pullman. Engraved on Wood and Printed under the Directions of George T. Andrew. 4to, cloth. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Of the size and general style of "Nature's Hallelujah," issued by the same publishers two years since, and which won at sight the favor of holiday gift-seekers, this volume is greeted with like expressions of admiration. Its contents comprise numerous sketches on land and water illustrative of the serene days of all seasons, the spirit of which is embodied in verses from Goethe, Tennyson, Wordsworth, Lowell, Whittier and others; the verse being engraved in quaintly fantastic letters and woven in with the sketch it relates to, on superfine, heavy paper, each page 10x14 inches. The binding is in keeping with the fine artistic taste and skill of the contents, and is richly embossed in silver and black.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE: Discourses Upon Holy Scripture. By Joseph Parker, D. D. Vol. IX. 8vo, cloth, pp. 360. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

The author reaches in this the first and second book of Chronicles, annotating such passages as he judges worthy of treatment. He is certainly to be credited with an industry and zeal in the pursuance of so formidable a work.

SPIRIT WORKERS

IN THE

HOME CIRCLE.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHIC NARRATIVE OF PSYCHIC PHENOMENA IN FAMILY DAILY LIFE EXTENDING OVER A PERIOD OF TWENTY YEARS.

BY MORELL THEOBALD, F. C. A.

Some of the most astonishing phenomena in the history of Modern Spiritualism are recorded in this volume, the descriptions of which are given with a marked degree of fidelity to detail and effort to corroborate their truth by unimpeachable testimony. They include independent writing in various languages, on walls and ceilings, in closed apartments and on note books in locked desks; lighting of lamps and fires; filling of kettles with water, and making preparations for breakfast, even to cooking food, making tea and "laying the table"; organ playing with no one visibly present; materialization and dematerialization of forms and fabrics, bringing of flowers, ringing of bells and movements of physical objects. Fac-Similes are given of various writings, one of them in Greek, with a translation. The book covers a period of twenty years, and of each of the phenomena above specified, together with others, numerous instances are narrated.

The author says that the book has been written in the intervals of a busy professional life, which fact has proved of advantage; for, while as careful as possible not to be carried away by enthusiasm, or by imagination, in a region wherein there is much scope for their action, the disjointed method of working he was compelled to adopt operated as a protection against a surrender to mere fantasy.

Post-Mortem Confessions:

Being Letters Written Through a Mortal's Hand by Spirits Who, When in Mortal, were OFFICERS OF HARVARD COLLEGE: With Comments by ALLEN PUTNAM, A. M., Author of "Natty, a Spirit," "Bible Marvel-Workers," "New England Witchcraft Explained by Modern Spiritualism," "Agassiz and Spiritualism."

This volume contains several letters written by spirits who, while in mortal, were officers of Harvard College, and now freely write out confessions that they were wrong in making that far-famed attack upon Modern Spiritualism in 1857 miscalled The Harvard Investigation. These letters are to be so valuable as history in future times that they merit a place in every family library, deserve to be carefully read now, preserved and handed down to posterity. They came forth in response to letters written by a graduate from that college, who was the personal friend of those officers, and yet their contestant at the time of the sham investigation. He supplements the correspondences with his views of the timeliness, aims and operations, present and prospective, of Modern Spiritualism itself. It is a unique and instructive work, by one thirty-four years a Spiritualist and eighty-four a mortal.

Editorial Misconceptions.

The ignorance and misconception of the average secular journalist regarding Modern Spiritualism and everything relating thereto, even after forty years of exposition, is often something marvelous; but we find in a recent issue of the Washington Post an exhibition in this line that is quite phenomenal and monumental. In commenting upon the alleged expose by the "Fox sisters" in New York and Boston, that journal indulges in the following extraordinary outburst of historical wisdom:

"Spiritualism is the last of the great religious movements of the world, and its founder was or is Margaret Fox Kane and her sister Kate, or Katie, as she was generally known. They were to Spiritualism what Confucius was to the Chinese religion, what Mohammed was to Islamism, what Buddha was to Buddhism, what Christ was to Christianity. On their words and works the faith was founded, and it has grown until almost every land has its disciples among its people. So with the other religions. But now comes the startling difference. Confucius, Mohammed, Buddha, Christ, died in their faith and made it glorious. The Fox sisters live to come before the world and pronounce their faith and their works lies and shameful frauds, to denounce their followers, and to ask forgiveness of God and man for their infamous deceit. It is the only instance on record of the founder of a great sect living to condemn and deny its tenets. Even Tom Paine and Voltaire died believing in their disbeliefs."

The idea of classing the Fox sisters with Confucius, Buddha, Mohammed and Christ as "founders of a great religious movement" is something wholly original and stupendous! The astute editor should have secured a patent for this idea at once, as the most original and marvelous invention of the century. It would probably have puzzled him, however, to specify in his "claim" what great "religious" or even moral truths these sisters have ever discovered, or announced, or advocated before the world as the basis of a great religious movement. That Spiritualism, as a movement, embodies and is founded upon grand moral and religious truths of the most vital, potential and far-reaching character—in fact, all the truths that are embodied in all systems of the past—is an undoubted fact; but that the discovery, demonstration, elucidation, or promulgation of these moral and religious truths has in any marked degree depended on, or been furthered by, the Fox sisters, it would be difficult to show.

They are entitled to all the credit that belongs to them, and this they have received in unstinted measure. But they did not even originate the "rappings" which called the attention of a startled materialistic world to the fact that we are surrounded by a host of invisible intelligences. These rappings had been heard in sporadic instances, and in various parts of the world, long before the Foxes were born; and when these sounds broke out in the little house at Hydesville, without any conscious agency on the part of these children, and to the terror and discomfiture of the whole family—as is proved by the fullest testimony, and affirmed by the sisters themselves for forty years—the chief part they had in the matter was the discovery by one of them that the invisible cause of the raps was an intelligent being, that "could both see and hear"; whence followed the adoption of a code of signals by means of which intelligible communication was established.

For this discovery the Fox girls should have all the honor that is due them. But they did not originate, and had no monopoly of the "raps." These soon extended to various parts of the country, and were heard in the homes of many people who had no connection with or personal knowledge of the Foxes, manifesting everywhere the same intelligence, and making the same claim to be the product of excarnated spirits. But this original clumsy mode of communication by raps was speedily superseded by more expeditious methods, and in time, through numberless channels, a flood of light and thought was poured upon awakened humanity.

The moral, spiritual and religious truths thus promulgated from the spiritual world, through countless instruments, constitute the real foundation of Spiritualism as "a great religious movement." These truths have been to but a very small extent, if at all, set forth through the agency of the Fox sisters; much less are they in the least degree dependent upon the word or authority—the "faith" or the "works"—of these sisters. Herein Spiritualism differs essentially from what is alleged of the other great religious movements above cited. It has no human founder. Hence the defection of these sisters, or of a hundred other instruments who have been similarly used, can have no appreciable or lasting effect upon the great movement itself. Its origin and its motive-force are far above and beyond all such fallible agencies. Judas, one of the chosen apostles of Christianity, betrayed his Master to death for thirty pieces of silver; and Peter, though selected to be the "rock" on which the Church should be built, denied with an oath any knowledge of the man Jesus. Yet these defections did not destroy a single truth which the Nazarene or his disciples had taught, or prevent its spread in the world. They only afforded occasion for a momentary triumph and jubilation of the "powers of darkness," like that we now see repeated in our own day, but which was then speedily followed by a pentecostal "outpouring of the spirit," in new forms and with more potent demonstrations, such as we shall no doubt witness in due time if we possess our souls in patience.

The Post concludes its sage observations with the following remarkable piece of materialistic advice:

"The dead are gone and the resurrection is not yet. The world is too busy for that now. It will come soon enough, and Spiritualism will find its greatest work in getting the living ready, rather than in disturbing those who have given over living."

What sort of a notion this editor can entertain respecting "the dead," who have "given over living," and yet are liable to be "disturbed" by Spiritualism, or Spiritualists, before the proper time for "resurrection," it is difficult to conceive. Let us assure him, on the basis of all we know of Spiritualism, that there is not the slightest occasion for anxiety on that score! On the contrary, Spiritualism proves the truth of what Jesus told the Sadducees of his time, that "the dead are raised"—not that they shall be, at some far-off resurrection day. The ancient patriarchs, he affirmed, were then "living." They whom this editor imagines to be "dead" and to have "given over living" are resurrected already, and more alive than ever. It is, in fact, they who, through Modern Spiritualism, are seeking to "disturb" him, and such as he—to awaken them from the materialistic stupor in which they are dreaming, to a knowledge of the spiritual realities with which they are environed thus getting them "ready" for a truer life here and a happier one hereafter.

Verily, while such crude notions as those exhibited above prevail among conductors of our leading secular journals, there is urgent need for the enlightenment which Spiritualism brings.

Facts About Land and Water.

In the course of his eight current lectures in Boston on the "Effect of Geographical Conditions on Life," Professor Shaler discussed the effect of geographic development on organic life, and the geographical history of the continents. He called attention to the important fact that the difference between continents and mountains lies in the fact that mountains are sharp, while continents are very wide, triangular masses, pointing in every case toward the south pole. The higher forms of life are found on the surface of the land; and the existence of all life on the earth depends upon the constant presence of water on the surface. Organic bodies, in fact, are all of them to be considered as water engines driven by solar heat. Birds, insects and the higher forms of plants are limited to or dependent on the land.

In the formation of land volcanoes exert a large influence. Essentially they are outbreaks of steam under a high pressure, the lava and ashes being merely incidental. Beds of sand and mud, containing a small per cent. of water, are gradually forced down by the accumulations above them, the lower layers becoming thus covered with a water-tight and non-conducting blanket. The heat of the interior of the globe finally converts the water of these now deep layers into steam, whose pressure finally overcomes the resistance above, with the result of a volcanic eruption. No such thing as a general submerging of the land ever took place, since in such a case all land-life would have disappeared. This latter statement of the Professor is a bold one, in the face of the Hebraic record which all good Christians are required to believe in—ark and all!

The speaker laid peculiar emphasis on erosive action, and the importance of this action and the attendant solution of mineral substances in water. The ocean contains, he said, nearly, if not quite, all substance found in rocks, in either mechanical or chemical solution; and consequently in the course of time the copper bottoms of ships collect and alloy with themselves enough silver from sea water to make it profitable to extract it. Lead, gold and other mineral elements of the rocks are likewise held in solution as chlorides and other salts. The very fact that the sea is occupied by a great variety of plants and organic growths, is additional evidence that it is not clear and pure, like a mountain stream.

This idea of matter held in solution by the sea-water is suggestive and confirmatory of the reports given by returning spirits through mediums concerning that larger ocean, the atmosphere, which surrounds our planet; these revenant spirits have from the first declared that all the elements known to material life on earth are in tenuous existence in the air around us, and can be utilized by those in the higher life who possess a knowledge of the chemical laws necessary for the purpose—as seen in the phenomena of materialization, independent slate-writing, etc.

Meanness Extraordinary!

The following paragraph from the New York Tribune, which we find going the rounds of the press, illustrates the "Regular" methods so completely that we transfer it to our columns as an evidence of what the Allopaths will do when they have the power. The Tribune is right in its query as to "small business":

"A druggist in this city was recently fined $60 for prescribing some simple remedy for a woman who came into his shop and complained of being ill. The charge was that he had practiced medicine without a license, and the County Medical Society caused his prosecution. Of course it is plain that it is the physician's duty to prescribe medicine, and the pharmacist's to prepare it, but to prohibit druggists from giving advice to customers who complain of trifling ailments is to subject poor people to a needless and cruel hardship. On the whole, is n't the County Medical Society in rather small business when it engages in a crusade like this?"

Tinkering Legislation.

There is ample time between this and the approaching session of the Massachusetts Legislature to pay the serious consideration which is its due to this vital subject, all the more vital since it has developed into a public nuisance, of tinkering the laws merely because of a Legislative meeting. The natural inquiry arises in many minds—suppose the Legislature should for once decide that it is better to do nothing, and as soon as possible thereafter adjourn and disperse? Would there be any special imperilment of the public peace and security in consequence? We sincerely wish the experiment could be tried just for once, and the results carefully noted. Among the numerous legislative experiments that are likely to be tried again is the oft-repeated effort of certain medical zealots to obtain the passage by the Massachusetts Legislature of a law to prohibit all but the self-styled "regular" physicians from exercising the gift of healing. This is the very kind of work which is rightly called "law tinkering." It has nothing to do with justice or equal rights, but merely undertakes in the most arbitrary and despotic manner to say to a specially-favored class, who themselves press for the legal bestowment of the privilege, that they only shall have the right to cure and relieve the ailment of all the rest, in spite of the notorious fact that they more frequently fail of doing both than otherwise. Well may the outspoken Minneapolis Tribune say that the curse of our democratic system is "law-making." It adds with equal truth that everybody wants to go into the law-manufacturing business, and that the business presents the spectacle of a curiously one-sided industry.

The ratio of supply and demand in this business it regards as an inverse one. All are eager to produce, but none to consume. The fewer new laws needed, the greater the increase in the output of the ever-grinding mills of legislation. It ranks the case as fairly one of the most serious political diseases of our time. "What an ocean of speeches and talk have not the parliaments of our century produced! What a countless number of laws have they not inflicted upon the suffering nations! Yet we profess ignorance of the true causes of the appalling increase of insanity and other forms of mental aberration or debility." The case is felicitously labelled rabies legislandæ. The danger is that our civilization will be crushed and buried under the mountain of laws it is piling up. And lest the excuse for persisting in this fatal work should be taken away, a few men are trying to switch off legislation in the direction of their own pecuniary interest, under the plea of curing bodily ills! Rabies, indeed!

The Christian Scientists.

According to the testimony of the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette, as well as of others, not only the "regular" physicians, but the modern army of "Christian Scientists," "mind curers," and others of their ilk have reaped golden harvests from the weak nerves and similar ailments which characterize the present state of society. It says that Boston would be thunderstruck if the names of the believers and dabblers in these modern cults should be published. The wife of one of our most prominent and wealthy men, says the Gazette, has become so fascinated and involved in the theory of the "Christian Scientists" that she no longer takes any interest in church work, and is the cause of great grief to her husband. She made a prolonged visit to Europe with a view to her cure, but that did not avail to wean her from her questionable beliefs. If her child were to fall ill, she would not consent to have any physician see or prescribe for it.

