Harmony in Diversity Consistent with Unity on Earth and in the Spirit-Life.

An Inspirational Discourse by

W. J. COLVILLE,

Delivered in Odd Fellows Hall, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, Oct. 23d, 1887.

[Reported expressly for the Banner of Light.]

The question of organization among Spiritualists being always more or less to the fore, we find ourselves frequently called upon to express our opinions on this fruitful theme. Whenever we respond to an invitation to state our convictions we endeavor to give them in as plain and decisive words as possible, though at the same time fully aware of the inadequacy of language, in many instances, to fully clothe one's innermost thoughts. The subject is, moreover, one of such vast proportions, and, without doubt, so many-sided, that all who essay to treat it are apt to find themselves unwittingly guilty of a failure to speak or gaze from the various and certainly opposite points of view from which it must be regarded if fairly and dispassionately treated. A course of several lectures could easily and profitably be given at this particular time on the pros and cons. of organization. That much can be said in its favor, no one can deny; that sound and valid arguments can be brought against it, is equally evident.

It seems to us that much if not all the inharmony among Spiritualists, as well as among other people, proceeds from narrow-mindedness and undue personal ambition. Many very sincere and good-natured persons are afflicted with mental and spiritual near-sightedness. They see quite distinctly within the boundaries of their own limited sphere of thought and necessity; they devise excellent means for carrying on a useful work in their own special corner of the spiritual vineyard; but they unfortunately sow strife and dissension in the very ranks they desire to consolidate and increase, by supposing all the world needs exactly what they require individually to help it along the path of progress.

The other class of persons we have referred to are neither so amiable nor so estimable. Their intention is usually to rule or ruin. Inflated with personal pride, actuated by selfish ambition, they claim a right which they do not possess to lead, and represent others who have no intention of becoming their submissive followers.

In every age of the world's history, in every land beneath the sun, this hateful spirit of self-assertion and self-glorification has been the curse of mankind, and the prolific instigator of every phase of tyranny and persecution. Would-be-organizers should carefully weigh the following considerations: Spiritualism is in its very nature and essence totally opposed to sacerdotalism; it cannot affiliate with any ecclesiastical system whatsoever. Spontaneity is its leading characteristic; no creeds can confine it, no institutional walls can contain it. True Spiritualism is like the air and sunshine; it may be in all your houses, but it is also outside them; you cannot have it all, though you may enjoy as much as you can assimilate and utilize. It is as impossible to enclose Spiritualism within a narrow, man-made cage as it is to confine nature within your own poultry yard.

The most powerful and efficient organization on earth is without doubt the Papacy, but the tactics of the Roman Church are diametrically opposed to those of Spiritualism. No two systems can possibly be wider apart than Spiritualism and Popery. Strange to say, however, there are to-day in the spiritualistic ranks many persons who positively abhor the Roman Church, and never lose an opportunity to denounce it, who, if they had their way, would establish a hierarchy fully as despotic as that of Rome; and we are pretty sure an inquisition would not discord with their pet ambitions.

Unity and uniformity can never mean the same thing. The Church of Rome confounds unity with uniformity, and thus manages to preserve an external semblance of unity while disunion is rife among her members. Unity is consistent with freedom; uniformity is possible only among slaves. Harmony is neither unison nor monotony, it is the most exquisite variety, the broadest possible diversity. Nature is unitary, but never uniform; harmonious, but never monotonous. Her choristers sing in harmony, but not in unison; her orchestra includes many instruments and many performers. To perpetually harp on one string, or to utilize only one instrument, is to defy her genius at every turn.

Now if we are to organize as individuals into harmonious societies or groups, let us realize first of all that it is ourselves we are organizing, not Spiritualism and not other people. The utmost latitude must be given to honest individual or societary efforts, but directly any person or class of persons undertakes to represent Spiritualism and speak authoritatively in the stead of others, the action of such becomes an onslaught upon our most precious liberties. No one can ever have a right to represent another unless authorized or requested by that other to represent him. How, then, can we have representative Spiritualists speaking in the name of thousands, possibly millions, of Spiritualists who have never authorized them to act as their representatives? Surely it is enough that freedom of speech, pen and action be secured by law to everybody without those who pride themselves on the possession of such rights and liberties undertaking to control and vote away the liberties of others.

Now let us for a few moments consider what Spiritualism is and what constitutes a Spiritualist. Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten has, under inspiration, compiled a creed which she calls the creed of the spirits, but everybody knows there are multitudes of spirits who do not accept it; it is simply the creed of the influences who inspire her utterances and which she individually endorses. It is in its way one of the most excellent compositions we have ever seen, broad, lucid, comprehensive, and unquestionably expresses the sincere and deep-seated convictions of multitudes of enlightened minds on earth and in the realm of spirit. For ourselves we accept it gladly, and can devoutly say amen to every article it contains; but would it therefore be justifiable for any one to put that creed forward as a creed which must of necessity receive the assent of every Spiritualist on the face of the earth? Would any one be justified in refusing to acknowledge that a person could be a sincere and devoted Spiritualist even though he dissented from that creed? We feel sure Mrs. Britten and her inspirers would be the very first to protest against the forcing of their own or the creed of any other upon all believers in spirit communion the world over, though that particular creed has an unusually extended endorsement in the most enlightened moral teachings of all ages.

Some few years ago A. E. Newton suggested twelve articles of a very elevated and highly moral character as a sort of creed for Spiritualists, but, with his accustomed liberality and kindly toleration of the views of those who differ from him, he gave them to the world in a suggestive, not in a dogmatic spirit, making no claim for them as final and authoritative. They represented his honest sentiments, and they happily found an echo in the hearts and minds of many Spiritualists throughout the world. All such creed-making is as innocent as Ingersoll's, whose excellent creed has formed the subject of two of our recent lectures (both published in the Golden Gate). We see no reason whatever why companies of sympathetic kindred spirits should not meet together in any part of the world, draw up a set of resolutions and procure a charter from the State in which they live; an act of incorporation may be desirable in some instances, especially if there is any property to manage; and while we are fully aware that worldly goods oftener engender strife than harmony, we see no reason why halls, temples and reading-rooms should not be built and owned by societies of Spiritualists.

We are not opposed to the organization of individuals, indeed we favor it, and do all in our power to promote it whenever we have reason to believe it will serve the interests of truth. What we do oppose is a company of persons undertaking to legislate for others; setting themselves up as dictators to a community, anathematizing all effort except their own, and looking with eyes of envy and dislike upon all who cannot see eye to eye with them, join in their shibboleth, and assemble in their conventicle. As the Church of Rome is frequently cited as the most perfect specimen of organization in the world, let us examine as closely as we can what it is that makes that organization possible. The recent trial and suspension of Father McGlynn has caused many persons who would not otherwise have been likely to do so, to seek information regarding the nature of the Roman hierarchy. The result of all investigation has led to a two-fold conclusion, viz: that the constitution of Rome is such that the ecclesiastical dignitaries who superseded Father McGlynn could not well have done otherwise, and at the same time acted consistently; and secondly, that the constitution of the Church is such that it cannot continue to exist, much less control the world, if it be changed in a single particular. You probably all know the basic claim: Jesus said to his apostle Peter, "Thou art Cephas (a rock or stone), and on this rock I will build my church; the gates of hell (hades) shall not prevail against it." This quotation from the Gospel is interpreted in its most literal and unspiritual sense to begin with, and then the further claim is made that Peter was the first Bishop of Rome, and that from his day to the present, through a direct line of apostolic succession, the papal chair has always been filled with an infallible occupant, infallible, that is, in council, however fallible in private life. If any one can grant so stupendous a claim; if any one can believe in the dogma of papal infallibility, and see in the Pope the vicar of Christ and vicegerent of the Almighty, as the Church claims him to be; if any one can feel that the Holy Spirit of God moves him in council as it moves no other man, and that therefore God himself governs the Church on earth, and through the Church the world by means of his own specially appointed instrument, obedience and submission to Rome are quite natural, and can easily be rendered. But immediately Protestantism steps in and claims freedom for the individual conscience, maintaining that the Holy Spirit witnesses to truth in the heart of the individual believer, the whole fabric of Roman Catholicism falls to the ground, and authority vested in the person of any man becomes a pitiable delusion.

Authority vested in certain Protestant dignitaries, in synods, councils, etc., becomes ludicrous in the eyes of all who are acquainted with the genius of Protestantism and the history of the Reformation. Much inconsistency no doubt marked the conduct of Luther, Calvin, Melanchthon, Huss, and all the great characters who figured prominently in the Reformation era; but they one and all dealt deadly blows at the spirit of the very sectarianism which claims them as its founder, and for that reason church organizations the world over are losing their grip upon the populace, who can plainly see what a farce is sacerdotal authority unless the Romish claim be granted as an original premise.

That certain individuals have been and still are inspired in certain directions beyond the majority of mankind, is patent to all observers, but an acknowledgment of merit is in no sense inconsistent with perfect individual freedom within all reasonable limits. No one questions the supremacy of Angelo or Wren in architecture who understands anything about the subject, but no one should be forced to employ a noted architect or copy his designs merely because he is superior. If his superiority makes itself felt, neither he nor any one else can prevent his being recognized and patterned after sooner or later; but his merit must be the means of drawing people to his standard; his work must speak for itself. In musical fields no one disputes the palm to Mendelssohn, Mozart, Handel or Beethoven; they certainly are leaders, founders of schools, not by means of assumed authority and arbitrary dictation, but solely on account of true merit and sterling greatness making itself felt and appreciated. You cannot keep people away from certain places and people because of an irresistible attraction drawing the multitude to centres at which they are supplied with something their natures crave. It is the height of folly, and at the same time a humiliating confession of weakness, to endeavor to force a stream of tendency in our direction. If we draw it by our magnetic force it will come to us, and nothing can hinder it; if we seek to compel it when it does not naturally flow, and succeed in drawing it at all, it will overwhelm us.

The great German poet and philosopher, Goethe, had a favorite doctrine of Elective Affinity. He maintained that a law of elective affinity operates incessantly in the realm of mind, drawing together all kindred spirits. A very noble man in London some years ago, then a Congregational minister—we refer to Mr. J. Allanson Picton, who afterward was elected a member of the English Parliament—was much derided by men less gifted and liberal than himself for maintaining that the operation of some such force or law as Goethe calls elective affinity would tend to the establishment in a purely natural manner of all necessary church organization. People would feel themselves drawn together, and they would unite to form perfectly free societies in which they could worship and study in the bonds of peace in perfect liberty. Dr. Joseph Parker of the City Temple was one of the few Congregationalist ministers who always treated Mr. Picton and his opinions with respect, though we have no reason to suppose he fully agreed with them. Dr. Parker always preached to a full house, while many of his brethren in the ministry addressed comparatively empty benches. People evidently were drawn to the City Temple and held there by a subtle, invisible force they could scarcely define, while to many other churches of similar faith they did not feel attracted, and therefore did not enter them, or if they attended once they did not go again.

Now what is it that attracts to any focus? It may be music, oratory, beauty, warmth, sociability; we care not what, it is something people crave, and something they feel incomplete and uncomfortable without. If you give people what they want artistically, intellectually, emotionally, or in any other way, they will come again and yet again for fresh supplies; their appetite will be always whetted, as a healthy person is ready for three meals every day, and a good rest every night. We must cater to the needs of our brethren if we would attract and hold them. If we cannot give them anything they need, we may organize until time melts into eternity, so far as this planet is concerned, and all our efforts will end in vanity and vexation to our spirits.

In the spirit-world the only perfect and absolute system of organization must be the divine, natural order in which all spiritual beings are held in the most intimate relations to the source of their existence and to each other. This perfect spiritual organization has been dimly revealed in some of the old Sanscrit writings, especially as they bear upon the doctrine of Nirvana, which is not annihilation but solidarity, and in the New Testament, more particularly, where the kingdom of heaven is alluded to in two ways, it being represented both as an indwelling and an external state. The external, however, is self-evidently impossible until the internal is realized, as a building is impossible without an architect. Can any sensible person imagine for a moment that Modern Spiritualism is anything other than as yet an imperfect revelation of the condition of the human, conscious individual after he is dismantled of the physical expression? Read the thousands of messages from the spirit-world conveyed through the mediumship of Mrs. Conant, Mrs. Rudd, Miss Shelhamer, and, still more recently, Mr. Fletcher, at the Banner of Light Free Circle-Room, and if you accept every one of them and take them for exactly what they purport to be, do they not unitedly testify in the strongest possible manner against any form of dogmatism based upon spirit-teachings? Here are thousands of ordinary human beings, divested of their material garments, communicating from their separate states in the unseen world, and proving conclusively, if their testimony be accepted at all, that no sudden accession of knowledge necessarily follows upon physical dissolution. Therefore, while spirit-communion is an immensely important fact in human experience, there is no authority whatsoever in spirit-teaching, considered simply as such.

No upright and honorable spirit ever attempts to speak for others than himself, unless requested by others to represent them. John Pierpont, for instance, speaks as John Pierpont, through Miss Shelhamer, and most modestly and becomingly disowns all authority except such authority as his words themselves carry with them by way of conviction to the affections and intellect of the persons he addresses. Now if wise teachers in spirit-life, whom we have every reason to admire, respect and love, do not dogmatize or seek in any way to domineer over any of us, what shall we say of the haughty and overbearing spirit of many persons yet on earth, whose ill-disguised attempt, by means of aggressive organization, is to dominate the whole spiritual movement, themselves being the leading lights in every instance? We can but recall at this time the beautiful sentiment set forth in a discourse on "Ordination," delivered through the mediumship of Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond some years ago in San Francisco, the substance of which was to the effect that no body of persons could any more ordain mediums than they could ordain the sun to shine or the winds to blow. They could, however, recognize such gifts as mediumistic powers in others and club together to sustain and protect those who are thus endowed.

If at any time necessity arises for protective alliances among Spiritualists or mediums, there can be no reasonable objection to such alliances being formed; and, moreover, if in any town or village it be found desirable, as a matter of mutual help and convenience, for a company of Spiritualists to jointly own a hall, a library and reading-room and other auxiliaries conducive to the spread of a knowledge of Spiritualism among the public, what right-minded person would be likely to even desire to antagonize so sensible and helpful an institution? If Spiritualists would build and use their own halls, and not remain at the mercy of all sorts of hall proprietors, who use their premises for all sorts of purposes, much better results could be accomplished at our gatherings than under the present very imperfect régime. But we do not see that, as a rule, elaborate organizational efforts accomplish anything of the kind. The Boston Spiritual Temple building is capable of being put to manifold important uses; but it is well known the cost of its erection was defrayed principally by one gentleman. Organized societies as a rule rent halls which are used for all sorts of purposes, the influence in which is often exceedingly distressing to sensitive people, whether they are on the platform or in the body of the apartment, and nothing can more clearly prove the inefficiency of so-called organized effort than the self-evident fact that an attractive lecturer, and frequently elaborate music in addition, is necessary to draw an audience of moderate dimensions. Now if any virtue inhered in the organization itself, it would be almost entirely independent of professional assistance, for the special sphere of public lecturers and other people who have a world-wide mission to fulfill, is very largely of a pioneer character. All the most efficient laborers in the spiritual ranks have done a vast amount of missionary work, and in going from place to place breaking up new ground, have demonstrated their especial usefulness. It is an insult to common sense, as well as a gross infringement of universal human rights, for any society to endeavor to create a monopoly, reserving to themselves the exclusive right to rent halls and hire speakers. If the members of such societies as now exist all over this country and abroad had the faintest conception of the true nature and objects of a spiritual society, they would change their tactics and seek to cultivate mediumship within their own circles instead of ostentatiously engaging in a would-be monopolistic public work.

Bearing in mind what we have already said concerning the true nature of an organization, you must by this time have become so far familiarized with our position relative to this matter as to see that we regard the formation of a natural, human, healthy society, as a purely necessary and spontaneous affair. Certain persons meet and feel attracted mutually; they enjoy and profit by one another's society; they are happier when together than apart; they feel themselves in a manner necessary to each other's happiness and welfare. A mutual interchange of ideas is profitable; they agree to form a harmonious band of spiritual communists, or at least coöperationists; in no way interfering with the work of others; in no sense objecting to individual independence, and even solitary effort. They, feeling isolation to be foreign to their needs, coöperate so as to form, if possible, a natural spiritual household. They in this way constitute a sphere or society of kindred minds, and when harmony prevails, unity, not uniformity, is certainly a source of strength.

When people antagonize the work of others, they invariably neglect their own. The pitiably divided condition of Christendom at this hour is an evidence of the utterly devastating consequences of sectarian animosity. One sect has undertaken to oppose another; ostracism or excommunication has been visited upon heretics to the extent of either forcing the best men out of the Christian pulpit, or forcing them to cloak their honest convictions if allowed to remain in it. There is not a single denomination where a minister is wholly free to avow his honest sentiments without fear of expulsion from his living; even the Unitarians are not free in the sense in which we have a right to expect them to be. And who is it fetters the minister? Almost invariably deacons, trustees, committeemen, or other official personages, whose pride of office and love of power are far greater than their liberality of sentiment or perception of truth. Whenever a man does maintain absolute freedom to express his honest conviction while ministering to an organized society, it is on account of his own extraordinary ability or personal popularity. A weaker or less popular person, affirming the same principles, would be driven from his seat, or awed into hypocrisy.

Shameful to relate, the spirit of petty tyranny is by no means absent among certain Spiritualists, who, without the slightest claim even to mediumship, seem determined to organize Spiritualism after their pattern and develop a new theocracy, with themselves in the rôle of the Almighty. Such endeavors are so utterly alien to the intention of the higher intelligences who direct the spiritual movement, that when they are boldly presented in their naked hideousness, they at once repel all liberal persons; but when cunningly cloaked under the guise of an effort to make Spiritualism respectable and popular, they entice persons of good heart but weak judgment. Now, once for all, let us declare our utter disregard for that specious and hypocritical thing commonly called "popularity." Mrs. Grundy is for sale in every market in the world. Her opinion can be bought by any one who has a sufficiency of the coin of the realm. Anything and anybody can be popular and accounted respectable, if he but throw a sop to the modern Cerberus and don the livery of heaven while secretly paying court to his Satanic Majesty. That Spiritualism is unpopular, is to its credit; hypocrisy and fashion always go together; the most popular forms of religion are those which most readily allure the hypocrite, who takes a pew in a fashionable church so as to draw more custom to his place of business. Religion is degraded and perverted to a sham whenever the popularity and respectability craze takes possession of its professing advocates. To profess religion is too often to practice iniquity, as you probably all know, and perhaps to your cost if you are in any way of business brought in contact with those who profess to love the Lord.

We are quite ready to grant the favorite premise of those organizationists with whose methods we disagree, that a great general national, or even international association of Spiritualists, including many great names, would make a certain lifeless, external form, a body without a soul, falsely labelled Spiritualism, very popular. This monstrosity—a Spiritualism without spirituality—would threaten to overthrow the existing churches, even the Roman hierarchy might tremble at its approach, but it would itself be fully as great an evil as any it could possibly supplant. True Spiritualism is a matter for individual private examination; let Seybert Commission or Psychical Research Committee endeavor to investigate it in their official capacity, and they simply heap ridicule or odium on the cause with which they deal unjustly, and win for themselves the well-merited contempt of the fair-minded portion of every community.

Unfortunately within the ranks of Spiritualism there are far too many who prefer popularity to truth, while on the threshold are innumerable Nicodemuses who are terribly afraid to be known as having spiritualistic proclivities. Now Spiritualism proper is a something to be proud of, not a something to be ashamed of. It should be accounted an honor, not a disgrace, to be called a Spiritualist in this mercenary age, when materialism is rampant everywhere. Spiritualism is a religion, but it is not and can never become an ecclesiasticism. Sacerdotalism is totally foreign to its spirit, consequently its ordained priesthood, if it ever is saddled with such an encumbrance, must excite the ridicule rather than the respect of mankind. As to protecting mediums from persecution by according to them certain legal privileges in the gift of chartered organizations or ordaining to perform the marriage rite, these are questions upon which we do not desire to speak too decisively. These matters are many-sided, and it is doubtful whether too much stress laid upon civil authority to perform ministerial functions may not in the long run engender more pride of caste and fictitious valuation of a privileged caste than real good to the community at large. Spiritualism, as a distinctive movement, must always be a new bottle containing new wine, if it is to flourish and do good in the world. Old ecclesiastical bottles will not hold the new wine of modern inspiration without bursting. Let them burst, but do not let us purposely put wine into them, the spilling of which, when they burst, may occasion us much needless strife and suffering. Those who are in the churches, who were brought up there, are no doubt doing much good remaining where they are until conscience sends them forth. Savonarola, as well as Luther, may have been necessary to the reformation of the sixteenth century; but Luther was the more successful person of the two. The complaint is constantly raised that many who have long been efficient workers in the ranks of Spiritualism are backing into the churches for want of adequate financial support outside; if that is their reason for going into any church, we are more sorry for the church that receives them into its fold than for them, for any man who will choke his convictions for filthy lucre's sake must surely be a very inappropriate representative of any form of religion, religion becoming a mockery immediately it ceases to be a matter of conviction.

Probably many workers have crept into the church for a season of rest and recuperation, there is so much contention and so little unity among Spiritualists, all on account of the personal ambition and jealousy of aspirants to fame and office. If we could all remember that fame and office are sure to find those worthy of each in due course without their seeking it, and that in a well-ordered community every one will drop into his or her rightful place as naturally and inevitably as needles are drawn to magnets, we should not witness the clamor and discord now so prevalent in the ranks. If we said a moment ago that possibly many workers had gone into churches to find rest there, are we ready to admit that they have in most instances found what they sought? No; a thousand times no. They have either found the contest as hot, or hotter, in the church than outside, or they have drifted into apathy and indifference, sinking into complacent indolence, pocketed a moderate salary and preached harmlessly and only occasionally, in a manner to offend no one's prejudices. We probably all know enough about popular preaching to know how hampered a minister is who dare not voice his honest convictions for fear of dismissal from his charge; and can any one who has eyes fail to see that organizing Spiritualists, in many instances, are just as narrow in their platform as any church save the Unitarian, which is considerably more liberal than the clique and party sections of the Spiritualists? We can scarcely take up an issue of some journals devoted to the interests of Spiritualism, so-called, without meeting with a most unkind and illiberal spirit of reproach, hurled at all who disagree with the private opinions of the writer. Take, for instance, the controversy concerning Jesus. One school of Spiritualists affirms his personal existence most emphatically; another denies it with equal vigor; both appeal alike to history and spiritual communications to confirm their position. How much real light has this controversy shed on the subject? So far as we see, little if any; the amount of acrimony and dirt-throwing it has called forth has, however, been stupendous. Now what does it all amount to? Who is to decide for another in such matters? One thing seems clear—the gospel ethics antedate the days of Jesus, and he, according to the records of his career, never claimed originality but simply truth for his teachings.

Matters of literal history are quite unimportant from a spiritual standpoint; we must take the teachings for what they are worth intrinsically, without caring whether we have to ascribe them to one age or teacher or another. At the same time the stronger testimony is always the affirmative, therefore the negative assertions of those who say they know nothing of a Jesus should be regarded as simply a lack of information on a certain question of history. But in the name of reason what does it matter to us to day whether the Golden Rule came from Palestine or China? Its worth is like that of a pure diamond of the clearest water; it may have belonged to emperors; its pedigree may be traced through centuries, or it may be but just found in some most unlikely cavity in the earth, its worth is in itself, and not in its history or its accessories. Another question engendering much dispute is reëmbodiment, to many minds a purely speculative question. Is it becoming, is it even decent, to call those liars and impostors who differ from you on a question which has been a problem through all the ages—which the wisest have been perhaps vainly endeavoring to solve? One thing is beyond question, and that is that most excellent minds are ranked on opposite sides in this controversy. Allan Kardec, the promulgator of Spiritism in France, and Dr. Anna Blackwell, who so deeply sympathized with him in his researches, were both leading lights in the world of literature before the stupid claim that the doctrine of reincarnation, as foreign to Spiritualism, was ever set up. It may appear to some minds a side issue; but if we are to hold communion with the unseen world at all, can any of us be justified in setting ourselves up for infallible censors, declaring that all communications out of harmony with our beliefs are mendacious when they relate to subjects on which we have no sort of definite knowledge? When it comes to throwing stones at each other, resorting to the vilification of our neighbors who dare to disagree with us, we have surely forfeited all claim to further respect and consideration from honest truth-seekers, until we have made the amende honorable to those we have so grossly wronged. Allan Kardec was a man whose life needs no justification at our hands; he was one of the most faithful and unselfish seekers after truth the present century has known, so say all who were privileged to know him. The love his friends have borne him as a dear and honored friend has led to the annual celebrations in his memory. Not as a proud, imperial commander, but as an earnest fellow-student, his colleagues always have regarded him, and ever will. But Allan Kardec aside, the doctrine of the successive embodiments of the human spirit is so venerable and widely extended, the arguments for it are so weighty and profound, the testimony in its behalf so world-wide, that while many of us may pause ere we accept it, and while some of us may remain utterly unconvinced by every argument in its favor, we are surely bound in common courtesy to refrain from condemning those who entertain it. Those who hold the theory are, as a rule, far more charitable and considerate of the feelings of others than those who antagonize; and that single circumstance is one of the best presumptive evidences of its truth, as it seemingly commends itself to those of more than ordinarily unfolded charity.

Another point around which discussion seems endless is metaphysical healing. Here we may surely allow ample room for difference of opinion, each one speaking honestly his convictions and bearing testimony to the truth as it has been revealed to him in his own experience. As no one has a right to claim a monopoly of truth, and as a spiritual outpouring can never be confined within any circumscribed area, we are bound in justice to protest with equal fervor against the arrogant pretensions of many Christian Scientists, and the uncharitable and unreasoning denunciation of their methods, resorted to by many Spiritualists who fail to see any good beyond the pale of their own narrow school of practice.

Another point of difference is the Bible. Now who has any right to say how little truth there is enshrined in ancient stories? The fables of the old world all have their morals; the ancient cipher only needs interpretation. Swedenborg's theory of correspondence has never been disproved. Thus, while we certainly are none of us prepared to accept the literal words of either the Old or New Testament as divine truth, except in cases where they appeal directly to our intellect or our intuition as such, and while we certainly claim the right to investigate the Bible as freely as the works of any ancient or modern author, it is not for any of us to deny the nutritive properties of a kernel because we have only encountered a hard and innutritious shell. Some of us seem better provided with spiritual nutcrackers than others; those who can reach the kernels can feed on them; those who have been surfeited with husks, naturally turn away from them with loathing.

Another much disputed point is the value of physical phenomena, in comparison with the value of intellectual phases of spirit communion. Some writers for the spiritual press are continuously extolling phenomena; others perpetually speaking of them as inferior to philosophy. When shall we strike the golden mean, and, learning a lesson from the second chapter of Acts and the twelfth of Paul's epistle to the Corinthians, learn to estimate equally all modes of arriving at truth, knowing that divers tongues and operations are from the same celestial source originally, even though in their ultimation on earth they appear to differ as widely as the poles are asunder? We accept every message from the spirit-world as shedding some light upon man's condition here and hereafter; but perhaps we could not do so had we not been favored with visions and experiences of various kinds, substantially confirming Swedenborg's description of the heavens, hells and intermediary states.

As we live on earth in thought, desire and feeling, so we pass out into the unseen state. Our opinions and associations there are not immediately changed from what they were on earth; we only gradually outgrow them. In the local heavens surrounding the earth every creed is adhered to by some devotees; every earthly opinion is cherished by some who have not seen its fallacy. Thus the modern spiritual revelation through media of every shade of intellectual and moral capacity is first and last a revelation, and, as such, the utterances and advice received should be accepted with the utmost caution. The darker and more ignorant the communicating spirit, the more he strives to indulge in coercion and command; the higher he has advanced, the more liberal and mild his statements and the stronger his appeal to the conscience and reason of those to whom he speaks. The lower spirits would make slaves of mankind; the higher spirits respect man's moral liberty and right of individual judgment. There can be no authority but truth, and until we are all free from the biological influence of inherited and acquired falsities, until we are sufficiently redeemed from our love of error to be willing to treat every subject fairly and dispassionately, if we communicate with the spirit-world at all, we shall only receive an echo to our own preconceived ideas.

Experience teaches wisdom; no one can gain experience in the stead of another, and, as at present developed, all are not prepared for the same lessons or the same school. As to the outward conduct of spiritual meetings, for ourselves, we could see the equal utility of a Gothic cathedral and a Quaker meeting-house. If some persons require the influence of music, paintings, statuary, flowers and ceremonies, let them have all they require of these things; they are excellent in themselves, and only injurious when abused; but had we a hand in fitting up a gorgeous temple to be devoted to spiritual uses, we should carefully exclude every figment of mediæval superstition and seek throughout to symbolize nature in her highest and loveliest expressions. Every subject for a painting should be sublime, pure and natural, rather than mystical. The weird, fantastic allegories of the middle ages are surely not needed now. Dragons and satyrs are not fit subjects for temple windows or the painter's brush. Art should be ever true to nature, in its sweetest forms; or when the majesty of strife comes in, it should be suggestive of the ultimate victory of righteousness and the total overthrow of whatsoever impedes the advance of truth. In the simple meeting-room of the Society of Friends, in the days of Fox and Penn, when the inner light was all in all to these devoted and persecuted seekers after truth, the spirit of a living inspiration fell like a mantle and tongues of fire upon those simple, earnest men and women who cried against the steeple-houses and sought communion with the spiritual state, remote from every vestige of ritual display; but it was not their form of worship or their absence of form which brought them so near the higher realms of spirit and so close to the light within; it was their zeal, their earnestness, their devotion to the truth, their care for naught beside, their tender interest in the oppressed, which carried them up to heaven and brought heaven down into their own hearts and lives.

As Spiritualists in something more than name, we need only to free our minds from all attachment to ancient or modern idols; yield unreservedly to the inward illumination of the spirit, and by so doing secure to ourselves the inestimable privilege of becoming one with those pure and holy souls who, above the realms of strife and friction, can help us to perceive the oneness of God's whole family and the deep significance of that heaven-born love which, more than faith or hope, reveals God to his children.

THE PROSE-POET DICKENS.

He prescient paced incessant to and fro
The crowded lanes of cities, where the light
Of obscure firesides streamed into the night;
Babble of childish laughter, humble woe,
The common troubles that the common know,
The din of homely labor and the sight
Of homely pleasures, struggles wrong or right,
Unheard, unheeded, narrow lines and low—
He stooped and wove them garlands for his art;
Transfigured by the magic of his song
The simple joys and sorrows of the throng;
Laid his great heart upon the people's heart;
Garnered a harvest of the sheaves; and then,
Careless of deeper things, he sang to men!

An Eloquent Tribute.

COL. INGERSOLL'S REMARKS AT THE BIER OF A DEPARTED FRIEND.

Mrs. Ida Knowles, of Peoria, died in New York Dec. 15th. She was the wife of Howard Knowles and a daughter of Richard H. Whiting. Col. Robert Ingersoll, being an intimate friend of the family, was invited to say a few words over the flower-covered bier on the eve of its removal to the West for interment. In compliance with this request Col. Ingersoll made one of those eloquent utterances for which he is celebrated. He said:

My Friends—Again we stand in the shadow of a great mystery—a shadow as deep and dark as when the tears of the first mother fell upon the pallid face of her lifeless babe—a mystery that has never yet been solved. We have met in the presence of the sacred dead, to speak a word of praise, of hope, of consolation. Another life of love is now a blessed memory—a lingering strain of music. The loving daughter, the pure and consecrated wife, the sincere friend, who with tender faithfulness discharged the duties of a life, has reached her journey's end.

A braver, a more serene, a more chivalric spirit—clasping the loved and by them clasped—never passed from life to enrich the realm of death. No field of war ever witnessed greater fortitude, more perfect, smiling courage, than this poor, weak and helpless woman displayed upon the bed of pain and death. Her life was gentle, and her death sublime. She loved the good, and all the good loved her. But there is this consolation: She can never suffer more; she can never feel again the chill of death; never part again from those she loves. Her heart can break no more. She has shed her last tear, and upon her stainless brow has been set the wondrous seal of everlasting peace.

When the Angel of Death—the masked and voiceless—enters the door of home, there come with her all the daughters of compassion, and of these Love and Hope remain forever.

You are about to take this dear dust home—to the home of her girlhood, and to the place that was once my home. You will lay her with neighbors that I have loved, that are now at rest. You will lay her where my father sleeps.

All I can say is:

Lay her in the earth,
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
Let violets spring.

I never knew, I never met, a braver spirit than the one that once inhabited this silent form of dreamless clay.

Said Burke once, in Parliament, when some one had declared that England would stand until the day of judgment, "What I fear for England is the day of no judgment."

EXPERIENCES WITH MATERIALIZATION.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Judging from my own experience there are many interested but doubting inquirers to whom an understanding of some of the peculiarities attending first attempts at spirit-materialization will prove helpful. No doubt many are discouraged at the outset by what seem to them inconsistencies. Could they but know that these seeming inconsistencies are only the natural results of first attempts, they would persevere, and, in time, be able to identify the spirit friends that come to meet them.

It is this that prompts me to offer these statements. They are not made for the purpose, as it might seem, of benefiting any particular medium or mediums, but for the benefit of humanity at large and strictly in the cause of truth.

An account of the first séance I ever attended was given in your issue of May 21st, 1887. Since that I have been present at more than thirty, in the rooms of four different mediums, and at each, with only one exception, my spirit sister Alice has come to me in materialized form. The one exception was at the Berry Sisters', where I first met her.

Three others who have passed from earth—my father and two of my children, a son and daughter—have also come to me in materialized forms at the same place. And at another, an uncle, who passed away some thirty years ago, has materialized for me once, but only once, as it was the medium's last séance for the season. Besides, I have recognized five more of my departed relatives by descriptions and names given me, who would have materialized had they been able to do so. One, a cousin who died about two years ago, but whom I had little reason to expect to hear from, and who bore the "old-fashioned name"—as one of the mediums who gave it said—of "Ann Eliza," has announced her presence at two different places. It is not likely that any one at either place knew I ever had a cousin so named, or knew anything at all about my spirit relatives, and as I feel quite sure that in neither case was the name in my mind at the time, it is not at all probable that mind influence had anything to do with the announcements.

There were large families both on my father's and mother's side, the greater part of whom are now in the spirit-land, so I have no doubt I have many more friends there than here, as Alice has told me, and it appears to have been by her aid that the three others were enabled to materialize at the Berry Sisters'. She had met me several times before my father, who came next, appeared. Then he came with her—the two together—but in a form so unlike that of my father that I thought I was being imposed upon, and could not help showing my distrust.

I suppose it was that feeling which caused him to at once draw back and sink away. I tried to hold him, but when he had sunk almost to his shoulders apparently into the floor, just within the entrance to the cabinet, his hand slipped from mine, and he vanished from my sight. And my distrust seemed to weaken Alice, too; for after that she merely said "God bless you, brother! I'll come again," when she also left me.

She did not come again at that séance, but when I went, as I did next, to Mrs. A. M. Cowan's, she came to me there. But she made no mention of my father until I asked who it was that had been with her the last time at the Berry Sisters', to which she answered, "It was father; did n't you recognize him?"

I told her it did not seem like father, and suggested that possibly some other spirit had tried to personate him.

"No," she said, "it was father, and he will come again. You must not judge of us by these materialized bodies, but by our intelligence—by what we tell you."

She gave me no more information upon that point, and it seemed as if she did not consider it of much importance.

But he came again the next time I went to the Berry Sisters', and one afternoon while there I was suddenly surprised, while waiting for him and Alice, by Mr. Albro's announcing in what seemed to me a rather loud tone, "Father W——," a name I had heard frequently in my youth, but not for so many years that when I now heard it I was startled. [When the writer was a boy his parent was wont to be called "Father W——" by his sons-in-law.]

But now, on going to meet my father, when Mr. Albro announced him, I found a form that was very like his in his last years, aged and venerable, and when he spoke, though the voice was not like the one I remembered, it was in that calm and composed manner which was one of my father's characteristics. "Alice is here," were almost the first words he uttered, "but I am stronger now."

He remained with me some minutes, and that which passed between us fully convinced me that it was indeed my father with whom I was speaking. More than once he called me "my boy," in reply to my inquiries, and he seemed to have for me only the tenderest fatherly regard. Alice did not come till he had left me, but she was by my side the moment he was gone, and I had a very satisfactory interview with her. Since then they sometimes come together, but oftener my father comes alone, in the same familiar form in which he then appeared.

Not long after he first came alone, I attended another séance, at which neither he nor Alice appeared. The next time they both came together, and Alice's first words were, "Oh! brother, we were so sorry to disappoint you the last time! We came early, but were suddenly called away," and she told why they were called away, which I did not quite understand. My father expressed equal regret, and I felt that whatever had so suddenly and unexpectedly required their presence elsewhere, the demand had been imperative.

To show that they are cognizant of our earthly joys and sorrows, I will briefly state what occurred at one other manifestation. I have a daughter living near Boston, who suddenly lost her seven-year-old daughter shortly after my father began to come to me alone. The little one died the same day she was taken ill, and the next day after her funeral, I attended a séance at the Berry Sisters', in the hope that possibly I might there learn something that would help me to comfort her sorrowing mother. Alice and father came, the two together, as they had often done. I did not speak of what was in my mind, but waited to see if they would refer to it. As they did not, I asked, after a few words had passed, if they knew what had happened to my daughter Lina, being careful to give no clue as to what it was that had happened.

They both answered at once that they did; and, said my father, "Tell her not to mourn, for her little girl will be better off now, and will be more to her than she would have been here. Tell her not to mourn, for her little Flossie is in my charge. Tell her she is my charge," he repeated with greater emphasis.

"She is a lovely child," said Alice, "but very weak yet. She will soon grow stronger, and begin to progress. Tell Lina she will be well cared for, and that she has really more cause to rejoice than to mourn."

I am quite sure I had never, until that time, spoken to them of Lina, nor had I then made any mention of the child, yet they spoke the little one's name—"Flossie"—and seemed to know just what had befallen her. Since then they have given me other messages for her mother, and once I brought her mother to them; and while she hung weeping in my father's arms I heard him say, very tenderly, "You are not afraid to leave her with your grandfather, are you?"

My son was drowned seven years ago, while making a western trip for a Philadelphia mercantile house. I was particularly anxious to hear from him—more so, if possible, than from any other of my spirit relatives—and of course I had him most frequently in mind when attending séances. One of the first inquiries I made of Alice was if she knew anything of my poor boy.

"Yes," she answered, rather hesitatingly, "but I have not been able to get very near to him yet."

I spoke of him after that at other séances, but got nothing more definite, and when my father was able to come to me alone, I inquired of him; but he could give me no more information than Alice had. They both knew of him; but whether they knew that which they were not willing to tell me, I could not decide. They were evidently somewhat touched by my anxiety to hear from him, and I hoped that I should at length learn more, and that possibly he would himself manifest to me.

Regarding my daughter, who died thirteen years ago, at the age of seven, it was different. When I asked Alice if she knew anything of my little Gracie, she answered quickly that she did, and seemed to like to speak of her.

"Mother has charge of her," she said, "and she is a lovely child. She has a great deal to say of her dear papa, and is often with you. She loves you dearly. I will try to have her materialize; but she is so very spiritual I fear she will not be able to. She can hardly endure to come in contact with anything mortal." Father, too, said the same in substance, and they both seemed to love to speak of Gracie; but they could tell me nothing more about Fred.

Some weeks later, at the close of a séance the medium's control said there were two young men in the cabinet who had not been able to come out. "One," he said, "gives the name of Fred, for Mr. W——;" the other gave another name for a gentleman who sat near me, and who recognized it as the name of a young friend of his who died some years ago. The "Fred" was for me, and was the name of my son who was drowned.

At one séance a spirit that proved to be the control of a gentleman who was a medium, materialized directly back of the chair in which I sat, and I had to rise and move my chair to enable her to pass. She took my hand, but without stopping went directly to the gentleman referred to, who rose and met her, and taking his arm she went with him around the circle, shaking hands with those who desired that favor. She had gone quite around, and was on the side opposite to me, when she turned and came straight across to where I sat, and bending down said, in a whisper so loud that those who were next to me plainly heard—"Fred is here!"

The impression I got was that Fred was present, but not able to materialize. I asked if he would be able to come out, but she passed so quickly I did not catch her reply. I had not much hope of seeing him, but was expecting father and Alice, neither of whom had yet appeared, when Mr. Albro came to me and asked me to step forward. The room was rather dark at the moment, and when I met two forms I supposed they were Alice and my father, and said, as I took an extended hand, "I am glad to meet you again, father."

"No—Fred!" was the quick reply, and then I saw that it was not my father at all, but a form very different from his, and yet not like Fred's. It was neither so large nor tall as Fred had been; but it seemed to be about his age—twenty-eight—and the next words he uttered were decidedly characteristic of him. In answer to my inquiry, "Is it possible, Fred, that this is you?" he said, "Yes, father; I've got the water out of me now, and am all right! And oh! father, I am so glad to see you!"

I shall never forget the words, or the way in which they were uttered; which, with their reference to the manner of his death, assured me that it was indeed my lost boy whom I had at length found. "Yes, father," he said again, "it is me—your boy—Fred, and I am so glad to see you!"

He was stronger than either father or Alice had been at their first coming, and remained with me some minutes, Alice standing silently by while we conversed together. He referred again to his sudden death. "Of course, father," he said, "it was a terrible blow to you, but I can now see that it was for the best. You know there are lots of young men who go the wrong way, and if I had been spared I might have brought you to shame. I feel now, father, that I can thank God for taking me when he did."

Alice stood silently by till he was gone, and then she told me that it was my strong desire to meet Fred that had enabled him to come. "Father has helped him," she said, "and he will yet be a son to be proud of."

When Alice had gone, father himself came and spoke of my boy, as he called him. "I found him in a terrible condition," he said, "but he has risen above it and is now doing nobly. You need have no more fear on his account. And, my son," he added, "whatever may come to you, do not be troubled, for all will end well."

I told him the manner of their coming and what they said; all seemed so strange, that I could hardly believe it yet.

"It seems strange to you," he answered. "It do n't agree with the dark old doctrine that has been preached so long, but it is true. Eternal life is a free gift, and it is for all, but every man must work out his own salvation, and none can escape the penalty of his transgression. That is the truth, my son, and every one must learn it, here or there."

The last manifestation at that séance was also for me, given by Fred, who came again. "It seems so good to be with you," he said, "that I have come again; I could n't have you go without speaking to you once more."

The satisfaction he seemed to feel at meeting me could only have come from an overjoyed heart, and it would hardly have been in the power of mortal not to reciprocate it. Again he spoke of the "providence," as he called it, that had prevented his bringing shame to me, and again he said he felt that he could thank God for it. "Do n't you think so, father?" he added. "I was going wrong, you know, and might have brought you to shame!"

I had never feared that, for he had always been an affectionate, generous, dutiful son; but he was fond of pleasure, and as his occupation of traveling salesman led him to form many new acquaintances, I have no doubt temptations sometimes came to him which he was not able to resist. Since he first materialized, he has come to me at every séance I have attended, both at the Berry Sisters' and at Mrs. Cowan's. He sometimes comes with Alice, but oftener alone. His form has changed, as did father's, growing larger and taller, and in his last manifestations at Mrs. Cowan's, his form has seemed identical with that of my Fred when living. His form is more natural at Mrs. Cowan's, but he remains longer at the Berry Sisters'.

As regards identity, both Fred and Alice seem different, not only in form but in mind, at the different mediums'. They have that intelligence, however, which admits of no doubt that they are the same, giving proof at each place that they know of my doings, even in my own room at home, and of many of the circumstances that surround me.

It is hardly to be supposed that one who has not witnessed similar spirit-manifestations could give full credence to these I have described, and very likely many who have witnessed the like of these may deem me too credulous, too liable to be imposed upon. However that may be, I have not received these manifestations without considerable questioning in my own mind, and a careful weighing of all the probabilities, as well as of possible motives for presenting them. For indeed no one can fully believe in the possibility of such things upon their first showing, no more than he or she can fully believe that we shall live after what we call death, without some positive proof that there is another state of existence after this. To fully believe this one must have some other proof than mere hearsay, or than that which is only legendary—some better proof, by far, than the Bible affords.

Those who profess to believe in a future existence, upon the authority of the Bible alone, have only a hope—a hope supported by faith and trust, still only a hope—there is in their minds an uncertainty, though they may be so unconscious of it as to deny it. They have no proof that can for a moment compare with that which has already been given to me, as to thousands who have earlier sought for it. We know that our loved ones who have gone from our sight still live; and we know as well that when we, too, shall have put off our mortal garbs we shall receive from them such welcome as will accord with the deeds we have done—with the lives we have here lived; and, knowing this, why should not our lives be as pure and spotless as we can make them? Is there anything that can be more conducive to a perfect life than such belief as this?

It moves my heart to pity that those who mourn in doubt and uncertainty should be so slow to receive the great truths of the future life that are so open to them—that they should even denounce the revelation of them as an imposture—pity for the blind who are being led by the blind, but hardly pity for the leaders, those self-sufficient souls who are too wise in their own conceits to ever become amenable to spiritual law while here on earth.

Reading in the BANNER OF LIGHT that a spirit had materialized at Mrs. Fay's who gave the name of "Alice," but was not recognized, I went there, thinking that possibly the unrecognized Alice was the spirit-sister who had manifested at other places to me, and met one who claimed to be my sister, and who, at the next séance I attended there, proved to be Alice; but from whom at that first séance I got no name.

At the last two séances I have attended, Fred, Florence and Gracie have all been with me together, I should say at least five minutes each time, and at the last séance Fred came the second time, that he might speak with me alone, he said, and was with me some five minutes or more. When he met me with the other two, he was not so tall by some five or six inches as he should have been, but after speaking with me a moment he said, "Wait, father," and stepping back into the cabinet, he came directly out again, having then his usual height—the same height he had when living here upon the earth, which was very nearly my own. That he is my son, the Fred that I lost, I shall never doubt.

At one séance the spirit control, Emma, went around the circle, shaking hands, and passing a few words with those who spoke to her. I thought at first it was the medium; but when, having gone quite around, she turned, and stepping to the middle of the floor, shot down like a flash, the thought was gone. Her disappearance was so sudden that it produced a slight concussion on the carpet, as if a padded mallet had struck it lightly. Of course I no longer suspected that we had been shaking hands with the medium.

Others—two or three more at least—disappeared in the same way, going as if shot down by an electric bolt, and producing a like concussion, any one of which was sufficient to convince any skeptic who could credit his own senses, that spirit materialization is an absolute fact.

Another manifestation was that of a spirit mother who came to her child, a boy whom I judged to be some nine or ten years of age, who sat in the circle. The mother came up just back of and between his chair and one next to it, necessitating the moving of the other chair that she might come in. When she had embraced her boy and been with him a short time, she led him, with an arm about his neck and one of his hands in hers, into the cabinet, where they were for some minutes hid from view. Not very long after they had come out and she had gone, the boy fell from his chair to the floor, in a trance, his friends said. They raised him up and were trying to revive him, when out from the cabinet came the mother, again in material form, and again putting an arm around her child and taking his hand, she led him once more into the cabinet, from whence, when he was fully restored to consciousness, she brought him back to his chair and again left him. It seemed to me an especially noteworthy thing, to see a spirit mother come thus in material form to care for her unconscious child.

In Miss Shelhamer's "Life and Labor in the Spirit-World" I find a thought that is so in accord with my own that I will repeat it here:

"How true it is," says Spirit Violet, "that hundreds of spirits, manifesting through organisms foreign to their own, and doing the best they can, expressing their love and sympathy, and bringing words of counsel and cheer to mortals, have been repulsed with distrust and suspicion, even with positive denial of their presence, because they were unable to give every item of material affairs demanded of them.

"Such a reception of their efforts to communicate causes sensitive spirits to recoil from earthly conditions, and thus retards their manifestation to mortals. Were I upon earth, understanding this matter as I now do, I would accept a loving, kindly communication purporting to come from a spirit friend, not with overcredulity, but with the thought that it may come from my friend, who is not yet able to give me all I wish to know.... I would throw out a ladder of reciprocal love, ... thereby strengthening conditions, until that spirit gained power to give me all my soul required."

The evidence I have had enables me to commend this thought to every one who doubts the truthfulness of the manifestations that he or she has received. Such manifestations are evidently retarded by distrust, and I have no doubt that in many cases they are prevented. If one has doubts it would be well to give the manifesting spirit the benefit of them; for such a course can result in no harm, and it may lead to the full light of a great and glorious truth—the fact that there is indeed a life immortal.

SPIRIT VOICES!

Sights and Sounds from the Vasty Deep; A Boston Judge Gets a Communication in a Slate from his Spirit Friends While Sitting Upon the Slate.

WILL SOME SCIENTIST EXPLAIN?

Hearing from a friend that a spirit medium had recently come to the Hub from the roaring wilds of Michigan, who was by spirit power or by sleight-of-hand outdoing the famed Kellar or Hermann, I asked: "Can he equal Slade, Bishop, Montague, or the once famous Foster?" "Oh!" he replied, "I tell you he can knock Slade and Foster out the first round, and as far as for Bishop and Montague, he can do them up before he starts. On my soul," exclaimed my excited friend, "he summons the spirits from the vasty deep by dozens. I have just had a sitting with him. Why, sir, I got a long communication from my brother, in his own handwriting; also one from my mother and our old preacher. These communications were written between two slates, which I held while the writing was being done."

Satisfied that my friend was off his base, or that he was a victim of a trick, I noted down carefully the name and address, and proceeded directly to the place for the purpose of investigating the spirit claim, or rather exposing, as I have frequently done, a trickster.

In twenty minutes I was at 109 Falmouth street, an apartment house just off Chester Park, near Huntington Avenue. I touched the electric button. The door was opened. I ascended one flight; was met at the door by a little boy, who, having but one eye, looked as though he might see like a spirit out of the other.

"Is this where Mr. Watkins lives?" I asked.

"Yes," was the reply.

"I mean C. E. Watkins."

"Yes."

"Is he in?"

"Yes."

"Can I see him?"

"Yes."

I was ushered into the reception-room. In a few minutes Mr. Watkins entered. I was surprised at seeing such a fine looking man, a man of fine brain, pleasing manners, an honest face, and seemingly well educated, and, as I have since learned, a cousin of the novelist Howells.

"Are you the medium who gives sittings for independent slate-writings?"

"I am," was the prompt reply.

"Can I have one?"

"You can."

At this I produced four slates.

"You can write the names of several of your departed friends on a slip of paper, and ask each one a question; then fold the slips into little balls. I will return in a few minutes."

I wrote the names of nine different persons who were dead, asking each one a question, rolled each slip, which contained a name and question, into a fine ball, and when done I could not tell which was which. I had read the report of the Seybert Commission, how they claimed that the slate-writing was done by the medium with his feet, and I prepared myself for the trick. In a few moments Mr. Watkins entered.

"Point your pencil toward the little paper balls," he said.

I did so, he standing off three or four feet from me.

"Pick up that one," he said; "it contains the name of a lady; her name is (I will give the initials only) E. G.; she says her middle name is C., which you have forgotten; but, as you were an old lover, you can look at some of her letters, which are in your vault of the Safety Deposit Vaults of this city, if you do not already remember. She also says the last time she saw you was at Trenton, N. J., and you promised——"

"Hold on," I said, "do n't you give secrets out of school."

"This spirit says," continued Mr. Watkins, "if you will take up two of the slates she will write you a communication between them, with nobody touching them but yourself; that your father, who died in Chester, Penn., four years ago, will also write a communication."

I picked up the slates and instantly heard something writing between them. In less than half a minute the writing ceased, and there were two communications filling both sides of the slate, one in the handwriting of the young lady and the other in the exact handwriting of my father.

"Take up the other slates," he said, and in less than a minute, in the same way, I got three different communications, and one from my little girl who had been dead nearly a year, written in her broken writing, and talking just as she did.

"Look on the other side of the slate," said the medium.

I did, and there was a perfect picture of my little girl, wearing the winter hood she wore the last time she was upon the street.

"This picture work of the spirits," Mr. Watkins said, "seldom occurs."

All the rest of my questions were then answered. So thoroughly astounded and almost paralyzed was I that I left without expressing myself to the medium. In just one hour I was back with our old Judge and a brother lawyer. The same performance of writing names being over, the Judge said:

"Now, Mr. Medium, trot out your spirits, if you have got any. I bet you $100 you can't get any writing between these slates, if you keep your own fingers off of them."

"Take your slates," said the medium, "into the other room, and sit down on them."

This the Judge, though inclined to be fat, did in a most simple manner.

"Now get up," said the medium, "and open your slates."

He did so, and there were two full communications filling both sides of the slates, and signed, the one from a prominent lawyer, the other from a book publisher, both well known in Boston, and only dead about two and five years ago. The handwriting was exactly their handwriting.

Over forty persons have examined these communications, and pronounced the writing and signatures genuine. Mr. Watkins is busy all the time with those seeking an interview with their friends from the vast unknown. His charges are $5, $5 and $10, according to the length and character of the sitting. I have had seven sittings, each one being more wonderful than the preceding one. I have only given an outline of a few things which occurred. If this is not done by spirit power, will some of the wise men and scientists of Boston explain how it is done?—Boston Daily Globe, Dec. 22d, 1887.

WORCESTER.—F. R. Johnson writes: "I feel it to be the duty of every Spiritualist Society to give a report as often as once a month through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT of their meetings, as I believe it will help to strengthen other societies.

The Spiritualists of Worcester have been blessed during the past three months with success; the first two months you have had an account of—Mr. Tisdale in October, and Miss Jennie B. Hagan in November.

The first two Sundays of December Edgar W. Emerson was with us. He is always welcomed, as the people here, as elsewhere, are anxious for the tests which in a mixed audience are always well received. More than sixty names and descriptions of spirit-friends were given on each Sunday, and all recognized except two or three.

Miss M. T. Shelhamer occupied the platform Sunday, Dec. 18th, and spoke in the afternoon on 'The Progress of Man,' and in the evening responded to questions from the audience in a clear and able manner.

Sunday, Dec. 25th, Prof. W. F. Peck spoke for us. His subject in the afternoon was, 'The Science of Immortality.' He handled it in an able and scholarly manner, eliciting frequent applause. In the evening 'The Philosophy of Spirit Manifestations' was the subject of his discourse, of which one of our papers said: 'It would surprise an outsider, unacquainted with the facts brought forward by the Spiritualists, to see the breadth of reading and thought displayed on their platform last evening.'

Our Society will re6ngage Mr. Peck at the earliest opportunity. We consider him to be one of the finest speakers in the field. Any society will do well to engage him. Mr. Peck is a very fine vocalist, and can interest an audience by his beautiful songs as well as by his inspiring lectures."

HAVERHILL.—Isaac L. Morse writes: "It was my good fortune to be one of a large audience that on a recent Sunday listened attentively to the words of eloquence which fell from the inspired lips of Dr. F. H. Roscoe, whose guides have the power to hold and interest an audience as but few speakers of the present day can. His evening subject was 'Death,' and he handled it in a masterly manner. Mrs. Roscoe made her début as a reader, selecting a rather difficult poem for rendition, and acquitted herself admirably.

Dr. Roscoe and his wife are earnest workers for the dissemination of the truth of our beautiful philosophy, and should be kept busily employed. We unhesitatingly recommend them to spiritual societies as in every way worthy of their support."

BOSTON.—Remarking upon the passage, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," Mrs. E. O. Hines writes: "Adam represents the physical man, and Christ the man of God, or the perfect principle. The physical or earthly body dies and passes into earthly elements of life, but the soul is attracted by the higher spirit, the pure principle of God, or Love, and is purified; that is, all that can be absorbed into the pure spirit, while the animal element is overcome and passes into oblivion. Thus the spirit gains its experience of earth life, and the strength to carry on a work for the elevation of those who have not gained that knowledge. It may take many re6mbodiments to arrive at the condition that Christ experienced when he came to earth; but all are progressing toward that end, and the length of time remains with each one alone. There are spiritual teachers ready to help us if we ask with a desire for the truth, and a willingness to accept the lesson given. Christ was a God-like man. He was a man, because he had re6mbodied into the condition of the animal man, and a God, because he had overcome every earthly condition, thereby giving to the pure spirit from God, the supreme power over the man. Thus if the God-spirit had supreme power over the soul, then he was truly a God. Spirit not having form in the beginning, takes the form of the person or animal that it gains its experience through. The soul of man goeth upward, while the beast goeth downward. The soul is absorbed by the pure spirit, perhaps it may not be made perfect, but by several re6mbodiments into the various family conditions it gives different powers to the spirit until it has gained all it needs to become master, that is, master over itself in all things, and at all times. The beast goeth downward, is taken into the vegetable kingdom, purifying itself, thus working its way upward, until it may be found giving life to another soul that has, according to the law of nature, worked itself up to the form of man from the lower animal creation, and works its way upward until it reaches and is absorbed by the pure spirit. Matter and soul are being molded over and over, always with an upward tendency, for progression is the law of God. The change may be very slow, hardly perceptible, but there is one, nevertheless. Progression may be seen in the lower animals; they are more humane, and are being taught many things that would have been impossible a hundred years ago. An improvement may be seen in the very wild beasts of the forest. Nature is doing its work, and the power of God or Good may be seen in all things. The lower animal creation have souls or minds according to the development of the body, improving with each degree of birth, until it reaches to the stature of the animal man, where God, the supreme power, takes it unto itself, forming a perfect being."

New York.

TROY.—W. H. Vosburgh, Secretary, writes: "Hon. Warren Chase recently took his departure from our midst for other points of labor. His engagement before the Star Hall Society closed Sunday evening, Dec. 25th, and although the holiday festivities absorbed the attention of the people generally, he was greeted by large and attentive audiences. His plain common-sense logic upon the themes of material and spiritual life and its governing laws was well received, and no doubt the seed sown will be productive of good to all who had the pleasure of hearing him. His life has been an eventful and useful one in the field of spiritual reform.

Our Lyceum, recently re6rganized, is growing and prospering finely. The 25th being Christmas, the exercises consisted of a musical festival, closing with a grand 'spread' and surprise to the children. A table running across the entire length of the north section of the hall was loaded with a bountiful supply of good things, tastefully and beautifully arranged, and this was all screened from sight until the sign was given, when instantly the curtains were drawn aside, and the children invited to the feast. The hall was filled with visitors and friends, and after the children were satisfied, all were invited to the feast with us. After all had partaken, I think that possibly there might have been twelve or even fifteen baskets left. We had a glorious happy time throughout."

WATERVILLE.—Mrs. Cordelia B. Peck writes: "Mrs. Louie Kearn Lowe, the ballot test medium, was here a few days and held two dark circles. The manifestations were very fine. Some of the best men of the town attended for the first time. They seemed to be very much interested, and say they would like to know more about it."

NEW YORK CITY.—Mrs. A. A. Vedder writes: "Sunday evening, Dec. 4th, at the residence of Mrs. Gray, No. 323 West 34th street, I was one of nineteen ladies and gentlemen, mostly strangers to each other, who witnessed materializing phenomena, Mr. Hough being the medium. Shortly after being seated, Lotela, the Indian maiden of the Banner of Light Free Circle-Room, appeared in luminous apparel and crossed the room to a man whom she addressed as 'the Judge.' Music was played by invisible hands, and several forms appeared, and, going to their friends, called them by name and whispered their own. In the meantime Mrs. Gray, who is both clairvoyant and clairaudient, saw spirits and described them, and spoke the name she heard, and some one in the circle said the name was correct.

The gas being then lighted, there came in rapid succession from the cabinet, Miss Lizzie Hatch, Lucille Western, a very tall, ancient spirit, one speaking the name, 'Mother,' who passed to a man who conversed with her, Miss Edie Cadwell to her sister Mamie, one who gave the name of Edna Zwikert of Hartford, Conn., and Dr. Baker, who saluted the audience, walked to one side of the room and faded away as we looked upon him. At the same time there appeared in the middle of the room, in view of all, what appeared to be a puff of white thin lace. As Mrs. Gray held her hands above it it seemed to move, and in a few minutes a lady stood there, and, taking down a French flag hanging near by, asked for the 'Marseillaise.' As it was sung she faded, and, as we were looking, forth from that bit of fleecy white there grew up another spirit, and it was that of Dr. Baker who had so lately vanished. A German gentleman was called to the cabinet to see and talk with his mother and one he called Fritz. His conversation was in German.

About fifty spirits came into view and were recognized. One, Nelson King, who said he died by drowning, was recognized by a cousin of his, who said his name could not possibly have been known by any one in the room."

New Jersey.

ROSELLE.—B. F. Carpenter writes: "Residents of this place were favored recently with a lecture by Mr. Milton Allen, of Philadelphia, upon the spiritual elevation of mankind and consequent reform in temporal, social, political and religious life, to be accomplished in the present and near future. His remarks, which were accompanied by a series of illustrations, were based upon the book having for its title 'The Origin of all Things,' deducing therefrom that the hour has come when a new life must be engendered; not alone in Evangelical associations, but in the great multitude of spiritual believers as well. Such lectures as the one he gave are the bugle blasts for a new crusade; not against evil, but to overcome it with good; not to banish darkness, but to infuse light; not to tear down or destroy, but to build up and renew; not to establish any new denomination, but to reform all.

I write from a feeling of duty, that your readers may avail themselves of Mr. Allen's services, who, I am assured, will try to answer all calls."

Michigan.

ADRIAN.—O. S. Barrett writes: "Popular Theology teaches that human beings, following what is termed 'death,' remain in chaotic night until called for final disposition on a judgment day, at which time those found wanting are consigned to eternal perdition, where there is 'wailing and gnashing of teeth'; those who have been good and faithful, to a happiness of like duration. My Christian friends, that 'judgment day' will never come; there will be no 'rattling of dry bones'; but, as Spiritualism teaches, each individual will continue to follow his inclinations, and eventually advance to light, knowledge and supreme happiness."

Ohio.

MIDDLETOWN.—M. A. Robinson writes: "Spiritualism is progressing rapidly in our city. A year ago I did not know a dozen Spiritualists here; now they are numbered by the score, all having become such through the efficient work of a private medium, who located here about that time, coming from Cincinnati. There have been some wonderful cures made through him. In his trance circle he has given names in full of loved ones passed into the spirit-land, and has caused such an interest in Spiritualism among the people of this place, that some of the ministers have been preaching against it."

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—E. P. Goodsell writes that in his opinion the Seybert Commission paid too much deference to the popular religion, and feared too much the upraised, rebuking finger of Mrs. Grundy to give to the world a report different from the one that has made it a butt of ridicule the world over, with all who consider an investigation of any subject by any man or set of men should be thorough and impartial to be of any valde. As it was, he thinks preconceived views of what should be were held to be of greater value than newly discovered views of what really is.

January Magazines.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY opens the New Year in a manner to prove that the promises made for '88 are to be scrupulously fulfilled by its managers. A steel-plate portrait of Miss Murfree (Charles Egbert Craddock) is the frontispiece; the first installment of "Yone Santo: A Child of Japan," a new serial to be contributed by Edward H. House, follows; James Russell Lowell discloses "A Secret" in three stanzas; the "Unpublished Letters of Benjamin Franklin," as set forth by S. G. W. Benjamin, cannot fail of proving of marked interest; Craddock commences a new story: "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove," with striking power of delineation; Oliver Wendell Holmes, in a half-playful, half-serious paper, intended as an addenda to his "Hundred Days in Europe," seeks to account for certain literary slips occurring in, and to remove divers misunderstandings which have arisen concerning his relation of his personal wanderings in England; one of these troubles has evidently come from his use of a certain bird as an illustration, ("a tough old macaw," if our memory serves us,) the introduction of which in his narrative was, to us, at the time and under the peculiar circumstances, a matter of wonder; J. T. Trowbridge contributes a classic poem, "The Lost Earl," which all should read; Frances L. Mace has a splendid though brief tribute to Whittier on his eightieth birthday; there are other good articles, not here mentioned, which, together with the usual book reviews, "Contributor's Club," etc., go to complete the excellence of this initial issue for the New Year. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, Boston, Mass.

ST. NICHOLAS.—John G. Whittier furnishes "The Brown Dwarf of Rügen," a poem based on an old German superstition related to the Elves and Trolls. The frontispiece illustrating the poem is a design by the skillful young artist, Edwin H. Blashfield, whose pen-drawings also accompany it on every page. "The Amusements of Arab Children" are described by H. W. Jessup, with illustrations by Harry Fenn. An amusing account is given of "London Christmas Pantomimes," the engravings being quite suggestive to those desiring to arrange holiday entertainments. A good idea is obtained of the experiences of the children of the South during war times from "How the Yankees Came to Blackwood," by Louise Herrick. This number is one of the best; in fact, it is one of exceptional attractiveness in its prose and poetry, and equally so in the subjects and execution of its many engravings. New York: The Century Company. For sale by Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street, Boston.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—Thurlow Weed is the subject of the leading paper, filling twenty pages and illustrated with an exterior and several interior views of his home in New York, a fac-simile of a letter of Abraham Lincoln, and a portrait which is the frontispiece. Dr. Prosper Bender contributes, under the title "Canada: Reciprocity, or Commercial Union," much that will shed light upon a somewhat vexatious question now before the two countries for settlement. In "The Battle of Tohopeka, or Horse-Shoe," is given the report of that event (1814) by Andrew Jackson, never before published. Of the remaining contents are: "Samuel Carpenter the Elder, 1649–1714," "Discovery of Yucatan," "Christ Church, New York City," and "Fundamental Principles of Our Government." In "Notes," as an instance of history repeating itself, is copied from a New York paper of 1831 a lugubrious complaint against the custom of women going "to the theatre with hats on their heads big enough to overshadow a little German principality." New York: 743 Broadway.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—The opening of a new volume introduces two new serials—"Mornica; or, Truth Stronger than Death," by Evelyn Green, and "By Misadventure," by Frank Barrett—both promising to be highly entertaining. Timely articles are "How I Spent Christmas in Fatherland," "The Garden in December," "Flowers of the Month," and "A Winter Picture," the last in verse. In practical home life we are given "The Principles of Pastry Making," and in "The Gatherer" a variety of new inventions and discoveries. New York: Cassell & Co.

☞ Read "ZOELLNER'S TRANSCENDENTAL PHYSICS." This is one of the grandest works of the nineteenth century. Everybody should have a copy. Colby & Rich have the work on sale at the Banner of Light Bookstore, 9 Bosworth street, Boston.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From the home of his son, James Hawkins, Stoneham, Mass., Lewis Hawkins, aged 82 years and 6 months.

His passage from the mortal was prefaced by a long, painful illness. During the last sixty-three days not one particle of nourishment was given which could remain in the stomach except cold water and a very little sweet cider. His case caused much wonder and astonishment. His dear, patient companion has been blind for three years, and could render no assistance in caring for her husband. A large family of children, now men and women, are left to love and care for their blind mother.

"Grandpa Hawkins" was for many years a firm and faithful Spiritualist, and never hesitated to avow his knowledge of it. It was his wish that the writer should officiate at the funeral, and having the Rev. Mr. Dearborn, Methodist clergyman, to read Scripture and make a prayer, I was able to do so.

May his arisen spirit be with and sustain the loved ones still in the form, is the prayer of M. B. WOOD.

From Burton, Mich., Nov. 4th, without disease or pain, Mrs. Caroline M. Higbie, aged 76 years last May.

She was born in New London, Conn., and at an early age became a member of the Congregational Church in Northampton, Mass., where she was a member of the large choir for many years. She was married to D. Higbie, M. D., in 1814; became a Spiritualist soon after the Rochester Knockings occurred; was a true, faithful wife and mother, and an ardent advocate of Spiritualism. She saw her mother fully materialized many years after her death, under strict test conditions, as also did some thirty others at the same time. She said she would not go back to the old faith for all the world. A few minutes before she closed her eyes in death, we gave her a cordial invitation to return to us, or send us a message through her favorite BANNER OF LIGHT as soon as she could. COM.

From Centreville (Warwick), R. I., Betsey M. Tyler, beloved wife of Casey B. Tyler, aged 66 years 7 months.

Although feeble in health for many years, she was of strong mind, and a great reader and profound thinker. She was a constant reader of the BANNER OF LIGHT for many years, and of all the progressive works, of which she had a large number. She was a firm believer in spirit-communion, which was a great comfort to her in her long sickness. Since her transition she has communicated with her husband, and says spirit-life is far more beautiful and glorious than earthly minds can imagine. COM.

From Westfield, Mass., on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 4th, 1887, S. P. Burt, aged 73 years.

He was an earnest Spiritualist, and his true and pure life was the best exponent of his faith. COM.

UNANSWERABLE LOGIC:

A SERIES OF

SPIRITUAL DISCOURSES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

THOMAS GALES FORSTER.

These lectures, in a remarkably clear and comprehensive manner, give a very complete presentation of the phenomena and teachings of Modern Spiritualism, comparing them with those of the past in respect to life here and hereafter, and showing most conclusively that they are identical with the foundation facts and principles of primitive Christianity.

The arguments in support of a natural religion are strong and impregnable to all assaults that may be leveled against them, and commend themselves, by their reasonableness, to the common-sense understanding of every honest-minded person. The views presented of a future life—the undeniable proofs given of the reality, naturalness and immortality of that life—will be consolatory to those who mourn the seeming loss of friends, and inspire them with courage to meet the trials and duties that attend their present form of existence.

The thousands who have listened to the eloquent discourses of Thomas Gales Forster, when in the prime of earth-life, and wished that the truths he uttered, and so ably enforced under the inspiration of his exalted spirit-guides, might be put in a form available for the enlightenment of the world of mankind now and in future years, will welcome this volume with heartfelt gratitude.

The book as a whole is true to its name, and many who might be disposed to combat the author's positions will find that he has fortified them with "Unanswerable Logic."

REPORT

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

IF A MAN DIE,

Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.

It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.

It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

SUMMARY OF SUBSTANTIALISM; or, Philosophy of Knowledge. By JEAN STORY.

The author claims to show conclusively the mythologic origin of the Christian system of worship—the worship of the Lamb; thence makes a most urgent appeal for a higher appreciation and cultivation of the GOOD in humanity; thence urges the utter repudiation of the soul-degrading practice of idol-worship, whether the idols be ideal-gods, or sun-gods, or men-gods, or leading-men, or animals, or inanimate things. The subjects treated of are chaptered as follows:

Knowledge Man's Savior. The Heavenly Hosts. Egyptian Mysteries. Christian Idolatry. Nature's Genetic Principles. Genesis of the Human Organism. All Nutriment Metaphysical. All Organization Essential. Repetition of Inherited Qualities. Repetition. Evolution. Immortality. Sex, Soul, Spirit, Life. The Mind's Conceptive Creations Necessarily Endless. The Physical and Metaphysical Necessarily Immortal.

The Hereafter as Viewed by the Clergy.

The Boston Herald for Sunday, Dec. 25th, devoted a broadside to a symposium of the preachers and spiritual teachers of Boston and vicinity on the most important subject of which the human mind is capable of taking cognizance—the Hereafter. It consisted of a collection of concisely stated views by those who are regularly engaged in preaching to the people the absorbing doctrine of immortal life for the mortal spirit. It is to be taken for granted that, if the various writers failed to say all they could have said on the subject, no one of them failed to say the most that he could. The thing to be specially remarked, in any perusal of all their statements, is that they based their convictions wholly on faith, and, while indulging consistently in reasoning on the matter, still confessed that it was wholly impossible to establish belief by absolute demonstration. After reaching a certain point the realm of mystery begins and faith supplies the sole illumination. Rev. Dr. Miner, for example, a Universalist, simply reasons cogently that both the physicist and the psychologist ought in consistency to accept the doctrine of immortal life; produces Bible texts for evidence; and considers that faith in a life hereafter is needed to make this life endurable. And he clinches all with the statement that "if future life be not a reality, then the most tremendous of untruths is essential to the present well being of every human soul."

Many of the ministerial writers rest their belief on asserted revelation, professing everything, but disclosing nothing. One, a Catholic, determining the essence of the agent from the nature of an action, reasons that the human intellect is spiritual in its essence from the nature of human intelligence. And as such it "is one of the indestructibles in nature, and the chief among all that exist on this earth." Rev. James Freeman Clarke gives as his first reason for believing in a future life that it is a human instinct so to believe, and that the vast majority of mankind have believed in a future existence, including the savage tribes in all quarters of the globe. He is confident that this belief has not come from argument or reasoning or observation, "but from an inborn instinct." And he considers that "faith in God gives us the greatest assurances of immortality"; and that those who share the faith held by Jesus "lose all sense of death in a progressive life." As Dr. Channing said, "immortality begins here." Rev. Mr. Hamilton, Methodist, says "there can be no obligations to goodness, no evidence anywhere of justice, if man does not live after death." Rev. Percy Browne, Episcopalian, regards the question of life hereafter "as a question decided by the spiritual quality of individual character rather than by the strength of any special argument." He considers all the proofs urged in support of the doctrine of a life hereafter as having flaws. Conviction is an essential fact of the spiritual nature of us all.

At the best, he can say that when the desire that the doctrine may be true stirs in the soul, he cannot but think that "it is the beginning of that development of the spiritual nature which grows into the unshaken conviction that there is a life beyond the grave." Rev. H. W. Foote, preacher at King's Chapel, thinks very highly of the argument from the incompleteness of the present life. And he ends with the quotation from Emerson: "I have always thought that faith in immortality was a proof of the sanity of a man's nature." Rev. Dr. Bartol's compression of his views is the following: "The idea that man is an ephemeron does not kindle to great deeds or strengthen to any sublime endeavor." Rev. Julian K. Smyth, Swedenborgian, says that spiritual evidence is needed to prove the soul's existence; that besides the traditions of universal belief in a resurrection, and the irrepressible longings for a life beyond the grave, "the nature of man is in itself an indication of a higher world, in which that nature can attain its full development." "There are moments," says he, "in the life of every noble man when he feels the divine presence, and this communion is life eternal." Rev. Joseph Cook thinks "it is no more wonderful that we should live again than that we should live at all." And he adds, "the weaver that exists before the web he produces may exist after that web is destroyed, and, if God so will, may weave another organism, a spiritual body, adapted to the wants of a better state of existence."

Rev. Brooke Herford, Congregational Unitarian, observes that "it is not that a future life is needed for compensation, but for the working out of that moral completeness which the present seldom brings." He regards nature, where it comes to its highest and clearest meaning in man, as full of suggestions of immortality; but that the thought and teaching of Christ lifts it into a quiet certainty. Rev. George A. Gordon, Congregational Trinitarian, believes that immortality of necessity "belongs to the philosophy of the universe." He accepts as the starting point in his conviction on the subject the assertion of Lotze, the German thinker, that "that will last forever which on account of its excellence and spirit must be an abiding part of the order of the universe." Rabbi Solomon Schindler, of the Reformed Jewish Church, says: "if an existence of life after death could be proven, we would no longer believe it—it would be certainty. There are no proofs of a life hereafter, and therefore we cling to the belief. Past generations know as little about it as does the present, and I doubt whether the dark veil will ever be lifted." He says the Bible records only go to prove that people have yearned for a future existence in the past as they do to-day, and that of non-existence we have no conception. Arguments for immortality are plentiful. He regards man as a dual being, mind chained to matter, or matter saturated with mind. Why should not one be as indestructible as the other?

There were other expressions of clerical views on this most absorbing of all subjects and questions to the human race, but we have cited sufficiently from those which contain the salient points in the discussion. It has of course been noticed by everybody who read these statements from the occupants of pulpits, that, while they almost unanimously fall back on what is called "revelation" and the resurrection of Jesus as the corner-stone of their belief in a future life, they nevertheless manifest a common desire to resort to proofs that are far more individual and direct, and so proceed to argue immortality from the facts of instinct, desire, hope, faith and belief, all of them together, however, failing to satisfy them with an assured certainty of the main truth of which they are in such anxious quest. It is falling back on reason, after all. Mere faith is not satisfying. Certainty is needed. The pulpits confess their utter inability to furnish it. Nothing so effectually attests the fact that the old traditions respecting "revelation" are become wholly insufficient to answer the great question of our time, than this very attempt of a body of clergymen to find a new way of answering it, even while holding fast to revelation.