"Very likely"—the Gazette reflects—"weak women, with nervous temperaments, can be assisted and cured by such means, if there be no organic trouble; but when influential and sensible women are so led away, it is time that some outcry should be made and that the public be warned of the spread of these new and sometimes dangerous doctrines." Contrasting one class of women with another, it states that the number of women in Boston who have to work early and late, day in and day out, for their livelihood ought to put society-idlers and busy-bodies to shame. These women never have a chance to discover whether they have nerves or not. They could as easily make a voyage to the moon as be able to pass hours daily on a sofa or bed. Only too often do they know that they are ill, but there is no chance for them to rest or even to groan by the way; they must keep in harness till they drop.

Happy are these, however, in being safe from the reach of the "Mind Curers" and their ilk. Their very slavery to work—sad as it is—is their most effective protection. All things have their compensating side, and this is their peculiar and satisfying compensation. If ever there was a will-o'-the-wisp theory sought to be applied to practice, it is this modern "Christian Scientist" fallacy.

Independent Slate-Writing.

We understand that Mr. C. E. Watkins is having wonderful success in diagnosing disease by independent slate-writing, and by occult telegraphy. He is associated with a talented physician of this city, it is said, thus combining his wonderful psychological powers with the best of medical talent. Under these circumstances no wonder he is having good success in eradicating disease. His address is 107 Falmouth street, Boston.

☞ Thousands, no doubt, of people who are not subscribers, read THE BANNER each week. They are the borrowers! An old lady in a small New England village (who was many years ago a subscriber,) said to us with apparently great satisfaction, "Why, you do n't know how much my BANNER is appreciated in our village. A dozen people here borrow and read it every week; sometimes it is called for before I have an opportunity to look at it myself; and when it is returned it is nearly worn out." We replied that we were gratified to know the paper was so highly appreciated. But on subsequently visiting the periodical dépôt we asked the proprietor how many BANNERS he sold each week. His reply was, "We had a regular call for twelve last year, but no purchaser this season." His last year's patrons had been borrowing the old lady's copy, it seems! When we explained the matter to her, she was so aggrieved (she being a devoted Spiritualist) that she had been the direct means, although unconsciously, of cutting off twelve patrons, that she left us fifty dollars by her will!

☞ "Of all the materializing mediums I have seen," says Judge Cross of New York, "Mrs. Moss is the most satisfactory, owing to the perfect ease with which the forms converse with their friends, making sure of their identity."

The Banner of Light

Is all that it claims to be. It is a true exponent of the Spiritual Philosophy of the nineteenth century.

It has outlived calumny both from within and without our ranks. Its nearly thirty-two years of existence is proof of this. It circulates in every civilized country.

Since its advent quite a number of other papers devoted to the Cause have sprung up and ceased to exist, while THE BANNER has continued, after passing through multitudinous vicissitudes, because of its faithfully doing the work for the denizens of the spirit-world, who planned its publication. This is well known to our older patrons; but as a new generation of readers has come upon the stage, who are not conversant with the facts, we feel to briefly advert to them now, and to further say that the MESSAGE DEPARTMENT, which was inaugurated by a band of devoted spirits—(the free meetings at which the spirit-messages are given were established at the same time)—has been continued consecutively from the issuance of the first number of this paper to the present.

Thousands of decarnated individuals have at these meetings and through this Department reported—men, women and children, the great majority of whom we never knew or heard of—nineteen-twentieths of which messages have been verified, proving beyond doubt the direct return of the spirit, under proper conditions—thus establishing the fact, through demonstrable proof, of the immortality of all mankind.

All true Spiritualists should become personally interested in the Message Department, knowing as they do how anxious their spirit-friends are to have this Department continued. The friends of the Cause, therefore, are earnestly invited to render this establishment all the pecuniary aid within their power.

Obituary.

We are in receipt of a letter from Barcelona, Spain, under date of Dec. 3d, 1888, announcing the demise of DON JOSE M. FERNANDEZ COLAVIDA, founder, editor and proprietor of La Revista de Estudios Psicologicos. He was the founder and ex-President of the society of "Friends of the Poor," of Barcelona; founder of the society of Mutual Succor; honorary member of many scientific societies, both in Spain and in foreign countries; honorary president of the First International Spiritual Congress and of its Permanent Commission, and the most indefatigable propagandist of Spiritualism in Spain. He was born on the 19th of March, 1819, and departed for the spiritual life at 12 o'clock, noon, Dec. 1st, 1888. His body was buried on the 2d.

"Why I Became a Spiritualist."

We shall reprint next week, by permission of Allen Thorndyke Rice, Esq., editor, an important paper titled as above which appeared in The North American Review for December, '88. It is from the scholarly pen of A. E. Newton, of Arlington, Mass., and has by him been revised and corrected for our columns.

☞ At this time when there is so much bickering in our ranks, we feel to call attention to the closing remarks of Prof. W. F. Peck, in the grand address entitled "The Science of Immortality," delivered by him at the Cassadaga Lake Camp-Meeting of Spiritualists last August, and published in full in THE BANNER. He said:

"As love is the bond that unites all life, all intelligence, the underlying principle upon which all progress, all happiness is based, eternal life whispers to man: 'If thou wouldst attain to the highest seats in the temple of spiritual progress, thou shouldst love thy fellow-man; let justice and charity be thy watchwords; let good deeds be thy armor, and thus, when thou comest into thine inheritance, thou shalt have cause to rejoice that "though a man die, he shall live again."'"

Is it not quite time, we seriously ask, that this bond that unites all life—the bond of love—be more fully adhered to by Spiritualists everywhere? We should sink all minor discords in the one grand effort to promote the interests of the Spiritual Cause, to the end that superstition and bigotry give place to holy communion with those who have passed to spirit-life.

☞ The Popular Science Monthly (so-called) leads off in its last number with a paper on "The Psychology of Deception," by Prof. Jastrow of the University of Wisconsin. The closing sentence reads thus:

"With the spread of education, with the growth of the capacity to profit by the experience of others, with the recognition of the technical requisites that alone qualify one for a judgment in such matters, with a knowledge of the possibilities of deception and of the psychological processes by which error is propagated, the soil upon which Spiritualism and kindred delusions can flourish will be rendered unfit."

There! intelligent reader, what do you make of such a sentence? It is, in our estimation, a mere jumble of words, showing to what straits bigots resort to cast obloquy upon the grand facts that underlie the Spiritual Philosophy of the nineteenth century.

☞ Senator Hoar presented in the United States Senate last week a petition signed by 3,228 citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of a constitutional amendment which will prohibit the interference of any religious sect with the system of common public schools. The petition is the expression of a late public gathering of citizens of Boston, held in Faneuil Hall, and now asks the Senate to speedily frame such constitutional amendment for submission to the Legislatures of the several States for their approval.

☞ The London Times libel suit is drawing its slow length along. It has just been ascertained that Mr. Walters, who has been supposed to be the proprietor, possessed only one-sixteenth share of that paper, and that the ownership was divided among one hundred individuals. If this is the case, it is no wonder that the Times is losing its old-fashioned grip. "When a newspaper once finds itself distributed that way, it has struck a snag that will do it a great injury in the end," says the Boston Evening Record.

☞ Mr. J. W. Fletcher will lecture in Berkeley Hall, Berkeley street, this city, on Sunday, Dec. 30th, at 2:45 P. M., before the Independent Club. Subject: "Spiritualism: the Record of 1888."

☞ A letter from Cortland Ball, St. Louis, Mo., will be published next week

Lyman C. Howe

Closed his highly-successful engagement at the First Spiritual Temple, corner of Newbury and Exeter streets, Boston, on Sunday, Dec 23d, with a lecture on the Atonement—a brief abstract of which we shall publish next week.

Mr. Howe is, we understand, expected at Taunton, Mass., next Sunday.

Sunday, Dec. 30th, at 2:45 P. M., Mr. Caswell will be the medium to officiate at the Temple.

Mrs. H. S. Lake will resume her ministrations at the Temple the first Sunday in January. She is a favorite with the best minds wherever she goes, and deserves all the praise she receives.

☞ We are in receipt of a letter from E. J. Huling, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., (which arrived too late for use last week) in which he states that the peripatetic P-r-o-f. Starr—whose peculiar operations we have exposed for years—has of late been delivering a course of lectures, etc., in that place, intended as "death blows to Spiritualism." Some of the Saratoga papers allowed themselves to be made cats's-paws to pull out fiery "chestnuts" for the benefit of Starr, but we can assure them that his highly aerated and bombastic "yarns" as to what he has done and can do are about the only "blows" he can give to the cause. The clergymen of Saratoga and others, who pay their money to be imposed upon by this traveling mountebank, are certainly welcome to all the comfort they can obtain from Starr and his ilk. Mr. Huling says in conclusion:

"The lectures of Starr have aroused so much interest in Spiritualism that several new faces appeared at the last Sunday services. These new-comers listened attentively to the lectures of Mr. George H. Brooks, who is speaking here for four Sundays of this month. On Sunday evening, Dec. 16th, Mr. Brooks paid his respects to Starr, taking for his subject, 'Truth Crushed to Earth Shall Rise Again,' and dealt trenchant blows upon the Orthodox, who have been preaching a kind of immortality for centuries based upon old and incomplete accounts, and refuse to investigate all modern phenomena similar to those told about in their ancient records.

The society here is ending the year in good shape. Weekly socials are being held with a good attendance, and we expect soon to have a Lyceum in working order, also a Ladies' Aid Society."

Harvey Lyman also writes from Saratoga to the same effect regarding Starr, and adds:

"We are having good meetings here. Last month Mrs. Emma Paul, of Vermont, gave some very fine lectures. This month we have G. H. Brooks, of Washington, D. C., who is a fine man and a good speaker."

☞ At a meeting, Dec. 9th, in Odd Fellows Hall, San Francisco, held by Mrs. J. J. Whitney for the purpose of giving tests of spirit presence, she became controlled, says the Golden Gate, by a child, who called upon a person in the audience to speak, and when there was no response, she said: "I mean the man with the picture in his pocket of Ida." This was a wonderful test to the gentleman, he being a stranger, who said he put the picture in his pocket just before starting out, hoping the spirit might come and give him some evidence of spirit return.

☞ It is said that $800,000 have already been collected toward building a Catholic University in Washington. The bishops assert that the university will act as a bulwark against the rise of rationalism and free thought in America. We do not believe it will have any effect whatever in that direction. Rationalism and free thought have largely made this country what it is to-day—the most prosperous nation on the earth.

OBSERVER's letter from New York, which we shall print next week, will contain an account of a highly interesting and important occurrence (at Washington) in the early history of Spiritualism, which modern readers cannot fail to find of interest, while the elder ones will enjoy the reminiscence.

☞ John F. Whitney's letter concerning spiritual and other matters in Florida will appear in these columns next week.

☞ Dr. W. A. Hale, clairvoyant physician and surgeon, is located at 46 Russell street, Charlestown District, Mass.

Farewell Reception to Mrs. Ada Foye and Debut of Miss Clair Tuttle in Cleveland, O.

On Friday, Dec. 28th, at Memorial Hall, a farewell reception will be tendered Mrs. Foye, who has so successfully demonstrated the fact of spirit communion in this city the past month.

It is to be a grand affair and a double event. Miss Clair Tuttle, daughter of Hudson and Emma Tuttle of Berlin Heights, is to make her début as a dramatic reader. Miss Tuttle's character costumes are of the finest and have been made especially for the occasion, and will add greatly to the unique readings she proposes to give.

Miss Sadie Turner, the promising contralto, has kindly consented to sing, and Mrs. Chas. Van Wormer will preside at the piano.

The Council Fire.

Dr. T. A. Bland has resuscitated The Council Fire, and will continue the good work he has heretofore done for the Indian in its columns. The issue for January—the first since its suspension—is full of much matter of interest, largely bearing on the Sioux controversy now going on. Dr. Bland's views in this direction seem to be achieving—as they deserve to—wider recognition and acceptation as time goes by, and intelligent inquiry is applied to the Indian question. Those who feel to aid a good cause should send $1 to Dr. Bland, at 1121 10th street, Washington, D. C., and receive The Council Fire for one year.

"Echoes from An Angel's Lyre."

The collection of a dozen songs, with piano accompaniment, bearing the above title, cannot fail to become a familiar object in the homes of Spiritualists, and an indispensable requirement for their social gatherings. It supplies an amount of sheet music that in ordinary form would cost three dollars for a single dollar, and which has the advantage of being bound, and hence more durable and convenient for use. See advertisement.

Vaccination.

This ancient humbug has taken a new start. A Dr. James E. Reeves, of Chattanooga, claims to have discovered yellow fever microbes. Of course he will wish to vaccinate everybody with them. If this vaccination craze keeps on spreading, it will be a miracle if the "human frame divine" does not become a mass of diseases deliberately put there.

☞ The price of the book "Nature's Laws in Human Life," (308 pp.) has been reduced from $1.50 to $1.00 per copy; and that of the pamphlet entitled "An Epitome of Spiritualism and Spirit Magnetism" from 35 cents to 25 cents (postage extra). For sale by Colby & Rich at the Banner of Light Bookstore, 9 Bosworth street, Boston.

☞ Attention is called to the card of Dr. Conant, Skowhegan, Me., regarding a compound vapor bath of his own invention, for the removal of diseased conditions from afflicted humanity. He is in possession of many testimonials as to its marked efficacy.

EVOLUTION.

[An anonymous author recently sent the following to Rev. M. J. Savage, of this city.]

So you came from a monkey, you tell me?
No kinsman of mine, then, that's flat;
But 't is few who can grapple with history,
And trace such a birthright as that.

But, indeed, I 'm not over-ambitious,
And haven't the slightest desire
To take for my mother a monkey
Or call a gorilla my sire.

It strikes me that somewhere in history,
Recording creation's great plan,
We have it decided and certain,
"God in the beginning made man."

A man, not a monkey, remember,
But a being of beauty and shape;
No gorilla, or ugly baboon,
Or pitiful, chattering ape.

You may deem me both simple and foolish,
But in the beginning I see
God made man in his own upright image,
And that is sufficient for me.

Yet philosophy, ponder the mystery—
I begin where creation began;
And there, without ape or gorilla,
"God in the beginning made man."

TO WHICH HE REPLIED:

You are very sincere, madam, doubtless;
So have been people wiser than you;
And yet they have piously sneered at
What afterward proved to be true!

The poor, abused Bible has often
Been turned to a cudgel, whose blow
'T was hoped would give a quietus
To all Moses chanced not to know.

Galileo's new moons were delusions;
The earth did not move, and was flat;
And every new wonder of knowledge
Was impious, false, and all that.

But, spite of the folly thought pious,
The truth, not of man, but of God,
Still breaks through all clouds, like a sunrise
Bright alike in the star and the sod!

One line seems to you all-conclusive—
"God in the beginning made man";
But, pray, can your wisdom inform us
Just when God's beginning began?

Can you tell me why 't is not as noble
To lead life on, up through the ape,
As out of the dust, dead and formless,
The great human wonder to shape?

Sure, the ape is God's work; so contemptuous
To sneer at one part of his plan
Is hardly the best way to honor
Him who, by some process, "made man"!

When I hear foolish people whose title
To decide on so mighty a matter
Is only a prejudice pious,
I fancy I still hear the "chatter"

That hints the ape theory strongly,
But only goes far to suggest
That still there are cases remaining
Where progress has met with arrest!

Decease of Samuel E. Sewall.

Samuel E. Sewall, the venerable Boston lawyer, famous for his connection with the anti-slavery cause and his work in behalf of woman suffrage, passed away in Boston Dec. 20th, aged 90 years.

Mr. Sewall's interest in the anti-slavery cause dated from his acquaintance with William Lloyd Garrison. His generous pecuniary aid made it possible for Mr. Garrison to establish the Liberator and carry it through the first year, and up to its thirty-fifth and final volume he repeatedly helped to keep the paper afloat. He was also an important member of the New England Anti-Slavey Society formed in 1832. Early joining the Liberty party, after its formation, he was for several years its standard-bearer as candidate for governor of Massachusetts. The women of Massachusetts owe Mr. Sewall a debt that is incalculable, and by them his memory will be cherished. For nearly half a century he has labored incessantly to secure the amelioration or repeal of the laws bearing heavily against them, and has never relaxed his efforts to obtain for them equal rights of person and property, of the custody of their children and the fullest civil and political equality.

He was a life-long friend of James Freeman Clarke, of Longfellow and of Whittier, the latter of whom dedicated to "Samuel E. Sewall and Harriet W. Sewall of Melrose" his prelude to "In War Time," in his published poems, alluding to them as "friends of many years."

The funeral services were held on Sunday, Dec. 23d, at the Church of the Disciples, corner of Warren Avenue and East Brookline street, this city, being largely attended—many leaders of the anti-slavery and woman suffrage causes being present. On this occasion, in addition to a touching eulogy of the deceased by Rev. J. H. Heywood, of Melrose, Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney said:

"The voice of him who now lies silent before us has for long years past spoken to us in the cause of the right. His life speaks to us as nothing else can. He has been given the full span of life to do his work in. In his dying he dies fully ripe. In his heart was a well-spring of happiness. He had a wonderful confidence in human nature. He was never depressed by his failures in a great cause, as he was afforded an opportunity to try again. Let us give heartfelt thanks for what he has done for humanity, and let us ever bear his memory in our hearts."

Decease of Oliver Ditson.

The entering into spirit-life on the afternoon of the 21st inst. of Oliver Ditson withdrew from our midst the visible presence of one long known to the public of Boston and its vicinity. To pupils, amateurs, and professors of music in this country, and largely in others, his name has for near half a century been a household word, and will continue to be for a long time to come, though no longer, as the world judges, a participant in its activities.

Mr. Ditson took his initiatory steps in music publishing in 1832, as a partner of Col. S. H. Parker, becoming sole proprietor of the business in 1840, since which time he has applied himself with a remarkable degree of assiduity, attending personally to its minutest detail, until about fifteen months since, when illness compelled him to retire.

Though a strictly business man he was no stranger to the amenities of social life, and avoiding all ostentation, his career was marked with hundreds of acts of charity, which though not known here by any other than their grateful recipients, he has ere this found to be widely known in the world of which he is now an inhabitant.

Carrying with him to that life the traits of patient industry and unswerving integrity that distinguished him in this, he will, applying them as is unquestionably his wish to the furtherance of beneficent works, largely increase his own happiness and that of his fellows in that life and in this.

Mr. Ditson was a Unitarian. He had many opportunities to familiarize himself with Spiritualism and was favorably disposed to it, a large number of his intimate friends being Spiritualists.

SPIRITUALISM.—A friend in the country "would like to know if there is much Spiritualism in Boston." We do not know exactly, but we presume there is, if we may judge from the fact that last Sunday's Herald contained no less than thirteen notices of Spiritual meetings held on that day! This seems to show considerable liveliness. One of the lecturers, Mrs. Colby-Luther, is called "the female Ingersoll." She is a woman of ability, Liberal in her views, fearless and independent in her attacks on theology, and is blessed with so powerful a voice that she keeps all her hearers wide awake.—Boston Investigator.

Yes, Bro. Seaver is quite correct in his reply to a correspondent. There are many Spiritualistic Sunday meetings held in Boston, and in fact all over the country—as the reports in THE BANNER each week fully attest. But if the editor had examined the Globe, as he did the Herald, he would have found an equal number in the latter paper, also—all which are paid for, while this paper publishes all such notices gratuitiously. And yet the papers alluded to above frequently publish articles derogatory to the Spiritual Cause, notwithstanding the fact that our societies are composed of as respectable people as can be found in the churches.

Sanatoriums at Lakewood, N. J.

The readers of the BANNER OF LIGHT will be glad to learn that Dr. B. F. Sinclair, of Lakewood, N. J., (a well-known fall, winter and spring resort for invalids and those who need rest) has opened a small but home-like Sanatorium, where invalids can receive magnetic treatment, sun baths, massage, etc., etc. Dr. Sinclair is one of the best and most powerful of magnetizers, and has had excellent success. With his new institution, and patients under his direct care, he ought to meet with still more gratifying results. M. L. H.

To the Editor of the Banner of Lrght:

If it is in order I would like to suggest to the readers of THE BANNER that if each could appropriate a small sum as they may be able, as a New Year's Gift to that venerable worker, WARREN CHASE, his cottage fund would be easily made up and his anxiety relieved. Respectfully. S. M. C.

It appears that they have oil kings in Russia also. The late dispatches announce that the Noble brothers, petroleum refiners at Baker, spent $2,500, and another oil king at the same place $2,000 in entertaining the czar on his way through that town not long since. Our American oil barons have as yet no czar to honor, poor things!—Texas South-West.

Twenty-five hundred pounds of nitro-glycerine contained in several magazines at or near Bradford, Pa., exploded with terrific violence on the evening of Dec. 22d. Nine persons were injured, two fatally; houses half a mile distant were demolished; window-glass and furniture were at a discount, and the worthy citizens were badly frightened.

Here is what the Medicos are reported in the daily press to have accomplished:

"The man in pursuit of health, if he has carefully followed all the medical advice offered him from professional quarters, has given up meat, vegetables, milk, tea, coffee, fruit, tobacco and most of his clothes. Now comes the news that hats, by reason of their hard margins, 'exercise a constricting influence round the head,' and compress the blood vessels of the scalp, with results of the direst character. Of a truth man is much afflicted."

The worst man in Perry County, Kentucky, is known as "Tom Smith." There are sixteen indictments against him for murder. It is said that while reputed fearless in the daytime, he is a prey to the most torturing dreams when asleep. While in jail at Hazard he frequently terrified the other prisoners and guards alike by yells and screams of horror, which he would explain when awakened by saying that spirits seemed to be after him. His terror was genuine, and too apparent to admit of question, the account goes on to say. No doubt he is thus troubled by those he murdered; and he will be troubled a great deal worse when he meets his victims face to face in spirit-life.

THE FATE OF THE RED MAN.

Hark! what murmurs arise from the heart of those mountainous deserts!
Is it the cry of the Foxes and Crows, or the mighty Behemoth,
Who, unharmed, on his tusks once caught the bolts of the thunder,
And now lurks in his lair to destroy the race of the red man?
Far more fatal to thee and thy race than the tread of Behemoth,
Lo! the big thunder-canoe, that steadily breasts the Missouri's
Merciless current; and yonder, afar on the prairies, the camp-fires
Gleam through the night; and the cloud of dust in the gray of the daybreak
Marks not the buffalo's track, nor the Mandan's dexterous horse-race;
It is a caravan, whitening the desert where dwell the Camanches!
Ah! how the breath of these Saxons and Celts, like the blast of the east wind,
Drifts evermore to the west the scanty smokes of thy wigwams. —Longfellow.

THE NEW VERSION.—The revision of the Old Testament has revived the hopes of some people who expect to have things smoothed for them all through this life. It was this interesting fact that induced Shuttle to attend church on Sunday. "How did you like the sermon?" inquired a friend, as he passed out of the vestibule. "Never was so disgusted in all my life. Why, the man took 'Thou shalt not steal' for his text." "That's a good text." "It 's the same old text. So remarked the learned Greek, long before the Nazarene martyr said, "Lay up your treasures in heaven"; and both are endorsed by Modern Spiritualism, which —proving that the real man survives the wreck of the body, and that the possessions valued in the mortal world go not with him—teaches him to seek to accumulate the spiritual wealth of good actions done, which will float with him into a serene harbor beyond the storms of time.

MODERN LONDON.—The metropolitan police district of London comprises 687 square miles, within which there are about 4,900,000 inhabitants. It contains more Roman Catholics than Rome itself, more Jews than the whole of Palestine, more Scotchmen than Edinburgh, more Welshmen than Cardiff. It has 1000 ships and 9000 sailors in its port every day. It has a birth every four minutes, a death every six minutes, and an average of eight accidents a day in its 7000 miles of streets. It builds 28 miles of new streets and 9000 new houses every year. It has over 200,000 habitual criminals, and its beer-shops and gin-houses, if placed continuously side by side, would extend over 75 miles. There are delivered in its postal districts in a year 250,000,000 letters.

A curious letter written by Tennyson in 1874 has just come to light, in which the Laureate declares that from boyhood he has had experience of "a kind of waking trance." The letter asserts emphatically that the spirit of the writer is capable of transferring itself into another existence; that it is not only real, clear, simple, but that it is also infinite in vision, and eternal in duration. For, he continues, that when he comes back to "sanity" he is "ready to fight for the truth" of his experience, and that he holds it—the spirit, whose separate existence he thus repeatedly tests—"will last for æons and æons." Tennyson has never been heretofore identified with Spiritualism, but this utterance suggests a clearer interpretation of the well-known mystic lines in section xcv. of "In Memoriam," beginning with "The dead man touched me from the past,

And, all at once, it seemed at last
His living soul was flashed on mine."

"Brick" Pomeroy returned from London in November, where he made arrangements to raise all the money required to complete the Atlantic-Pacific Railway Tunnel in Colorado. From this time on he will devote more attention to his paper, Pomeroy's Advance Thought, $1.00 a year, and during the coming year will fully explain why the Democrats are so often defeated and the Republicans come again in power. In his publicly-stated prophecy that Grover Cleveland could not be re-elected, he proved himself acquainted with the drift of public sentiment, even if he gave offence by so doing. Advance Thought is a free lance, and one with a long reach, and well filled with most interesting matter. In it appears, with each number, a long chapter of the life-experiences of "Brick" Pomeroy. Those for the coming year will be descriptive of the rows, riots and ruptures he was in with his paper, the LaCrosse Democrat, during the war, and will be red-hot reading. Send $1.00 to M. M. Pomeroy, 234 Broadway, New York, and for it receive Pomeroy's Advance Thought for one year, and be sure to save every number.

The Lyceum Fair.

The Fair held in Berkeley Hall the last week was a success, and if earnest service on the part of the workers will accomplish wonders, this Fair was no exception to the general rule. It seems as though circumstances were against us in certain directions—such as the weather—yet the Lyceum came out with flying colors, and whatever has been accomplished has been done by members of the Association and parties who are not Spiritualists.

Among the list of Boston firms who donated largely are Shepard & Norwell, Houghton & Dutton, Macullar, Parker & Co., Horace Partridge, W. S. Butler & Co., Jones, McDuffy & Stratton, N. G. Woods's Sons, Walter Lowney and others. To all who so kindly assisted in helping the cause along we return our kindest thanks; rest assured, friends, we appreciate your kindness.

The net result of the Fair was $368.00. May the new year bring to the Lyceum Association all it so richly deserves.

C. P. LONGLEY.

This book is nicely gotten up, printed on fine paper, sheet-music size, neatly bound in boards, and is embellished by a finely executed title page, the symbolical picture of which was depicted to Mr. Longley by his friend, the late Dr. S. B. Brittan, many years ago. The work contains twelve choice and original songs, three only of which have before appeared in print. Its contents are as follows:

"Only a Thin Veil Between Us."
"There are Homes Over There."
"Mother's Love Purest and Best."
"Open those Pearly Gates of Light."
"They 'll Welcome Us Home To-morrow."
"All are Waiting Over There."
"On the Mountains of Light."
"In Heaven We 'll Know Our Own."
"Glad that We 're Living Here To-day."
"We 'll All Meet Again in the Morning Land."
"The Angel Kisseth Me."
"We 'll All be Gathered Home."

The book is now on sale at this office, and beside being a choice and appropriate work for the parlor of every singing person in the land, will be found a suitable holiday gift for friends.

Message Department.

FREE SPIRITUAL MEETINGS.

These highly interesting meetings, to which the public is cordially invited, are held at the Hall of the Banner of Light Establishment,

ON TUESDAYS AND FRIDAYS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK P. M.

The Hall (which is used exclusively for these meetings) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely.

MRS. M. T. SHELHAMER-LONGLEY will occupy the platform on Tuesday afternoons for the purpose of allowing her spirit guides to answer questions that may be propounded by inquirers on the mundane plane, having practical bearing upon human life in its departments of thought or labor. Questions can be forwarded to this office by mail, or handed to the Chairman, who will present them to the presiding spirit for consideration.

MRS. B. F. SMITH, the excellent test medium, will on Friday afternoons under the influence of her guides give deearnated individuals an opportunity to send words of love to their earthly friends—which messages are reported at considerable expense and published each week on this page.