These men of the pulpit are given to calling the present age a skeptical one, merely because it is one of more searching and serious inquiry concerning spiritual matters than any age which has preceded it. It will not do to try to evade the matter in any such way. Who can take it upon himself to say that the spirit of a skeptic would not be gladdened with the presented proofs of a future life equally with that of a professing Christian? The modern preachers shall not be allowed without open rebuke thus to offer thanks to God that they are not as these other men. We are all a united human family, and a common brotherhood. The future life is the heritage of us all alike. The one truth of which men are waiting to be convinced is the truth of immortality. They will not be satisfied with converse reasons, such as those drawn from the opposite assumption of annihilation. They hunger for real evidence that comes home to the heart of each individual for himself and herself. They are familiar with the stale and practically meaningless preachments from pretended revelation, and call for something that shall be convincing without theory, without assumption and concession—and wholly without knowledge. Why can they not have what they universally desire?

It is because they desire this priceless knowledge that it has finally and freely been given. It is strictly according to clerical reasoning, too, that it has been given, since the instinct and the desire could not have been thus implanted only to be mocked and denied. In the fullness of time the heavens have opened, and the new spirit has descended. Immortality is brought to light for every one who does not willfully remain blind. SPIRITUALISM is the gift awaited by the centuries, bestowed on those living in the latter half of the present century as the first acknowledged beneficiaries. The heavenly light was unable to penetrate except in scattered and single rays before; now it is poured out like a flood upon the whole world. What is the reason that these ministers purposely refuse so much as to recognize the existence of the irresistible proofs of a future life which Spiritualism furnishes them, but think their own speculations and reasonings satisfying enough? There is no reason, there obviously can be none, save that which has always and everywhere illustrated human nature, namely, because men occupying sure places which the acceptance of new and larger views would render insecure, prefer to cling to what they have, rather than embrace what is better with the chances of having to submit to the loss of present temporal good.

☞ In a private note from a friend in New York the writer says: "We are in receipt of the last number of Hall's Journal of Health, and it sparkles all over with bright gems of thought. Its editor must have been inspired, as his articles show talent and genius of a marked character." We also learn that our correspondent attended Mrs. Pennell's meeting at 52 Union Square, on Christmas Eve, where a goodly number of friends had congregated; that the occasion was one of genuine rational enjoyment, and that one of her controls, "Prairie Flower," gave many excellent tests which were fully recognized.

☞ Dr. and Mrs. Henry Rogers, of whose remarkable artistic mediumship an account was given some time since, have been for about six months almost wholly secluded from society at their home in San Francisco, they having been during that time sitting for a spirit-likeness, which proves to be that of a spirit-sister of a prominent citizen of Washington Territory.

What Macaulay Thought of a Government Religion.

A pertinent and timely word from a writer like Macaulay may perhaps be heeded by the wrong-headed men who think they are going to help the cause of religion forward wonderfully by incorporating the accepted shibboleth of the Christian profession in the Constitution of the United States. Macaulay was one who ought to be able to state the effects of mixing up civil and religious things as explicitly and authoritatively as anybody can. He remarks in one of his essays: "The real security of Christianity is to be found in its benevolent morality, in its exquisite adaptation to the human heart, in the facility with which its scheme accommodates itself to the capacity of every human intellect, in the consolation which it bears to the house of mourning, in the light with which it brightens the great mystery of the grave. To such a system it can bring no addition of dignity or of strength, that it is part and parcel of the common law. It is not now for the first time left to rely on the force of its own evidences and the attractions of its own beauty.

"Its sublime theology confounded the Grecian schools in the fair conflict of reason with reason. The bravest and wisest of the Cæsars found their arms and their policy unavailing, when opposed to the weapons that were not carnal, and the kingdom that was not of this world. The victory which Porphyry and Diocletian failed to gain is not, to all appearance, reserved for any of those who have in this age directed their attacks against the last restraint of the powerful and the last hope of the wretched. The whole history of the Christian religion shows that she is in far greater danger of being corrupted by the alliance of power than of being crushed by its opposition. Those who thrust temporal sovereignty upon her treat her as their prototypes treated her author. They bow the knee, and spit upon her; they cry Hail, and smite her on the cheek; they put a sceptre into her hand, but it is a fragile reed; they crown her, but it is with thorns; they cover with purple the wounds which their own hands have inflicted on her; and inscribe magnificent titles over the cross on which they have fixed her to perish in ignominy and pain."

In the above passage the sure result of all attempts to marry religion to civil law is most effectively and eloquently sketched. If those who are blindly and blunderingly engaged in that mistaken work in this country are half as wise as they would be thought, they will give these words serious heed in due season.

Independent Slate-Writing.

The occult power which is manifested in presence of Dr. Slade seems to be on the increase. He is much improved in health since his European tour, and says he never felt better in his life. With the full knowledge we have of his medial gifts, it seems strange indeed that Chairman Furness and his associates of the Seybert Commission should have made such a report as they did. It is simply inexplicable, when we take into consideration the respectability of the parties referred to, that they should have blundered so outrageously. Our columns of late give unimpeachable evidence of the reliability of the doctor's mediumship, and much more could be said in his favor than what has already been published.

Previous to leaving New York, we called a second time on this noted medium, in company with our partner, Mr. Rich. The manifestations we witnessed were somewhat similar to those reported by us on a previous visit: Two slates were placed upon Mr. Rich's left shoulder by the medium, with a bit of slate-pencil between them, when at once we could hear distinctly the noise made by the pencil as of some one writing. The room was well-lighted, and it was not possible that the least deception could have been employed. In a few moments distinct raps were given upon the table, signifying that a message had been expressed. On opening the slates, the following was found written upon one of them:

"My Friends—The attainment of our greatest desires is often the source of our greatest sorrows. To be happy is not to possess much, but to hope and love much. I am, very truly, the spirit of

Other exhibitions of spirit-power closed this very interesting séance.

What has Bro. H. H. Furness to say to such facts?

Look on This Picture—Then on That!

On January 1st, 1888, eighty thousand distinguished personages thronged St. Peter's Cathedral in Rome to hear mass and see the Pope.

In London, at the same time, eighty thousand paupers, many of them Catholics, were in a starving condition!

Christians! how do you like the picture?

"The Two Worlds" a Penny Paper.

In the sixth number of Mrs. Hardinge-Britten's new paper it is announced that, in consequence of the wide-spread interest in it and the success already achieved, the price is reduced to one penny a copy in order to further extend its circulation. The yearly subscription price is also reduced.

☞ Kind words are indeed blessed things; but when evil-disposed persons send out lying words against their fellows without a moment's reflection they do unjust things. Above all else Spiritualists should not be guilty of misrepresentation, and thus injure those who have many times befriended them. It is not spiritual—it belies their professed belief—it is sad to contemplate. Yet there are just such people who profess to hold communion with the angels; and thus we would remind all such that kind words are blessed things, that should be spoken each day—that should be scattered like sunbeams everywhere. They will not only bless others, but return to bless your own heart. Think of these things seriously, you who are swift to condemn.

DR. JAMES R. NICHOLS, one of the best known chemists in New England, passed to spirit-life from his home in Haverhill, Mass., on the afternoon of Jan. 2d, aged 68 years 5 months 13 days. He established the Boston Journal of Chemistry in 1865, and was its editor up to the time of his death. Dr. Nichols was known to be an interested student of the Spiritual Philosophy, and achieved an almost national reputation (aside from his chemical discoveries, etc.,) by his remarkable work on human life and future destiny, entitled, "Whence? What? Where?" which has now reached its eleventh edition.

The American Spiritualist Alliance.

By the report of its Corresponding Secretary, J. Franklin Clark, it will be seen that the members of The Alliance are discussing the vital question of the feasibility of placing the Spiritual Phenomena upon a purely scientific basis.

Several earnest Spiritualists, before passing to spirit-life, have donated various sums to the end that such facts as could be gathered upon the subject should be given to the world in an impartial manner, with a single eye to verity; but though honestly given, the funds were unfortunately placed in the hands of parties entirely incompetent to carry out properly the testators' legacies. The result has been, as might have been expected, a total failure up to the present time.

Others, by and in the name of Psychic, or Psychical, Societies, in London and the United States, have assumed to take the question in hand for elucidation, but have also signally failed.

Thus this highly important matter stands at the present time; but it gives us great pleasure to be able to state that the American Spiritual Alliance, with headquarters in the city of New York, has taken the subject in hand in earnest; and it is to be hoped the officers of that institution will persevere until they have placed the Spiritual Phenomena where they should have been placed years ago, on a firm basis—so firm that no carping critics could hereafter molest them, or pervert the facts they attest in any way whatsoever.

We call especial attention to what the Corresponding Secretary has recorded on our eighth page.

Demonstrations in a Rectory.

The residence of Rev. F. W. Smith, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Fall River, Mass., has for a month past been the scene of demonstrations similar to those in the house of Dr. Phelps at Stratford, Ct., nearly forty-one years ago. The first occurred upon the arrival of two newly employed servant-girls, and it is presumed by some that one of them is a physical medium. The noises, which occur principally at night, consist of rappings, the continuous slamming of folding-doors, sounds as of marbles rolling down stairs, and other noises equally strong. In addition to this, lamps are mysteriously lighted in various parts of the house, and rugs and bric-à-brac are disturbed during the night.

Though at first it was thought the manifestations might be easily explained, all attempts thus far made to do so have failed. On one occasion the tongue was taken out of the doorbell to stop the interminable ringing, but the committee on guard still saw the bell shake vigorously at irregular intervals, without any apparent human agency to cause it.

The church is the oldest as well as the leading Episcopal church in Fall River, and its congregation includes some of the leading families in the city.

☞ A young married woman, by the name of Wynant, residing near Anderson, Ind., says the Star, Gatesville, Texas, died suddenly. She had an intimate friend, Julia Graney. The morning after the funeral Julia saw Mrs. W. walking near the house and beckoning to her. She went out and conversed with her, and, on returning, told her sister of the meeting and repeated what was said. The spirit was again seen by Julia, and her sister, who was with her, though not seeing the spirit, did see Julia shake hands and could hear the words spoken by her and the spirit. Finally the spirit, whom Julia felt positive was Mrs. Wynant, bade them an affectionate farewell, said she could visit them no more, and disappeared.

☞ Mrs. Flora B. Cabell, a lady of prominence in Washington, D. C., writes an account of her experiences last summer with Mrs. Ross, the medium. Mrs. C. claims to have had a séance alone with Mr. and Mrs. Ross, at which she saw spirit-members of her own family, unmistakably, and was told things impossible for Mrs. Ross to have known. She says she begun her sittings with Mrs. Ross (six public and one private) with no confidence whatever in the general phenomena at materializing séances, but is now confident that form-manifestation is a great fact.

THE THEOSOPHIST.—In the December number just received, H. S. Olcott reviews the rise, progress and present state of Theosophy in France. A. P. Sinnett treats upon "The Relations of the Lower and Higher Self." The "Rosicrucian Letters" are continued, and accounts of strange beliefs and practices are related in "Ghost-Lore from Guzerat," compiled from a rare book, "Bhut Nibandh," Bhut designating the earth-bound spirit of a deceased man. Considerable is said by correspondents upon Hindu Astrology. Madras, India. Boston: For sale by Colby & Rich.

☞ A correspondent informs us that an acquaintance who is a constant reader of the BANNER OF LIGHT, in speaking of the executive and editorial as well as the mechanical departments of this paper, made use of the following commendatory remarks: "It is one of the best published, also edited, ones that I find, either within or without the ranks of Spiritualism." A literary gentleman made still more flattering remarks, in the hearing of our informant, concerning the paper, and regarding its general appearance and literary ability.

CHANGE OF HOUR.—Attention is called to the fact—stated under "Meetings in Boston"—that hereafter the Sunday evening service of the Berkeley Hall Spiritual Temple Society will commence at 7 o'clock (instead of 7½), the change having been made by the management in order that numbers of people from suburban towns, who attend this session, may in future be able to reach their homes at an earlier hour than formerly.

MR. SAMUEL ROBERTS recently passed to spirit-life—writes W. W. Currier—from his late residence, 28 Duncan street, Haverhill, Mass., aged seventy-one years, eleven months and seventeen days. "He was one of the Trustees of the First Spiritualists' Society of this city; a consistent Spiritualist and a true man. We shall feel his loss deeply, both in social life and in our Society." [Maine papers please notice.]

☞ Mr. Frank Herne, a medium for physical phenomena of a very remarkable character, including form-materialization, whose services as such have been largely utilized in England during the last twenty years, passed to spirit-life Dec. 8th.

The "Condition" of Mr. Seybert's Gift.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In a recent notice of Prof. Kiddle's Review of the Report of the Seybert Commission, printed in your columns, I called attention to the need of more definite information relative to the "condition" attached by Mr. Seybert to his donation to the University of Pennsylvania, which led to the appointment of the investigating Commission—a serious discrepancy appearing between the terms of this "condition" as stated in the Report, and those set forth by Mr. Thomas R. Hazard.

I am happy to be able to say that I have been furnished from an authentic source with a copy of Mr. Seybert's letter accompanying the donation. The letter is without date, but is stated to have been received by the Trustees some weeks or months before Mr. Seybert's decease. The condition attached to the gift of $60,000 to found the "Adams Seybert Chair of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy," is expressed in the following terms:

"Upon the condition that the incumbent of said chair, either individually or in conjunction with a commission of the University Faculty, shall make a thorough and impartial investigation of all systems of morals, religion or philosophy which assume to represent the Truth, and particularly Modern Spiritualism."

It will be noted that the language is the same as that given by Mr. Hazard (and I think identical with that incorporated in Mr. Seybert's will, though I am unable at this moment to lay my hand on the copy of this instrument which I procured in Philadelphia), but is markedly different from that given in the Report of the Commission.

It yet remains to be explained why the Commission should put forth such an inaccurate statement of this "condition"; also, why the Trustees should appoint one-half of the members of the Commission from outside the Faculty, when Mr. Seybert expressly stipulated that it should be "of the Faculty"; also, why the Trustees have allowed to be thrust upon the public an ill-digested, partial, superficial and manifestly unreliable "preliminary Report" of the investigation of certain professional mediums, or certain unessential alleged phenomena, when Mr. Seybert had specified "a thorough and impartial investigation of all systems of morals, religion or philosophy which assume to represent the Truth, and particularly Modern Spiritualism" (with not a word about a report)—a work upon which they appear not to have entered at all as yet.

Mr. Seybert's letter also affords a correction of a misapprehension which has become somewhat prevalent. It has been supposed by many that his donation of $60,000 was given to defray the expenses of an investigation of Spiritualism; and this supposition probably in some instances has led professional mediums to insist upon liberal if not exorbitant charges for their services before the Commission. The facts are that the money was given to found a chair of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy in the University, with the express stipulation that only the interest of the fund was to be expended, first in paying the salary of the Professor—the overplus alone, should there be any, to be used as the Trustees may deem best to promote the views of the donor.

As a matter of fact, I am informed that all expenses of the investigation thus far have been defrayed by a single member of the Commission out of his private means.

Yours for the truth, A. E. NEWTON.

"OUTSIDE THE GATES," Miss Shelhamer's new book, is the subject of a review in London Light of Dec. 24th. After quoting from it, the writer says: "We might select many points for commendation, but we content ourselves with a word of praise for the gentle, sincere and earnest spirit that pervades the book, and a recommendation to parents and guardians to use it in the training of the young."

☞ Silas Hatch, Swale, N. Y., writes: "In reading your recent experiences in New York, as contained in the BANNER, I have been much pleased with the interesting facts thus furnished to the public. God bless and keep you in health, that you may long be spared to labor in the cause of humanity."

God's Poor Fund.

Since our last report we have received the following sums in aid of the destitute poor whom spirit-friends bring to our notice for relief:

Alexander, 50 cents; H. J. Moore, 75 cents; J. Hatch, $5.00; Mara A. Mason, 50 cents; From Banner of Light Free Circle-Room, $1.15; H. B., $1.00; A. J. Kennison, $1.00. Grateful thanks, friends.

J. J. Morse in California.

Mr. J. J. Morse's lectures in Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, are attracting attentive audiences, and are deemed of sufficient interest to the general public to be reported at some length in the Chronicle. On the evening of Dec. 25th his subject was "Christmastide: A Factor of Social Life." It was announced that Mrs. E. L. Watson was to take part in the evening exercises of last Sunday—New Year's day.

☞ The way of life is like a path along the sea-coast. Every now and then it brings one to a bay, setting inland, and around which we pass. The year's end is such a turning-place. We pause and look out upon the sea of eternity that rolls in to our very feet. But one day the time-path will go no further. The water before us will not be that of the bay, but we shall have come to land's end. We may not stop, though our souls shrink back from the chilling flood. Destiny is ever crying, "Move on!"

So sighs the evangelical Homiletic Monthly; but to the Spiritualist the exit of the Old Year and the coming of the New is no more natural than the close of mortal experience, and the passage of the excarnated intelligence into the grander scenes of the better land. There is no "chilling flood," no "land's-end." Destiny to him is not a stern policeman with his official "move on," but an angel messenger pointing with kindly hand to the glad House "where many mansions be!"

Copies can be had by addressing the Board, 461 Tenth street, Oakland.

☞ Milton Lyle, Secretary First Association of Spiritualists, writes as follows from St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 28th: "W. Harry Powell, the well-known slate-writing and pellet test medium, passed suddenly to spirit-life from this city on Nov. 27th, 1887. The remains were forwarded to Philadelphia, and the funeral, which was very largely attended, took place from his late residence, 313 New street."

WHAT THE BULGARIANS THINK.—Olive Harper, in Demorest's Monthly, speaks as follows regarding the Bulgarian idea of the relationship between soul and body, and the subtle links temporarily existing between them after the change called death has been experienced:

"When the [funeral] procession reaches the cemetery it gathers around the grave, which is always shallow, and as soon as the last words are said, and the coffin closed and consigned to the dust, each one present throws in one shovelful of dirt, and it is thus filled up before they leave. One reporter was recently informed that "there are thousands of persons—women for the most part—who are converts to the mind-cure theory," and that there are more than a hundred shrewd operators in Brooklyn alone "who are making money out of these delusions."

Decease of Mrs. M. A. French.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Star of this city last evening contained the announcement of the decease of our well-known medium, Mrs. M. A. French, at the age of sixty. She passed away suddenly, I am told, at her temporary residence, 717 M street, N. W. This will be sad news to her very large circle of friends, who know how to appreciate her fidelity to her convictions, her honesty in her vocation as a medium, and her readiness for every truly charitable work.

Struggling through many years against a constant stream of adversity, she bore herself with fortitude and patience, worthy of a true woman, to the end, which at last has come with rich rewards to her, and a legacy of sorrows to her friends, who will forever miss the door she kept open to the bright world which is now henceforth to be her own home. May she still work from that side to advance the perfect day that shall at last illumine our world by the full restoration of our loved and lost. D. L.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 30th, 1887.

Hon. Warren Chase

Will meet his friends, and all who choose to come, in PAINE HALL, Boston, on his seventy-fifth birthday, January 5th (Thursday), at 7 P. M., where an interesting and intellectual entertainment will be enjoyed during the evening, consisting of music, recitations and short speeches by quite a number of prominent speakers, with a brief sketch of his forty years' labors on the spiritual rostrum, which term closes with the present year.

A highly enjoyable time may be anticipated. To defray expenses an admission fee of ten cents will be charged.

A Testimonial to Mrs. Amanda M. Cowan.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The friends of Mrs. Amanda M. Cowan, having a wish to demonstrate their regard for her as a medium through whom they have derived much happiness and satisfaction, on the evening of Thursday, Dec. 22d, wholly unanticipated and unknown to her until within a few hours of their meeting, assembled in her parlors, 219A Tremont street, this city. Among the number was J. Wm. Fletcher, who, in an exceedingly appropriate address, made known the object of the gathering; outlined the duties, labors and responsibilities of mediums; congratulated Mrs. Cowan and her husband upon the benefits that would accrue to them from thus meeting in a social way their many friends, and at the close of his remarks, in behalf of all assembled, presented to Mrs. Cowan the sum of sixty-five dollars as a slight token of their appreciation of the happiness and satisfaction they and others had derived from attendance upon her séances, adding that the friendly sympathy and good will that accompanied the testimonial, no sum, however large, could represent. Mrs. Cowan feelingly responded in a very neat and appropriate speech. The following preamble and resolutions were then read by Mr. Fletcher, adopted, and subsequently signed by those whose names are appended:

Whereas, Having been privileged with exceptionally fine opportunities, through the mediumship of Mrs. Amanda M. Cowan, of becoming assured beyond all question that those who have experienced the event termed "death" can, under suitable conditions, render themselves visible to their friends on earth and converse with them; and recognizing an earnest desire on the part of Mrs. Cowan and her spirit guides to furnish all available means to investigators for obtaining evidence of the truth of the phenomenon known as full-form materialization; therefore be it

Resolved, That we tender to Mrs. Cowan our sincere thanks for the opportunities she has afforded us and continues to afford us for interviews with our angel friends, and freely and fully commend her séances to the attention and patronage of all who long thereby to receive palpable proof that death does not end all.

"——for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still,"

Resolved, That for their endeavors to eliminate from the séance-room every appearance that might by any possibility suggest that what is therein seen and experienced is not what it is represented to be, and to establish conditions that cannot fail to be satisfactory to every honest seeker for the truth, Mrs. Cowan and her guides are entitled to, and should receive, as they now do from us, the esteem and gratitude of all who would promote the development of elevated and refined mediumship, and aid in the dissemination of that knowledge which Modern Spiritualism is designed to impart.

Resolved, That to Charles D. Cowan, the husband of Mrs. Cowan, and manager of these séances, our thanks are also due, and are hereby tendered, for his hearty coöperation with Mrs. Cowan and her guides, for his orderly conduct of the séances, his considerate regard for the wishes of all who attend them, and his kindly disposition to assist every one to a comprehension of their high import.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Editor of the BANNER OF LIGHT, with a request that they be placed before the readers of that able exponent of the truths of Modern Spiritualism thereby benefiting the cause by making known through its widely-extended circulation one who, as a medium for the materialization of spirit forms, has proven herself to be eminently worthy of the confidence of the public.

Arrangements were next made to afford the unseen guests an opportunity to take part in the exercises. Mrs. Cowan entered the cabinet, but soon reäppeared under the control of "Wason," her leading guide, who, in addressing the company, said that when Mrs. Cowan gave herself up to him and his band, he did not think she would in so short a time win so many friends, and did not even dare to hope for such grand results as had been shown through her mediumship; and as the friends had met here for the purpose of paying tribute to her, he also would add a renewed power, that she might win even more laurels in the grand work for which she has been selected, and should ever strive to give true and honest manifestations, as it had ever been his aim to do in the past. Mrs. Cowan then reëntered the cabinet, and had scarcely done so when two female forms robed in white came out and gave their names, and were recognized as two daughters of a lady and gentleman present. Upon their returning to the cabinet, Mrs. C. instantly appeared clothed as when she entered the cabinet, proving beyond a doubt the materialization of spirit-forms to be a fact.

The séance was of secondary consideration in the purpose of the gathering, but suffice it to say that it was heartily enjoyed by all present, nearly every one having some dear friend come with glad tidings from the unseen shore. Prof. Longley, who kindly contributed his services to the occasion, presided at the organ, which for want of space in the séance-room was located in an adjoining apartment, occasionally singing one of his charming spiritual songs. As he commenced to sing "Only a Thin Veil Between Us," a female form walked across the room from the cabinet, and passing to Prof. L., stood by his side and joined him in the song, her clear, full-toned contralto voice being plainly heard by all.

Those familiar with the room in which Mrs. Cowan's séances are held, will remember that the only entrances are two doors in the wall furthest from the cabinet and in the rear of the sitters, one leading to the hall and the other to the reception room. On this occasion "Ethel," a spirit-daughter of Dr. Whitney, came from the cabinet, crossed the room, requested those sitting in the doorway of the reception-room to make way for her to pass, which they did, walked through the reception-room to the hall, and through it to the other door, near which her father stood, whom she surprised by her unexpected presence, and taking his hands in her own, led him past a number of others and re-crossed the séance room to the cabinet, in front of which the two remained a short time in conversation, after which she disappeared within. All this time the gas was burning, though dimly, in all three apartments. Many other incidents of a like interesting nature transpired during the séance, the forms coming in rapid succession from both inside and outside of the cabinet, varying in size and appearance, from the little child "Elsie," of three feet, to the ancient of seven. The occasion throughout was highly creditable and enjoyable to all concerned, and an appreciative tribute of friendly regard to one who was eminently worthy of it. W.

Resolved, That we return our sincere thanks to Prof. Cadwell for his services under the auspices of our Association.

Resolved, That we most cheerfully recommend him to all Spiritual Societies as a lecturer well adapted by his forty years' experience as a public mesmerist and a student of the phenomena of Spiritualism to teach the truth he has so thoroughly learned. His mesmeric experiments arouse in the mind of every thinking man a desire to study the phenomena, also the laws of spirit control.

Resolved, That we wish him a merry Christmas, a happy New Year and the choicest blessings from the angel world while he remains in earth-life, and a joyous welcome into the spirit realms when he shall have completed his mission on earth.

Frank T. Ripley in Pittsburgh, Pa.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

We are now in the second month of our engagement with Mr. Frank T. Ripley, whom we at first engaged but for one month. Our Sunday morning service consists of questions given by the audience, the answers to which leave no doubt of the ability of Mr. Ripley's band of spirit-guides. In the evening he gives a very able lecture, and at the close tests that are remarkable and at the same time convincing. They consist of the names, age, and personal appearance of spirits, and time they have been in spirit-life; if from all this the friends fail to recognize the spirits, he gives incidents of their life until recognition takes place. Mr. Ripley is doing a great work for our society. We have a large and intelligent audience in the morning, and far more people come in the evening than the hall can accommodate. Mr. Ripley is attracting much larger audiences than any member of the society expected to see in the first year of its existence, our society being less than a year old. We deeply thank our spirit-friends for the success that has attended our efforts. J. H. LOHMEYER.

The Christmas Festivities at Onset

Were held in the Pavilion Saturday evening. Nearly every child in the place was present, and all were provided for. The entertainment was very good; the principal feature was the Christmas tree, festooned with strings of pop-corn and cranberries, decorated with lighted candles and ornaments, and loaded with presents. Some of the needy children, together with the members of the Lyceum, were remembered by the Ladies' Industrial Union, but most of the presents were contributed through the kindness and generosity of Mrs. A. F. Butterfield, who is very much interested in the prosperity of our Lyceum. Every member was remembered by her.

The children were made happy, and their glad faces and sparkling eyes imparted pleasure to all. We regretted very much that Mrs. Butterfield was unable to be with us on that occasion.

After refreshments the entertainment closed with a dance. G. F. HOWE.

Oregon.—M. F. Moore writes from East Portland, Dec. 23d: "The California and Oregon and Oregon and California Railroad is completed, and trains are now running through from San Francisco to Portland daily. Eighteen years ago last May I entered the employ of the Oregon and California Railroad, and am still in its employ. I was a Spiritualist then, and am now. We have taken steps to organize a Lyceum here, and hope soon to have it in working order. We have a meeting Sunday at 3 o'clock and at 7; the 7 o'clock service is usually a circle. We have some three or four good mediums. Sometimes we have some fine and convincing tests from them. It is quite common to have divers church-members present at the circles. There is a fine field here for a good platform test medium, but none come this way, so we manage with home talent. There are several private circles held here in town, and some very good mediums are being developed, but they, as yet, fear to come before the public."

Haverhill and Bradford.—Dr. J. C. Street, of Boston, spoke before the Brittan Hall Spiritualists last Sunday. His afternoon lecture was upon a New Year Holiday, as it had been observed by the ancients, and its present significance was considered. The evening service consisted of the answering of questions by controls, as they were proposed by the audience.——Next Sunday Mrs. E. C. Kimball, of Lawrence, will speak and give platform tests.

Troy, N. Y.—C. M. Austin, Secretary, writes a letter concerning the progress of the Society, etc., which will appear next week.

Saratoga, N. Y.—The annual meeting of the First Society of Spiritualists was held after the morning service on Sunday, Dec. 25th. Mrs. Mary S. A. Mills, J. M. Gallor and Mary A. Lyman were reëlected trustees for the full term of three years, and George H. Burrows was elected to fill a vacancy caused by the removal of a trustee from the town.

Dr. W. B. Mills, President and Treasurer, presented his report, showing that Sunday services had been held forty-eight Sundays during the past year. Mrs. N. J. T. Brigham has given eight lectures on week-day evenings, and Edgar W. Emerson has given one extra evening lecture. Among the Sunday lecturers from abroad have been Mrs. Clara A. Field, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. Emma Paul, Giles B. Stebbins, Dr. H. F. Merrill, Mrs. H. Morse Baker, Mrs. Fannie Davis Smith, Mrs. Sarah Graves, Mrs. A. M. Spence, Mrs. Rich and Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn.

The receipts of the Society during the year were $641.46, and the expenditures $641.28, leaving a balance of twenty cents in the treasury and all expenses paid to January 1st.

The Ladies' Aid Society has raised funds and purchased an organ during the past year.

The trustees voted to engage Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn to lecture every Sunday during the month of January. Dr. W. B. Mills was reëlected President, and a finance committee of three appointed to circulate a subscription paper for the coming year. H.

Lawrence, Mass.—Mrs. Abby N. Burnham, of Boston, occupied the platform both afternoon and evening at Pythian Hall, Jan. 1st. She is an interesting speaker and a lady of wide platform experience. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, many were unable to listen to her eloquent inspirations.——Next Sunday Miss M. T. Shelhamer of Boston will speak for the Society. F. S. EASTMAN.

Lowell, Mass.—On Sunday, Jan. 1st, 1888, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant occupied our platform afternoon and evening, and gave us very interesting lectures; her readings were first class, and her tests were fully recognized by the audience. Mrs. C. is a good medium and speaker, and we hope at some future time to be able to have her here again.

BENJ. S. FREEMAN, Cor. Sec'y.

New Haven, Ct.—A correspondent writes: "The friends here have organized a new society, to be called the 'Progressive Spiritual and Philosophical Society.' Our first regular meeting was held Dec. 25th, and was very successful. Meetings are held every Sunday at 7:30 P. M., in Courier and Journal building. Mrs. Ella Bacon, President; Thomas F. Davie, Recording Secretary."

Albany, N. Y.—D. M. S. Fero, President, writes: "The First Spiritualist Society has taken a lease of Van Vechten Hall, 119 State street, for a term of years in which services will be held every Sunday evening. The Ladies' Aid Society meets in its rooms adjoining the hall every Friday afternoon and evening."

Providence, R. I.—Interested and appreciative audiences listened to two stirring addresses from Mr. J. Clegg Wright, Sunday, Jan. 1st; he will remain with us during the month. MARY E. A. WHITNEY.

Warren Chase to his Friends.

As previously announced, I have closed my forty years' public labor in the cause of spirit-life and intercourse with my seventy-five years of life on earth, and have my last book—containing a sketch of those years of labor as a sequel to my autobiography, the Life-Line of the Lone One, also a variety of other matter—nearly completed, and which I wish to bring out through the office of Colby & Rich, Publishers, before I leave for the West the first of March.

As I have not saved money enough from these forty years of labor to publish this book—which will be a work of about three hundred pages or more—all who desire copies can aid me by sending one dollar, and ten cents for postage, directed to me at the BANNER OF LIGHT office, Boston, before Feb. 20th, with full address of the sender, to whom one copy for each like sum received will be mailed as soon as the work is out of the binder's hands, whatever may be the price fixed upon it hereafter, which cannot be less, and is likely to be more than the amount named.

The book will contain an excellent photograph frontispiece, and a full chapter of select poems, some never before published, the ninth and last one of which will tell what I have learned about the spirit-world by forty years' communion with it. Yours truly, WARREN CHASE.

THE DECADENCE OF FIVE O'CLOCK TEAS.—"I am getting very tired of five o'clock teas," said a lady of fashion to a friend. "Why?" inquired the friend; "because the reception part of the programme bores you?" "No," was the answer; "it is because the tea part of the programme bores me. I am getting tired of this everlasting tea drinking. A bright idea has just come to me, and you know there is nothing like a novelty for social success; I intend to introduce five o'clock chocolates. What do you say to that?" "I say to that that you are a genius; for there is nothing in this world equal to a good cup of Baker's chocolate. It is always refreshing, and it rests rather than excites the nerves. Your five o'clock chocolates will be the sensation and success of the season."

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

Message Department.

Public Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and THURSDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER will occupy the platform for the purpose of answering such questions as may be brought up for the consideration of the Controlling Intelligence.

On Thursday afternoon, JOHN WILLIAM FLETCHER, under the influence of his guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit-messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock, and services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no egress until the conclusion of the séance, except in case of absolute necessity. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits at the Tuesday séances for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who may recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of the BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case, but to LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Dec. 13th, 1887.

Spirit Invocation.

Oh! our Father God, we draw nearer unto thee in thought and aspiration this hour; we come with praises on our lips and songs of joy and thankfulness in our hearts, because, as human beings, as thinking minds, we recognize thy protecting care and boundless love. We would grow in sweetness of thought and expression, creating in our souls harmony and sympathy, and a tender affection. Oh! may we live in the sunshine of thy presence; may we realize that in every breath we draw we gain something from thy divine spirit.

We would, at this time, come into holy and sweet communion with the angels of the upper spheres of life. May they have power to draw near unto us at this time, and shower upon our hearts something of their bright and uplifting influence and magnetic strength which shall inspire us with grander effort and diviner aspiration for pressing forward and doing thy will. Thus, our Father, would we learn of thee and thy angel-ministers, and coöperate with them in their good works for humanity by sending forth a blessed influence that will cheer, inspire and bless. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By Mrs. J. L. K. Haner, Delta, Mich.] Are spirits restricted in the material and mode of their apparel to their conditions, or are they at liberty to choose according to their respective tastes and inclinations?

ANS.—The taste and inclination of a spirit governs, to a wide extent, the personal dress and appearance of that spirit. If the inclination, the tendency of a spirit, be toward refinement of character, exaltation of mind, and in that direction which exercises itself in the preparation of beautiful garments, then that spirit will most certainly appear in robes of beauty, and the form and texture of the apparel will be delicate—either snowy or of some sparkling, brilliant hue, just as the taste of the spirit prefers. But another spirit may have tendencies of a downward nature, aspirations that are not toward the beautiful and refined, not lovely in character; therefore the emanations of its life will be of a coarse, dark, forbidding nature, and these emanations will, to an extent, enter into the formation of the garments it wears as well as into the constitution of its personal or spiritual body. You will therefore see that while spirits are in a sense restricted by conditions and surroundings not only in the fashion, the hues, the texture of the garments they wear, yet at the same time the tastes and inclinations of spirits, to a wide extent, govern their personal appearance as well as their apparel.

Q.—[By the same.] At what period in its development does the human embryo attract the immortal principle, or is it an individualized entity from the first stage?

A.—We do not consider, from our observations of this scientific law, that the immortal principle or soul is attracted to the embryo from the very incipiency of its formation. We find that a longer period of time elapses with some than with others, and that an immortal soul or individual spirit, if you will, is attracted to the embryotic form and the prospective mother at different periods of time; that is, one soul or individualized entity may be attracted to a prospective mother within a very few weeks after gestation, and may attach itself magnetically to that female, coming within her atmosphere, and under the laws of her being, and remaining closely attached to her form until the embryotic form arrives at such a state of maturity that this soul-principle may, to an extent, vitalize it into activity. With others, the attachment may not take place for a period of several months; but you may rest assured that this magnetic attachment between the life-principle, as your correspondent puts it, or the spiritualized entity, must be formed between the mother and the spirit, and must be maintained for some weeks, at least, before the birth of the child into mortal life. Should the magnetic attachment between the spirit seeking expression and birth in mortal life, and the prospective mother, become severed and the spirit be obliged to pass out of her atmosphere, and be unable to re-connect itself with her form, and with the fœtus within, there will be born upon earth only a clay-cold senseless mass of flesh, such as you are accustomed to call a "still-born child."

Q.—When we gaze at the moon and the planets of our solar system do we then see the spirit-homes of our dearly loved ones whom the world calls "dead"?

A.—No; you do not. We believe in the evolution and progression of life, and that many worlds have been prepared for human inhabitants. From what we have learned in spirit-life we have good reason to believe that after a human being has dwelt upon this planet as long as he can possibly reap any experience from it, he passes into a spiritual condition, but still remains in connection with this planet for a time—this planet, like all others, having a spiritual counterpart, which we may call, for all purposes, the spirit-world. This human being of whom we speak will take up his residence in that spirit-world, either in close contact with the physical condition of this planet—because it still requires something of its elements and its experiences—or perhaps at a more remote distance; and yet the spirit has a tangible abiding-place, one that provides a substantial home and facilities for its expression; that is, the spirit will there enter into pursuits, employments and studies for which it is adapted, and come into association with minds that will assist it in its unfoldment, and in this way gain in experience and discipline. These human beings become reünited to the friends who pass on before them, and are, in time, united to those who are to come after to the world of spirits. Well, this much we can demonstrate to you through the claims of Spiritualism—because returning friends can identify themselves to your understanding and your hearts—but, beyond all this, we are conscious of still a continued round of existences and of progressions; and we believe, from what we have learned from wise and exalted spirits, that after a soul has gained all the discipline, all the experience, all the knowledge and all the wisdom that it possibly can in contact with this physical universe of yours and its spiritual counterpart, then it is ready to wend its way to other planets and to other worlds, to take up new experiences and new unfoldments. Nor is it necessary for you to give up your friends, if called upon to pass forward in such succession, because you will have the privilege and the opportunity of arising to such states as they may gain, and progressing to such altitudes of knowledge, refinement and wisdom as they can possibly do. But when you gaze upon the stars and upon the various moving bodies in space that brilliantly light the heavens at eventide, you are not gazing upon the abodes of your personal friends, because, as we understand, those who pass from the earth will dwell in connection with it many ages beyond our desire to count, before they will be prepared to enter into other worlds or take up new experiences upon other planets; therefore you will rejoin them and pass through many experiences and events before they or you can possibly pass forward to such distances as the question seems to imply.

Q.—[By A. P. R., Covington, Ky.] The result of sitting for the development of independent slate-writing has been that for about two months past I have heard a sound as of writing upon the slate, but nothing appears upon it. At first this sound continued but a few seconds, but now five or more minutes. Why is this, and what is my prospect of obtaining writing provided I continue my sittings?

A.—We should judge that the prospect of the questioner for obtaining independent spirit writing is a very promising one. So far as we can ascertain of this case from the question, it appears to us that one or more spirit attendants are experimenting with his mediumistic forces; they are probably trying to utilize what physical power he may possess that they can in any degree make use of, and the fact that he can hear certain movements and sounds upon the slate, even though no visible signs appear to his eye on examination, must prove to him that a power is at work seeking to manifest itself in intelligent ways. It is possible that the spirit band is developing him in clairaudience, and that they have a purpose in view in arousing his attention to these sounds and movements which are discovered.

We should by all means advise the questioner to continue sitting patiently and quietly, not in an anxious frame of mind, but passively waiting for the unfoldments of spiritual power; at the same time, to sit in an earnest, receptive condition, invoking the presence of wise and good spirits, and at all times to be in readiness to supply whatever desire they may express. In time, no doubt, more tangible evidences of spirit presence and manifestations will appear, but it may take a long while.

One of our very best slate-writing mediums sat for thirteen months before he received one intelligent response from the spirit-world to his questions of their presence and identity; and yet, after the first developments appeared, the unfoldment of medial power advanced rapidly, and it was not long before that medium succeeded in gaining intelligent messages from the unseen but powerful spirits who attended him. So the questioner may take courage and press on with his investigations. If nothing more comes to him than what already appears he should not be discouraged, but should sit patiently and quietly, in a loving, sympathetic mood with all good spirits, and if he is really in earnest, and desires this gift of mediumship for good purposes, then, no doubt, sometime the true response will come and the satisfactory evidence be given to him of angelic presence and power.

Q.—[By the same.] What is the cause of our receiving inconsistent and untruthful communications? Does the blame, if any there is, rest with us or the controlling intelligence?

A.—This is a question that all investigators—and circles of investigators—should search out for themselves, because one reply will not apply to every case. Sometimes, when experimenting with a mediumistic subject, spirits from the other life are not able to clearly communicate what they desire; what is given as coming from that side of life may appear distorted and imperfect to those who receive, when perhaps the spirits who give are perfectly sincere and honest, and so is the medium whom they employ; but there is a want of adaptability between the subject and the spirit, or perhaps a want of proper development, and so what is given may be of little value; but by quietly pursuing the experimentation, keeping the medium and what is given through her organism away from the criticising world, the spirits will be able to become more perfect in their manifestations, and by patient and constant practice so far develop their medium as to give that which is correct in detail, where at earlier times the imperfect was found.

In this case, we take it for granted that all concerned are perfectly sincere, the medium and those who sit with her, as well as the spirit-band in attendance; but if the mediumistic instrument is not entirely honest, then she will attract spirits of a like nature, those who delight not only to deceive the public, but also the medium whom they employ, for she can be no more safe with those spirits than can those who come to her seeking a sign, who are imposed upon by her mediumistic ministrations.

It is necessary not only for a medium to be honest, but also for the sitters—and just as necessary in one case as the other. Those who approach a medium in a vacillating, insincere state of mind, will attract a like character of communication from the other world. There are spirits who delight in imposing upon mortals; they realize their power outside of material things, and that those who seek knowledge from them cannot see nor get hold of them; therefore, to an extent, they exercise a certain power over those mortals who approach; and if the mortals are of themselves tricky by nature, insincere, ready to take advantage of others, whether it be at the time of sitting or in their daily life, rest assured they may be imposed upon by spirits from the other side who occupy a like plane of existence with themselves.

If our friends who send this question are troubled by receiving communications that are incorrect, and even deceiving, it is wise for them to examine into their own hearts. If they are perfectly honest and earnest in their search for truth, then they must discover whether or not their medium is sufficiently developed to receive correct communications from the other life; if not, they must proceed carefully, give the best conditions to their instrument for her unfoldment, seeing that she comes to the sitting in a state of mind that is free from anxiety and care, with perfect trust in the higher spirits, and then they must also inquire into the character of those spirits who approach. They will ascertain, by a keen, close scrutiny of what is given, whether imposition or incorrectness proceeds from a fault in their handling of the instrument or from a desire to willfully deceive; if the latter, the sitters must turn away, even if they are obliged to suspend their séance until the deceiving spirits are removed; if the former, by coming into close rapport with the spirits, and giving out magnetic sympathy and strength, they may form such a battery of power as to overcome the difficulty, and in time receive that which is required—truth alone.

Q.—[By Mrs. Matilda Shannon, Salem, Ind.] A girl of twelve years has been controlled to give messages from spirits, but quite unexpectedly her mediumistic gifts were withdrawn. What is the probable reason for this suspension?

A.—Most mediums have had experiences of this kind. Through a long process of development it sometimes seems wise to spirits in attendance upon a medium to suspend operations, and withdraw for a time from all personal contact, so their subject may recuperate in vital force from the physical side. If a continual operation upon the life-forces of a child-medium goes on, she will become exhausted in vitality, give out more largely of her magnetic life than she receives, and part with a portion of that magnetic aura which is necessary for her spiritual well-being, and consequently such a constant worker may find herself fading away, and becoming either a physical wreck or mentally disturbed.

Unless a very powerful band of spirits are in attendance upon a constant worker in the mediumistic field, those spirits who are wise and sensitive, understanding the law, and who know how to govern, to an extent, the operations of this law, such a medium will find herself failing in vital force and activity; therefore, wise spirits, who do not have this scientific understanding of magnetic law, but yet who remain in attendance upon a medium for the purpose of utilizing her powers, and being of use to the world, will sometimes suspend their operations, and withdraw from vital contact with their subject, that she may recover her equilibrium, and again grow into condition for the pursuance of that mediumistic work for which she is adapted. It is no reason for discouragement for a medium to find that she is for a time losing her power; if she is in earnest in her desire to work for humanity, and if she has had reason to trust her spiritual guides, she may well know that his suspension of mediumistic activity is for a wise purpose, and can afford to wait in patience until such time as operations are resumed, and the attendance of her spiritual guides is again shown to her.

Q.—[By Wm. H. Borden.] A lady has at times seen forms of human beings when she knew that no one in mortal body was present. She has also, after becoming partly unconscious of earthly surroundings, experienced a sensation of floating to various spheres of existence where she beheld groups of individuals—sometimes men, sometimes women, and at other times men and women. Is such an experience simply a dream, or does she really see spirits and visit their abodes?

A.—This experience cannot be classed among those attributed to dreams. The lady mentioned is certainly a sensitive or a spiritual medium. She may be operated upon by individual spirits who approach her organism, or she may become the subject of a band of spirits, each one united with the other, sending their magnetic influence upon her for a wise purpose. The lady in question is an independent clairvoyant, we should judge, by the question. She is one who can at times leave the material body and pass out into space, coming in contact with groups of spirits and visiting scenes and localities in the spirit-world. There is, at such times, a partial suspension of the activities of the life forces connected with the physical body; the spirit withdraws itself from contact with the mortal, and enters other conditions, showing that it can rise to a superior state, as can the spirit of most trance mediums when under the influence of external intelligences.

If this lady wishes to develop her mediumistic powers, in order to come into clear communication with intelligent spirits, and to convey such communication to mortals, it would be well for her to select one or two congenial friends who are in harmony with her thought, who have confidence in her judgment, with whom to sit, at least once a week, on a regular day, at a stated hour, for the purpose of coming under the direct operation of such intelligent spirits, and to continue this series of sittings indefinitely, always being punctual, coming to them in a quiet, passive state of mind, free from perplexity and care, and also to have them occur in a well-ventilated apartment. The presence of flowers and fruit, if gathered fresh, is a great acquisition to spirits in approaching mediums, but they should be removed from the séance-chamber after they have begun to decay.

These few simple rules are quite as important for any to follow who desire to unfold mediumship, but they are useless for the impatient ones, those who wish to hasten the development and soon grow weary; for sometimes it takes a band of spirits many months to so magnetize the surroundings of a mediumistic subject as to put them in a condition for the approach and use of the spirit-world; therefore patience and perseverence are the necessary acquisitions for the investigators, with harmony of spirit.

The Control.

Mr. Chairman, we have an old friend with us who desires to say a word from our platform, therefore we shall now give him an opportunity, and then another one will follow.

John W. Edmonds.

I have no desire to encroach, but I feel, and I have always felt, that the Banner of Light Circle-Room is the place for spirits to give expression to their thoughts, so I feel at home here. I know that I can send forth my thoughts and affections to friends at a distance and they will receive the influence, even though they know not from whence it proceeds.

I am interested, Mr. Chairman, in Spiritualism to-day, fully as much as I have been in times past, and my great interest at this time centres in phenomenal Spiritualism, because it is the one grand torch of truth that lights the pathway of despairing humanity to a brighter world.

Philosophical Spiritualism is very useful in teaching mankind how to live, and I do not underrate its power and influence; but we all know that man needs hard, stubborn facts to convince him of any truth or the soundness of any question; and if to our philosophy we can add this undoubted truth or fact, then we have in our possession a power that must move the world—and that is my idea of Spiritualism. I leave others to expound the philosophy and teach the moral lessons which Spiritualism conveys to man. It points out to humanity the broadest pathway of pure living through bright and glorious teachers who can do this most beautifully to human understanding.

But I have a word to say in connection with the phenomena—which appeal to the external senses of man and shake old and deep-rooted convictions which are grounded in error, shake them to such an extent that they totter and fall.

I am very glad to know that Spiritualism is moving onward, although there is so much in connection with it that seems faulty and filled with shadows; but in spite of this and aught that may look questionable, I know there is a grand and glorious bulwark of truth to which we can all cling and from which no earnest heart may be swept away. I am glad to come back to my old friends and coadjutors, and say to them that the cause was never more useful than it is to-day; never more powerful than at the present time; for it is challenging the attention of materialistic and scientific minds, of those who have grown positive, through their contact with and their research into physical laws and physical forms alone; and it is coming to them with great force and conviction that there is a truth underlying this movement which they dare not push aside.

You may think, friends, that I am making a broad statement, but I can see that it is true, for from the spirit-side of life we can perceive the thoughts of human minds; and we know that there is going up from scientific homes and circles, as well as from minds that have been bent on materialism alone, a thought for an investigation of the spiritual phenomena, and which will have its sure result.

I hope my friends are prepared to stand firm by the truth; for it seems to me there is to be a grand shaking up in the midst of our strongholds. Those who are ready to maintain their hold on what they know is true, need not fear this trembling and shaking of old things; but those who are not certain of themselves must look well to their surroundings, because they are likely to be swept away, and lose their footing in this grand upheaval, which, I think, will come within a very few years, for it is even now approaching. That which is false, imperfect and useless, will be swept away; that which appears beautiful on the surface, but is decayed at heart, must be crushed and sent out from our midst; but that which is sound will remain and perform its useful work.

There is no use in shrinking from this, because it is sure to come, and all have a part to take and a work to do in connection with it. All that we have especially to concern ourselves with is the endeavor to do our best, and work with honesty and sincerity of purpose. All the rest may be safely left to higher laws and grander forces than we can claim, for the right is ever triumphant, and will make itself known.

I would like to say to my spiritualistic friends of the press, those who are called into public places, that I wish them to be firm in their expressions of truth, and not allow bigotry and opposition to make one step forward. I look at them as being among the first to repress any advances from the old stronghold of intolerance. I do not believe it necessary for us to submit to the taunts and sneers of those who do not accept the teachings and the truths which we accept; but I believe it is necessary for all workers, all thinkers, to maintain a strong, dignified, manly attitude, and show by their bearing and expression that the truth is dear to them, and that the cause they espouse is a holy one, and that they will not allow any encroachment upon it from those who desire only to assail.

I send greetings to all my friends. Dr. Gray is present with me to-day, and sends his kindly regards to his friends. He is a worker in the spirit-world, in the dissemination of truth, for he finds himself supplied with magnetic forces that may be utilized for the benefit of the weary and debilitated. He is happy in his labor, and desires all his friends to realize that he would not return to the mundane world to take up his old habiliments, but is content to pass on, reaping new experiences, and sending back influences that may cheer and strengthen all for the trials of life. John W. Edmonds.

Otis Shepard.

I am a stranger to you, Mr. Chairman, but I have been permitted to speak a few words. I have many friends in New York State, a number in the city of New York, and in Brooklyn, as well as in other localities of that great State. I desire simply to send my greeting and remembrances to those friends, with the assurance that I am a strong, active, and conscious man, not so much one of the world and commercial circles as in the past, but one who feels himself still endowed with vital energy and active force, which he has to employ in external ways. I am not obliged to live directly in contact with the physical world, but I am often here, seeking avenues by which I may express my energy and make it useful.

I find in the spirit-world avenues of advancement, and I am delighted with the study of those laws, for they give me much intelligence and ability for future usefulness.

I would like to communicate with my friends, and if they will give me an opportunity privately, I shall be pleased to speak of my aspirations and plans, and also of the friends I have found in the other life, and of their surroundings. Otis Shepard.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Dec. 15th, 1887.

Andrew T. Foss.

Yes, the friends of progress need to hear the word "onward" whispered in their ears each day, otherwise they would slumber and forget the trust they hold, and leave unspoken the word that must make the way for a still greater truth waiting in the realm of spiritual thought. I did not intend to speak to-day; I thought of waiting until some other moment, when friends of mine would be here, but somehow the words just sung took me back to the early days of the movement, when progress was a dream, and all that you are now enjoying but a theory held by some and denounced by many.

I wonder if to day the Freethinkers and Spiritualists value the opportunity they are enjoying, and understand that every step taken that has led up to the present time has been paved with sorrow, trial and sacrifice. It is said that "the blood of the martyrs becomes the seed of the Church." Certain it is that the bravery and the suffering of martyrs makes way for the oncoming Spirit of Truth. And the institutions that we enjoy to-day, in a political sense, and the wider sphere of social life which has become ours, and the grander attainments in the realms of science and religion, have each and every one been paid for by the suffering of brave men and noble women, who have worked for truth and freedom despite the consequences, and unto whose hearts the angels have whispered: Onward! onward! onward!

Now, Spiritualists, you who are to-day enjoying the blessings which Spiritualism brings, and for which nothing is demanded save to enjoy its belief, do not forget that the time was when the worker was despised among men, and that there has been a vast amount of clearing away of stubble and stone and obstacles before the smooth pathway of the present was accomplished. Don't forget that! If you think it costs something to be a Spiritualist and a Liberalist now, what do you think it must have cost thirty years ago, when every person who entertained liberal ideas was at times hissed at as he passed through the streets. Why, the very stones you tread upon, had they the power to speak, would tell a story of the persecution of brave men in the cause of human liberty and human rights that would make your hearts bleed!

From the world of spirits to which I have been translated, and from which I can look down upon this earth and comprehend more fully than it was possible for me when I was here all the work that has been done, I feel to say to every earnest worker in earth-life that nothing that serves the truth is in vain. A word spoken to-day may apparently mean nothing, but it may be a drop of water in a dry place. There are a great many sermons preached outside the pulpit—at the fireside, at the table and at the corners of streets—for each one who utters his thoughts is in the highest sense a preacher of the truth.

I have not come to say much about myself. I've got outside the sphere of personal enjoyment into the realm of principle, where you 'll all come. I would like to say that there are some here who remember me for the work I tried to do in the cause. My name is Andrew T. Foss. I passed away in Manchester, N. H.

Julia Collins.

To my mother, Charlotte Collins, of Milton Lower Mills, Mass. I passed away of diphtheria; that is why my throat is so troubled. [The spirit coughed considerably upon taking control.] Dear mother, it is years now since I closed my eyes in the long sleep, and they told you I was dead. You have wished times without number to hear the sound of my voice again and to feel the touch of my hand, and you have prayed with all the strength of your heart that I might make you know that I could come near to you, and I have tried to answer your prayer in several ways. I come now with more strength, and move the lips of this stranger, that I may tell you the old story: that I live and that I love you still. The suffering that I had to pass through when the change of death came, and the passing from one scene of life to another, and the meeting with so many things that were strange, did not make me forget you, for where love is, mother dear, there is remembrance.

I am glad that you took Aunt Josie where she could see something, and that the light begins to shine over her pathway. She will understand more as time goes by; we all are near to her, and I think will find more comfort in the new way than in the old. Fred is here, and sends his love to Uncle Dave, and says that he is often near to him, only he cannot make him know it.

I shall see you, mother, when you are reading these words, and be looking over your shoulder, and know, as you wipe away tears, all about it. Oh! trust in God and the high and pure angels who are often with you. Tell father and brother Hermann that I love them, too, and am with them. You hold me just the same as you did, and that draws me closer to your life than to theirs.

All the pain in my throat is over, and I only speak of it by way of identification. My blessing and love be with you always, mother. Julia Collins.

Isaac Z. Brock.

Got any room for me here? A small quantity won't do. I've got to have room enough to swing around. My name is Isaac Z. Brock. They used to call me Ike, for short. I passed out in such an almighty hurry I did n't know it till I got out. Why, 't was done so quick I thought I was there, and I was n't! When I woke up and found myself outside of my body I felt kind o' cheap.

I was a tin peddler by profession, and friends up in Athol, in North Dana, and all round Franklin County, will remember me. Nothing very serious about me! I could sing a song, and there was nothing I liked so well as to sit down and have a jolly good laugh with somebody. Do you know that I have an idea in my mind that if folks wa n't so awful stiff and had a little more laughing going on, they would n't get a chance to cheat each other so much; it 's generally the cheating folks that are the scowlers.

Many a time when I've stopped at a house and asked 'em if they wanted to buy anything, they said "No." Well, I never run away at that; I'd kind o' hang round a little bit and talk about the neighbors. I always notice when you want to drive a bargain the best way is to tell something about somebody; they 'll listen to that if they won't to the bargain, and pretty soon they 'll listen to the bargain—and so I've made a very good trade a great many times.

A good many of 'em will remember me up there. I've tried to come back to some of their sittings, when they were round a table, you know, and somebody was thumping; but I could n't do anything that way; 't was too slow work for me; and so I thought I 'd come in here and just hand in my papers and say that I am here, lively and well, and sometime I hope to be up in the old place and try to sing a song when the boys get together and then tell a yarn. Why, I could tell a bigger yarn than ever. We used to have a great many pleasant times.

You can say I died Aug. 22d, 1878. I guess that 's about all.

Worcester Smith.

Mr. Chairman, I do n't feel strange in this place, because I have been here a number of times, getting ready to say something, and I now improve this opportunity. I understood, when I passed into spirit-life, much in regard to the subject of Spiritualism; but, like many other persons who are possessed of mediumistic power, I was given to doubt even myself; consequently I was always hesitating, for the impressions that I received were never quite strong enough to carry me over the objection that was raised in my mind, and, although I believed when I came away, I did not rest firmly on my belief.

Now I have here those who remember me and whom I care for, and I know they will be glad to hear from me, for they have turned their eyes to your paper many times, hoping to see my name and wondering why it was, with my strong will and determination, I should not have come before. But when I stop to think of the hundreds that are standing around me at this moment, and all pushing their way for a chance to speak, I wonder that any get in.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this to you, as the representative of this department and of the institution it is connected with: You have no idea of the amount of good that you are doing in this form of work. There are millions of people in the world who are gaining light through what is said here, and there are millions of spirits in the spirit-life who are made happy, and the links that bind them to earth are out by the influences they receive at this place. Now do n't you think that ought to be a sort of compensation for the burden that you have to bear and the misjudgment that is placed upon you sometimes by those who are too ignorant or too blind to comprehend the measure of the work that is done? It seems so to me; and when I was here I realized it, and do now. Every instant that I am speaking I feel stronger and better. So do hundreds of others, who came weak and went away strong. God bless you and speed you in the work.

To my wife, I send my love. She keeps me strongly in her mind; that helps me, and I am with her. Many of the old-time friends are here, whom I knew on the earth, and whom I know now better than I did; then there is my old friend, Col. Sargent, who has come to the spirit-life, and "Father Morrill," and many others I might name. They are a happy company, I assure you. They want to send their greeting and their message of love, so I come from the world of spirit to this world, bringing a message of remembrance from those who were associated with me in carrying forward something of this spiritual and liberalizing work in the town where we lived.

I thank you, sir, for the opportunity, and subscribe myself as Worcester Smith, of Lawrence, Mass.

S. B. Wing.

I am surprised that my dear Sarah has been so persecuted by my family. They have no business to act in the way they have; and while they may succeed in what they are trying to do, for the time being, just remember, Sarah, that this earth is not the end; justice is sure, though it takes a long time to get at it; and the way they have acted has caused me more trouble and sorrow than I ever expected would come to me again. You had better ignore the Doctor entirely, and not pay any attention to him; he is influenced in such a way by others that I do n't think he is responsible for what he is about. That is the most charitable construction to put upon it. Do n't be troubled by him at all; just get off by yourself into a room alone, and pull down the blinds or the curtains—shut out all the rest of them—get your mind as placid and quiet as you can, and I will impress and help you. I will assist you about the management of Frank and Charlie; sometimes it is all you can do to govern them, and you need to carry a firm hand; if you are disturbed, do n't try to govern them until you are first quiet yourself. I cannot tell you how sorry I am for what has happened. Had I for one moment thought it would have occurred, I should have arranged things differently from what I did. Think of me kindly, think of me as being near to you, and always believe that I did what I thought was best. Your husband, S. B. Wing, of Jamaica Plain.

Charles Jenkins.

In the course of events it follows that I am about to communicate, indirectly to be sure, with those who remain on the earth. There are members of my family to whom I might send a message, but it would be of too private a nature to give in so public a manner. But I have a friend with whom I have talked much for years upon certain subjects which were dear to his heart and to mine. He has wondered if I am now satisfied on certain points. To speak of that subject I come to-day, but will add that he will be soon with me, and we shall enjoy in spirit-life what we so much contemplated. There was no mistake about it in our minds, except, perhaps, that the picture was not painted half bright enough.

I wish there could be some private place of meeting arranged between us, so we might hold converse with each other; but the instruments he consults I have not the power to influence; so I am as badly off individually as if he never attempted to obtain anything from me.

But I weary under the influence, and the attempt at communicating, so I shall give my name as Charles Jenkins, well known to many people in Boston.

Sophia Scott.

Dear brother, you feel that I am with you, for I can sense your calling upon me continually. It is not my fault that I have been unable to answer you correctly. I come to-day to tell you that I am helping Elizabeth all that I can; that both of you are possessed of mediumistic power, which, I think, if you had an opportunity of developing, you would realize more fully, and it would be a great comfort to you. On Sunday evenings you are less disturbed than at other times, and if you will put your mind upon me, and dismiss all other thoughts, and take a pencil in your hand, I will try to manifest to you. The first two or three times we shall probably fail—that is usually the way, I think—but we will have courage, and keep on trying until something is done. If you were to get a planchette I might be able to use that better than writing directly through your hand.

My brother is Erastus Stebbins, of Chicopee, Mass. He will be very glad to receive this word from me. Brother Frank also sends his love. Sophia Scott.

Spoke for the following named spirits:

Thomas Ross.

A gentleman now comes who gives the name of Thomas Ross, of Rutland, Vt. He is close beside me, and says that he passed away by the bursting of a wheel—an emery wheel—and it has taken him all this time to get himself ready to come. He would like simply to have his name recorded, and the manner of his death, so that those at home who will remember him may know that he came here. He says: "By doing this I shall draw them where I can speak directly to them, and that is what I wish to do, for my going out as suddenly as I did left everything disturbed."

Benjamin Benner.

Benjamin Benner, of Philadelphia, comes to send a message to his son in Philadelphia. He says that his son must be very careful of himself, because, physically, he is not as well as he seems to be, and that while he has overcome the physical troubles that were upon him, in part, they are lurking still in the system. He is needed too much by all to go up to spirit-life yet. I hope he will take good care of himself, and not to keep over-exerting as he does, and, above all, be careful about getting heated, because the quick changes of heat and cold are injurious to him.

Edward Cross.

Now comes Edward Cross, dressed in soldier's clothes, because he was a soldier. He wants to send his love to his sister here in Boston, and to his brother in New York. "They hear," he says, "very little from me. There seems always to be so many others to come that I don't get an opportunity. But I should like to tell my brother that I am near to him, and that the time is not far distant when we shall meet and shake hands again. Father and mother are present with me, but they take little interest in communicating, for they understood nothing about it when they came away."

Cancer: "Live Frog" and "Brandy and Salt" Cures.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

A remarkable cure of cancer in the breast, by application of live frogs, enclosed in a thin muslin bag placed over the seat of the pain, has recently been brought to a successful termination in this city. Several of the "Regular Faculty" attested to the disease being cancer, and were anxious to have the patient submit to the usual "operation" at the General Hospital. The cure was reccommended to her in the market, by a farmer's wife, while the patient was making a purchase.

The afflicted lady, before resorting to the application of the cure, was particular in asking more than one of her doctor friends if the frogs so applied would do her any harm, and was assured that they would not; at the same time the doctors had a good laugh at her expense over the "silliness" of the question and the pretended "cure."

The frogs were promptly applied, however, with the aid of one or more kindly neighbors, who waited on the patient until the entire process was complete, the cure effected, and the wound carefully healed. The first application was of three or four small frogs, a large one not just then being procurable; the second or third with larger frogs; and in every case with the same results—the frogs died, then decayed, leaving nothing but the bare bones in the bag, accompanied by an intolerable stench. The pain was immediately relieved on the first application; the process had eaten its way through the flesh; and on the third application, the death-suggle with the disease, became so intense, and the pain so great, that the patient and her friends, becoming alarmed, called in a doctor. But the cure was complete. The healing process was all that was then needed, which took some time, but the patient rapidly regained her health, and was soon perfectly well.

The doctors requested them not to mention the "cure by frogs," but even three women combined could n't keep a secret, and now the fact is patent to the entire city. The parties are reliable, and I am prepared to vouch for the cure.

Some years ago an old friend of mine had two operations for cancer performed on the under lip—the disease being probably caused by smoking. The trouble threatened to develop a third time, when he accidentally picked up a piece of an old newspaper in which he found a simple cure, to wit: Take as much salt as will dissolve when added to pure brandy, and make use of it as an external remedy. He tried this by keeping a piece of old cotton wet with the liquid on the spot. After a reasonable time the cancer was drawn out on the rag, which was kept constantly wet. My friend is still living, and at the ripe age of ninety-seven rejoices in his second sight—but no cancer.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

FANNY GREEN MCDOUGALL.

Not having seen a copy of the BANNER OF LIGHT for several months past, I was handed some copies of the paper the other day, and on looking them over I was rejoiced to find a message for me from my loved and dearly-remembered friend and sister-soul, FANNY GREEN MCDOUGALL, printed Oct. 29th. I drank in its kind and loving words as a thirsty traveler on the desert quaffs the waters from a cool spring. This timely message, through Miss Shelhamer, is proof of the kind solicitude and love our departed friends still feel for us here below—lone wanderers on a stormy sea. I would send from my heart a wave of magnetic love to my beloved Fanny, as also to the angel instrument, for this precious message to me, and others of her friends in California. LUNA HUTCHINSON.

Bellevue, Alturus Co., Idaho, Nov. 22d, 1887.

CAPT. JOHN SHERWOOD.

I find in a recent issue of the BANNER OF LIGHT a communication from my husband, through the highly-esteemed medium, J. Wm. Fletcher. It is correct in every particular, bringing me strength and comfort at a time most needed. The message has created quite a sensation here among his old steamboat friends—many of them knowing nothing of our beautiful philosophy—yet all who have seen it have said, "how much that sounds like Capt. Sherwood."

God bless the Free Circle-Room, Message Department, and all connected with it.

Yours for the truth,
MRS. M. C. SHERWOOD.

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 24th, 1887.

PANSY.

The message from "PANSY," through Miss Shelhamer, in the BANNER OF LIGHT of November 19th, I recognize as coming from the control of a lady friend. I was expecting it, as "Pansy" had promised to send a message to her "medy" through that channel. It is very accurate, and we thank you very much for the same. Very truly yours. MINNIE NESBITT.

Decatur, Mich., Dec. 14th, 1887.

Dr. Babbitt's Human Culture and Cure.

The first part of this work, called the "Philosophy of Cure," nearly a thousand of which were sold before it was issued, is now making an important impression. Judge Poston, of Harrodsburg, Ky., writes to Dr. Babbitt as follows:

"I have this week read the first part of your great work, 'Human Culture and Cure.' I feel satisfied that when completed it will be a rich legacy to the world, and eventually work revolutionary changes in the practice of medicine. Your chapter on Homeopathy elucidates matters that I never understood previously, and will shed light on the learned practitioners of that system. I was gratified to find that you embrace magnetism in your range of remedials. I have great faith in its curative power in many cases, provided you can find the magnetizer."

Among other things, Hall's Journal of Health says the following:

"This is the title of an exhaustive work in six parts by the widely known author and lecturer, E. D. Babbitt, M. D., D. M., Dean of the New York College of Magnetics. We may say in a few words that the work when completed bids fair to be the crowning one of its author in that field in which he has already acquired great eminence in this and other countries."

This work is issued in elegant style, with beautiful colored and other illustrations, for 50 cents, postage 6 cents. Furnished by Colby & Rich.

THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

ZÖLLNER.
AN OPEN LETTER
TO
PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,
Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism,
BY C. C. MASSEY,
Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

GATHERING CRUMBS. A Lecture by SARAH J. PENOYER, of Saginaw, Mich.

With a view to the great unfoldment of God's truth, we will endeavor to unfurl the banner of freedom to the world, inscribed on this banner is the word Love. Whenever a new truth is born, people are in such a hurry to cover it with swaddling clothes, lest it should be seen as it comes forth from the womb of Nature, that they half destroy its life before they can get it clothed to look according to their ideas of "respectability." Then, when its form is mutilated, it comes forth an ill-shapen and ill-gotten thing.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, January 1st, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a large audience greeted Mrs. R. S. Lillie. After singing by the congregation Mr. W. A. Dunklee opened the memorial service by giving brief sketches of the lives of departed members who have passed away during the year, and a statement of their interest in and devotion to the cause of Spiritualism: Moses Hunt, Allen Putnam, George W. Smith and Mrs. Caroline Cook.

With the advent of the New Year, Capt. Richard Holmes, after his long absence, appeared in his official capacity as President, and was greeted with applause. He then paid a glowing tribute to the memory of the departed. After the singing of the beautiful hymn, "He Giveth His Beloved Sleep," by Mr. J. T. Lillie—piano accompanist, Miss Mintie Eakins—Mrs. Lillie commenced her memorial address by alluding to the passing out of the Old and the entrance of the New Year. She said: Dark clouds are types of earth's sorrow; above them the sun shines bright and clear, and though your tears fall in memory of the absent, they have passed from the shadows of earth. Each had arrived at a ripe age; their spirits were ready and waiting to be set free, and we should rejoice with them in the possession of eternal youth as their divine heritage. While I look upon your sad faces I also see their illumined ones; they are pointing above, saying unto you: "Come up higher." Ba this your endeavor—to live your religion each day; no regrets will then follow.

Mrs. Lillie stated she saw clairvoyantly Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, who spoke of their glad reunion in spirit-life, and Mr. George W. Smith, who had placed a white wreath upon the brow of his wife, who was present. Mr. Allen Putnam was also an active participant in the exercises. Continuing, she said: "And now, stopping amid the shadows of your earthly wanderings, and the material cares engrossing your attention, to think of the higher life, the home of the soul, and what pertains to your spiritual advancement; taking thought of those passed from your mortal sight, you more fully realize that life is continuous, merging into that which is eternal. As the mists hang over you to day, so they hang as a veil between the two worlds. Do you who are living on this mundane sphere know what it is that takes possession of your physical bodies, and by-and-bye loses its grasp? The body is the medium of the soul; it is like the musical instrument which responds to the touch of the operator. When out of order, the response is feeble or discordant; you only dwell for a little while in your earthly temples, and finally they are left without a keeper; the door is closed, you call it death, but it is rather the dawning of a new life. The crown of life has been given your arisen ones in all its fullness. From our standpoint we say, 'It is well.' You who in the tempest wait awhile, cannot comprehend the full meaning of the shadows; by-and-bye you will do so, and gather in the fruitage of your own good works. Therefore, look up to the beautiful city, your eternal home, and be assured you will 'know each other better when the mists have rolled away.' Abide in the gladness; wait, labor, work; do good every day, and when life here is over, you 'shall know as you are known.' In youth you look forward to death as an event to be dreaded; in old age it is often a welcome guest. In the reunions above it is bright sunlight and everlasting joy, and you will be welcomed as have been the departed in whose memory this service is held, by legions of angels, who will lead you into the paths of progression and wisdom."

After a song by Mr. Lillie the President closed the exercises by referring to the increased attendance of this season, the present prosperity of the Society and its promise of future usefulness through the liberal bequest of Moses Hunt; also of the efficient management of the Vice President, William H. Banks, during the absence of the President. Mrs. Lillie then rose and said, "I see, clairvoyantly, Mrs. Abbie M. H. Tyler bearing two torches; one had burned out, signifying her earth-life has closed. The other burning brightly, signifying the spirit-life; holding this up she says: 'By the light of the spirit I shall be enabled to unfold in this life, and by its power lead my earth friends to understand me more fully.'" Though not a member of the Society, Mrs. Tyler was a frequent attendant of the meetings.

The floral display was a profuse one. A large portrait of Allen Putnam hung over the platform, while on the desk were pictures of Mr. Smith and Mr. Hunt, surrounded with trails of smilax.

Evening.—After the usual singing and invocation, Mrs. Lillie selected from several questions presented by the audience, "Is there an Exact Standard of Justice, Mercy and Truth? If so, where may it be found and how obtained?" which her control replied to in a clear and satisfactory manner, closing with a poem.

Mrs. Lillie will speak next Sunday, morning and evening. The service in the evening will commence at 7 o clock for the present, the time being changed from 7½ o'clock. MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association—Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington Street.—The watch meeting held under the auspices of this Society last Saturday was a success, nearly one hundred people being in attendance and remaining till the New Year was ushered in. At ten o'clock a collation was served; at eleven a circle was formed, and a spiritual feast was the result. Mr. Oscar Edgerly of Newburyport delivered an address arousing much enthusiasm. Mrs. Abby N. Burnham made acceptable remarks. Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant delivered a fine inspirational poem. Dr. J. D. Moore made an earnest practical address. Dr. Fred Crockett was influenced by an Indian chief to voice words of admonition and praise. Mrs. Jones, controlled by an arisen Methodist sister, gave her testimony for the truth. Remarks were also made by J. H. Lewis, F. B. Woodbury, Dr. U. K. Mayo and President Hall.

The last five minutes of the old year were spent in silently invoking the blessing of the angel-world upon the cause of Spiritualism during the year about to open.

All joined in a song, and, wishing each other a Happy New Year, departed to their several homes, spiritually blessed.

On Sunday, New Year services were conducted by Mrs. E. Clark Kimball of Lawrence, Mass. Mrs. K. has been only two years before the public; was formerly a member of the Baptist Church. Her phase of mediumship is highly developed. She gave a large number of tests at each session and was heartily applauded for her efforts, giving so much satisfaction that she is engaged for four more Sundays. We feel assured that large audiences will always greet her. Next Sunday Hon. Warren Chase will lecture at 2:30 and 7:30. FRANCIS B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society held its regular meeting Tuesday, Dec. 27th. In the evening the President, Mrs. C. N. Mellen, presided, and introduced the speakers in a felicitous manner. Master Willie Boyce opened the exercises with a piano selection. Capt. Richard Holmes was heartily welcomed after his six months' absence in Canada. His remarks expressed deep feeling and pleasure in being able to meet the friends at home. He related some of his experiences during his travels, and closed with reciting a poem, all of which was listened to with much interest.

Mrs. H. S. Lake described some of her late experiences in mediumship, and under control of her spirit-guide made an eloquent address, that was both entertaining and instructive, inspiring us with a desire for closer harmony and unity in the great work. Mrs. Pengilly read an essay from her spirit guides, which commanded the closest attention of the audience.

Mrs. A. E. King, under control, made a short address, also gave tests of spirit presence. Interesting remarks were made by Dr. J. D. Moore, Jacob Edson, W. A. Dunklee, William H. Banks, and Mrs. W. A. Dunklee. The audience joined in a closing hymn, and dispersed feeling that another ray of sunshine had fallen upon them from the spheres of wisdom.

The next regular meeting, at which supper will be served at six o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of Jan. 10th. An invitation is extended to all the members of the Society and friends to be present.

The First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The service last Sunday was extremely beautiful and impressive. The music was of a high order, and several appropriate selections were exquisitely rendered by Mrs. Fisher-Wellington. The organ solos by Mr. E. E. Truett were unusually grand and inspiring. The invocations through Mrs. E. Dyar Clough were grandly cheering and prophetic, particularly the last by a very ancient spirit, who portrayed in glowing words a beautiful vision and allegory of the new power and great spiritual outpouring which the year 1888 would see ushered in: "Behold a new light," was thrice repeated, a light which was to shine upon the sons of men, and the poor and hungry who shivered and thirsted within the shadow of the palaces of the rich, would be fed and clothed; the laborer would have his toil sufficiently requited, and justice and mercy reign. The great black curtain of death—whose heavy folds and dark shadow had so long been thrown over the lives of men, which they resolutely turned from, and with song and dance endeavored to forget, though ever present—will not be made thinner and less dense, nor through rents the splendors of a future life discerned, but will be rolled away, and the faces of our loved ones in the full light will flash once more upon our sight.