☞ It should be distinctly understood that the Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them to the life beyond the characteristics of their earthly lives—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the mundane sphere in an undeveloped condition, eventually progress to a higher state of existence. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers for our table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. M. T. Shelhamer-Longley.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 13th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! our Infinite Father, thou source of all love and blessing, we would come into close sympathy with thy holy spirit, and draw that sense of happiness and peace which only a contemplation of divine things can bring. We would gain instruction from thy laws, we would read the secrets of the universe, and become strong in truth and wisdom. Oh! may we join with the angels in sending forth aspirations and in receiving inspirations from the eternal fount of all knowledge. Oh! may we come into sympathy with our fellow beings and grow in harmony with each other, so that we shall join in one fraternal band of brotherhood and feel that we are indeed linked together, that we are thy children, that only one heart and one life enfolds us all, and so may we now receive the inspirations and the divine blessing of heaven, under which we may grow and expand in spiritual grace and beauty. Amen.

Charles Cleveland.

Once more, Mr. Chairman, it is my privilege to take a stand upon your platform, and to mingle with the band of spirits who operate from this place. This, to me, is a central avenue, through and by which earnest spirits may not only find communication with their friends on earth, but also come in contact with other souls of the immortal world, which contact may inspire and stimulate or strengthen those spirits in their search for knowledge. I am here to-day upon my usual mission: not to present any grand word to the world, but to bring with me spirits who are in need of the magnetic strength and light which they may find in your circle-room.

A few are under my protection to-day at this place who are in need of human sympathy; and we trust that every one will feel kindly disposed, and send out a thought of love to such unfortunate souls as are here, who, through earth's discipline, did not round out the higher parts of their natures, but who sank in weakness under the strain laid upon them; for, Mr. Chairman and friends, such sympathy and brotherly love, flowing forth from your hearts to those whom you may not see, and who nevertheless are human beings present with you from time to time, in need of a helpful thought or a kindly hand stretched out to them, will afford such assistance as you may not understand, but which is really of practical use to a spirit in search of light.

I do not propose to introduce my protégés to you this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, because it is not necessary for them to report on the mortal side, so far as coming into communication with earth's children is concerned. They have done with the things of mortality, and are now the wards of the spirit-world and its higher intelligences; they have been brought under the jurisdiction of spirits who are kindly disposed toward them, and who will help them to gain the knowledge and experience which they require, to round out more fully their own spiritual natures; but I bring them here because at this place is a sea of magnetism. You may not see or understand it, but nevertheless it is here, and when such unfortunates are brought within its atmosphere they feel renewed in spirit, stimulated in courage, and realize that they are not friendless and forlorn; consequently they speedily learn, under its influence, to reach out a hand to those who would help them, and at the same time to make a new effort for their own uprising.

Now that I am here, Mr. Chairman, and your spirit-president has kindly invited me to announce myself, I will do so by telling every friend who may care to hear of my return that I am in fraternal sympathy with each one who is engaged in a work of love for humanity, that I often come to this city to visit old scenes and seek to renew old associations in spirit, sending out what influence I possess to be used in practical ways, if possible, for those who are in need of spiritual influence. And if any friend desires to hear from me, let him send out a call from the depths of his soul, and I will respond. In the secret of his own life he may receive such impressions as I can bear, which perhaps may afford to him knowledge concerning the life which is now mine. I am Charles Cleveland.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—We will now attend to your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By Mrs. B. B. Kendrick, Cayuga, N. Y.] What is the spiritual interpretation of the passage in Job: "On the last day I shall rise out of the earth, and in my flesh I shall see God"; and the words of Jesus: "All that are in their graves shall . . . come forth"; since Spiritualists teach that the real man never enters the "earth" or a "grave," and never again has any affinity with or use for the body that decays when he becomes a dweller in the world of spirits, which event immediately follows his leaving this?

ANS.—In ancient days the belief was somewhat prevalent that the spirit of man fell into slumber at the time of death, and so remained for a long period of time. We presume that even Job himself had conceived the erroneous idea, and that he believed that as death approached the body he should fall asleep, not to awaken until summoned from his slumber by the Great Eternal, and that then he should arise again in the flesh, not only to be judged for his earthly life, but also to meet with his Creator.

The day has passed when such a belief can find root in the hearts of humanity, and therefore we do not, at the present time, hear it stated very widely that man shall sleep until the last trump calls him to judgment; but there is a great truth underlying this error, as there is a foundation for all erroneous ideas that have grown and spread, and even for old superstitions, and the truth which we find at the root of this old idea, which has been clouded and crowded upon by false conceptions of life, is this: there are spirits who do not immediately rise out of the condition of earthly life, even when death has claimed the mortal form, because they are so earthly in their tendencies and attractions, so physical in their conditions and inclinations, that they cling strongly to the material life, and although they are obliged to loosen their hold upon the external form, yet for a time they do not rise above its surroundings and its conditions.

We know it to be a fact that there are and have been spirits who do not leave the place where their bodies are confined until the mortal clay has dissolved entirely and its elements have become dissipated in the atmosphere; they seem to be bound to the spot where the organic form is laid, and cannot sever the magnetic connection between the spirit and the form until the latter has become thoroughly disorganized. Undoubtedly some thought or knowledge or intuition of this great law of material attraction may have come to the old prophets and patriarchs, and so they conceived or formulated the theory and opinion of a long period of sleep for man, from which he should be awakened at the final judgment day to receive his just deserts before a great tribunal of the Supreme Being. It is very easy for the human mind to formulate a theory or opinion, and to clothe that theory with its own imaginations and crude ideas, assuming certain thoughts and forming certain conclusions in regard to it, and thus covering up from sight or from attention the element of truth which has been the starting-point of the said theory. Undoubtedly the Nazarene himself, an inspirational teacher and a sensitive medium, impinged upon in his susceptible nature by influences from another life, learned something of this great law of which we have spoken. He understood something of the material tendencies of certain individuals on earth, and therefore he realized that it was possible for a spirit to remain tethered to the body even after the latter had yielded to the embrace of death.

What is meant by the assertion that we shall see God in the flesh? Well, it is possible for every individual to behold God not manifested as an individualized form apart and independent of all other forms and objects in life, but if the spirit becomes sufficiently sensitive and receptive to truth, it may so expand in knowledge as to take cognizance of things and objects in the universe, to study and understand them so as to behold the Supreme Spirit or the workings and manifestations of the Supreme Being while they are in the flesh, and they may also behold the Great Spirit in the flesh, as manifested in its divinity through the higher traits and attributes of humanity.

We believe the Nazarene wished to teach that, eventually, as man progresses from one stage of unfoldment to another, gaining knowledge and power, reaping a comprehension of truth, and reading the secrets and mysteries of the universe, and making them his own, he would eventually develop such a strong spirituality of nature that he himself would manifest or express even a divinity which he had drawn from the Great Infinite Spirit and Source of all Life, and which made him a part and child of that great infinite soul; and thus would God be manifested to man in the flesh.

Not for his own generation did the Nazarene speak, nor for those immediately to follow; not for the centuries close at hand did he teach and labor in the world, but for the centuries that were to come, the generations that were to follow after man had advanced in spirituality, grown in beauty of thought and of comprehension, thrown off the crude ideas and tendencies which belong to materiality alone, and developed into that strength and power which would make him understand, read and learn the laws of life, and how to operate, how to live in accordance with them, and how, in a measure, to control them for himself.

Q.—Is vocal or instrumental music desirable in a séance-room? If so, what are its effects, and which is to be preferred: vocal or instrumental?

A.—It matters not. That which creates harmony of thought and sympathy of spirit between those who are sitting for spirit-manifestations, and also between the sitters and the spirit-world, or the spiritual attendants, will assist in the operation of those spirits who come wishing to manifest. Whatever creates harmony in the séance-room will send those elements of beauty and of sweetness into the atmosphere, which may be utilized by attendant spirits in their desire to reach their mortal friends.

Vocal music, the singing of sweet and grand words, will generally draw the hearts of those who are present into close communion together, and thus there will flow forth from each one a magnetism at once uplifting and cheering, which is attractive to returning spirits. Instrumental music, also, may harmonize those who are present and evoke sweet sounds which are agreeable to attendant spirits: in short, make of the séance-room a place of beauty and of joy, where those who wish to reach their mortal friends from the unseen world will be pleased to come and make effort to accomplish some good result for humanity.

Q. By DeLass Wood, Danielsonville, Ct. Does a superabundance of electricity in my hands, and at times in my entire body, indicate a probable development of mediumship?

A. It may do so, although we have seen individuals largely charged with electrical force who have not developed any special phase of mediumship. But it is sometimes the case that a person who is so overcharged with electrical force does attract spirits who understand how to utilize this superabundance of electricity, and to make it of use in the manifestation of their power and their presence to mortal comprehension: therefore it may be that your correspondent is brought under the influence and the charge of a band of spirits looking toward his mediumistic development for a special work, and that these attendant spirits will be able to utilize that abundance of force for the manifestation of their presence, through physical movements or some external expression, which will call the direct attention of mortals to their work.

Electrical force drawn from the organic form of man may be utilized very beneficially by spirits who wish to draw the attention of the world to their existence. This electrical power may be used in the movement of physical objects, in the communication of spirits by telegraphic signals, by rappings upon pieces of furniture, or by other forms of mediumistic manifestation; so, if your correspondent feels that he is passing through a process of development, we should advise him to pay strict attention to it, to afford his spirit attendants every opportunity for the unfoldment of their work and the accomplishment of their designs, for undoubtedly they have in view the end of making converts to spiritual truth and of manifesting the power of spirit over material things.

It is sometimes the case, also, that a person possessing a superabundance of electrical force may be utilized by spiritual guides and guards, in sending out to others in mortal life some part of this great power, to stimulate them in their work, and make them strong in the flesh to overcome the ills and ailments which may affect them. If this be so in the case of your correspondent, he will find himself relieved of that over-pressure which may sometimes affect him, if following the impressions which come to his mind he pursues the work of laying on of hands to those who are affected by disease or ill health of any kind, toward whom he may be magnetically or sympathetically attracted.

Q.—[By George D. Danforth.] Does individuality ever have a beginning? and if so, will it not have an end?

A.—If individuality has ever had a beginning, it must have been so far in the remote past that we, of the spirit-world, have no record of its occurrence. We do not know when life began, when individuals first sprang into existence, or when the human entity first came forth from some abstract form or atmospheric sea of life, neither have we any records concerning these things, therefore we are justified in believing, until our knowledge increases on the subject, that individuality never began, and consequently can never end. We know, or think we have reason to know, that the human entity always did exist; not perhaps in the same condition and association as it exhibits upon this planet earth, but always as an intelligent force, always as an individualized unit, capable of unfolding from within the grandest possibilities, energies and powers. So far as we understand anything of the law of human existence, we learn that the individual is ever to press on, always increasing somewhat in power, always unfolding somewhat in energy and in expression. As man advances grade by grade in experience, he seems to be stimulated to make new effort, to expand with new growth, he puts forth higher possibilities of achievement, and so goes on, age after age, becoming more highly exhilarated as an individualized entity, more fully conscious of his being, of his own work and mission, and more highly charged with that great electrical force which he draws from the universe, which is itself life and vigor, therefore we know of no end.

We have records of individualized spirits who have lived many ages, who have passed through human experiences, have gained rounds upon rounds of human growth, but we have no record of any one such individual whose light of existence has gone out, whose own personal power has been swallowed up in any sea or atmosphere; we have no record of any such entity that has ceased to be, therefore we have the largest grounds for hope that man shall live on eternally, forever putting out new thoughts, new powers of selfhood, and forever unfolding in higher energies and grander accomplishments.

Q.—[By C. D. Miller, Stanwood, N. Y.] About nine years ago I became clairaudient, and in possession of healing power, but was obliged to discontinue its practice until three years since, when I resumed. From that time I have experienced the influence, but it has been quite weak. Should you judge that if I continue to sit it would become as strong as formerly?

A.—It may be that your correspondent has suffered some physical depletion of vitality, or nerve aura, the presence of which may be necessary for the direct work of healing which he has formerly pursued, or it may be that the spirit friends attending your correspondent have desired to change his labors, his method of labor, or his mediumistic phases of manifestation, and thus they have not utilized his magnetic forces of late as fully as before. We cannot tell just what is the solution of this case, but it can certainly do no harm for him to continue his sittings, and to seek by earnest prayerful aspiration and desire the presence and helpfulness of wise and good spirits who may be drawn to him in his work. This we should advise. We think it probable that by so doing the full amount of his vigor and magnetic usefulness may return to him, he may be able to send forth again that impartation of strength and of health to others which he desires, and which has formerly been of such service to his fellows.

Q.—To what extent is a person responsible for acts resulting from inherited proclivities to do wrong?

A.—Only to such extent as he willingly and willfully submits to and encourages the exercise of these inherited traits and tendencies. We believe that every person has a certain amount of moral responsibility, and that the violation of this responsibility will react upon himself in suffering at some time in his experience. It is true that some individuals are more weak-minded than others; they have not great moral stamina; they have not a positive will-force at their command, and therefore it is easier for them to fall under temptation and to yield to weakness. Such individuals are frequently found going astray; they have inherited this weak moral nature, and perhaps certain evil traits and tendencies, from their ancestors. They are not to blame for this inheritance. They should be encouraged and assisted by friends and associates, in every possible way, to overcome their weakness and to develop strength of character. We believe that every person has the power of developing strength of character of his own under certain conditions, but he must not only put forth all his own power, and exercise as far as possible what will-force belongs to him, but he must also be surrounded by helpful associations and congenial conditions, which will assist him to rise above the evil and to attain the good.

It is a law of Nature, one that we cannot controvert or overcome, that if man does wrong, willfully or not, he will suffer. It is a law of Nature on earth that if he violates any natural mandate he must pay the penalty; if he stretches his arm out to the fire it will burn him—he will suffer smart and pain—and it is the same in the spiritual realm. If a man stretches out his moral sensibilities into the fire of degradation it will scorch and scar him; he cannot fail to pay the penalty through suffering and pain. This is the inevitable law of human life, and ever exerts itself; and although a man has inherited his moral weakness, although he has become the victim of hereditary law, yet the time will come when his moral sensibilities will have so far unfolded and increased in power that he will see he has committed offence, and will therefore suffer contrition and pain because of such insight. However, it rests with the spirit himself whether he shall suffer without mitigation or not. If he can clearly see that he tried to do his best under the depressing conditions, if he can realize that it was not so much his own fault as that of his ancestors that he committed these wrong deeds, then will his pain be mitigated; he will try to atone for his past by helping others to rise above their lowly conditions, and in seeking to do this good work he will find the pain passing away from him, strength of mind and character will unfold within him, and peace, and at last happiness, will come.

Q.—[By A. J. Hollingsworth.] Some persons when intoxicated give indications of character entirely differing from their own. Is this a revealment of themselves usually kept concealed, or is it attributable to an independent spirit influence holding them in control and exhibiting its own peculiarities?

A.—This may be attributed to either one or the other cause of which your correspondent speaks. It may be that a person under intoxication may reveal certain traits and tendencies of his nature usually kept in subjection in his normal moments. When reason has full sway over the organism, and a sound mind controls the body, the higher tendencies and attributes of the individual are in the ascendency, and he may exhibit traits and tendencies totally unlike those which are displayed when he is under the influence of strong liquor; for at such times, when under the influence of intoxicants, the lower and baser traits and characteristics, which he may have inherited from some remote ancestor, which may have been handed down to him by pre-natal conditions and influences, exhibit themselves, and the man appears to be a very different person from what he is at other times.

On the other hand, these strange incongruities and characteristics which display themselves when a person is intoxicated, may not be the exhibition of his own mind at all; they may be caused by the close attendance of some unseen spirit. Some mediumistic natures are more susceptible to the influence and approach of invisible spirits, when under the influence of some stimulant or of some narcotic, than when in their own normal condition. The intoxicating liquor, affecting the brain structure and also the nervous organization, may bring an individual into a susceptible, negative condition, through which he is easily approached by those spirits who desire to make use of his organism, and at such times these traits and tendencies which he displays may be, and probably are, exhibitions of some foreign spirit manifesting its own characteristics in outward life.

Q.—[By Chas. S. Simmons.] Spirits in their messages frequently express regret that their friends on earth do not open the door so that they may enter. Please inform us what is implied by the term "open the door," and in what manner we can accomplish what they so deeply regret our not doing.

A.—You can close and bar the door, so to speak, of your life against spiritual approach and spiritual communication, by the influence of your own minds. By cultivating and exercising a spirit of coldness and distrust, of suspicion, and perhaps of misjudgment, against any one human being, you may create around yourselves an atmosphere which may be as hard as adamant, impenetrable by good and loving spirits. It may be that you are harsh and distrustful against the thought of spirit-return; you do not believe that the dead have the power of communicating with mortals; you do not believe it possible for those whom you have loved, whose forms you have laid away, to mingle in your homes, and in your families make their presence known.

You may like to believe this, but after all, you do not think you can be convinced; you do not see what possible evidence could be brought to convince you of this truth, and you are constantly sending out an atmosphere of doubt and distru . Your spirit-friends cannot approach you very closely when you are in such a mood; they cannot lovingly impress your mind with thoughts of their presence, or give to you any token of their continued affection for you. But while you may not do this, while you may desire and long for the presence and for the confidence of your spirit-friends, yet you may perhaps yield to a disposition of harshness, of coldness, in your outward life, toward those whom you meet; perhaps you cultivate and send forth a spirit of dislike against certain of your fellow-creatures; perhaps you are not sympathetic by nature, cheerful and kindly in disposition, and thus you create an atmosphere which is repellant to sensitive, loving spirits, who inhabit worlds of light beyond; they cannot approach you, although they desire to do you good; they are held off by your own attitude toward human kind; thus you close the door against them, bar their entrance to your lives, and they cannot come.

Yield to a loving, gentle disposition, give freely of your smiles and kindly words to your human fellows, do not stint the flow of your own gentle, loving hearts, but let the milk of human kindness go forth, and you will be well repaid, for you will not only attract to yourself congenial natures, loving friends on earth, but you will draw around you beautiful spirits from the other life, those who are tender and affectionate, who desire to bless you and lead you onward and upward. Your own friends will thus be assisted in coming to you; undoubtedly they will be able, after a time, to impress your hearts with a knowledge of their presence, and they will find the doorway of your lives wide open, so they can pass in, folding their own thoughts close to your hearts, and bringing to you peaceful influences, which will help you along with the struggles of life.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

THROUGH THE TRANCE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Mrs. B. F. Smith.

Report of Public Séance held Nov. 16th, 1888—Continued from last issue.

Freddie Warren.

[To the Chairman:] Please, sir, can I come? I was a little boy when I passed away—only seven years old—and I have been gone three years; that would make me ten now, would n't it? They teach me to say "passed out," instead of died. I know the people said I was dead. But we do n't find people dead; they only just come right through what we call the cloud, to where we are.

I want this letter to go to papa and mamma, because they do n't know very much about our coming, although they have heard that we do come right home where our own people live. Oh, sir, they had lovely flowers when I went away.

I have a teacher, just the same as I would if I had staid here and went to school. I lived in Brighton, Mass. Grandma told me not to forget to say that, else you would n't know who I was.

[Pointing into the audience.] Oh! that's a lovely lady right down there, because the spirits come to her so much. Grandma says I must n't point to be partial. I did n't mean to, only I saw so many spirits I could n't help speaking. A sweet little girl comes close to her to-day.

The children—the boys and girls—play together in the happy Summer-Land. The beautiful flowers bloom all the time; then we have what we call the crystal river, which seems like a stream of beautiful clear water running along; and the birds sing so sweetly. We do n't have any snow like you do here; it is always sunshine. Do n't you think you would be happy if you had the sunshine always and no rains?

Won't you please, sir, just to send this letter to my papa, George Warren? My mother's name is Nancy, and mine is Freddie Warren. I thank you for writing it down for me. Grandma is with me to-day, and sends love to them all, and says to tell them she is taking care of Freddie.

Sarah Ricker.

I thank God for the children! It is delightful to know that they are so happy and so well cared for in spirit-life. Many times while I dwelt in the mortal, doubts would come to me as to whether we should find our children again; but on passing over the first sight which greeted me was that of children gathering around, with bright and happy faces and arms full of flowers, strewing the path before me.

Oh! it is sweet to feel that there is companionship in spirit-life, and also that an attraction still draws us to dear ones yet left in the mortal. Let me say to you, sir, this is a noble work you are engaged in, opening channels of communication for us; for we might come, and if you did not open a door we could never make you know we were here. The beauties of spirit-life can never be half expressed by us. You must wait until you come to be spirits as we are, then you will understand for yourselves. It is a grand, a glorious truth, to know that we find our own.

Many have looked upon the face of a friend as it has lain in the casket, and said: Oh! I love to look upon it, but why did they take my dear one away? In wisdom have they been taken, dear mortals, but never in this life can you understand why it is so.

I have heard it said: "If spirits are coming, they will come to me of their own accord." Let me ask you if we should come to visit you in the flesh, and sit down and talk to you for a long time, while you merely assented, how long do you think we would stop with you? Not very long. So just turn the tables for a moment, and consider how it must be with us, who are more sensitive in the spirit form than you can be in the mortal.

I am thankful to-day that I have been given the privilege of speaking here, for there are loved ones far away in Oakland, Cal., who are waiting for a word from some dear one who has passed over. I have been here before, and the thought has come to them: "Why do we never hear anything from Sarah Ricker?" and it has been spoken many times.

Think not, loved ones, we are idle, or that we have lost aught of our affection for you. Oh! no, the old attraction still holds us to you, although we have not spoken. More enlightenment is coming; you are constantly learning; old theology is fading away, and spiritual truth is taking its place. My name is Sarah Ricker.

Daniel J. Ames.

I hardly know, Mr. Chairman, whether to make the attempt to speak in this meeting. I feel that all I can do is to acknowledge here that I was in the dark. I knew not of spirit return. I always believed that the spirits of the departed ones hovered around us, but as for anything further, I dared not think it, and so I plodded along in just about that way. I would say to all dear friends that are left, to my dear wife and children, I am aware of what has happened since I left the mortal. I know of the trouble that came into the home only a little time after my form was laid away.

Dear wife, when you were nearly prostrated with grief on account of the separation, if you could have known that I was right there it would have been a comfort to you. I attended the funeral services, and heard the words spoken over the old form. I knew, as I said, of what came to the home in a little while that we enjoyed so much; when it went up in the flames. I have been with you, and have realized all more fully than you could have told me.

In Rutland, Ill., I shall be remembered. They will say: "It cannot be possible that he would go into a Spiritualist meeting and mix with those people," for I hardly dared utter the name of Spiritualism in the mortal form. I belonged to the church, and thought that was going to sustain me all the way through.

The words that were spoken at the services were from I. Corinthians, xv:57. Now I will say to you it would have been more appreciated if they had taken the fifty-first verse. Not that I come to find fault, but to let them know that I see things differently from what I ever did in the mortal form.

I shall be remembered in Parsonfield, Me., for that was my native place. I am confident that by means of some of the friends or through some channel this message will reach my family. I want them to know I realized their sorrow, and how much they felt they needed me in the time of trouble. As they went to the hotel they said: "Oh! if father had only been here how much he could have done for us." Dear children, father was there, but not in the mortal form. I came to help you, to strengthen you through those trials. Again I must acknowledge I was in the dark. I would not have listened to the truth that spirits can communicate with mortals.

I find that heaven is a place of happiness, and that it is our privilege still to progress onward and upward.

It is hardly one year since I left the mortal life, but let me tell you I have not left the earth, by any means. I have been with the dear ones many, many times. As I entered spirit-life dear old Grandma Ames came to me, saying, Daniel, you have much to learn. I looked at her in astonishment, because I beheld her in a perfect form. I said, Grandma, you do n't look as old as you used to. She replied that the spirit never grows old. I am thankful that this opportunity of speaking has been granted to me, for I feel that some good will come from it to those who know not of spirit return; that is, they will seek to learn a little on this side. Daniel J. Ames, of Rutland, Ill.

Theodore Noyes.

I too, Mr. Chairman, am very glad to be able to speak a few words, that they may feel in the home that those who have passed out of the body are not dead. Hannah says she has been many times in the home and has spoken privately; also that Moses has given a few words, but I never have made the attempt to speak. I trust these words will reach some one in the family, and that they will learn from one and another, by putting this and that together, that we really are live people. I feel thankful to know this is a truth. I knew a little of it before I passed away, but not as much as I might have done, and therefore I am trying to learn on the other side. When we say "the other side," it seems as if it was just this side, the partition is so slight that closes you out from us. How many times has this been told you; still it is just the same with you, you do n't understand it any better for the telling.

It is a beautiful home, and never have I met a spirit that will say he wishes to return. More than that, I have seen spirits almost afraid to enter the earthly atmosphere, for fear they would not get back to the spirit-home again. So you must know that that home is attractive.

Hannah wishes to send greetings to Calvin, and say to him there are some little changes coming in the family.

In the hall, on the last Sabbath day, I tried hard, as I stood by the lady on the platform, to make myself known, but I failed. We try to do this, not so much for ourselves as for mortals, and how grand it is that the talent is given to some that they may speak for us. My name is Theodore Noyes, of Haverhill, Mass. It is many years since I passed out.

THE MESSAGES GIVEN (THROUGH MRS. B. F. SMITH)

As per dates will appear in due course.

Japan.

The Mikado has the bluest blood of any ruler on the face of the earth. The present dynasty of Japan runs back to the gods, and his Imperial Majesty is the one hundred and twenty-first Emperor of Japan. The Japanese have their history and their mythology, and the present Emperor comes from Jimmu Tenno, who was the first Mikado, and who ruled Japan six hundred and sixty years before Christ was born. This man was a descendant of the sun-goddess, and Mutsuhito, the present Emperor, traces his descent directly from him.

Japanese history gives the story of each of the one hundred and twenty Emperors between the two, and if you will think a moment you will see how far back 660 B. C. is. This was before Rome had become an empire. England was unknown even to the Romans, and hundreds of years were yet to elapse before Cæsar penetrated Gaul. The present Emperor was born in Kiota, Nov. 3d, 1852. He was declared heir apparent to the throne when he was eight years old, and he succeeded on the death of his father in 1867. He was crowned in 1868, and was married at the age of seventeen, in 1869.

China.

Probably the magnificent state of the royal baby of Spain surpasses that of any other infant of western lands, but the retinue of the Emperor of China shows how they do such things in the East. The list of his attendants was as follows: Eighty nurses; twenty-five fan-bearers; twenty-five palanquin-bearers; ten umbrella-bearers; thirty physicians and surgeons; seven cooks; twenty-three assistant-cooks; fifty servants and messengers; fifty dressers (to put on and take off the imperial clothes); seventy-five astrologers; sixteen governors; sixty priests. With thirty cooks and thirty doctors, it is perhaps a wonder that Kuang Hsu, Emperor of China, has lived to be seventeen years old.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

PAUL DILLINGHAM.

It is my privilege to verify the truth of the message, coming a few weeks ago, from PAUL DILLINGHAM. He was a resident of this place from boyhood. He passed beyond some five years ago, leaving a wife and child to mourn his loss. FAY MCFADDEN.

West Pawlet, Vt., Dec. 17th, 1888.

HARVEY SLADE AND CHARLES BRISTOL.

The communications recently published from HARVEY SLADE and CHARLES BRISTOL are both recognized here, where they were known. Harvey Slade was a Baptist minister who some thirty years ago investigated Spiritualism and gave up preaching. He officiated at Beekman Huling's funeral in 1864. Charles Bristol was a whitewasher, as he says, and is well remembered by many old citizens, who see his characteristics in the communication. E. J. HULING.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

To the Liberal-Minded.

As the "BANNER OF LIGHT Establishment" is not an incorporated institution, and as we could not therefore legally hold bequests made to us in that name, we give below the form in which such a bequest should be worded in order to stand the test of law:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto Luther Colby and Isaac B. Rich, of Boston, Massachusetts, Publishers, [here insert the description of the property to be willed] strictly upon trust, that they shall appropriate and expend the same in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient and proper for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression."

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Boston City Hospital, Dec. 11th, 1888, Mrs. Rosilla M. Manum, wife of A. E. Manum, of Bristol, Vt., in the 49th year of her age.

Sister Manum was a firm believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, and being somewhat of a medium, was fully convinced of the power of spirit return. Her many friends will miss her smiling face from Queen City Park, where she was a constant attendant from the time the camp-meetings first commenced at that place. Ever a loving, tender wife and mother, a kind and sympathetic friend and neighbor, ready to aid the sick and suffering, she will be truly missed.

Her remains were conveyed to her late home in Bristol, where the funeral was held, the discourse being delivered by A. E. Stanley of Leicester. Her sorrowing husband and son have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in their great bereavement. F. A. EMERSON.