Behold an angel from the north and from the east, and from the south and from the west; and each bears in its hand the corner of a great canopy, which is being lowered upon the nations of the earth! These messengers had the appearance of little children, and their faces shone with love unutterable; the border of this canopy was of crimson and its centre pure white, and on it were mystic characters written in gold and violet, which these little ones would interpret.

No language of the writer can do justice to the beautiful, poetic imagery of this prophetic voice, whose utterances God grant may soon become externalized upon this lower earth.

It is designed to continue these services of song, and on the first Sunday of February it is expected there will be a repetition, with a full quartette choir and congregational singing.

Usual service next Sunday, Mrs. Clough being the speaker. All are cordially invited.

The usual sociable in the lower audience-room will take place on Wednesday evening at half-past seven, when the children, debarred last week by the storm, are expected to enliven the occasion with song and recitation.

Thanks are due to the sender of the beautiful flowers placed upon the altar. W. H. R.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meetings were largely attended last Sunday, notwithstanding the storm. Bro. Cobb gave one of his sterling lectures in the morning, which was warmly received. Mr. Hatch of Somerville, under control, gave a fine address on the New Year. Mr. Corliss, whose visits are always hailed with pleasure, gave tests to skeptics that sent them from College Hall converts to our glorious cause. Dr. Harding spoke in his forcible manner and gave readings with marked success. Dr. Eldridge, in connection with his diagnosing diseases from the platform, gave interesting experiments in mesmerism. Miss Peabody, Mrs. Bruce, Mrs. Forester, Miss Cullen and Mr. McKenzie also accomplished good service. These workers are greatly assisted by the inspired music furnished by Mrs. Eudora Case and Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain. COM.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society.—In response to an invitation from this Society several members of the Ladies' Aid, of Lynn, Mass., braved the severe cold of Dec. 30th, and favored us with their presence. In the early part of the evening the entertainment consisted of singing by Miss Bailey and reading by Lucette Webster; after which the floor was cleared and a couple of hours devoted to dancing, to the great enjoyment of all present.—Members will please bear in mind that next Friday is the annual meeting for the reports of the year's work; also the election of officers for the ensuing year. The business meeting is called at 2:30 P. M., and it is hoped that all who can will attend.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum—Paine Hall.—The usual service was held by this school on Sunday morning last, but the Secretary, being unavoidably absent, has no report for the present week.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown.—Meetings were held at this place on Sunday last, afternoon and evening. Afternoon exercises were opened by singing. Short address by Chairman, under control. Subject, "The Breaking of the Seal of the New Year"; followed by Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas with tests, which were readily recognized. Mr. Edson presented some interesting and excellent thoughts, followed by Mrs. Collier with remarks, and the recitation of a fine poem. Services closed by singing.

Evening exercises opened at 7:30 with good attendance. Singing; an address by the Chairman; remarks by Mrs. Shackley, under control, also tests; tests by Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, and psychometric readings by the Chairman, composed the services, which closed with singing. W. A. H.

The People's Spiritual Meeting.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sundays Dec. 25th, 1887, and Jan. 1st, 1888, were seasons of interest at the People's Spiritual Meeting in this city. The afternoon exercises were principally carried on by Mr. S. A. F. Goodspeed and Mrs. T. J. Lewis with remarks and tests which were very satisfactory. In the evening of the 25th ult. Dr. Henry Slade gave an interesting account of his early life, and how he became a medium, which was intensely interesting and held the audience for nearly two hours with no sign of weariness.

Sunday afternoon, 1st inst., Mr. Goodspeed gave something to each one present by way of prophecy or spirit tests—generally recognized. Mr. E. P. Cooley, Mr. Lawrence, Mr. J. F. Jeaneret, Dr. Perine and others filled out the time with great interest and intellectual profit.

Last evening, 1st inst., Dr. Slade gave a short narration of his trip around the world, which delighted a large and appreciative audience. Dr. Dumont C. Dake supplemented the address with remarks appropriate to the occasion. Dr. Slade will minister unto us again Sunday evening, Jan. 15th, at Columbia Hall, 878 Sixth Avenue. F. W. JONES.

THE MIDNIGHT SEANCE (or Watch-Meeting) at Mrs. Morrell's residence, Saturday evening and Sunday morning last, was a grand success considering the exceedingly inclement weather. About fifty persons braved the snow and rainstorm and enjoyed the evening well; it was voted to have a social gathering once in two weeks for the purpose of becoming better acquainted among ourselves. The first will take place Tuesday evening, 10th inst., at Mrs. Morrell's, 230 West 30th street. All interested are invited.

First Society of Spiritualists.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke for the Society in the morning upon subjects selected by the audience, and in the evening upon "The Fruitage of the Past Year and the promise of the one upon which we have just entered." Mrs. Brigham's return is always looked forward to with great interest, and this being the first Sunday for several weeks that our people have had the pleasure of listening to her words of wisdom they gave her a hearty welcome. The day was very unpleasant but the audiences were remarkably large, as her hearers never stay away for fear of stormy weather.

The inclemency of the weather kept many people from attending the afternoon service for spiritual manifestations, and the audience was not as large as usual, but what was lacking in numbers was made up in quality, and we had a very interesting and profitable meeting.

Dr. Dean Clarke recited a poem and made a very able address that was fully appreciated by the audience. Dr. Clarke is one of the ablest, most logical and eloquent orators on our platform.

Mrs. Wells gave twenty-two tests and nearly all were fully recognized.

A very pleasant and interesting meeting was held at the residence of Mrs. Wells, 822 Sixth Avenue, Saturday evening, to watch the old year out and the new year in. Able remarks were made by Dr. Dean Clarke, Mr. Henry J. Newton and Dr. Lawrence, and many humorous anecdotes and stories were related by Mr. Newton and Dr. Lawrence that caused merriment and called forth applause from all. Mrs. Juliette Schooley also gave a poem through inspiration, the "Happy New Year," that was well received and worthy a place in memory. S.

New York, Jan. 1st, 1888.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity

Holds its services at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoons in Macgregor's new and beautiful Hall, Madison Avenue, corner 50th street (entrance 42 East 50th street). Mrs. T. B. Stryker is the regular speaker. She takes from the audience the subjects for discourse and poem, which are treated with eloquence and fine oratorical effect. Character Readings are also given at various times by Mrs. Stryker while under spirit control. We also from time to time listen to other eminent speakers.

Mr. Charles Dawbarn, the well-known lecturer, will address us on Sunday, Jan. 8th. Subject: "The Future of Modern Spiritualism." •••

The Spiritualists' Society

Of Brooklyn is now in a prosperous and flourishing condition under the able management of its present officers. Mrs. Emma Beckwith, the President, is one of the most popular and efficient officers this Society has ever had, and the Treasurer, Mrs. Morgan, is especially adapted to hold this important and responsible position. These ladies have as co-workers Mr. Geo. A. Delence, Mr. Rand and Mr. Cushing, all very earnest supporters of Spiritualism, and they are laboring to lay a permanent foundation for Spiritualism here in the "City of Churches"—there being already rumors of buying a church.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham has ministered to this Society during the past month; she is a general favorite here as elsewhere, and has attracted large audiences by her sweet, spiritual bearing and logical teachings of our philosophy.

We are to have Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing as platform speaker for the first three Sundays in January.

Dr. B. M. Lawrence has been giving phenomenal entertainments in New York and Brooklyn for several weeks past with good success.

He will give one of his unique lantern lectures in my parlors next Friday evening, Jan 6th.

Progressive Spiritual Conference.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Saturday evening, Dec. 24th, Mrs. H. M. Walton, a pioneer Spiritualist and medium, read before the Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference an essay claiming to be written by herself under the inspiration of Madam De Stael, entitled, "Eulogy Upon Woman." It was a brilliant effort, and highly complimented. The Conference exercises were participated in by Mrs. S. A. Slocum, under control, and Mr. A. P. Dey—who will speak Saturday evening, 7th inst.—and by Mrs. E. C. Aldrich-Hall with a scientific inspirational essay. F. W. JONES, Chairman.

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE

MEETS AT 219 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK CITY, ON EACH ALTERNATE WEDNESDAY AT 8 P.M.

☞ All Spiritualists are cordially invited to become connected with THE ALLIANCE—either as resident or non-resident members—and to take an active part in its work.

THE ALLIANCE defines a Spiritualist to be: "One who knows that intelligent communication can be had between the living and the so-called dead," and all such are invited to become members. NELSON CROSS, President.
J. F. JEANERET, Secretary,
41 Maiden Lane, New York.

American Spiritualist Alliance.

At the regular meeting of the American Spiritualist Alliance, held in the parlors of Mrs. M. E. Wallace, 219 West 42d street, Dec. 14th, it was ordered that the meetings for the future, and until otherwise specified, should be on each alternate Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock, instead of on the second and fourth Wednesday evening of each month, as has been the arrangement heretofore.

It was also ordered that special notices of meetings by mail to each member should be discontinued save in the case of newly elected members, who should be notified of their election and of the date for the next meeting.

Last evening The Alliance held a regular meeting, and was fairly well represented, notwithstanding the severe storm that had prevailed all day. A number of communications that had been received were read and acted upon, and two new members elected; and in this connection it might be well to state that at every meeting, save one, since the reörganization early in the year, new members have been elected.

After the regular business was disposed of, the question for the evening, "The Evidence of Spirit Identity," was discussed by several of the members, and the evidence on which each claim of identification was made was presented. This question of identity is a very important one, and has been receiving the attention of The Alliance for several weeks past, and it is expected that much more evidence upon this vital question will be presented.

After the close of the discussion—as is usual at these meetings—a circle was held for manifestations of spirit phenomena. A number of mediums were present, and described the spirits they saw, and delivered their messages. "Maudie," the familiar child-control of Mrs. Carrie M. Sawyer, talked to the circle in her own voice, or what is known as the "independent voice," and many in the circle were touched and caressed by materialized hands. I was several times patted upon my hands and head, and Mrs. Wells, who sat near, described the spirits she saw standing by me.

The interest in the work of The Alliance is becoming more earnest, its growth in membership is steady and satisfactory, and it ought to, and no doubt will, be an effective Organization for aiding in placing the Spiritual Phenomena upon a scientific basis, thus establishing the grand fact that it is all in strict accordance with, and produced by, the operation of natural law.

The next meeting of The Alliance will be on Wednesday evening, Jan. 11th, at 8 o'clock, at 219 West 42d street. All city members are requested to make a note of the fact that the practice of sending out notices of meetings has been discontinued.

JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

New York, Dec. 29th, 1887.

Rochester, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Spiritual Fraternity of this city has enjoyed much the last two months listening to "voices from the spirit-land" through the highly gifted Carrie C. Van Duzee, trance lecturer and test medium, from Geneva, Ohio. She has been lecturing and giving platform tests here since the early part of November, giving two lectures each Sunday and tests in the evening. Subjects for lectures were given by the audience after the medium was entranced and standing on the platform ready to commence speaking. Infidels, skeptics and Orthodox were astounded, and Spiritualists established in the knowledge of the fact of spirit return and communion, whilst many recognized in the tests given dear friends and relatives who had passed to spirit-life.

Mrs. Van Duzee left here Dec. 28th, with the good wishes of her many newly made friends, to commence a course of lectures in Syracuse, N. Y., the Spiritual Fraternity of Rochester having secured the services of Mrs. Cornelia Gardner, of this city, who has labored long and faithfully for the spirit-world, to lecture during January; and so the grand philosophy is being made known among us. IN MEMORIAM JOHN MURRAY SPEAR.

BY THOMAS SHORTER,
Of London, Eng.

In spirit pure and warm as thine,
So like a child in filial trust,
We see the clear, the Christly sign
Of gracious nature, mild and just.

Our faith is oft a barren creed,
Or, worse, a fruitful cause of strife;
Far otherwise in thee—the seed
Of sweetest fruit—A NOBLE LIFE.

True faith in God is love to man,
Indwelling affluent grace, so given
To prophet souls in whom we scan
The inspiration of high Heaven—
Thy faith, beneficent and brave,
Friend of the prisoner and the slave.

Greenwich, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The suit, so long pending in the Supreme Court, brought by the Orthodox Congregational Society against the town for possession of the town meeting-house, was recently decided in favor of the town. The would-be usurpers of the public property, who have claimed the exclusive right of worshiping in a building designed to give equal privileges to all, irrespective of creed, have been taught a lesson by the decision of the Court, which their vaunted allegiance to Christ has failed to do.

That the triumph of justice and right might be fittingly expressed, a Unitarian service, conducted by Rev. C. T. Irish, was held within the walls of this "bone of contention"; meeting from the usual occupants no resistance save the locking of the organ and removing of the Bible.

Mr. Irish was formerly settled over the Unitarian society of Northborough, and is a man of exceptional ability; and I venture the assertion that words of greater eloquence never resounded within the ancient edifice, or more thrilling words of heartfelt prayer quickened the spiritual intuitions of a sympathetic audience.

I must not linger in the old while the new "Liberal Independent Church" and its interests challenge attention. Sunday, Dec. 25th, called out a good audience, Mrs. Yeaw taking for her subject "Christmas and Its Observance." The exercises of the Lyceum were pleasingly enhanced in interest by a fine recitation by Miss Clara Clark (Mrs. Lillie's daughter). Miss Clark has a fine voice and great dramatic power, and apparently is destined to work high in her chosen profession. Miss Ethel Duncan, of Worcester, eight years of age, recited "Somebody's Mother" so effectively as to excite the admiration of all. The regular participants in the exercises did themselves credit. The march was joined in by a large number.

Monday evening, Dec. 26th, was the occasion of a joyous gathering of old and young, to engage in the festivities of Christmas. The always beautiful audience-room of the church was brilliantly lighted, and made still more beautiful by the two tall, stately trees upon the platform, whose bending boughs bore the fruits of generous giving and loving hearts. Seldom have Christmas trees borne a more generous supply of things ornamental, useful and beautiful, children's toys, books, and the ever-welcome candy-bag.

In the vestry tables groaned underneath their weight of good things, conspicuous among which were the delicious chicken pies the Greenwich ladies so well understand the construction of. After one hundred and thirty-five people had tested the excellence of the viands, chicken pies remained untasted, which later were placed in the hands of the highest bidders.

Still, intellectually the people were unfed. Repairing, at the banquet's close, to the audience-room, another feast was spread—the "feast of reason and flow of soul." That it was satisfactory needs no guarantee, save the fact of the presence of Mr. Charles W. Sullivan, of Boston, whose inimitable characterizations convulsed his audience with laughter. Miss Ethel Duncan with great readiness contributed four recitations, the last in Highland costume. Mrs. Johnston and her two little girls, Lena and Bessie, with Miss Nellie King and Miss Lulu Gutberlet, touchingly rendered, in one act, a poem: "Children Coming Home." Miss Mamie Southworth and Cretie Southworth, sisters, Edna, Lena and Bessie Johnston, sisters, Nellie and Mabel Nevins, and Edmund McGrath, gave recitations.

This report would be incomplete without mention of the opening beautiful "Christmas Carols," by a chorus of young ladies, under the direction of Mr. H. W. Smith, and two well-rendered songs by Miss Nellie Sears.

After the closing of the entertainment, expectant hearts were made happy by the distribution of the numerous gifts of Santa Claus. The last act of the evening was the presentation by Mr. Ferrell, in behalf of the ladies of the Society, of a beautiful oil painting, handsomely framed, of the "Liberal Independent Church," to the speaker, Mrs. Juliette Yeaw, which was most gratefully received. It was executed by Mr. Brooks, a local artist. At the picture's base are gracefully grouped evergreen and arbutus, copied from that adorning the church last Easter morn. In the soft, tender light surrounding the spire, the closely observant eye may catch glimpses of dimly-outlined angel faces.

So the good work goes on in Greenwich, and ancient error's hold is being loosened, because truth and error have met and grappled, and error

"Dies among his worshipers."

Long live the brave, heroic man, who has here unsheathed the sword of truth, and erected a temple for her service. JULIETTE YEAW.

Philadelphia, Pa.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sunday, Christmas Day, 1887, our streets were comparatively thinly peopled, on account of the majority remaining at home, preparing for the "Merrie Chrystmas." Very many also attended the churches, drawn thither by the elaborate decorations and extra music. Miss Jennie B. Hagan, the well-known and wonderful improvisatrice, has been feeding our minds with spiritual food for the past Sundays in December. Jennie has always seemed like one of our own First Association family; she is now, for we have ordained her to preach, teach and demonstrate the science and religion of Spiritualism to every living creature. Judging from her good-heartedness, the "living creatures," be they two-footed or four, will receive the benefit thereof. Our sister, Mrs. Anna McCahan, who is well known as a spiritual medium, was also ordained, with our good Bro. Benner, on Christmas night. We have many other good, true and reliable mediums who are to be treated likewise during the following month.

It seems to me that it is clearly our duty to demonstrate the facts of immortality through our media, and by association and protection make their condition more favorable.

Our esteemed and valuable pioneer in Spiritualism, Mrs. Danforth, is still with us; her sound advice and other aid, so timely rendered, have indeed proved her our friend and also the friend of humanity. Mrs. D. and our good old friend and president, Mr. Wood, are among the oldest, if not the oldest, of our Association and Spiritualists in this city. We hope for their stay to be prolonged in the form many years longer. We are already looking toward our summer home in Parkland, expecting to render the cause valuable aid through the camps.

The Lyceum is progressing. We are anxiously looking forward to next "Sabberday" to see and hear that good man, Dr. Willis, who will be with us through January.

May 1888 be a year propitious for the reception of the tidings of great joy and comfort to many families throughout the world. R. A. THOMPSON.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock spoke for the First Spiritualist Society of this city Sunday, Jan. 1st, at 2 and 7 o'clock P. M. The subject at 2 P. M. was "The Duty of Spiritualists to Themselves and the Outside World."

Mrs. Whitlock's controls gave a logical and common-sense discourse upon phenomenal investigation of spiritual facts, declaring that we should present our facts upon a scientific basis, first investigating ourselves, to learn how far we are, as sitters for manifestations, responsible for what takes place in our presence, that we may then be prepared to know what comes from the other side of life. The attendance was small, owing to a drenching rain that prevailed all day.—Mrs. Cutler, of Philadelphia, Pa., will occupy the same platform next Sunday.

IN THE SEANCE-ROOM.

BY E. A. BRACKETT.

No. 2.

In pursuing my studies of materialization I became interested in those who were more or less my companions in these investigations. Most of them were strangers to me; many of them persons of keen perceptions, intellectually strong and possessed of more than ordinary intelligence. Having lost, to a great degree, their confidence in old theology, they were the worst skeptics I had ever met, and the idea that they were credulous and easily imposed upon, as I had been informed, was the furthest possible from the truth.

Upon all the evidence we obtained touching the existence of these forms we compared notes, and facts, or supposed facts, having any bearing upon this question had to run the gauntlet of a free discussion, and so thoroughly was this done that what at first seemed to be important evidence was frequently nearly lost sight of, and would have been discarded had it not been repeated at subsequent séances with increased force.

All of this training may have been necessary to our mental growth, or, as Prof. James would explain it, "the lack of elasticity did not allow a rapid change of the molecules of our brains without danger of rupture." But this contention and skepticism on our part did not contribute to the success of the séance, and had it not been for a kindly feeling toward the medium our investigations might have been a failure.

Perhaps no one thing created more discussion than the supposed materialization and dematerialization outside of the cabinet, occurring, as often appeared, under suspicious circumstances, enhanced by the unexplained arrangement of dark draperies against the wall and extending back of the cabinet.

The existence of these forms had been proven beyond a doubt, and it seemed to me a matter of no consequence where they were embodied. Their appearance outside the cabinet did not explain the phenomena.

The materialized form Bertha, claiming to be my niece, was coming to me quite freely, and occasionally volunteering remarks which showed that she was acquiring the necessary strength to express herself. On one occasion she came up several feet from the cabinet, and, springing forward, greeted me in her usual playful way, saying, "Do n't you think I came up beautifully?" I replied, "It was very well done." "You think I materialized out there, but I did not." I was surprised at this, for I thought it one of the most beautiful materializations I had ever seen. She continued: "The forms are all materialized in the cabinet, and those that appear to come up outside emerge from it, invisible to you, and appear where they choose. Your vision is limited. Above or below a certain number of vibrations of light you cannot see anything. If, then, these vibrations are suspended, we can go into any part of the room unseen by you. Most of what is called materialization outside is due to the fact that we can become invisible when we choose, and we are aided in this by a dark wall, or curtain hung against it, which does not reflect but absorbs the light. Sometimes, when the forces are weak, we come out between the drapery and the wall in a way that you mortals could not pass without being observed, and become visible by passing through the drapery."

When I reminded her that statements purporting to come from the other side did not always agree, she said, "There are with us, as with you, different degrees of knowledge and beliefs; were it not so, we would lose our individuality."

Changing the subject she said, "Do you know how much I have improved since I first came to you? You were so skeptical, I thought I should never get near you. It was very kind in you to be so thoughtful and patient, when you supposed I was a fraud. My coming has benefited me more than it has you, for I have gained something of that experience denied me of earth-life, and from it have become strong. When you come over here, you will understand what I mean."

The intense human character, the quick nervous sensibility which she was rapidly developing, would have shaken my confidence in her spiritual origin had I not had positive proof that she was not a being belonging on this side of life.

As stated in a former article, it was a significant fact that we all became satisfied of the existence of these forms as distinct creations by an unknown force or intelligence.

Following this conviction arose a question which has perplexed many investigators. If they were what they claimed to be, why should they not express themselves with the same force and intelligence as when they were our companions in this life? Had we not been taught from childhood that spirits were immeasurably superior to what they were in earth-life, ideal angels with snowy pinions sweeping through boundless space? Here were what purported to be spirits, very human and apparently below the standard we had created for them. Had we wrongly estimated them, or did this seeming lack of intelligence arise from weakness such as we often see in persons who are physically exhausted? Whatever it might be, it was evident that if we made any progress in our investigations beyond the mere fact of materialization, we must meet them on a different plane. There was nothing to be gained by perplexing them with questions beyond their power of expression. While I was satisfied of their spiritual origin, I was slow in coming to the conclusion that they were in any instance our friends or relations. I had discovered early in my investigations that these spirits could build as they pleased, could take on almost any form that they desired; consequently the resemblance to my friends had little weight with me. I was satisfied that many of them did not know how they looked in the séance-room.

I knew that the best artist in the world could not make a likeness of himself unaided by some kind of a reflection to work from. With one of these forms coming to me bearing but little resemblance to the person she claimed to be, I tried the experiment of showing her a photograph taken a short time before she passed away. Ever afterward she came looking like that picture, and I have no doubt that had I shown her a very different one and insisted that she should come looking like it, she would have been forced by my will to comply with my request.

It is this will-power, exerted consciously or unconsciously over these beings by those who come in contact with them, that has led to so many conflicting opinions in regard to them. It is difficult for most people to approach them without intense mental action, and it matters not in what direction it is exerted, it always tends to weaken the manifestations, unless the spirit has acquired unusual control.

Children are almost the only ones who instinctively know how to meet them. If it is true, as they have so often asserted, that they are dependent on their will in sustaining the form through which they endeavor to communicate with us, it is easy to see what effect a counter will-force would have upon them.

No one can successfully study anything in nature without adhering closely to the laws that govern it. If we seek to communicate with any one at a distance by means of electricity, we must first establish a medium of communication. Communication with these beings is over the magnetic lines of the affections. To its divine warmth alone their intellect responds. The sooner we understand this the better. Goethe has truly said that "we learn only that which we love." He might have said with equal force that love is the key to all knowledge. Beyond the material evidence establishing the existence of these forms, everything passes to a higher plane, to a study of that spiritual influx that more or less permeates all forms of life, a knowledge of which is made possible by our association with these beings.

Many of the forms appear stupid on their first appearance in the séance-room, but if rightly met and encouraged, become, in many respects, our superiors. We are constantly judging life by outward appearance, a standard wide of the truth, for we are only listeners at one end of the wire, dependent upon imperfect conditions for what may be transmitted from the other side.

In our associations with them it should not be forgotten that we are not their guests, they are ours, and if we cannot treat them with the delicacy which the situation demands we have no business in the séance-room.

Neither have we a right to indulge in wholesale denunciations on account of real or supposed defects.

Most of the charges made against mediums and their séances are based on ignorance and self-conceit. This cannot be too strongly stated, for it is a fact patent to every intelligent investigator, that these charges are the besetting sin of a class whose knowledge of these manifestations consists mainly in the slanders they utter. They are responsible for all the brutal attacks on mediums. Having no case they abuse the witnesses. This moral epidemic is found in all classes of society, from the creed-bound clergyman to the sporting editor, whose miasmatic emanations materialize in the papers.

Against this great injustice, this maligning of men and women who are devoting their lives to the development of one of the most important truths that has ever engaged the attention of man, every honest person should protest.

Faults and imperfections there doubtless are in these séances, but no person with a well-balanced mind will condemn or be deterred from the pursuit of any subject simply because he finds it defective, for he knows that imperfections are the inseparable companions of everything that exists in this world. There would be no progress, no evolution, if everything was created perfect.

It is, then, not by its defects, but by its merits, pointing as they do to higher possibilities, that every séance should be judged.

ORGANIZATION.

BY A. F. MELCHERS.

All light comes from within, and all that which exists within is spiritual in nature, or constitutes a part of causation (God). Thus Spiritualism is a cause, or constitutes an impulse of the Divinity, and therefore spiritual in nature. Having issued from the spiritual, it is destined to guide man spiritually, i. e., for his interior, and not his exterior or material welfare.

As a cause in a material sense, it is the working together of all those who believe in its phenomena or its spirit-communion, and in which it operates harmoniously and successfully, but as a cause in its spiritual tendency or growth, it is strictly individual—operating on the interior or soul-nature of man, like the silent action of universal law itself, and thus makes itself understood to each one according to his inherent personality—one comprehending it as a science, another as a philosophy, and a third as a religion, and therefore its diversity of ideas and opinions. But this does not affect its fundamental principle. Being a cause itself, it is naturally immutable or absolute in its force or motive power, only that the effects take shape according to the material it operates through. But such is necessary for its growth as a popular or universal cause, and without which it would dwindle down to a limited or narrowed sphere of action—a creed perhaps. But in its phenomenal and unlimited outpouring of truths, it cannot be thus controlled or cramped, and therefore our extreme difficulty in centralizing it or effectuating an organization materially speaking. A spiritual organization, as it exists in the beyond, and which is undoubtedly necessary to uphold and lend impetus to the material, or to mortal Spiritualism, is perhaps an impossibility, or as yet impossible; and to force an organization at present might create discord instead of harmony. Spiritualism, in our humble opinion, has not yet sufficiently unfolded itself to formulate any definite conclusions on the subject, or to lend us the cue for this purpose, and it is questionable if it ever will. If it constitutes the universal philosophy of life it never can, for this is infinite, but if it is a creation of the spirit-world surrounding this planet, the end must come sooner or later, and this when the spiritual organization has unfolded all its plans to our inner view, with perhaps a further array of physical phenomena for a material basis to operate on. The two will undoubtedly come together, and as long as we are receiving higher truths, the end is not yet; and as long as additional phenomena are being developed, the spirit-world is not ready to permit organization on this mundane sphere. But when ready, the impulse will be universally experienced, and we, or those who follow us, will find no difficulty in effectuating satisfactory results.

We are not opposing local organization, nor anything that tends to a harmonious intercourse of Spiritualists, but merely trying to account for the cause of our difficulties in this respect. Local organizations are necessary adjuncts to the advancement of the cause, where a sufficient number can be gathered who will harmonize together; but where this is impossible, Spiritualism progresses better without them, for want of harmony is a drag on those who are unfortunate enough to be the mediums, and only ruins their medial powers for private séances, thus preventing others from becoming convinced who prefer to investigate at family circles.

But as all light comes from within, let us form a spiritual organization in our souls, with love as its constitution, and endeavor to comprehend the truths that are being showered upon us, and through which we may finally reach our aim—the best good of universal humanity.

"THE GATES BETWEEN."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Elizabeth S. Phelps, the celebrated authoress of "Gates Ajar" and "Hedged In," has now brought out before the public this later volume, "The Gates Between." The volume fell into my hands recently, and I have a few words to say about it and its excellent writer—and that in the best possible feeling. To say I am simply pleased with the volume does only half express it; I am delighted, and never more so. I hung over its pages, fully under the power of the wand of the enchantress to the last, and am willing to do the most ample justice to the conception and portrayal of the characters and story. But there is one thing perfectly amusing in this, as in all the fair author's books I have seen; and that is, the enormous and ill-concealed struggle she continually makes to let the world know that she is not and does not mean to be a Spiritualist! And there is, or seems to be, a dread fatality against her, which she cannot avoid any more than she can avoid the "Destiny that shapes our ends, Rough hew them how we will."

Will or can any one believe, after reading "Gates Ajar" or this latter book, that this lady is not a fine spiritual medium? yea, one of the very finest? and that she has not, as Burns beautifully expresses it, "A correspondence fixed with heaven"? She may personally disclaim Spiritualism, and "pooh" at it and at mediumship as much as she will, but she bases all her books that I have read on it. She runs into it on every page, and might as well get rid of her right hand as to avoid the spirit intelligences, who, like flocks of gathering doves, hover over her head and influence her hand and her brain when she writes. It will not do for the good lady to deny it. Nobody who knows aught intelligently of Spiritualism or mediumship in their best sense will accept the negation, but will smile good-naturedly, and, setting her protests all aside, only thank both the good God and Elizabeth Phelps for her books.

But now, aside from all this, what shall we say of Miss Phelps's famous letter awhile ago, denouncing so vehemently the Spiritualists of the country, and which was at the time handled without gloves by a number of your correspondents? How she poured out her scorn and derision on all mediums in the descriptions of the flights of stairs, to little, obscure rooms and meanly appointed apartments, and sinister looks and suspicious machinations, we all remember; and with what self-possessed air of satisfaction she came down upon all the mediums she had visited and all Spiritualists generally. She did not even try to conceal her contempt of them in the way of innuendo, sarcasm and satire, if we remember rightly. But Miss Phelps is not so obtuse—she cannot be—as to think any intelligent Spiritualist does not see through all this dissimulation! To my mind it was nothing but a sop to the "very respectable," pharisaical Cerberus of the old and the new Orthodoxy.

It seems strange that the fair authoress could not open her eyes wide enough, with all her intelligence, to see that there are millions of people in the world—as sensible, as truthful, as honest, and in every way as respectable as herself, and who can see into a millstone quite as well as the authoress of "Gates Ajar" and "The Gates Between," though they never saw Andover or New England, perhaps—who are filled with a sort of righteous indignation when on reading her books, and finding her so near the kingdom of modern truth, they also discover her in the act of dodging the issue, and endeavoring to veil the great light which is yet to enlighten "every man that cometh into the world" from an evident reluctance on her part to meet the frowns of conservatism. May God and the loving angels help her in time to attain to perfect liberty of thought and the fullest expression thereof. REV. E. CASE.

Spiritual Phenomena.

Transference of Spirit-Pictures.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Rogers, of whose remarkable artistic mediumship an account was given some time since, have been for about six months almost wholly secluded from society at their home in San Francisco, they having been during that time sitting for a spirit-likeness, which proves to be that of a spirit-sister of a prominent citizen of Washington Territory.

It is understood that the pictures given through the Rogers mediumship are first produced in spirit-life, and then, says the Golden Gate, quickly transferred to paper or canvas by a process as mysterious to mortals as their origin.

When it had been announced by the spirit-artist that the portrait above named was finished and ready to be transferred from the spiritual to the physical side of life, half-a-dozen persons were invited to witness the event. On assembling, the witnesses, beheld in the studio a large sheet of white card-board, mounted on stretchers and resting upon an easel. Beneath it was a small quantity of pulverized crayon. All present made an examination, by which they became satisfied that no finished picture existed in the room. The doors were then locked and sealed. Dr. Rogers seated himself within the studio, in front of which was a curtain, and soon was entranced. Singing was engaged in, and shortly after the control announced the work done.

After further singing, says the writer in the Golden Gate, the curtain was thrust aside for a short time, when all could see standing in front of the easel a noble form, tall and beautiful, robed to the feet in soft, luminous apparel, with his right hand moving and extended toward the picture. This was the medium's ancient spirit-guide, "Esmond."

The séance lasted nearly an hour, when it was announced that the work was completed. The light was then gradually restored, and the curtain drawn aside, when there appeared upon the easel a picture of wondrous beauty and spirituality. The face, says the account, fairly flashes with the light of a highly unfolded soul. One arm is raised to lift a light, gauzy veil from her face, and such an arm and hand no sculptor's genius ever excelled. The pose of the queenly head is perfect, and the drapery of the bust arranged with marvelous skill. Every detail of light and shade seems faultless.

A Worthy Medium.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. W. A. Rich, whose advertisement is upon the seventh page of the BANNER, is giving great satisfaction to all who visit her for the purpose of receiving messages from their spirit-friends.

In filling my engagement to furnish music at her séances, I have enjoyed excellent opportunities of judging of Mrs. Rich's merits as a medium, and have no hesitation in saying that her gifts are second to none before the public.

I could give very interesting details of the experiences of many persons who have had through her instrumentality all doubts of a future life removed, and are to-day rejoicing, as the result of their newly acquired knowledge; but your limits will not allow, and further, it is a matter that while another's experience may serve to awaken an interest in the subject, a personal investigation and experience only can bring a positive and abiding conviction of its truthfulness.

Anxious inquirers, honestly wishing to obtain indubitable evidence of the fact that communion with their friends in spirit-life is possible, will never regret a visit to Mrs. Rich for a private sitting, at her parlors, 38 Evans House, 175 Tremont street, this city.

PALINGENESIA; OR, THE EARTH'S NEW BIRTH. By Theosopho, a Minister of the Holies, and Ellora, a Seeress of the Sanctuary. 12mo, cloth, pp. 360, with a Supplementary volume containing twenty-four Diagrams and Illustrations of Altars and Church Paraphernalia. Glasgow, Scotland: Hay, Nisbet & Co.

There is a mystery about this work that the reader fails to find solved after a perusal of its contents Theosopho, a Minister of the Holies, and Ellora, a Seeress of the Sanctuary, are reputed to be its authors, but who these persons are, if indeed they are persons, as known to mortals, does not appear. The opening of the first chapter is as follows, one of the authors, probably Theosopho, giving some account of himself:

"Many thousand years I have been upon this earth. Having been created in a state of innocence, and gifted by my Maker with free-will, I chose to experience the evil as well as the good, and by that choice my spirit gravitated toward the material planes of existence. I came upon this earth, and accreted to myself a body suitable to my earthly state and surroundings—through gases, through minerals, through trees and flowers, through fishes, through birds, through four-footed animals, have I ascended the dusty path of life, and finally arrived through various grades to the form of Man.

"As man I have traversed every clime, lived in every land, spoken every language, and worshiped the Supreme under every form of religion. I have sought the Unknown in mountains and in caves, in trees and rivers; in the sun, moon and stars; in fire and in water; in holy symbols and in holy men and women; and now I find the holy and blessed One in the crucified man and the suffering woman, in Jesu Mari the perfection of humanity, the last revelation of God to man. How many more experiences are before me, God alone doth know; but I go unto my Father and my Mother, and this is the path of my return to the great Parent of all."

The writer proceeds to state that in 1835, while traveling in the East, he came to the ruins of Heliopolis, once the central point of Egypt's gorgeous ritual and impressive ceremonial. There he met an aged man clad in the simple white garment of the priesthood, flowing to his feet, and bound round the waist by a girdle of blue silk; in his hand was a staff surmounted by a ring or crescent of precious metals; on his head was a turban of white linen. He had for a long time been oppressed with a keen sense of the want, ignorance and misery that sway mankind; "the cruelty, injustice, oppression and wrong which turn this earth into a very hell for the majority of mankind, and for the dumb animals committed to their care," questioning whether peace, righteousness, justice and truth would ever prevail.

The aged priest perceived his thoughts, and told him that Truth, Love and Righteousness would yet rule the earth, but before that time there will be "greater disorder than has yet been, and all governments and churches and institutions must be broken up, and a time of great sifting shall be, and the hearts that rest on the things that have been established in the past shall fail." "But," continued he, "wilt thou even now see that which shall be in many ages hence, when error and darkness shall be put to flight and light and truth shall prevail and govern the hearts of men? Arise and follow me, and I will show thee a higher and a better age, the Age that yet shall be for regenerated humanity."

Theosopho—such we suppose him to have been—was then, after a singular experience in a cave, which is poetically described, led into a chamber of the temple and placed on a couch by the priest. The fumes of burning incense from a tripod caused him to fall into a deep slumber. He seemed to leave his body and float in space, passing many worlds and planets which he beheld revolving on their axes, till he found himself on one which he was told was the earth he had shortly before left, but wonderfully changed. Its atmosphere was purified. There were no wild wastes of sea and desert; no impassable mountain ridges; no volcanos, earthquakes or floods.

Man had reached a high degree of intelligence. He had made useful what before had been destructive, and the physical character of the whole earth had been remodelled. There were railways beneath its surface, upon it and above it. It had been excavated to the depth of three miles, and cities, towns and villages of great beauty, corresponding to those above them, were constructed. These had for their canopies the upper crust of the earth, hollowed in the form of a dome to the height of a mile, which, sparkling with electric lights, gave a brightness equal to the sunlight of the exterior in former times in the old cities, and supplied with abundance of fresh air produced by "ærogene." Heat, light and motive power were supplied to interior as well as to exterior cities by electric force. Air ships or cars, public and private, traversed the air in all directions. The earth's axis having been restored to its vertical position by the aid of guardian spirits of the solar system, and the tutelary angel of the earth in particular, each zone had its own equable and unvarying climate as of an eternal spring.

Desiring to know of the government and religion prevailing on the renovated earth, the writer was by his guide conducted to a city named Mayota, the ruler and high priest of which gave into his hands a book called "The Constitutions," transcriptions from which, illustrated with elaborate plans, diagrams, etc., form the contents of this volume.

Banner Correspondence.

New York.

WESTBURY.—A correspondent, "H.," writes: "As the subject of mind-reading is attracting some attention, I will give a little of my experience in investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism, and should like to know where mind-reading comes in. A few years ago a gentleman said to me, 'I wish you could go to the schoolhouse where my daughter teaches. I believe you could find out what produces the noises there every week. There are heavy raps, sometimes groans, sounds as of struggling and various other noises, occurring in the closet where the scholars put their dinners.' The schools had been broken up two seasons before by reason of the noises. The teachers would not stay. It was quite wonderful, and no one had been able to find any cause for the manifestations about the house. He said his daughter, one day when the noises began, requested in thought: 'If that is a spirit, make the raps in a place I mentally designate.' They were made there at once. She indicated in her mind six different places, and the raps were made as thus requested. The last time she wished them to be on the floor by her feet, and they were made with such power as to cause the floor to tremble. I told the gentleman I knew of a medium whom I thought could find out about it, and would tell her. This was on Saturday.

On Monday I went to find the medium; she was sick and could not sit. I called on another, a man, who had but just been developed. I told him I wanted to investigate a subject in my own way. He sat down in a chair and I in another, so that my face was hidden from him; I took paper and pencil and asked all my questions mentally. As soon as my question was formed his foot rapped the answer. I took down my questions and the answers as given. The schoolhouse was on the bank of a deep and sluggish river. I was told the sounds were caused by the spirit of a man who was murdered near that schoolhouse by a man living east of the house, to obtain money and property. The body was bound by chains and weights, thrown into the river, and had never been found. This was done between five and six years previous. He was a married man, had a wife and three children. I was not told his name or residence, the reason given being that doing so might cause his folks much trouble.

About three weeks later I was going where the medium lived, and overtaking the school-teacher's father he rode with me. He asked if I had investigated the subject. I told him I had. He said he thought so, as there had been no noises since that time about the schoolhouse until two or three days previous. I read to him what I had received. He said there was a man east of the schoolhouse in the district who was a hard case, and had become in possession of money and property, no one knew how, five or six years before. I told him I thought the spirit wished to tell a little more; that if he would go with me we would go to the medium and try and find out. We went. The medium was not at home, but I found another one, a little girl twelve or fourteen months old. She rapped with her foot. The woman said she thought we could get nothing through her. She was sitting on the floor among her playthings. I mentally asked if there was a spirit present that would communicate with me. The child's little foot, as quick as a flash, rapped an affirmative. I asked if it was the same one who gave me the communication I had. With her foot she gave three raps. I then took my paper and turned my back to the little girl, and by pointing to the questions each was responded to just as before. I then asked if there was anything further than raps. I asked if he manifested himself to the teacher at any other place than the schoolhouse. 'Yes,' was the response. He said he caused her to be taken up clear from the bed, where she went to board, east of the schoolhouse, twice. First she was taken from the bed and placed upon the floor in front of the bed, and after she lay down she was taken up and carried, feet foremost, over the footboard and placed on the floor; that she did not stay there another night while she boarded there, but went home, two miles, every night until she had finished boarding there. He said his object in making those demonstrations was to tell to the people that a murder had been committed near that schoolhouse. The man said he knew his daughter came home to stay nights while she was boarding at a certain house, but did not tell why she did; he would ask her. After that I saw him, and he said his daughter told him it was true about her being taken from the bed, just as it was given, and that was why she came home to lodge.

In both my experiences with those two mediums I asked all my questions mentally. The little girl was a puny little thing. I found her where I was acquainted with the woman she was left with her by her mother, who was out washing; and from that time to this there has been no further trouble around the schoolhouse. I think it would bother any one to tell where mind-reading came in in this case. I am cognizant of many cases where no one present could by any possible means know anything about what was communicated."

NEW YORK CITY.—H. C. M. Conkling writes: "Christmas came, as we all know, on Sunday, which made it (with myself and wife) very quiet. Neither of us went out, and, all the afternoon, I employed the time in making one of my scrap-books of spiritualistic clippings. Of course engaged in such an occupation, my thoughts were more or less upon spiritual subjects, and perhaps I may have been the medium which supplied the power for the incident I am about to relate.

About three o'clock, while my wife was in the parlor, in the front of my flat, and I in the dining-room in the rear, the hall bell (an electric one) rang sharply and distinctly, which at once arrested my attention. My wife went to the hall door, opened it, saw no one, looked in the hall and on the stairs; still no one was seen.

She came back to me and said: 'That was strange! There was no one in the hall, and I watched at the front window and no one went out. Some one must have touched the bell in passing.' I said nothing, as we do not agree in our views about Spiritualism, but I thought to myself, perhaps that was some spirit-friend who wanted to attract my attention. I even thought it might be either sister or mother, as they tell me they are ever with and near me, and I am sometimes conscious of their presence. At all events I was very happy and contented all the remainder of the afternoon, and at eight o'clock I was at Mrs. Stoddard-Gray's, in 34th street, where a large number were gathered together for a séance.

I do not propose to describe the séance of Christmas night, which was grand and worthy the occasion, but to tell you that after a while my sister came to me and I introduced her to my friends. She is a very lovely spirit. Later she came again and sat at the table near the cabinet, wrote and handed me the following:

'Dear Brother—I was at your home to-day, and rang the bell. Didn't you see me? Mamma is here and has promised to come strong to-night. God bless you. Your loving LAURA.'

She then said to me, 'Oh! brother, I am so happy,' kissed me good-bye, and disappeared within the cabinet. Almost instantly mother appeared between the curtains and came out in the room with me remarkably strong, and when she left me said to me: 'I was at your house, too, dear, when we rang the bell. Your Christmas call,' or words to that effect.

Now that is what I deem a very lovely and interesting manifestation of spirit-power and a test well worthy the attention of all. To me it was simply one of the most beautiful events of my life, and made my Monday Christmas full of divine joy."

HEMPSTEAD, L. I.—Jane M. Jackson Buck, recounting the phenomena she witnessed many years since, says: "I have attended circles with Judge Edmonds, Partridge, Greeley, Hallock and others. I opened my house free to Spiritualists; my spirit séance-room was never closed. In Washington, D. C., I saw Mrs. Youngs give tests. A piano would rock with heavy men upon it, by the medium simply touching its keys. Many musical circles were formed, of which Jennie Lord was the only medium. Several times she sat for James G. Bennett. Once, among editors and lawyers, Charles O'Connor attempted to grasp the guitar, but received a sharp blow on the head. Fresh violets were brought from the conservatory, all doors being locked; a piano was played, gas lighted, spirits spoke to each one; the medium was lifted in her chair. When Charles H. Foster was dining with me, pictures would turn as they hung on the walls; paper thrown on the floor in full sight was found filled with test communications, and mental questions were answered."

BROOKLYN.—Mrs. E. B. Ruggles writes: "Dr. B. M. Lawrence has given several of his unique, descriptive lectures in my parlors. They consist of stereopticon views illustrating various phases of both Ancient and Modern Spiritualism. Dr. Lawrence has a pleasing and happy faculty of explaining the pictures thrown upon the screen, and is listened to with deep interest by his patrons. He has several beautiful oil-paintings and drawings by the renowned Madam Diss Debarr, as well as Dr. Henry Rogers's likeness of the ancient Arabian alchemist, 'Amarona,' who has given Mrs. Harriet E. Beach his picture through three spirit-artists. Added to these manifestations of modern spirit-art are the allegorical pictures and beautiful Bible views of Raphael, Benjamin West, Gustave Doré, at al., which make these lectures, with their description, worthy of the attention of all liberal minds.

Dr. Dean Clarke has been spending a few weeks in Brooklyn, making friends by his dignified and gentlemanly manners and earnest and logical presentation of our Philosophy, in public and private circles.

There are numerous private circles and séances in Brooklyn, and the meetings are fairly well supported."

ERIE.—Sidney Kelsey, Secretary of the Spiritualist Society, writes: "Having heard of remarkable exhibitions of spirit-power at the residence of Mr. Newton Cobb, Mantua, Portage Co., O., his wife being the medium, Col. Irvine Camp, of Erie, and myself made a pilgrimage thither Nov. 23d. The séance-room is about fourteen by sixteen feet. The cabinet is formed of pine, just large enough to accommodate two persons in the form. The entrance is in front, through a door in which is an aperture about eighteen inches square, with a black cambric curtain. Mrs. Cobb, the medium, is some fifty years old, her husband verging on threescore. Both are exceedingly unassuming in all things, honesty and honorable intent being unmistakably shown in their faces. Indeed, in the seven or eight years of their connection with Spiritualism and the demonstration of its phenomena, no shade of suspicion of their truthfulness has arisen.

After tea our party of four, Col. Camp, Capt. B. F. Lee, of Sandusky, O., Mrs. Badger, of Hornellsville, N. Y., and the writer, were desired to take chairs in front of the cabinet, about five feet distant, the room being darkened to a shadowy twilight. Mrs. C. stepped into her sanctum and closed the door, Mr. Cobb seating himself on our right. For a few minutes the heavy breathing of the medium was heard, then perfect silence reigned. Presently the door opened and the tall form of a handsome lady, apparelled in white, walked out and approached us, leaving the door swung wide open and revealing the form of her medium heavily entranced. As the lady walked she invited the inspection of her person and the make-up of her garments, which appeared to be 'without spot or blemish, or any such thing,' and to be fashioned without seam, stitch, button, hook, or any modern device known in dressmaking. She is a constant attendant at the séances, and is known only as 'The Lace-Maker.' After an introduction she proceeded to make lace from the clothing of each one present, the color depending upon the garment from which it was taken; if taken from the carpet on the floor the fabric was striped, in accordance with that pattern, and colored accordingly. The process seemed simple, but called forth the wonder and admiration of the party. By a slight manipulation of the points of her fingers near the clothing she extracted a lace fabric, which my lady friend said looked as real as any she ever saw. As she drew her hand away the web followed it and was developed before the eyes of all present. Each time she finished a piece, she threw it over her left shoulder and began again, each piece remaining in sight until form, robes and laces vanished. She also made large and handsome tidies from two handkerchiefs borrowed from persons present, the process of unfoldment being clear to all, as, placing the two articles in her hands, she tossed them up and down until a large mass of drapery was seen. She then dematerialized the tidy, and it was seen to grow beautifully less until the two handkerchiefs alone remained in her hands. She then went into the cabinet to renew her strength, but immediately came out and walked outside the circle, touching each member as she passed, until, the power beginning to wane, she made rapid strides back to her medium's presence.

Next came 'Jimmy,' a son of the lace-maker. Seeing the writer in the circle, he said: 'Mr. Kelsey, you are a writer; will you speak a good word for me?' 'Certainly,' said I. 'Well, then, tell the people to seek first to control themselves, then they can better control their children, their friends and the spirits.' I then said, 'Upon this hangs all the law and the prophets.' 'Yes,' he quickly responded, 'and more, too.'

On the first night my wife came and was readily recognized by me. Of course I was pleased, so was she; then I said, 'Mary, can you show your hand?' (without saying which one, nor why I wished it.) She made no particular sign and soon vanished. It will be necessary for me to explain here: My partner, with whom I lived in earth-life for thirty-eight years, passed over about four years ago. As her body lay in the parlor I placed a single pansy blossom between the thumb and forefinger of her left hand, she being a great admirer of the old ballad, 'Only a Pansy Blossom.' At the second séance (next evening) my wife came again, was recognized, then gracefully and proudly raised her left arm, showing the pansy in her fingers, as I placed it, looking as fresh as when I last saw it. The flower was seen by all, and called forth from me an explanation after the séance. I was glad, and in the exuberance of my joy exclaimed, 'My darling wife, this puts the finishing touch to a picture which to me is more precious than gold, more valuable than diamonds! I am content; I ask no more.'

I also saw my mother-in-law, Mrs. Oliver Spafford, with large-eyed spectacles; my sister-in-law, Miss Margaret A. Spafford; Lieut. Chas. H. Riblet, who was killed at Fredericksburg; Mr. George Hunt, of Amboy, O., who, when recognized by me, tried to speak my name, but succeeded only in making a sort of hissing sound, when 'Jimmy' helped him out by saying, 'Yes, Sid, it is me.' I also saw the tall and portly form of Dr. S. G. Holbrook, who passed away from Kelloggsville, O., with whom I had lived for two years when a boy. I said, 'Doctor, I am thankful for this visit, and shall acquaint your daughter, Mrs. Beech, of the fact.' The countenance of the spirit instantly glowed with satisfaction, and waving me a graceful adieu, he faded away.

My friend Col. Camp was also highly favored, in that he saw a daughter, Mrs. Commander Wright, U. S. N., a son, Willie, a sister-in-law, and others, and finally the beautiful spirit of another daughter, 'Irvinia,' who passed away in infancy many years ago. She was robed in thick folds of white, all but her face, when, to explain, 'Jimmy' said, 'we had to do this to keep her here.'

Mrs. Badger welcomed her husband, father, mother, son, and many friends. Capt. Lee was also fortunate; among his visitants being a beautiful female known as 'Gold Star,' she bearing an illumined orb on her forehead. Thirteen forms appeared the first evening, sixteen the second; but I must only allude to one more, that of a highly-developed spirit known as 'Sarah Dennis,' who lived in New Jersey. She came out, as the first lady did, and like her produced laces and tidies from clothing, the elements, etc. From my handkerchief she fashioned a web two yards long, over a yard wide, right before our eyes, and dematerialized it in the same way. From Col. Camp's handkerchief she produced white lace enough to line the interior walls of the cabinet, several yards in extent. It is understood that both these lace-makers worked at that business during their earth-life.

Col. Camp and myself started homeward-bound the next morning, glorying in our newly-found evidences of immortality."

MEADVILLE.—Mrs. H. L. Haverty writes: "I see in the columns of our daily paper an article taken from the BANNER OF LIGHT. It has made a very great impression, and I am forced to say something in regard to this interesting subject—especially as the Hon. Mr. Richmond is interested in it. He is known far and near, and his reputation is such that people remark, 'Well, if Mr. R. can believe and write on that subject, it certainly must be true.'

I, like Mr. Richmond, went to Cassadaga to give the people the laugh; but before I left I felt more like praying. While there I saw things I was forced to believe came from the spirit-land. The medium I went to was Mr. Will. A. Mansfield, now in your city. I am certain he never saw nor heard of me until I stepped in his room at Cassadaga.

We are waiting very patiently for Mr. Richmond's book, which will be appreciated by many. I have never read the BANNER OF LIGHT, or any other spiritual paper. All I know in regard to Spiritualism I learned at Cassadaga."

PHILADELPHIA.—Charles F. Peterson writes: "The Children's Lyceum of the First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia gave its annual Christmas entertainment, Thursday evening, Dec. 29th. Our hall was finely decorated with evergreen, and a large tree in the center that reached to the ceiling, and was well filled with fancy articles made by the teachers and children. The entertainment commenced in the afternoon; at five o'clock we gave a tea party to children, and in the evening each child received a handsome basket of candies, and an orange. At 8 dancing commenced, and continued until 10 o'clock. We return thanks to Bro. Coffman, our Conductor, for his interest in our Lyceum, and hope he may continue to be our Conductor many years. The Committee were Bros. Munns, Smith, Coffman and Peterson, and Misses Hirsh, Carroll, McArtney and Musson, all of whom deserve great praise for the very satisfactory manner in which they carried out the programme."

PITTSBURGH.—A correspondent writes: "Frank T. Ripley is doing excellent work here for the cause of Spiritualism, and leading many to a knowledge of the truth. The hall in which he speaks has been filled to repletion. The Times has given good notices of his lectures, and its reports of tests given by him on the platform, some of which have been remarkable even to believers, have drawn to the meetings large numbers desiring to ascertain whether there may not be more in Spiritualism than they have hitherto been led to believe."

AUGUSTA.—"E. H." writes: "Seeing the announcement of Mr. Allen Putnam's decease in your columns, leads me to narrate to you this incident:

In the summer of 1886 I was away from home and laboring under a great stress of undeveloped mediumship. I was being taught by unseen forces to accept the truth of spirit-life, for I had long been a materialist. I resisted every step, and insisted that it was my right to investigate this as I would any other subject—use my reason and avail myself of the experience and writings of others.

If, as was sometimes the case, a book or paper was sent me pertaining to Spiritualism, I could not read it; but even while protesting vehemently, I would go deliberately and lay the volume aside and sit with folded hands, waiting for instructions from unseen and, to me, unknown sources. One Sunday I was more than usually perplexed and troubled, and I said aloud, 'Oh! for the sound of a human voice, for the touch of a tangible mortal hand to show me the way.' Immediately the spirit-voice said tenderly, 'I want you to write a letter.'

I made ready; then, holding the pen over the paper, I said, 'Who shall I write to?'

A friend had brought me a few copies of the BANNER; I took one from the table, turned it over as though in search of something, then placed my own fingers upon these two lines in fine print, which at that time appeared regularly in its pages: 'Allen Putnam, Esq., will answer calls to lecture and attend funerals. Address him No. 46 Clarendon street, Boston, Mass.' Then the voice said, 'Write.' I did as instructed, supposing Mr. Putnam to be a medium. After mailing the letter I felt vexed and foolish for allowing myself to write in this confidential way to an entire stranger.

In closing my letter I asked permission to call upon him as I passed through the city en route for my home in Augusta, Me. The return mail brought me a very kind and instructive letter from Mr. Putnam, enclosing one full of loving sympathy from his wife. Mr. Putnam said, 'The place of your residence comes up vividly before me and recalls the days of my youth. In the autumn of 1831 I was ordained as minister of the Unitarian society in Augusta, and remained there as such till the summer of 1834, when the loss of my companion compelled me to take the little babe that she left me and with a broken heart seek my mother's home. Ruel Williams, Judge Coney, Dr. Briggs, Eben Fuller and others are well remembered.'

I will not attempt to tell you of my feelings as I read that unexpected and convincing 'evidence' from my spirit-friends. As I was myself a member of this Unitarian Society, and as my guides purport to have been, in former years, active members of this same, and as I was sure that I had never known of the existence of Allen Putnam previous to my writing to him, I felt that they did indeed give me very good 'evidence.'"

DETROIT.—G. W. Kates writes: "From an extended active personal observation the writer has noted the trend of public inquiry made by persons not familiar with the facts and philosophy of Spiritualism.

It is easy to note that there are thousands unacquainted with the simplest phases of what Spiritualism offers or teaches, and also that there are thousands who profess the faiths of other isms who comprehend and are imbued with the truths of the Spiritual Philosophy.

The latter class obtain their information from the bountiful supply of literature our mortal and spirit workers have presented to the world, and from personal attendance at private séances. They do not, as a rule, attend the public meetings of the spiritual societies.

The former class are either adrift in the mazes of worldlyism, or confined within the pale of sectarian dogmas. It is this ignorant and prejudiced class who ask the majority of questions propounded to the itinerant speaker or medium.

These questions are usually of very simple character, and request the fundamentals of our philosophy. The amount of ignorance upon the subject of Spiritualism is appalling. Yet we imagine that our cause has reached an age sufficient to warrant its release from swaddling clothes. Some students have advanced so far that they imagine the people at large are ready for progressed teaching. It is not true. There is too much said that is impractical, because it is too far in advance of the prejudiced or dwarfed mind to accept or comprehend.

Are we not, therefore, using our means and strength more for a few than the many? Do we not forsake too much the first principles, and soar aloft amid stellar orbs, or meander through the brilliancies of the spirit-world?

It is a common every-day sort of teaching that the people need. A plain and comprehensive exposition of the Spiritual Philosophy may not suit a coterie of would-be progressivelsts, but will attract and elevate the masses. Spiritualism is for the people, and we have no right to selfishly use it, nor to confine it to those only who can pay, or are already enjoying advanced opportunities. We must beware of creating a condition of caste that shall own and use Spiritualism. Let us try to keep it, and spread it amongst the people at large. Let us try to make it useful for the elevation of the needy, and their advancement in a physical, mental, moral and spiritual direction.

To that end we want more simple explanations of our ideas relating to olden dogmas—new truths, and more practical expositions of the laws of life."

KIRKSVILLE.—Dr. F. A. Grove writes: "I wish to give my testimonial in favor of Mrs. Dr. Eleanor Martin, 73 Lane Avenue, Columbus, O., who advertises answers to sealed letters, in the columns of your paper. I have placed in her hands a number of letters under absolute test conditions, and the results have been far beyond my anticipations; a majority of questions were satisfactorily answered, and a number of absolute tests given on subjects not incorporated in the letters. My correspondence has extended through a number of months, and is still in operation. My success I attribute to the complete confidence I have in the medium. I think every letter written by a skeptical, doubting organism (not the honest skeptic) carries with it elements that obscure the field from which the medium receives impressions, therefore unsatisfactory results.

I find Mrs. M. excellent on business, as well as spiritual matters; her guides seem to be intelligent, refined and cultivated; not inclined to give advice except as they see it based on sound business principles, or spirit surroundings. I take pleasure in commending her to all honest, earnest seekers for truth, believing they will be amply compensated in every sense. I make this statement voluntarily, and without solicitation."

WILLIMANTIC.—Dumont Kingsley writes: "Our Children's Progressive Lyceum meets every Sunday in Excelsior Hall, where old and young pass a couple of hours in singing, recitations and discussions of timely topics. Last Sabbath, Jan. 1st, was an exception to our general rule, and we had with us the inspirational speaker, Mr. Bishop A. Beals, who discoursed in an able manner to a fair-sized and appreciative audience that had come through a heavy rain to listen, on subjects presented to him after entering the hall. In the evening the rain and darkness prevented many from attending, but those who ventured out were treated to a feast in the form of psychometric readings by Prof. Beals, who is the best reader it has been our pleasure to meet, the readings taking the place of the lecture which was to have been given on 'The Old and the New.'

Monday evening, Jan. 2d, Mr. J. William Fletcher addressed a large and intelligent audience, the occasion being his début in Willimantic. He is a very pleasing speaker and won the applause of his listeners. After the lecture he mentioned the names of many of our former residents who were present in spirit, and they were recognized by the audience. Arrangements are being made for Mr. Fletcher to give his illustrated lecture here."

SPRINGFIELD.—Helen M. Schmitt writes: "The Spiritualists of our city have not been idle during the closing days of the old year, but have had the services of Dr. J. K. Bailey, of Scranton, Penn., who has given us a grand treat. Our hall has been well filled, although the weather has been very cold and a terrible snow-storm had visited us. The lectures were deep, but he explained them so explicitly that a child could understand them. The Doctor is, without doubt, the best speaker our society has had in its hall, and we have made arrangements to have him again when he returns from his Eastern trip. Many strangers to our cause, who have heard him, have been converted so far as to assert that they will investigate the grand truth. We regret that we cannot have the Doctor with us at least another week, but other engagements prevent. From Springfield he goes to Lafayette, Ind. Our society is doing nicely and a happy band we are."

CHICAGO.—James Powell writes that for several weeks Mr. C. J. Barnes has been engaged in giving tests before the public with great success, and that his influence is making itself known in an increased interest in the subject on every hand. He was at the time of writing, Dec. 28th, about to leave to fulfill engagements in Michigan. Wherever he may visit, our correspondent recommends him to the good will and patronage of Spiritualist societies.

BOSTON.—E. R. Knowles, Ph. D., writes: "A primal instinct with all of us is to believe that there is but one law, one life on which all things rest; and it is only when men have attempted to make a formal statement of this oneness that confusion and contradiction ensue. In the past idealism has given the grandest definition of this 'all-pervading unity.' It says, 'There is nothing whatever but God,' and it is only when we come to the inconsistencies of Idealists, Transcendentalists, or 'Christian Scientists,' that we find any weak side to Idealism. But it is begging the question to say, 'There is nothing whatever but God and there can be no such thing as matter.' How do we know? In its relation to our finite personalities, matter is very real, though we and matter are but ideas of God, the one only absolute entity. All proceeds from one infinite, invisible Spirit.

It is the absolute duty of spiritual science to keep such distinctions perfectly clear and avoid such well-meant but erroneous expressions as 'All is spirit, there is no matter.' True, all is spirit, and in an absolute sense there is no matter; but spirit sustains the phenomenon known as matter, though spirit is the only substance."

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—William G. Wood writes that seventeen years ago last Christmas he received his first message from the spirit-world, and since that time he has had the good fortune to receive from his sister in spirit-life messages through the mediumship of more than fifty individuals, the records of which abound with positive proofs of the truths of Spiritualism.

NEWPORT.—John C. Peckham writes that his advice to materializing mediums is to have only those persons attend their séances who have confidence in their integrity, and after having established reasonable conditions, and informed the company of them, to request all who cannot or will not comply with them to leave, as their presence will retard manifestations, if not wholly prevent them.

ELK FALLS.—A. C. Williams writes: "I wish to speak a word in favor of the genuineness of Mrs. Eleanor Martin, of Columbus, Ohio, as a genuine test-letter medium. In a reply to a letter I received a remarkable test-letter from her. My mother used Quaker language and the same words she did at a materializing séance, and a dear friend—Miss Caroline Baldwin—gave her name, 'Carrie,' as I call her, and gave me encouragement concerning my mediumistic development."

Solar Biology.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I would like to ask space in your columns to correct an erroneous impression which I have unwittingly sent abroad regarding Mr. Butler's valuable work on "Solar Biology"—through having referred to his astronomical tables as "only rude approximations to correctness," thus giving the impression that these tables have but little practical value.

I proceeded upon the supposition that heliocentric longitudes ought to correspond in the number of degrees in the sign to the geocentric longitudes in the opposite part of the zodiacal zone. When I came to reflect more seriously upon this point I discovered that my hasty assumption was incorrect, and wherein I intended to do Mr. Butler a kindness I have unwittingly prejudiced the circulation of his book. The facts are that the tables in "Solar Biology" are substantially correct, for they accord in every essential particular with the heliocentric longitudes of the planets contained in the Nautical Almanacs issued from the Greenwich Observatory.

It is to be observed that Mr. Butler has given in his tables the heliocentric longitudes of the planets, and the geocentric longitudes of the moon. Let me make this distinction plain. The heliocentric center of the zodiacal zone is the sun; the geocentric center is the earth. The first is stationary; the second is constantly shifting by reason of the earth's orbital motion. Hence the geocentric positions of the superior planets are always retrograde when they are in conjunction with the earth; but they never become retrograde in their relations with the sun.

Therefore when Mr. Butler tells us that he has arranged his planetary tables in "reverse order," that is, substituted heliocentric positions for the geocentric positions which are published in astrological ephemerises—we err if we expect these positions should always be the exact opposite of the geocentric longitudes. The shifting of the geocentric center one hundred and eighty million miles across the zodiac, while the heliocentric center remains stationary, is sufficient cause for the variation in the two sets of longitudes, except when a planet is in conjunction or opposition with respect to the earth, when they would occupy similar positions in opposite signs.

Hence the tables in "Solar Biology" may be relied on as possessing all the practical value which Mr. Butler claims for them; and therefore I hope no one will hesitate to purchase this book on account of the confusion that has arisen regarding them.

Has Electricity Intelligence?

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Atlantic Monthly for August, 1868, records some of the most wonderful physical manifestations that have occurred in connection with the spiritualistic movement of the nineteenth century.

These manifestations took place at the residence of the Cashier of the bank in Fitchburg, Mass., and in the presence of an Irish girl who had been employed as a domestic in the family. The manifestations embraced, among other things, the moving of marble slabs about the room, without human contact.

The case created such a marked sensation in community that many of the leading citizens—including ministers, lawyers, business men and others—were invited to witness the manifestations for themselves, but no one among them discovered any reasonable method of accounting for the remarkable power exhibited; they being universally ignorant of the spiritual hypothesis and its verity, which was the true solution of the mystery.

If I mistake not the prominent individuals invited to witness the phenomena suggested that scientists should investigate these various manifestations for the public good. I remember of calling upon the employer of the girl, to see if there could not be some place secured where she might have a home and exhibit her powers, or that she might find a home in the family of Spiritualists, where the phenomena would be better understood; but the impression I now have was that the girl was not allowed to go into a family of Spiritualists, although she could not stay with the family much longer; and where she finally went I could not learn, until recently I heard Dr. A. W. Fuller of Worcester, Mass., relate his experience with a girl—which narrative had such a distinct bearing upon the case of the Fitchburg young woman and her manifestations that I became quite interested, and, to my astonishment, found that she was the same girl.

I requested Dr. Fuller to give me his experience with the case, and the facts, as near as he could recollect, were as follows: She left Fitchburg, and soon afterward found a situation in the family of James McFarland, in Worcester. She would work nights with her eyes closed, as in a trance, or in a somnambulic state, washing windows and doing other laborious work, and in the morning she did not feel exhausted, neither did she know that she had worked at all.

At one time she was discovered walking in this condition upon the housetop, in a dangerous position. The gas would sometimes be turned off when the family had company. She was called to account for so doing, and informed Mr. McFarland that she would turn it on if they would not come near her while she was doing it. They however followed her, and saw her place her hands over the gas-stopper, when the gas was let on; this is the way she turned it off—not needing to use a wrench for the purpose, as others were obliged to do.

At one time she said to a person present: "You have lost a ring, and it is in a gutter under the snow;" she went out and secured the ring, and gave it to the owner. At another time the carving-knife was seen passing from one part of the room to the other, and close to the heads of those present, but no harm was done by it.

The Roman Catholic priest was called to see if he could not exorcise the "evil spirits." Doctors of the regular school of practice were also called, and they pronounced it a clear case of nervous affection caused by having too much electricity in the system.

Mr. McFarland was suffering severely with rheumatism, and she, while entranced, gave him a treatment, which very much benefited him. The girl knew nothing of her acts during the treatment, and while it was going on loud raps were heard all about the room. At another time Mr. McFarland heard her voice and that of a male talking in her room. The male voice claimed to be that of the spirit of her father, and said to her: "You were not afraid of me when living—why be afraid of me now?" She said: "If it is my father I will not be afraid of you."

On another occasion a hassock—without contact of visible power to cause its action—was seen to fly across the room, and at another time a large table came into the adjoining room and tipped over before the people present. A sharp whistle was sometimes heard, and in it could be recognized words and sentences. At this juncture Dr. Fuller was sent for to advise as a Spiritualist; she was afraid of him at first, knowing that he was a Spiritualist, but the whistle came and could be heard by himself and Mr. McFarland, and the strange occurrences continued as long as she resided with this family.

A voice once said: "It is your brother that is answering you in a whistle."

A drum was also played upon. The girl once said, "If this is you," naming the spirit, "please play your favorite tune," when it was played in perfect time.

This girl—Mary by name—remained in the family some four years, but they could not keep her longer, as she caused them so much anxiety and trouble; therefore she was taken to Mr. Dorman's for a short time and then was placed in a Roman Catholic institution in Worcester, where she subsequently deceased.

This case is a marked one, and can be readily looked up for corroboration by any person; the Psychical Research Society will here find, in this case, an account of the spiritual manifestations which occurred in families whose members did not recognize the spiritual phenomena of the present age, hence the account cannot be set aside as "a spiritualistic sensational fable that will not stand investigation."

I find I have omitted to give an account of a remarkable clairvoyant vision in connection with this case. The voice described above said to the girl: "Mary, you have an animal in your stomach." Dr. Fuller in his clairvoyant diagnosis said: "I see you drinking at a spring of water with flags growing about it; but it is not in this country," and he also saw a lizard in her stomach. The voice then said: "Eat tobacco, and it will kill it." She did so, and the doctor declares that he saw the lizard, which she vomited up. The girl informed him that she distinctly remembered drinking at a spring in Ireland answering the description of the vision. She had been in America but about three months when the manifestations commenced, and only lived until she was about twenty years of age.

Doubtless if this girl had been better understood, the results would have been much different, and it may safely be said that a most wonderful spirit medium's earth-life was shortened through want of information in these matters on the part of those around her.

A similar case is now taking place in the presence of a girl residing some fifteen miles from Boston. The physical manifestations have been remarkable and startling, and the mental tests equally so. The girl is the daughter of parents who have never known anything of Spiritualism except by and through the girl's grandmother, who, believing in the philosophy, has thus been able to explain what is taking place through her grandchild's organism.

"OUTSIDE THE GATES; AND OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES," by a Band of Spirit Intelligences, through the mediumship of Mary Theresa Shelhamer, has just been published by Colby & Rich, of Boston. The book is not exactly a novel, but the heroine is a spirit who "depicts her progress"—we copy from the advertisement—"in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the sunrise land—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences, as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world." Doubtless the work is as authentic as Revelation, and those who have read Miss Shelhamer's lectures will probably desire this book. The price is $1,25, and, like all of Colby & Rich's publications, it may be obtained at this office.—The Truth Seeker, New York.

THE BROWN DWARF OF RÜGEN.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

The pleasant isle of Rügen looks the Baltic water o'er,
To the silver-sanded beaches of the Pomeranian shore;

And in the town of Rambin a little boy and maid
Plucked the meadow-flowers together and in the seasurf played.

Allied were they in beauty if not in their degree;
He was the Amtmann's first-born, the miller's child was she.

Now of old the isle of Rügen was full of Dwarfs and Trolls,
The brown-faced little Earth-men, the people without souls.

And for every man and woman in Rügen's island found
Walking in air and sunshine, a Troll was under ground.

It chanced the little maiden one morning strolled away
Among the haunted Nine Hills, where the elves and goblins play.

That day, in barley fields below, the harvesters had known
Of evil voices in the air, and heard the small horns blown.

She came not back; the search for her in field and wood was vain;
They cried her east, they cried her west, but she came not again.

"She 's down among the Brown Dwarfs," said the dream wives wise and old,
And prayers were made and masses said, and Rambin's church-bell tolled.

Five years her father mourned her, and then John Dietrich said:
"I will find my little playmate, be she alive or dead."

He watched among the Nine Hills, he heard the Brown Dwarfs sing,
And saw them dance by moonlight merrily in a ring.

And when their gay-robed leader tossed up his cap of red,
Young Dietrich caught it as it fell, and thrust it on his head.

The Troll came crouching at his feet and wept for lack of it.
"Oh! give me back my magic cap, for your great head unfit!"

"Nay," Dietrich said, "the Dwarf who throws his charméd cap away
Must serve its finder at his will, and for his folly pay.

"You stole my pretty Lisbeth and hid her in the earth,
And you shall ope the door of glass and let me lead her forth."

"She will not come; she 's one of us; she 's mine," the Brown Dwarf said.
"The day is set, the cake is baked, to-morrow we shall wed."

"The fell fiend fetch thee!" Dietrich cried, "and keep thy foul tongue still.
"Quick! open, to thy evil world, the glass door of the hill!"

The Dwarf obeyed, and youth and Troll down the long stairway passed,
And saw in dim and sunless light a country strange and vast.

Weird, rich and wonderful, he saw the elfin under-land,
Its palaces of precious stones, its streets of golden sand.

He came unto a banquet hall, with tables richly spread,
Where a young maiden served to him the red wine and the bread.

How fair she seemed among the Trolls so ugly and so wild!
Yet pale and very sorrowful, like one who never smiled!

Her low, sweet voice, her gold-brown hair, her tender blue eyes seemed Like something he had seen elsewhere or something he had dreamed.

He looked; he clasped her in his arms; he knew the long lost one;
"Oh! Lisbeth! See thy playmate—I am the Amtmann's son!"

She leaned her fair head on his breast, and through her sobs she spoke,
"Oh! take me from this evil place and from the elfin folk!

"And let me tread the grass-green fields and smell the flowers again,
And feel the soft wind on my cheek and hear the dropping rain!

"And oh! to hear the singing bird, the rustling of the tree,
The lowing cows, the bleat of sheep, the voices of the sea;

"And oh! upon my father's knee to sit beside the door,
And hear the bell of vespers ring in Rambin church once more!"

He kissed her cheek, he kissed her lips; the Brown Dwarf groaned to see,
And tore his tangled hair and ground his long teeth angrily.

But Dietrich said: "For five long years this tender Christian maid
Has served you in your evil world and well must she be paid!

"Haste—hither bring me precious gems, the richest in your store;
Then when we pass the gate of glass, you 'll take your cap once more."

No choice was left the baffled Troll, and, murmuring, he obeyed,
And filled the pockets of the youth and apron of the maid.

They left the dreadful under-land and passed the gate of glass;
They felt the sunshine's warm caress, they trod the soft, green grass.

And when, beneath, they saw the Dwarf stretch up to them his brown
And crooked claw-like fingers, they tossed his red cap down.

Oh! never shone so bright a sun, was never sky so blue,
As hand in hand they homeward walked the pleasant meadows through!

And never sang the birds so sweet in Rambin's woods before,
And never washed the waves so soft along the Baltic shore;

And when beneath his door-yard trees the father met his child,
The bells rang out their merriest peal, the folks with joy ran wild.

As soon from Rambin's holy church the twain came forth as one,
The Amtmann kissed a daughter, the miller blest a son.

John Dietrich's fame went far and wide, and nurse and maid and maid crooned o'er
Their cradle-song: "Sleep on, sleep well, the Trolls shall come no more!"

For in the haunted Nine Hills he set a cross of stone,
And Elf and Brown Dwarf sought in vain a door where door was none.

The tower he built in Rambin, fair Rügen's pride and boast,
Looked o'er the Baltic water to the Pomeranian coast;

And for his worth ennobled, and rich beyond compare,
Count Dietrich and his lovely bride dwelt long and happy there.

Troy, N. Y.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

We are progressing into the light, and in fact we could hardly do otherwise under the instruction we are receiving.

Mr. Charles Dawbarn, of New York City, was with us the first two weeks of December, and entertained us by his happy, cheerful influence not only, but by the sound logical arguments he advanced regarding spiritual truth. He must be heard to be appreciated—a newspaper report is quite tame, when placed in comparison with the magnetism of his words and manner. We would gladly have heard him longer, but other engagements prevented.

The venerable Warren Chase succeeded him for the balance of the month; most everybody knows what a whole-souled, good-natured speaker he is, and it seems that like old wine he improves with age. He has done us good, and we part from him regretfully—as he informs us he is going to the far West, and may not visit us again for a long time.

The BANNER OF LIGHT is read and re-read, and warmly cherished here.

O. M. AUSTIN,
Secretary Progressive Spiritual Society.

☞ An instance of corrupting Indian words by contraction is illustrated in the word "Kalamazoo," the name of a river in Michigan, which, in its proper form, it is said, is Ni-gik-an-a-mazoo, an Indian phrase descriptive of the stones seen through the river bed, which from a refractive power in the current of the water resembled an otter swimming under the water, the term having its root forms in Nigik, an "otter," the verb Kana, "to hide," and Ozoo, "a quadruped tail." The letter "l" is a mere transposition of "n" in native words passing from Indian to the French language.

January Magazines.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—The quaint people, primitive customs and scenery of Cape Breton Island form the subject of an interesting descriptive sketch by F. M. Endlich, with eighteen illustrations. A series of papers, "Boy Life on the Prairie," is commenced by Hamlin Garland, that lovers of the felicities of farm-life will greatly admire, judging from the initial number, which treats of "The Huskin'." An old homestead near Brooklyn, replete in its history with revolutionary incidents, once the home of Anna Cora Mowatt, and the scene of many stories of the palpable presence of "strange visitors" from another world, is described in an illustrated article by F. L. Perrine. A pathetic description is given of the passing away of a precocious child in new chapters of Edgar Fawcett's serial, "Olivia Delaplaine." Among the remaining contents are "Some Boston Artists and Their Studios," "Manual Training in Schools" and several short stories. Joaquin Miller contributes a fine poem, "Twilight at Nazareth." New York: Am. Mag. Co., 749 Broadway.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW.—A new arrangement of contents and new departments mark the opening of the new volume with the new year. A "European Department" is introduced, under charge of Dr. Stückenberg, of Berlin, whose contributions to past numbers have shown him to be well qualified for the position. We may expect from him a fine transcript of the religious thought of Europe, more especially that of Germany and France. Dr. Van Dyke, of Brooklyn, takes the negative of the question, ably argued in the affirmative by Miss Willard, "Shall Women be Licensed to Preach?" His chief argument is that women must not be allowed to preach because "there is no Scripture warrant for it." What a pity! But women do preach, nevertheless, and many other things are done for which "there is no Scripture warrant," and many not done, even by Dr. Van Dyke, and others of his profession, for which there is in the Scriptures not only warrant but command. The position of this writer is in keeping with that of the main body of the church in its relation to every progressive movement. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

THE CENTURY.—"The Catacombs of Rome" is the title of an intensely interesting account of the subterranean cemeteries of the early Christians outside of the city, by Prof. Philip Schaff, D. D. The illustrations show the entrance to the catacombs, sections of tombs, sculptured figures, and tools, glass flasks and lamps found within them. John Ruskin is the subject of a finely written biography by W. J. Stillman, a frontispiece portrait accompanying it. The famous American actor, John Gilbert, has the story of his dramatic days attractively told by J. R. Towse, a portrait and his appearance in several of his leading characters being also given. Mr. Kennan continues his Siberian sketches, treating this month upon "Russian Provincial Prisons." Nicolay and Hay's "Abraham Lincoln: A History," reaches in this issue "The Formation of the Cabinet," of which is given very full details, illustrated with portraits of the men who composed it. The "Memoranda of the Civil War" comprise four papers, all of much interest. The other contents of this number are superexcellent in variety, meet all tastes, and are of topical and general interest. New York: The Century Co. Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

WIDE AWAKE.—One of the most enjoyable of the contents of this number is Maud Howe's "My Friends, the Dogs," a picture of the writer and her dog, "Sambo," being the frontispiece, pictures of several others, including, "We are Nine"—a family group—illustrating the article. Of "Warwick Brookes and His Pencil-Pictures," by T. Letherbrow, the second paper is given, sixteen engravings from paintings, photographs and drawings, including a fac simile autograph letter of Gladstone, written at the time of the death of Mr. Brookes, accompanying it. Those whose floral tastes incline them to care for plants in winter will be interested in Charles Barnard's response to "When Does Spring Begin?" "A Journey to Peking" gives one a very clear insight of the habits and methods of the people of the celestial kingdom. In the C. Y. F. R. U. department, instructive matter is given under the titles "Arabian Nights," illustrated with a page of Arabic, "More About Crystals," "More About the Hindoos," etc. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.—The opening article is a just and wholesome critique of Mary Anderson's dramatic personations, by the author of "John Halifax," illustrated with portraitures of that distinguished actress as Hermione and Perdita, from photographs by Van der Weyde. Mrs. Charles M'Laren contributes an essay upon "The Fallacy of the Superiority of Man." An illustrated "Treatise on Hoops," historically correct, exhibits the ridiculous extremes to which the slaves of fashion have been driven by their fickle goddess. An interesting sketch of travel will be found in "At Royat." Practical humanitarian work is outlined by the Countess of Meath in "The Ministering Children's League," the members of which are enjoined to "try to do at least one kind deed every day." Much else of interest is given in this the second number of a new monthly that promises to be one of great merit. New York: Cassell & Co.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN.—The contents, though chiefly selected, are exceedingly interesting and instructive in their relations, descriptive and otherwise of occult phenomena, and the laws that presumably govern them. In the "Miscellaneous" Department, current events and topics prominently before the public are noted in brief, and the number closes with a new chapter of the editor's treatise upon "The Principal Methods of Studying the Brain," Cranioscopy, Pathology, Vivisection, and Human Impressibility, being specifically considered. Boston: 6 James street.

A REVIEW OF THE REPORT OF THE SEYBERT COMMISSION APPOINTED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA TO INVESTIGATE MODERN SPIRITUALISM. Issued under the authority of the American Spiritualist Alliance. Pamphlet, 54 pp. Price 10 cents. Published by Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston.

Here we have in a convenient form for reference a concise statement of what the Seybert Commission have done toward investigating Spiritualism, and a stern yet just criticism of their work. This Review was presented September 28th, at a regular meeting of the American Spiritualist Alliance, by Prof. Henry Kiddle, for the committee appointed by said association to examine the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" and prepare a review of the same. Then it was unanimously resolved that the review should be forwarded to the BANNER OF LIGHT, and also printed as a pamphlet for general distribution. After a careful perusal of the Review we pronounce it the finest contribution to the polemics of Modern Spiritualism it has ever been our pleasure to read, and would recommend the work as a missionary document calculated to be of great service to Spiritualism at the present time.—Light on the Way.

SEYBERT COMMISSION APPOINTED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
TO INVESTIGATE
MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE
AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE.

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.
By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

IF A MAN DIE,

Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.
It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.
It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.
Copies may be had for circulation at the following low prices:

Nature's Laws in Human Life: An Exposition of Spiritualism.

The way to decide the merits or demerits of any subject is to obtain facts, evidence and argument, pro and con.; and in the above-named book such form of evidence has been collated from prominent individuals who have publicly expressed themselves pro and con, on the proof of the great problem of immortality of the soul being a fact in the nature of things that goes far beyond belief or unbelief in the same.
PART I.—Testimony against Spiritualism, from the religious denominations and skeptics, headed by remarks of Prof. Austin Phelps, of Andover College.
PART II.—Opinions of noted men that hold the conservative view on the subject.
PART III.—Testimony in favor of Spiritualism being what it is represented, i. e., a fact not to be gainsayed by ridicule, prejudice and skepticism. The book illustrates nearly all of the side issues that have grown out of the subject—pure and simple.
PART IV.—Religious aspects and relations of Spiritualism; comments on religious organizations; Spiritualism in the Bible.
This book is designed to perform a missionary work for the cause of Spiritualism. pp. 308.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.
It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

ENGRAVINGS.

"MY PETS."

A bouncing girl, healthy and happy, sits among her Angola cats and kittens, on the steps of a French cottage, around which grape vines gracefully climb. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"AN ARMFUL."

This charming picture represents a little girl in a bart of rustic architecture in the act of trying to carry off more of the old cat's young than she can well manage, while the other kittens frolic in hay and apples at her feet. The mother, in eloquently pleading attitude, is putting in a decided but dignified protest against the abduction. It is a very animated and pleasing gem of art, finely engraved on steel by F. T. Stuart, from a painting by V. L. Knous, an eminent German artist. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

Good Counsel and Timely Warning.

We sincerely trust that no reader of THE BANNER omitted to peruse, and with serious thoughtfulness, the message of Spirit John W. Edmonds in its last week's issue. There can hardly be a Spiritualist living who is not more or less conversant with the writings of Judge Edmonds while in the earth-life, and has not been instructed and inspired by his seer-like utterances. He could not well communicate with mortals, after being clothed upon with the garments of the new life, without having something to say which is well worthy of attention. In this recent message of his he confesses his profound interest in "phenomenal Spiritualism," for the sole and sufficient reason that it is the one grand torch of truth that lights the pathway of despairing humanity to a brighter world. While philosophical Spiritualism is useful in teaching us how to live, we all need, says Spirit Edmonds, "hard, stubborn facts" to convince us of the truth. If to our philosophizing we add this undoubted fact, we then have in our possession a power that must move the world. That, he says, is his idea of Spiritualism. He leaves others to expound the philosophy and teach the moral lessons which Spiritualism conveys to man, pointing out to humanity, as it does, through bright and glorious teachers, the broadest pathway of pure living.

Of the phenomena he remarks that they appeal to the senses of man, and shake old and deep-rooted convictions that are grounded in error to such an extent that they totter and fall. In spite of all that seems faulty and filled with shadows, he knows there is a grand bulwark of truth to which we can all cling. He asserts that the cause was never more useful than it is to-day; that it never was more powerful than at the present time; that it is engaging the attention of materialistic and scientific minds, and gradually compelling them to be convinced that there is an underlying truth which they dare not push aside. The invisibles know, he asserts, that from scientific homes and circles, as well as from minds that have been bent on materialism alone, there is going up a thought for the investigation of the spiritual phenomena, which will produce its sure result. Therefore he appeals to us all to stand firmly by the truth, since it appears that there is to be a grand shaking-up in the midst of our strongholds. They who hold fast by what they know to be true have nothing to apprehend; but it behooves those who are not certain of themselves to look well to their surroundings, since they are likely to be swept away in the grand upheaval which is now approaching. The false will be wholly swept away. What appears to be beautiful but is inwardly decayed must be cast out from our midst. Only what is sound will remain to do its useful work.

We cannot as Spiritualists evade or shrink from this winnowing test, for it is sure to come and we must all take our part and lot in it. We need give ourselves no concern, however, if we endeavor to do our best with a sincere and honest purpose. The rest we may safely leave to higher laws and mightier forces than we control or possess. Those who control the spiritualistic press, and those who occupy public places in the spiritualistic field, are counselled to be firm in expressing the truth, refusing to yield any ground to bigotry and opposition. They should be the first to withstand every advance of intolerance. While, on the one hand, Spirit Edmonds does not believe it to be necessary to submit to the taunts and sneers of those who do not yet accept the teachings and truths which we accept, he believes, on the other hand, that it is essential that all workers and thinkers maintain a strong, manly, dignified attitude, and show by both their bearing and expression that the truth is dear to them, and the cause they have espoused is a holy one, which they will not allow any to encroach upon only for the purpose of assault. Here is just where the sifting-out process is going to produce unexpected results in the reconstruction to which Spiritualism is in due time to be subjected.

Insane Asylum Management.

Dr. Talmage, in one of his recent Friday evening "talks," has been stirring up the elements in relation to the management of our insane asylums in his own characteristic way. Alluding to the exposure of the secrets of their interior management through newspaper enterprise and the explorations of journalism, he compares these establishments in the midst of our civilization to engines of torture rather than institutions of mercy. He instances the crowding of patients into quarters that are cruelly inadequate for them; the meagre allowance of only thirteen cents a day for food; and recites the list of miseries and misfortunes which may have led to the unbalancing of their reason, which is, nevertheless, imputed to them as a fault for which they deserve only punishment. "I will undertake to say," observed Dr. Talmage, "that if you should take fifty men and women of sound minds and level heads, and compel them to stay in such a place one year, forty-five of the fifty would by the end of that year be as crazy as a loon or as mad as a March hare."

He puts the question plainly and directly—"What have these patients done that they should suffer such oppression?" He can himself find no fault with them, more than that they may have had an unbalanced ancestry; or that they were thrown from a run-away vehicle, or caught in a railway collision, with consequent injury to the brain; or that some sudden bereavement has dethroned the reason; or that the inhumanity of a brutal husband or the collapse of fortune has driven them into dementia. For these misfortunes, and for no fault at all, they are kept, says Dr. Talmage, in "a most distracting, terrifying and intolerable incarceration." Kept on thirteen cents a day! he justly exclaims. Why, says he, a loaf of bread costs ten cents; with the remaining three cents what green turtle soup, what sirloin steaks, what ice cream meringue desserts they must have had! And he calls on the well-fed Board of Supervisors and the Board of Charities and the judges of courts and the grand juries to particularly note it.

The majority of insane patients, with their nerves all a-jangle, he told his hearers, are thrust in where recovery is an impossibility. Those who are only a little daft are compelled to hear the howlings of the stark maniac. Kleptomania, pyromania, dipsomania, hypochrondria, and all the multiform shapes of aberration are placed amid surroundings that are notoriously unfavorable for cure. The doctors say so, and so do the nurses, and so do the visitors. Moreover, such a doom is possible to any one. When the mind loses its poise, the capacity to earn a livelihood is gone. A man may make his boast of his ancestry being free from all mental taints, and that he has no fears of becoming crack-brained; yet some night, on his way home from church or lodge, a ruffian may hurl a slung-shot against his temples, and for the rest of his life he would not know his own name. The mightiest of human intellects have sometimes given way, too. Robert Hall, the most eloquent preacher of his day, and his writings a classic in sermonic literature, spent many of his days in the insane asylum, and vibrated alternately from asylum to pulpit and from pulpit to asylum. Cruden prepared much of his famous "Concordance" in the insane asylum. Dr. John Brown of Edinburg, author of the immortal sketch, "Rab and his Friends," was taken again and again, at his own request, to the asylum, and died insane.

From illustrations like these, the unsympathetic with clear brain should not presume to feel too independent of disaster. The horror of crowding 1483 patients into quarters designed for 800, and thirteen cents a day of prolonged starvation, is a fact, asserted Dr. Talmage, in the suburbs of a Christian city. It is well enough to witness the ravings of King Lear, or see Meg Merrilies acting her craziness on the mimic stage, or to sit at home and read of the mental derangement of Goethe's Mignon; but he thought it would please the Lord much better if we did something that was of some practical help for the insane asylumns of America. Alas! he exclaims, for the fifty thousand insane of the United States, and the sixty thousand insane of England, and the seventy thousand insane of France, and for the millions wrecked on that awful coast of insanity. He narrated an experience he had in the company of a demented man in an English railway coach, that was enough to thrill every one of his listeners, and make their blood run cold.

And well he might have appealed to all within the sound of his voice to thank God for the healthful possession of the mental faculties. For this, he said, we ought to offer up our deepest gratitude night and morning. We do not sufficiently appreciate that great blessing. But along with our gratitude for this continued use of right reason ought to go a stronger and deeper determination to leave nothing undone, not a single stone unturned, that promises to result in the alleviation of the condition of the numerous unfortunates who are confined in these insane asylums, and treated as above described. The present system is inhuman to the limit of barbarity. It only helps to spread the disease it vainly professes to cure. It is a standing disgrace to the progress of knowledge and the advance of civilization. But it can never be changed or ended without strenuous efforts, unitedly put forth by the community at large.

"Is Spiritualism True?"

This caption is the title of Mr. J. W. Fletcher's illustrated lecture, to which the citizens of Boston will have an opportunity of listening, besides witnessing the two hundred dissolving views in connection therewith, at Parker Memorial Hall, on the evening of Sunday, the 15th instant. The lecture is both interesting and instructive, and the views illustrate many of the important events connected with the spiritual movement.

Hanging and Life Imprisonment.

Without question many persons who hesitate in giving their assent to the final abolition of capital punishment would hesitate no longer if they could be completely assured that a life-sentence in place of it was under no possible circumstances to be interfered with and shortened. It is preposterous on the very face of it, that one man, like a State executive, should be entrusted with the arbitrary power of setting aside the patient and expensive work of courts and juries in reference to accused criminals whom they have at length found guilty of the highest crime known to society. Take from every Governor the right to meddle with verdicts deliberately rendered by juries and no less deliberately accepted by judges, and leave the matter where these leave it, subject to future revision only on the discovery of new and important testimony, and there is little doubt that numbers of the people who now advocate capital punishment mainly because of its certainty would willingly come over to the advocacy of life imprisonment instead, with an unutterable sense of relief from their present responsibility.

Rev. Dr. Pullman, at a recent meeting of Universalist Sunday school teachers in this city, remarked as follows: "'T is a pity that, after all these centuries, we have no better way of dealing with criminals than the brutal and cowardly method of hanging them, for we thus make the punishment as brutal as the crime—the law as brutal as the law-breaker. There is no 'majesty of law' in such exhibitions. It is simply a vulgar striking-back, a throttling-match between bullies. The acts of human law should be like the acts of divine law—calm, inexorable, unhasting, unresting, decisive, majestic. It is a pity, too, that, by our brutal method of punishment, we turn the sympathy of millions toward a point where no sympathy is deserved."

In his "Reminiscences of a Preacher," published in the Boston Investigator, William McDonnell, the author of "Exeter Hall," declares his unhesitating denial of the right of any body of men to legislate to the extent of authorizing a criminal to be deprived of life, no matter what may be the atrocity of his guilt. While the one who wantonly deprives another of life should be severely punished, it should be punishment that is visited upon him, and not revenge. Besides, many innocent lives are now taken, in spite of the interpretation of the law respecting ninety-nine guilty men's escaping.

Until within a comparatively few years, great crimes and petty ones were alike expiated by death. It was "death for political offences, many of which were far from being treasonable; death for heterodoxy; death for non-conformity; death for forgery and for counterfeiting; death for burglary, for robbery, and for larceny; death for horse-stealing and sheep-stealing; and the same dread penalty was inflicted for numerous other offences now hardly counted misdemeanors." Mercy was generally extended on condition of forfeiting an eye or a limb, and poor objects thus mutilated were seen crawling or hobbling, and begging along the highways, as a terror to evil doers and dread examples of the retributive justice of a Christian nation. About two hundred years ago there were more than two hundred and fifty crimes or offences for which the punishment of death was inflicted in England. The law was vastly more sanguinary at a period when English laborers were much more ingnorant than they are even at present. If it be held that the "weight of authority" is still in favor of the death penalty, it is to be remembered that scarcely more than a hundred years ago a greater "weight of authority" was in favor of extirpating almost every offender, after the fashion of the most vindictive barbarians.

Says John Bright: "I do n't think the punishment of death is necessary to the security and well-being of society; and I believe its total abolition would not tend to increase those crimes which it is now supposed by many to prevent. The security and well-being of society do not depend upon the severity of punishments. Barbarism in the law promotes barbarism among those subject to the law; and acts of cruelty under the law become examples of similar acts done contrary to law. The real security for human life is to be found in a reverence for it. If the law regarded it as inviolable, then the people would also begin so to regard it. A deep reverence for human life is worth more than a thousand executions in the prevention of murder, and is, in fact, the great security for human life. The law of capital punishment, while pretending to support this reverence, does in fact tend to destroy it. If the death penalty is of any force in any case to deter from crime, it is of much more force in lessening our chief security against it, for it proclaims the fact that kings, parliaments, judges and juries may determine when and how men may be put to death by violence, and familiarity with this idea cannot strengthen the reverence for human life. To put men to death for crimes, civil or political, is to give proof of weakness rather than strength, and of barbarism rather than of Christian civilization."

To the World!

The editors and publishers of the BANNER OF LIGHT are doing all that lies in their power for the enlightenment of humanity by demonstrating to the world the fact of the Immortality of the Soul. Threats and misrepresentations, coming from whatever source they may, do not disturb them in the least, as they are assured of the coöperation and assistance of the good and the true in both spheres of life.

☞ President Cleveland has sent to Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting the draft of a bill "to provide for the protection of the Round Valley Indian reservation" in California. The President, in his message of transmittal, says, "The documents thus submitted exhibit extensive and entirely unjustifiable encroachments upon lands set apart for Indian occupancy, and disclose a disregard of Indian rights so long continued that the Government cannot further temporize without dishonor."

Brief History of Anti-Slavery.

Fifty-six years ago WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, a printer by trade, and a few other humanitarians, met in the schoolroom under the African Baptist Church in Belknap street, Boston, and formed the New England Anti-Slavery Society. Mr. Oliver Johnson, the only survivor of the twelve men who signed the constitution, says it was a dark and stormy night—thus seeming as if Nature was frowning upon the inauguration of a scheme for the abolition of chattel slavery in the United States. But public opinion subsequently was fiercer by far than the tempest then raging without. On that eventful occasion Mr. Garrison remarked: "We have met to-night in this obscure schoolhouse—our numbers few and our influence limited; but mark my prediction! Faneuil Hall shall ere long echo with the principles we have set forth. We shall shake the nation by their mighty power!" His prophetic utterances were literally fulfilled: CHARLES SUMNER, a man then only twenty-one years of age, startled the people all over the country by his remarks in behalf of the cause in Faneuil Hall, as the press scattered his eloquent utterances far and wide.

The mighty result of that little gathering in an African schoolhouse on the 6th of January, so many years ago, has made this country a nation of freemen in every sense of the word, culminating, as the agitation did, in the issuance of the Emancipation Proclamation of President ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Forty Years a Speaker.

A delegation of the Boston friends of Hon. Warren Chase celebrated with appropriate exercises, on Thursday evening, Jan. 5th, his attainment of the age of seventy-five years of mortal experience, and the rounding out of a forty years' term of service on his part as a public advocate of the New Dispensation.

An account of this Testimonial Meeting was prepared for the present issue, but we have been forced, by lack of space, to defer its appearance to next week; (which is also true of several other articles of merit now on hand.)

The exercises occurred at Paine Memorial Hall, and took the form of congratulatory speeches by Dr. H. B. Storer (who also presided with his usual tact and skill during the evening), Mrs. J. T. Lillie, Miss Lucy Barnicoat and Dr. Paxson (of Philadelphia); singing of a high order of merit was furnished by Mr. J. T. Lillie.

Bro. Chase appropriately responded to the good wishes expressed, and declared himself ready to continue without flinching the work to which he had devoted so many years of his life-pilgrimage. We wish this Spiritualistic veteran the fullest measure of success in the days that are to come.

Our Free Spiritual Circle.

At the resumption of the Free Circle in September last it was decided by our regular spirit-band to employ their medium—Miss M. T. Shelhamer—upon our public platform but one day of each week; and we were advised, if possible, to secure the services of that well-known trance medium, J. W. Fletcher, for a series of Thursday afternoon séances at this office. We did so, with results mutually pleasant to ourselves and the general public, as attested by the verifications of spirit messages given through Mr. Fletcher's mediumship during the last three months, and the congratulatory words we have received from friends and strangers in reference to this work.

The time for which Mr. F. was engaged at our office having nearly expired, he will soon retire, bearing the good-will and best wishes of all associated with us in the good work.

Mr. Fletcher will continue to hold Thursday afternoon circles upon our platform during the present month; after which we shall—for a time at least—suspend the second weekly public séance, and hold only the regular Tuesday afternoon free-meeting under the auspices of Miss Shelhamer and her guides.

☞ "Will 1888 be a year of war?" queries the Philadelphia Inquirer, and it makes in this connection the following interesting chronological statement:

"The present year is the fifth year of modern times in which the aggregate of the figures is twenty-five, and there will be but five more years in which such a combination is possible prior to the year 2599. Probably but few have ever heard of the old prophecy, which runs as follows:

'In every future year of our Lord,
When the sum of the figures is twenty-five,
Some war-like kingdom will draw the sword,
But peaceful nations in peace shall thrive.'

Students of modern history will readily recall how faithfully this prophecy has been fulfilled in the four previous years to which it applied.

In 1699 Russia, Denmark and Poland formed the coalition against Sweden which inaugurated the great war that ended in the disastrous defeat of Charles XII. at Pultowa.

The year 1789 will ever be memorable on account of the breaking out of the French Revolution.

1798 witnessed the campaign of Bonaparte in Egypt and the formation of the second European coalition against France.

In 1879 war broke out between England and Afghanistan, followed by the invasion of the latter country by British troops.

In what manner the prediction is to be verified in 1888 remains yet to be seen, but the present condition of Europe seems to promise an abundant fulfillment of the prophecy."

☞ In THE BANNER of last week an account was given of a séance held in connection with the presentation of a testimonial to Mrs. A. M. Cowan. The success of an effort to bring together as many of the friends of that lady as could conveniently be present was largely due to Dr. W. F. Whitney of this city. In the early part of the séance, it is said Dr. W.'s spirit-daughter, Ethel, came to him, saying that, as a token of her appreciation of his efforts in behalf of Mrs. Cowan, she had that afternoon given him a message through the instrumentality of J. W. Fletcher, at the Banner of Light Free Circle. Inquiry at this office the next morning substantiated the truth of her statement. The message referred to will be found on the sixth page of the present issue.

BANNER CORRESPONDENCE.—Patrons of THE BANNER should be sure to peruse the contents of our "Correspondence" department as given in the present number. A wide range of topics—including a relation of spiritual phenomena on the physical and mental planes, reports of Christmas and other meetings, the presentation of ideas regarding the needs of the Cause, testimony concerning materialization, etc., etc.—finds treatment by writers located at various points in New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

A Victory!

Chicago dispatches state that some months ago a certain doctor came to that city and commenced the practice of medicine. He advertised extensively as a specialist, when the State Board of Health interfered and revoked his certificate. He at once began an action against the Board in the Circuit Court. January 3d, Judge Waterman decided the case and declared the act of the State Board of Health unconstitutional. He said:

"The defendant had a perfectly constitutional right to advertise in the newspapers, and he cannot be deprived of it by any rule or regulation of the State Board of Health. Such an institution as the State Board of Health must not be allowed to exercise such a power in a free country, and its acts must in this case be declared unconstitutional."

The Banner of Light

☞ We are in receipt of many letters from different parts of the country filled with commendations in regard to the management of THE BANNER. Here is one from a distant friend, who, after presenting many queries in regard to spiritual matters—(which, by-the-way, will be answered by the spirit intelligences at our public circle,) concludes by saying, "You are giving us a splendid paper, and I think no one can read it without pleasure and profit."

☞ It gave us great pleasure last week to again greet our spiritualistic friend and efficient co-worker, Capt. Richard Holmes, President of the Berkeley Hall Temple Society, who has recently returned from a business tour in Canada.

Dr. James R. Nichols a Spiritualist.

In your notice of the late Dr. James R. Nichols, Mr. Editor, you state that he was known to be "an interested student of the Spiritual Philosophy." Having known and loved the man, I desire to bear testimony to that part of his character not generally understood.

When, several years ago, I received a copy of his admirable book, "Whence, What, Where?" I could not help reading between the lines the fact that, back and behind these words, there was no inconsiderable knowledge in spiritual matters, which for prudential reasons he thought best to withhold from the public. In my subsequent acquaintance with him I found that I had not been mistaken, and that this popular book was only a prelude to a more important work which he would have given to the world had his health and life here been spared him, in which the present aspect of Spiritualism would have been prominent.

Trained to scientific methods of thought, which led him to give due weight to whatever facts were presented for his consideration, he nevertheless possessed that genial nature which led him to approach the spiritual side of life with great delicacy.

As a member of the American Society for Psychical Research he was one of the first to point out the fact that the methods of investigation which they had adopted would be fatal to any just conclusions.

His failing health prevented his giving to the later phases of the spiritual phenomena that attention which he earnestly desired. He was always grateful for any assistance in this direction, as will be seen by the following extract from one of his many communications to me:

"I am now quite restored, and I feel that my great indebtedness to you should be again acknowledged. I have thought very much of the extraordinary occurrences at the séance last April. The experiences of that day were of great interest to me. I wish I could see more of the phenomena, and intend to soon. What I saw was so conclusive that all doubt was dispelled, and I have not for a single moment entertained distrust from that day."

The séance alluded to was a private one held under the mediumship of Miss Helen Berry, and was the most remarkable I have ever attended. Everything was arranged to the entire satisfaction of the parties present, and the intelligence controlling the manifestations, apparently appreciating the Doctor's lack of opportunity, crowded into that one sitting an amount of evidence which often requires years to obtain through the ordinary public séance.

I desire to bear testimony to the admirable qualities of the man, to his clear spiritual perceptions, and to express my regret that his poor health and sudden departure from this life prevented him from giving to the world the important work he had in contemplation.

A Pleasant Occasion.

In the early evening of Jan. 1st, Dr. J. A. Shelhamer, the well-known magnetic healer, and Miss Clara L. Blenus were united in marriage, at the residence of J. B. Hatch, Jr., 16 Everett Avenue, Dorchester, by Rev. Mr. Adams of that district. The affair was a very quiet and informal one, no guests being present but the nearest relatives of the bride and groom. Wednesday evening, Jan. 4th, however, was set apart for the newly married pair to receive their friends, on which occasion the spacious residence above mentioned, was brilliantly lighted and made to wear a festive appearance in honor of the event. During the evening a large number of guests were presented to the happy pair, and all united in wishing Dr. and Mrs. Shelhamer the utmost of happiness and prosperity in the new life they have entered upon.

The passing of congratulations and compliments, the partaking of refreshments, the review of the large and beautiful display of handsome presents, and the exchange of social pleasantries between the friends assembled, served to render the event a most delightful memory to all who participated.

The House at Hydesville.

We are in receipt of an excellent photograph of the house at Hydesville, N. Y., in which the modern manifestations of spirits, introductory to their occurrence in all parts of the world, first took place, and which for that reason will always be a point of deep historical interest, not only to Spiritualists but to all mankind in all coming time. The negative from which this picture is made was taken July 12th, 1887, by George N. Bigelow, Palmyra, N. Y., and is one of the finest specimens of photographic art we have ever seen. It is mounted on a card 12x10 inches, and should be in the possession of every one who realizes the momentousness of the event it signalizes.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE is an indispensable accompaniment of every opening spring season, to every one who would select and plant flower seeds that can be relied upon for a continuous harvest of beauty and fragrance throughout the year. With its 136 pages of engravings, colored lithographs and descriptions, the volume just issued exceeds, if possible, all that have preceded it in attractiveness, and can be had for a dime by addressing James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., a due bill for ten cents' worth of seeds being sent with each copy.

☞ Mr. C. E. Watkins will remain, he says, in Boston the present year. His office hours are 10 A. M. to 4 P. M.; locality, 109 Falmouth street. Visitors should take Huntington Avenue or Back Bay cars.

THE SOUL'S RECOMPENSE.

Many a seed is dropped upon the lawn
By little birdlings at the early morn;
But, taking root beneath the dewy green,
Sweet flowers of beauty often may be seen.

In human life grand seeds of truth are sown,
That bring us peace where discord once was known;
So that at last, when Nature calls us hence,
The Soul shall find its sweetest recompense.

"George" says "the dollar of our daddies," such as we have, is the coin of our Constitution; is the people's money; and in the West, the Northwest and the Southwest is preferred to gold or paper." "It is only bankers," he says, "and other manipulators of money, who have given temporarily a false value to gold, and who flourish on the falsities thus created, that affect to dislike silver. Let no honest man, whose sympathies are with the people, seek to ally himself with Shylocks, either of high or low degree, who outrage all the equities in their gambling schemes for selfish gain." That settles it. We shall not appeal to "George" again in re the 88-ct. dollar. If the depreciated silver dollar "is the coin of our Constitution," then Uncle Sam's constitution has consumption, and needs doctoring. Nuf sed.

St. John (the temperance candidate for the presidency) says tobacco is a filthy weed; Mr. Blaine (also a candidate for the presidency) says it is one of the necessaries of life; grocers quote it as a grocery stock; and a Massachusetts court has decided that it is a drug. The question seems to be a little mixed on this tobacco business, and the tariff folks will have to solve it.

A bill has been introduced in the United States Senate for a World's Exposition in 1892, which provides for a governmental board of twenty-one directors, and has in view a grand combination of all nationalities, together with provisions for permanent buildings in Washington, which shall perpetuate at least the representative exhibits, etc., of the "three Americas."

A good story is told that a freshman in one of our New England colleges, on being asked by his professor by whom and on what occasion the term "Eureka" was first used, replied, "By Demosthenes when he sat down on the pin for which he was hunting."

The meanest kind of a thief is said to be the one who steals under-apparel which is hung out to dry—that it is worse than stealing from a hen-roost. Both are bad enough; but the man who, in order to aggrandize himself, uses every means in his power to traduce his neighbor, is a far worse character than the petty thief.

The Independent Club that has been formed in this city to suppress slander embraces a good deal; but the important question arises, Will it prove a success? We hope so.

MORNING COMPLIMENTS.

A light little zephyr came flitting,
Just breaking the morning repose.
The rose made a bow to the lily,
The lily she bowed to the rose.

And then, in a soft little whisper,
As faint as the perfume that blows,
"You are brighter than I," said the lily;
"You are fairer than I," said the rose.

Washington's "weather prophet" was out in his "indications" for last Sunday, as his "report" read that for the twenty-four hours commencing Sunday at 7 A. M., Jan. 8th, in Massachusetts and other New England States we should have "colder, fair weather," etc.; whereas, at 8 o'clock on Sunday morning we had a nice little snowstorm which lasted several hours.

A couple of Fish were Swimming about a Wharf one day when a Man sat down on the Edge of the Planks and Dropped in his Hook and Line. "See that?" queried one of the Fish. "He thinks to Play us for Suckers with a bare Hook. He has no Bait on it." "My Son," responded the other, "he has no Idea of even getting a Bite. It is the Fish which men do n't Catch that they Lie about."—Detroit Free Press.

A correspondent writes: "I picked up a copy of THE BANNER of August 20th, 1887, and was delighted with its editorial on the 'Christian Science' (?) question. Of all the Jesuitical and miserable balderdash hurled into our camp, this C. S. and 'Metaphysical' twaddle is as dangerous and as destructive as anything could possibly be."

THE GREAT WINTER FAD.

The winter sports include a new
But Omnipresent pleasure;
And lively Boys, and maidens, too,
Happy memOries treasure
Of first toboGganning delights.
When down the Glassy shuteletes
They flashed like swAllows in their flights,
And showed their faNcy bootlets.
Long may this winter fuN remain
To please the country's milIions,
And each January come againN
Until we 've Grown

The Smith and Anthony Stove Co., of Boston, manufacturers of the Celebrated Hub Ranges, sent us a specimen of their really fine calendar for '88. It is in six sheets, each being a fac-simile of a delicate water-color drawing by Copeland, made especially for this purpose.

The brother of "Bright Eyes," Francis La Flesche, a full-blooded Omaha Indian, who has been in the U. S. Indian office since 1881, was recently promoted in professional standing by Acting Commissioner Upshur. La Flesche was educated at the mission school at an Indian agency in Nebraska, and was appointed by Secretary Kirkwood.

The venerable poet John G. Whittier received many handsome presents, besides a bushel-basket full of letters, on his eightieth birthday, Dec. 17th, 1887. Among the former were a balsam pillow embroidered with pine cones, from the grave of "H. H." in Colorado, the handiwork of an Indian girl, boxes of flowers, and a sofa-pillow made of a curtain that once belonged to Jean Armour, from Mr. and Mrs. Richard S. Spofford, of Newburyport.

In Boston four taxpayers contribute more than $50,000 to the treasury; twenty-three pay more than $20,000, and seventy-six pay more than $10,000.

NEW MUSIC.—We have received from the publishers, White, Smith & Co., 515 Washington street, Boston, the following: "Whip Snap Quadrille," by O. A. White; "Folio March," by Richard Goedeler.

A correspondent informs us that there has been organized in Cincinnati "The First New Spiritual Church," and that the following-named individuals have been elected as its officers for 1888, namely:

"Pastor, James A. Bliss; Assistant Pastor, Mrs. A. Riedel; Recording Secretary, Mr. A. Riedel; Financial Secretary, Martin Metzger; Treasurer, Mrs. Cora A. Bliss; Musical Director, C. S. Baldwin; Organist, Miss Lillian Baldwin; Sexton, Horace Baldwin; Trustees, Mrs. Kate M. Warden, Mrs. C. S. Baldwin, Mrs. H. S. Perrin, A. L. Staniford and Miss Mary Evers."

Now that these good people have "joined the church," and are to cultivate spiritual things, to the end that the unbelievers of Cincinnati may be induced to follow suit, and walk in the "straight and narrow path," we bid them Godspeed in this their new undertaking.

The great Lick telescope in California, which has just been placed in position, will bring the reflection of the moon within thirty miles of the earth, it is said.

Congressman Russell, of Massachusetts, was recently asked why he had introduced no bills in the House of Representatives. With a high appreciation of the nation's needs he said: "Because I think the principal duty of a legislator is not to introduce bills, but to prevent them from becoming laws. There are too many bills introduced anyway, and the man who refrains renders a service to the country." We hope the legislators at our State-house will bear this suggestion in mind, and nip in the bud any bills that may be presented by the Doctors' Monopoly Association, which the latter have been endeavoring for the past nine or ten years to get enacted, but which our law-makers in the past wisely repudiated.

JOSEF HOFMANN.

With gravest lips and innocent, sweet eyes,
And smile made pure by deep emotion's cast;
With childlike wisdom, more than worldly wise,
Thou bringest messages from out the past.

The mighty spirits of the sons of song
To thee reveal the tones they could not write
When fancies came in overwhelming throng;
Thou knowest them, oh! boy; thine is the light.

Two little hands, a child's imperfect hands,
Make new for us the dead dreams once again;
From dusk to dawn, through all the listening lands,
Those little hands are on the hearts of men.

The strongest friendships have been formed in mutual adversity, as iron is most strongly united by the fiercest flame.

The mystery of evil and consequent misery on the premises of an infinitely holy and infinitely kind being, who has also infinite power, we have on our hands for explanation; and until some theodicy, or something, has disposed of that, we may as well relegate lesser things to the relative obscurity in which they belong.—Boston Congregationalist.

The law of heredity explains "the mystery of evil."

DISCOVERY OF THE PENDULUM.—Galileo, the future great astronomer, though then only a young man, was in the cathedral of Pisa. One of the vergers had been supplying a lamp with oil, which hung from the roof, and left it swinging to and fro; this caught Galileo's attention, and carefully noting it, he observed that it vibrated in equal times, and first conceived the idea of applying it to the measurement of time. It cost him fifty years to complete his pendulum.

AN ARDENT SPIRITUALIST.—President Carnot is said to be an ardent Spiritualist and an excellent medium. A lady who claims to be well acquainted with M. Carnot's family declares this gentleman the most perfect embodiment of faith and good works she has ever known. "He is keenly analytical," she says, "brilliant, generous, to some absurdly conscientious, but with all these traits he is invariably as calm as a clock. Unlike almost every other Frenchman of my acquaintance he never appears to act from impulse. His unfaltering belief in the return of his dear ones may have developed this beautiful serenity."—Eleanor Kirke.

The Boston Congregational ministers ask: "How can the idle, cold and indifferent members of our church be aroused?" Pass the contribution box around. Then there will be a general movement on their part.

The American Society for Psychical Research has gathered some interesting statistics regarding the proportion of superstitious people to be found in a community possessing a fair amount of culture. It is found that one man in ten has a tendency to superstition, and that two women in ten are affected the same way. Judging by the comparative number of men and women in the church, we should have placed the proportion of superstitious women to superstitious men much higher.—The Truth Seeker, New York.

The Mormon question has begun to agitate the Canadians. There seems to be no business interest or political question on one side of the line between the two countries but is found on the other. The Canadian Parliament will consider this vexed matter at its coming session.

THE MOON AND POTATOES.—"In what quarter of the moon do you plant your potatoes?" asked one farmer of another. "I plant my potatoes in well manured and well plowed soil, and not in the moon at all, or any part of it," he replied.—Ex.

Miss H. had been brought to Nevada by her mother, with the hope of receiving from its atmosphere much-needed help for a serious pulmonary difficulty—which trouble, under the combined influences of change of climate and the power of spirit guides, has since disappeared.

A young man of integrity and mental ability, who desires to pass through a course of instruction at the Vitapathic College of Cincinnati, but who is without means to defray the current expenses therefor, would like pecuniary assistance in the shape of a loan in this direction. If any of our readers, who are able to do so, feel to aid the applicant in such a philanthropic work, and will send their full address to this office, we will place them in communication with the applicant.

LIBERAL LECTURES. By A. B. French. 12mo, paper, pp. 140, with portrait. [For sale at this office.]

Acceding to the wish of many who have been privileged to listen to the eloquent and forcible utterances of Mr. French on the public platform, and have strongly desired that those not thus favored might be supplied with the clear elucidation of the fundamental truths of Modern Spiritualism his lectures present, the author places, within reach of all, eight of them carefully revised by himself. Appended are abstracts of two addresses delivered on special occasions—one relating to "The Future of Spiritualism," the other to "The Emancipation Proclamation." Those who would cultivate a spiritual unfoldment, or assist others to so desirable an acquisition, cannot fail to realize that this book should be in their possession. In isolated localities, where it is next to impossible to have the services of a public speaker, the reading of one of these will serve a good purpose.

Children's Progressive Lyceum, Cleveland.

The lately elected officers of the Children's Progressive Lyceum for the current year were formally installed Sunday morning, Jan. 1st, Mr. Thomas Lees officiating in the absence of Acting Conductor C. G. Oyston. The ceremony was simple, yet highly interesting to all concerned. Mr. Lees outlined the utility of the Lyceum, the great difference between it and the Orthodox Sunday school, and defined the duties of each of the newly-chosen officers, presenting their respective badges of office, each signifying acceptance in a short but appropriate speech. The following are the officers for 1888:

Conductor, Richard Carleton; Guardian, Miss Nellie Ingersoll; Assistant-Guardian, Mrs. Rose Carleton; Secretary, E. W. Gaylord; Treasurer, Edward Lemmers; Musical Director, John W. Pae; Assistant-Musical Director, Albert Lemmers; Librarian, Arthur Derby; Assistant-Librarian, Dora Smith; Postmistress, Miss Rena Hatch; Assistant Postmistress, Miss Pearl Lees; Guards, Fred Derby, Albert Derby, George Duguay, Leonard Turner; Trustees, Thomas Lees, John Madden, Samuel Russell.

At the close of the ceremony the Conductor invited any one who had a word to say to the children to do so, whereupon Mr. Charles D. Everett, of Cleveland, and Dr. Williams, of Rochester, N. Y., responded with a few words of encouragement to the children and the new officers. The exercises closed with a recitation by Miss Lillie Root.

Chicago, Ill.

On Sunday, Jan. 1st, the members of the First Organized Society of Spiritualists and Mediums, of the South Side, at the close of the afternoon exercises convened for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year—when the following were chosen:

President, Dr. J. H. Warn; Vice-President, Mrs. Fanny Mahan; Treasurer, W. S. King; Secretary, Edwin Jones.

Haverhill and Bradford.—The lectures and platform tests given in Brittan Hall last Sunday by Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball, of Lawrence, were highly interesting and instructive, carrying with them internal evidence that they were directed by an outside and invisible controlling intelligence. The afternoon theme was the departure of the old year, and the entrance upon the new, combined with cheering views to those whose footsteps are hastening toward the other shore. Following the lecture were large numbers of descriptive tests, which were listened to with unusual interest.

In the evening the brief lecture was descriptive of what true Spiritualism is, and urging the importance of a thorough education in its essential principles, beginning with children. Following the lecture a large number of tests were given of spirits purporting to come from many localities, a large number of whom were recognized by persons in the audience.——Next Sunday, the platform will be occupied by Mrs. Susie Willis Fletcher, of Boston. E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—The First Spiritualist Society of this city has been fed spiritually the past few months by some of the best talent on the spiritual platform in this country, and the audiences have gradually grown because of the good thought that has been placed before them, thus demonstrating the fact that the best is always the cheapest. For the three remaining Sundays of the present month we are to have the pleasure of listening to the inspired words that may fall from the lips of Miss Jennie B. Hagan. Miss Hagan always has good audiences in this city. Mrs. E. Cutler occupied our platform Sunday, Jan. 8th, at 2 and 7 o'clock P. M.
W. W. CURRIER.

Norwich, Conn.—On New Year's day, despite the storm, a goodly number assembled to hear J. Wm. Fletcher, and listened attentively to two very interesting lectures and the closing test-séance. The 8th inst. the hall was well filled. The afternoon address was given by Spirit Edward S. Wheeler, relative to his experiences in spirit-life. The evening address was founded upon subjects presented by the audience, followed by the usual test-séance. Many descriptions were given and recognized. Mr. Fletcher will be with us again Sunday, April 1st, and deliver the anniversary address.——Jan. 15th and 22d, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes will occupy our platform.
MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Onset Bay.—The Ladies' Industrial Union of Onset met Jan. 4th at the residence of Mrs. King for the purpose of choosing officers for the ensuing year, with the following result: President, Susan S. King; Vice President, Margaret L. Union; Secretary, Gustie F. Howe; Treasurer, Catherine L. Woodward; Directors, Catherine L. Woodward, Amanda F. Butterfield, Catherine Reynolds, Ellen M. McIntire.
GUSTIE F. HOWE, Sec'y.

HEALING AT A DISTANCE.—A. S. Hayward, Magnetic Physician, 443 Shawmut Avenue, Boston, will for the next fifteen days, on receipt of return postage, name and full address, send a half-package of his vital magnetized paper to the sick who are unable to pay for it.

Boston, Jan. 14th.

Lawrence, Mass.—Miss M. T. Shelhamer delivered a deep and stirring address on the afternoon of Jan. 8th at Pythian Hall, and in the evening answered questions for the audience in a clear and satisfactory manner, giving much light upon each. To listen to her inspiration is truly a feast for the Spiritualist, and affords a source of thought for the investigator. She is a lady of much experience, who must be seen and heard to be appreciated.——Next Sunday our local test medium, Mr. B. F. Smith, will occupy the platform.
F. S. EASTMAN.

New Bedford, Mass.—Prof. W. F. Peck gave two very interesting and instructive lectures Sunday, Jan. 8th. His subjects were "The Science of Immortality," and "The Philosophy of Spirit Manifestations," which were treated in a very clear and interesting manner. At the close of his discourses Mr. Peck received many warm congratulations from members of the audience. He is re-engaged to speak for the Society on the 29th of January.

Providence, R. I.—The Spiritualist Aid Society met at Slade Building, Room 1, Thursday evening. Full meeting. Mrs. Waterman, President, being absent in New York, Mrs. Osborn, Vice-President, filled the chair very efficiently. Remarks by Mrs. Strait and Dr. Stoddard, followed by an interesting test séance.
M. A. SCANNELL, Cor. Sec'y.

Attleboro, Mass.—Mrs. Benj. F. Boomer, in a letter the remainder of which we shall print next week, says that on "Sunday, Jan. 8th, Mrs. Mary L. French, of Townsend Harbor, Mass., spoke and gave tests for us. Next Sunday Miss M. T. Shelhamer, of Boston, will be our speaker."

Many men claim to be firm in their principles when really they are only obstinate in their prejudices.

Warren Chase to his Friends.

As previously announced, I have closed my forty years' public labor in the cause of spirit life and intercourse with my seventy-five years of life on earth, and have my last book—containing a sketch of those years of labor as a sequel to my autobiography, the Life Line of the Lone One, also a variety of other matter—nearly completed, and which I wish to bring out through the office of Colby & Rich, Publishers, before I leave for the West the first of March.

As I have not saved money enough from these forty years of labor to publish this book—which will be a work of about three hundred pages or more—all who desire copies can aid me by sending one dollar, and ten cents for postage, directed to me at the BANNER OF LIGHT office, Boston, before Feb. 26th, with full address of the sender, to whom one copy for each like sum received will be mailed as soon as the work is out of the binder's hands, whatever may be the price fixed upon it hereafter, which cannot be less, and is likely to be more than the amount named.

The book will contain an excellent photograph frontispiece, and a full chapter of select poems, some never before published, the ninth and last one of which will tell what I have learned about the spirit-world by forty years' communion with it. Yours truly, WARREN CHASE.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

Message Department.

Public Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and THURSDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss M. T. SHELHAMER will occupy the platform for the purpose of answering such questions as may be brought up for the consideration of the Controlling Intelligence.

On Thursday afternoon, JOHN WILLIAM FLETCHER, under the influence of his guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit-messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock, and services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no egress until the conclusion of the séance, except in case of absolute necessity. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits at the Tuesday séances for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who may recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of the BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case, but to LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

Miss M. T. Shelhamer.

Report of Public Séance held Dec. 20th, 1887.

Spirit Invocation.

With tongues that voice the sentiments of our hearts, oh! our Father God, we would praise thee more and more, as there opens before us a consciousness of thy great love and tender protection. Our souls expand with gratitude as we behold on every hand the manifestations of thy law, the evidences of thy wisdom; and as gratitude wells forth from our lips, may it ascend to thee in sweetness, as the aroma of the flowers ascends to gratify and bless those it may reach. May the desire be born in our souls to grow in sympathy and tender feeling toward our fellow-beings, to recognize each one and desire to bless all in helpful ways. We ask thy benediction to rest upon all, wherever they may be, in the palace or in the hovel. May each one of thy human children feel thy protection and benediction of love, and, in knowing whence it comes, look up to thee for further strength and light and truth from day to day. Amen.

Questions and Answers.

CONTROLLING SPIRIT.—You may now present your questions, Mr. Chairman.

QUES.—[By Dr. Boatman.] Is there a distinctive difference between soul and spirit?

ANS.—In our judgment, yes. The soul is the vital principle of life, an offshoot from the great fount and source of all existence; that which contains within itself the intelligence which operates throughout nature and throughout humanity, and manifests itself in all the conscious activity of life.

The soul, then, being the essential or vital principle of existence, must have an instrumentality through which it operates and expresses its power; this instrumentality we term the spirit, being not only an instrument, but a tabernacle for the vital principle—the soul. The vital principle is not contained within any special portion of the spiritual instrument, but it governs and controls the spirit, permeating its every part, and one is necessary to the other; the spirit dependent upon the life-principle, or soul-power, for the manifestation of its intelligence and activity, and the soul, or vital power, depending upon the spirit for a machine or instrument by and through which it may work its perfect results in the life of humanity.

Q.—Should Jesus and Christ be used as synonymous, or conveying the same meaning?

A.—No; Jesus being a name or appellation, and Christ signifying a principle, we should not connect the two together, as we do the Christian name and the surname of a man, because they are not so related to each other. It was in earlier ages the proper custom to speak of the Nazarene as Jesus the Christ, or Jesus the messenger, or message-bearer, the light-bringer to the world. Jesus the Nazarene was known to his followers as the Messiah, he who brings a message of light and peace to humanity, the Christ, the principle of love and good will, an apostle of peace to earth; therefore when we say Jesus Christ, we do not altogether mean the man, as we would mean an individual in saying John Brown or Peter Jones; but we mean the man, and also the apostle, the teacher, the light-bringer, who has come forth to give spiritual instruction and enlightenment, to bear the principle of peace and of good will.

Q.—[By William Osgood.] We read in the gospel of St. John, xx:19, that Jesus entered the room where the disciples were gathered, "the doors being shut." Does that fact prove that Jesus was divested of his natural or earthly body?

A.—It seems so; although in the developments of the phenomenal portion of Modern Spiritualism, history records in this present generation that mediums have been taken from one locality and transported, so the record says, to a distant locality, even taken through apparently "closed doors" or sealed apartments. If this be true, and careful investigators and scientific minds declare that such has been their observation, then we may not disbelieve that in the times of Jesus it was possible for such a spiritualized medium as he must have been to be transported in a like manner from one place to another, even while he was invested with a mortal form. But so far as we understand anything of this occurrence from the records that have been preserved in the spiritual life, we are taught that the Nazarene, at the time the question speaks of, was not clothed upon as a body of flesh, but it was a distinctively spiritual manifestation; the spirit itself was divested of its outside body of flesh, and was powerful enough to consciously and tangibly manifest itself to those before whom he appeared.

Q.—[By M. M. T.] Revelations, chapter eleven, verse three: "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth." Who are the "two witnesses" referred to?

A.—We consider this but a very imperfect rendition of the true ideas and their significance, which the apostle, or rather the spiritual intelligences using the apostle, desired to convey to humanity. Great truths were taught in those earlier days through signs and symbols and figures of speech, and at that time, in the chapter of Revelations, it was intended to teach mankind concerning itself and its power; and the two mentioned who should be endowed with the gift of prophecy, that of creating a new earth and giving to the world activity of consciousness, intellect and manly grandeur—for this is what we read between the lines—the positive and the negative principles of existence, the male and the female, each being endowed with great productive power, not only in the physical but in the mental and spiritual departments of their natures; that through great suffering they should gain experience with the laws of life, the power and force of the universe—and through this long extended period of suffering mankind would have to undergo, and which might be likened to a season spent in sackcloth, the entire race would become informed concerning itself, and thus gain in power and intelligence until it would be able to accomplish all things and overcome every difficulty in life.

Q.—[By F. W. D.] Does planetary influence, in accordance with the teachings of astrology, affect our destiny in the life beyond?

A.—Many believe that planetary influence, according to astrology, has a decided effect upon human life here on earth. If we grant that this is so, then we must believe that this planetary influence works out and reaches into the spiritual department of man's existence, inasmuch as whatever directly affects the individual on earth casts a reflection upon his spiritual nature and extends with him into the other life. We are informed by spirit-teachers that the career of a man on earth has a direct influence upon his spiritual happiness, or restlessness, after he has passed from the body. If planetary influence, or the movements of the planets, have had such an effect upon an individual's life as to largely determine his career and destiny, then that influence must go with him, to an extent at least, in its results, to the other world, as we know that his career, his work, his actions on earth, certainly do have an effect upon his existence in the spirit-world.

There are spirits who do not recognize any extended truth in the law which governs astrology, but yet we believe that there is a truth in this planetary movement and system of study which belongs to the department of science. The movement of the planets and their conjunction with the earth holds an influence, to an extent, over human life. But is this planetary influence so profound and so far-reaching as to entirely govern human existence, independent of other laws, spiritual and physical? A man may be affected when a certain planet is in close conjunction with this earth, and may receive from it such magnetic forces as may stimulate his life and activities; or if the planet be so far withdrawn from conjunction with the earth as to have its magnetism and influence feebly felt, such a life may possibly be depleted of vital force, and in time become weakened in the physical and even in the mental department of its being; but we do not believe that an individual life is entirely governed by the movements of a planet, for we recognize the fact that there are higher laws than those of planetary existence, which may supersede and govern those of which we speak, and under which the individual life may come, to such an extent as to be able, within itself, to control adverse conditions and rise above them.

So far as these planetary influences may extend to the individual life in the spirit-world, one may perhaps be affected by them for a time, but as he comes under the higher spiritual laws, not pertaining entirely to the physical life and the physical universe, he may so gain in power, in knowledge and information, and in the exercise of his own indomitable will, as to subject all lower influences to himself and rise entirely above them.

Q.—[By Mrs. J. L. K. Haner, Delta, Mich.] Granting that pre-natal conditions determine the natural character of individuals, how may the vastly unlike natures of twins be accounted for?

A.—It may be that two children who are born at the same time into the same family circle are unlike, and yet they may both come under the laws spoken of by the questioner. Remember that there is not one set alone of pre-natal conditions or influences which can govern human life, but that these ramify in various directions and departments, consequently one of the two children may be swayed or influenced by one certain line of pre-natal conditions, and another may not be thus affected; the second may, however, come under the line of another set of influences or conditions, belonging not only to the life-sphere of the parents, but extending far back into generations past, and one may exercise and exhibit certain characteristics and tendencies of disposition and nature entirely opposite to those of its twin.

Remember that the twins are not operated upon by the same spirit; the two bodies have spirits of their own, intelligent life-principles, which belong to themselves. One of these spirits may perhaps have been in advance of the other, may have been more experienced, progressive, and come under certain laws which the other has not yet reached, and may thus develop and exhibit signs of stronger character and of greater mental faculty than his associate. The other spirit may be weaker in experience, in mental unfoldment, in all that goes to make up a strongly marked individual, and may not understand how best to take control of and operate upon its mortal organism, therefore the two, although they are brothers, born at the same time and linked together by the strongest ties, and exhibiting diverse characteristics and tendencies, yet the law of heredity is true to itself, and both of these children will in some degree manifest natural traits and abilities which have been gathered either from the parent-stock direct, or from ancestors in the past; one may put forth signs and tendencies a remote ancestor possessed, which have not appeared in the offspring from the life of that ancestor to the present time.

It may be thought strange that the child should exhibit these tendencies, but yet when we consider that the law is in operation, that there is a transmission of force, spiritual and intellectual, as well as of physical life, from one generation to another, operative through some and quiescent in others, we may not marvel at this exhibition. The other child may not possess or exhibit these characteristics, and yet he may display other tendencies, which have been known to exist in another branch, or upon another side of the family tree, and you wonder because the two children differ so much from each other, yet both are controlled and acted upon by natural law, both in the spiritual development of this law, upon the spirit side, operating upon the spirits which inhabit these physical forms, and upon the material side, operating through the physical forces of life in that development which is known to the world as heredity.

Q.—[By the same.] How can we put into exercise the internal sense of spiritual perception or clairvoyance?

A.—Much depends upon one's surroundings and associations. It may be that associates are not supplying that assistance, magnetically and physically, which is required for the development and exercise of that faculty. But perhaps the associates are such as to make a draft upon his magnetic life, and he imparts to them, unconsciously to himself or to his friends, such relays of power and strength as are necessary to the best outgrowth and unfoldment of his spiritual perceptions; in such cases he will perhaps never be able to develop that faculty which belongs to him, because of the inroads made upon his vital force by those whom he approaches.

The physical conditions of his own life may act as a barrier between the soul-sight and the outer world; if this be so, then he cannot develop spiritual perception until he makes a change in his living. Possibly he will enter another atmosphere from that in which he dwells. We have found persons dwelling upon a lowland coast who could not feel within themselves any symptoms of mediumship or of spiritual power; circumstances arose which necessitated their departure to a high altitude, and there, amid the mountain scenery, in the refined atmosphere, they found themselves developing clairvoyance, and also clairaudience, thus showing that the perceptions of their spirits were being developed in double form. And vice versa, we have known of parties living at a high altitude who could not develop any form of mediumship; that they have taken a journey and entered the atmosphere by the ocean side, and there, breathing the strong fresh breezes, they have found their inner life quickened and their spiritual perceptions unfolding, until they suddenly discovered that they were mediums, and enabled to hold conscious communication with and gain a clear insight into the spiritual world; therefore one general law does not pertain to all cases; much depends upon the constitution, life-surroundings and habits of the individual; that which may be favorable for the development of one may be adverse to that of another; only experiment in each case will define just what is best in the individual case. Yet it is wise for each one who desires the unfoldment of spiritual perception to live as near as possible in harmony with the laws of health and with the laws of good feeling—we mean health of body and good feeling of spirit toward mankind. If one pays strict attention to the hygienic rules of nature, partakes sparingly of wholesome food, keeps regular hours, takes active exercise daily, especially in the open air, expands his lungs in the sunshine, makes a free use of water which nature has given him, then he will live in accordance with natural law. If he seeks to live in harmony with his neighbors and friends, to exercise a spirit of good-will toward all, then his own interior nature will develop a state of health and comfort which will assimilate with the health of the body, and perhaps before he is aware he will find his spiritual perceptions unfolding, his intuitive faculties awakening, and will almost unconsciously sense the reason and the source of things, and there will come to him a spiritual illumination that will be of great advantage to his soul. In addition to this, he may possibly unfold the clairvoyant sight so as to behold the spirits of departed friends and their abiding places, and come into conscious communication with those who have passed on before.

David Leighton.

The good man who has just been speaking to you, Mr. Chairman, invited me to step in and say a word. I feel that I have pressed hard upon him, for I was anxious to hear all that he had to say. I am trying to learn the laws that govern communication between mortals and spirits, and I take every opportunity of gaining such information.

You may think it singular that I should come to such a place on earth to learn these things, and ask if we have no schools of information on the spirit-side. Yes, we have, many of them, and there are a great number of informed spirits who take great pleasure in telling us these things and in guiding those who are unfamiliar with them in paths of communication between the two worlds; but to come to such a place as this to listen and to watch proceedings, one gets into a school of practical experience; it is like the object-teaching you give in the Kindergarten system to the little child, which takes hold of his life.

So I was listening, and I approached very close to the good man here; but he very kindly overlooked my trespassing and invited me to enter. This was what I did not expect, but I have been anxious to send a word to my friends for a long, long period of time. I will not dare to say how long it is since I first became aware of the ability of spirits to manifest to their friends on earth, but since that date I have been watching for an opportunity and trying to find an avenue by which I could reach my friends.

First I wish to send them my greetings and earnest love. I have not forgotten them, though lacking the power of showing my remembrance; it has been with me for a long time, and I am thankful to just say these few words.

When I entered the other life I did not at first understand my condition; it seemed to me as though I was still in the body, and had figures, rules and numbers in my head which I wished to express in speech and writing; they crowded upon me, and it seemed to me that I must find an opportunity of giving them expression.

Well, you will understand, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, that I was engaged with these things when in the body, and I was taken ill while pursuing my labors. The work was a very intricate one that demanded my attention, and I spent a great deal of time over it when I should have been resting on my bed; so illness came; the nervous system seemed to be prostrated, and in a little while the brain itself refused to act as it had been accustomed to. Under the pressure I passed out of the body. I did not realize fully my condition while ill, and did not realize fully my situation when, divested of mortal form, these things recurred to me, and I tried to find a way to arrange them, and settle up those affairs that pressed upon me. After a while this condition passed away, but I did not, even then, fully realize myself to be a spirit; first, because I had a body resembling the one I formerly occupied; secondly, because I was surrounded by familiar faces and localities that did not seem strange to me, and although I thought that all things had been a little changed, I couldn't fully realize that I myself was the one who had been changed.

I must also say that I did not believe in Spiritualism. I did not have a clear idea of the future life. I often attended church, and listened to the teachings of my pastor. Sometimes they satisfied me, and seemed to be what I needed; at other times I felt a want, as though there was not a real, vital soul in those teachings, that I desired; but, such as it was, I received it.

When I found myself in the spirit-world, and began to listen to what my friends were saying, that, so far as the mortal went, I was dead, I could not at first accept the truth. So, you see, I did not, in the beginning, know of this method of communication nor seek for it. But it came to me, and for a long while I have been trying to come to my friends with a word of truth, and ask them to search into this Spiritualism and try to gain the light which is necessary for their guidance, if they would understand life as it is here and in the spirit-world. I would like to communicate with them in private, now that I have spoken here in public. I think I could do so again, through some instrument, if my friends would find one for me. I have many things I should be pleased to say in a private way.

My name is David Leighton. My friends are in Boston. I have felt at home in this city, and I hope I shall not be rejected and denied entrance now that I come from the spirit-world.

Claribel.

There is one near to me who reads your paper, and who is far away from Boston, but who, I think, will be pleased to receive a few words from this place; indeed, I have been mentally requested to come—that was long ago—but I could not gain the power to manifest as I wished. I hope, however, the interest and the desire for my coming has not ceased, because this is my first opportunity.

I bring a spray of white flowers, as an offering of love and tender fragrance from my spirit-home to my friend; I believe its perfume will be sensed and understood as a message of peace to the one for whom it is intended. I have seen the trials and even instances of opposition exercised toward that friend, and I have sympathized and felt sad also, but I can rejoice now, because I see light is coming in, and making its way, and after a while it will be felt in its warmth and radiance, so that opposition will flee away, and difficulties be smoothed in the path of the one I love. I know my words will be understood, and your Spirit President has kindly assisted me to speak.

I cannot give my full name, because it would only awaken antagonism in the hearts of those who are nearest to my friend; but I shall be understood if I bring the name by which I am known when coming from the spirit-life to bring my influence of peace or spiritual healing, when needed. If you will simply call me Claribel, I shall be very grateful to you.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Dec. 22d, 1887.

Spirit of Light.

There are few who are engaged in carrying forward the important work of the world who understand to what degree they are influenced and guided by those unseen by mortal eyes, who are around about them. Some labor on blindly, feeling an impulse that something must be done, and strive to accomplish the desired result. Others, who analyze the conditions of their own minds more clearly, perceive that there is an interblending of power with their own impulses, and are able to separate the one from the other, as they journey along the way, waiting for time and opportunity to reveal the battle-field upon which the war is to be waged, and these are by far the most intelligent workers, for strength does not consist in numbers alone, but in being able to apply all the forces at one's command to their highest and best uses. A man with large power, physically and mentally, may have so misdirected the use of that power as in the end to have accomplished nothing. Another, possessed with only a moderate amount of ability, but marked with great determination, husbanding his forces and understanding their use, may, in the end, accomplish a great victory for the world and for the truth.

It is often said that knowledge is power, and we are inclined to think that the statement is true only so far as a man fully grasps the application of that knowledge. The mere possession of knowledge of any kind does not necessarily involve a great power. Some of the men in the world who have been the most highly educated have made the greatest failures, because they did not know how to use the power of which they were possessed. Knowledge to them was nothing, because a superior knowledge, a rightful application, was not vouchsafed them, and although possessed of great and rare jewels there was no setting to place them in, therefore their value became almost naught.

In the long ago, of which poets sing and to which philosophers are wont to refer, knowledge was not as common as it is now; there were a few, however, who became the votaries of knowledge, who devoted the strength and power of their lives to learning all that they could, and, consequently, such lives seemed to rise and shine like so many stars in the heavens, and in looking back over the past, it seems even now illuminated by the rays of the strong light that were emitted by them.

The difference between that time and the present is this: the knowledge then was given to the few; the effort now is to give it to the many; and while we have not the few that rise and shine with such strength and power, we have a world full of intelligent men and women, who are all reaching after the heights, although they may not as yet have attained unto them.

And what I say of knowledge, so far as material things are concerned, I would connect with the occult forces of the world; for in that long ago men were wise as regards spiritual things; they understood the forces and powers of their own natures, and how to use them. What is called to-day Modern Spiritualism, the possession of certain occult and mysterious powers at the present moment, was known to a greater degree, to a few, in that long ago; they exercised these powers more freely among themselves than you are able to exercise them now; and for this reason: nothing was called a sacrifice then that led to a higher truth; worldly things, influence and power, and the applause of the world, were all as nothing before the light of the truth or the power for good that they might possess.

The effort of some spirits in the present time is to bring that knowledge back to this day; and there are men and women gathered together, inspired by the desire to unroll the scroll of knowledge and allow their eyes to read what was written upon it by great and wise minds. When we shall work for the truth's sake; when all the world shall understand that it is impossible to serve two masters at the same time; when the words of the teacher: "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven," which is simply the realm of the spirit, are heeded, then the earthly influence, the selfishness and the narrow-mindedness that so mark us at every turn, will be entirely overcome, conquered and swept away.

But we must remember that all workers, of whatever degree, are important in the vineyard. There can be no turning aside to the right or the left; no looking askance at any man or woman in whose hands the angel-world place the truth. If any one of high or low degree is touched by the spark from off the altar, then be assured that there is something in them worthy of thought, although for the moment you may fail to perceive it. The hand of the true worker is extended to all; the hand of the earnest seeker for truth reaches down to gather up a single shining pearl, because not one can be lost, all are necessary.

My words, perchance, will have little meaning to many mortals, for I am one who has been drawn from the spirit-life out of the past which is almost forgotten by men, and I am mingling with certain ones on the earth who are seeking to solve this problem of past and future existence, and desiring to speak through a channel that is not and cannot be affected, at the moment, by any personal feeling whatever. We need to put all the elements into the crucible, and after they have mingled together then out of all these elements a high and noble purpose will arise. Yes, all must be put into the crucible. No matter how low down the earth may seem beneath you, out of it the fairest flowers will come; and so, out of natures that seemingly are lost to all the influences that you can bring, some sweet and beautiful flower may grow and bloom.

To those who are engaged in the work with me, I urge them to turn neither to the right nor to the left, but go on. The year has been marked with some disappointments, but the year that is coming, if you heed well my words, will be marked with the accomplishment of the purpose for which you have long been waiting. Take my blessing, and know that I hold in my hands laws and lessons that I will give mortals when the time comes; and believe me, now as then, Spirit of Light.

Rebecca Bartlett.

I should like to send a message to my daughter, Priscilla S. Bartlett, of Plymouth, Mass. My dear child, I know how much you miss me at home, for scarcely a day passes that I do not know that you are thinking of me. I can sense it. You were all that a daughter could be to me—faithful, trusting and kind. You have been a faithful daughter and friend to your old father, and heaven will bless you for what you have done. He misses me, too, more than words can tell. He sometimes says he has wished that we might have gone together. It would have been pleasant if it could have been so, for our lives had flowed on so long together, and we had so grown into each other's hearts, that it was hard to part with him, even in the outward sense. But we did not understand this thing when I was here, but I understand it now much better, because I can see face to face, where then I only saw through a glass darkly.

The visit you made a little while ago has helped me about coming to-day, and I thank you for it.

I know that you will see these words. I want to send my love to both of you, and the warmest hopes for a happy Christmas. It seems to me as if I had always been here, and that both of you were like the memories of my childhood, belonging to another life. We shall meet soon, and until then God bless you both, and keep you, is the prayer of your mother, Rebecca Bartlett.

Andrew Crum.

Do you ever have anybody from Maine? [Yes.] Well, I am from Maine, and Westbrook is where I hail from. My name is Andrew Crum. My son Charles is as good a boy as ever lived, and I want to send word to him that his mother and I are here to-day—but most always we're with him. It was a sort of nip and tuck between Caroline and I as to who should come, but I thought I'd come and do the talking. Not that I am given to talking much—generally the women folks do the most of that—but somehow I felt as if I'd know it was said straight if I said it.

Tell Charlie he will be prospered in his undertakings, but he'd better stay where he is, for rolling stones never gather much moss, and to keep right on just the way he is—to be satisfied and not worry. Just you say that Amanda is here, and she sends her love to all the friends. Well, I guess that's all I've got to say.

Ethel Whitney.

Dear father and mother, I lift the curtain once more and stand where I am able to breathe out my love and my blessing upon you. You know that you have your child still; you know that in the world above the noise of this one I live, and from time to time can come to you both and take your hands in mine and make you know that your Ethel lives in the bright world of spirit.

Oh! I can see you many, many times, and I am watching over you, dear papa, looking into your heart, perceiving how you watch the hours until you can go where I can come to you again, and when you go away how you treasure every word I speak, and how you think about it and dream about it—and then wait to see me again. I knew when you said to me, only a little while ago, "I wish you would go up there and send a message that can be printed." Why, of course I'd come; and here I am, to wish you and mamma a bright and merry Christmas, and to tell you that I am too old now to hang up my stocking for you to put gifts and presents in; that is n't needed, for I can look into your hearts; I realize every memory that you have of me; I keep them all, and they are blooming into flowers, and I weave them into a bright wreath and bring them to you as my offering.

Yes, father and mother, I am with you, I love you, I meet you wherever I can, and I am happy as you are happy; and the more peaceful everything is at home, the nearer we are together and the smoother everything flows on and the happier I am. I wear the ring as a token of my presence. Bless you, always. Ethel Whitney, to her father, Dr. Whitney.

Robert Sherman.

I am very glad to see that the good work goes on in spite of all the opposition that it meets with in my native place. I have seen the time when it seemed as if the water was at a pretty low ebb; there was n't much chance of doing anything, for people were so confoundedly bigoted they could n't see a hole through a ladder when there was a lantern burning the other side. It's a curious thing to me that people can't see that two times two make four in theology and religion just the way they do in everything else, but they can't. Well, they won't, that's the reason why they can't.

I was fortunate enough to have some valuable experiences before I came away, so that I was not a stranger in a strange land by any means. A good many friends were here before me, and they gave me a welcome that made me feel I had got home. We sat down and talked it all over—Brother Robinson and Horton and the whole of us—we talked about how things used to be and how they are now, and wondered how it is possible that when people want to know the truth, and the truth is at their elbow, they won't know it. Of course I've seen some friends since I have been up here that died in their faith in Jesus, and they've been looking around trying to find their Jesus ever since. They would n't believe what I told them nor what anybody else told them; they said it was all a delusion and a snare, and they was n't going to be caught; so they're waiting, and I guess they will take it out in waiting. The rest of us have gone along, trying to learn what we could and help all those that we could.

I see the good friends have started the meetings again. I hope they will keep them going—keep the fire burning—for that's what is needed.

William Balch is here with me, and he says: "Send my remembrances to the friends at home"; and I want to send my love to all the friends down there, for when they meet together in the business meetings and in the Sunday meetings we're all there.

My name is Robert Sherman, of Newburyport, Mass.

Winona

Spoke for the following spirits:

Charles Gardner.

A gentleman here gives the name of Charles Gardner, and he wants to send his love to his friends in Portsmouth, N. H. He says that nothing could have been done to arrest his disease, which was a very serious trouble with the lungs; it could not have been alleviated—all was done that could be. He adds, "I have met Father Bartlett, and other old workers. The friends at home think it strange that I have not made even a sound to let them know that I have waked up, so I take this means to do it."

Robert Byrnes.

A little boy puts his hand on his throat as he comes here. He seems to have suffered a great deal of pain when he went away. He was about seven years of age. He gives me the name of Robert Byrnes. He had diphtheria. He sends word to his mother that he has grown up to be a man now, it is so long since he went away, for she feels sad when she thinks about him. He says: "I am with my brother Charlie a good deal, although he don't know much about Spiritualism, or care much about it; but he is a good boy, and I love him much; and give my love to gran'ma, too, because I think as much of her almost as I do of anybody; and tell mother that when she's going round from one place to the other, and never staying long at a time in any one place, she is n't alone, I travel along with her, and guard her from accident, and impress her many times, and I wish that she would some day sit down alone for a little while by herself, and I will try to come to her nearer than I have before." While I am speaking this, an Indian, that stands beside this child, gives me the name of Scio.

Perley.

A spirit-boy gives me the name of Perley, and says: "Tell Auntie Sprague that I know every single thing that she does, and that she need n't think she can hide anything from me. I have made my papa send something to her that nobody knows anything about, and it will tickle you, Auntie Sprague, almost to death. You won't die, though, not just yet; you aint a coming up here for quite a while; you've got to have another summer down at the beach before you come, and perhaps more than that. I want to send my love to you, because you keep a place always for me. I want you to know I've got the cat all right, and nothing frightens him any more than it does me. A Happy New Year and a Merry Christmas to Auntie Sprague, from Perley."

Celeste.

A spirit gives the name of Celeste—a very beautiful spirit. She holds by the hand an old gentleman and quite an old lady. She says that she has helped them both to wake up in the spirit-life, and that they have already manifested three or four times, although he has only just passed away. She reaches out to her medium, a lady here in the earth-life, who is much interested in the work that she has to do. Moses is wide awake in the spirit already, and he sees everything that is being done. He wishes that things could have been carried out somewhat differently, now that he sees what was done, but he says he shall watch over what you are doing and hopes that some good will come of it. This will be understood completely, so that it does not require any further explanation."

SPIRIT MESSAGES

As the "Banner of Light Establishment' is not an incorporated institution, and as we could not therefore legally hold bequests made to us in that name, we give below the form in which such a bequest should be worded in order to stand the test of law:

"I give, devise and bequeath unto Luther Colby and Isaac B. Rich, of Boston, Massachusetts, Publishers, [here insert the description of the property to be willed] strictly upon trust, that they shall appropriate and expend the same in such way and manner as they shall deem expedient and proper for the promulgation of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and its eternal progression."