From Malden, Mass., Tuesday, Dec. 11th, suddenly, from heart disease, Mr. Henry H. Hyde, aged 76 years.

Mr. Hyde resided in Malden more than fifty years, and served the town as Selectman, Assessor and Overseer of the Poor; he also filled many other minor offices in the town; was ward officer in one of the districts since the organization of the city. He was also for twenty years in the Government service at the U. S. Storehouses on Long wharf, Boston, also Agent of the Kennebec Steamboat Company, and when he retired from active service in that capacity, his only son, Charles H. Hyde, succeeded him. Mr. Hyde had many friends of long standing, who appreciated his worth as a man. He was remarkably active for one of his age, and was a constant attendant at the Spiritualistic meetings in Boston, being present at the Boston Temple Society meeting the Sunday previous to his exit. He was also present at the Ladies' Aid Society gathering the Friday evening previous. A good honest man has gone to his reward, and joined loved ones gone before. COM.

THE DISAPPOINTED.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

There are songs enough for the hero,
Who dwells on the height of fame;
I sing for the disappointed,
For those who missed their aim.

I sing with a tearful cadence
For one who stands in the dark,
And knows that his last, best arrow
Has bounded back from the mark.

I sing for the breathless runner,
The eager, anxious soul,
Who falls with his strength exhausted
Almost in sight of the goal;

For the hearts that break in silence
With a sorrow all unknown,
For those who need companions,
Yet walk their ways alone.

There are songs enough for the lovers
Who share love's tender pain;
I sing for one whose passion
Is given all in vain.

For those whose spirit-comrades
Have missed them on the way,
I sing with a heart o'erflowing
This minor strain to-day.

And I know the solar system
Must somewhere keep in space
A prize for that spent runner
Who barely lost the race.

For the pain would be imperfect,
Unless it held some sphere
That paid for the toil and talent
And love that are wasted here.

Holiday Sentiments of the American Pharisee.

We thank Thee that we are not as other nations are. We have the biggest territory; it stretches from the Canadian shore to the Gulf of Mexico, with a prospect of including Canada on the north and Mexico on the south; it stretches from Sandy Hook to the Golden Gate, with a prospect of including Cuba on the east and the Sandwich Islands on the west. We could put all Great Britain into one of our interior Western States and have room to spare. How big we are!

We have the biggest prairies, the biggest mountains, the biggest natural watercourse, the biggest waterfall, the biggest cyclones and blizzards, and some premonitions of the biggest earthquakes. We have the biggest wheat fields, the biggest cotton crop, the biggest coal and gold and silver yield, the biggest oil wells and the biggest monopoly to control them. We have the biggest railroad systems, the biggest telegraph system, the biggest bonanza farms, the biggest corporations, the biggest Trusts, the biggest labor organizations, and a remote prospect of the biggest kind of war between the two. We have not yet the biggest populations, but we shall have by 1988; nor the biggest cities, but when we have added Brooklyn and its suburbs and Jersey City and its suburbs to New York City and its suburbs, we have a city which promises to be as big and unwieldy as London. We have not the biggest churches, nothing yet equal to St. Paul's and St. Peter's, but we have the biggest opera-house. We do not claim the best universities, but we promise ourselves the biggest. We have a $3,000,000 one building in Worcester, a $5,000,000 one in prospect in Philadelphia, and a six or eight million dollar one organized in California. We have the biggest newspapers, if not the best; the biggest school system, if not the wisest; the biggest surplus in our Treasury; and we pay, as a nation, the biggest tobacco and drink bill.

We have a history big with events. The migratory movement which landed the Pilgrim Fathers, the Cavaliers, and the Huguenots on the Atlantic coast was the biggest migratory movement in history, measured by results; the Revolutionary War was, in its influence on the destiny of the race, the biggest revolution ever wrought. We have since fought out the biggest civil war ever fought, and buried the greatest number of brave boys in gray and in blue beneath the sod, have paid off, since, the biggest National debt and entered on the grandest epoch of the making of big fortunes. We have elections on the biggest scale; we have the biggest barbecues, the biggest processions, the biggest mass-meetings, the biggest corruption fund paid out during the campaign, and the biggest lot of public offices to be distributed as spoils to the victors at the end of it. What a country we are!

Ah, Mr. Pharisee, is there in all this a cause for such self-gratulation? Is this great Babylon that we have builded? Did we lay the prairies, build the mountains, dig the watercourses, or fill the rocks with their treasures of coal and gold and silver? Did we make the territory great? Did we or our fathers frame the institutions that have given us a history like that of no other people? Not at all. A thousand years ago King Alfred found in the Mosaic laws the germs of free institutions and sowed them in English soil. Other statesmen followed, cultivated, developed what he had started. The Magna Charta established the rights of the people as against the despotism of the kings; the constitutions of Clarendon, the rights of the people as against the despotism of the church; Simon de Montfort and his compatriots, the rights of the people as against the exclusive authority of a landed aristocracy; the English reformers, under Henry the Eighth and Queen Elizabeth, the rights of the nation to be free from foreign prince and potentate; the Roundheads, under Oliver Cromwell, the supremacy of the people represented in the House of Commons. These battles were fought on other soil than ours; these victories won by other heroes; we are not as other men are because we have a grander opportunity. We shall be a greater Nation only as we see our opportunity and make good proof of it, proving ourselves worthy of all the history which has preceded and all the possibility which may follow. —The Christian Union.

What I Saw at Cassadaga Lake.

A REVIEW OF THE SEYBERT COMMISSIONERS' REPORT. By A. B. Richmond, Esq. Boston: Colby & Rich. 8vo, cloth, pp. 244. $1,25, postage free.

This is a scathing criticism on the absurd and unjust report of the Seybert Commission. Lawyer Richmond brings to bear his methods of procedure before juries—marshals the evidence in overwhelming detail, sums it up, and drives it home upon the mind of the reader till no other conclusion can be reached than the one that the phenomena he saw at Cassadaga Camp were not produced by any kind of trickery. The work is excellent to place before a skeptic.

Mr. Richmond was an intense unbeliever before he went to the camp, and beside, he had just read the report of the Seybert Commission, and settled down to the conviction that all spiritual mediums were deceivers, and all so-called spiritual manifestations fraudulent tricks. He had a legal friend who had become a believer in Spiritualism, and he was anxious to undeceive him. Hence he went to the camp-meeting sure he could detect all the trickery.

This is how he reports a portion of what he saw:

"I visited a slate-writing medium.... I had purchased two slates at a store on the grounds. I marked them and cleaned them, and kept them in my hands. I opened the slates; the medium put a piece of pencil between them of the size of No. 4 shot; I closed the slates, and held them together. I held one of the pellets I had prepared in my hand. I held the slates above the table, in open day-light, firmly grasping their ends. The medium placed the ends of his fingers under the slate-frame, with his thumb above them. Soon I heard the pencil move between the slates, and distinctly I heard it write. I lowered my head, and raised the slates close to my face; I traced the movement of the pencil from my left to right.

Soon the pencil ceased to move; the medium removed his fingers; I opened the slates, and saw a communication on the lower one that nearly covered its surface. I read it, opened the paper in my hand, and the communication was an intelligent answer to that interrogatory; the writing not unlike the familiar hand of the one to whom I had addressed the question, and whose name was signed to the communication."

Mr. Richmond visited other slate-writing mediums, and obtained similar results, always on his own slates, which never left his hands. Finally he received a message between two slates from Mr. Seybert. It read as follows:

"DEAR SIR: Do all you can to combat the error into which my Commissioners have fallen. They were unworthy and unfaithful. H. SEYBERT."

The minister who married five couples in one day said he was getting on at a "five-knot gait."—Martha's Vineyard Herald.

MAGNETIC SHIELDS
FIRE AND SMOKE BLAZE AWAY.
YOU can't make any smoke around our camp. Magnetic Fire makes no noise or smoke. But Dr. Thacher's Genuine MAGNETIC SHIELDS make such attacks upon all forms of sickness as fire makes upon wood and coal—that is, burns and destroys sickness. MAGNETIC SHIELDS are the product of a studious mind coupled with scientific acumen, and the result is the creation of a NEW OLD healing agent, the like of which never was known to the world, even in ancient times.
Dr. C. I. Thacher is a live man, has been a close student, and possesses a thorough knowledge of science and understands the therapeutics of mind, drugs and other agents. When he says MAGNETISM is the quickest curative agent known, he expects learned men will controvert it; expects to be met in the future, as in the past, by the old-fogy notions of superannuated brains. He has fought too long to expect a full surrender of these false teachers at once, but he is convincing the world of these immortal truths quite as fast as the education of the age will permit. Hidebound, mossback skeptics cannot believe, but thinking minds will read our literature and judge for themselves whether the new method excels drugs in curing disease.
If you want the best MAGNETIC FIRE to warm your blood, get a pair of our FOOT BATTERIES. They speak to you through the vital warmth they create in feet and limbs. $1 gets a pair; $2 brings three pairs to you by return mail.

The Writing Planchette.
SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.
DIRECTIONS. Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of some muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.
The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.
PLANCHETTE with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.
NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES. Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES can not be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

Bible Marvel-Workers,
And the Power which helped or made them perform MIGHTY WORKS, and utter Inspired Words; Together with some Personal Traits and Characteristics of Prophets, Apostles and Jesus, or New Readings of "THE MIRACLES."
BY ALLEN PUTNAM, A.M.

Mr. Putnam has here, in his uniformly candid and calm spirit, furnished an unusually vivid, interesting and instructive volume of about 240 pages. He here allows what he incidentally calls "THE GUIDE-BOOK OF CHRISTENDOM" to tell the story of its own origin and character, and mostly in its own words and facts. Biblical light leads his way, and as he moves on he finds and points out Fact after Fact, View after View, Meaning after Meaning, attaching to old familiar mental pictures and forms of Bible scenes and personages which possess the charm of novelty, while they generate conviction that they are true and valuable. Without questioning the genuineness or truth of any part of the Bible itself, and without attack upon any sect, denomination or individual, Mr. Putnam, following the clear leadings of light which John the revelator furnished, examines most of the prominent Bible marvels and personages, and presents to the public a work which will show to most readers spots where they have been accustomed to overlook very plain and distinct information lying upon the very surface of our English Bible, which, if recognized, will lead devoted lovers of the Bible, and its contemners also, to estimate it with more discriminating justice than they have been accustomed to apply there.

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P. M.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead"; therefore all Spiritualists are cordially invited to become members—either resident or non-resident—and to take an active part in its work.

NELSON CROSS, President.

J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
44 Malden Lane, New York.
JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Secretary,
89 Liberty street.

The American Spiritualist Alliance.

The regular meeting of The Alliance convened at Mrs. Wallace's residence, 219 West 42d street, New York City, on the 19th inst. After the election of two new members and the usual formal business had been disposed of, Mr. Clark stated that he had that morning the pleasure of conversing with an ascended brother, Dr. S. B. Brittan, one of the earlier members of The Alliance, in which he had taken great interest while here, and still continued to be deeply interested in its work and welfare. Bro. Brittan said that what The Alliance needed was a good, old-fashioned Methodist revival among its members; that most of them seemed to think they had done their full duty when they paid their dues. But this was a great mistake; that they should cease trying to see how much they could get and begin to try and see how much they could give; that tests of spirit presence might be all well enough for strangers, but the members of The Alliance should have grown beyond the desire for tests, and should endeavor to see what they could do for the uplifting and enlightenment of humanity.

Mr. Clark then called the attention of The Alliance to the subject of obsession by undeveloped spirits. The opinion of its members was asked as to the cause of obsession, and the proper course to be pursued to secure for the mediumistic persons a complete control of their own organism, and also to place the obsessing spirit in the line of progression.

The subject was suggested by the statement of Mrs. M. E. Wallace at the previous meeting of The Alliance of a case of obsession in which she had been called upon to render aid in enabling the obsessed lady to gain control over her own organism. The case, as related by Mrs. Wallace, was as follows:

About two weeks ago I received a call from two ladies of this city, the elder of whom told me that her younger friend was suffering from the control of some spirit, and that unless she could be rescued from such control she would be sent to an asylum for the insane; that she had determined to try and find some medium who could help her friend, and had called upon one who had assured her that he believed the wise and highly advanced spirits that formed Mrs. Wallace's band could control the obsessing spirit. The lady said that her friend some months ago, knowing nothing of spirit phenomena, had gone with her to a seance and formed one of a circle around the table; that when the circle was over they found that her friend was entranced, and themselves powerless to dislodge the controlling spirit. The spirit held the lady for several hours, refusing to leave, and declared that now she had got back to the earth-plane she was determined to remain.

At one time the spirit held her medium for four days consecutively, and would take control of her at all times and in all places, refusing to let her engage in her ordinary daily pursuits, but spending most of her time singing snatches of operatic music and falsely calling herself Christine Nilsson, though the young lady in her normal condition did not understand a bar of music. She had lost all power over herself; and her family were contemplating placing her in an asylum.

This, said Mrs. Wallace, was her condition when they came to me. I told them I did not know what my guides could do to help her, but I would give them a chance to try, and invited them into my library. The spirit controlled her medium, and began to laugh in a peculiar manner, and then to sing. She would not let me place my hands upon her medium nor come close to her. As I talked to her and approached, she retreated, and finally defied me, saying they had got control of the medium—for there seemed to be more than one spirit—and that they would hold her in spite of herself and everybody else. My chief control then came in and spoke through me, saying: "The very words you have spoken proclaim your darkened condition. We say to you no" a thousand times no" you shall not control this earth-child to her detriment." Then, offering up an earnest invocation to the Source of Life to give them wisdom and power to lead those undeveloped ones up out of darkness into light, in tones of authority, he pointed out to them their duty toward their medium, until the spirit gave up the attitude of defiance and began to weep.

Then in tones of tenderest love he pointed out to her how she could be of great service to her medium and to herself, and assured her that he and all the bright spirits she saw around her loved her, and would teach her how to control her medium wisely if she would try to learn; and that if she would obey their instructions no one should be permitted to take from her the medium she had found.

Then, said Mrs. Wallace, my Lillie controlled me, and placing my arms around the neck of the young medium, asked the spirit if she would not like to be the same to her medium that she (Lillie) was to me.

The spirit said that would please her very much. Lillie then said to her, "I do not like your assumed name of Nilsson, and am going to give you a new one. We are going to call you 'Guiding Star,' because henceforth you are to keep near your medium and not allow any spirits to control her; and we wish you to promise us that you will not control your medium again until she comes here one week from this day. Will you promise us that?"

The spirit hesitated for a time, but finally made the promise, and Lillie assured us that she and others of her mother's band would come to her and her medium during the week.

On the next Thursday morning the young lady called again and said the spirit had kept her promise, and had not controlled her, but had been near her all the time, and seemed to be just ready to take control.

At this second séance with this medium I had with me Dr. Hicks, who being, as you know, both clairvoyant and clairaudient, was able to see and talk with the spirit, and described her to me to be a fair young girl, very fond of singing.

Soon after entering my library, said Mrs. Wallace, the spirit controlled her medium and began to sing as if she were wild with delight at again having control.

Dr. Hicks saw what appeared to be a temple near by, and heard therefrom grand and noble music produced by the voices of many singers, and he asked the spirit if she did not hear the singing. She said, "No." Then he said: "Look yonder; do you not see that great building?" and he pointed toward it. The spirit, looking in the direction indicated, said she saw the building. "Now listen," said the Doctor. "Do you not hear the grand singing?" "Yes, yes, I hear it," said the spirit, and she seemed greatly pleased. "Well," said the Doctor, "I will introduce you to my friend here, Aglos, and he will take you there and introduce you to the singers, and you may join them, when you can sing all you like." This seemed to please her, and we continued to talk to her for a considerable time, again securing her promise that she would not control her medium at her home, but only when she was with her friend; nor let any other spirits control her. We made an appointment for them to come here again on the following Monday evening.

It was arranged that Mr. J. Franklin Clark should be with us at the next séance for the treatment of this case, and on the appointed evening there were present the two ladies, Dr. Hicks, Mr. Clark and myself.

Mr. Clark was the last to arrive, and after being introduced he emphasized and enforced upon the mind of the medium what had already been pointed out to her, that it was her duty to claim and demand that her own individuality should at all times be respected, and that the spirit should be made to understand that she must never attempt to control her against her wishes.

Mr. Clark noticing that the spirit had already got control of the medium's right hand and was using it as if picking the strings of a musical instrument, and that the medium's attention was being concentrated upon her hand, suggested to the medium that it was the method used by the spirit to get full control, and told her to press her tongue firmly and with an effort against the roof of her mouth, and thus concentrate her mind by the exercise of her will in opposition to the will of the spirit, and thus baffle her effort at control.

The medium did this, and retained the control of herself until all had been said to her that we desired, and was then requested to make herself passive to the spirit, which she did, and instantly the spirit had control, and began to laugh and then to sing. Finally we said we wished to talk with her, and she ceased singing.

I was then controlled by my chief guide, and offered up a fervent invocation. As I did this, I stood close in front of the obsessed medium, who was seated with Dr. Hicks upon my right, and Mr. Clark at my left, the four thus forming a square. As I spoke Mr. Clark stretched out his left hand to near the medium's forehead, and she gradually settled backward until her head rested quietly against the back of the large chair in which she was seated.

I then tried to have the spirit talk with us, but she could speak only in the Swedish tongue, which none of us understood. But we all united in trying to win her confidence and affection by trying to teach her a few English words.

After some time Mr. Clark requested my control to bring some one to control the medium that could speak the English language. He said to Dr. Hicks, "I will do so," and leaving us, in a few moments returned with a male spirit.

Mr. Clark then took the medium's right hand in his, and placing his left upon her forehead, asked the Doctor to take hold of her left hand. Then we all united our will-force to expel the female spirit that was controlling, and to bring in the male spirit.

Soon we saw a change coming over the face of the medium. It brightened up with a smile, and soon an effort was made to talk in English. After a time, encouraged by our words to get a more perfect control, the spirit succeeded in making himself known, and proved to be a physician, who had been an acquaintance and friend of the medium when on this plane of life, and who had but lately passed on. We desired him to make the acquaintance of the Swedish spirit, and in conjunction with her to assume the chief charge of the medium, which he said he would do.

Doctor Hicks saw the spirit that had been gently forced from the control standing at the side of her medium looking very disconsolate, for she realized that she had been cast out by a power she could not resist, and seemed to fear her medium was to be taken from her.

When the physician was about to give up the control, he was requested to yield it up gradually, so that we might bring the medium back to her normal condition, and prevent the little spirit coming in until we gave her permission, wishing thus to enforce the lesson upon her that there was a power that she could not overcome.

Mr. Clark removed his hand from the medium's forehead, and releasing her hands made upward passes, and after considerable effort brought her into her normal state. Dr. Hicks then saw the physician talking to the little Swede and placing his hand upon her head. After we had conversed with the medium for some time it was suggested that the little Swedish spirit should again be permitted to control her medium, to assure her that there was no desire on the part of the spirits or ourselves to send her away or to take her medium from her.

So we invited her to return, and as an evidence of our desire to aid her, Mr. Clark placed his hand upon the medium's brow, though there was no need of our assistance. Instantly she took control, and if one might judge from her song, she was filled with joy at again finding herself in control of her medium.

Talking kindly and pleasantly to her, and getting her promise that she would only control when sitting with her friend who was present, and then only for the stipulated time, and guard her against all undeveloped spirits, she sang adieu, adieu, and quietly gave up her control.

Soon afterward this spirit left the room and then spirit Aglos told Dr. Hicks her story as follows:

When she was a young girl of fifteen years and was receiving a musical education as a vocalist, she lost both of her parents by shipwreck. The shock she then received dethroned her reason and made her a mild maniac. Shortly after she passed to the supermundane plane of life in that wrecked mental condition, and had been since that time a wandering spirit, going hither and thither, finding no rest. In her wanderings she came in contact with the medium in question, and gained control of her organism, wholly ignorant of the laws governing it, and the mental condition that she was in made her wholly oblivious to any moral obligation to respect the rights of the medium. He said the spirit had now entered upon a line of improvement, and would soon be a blessing to herself and her medium.

He said that we would be astounded did we but know of the multitudes of spirits that were in a similar condition, and for whose restoration it was necessary that they should gain light through some human organism, and that in every large city on this mundane plane there should be hospitals established in charge of sympathetic and enlightened souls, where such cases as the medium with us could go for relief, and where those multitudes of wandering spirits could come and be restored to their right minds; that the wise and benevolent inhabitants of the several planes of life should coöperate in their efforts to bring the afflicted of their kind, wherever found, into conditions of physical and mental soundness and health, and place them in the way of progression to higher planes of life and usefulness.

The subject was discussed and illustrations from observed cases given by Dr. Cetlinski, Mrs. Coleman, Mr. Jeaneret, Mrs. Beach, Dr. Wyman, Dr. Hicks and Mrs. Wallace.

The general opinion was this: That obsession was the control of a mediumistic person by undeveloped or insane spirits, and that the proper course of treatment was to first gain the confidence of the spirit by gentle, kind and sympathetic words and actions, and then, after having gained the spirit's confidence, to instruct it as to its true position, and show it how it could change the conditions it was in, and enter into a better state, thus saving the spirit and medium at one and the same time.

After the discussion by the parties above referred to, Mrs. Moss was controlled by Spirit S. B. Brittan, who addressed The Alliance, and Mrs. Coleman was controlled by Dr. Channing, who spoke to us. Miss Veil was also controlled.

The next meeting will be at the same place Jan. 2d.

[THE BANNER forms were necessarily put to press one day in advance the present week: we have therefore found it necessary to condense the local reports which came in at intervals on Monday, and to give only the announcements minus details.]

The Boston Spiritual Temple—Berkeley Hall.—On Sunday, Dec. 23d, after the song "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," beautifully rendered by the accomplished songstress, Miss Alice M. Black, with Miss Ellen F. Barnett as accompanist, the guides of Mrs. Luther discoursed to a large and attentive audience upon "Experiences in Spirit-Life of Martyred Victims of the Christian Church, and Their Relations to the Unfoldment of Modern Spiritualism." In the evening she spoke on "Death in the Spirit-World."

Next Sunday Spirit Thomas Paine will discourse upon the common-sense and radical truths advocated in his earth-life. O. L. R.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington Street.—Large audiences assembled last Sunday. The exercises opened with the singing of "Beyond the Shadows," by Mrs. Mary Nickerson, Prof. Willis Milligan accompanist. After remarks by President Lewis, Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock read "Only Remembered by What I Have Done," followed with an invocation and remarks contrasting Christianity with Spiritualism. The Christian world is, she said, rejoicing to-day over the birth of Christ, and Spiritualists over the continued existence of their friends in spirit-life. John Calvin in his day gave creeds by which men and women might be born again, and be sure of a future life. Martin Luther followed, a little more liberal in his thoughts. Both presented new thoughts, but were limited in their views regarding the future. Father Murray, of the Universalist church, came later, and declared he could not believe that the All-wise Father would punish his children eternally; and lastly come our spirit-friends, teaching no creed or form of worship, but believing that for every sin a man commits he must suffer, and through suffering be purified and fitted for an eternity of happiness. The men I have named were true to their convictions, bigoted, it is true, but living and acting up to the light they had.

Spiritualism could not have attained its present strength through the religious truths taught by these men and their followers. Progress is marked upon thought from that day to this, and the hell of orthodoxy is rapidly becoming a thing of the past. Let us accept the truth from whatever source, and the truth shall make us free. To-day we have the church upon one side, Spiritualism upon the other, both believing in a heaven and a future life, yet antagonizing each other. Spiritualism will soon or late leaven the whole lump, and we shall all be in a realm of purity of thought and our lives flow on for the benefit of humanity and in harmony with the Divine Spirit.

Mrs. C. M. Bagley remarked that the last speaker had given the theory and she would clinch the truth by giving proof of spirit presence, and did so to the satisfaction of all, giving among other names, John Mayo, of Waltham, Mrs. Dr. Fenwick, of Chelsea, Capt. James Townsend, of Stoneham, and Geo. Hoyt, who was formerly a dealer in hay and grain upon Canal street, Boston. All were recognized.

Evening.—After singing by Mrs. Nickerson, Mrs. Whitlock spoke earnestly upon the claims Spiritualism makes upon us, and the duties involved in its acceptance.

Mrs. C. M. Bagley gave clear and convincing tests of spirit presence. One control remarked that when living he used to talk a great deal, and many thought him crazy; but he did not wish to be forgotten, and gave the name of Chauncy Barnes.

Wallace Wright and his wife Katie, who went down in the ill-fated steamer Columbus, announced themselves re-united and happy. Madame Beals, a well-remembered medium, also came and gave hearty greeting to her Boston friends.

Edgar W. Emerson will occupy the platform next Sunday, and the usual test circle Thursday evening, to which any and all are invited, especially those who are in doubt about this philosophy. HEATH.

Independent Club—Berkeley Hall.—On Friday evening a most enjoyable and entertaining programme was carried out. Mr. J. W. Fletcher made general remarks, and cited illustrations and experiences from his visits to Springfield. Miss Jennie Rhind spoke in an acceptable vein, relating an anecdote to show her standing in relation to the work of the Club. Miss Emma Nickerson gave an inspirational address of exceeding interest.

W. H. Randall being called upon, responded with remarks of a very spiritual nature. Capt. Holmes said the name of Charles Sumner, referred to by preceding speakers, recalled many reminiscences of our statesman; he closed by reciting an original poem, written at the time of Mr. Sumner's demise. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles was heartily received as usual, and the beautiful poem, "Christmas Chimes," was a pleasing tribute to the evening's interests.

Next Thursday evening the annual business meeting for the election of officers takes place, and all members are requested to attend.

This meeting will be held at 6 Beacon street, Room 5.

Next Sunday Mr. J. W. Fletcher will deliver a lecture entitled "The Record of the Year." This will be a retrospective glance at the Spiritualistic events of the year, with morals to be drawn therefrom, and hints as to the future growth. F. V. FULLER, Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society held its regular meeting at No. 4 Berkeley Hall building Dec. 18th. After a very enjoyable supper the meeting was called to order by our president, and the exercises were introduced with a solo by W. H. Briggs, entitled "Anchored;" accompanist, Miss Ellen F. Burnett. In response to an encore Mr. Briggs sang "Dreaming." Mrs. Colby then addressed the friends in her usual logical and earnest manner. A duet was sung by Mrs. Hattie Mason and Mrs. Hattie C. Stafford. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles talked of Inspiration and gave an original poem, "Babyland." An intermission allowed time for increase of membership, when Miss Nickerson recited an original poem—"A Song out of Silence." Mr. Lees gave "Old Saws and New Sayings," from Sermon on the Mount. Capt. Holmes filled a few minutes with "A Sunset Picture," Mrs. Mason and Dr. Brown added to the interest of the meeting, and the evening closed with inspirational singing that united all hearts, as hand-clasps and good-nights were exchanged. EMMA J. NICKERSON, Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum No. 1, Paine Hall.—The exercises Dec. 23d at this hall were unusually interesting, while the large attendance of both scholars and friends was very gratifying to the officers of the Lyceum. After the usual exercises by the children, Mrs. Butler was called to the platform, and Conductor Weaver in behalf of Mr. Milligan, presented her with a beautiful pet dog. Mrs. Butler responded in her usual interesting manner for the gift.

We trust our friends will not forget the regular Wednesday meetings held at 1031 Washington street, but will come and see us. All are welcome.

H. O. TORREY, Cor. Sec'y.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meetings at this hall were well attended the 23d. Singing by Mrs. Chamberlain, after which Eben Cobb, manager, took for his theme, "The Saving Power of the Spirit of Truth, Contrasted with the 'Blood of Christ.'" His remarks were eloquent, and well received by an appreciative audience. Arthur McKenna, Mr. Redell, Mr. Fernald, Dr. Taylor, Miss Peabody, Mrs. Nellie Thomas and Mrs. Downs participated in psychometric readings, tests and remarks, and Dr. W. S. Eldridge diagnosed diseases.

The Fraternity Club of Singers is expected next Sunday to discourse fine music.