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From Fitchburg, Mass., Geraldine, wife of Charles A. Keene, and only daughter of Mrs. Sarah A. Wood, aged 29 years and 7 months.

After a few days of illness, Mrs. Keene's disease terminated with paralysis of the heart. The silent messenger came unexpectedly, finding those who loved her all unprepared for the loss. She was an affectionate daughter, devoted wife and mother, genial and sunny in spirit, and much beloved by those who were named among her friends. Her mother and her companion, who felt for her a father's love, are consoled with the knowledge of angel ministry, while the lonely husband and little child find in this home tender sympathy and care. The elder son deeply feels this great sorrow. The funeral service was conducted in the home by the writer. Surrounded by the beautiful flowers she loved, and the roses, in which she had said she wished she might be buried, lay the peaceful sleeper, while music soft and sweet soothed the hearts of the bereaved, and words of inspiration voiced the consoling thoughts of the denizens of the higher life. JULIETTE YEAW.

From Washington, D. C., Dec. 27th, 1887, Mr. John Youngs, son-in-law of Mr. Thomas Downey, of Washington, in his 44th year.

During an illness of four years, from consumption, he was always patient, fully realizing the nearness of his departure from mortal life, welcoming such gladly. As the end drew near, he clearly recognized and spoke to his father and other loved ones gone before. The funeral ceremony was held at one o'clock on Friday, Dec. 30th. By request of some relatives of the deceased, the Rev. C. Usher spoke at the funeral, his remarks being liberal and impressive. After which Mrs. A. M. Glading (in accordance with the last wishes of deceased), under control of spirit "Hoolah," discoursed at length in her usual beautiful and impressive manner, carrying conviction of spirit power and consolation to all present. The members of the Knights of Pythias attended in a body, paying their last tribute of respect and esteem to their late brother and friend. V. S. P.

From Springfield, Mass., Dec. 19th, Mrs. Jennie M. Warner, aged 37 years. M. C. F.

The Late Horace M. Richards.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I notice a spirit-message in the BANNER from HORACE M. RICHARDS. There are many scenes associated with him in my mind. He was of a true, brave heart. A more devoted and zealous advocate of the higher and moral phases of our soul-stirring philosophy never championed a cause.

His tongue and pen shed a radiance of light wherever plied. The sentiments that sparkled through his numerous poetic inspirations would prove brilliant gems of rare lustre in comparison, if collated and mingled with the volumes of our master poets.

I possess many of his impromptu flashes of genius in the original manuscript, and no doubt he refers to these and other productions of his pen in his message when he says:

"I am only sorry that I was not able to arrange in book-form some of the things which I hoped sometime to give to the world."

Subjoined are a few stanzas from his pen, written to a lady medium of rare gifts, whose beautiful powers of inspiration are noted by Robert Dale Owen in his "Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World."

Respectfully yours, CHAS. S. FORD, SR.

ANNA M. BULWER.

Oh! weary one with eyes of blue,
With soul so large and heart so true,
My soul in homage bows to you.
Thy soul which hath been tried in furnace heat,
Thy heart which when most tried doth warmest beat,
Hath taught my soul and heart a lesson sweet.

It hath not been o'er flowery sod
The weary way thy feet have trod,
And yet it brings thee nearer God;
For midst the grief and tears, the toil and pain,
Thy soul unfolds like bud beneath the rain,
And not one lesson hath been taught in vain.

What though the road seems drear and lone,
There 's One who hears each weary moan,
Who speaks to thee in loving tone,
And says unto thy anxious soul, "Be still,
Find rest in duty done, and still fulfill Thy destined work, which is to do my will."

Thank Him for labor and for toil;
Thou canst not His grand purpose foil,
Though tears bedew the "stubborn soil."
And yet I would not have thee doubt or fear,
For well I know there draweth near,
In His good time, an hour from shadows clear.

So, waiting, watch for coming morn,
Then shalt thou find reward for scorn,
While angels shall thy brow adorn
With coronet of gold, and jewels rare,
With victor's wreath, and fragrant lilies fair,
While loving deeds sown here shall blossom there.

West Gloucester, Mass. HORACE M. RICHARDS.

[From the Oregonian.]

The Beautiful Legend Told of Lake Whatcom in Oregon.

Lake Whatcom is certainly one of the most beautiful sheets of water in North America. It lies three and one half miles east of Bellingham Bay, and almost surrounded by mountains averaging from two thousand to three thousand five hundred feet in height. It winds among the hills with a wild, picturesque grace truly grand. The streams issue from small but fertile valleys. Upon its borders, in the past four years, settlers have located, and the daily sound of the axe, mingled with the mellow tones of cow bells, promises to awaken it from its dreamy sleep of ages. The lake is eleven miles in length, and its general course is north and south. It is about a mile in width, and resembles a half extended arm, with two long, narrow inlets at the southern end like a thumb and forefinger, one pointing east and the other south.

Reveille Island rises out of the blue waters of the lake like a green capped tower. The summit of the island is about one hundred and fifty feet above the level of the lake, and the shape of the island is almost that of an egg. The north and west sides have a gradual slope to the summit, and the east and southern sides are steep and precipitous. It is covered with a heavy growth of fir and cedar timber, and the rocks are of a sand formation. They contain palm leaf, sycamore and fern leaf fossils, thus affording an interesting spot for geological investigation.

There is a story told of a dark and bloody tragedy that took place upon its shores. It is said that in the early days, before the coming of white men, a band of Northern Indians invaded Bellingham Bay, and, after most of the native Indians were killed, the few remaining fled to the lake for safety, but, being closely pursued, took refuge on the island, and finding escape impossible, they resolved to seek death in the cold waters rather than be taken by their cruel foe, and, while chanting their death song, they proceeded to a reef at the north end, and, springing into the lake, were drowned, thus escaping by death the tortures of their exultant enemy.

Since then it is said that strange sounds can be heard on a still night, resembling the chant of an Indian warrior. The story was first told by an old trapper, who, on returning late one moonlight night from his traps to his camp on Swan Creek, and while passing the island, was startled by a strange noise. He ceased paddling and listened. As he paused there slowly rose from a deep cañon on the opposite side of the lake a murmur like the distant whisper of the sea made by the waters breaking in soft music upon a pebbly shore, becoming louder and louder until it deepened into a weird-like chant, and slowly coming across the lake, as if wafted by the wind to the north side of the island, which on reaching it continued up to the summit; pausing there a moment, as if recovering its course, it slowly descended to the reef on the south side and was lost beneath the deep waters. As it died away, a slight breeze sprang up and ruffled the smooth surface of the lake, and the moon shone with redoubled splendor, making the waters glisten and glimmer.

Different parties of pleasure seekers have since heard the same strange sounds, each one having different opinions as to its cause. Some say it is the noise of a cataract across the lake; others think it is caused by the sighing of the wind in the trees, and others contend that it is the death chant of an Indian warrior on his journey to the land of the Great Spirit. Whatever may be its cause, the mystery still remains unsolved.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

ALICE SAMPSON—MRS. ANN LAMSON.

I wish to bear witness to the truthfulness of the message published in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Dec. 3d, addressed to me from my beloved friend ALICE SAMPSON. It was not only characteristic of her, as any one acquainted with her would testify, but it contained a test which is of great value to me. I thank her for her effort to reach me in that way, and shall ever feel grateful to the medium and the BANNER people for their agency in the matter.

I also recognize the message from MRS. ANN LAMSON, in same paper. I knew her well when in the form, and while reading her words of love and cheer it was so much like her I could hardly realize that she was in spirit-life.

The Message Department is doing a world of good, and I hope it will continue as long as the dear BANNER waves. ANNIE LORD CHAMBERLAIN.

Mattapan, Mass., Dec. 30th, 1887.

LYDIA.

In BANNER OF LIGHT of Dec. 17th is a message under the heading of LYDIA. I was present when the message was given, and fully recognized the same as coming from my daughter in spirit-life; and the consolation of her assurances of love and help over the rough places in life vastly more than overbalances what she says in the message in regard to things at home. Truly are we held in loving remembrance by angels above. W. D. FISHER.

The communication to Mrs. E. U. of New York, from J. B., given by Winona, through Mr. Fletcher's mediumship, in the BANNER OF LIGHT dated Dec. 10th, 1887, I fully recognize, and it is very characteristic of the gentleman, who, while in earth-life, was a good friend of mine. Many thanks to Mr. Fletcher and the dear spirits for their kind thoughtfulness to one who is ever anxious to receive the truths of the spirit. Very respectfully, E. U.

"Glad Tidings of Immortality."

Finely executed lithographs bearing the above title have been received by us. The size is 22½x28½. The principal figure is a female, evidently designed to represent a materialized spirit, crowned with a wreath of flowers, and bearing a long band of them in her left hand, while in her right is a scroll inscribed with the words "Message of Love." Over her head are three stars. The drapery on each side appears to be the curtains of a cabinet, between which she stands in an exceedingly graceful position, suggestive of the line, "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." From above a ray of light radiates over the entire form. Vignette likenesses of Mrs. Brigham, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Lillie and Mrs. Britten, and Messrs. Howell and Colville, are given, and excellent ones they are. The artist is Mr. Shobe, who, we are informed, has executed many beautiful drawings illustrative of the Spiritual Philosophy.

THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

ZÖLLNER.

AN OPEN LETTER
TO
PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism,

BY C. C. MASSEY,
Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, after singing by Mr. Lillie, Mintie Eakins accompanist, and the congregation, and an invocation, the guides of Mrs. Lillie replied to a question whether the boy pianist, Josef Hofmann, is under spirit-control in his performances, she said that when Jesus was only twelve years of age; he went into the Temple at Jerusalem and confounded the philosophers, priests, scribes and doctors in the wisdom of his answers to questions propounded by them. What was that power? It was the power of God through his son; so is this lad of to-day one of his sons, imbued with the divine power. In this child we see genius. What is genius? It is a birthright by inheritance with the soul, in this case attuned to the spirit of music. The speaker was next asked to define the difference between mesmerism, or psychology, and magnetism. Mesmerism, or psychology, it was said, is a force produced upon a person from a mind in the form; at the same time a person may be susceptible to this influence from a disembodied spirit. Every person possesses this subtle power, which, if called into action, will enable him to manage business affairs with success, or attain a superior spiritual unfoldment. Spiritualists can understand the force of this power and its applications. Magnetism is a force obedient and subject to the will of the operator, and is governed by natural law.

After considering a question relating to the parable of the foolish virgins, remarking that the lamp of life is an eternal one, whose light never goes out, the service closed with a poem, "Passing Shadows." In her normal condition Mrs. Lillie then spoke of being present in Music Hall the past week, at a recital of the child pianist, Josef Hofmann. She stated that while sitting in the auditorium she saw clairvoyantly a spirit, surrounded by a bright light, looking like one of the old masters of music. He entered upon the platform from a side door and spoke to her, saying, "I control this child in his musical performances the same as your guides control you in your inspirational discourses. When the youthful performer seated himself at the piano she saw the white hand of a spirit over his head during his whole performance.

Mr. Lillie closed the exercises with a song entitled "Mother's with the Angels Now."

Evening.—After the usual preliminary exercises the guides of Mrs. Lillie spoke upon "The Most Excellent Ways of Living," and "The Atoms of Life," subjects suggested by questions from the audience, which were treated in a manner that called forth many expressions of satisfaction from those who listened. Mr. Lillie then closed the service with a song, and it was announced that Mrs. Lillie would again occupy the platform next Sunday, morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7. MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association—Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington Street.—Hon. Warren Chase delivered two instructive lectures before this Association last Sunday. At the afternoon meeting, he said: "I am pleased to address the Phenomena Association, organized as it is, to foster and protect and promulgate the phenomena upon which our temple of truth is builded. The phenomena brought me out of the barren waste of agnosticism, and since then, for forty years, I have been an earnest defender of true mediumship. The phenomena of Spiritualism have existed since time begun; but in countries where priests controlled the minds of the people they have been either used to aid them in promulgating their particular ism or condemned as the works of the devil. The ancients believed that the earth and heaven were arranged in three flats, like a tenement house, and Bruno and Copernicus were persecuted and derided because they thought the earth was round. Read the 'Iliad,' and the accounts of the Roman and Grecian wars, and see that in those times spirits communicated with mortals: gods, they were termed then, who controlled and aided the warriors in battle to become victorious over their enemies. In the Temple of Delphos mediums gave evidence of intelligent spirit control. The primate catholics held communication with the spirit sphere, termed by them the communion of saints. As far back as history goes haunted houses have been reported, and all such phenomena, if under the supervision of the church, were endorsed and used to further church purposes. Science has demolished the gods of the past, and though they have been worshiped and had sacrifices offered to them, they have been proved to be only finite persons, advanced a little beyond us, to spirit-life. Let us not forget that all kinds and conditions of men are ushered into spirit-life, and then we shall comprehend why there are so many different opinions advanced by returning spirits. If we in this life are bound up entirely in the things of this world, we shall not on our transition to spirit-life be able at once to leave earth's conditions." The lecture closed with an earnest appeal to live this life out with high aspirations, love for our common brotherhood, and then by a thorough spiritual education we shall be ready for the next stage of being.

The evening lecture was much enjoyed by those in attendance, and consisted in part of a lucid explanation of Prof. Zöllner's "Fourth Dimension" theory.

Next Sunday, Mr. Oscar Edgerly, lecturer and test medium, of Newburyport, will conduct the services.

Warren Chase will deliver the Paine oration on Jan. 29th, before this society. Mrs. M. L. French, Mrs. Clark Kimball, Joseph D. Stiles, Carrie E. S. Twing and others, are expected to appear before this Association this season. F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

Children's Progressive Lyceum—Paine Hall.—A large company of children and their friends were present last Sunday. Readings and recitations were given by Emma Barbier, Addie Hazeltine, Mabel Myers, Frank Hall, Lillian Rich, Flossie Sargent, and Mrs. S. D. Francis. Musical selections by Annie Barlow, Blanche Myers, Louise Morris, Grace Scales, Mabel Waite, Mary Barbier and Jessie Judkins. The annual meeting was held Thursday evening, Jan. 5th, at which the election of officers resulted in the choice for Conductor, Benjamin P. Weaver; Assistant-Conductor, Frank B. Woodbury; Guardian, Miss Annie L. Clark; Assistant-Guardian, Miss Amy Peters; President of Association, B. P. Weaver; Vice-President, Sidney Whitney; Recording Secretary, C. C. Fearing; Corresponding Secretary, F. B. Woodbury; Librarian, C. C. Fearing; Monitor of Groups, Mrs. W. S. Butler; Treasurer, Franklin Stevens. A list of the Directors and Leaders will be given next week.

The result of the annual meeting has been to establish a more harmonious feeling, and all hope that the general love feast that marked its close may be an indication of a prosperous year. A large number of applications for membership were received, among them the names of several of Boston's most prominent Spiritualists. The Wednesday evening socials in Lyceum Hall are well attended, and much enjoyed by old and young. Sewing circles in the afternoon, supper at six o'clock, social in the evening, is the order of exercises. All are cordially invited.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Last Sunday Mr. Cobb opened the morning session with an eloquent address upon "The God of Spiritualism," followed by Dr. W. S. Eldridge with remarks upon the developments of Spiritualism and the jealousy with which it is viewed by the churches. Peter McKenzie gave the names of several spirits. Readings were given by Miss Cullen, Mrs. J. D. Bruce and others. In the afternoon and evening the meetings were in charge of Mrs. Cobb. Dr. W. S. Eldridge spoke upon the general truths of Spiritualism, and gave exhibitions of his power to mesmerize. Tests and readings were given by Miss A. Peabody, Mrs. A. Forester and Peter McKenzie, Miss S. E. Cullen gave facial readings, and "Winona" tests of spirit presence.

The evening session was opened with singing by Mrs. Eudora Case, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain. Dr. J. L. Paxson delivered an address upon "Inspiration." Mrs. J. D. Bruce gave some very excellent readings. By request Miss Annie L. Curtis gave a recitation. Dr. H. B. Leighton combated the assertion of some clergyman that Spiritualism is destroying the truths of the Bible, affirming that it corroborated them. Mrs. Maggie F. Butler said that Spiritualism is coming to many homes, and the time is near when it will receive universal acceptance. Mr. Johnson gave tests of spirit presence. Mrs. Forester claimed Christ to have been the most wonderful medium that ever lived. HEATH.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of Dec. 3d the members and friends of this Society held a social meeting in Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. After a half hour's pleasant converse a spiritual entertainment followed, Richard Holmes presiding. Willie Boyce and Maudie G. Banks opened the exercises with a piano duet. Dr. J. C. Street gave an account of recent experiments he witnessed in New York City, which was of great interest, and attentively listened to. Mrs. J. F. Dillingham made a brief address, and under control of "Chinnewanna" gave personal tests of spirit presence. Maudie G. Banks gave a piano selection, which was well received. Dr. M. V. Thomas, under control of "Light Heart," made an excellent address, and rendered several inspirational songs in foreign language, following which remarks were made by Jacob Edson and Richard Holmes.

The next social evening meeting will be held Jan. 17th. MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The meeting in this place on Sunday last was well attended and interesting. The exercises were opened by Dr. P. C. Drisko, who gave an excellent address filled with gems of thought and sound logic.

He was followed respectively by David Brown, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Prof. Milleson, Dr. Thomas, Mrs. M. W. Leslie and Dr. J. L. Paxson, all of whom made remarks which were of a highly instructive character.

Many clear and convincing proofs of spirit presence and personal identity were given through the organisms of Mrs. S. E. Rich, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Dr. M. V. Thomas, David Brown, Mrs. S. E. Buck, Mrs. Nettie Smith and others; and clear psychometric readings by Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Mrs. Rich and Mrs. Leslie. A very fine recitation was given by Miss Lillian Rich.

Paine Memorial Hall.—Mr. Edwin Powell, test medium, is still at this hall. Last Sunday afternoon and evening he had good audiences. The subject of the afternoon was "The Rapid Growth of Spiritualism and the Consolation it Gives to Mortals in the Hour of Sorrow."

In the evening the subject, "Immortality," was replete with good thought, the intelligent audience showing their appreciation by applause.

It was announced that the meetings would be held next Sunday, Jan. 15th, at 2:30 and 7:30 P. M.
F. E. D.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown.—The Echo Spiritualists' meetings were held in this place, Sunday, Jan. 8th—W. A. Hale, Chairman. C. M. A. Twitchell, Mrs. J. E. Davis, and Miss Nettie M. Holt participated in the afternoon services. Excellent music by Mrs. Mandell, varied the exercises.

At 7:30 the hall was filled to overflowing. Dr. C. H. Harding of Boston addressed the people upon the query: "Are we Building our Spiritual Temples?" The doctor also gave some clear psychometric readings, which were all recognized. H.

New York Items.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I am happy to state that there seems to be this winter an increase of interest exhibited in spiritualistic matters in this city.

Meetings are regularly held Sunday morning and evening at Adelphi Hall, corner 52d street and 7th Avenue. Each Sunday afternoon Mrs. E. A. Wells conducts a meeting for spiritual manifestations at the same place, which are very interesting as well as profitable.

The People's Meetings are continued at Columbia Hall, 878 Sixth Avenue, Sunday afternoons and evenings.

Mrs. A. L. Pennell, late of Boston, conducts spiritual test meetings Sunday afternoon and evening at 52 Union Square. A meeting is also held by Mrs. Morrell, at 230 West 36th street, every Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. M. E. Wallace continues to conduct services at her residence, 219 West 42d street, every Sunday evening, which are well attended.

Dr. F. L. H. Willis's lectures, recently delivered before the First Society, and in Mrs. Wallace's parlors, were of a high order of intellectuality, and have awakened quite an interest in the subject of Spiritualism. I cheerfully recommend Dr. Willis to Spiritualistic Societies, and can assure all who may engage this eloquent teacher that they will be more than amply repaid. It is sincerely hoped that Dr. Willis will be able to give us more of his lectures after his engagement closes in Philadelphia.

Mr. Charles Dawbarn spoke at the meeting in Mrs. Wallace's parlors with much acceptance on Sunday evening, Jan. 1st. Prof. Henry Kiddle's lecture at the same place on Sunday evening last was replete with good thoughts.

Mr. Wm. C. Bowen of Brooklyn will lecture there on Sunday evening, the 15th inst., and the Rev. E. B. Fairchild of Boston is expected to lecture at the same place on Sunday evening, the 22d inst.

The American Spiritualist Alliance meetings are held every alternate Wednesday evening. This society is rapidly increasing its membership. A cordial invitation is extended to Spiritualists everywhere to unite with this spiritual work.

The Ladies' Spiritualist Aid Society convenes every Tuesday afternoon at 128 West 43d street. After the order of business is completed, interesting séances are held, which add much to the interest of these meetings.

An exceedingly interesting meeting on the eve of the departure of the old, and to welcome in the new year, was held in Mrs. Wallace's parlors. There was quite a gathering of friends present. The services were of an interesting character, consisting of songs of praise, social exchange of thought, and mediumistic exercise, which continued until the new year was ushered in, when congratulations were exchanged, and all separated satisfied with a well-spent evening.

Meetings of like character were held at the residences of Mrs. Wells and Mrs. Morrell the same night.

Dr. B. L. Cetlinsky, one of our oldest physicians, an earnest Spiritualist, is about to give a course of scientific lectures. I do not doubt but that they will be interesting, as well as instructive.

A musical and literary entertainment for the benefit of the First Society of Spiritualists will be given at 232 West 46th street, on Wednesday evening, the 18th inst.

Our mediums are doing excellent work, and are receiving the recognition of the refined and well-to-do people of our city.

I must not fail to make mention of a young materializing medium, who is rapidly growing into popularity, favor and usefulness, Miss Della Sawyer, an intelligent and accomplished young lady, only daughter of the well-known medium, Mrs. Carrie M. Sawyer, 785 Sixth Avenue. I have attended several of the séances given by this young lady, held at the above place on Thursday evenings, which are wonderful. Miss Sawyer is destined to do a good work for Spiritualism by convincing the people that materialization is a grand reality.

I cannot close these hasty notes without stating to you how agreeably surprised I was to receive through the BANNER OF LIGHT of Dec. 31st a communication from my spirit-daughter Eva. I consider the spirit-messages which appear weekly in the BANNER OF LIGHT among the best evidence to convince doubters of the truth of spirit communication.

GEO. H. PERINE.

First Society of Spiritualists, New York.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke, in the morning, upon "What Form of Compensation do we have in the Next Life for Injustice Done Us Here?" and seven other subjects furnished by the audience. Mrs. Brigham was at her best, and many remarked "that was the best discourse they had ever listened to from her controls." In the evening she spoke upon a subject selected by the influences speaking through her, "The Story of the Song."

The meeting for spiritual manifestations in the afternoon was well attended. After singing, Dr. Dean Clarke improvised a beautiful poem, and his control gave a logical and powerful discourse that warmed up the hearts of his hearers. He is to speak to the society each afternoon during this month. His subject for next Sunday afternoon will be "Mediumship, and the Laws and Methods of Spirit-Intercourse." Mrs. Wells gave a large number of tests, all of which were recognized, and the friends receiving them extended to her many thanks for such convincing evidence of immortality, being to many the first proof they had ever received. Mrs. Wells has much improved in her public platform tests since the opening of these meetings, and is now receiving many compliments and congratulations from her numerous friends, who rejoice at the success she has so deservedly and honorably won through the unseen forces influencing her. If Mrs. Wells continues to improve in her platform tests as she has for the last two months, we predict that in a very short time she will be (if she is not already so) the equal of any one in this line of manifestations. S.

The People's Spiritual Meeting,

Sunday, Jan. 8th, was well attended, and the interest good. Mr. S. A. F. Goodspeed made remarks, and gave a number of recognized tests. Mrs. Hamilton gave (under control) a short address, also several well defined tests. Mr. J. F. Jeanneret spoke at some length upon the "Laws of Spirit Control and the Philosophy of Spiritism." In the evening Mrs. M. C. Morrell gave several psychometric readings, and also descriptive tests, mostly recognized. Remarks by E. C. C. Rejaunier, Mr. Crowell, and others, filled the time with spiritual profit.

Dr. Henry Slade will occupy the platform next Sunday afternoon. F. W. JONES.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mr. A. P. Dey read an instructive essay Saturday evening last—his theme being "Materialism and Spiritualism." Able remarks and spiritualistic experiences were given by John Nicholson, W. C. Bowen, W. J. Cushing, Mrs. E. C. Aldrich Hall, Mr. Robinson and the Chairman. Next Saturday evening, 14th inst., Mr. Harris will read to us "Remarkable Spiritual Instructions," received through mediums.

A Liberal Club Seance.

[Secular Press Report.]

MR. WILSON MACDONALD GETS INTO A HORNETS' NEST OF MATERIALISTIC DOUBTERS—FLUIDIC RAPS ON THE FLOOR OF THE PLATFORM.

Several materialistic hornets of the Liberal Club stung Mr. William MacDonald severely at 220 East 15th street, New York, Dec. 30th. The sculptor went into the hornets' nest and tried to explain "The Mathematics of Modern Manifestations of Spiritualism." It was a very entertaining séance. Mr. MacDonald began to talk at about 8 o'clock, just after Dr. Foote, the Chairman, had told the audience that each one was expected to give five cents to a man sitting near the door to help pay the hall rent. He also said that if there were any members of the Society present who had n't paid their dues they had better "pony up."

When Mr. MacDonald stood up he was seen to be of medium height. He wore long gray hair, gray side-whiskers, black clothes and spectacles. He read his lecture and spoke distinctly. He was an infidel and a materialist, and he was proud to say so. There was no such thing as death. That word simply meant a change in matter. A favorite word of the speaker's was "fluidity." This he used to signify the condition that a body assumed after death.

The speaker said it was as clear as mud that the mind controls matter. Did he know anything about spiritualistic phenomena? Yes. He had seen weights moved, writing on human flesh, apparitions. He had heard rappings for forty years, indoors and outdoors. He had seen fluidic bodies which retained their intelligence and shape speak to persons and do acts. On account of his belief he had been thrown out of society, called a lunatic, and crucified. The speaker alluded to Robert G. Ingersoll as a prince of humanity, and spoke about the boundless love that filled his soul. Then Mr. MacDonald trotted out his corroborative evidence. He said to a man in the audience,

"Mr. J. F. Clark, will you please stand up."

Mr. Clark arose.

Q.—Do you live in New York? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—What part of New York? A.—785 Fifth avenue. [Voice in the audience.—Bring your spirits up there now.]

Q.—If put on the stand, Mr. Clark, would you be willing to make oath that you had seen spiritual phenomena for which you could not account? A.—Yes, sir.

MacDonald.—That will do, sir.

Mr. Clark resumed his seat.

MacDonald.—Will Dr. Perine please stand up.

The Doctor arose.

Q.—Where do you live? A.—Seventy-four West Fiftieth street.

Q.—Have you ever seen any manifestations of spiritual force? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did you ever see your daughter? A.—Yes, sir; many times.

Q.—Will you say you have seen 500 forms? A.—Yes, sir.

Dr. Dake, of Fifth Avenue, was next called upon.

Q.—Did you ever see Dr. Slade? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did he make a slate disappear and play peek-a-boo? A.—He did.

After the examination, Mrs. Margaret Fox Kane, wife of the celebrated explorer, and a noted spiritualistic medium, went on the platform, accompanied by a female friend. Mr. MacDonald said, while silence fell on the audience: "Will the spirits rap?"

There was an interval of about a minute, during which time everybody craned their necks and listened. Then a feeble and uncertain rapping was heard. The silence deepened. Again the raps were called for, and again they were heard, this time much more vigorously. Judging from the sound, they were made by something much more fleshly than fluidic knuckles.

For fear there were some skeptical Liberals who had not heard the raps, the spirits were called on again, and responded with vigor.

Dr. Slade, the man who manipulates slates, was in the audience, but he refused to take part in the exercises.

Mr. Oppenheimer was the first hornet to fly at the spiritualistic sculptor. He had heard the raps, but presumed that Hermann, the magician, could produce the same effect. Besides, he did n't know positively but that the medium had some mechanical contrivance hidden in her dress. He had heard more wonderful things in a Bowery museum. Mr. MacDonald, he had no doubt, was sincere, but then he belonged to the same order of the human family as George Francis Train.

Mr. Leavitt was the next speaker. He thought perhaps Mr. MacDonald had bit off more than he could chew. . . . Dr. Wygand talked about the visible and the invisible, and Mrs. Hinton said she had been investigating Spiritualism for seventeen years. She had seen pianos lifted by unseen hands, and had met a lady friend in Chicago who was really in California at the same time.

T. B. Wakeman was like Oliver Twist, he never could get enough spiritualistic phenomena to satisfy him. He thought that if Spiritualism was a disease, the modern phase of it bore the same relation to the old-time disease that varioloid did to smallpox.

A case is reported of an eccentric and humane gentleman down town chloroforming raw oysters before eating them on the half-shell.—N. O. Picayune.

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Christmas and New Year's! the two well observed days of the present season's festivities, have come and gone, bringing joy to many, and sorrow to not a few.

Joy to the Lyceum Children. As predicted, Santa Claus put in his appearance in thoroughly Orthodox fashion, entering from the roof and down the chimney. Grand Army Hall proved too small for the children and their friends, and the little ones could scarcely be controlled as "Santa" (Mr. Samuel Russell) skipped round with his pack on his back, and with his assistants distributed the presents from the Christmas tree to every scholar in the Lyceum. Acting Conductor Oyston had his hands full in conducting the preliminary exercises, which consisted of music, singing and speaking, and a short address by himself. "Happy Greeting" was the motto in large white frosted letters over the platform, and everybody seemed to endorse it. Several old English Christmas Carols were sung by the Russell Family (numbering between twenty-five and thirty) and were thoroughly appreciated.

Our Grief-Stricken Musical Director had no "Merrie Christmas" in his household this year, owing to the transition of his little five-year-old daughter (Emily) to spirit-life (through diphtheria), and whose remains were laid away in Woodland Cemetery Dec. 24th, after a brief service, conducted by your Cleveland reporter. She was, and is yet, a bright little spirit, and the sympathy of us all goes out to the sorrowing parents (Mr. and Mrs. Pae) for the physical absence of their first born.

Sunday Evening Lecture Course, of which a financial statement will be found elsewhere in this issue, was concluded on Christmas night by Mr. J. Frank Baxter before a large audience at the Columbia Theatre. In every other respect but a financial one, the lectures have been eminently successful, and have produced intense interest throughout the city in many circles not before invaded by Modern Spiritualism, and many who do not seem to realize the risk in arranging and conducting such a course of lectures, express surprise and sorrow that the course is concluded. On Sunday, Dec. 18th, by special invitation, Mayor Babcock and his family were present, and seemed greatly interested in the lectures and séances of Mr. Baxter, as also the Board of Education, some members of which attended the greater part of the lectures. So while the hope of starting a Free Public Spiritual Library and Reading Room in this city is yet deferred, we feel that the prime object of the lecture course at the Columbia Theatre has been secured, and Spiritualism in Cleveland and vicinity is better understood and more respected than ever, through the eleven public lectures given by the four able exponents of our glorious philosophy, previously mentioned, and the wide circulation given to the lectures so fairly by the Plain Dealer and Leader of this city, the former paper reporting every lecture in the course.

Baxter at Newburgh.—On Monday, Dec. 26th, by special invitation, Mr. B. addressed the friends in that section of the city, in the Town Hall, supplementing his lecture, as usual, with his interesting clairvoyant and clairaudient séances.

Edgar W. Emerson.—As a kind of dessert to the spiritual feast already spoken of, this well-known medium was induced by his friend, Mr. H. S. Powell, to stop off, while en route to Cincinnati, and hold two séances in this city; one—private—at the residence of Mrs. Henderson, in East Cleveland, and one—public—Dec. 30th, in G. A. R. Hall, at which a very large audience was present. Mr. E., who has never visited Cleveland before, was welcomed as an old friend, his reputation having preceded him. If Bro. Walter Howell and himself do not interest the Cincinnatians during January and February we are greatly mistaken.

W. Harry Powell, the well-known medium, passed away from St. Louis Nov. 27th, 1887, of hemorrhage of the lungs, and leaves in bereavement a wife in the city of Philadelphia, where his remains now rest. Peace to his memory!

Harvesting.—As the product of some of the good seed sown at our "Fact Meeting" a year ago, we point with pride to Mr. Richard Carleton, a young man who, through them and subsequent investigations, has become an earnest Spiritualist, and in gratitude he proposes to help along in the good work. Last Sunday he was formally installed as the Conductor of the Children's Progressive Lyceum.

A Happy New Year to every reader of the BANNER OF LIGHT! Yours for the cause, THOS. LEES.

J. Frank Baxter in New York State.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Universalist Church at Eddyville, N. Y., was recently packed to hear J. Frank Baxter. The beautiful evening and sleighing brought large numbers from all around. A lecture and poem, enlivening music and astounding tests, made up the programme. The exercises lasted three hours. Great good was accomplished by the work. Salamanca, Otto, and Franklinville, are determined to secure Mr. Baxter, if possible, at the earliest opportunity. He could not go to them on this occasion, as existing appointments demanded his presence elsewhere. Mr. Baxter was next at Palmyra, N.Y., where for two evenings he lectured. The stormiest, coldest weather of the winter, with almost impassable roads, prevailed, and, of course, the audiences were small; sufficiently large, however, to thoroughly advertise Mr. Baxter, so that no seed fell on stony ground. Indeed, so marked was his work, that what with the pleasure of those who "turned out" and the regrets of many who could not, all are anxious for a series of meetings under his ministrations. Mr. Baxter began his labors for Troy with the new year.

On Sunday, Jan. 1st, he gave a fine New Year's address. The songs, original poem, and address, were different from anything ever rendered from a spiritual platform in that city. Mr. Baxter lectured on Jan 1st, and twice on Sunday, Jan. 8th. The morning lectures are broad and liberal, and well adapted to the liberalists, Spiritualists, and free-thinkers who in the morning assemble. The audiences of the evening are larger and more promiscuous, that of last Sunday evening nearly filling the spacious hall. Mr. Baxter adapts his themes to occasions, and Spiritualism, pure and unadulterated, is always to be expected from him evenings. His arguments and reasoning were fine the past two Sundays, but their power rests with the facts he narrates, and the phenomenal tests through his wonderful mediumship. His lectures are like driving nails effectively in carpentry, but his tests are as clinching them.

Next Sunday, 15th, Mr. Baxter gives lectures on "The Naturalness of Physical Death," and "The Spiritual Body and its Emancipation." COM.

Trenton, N. J.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The First Association of Spiritualists of Trenton was organized about six years ago with J. W. Royle as President, and J. W. Royle and myself as local speakers. Much good we claim has been done for the cause in this locality by our Association. We have held circles and public meetings ever since. We have employed some of the most talented speakers and mediums. Our work has aroused the opposition of the ministry several times, which proves it to have been effective. Hundreds of people have proven the truth of the hereafter to their consolation. Sunday, Jan. 1st, the newly-elected officers took their places, and commenced the year with the services of Mrs. H. S. Philips, of Eden, Pa., as test medium; she is decidedly a good one, and we shall endeavor to get her soon again. Our hall is too small, and we expect to secure a room in Taylor's Opera House. We have engaged Mrs. A. N. Burnham, of Boston, for the month of February. She has always done us a great good when here before, and we all are desirous of again hearing her. We hope the BANNER OF LIGHT will sympathize with us, and that we shall be an influence for good. We intend to employ the ablest speakers and mediums if possible to obtain them. In a word, we are determined to be aggressive. We give below the names of the officers of the present year: President, H. L. Perves; 1st Vice-President, J. T. Marshall; 2d Vice-President, Mrs. Jefferson; Corresponding Secretary, Milton Baker; Recording Secretary, Thos. Foulds; Treasurer, Wm. Davenport.

Yours fraternally, MILTON BAKER.

Salem, Mass.—Mrs. H. S. Lake occupied our platform Jan. 1st and 8th. Numbers of subjects were presented by the audiences for treatment at the sessions, and the guides of Mrs. Lake proved eloquent and soul-satisfying in their remarks. Mrs. Lake is to be with us again Jan. 29th.—Mrs. E. Cutler, of Philadelphia, Pa., is to be with us Jan. 15th.

Essence and Substance:

A TREATISE ON

Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,

Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

Pseudo "Spiritual Science."

"SPIRITUAL HEALING FORMULA AND TEXT BOOK, by Prof. A. J. Swarts, editor Mental Science Magazine, and President Spiritual Science University," of Chicago, Ill., is the title of a small handbook sent to this paper for notice. It appears to have been prepared especially for the use of non-resident students in the above-named "University," who, on paying three or five dollars for its fifty-four pages, and mastering its contents so as to be able to answer satisfactorily a series of questions thereupon, and paying a further fee of twenty-five dollars, are promised a legal diploma, with the title of S.S.D. ("Doctor of Spiritual Science"), authorizing them to practice "Mental Spiritual Healing," (whatever that may mean) under the laws of the State of Illinois!

This seems to be a scheme for providing legal medical diplomas on remarkably easy terms compared with those usually required by medical schools; but the question properly arises whether a diploma issued on such a basis is worth even the small fee demanded for it, or furnishes any guarantee against charlatanry and ignorant imposition. Moreover, the adoption of the term "Spiritual Healing," which has so long and rightfully been applied to the exercise of the healing power as one of the phases of Modern Spiritualism, renders it fitting that we should inquire into the propriety of its appropriation by this new school in therapeutics. We have therefore looked somewhat carefully into the claims and merits of this work, and propose to frankly tell our readers what we have learned.

In the first place, it appears that "Professor" Swarts was a pupil of the noted Mrs. M. B. G. Eddy, of Boston, the reputed originator of the so-called "Christian Science" fantasy, which has produced such a "craze" among a class of uncritical and ill-regulated minds in this vicinity and elsewhere. This woman is no doubt a remarkable character, judging from the impression she has made upon a portion of the public. Being gifted, doubtless, with a strong healing power—or that peculiar quality of organism which renders some persons capable of being used as instruments of direct recuperative energy from spiritual sources—and possessing some vague notion of the superiority of spirit over matter, but bitterly hostile, from some unknown cause, to the theory of Modern Spiritualism, or the recognition of individual spirit-agencies in any way—she appears to have set herself the difficult task of devising a scheme to account for the marvels of healing and other alleged spirit-interpositions without recognizing personal spirit-agency. Endowed with much mental force, and great volubility of language, yet so lacking in literary culture and mental training as to be seemingly incapable of expressing any philosophical or spiritual idea with precision and intelligibility, she appears to have succeeded in impressing on her receptive pupils her crude and often absurd conceptions with all the positiveness and force of demonstrated facts and principles. They have accepted her, it would seem, as the "inspired" discoverer and oracle of a "Science" of inestimable value to mankind—in fact the only Science of Life and Health ever taught on earth! Discarding the conventional meanings of language, and ignoring the recognized rules of grammar, as well as the universal testimony of the human senses, she has introduced into her writings a vocabulary and style of her own, which, to a critical reader, render almost every sentence an insoluble enigma, and every page little else than a jumble of unintelligible words, with occasional gleams of sense. But her very obscurity seems to be taken as evidence of consummate wisdom by her admirers.

It would be easy to justify the above characterization by citing almost at random passages from Mrs. Eddy's extraordinary but unreadable book entitled "Science and Health." Take the following example from page 61:

"Belief is all there is to mortal man, and if this belief is wretchedness only, no circumstance can make it happiness, and if happiness no circumstance can change it, or make it wretchedness, until the belief of the different conditions are [sic] changed; 'for as error thinketh so is it.' The science of being is as necessary to those in the belief of health as sickness, for a change of belief would make the well sick, when, if they understood these conditions depended on mind, instead of matter, they might continue to be well by grounding their belief in the case and letting intelligence be master of the situation."

Is not that as lucid as a bucketful of mud? Try another, from page 111:

"Matter is but a grosser strata [sic] of mortal mind."...."Spirit is Intelligence, whereas the basis of matter is belief; the former is science, the latter mesmerism."

Wonderful wisdom indeed! One more from page 391, verbatim et punctuatim:

"Disease is a belief, its origin mental instead of physical, and it matters not what the body indicates, in reality all is mind, there is no matter, and mortal things are beliefs, and not the science of man in which he is immortal."

Such profundity defies comment! It is difficult to regard it as the product of a sane mind. But think of stringing out 456 pages of this inane verbiage and calling it "Science"! "Christian Science" and "Mental Science," forsooth! and then think of devoted disciples hailing the book as an "inspired" production, founding on it a new school of medical practice, with "colleges" and "universities" to teach it—and not only these but a new sect in theology, with its "Church" and "Sunday school" and the usual machinery of propagandism! Surely, no more puzzling phenomenon has arisen in this marvelous nineteenth century than this sect of so-called "Christian Scientists," and that, too, at the very "Hub" of modern civilization!

Mrs. Eddy's teachings regarding Spiritualism are sufficiently indicated by the following brief excerpts: "There is but one Spirit, even God, ... and there is but one God; hence to talk of spirits is to believe in gods and demons."—p. 62. "The entire phenomena of mediumship are deceptions or delusions."—p. 68. "All there is to mediumship is belief."—p. 97. "We are never spirit until we are God; there are no individual 'spirits.'"—p. 435. Etc., etc.

Such is the source from which Prof. Swarts acknowledges having derived his instructions in the wonderful "science" which he undertakes to expound in this "Formula and Text-Book"; and, though he claims to have originated "important discoveries and successful methods" of his own, yet he avows himself to be "still in accord with the fundamental teachings of Mrs. Eddy" and others.

It may be fairly supposed that the disciples of this new school in therapeutics and theology are in general of the same class of untrained minds—loose thinkers and unintelligible writers or talkers—as the founder of the sect has shown herself to be. The President of the Chicago "Spiritual Science University" is no exception, as evidenced by the work before us. Like his teacher, he is independent alike of the rules of grammar, the conventionalities of the dictionary, and the testimony of the senses, indulging largely in a jargon peculiar to himself, and defiantly claiming that "our science [?] has a vocabulary of its own and it does not allow any system of theology or of popular philosophy to select terms for it"!

A specimen or two of this extraordinary scientific (?) treatise must suffice. On page 9 we read:

"As this Science teaches that flesh, bones and blood are not Man; as it teaches that visible body or existence is not the image of Deity or like it, so it rejects all belief in the reality of so-called 'matter.' That which common thought names 'matter' has no entity, no life, no intelligence, and at best all objects beheld by sense are simply reflections, and are no more the real than the picture reflected on the canvas is real."

After thus rejecting "all belief in the reality of so-called 'matter,'" and declaring that it has "no entity," etc., he further on (page 33) indulges in the following enigmatic utterances:

"This science admits of enough reality[!] in the mortal or reflected mind to possess flesh, blood and bones, yet, as previously stated, these are not the real, nor is this visible, sensuous appearance admitted to be Man in Spiritual Science. Though it is man in belief, in anatomy and in common thought, yet Christian or Spiritual Science takes issue with the generally accepted conclusions and does not propose to be subject to these failing beliefs, but to maintain its higher understanding and its claims in Spiritual Science."[!!]

Comparing the physical human body to a photograph, as a mere "reflection," he delivers himself of the following nebulous scientific(?) dictum (page 9):

"As the photograph is void of sensation, having progressed outward from its once invisible, sensitive state[!], so the body and all visible objects are void of sensation, and are only reflections or negative expressions of the real."[!!]

A wonderful "science," truly, which makes our bodies as void of sensation as are our photographs! Another marvelous discovery of this "science" is that when one beholds what he supposes to be a reflection of his bodily features in a mirror, he is actually seeing his invisible self or spirit! At least, this seems to be the purport of the following dubious language (pages 10–11):

"My point is, that while you claim to see yourself or your reflection in the mirror, it is simply the invisible you or Spirit between you and the mirror beholding the one and only reflection of the spiritual idea." .... "This is our point that he is not beholding a reflection of himself, but he is actually seeing 'himself.'"

It is evident at the outset that neither Prof. Swarts nor Mrs. Eddy has any correct idea of the meaning of the word "science." To properly educated minds, science signifies "Knowledge, generalized, systematized and verified." These writers, however, apply the term almost exclusively to the set of bizarre and peculiar notions they have put forth—the crude conceptions of unscientific and untrained minds—unverified, and for the most part unverifiable. At best, their vaunted "science" is but an ill-digested theory or "belief," set up against the "belief" of others, contradicted to a large extent by the common sense and common experience of mankind, and in some particulars (as regarding the reality of mediumship, the existence and communication of individual spirits, etc.,) disproved by the absolute knowledge of thousands of careful investigators.

As some one has properly said, this "'Christian [Science,' so-called, is neither science nor Christian." Its alleged principles are mostly sheer dogmatisms, and its methods are not those practiced by the Christ and his apostles, according to the record. They healed largely by touch or "the laying on of hands," whereas Mrs. Eddy declares that she "never manipulates the sick," nor permits her students to do it, considering it a very dangerous "malpractice" (p. 378, et seq.); and Prof. Swarts in his Formula "forbids contact of every kind" (p. 35).

Prof. S., however, for some reason, seems anxious to drop the designation "Christian Science," and adopt that of "Spiritual Science" instead, sometimes, indeed, prefixing the word "Mental"—as, "the Mental Spiritual Science University of Chicago"—though what such a conglomeration of terms can mean is not apparent. He has even gone to the trouble, as he tells us, of procuring "new incorporation papers," in which the term "Christian" is omitted, and "Spiritual Science University" inserted as the new title. He states that "God ordered an advance" in this matter, and that it is a "Heaven-furnished title." The precise object of discarding Mrs. Eddy's chosen designation, and adopting that so long in use by Spiritualists, to whom she has manifested the greatest aversion, does not appear, unless it be to conciliate and thus secure the patronage of Spiritualists. If so, it looks very much like a case of false pretense. This supposition receives color from the fact that Prof. Swarts has made strenuous efforts to introduce himself and his publications among Spiritualists, soliciting their aid in getting before the public, sometimes dealing in sugar-coated compliments to them; and yet now and then giving such thrusts at the claim of spirit-agency through mediumship as the following, from the November issue of his magazine:

"Our Science holds that all such claims are delusions; that they are mere beliefs and nonsense when compared with the higher understanding of Christian Science touching immortality."

The Professor further claims to have written his Formula and Text-Book "under inspiration," and to be proceeding in his educational work "under the direction of God." A quotation from the new incorporation papers of his University reads as follows:

"The objects for which it is formed is [sic] educational purposes and the application of Mental Therapeutics or Spiritual Science to the restoration and maintenance of healthful and harmonious conditions in the human organism," etc.

The peculiar construction of this and many other sentences in his writings suggests that the "God" of Prof. Swarts must be of the same class with that of the honest but illiterate Shaker Elder, who confidently declared that "God hates grammar!"

We might cull many more choice gems of language, logic and philosophy from this University "Text-Book," but the foregoing will suffice to indicate to intelligent readers the sort of "Science" they will be able to glean from its pages, or to learn in the institution. In fact, the book, to our view, contains more nonsense to the square inch than any other work we ever attempted to read, always excepting that entitled "Science and Health," which it claims to summarize.

Nevertheless we believe in the reality of Spiritual Healing, and do not question that it sometimes occurs through the instrumentality of these practitioners—not by virtue of their pseudo "science," but in spite of it. We believe in Spiritual Healing, both direct (i. e., without the employment of material or human agencies) and indirect (i. e., through the use of various instrumentalities, living and inanimate, which serve as conduits or media of the spiritual force which alone heals); and we are of opinion that the need or utility of these agencies depends upon the physical, mental and spiritual conditions of both patient and healer. The facts and laws of this method of cure, constituting the true Science of Spiritual Healing, have been to some extent known to intelligent Spiritualists for years, and have been set forth with more or less clearness in the literature of Spiritualism, from the publication of the "Healing of the Nations," by Linton, in 1855, to Colville's "Spiritual Science of Health and Healing," in 1887. Indeed, the facts of such healing, and to some extent the methods, have been known from antiquity, and among people of various nations and creeds, thus showing that it does not depend upon any particular belief in theology or miss-called "Science," so much as upon certain conditions of mental and physical receptivity or impressibility, which may, no doubt, be to some degree either aided or hindered by beliefs. But the philosophy of the process, which is necessary to the generalizations of a true science thereof, has been little understood, except as made clear by Modern Spiritualism through its qualified exponents.

We have little room here to expound either the Philosophy or the Science of Spiritual Healing, but will briefly remark that while it recognizes the being and the potency of the Universal Spirit as the ultimate source of all life, health and healing power, and the ability and readiness of the Infinite Spirit to impart health whenever and wherever suitable conditions exist, yet it does not discard the use of intermediate agencies in the process, nor commit the folly of denying the existence or ministration of individual spirits; nor does it indulge in the absurdity of declaring "matter" to be either "nothing" or a mere "reflection," or that "disease is a belief," or that "there is no matter, and mortal things are beliefs," and so on.

A rational Spiritual Philosophy, as we apprehend it, distinguishes between matter and substance (sub stans, that which underlies). It regards matter, not as an eternal, indestructible entity, but only as the transient form temporarily assumed by some portion of the eternal substance or Spirit—a form which renders it for the time palpable to the physical senses of man and subject to the force of gravitation, but which may be changed from its palpable form, when it is no longer matter but substance. (This is a very different thing from saying "there is no matter," or that "matter is nothing.") Yet substance doubtless subsists in an indefinite variety of grades or gradations of refinement, tenuity, and potentiality, extending from that grade which is but one degree finer than visible matter up to that which is pure mind, spirit, or intelligence. This furnishes a basis for a conception of Being and of the universe which is intelligible and comprehensible to minds of average capacity, and free from the paradoxes and enigmas of pseudo "Spiritual" or "Christian Science."

The Spiritual Rostrum.

HADES; OR THE LAND OF THE SO-CALLED DEAD.

BY A. E. FRENCH.

[Synopsis—From The Cassadagan.]

When a person is about to leave his native land and adopt another country as his home, it is natural to indulge in anxious speculations regarding the new abode. We question all that pertains to it—draw pictures in fancy of the land to which we shall emigrate. We try to anticipate the accidents and incidents of the voyage. You and I are soon to leave our native land. We are forced to bid farewell to all the associations of this life; our exit is not a matter of choice but of necessity. The ever restless waves of time will soon wash from the sands of earth the last trace of our footsteps. In a little while the busy world will forget that we lived. Even the block of marble or shaft of granite will have been brushed away from our tombs, and those who succeed us will not know that we have loved, toiled and died.

"We all within our graves shall sleep
A hundred years to come;
No living soul for us shall weep,
A hundred years to come;
But others then our streets shall fill,
And others then our land shall till,
While other birds will sing as gay,
And bright the sunshine as to-day,
A hundred years to come."

To him who rises to an eminence whence he can overlook the great field of human life, there is much for contemplation, as well as much for sadness. Races with their busy millions come and go like the transient actors in a play. Birth and death meet and touch each other everywhere. The earth is a graveyard from polar seas to burning tropics; from the ruddy sunrise to his sadder setting; on towering mountain heights, broad-spread plains, sombre valleys and down beneath ocean floors, this world is honeycombed with the ashes of the dead. What a strange medley this field of human life! What a motley throng of beings hold high carnival in its amphitheatre! Philanthropy and sordid avarice, rosy love and green-eyed jealousy, rising hope and falling despondency, velvet childhood and wrinkled age, greetings and farewells, birth-cries and death-groans, all meet and mingle here.

Behind the drama, and pressing hard upon the stage, there lies a fathomless ocean, and from its thickly-crowded shore there launch hourly millions of mysterious life-barks out upon the waves, where the low-bending horizon and deepening clouds veil our sight. Vainly has man looked in every age after the phantom barks that have glided away, and tried to anticipate their voyage and destination.

No problem has been fraught with graver interest, or presented more insuperable barriers to human thought, than the origin and destiny of the soul.

Some ancient philosophers taught that all finite life is a disintegration of the infinite, hence when death kisses down the eyelids still, we are all absorbed into the Universal Soul. This theory is still in active force in the thought of our time; unpleasant as it may seem to some of us, it is, nevertheless, far above that blank materialism which proclaims that death ends all. Far better is it to be absorbed in this Over-Soul, as the dewdrop is at last absorbed in the ocean's broad expanse, than to burn out like a candle in its socket, or vanish like a bubble on the surface of the sea. I can have patience with those who, looking out on death's mysterious sea, and as human life-barks glide away beyond their sight, still believe they are not lost; but I have no patience with the make-believe scientist or thinker who looks in a cradle lit with a baby's smiles, or a coffin garnished with death's sweet kiss, and says that each is an empty illusion. The smiles of the cradle are borrowed from the hope of life, and the pale tenant of the coffin, with mute lips, proclaims this life has been transformed somehow or somewhere.

It is a fact worthy of note, that man in every age has drawn his pictures of the land of the dead very largely from his own conditions and surroundings. To him the destiny of the soul is measured by what he sees, hears and feels; hence Hades, or the land of souls, is light or dark, cold or warm, savage or civilized, high or low, just in proportion as fate has dyed the warp and woof of his poor life with his environment.

[The intuitions of the savage, the Bushman of African jungles, the New Zealander, Kamschatkan, Greenlander and other races were shown to have a pictured idea of heaven corresponding to their conditions and desires, and the speaker continued:] Deeply impressed have I been in studying the views of the various tribes of North American Indians, regarding Hades, the land of the dead; some of their traditions are so beautiful, it were well for us to accept them. They have not been cursed with the thought of hell or the devil, only where contaminated by the missionaries of Christian civilization. Many of the aborigines believe firmly in the return of spirits, as Longfellow made the ghost of the dead come back to sing the song of Hiawatha. Some of the Indian tribes make the future world very closely allied to this. I was touched when I read the request that old "Black-Bird," a chief of the Omahas, made when dying: he said: "Bury me on a high bluff on the banks of the Missouri, where I can see the boats pass by on the river." So soon as he had ceased to breathe, it is said they set him upon his favorite steed and heaped the cold earth around him. If the old warrior is looking from the bluff to-day, how changed is the scene which greets his vision. His muddy river is spanned by iron, and the dashing engine, with its heart of fire and arms of polished steel, vomiting from its dusky lips great clouds of smoke, bears another race in magnificent palace cars away to the Golden Gate where the sun kissed his wigwam, and then sank into the sea. The rude tents of his people are now gone, and a beautiful young city stands where the old warrior chased his game.

The highest civilizations have offered us nothing clearer or more touching regarding the state of the dead than the simple superstitions of some of these uncivilized people. Indeed, so-called civilization is at best a braggart and egoist. It steals virtues from barbarity and stamps them as its own. It lifts its hands in holy horror at the wars of savage tribes, but builds gunboats, polishes guillotines, establishes navy-yards, manufactures dynamite and powder to carry on its own hellish wars. It laughs at the Indian's Great Spirit, but holds up to the world a magnified Jew, Pagan or Mahometan. It points with the lily finger of the millionaire's wife, or Saratoga belle, at the poor old woman carrying her pappoose in the heat of the summer's sun or chill of the winter's storm. But this same Christian civilized millionaire's wife is too inhuman to nurse her own child or care for its wants. What a stupendous fraud this boasted civilization is! Gunpowder and Bibles, churches and jails and houses of prostitution; presidents and governors, courts, judges and hangman's cords; thefts, robberies and saloons, where blear-eyed devils cajole youthful innocence into hardened criminals.

We are sending out missionaries to Christianize the heathen, but I have sometimes thought it was high time the order of things was reversed, and the heathen sent out missionaries to humanize us.

[Returning to the subject, Hades, the Land of the Dead, the beliefs of the Romans, Greeks, Plato, Zoroaster, Achilles, the Buddhists and the Christian religion, with its various denominations, were set forth and compared in a graphic and instructive manner; then, coming to the spiritualistic philosophy, the speaker said:]

Let us ask the Spiritualist, what do you know about Hades, or the land of the dead?

Has the seer of Modern Spiritualism lighted the dark recess behind the tomb? Has the New Dispensation revealed to our poor sight the land to which we shall emigrate? Who among us has seen the cloud-capped summit of its everlasting hills? For whom have angels or spirits drawn the veil that they may behold the majestic rivers, singing birds and blooming flowers, in the land we are so soon to enter? Where is that land, brother and sister Spiritualists? Is it up in some fair star that smiles down to us from the great deep of heaven? Or is it down beneath the gloomy cavern of avenues whither the old Greek looked with anxious eye and pensive thought? Or is it a vast belt or zone interlacing the stellar worlds? How much more, my brother or sister, do you know about the land of the dead than your Orthodox neighbor? Some of you claim to have been holding converse for more than a quarter of a century with those whose life-barks have touched the other shore, whose feet have climbed the immortal hills, and who profess to love us still: What have they told you? What information have they given you on which you can rely with utmost confidence regarding that life? I confess for myself that with all that has been given us from the other side, I am in a measure left to-day to draw my own poor picture of your world and my world so soon to be.

If you will permit me to voice the central thought of the Spiritual Philosophy, we will affirm, first, that Hades, or Soul-Land, is a real world, more real and substantial than this earth upon which we dwell. It is builded out of finer and more perfect material. Did you ever stop to think that we live to-day in a phantom world? This grand old planet, with mountains lifting their hoary heads above the clouds, valleys green with living verdure, lakes glistening like a silver sheen in the sunlight, oceans lifting their billows in sullen grandeur, singing birds and mountain rills, is, after all, less real and less permanent than is Hades, the land of the dead.

The only substantial thing about this world is its changes. We live. This continent upon which we dwell is only the dust of older continents picked to pieces by the hand of time, and then wrought up by Nature's all-potent forces into new forms. Continents that once were peopled with life, are now slumbering beneath the waves of the sea. Where plow-shares now turn up the virgin soil, huge leviathans of the deep once roamed with vain pride, and then vanished away like a passing meteor. Where now the inhospitable desert stretches its broad expanse, once flowers smiled in the kisses of the dew.

Ours to-day is the transient world, ours in the to-morrow will be a permanent world. I love to think that this is true. I have nursed my flowers, and grieved that they so soon should fade. I have builded structures, only to see the hand of time slowly yet surely demolish them. I have basked in the smiles of summer, only to grieve that autumnal winds should scatter its leaves with ruthless hand.

To me, therefore, the proposition that Soul-Land, or Hades, is a real world brings with it much of satisfaction, as I behold the changes in this.

Second—It is a vast world. "No pent-up Utica," no Greek Hades or Hebrew Sheol, beneath the gloomy caverns of this world. It is not a little narrow Orthodox coop, builded somewhere above the stars, where pious deacons live in inglorious idleness throughout eternity! It is not a sea of fire where mocking devils hiss, and dark damnation broods, but a vast world with capacity sufficient for all who shall migrate thither in all the ages to come.

How vast must be this world of the dead! How many millions will pass out into Hades during the life-bearing period of this planet! And yet what is the contribution of this little planet upon which we toil and dwell, compared to the countless millions of worlds which people the vast depths of space. So vast must be this world that we are constrained to no longer call it a world. Let us call it a universe. Let us say it is the visible side of this universe, its larger, better, deeper and truer side.

The fact that we cannot see it is no proof that it does not exist. So curiously constructed are our eyes that they only take cognizance of certain objects within a certain range. There is a diminutive and a great world all about us that we cannot see; there are forms of life so small and others so extended that we cannot behold them. There may be hundreds and thousands of modes of being all about us which we have no sense capable of apprehending.

What knows the blind fish in the darkened cave of the world of color? What knows the sea-monster of life on land, and what knows the horse, the ox, or the bird of life in the depth of the sea? In the incipient life of the bird it is bound within the shell of the egg, wholly unconscious of its power to cleave the air or bathe its plumage in the warm rays of the sun. This universe is many-sided, and to most of us it is only in supreme moments that we rise to heights whence we can behold its spiritual side.

Hence we are led to a third affirmation: That Hades lies all about us. It interlaces, overlaps and underlies this world and all worlds peopled with busy life. It is not necessary to go afar up or descend afar down to penetrate beyond the realm of sensuous matter.

Within every vital organism there is an invisible side lying beyond the realm of physical apprehension. It eludes the laboratory of the chemist, it laughs at the scalpel of the anatomist, it scorns our yard-stick and all other physical appliances, and yet so real is it, that it is the only enduring side of organized life, and so near is it, you cannot separate it from it.

We need neither go down nor up to find other modes of being. Nor is it necessary that the soul, cut loose from its prison-house of clay, should ascend or descend to reach this spiritual universe. As the tree has its invisible life-force, as the rose has its aroma, so this universe is everywhere enveloped by its invisible spiritual universe, real, permanent and substantial; so this invisible side has in its more refined and spiritual sense, plants and flowers. There birds of brilliant plumage float in ambient air, singing sweetly through the long summer days. There wooded cliffs look out upon the sea, and glassy lakes turn up their crystal lips to meet the kisses of the moon. Bros. Davis, Swedenborg, and other seers, claim to have seen all that we have here intimated.

Fourth—They tell us that it is a world dotted with homes, as we dot this world with homes for ourselves and those we love. I am glad to believe that this is true. When I look over this earth I see this love for home threading like a silver thread of light through all departments of life. Even the little ant toils to build its mound. The beaver is a home-builder. The bird, too, is a home-builder, it builds its nest for its young.

All animal life seems to find some sacred spot, some place it consecrates. It may be beneath the shade of a generous tree, or on the banks of a flowing stream. It may be in some spot where a crystal spring bubbles forth to slake its thirst; or it may be a cavern temple unthinking Nature has left in the rocky cliff with doors ajar. Home-building is the instinct of the animal and the aspiration of man. The poor savage will select some spot where, with boughs and bark of trees, he can shelter his dusky babe from sun and storm. The tired peasant never gets so weary in his terrific struggle on labor's ceaseless battle-field that he will not seek, in the deepening twilight, some humble cot, where the vines creep up toward the lowly roof, and half-clad children watch for his coming.

If there is one being above another for whom my heart yearns with tenderest pity, it is the one who has no home. To me, the man or woman who is homeless is like a wandering bird cut off from all its kind. Home is a poem, a benediction, a prayer; home is the dream love has on earth of the glories that await it in heaven! Did you ever think that man is the only creature who is dissatisfied with the home that he builds? He always has an ideal before him, hence the form and style of material of his home constantly change. The first beaver and the last build the same; the swallow of to-day and the swallow of a thousand years past build their homes precisely alike. The first eagle and the last hatch their young in the same form of nests; but man's home is progressive. Paleolythic man made his home in the caves. Neolythic man built his poor hut from the unpolished bark and limbs of trees.

As civilization moves onward, homes become more artistic and beautiful. If in our present state of knowledge man is enabled to build his cottage or home so fair, what beauty and skill will be displayed in home-building on the other side. How many busy hands are building at this moment homes for us there. They are doing for us perhaps at this moment a labor of love, as the expectant mother prepares with deft fingers the garments for her unborn child.

Fifth—The law of association obtains there as here. In Hades, or Soul-Land, the relations born of friendship or family are maintained with renewed force and vigor. Special and personal friendships there blossom into their most perfect flower. The pictures of Damon and Pythias are no longer an idle dream. On those serene heights where the dead abide, excarnated souls know the depth and meaning of Platonic love. They know what it is to rise above sex-impulse and passion, and blend together in unselfish union, as the fleecy clouds meet and blend in the hour of twilight. Nor does love escape its more earthly and human manifestations. Families are bound together by deathless ties. The maternal heart beats there for her child as on earth. Father-love, mother-love, husband-love and wife-love continue to burn and glow in Hades—more perfect and beautiful in development than earth can know.

In this world we judge of the value of particular places and locations by the societary privileges they offer. The schools, churches, literary culture, morality and integrity of the inhabitants, are all taken into account in our estimate of it. This being true in this life, what social wealth there must be for you and for me in Hades, or Soul-Land! There dwell the wise and good of every nation and clime. What company for the philosopher! Who would not yield every dream of earthly bliss for the society of Socrates, Plato, Descartes, and our own Emerson! What poet would not delight to sit at the feet of Homer, Goethe and Shakspeare, and listen to the fresh melodies they breathe! What statesman would refuse to exchange earthly honors for the society of Solon, Lycurgus, or our own Washington or Lincoln! There dwell the world's poets, musicians, artists, philosophers, statesmen and philanthropists. Hence, all that pertains to the social life of man may find in Hades its largest, truest and deepest expression.

Sixth—The Spiritual Philosophy affirms, in direct opposition to the theology of our time, that the law of progress obtains in Hades, or Soul-Land, as in this world. Evangelical Christianity declares that all progress ceases at death. "As the tree falleth, so it lies." This is the foundation-stone of modern Orthodoxy. It affirms that our future life, its happiness or misery, depends wholly and entirely upon what we believe in this life. The Spiritual Philosophy protests against this narrow and unsatisfactory view of Hades. It says we have the same opportunity, and perhaps greater, for growth on the other side than we have in this life. It affirms there is not a hell so deep that the divine love cannot penetrate it.

There is not a soul so low that it may not rise to higher heights of being. All hells are temporary and conditional. There never was and never will be a special and local hell where damned souls dwell in a sea of fire. Such hells exist only in the distorted minds of ignorant and vindictive priests who use them to frighten reluctant sinners into the folds of the church.

We carry to Hades, or Soul-Land, our hells and heavens with us. We build them by our lives here. Wherever hate, envy, jealousy, avarice and lust reign, there is hell.

Look into the bloated face and bleared eyes of the drunkard; look at the blanched cheek of the poor, unfortunate prostitute; look at the pinched face of the miser, and you shall see in each the shadows of hell.

We need not go to Hades to find hell; unlock the door of the millionaire's castle and you will often find it.

Hell is not a public domain; it is a private and personal estate. It is a hidden and ungarnished chamber in the soul.

We shall all carry our hidden rooms, our hells, into Hades; there souls suffer as here, but the door to progress is open before them. They have an eternity in which to grow. What encouragement, what hope in this thought for you and me! What if our progress is slow, there is an eternity before us! What if we are misguided to-day, in one of those golden to-morrows hurrying with winged feet to meet us we shall be known as we are. What if the hand of disappointment does rest cold and hard, it cannot forever chain us. What if love does weep for an hour over the cruel wounds she has received, there is an eternity in which they may heal. What matters it, my brother, if your home is humble, if your wife and children are poorly clad? What if you do have to work in summer's sun and winter's storm, with no holidays, no rest for your tired feet—you will have another chance in Hades, or Soul-Land. The contest will not be as uneven then as now. There are no walls of caste, of creed, of wealth, or of sect, in Soul-Land.

Who can measure the hope this thought of eternal progress kindles in the soul! How grand to live! How gloriously grand to die! I tremble with joy when I think what we may become! If a babe can grow into a philosopher, statesman, scientist or orator in one brief life, what vast possessions will Hades, or Soul-Land, give!

Is your sight dim, brother? cheer up, your vision shall be opened there! Are your ears heavy? wait a little longer and sound shall be restored! Soon you shall hear the musical beatings of the Infinite Heart over the crystal sea of life! Has age plowed furrows in your cheeks, withered your limbs, and dried your blood? Grieve not! The faded rose shall return! You shall walk again with nimble feet. Returning angels are at this moment holding up torches to your eyes, so you can see over the willow-fringed river the white gates that open into the Eternal City beyond!

Written for the Banner of Light.

THEY ARE NOT DEAD.

When creeping shades foretell the sway
Of twilight's soft, entrancing spell,
Our loved and lost come flitting back
Where old-time scenes and memories dwell.

We sit before the flickering flame
Of quiet hearth on winter's night;
And dream of days and faces gone,
While wistful tears bedim the sight.

A vacant chair in cosy nook,
A vanished hand or pencilled page;
Some little gift, or faded flower,
Are held more dear than heart can gauge.

They are not dead, our well-beloved,
Their presence lives each hour and day;
Their care foresees, protects and leads,
When thorns and snares our steps delay.

We know they come in pitying wise
When toil and pain attend our lot;
We know their strength is freely ours,
Their faithful hearts forget us not.

What peace untold broods o'er the home
Where death is shorn of dread or fear;
The smile, the kiss—the lingering touch
Are all unchanged—to souls still near.

'T is through the rent and misty veil
The spirit-world is half revealed;
A power divine sends angels down
To light the way to realms unsealed.

GEORGIA DAVENPORT STEVENS.

Dover, Mass.

Seventy-Fifth Birthday of Hon. Warren Chase; Forty Years in the Field; Congratulatory Testimonial at Paine Memorial Hall.

As set forth in these columns last week, a delegation of the Boston friends of Hon. Warren Chase celebrated with appropriate exercises, on Thursday evening, Jan. 5th, his attainment of the age of seventy-five years of mortal experience, and the rounding out of a forty years' term of service on his part as a public advocate of the New Dispensation.

The exercises occurred at Paine Memorial Hall, on Appleton street. Dr. H. B. Storer officiated as Chairman, with his usual tact and skill; and all present seemed filled with an appreciation of the occasion and its lessons.

Shortly before eight o'clock the people were called to order by Chairman Storer, who proceeded to explain the meeting and what it proposed to emphasize in eloquent and concise fashion:

Bro. Chase, he said, was indeed to be congratulated at having attained the age of seventy-five years of earth-life—forty of which had been devoted to the wearing cares incident to the path of the pioneer in the cause of truth—with his faculties still undimmed, and his full ability for active service in the field still capable of demonstrable proof. Some thirty-four years ago he had made the acquaintance of Mr. Chase in the city of New York, whither he (the speaker) had gone as a delegate to a Spiritualist convention; and the friendship then formed had endured to the present hour.

Bro. Chase commenced life as a free-thinker, or materialist; he did not hesitate to give expression to the agnosticism which then ruled his mind; when he did not believe the existing order of thought regarding human life and its probable outcome, he did not hesitate to proclaim it; and when the time came that he did believe in a future life and in the bearing of the present upon the next, he showed equal courage and persistency in making that fact known also.

The speaker believed that Bro. Chase was the first advocate of the Harmonial Philosophy as set forth by Andrew Jackson Davis; and did valiant service for the betterment of human conditions at a time when the glamour of a false theology blinded some of the keenest intellects of the world, and any reform, if it hoped for a hearing, must approach the people, hat in hand, through church channels, and "for Jesus's sake."

He referred to the bigotry of the churchmen who, in the early days of the great temperance movement, refused to allow women, the wives of reformed drunkards, to tell from the pulpits of the land the story of their great temporal salvation! It was because of the earnest efforts of Bro. Chase and those of his class in this country, that the pulpit at last became open to the voice of Temperance, whether it used the lips of a man or of a woman in the expression of its measurably Apocalyptic message. Bro. Chase went into the fight for temperance on moral, not on religious grounds; then he went further, and demanded equality of the sexes and freedom for the slave! Of him it might be said, as of one of old time, "The common people heard him gladly"; his long life had been devoted to the righting of their wrongs with a sturdy fidelity which told that underlying principles, not the shifting influences of "every breath of doctrine," were at work in his mind.

Dr. Storer recommended that all who had not should read the book of Bro. Chase entitled "Life-Line of the Lone One," and also keep in mind the sequel thereto which he is about to bring out; since by such action they would become much better acquainted with the true and sterling merits of his (C.'s) character than any words of the speaker could accomplish toward making them so.

The little stream which took its rise among the rugged hills of New Hampshire three quarters of a century ago had since spread from the Atlantic to the Pacific, had extended into every department of reform connected with human progress and well-being; and the present assembly was convened to bear witness to the practical worth of its enduring influence.

Dr. Storer noted the disappointing absence of Horace Seaver, Esq., and then said he had a letter to read (which would explain itself) from another, who, purposing to attend, had been rendered unable so to do through illness:

BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, BOSTON, MASS.,
Jan. 5th, 1888.

DEAR MR. CHASE: We congratulate you that Dame Nature has kept you physically intact up to the present time; we are thankful to the spirit-world forces for thus protecting and encouraging you in your able advocacy of the grand movement through whose revealments we and others have for many years, and in the midst of much tribulation, sought to enlighten a benighted world.

Your forty years of incessant labors, by both voice and pen, all over this country, in conjunction with other able co-workers, have resulted in placing before mankind a mighty truth—no more nor less than the grand fact of immortality; the fact of direct spirit communion between the world of causes and the world of effects; the fact that we still live after the dissolution of our physical bodies.

Should you pass to spirit-life ere we are called up higher, it is our earnest wish that you report to us promptly. Should we go first, we shall make it a point to report to you whenever the first opportunity offers.

Enclosed you will find material evidence of the appreciation in which you are held by

Your humble servant, LUTHER COLBY.

N. B.—I should have been present in the form at your ovation had not illness prevented.

Mr. J. T. Lillie then favored the audience with a fine vocal selection, after which Miss Lucy Barnicoat was introduced to the people.

Miss Barnicoat prefaced her remarks by reading "My Birthday," by the poet Whittier, and then proceeded to note, in advance, the fact that as it was due to the efforts of Mr. Chase, and such as he, in the past, that women had found admission to the public rostrums of the several reforms, the presence of Mrs. Lillie and herself on an occasion like this was eminently appropriate. She spoke of the service which she personally knew Mr. Chase had performed, at camp-meetings in Maine and elsewhere, where she had met him and where the young admired him, the middle-aged appreciated him, and the old honored him.

She regretted the enforced absence of Mr. Colby, whom she considered a valued personal friend and a stalwart bulwark of the cause of Spiritualism which was so dear to the hearts of those present.

She closed by thanking all who had given the encouragement of their presence to this testimonial, and by the expression of hearty wishes for the success of Bro. Chase in the future.

Dr. Paxson, of Philadelphia, gave several interesting personal reminiscences of the temperance and anti-slavery reforms and reformers, and bore witness to the fearlessness which Bro. Chase had ever manifested in the expression of his views all along the line. He (the Doctor) had found that a man, firm in his convictions, and calm but determined in their presentation, would as a rule escape from permanent injury when brought into collision with heated opponents. Dr. P. had been, himself, tried in that furnace, when a Philadelphia mob threatened to burn his house over his head because he had at the time William Lloyd Garrison as a guest; he refused to turn that great apostle out of doors at the cry of the rioters, but his house was not destroyed, after all! The mighty inspiration of that hour had gone onward, and Spiritualism was now its point of objective expression; he adjured all to be true to its uplifting power; prophesying that by the aid of female intuition, which the New Dispensation had so strongly emphasized in its public work, the character of men and nations would be thoroughly changed ere another century had passed away.

Mrs. J. T. Lillie spoke of Bro. Chase as one who by the peculiar conditions attending his early life, had been commissioned to right the wrongs of women, and thus do valiant work for the good of general humanity. She compared him to John the Baptist, crying in the desert of human skepticism forty years ago: "Prepare ye the way for Spiritualism—the revelation of immortal life, and sure progression for all mankind." Her controls then delivered an inspirational poem appropriate to the occasion, and instinct with recognition of what the guest of the evening had accomplished for the cause when once it had made its cheering advent.

Mr. Lillie then sang, "One Hundred Years to Come," and on being encored, gave in response, "My Sweetheart when a Boy."

Mr. Chase followed; he was warmly received, and commenced with congratulating himself: There was a vast improvement in his conditions over those which existed early one morning amid the bleak hills of New Hampshire seventy-five years ago. He had then been ushered, at the very threshold of life, into a moral and social atmosphere which equalled in keenness and cruelty the wintry blasts that swept the gloomy heights around, and found none to welcome him to the mortal plane save his mother.

The life of hardship to which he was exposed in his earlier years had produced a lasting impression on all his subsequent career, making him, through a fellow-feeling of sympathy, always a friend of the poor and the oppressed on every hand. He had thus been led to champion anti-slavery, temperance, woman suffrage, and had in turn, according to his light, been a materialist, and latterly—for the forty years just closed—a Spiritualist, and a platform advocate of the claims of the New Dispensation. It had been mentioned during the evening by a lady speaker, that he had been privileged to do a great work toward opening the platform to women and breaking up the prejudice which had so long existed against woman's speaking in public; and, judging by the remarks which had been made by the lady speakers on the present occasion, and the eloquent sentences for justice and reform which were finding expression from the women of the present day, he was proud to have so grand a compliment paid to his life labors. "Perfect equality between the sexes" had been his motto for half a century, and he should hold to it till his life on earth was done. The principle involved in this motto he believed would become world-wide in its power as years proceeded.

He announced that by reason of unexpected detention, HORACE SEAVER Esq., the venerable editor of the Boston Investigator (whose presence had been expected) had not been able to attend. He was much interested in the Investigator, as it was the first paper with which he (C.) had had any journalistic experience; his first article on Spiritualism was published in the columns of the Investigator, before there were any Spiritualist papers; both himself and Mr. Seaver had been progressing since their acquaintance; he had known that gentleman when he (S.) was calling on men to "come to Jesus" to be saved, and when he (the speaker) was teaching exactly the materialistic views which Bro. S. now entertained; but since then he (C.) had stepped forward and taken up the knowledge of immortal life from and through the demonstrations of Modern Spiritualism, while Mr. S. had become an agnostic; thus both were moving progressively over the same track, though he (C.) thought he was as much in advance as ever of Bro. Seaver.

He regarded the service of the Investigator in the past as having been of great value—by its stalwart denials of then generally accepted views—in clearing away the rubbish, and preparing the ground for Spiritualism in its modern advent. Its work had therefore not been one of negation alone, but was full of a grand activity.

He spoke of the old leaders of spiritual thought who had gone to higher life since he took upon himself the responsibilities attending the promulgation of the new truth; and said, when the ground had been prepared, and the time had become ripe, the angels raised up his friend and brother LUTHER COLBY, who had fought the fight for Spiritualism with his BANNER ever turned toward the sun; amidst abuse the most virulent, and suspicions and misrepresentations the most cruel, that brother had maintained his way victoriously, and still held up the BANNER to the breezes that blow in upon us from over the borders of the heavenly land. The speaker had an abiding friendship for Bro. Colby, which the fleeting years of this transitory life were totally inadequate to measure.

He spoke appreciatively of his mother, and what she had tried to do for him; of the aid and comfort which the spirit-world had extended to him in the past through hundreds of mediums; and of the inspirations which came to him personally and ofttimes from the denizens of the higher life. He referred to the political triumphs which had been accorded him in several States of the Union, and said whatever position he had held in the past as to public office, he never for a moment had hidden his views, but had openly lectured on Sundays upon Spiritualism and its revelations—and he was sure his outspoken course in this regard had done him no harm.

He believed that Modern Spiritualism, if fully understood—as its primal facts were sure to be in coming time—would elevate and purify the race till angels and men, unfettered by present untoward conditions, would clasp hands in practical efforts to rid the world of poverty and crime.

He closed his remarks with a feeling expression of thanks to all present who had assembled to bid him farewell previous to his removal to his Western home.

The meeting closed with a few appropriate words from Chairman Storer, and the audience then resolved itself into a "committee of the whole" on hand-shaking with and general congratulation of the venerable guest of the evening.

Remarkable Tests of Spirit Identity Through the Planchette Medium.

To the Edi tor of the Banner of Light:

Some time since I contributed to your columns an account of a new medium; I have since been testing the reliability of certain communications written through planchette in presence of the lady in question, and have found them uniformly to be of a very satisfactory character.

The following, as given through the mediumship of this lady, seems to preclude the possibility of its emanation from any other intelligent source than the spirit whose personality and wishes it claims to express: I forbear to mention names in this connection, for obvious reasons: One of the three composing the circle in question visited me, an entire stranger, and said that a spirit relative of mine wanted him to call upon me, and what—as detailed by the visitor—the spirit had written out concerning myself and themselves, proved to be true; in conversing with me he related a singular case, of the truthfulness of which—as related from spirit-life—he was anxious to have some material evidence. My visitor simply gave the name of the spirit and his claimed residence—which was in a city about fifty-five miles from the town where the medium resides. I, being acquainted with a prominent, responsible business man residing there, wrote at once to him asking if he knew a man by such a name, and if so, how long he had been in spirit-life, and what caused his exit. His answer came back in due course of mail, acknowledging that such a person had lived in that place, that he was a blind man, who kept a cigar store, and that he died suddenly some two years ago under what were considered at the time suspicious circumstances.

On the strength of the above answer I wrote to my first informant, asking him to send me a copy of the communication alluded to, as I had been told that a man answering the description and having the same name had resided in the place cited, and there could be no harm in giving his message. The letter was answered in person, and with a copy of what the spirit said.

The gentleman narrated that there was a small piece of codfish on the floor at the time the three were to have a séance, and the medium's husband remarked: "I will put this fish on the table; perhaps it will attract a Cape Codder." They then sat down in total darkness, and the planchette wrote the following:

"Well, now you have hit it; you have attracted a Cape Codder. I would like to say that I am a stranger to you all here. When in the earth-life I was deprived of my eyesight and had to give up my ship, and after that I used to fiddle for people to dance by. I did that for a number of years, then I moved to —— and carried on a little business of my own with the help of kind friends.

I left this life very suddenly, and under what friends considered suspicious circumstances."

The spirit then wrote what he considered the cause of his demise, etc., etc., and continued:

"I was very fond of the violin and dearly loved music, and now have all I want. I will not say more, only that I have been gone nearly two years, and that my name was —— ——."

On receipt of the above I immediately wrote to the man living in the city where the spirit had resided, and informed him that I had the message, asking him if there had been any legal investigation as to the cause of the man's death.

Shortly afterward this gentleman called upon me, and I read to him the message from the purported spirit; he then and there declared it to be true in all particulars.

I have done my best to discover whether there was a possible chance for the obtaining from any other source of the information that came through planchette in this instance, than the one claimed for it, i. e., a spirit who wished to make his presence and identity known to mortals: but the evidence is all in favor of this latter position.

There was no money at stake in this séance; the communication came voluntarily, and the parties who were in the circle declare they never knew that any such individual ever existed; hence it cannot be accounted for by mind-reading, and I see no earthly reason why it should not be credited to the source it claims to come from.

Subsequently it was my good fortune to be in the town where this new medium resides, and in company with three others I visited her to obtain a sitting; as there was present but one of the three individuals who generally compose the circle for her séances (the rest being temporarily engaged), the medium consented to hold the sitting with her aunt, who was visiting her, that we might see how the communications were obtained. We sat down at a small table; rolls of paper were placed over the table; the planchette was put upon the paper, and the lady then placed her hand on the planchette. Soon her hand, together with the instrument, moved as rapidly as they could be moved; the aunt gradually drew the paper along as fast as it was written upon; this was done with the room as dark as it could be made. None of our party had ever seen the medium before to speak to her.

When the planchette ceased to move it was found that the spirits of the father and mother of two of our party had written their names and relationship, and also some words of advice and consolation to them, which were decidedly appropriate to the parties receiving the same—they not being much interested in the subject. The manner in which the communications were given was, however, an eye-opener to them, as there was no possible chance for deception or duplicity on the part of the lady, or any one present.

The next communication was directed to me; it alluded to my work for the cause of Spiritualism, and wrote out the first name of my father, also my mother, in this wise: "Your father," giving the name, "your mother," giving her name—associating their names with the relationship, which made it very satisfactory, as my father and mother passed on to the higher life many years ago, and there was not the slightest probability that the medium could have known of it, and the names, except by and through the aid of some spirit intelligence.

The medium's husband gave me an account of a communication that came by and through the lady's mediumship—either in writing or speaking, I do not remember which, as the lady has other spiritual gifts than planchette-writing. The purport of the communication given to me was as follows:

"A young man comes here who says his name is Harry Duclos, and that he was drowned in Crescent Lake, Crescent City, Florida. He was about twenty-three years of age, and had been gone between two and three years; and he has a mother residing in Boston, by the name of Adele Duclos."

The gentleman had examined the Boston Directory and found a name that answered to that of the mother, and was anxious that I should look it up. I subsequently called at the number and street indicated, and found the lady had removed; I then called at her new residence, and learned from her that every word was true concerning her son and his exit to spirit-life, and that she was willing the facts should be made public. I can see no way by which this communication could have been obtained except from the source represented, as the medium is not versed in Spiritualism, and even if the facts had been in the public prints years previous, it is not probable that they were retained in the memory for over two years.

I am satisfied that this lady—if proper and harmonious conditions can be maintained—will make a valuable instrument in the hands of the spirits to convince the most skeptical minds of the truthfulness of spirit-return.

☞ There is a decimal clock in Wiesbaden which is constructed on the following principle: The day has ten hours, the hour ten decades, each decade ten minutes, each minute ten seconds, and each second ten rays—thus dividing the day into ten thousand parts. A similar division is to be applied to the circle. Herr Moder, of that city, goes still further, and proposes to divide the year into ten months—the even months of thirty-six, the uneven ones of thirty-seven days each. The advantages of this decimal system are placed in evidence, and the inventor hopes to see it adopted before long, despite the present opposition.

POEMS. By David Atwood Wasson. 12mo, cloth, pp. 165. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

The author of these exquisite lyrics of the heart has passed within the veil; but in this volume he will appear re-incarnated in earthly form to the thousands who, in this sphere of existence, "knew him but to love him," for his high ideals of a true life and his lofty aspirations for the beautiful and the good. In the mention of Mr. Wasson's life and works given in the preface, the initials appended to which indicate the writer to be one of his most appreciative co-workers, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, we are told that these poems, "like the drawings of a great master, draw us nearer to him than the scholarly essays which have given him his position as one of the greatest thinkers of his time." They have long been known and greatly prized, and from sources in which they first appeared, some of them have found their way to choice collections, like the "Parnassus" of Mr. Emerson. The leading poem, "Orpheus," is here for the first time in print. It reproduces the classic myths to indicate retribution for that faithlessness which looks backward instead of forward. "The Confession" tells how the recognition of the highest human ideal, through love, changes the whole of life, from doubt and evil to faith and joy.

The third and last long poem is entitled "The Babes of God." "In it," says Mrs. Cheney, "we see the blessed spirits treading the ether, and listen to their high converse, as awe struck, but with undaunted courage, they go voluntarily to meet the vast cloud of evil and struggle which looms up dark and fearful over the horizon of infinity. But, 'The Babes of God' are already human; we recognize in them relation and individuality; and we cannot help thinking that in the younger spirit he had in thought the poet and philosopher, who, dwelling familiarly among us, yet never seemed to have lost the atmosphere of his immortal home."

The volume contains a finely-engraved portrait of Mr. Wasson, and will be eagerly sought for, and treasured with that rare spirit of soulful appreciation it richly merits from all refined and exalted minds.

THE NEW CRISIS. By Geo. W. Bell. 12mo, cloth, pp. 351. Des Moines, Iowa: Moses Hull & Co.

The author states his purpose to be to prove the existence of a class conspiracy to subvert the principles upon which the government of our nation is founded, by a monopoly of wealth. To do this he avoids statistics other than those from Secretaries' reports, addresses of leading statesmen, and political writers universally recognized as reliable. From the first page to the last it is deeply interesting—unusually so for a book of its class—and embodies information of a most startling nature to those who have given but little if any thought to the encroachments of banded capitalists upon the rights of the people. Capt. Bell, it is said, "brings to his aid a ripe experience and the benefits accruing from keen observation and extended travel among the people of the old world, where the opportunities for studying economical questions and the inevitable results of politics, are all that can be asked or desired."

A NATURAL SYSTEM OF ELOCUTION AND ORATORY, Founded on an Analysis of the Human Constitution, Considered in Its Threefold Nature—Mental, Physiological and Expressional. By Thomas A. Hyde and William Hyde. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, pp. 653. New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

Platform oratory and elocutionary readings are herein treated in a way that, while including all the essential features of previously published methods of instruction, unfolds laws and principles never before advanced. The authors are of the opinion that the first requisite for successful instruction in any form of mental science is the adaptation of general principles to the natural faculties of the mind, a knowledge of the human constitution being its basis. They have therefore adopted the teachings of phrenology, physiology and mental science as essential factors to a full understanding of the lessons they present.

A Review of the Seybert Commission.

Our thanks are due and hereby extended to Messrs. Colby & Rich, publishers, No. 9 Bosworth street, Boston, for a neatly gotten up pamphlet containing the Report of the Seybert Commission. After a careful perusal of that document, we are compelled to say that it is an unfair, unjust and one-sided statement from beginning to end. While we would not uphold fraud in any manner or form as practiced upon the public as individuals or otherwise, yet we do believe in an honest and candid investigation of facts or phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. In no one instance were the ten members of this Commission present at any investigation, and all phenomena condemned by three or four persons who were present, instead of the ten members who gave their affidavits as to trickery and falsehood in every case as being present themselves. We would ask the gentlemen of the Seybert Commission, are they spirits who can travel while in their bodies? If so, then is it not possible for spirit phenomena to be a fact? We feel that Henry Seybert, now in the other life, will not justify such a false and outrageous report, and will not allow such an unfair investigation of this, to him, important truth, to go forth as truth to the many inquiring minds. We should deem it strange that a man should leave a sum of $60,000 for the investigation of any science that he had no interest in himself, or that would be of no important interest to humanity. We cannot see, in any case given as fraud and trickery, that such a state of things existed, or could have existed, at those times of investigation.

We do know, if such a party as the Seybert Commission went with a spirit to meet fraud and trickery, rather than to fairly investigate its purity and truth, just such conclusions as they have reported might they expect to arrive at in the end. Let us have candid, honest investigators, who are prepared to receive truth where truth may be found, and falsehood, if found, utterly condemned. We do feel that the higher spirit intelligences are forcibly working to give us even greater truths and more convincing spiritual phenomena than the world has ever yet known.—The True Messenger, Boston.

A Blind Watchmaker's Skill.

Many years ago there lived in the town of Holbeach, Eng., a blind watchmaker named William Rippin, whose delicacy of touch and marvelous skill in repairing watches were famous throughout all the neighboring country. He was not born blind, either, so that his singular faculty cannot be explained as congenital. After learning his trade in regular fashion, he commenced business at Holbeach, but three or four years afterward caught a severe cold in his eyes, which resulted in amaurosis, and although under treatment of the leading oculists of the day, he became totally and hopelessly blind at twenty-eight years of age. Instead of being crushed by his misfortune, he, by great and untiring energy and perseverance, became one of the cleverest of blind men. His ability to clean and repair clocks, watches, musical instruments, and every article connected with the business, was marvelous.

He was able to work as well as before his affliction. He could do any repairs required, even turning in verges, etc. The only aid he required in taking to pieces and putting together a watch was in unpinning and pinning the hairspring, which was impossible for a blind man to do, which was done by his wife, whom he taught to work at the business after his loss of sight. He generally had one hundred watches in the shop for repairs, some of them being brought from a distance of one hundred to two hundred miles. Every watch he knew by the touch, and every customer by his voice. Having been a first class cricketer previously, even after his loss of sight he played two single-wicket matches, both of which he won. He could play cards, dominoes, bagatelle, was a good musician, and leader of the Holbeach Brass Band. He was an intelligent man, nearly six feet high, and many who saw and conversed with him were unaware that he was blind. He died early in consequence of the severe treatment for his eyes, but the prosperous business he left at Holbeach was carried on successfully by his wife and daughter until about five years ago.—The Jewelers' Review.

ATTLEBORO.—Mrs. Benj. F. Boomer writes: "The regular business meeting of the First Spiritual Society was held in its new hall on Tuesday evening, Jan. 3d. After the usual business was transacted, the annual election of officers for the ensuing year took place, which resulted as follows:

President, Walton F. Shattuck; Vice President, C. Herbert Knight; Secretary, W. S. Wilbur; Treasurer, Benjamin F. Boomer; Trustees, Charles E. Forsyth, Reuben A. Dean, Albert Sinclair.

After the meeting adjourned, the ladies of the Society furnished sandwiches and coffee, and a pleasant social time followed, which was much enjoyed.

All things considered, we are in a fairly prosperous condition; the most of our members are earnest workers, and are doing all in their power to spread the truth in our town. We have now a commodious and neatly furnished hall, having had much help from the different evangelical church-members toward fitting it up. Any speakers who would be willing to come to us for a reasonable compensation, are requested to communicate with our Secretary, W. S. Wilbur.

It is truly surprising to see the audiences which we have now, and compare them with those of one year ago; many prominent church-members and other skeptical people who once would not have entered a spiritual hall, now come out openly to our meetings. We feel truly that Spiritualism has come to Attleboro to stay."

BOSTON.—Mrs. Kate R. Stiles writes: "Pope's expressive line,

'Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring,' is especially applicable to those who are beginning the study of spiritualistic phenomena, and also to those who are desirous of developing their own spiritual or mediumistic gifts. There are too many superficial investigators—people who, having heard a rap or received a written communication, think they have wrested from the bosom of Mother Nature all her secrets, and straightway commence to circumscribe the powers of the spirit, and constitute themselves the arbiters of the possible and the impossible.

We read that 'With God all things are possible.' So, reasoning from what we have already witnessed of the powers of the spirit, we feel that there are no limitations to its powers of expression, even while robed in flesh.

The poet has said 'We need not die to go to God,' nor is it necessary for us to pass through the change called death before we become possessed of our spiritual inheritance.

The spiritual phenomena have a deeper significance than man in his present state of unfoldment can comprehend. True, the outward or phenomenal expressions of the law are but 'means to an end,' yet they are the doors that open into the halls of knowledge, and we cannot afford to ignore or treat in a superficial manner one of these helps or guides to the temples of truth. We should never pause in our researches after knowledge. Let us be persistent and humble students of the great forces that govern and control life, and we shall find ourselves constantly borne further out upon the limitless ocean of limitless possibilities. Man says, 'Thus far shalt thou go and no farther.' Spirit says:

'Move on! Move on! oh! soul of mine;
The powers within thee, all divine,
Can compass earth and air and sea,
Boundless as is infinity,
Which none can fathom or control;
So boundless are the powers of Soul.'"

HAVERHILL.—Dr. W. L. Jack writes: "Spiritualism is on the increase here, and many circles are being held weekly with excellent local mediums, public and private. Both societies are actively engaged in disseminating the truth with favorable results. In the beautiful village of Groveland and surroundings are many old and true Spiritualists who are as strong as ever to do and to proclaim the truth whenever occasion offers.

Allow me, with the many thousands of your readers, to wish you a Happy New Year and many of them, and a large increase of subscribers, as usual to the BANNER OF LIGHT. I here take pleasure in extending to my numerous friends my thanks for their kind remembrances of the season, and to recognize in what they have done the sunshine of their souls shedding its light and warmth upon my daily path."

FAIRHAVEN.—E. E. H. writes: "Far away in my country home I read the fair pages of the pure toned BANNER OF LIGHT. The messages from the spirit-world I particularly enjoy, and would not give up my belief in spirit return for all this world's wealth. Each succeeding number of the BANNER seems more and more interesting. Miss Shelhamer's beautiful story, Mrs. Townsend-Wood's letter in Dec. 10th number, and much more that I might add, greatly pleased me. I am particularly impressed by the entire absence of all sentiments and expressions distasteful to refined minds on its pages, and hope the editor may remain many years upon earth and be permitted to continue in the good work."

ASHBURNHAM CENTRE.—Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Alonzo Townsend write fully endorsing the mediumship of Mrs. M. A. Charter; expressing great pleasure with what they have received through her instrumentality, and recommending her to the investigating public wherever she may go.

Illinois.

CHICAGO.—J. C. St. Charles writes: "I am no Spiritualist, so to speak, nor have I ever believed that I could communicate with my dear friends who have passed over until a few weeks ago upon visiting your city. I have called upon several well known mediums in Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, New York, Providence, and many other cities, but never gained any satisfaction until I met in Boston last October Mrs. W. A. Rich. I had become somewhat discouraged in my efforts previously made, but since my sitting with Mrs. R., I am convinced of the truth of communicating with spirits. Through the mediumship of this lady I had the pleasure for the first time of conversing with my dear friends who have passed over the river. The manifestations were most wonderful. Not being a believer, I did not know what to do, and was almost crazed with delight; and to think, too, that all these years I have until now laughed at the word Spiritualism. I have had several sittings since with Mrs. Rich, and have sent many of my friends to her who have gained very valuable information through her mediumship. I should advise those who do not believe in Spiritualism to call upon her and learn for themselves the truth of what I state. I could not, and said a thousand times I would not, believe in Spiritualism. But I was obliged to after my first sitting with Mrs. Rich. May she meet with success, and the good and glorious work go on."

CANTON.—C. McCall Black writes: "In behalf of our brother, A. R. Tisdale, I feel that perhaps it is due you and his home friends to know something of his sojourn in the West among strangers. As a man he has won the esteem and respect of all who met him. As a speaker he came into strange fields to labor—came where no friendly feeling awaited the subject he expounds (having no society here and but few friends of the cause). He fought the battle for truth single-handed, and won; and so pleased were his hearers that a plan for his return was agitated, with the result that the largest portion of the amount required to secure his services from Jan., '89, to June inclusive, was raised. We gave him a Godspeed as he left us, Jan. 6th, for other fields.

During his stay here Mr. Tisdale sent to the editor of the Register—in which paper it was published—an outline of his religious creed, the leading points of which were that he believes in a God—one whose will and nature are revealed through nature and its law, and that the only true worship of God consists in cultivating our moral and intellectual power, with a view to becoming all we may possibly become, so that our influence may be exerted for good upon the largest number possible of our fellow beings."

New Jersey.

PATERSON.—R. Parkinson writes: "The Spiritualists of Paterson met last Sunday, Jan. 8th, in Fidelity Hall, corner of Market and Church streets, for the purpose of organizing a Society, and have decided to continue holding meetings there every Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, and hope all interested in the cause will come forward and assist them. Our friend Dr. B. M. Lawrence gave a very pleasing and suitable address for the occasion, and in the evening a very interesting and instructive lantern lecture in Mr. Bently's parlor. We shall be glad to hear from any medium who will come forward and help us in the cause. Address R. Parkinson, Secretary, 1012 Madison Avenue."

Connecticut.

NORWICH.—W. F. Peck writes: "No one can read the BANNER OF LIGHT editorials and remain ignorant of the fact that its editor is sound on all the reforms of the day. This is consistent with the spirit of our glorious philosophy. The person who thinks that the only mission of Spiritualism is to bring positive evidence of continued life has utterly failed to sound the depths of its teachings; has not gotten near enough to touch even the hem of its white robe. And yet how many there are of professing Spiritualists who appear to have no other conception of its mission, no ambition or care beyond its phenomena. If they can demonstrate that man lives after death, and, perhaps, in addition, that the Orthodox hell and heaven are myths, the measure of their desires is full, ambition is satisfied, they are content.

Such people to me are not Spiritualists, they are merely Spiritists; too narrow and selfish to reach out beyond their own circumscribed natures, the world is in danger of being no better for their living in it.

It is gratifying to be able to point to the thousands of noble men and women in our ranks who are marching in the very forefront of the army of reform, into whose souls this new light has shone with a radiance so bright that they reflect it on all around them. We number among us a very much larger proportion of reformers than any other religious body can claim, and yet I am constrained to ask right here, What are Spiritualists, as a body, doing for the cause of humanity?

The fact that our loved ones who have passed from sight still live and can communicate is a glorious thing to contemplate, but it is of far less moment than the spiritualizing of mortals who are still on the earth.

Spiritualists should be on their guard, or the divine inspiration that has been poured upon them will be withdrawn because they have not made proper use of it. Let us take warning by the fate of the Christian Church, which, without fresh and vitalizing influxes from the world of souls, is trying to live on the inspiration of eighteen hundred years ago, and is little more than a withered corpse, a parchment-colored mummy.

But will the spirit-world cease its work even if Spiritualism as a distinct movement ceases to be? Never. Spiritual influxes are not confined to any sect or body. This great spiritual awakening is manifesting itself in every department of life; it is the undercurrent of the mighty agitation of thought that is shaking the political, social and religious systems of the world today; it is the moving power of the grand reforms that are sweeping over the entire globe, and its influence is a permanent factor in human destiny.

Let us take our rightful place in the front rank of the battle for humanity. We cannot afford to be laggards; if we drop behind the army we will have the mortification of seeing others reap the fruits of this spiritual uprising."

NEW HAVEN.—The following document is self-explanatory:

"We, the undersigned, would recommend to the kind attention of the public MRS. Frank Boyden, formerly Mrs. Hattie Lovette, who has labored among us for a number of years, as a most successful business and test medium. Her abilities are among the first, and give much satisfaction to those who have consulted her.

She is to make her home in Boston henceforth; and while we regret very much to part with her, we can one and all, as members of the Society, wish her God-speed in her mediumship in the new home which she is about to enter.

343 Howard Avenue. THOS. T. DAVIE, Sec'y."

New York.

BROOKLYN.—Emily B. Ruggles writes: "It seems but just to the Spiritual Society of Brooklyn, and to Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, that we should report her remarkable success. Her audiences have been large and deeply interested in the evidences given of the truth of spirit return. At times her control 'Ikabod' convulses them with laughter, and in her instructive and pathetic moods many eyes are wet with tears. An instance of this occurred Sunday, Jan. 8th, when she told us how she came to know the truths of Materialization. Her mother-heart longed to hear from her baby that had gone from her arms to join the angels. Mrs. Twing went out from Boston to Jamaica Plain to Mrs. Brightman, and in God's own light her baby was put in her arms, and played with her earrings, and an M. D. present said, 'that is a real live baby, Carrie Twing.' She held it close to her heart until it dissolved, and nothing was left but a little white lint on her dress. Mrs. Twing told us of the perfect test conditions of that séance—bare floor, cabinet a kersey blanket hung across a corner of the room. She was an entire stranger when her name was called out by a spirit who gave her full name, and spoke of personal incidents in their lives. The spirit said, 'Your heart aches for your baby; I will go and get it.' So while Mrs. Twing stood by the open aperture she saw the spirit go to the medium, extending her arms with several wavy motions, and then bring the baby out to her—a real living, laughing, playing baby—her very own.

Mrs. Twing is giving sittings daily, and every evening holds séances in the parlors of friends. Mrs. Fred. Haslam gave Mrs. Twing a reception Thursday, Jan. 12th, in her elegant parlors, and the day following she (Mrs. T.) held a séance for the benefit of Mrs. Sue B. Fales, of Boston. Our people are hungry for tests of spirit-return, and come in throngs to be fed by the positive evidence that 'Ikabod' gives."

Maine.

AUGUSTA.—E. H. Bigelow writes: "Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Bucksport, held a very satisfactory séance with us Sunday evening, Jan. 7th. He cited sixty-four full names, often giving the middle name and age, with descriptions and incidents. All of the tests were fully recognized. The Doctor came to us a stranger—this being his first visit to our city. We found him a genial, pleasant gentleman, and our best wishes follow him on his arduous labors."

Michigan.

DETROIT.—F. E. Dingman writes: "In this age of spiritual unfoldment the demand for proof can be heard on every hand. In Detroit, my native city, the cause is prospering, but we are in need of earnest and good mediums. Mr. Augustus Day has built a fine hall especially for use in the advocacy of our cause—Spiritualism. May the appeal which has so often been made be answered by the spirit-workers, for the children need to be led to the knowledge of Spiritual Philosophy."

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—A correspondent writes: "Mrs. M. Eugenie Beste is here at present, at 524 Eddy street; she will remain here for a few weeks, and then will return to Los Angeles and San Diego for the rest of the winter. There is much interest taken in Spiritualism, and a great demand exists for mediums. Mrs. Beste is kept very busy, and is growing strong again in this beautiful climate."

A Vivid Contrast.

Twenty thousand clerks unemployed, overcoats in pawn, tramping the streets, looking for work; wives hungry, babies crying; cold weather coming, the doctor's bill unpaid.

Twenty thousand gin-mills in full blast.

White slaves fighting the wolf at their door with needles that net them thirty cents a day.

That's one side.

Miles of blocks of houses, each costing from $30,000 to $500,000 to build, in which families live, each spending from $10,000 to $150,000 a year.

A hundred capitalists, each with convertible assets estimated at from $1,000,000 to $150,000,000.

Starvation on the one hand, waste and extravagance on the other.—"Howard," in New York Graphic.

HOUSEKEEPERS that fail to acquaint themselves with the value of JAMES PYLE'S PEARLINE in the kitchen and laundry deprive themselves of the most convenient and useful article of the age.

Essence and Substance:

A TREATISE ON

Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,

Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

A REVIEW

OF THE REPORT

OF THE

SEYBERT COMMISSION

APPOINTED BY

THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA

TO INVESTIGATE

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE

AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE.

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

Price, per single copy, 10 cents; postage free.

IF A MAN DIE,

Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.

It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.

It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

The Spirit that Rules Our Churches.

The Boston Sunday Herald takes for its text in an article in a recent issue: "The Social Lie in Religion," and strikes straight into its discourse with the unqualified statement that "if there is any one drawback to the Christian faith in its practical ministration in this city among what may be called the society churches, it is that there is one sort of religion set forth from the pulpit, and quite another practiced by the people on the plane of the pews." The Herald cites the fact, by way of illustrating its statement, that "Sunday after Sunday, in the representative churches in Boston, you shall hear the duties of social brotherhood and the relation of man to man set forth with all the eloquence which individual clergymen possess, and you would think that they and the people whom they minister to were angels of light, too perfect for the mean things of life which the rest of mankind come in contact with; but when you sit in the pews and watch the habitual attitude and behavior of the congregation, you will be wiser than you were before, and will realize how scarcely skin-deep is the religious character of the congregation as a company of professedly Christian people."

Plain talk, but timely and richly deserved. No softer words suit the actual case. For all the good done, the preacher in one of our society churches may as well read verses selected from the poets, or intone passages from the Psalms of David. All that he actually accomplishes is the unworthy feat of flattering the sense of self-righteousness that is pampered in such a high degree by his congregation. The amount of true religious feeling excited in their natures is fairly expressed by The Herald's well-grounded charge that persons attend a religious service habitually from one year's end to another, without ever having the slightest recognition from either pastor or people, which is often the case in our leading fashionable congregations. In several of our city congregations, it asserts, there has grown up such a social indifference, on the ground of a certain distinction and reserve, that it is regarded as a breach of good manners to behave with even Christian courtesy toward those who worship side by side with you in the same tabernacle. A person may rent a seat in one of these society churches, and attend on the Sunday services regularly for a year or more, and in all that time never have spoken a word with a single communicant, or even with the pastor. Well may he feel disgusted with the shallow show. This is the very kind of congregations, too, that cannot abide so common a religion as spirit-communion inspires. They will want to sit down on the right hand and the left of the throne itself, in the kingdom which they fear will be none too good for them.

This reprehensible, this shameless condition of things, The Herald avers, is as true of a dozen parishes in the city as it is of any particular one. The idea seems to be, it says, to freeze out by supreme indifference the strangers who resort to these churches and would like to join heart and hand in their work. The new comers ask for nothing more than Christian welcome and sympathy; which conveys the sense of brotherhood in a common cause. They would be certain to find it in a Masons' or an Odd Fellows' Lodge. But they discover that the church is composed of a company of individuals who use their Christianity for social purposes which centre in their personal satisfaction. The result, according to the confession of The Herald, is that the hollowness of our Christianity is patent to every one, and that the Christian religion is constantly discredited among those who claim to be its friends. And it fitly describes such an affectation of exclusiveness as "a fashion of this world which is a disgrace to congregations which call themselves Christian."

It is in the face of allegations such as are contained in the above recital that the preachers bewail the falling off of their congregations and lament the increasing number of empty churches. Is at all to be wondered at that the people from whose industrious labor all the taxes are ultimately paid should open their eyes to the true state of the case, and unite in a demand that church property, thus devoted to exclusive use, should be subjected to taxation like all other property? If it is not the Christian nor any other religion which is taught in them, but merely the mode of practicing social hauteur and fashionable exclusiveness, then, we say, there remains not even the shadow of a reason for any longer exempting them from bearing their share of the common burden. This is but the plain, common sense view of the subject.

And it is from these same churches that so many people are satisfied to take their cue of vilifying and ridiculing Spiritualism. If they really believe Christainity is so much its superior, let them attend these society churches long enough to see for themselves what sort of a religion Christianity is, in the light of such illustrations. Let them try the freezing-out process which these exempted churches know so well how to employ on others who are not of their set or class. We know they would soon enough have their eyes opened by their experience and observation. They would welcome an all-embracing religion, such as genuine Spiritualism offers them, with a gratitude never before felt in their intercourse with the churches. Think of Christ entering one of these churches and finding hardly a standing-place under the gallery!

Robert Southey on Spirits.

For the sake of giving colloquial form, and thus a more flowing and flexible spirit, to his meditations on society, in his book entitled "Colloquies on Society," the late Robert Southey thought best to introduce the excarnated spirit of Sir Thomas More into the dialogue, in an intangible though not an invisible form. What he has to say, therefore, by way of preliminary explanation, becomes specially interesting for its speculative character in relation to the existence, presence, and communicating power of spirits. Southey feels compelled to confess that many persons would be inclined to think him superstitious, because he is not ashamed to avow his persuasion that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in their philosophy. His strange visitor thereupon asked: "You believe, then, in apparitions?" And Southey answered at once: "Even so, sir. That such things should be is probable à priori; and I cannot refuse assent to the strong evidence that such things are not to the common consent which has prevailed among all people, everywhere, in all ages; a belief indeed which is truly catholic, in the widest acceptation of the word....If, then, there are moments wherein I, who have satisfied my reason and possess a firm and assured faith, feel that I have in this opinion a strong hold, I cannot but perceive that they who have endeavored to dispossess the people of their old instinctive belief in such things have done little service to individuals and much injury to the community."

Then the apparition of Sir Thomas More inquires of Mr. Southey whether he thinks all the stories which are related of an intercourse between men and beings of a superior order, good or evil, are to be disbelieved. Mr. Southey replies that "in the scale of existences there may be as many orders above us as below." He asserts that our knowledge of creatures so minute that they never could have been discovered without the aid of glasses would seem "not less incredible to skeptical minds than that there should be beings which are invisible to us because of their subtlety. That there are such," he added, "I am as little able to doubt as I am to affirm anything concerning them.... My serious belief amounts to this, that preternatural impressions are sometimes communicated to us for wise purposes; and that departed spirits are sometimes permitted to manifest themselves."

His spirit visitor then informs him as follows: "I am a [decarnated] spirit, and the form in which I now manifest myself is subject to none of the accidents of matter." And he requests Mr. Southey to feel and be convinced, extending his hand to be grasped. The latter held forth his own to accept it, not without a vague apprehension that he was about to receive an electric shock. He describes the effect as more startling than electricity would have produced. "His hand had neither weight nor substance; my fingers, when they would have closed upon it, found nothing that they could grasp; it was intangible, though it had all the reality of form." Looking closely at his features, he recognizes the same which were so excellently painted by Hans Holbein—those of the great Sir Thomas More. Soon recovering from the mingled feeling of fear and veneration which kept him silent, he collected his spirits, and ventured a series of interrogations. In making answer, Sir Thomas More observes that "inasmuch as the world has any hold upon our affections, we (spirits) are liable to that anxiety which is inseparable from terrestrial hopes." And that "the future is as uncertain as to you; except only that, having a clearer and more comprehensive knowledge of the past, we are enabled to reason better from causes to consequences, and by what has been to judge of what is likely to be. We have this advantage also, that we are divested of all those passions which cloud the intellects and warp the understandings of men."

Describing the leave-taking of his spirit visitor, Southey says the sentence he last uttered was no sooner completed than he was gone. "Instead of rising from the chair he vanished from it." He was at a loss for an illustration of the instantaneous disappearance. "In the same indivisible point of time when I beheld the distinct, individual, and, to all sense of sight, substantial form — the living, moving, reasonable image—in that self-same instant it was gone, as if exemplifying the difference between to be and not to be." On the following morning, after calling to mind every circumstance of time and place, he felt convinced that the apparition was real, and that he might again expect it. Mr. Southey at the time of writing these Colloquies on Society in two large volumes was poet laureate of England. In order to introduce the work to the reading public, as he thought with most effect, he created the apparition of Sir Thomas More, who was beheaded by the order of Henry the Eighth because he persistently withheld his assent to that monarch's divorce from Queen Catharine. No doubt the conception itself was a pure poetical fancy, but in working it out Southey has expressed views concerning the future state which are identical with those now taught by revenant intelligences through the modern mediums, and has put himself on record as a professed believer in the return of spirits to the scenes of earth, and their ability to hold free communion with its inhabitants.

The Daily Press.

The arrant mendacity of the sensational daily press, which pries into the closets of the most respectable citizens to ascertain whether or not any skeletons are to be found there, is becoming such a nuisance of late years that the public mind is seriously agitated in consequence. When nothing can be found to hang a loop upon, then these penny-a-liners manufacture out of whole cloth, so to speak, gross fabrications about individuals of the highest respectability. It is a species of venality that should be speedily suppressed.

A case of the kind referred to lately occurred in this city, in which the Boston Daily Globe was the chief offender, although its editors profess to be respectable men. In that sheet, on Jan. 12th, appeared over a column of close print, headed in glaring capitals: "Where is the Gold Fish? Commodore Vanderbilt's Millionaire Daughter And Her Connection with the Spiritualistic Inner Circle. How the Heiress Was Deceived and Fleeced in This City." The whole thing is a gross libel upon the estimable lady so rudely alluded to—only because she is a Spiritualist. It is asserted that "she was a hypochondriac," etc., and "at length in despair of self-preservation, she threw herself into the hands of a faith-healer—[whatever that may be]—and from that moment there was no hope for her: it was her first plunge into the pool of Spiritualism." [The words we have designated in italics were printed in the Globe as a catch-line in full-face type.] And then the writer goes on to ask: "Who was the lucky healer?" and answers in the following paragraph: "Dr. A. Hodges, electrician, faith-healer, and heaven-born physician!" etc., etc.

And right here we would in all seriousness ask: Why is it, because a person acknowledges himself or herself a Spiritualist, that he or she should, on every occasion possible, be held up to ridicule? None can say aught against the lady so shamefully referred to by the Globe reporter. The last Sunday's edition of the New York Sun, in alluding to Modern Spiritualism there, says: "A catalogue of the prominent people in this town who believe in Spiritualism would be decidedly astounding. Mrs. La Bau, the late William H. Vanderbilt's sister, does n't hesitate to avow her belief, and there is no reason why she should; E. H. Goff, the President of the biggest manufactory of electrical apparatus in the country, and owner of the Graphic, is said by his friends to be a believer. There seems to be some affinity between electricity and Spiritualism: Edison is known to be deeply interested in both subjects. Ex-Gov. Hoadley is a student of both. These educated and intelligent disciples of the new creed... are seekers after truth, and believe the veil between the material and the spiritual may be lifted."

Now comes the finale to The Globe's sensational twaddle: Dr. Arthur Hodges, than whom no more upright and responsible gentleman resides in Boston, who is a remarkable trance medium and a most excellent clairvoyant, and hence a very successful healer, became indignant, as a matter of course, at the publication alluded to above, and replied to the scurrilous article as follows:

"WHERE ARE THE GOLDFISH?"

To the Editor of the Globe:

In your Thursday morning's edition, in an article with the above caption, there appeared so many erroneous statements that to deny them in detail seems useless. It must be very amusing to hundreds of your readers who are or have been my patients to learn for the first time that I had adopted the faith cure. It must be news, too, that I wear glasses.

I know absolutely nothing about the faith cure, only what I have read or heard in a general way, so I never could have practiced it. I have too good an opinion of your paper to believe you will allow so ridiculous a story to go uncontradicted merely for the sake of publishing a sensational article. I am too well known, having been in practice in this city for twenty years, and hundreds would gladly testify to my integrity professionally, and as a gentleman. I am sorry to spoil the article of the ambitious reporter, but I feel it a duty I owe The Globe, knowing its great love for truth. I can but feel, however, that there is a future for that reporter somewhere (I am speaking of this present life). He has talents of a high order, but they are dangerous as now utilized, which I think you and your many readers will admit now that you have heard my side of the story.

The Ross Case Disposed Of.

The case of Charles R. Ross, who was indicted in the Superior Court in this city, under public statutes Chap. 203, Sec. 65, for "obtaining money by a trick or device," has at length come to an end. Asa P. French, Mr. Ross's lawyer, having moved to quash the indictment on the ground that the offence was not covered by the statute, as this is not obtaining money by a trick or device, Judge Bacon heard arguments on the motion last October, and, Jan. 14th, after a further hearing, sustained the motion, on the ground that there was no statute under which mediums could be indicted and convicted.

Immortality Demonstrated.

On our fifth page will be found a notice of the issuance of the third edition of a work which has since it first appeared steadily grown in public favor. In the past it has been known under the style, "Biography of Mrs. J. H. Conant," but the publishers in preparing the new edition have decided to give the work the more comprehensive and significant title which it now bears—that should have been given it in the first place—and which does a greater measure of justice to the important and varied character of its contents.

The Spiritual Phenomena Association, Meeting on Sundays at 2:30 and 7:30 at Ladies' Aid Parlor, 1031 Washington street, Boston, has—we have authority for saying—expended more than one thousand dollars the past year in placing the phenomena of Spiritualism before the public. All who are interested should attend its sessions.

MRS. RICHMOND'S LECTURES, a new one of which is published every Saturday in pamphlet form, under the general title of "The Weekly Discourse," have reached the forty-fifth number of their second volume and attained a wide circulation. As a compendium of spiritual teachings they are highly valued, and are the means of enlightening many minds with the truths of the New Dispensation. They are issued by the Spiritual Publishing Co., 64 Union Park Place, Chicago, Ill. For sale by Colby & Rich, Boston.

☞ A. M. Whipple, who contributes (sixth page) a memorial to the late Newton Reynolds, of Troy, N. Y., writes us under a date too late to make the correction, that this gentleman's decease occurred Dec. 14th, instead of Nov. 14th, 1887.

A. B. Richmond's Great Work.

It is with much pleasure we announce that the new volume entitled: "A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report; or, What I Saw at Cassadaga Lake," by A. B. Richmond, Esq., of Meadville, Pa.—mention of which as forthcoming has several times been made in these columns—will be brought out from the press of Colby & Rich on Tuesday, Jan. 24th.

A running glance at the well-filled pages of this sterling book will convince any one that it is no superficial, transitory affair, sent forth to meet a sensational demand created by the work it reviews, to pass from public notice as soon as that does; but a compendium of facts that can be employed with advantage so long as there exists among us one man who questions the truths upon which the teachings of Modern Spiritualism rest. An advertisement in another column gives the price of the book, and other particulars.

Notice.

As we have a press of matter on hand that requires immediate publication, and as the subject-material given at our Tuesday Free Circles by Spirit Father Pierpont will be as readable a few weeks hence as at the present time, we have been advised by that Intelligence to defer printing the reports of said Tuesday séances until the Thursday circles have been reported and published. The latter, consisting of personal communications from individual spirits, require immediate attention, and are therefore given precedence at this time. We shall resume the publication of our Question and Answer Department—the séances for which will be held on Tuesdays as usual—within a very few weeks.

The Soul.

This new journal, the legitimate successor to the Facts magazine, starts out on the broadest possible basis for the study of the soul forces. Its editor is a thorough Spiritualist, who has for several years been a careful observer, and stood on all occasions a firm advocate for spirit phenomena.

Mr. Whitlock in The Soul will continue to give special attention to phenomena; and its Facts department will be as interesting as ever, while an opportunity will be given for free discussion on all psychical subjects or action. Facts has always been free from personal abuse, and this praiseworthy course Mr. W. announces will also characterize The Soul.

Onset Bay Grove Association.

At the annual meeting of the Onset Bay Grove Association, held in Boston on the 11th inst., the following officers were elected for 1888: President, Wm. D. Cremation.

We noted recently that the New England Cremation Society, of Boston, had disbanded, bequeathing "the good will," etc., of the establishment to the kindred Massachusetts Society, at Worcester. It is now announced that an earnest effort is to be made by the Directors to secure additional stock subscriptions by personal canvass in Worcester and Boston, and it is expected that $10,000, the amount desired, will be raised. The intention is to build and equip a crematory in Worcester the coming season.

☞ Dr. J. S. Billings, surgeon in the United States Army, lectured last week at Huntington Hall, Boston, on "The History of Medicine." The lecture was the sixth of his course before the Lowell Institute, and in it the Doctor took up the relations of the physicians to the State, and the history of medical and surgical education, from the early times down to the present. In early Rome, he said, as in Greece, India and Egypt, medicine was kept in the hands of a particular caste, the same as the parchment medicos of this country have been trying to accomplish. The law of Hippocrates, said the speaker, gives the necessary qualifications for a medical student of his time. Hospitals were first established as Christianity came into vogue. They were in charge of monks, and principally attended by monk physicians. In the twelfth century a large number of leper hospitals were established, notably St. Giles of London. Orders of knights to attend the sick soon sprang into existence. The medical faculties of Montpellier and Paris were next discussed, and their characteristics formed the subject of many amusing stories. The separation of surgery from medicine was next spoken of, and its various changes down to the present century, formed the subject for the last part of an interesting lecture.

☞ While THE BANNER OF LIGHT has for many years endeavored to impartially record all public meetings in Boston and elsewhere, when properly reported, it behooves those interested to give this paper the credit which legitimately belongs to it. It is very ungenerous, to say the least, that any through prejudice or self-interest should seek to make it appear that THE BANNER has not treated them fairly. We desire to act in harmony with all the various workers for the Cause, and therefore ought not to be misrepresented as we have been of late by certain parties in our ranks. The duties devolving on our position from week to week are extremely arduous; we desire to do the right thing by every one; and individuals who are just and discriminating in these matters will clearly see the unfairness, under such circumstances, of those who are endeavoring to place us in a false position before the public.

☞ Thomas B. Jenkins, editor of The Horticultural Art Journal of Rochester, N. Y., sends us a message purporting to come from the spirit of the late Marshall P. We are informed that the medium through whom the message was given is a person of high moral character, and worthy of confidence and esteem.

An Appeal to the Clerical Mind for Light.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The recent effort of the Boston Herald, on which you commented in your last issue, to obtain light from the clerical mind on the great question of immortality, has been productive of very interesting results. Twenty-two replies (for I leave out that of the Theosophist) from as many learned divines to the question, "What are the strongest proofs and arguments in support of the belief in a life hereafter?" ought, indeed, to shed a vast deal of light upon that subject—ought to go far toward the annihilation of the skepticism and agnosticism that at present so widely prevail in regard to a life hereafter.

These replies, which are from some of the most eminent and learned representatives of Protestant Christianity, including a few of the most scholarly Unitarian and Universalist divines, with one representative each of Roman Catholicism, Judaism, Swedenborgianism, and Occultism or Theosophy, are particularly interesting and instructive, not in showing how much knowledge these persons, whose vocation it is to preach immortality, really possess to support a belief in the continuity of life and transmute the skepticism of a large part of mankind into an abiding faith in its reality, but as a virtual confession on their part that they really have nothing to offer that is able to bring conviction to any inquiring, reasoning mind. Some refer to the reappearance of Jesus to his disciples and others after his crucifixion; but they seem to realize how exceedingly difficult it is, at this time, to make so astounding and incredible a statement at all acceptable to any mind that is not willing to assent to it on mere blind faith. Besides, the Trinitarians have eliminated from that event, even though proved to be authentic, every element of logical evidence of man's continuity of existence; since the fact that an incarnate God, after the destruction of his physical body, rose from the tomb and appeared to mortals, by no means proves that such is the universal destiny of mankind.

The Biblical Scriptures, held to be the "word of God," the offspring of an infallible inspiration by the Divine Mind, contain a vast number of spiritualistic accounts of the appearance of angelic spirits coming in human form, and some, also, of the excarnated spirits of noted persons manifesting themselves to mortals; such, for example, as Samuel to Saul at Endor, and Moses and Elias to Jesus and some of his disciples. Why didn't the ministers, who have so implicit a faith in these scriptures, prove their authenticity and their alleged infallibility, and then point to these spiritualistic accounts, which would, however great their antiquity, have settled the question; for, if a single instance of actual reappearance after death can be proved, it shows, finally, that there is a life hereafter, since God's laws must be universal and immutable. But no, they can offer only theoretical, metaphysical, speculative "arguments," which will convince no one, and will scarcely impress at all one mind in a hundred; and yet they are the "strongest" they can present.

The only persons who claim to have any actual knowledge on the subject of a life hereafter, who have been observing, collecting and recording facts in proof of it for the last forty years—facts that many of the best minds of our time have observed and endorsed—are entirely ignored in this inquiry. They are ignored by the Boston journalist, although his city swarms with them; and their facts, and the record of those facts, are ignored by those teachers whose doctrines, for which they are paid to preach, are based on the reality of a future life. If there is no life hereafter, or if these religious teachers do not believe there is, or cannot give a satisfactory reason for the faith that they profess, what, it may be asked, is the ethical character of their position as teachers of immortality, or as ministers of a religion the cardinal truth of which is the deathlessness of the immortal soul—the "resurrection of the flesh," and the final judgment?

If the Boston Herald is friendly to the churches and their ministers, it is quite unkind or inconsiderate on its part to ask such a question of those who, it ought to have known, can give no satisfactory answer, though it is their profession to know about it all there is to be known or learned from any and every source—not merely to discourse eloquently on the subject, while imparting nothing of any logical value. So long as everything goes on well with their parishioners or members of their congregations; so long as there is no heart-rending bereavement, no "Rachel mourning for her children" and refusing to be comforted—at any rate by such clerical speculation and metaphysics as they have sent forth to a skeptical world through the columns of the Herald—such "arguments" may be available, if not really to "support belief," to support the clerical reputation for culture, learning, and eloquent diction; but it is nonsense to suppose these utterances to be of the slightest use to the people at large, who are hungering for spiritual food; nay, as these ministers are all the while saying, are dying—dying eternally—dropping one by one into a bottomless abyss of perdition, NEVER to be rescued, but EVER to suffer the unutterable torment of a "second death."

It almost looks like a providential interposition to make these clergymen, the irrational and suicidal enemies of the spiritual facts of this time, demonstrate, under their own signatures, the need of just such a revelation of the life hereafter as God, the Father and Preserver of all mankind, has vouchsafed them in these days of spiritual skepticism, arrogant denial and blatant materialistic dogmatism. The modern spiritual manifestations on the sensuous plane, with all their concomitants of the "open vision," are plainly what the great mass of mankind need to be saved from the epidemic of materialism, which, until the middle of this century, was fast sweeping all religion—all belief in, or even hope of, immortality—from the human mind. Then it was that the "windows of heaven were opened," and the hosts from the spirit-spheres commenced their work—a work which has now been carried on in every part of the civilized world—for the modern evangel of immortality has needed no mortal missionaries; it has been self-propagative, and has been literally carried around the world, all in the space of forty years, and in defiance of persecution, scoffing and derision, especially from those who ought to have been the first to have welcomed this new light, and to have recognized its importance and value. Nevertheless, even after forty years of these manifestations—a struggle of nearly half a century between truth, newly revealed, and antiquated error—these professional divines still pursue the policy of ignoring this new revelation; or, as the Jewish ecclesiastics treated the Christ, they give it a mock-trial and crucify it as "fraud." Then, with the scoffing, hooting rabble, they cry out, "Come down from the cross and we will believe on thee." There may be some Judas among the disciples who is ready to join in this cry, for selfish reasons; but the great body of them, though grieved perhaps, are undismayed; for they console themselves with the consideration that no spiritual truth has ever gained a general recognition until it has suffered its Calvary, and had its Resurrection. HENRY KIDDLE.

☞ Messrs. Harrison, Farrington & Co., wholesale grocers in Minneapolis, Minn., sent, under date of Dec. 31st, a circular to their two thousand customers, requesting each to become a subscriber to The Voice, a prohibition campaign paper, published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York, offering cash prizes to the amount of five thousand dollars. The circular is itself a powerful plea for aid in efforts to put a stop to a traffic that, says Dr. J. G. Holland, every year fills "sixty thousand homes with shame and sorrow, loads the public with a burden of pauperism, crowds our prison-houses with felons, detracts from the productive industries of the country, ruins fortunes, breaks hopes, and breeds disease and wretchedness." Associated press dispatches state that some of the customers of the firm, who are engaged in liquor selling, are very angry. Hugh Harrison, the senior member of the firm, says, in the dispatches: "Our course will, doubtless, hurt our trade with a class of customers, but we gave this no weight. We thought only of the right, and did it for that reason alone." A firm that dare say: "Our goods are for sale, but not our principles," should be respected and protected by public sentiment.

"SHE."

"Did you see She?" said the wide-awake girl,
Up at the Hollis Street?
She is nicer far than the Great Pink Pearl,
She is just too awfully sweet."

"No, I have n't seen She," said Miss Intellect
In the tone of those who deride;
"I went to see 'Nero,' as you might expect,"
And her glasses glistened with pride.

"Of course you did," cried the witty maid,
"How exceedingly stupid of me!
I might have known that you 'd choose," she said,
"To gaze at a classical He."

Several years ago a friend of ours was cured of dyspepsia by partaking of ham and eggs. A very unusual prescription, it will be said. No doubt it was; but nevertheless it cured him. This much we know. Now we learn that another person has been cured of this dreadful complaint by breakfasting on country-made sausages; the authority for which is Dr. Richardson in the American Magazine. The account is as follows:

"'Everything I eat in the morning disagrees with me, doctor,' remarked a patient a few days ago. 'It has come to a point when, if I take any solid food before noon, it becomes a source of heavy discomfort.' 'Have you ever tried any home-made sausage?' 'No. Why, I never could digest that, doctor; it is too greasy.' 'Well, perhaps so,' was my answer; 'but, as some really good results have shown up lately, I would like you to try it.' And, sure enough, the highly-seasoned fatty food was quietly digested, and proved just the required morning meal. It is worth trying in every case of forenoon dyspepsia when ordinary diet fails."

"Miss Phelps and Spiritualism."

In our issue for Jan. 14th, Rev. E. Case, of Beaufort, S. C., paid his respects to the very peculiar attitude (to say the least) occupied by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps toward Spiritualism. We note that in a recent Brooklyn letter to The Cape Ann Advertiser, (Gloucester, Mass.,) that thoughtful journalistic correspondent, "Eleanor Kirk," has the following, under the above quoted head, concerning this lady and her position. While we are ready to admit, parenthetically, that the author of "The Gates Ajar," etc., has wrought a good work in making spiritualistic converts—however much disgust may arise in her own mind in consequence—we really think "Eleanor" is rather too enthusiastic when she rates the services of Miss Phelps above "all the trance mediums and platform speakers put together":

"A correspondent wishes to be informed if it is credible, after writing such a book as 'The Gates Between,' that Miss Phelps can deny being a Spiritualist? 'I am informed,' she adds, 'that this author is most indignant when accused of such a belief.'

Well, we are 'informed' of a great many things, but it is mighty difficult to get at the hard pan of facts. If Miss Phelps can send such literature broadcast over the earth, and not have an abiding faith in its truth, then she is a woman utterly devoid of conscience or humanity, and this cannot be. For Miss Phelps to use her genius in such a way, would be to mock at the most sacred things of 'life, death and the great hereafter.' This writer has made more converts to Spiritualism than all the trance mediums and platform speakers put together. Those who have mourned without hope have been comforted by her sweet and most practical assurances. The effect of 'The Gates Between' has been something marvelous, but it would be simply devilish if its author had not a reason for the faith that seems to be in her. Such works as these cannot be likened to other works of fiction. The subject is too sacred. Miss Phelps must be a Spiritualist in the highest sense of that much abused word."

Spiritualism Illustrated.

Mr. J. W. Fletcher delivered his lecture on "Spiritualism Illustrated" by numerous stereopticon views in Parker Memorial Hall on Sunday evening last to a large and highly appreciative audience. The music of the Adonis Quartette was greatly enjoyed. The speaker first defined Spiritualism as the demonstration of continued life, and then began by showing the Fox Family and the House at Hydesville. He then went to Jerusalem, illustrating graphically the life of Jesus, showing that Spiritualism was not anti-Christ. Then scenes from the life of Daniel Home—of Mr. Eglinton, Slade and others were given; the inside of the cabinet was revealed, and materialization explained; closing with the "Rock of Ages." It was a most excellent and instructive entertainment.

Baron Hellenbach.

The transition from earth to the land of the immortals of this distinguished Spiritualist is alluded to by our Bavarian contemporary, Sphinx, as follows:

"Our movement has received a heavy blow. One of our oldest and most active fellow laborers has left us. Hellenbach is among us no more. In this place we can give no adequate impression of what the loss of this gifted worker will be to the world in general in the domain of social politics and philosophy, and still more to us who labor to establish higher, freer and nobler views in opposition to the materialistic tendencies of the age. We hope to do more justice to this subject on a future occasion. At present we are restrained by the sorrow we feel at our loss, which must be shared by all who are, like ourselves, convinced of a future life and that the active mind of our deceased friend will still carry on its work. When such grief is felt far and wide, as it must be in this instance, an elevating sentiment is aroused in each by such unity of feeling. May this experience of sympathy somewhat soften the heavy sorrow felt by those nearest to the departed. We cordially agree with the calm and resigned words in which the wife of the deceased kindly communicated to us the news of his death:

'My husband did not live to receive your letter; but, struck down by apoplexy on the 24th October, he passed without suffering to that world the secrets of which during his lifetime he endeavored to explore. The noble spirit of him who is too early taken away can work no more in this world. May God give him eternal peace.—HUEBBE SCHLEIDEN.'"

Mr. Baxter in New York State.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The severe storm of Jan. 13th, and a minor yet annoying accident, made it impossible for Mr. Baxter to get through in time to meet his regular Albany, N. Y., appointment for the evening of that day. Of course the interested Albanians were disappointed, but there was mitigation in the fact that Mr. A. E. Tisdale, who was sojourning near, was secured, and gave a very fine discourse under the inspiration of his guides.

In Troy, N. Y., and vicinity, the season's series of stormy Sundays was continued on the 15th inst. by one of the worst of all. A goodly audience assembled, however, in the forenoon, and all were amply repaid with an interesting lecture on "The Naturalness of Physical Death." It was to some degree scientific, and in a line of thought rarely ever presented by our speakers.

The evening audience was large, and thoroughly appreciated an argumentative lecture on "'Death' as Related to the Spirit," wherein man's triple organization was discussed, combined of soul, spiritual body and physical body. Some time was spent on proving the existence of a spiritual body, and more on an interesting explanation of its transition to spirit-life. To use an old, yet expressive saying, "one could have heard a pin drop," so attentive and quiet was the audience.

At the close of the evening lecture a séance was given, during which several "departed ones" clearly demonstrated their return, gave messages and received prompt recognition.

Mr. Baxter has two more Sundays in Troy. His lectures and séances thus far have been kindly noticed by both the Times and Telegram of the city. COM.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Miss Jennie B. Hagan spoke for the First Spiritualist Society of Haverhill Sunday, the 15th inst., at 2 and 7 o'clock P. M., receiving subjects for the lectures and poems from the audience, which were treated upon by the controlling influences in a manner that held the large audiences in perfect quiet to the close. The subject for the afternoon lecture was "The Power and Permanency of Ideas." It was a scholarly effort, and no partial report can do the lady justice. Two subjects were handed up for poems, which were also used to the delight of the audience, namely: First, John G. Whittier: His poetical work; His love for humanity; The man, the work, the good. Second, Home and its Influence on Earth.

Evening Service.—The Bradford Home Orchestra, Miss Jessie M. Little, Precentor, volunteered its services, and rendered beautiful selections upon violins with piano accompaniment. Fifteen subjects were presented for consideration, all of which received a careful consideration in prose or verse, to the satisfaction of the questioners. Miss Hagan's answers to so many questions at one service is wonderful, each question receiving its proper answer from the standpoint of reason and common sense.

W. W. CURRIER.

Haverhill, Mass., Jan. 16th, 1888.

Haverhill and Bradford.—In consequence of ill health, Mrs. Susie W. Fletcher was unable to fill her engagement here last Sunday, and her place was supplied by Dr. J. C. Street, of Boston, whose afternoon address was in reference to the late railroad disaster and some considerations which govern material things—some of which are visible and some invisible, but all subject to the control of fixed and unvarying laws. In connection with his subject he remarked that astrological predictions made last October pointed to January as a month of disasters, more numerous than in that month during the previous two hundred and thirty years. Thus far the prediction had been remarkably confirmed. Up to the 12th of the month there came in succession one accident a day in America alone, where five or more persons were killed, and, added to those, minor casualties were numerous. In the evening the time was instructively given to answering questions from the audience by controls. Next Sunday the platform will be occupied by J. William Fletcher. E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass., Jan. 16th, 1888.

Portland, Ore.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In connection with the First Spiritual Society of this place, some few of us ladies and gentlemen, headed by Major C. Newell (President of the Society), have inaugurated the organization of a Children's Lyceum, and our attempt so far has met with very encouraging success.

I am the only one here seemingly who has had any experience with all the different exercises of the Lyceum, but have willing hearts and ready hands to aid me, and with the earnest feelings manifested, I feel we must succeed.

We have quite a live and earnest little Society of Spiritualists here whose members have thus far held meetings every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, at which any one was permitted to speak for or against Spiritualism. Also meetings at 7:30 P. M. for the discussion of subjects furnished by the audience, which subjects pass through the hands of a committee before they are presented.

Our meetings in the evening especially of late, have been well attended, and many are inquiring as to the truths and ways of our philosophy; but what we need most is a good platform test medium. I have no doubt that a good reliable instrument of this kind would be well satisfied, personally, and would be the means of doing much good on this coast.

The Society has given up the 11 A. M. meetings at present, so that the Lyceum can have the use of the hall at that hour.

Our Society and Lyceum meet at Red Men's Hall, corner 2d and Salmon streets.

The BANNER has many interested readers here, and many of its items are used in arguments for our cause. God speed you in your good work, is the heartfelt prayer of many readers here.

68 Jefferson street, Portland, Ore. F. M. BROWN.

Lawrence, Mass.—Pythian Hall.—Jan. 15th the meeting in the evening was conducted by our local "full-name" test medium, Mrs. B. F. Smith, giving one hundred and forty names of spirits who have entered the higher life; also a short lecture relating to the return of friends. Owing to lack of patronage among the many Spiritualists of Lawrence, the meetings for the present will be discontinued.

F. S. EASTMAN.

Lynn, Mass.—Mrs. H. S. Lake spoke in Cadet Hall, last Sunday, afternoon and evening. She had excellent audiences, and the work of her guide was warmly and heartily commended. She speaks here again next Sunday.

Mrs. A. L. Pennell

Writes from No. 18 West 17th street, New York City, that she is very busy, both publicly and privately, in doing the work assigned to her by the spirit power: "I have met with more than anticipated success, and found many warm friends and earnest supporters, and my blessed spirit guides attract more inquirers who want sittings than I can attend to. Among my first and most sincere and trusted friends are Dr. and Mrs. Dumont C. Dake. They opened their hearts and home to me when a stranger, and I shall never forget their disinterested kindness while memory cherishes one good thought or deed. Dr. Dake is doing great good, and is blessed with the love and earnest coöperation of his dear companion.

I shall long cherish pleasant and grateful recollections of the grand reception held in their parlors for my benefit, at which I met many who have been my after friends, and where I had the great pleasure of meeting in social converse the venerable Editor-in-Chief of the BANNER OF LIGHT, whom all true mediums cherish as one of our best friends and most valiant defenders.

Bro. Colby, in behalf of the thronging hosts of spirits whom you are serving as one of their most efficient mediums and co-laborers, I send you my blessing and God-speed in your good work. To all my New England friends I send a sister's warm greeting and kind remembrance.

That the new year may bring peace, goodwill and joy to all who are doing their best to serve truth and humanity, is my earnest wish."

Fitchburg, Mass.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Meetings have been held alternate Sundays, but no permanent society formed until Jan. 8th, when the First Spiritualist Association was instituted, and the following officers chosen: President, John C. Sanburn; Vice-Presidents, H. F. Smith, Dr. H. H. Brigham; Secretary, Mrs. Loring; Treasurer, Dr. S. A. Weston; Board of Directors, Dr. Charles Alexander, Mrs. Ballou, J. W. Briggs.

Last Sunday Joseph D. Stiles delivered two able discourses, after which seventy-four names and descriptions were given, sixty-seven being recognized. [The names referred to will appear in our Correspondence column next week.—ED.]

Mr. Stiles is to lecture here again Tuesday, the 29th. PRO TEM.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—J. Clegg Wright is giving lectures upon our platform that are awakening earnest thought among his hearers. His Monday and Wednesday evening efforts have met with great favor. They will be continued during the month.

The Ladies' Aid Society met at Slade Building, Room 1, Thursday evening, Jan. 12th. Full meeting. Debate on "Forgiveness of Sins," followed by an interesting test séance. Warren Chase to his Friends.

As previously announced, I have closed my forty years' public labor in the cause of spirit-life and intercourse with my seventy-five years of life on earth, and have my last book—containing a sketch of those years of labor as a sequel to my autobiography, the Life-Line of the Lone One, also a variety of other matter—nearly completed, and which I wish to bring out through the office of Colby & Rich, Publishers, before I leave for the West the first of March.

As I have not saved money enough from these forty years of labor to publish this book—which will be a work of about three hundred pages or more—all who desire copies can aid me by sending one dollar, and ten cents for postage, directed to me at the BANNER OF LIGHT office, Boston, before Feb. 26th, with full address of the sender, to whom one copy for each like sum received will be mailed as soon as the work is out of the binder's hands, whatever may be the price fixed upon it hereafter, which cannot be less, and is likely to be more than the amount named.

The book will contain an excellent photograph frontispiece, and a full chapter of select poems, some never before published, the ninth and last one of which will tell what I have learned about the spirit-world by forty years' communion with it. Yours truly, WARREN CHASE.

A REVIEW

OF THE

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

A MEMBER OF THE PENNSYLVANIA BAR; AUTHOR OF "LEAVES FROM THE DIARY OF AN OLD LAWYER," "COURT AND PRISON," "DR. CROSBY'S CALM VIEW FROM A LAWYER'S STANDPOINT," "A HAWK IN AN EAGLE'S NEST," ETC.

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wieldshis weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"; Chapter XI. gives further testimony from two witnesses; Chapter XII., "Summary," and the Proscriptum, close the volume.

"A Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report" is a strong book, and will be read; it will throw light on some disputed questions, while it cannot fail to bring out in bold relief the puerileness as well as the unfairness of the claims of the Seybert Commission. Its clearness of statement, its unanswerable logic, its scholarly style, at once original and forcible, its abundant wit and fine sarcasm, with here and there an exquisite touch of pathos, its vigorous mentality, and, above all, its loyalty to the highest principles of truth and justice—all combine to make this work a valuable addition to the advanced thought of the day.

IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work.

Message Department.

Public Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and THURSDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER will occupy the platform for the purpose of answering such questions as may be brought up for the consideration of the Controlling Intelligence.

On Thursday afternoon, JOHN WILLIAM FLETCHER, under the influence of his guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit-messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock, and services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no egress until the conclusion of the séance, except in case of absolute necessity. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits at the Tuesday séances for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who may recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of the BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case, but to LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Dec. 29th, 1887.

Spirit Invocation.

Infinite Spirit, we turn our hearts again unto thee, and with songs of thanksgiving would breathe forth our gratitude and praise. We know that when earthly powers fail, when friends fall by the way, and storms rage around us, that we can find, in communion with thee and with the spirit-world, a strength that the earth cannot give nor yet take away. We have realized, through years of sorrow and experience, that the strong arm of thy love is ever ready for us to lean upon, and that where we fail in our human understanding, thou dost send us those who are wise and true, and by their instruction and guiding power wilt lead us even through the valley and the shadow of death. We have learned, in past years, that nothing comes in vain, that sorrow and trial and misunderstanding are stepping-stones to better things, and so we shall welcome them, if they are to come in the future, and feel that, as we bear with cheerfulness the burdens that are laid upon us, we may be gaining great and useful experiences that will fit us for the life that is to come.

Father, infinite and most wise, we bless thee for all things, and with our hands placed in the hands of the angels and our hopes centred in thee, our aspirations climbing along the pathway to still higher things, we will await the coming of the new year with courage and fortitude and strength, knowing that thou who canst see all things will, when we shall strive to do our best, bring everything out as best in the end. May honor and glory and power be ever ascribed unto thy name, and may the blessing of purity and peace abide with every worker in thy vineyard. Amen.

Fidelity, on the Past, Present, and Future.

Mr. Chairman and friends, as this is the last time that you will meet here during the present year, it may not be out of place for me to voice some of the thoughts that come to mind relative to the work that has been done during the past year in the cause of Spiritualism and human progress.

It always seems wise to me to stop, now and then, in the midst of any great and important work, and consider dispassionately how that work is progressing—whether we are satisfied with what has been done, or are fully convinced that what we intend to do is wisest and best.

Speaking of the progress of Spiritualism: it was not a difficult matter to consider that subject some years ago, for then you knew just where to find Spiritualism and Spiritualists, the number was so small and the work so insignificant; you could very easily gather them both into a small compass, dissect and analyze them in a short space of time, for the public work of Spiritualism was mostly confined to small halls or school-houses, now and then, perhaps, a large public meeting, and in the home. In every large-sized town there were a few Spiritualists, and these served as a target, and many were the shots that were aimed at them. That was in the past. When I now try to find Spiritualism and Spiritualists, so extended has their influence become that I know not of a single place where I shall not find them.

The church in the earlier days was never weary of denouncing the fallacies that were taught under the guise of this new religion; but to-day the clergymen who claim the attention of the world are those who are preaching the strongest kind of Spiritualism under some other name—it is the same remedy with a different label on the bottle! In the church, then, I find Spiritualism without any apology, save that it has not yet received its name.

If I search through the literature of the present day I find a silver thread running through the works of modern writers, inculcating the very ideas which you, in common with many others, are laboring to place before the world. They are sometimes so covered up, so sugar-coated, that you scarcely realize what they are, and the public accept them without even knowing it. But this great army of readers realize that there is something in the works of certain writers to satisfy the craving of the human soul, consequently "The Gates Ajar," "Old Lady Mary," and other works of that kind, are largely read and accepted by the public, yet what they contain is neither more nor less than the essence of Spiritualism.

The satirist, the humorist, after he has exhausted every other theme whereby he can make the world laugh, falls back upon Spiritualism, and like the court fool, takes the most serious subject to make the king laugh. In every-day society in the world of men, it is a topic constantly coming up, so that I think I am safe in saying that it has become no longer an extraordinary disease, but an epidemic, and has extended its influence far and wide. Accepting this position, which I think cannot be contradicted successfully, I am not desirous of simply gaining strength from our victories, but I feel that it is incumbent upon every general to consider the misfortunes and weak places that we may be likely to encounter, or that we have encountered, in the progress of this work.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that this year has been marked by the report of a Commission appointed to investigate the subject of Modern Spiritualism, and that this Commission, after some years of profound study upon the subject, has come out with its report, which is said to be derogatory to the subject of Spiritualism; but being somewhat acquainted with the Commission, I should say that its adverse report was the most favorable one that it could possibly make. We are not at all convinced that Spiritualism is at present strong enough to carry along with it a number of individuals who are not constituted to grasp the important issues of the present day; and I hold that no clergyman, no doctor, is capable of investigating dispassionately any subject that will interfere with his daily vocation, therefore if doctors and ministers give unfavorable reports of this subject, why should they not? You will not find many persons who will admit that there has been something in the world for forty years that they have not been bright enough to find out.

The report, then, has had the effect of not troubling the waters as much as a tiny pebble would disturb the ocean, if one were to be dropped into it. Some things, however, it is well to consider. There have been exposures of fraud, or alleged fraud; there have been some unfavorable attitudes that have been assumed by those who are prominent in the cause of Spiritualism. I think, sir, that these failures and so-called exposures, and every disadvantage of whatever kind, should teach the investigator the great necessity for intelligent investigation, and that, instead of seeking more phenomena or more wonderful demonstrations, the effort should be made to more fully comprehend the demonstrations that are already made. The tiny rap, which reveals the existence of a spirit, is the master of every mind, until it is once comprehended; and until that rap is fully explained it is folly to seek greater and more marked demonstrations.

I would say, also, that Spiritualists need far more unity of action; they need to put their hands and hearts together; they need to understand that they have a cause to work for; they need to learn the great lesson of putting their feet firmly upon all scandals and slanders against their mediums and their workers; they need to understand that an enemy within the ranks can do infinitely more harm than an army outside of them. If they can remember this, if they can put their hands together in the year that is coming, if they can study the demonstrations that are given intelligently, feeling that they are working not for to day but for eternity, then we are safe in saying that 1888 will be marked with greater results and more blessed returns than have graced any preceding year.

Let us thank fate, if I may use that word, for all the failures that have come; they have been blessed if they have only brought wisdom with them. We may thank our enemies for what they have done—for an enemy only serves to test our strength—and we can forgive those who have despitefully used us, knowing that hatred and venom are the outgrowth of ignorance, and that when knowledge and love come to the human heart these things will forever disappear.

I look forward to a term of great usefulness here and elsewhere for the work throughout the world, and ask the hearty coöperation of every earnest soul for the accomplishment of the best and purest purposes. Fidelity.

Rebecca Maxim.

I did n't think I should experience any of my old trouble when I came back again, but I feel at this moment just as I did before I passed out from the body—the same contraction across my lungs, the same pressure and dryness in my throat and weakness all through my system, which, for more than two years, seemed to be stealing every particle of strength away from me. Consumption is a terrible disease, because it is so deceptive. You feel one day that you are getting better, and the next day you know you are worse; then again, after you have been ill for some time, it seems as if it was n't impossible to get well. That is the way I was, and yet I knew in my heart I had got to go.

But my sons, they were very kind to me; there never was a mother who had boys who did more for her than mine did for me, and I want them to know how much I love them now, and how I know that I was impatient sometimes—a great burden and a care—and they were always so considerate of me, and I bless them a thousand times for it.

I want to tell Marcus—that is my husband—that I am often at home with him and with Sarah, and that I am glad to see the change that has taken place. I think, taking everything into consideration, it was the best thing that could be done. I have not made him know my presence as much as I shall do in the future, because there have not been many opportunities for so doing.

My dear Orpha is with me. Many times it seems as if, from the home in the spirit-world, there was a road of golden light leading down to them, and I take the child's hand in mine, and we come down that pathway so easily that before we know it we are with them, and shortly we hear one speak to the other of something about either one or the other of us, and that is because of the impression we make on their minds.

Now I want—because I am going in a minute—to send my love to them all and wish them every blessed thing that could come to a loving heart; and tell them that when I am out of the influence of the earth, all earthly pain and sorrow is entirely forgotten; that we are happy in the spirit-life, and wait for their coming by-and-bye to welcome them with all the love they could wish.

My name is Rebecca Maxim. My husband is Marcus Maxim, of South Middleboro', Mass.

David Pearsons.

My name is David Pearsons. Although I have passed from your sight, my dear and trusted friend Lizzie, I know that I am present with you, and that you live more in the memory of the past than in the present duties and work. I always trusted you; I believed that I understood you, and that your motives, however mistaken, were always in the right direction; but now that I have stepped out where I can see you—as St. Paul said—"face to face," I find that I did not give you half your due. You have not a single element of selfishness in your character, not enough for your own good; you sacrifice yourself right and left, without expecting the least return.

I am glad to see how true a friend Sister Susie is to you. I love to see you together, and hear you speaking of the old times, and know that you are growing more in harmony with each other. When you are together I can come nearer to you, for I love you both, and always shall. I am glad that you have a small photograph of me; whenever you look at it, think that the original is looking over your shoulder. I suppose if I was to tell you that, and you absolutely believed it, you would keep looking at the picture all the time. But I am there, and I want you to know it.

Melzer is a good fellow, and I am with him, trying to influence him all I can, and to make him feel that there is an influence around him. Hattie wishes me to thank you for all that you did; she holds you in grateful remembrance. She and I have passed many happy hours together. May the new year be as full of sunshine as the past has been of shadow.