American Hall, 724 Washington Street.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were held here Sunday last, afternoon and evening, Dr. W. A. Hale, Chairman. Good audiences were in attendance. Instructive remarks and convincing tests were presented by Mrs. A. E. King, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Mrs. I. E. Downing, Miss Nettie M. Holt, Dr. Eldridge, Mr. Fernald, Mrs. Rich and Dr. Hale. Good music throughout the day—Mrs. Campbell pianist, Dr. Hale organist. Next Sunday test services, interspersed with short speeches; also the child medium, Miss Emma Ireland, will be present. M. M. HOLT.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The three meetings at this place were well attended last Sunday. Dr. Eames, Mrs. T. J. Lewis, Dr. Mckenzie, Mrs. Hancock, Mr. Redell, Mrs. Dr. Robbins, David Brown, Mrs. Conant, Dr. Thomas, Dr. Mathews, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Hattie Mason participated, in a programme consisting of singing, tests, psychometric readings, etc. Next Sunday, the 30th, Mrs. Temple, fire-test medium, will again be at this hall.

Parlors at 20 Bennett Street, Boston.—Last Sunday evening Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, under the influence of her control, gave some eloquent remarks and satisfactory psychometric readings and tests which were highly appreciated.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Sunday, Dec. 16th, was a disagreeable day in Buffalo, the rain incessantly driving; but a good-sized audience convened for the afternoon exercises. Mr. Baxter, after singing and reading, chose for his subject, "Binding Obligations of Spiritualists," and gave a timely lecture—one which every Spiritualist in the land might hear with profit.

A business meeting followed for an hour to some purpose; yet the adjournment was for future meeting and further action.

In the evening the storm continued, and the audience was considered small, numbering nearly two hundred. Mr. Baxter gave a lecture on "The Facts of Spiritualism and their Resultant Philosophy." "Facts outweigh all argument and sophistry," said the speaker, and then called attention to facts and phenomena, independent of the exarnated spirit phases, and showed how unequivocally they upheld Spiritualism. Mr. Baxter handled would-be exposers without gloves, and paid well-merited attention to Starr and Kellar, who of late have been exhibiting in Western New York—the latter, at the time, in Buffalo. Notwithstanding the controversial methods of Mr. Baxter, he is so well grounded and shows himself so thoroughly the gentleman, that he commands respect and hearing, gains commendation, and receives, as on this occasion, well-directed applause.

The house was particularly harmonious, and this aided to a most successful séance at the close of the evening discourse. Remarkable and accurate descriptions were given and some personal tests. The meeting was a treat to all who braved the elements to hear, and repaid them threefold for all they undertook. Mr. Baxter will continue two Sundays more in the city. VIDEX.

Brockton, Mass.—On Wednesday evening, Dec. 19th, Mrs. A. H. Colby-Luther lectured for the Ladies' Aid Society of Brockton. It seems fitting to say in praise of her lecture that it was full of truth and common sense. She spoke at some length of the creedal power which rules in our world, which we all realize to be true. She also thought that the money which is to-day expended to support our criminal courts, to fee our judges, lawyers and jurors, might be expended much more wisely in educational schools for criminals. She thought instead of sending men out of their bodies for committing crime they should be put in graded schools where there would be some chance of making them better. Angels bless Mrs. Luther in her ministrations for the good of humanity. MRS. EMMA BOOMER.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday the services at Brittan Hall were of more than ordinary interest on account of the Christmas hour. The hall was handsomely decorated for the occasion with evergreen, holly, laurel and flowers. Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester was the speaker in the afternoon. In the evening the sermon was a double one, it being specially arranged for the Christmas observance, by the presence of two mediums, Mrs. Manchester and Mrs. M. Louise Chase of Merrimacport, and many names and messages were given. Mrs. Manchester will occupy the platform next Sunday. E. P. H.

Worcester, Mass.—Mrs. Emma Miner occupied our platform Sunday, the 16th inst. Her subject in the afternoon was "The Elements of Character," and in the evening "Foundation Principles." The lectures were full of sound reasoning upon these subjects, and of the practical application of the teachings of the Spiritual Philosophy in our daily lives. Societies should keep Mrs. Miner upon the platform. S.

Notes by the Way.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A gentleman carrying on business some fifty miles from Boston called upon me recently and related his experience regarding Spiritualism and the gift of healing by and through the magnetic and spiritual forces. He said, in substance, that he lost a child, a few years since, by so-called death, and this event caused him to investigate the philosophy and phenomena. He received good tests of the truthfulness of Spiritualism, also was informed that he possessed the healing gift to a large extent

One year ago he was in the presence of a lady whom he had known for many years. She had been treated for consumption for a long time, by various medical advisers, and was considered to be in the second stage of the disease, having ulcers upon the lungs. In a joking way he informed her that he had been told that he possessed the healing gift by the laying on of hands, when another lady present asked him to see if he could not relieve the sufferer. He consented, and the results were so beneficial that he continued to give her treatments until she is now comparatively a well woman—able to do her work.

He said that soon after he commenced to give her treatments, she would go into an unconscious trance or sleep, and while in that state would correctly describe her physical condition—the intelligence doing this claiming to be the spirit of a prominent physician while in earth-life. Several other intelligences also purported to come through her organism, the lady herself not knowing a word she uttered while in this state.

Other remarkable cures, wrought through his organism, were related to me by this man, who, however, for business reasons declined to have his name made public, though he was willing to bear witness in private to the verity of his gifts—gifts which he did not propose to exercise openly through fear of the opposition of a bigoted public, led on by the self-interested hatred of the "Regulars" in medicine.

There are many now in the community everywhere who, like this man, have the apostolic gift of healing, which they have received, but are hiding their talent in a napkin, for similar reasons. When will people generally gain mental stamina enough to declare to the Allopathic fraternity and its abettors, that medical laws to prohibit the practice of (successful) magnetic healing in the interest of (unsuccessful) mediævalism in medicine are alike an insult to the patient and an outrage on the practitioner!

Notice has recently appeared in THE BANNER of the transition of the East Indian Sattay.

While at Saratoga Springs last August I had several pleasant conversations with him in relation to his views on many points related to human life and the spirit-world. The Spiritualistic society at Saratoga employed him for several Sundays to give his views of the Hindu religion and its relation to Spiritualism, and in them he alluded to so-called Christian Science.

I will at this time only allude to his view of living on earth forever; to that end he argued that all there was of him was spirit; the material body was spirit, and by the right mode of living there would be no end to earth-life. This he claimed was the Hindu belief, and that the so-called Christian Scientists had a smattering of the same views, and were advancing them as new doctrines—merely for the money they could make out of such a course—whereas in East India information on these subjects was as free as the air, and could be obtained by simply searching for it.

He, to further this peculiar view, refused to eat meat and other nourishing things that would go to sustain the material body in this trying climate, so different from his own, and gradually allowed the spirit to lose hold on things material; the result was the separation of the two—which mortals call "death." Evidently he did not realize the relations of life in the spirit and the material spheres in a common-sense practical manner; the results show this at least.

He was quite a young man, and seemed to be well informed concerning the Hindu doctrines; he was positive in his nature and assertions. He did not seem to care for money except to pay his necessary expenses. His highest ambition seemed to be to make manifest his doctrines in this country, so that the "Christian Scientists" might not palm off their faint conceptions of the Hindu philosophy upon a credulous people as something new! Pleasant Occurrences.

A number of the friends of MRS. M. A. CHANDLER, feeling a desire to express in a tangible form their high appreciation of her faithful work, met at her rooms, 33 Common street, Boston, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 19th, to tender her a reception, and also to present to her a token of their respect for her worth as a woman, and her ability as a medium.

After singing by the assembly, Mrs. A. A. Morrill, as the originator of the happy affair, in a few appropriate words presented to Mrs. Chandler a fine, solid gold watch-chain, that had been purchased by the united contributions of those assembled, as well as of some who were unable to be present, but who sent kind words of interest and congratulation. Mrs. C., though taken entirely by surprise, was aided by her controls to give a feeling, appropriate and appreciative response.

Miss Minnie Stone, who very kindly volunteered her aid on the occasion, gave songs with guitar accompaniment. Remarks were made by May Andrews, and others; recitations presented by Miss Stone and Lillian Rich; and Mrs. S. J. Hosmer, of South Boston, pleased the company with the delightful music of the zither. The partaking of refreshments, the singing by the company of "The Isles of the By-and-Bye," and the expression of congratulations and kind wishes to the medium, closed the services of the successful occasion. M.

An informal reception was tendered MRS. JENNIE LORD WEBB on Thursday evening, Dec. 20th, at her room, No. 56 West Brookline street, Boston. Mr. Lyman C. Howe was expected, but on account of a previous engagement he was not able to be present, but sent a letter of regret. Some thirty friends were convened on the occasion, and an enjoyable entertainment was realized, which continued until a late hour.

It may not be generally known by Spiritualists that Mrs. Lord Webb has been before the public from the early days of Spiritualism as a physical medium, also that of late years she has been afflicted with partial blindness, and while in this state the gift of independent slate-writing has been unfolded to her through her mediumship—which clearly shows that there is an intelligent power about and independent of her, which accomplishes the convincing phenomena witnessed at her séances.

In Mrs. Lord Webb's long experience and labor as a physical medium, I have never heard of any one casting doubt upon her probity. She greatly needs the sympathy and patronage of the public in her unfortunate condition.

The Psychical Research Society could, no doubt, if its members wished, obtain the services of Mrs. Webb as a medium in its investigations. COR.

Chesaning, Mich.—The inspirational speaker, Mrs. Nellie Baade, of Capac, Mich., gave three splendid lectures here Dec. 8th and 9th, two on the Spiritual Philosophy, and one on Temperance. The latter was pronounced by many to be the best ever given here; and this is saying a good deal, when we consider that Volney B. Cushing, of Maine, Col. Smiley, of Missouri, and many other speakers of State note have addressed our people under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., and during the political campaign. Mrs. Baade is what is termed a "Christian Spiritualist," and her lectures always prove to be of a high order, and of such a nature as the Orthodox find least objectionable. I wish there were more, or all might be classed under this head in the ranks. For I believe the Bible to be the best spiritual book we have to-day, and that it contains the best arguments we have for convincing the people (especially the Orthodox, and those who refuse to investigate) of the truth of spirit-return and spirit-communion. For if they believe their Bible they must credit its narratives when they are properly interpreted to them. It should, therefore, in my opinion, be treated with all due reverence, instead of being scoffed at, as I have heard some do, who say we have proof enough without it, and therefore no use for it.

MRS. W. MILLER.

New Bedford, Mass.—On Sunday, Dec. 16th, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Longley appeared upon the platform of the spiritual society of the above named city, afternoon and evening. In the afternoon Mrs. Longley (formerly Miss Shelhamer) lectured under the influence of her guides upon the subject: "Life or Death; Immortality or Annihilation," to a large and attentive assembly. At 7 P. M. the lady answered questions from the audience, receiving the marked approval of her hearers at the close.

At both the above sessions Mr. Longley favored the audience with vocal selections from his own beautiful compositions, and awakened such interest that the people lingered after the close of the meeting, while the gentleman, by request, continued his service of song.

New London, Conn.—February last we organized, and now our society has fifty members. We meet twice a week, and the most intelligent classes are, many of them, embracing Spiritualism. The ranks are filling here more rapidly than in any place I have known in an experience of thirty years as a medium, during which I was well acquainted with Dr. James R. Newton, and healed the sick with him.

The obsequies of Geo. H. Dart were held Dec. 8th. Mrs. R. Shepard Lillie delivered the discourse, and a more fitting one for such an occasion was never given from platform or pulpit.

Henry Miller is the President of the Pierpont Lyceum Association, Orlo Atwood, Treasurer, and Mrs. E. Winslow, Secretary. DR. T. G. SWIFT.

Lowell, Mass.—B. S. Freeman writes, Dec. 23d, that Frank T. Ripley has addressed the society in this place for two Sundays with good success. His tests have been universally recognized. Next Sunday Mrs. Fannie D. Smith, of Brandon, Vt., occupies the platform. The meetings are held in Post 135 G. A. R. Hall, Wyman's Exchange.

Spiritualistic Meetings in Brooklyn.

Johnston Building, Flatbush Avenue, near Fulton.—Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference every Saturday evening, at 8 o'clock. F. W. Jones, Conductor.

The Progressive Spiritual Conference at its meeting of Dec. 15th was addressed by Mr. W. W. Sargeant upon "Evidences of Immortality." Mr. Sargeant is a scholar, a clear and logical thinker, and able to express much in a few words; his essay was well received. Dr. E. J. Wright, Mr. William C. Bowen, Mr. C. L. Harris, Mrs. Emily B. Ruggles and Mrs. E. C. A. Hall filled up the remaining time of the conference with remarks pertinent to the subject of the address. F. W. JONES.

Philadelphia, Pa.—It was near Christmas, but a few years ago, that the writer of this bade farewell to his most beautiful and spirituelle daughter, a little girl of five years, who passed out from the form of clay. Farewell, did I say? Only to the form, for on the day her beauteous form was to be placed in mother earth, to the friends assembled, dear old President Wood related how he had had a communication from his little Helen, who had brought our little one; that father and mother need not grieve, for they—the spirit-children—were to have a Christmas-tree in the beautiful Summer-Land. We had our Christmas-tree, and our little one was there in spirit. Many the comforting messages from this little angel have we had. She keeps us near to the spirit-world, and cheers us in our trials of earth.

The Children of the Lyceum hold their jubilee Dec. 28th.

Prof. W. F. Peck is doing a good work for us. Audiences immense, delighted, enthusiastic. Many new members are being added. Surely we must feel greatly encouraged. Bro. Peck is an earnest worker. His lectures are replete with new ideas and thoughts—logical, convincing.

The Trustees have a surprise for the friends in the way of speakers and test mediums the coming year. They evidently mean business, and seem determined to carry the war into the enemy's camp.

With a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all, I am, fraternally, DEACON T.

Haverhill, Mass.—The annual social gathering of the Female Benevolent Society of this place was held on the evening of Dec. 12th. It was presided over by the Mayor of the city, George H. Carleton, who made appropriate introductory remarks, reviewing the past history of the Society, which has had an existence of seventy years. Addresses were made by others, among whom was THE BANNER correspondent, Mr. E. P. Hill, who responded in a line of talk in allusion to the early beginning of the Society, which was in the age of the "pine knot" and tallow candle as an evening light.

At supper, which was one of the best, two hundred and fifty were provided for. During the evening a number of liberal contributions to the funds of the Society were made. Excellent vocal music was supplied by Mrs. West, who sang "Charity," by Faure, and "Guardian Angels," by Gounod, Mr. Miller accompanying.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Joseph D. Stiles spoke for the First Spiritualist Society Sunday, Dec. 23d, before good audiences. The subject of his