You may put me down from Cambridge and Milford, for I belong in both places.

W. R. Clapp.

If you will tell my friend Smith, who lives on Cooper street, Trenton, N. J., Mr. Chairman, that I have tried about seventy-five times to bring things round so I could talk straight out about matters which it will interest him to hear and me to speak of, I shall be glad. He is on the right track, but he gets discouraged, because he does not get along faster. That's the way with everybody in these days.

In the beginning, if people could get about three raps, or spell out one name, they thought they had a glorious time; but now, although they get messages and demonstrations, and heaven knows what, they are not as well satisfied as they were then.

If he 'll tell Mary S, when he sees her, that I should be glad to have her divide, or share what I left, with the one I intended to benefit, I shall also be glad. Tell my fellow craftsmen that I have n't given up work, but that I have greater facilities for carrying it forward now than I ever had, and that I have many things to communicate which would be of interest to them, if they could only give me a chance to do it. I do n't suppose it would be very interesting for me to enter in upon it here, but I want to send that word to them, for it will bring a ray of light to their minds, and in fact to all those who knew me; and to my friends at Trenton, I wish to send friendly greetings. W. R. Clapp, of Trenton, N. J.

Willie Langford.

My name is Willie Langford, and I want to tell my papa and my mamma that gran'ma, who came away just a little while ago, has woke up now; and she and gran'pa and Aunt Stacia, and all the rest of us, have come here to send our love to them.

Amanda M. Chamberlain.

My name is Amanda M. Chamberlain, and I wish to say to my dear husband, William M. Chamberlain, of Lewiston, Me., that I am more than happy to be able to accede to his request, and to come, even in this way, and send such words as will enable him to know that I live, and that there is life beyond the grave. The change that has taken place will, I am sure, be for the better, and I look down with approving eyes upon all things that will bring happiness to those I love.

My darling Bertha, whose heart often yearns for a message from me, must trust herself more fully than she does, and try to feel that I am with her, and that if she cannot see me she may be able to feel my presence around her. My dear child, may you always know that whenever you do right I cannot fail to be anything but happy. I strive to guide you, and to make you kind to grandma. You will not always have her, and you will never regret being kind, for I have learned this, since I came to the spirit-life, that no matter how much we may regret the evil we may do, and the mistakes that we may make, we never regret a kind word that we speak, or a kind act we may perform. So, my child, be kind to your grandmother, and to Aunt Ruth; they both love you, they both wish well for you, and your future is, I know, to be happier and brighter than the past has been.

May you, my husband, feel that I am walking beside you in all good ways, that my heart is with you, and that sometime, beyond the temptations of this world, we shall meet and understand each other better than we ever could on earth.

Cyrus E. Lord.

This does not seem much like the place where I lay and suffered so much, and used to wish through the night that I might die before morning, and when morning came, wished that I might be put out of my pain before night.

No; this is not like that place, for I was a soldier in the hospital at Savannah, waiting for further orders, and I want to say that it is a very hard thing to wait alone, on a narrow cot, with the dying and the dead all around you, and those that you would give the world to see beyond your reach or your call. That is the hard part of war you do n't hear about. Most people have an idea that war means wearing a uniform, and hearing a drum beat, or the heat and excitement of battle. That is easy; it is easy, because it is full of activity, it leaves no time to think; the hardest part comes when you are sick or wounded, or you are left behind alone, as I was.

My father and mother sit down sometimes and talk about me, of what I would have done if I had lived to be with them, how proud and happy they would have felt of me; and I can hear them talk. I have seen my mother wipe away a tear, and get up and do something to try to make herself forget about it. It's hard work for mothers to forget their boys or their children; there is something in a mother's heart that always made me believe in God; no matter how bad her boy is, she has always a ray of sunshine for him.

Dear mother and father, I have been mustered out of service; the war is over, and the Twelfth Regiment, to which I belonged, rests on its past glory and will probably never march again; but in this life to which I have come I have learned to value you both more than I ever could had I lived on earth, and I am gaining in strength and in manhood every day of my life. It will not be long before I shall take one of you by the hand, soon to be followed by the other—then we shall be together again. Think, father and mother, how pleasant it will be to look into each other's eyes and feel that we shall never say "Good-bye" again. I love you and I trust you; the shadow that is over you will pass away. I know what you have been worrying about, and how much trouble you have had within the past months. I can only say: Don't do anything rash; don't be too much troubled about it, for it is only to be temporary at best. Frank will in time free himself from his troubles.

My father's name is Cyrus Lord, and my mother's is Lydia Lord, and mine is Cyrus E. Lord, of Portland, Me.

Spoke for the following spirits:

W. W. Robbins.

A lady and gentleman come together: W. W. Robbins and his wife, Susan Robbins. He says: "We wish to send a message to our daughter Mary, and say that we are very sorry that she is not able to realize that we are ever with her. We are glad to see the pictures and enjoy them with her. If she will place herself in the proper attitude we will be able to convince her beyond a doubt." They lived in Milford, N. H.

Phineas Gay.

Mr. Phineas Gay would like to have it recorded that he has reported here, and that, in company with a number of other spirits, he will assist in the memorial service that is soon to be held. He wishes to be remembered to his friends who were engaged in the same work with him, and to say that he has found there is no limit to the possibilities of the spirit; so that he is with them at times, and then with the medium, whose teachings were always so pleasant to hear, who is so many miles away from this place.

Capt. Samuel Luce.

A gentleman now standing beside me gives me the name of Capt. Samuel Luce. He says he lived in Marion, Mass. I should like to make my wife, Mary, aware of my presence with her. She feels alone, and there are hours when it seems to her that she must get away from herself. No use to feel that way, Mary, because you can't do it; you've got to wait, wait and accept whatever pleasures come, and try to make our boy Christopher be as much to you as he can. Tell him that he has to take my place, and that when he is considerate of you he makes us both happy.

Maria.

A very beautiful spirit brings a bouquet of white flowers; her face seems as if it was illumined by a beautiful light that shines through it. She passes down to some one in the audience, puts her hand on the shoulder, and says: "I am with you, and although you do not need that I should speak to you in this way to convince you that I can come, I could not let the opportunity go, without bringing you another evidence of my love and my presence. Say that this is from Maria." She points to somebody down there.

Abbie C. Burrill.

A lady comes who calls herself Abbie C. Burrill, and says she comes from Lynn. She wishes to send greeting to her husband, John, and tell him that she is watching over the children, so that no harm may come to them. She says: "I want to thank Mrs. Todd for her kindness to me. I shall never forget how sweet her face looked the last time I saw her on earth. I am with her in spirit, and she will be glad to know that I have appreciated what was done; she smoothed the pathway of my life in moments when everything was dark."

Friends, the hour of parting has come. May you bury, as the old year dies, all enmity, all unkindly feeling and bitter thoughts, and put sweet and tender hopes in the place that they have occupied. If there is any man or woman against whom your hand has been raised, let not the old year die until that crooked place has been made straight. Remember that you pray that your trespasses may be forgiven only as you forgive those who have trespassed against you, and may God and the angel-world bless you and keep you to the end. Amen.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

FANNY GREEN MCDOUGALL.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Oct. 29th, I read a message from my dear spirit-friend, FANNY GREEN MCDOUGALL, through Miss Shelhamer. There is a test to me in the way it was given in advance of the regular order of time:

A few days before she gave this message at the Banner of Light Circle, I had received sad news concerning the health of my husband. I remember that one night, in my distress of mind, I called upon "Fanny" for help magnetically, as I could not sleep; also asking her to send me a word from her home beyond, which in this message she has kindly done.

Bellevue, Idaho. L. HUTCHISON.

TOXAS.

A dear friend sent me the BANNER OF LIGHT of Nov. 5th, 1887, in which I see a communication from an Indian chief, TOXAS ("Tauxas," as the scribe has it), and it is very characteristic. I was very intimately acquainted with his "medy," as he called Mrs. Hatch, and have received many communications from Toxas through her, even since I became a "denizen of the West." But she passed to the Summer-Land some time ago; I did not learn the date, but think it must be nearly two years since. She was a resident of Concord, N. H., when I knew her, but moved to Kennebunkport, Me., some time before she crossed the "shining river." She was a splendid medium, a pure, whole-souled woman, and Toxas was a splendid guide. I was so rejoiced to hear from him again! and I hope to hear from him often. Respectfully,

MRS. S. A. CARTER.

Exira, Audubon Co., Iowa, Jan. 2d, 1888.

WALLACE WRIGHT.

WALLACE WRIGHT gave a communication at your Circle-Room (published in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Dec. 17th) which I wish to recognize. I knew him well; he and his wife boarded with us a part of two seasons, and the facts he states are correct.

Respectfully, N. A. LULL.

IN MEMORIAM.

Samuel Roberts.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

To Spiritualists the day of mourning for friends as dead when they lay aside their mortal habiliments, and enter upon the real life of their existence, has passed. So while I would say a word in memory of our friend, the late SAMUEL ROBERTS, who entered spirit-life on the night of Dec. 31st, I would speak of the real man, alive to all that concerns himself and his friends.

As a kind husband, a loving father, a good citizen, and an exemplary man, we shall miss his visible presence, but the real man, the character, the great, noble nature, the kind-heartedness, the counsel he has given us, will remain with us; for principles taught can never be blotted out; they are living entities that never die.

Samuel Roberts was convinced of the immortality of the soul only after a very careful and thorough investigation of the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. When he became satisfied of a life beyond the grave, he began to realize the great responsibility that lay in the path of every human being. Then it was he became satisfied of true progress; that every person must build for himself or herself all that they can ever attain unto. His only Saviour was a knowledge of what to do, and how to do it.

Mr. Roberts was born in Gorham, Me., Jan. 13th, 1816. At the age of twenty-one he had acquired a common school education, and given three years to learn the edge-tool-making trade, which he followed in St. John, N. B., and in Boston, Mass., until 1852, when he left with his family for California, spending twenty-two years on the Pacific coast. Returning to Haverhill in 1874 he remained here until his spirit took its flight for the world of souls.

In 1845 Mr. Roberts married Miss Olive A. Stetson, by whom were born to him one son and three daughters, the son and one daughter preceding him to spirit-life. He now leaves a widow and two daughters to think of him, not as dead, but gone to join his two children, and a host of friends. As an earnest, active member of the First Spiritualist Society of this city, we shall miss him in all the ways pertaining to a true and faithful man and brother.

Funeral rites were observed over his remains on Thursday, Jan. 5th, at his late residence, 28 Duncan street. Dr. H. B. Storer of Boston officiated, and the choir of the First Spiritualist Society rendered appropriate selections. Dr. Storer opened the exercises by reading the following, written by Benjamin Franklin in 1756:

"I condole with you. We have lost a most dear and valuable relative; but it is the will of God and Nature that these mortal bodies be laid aside when the soul is to enter into real life. Existence here on earth is hardly to be called life. It is rather an embryo state—a preparation to living; a man is not completely born until he is dead; why, then, should we grieve that a new child is born among the immortals, a new member added to their society?

"We are spirits. That bodies should be lent to us while they can afford us pleasure, assist us in acquiring knowledge or in doing good to our fellow creatures, is a kind and benevolent act of God. When they become unfit for their purposes and afford us pain instead of pleasure, instead of an aid become an incumbrance, and answer none of the intentions for which they were given, it is equally kind and benevolent that a way is provided by which we may get rid of them. That way is death.

"We ourselves, prudently in some cases, choose a partial death; a mangled, painful limb, which cannot be restored, we willingly cut off. He that plucks out a tooth parts with it freely, since the pain goes with it, and he that quits the whole body parts with all the pains and possibilities of pain and disease it was liable to, as capable of making him suffer.

"Our friend and we are invited above on a party of pleasure that is to last forever. His chair was first ready, and he has gone before us. We could not conveniently all start together, and why should you and I be aggrieved at this, since we are soon to follow, and we know where to find him?"

The Doctor in his remarks referred to the fact of our faith and philosophy, of the very sudden yet beautiful passing to the spirit of the deceased, of his nobility of character, and that he would live in the hearts of those who knew him in his daily life; would be to them a means of bringing them up to a higher and better plane of existence; a husband and father that would not leave that home desolate, but whose spiritual presence would be with to guide and bless them, as a father that had only gone to be with those of his children and friends who had preceded him. As our friend he now stands with outstretched hand, beckoning us on to that land of real life.

The floral offerings were very appropriate. From the family a Pillow composed of white immortelles, with the word "Father," in purple; from his employés a Horse Shoe, composed of ivy leaves and violets; from friends a Sickle, the blade composed of ivy leaves and the handle of pansies; from the choir, a bunch of callas, the well-known Egyptian Lily, resting at the left hand corner at the head of the casket. Sprays of ivy were gracefully trailed about the casket.

The remains were deposited in the receiving tomb at Linwood. W. W. CURRIER.

Haverhill, Mass., January, 1888.

Dr. James R. Nichols.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The recent decease of this eminent gentleman at Haverhill is an event of particular interest to those cherishing a belief in and possessing some knowledge of the Spiritualistic Philosophy.

Dr. Nichols was extensively known as an advanced chemist and scientific agriculturalist, and through those channels of intelligence his death has already been widely noticed. He had become still more extensively known to the Spiritualistic world and those interested in the investigation of that philosophy, by the publication of a volume entitled "Whence, What, Where?" which is already passing through its eleventh edition. It is in consequence of his valuable services rendered, by offering cheering responses to that the greatest of all questions, in terms easy of comprehension, and popular with the inquiring and investigating millions, that Spiritualists have reason to momentarily pause to pay a grateful tribute to his memory.

For fully forty years Dr. Nichols had been an investigator, and had treasured up a large amount of psychic information which made it possible for him to produce a volume which has carried his name wherever the English language is spoken, and has greatly served to strengthen the thought of a large class of investigators and thinkers. He was a careful man in his phenomenal and metaphysical investigations, but he never would throw away a fact; when once possessed, it was his to keep as a treasure, bearing some relation to other, possibly, undiscovered ones. He was a constant investigator, and would readily turn from his manifold business interests and cares, to look and listen.

It is known that some time previous to his death he expressed his purpose to give to the world another volume, which should be a step in advance of the one already given, but it is not known whether or not he had begun the preparation of the manuscript. It is most probable that all which will ever be given as his thoughts upon the question of Spiritualism and the life immortal, is already before the world. Yet it is sufficient to identify him as a believer in and defender of the principles upon which the philosophy is based. Some of his intimate friends knew his last and best thoughts upon the subject, and will warmly cherish his memory as one who gave his endorsement to the principles of Spiritualism, and was an interested inquirer into its philosophy. E. P. H.

Haverhill, Mass., Jan. 9th, 1888.

Newton Reynolds.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Passed to spirit-life, from Troy, N. Y., Nov. 14th, 1887, Mr. NEWTON REYNOLDS, aged 57 years.

The funeral and the occasion of the delivery of the memorial address were largely attended by friends, business men of the city, and the societies of which he was an honored member.

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham officiated on both occasions. Her inspiration seemed a living stream of light, and, like a lofty strain of music, moved all hearers, awakening memories and hopes of a diviner life.

Though a new recruit in this department I have concluded to say a few words over the new-made grave of a fallen comrade.

Our departed brother belonged to that class of Spiritualists who knew of spirit-return before the manifestations at Hydesville; yet he gladly hailed these as substantial and positive proofs that were to make the glorious truths already his the common property of the world.

While I do not find his name associated with the earliest workers here, yet it was not long after the old society laid down its arms and disbanded that he and a few others started a circle for the development of mediums. In this circle his wife was soon developed as an inspirational speaker. This, coupled with other events, led to engaging a hall for the purpose of once more holding regular Sunday meetings, Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Ralph Osgood, now of Albany, becoming personally responsible and meeting the deficiency at the end of the year.

These meetings have continued ever since, and to these brothers mainly belongs the credit of once more raising the banner of Spiritualism in this city from the dust in which it had fallen.

Mr. Reynolds was not only an earnest defender and liberal supporter of the cause; in addition to this his home was ever open to the entertainment of mediums, where most of those visiting this city, since his connection with Spiritualism, have been made welcome. He has also aided and encouraged his wife to use her mediumship without remuneration, for the good of humanity.

His departure to a better and brighter life is certainly a great loss to the society—how great time alone can tell.

At Lake Pleasant he was also widely known and will be greatly missed. He was one of the earliest campers there, and each succeeding year found his tent pitched on the "Bluff" that fronts the great spiritual sea; here he was also the generous host; his forest home was the headquarters not only of all Trojans, but for many others who dwelt not in the shadows of Mounts Ida and Olympus. Other hosts must entertain and other hands must now welcome those who come. A. M. WHIPPLE.

WOMAN.—The substantial appearance of this new monthly augurs well for its permanency, and its contents exhibit a good judgment of what those for whom it is especially designed will appreciate. Serial and shorter stories by leading writers of fiction; papers of practical utility in every department of household affairs, with an open page for a consideration of Woman Suffrage, are among its attractions. The frontispiece of this, the second number, is a fine portrait of the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Jenny Lind is the subject of a pleasing sketch by S. Fredericks; Mrs. E. D. Cheney contributes "Woman in the Brahma Somaj"; Fred'k Schwatka, the Arctic explorer, "Flowers of the Snow," to be followed by other sketches of Arctic life and incident. "The Doctor's Eldest Daughter" is a story by Margaret Sidney, and "A Cloud-Burst" one by Patience Stapleton. The Astor Library has some of its rare treasures described, and much else of an entertaining and instructive nature is given. New York: 122 Nassau street.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—A portrait of Louis Pasteur, with a biography, leads the contents. Portraits of William O'Brien, Charlotte Gray, an efficient worker the past nine years in behalf of temperance and social reform in Antwerp, Henry George, Gen. O. B. Wilcox and Emile Zola, illustrate this month's "Notable People of the Day." C. S. Weeks writes upon "Early Experiments in Mesmerism." New York: Fowler & Wells Co.

THE FREETHINKER'S MAGAZINE.—An outline of a discourse by T. B. Wakeman on "The Hebrew Scriptures Under the Light of Evolution" is given. C. W. Stewart contributes his views of "Spiritualism," basing all he has to say upon the statement that after forty years the theory of its adherents has not been demonstrated. Basing his argument on so utterly weak a foundation, if, indeed, a foundation at all, one may judge how valueless it must be to any man familiar with a single one of the facts the writer seeks to disprove. If a conviction of the truths of Spiritualism in the minds of upward of thirty millions of people the world over, including those of every degree of intelligence known to mortals, is not a "demonstration," we are at a loss to know what constitutes one. Buffalo, N. Y.: H. L. Green.

THE ELECTRICAL ENGINEER.—In "The Wrong Way and the Right Way," the editor gives some cautionary hints of the liability to expect too much from electric motors on railways, and of the danger of indulging in such too "great expectations." The views are timely and should be heeded. New York: Elec. Pub. Co.

THE PATH.—Madame Blavatsky comes to the aid of the much talked of "Keeley Motor." The other papers relate to subjects that we shall know more of "when the mists have cleared away"—if they ever are. New York: W. Q. Judge.

What is to Become of the Young M. Ds.?

A Boston contemporary is very much exercised on this subject, and diagnoses their case in the following semi-jocose fashion. We presume certain of them at least would be glad to obtain the passage of a law by the next Legislature compelling Bostonians and others to employ them whether or no, and to the exclusion of every system of medical practice save the particular one they themselves have studied:

"What is to be done with all these young physicians? The Back Bay territory is full of them, and unless the city becomes even more unhealthy than it is at present, they must, alas, starve! Is it not painful to think of these graduates of the medical school in that sad plight? Of course, some of them have rich relatives to give them a boost, and so can wait for epidemics and patients in offices furnished in the latest household art styles without turning a hair; but the others, who wish to live up to their shingle, and make a reputation as soon as possible, I do n't like to think about. One feels as though it was really wanting in benevolence not to break a leg, or have a rheumatic fever, or some other long and tiresome affliction, just to employ them. And then, too, the question will arise, Why do these youths all choose the same profession? Every specialist, even if he does charge $15 to look at you two seconds, can't always grow rich. Pathology is a most fascinating study, but I think unless a man can be absolutely eminent in it he would do much better to select a less intellectual pursuit. Now, this world is in great need of cooks. Men are generally excellent cooks, and why should they not aspire to becoming a Soyer, or some other equally distinguished cordon bleu? The atmosphere of Boston is inimical to such a profession, perhaps, but the moral satisfaction of writing M. D., and hanging out a shingle on Commonwealth Avenue, is very much lessened when you come to think of it on an empty stomach. It was probably this common-sense view of the matter that has induced one highly educated physician here to abandon his calling, and seek his better fortune in a well-known railroad office of a distant city. The difficulty for many of us lies in an ever-increasing distaste for trade, and in the idea that the liberal professions are the next step to the aristocracy of wealth. Rank silliness, illiberal in the extreme, is yet nevertheless the motive which has planted over seventy M. D.s within less than a quarter of a mile of each other."

UNANSWERABLE LOGIC; a Series of Spiritual Discourses given through the mediumship of Thomas Gales Forster. Boston: Colby & Rich, publishers.

The work of a cultured, thoughtful and eloquent man is embodied in this "Unanswerable Logic." To those whose hearts feel the truth of his teachings, it must be an unspeakable comfort; to those who do not accept his views it is still a finished piece of literature. In one beautiful chapter, "Joan of Arc," we are told the sweet, sad story of how a simple peasant maid tending her flocks, like those shepherds of old to whom the message of salvation was sent, heard also the heavenly voices and obeyed them. Quoting from the Rev. Morgan Dix's sermon of the "Existence of Spirits," the talented author writes the following:

"Our actual knowledge is not to serve as the total of all that may be known. That you have not seen a spirit does not prove that there are no such things. What a solemn view of life this conveys! How greatly must a man's ideas expand when he takes this in mind! It is not superstition, but sober reason. We have heard of dreams, signs and omens as they were viewed in olden times. We have heard, too, of communication with spirits of departed friends, warning us of danger. We have all heard of strange signs and sounds in vacant houses where a crime has been committed. The records of the spiritualistic operations in our day show, too, that there is subject for deep consideration. Doubtless many of the so called manifestations are but pure nonsense and transparent frauds; but is it not wiser to believe that there are things happening impossible to explain except under the doctrine of the supernatural?"

There are many other authorities quoted as countenancing if not supporting the Spiritualist's doctrine. The work may be obtained at No. 1920 Madison Avenue, at the residence of Mrs. Carrie G. Forster, widow of the author.—The Baltimore American.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From his home in Lebanon, N. H., Dec. 29th, Ziba Huntington, aged 87 years.

Mr. H. was born and had always lived within a few miles of the place of his translation. Last April we laid away the form of his companion, with whom he had happily journeyed more than fifty years, and thirty-five years in the glad light of our Spiritual Philosophy. Truly a good man has left us; his was the soul of honor. Although a man of but few words, he was a great reader and deep thinker; could read the finest print without glasses, and retained his faculties almost perfectly up to his last hours. He left two sisters in Boston, a brother here (who has since passed on), and one daughter and grandson, who had kindly cared for him. The home so long made bright and cheerful by his presence is now lonely. But the plate is still laid in its accustomed place upon the board, for they feel that "though the form is laid from their sight, father and grandfather is still with them." Beautiful "superstition," if such it may be called. Who would not wish to be thus remembered?
Lebanon, N. H. L. A. STURTEVANT.

From Taunton, Mass., Jan. 5th, 1888, Willard Tripp, aged 80 years 5 months and 20 days.

Mr. Tripp was a native of Westport, learned the machinist trade, and has been identified with the Taunton Locomotive Works since their inception. Starting there in 1837, for forty years he busied himself in the same place of industry, showing the confidence and satisfaction of his employers in his skill. Mr. Tripp was twice married. Two sons by his first wife survive him; a widow and three children survive the second marriage. It is a remarkable fact that Mr. Tripp and his second wife had passed the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. He was, as stated above, a quiet, unassuming citizen, of first class mechanical skill, a good husband and father, and esteemed by all who knew him during his long and useful life of over eighty years. He was a member of King David Masonic Lodge. Death had no terrors for him. The other world always opened to him vistas of happiness and sweet converse with friends who had long since passed over to the great majority—not silent to him—and he welcomed the great change as an inevitable part of man's destiny.

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to overestimate the value of warm feet at this season of the year. THOUSANDS OF VALUABLE LIVES are sacrificed every year in consequence of DAMP, COLD FEET. Cold feet lay the foundation for PULMONARY DISEASES, so fatal to the people of our land. Could we make the world know how valuable OUR MAGNETIC FOOT BATTERIES are for keeping up a WARM GENIAL GLOW THROUGH THE FEET AND LIMBS, none would be without them. These INSOLES WARM THE WHOLE BODY, keep the VITAL FORCES UP, magnetize the iron in the blood, and cause a FEELING OF WARMTH AND COMFORT over the whole body. If no other result was produced than to insulate the body from the wet, cold earth, the INSOLES WOULD BE INVALUABLE. In many cases the INSOLES ALONE will cure RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA and SWELLING OF THE LIMBS. $1 a pair or three pairs for $2 to any address by mail. THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

AN OPEN LETTER
TO
PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism,

BY C. C. MASSEY,
Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

Letter from W. J. Colville.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

As it seems a long time since I last sent a brief communication to the BANNER OF LIGHT, and as we have just been celebrating Christmas and New Year's in this far distant part of the United States, I feel impressed to pen a few lines to my many Boston friends, to have them know that three thousand miles of territory, while it may divide bodies cannot separate minds which have once enjoyed communion on the plane of sincere friendship and true mutual appreciation. Wherever I may be I shall never forget my Boston friends, and at this time it specially becomes me to thank quite a number of them for kind letters recently received, which, alas! I have had no time to answer. I trust my correspondents will not accuse me of willful neglect, or think I undervalue their missives because imperative engagements prevent me from replying; it is always a genuine pleasure to receive letters from one's former home, where so many pleasant hours have been spent, and around which so many pleasant associations cluster. This may be regarded as a hint to all who choose to take it, and if I receive hundreds of letters and postals in a week I shall find time to read and enjoy them all.

As much is said of the delightful weather in California, and as this is my first winter on the Pacific slope, I want to give my Eastern friends a faint description of it from personal experience, fully realizing the truth of the world-wide admission that no two persons are apt to see the same object, mentally or physically, in precisely the same light. To begin with, we have had frost, but no snow and ice, except on high elevations. The hills between San Francisco and San José are thickly covered with snow at time of writing, and present a beautiful appearance in contrast to the deep bright green of the grass in the valleys. At no time of the year is the grass so green here as in midwinter. Flowers are scarcer than in summer, but by no means a rarity. Chrysanthemums and lilies are quite abundant, and there are some roses and other delicate blossoms blooming in outdoor gardens in front of houses in many places. Rain has been very abundant, and the air frequently very chilly, quite cold enough to necessitate the wearing of heavy garments; sealskin jackets and thick woolen overcoats are just as much worn here as in any Eastern city, and in some respects the cold is felt more keenly, owing to the general absence of furnaces in houses and public buildings. Stoves and open grates answer in many instances, but wherever furnaces are introduced they add almost as much to comfort as in Boston. Of course the thermometer never registers below zero, and the cold does not continue for a protracted season, though it is anything but warm for at least four months out of the year. After the rains, which are sometimes very heavy, and occasionally accompanied by strong gales of wind, and not infrequent hail, the sun bursts forth in glory, and in a few short hours we might almost fancy ourselves in the middle of summer.

Everything here seems indicative of constant change on the one hand, and of a struggle for permanency on the other. During the past nineteen months, since I first saw California, a great number of tall, substantial, stone and brick edifices have been erected. The old wooden structures are rapidly being superseded, and San Francisco can no longer be called a wooden city. Vivid contrasts are everywhere the order of the day; fabulous wealth and abject poverty are witnessed here just as elsewhere; but if common report speaks truly, almost every one is investing in some little real estate. There is, therefore, a fair prospect of the land soon coming into the joint hands of the multitude. Times are not hard, and yet money is not nearly so free as in 1886.

The interest in spiritual matters is by no means abating; it is, indeed, on a steady increase. Though there is not so much clamor and curiosity, scarcely as much apparent eagerness as formerly, there seems to be much more silent, private work accomplished, and in the direction of spiritual healing, nineteenth century miracles are veritably transpiring. Of course the Spiritualists are more or less divided—how can it be otherwise? Some want to stand still, others are determined to go ahead, and then all have not equally keen intuitions, nor are all equally ready to follow the call of truth wherever it may lead. The Golden Gate is just as firm, steadfast and liberal as ever. Mr. and Mrs. Owen are the friends of all sincere workers and of all honest mediumship. My experiences accord with those of multitudes when I say from the bottom of my heart, it was never my privilege and pleasure, anywhere or at any time, to meet warmer-hearted friends or persons more truly devoted to the work in which they are engaged, and unselfishly consecrating their lives to the spread of truth for the elevation of mankind. One institution is greatly needed here, and that is a publishing house for the Golden Gate and spiritual literature in general; eastern friends permanently residing here sadly miss the beautiful and hospitable BANNER OF LIGHT establishment. A movement is now on foot to raise funds for a building where visitors can have the same opportunities for selecting literature and attending meetings they have in Boston. It is whispered that some wealthy man is willing to donate $50,000, providing a like amount can be raised by public subscription or private donation.

Concerning the work in which I am individually engaged, I can only say it is prospering as usual. Our Sunday meetings in Irving Hall are largely attended, and we have a very pleasant hall in Odd Fellows Building, Market street, of which we have the exclusive use, where all classes and week-day gatherings are held. It is large, light, airy, well furnished, and seats two hundred persons comfortably. In that hall we have had some delightful Christmas and New Year's gatherings. The children's festivals, with Christmas Tree, of December 26th and January 2d, were particularly enjoyable; the little people came in crowds and their older friends came with them. Both entertainments ended with a pleasant informal dance, in which old and young took part with equal zest.

The New Year came in wet; at all events it was very wet on New Year's day from ten A. M. till midnight. Considering the weather our audiences were large, but the storm prevented the crowded gatherings we had anticipated. As I have often remarked, the largest audiences are not always the best from a spiritual or sympathetic point of view, and on rainy days, when it costs an effort to attend a meeting, we invariably encounter a particularly pleasant mental sphere, a sphere of earnest thought and deep sincerity of purpose. In that most gratifying atmosphere our New Year's work commenced, and I have no doubt that 1888 will be productive of more solid, substantial effort than any year preceding it.

Liberal-minded people here are getting up an anti-vaccination crusade, and it is surprising to see how many physicians, especially of the homeopathic school, antagonize compulsory vaccination. An immense amount of fuss has been made over a few cases of smallpox, probably introduced by the Chinese. The Mayor of the city and the Health Commissioners have sent letters to the Catholic clergy and other prominent people, urging them to persuade all whom they can influence, to be vaccinated immediately. Wise and far-seeing people are of opinion that a little more attention to sanitation in the way of keeping the city clean would be a more effectual precaution against cutaneous disorders, while many advanced minds, numbering among them several prominent physicians, are laboring to prove the evil and not the good effects of vaccination. This agitation takes me back to London and the early days of my public life, when I was thrown constantly in the company of Mr. and Mrs. William Tebb, Messrs. Leigh, Hunt, Wallace and other earnest and energetic anti-vaccinationists. I say now, as I said then, I would far rather pay a fine or suffer imprisonment than submit to what I feel to be an outrage upon the rights and liberties of free-born people. How is it that people as a rule are so blind as not to see through the disguise of sophistry with which the advocates of compulsory vaccination endeavor to enforce unjust and tyrannical laws? I think no one has put the matter in a plainer light than Rev. John Page Hopps of Leicester, Eng., who said some time ago in his excellent magazine, The Truthseeker, that if vaccination really does protect, the vaccinated are in no danger from the unvaccinated; therefore there is no justification in reason for vaccination as a necessary precautionary or protective measure.

I see you have already published the lecture I sent you some time ago; it has quite a post of honor in the New Year's number. I have others to send you shortly. In common with numerous other readers here I greatly enjoy perusing the BANNER OF LIGHT from week to week, and especially am I interested in the noble work accomplished by Miss Shelhamer; the answers to questions grow more interesting every week, and as to her stories they are completely fascinating. Among other Christmas presents I received a copy of Thomas Gales Forster's lectures, published under the overpowering title of "Unanswerable Logic." From what I have read of them I should say no book on the subject of Spiritualism now before the public is calculated to make a better and profounder impression among sincere students of the philosophy; it ought to sell by the hundred thousand copies. Nothing more logical, refined and scholarly has, in my humble opinion, ever emanated from the spiritualistic press. It has been my good fortune to know Mrs. Carrie Grimes Forster many years, though we have only met at long intervals; and ten years ago, in London, I met Mr. Forster. The beautiful book fully breathes the spirit of these two noble and time-honored workers.

Without having said more than a tithe of what I should like to express on various current matters, hoping I have not already trespassed too much on your valuable and generous columns, I will conclude by saying that Dr. Morton and I get along splendidly, while I find Mrs. Morton one of the most charming women and most gifted mediums I have ever met. My present engagement with Dr. M. extends till end of February. I expect to renew a contract with him, March 1st, for a brief engagement in Los Angeles, after which my temporary destination will be San Diego. I am open to Eastern engagements in the summer.

With kindest regards and best wishes to all our mutual friends, believe me, as ever, your sincere co-worker, W. J. COLVILLE.

Room 7, Odd Fellows Building, San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 10th, 1888.

St. Augustine, Fla.

[From Our Regular Correspondent.]

The readers of the BANNER OF LIGHT will be pleased to know that in this quaint and curious old city, whose foundations were laid more than three centuries ago, the matter of a continuity of life is interesting the great mass of the people as never before. Through the medium of private letters received from that section, I learn that the Spiritualist Association, which was formed and organized early in the season, largely through the efforts of Mr. John F. Whitney, is increasing weekly in numbers and influence, and has become quite a power in the mental life of the place.

The inauguration of the Spiritualist movement has developed the fact that for several years there have been a large number who have been quietly investigating the phenomena, and who have now come to the front, and made themselves known. The general interest manifested by the public to learn and understand something of the philosophy is great, and characterized with a spirit of earnestness. Circles are held nightly in various parts of the city, and medium ship is being developed in unlooked for quarters. Mr. George P. Colby, a trance and test medium, has recently given several lectures before the Association with very marked effect. The attendance was large, the hall being completely filled each Sunday afternoon and evening. The meetings will be continued through the season, and all the different phases of the spiritual phenomena will be given. This is promised by the spirit powers who are conducting the movement, and who affirm that the result of the combination of efforts will be to greatly advance the glorious truth throughout the country.

Visitors to St. Augustine will be cordially welcomed by the Association, and Spiritualists and Liberals, coming South for the winter, are specially invited to attend the meetings at that place.

It is to be hoped that this invitation will be accepted largely, and that there will be a powerful interchange of thought in that old Spanish city, whose Moorish gates, old walls and narrow streets tell of a civilization of years ago; a city wherein, in 1512, Juan Ponce de Leon sought for the "fountain of eternal youth," and whose pure and peaceful atmosphere, redolent with bright sunshine, the perfume of roses and orange-blossoms, combined with the notes of the guitar and mandolin, render it the nearest to Paradise of any place the writer of this has ever seen.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Presuming that your readers will be interested in learning what is transpiring in this region of sunshine and flowers in spiritualistic circles, I write to say that on the evening of Wednesday, January 4th, a fine social entertainment was given in North City, at the residence of the excellent medium, Mrs. Camperelle, in the shape of a masquerade party. The following ladies personated the characters indicated: Mrs. Camperelle, "Chihuahua"; Miss Sarah Harris, "Chinese Lady"; Miss Nellie Bushey, "French Nurse Girl"; Mrs. Genong, "English Bride"; Mrs. Mance, "Colored Nurse Girl"; Mrs. Hunter, "Sister of Mercy"; Mrs. Hagar, "Spanish Girl"; Mrs. Felkins, "Irish Fishwife"; Mrs. Sophia Whitney, "Nun"; Mrs. Hatchie, "Granny"; Mrs. Kirkpatrick, "Night."

The gentlemen present were Mr. Whitney, Sr., John P. Whitney, E. C. Whitney, Professor Colby, the noted medium, Undertaker Streeper, Mr. Genong, John J. Jesseman, John T. Henderson, Mr. Kirkpatrick and Gabe Pomar.

Mr. Camperelle being absent, the position of Master of Ceremonies was well sustained by Mr. Frank Proudfoot. Music for the dances was furnished by Prof. Patrick's Band. A sumptuous repast was served at 11 o'clock. The occasion was an exceptionally fine one. OCTO.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, after congregational singing, an invocation by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and a song by Mr. Lillie, Mintie Eakins accompanist, the guides of Mrs. Lillie announced for their subject "Spirit Phenomena," and said: Spiritualism differs from all other forms of religion. Spirit is the foundation and corner-stone of its philosophy. Jesus was endowed with spirit-power; he not only taught the people as having authority, but imparted to his disciples the same power, and bade them go forth and teach the truth according to their different phases of mediumship. Ancient Buddhism and Christianity are based on spirit-phenomena. Two thousand years ago mediums and seers were among the people even as to-day. Spirit-phenomena have always existed, and they crystallize into what has been called miracles, forms and ceremonies. Forty years ago raps were heard in the home at Hydesville, and have since been heard over all the world. At first they were called works of evil. Prayers were offered that they might cease; ignorance protested, and the people of to day cry out: It is untrue! But these phenomena will remain. They are the signal-lights from another life to make known to all of earth's people that life can never end; that immortality is an assured fact. The service closed with a poem, after which the President, Capt. Richard Holmes, with appropriate remarks introduced Hon. Warren Chase. He was received with applause and made a brief address.

Evening.—Following the usual preliminary exercises, Mrs. Lillie, under the influence of her guides, spoke upon "The Essential Christ," and said, "It is a blessing we have so much of hope; we look beyond the shadows and hope for the future, and when we find ourselves in the valley, hope lifts us up and bears us onward. Hope is the angel within that bids us look up and never despair. The Christ within is an essential principle, destined to redeem and overcome the grosser part of human nature. There is not a soul to-day but what dwells with the infinite." The lecture was earnest and eloquent. Its delivery elicited much applause.

Mrs. Lillie will occupy the platform next Sunday, morning and evening, at 10:30 and 7.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday Dr. H. B. Storer gave a very interesting and instructive discourse on "Man's Relations as a Moral Being." He contended that morality is the fruit of the experiences and growth of the race, and is apprehended just in proportion to the development of the race. In the earliest periods man was chiefly occupied in war and conquest, and no question of the morality of one nation or tribe attacking and enslaving another arose. But society as to-day organized recognizes the rights of each individual in a way not thought of then, and the progress in personal liberty and happiness is the result of much thinking, experience and growth.

The teachings of the church made God to be a personal being, who through revelation had given to the world a written standard of action; and the members of our churches looked pityingly, perchance contemptuously, upon the poor Spiritualist, whom they conceived to be without chart or helm. Nevertheless each churchly denomination claimed to interpret for itself, and this infallible standard became very fallible. He considered the Catholic the most logical of all; for if we must bow to authority, who so capable as the head of the church of infallibly interpreting this infallible book? He however bowed to no authority but the authority of right, and looked upon humanity as part of the great whole of spiritual existence whom we call God. All are governed by those great spiritual laws inherent in the soul which in our imperfect development we may not fully apprehend, but which, in the natural and divine order of things, will more and more assert themselves as we reach a higher unfoldment.

We were not to reach out after visionary things, but live practical, useful lives; and although we could not and ought not to be hypocrites and profess to love our neighbors as ourselves—which he considered impracticable in this age and condition of the world—yet doubtless we might in some higher state find it to become more natural and possible than here.

Next Sunday, the 22d inst., at the usual hour of 2:45 P. M., it is expected, through the mediumship of Mrs. E. Dyar-Clough, to have short addresses from several spirits, three of whom were well known to us in life here, viz: Mrs. Lydia Maria Child, Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis, Miss Adelaide Proctor, Mrs. Doct. Edgerton and "Spirit of Light." It is thought they will give some statement of their lives and work in the spirit-spheres, which will be found both interesting and instructive.

The usual Wednesday evening sociable will be held at half past seven o'clock. Last week Mr. C. E. Watkins, the slate-writer, gave some very interesting experiences connected with his mediumship, and is expected again next Wednesday to favor us. Mr. Edson will also read an interesting paper. All are cordially invited. W. H. R.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—Last Sunday Mrs. A. Forester opened the morning session with a fine address on "Hope," followed by Dr. M. V. Thomas on the same subject. Tests and readings were given by Mr. Campbell, Miss S. E. Cullen and others.

Afternoon.—Mr. Cobb spoke on "Forgiveness," Miss Peabody gave tests, and Mr. Augustus Hatch, of Medford, an address. Dr. W. S. Eldridge illustrated his power to mesmerize. Mrs. A. H. Moore sang in Indian dialect, and Mrs. Willard gave tests.

Evening.—Mrs. Eudora Case opened by singing "The Brook;" Mrs. Forester of Charlestown spoke on the continuity of life, and also gave readings that were recognized. "Winona," through Miss Peabody, gave some very remarkable tests. Dr. H. B. Leighton replied instructively to a question relating to prayer. As an instance of the results of prayer, Dr. W. S. Eldridge stated that a deacon made a prayer for a soldier and for a widow, both in need, and he, Dr. E., was impressed to carry to the parties sugar, flour, and a load of wood, which he did. The Doctor diagnosed disease for several persons. Mr. Cobb remarked that no physician, however learned, is able to diagnose disease with as much certainty as can be done under spirit-control. Mrs. J. D. Bruce gave psychometric readings, also the names of Lucy Macon and Laura Williams, who desired recognition by their friends. Dr. C. H. Harding gave psychometric readings, with remarks pertinent thereto. Miss Annie L. Curtis closed with a fine recitation one of the best meetings of the season. HEATH.

The Independent Club.—At the headquarters of the First Independent Club, 1031 Washington street, a very intelligent audience gathered on Monday evening last, to pay their respects to Mr. J. Wm. Fletcher, the prominent medium and lecturer. Mrs. W. S. Butler—who tendered Mr. Fletcher this reception in behalf of the Club—made an earnest and eloquent resumé of Mr. F.'s loyalty to Spiritualism, his universal kindliness of heart, especially to the unfortunate, and of their long and unbroken association as mediums and friends. She then presented Mr. Fletcher with a magnificent bouquet of flowers, in the hope that it might symbolize her wishes for his future success.

Mr. William Falls, the Vice Grand Master of the Club, paid a most kindly tribute to Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher's work, both in Spiritualism and for the Independent Club. Mrs. Susie Child and Mrs. Nettie Wentworth Osborn gave dramatic selections in a highly artistic manner, and Dr. Street made very appropriate remarks complimentary to Mr. Fletcher as an able worker, who should be encouraged to persevere in the good work.

Mr. Fletcher responded to the many friendly words and kindly wishes expressed for him, in his usual terse and forceful manner, trying to make his friends feel that if appreciation and tender friendship could repay the members of the Club for the courtesy tendered him, then would his heart fully balance the debt. He assured them that their smiles had wiped away many of his tears, and their loyal friendship had been his strongest and tenderest support.

Mrs. Fletcher closed the evening's exercises, assuring the friends that the Club had come to stay, and that the officers would be loyal to their trust. She secured many new applicants for membership. Altogether it was one of the most enjoyable of the regular Monday meetings of the Club. ☞

The Ladies' Industrial Society, connected with the "Boston Spiritual Temple" Society at Berkeley Hall, held its regular meeting on the afternoon and evening of Jan. 10th. In the evening the President, Mrs. C. N. Mellen, presided. Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lillie opened the exercises with a song. Mr. W. A. Dunklee made a brief address. A piano selection was rendered by Master Willie Boyce. Mrs. R. S. Lillie, under control, spoke upon "Metaphysical Science." Oscar L. Rockwood gave a recitation. Mrs. J. F. Dillingham, under control of "Chinnewanna," made a short address and gave tests of spirit presence. Mrs. Mary E. Wellington read one of Lizzie Doten's poems and Mr. Lillie sang "The Bridge." After remarks by Capt. Richard Holmes and Jacob Edson, and an impromptu poem by Mrs. Lillie, the audience joined in singing a closing hymn, and a session of social converse followed. The exercises throughout were creditable to those who took part in them and highly satisfactory to all. The next regular meeting, at which supper will be served at six o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of Jan. 24th. All are invited who are interested in the cause of Spiritualism. MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown.—Last Sunday, at 2:30, services opened by singing, followed by remarks of the chairman, W. A. Hale, and Mr. Twitchell, and psychometric readings by Mrs. N. S. Thomas. At the afternoon meeting, after singing, remarks were made by Mr. Hale and Fred. Heath, tests given by Mrs. Shackley, and readings by Miss Cullen and Mr. Hale. ☞

Paine Memorial Hall.—Edwin Powell held well attended meetings last Sunday afternoon and evening. His tests were of a highly interesting character. Sessions will be held each Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. 6 James street. W. E. WHEELOCK.

BROCKTON, MASS.—Mr. W. F. Peck entertained a large audience, drawn together in spite of the very disagreeable weather, to listen to his discourse on "The Philosophy of Spirit Manifestations." His exposition of the subject was clear and logical, fully sustaining his claim that all the different phases of manifestations are in strict conformity to well-known laws of nature, from the tiny rap to the most wonderful materialization. Mr. Peck's singing was an enjoyable feature of the meeting. He will lecture and sing for us again next Sunday evening. ☞

American Spiritualist Alliance.

The regular meeting of The Alliance was held at 219 West 42d street, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 11th, and was well attended. The discussion of the question "The Identity of Spirits," was, for the present, brought to a close at this meeting, and the following resolution offered and adopted:

Resolved, That a Committee of Three be appointed to consider and report on the proper scientific method of investigating the phenomena of Spiritualism, the members of said Committee to be designated by the Chair, and said report to be offered at the next meeting of the Alliance.

The report to be presented by the Committee will be the subject of discussion at the next meeting, Jan. 25th, at which time it is expected that a method of procedure will be decided upon by The Alliance, and a Committee appointed to carry forward the investigation in accordance with the plan decided upon.

The following preamble and resolutions were also offered and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The BANNER OF LIGHT has ever manifested a readiness to aid The Alliance in its efforts for the furtherance and protection of the Cause of Spiritualism, and has, especially during the past year, afforded our organization most valuable and effective assistance and coöperation; therefore,

Resolved, That we take occasion, at the commencement of the new year, to offer Messrs. Colby & Rich, publishers of the BANNER, the kindly greetings of the season, congratulating them on their faithful and successful labors in the year that has passed, and cordially wishing them the fullest degree of prosperity during the present year. With particular emphasis do we desire to express our warm appreciation of the earnest coöperation of the senior editor, Mr. Luther Colby, and of his ardent and active sympathy in our efforts during the past year.

Resolved, That we regard the BANNER OF LIGHT (the oldest of our Spiritualist journals) as worthy of the earnest support of all true Spiritualists; as propagating sound spiritual principles; as supporting and defending all genuine and honest mediums, and condemning those charged with dishonesty and deception only after the fullest inquiry, and never on the prejudiced, one-sided and usually garbled report of hostile secular newspapers; exercising a kindly and fraternal spirit in all its animadversions and discussions, free from vituperation and all harsh personal obloquy and condemnation.

Resolved, That while expressing our obligations to THE BANNER for its earnest coöperation with The Alliance during the past year, we gratefully accept the tender of the free use of its columns as a vehicle of our organization during 1888, and hope that in this intimate relation to it, the joint labors of The Alliance and THE BANNER, mutually coöperative, may be followed with augmented success in the advancement, elevation and purification of the spiritual Cause before the public, and especially in obtaining for its ascertained facts the full scientific recognition to which they are justly entitled.

Resolved, That we also tender our best thanks to other members of the Spiritualist press for many favors received, and trust that we may continue to enjoy their friendly support and coöperation, and that there may be between them and our Organization a continuance of the same friendly relations as heretofore, with the same harmony of action in our respective labors for the good of our Cause and the spiritual enlightenment of mankind.

Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary be requested to furnish for publication in the BANNER OF LIGHT reports of the proceedings at all regular meetings of The Alliance, so far as they may be of interest to our absent and non-resident members, or to the public.

Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary send a copy of the foregoing to the editor of the BANNER OF LIGHT.

After the adjournment of The Alliance, the lights were turned down, and the mediums present requested to give to the members whatever they might see or hear. Many tests of spirit presence were given in various ways. The Alliance is preparing for active, systematic work, with the expectation of attaining useful results, and invites coöperation and help from all. JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

First Society of Spiritualists.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Stormy weather seems to be the rule every Sunday this month in New York, but the Spiritualists make a good showing toward filling the large and commodious Adelphi Hall each Sunday. Mrs. Brigham upon taking the platform in the morning of last Sunday described a very exciting experience in Central Vermont last week, where her life was imperilled in a blinding snow-storm, the horses getting down in a drift; the driver and herself nearly frozen before the horses could be shoveled out; the darkness of night coming on, and still one mile or more from a house where shelter could be had. Mrs. Brigham began to doubt whether she could endure the cold sufficiently long for the driver to free the horses from the drift. While thus meditating upon the situation, she heard a spirit voice say, "You will get through all right, and the horses too." This gave her courage, she having expressed as much fear for the horses as for her own safety. The prediction came true, and in an hour or so they reached a house, and were hospitably cared for.

Mrs. Brigham spoke as usual in the morning upon subjects selected by the audience, and in her usual clear, comprehensive and satisfactory manner. In the evening she spoke upon a subject chosen by her guides.

The meeting in the afternoon was attended by a refined and intelligent audience. Dr. Dean Clarke gave an interesting discourse upon "Mediumship and the Laws and Methods of Spirit Intercourse." Dr. Clarke is winning golden laurels from our people. Next Sunday he will relate some of his experiences while speaking and traveling in over thirty States of this Union. All should come and hear him. They will find the time profitably occupied, and be spiritually benefited. Mr. Newton made apt and characteristic remarks upon "How Little we know, and how much we think we know," that would apply well to some of the investigators of spirit phenomena. Mrs. Wells gave a large number of tests, some of them very remarkable, and all were recognized. One was to Mr. William R. Tice. She described his mother as a little child, showing where she was burned on the face, and then gave a description of the conditions under which she passed out, which Mr. Tice fully recognized.

Dr. Henry Slade.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sunday evening, Jan. 8th, it was our pleasure and privilege to listen to the third biographical lecture by Dr. Henry Slade of No. 58 East 9th street. We had been well pleased with his former lectures, but on this occasion he surpassed himself. This prince of mediums held the audience spell-bound while he "did all his pilgrimage dilate, whereof by parcels they had something heard." This large gathering of intelligent people seemed well content to listen as long as he would speak, "and with a greedy ear devour up his discourse." The subject was "His Experience with Prof. Zöllner." It thrilled us with enthusiasm, as with flashing eye he stood there to defend, against the Seybert Commission and their accusations of insanity, the grand spirit who once defended him. He said: "They called him insane, because he knew more than they ever did or ever will." He was of opinion that coming generations will blush to own the Seybert Commissioners as ancestors, and will wish their writings had been burned, before given to the world; he further stated that when the investigators (?) came to him, they did not seem to care particularly about seeing any phenomena, but complacently smoked their cigars, and when taking their leave, complimented him very highly.

One of the best features of the evening was the liberal donation made (through his instigation) to a needy family in great bereavement.

Yours sincerely,
FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE DAKE.

The Metropolitan Church for Humanity.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sunday last Mr. Charles Dawbarn, the eloquent lecturer, favored us with a discourse on "The Future of Modern Spiritualism," and a large audience was amply repaid by his pleasing and instructive address.

To-day Mrs. T. B. Stryker, the regular speaker, spoke upon "The Origin and Destiny of Man." At the close of the discourse, "Bright Star," one of the guides, stated that Mrs. Stryker had not been developed as a platform test medium, but realizing the intense desire of all to receive some evidence from the spirit-world, they would do the best they could. Several names, with unmistakable facts, were given. Mr. and Mrs. Warren Sumner Barlow, Mr. Samuel Terry and several others, recognized and acknowledged their correctness, expressing themselves as delighted and thankful.

Bright Star's Aid Society, composed of ladies of this church, which took care of twenty-one children last winter, and this fall clothed and purchased a life-home for an old lady of seventy-seven years, began its winter work last week with a full treasury. Great credit is due to its secretary, Mrs. T. Stewart Smith, for her untiring energy in seeking out the deserving objects of charity and ministering to their necessities. The Aid Society is carrying out the philanthropic object of its existence. G. D. C.

City Items.

Dr. Dean Clarke, known to all the old Spiritualists as one of our ablest writers and most earnest, eloquent and profound speakers, has met a hearty welcome from those who have known him long by reputation, but never before have had the pleasure and great benefit of listening to his instructive lectures. He is now edifying good audiences at Adelphi Hall, assisting Mrs. Wells, Sunday afternoons. Jan. 15th, Sunday evening, he aided Mrs. Pennell, who has crowded houses eager for the wonderful tests she gives.

Prof. Henry Kiddle lectured before a select and very intelligent audience, Sunday evening, Jan. 8th, at the parlors of Mrs. Wallace, 219 West 42d street. Prof. K. always meets appreciation among those who know him best and are advanced in spiritual growth sufficiently to apprehend the truth as he presents it.

Mr. Charles Dawbarn has profoundly stirred the interest of the people by his recent addresses in our city. REPORTER.

Fox, and Rev. O. P. McCarthy. In the evening Mrs. Morrell's ill health prevented her attendance as advertised. We were, however, provided for by Mrs. L. Fox, who gave tests.

Next Sunday afternoon, in addition to the regular mediumistic phenomena, Mr. William C. Bowen is expected to address us. In the evening spiritual manifestations. F. W. JONES.

Bowen followed with remarks, Mrs. W. reading an inspirational poem.

Mr. Lawrene, Chairman of the Eastern District Conference, will deliver his second address upon "Mediumship," Saturday evening, 21st inst. Mr. L. is a forcible and interesting speaker, and it is hoped the inexhaustible subject he has chosen will call out a large audience. Spiritual Phenomena.

Under the above heading the BANNER OF LIGHT publishes from time to time communications contributed by reliable people describing the spirit-form manifestations they have witnessed; but we desire it to be clearly understood that we cannot be held responsible for any accounts of such manifestations appearing in our columns, except those we have witnessed and personally endorsed: Writers in describing the phenomena they have seen, must alone bear the responsibility of their statements.—Publishers B. of L.

MATERIALIZATION EIGHTY YEARS AGO.

In Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten's Two Worlds is being published a series of interesting historical sketches, the latest of which is a reprint of portions of a pamphlet published in this country in the early part of the present century, the facts given in which have so direct a bearing upon the phenomenon termed materialization that we place them before our readers. The resemblance between some points of the phenomena described and what is of frequent occurrence in the materialization séance of our own time, is quite marked. The pamphlet bears the following title-page:

"Immortality Proved by Phenomena That Were Witnessed by Hundreds in the Town of Sullivan, Maine, in the Year 1800. Published by an Eye Witness, the Rev. Abraham Cummings, a Man Eminent in Learning and Piety; a Graduate of Harvard University."

The pamphlet, which is a series of letters, arguments, and affidavits of various witnesses, contains circumstantial details of the apparition of a Mrs. Butler, who manifested her presence to hundreds of people by rappings, preternatural lights, singing, speaking with an audible voice, and frequent appearances in her own as well as other forms.

Beside Mr. Cummings's pamphlet, the author has gathered up a mass of information on this subject from various publications of the time, as well as the oral testimony of several persons whose relatives were resident in Sullivan, and themselves eye-witnesses of the extraordinary scenes here related. From all these sources it appears that a certain Captain Butler of Sullivan, Maine, married Miss Nelly Hooper, who, ten months after her marriage, gave birth to one child, and passed with her infant into the spirit-world. Shortly after this lady's decease Captain Butler became the accepted lover of a Miss Blaisdell, whose father was violently opposed to the match.

In this state of things, and whilst the lovers were vainly attempting to soften the obduracy of their parents, the spirit of Mrs. Nelly Butler manifested herself in the various modes before described, in the houses of Mr. Blaisdell, Mr. Butler, and her own father, Mr. Hooper. She appeared to and audibly conversed with her mother and sisters; urged her father to visit Mr. Butler, with a view of persuading him that the manifestations that now began to astound the whole country were in reality produced by herself, the spirit of his daughter. Her father, mother and sisters became so entirely convinced of the spirit's identity that they published circumstantial details of her visitation, attested by their solemn affidavits. One of the purposes alleged by the spirit to have influenced her appearance was to procure the consent of the parents to the marriage of her late husband with Miss Blaisdell....

Mrs. Butler's spirit often walked by the side of Miss Blaisdell in the light of day and the full sight of astonished witnesses. She was seen in the fields, lanes and woods, besides the houses which she frequented, where she would pass from room to room, and when the inmates, terrified by her apparition, fled from the apartment, she would kindly assure them she would not intrude upon their presence, but meet with them whenever they wished to see or converse with her, in the cellars of their dwellings. In the cellar of Mr. Blaisdell's house she conversed for several hours, on different occasions, with the crowds who flocked thither to witness the manifestations. Sometimes she appeared to a number of persons at a time, occasionally in the likeness of her former self, but still oftener in a fleecy mass of white, shadowy light. When the parents of the lovers, awed by the preternatural interference of this wonderful apparition, finally gave their consent to the union, the spirit presented herself at the wedding festivities, and there foretold the death of the bride within ten months, together with the birth and death of one child. These predictions, like many others of her prophecies, proved correct.

Mention is made in Mr. Cummings's pamphlet of a singular act, enjoined in the most solemn manner by the "spectre," namely, the digging up and reïnterment of her child's body, which she desired to be buried in a different place. At the reinterment, which caused great scandal in the neighborhood, the spirit attended in person, singing and chanting in a voice which was audible to over eighty people who were present at the ceremony.

Rev. Abraham Cummings has given interesting and minute details of the modes in which the spirit-visitant's presence was regarded. He says:

"The times, places and modes of her appearing were various. Sometimes she appeared to one alone, sometimes to two or three, then to five, six, ten, or twelve, again to twenty, and once to more than forty witnesses. She appeared in several apartments of Mr. Blaisdell's house, and several times in the open fields. She also appeared at other houses and in the open fields There, white as the light, she moved like a cloud above the ground, in personal form and magnitude, and in the presence of more than forty people. She tarried with them till after daylight, and vanished; not because she was afraid of the sun, for she had then several times appeared when the sun was shining. Once in particular, when she appeared in the room where her family were, about eleven o'clock in the day, they all left the house; but, convinced of the impropriety of their conduct, they returned.

"At another time, when several neighbors were at the house, and were conversing on these remarkable events, a young lady in the company declared that, though she had heard the discourse of the spectre, she would never believe that there had been a spectre among us, unless she could see her.

"In a few minutes after, the spectre appeared to several persons, and said she must come into the room where the company was. One of those who saw her, pleaded that she would not. The spectre then asked, 'Is there a person here who desires to see me?' The young lady was then called, who, with several others, saw the spectre. 'Here I am,' said she, 'satisfy yourselves.' The lady owned that she was satisfied.

"In all the appearances of the spectre she was as white as the light, and this whiteness was as clear and visible in a dark cellar and dark night, as when she appeared in the open field and in the open day. At a certain time, August 9th, she informed a number of people that she meant to appear before them (for she frequently conversed without appearing at all), that they must stand in order, and behave in a solemn manner, 'For the Lord,' said she, 'is a God of order.' Accordingly she appeared and vanished before them several times. At first they saw a small body of light, which continually increased till it formed the shape and magnitude of a person.

"This personal shape approached so near to Captain Butler that he put his hand upon it, and it passed down through the apparition as through a body of light, in the view of thirty persons, who all saw the apparition, which rose into personal form, face and features, in a moment; returned to a shapeless mass, resumed the person, and vanished again directly. They saw that which was not afraid to be handled by them, for she passed slowly by them, near enough for that purpose.

"Once, when she conversed with about fourteen persons, Mr. Blaisdell, having heard that his father was sick, asked the spectre whether she knew anything concerning him. 'Your father,' she replied, 'is in heaven, praising God with the angels.' He afterward found that his father, two hundred miles distant, died three days before this answer of the ghost, and his friends at York, where his father lived, utterly deny that they sent the news in the course of these days.

"At the time when fifty people heard her discourse, while more than forty saw her, she mentioned several occurrences of her past life, known to them and her, in order to satisfy them that she was the very person she professed to be. Almost all this company had been acquainted with her in her lifetime very intimately. She desired that any of them would ask what questions they pleased, for the removal of any doubts respecting her. Accordingly certain persons did propose several questions respecting a number of events in her past life. To all these inquiries, she gave completely satisfactory answers.

"Some time in July, 1806, in the evening, I was informed by two persons that they had just seen the spectre in the field.

"About ten minutes after, I went out, not to see a miracle, for I believed that they had been mistaken. Looking toward an eminence twelve rods distant from the house, I saw there, as I supposed, one of the white rocks. Three minutes after, the white rock was in the air; its form a complete globe, white, with a tincture of red, like the damask rose, and its diameter about two feet.

"Fully satisfied that this was nothing ordinary, I went toward it for more accurate examination.

"While my eye was constantly upon it, I went on four or five steps, when it came to me from the distance of eleven rods, as quick as lightning, and instantly assumed a personal form with a female dress, but did not appear taller than a girl seven years old. While I looked upon her, I said in my mind, 'You are not tall enough for the woman who has so frequently appeared among us.' Immediately she grew up as large and as tall as I considered that woman to be. Now she appeared glorious. On her head was the representation of the sun diffusing the luminous rectilinear rays everywhere to the ground. Through the rays I saw the personal form, and the woman's dress. Now, said my mind, I see you as plainly as ever I saw a person on earth; but were I to converse with you an hour, what proof could I produce that I ever conversed with you at all? This, with my fear, was the reason why I did not speak to her. But my fear was connected with ineffable pleasure.

"Life, simplicity, purity, glory, all harmonizing in this celestial form, had the most delightful effect on my mind. And there appeared such a dullness afterward upon all corporeal objects as I never perceived before. I went into the house and gave the information, not doubting that she had come to spend some time with us, as she had before. We went out to see her again; but to my great disappointment she had vanished. Then I saw one of the great errors of my life. That I had not spoken to her has been the matter of my regret from that hour to this."

Then follow the affidavits of forty-one persons, "of good repute and standing" in the town, taken before the magistrates. Of these our space will allow us to give only one extract from the testimony of a well-known and highly respected ship-owner of Sullivan, Capt. James Millar, the spirit appearing in his house as described on account of its having been said she could not appear at any other place than the house of Mr. Blaisdell. In continuation of an extended testimony, he says:

"August 14th, 1800.—Just before daylight, I heard singing, as I lay in bed, approaching to my house. Presently, by my leave, my house was filled with people, and I heard knockings on the floor. By the desire of certain persons, I went into the cellar with Capt. Paul Blaisdell. After some discourse of the voice with him, I heard sounds of knocking near me. I asked, 'What do you want of me?' The voice so often heard before answered, 'I have come to let you know that I can speak in this cellar, as well as in others. Are you convinced?' I answered, 'I am.' 'Now,' said the voice, 'the company must be solemn, and stand in order before your door; I am going to appear. Remember, I was once Nelly Hooper.' We went up, and complied with her direction, and I saw a personal shape coming toward us, white as the light. By the spectre's order, as I was informed, Mrs. Butler went toward her. 'Lydia,' said the spectre, 'you are scared, you must sing.' Then she sang a hymn. The spirit came almost to us, then turned, and Mrs. Butler with her, and went several rods toward Capt. Simson, and appeared to take her by the hand, to urge her on further, and disappeared in our sight. Mrs. Butler returned, and informed the company, as I was told, that if they would walk to Mr. Blaisdell's solemnly, as to a funeral, the spirit would walk with Mrs. Butler, behind them. The company did so. But I, being far forward, looked back, and saw a person in white walking with Mrs. Butler. After we returned to the house, Mrs. Butler appeared very weary and exhausted.

"I asked her at what time the spirit came to her. She told me it was after she had walked a little distance from the people. 'When you heard me groan,' said she, 'then I saw it coming toward me; I am always more afraid when I only see it, than I am after it has spoken to me; and she then told me not to be scared, that she was not come to hurt me, and if I would sing a hymn it would expel my fears.

"JAMES MILLAR."

AN EVENING WITH THE SPIRITS.

BY WARREN CHASE.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

By the kind invitation of Brother C. N. and Sister M. S. Wood, now of Stoneham, Mass., at whose new and pleasant home I have been stopping several nights, while busy days in Boston on my book, I attended with them and a few friends the séance-room of Mrs. Amanda M. Cowan and her husband, also a medium, at 219A Tremont street, Boston, on Thursday evening, Jan. 12th. I had never, to my knowledge, seen either of the Cowans, and they did not know me till I was introduced to them. At eight o'clock Mrs. Cowan came into the room for the first time, after we (about fifteen) were all seated, and I was not introduced to her till after the séance closed. The cabinet was thoroughly inspected by all present, and all were satisfied that no confederates could possibly be there or get there at any time during the séance. I was seated at one end of the circle, which was open on the cabinet side or corner of the room.

As soon as Mrs. Cowan, attired in a dark dress, entered the cabinet, the curtains were closed and lights reduced, but not so much but that we could see any form in the room. Within ten seconds after she entered the curtain parted, and two distinct adult forms, both in white, stood in full view of the company two or three seconds. Immediately upon their retiring the curtain parted and a form appeared and called for me to Mr. Cowan, who stood between me and the curtain. I went up, and if I ever saw my wife, Mary P. Chase, I saw a form representing her in every particular, both in looks and actions. Mrs. Wood, who also knew her in earth-life, fully recognized her, as she did later in the evening when she came again and walked out into the room with me and was introduced by me to several of my friends.

As soon as she retired and I was again seated at the side of the room close to the wall, with a Mr. Noyes, whose wife had often materialized through Mrs. Cowan, he gave a start and his spirit wife was in his arms. She certainly did not pass before me, and I could not see how a form could pass behind, between me and the wall; but the form was there, remained several minutes and saluted those whom she knew, and was introduced to me, and seemed as real as the rest of us. She came out several times during the evening. Henry C. Wright stepped out and called for Melvina—meaning Mrs. Wood—and also for me, and we talked with him. The form was very much like the one he wore here, but no more like either of the Cowans than mine is like a spirit. I. P. Greenleaf came out and called Mr. and Mrs. Wood and myself; and although the form was not defective as in earth-life, the face and voice were those of I. P. Greenleaf, as we who knew him could all testify. Aohsa W. Sprague was as well identified by myself and Mrs. Wood as any old familiar face and form could be. Ed. S. Wheeler talked, looked and acted as natural as in this life, to us who knew him well. Allen Putnam, in a form as tall as of old, looked and talked to us as he used to. The former wife of Mr. Wood also came, and was recognized fully by him. A sister of Mrs. Campbell, some friends of Mr. Tibbets, and quite a number not personally known to any of us came. Some gave us short lessons as well as greetings, till all seemed satisfied.

The séance was a grand success; and now comes the question, what are our senses good for if we cannot rely on them simply because they bring us facts at variance with early teachings and strong prejudices? I have never been accused of being insane. I certainly am not, and never was, fanatical nor superstitious. I have always relied on my senses. I am not entranced, not psychologized, and no one in the room was. Our senses were all open and keen to detect a form and a voice. We could see and feel and hear, and could often hear the medium, or a spirit controlling her, in the cabinet when the manifestations were going on. If my prejudices were stronger than my senses and reason both I might say though the forms were not spirits, I could by no means tell who or what they were. Should I question the personal identity of my wife, with whom I lived over thirty-eight years, if she had been absent a few years, and then returned and greeted me as she does now? Certainly no one would justify my denial of her personality if she was not known to be dead—but who among our Christian teachers believe she is not in existence? If she is, why, in this age of discoveries, is it called impossible for her and others to find a way to reach us? And what a shame in one to reject the evidence when it comes through the senses and the reason, and the finest feelings of which we are possessed. I shall not, and cannot; so I gladly accept the evidence, and wait and watch results.

SEANCES WITH C. H. BRIDGE.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

On the evening of Jan. 4th, 1888, Mr. C. H. Bridge, of No. 46 Chandler street, Boston, Mass., gave a parlor séance at the house of Maj. C. F. Howard, twenty-two persons being present, all of them strangers to the medium.

During the light séance, which was held in the first part of the evening, Mr. Bridge sat with his hands tied to the back of his chair, his body being covered with a black cloth, his head alone being seen; he sat directly in front of the cabinet, which was simply a closet with a curtain instead of a door. Under these strictly test conditions, musical instruments were played upon; messages were written upon slips of paper, and passed out of the cabinet; hands were materialized and shown; and flowers, beautiful in coloring and perfume, some of them wet with dew, were passed to the friends outside.

The medium then took his seat inside the cabinet, his hands still tied to the chair behind him, and allowed four persons, one at a time, to enter the cabinet and place a hand on his head and one on his right shoulder. The physical manifestations took place just the same, and each one of these parties received convincing proofs of the presence of spirit friends.

He then gave a dark séance for etherealizations; and as nearly as I can estimate, about ten forms came out, some of them very bright *and beautiful. Three sisters came out to*gether; on the garments of one of them were several bright stars, emblematical of her spirit name, as given by her to her father many times at séances for materializations; some of these forms gave messages in an audible voice to their friends—others only gave their names.

So far as I can learn it was a very satisfactory séance, and we hope to have Mr. Bridge with us again very soon.

I received a satisfactory message from my spirit daughter.

On Thursday morning, Jan. 5th, I had a private séance with Mr. Bridge for independent slate-writing, and obtained on my own slates a message of one hundred and ten words, with my daughter's name signed to it, containing also several proofs of his identity.

I then placed upon the table a sealed envelope containing a sheet of paper, upon which was written a question. Mr. B., his wife and myself then joined hands around the table, and in a very short time we could hear unseen operators writing on the paper; when done, these intelligences signified it by three raps; upon examining the envelope I found the seal had not been tampered with; upon opening it I found an answer written just below the question, and signed by my husband's father's name.

I cordially recommend Mr. Bridge to all investigators of the phenomena of Spiritualism as a genuine, honest, and wonderfully gifted medium. MRS. JAMES W. LEONARD.

SEANCES AT MANTUA, O.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I was very much interested in reading an account of a visit to the celebrated medium, Mrs. Cobb, at Mantua, Portage Co., O., by Sidney Kelsey, of Erie, Pa. Having attended three séances with this lady, I think his description of the details very correct and truthful. At those séances I saw and recognized at the aperture in the cabinet numbers of my relations and old acquaintances. At the last séance the "veil-maker" came out dressed in pure white, and passed behind the circle, which (as the weather was rainy) was composed only of Mr. Cobb, Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings and myself.

The spirit put her hands on my head, then came in front, and held her face close to my own; she then materialized a white handkerchief, and put it on the lap of the medium; she next called me to the door by her side, came close to me, and made a large black veil, which felt and looked like any real veil. It soon disappeared.

Soon after she was gone, a well-known lady of the place came from the cabinet in pure white; then appeared at the aperture Howard Sessions, wearing gold spectacles; he was an old friend of mine; his widow, now Mrs. Steel, told me that he always wore these spectacles when in earth-life. The next to be seen was Mr. Barber, who was once an actor. Mrs. Richings recognized as correct certain statements made for this gentleman by "Jimmie," the cabinet spirit.

I was highly gratified with my experiences at Mantua. A. PEPOON.

SOUL-GROWTH.

AFFIRMATIVE QUESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION.

How can we Account For and Reconcile all the the so-called Accidents and Incidents of Life—the Calamities that Befall and Afflict the Just and True, as well as the Depraved and Incorrigible, with the Doctrine of a Perfect Cause?

BY JACOB EDSON.

I.

If there be an infinite, all-pervading Spirit called God, who is perfect in every conceivable attribute, is he not necessarily governed and controlled by the law of his spiritual being, by and through which he governs and controls all other beings? and does not such law, government and control limit his personal power to the capacity evolved in his finite outbirths?

II.

Does not the doctrine of an infinite, all-pervading spiritual cause necessarily involve a perfect Providence to open up, guide and control, so as to ultimately express itself in and through the finite entities it has evolved? Is it not evident that such an all-pervading principle or personage could so inspire receptive entities as to lead them up into higher and still higher life, without interfering with the freedom of their agency?

III.

May we not want and be seeking after this world's goods—its riches—when in reality what we need is poverty, trouble, trial and affliction to open up and bring forth the spiritual nature within us? Is there not necessarily sorrow and suffering all along through the different stages of spiritual gestation? And if not properly gestated, may there not be excruciating agonies, as we die to the old in being born to the new? Is not spiritual life upon the animal plane a continued alternation from one to the other? Are not compensating effects essential to soul-growth? How else could the Infinite Father, without interfering with the freedom of our agency, open up and unfold our spiritual nature? And is it not more than probable that all the so-called accidents and incidents of life, the trials and troubles that befall and afflict us, are designed and overruled for our supreme good?

IV.

If there be such a perfect Cause, such a Providence, is it not uncreated, eternal? and must it not have possessed within its subjective self all that has been, is now, or ever will be, in heaven, earth, or hell? If there be such a perfect Cause, is it not the inmost of our within, and nearer to us than we are to ourselves? If we existed subjectively in the Infinite Mind, are we not immortal in our nature, origin and destiny? and have we not good and sufficient reason to trust this perfect Cause, that it, through the execution of law, will open up its perfect providence to guide, control and demonstrate its personifying presence as the subjective principle for whom we act?

V.

Would the omnipresent and omniscient Cause be omnipotent, without finite spirit-entities to serve with deputed power, to exercise and evolve the love, will, and wisdom of the Principal for whom they act? And if every conceivable condition of spirit-life is occupied by such accountable agents, and no two agents exactly alike in their loves, is not our Infinite Father, because of his finite agencies, omnipotent and all-controlling? Are not all the tempters and tempted, all the Iscariots as well as all the Christs, subserving the Infinite Will, each in his special sphere of operation? Would the Infinite be omnipotent without them? "Is there evil in the city, and the Lord [through his agents] hath not done it?" If we believe in the perfect Cause and Providence, ought we to complain and be disconsolate because of apparent evil? Is it not, even in its most malignant forms of expression, comparatively good because it is in the service of the Absolute?

VI.

Whence our individual personality? Is it not evolved from the principle of eternal life implanted within us? Are we not accountable agents to this principle? Is it not our inmost, our eternal self? Are we not epitomies of all else, including life and its Giver? If so, can there be more than one perfect personage? Are we not all of us unfolding and perfecting parts of this metaphysical body, of which God is the soul? Is it not the province of the Infinite to inspire, and ours to respond and obey, and thus enlarge our intellectual horizon, evolve its spiritual power, and so eliminate ignorance, the occasion of sin, as to ultimately apprehend and enjoy the Absolute? May we not so enlarge and perfect our finite agency as to embody, reflect, and demonstrate the personal presence and deputed power of the only living God?

VII.

Do not our personal freedom and happiness depend upon our loyalty to truth, our obedience to the higher law? Are we not bound each to the other, and all to God by an inexorable law so that no one can be perfectly happy while another is apparently left unloved, uncared for? Is it not true that he who is the truest bound is the most free, and that where truth is master, there can be no slave?

VIII.

Are not prayer, praise, and adoration, as well as work and spiritual contemplation, essential to soul growth? May not the soul be considered a divine plant, receiving its substance from God? And if we allow trials, cares, frivolities, and speculations to engross our whole time, and as rocks to prevent the tendrils of our hearts from taking hold on Him, or as choking weeds to hinder the leaves of desire from expanding in the sunlight of His countenance, ought we to expect a vigorous growth? If we cut off the tender fibrils which crowd the roots, should we look for beauteous blossoms? May we not as well hide the material plant from the natural sun, and expect to gather luscious fruit, as to deprive the soul of spiritual communion and religious associations, and hope for a glorious development? In the barbaric age, was not brute force—muscle—master, and might, right? In the present intellectual age, are not ideas, brains, master? And if on the animal plane, may they not be equally selfish and cruel—more effective and exacting in their domination? Were not these lower manifestations of evolving life necessary for the higher expression, in which truth is to be master, that is now dawning within us with deputed power to further unfold and perfect itself in the heart and conscience of the race? Is not spirituality—enlightened love, unselfish will, and humane wisdom that shall personify the Christ in differentiated agents—to be the Saviour of the world?

IX.

Why is it that Christians, with so few honorable exceptions, though they know the good, and apparently teach it, do the wrong and take the consequences? Is it not because their religion is of the head, the intellect, and not of the heart—the affectional nature? Are not professional Christians too literal? Does the Christ principle, as they preach it, pertain effectively to the formation of motives, the chemistry of spiritual life, the laboratory of the mind, and consequently the regenerative transformation of the triune man, body, spirit, and soul, from the animal, through the human, into the divine? Is not cultured animalism, labeled Christian, a disgrace to Christendom and the nineteenth century?

X.

Are not all religions that are peculiar to the animal plane of life, crude, cruel and barbaric? Do not some of these peculiarities still adhere in the more enlightened religions of to-day, seeking to dominate on the animal plane, hence contention and strife that ought not to exist except as means to an end?

XI.

Is there any good in resisting evil with evil? in fighting animalism on the animal plane? Is it not better to calmly look the lion in the eye so as to peaceably deplete his anger, subdue and dispel his brutish ferocity, until a little child—the becoming son of God—may lead him up through divers mazes, beclouded jungles, into the discreet degrees of attained at-one-ment—our Father's house—where all is love, joy and peace?

XII.

When we consider that man, the crowning work of creation, came after all the lower departments of the animal kingdom had obtained; that he is an epitome of all else, and that because of hereditary tendencies, there is within him seeking expression, not only the lion and the lamb, but also the monkey and the mule, the jackass and the tiger, the rattlesnake, the copperhead and the adder, and that the lowest, most disagreeable obtain first, and consequently are liable to dominate: I ask, in consideration of the foregoing, is not the animal man, even in his worst estate, about what—considering his environments—we should have expected him to be? And can we not assent to and substantiate the Bible statement that he is "very good," not as a finished product, but as a basis upon which to operate?

XIII.

Is it not written "God is love"? Is not love to the soul what blood is to the body? what God is to the universe—the life thereof? Is not love to the human soul what magnetism is to the mariner's compass—the power that inspires action? Do not scientists tell us that by placing bars of common iron, properly conditioned, one to the other, and all to the poles, that they will in time become receptive to and surcharged with the electric force, the magnetic substance of the planet, so as to enable us to determine the cardinal points? As with bars of iron, is it not so with human souls? By conditioning ourselves in proper relation to each other and all to God, may we not only become receptive to, but surcharged with the power that moves the universe—love the life thereof—so as to determine the absolute truth and evolve its standard within our own selves, by and through which may we not only be enabled to detect error in all its phases, but in addition thereto be guided into all truth? Is there not an exact standard of truth? Does it not exist subjectively in the soul? Is it not objectified through the subjective perception of absolute realities, their corollaries and relations to all else, both heighth and depth, as well as length, breadth and thickness? Does not truth satisfy, suffice the human soul, and unfold its love, will and wisdom? Does not truth, through its impregnated gestation, travail and birth, eliminate ignorance, bigotry, superstition and tendency to crime, in such a manner as to regeneratively transform the soul into higher life, dispelling animalism and brutality as mist before the rising sun?

XIV.

Is it not said that by cutting off the seed parts of the coarser grain, and not allowing them to mature, we may produce a different order, a higher grade? Has it not been demonstrated always with the same results? Do not oats under this treatment always produce rye, showing the law of regenerative transformation in vegetable life? Are we are not told by agricultural chemists that great droughts are necessary at times to enable an electric substance, an essential element, to come up from the subsoil below, to vivify, unfold and perfect vegetable life?

As with the soil of earth, so also with the soul of man. Do we not need at times sickness, sorrow and pain? Is not pain the sentinel that stands at the gateway of life to save us from total destruction? Are not sorrow and anguish of soul for a similar purpose, that as moral beings we may be quickened into clearer conceptions of truth, and advance through soul-growth to a higher life? Are not pains and pleasures the alternating conditions of soul-growth? Might not the oyster, could it reason, have complained of sickness and pain? Had its experience been different from what it was, the pearl (the result of disease) might not have been formed within it. Is it not so with the Adamic man? Had he not fallen through hereditary inclination and sin, from his estate of untried innocence, could the nobility of God-like virtue, the pearl of great price, have been formed within him and transmitted to us? Is not every punishment or pain which is not reformatory or creative, cruel and vindictive—whether it is inflicted in heaven or hell, by God or man, here or hereafter? Has not nature attached to every law, physical and spiritual, her penalty, for the unfoldment, protection and preservation of health and harmony, within and throughout the universe? Has not every moan that has broken from the passionate lips of humanity, every thrill of anguish that has fired the nerves of the human body or tortured the human soul, had for its object the perfection and ultimate good of the human race? Are we not guided? do we not build wiser than we know? Is there not in every human life a chord which, touched by a sympathetic vibration, thrills and echoes through the inmost fibres of our own soul? Is it not the law of love, evincing its divine origin, its inhering divinity, in its universal adaptation to all conditions of men?

"DECEIVING SPIRITS."

BY MRS. JENNIE L. K. HANER.

I would like to place before the consideration of the general public a few suggestions upon this common cry and bugbear of the (ignorant) masses; not but what much has been said and done upon the subject, but that much more yet remains to be thought and said to relieve the minds of many who might be earnest, honest investigators of the grand and noble truths of Spiritualism. In my very limited intercourse with the world I find quite prevalent the delusive idea that Spiritualism is of an evil source, because, as so often manifested, we realize unsatisfactory results and incorrect assertions, which, in the utter ignorance of the natural consequences of surrounding conditions, is attributed to "deceitful spirits."

People say: "Oh, the idea of deceitful spirits! If such be the case, I will wash my hands of the entire affair and hear nothing of it." Now it would be just as reasonable for these people to attempt to tear themselves away from the human race because they had found deceitful human beings. They do not think of doing that, but go on shunning the evil ones and entertaining the well-disposed and virtuous ones, because their human natures lead them on in that strain, and they probably realize there is no other advantageous way of getting through earthly life.

The question arises, Can such free themselves from the influence of spirit-power by so declaring it? No! each one is surrounded by certain spirit influences and guidances for better or worse, and as one's real inner nature is, just such forces will he gather closest to him from the invisible side; just as we see in general society by the truly good and virtuous attracting to their very hearts those of a like character, and the evil ones drawing to themselves the confidence or suspicions of those within their line—and all brought about by the subtler influences of nature, which we cannot avoid.

I do not deny that there are "deceiving spirits," for, as people often leave earth-life in this low, undeveloped condition, they must consequently enter the next existence in a similar state, and being devoid of the buoys of noble desires and high aspirations, they are the most likely to remain in the same state longest. We must feel convinced that such really exist, and may perhaps be encountered from time to time. But let those who are afraid of them consider, and build up a fortification against them—one insurmountable and enduring—by bringing themselves into a state of noble uprightness, honesty, truthfulness and purity of thought, word and deed: then will the ministering angels of the higher spheres find a natural affinity with such souls, lifting them upward and over the many cares, trials and tribulations which are constantly to be encountered in the path of earthly existence, bringing them to that state of peacefulness and happiness which constitutes the true and only saviour of humanity and the end and noble aim of Spiritualism!

This is the grand work that Spiritualism was intended to accomplish, and the one above all others which seems, by the great majority of curious investigators, to be the least understood and conceived of.

During the forty years of Modern Spiritualism, the kind of laborers in greatest demand have been those for tearing down the old, clearing away and making preparations for planting the new and improved; and when we consider the vast number of agnostics, materialists and liberalists, now to be found throughout the world, it appears that the work has been going on to good account; but now steps foremost the need of earnest, honest, true-souled workers for building up the new; sowing the good seed in the fertile soil, watching the little impressions they may make in the previously prepared element, and nourishing them with the gentle showers and warming sunshine of the purest and most perfect examples of uprightness, honesty, purity and brotherly love. So that the time may come when there will not be launched into eternity so many undeveloped souls as now.

May we all ever be found willing and able to contribute a portion of our power and influence to service in this great field of labor.

MATERIALIZATION AND RE-EMBODIMENT; ARE THEY FACTS OR FALLACIES?

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I am a materialist in every sense of the word, with one exception, and that is, I do not believe in the destruction of life, not even of the atomic particles, of which all are necessary parts. All which the five senses can comprehend must be composed of material substance, and all spirit must be also material in different degrees of refinement, as there is a spirit in every atomic particle of matter which is a casket for the ever-living I Am, or Soul, to manifest through, and this soul-life, or germ, contains inherent the Alpha of all progressive unfoldment. It is said by some that death is devoid of life; but there is no death; the word is a misnomer. All there is of so-called death is a disintegration of particled matter composed of atoms which existed in copartnership with more active life; each infinitesimal atom is in itself a oneness, and no outside power can destroy it. It can enclose itself in its own aural element and defy opposition. Being one of the smallest particles of substance, nothing can enter its domain, and it can pass through all larger forms. The soul-atom is, then, forever intact; a microcosm or a little world within itself, containing in miniature the essence or germ of all possibilities it can ever be developed to, and nature being no respecter of things or persons, and as it started from the lowest form it will progress to the highest.

It is contended by some that materialization, as understood at the present day by the well-informed Spiritualist, is not a fact, but a deception practiced by the medium, and many are ignorant enough to suppose if they can catch the materialized form that they will expose the deception. They do not know that in disturbing the magnetic current the material will return to the person from whence it came, and, if there is a form caught, that it will be the form of the medium, for it is impossible to catch a spirit. I contend that materialization and reëmbodiment are facts to our material vision, and no sophistry or false embellishments can gainsay or destroy the ideas, which are certainly based upon the permanent hypothesis of reasonable consistency.

There is not a particle of substance which we can behold with our material vision but what is materialized to one or more of our five senses; all our senses can comprehend is a compound mixture of elements, ingredients or parts. It is impossible for us to approximate a oneness by any intelligent faculty we possess; all we can know about a oneness is barely a supposition. Everything we see, hear, feel, taste, or smell must be composed of material substance. All we can know about a oneness, is barely supposition. All things which elude the five senses are to us in our material condition visionary. But there is a finer etherealized sensation which can be susceptible to all intellectual capacities. The clairvoyant vision can behold etherealized substance which evades our material senses. All nature must be material to the organs which comprehend it. The denizens of spirit-life inform us that all things are material to their spirit vision, which vision is more real than our natural vision is to us; they say all fluids are to them real substance; nature has adapted herself to all visions, according to their several degrees of development without respect to things or persons; and she will remain in that condition, the same in all the future as she has in the eternal past.

There are those who pretend to be well informed in the philosophy of Spiritualism who deny reëmbodiment or reincarnation as taught by well developed spirits: But if progression is a truth, then every human being has progressed from the soul atom, through all gradations of forms, up to their present standpoint; the mineral to the vegetable, the vegetable to the animal, up to the human form, which was born in the lowest form of humanity; and as it is represented that we pass through an entire change of body form once in seven years a person who is seventy has had ten reëmbodiments or reincarnations in this life. What, then, must have been the unnumbered bodies which he may have taken on and laid off in his progressive life-line? It is the immortal I Am or Soul which has progressed through all those many changes of reëmbodiment. The body we have now, never has passed with the soul through any lower changes of body forms; all the bodies the soul has passed through were laid off, as this body will be when the soul leaves it to enter a more etherealized one in the next life. I would ask those acute reasoners who believe the soul has had an eternal existence, what it has been about from the eternity of the past, if not coming up through the gradations of forms of existence below its present status?

It is said, through ignorance, that God (or Nature) never makes any mistakes, or goes back to do a work over again. Yet the law of progression has had to reëmbody every primitive, natural form in existence. The mineral, vegetable and animal, with the human forms, flatly contradict the above assertion. Every form in Nature is constantly being molded over; no thing of life can remain intact. If there is a God, he must progress, or his position would become stale. What would have been the condition of human beings if progression had not constantly renewed them? Every change the soul has passed through, called death, has been a reincarnation into a more otherealized body. The soul has not gone back into new bodies, but has come up from lower forms by the law of progression or unfoldment. Nature never retrogrades, but is eternally advancing, and all she will ever gain by it is experience, for there can be no new materials added to Nature, nor anything taken from it; everything in existence is a part of Nature, and lives and moves within her dominion, and cannot be put outside or destroyed, for she has no outside. All life will then eternally exist within her; will she never destroy any part of her own life, all assertions to the contrary notwithstanding?

It is said in the Christian's Bible that death, which is only change or rest, and he who has the control of it, will be destroyed. Can it be possible there is a power that can and will destroy the most holy and divine elements existing for the amelioration of suffering humanity? All Nature forbids! I have no doubt but there are two powers in existence, the positive and negative; one called good and the other bad; but in my opinion the one that is called bad is the lever that moves the world. They are both good, and one could not exist without the other. All things in Nature when equally developed will be equally good.

With all due regard for the truth, I remain a true friend to progression,

M. L. SHERMAN.

SMALLPOX AND VACCINATION.

The Disease not to be Feared—Its Proper Treatment—The Duty of the Skin—Vaccination—Shameful Malpractice—Views Worthy of Consideration.

BY C. S. WOODRUFF, M. D.*

For many years I have desired to give expression to my thoughts upon smallpox, but have been deterred from doing so by the fear that the time had not come when what I might say would be well received. Now, however, the time seems to have arrived when the public mind is open to the reception of liberal ideas upon many subjects, and as this is one admitting of the plainest speech, I shall in no manner reserve what, in my estimation, it fully merits. Although called small, it yet seems to have been large enough to frighten humanity out of its wits the world over for nearly a thousand years; and, to my knowledge, there has seldom been a rational word uttered in regard to its proper treatment and quarantining. From its earliest history down to the present time, it has been looked upon with a dread not at all commensurate with its real character; that dread originating in an ignorance which the science and civilization of later centuries have not been able to overcome and dispel; and, in the history of things, it is most marvelous indeed that this disease should have mastered the human mind for so many centuries, and that no greater advance in considering and treating it has been made. While it has been called a healthy disease, it nevertheless has held the world spellbound with fear, so that instead of receiving rational and calm consideration, and being met and conquered, it has seemed to imbue the human mind with but one impulse, and that to flee from it, or else cause it to be carried off to a den of its own, there to have free fight with its victims, undisturbed by the light of science or common sense. Of all the class of exanthemata to which it belongs, it is among the simplest, and least liable to leave—even with its present mode of treatment, or rather no treatment—evil after-effects upon the constitution; while it is a well-known fact that it oftentimes removes from the system constitutional disorders of long standing.

Its origin is unknown, and its precise character as little known. All writers upon the subject agree, however, that it is a specific poison, transmissible from one person to another; that it is one of the most highly contagious diseases, and with these astute conclusions they have, by some sort of common consent or otherwise, agreed in posting it upon the house-corners and cross-roads as a foe to be feared. Just how much of the contagion will transmit the disease has not been told us, but that the amount is infinitesimal there can be no doubt, since it may be contracted by simply passing one on the street; and even it is supposed, no doubt correctly, to have been carried in the air across rivers and over plains to a considerable distance.

The amount received in passing another quickly in the street is impossible of comprehension by the outer senses; it cannot be weighed or measured, still its effects may be most severe. In this fact might be found a strong argument in favor of infinitesimal doses in the cure of disease. Why one poison will generate an eruption upon the skin, another a fever, a cholera, or a mumps, no one as yet can tell, but the fact is well understood none have the power of reproduction with more certainty and clearness than the one under consideration; its nature seems to impel it to the surface more surely than is the case with others of its class. Its law is outward, and after the first great feverish fermentative disturbance its inception in the system creates, nature unerringly throws the intruder to the surface to pass it off through the millions of outlets furnished for that and similar purposes; and most wise indeed is the provision and this tendency, for were the disease to locate upon the internal organs it would doubtless prove the most formidable of maladies.

THE SKIN.

I must here digress a little, and speak somewhat of the function which is brought most prominently into use in this disease—the skin, with its vast and intricate network of capillaries, glands, ducts, etc. The cutis, or inner skin, holds in its fibrous meshes the capillary blood-vessels, which on one side receive the arterial in its extreme, or last flow, and pass it through into the vein radicals on the other side, to be returned again to the heart, and from thence to the lungs for aeration. The office of these capillaries is not only to transmit blood from the arterial to the venous circulation, but also to eliminate excrementitious matter by transudation to the sudoriparous glands, and through the skin direct, in the form of sensible and insensible perspiration. Each pore of the skin is a little duct, leading inward to a sweat-gland lying embedded in the meshes of the capillaries, whose office is to receive from the capillary vessels their excrement, and pass it out through its duct, and as there are about two thousand eight hundred such ducts to the square inch of surface, aggregating in one human body twenty-eight miles of drain pipe, it will seem that the system is well provided with outlets—when in a healthy condition—through which to rid itself of impurities that cannot be passed off in other excrementitious ways. In good health the function of these sudoriparous or sweat-glands is normal and constant, the amount daily eliminated not varying very much; but when the system is invaded with disease, like the one under consideration, and all the forces of nature combine to throw outward, these little busybody glands become overcharged with duty, and their ducts, or pores, having been previously baked and dried up for days with a violent fever, refuse to perform their office, the consequence being the undue collection and retention of effete matter, which, imprisoned for nine or ten days, inflames the skin and forms pustules that break and exude their contents upon the surface.

This exudation, not being washed off, dries into thick crusts or scabs that constitute the loathsome and infectious character of the disease that is so much and universally dreaded.

THE FIRST TREATMENT.

I write plainly, for I try to do so understandingly for the popular mind, and not for professional display. Now it can be readily seen that if by any process these ducts or pores can be kept open from the beginning of the disease, the escape of effete matter must be free; and if, by a still more urgent process, the activity of the sweat-glands can be largely increased, the rapid collection of matter to the skin, that occurs in smallpox, finds ready and easy transudation. This increased action of glands and pores can be accomplished easily by hot water bathing, often applied, and the use of sudorific remedies, which I have many times proven in practice. If a person be suffering from fever, whatever be the cause, the first and simple duty of the attending physician is to see that the pores of the skin are opened by bathing, and means taken to produce profuse perspiration, thus giving free vent to whatever there is in the system causing fever, whether it be the poison of smallpox or something else; so that whether the doctor suspects the nature of the disease or not makes no difference, since the measure for relief should be the same for fever under all circumstances, or from whatever cause. Long before the rash appears the patient should have been bathed many times and made to perspire freely. If this be done the rash appears very much modified, and, finding ready escape through pores previously kept well open, can be washed off as fast as it exudes upon the surface, and the disease thus be rendered simple and comparatively free from noxious odors, and forming very few if any pustules. Besides, the duration of the disease is very much shortened, its contagion very largely destroyed, and its progress toward convalescence comparatively comfortable.

VACCINATION.

Seen in this light, this king of diseases, this lion in the pathway of nations, that has held humanity at arm's length for so many centuries, loses at once all its hideous proportions, becomes shorn of its savage aspect, and the necessity no longer exists for the employment of that means so long and fruitlessly used to conquer this enemy to the peace and comfort of the mind of man, that abominable, unskillful, unnatural, unreasonable and unsafe practice of introducing an effete matter into the blood direct by opening the capillary vessels, called vaccination. For what is a scab, eliminated by processes of nature from the skin, but an effete substance, a dead and decaying pus? I care not from whence it comes or by whom recommended; it is totally unfit to be again incorporated into healthy blood by processes which nature cannot defend herself against, as she does when passed through the natural inlets. What will destroy life almost instantly when introduced directly into the circulation, becomes harmless in the stomach. Nature often culminates a fester upon the surface somewhere, through which to relieve the system of noxious particles; this is her method, and she never fails to improve opportunities, so that, if there are any poisonous remnants lurking in the blood, the vaccine scab must contain them. But contain what it will, a scab is still an effete, excremental, putrid substance, bearing the same relations to health that health does to life. I know what an array of statistical facts, so called, can be brought forward in favor of this vaccine practice; whereas that other possible statistical record, which has not as yet been compiled, but which remains for the future historian to present, bearing upon the other side of this question, and probably showing a long list of diseases far more fatal to human life than smallpox; the result, direct or indirect, of this unsafe practice cannot now be brought forward as an offset. I know also what motives might prompt the arrayal of such statistics on the part of those mercenarily inclined, with the view of perpetuating a practice largely lucrative to the profession, regardless of the question of right or wrong; but he who would pit his purse against human life is not its fit custodian. And how vile it is to speculate that the good effects of vaccination run out every seven years! The traffic, too, of scab-raising, judging from the number who engage in it, must also be lucrative. That very many of the new phases of disease that from time to time spring up and prove so destructive to life, especially infantile life, are largely due to this practice of vaccination, I firmly believe. That I have met many cases of specific poison from vaccine, I positively know; and it is fair to suppose that if it is possible for poison to be transmitted in one or several cases, it may be, and very likely is, in many or all cases; although pro-vaccination writers will stretch a point a long way to prove the impossibility of a specific poison being thus transmitted. A little reflection will convince any thinking mind that this is the very method for poisoning: the method of the serpent, the wasp, the anatomist's scalpel, etc., all introduced as vaccine virus is put into the system, viz: through the skin. It is claimed that vaccination modifies the disease, a claim not at all proven, since it is a well-noted fact that epidemics are most virulent and fatal when first known, becoming milder with each successive repetition. But, admitting that vaccination does modify the disease, it is still wholly unnecessary, since a little common sense nursing and treatment will readily cure it; whereas vaccination is the introduction of a greater evil to overcome a lesser. Why is it, if vaccination is a preventive, that every few years a smallpox epidemic sweeps over the length and breadth of the land, and, too, in communities where vaccination is compulsory? This is a pregnant question, and demands solution.

THE POWER OF FEAR.

And just here I would like to notice somewhat this question of a preventive. Many physicians and scientists understand the true relations existing between the mind and body, and how largely the functions of the latter are controlled by the former. Even those organs whose functions are involuntary, like the heart, are influenced by states of the mind, such as a sudden joy or fear. The liability of a person to be infected by a contagion is in proportion to the positive or negative state of the mind at the time of exposure, fear rendering the will negative and the body inceptive; while a total lack of fear keeps the mind positive, and thus wards off—to a great extent—the enemy. In the human spirit lie all human powers and possibilities, the body being but a bundle of organs obeying the spirit's mandates, given through its commander-in-chief, the will-power. Without the spirit the body is dead—a bundle of inertia—so that impressions made upon the former transmit to the latter, and give strength or weakness, as the case may be. If fear possess the mind weakness is the result, and vice versa. Persons have been known to die of fright alone. In times of cholera epidemics more die from the effects of fear than of the disease; or, in other words, when the will becomes negative through fear, the liability to the disease is greatly enhanced. I have known several instances of strong laboring men, who, becoming possessed by fear at hearing the recitation of some sudden death in their vicinity, were immediately taken with cholera and died in three hours. Anything that will keep fear out of the mind will operate largely as a preventive. Were any one, in a time of an epidemic of Asiatic cholera, to introduce some practice, or remedy, as a preventive, and be able to make the popular mind believe it possessed the power claimed for it, there is no doubt it would be the means of mitigating the ravages of the disease very materially, whether it possessed the virtues ascribed to it or not; and I believe the efficacy of vaccination—admitting it to possess any—is almost wholly due to its effects upon the mind in disarming it of fear. How frequently the expression is heard: "Oh, I am not afraid of the disease; I have been vaccinated and have a good scar"; showing the confidence the mind reposes in the custom. As another bit of evidence in this connection, I might show how seldom physicians and nurses contract contagious diseases. Who knows how many of the consumptions—so fearfully increasing—diphtherias, rheumatisms, neuralgias, chronic eruptions, brain softenings, scrofulas, blindness, etc., that afflict humanity, are due to this unnatural practice of vaccination? I know it is a question an affirmative reply to which is not easy of proof, but it bears reason well—is a reasonable reasoning. Many of the more insidious and fatal diseases are doubtless vaccine's progeny.

HOW THE DISEASE IS TREATED.

Since the practice of vaccination has not succeeded in ridding the world of smallpox, but it is still found necessary to maintain sanitary regulations, pest-houses, etc., let us look a little into the modus operandi of treating cases in times of an epidemic, and see what it is; and a modus operandi it is that would better become a nation of savages than races calling themselves civilized. A man is taken with the disease; his stage of fever has been gone through with, the eruption appears; the physician now makes out his diagnosis, and, heeding the legal injunction of the municipality in which he lives, reports the case to the health-officer. It is decided to take him to a pest-house, and he is, willingly or unwillingly, taken from his bed and home, generally in the night-time, and driven through the inclemency of night air, and perhaps storms, a mile or two to his new abode, there handed over to the tender mercy of strangers who, for hire, perform in some manner their mechanical duties. And how is he here treated? Is he tenderly and carefully bathed with warm water, containing some disinfectant, three, four, five or six times in the twenty-four hours, over his entire body, and his face much oftener? By no means; but he is put into bed with not so much as his usual bathing in time of health, and, with the exception of an occasional change of linen and bedding, allowed to lie there undisturbed, while the disease, that ought to be washed off as fast as it exudes upon the surface, is left to dry on, "piling Ossa upon Pelion," scab on scab, until the subject is outwardly one mass of decaying putrescence, emitting loathsome, poisonous odors, "a stench in the nostrils." And this is civilization! This is the pregnant age of progressive art and science! I burn with indignation and my cheeks crimson with shame that I have to write it of any people. If there be an accounting hereafter for wrongs committed here, those clothed with authority and assuming the care and custody of smallpox patients, exercising thereover arbitrary measures, will have much to account for, though let us throw over them the mantle of charity, and hope that here, as in other things, ignorance may cover a multitude of sins. All eruptive diseases especially need hot water bathing, but none so much as smallpox, not only as curative means but also as a sanitary measure, hot water being a ready solvent, and one that renders the disease mild, comparatively sweet, and of short duration. No thick, heavy crusts can form, with scars beneath them, if a strict cleanliness is observed, and the pestiferous stench, that otherwise is so infectious, is done away with, destroyed by the hot water. There should, doubtless, be appended to every city a smallpox or other hospital, having the most complete arrangements for bathing, supply and waste pipes, with competent nurses, for the accommodation of the indigent poor, strangers within its gates, etc., but, generally speaking, patients suffering from the disease can be best taken care of in their own homes, by tender and sympathizing friends having an interest in their welfare, and not be subjected to the liability of taking cold, as is the case in that inhuman custom of removing them elsewhere. Many an otherwise case is rendered severe, and ofttimes fatal, by exposure at a time when it needs the best of care and comfort. I cannot imagine that with proper care and treatment the disease could scarcely ever prove fatal in a sound constitution, or be in any degree loathsome or highly contagious. It should be met and taken care of, as other diseases, in the homes of the patients, and not be treated as an outcast, i. e., hustled out "pell-mell," patient and all. Rightly treated, this disease is no more to be feared than measles, and not half so much as scarlatina, so maiming and destructive in its effects upon the constitution.

* Dr. Woodruff, who some years since wrote out this valuable advice, has now passed to spirit-life. We have been put in possession of the article by a lady in Troy, N. Y., who greatly admired his literary work when he was in the mortal—but who declines to have her name used in this connection.—ED. B. OF L.

An Open Confession.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Dr. George S. Wilson, in making his report of the "Working People's Aid Society," Jan. 11th, in Boston, said that he would again call the attention of the members to the urgent need of "medical legislation" in this State! One year ago he stated to the society that in nearly all European countries and the British provinces, there were license laws to regulate the practice of medicine; and that there were also in twenty-eight States of this country laws preventing any person taking human life into his hands and practicing medicine, unless he had a special medical education; and that during the last year he believed two other States had passed similar laws.

It was to be regretted, however, that in Massachusetts the same lamentable condition of affairs exists as one year ago, and that there is no law that prevents any person from setting himself up as doctor. An attempt was made, early in the year, to enlist the co-operation of the Massachusetts Medical Society in the work of obtaining evidence against the "quack doctors." The President was written to, and respectfully asked if he would call the attention of that organization at its next annual meeting to the desire of the "Working People's Aid Society" to obtain answers from the members, to circulars expressly prepared for the purpose. The President, however, declined to comply with this request; and the attempt to enlist the coöperation of the society he represented proved futile.

This report shows "how the wind is blowing," and is an important sign of the times, indicating the prime necessity of alertness on the part of every friend of medical freedom in Massachusetts, lest in some unguarded moment the seekers after a restrictive doctors' monopoly law spring such a measure upon our now unshackled State. It is shown by such utterances as were given vent to in the report referred to above, that no stone is left unturned by these self-blinded zealots who are working for the best interests of their own pockets, to deprive some citizens of Massachusetts from exercising their constitutional right of choice as to a medical adviser in case of sickness; to prevent others from the exercise of natural healing and other gifts for the benefit of humanity; and to establish a close professional monopoly ostensibly as a protection for the people, when, as every one knows, the laws now on the statute-books are sufficient, if enforced, to punish malpractice and misdemeanor of every nature in the field of remedial matters.

In the State of Maine, purely local causes some time since brought the Regulars to the front to ask for a new enactment which, if granted, would deprive the people from employing individuals who had cured them in the past; in the last hours of the session the bill was enacted, and would have become a law, had not the late Gov. Bodwell vetoed the ridiculous measure that had been so hastily acted upon; the members of the Senate wisely discovered their mistake, and justly sustained the Governor's veto, and this act ended one of the most stupendous farces that was ever attempted in the way of enslaving the people of the Old Pine Tree State.

In regard to the open confession in Dr. Wilson's Report as to the action of the Massachusetts Medical Society, in its refusal to place itself in such a secondary position as is referred to, I would remark that its course shows sound sense and wisdom on the part of that organization. The Regular Society knows the difficulty it encountered when it, as a petitioner, several years ago, asked for a similar law, and the remonstrants not only came forward with accounts of remarkable cures that had been made by the irregulars, but also placed before the Committee some supposed-to-be-incurable cases that had been under the charge and care of its members, which "looked bad" when placed in their true light according to facts. It needs the presentation of both sides of a question to let a Committee know where to draw the line of distinction in medical practice.

Thus far in Massachusetts all that these petitions for new enactments in medical practice have done is to advertise the "irregulars" and destroy confidence in the Regulars in the public estimation.

If new laws are to be made, let the people see the need of them, and let the demand for them come from the people, and not from financially-interested individuals.

☞ All who are interested or curious in the matter of the Spiritual Philosophy should read OUTSIDE THE GATES and other sketches, just published by Colby & Rich, Boston, Mass., and from whom it can be had on receipt of the price, $1,50. The thoughts are beautiful, the statements based on reason and intelligence, and none but the most bigoted and narrow-minded can fail to be deeply interested and spiritually benefited. THE HEART UPON THE SLEEVE.

BY EDITH M. THOMAS.

What, noble masters, alamort?
Why will ye be the mob world's sport,
And let each knave his weapon pick
Wherewith to stab ye to the quick!

Lo! arms and charms ye do not lack
(If arms and charms could save from wrack)
Nor any point of crafty art
To triple fence and guard the heart!

Yet ye are scathed; unhurt am I,
Though to attack I open lie;
All nude of corselet, casque or greave,
I wear my heart upon my sleeve!

Since on the day Truth's lips I kissed,
No best of hers could I resist;
She turns and winds me at her will,
Her lips set mine the copy still.

She will not let me doubt or shrink
To roundly speak what I must think;
She lays this charge upon my skill,
To part entwining Good and Ill.

My heart upon my sleeve I wear,
And all who see may read it there;
"That poor, plain thing, a heart!" they cry,
And subtle-minded pass it by.

I laugh, I sigh, I praise, I chide,
With moods of mirth and sadness plied;
They call me, then, chameleon elf
That hath no color of himself.

But some, suspecting artifice,
The life they seek to take still miss,
Since all the deeper they might smite,
I bear my heart more high and light!

They think I case my bosom frail
With woven links of hidden mail;
The simple truth will none believe—
I wear my heart upon my sleeve!

Still, noble masters, alamort?
Your shields, your plates of proof, fall short;
But wear your heart upon your sleeve,
And not a dent shall it receive!

Banner Correspondence.

New York.

FARMERSVILLE.—William Henry writes: "I have been a subscriber, and an attentive reader of the BANNER OF LIGHT, with a few short intermissions, from the time of its first publication until the present. Have often thought of writing for publication; but the almost faultless style of your editorials, and of nearly all your principal correspondents, has discouraged me from offering anything, though I might esteem my thoughts valuable. You can have no words of approval so satisfactory as the fact that after reading it for over thirty years I prefer it to any other paper published. Not that I have a diminutive opinion, or am unacquainted with many very excellent spiritual papers. Nor do I wish you to understand that I fully and always approve and defend everything said in the BANNER. I see none that are modeled exactly to my ideal; and I am aware if I could edit a paper, or influence any one to strictly follow my own taste and judgment, without considering the diversities of tastes and conditions of other minds, I should have a very stupid and unsuccessful paper. My principal motive in writing is to give you a word of encouragement, and send to you and dear friends who read your paper fraternal greetings. 'Fraternity! Love's other name!'

I am now seventy years old, and think I begin to appreciate the supreme power, blessedness and beauty of charity. The best of logic, the greatest learning, and a possession of all spiritual gifts, unless adorned with a charity that thinketh, or at least speaketh no evil, are indeed but 'as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.' What, then, shall we say of people who deliberately write and print uncharitable and many times untruthful words? It seems to me Horace Greeley had a rule which should be adopted by every one, which was never to attribute a bad motive to any man if he could find any way to attribute a good one.

The saddest and most unaccountable thing to me is the uncharitable spirit sometimes manifest among so-called Spiritualists. I am aware there are the same Scylla and Charybdes to be guarded against on this as on every other question. While charity may permit us to be blind to what we consider faults and follies of men, it does not require us to overlook vicious acts, or compromise the truth. It is hard for sincere Spiritualists to believe any person could be so depraved as to deliberately deceive in matters so sacred. It seems to me any medium who is voluntarily guilty of deceit should be discountenanced.

With best wishes for the progress of the cause so dear, I remain your friend, and the friend of all."

NEW YORK CITY.—B. M. Lawrence writes: "The Spiritualists of Paterson, N. J., have just opened Fidelity Hall, nicely carpeted, up one flight, and centrally located, where they propose to hold regular Sunday meetings. The first meeting called two weeks since created such an interest, followed as it was with the exhibition of my new stereopticon views, that I was urged to return and assist in organizing a society, which I did Sunday, Jan. 15th, repeating the illustrations in the evening to a much larger audience, with a request to return as soon as other engagements will permit. A full list of officers was elected. A choir was formed and supplied with my new edition of 'Celestial Sonnets.' Speakers from this city and Brooklyn are requested to aid the society, and home talent is already being rapidly developed. Arrangements are being made to have Mrs. Gray and other mediums hold public séances. The six lectures that I have just closed in this flourishing city (two of which were before the Anti-Poverty Society) have confirmed my resolution to give my entire time to the platform, and principally to the cause of spiritual phenomena as the evidence of immortality. Additions to the illustrations of my descriptive lecture will not fail to attract to our beautiful faith investigating minds both in and out of the popular churches."

ALBANY.—D. M. S. Fero writes: "During the month of December we had Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, Mr. Charles Dawbarn, Hon. Warren Chase and Mrs. Reynolds of Troy, as our speakers, who were greeted with large and intelligent audiences.

Jan. 13th and 15th we had a decided intellectual feast from Mr. A. E. Tisdale. Language fails to do justice to the work wrought by this talented gentleman. His arguments were unanswerable, his delivery was excellent, his singing fine, and the satisfaction complete to all.

Prof. J. W. Cadwell will be with us the balance of January. Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing and Jennie B. Hagan will officiate here during February, and Bishop A. Beals through March; so you see we are still alive and trying to do our share toward spreading the light of the New Dispensation."

NEW YORK CITY.—"Patterson" writes: "It has been my pleasure for several months to attend the meetings of the First Society of Spiritualists of this city, and while I have always been liberal in my religious views it has been nearly my first experience of listening to the divine truths of Spiritualism as proclaimed by and through the well-known inspirational speakers who have occupied the platform of that Society—such as Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham, Mrs. A. M. Glading, Mr. J. J. Morse, Dr. F. L. H. Willis, Dr. Dean Clarke and others.

Their logical and forcible use of language—they speaking upon any subject without a moment's notice, and even several subjects within the limits of a single lecture, with as much depth of thought and felicity of expression as though the effort had been prepared by one of our best educated and most eminent clergymen (having a salary of ten thousand a year)—has filled my soul with admiration in behalf of these inspirational speakers and the cause they represent; and I venture to say that there is not a clergyman in the great city of New York who would dare to stand in his pulpit and have a subject handed to him, at sight, for discussion, and then give the opportunity to answer to one of these trance or inspirational speakers, leaving the question to the audience, by a rising vote, as to which of the two had been the most brilliant, logical and learned in their argument.

Still Spiritualism is not popular; and why? Because men and women are cowards, and had rather be fashionable than honest. We would like to see it otherwise, and hope to 'ere long, for public sentiment is changing, and the moral worth of men and women will not by-and-bye be so generally measured by the price paid for their church pews.

The First Society of Spiritualists is presided over by Mr. Henry J. Newton, one of nature's noblemen. The efforts of this gentleman and his estimable wife are earnestly put forth to sustain the principles and to lead a life of usefulness worthy of Spiritualism. I am informed that the expenses of the First Society are mostly paid by Mr. Newton; the monthly subscribers are not numerous, and the contributions very small.

This is not as it should be. In this city there are many thousands of people who firmly believe in the foundation principles of Spiritualism, who never attend a Spiritualist meeting, or are ever known to read the BANNER OF LIGHT (only 'on the sly')—they are so church-bound, and fear that they might lose social standing, or a dollar in business. When individuals shall stop being cowards, and will learn to work for a common prupose, Spiritualism will take a stand among the opinions of men that will make it uppermost in the hearts of the people, and not before. We believe this time is fast approaching."

Massachusetts.

FITCHBURG.—Pro Tem writes: "At séances given at the close of Joseph D. Stiles's lectures, Jan. 14th, the following, among other names, were given as those of spirits present, many being accompanied with personal descriptions or other means of identification: From Fitchburg, ex-Councilman Willard Dennis, Charles Brigham, Warren Russell (ex-leader of Fitchburg Military Band), Mrs. Emma Russell, Otis Ruggles, Thomas Whitmore, Abel Fox Adams, Dea. David Bates, Dea. Hartwell, Dr. Leighton, John Milton Harris; from Leominster, F. W. Divol, Susan and Lewis Tisdell; from Sterling, Levi Rice, David Wilder, Reuben Blood; from Westminster, Dea. John Foskitt, Daniel Foskitt, James and Lucy Buffer; from Lunenburg, Amos Dyke, Daniel Stowell, Capt. Sewell Goodrich; from Barre, William Ryder, Lot Holland, John F. Wood, Dr. Geo. E. Lee; from Ashburnham, Joel Ellis, Samuel Randall, Wm. Bemis.

Mr. Stiles is to lecture here again on Sunday, the 29th. There is always the ridiculous with the sublime, and so it seems when men of education and refinement are heard to remark about such tests: 'He must have gone to a deal of trouble to get all those names.' But sometimes more than their own curiosity is gratified by their own dear sister who died and was buried under the sod of the dear old country. Then comes the inquiry: 'How did he get that name?' Thus the mind becomes opened; they begin to seek for more light, and become receptive to the great truths of immortality."

BOSTON.—"Franklin" writes: "I am full of thought, tending toward a better education, and more harmonious development of human beings—as I believe. The advance is slow, but certain; our knowledge of truth grows imperceptibly, but surely—as in growth to the tree: after a long time it appears considerably increased, though each advance apparently amounts to nothing.

Deceivers may rise, flourish and fall out of the way, but truth never dies, and we will find, as we look back through the past, that history records the constant increase of man's intellectual force, so that the present has more refinement and greater spiritual toleration and harmony, and higher conceptions of true spirituality than has blessed any past age that we can read of. Material science has now the opportunity to record in written language its triumphs, and the human intellect is heir to the truth of the past without having to find it out for itself. So much for printing.

It matters nothing how many mediumistic adventurers are discovered. This process can never disprove a single correct statement. No juggiery can ever mix the true and the false. They are different, and will remain distinct—each excluding the other by its very nature. People get disheartened, because tricksters make their pretensions to being honorable; but the proper work of Spiritualists lies in discovering actual truth in regard to spiritual harmonies, and in trying to introduce such harmonies.

It is of no use to fight wind-mills. Let rascals flourish for a time; their own rascality is bound to expose itself. Many true-hearted, sincere lovers of humanity are more alarmed at these false imitators, than at the utter want of spiritual knowledge in which all are placed; they seem to forget that they can be as industrious as ever in working to see the truth, no matter how many scamps are wallowing in the mire of untruth."

WAVERLY.—Jesse Leverick writes that he lived in Beloit, Wis., twenty-eight years ago, and was known all over Rock county as a Spiritualist. He became such by reading "Paine's Pilgrimage in the Spirit-World," previous to which he had been a stanch infidel. The change from an opinion that there is no hereafter for man to a knowledge that immortality is his sure inheritance, changed his whole manner of living and led him to do all in his power to impart that knowledge to others, in which work he has since labored, and although seventy years of age continues to do so.

PHILADELPHIA.—"Reflector" writes, in view of what is being said in the secular press regarding the boy musician Hofmann: "Is reincarnation true, despite the adverse opinion of some of the lecturers on the Spiritualistic rostrum and that of various scholastic authors? Let us not become so absorbed with the 'dead languages' that we miss the vital importance of the (to many) great fact of reincarnation" [re-embodiment].

☞ "What a world of poetic and philosophic suggestion there is in Sir John Lubbock's remark in his address on the 'Senses and the Senses of Animals,' that to insects 'the world might be full of music which we could not hear, colors which we could not see, and sensations which we could not feel.' This, no doubt, is an hypothesis capable of explaining many apparently inexplicable actions on the part of insects, and others of the so-called 'lower animals,' whose senses are finer than ours. In the ancient tradition the dog howls because it sees the angel of death whom our eyes cannot see, and Balaam's ass may differ from other asses, not in his quality of seeing the angel of the Lord, invisible even to the prophet his master, but in his capacity of speech. The warder of the gods, who sits in the gate of Asgard, could hear the grass growing in the fields, and the wool grow on the sheep's back. How different might be the soul of a man if he had but the eye of an insect! A veritable new heaven and a new earth lie round each of us, from which we are excluded solely by the density of our senses."—Pall Mall Gazette, London, Eng.

A REVIEW OF THE REPORT
SEYBERT COMMISSION
APPOINTED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
TO INVESTIGATE
MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE
AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE.

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

Essence and Substance:
A TREATISE ON
Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,
Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

IF A MAN DIE,

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.

It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.

It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

ENGRAVINGS.

"MY PETS."

A bouncing girl, healthy and happy, sits among her Angola cats and kittens, on the steps of a French cottage, around which grape vines gracefully climb. She fondly embraces one of her pets, and her countenance in sweet eloquence bespeaks a heart brimful of the dawning of maternal love. Painted by L. Perrault. Engraved on steel by J. A. J. Wilcox. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"AN ARMFUL."

This charming picture represents a little girl in a barn of rustic architecture in the act of trying to carry off more of the old cat's young than she can well manage, while the other kittens frolic in hay and apples at her feet. The mother, in eloquently pleading attitude, is putting in a decided but dignified protest against the abduction. It is a very animated and pleasing gem of art, finely engraved on steel by F. T. Stuart, from a painting by V. L. Knous, an eminent German artist. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE."

Painted by Joseph John, and engraved on steel by J. R. Rice. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 16x21 inches.

"LIFE'S MORNING AND EVENING."

From the original painting by Joseph John. Engraved on steel by J. A. J. Wilcox. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 16x20 inches.

"THE ORPHANS' RESCUE."

Engraved on steel by J. A. J. Wilcox, from the origina painting by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches; engraved surface, 16x20 inches.

"HOMEWARD."

Designed and painted by Joseph John. Size of sheet, 22x2. inches.

"FARM-YARD AT SUNSET."

Copied from the well-known and justly celebrated painting designed by Joseph John. Stein, copied in black and two tints. Size of sheet, 22x28 inches.

"THE DAWNING LIGHT."

From the original painting by Joseph John. Engraved on steel by J. W. Watts. Size of sheet, 20x24 inches.

For each additional Engraving 50 cents extra.

The Man Jesus.

Without a doubt, the pure moral teachings of Jesus would make much more rapid headway among men in this age of the world if ecclesiastical authority, that insists on the worship of him as a divinity, instead of simply inculcating the spirit of his unexampled teachings, did not so heavily overlay the common intelligence, and cloud the average conscience. Theology prefers to rule the conduct of men by exciting their fears, rather than instruct them in pursuing the always better way, and inspire them with the contemplation of a perfect human example. Jesus has thus been made a sacerdotal fetich, for all people to acknowledge if not to worship, when it is only the exalted spirit of his teaching, and the unsullied character of his life, both of which were sealed by his martyrdom, that have any real significance for mankind. And these are precisely what the power-loving organizations of men, in church and state, and both, have eagerly appropriated for their own exclusive keeping, seeking to vindicate their unscrupulous ambition by preaching the morality taught by the man Jesus long before they or their designs were thought of. The last remark will sufficiently explain the seeming inconsistency which is so often implied in the fact that so-called good men make the most tyrannical rulers.

Rev. Mr. Savage recently preached a discourse from his pulpit in this city on the nature, life and work of Jesus. At the outset he disclaimed all belief in Jesus as God. Yet he protested that his reverence for Jesus was all the more profound for that very reason; that he never felt greater tenderness or fellowship for him than when he regarded him as human. He utterly refused to credit theological assertion, founded only on an assumption, that there was any need of such a life and death as that of the historic Jesus for the propitiation of God's anger toward fallen man. The history of humanity itself contradicts it—shows that the very need which was supposed to have called for this kind of work does not and did not exist. Man has never fallen, therefore there is no need of a plan for redeeming him from the results of a fall. Secondly, no human proof exists that any such wondrous and incomprehensible being as sacerdotalism makes out Jesus to have been ever had an existence on earth. Very similar beliefs of the mysterious blending of the distinct yet double natures of God and man prevailed in the most ancient times. People believed in beings who had divine fathers or divine mothers, and a double nature was ascribed to them. The asserted revelation of the so-called St. John proves nothing which the present century can be expected to accept.

But, stepping on higher ground than that of mere external evidence, the spiritual, Mr. Savage declared that there does not seem to him to be any sense of companionship in the thought of a being of this double nature. Such a being can be to him neither an example nor an inspiration. To form any adequate conception of Jesus as a real being, we must think of him either as God or as man. It is absurd to try to produce a dramatic effect by portraying to human imaginations the sufferings of Almighty God on the cross. And it is no less absurd, not to say blasphemous, to represent God as being patient and as overcoming difficulties. "What comforts me, what helps and inspires me," said Mr. Savage, "is to find some one on my own level who can feel the burdens I feel, who can face the temptations I face, who can understand the difficulties I understand, who can feel the perplexities I feel, but cannot solve them any more than I can. To see one like that more brave than I, more patient, more strong—that is what comforts me and gives me example and inspiration. Such a one shows me what I can be and do."

Nor could Mr. Savage see how the death and resurrection of Jesus can give any assurance to us in our belief of a future life. Tracing his career from birth, so far as anything is known of it, we see that he was willing to endure anything for the sake of the truth; facing obstacles, braving danger, supporting the desertion of friends; at last, in Jerusalem, rebuking sin under circumstances which he could not but have known rendered him liable to arrest and punishment. Mr. Savage questioned seriously whether he did not expect divine help and interference to save him at the last and to establish the kingdom of heaven on earth; for he wavered for an instant on the cross—a satisfying evidence of his humanity—and called on God to answer why he had forsaken him. There is no sublimer, more tenderly touching record in all human history than that of this soul, brave even unto death in spite of human weakness. He had the endurance of the martyr. He possessed a boldness that did not cower before the howling mob. He was inspired with a courage that flinched not in the shadow of the cross. His character for tenderness was never paralleled in the annals of the human race. His compassion for the frail and fallen was peculiarly divine. And his power of wrath, with its out of a lightning-stroke, was only for the hard, the grasping, and the cruel—for those who would coin the heart's blood of their fellow-men into money.

His pity, his ineffable tenderness, was always for what we call the fleshly frailties, the infirmities of men and women. Never did a hard word fall for them from his loving, sympathetic lips. He was human, but not humanity at its lowest. He was man, said Mr. Savage, in the highest reach of man. Was he perfect? he asked. Frankly, he answered, he did not know, for there is no man in history of whom we know less. The question had no necessity for him, he said, and therefore he did not care. It is not the most perfect men, he justly added, who have rendered the world the grandest services. Jesus was grand enough and high enough to be an inspiration, a helper, and a leader to all the ages since his time. "I believe," he proceeded, "that he died like any other man, and was buried like any other. I have no evidence of a physical resurrection, but I do think it possible that he was seen after his death. Men like that are never buried; they continue to live."

As to the work of Jesus, there are those who arrogate the claim that everything which distinguishes Christendom to-day above all the other nations of the earth is to be ascribed to the life and teachings of Jesus. But Mr. Savage rightly asks us to consider what has come to Christendom from other sources. We are to look, said he impressively, at the great stream of humanity with its origin in God—a mighty river, lost in the mists of antiquity. Moses contributed to it, so did Socrates, Plato, and many a Greek philosopher, poet and artist. So did Seneca, Virgil, Savonarola, Huss, Luther, Dante, and the great group of renaissance artists, scholars, humanitarians, all the leading thinkers, inventors, writers. All have contributed their share to Christianity. And he asks who is to untangle this mighty skein and tell us what threads lead directly back to Nazareth. And if it is Christianity that has done everything, he wants to know how it is that it has not produced the same effect on all nations alike; how it is that certain Eastern nations that are Christian are among the meanest and most contemptible on the globe; and if Christianity is able to elevate all to the same level, why the marked difference between Spain and Germany, France and the Norsemen.

Mr. Savage deliberately asserts that no man whose teachings have greatly influenced the world ever lived, who has shown less originality than Jesus, in the sense of being the author and first utterer of these teachings. He unquestionably, however, possessed a mightier power than that of originality. We find in him a feeling of ideal humanity. He has ever stood as the ideal man in the thought and heart of the world. There is no power mightier to propagate itself in other hearts and lives than this power exerted by Jesus. Men have felt eloquently, says Mr. Savage, this ideal of purity, tenderness, justice, truth. It has spoken to them so that they have been compelled to hear its still, small voice above the turmoil and clamor of earth, and it has had the power to reproduce itself in millions of other lives.

We find, said Mr. Savage, a marvelous, mighty power, such as we find in no other character that ever lived. This is purely soul-power, the power of the divinest thing in us. And as one feels life thrilling by contact with very God himself, so we are made more alive when we come into the presence of these souls, and are permitted to touch even the hem of their garments. "I do not know," he added, "of any character that ever lived who possessed this life-giving power to the same extent and in the same degree that Jesus possessed it. In his presence we feel the touch of life. In his presence we are lifted up and made strong. Jesus and souls like him are like mountains that catch the first rays of light, while we in the valley remain in darkness. We are not tall enough to see as they see, but we can believe that they see what they tell us they see and what they can, in the main, impart to us." That is all, and that is enough. If we were let alone to worship Jesus with our highest and holiest aspirations to be as much as possible like him, instead of being forced by sacerdotal machinery to adore him superstitiously as God while he is yet but man, and to regard him as a martyr in turning away from us the anger of One represented to be ineffably more to us than any earthly father, his life and teachings would do a work such as they are silently waiting to do in all human hearts. We should then know Jesus as he was and is and ever will be, and not as a mere name to entrench usurped authority.

A Critic in a Bog.

The superfluously wise men of the country continue to stand up and be counted. A fresh specimen of the class, who is not at all backward about proclaiming his individuality as Dr. H. P. Wright, in The Methodist, Little Rock, (Ark.) makes a supreme effort to annihilate Spiritualism by showing—to use his own peculiar expression—"how modern Christians unthoughtedly spread the doctrine of Spiritualism," and to signify with all the emphasis of which he is capable that it must be stopped right where it is or the worst of consequences will ensue. What this "Dr." has to say on the subject is entitled to no consideration at all from people of ordinary intelligence and mental cultivation; it is the spirit that characterizes his effusion of inane jargon to which we think fit to direct only passing attention.

After spattering the editor of The Methodist with a paragraph of what he intended for personal laudation, he comes to the point thus: "But about spiritualism"—the last word designedly with a small s, the better to manifest the contempt of a contemptible writer for the subject to which he thinks himself so vastly superior. He feels compelled to cite a paragraph from the Sunday School Times, to inform Christians what they are so "unthoughtedly" doing: "Much of the best work of the world"—says the paragraph quoted—"is done through the present personal influence of the dead. And in our estimate of the forces which give us efficiency, we ought to assign a large place to the power over us and in us of loved ones whom we mourn as wholly removed from us. As a practical fact, and as a great spiritual truth, our dead do for us as constantly and as variously as they could do for us if they were still here in the flesh; and they do for us very much that they could not do unless they were dead. Our living friends do much for us, but perhaps our dead friends do yet more." Now Dr. Wright thinks this is "orthodox spiritualism." It certainly is Spiritualism.

But he will not accept the sacred truth in that form. He wants an "orthodox" article, or he will have none. Hear him: "The Christian world believes that there is existence beyond the grave; so do the spiritualists [little s still]; but they believe that the dead sleeping in the cold damp vault of the grave are rational in the spirit, and that their spirits are wandering about and subject to be interviewed at will by some especially endowed spiritualist. Therein lies the great error. Hence the spiritualistic doctrine leads to free love, etc." The logic implied in the Doctor's "hence" is something irresistible. To overcome this doctrine of Spiritualism he proceeds to hurl the Bible texts around with all the impressiveness of an ancient Hebrew prophet, and he only an Arkansas doctor. . . . The Psalms of David, Ecclesiastes and Job are cited to appear in the columns of The Methodist as mute witnesses that "the dead know not anything," that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave," and that the sons of the dead man "come to honor and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low and he perceiveth it not of them." Thus, declares the Doctor, is it apparent that the Bible authority "is against the idea that the dead possess any knowledge until called from their long sleep in the bright morn of the resurrection." We said at the outset that what he had to say was entitled to no consideration at all from people of ordinary intelligence and mental cultivation, and there is no need of repeating it after giving the foregoing sample of his quality. A fine house for the God-given human spirit to be confined in for countless ages until resurrection morn, "the cold damp vault of the grave."

Next he tackles the subject with aid of his old spiritual friend and ally, the devil. This worn-out "bugaboo" of Old Theology is the main reliance of its defenders. Evidently the Arkansas doctor does not believe in the necessity of using a long spoon when sitting at the same table with his satanic majesty. "I rather think," he says, "that many of these manifestations are the spirits of devils working miracles." For proof, see Rev. xvi: 14. Satan has the power to turn himself into an angel of light. For proof, see II. Cor. xi: 14. Also, Isaiah viii: 19, 20. "Thus," says he, thinking he has that clinched it, and dragging up the battery of his irresistible logic, "thus we have three propositions." And the bored reader may perhaps inquire what these fatal "propositions" are. 1st. "The dead are without knowledge and have no communication with the living, and have no connection with the living further than our memory of them binds us to them, and the thought and hope of a final union urges us to a closer performance of duty." 2d. "The spiritual manifestations are by the evil spirit that 'rebelled against God,' and those 'who sinned and kept not their first state,' but left their habitations.' 3d. "Christians often strengthen the ism of the deception as is noted in the quotation from The Sunday School Times."

The person contributing this puerile drivel to The Methodist dates his sapient communication from "Bayou Metoe." He need not have been at the trouble to advertise his residence, present and past, in a swamp. He is in a very slough of despond. No wonder he is so much more addicted to a belief in devils and fiends, in the constant company of kindred frogs, newts, rattlesnakes, and water-witches of every description. It is not at all strange that he can think of the freed human spirit only as the tenant of "the cold damp vault of the grave." The man needs, first of all, to be reached with a ray of light. The dark twilight he lives in is matched only by the miasma with which his spiritual sense is infected. As a professed physician, we advise him to heal himself by wading out of his bayou up on to the firm land. He has butted his poor head against a subject that will surely give him a chronic headache. As one of the exclusive Christians he "takes the cake."

Woman as a Voter.

We have before us the printed testimony of Rev. Dr. Chapman, pastor of the East Oakland Presbyterian Church, who had spent some years in Wyoming Territory, and had held pastoral charges in Laramie and Cheyenne, in regard to the operation of woman suffrage in the Territory. He recently gave a lecture in the Modesto, Cal., First Congregational Church, in which he frankly set forth his conclusions in regard to what he saw. Dr. Chapman became a citizen of Wyoming Territory after the new law had been in force for thirteen years, and he observed its workings with the special purpose of forming an unbiased opinion on the subject. He attended caucuses and public meetings, and went to the polls and talked freely with men and women.

To begin with, he said, the polling places were removed from the saloons to the court-houses. The candidate, therefore, instead of seeking the vote of the saloon element, brushes up his dress, appears clean and respectable, and cultivates his manners. Since women have been appointed on the boards to count votes, tobacco smoke, profuse spitting, ribaldry and profanity are all dispensed with. This is the good woman suffrage does the male voters. As for the other sex, instead of losing any part of their instinctive refinement, they are as much real ladies as one will find them in any place where they are not allowed to give their ballots. Neither was he able to detect that they neglected any of their home duties because they exercised the right of suffrage along with men. In Nebraska, a constitutional amendment giving the suffrage to women was rejected, in part because of the common sentiment that found expression, that women who vote will not cook. This Dr. Chapman denied as the result of his own observation. There are, said he, no more wifely women in the Union than in Wyoming. And in Laramie and Cheyenne, there is as large a proportion of children to the female population as in any other cities.

But a marked change is wrought in the character of the women. They realize the dignity and responsibility of their new position. If there is a wrong that has found lodgment in the laws, they feel that they have a share in the responsibility for that wrong. And that responsibility is made to rest on the whole household. She is the equal of her husband, and ready and able to perform her share of the public work required to be done. When he thought of the independent power of women in Wyoming, Dr. Chapman said it made him heartsick to see ladies on their knees, in gutters, pleading to saloon-keepers in Ohio, during the crusade; and he confessed it made his heart hardly less sick to attend the meetings of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and hear their speeches and see how helpless they are.

He said he had often heard men say that a woman would vote as her husband does. Well, he asked, suppose she does? That only signifies that the family man's influence as a citizen has become twice what it was before. But it is not practically true that women vote as their husbands do. In a good many cases they vote very differently. They scan their tickets closely and vote intelligently, preparing their tickets at home. They vote differently from their husbands because they are not so tied to party lines, although they have decidedly partisan inclinations, much as men have, and can talk politics glibly. But they prove, said Dr. Chapman, to be great scratchers of their tickets. And yet he never heard of this different voting from their husbands causing any domestic infelicity.

As to the effect of woman suffrage on local government, he had to say that in Wyoming the men are in a great numerical majority. When he lived in the Territory the ratio of men to women was fifteen or twenty to one. It is now eight or ten to one. But the effect on the government of the cities, he stated, was very palpable. Although the women do not usually attend the nominating caucuses, yet their silent and unseen influence is none the less felt. The men at the caucuses show a greatly increased care in making up tickets to be submitted to the other sex to vote upon. They take pains to put good men on the tickets, as they instinctively know that the women will have no other. Men of doubtful character, said Dr. Chapman, could not be put before the electors in Wyoming Territory.

The women of Wyoming do not hold office, and have no disposition to. In a few instances they have been elected to office in the School Department, and have discharged the duties in an exemplary manner. Wyoming, in point of intelligence, though but a frontier Territory, ranks third in the Union. There is perfect order and decorum observed at the elections. Describing an election day in Laramie, Dr. Chapman said the ladies drove up to the Court House door. Their carriage was opened by a gentleman at hand. They ascended the stairs and were shown by a gentleman to the polling place. They deposited their votes and left the Court House by another door. He saw a woman, a widow, the owner of ten thousand sheep, go to the polls. A worthless drunken man followed next. He saw a woman going to the polls carrying a bucket in one hand and an infant on the other arm. Both sights conveyed their lessons to his thought.

Mendacity Par Excellence.

Last week we noted the fact that the "all-wise but utterly unscrupulous" Globe, of Boston, had, Jan. 12th, in a most unpardonable manner attacked the reputation of two perfectly respectable parties—the one Dr. A. Hodges, a prominent medium in this city, the other Madam La Bau, a member of the celebrated Vanderbilt family of New York. The Herald of that city also contained the same objectionable matter.

It now remains to be settled as to the amount of responsibility which the Herald of New York and the Globe of Boston must share between them for their miserable conduct in this case. Madam La Bau has sued the first-named paper for libel, setting her claim for damages at one hundred thousand dollars.

The New York Sun, Times and World have already ventilated this matter in their columns—the latter journal being especially severe on the Herald for its conspicuous mendacity in regard to this case—echoing the sentiments of Scott Lord, jr., Madam La Bau's lawyer, when he said: "This article is a contemptible assault upon the reputation of a respectable lady and the mother of a grown-up family," and calling attention to the disclaimer published by Dr. Hodges, and the fact that Mme. La Bau positively and unequivocally denies every charge made and any acquaintance with any of the parties named.

The article in question finds synoptical treatment to the following effect in the Sun of Jan. 18th:

Mrs. La Bau, a daughter of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, and one of the contestants of his will, instructed Scott Lord, her counsel, yesterday to sue the Herald for $100,000 for libel. The suit is based upon a despatch two and a half columns long, dated from Boston and published on Wednesday last, which set forth, as she alleges, that she had mysteriously disappeared, and declared that she had been humbugged by Dr. Hodges, an electrician and "faith healer," and by Spiritualists De Lancey Young and Nina Perry, of 628 Tremont street, Boston. Nina Perry appeared as the spirit of Mrs. Le Bau's dead child, according to the despatch, which also set forth that Mrs. Le Bau paid a great deal of money to many other mediums in Boston, often paying as much as one thousand dollars for a single "séance," and in one séance was enabled to converse with the Angel Gabriel. The despatch referred to Mrs. Le Bau as Mme. Berger, and said she was a hypochondriac and dosed herself with all sorts of medicines.

Mrs. Le Bau says that the despatch was a tissue of falsehoods, printed without any justification whatever. She declares that she never even heard of Dr. Hodges or De Lancey Young or Nina Perry. She says that she was married to M. Berger in 1873, but soon afterward assumed her former name of Le Bau, and has never lived with Mr. Berger since.

Mrs. Le Bau, continues the Sun, says that she is a Spiritualist, as Judge Edmonds was; but that she has attended but one séance in her life. She also says that she has not "disappeared," but has been living quietly at a New York hotel all the time.

The New York Herald ought to feel very much elated over its wonderful enterprise (?) in securing such disgusting and defamatory matter for its columns, and the Boston Globe's action in the premises, taken in a sort of "me too" way, can hardly be said to add any new lustre to its peculiar reputation. We are content to leave them in their present position, pilloried before the scorn of all thinking men and lovers of fair play, whatever may be their opinions regarding Spiritualism.

But it is due to Dr. Hodges, since we copied his alleged letter to the Globe from the columns of that paper, that we give publicity to matter which he then sought to set forth, and which he claims—and justly, beyond a doubt—the managers of that paper suppressed for their own purposes. We have been placed in possession of the following facts by Dr. Hodges, under date of Jan. 23d:

MR. EDITOR:

Of all the kind words spoken or written, which the article in the Globe has called out, none are more highly appreciated by me than those by THE BANNER in its last issue. Sickness of dear ones at home has prevented my sending you an extended article, but I here give the main facts, from which you will learn of what a tissue of lies the whole story was composed, and what a contemptible part the Globe has acted in this matter. The story was simply manufactured, and my name and street number added. There was no interview of any kind. I never had any patient answering any such description, nor have I ever received a thousand dollars from a single patient in all the years of my practice. The lady herself says she never heard of me; she told a Times reporter she never consulted any medium in Boston, or employed a physician of any school here. The Globe managers knew all this, yet when I sent them a letter of denial, they suppressed what would have placed them in questionable position, and published the rest, as you copied it into THE BANNER. This is the treatment the cause and its mediums are constantly receiving from certain of the daily press.

A clergyman who has attended several of my séances called yesterday to express to me personally his indignation. He said he was surprised that the Globe did not editorially admit it had done me a great injustice. I asked him if, supposing I had been Evangelical or Catholic in belief, instead of a Spiritualist, he thought I would have received the same treatment? He answered "No." The Globe may be very rich and independent, as it boasts, but it seems it cannot afford to be just.

Such press attacks against Spiritualism will, however, never be successful. The cause will not down. It is the only proof of immortality.

Fraternally, DR. A. HODGES.

The Seybert Commissioners' Last Ditch.

Mr. Harry Kellar, the magician, by whom the Seybert Commission in their report claimed to have been informed just how the independent slate-writing of Henry Slade and others is produced, but which information they had not sufficient confidence in to give it to the public, and thus convince the world that their conclusions were based on something better than their prejudices, has been brought to the test and signally failed to substantiate his pretensions.

As Mr. Kellar was a short time since fulfilling an engagement in Cincinnati, the time was thought to be a propitious one for proving whether the "eminent professional juggler," who "utterly baffled" the wise men of the University, could do what they said he could and what they claim he did. The following from The Better Way of last Saturday gives the particulars of what transpired:

COPY OF LETTER SENT TO MR. KELLAR.

"CINCINNATI, O., January 10th, 1888.

MR. KELLAR—Dear Sir: The claim has been made in some of the public journals and by some of the adherents of the Seybert Commission of Philadelphia, that among your many wonderful feats of magic, etc., you can produce independent slate-writing by means of juggling, etc., under the same conditions and restrictions as those under which mediums for the manifestation of spiritual phenomena produce such writing. Now, if you can accomplish this, many intelligent persons would be glad to know it; and, if you will consent, a test of your ability in this direction is desired.

The 'conditions' which I suggest are as follows:

The success of your effort to be decided by a committee of three persons. You to select one, I to select one, and these two to select a third. In the presence of yourself and this committee I will produce an ordinary double slate, closed and securely fastened—which is not to be opened or unfastened until your attempt is concluded. Between these two closed slates I will have placed a piece of slate-pencil the size of a grain of wheat, and a slip of ordinary writing paper, two inches wide and three inches long, on which will be written the name of one of my spirit friends. This closed double slate and contents are not to go out of my hands during our interview.

Now, if you shall write or cause to be written on either of the inner surfaces of said slates, by any means other than mediumistic power, an intelligent and pertinent message, signed by the name written on said slip of paper, then it is to be considered that you have succeeded in producing independent writing under medial conditions. If the writing is not so produced, then it is to be considered that you have failed in your undertaking.

If you make this test in the manner prescribed, you will be liberally compensated for your services, whether you succeed or not.

Trusting that you will consider this proposition as having been made in all candor and good faith, I leave it with you.

Any reply you may make and address to me in care of the office or editor of The Better Way, Cincinnati, O., will receive my prompt attention.

Very respectfully, JOHN CALVIN."

On the ensuing day the following paragraph appeared in the "Amusement Notes" of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette:

"A gentleman signing himself John Calvin has challenged Mr. Kellar, the magician now at Heuck's, to a slate-writing 'test,' which Mr. Kellar has accepted, agreeing to forfeit $500, to be devoted to some charitable institution, provided he fails."

On the same day I went to the office of The Better Way, expecting to find a formal acceptance of my proposition; but nothing from Mr. K. had been received. I then went to the Opera House previous to the matinee performance of the day, sent my card to the gentleman, and he received me very cordially in his dressing-room, where, during a very pleasant interview of perhaps ten minutes, Mr. Kellar informed me that he declined to make the test under the conditions stipulated, giving as his reason that it was absolutely impossible for him or any one else, either by spirit-aid or not, to succeed under the restrictions specified in my communication to him.*

Now, there are very many readers of this paper who have attended sittings for slate-writing, whose invariable custom is to carry their own slates or blank books with them, in order to preserve the communications received. These slates or books never leave the possession of their owners, and in them they habitually receive written messages from the spirit-world. I have in my possession a little book which I have carried with me to many sittings with a medium for independent writing. There were quite a number of communications written therein during these visits, and I know that the mediums never so much as touched the book. Therefore, to persons who have had these experiences—to whom such occurrences are an actual knowledge—are not Prof. Kellar's claims to duplicate, his declination to attempt, and his statement of the impossibility of such productions, proof of a very strong character that spiritual manifestations cannot be produced by simple magic, conjuring or juggling?

Respectfully, JOHN CALVIN.

Cincinnati, Jan. 12th, 1888.

*Though we have published the fact before, it is apropos in this connection to say that during Mr. Eglinton's series of séances a few years since in Calcutta, Mr. Kellar attended one or more of them, and published in the Indian Daily News an account of what he witnessed, including independent writing, under conditions similar to those described above, closing with the following:

"Forty-eight hours before, I should not have believed any one who had described such manifestations under similar circumstances. . . . I repeat my inability to explain or account for what must have been an intelligent force that produced the manifestations, which, if my senses are to be relied upon, was in no way the result of trickery or sleight-of-hand. (Signed) HARRY KELLAR."

Spirit Phenomena!

We shall print next week a verbatim report (prepared specially for our columns) of a discourse treating the above important topic, which was delivered in BERKELEY HALL, Boston, Sunday morning, Jan. 15th, by MRS. R. S. LILLIE.

☞ The list of Spiritualist meeting notices heretofore appearing regularly on the eighth, will now be found on our sixth page.

The Official Management

Of the New England Spiritualists' Camp-Meeting Association will hold a business session at the Crawford House, in Boston, on Saturday, Jan. 28th.

Among other matters for consideration will be the arrangements for holding the Annual Camp-Meeting at Lake Pleasant the coming summer.

☞ While the American Churches are sending out missionaries to India to "convert the heathen," and quarreling over the point of what class of men to send there—whether evolutionists or otherwise—a Parsee girl student named Sorabji has become celebrated for her intellectual powers in that "awfully wicked and demented country." She has distinguished herself throughout her university course, and has succeeded in winning scholarships each year. In 1885 she was declared Havelock "prize-man," and gained the Hughling scholarship, besides being at the head of the list of competitors in English. She has now succeeded in graduating in the first class. Only six students in all, of whom the remaining five were men, succeeded in obtaining this degree. Miss Sorabji is the only "girl graduate" in the Bombay Presidency. Further comment is unnecessary, excepting to say that we should think the Andover bigots would hang their heads in shame.

☞ "Stop this lawlessness of tongue and assassination by scurrility," said Dr. Talmage in a recent address, "if you do not want to hear the echo thereof in the crack of pistol or explosion of dynamite. In every autumnal election, and especially in every quadrennial election, there is enough damnable stuff uttered about public men to arouse against them the uncontrollable classes. There is hanging dreadfully needed all through this land—the hanging of slanderous tongue and of scurillous pen. Make your writing-desk and your own political stump the gallows." And he describes what he imagines the newly arrived immigrants would think, if they understood English, at reading the papers and hearing the speeches made just before an election. For himself, if he were one of their number, he declares that he would take the next steamer and hurry back to Europe as fast as he could.

☞ A murderer was choked to death by law in this State, on Friday, 20th inst. If the ancient Mosaic code regarding "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" must continue in this Christian community, we would earnestly impress upon the attention of our law-makers the report made recently by a special Commission of the New York Legislature, to wit: that the most humane and practical method known to modern science of carrying into effect the sentence of death in capital cases is the killing of culprits by electricity. The matter has, we know, already been introduced into the Massachusetts Senate by Mr. Crosby of Berkshire, and we trust it will receive the endorsement by both houses of some practical scheme in this direction.

☞ It will be seen by the correspondence in THE BANNER each week from many sections of our country that the Spiritual Philosophy is gaining ground more rapidly than ever before. Thousands of public and private circles are being held, and the interest in direct spirit-communion is permeating the souls of many people who but a very short time ago knew nothing or very little upon the subject. We believe, with Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, whose communication appeared in the last BANNER, that "the Spiritual Phenomena have a deeper significance than man in his present state of unfoldment can comprehend; . . . they are the doors that open into the halls of knowledge, and we cannot afford to ignore or treat in a superficial manner one of these helps or guides to temples of truth."

☞ The New York Evening Post of a recent date alludes to Prof. Henry Kiddle's arraignment—under endorsement of the American Spiritualist Alliance—of the Seybert Commission, as "a critical review of its work from a Spiritualist source," and "a sweeping censure of the methods of the Commission"; the Post closes its notice by transferring to its columns the succinct recapitulation (six paragraphs) with which Prof. Kiddle concludes and clinches his trenchant Review.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.—The Golden Gate, of San Francisco, is doing good work in the advocacy of the spiritual cause.——W. J. Colville's meetings are well attended.——J. J. Morse gives on our eighth page an interesting narration of his work on the Pacific slope.——The Carrier Dove, in addition to much other interesting matter, is now printing an original story by Miss M. T. Shelhamer, entitled: "Crooked Paths, or the Wages of Sin."

☞ The independent slate-writing phase of the spiritual phenomena is an established fact to all those who have honestly investigated the subject. Those who have no knowledge of the fact, and are desirous of learning the truth in this matter, should call upon the medium Watkins, located at 109 Falmouth street, this city.

☞ Prof. J. H. W. Toohey will please receive our thanks for a copy of Charles William Butler's poetic memorial of Wendell Phillips. The likeness of this great friend of the oppressed with which the brochure is embellished is excellent.

☞ We are in receipt of full files of our French and Spanish Spiritualistic exchanges, but we find nothing in them of especial interest in re Spiritualism in the Old World. Quotations from THE BANNER appear in several of them.

☞ As will be seen by reference to his letter in another column, press of mediumistic labor will prevent Bro. J. J. Morse, of San Francisco, Cal., from visiting the Eastern Camp-Meetings the coming season.

☞ The Berry Sisters continue to hold their séances Sunday and Wednesday evenings, also Sunday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

NEW ENGLAND LABOR REFORM LEAGUE.—It is announced that the Twentieth Annual Convention of this organization will be assembled in Codman Hall, 176 Tremont street, Boston, on Sunday and Monday, Jan. 29th and 30th, three sessions daily. Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D., John Orvis, Carl Fredi, Rev. J. M. L. Babcock, N. E. Chase, J. P. Sheafe and other speakers expected. Rev. Dr. Miner speaks at three P. M. on Monday, Jan. 30th.

CELESTIAL SONNETS.—Colby & Rich have now on sale copies of a new and improved edition of this fine musical collection by B. M. Lawrence, M. D. The work will be found of marked value to Spiritualist and reformatory societies, as well as in the home circle. Circulate it, friends,

THE LESSON OF "SHE."

BY JOHN W. DAY.

I.

A wondrous being, fenced by vital fire—
A type of blended hate and joy art thou;
Through circling centuries a fierce desire
As Scribe's phylactery rests on thy brow,
Till reached at length Fruition's Haven bay,
Life sweeps thee, by excess, from port away!

II.

While she who all uncrowned thy truth defied,
And dared for love to cross th' Eternal sea,
Smitten and prone—all stark and glassy-eyed—
Yet speaks a deathless truth to you and me:
Fair Innocence transcends wild Passion's power;
Each blasted joy re-blooms in Eden's bower!

A queer story is afloat to the effect that two young men attached to a jewelry establishment on Washington street had a "falling out" recently, which resulted in a personal tussle. The one who got worsted said: "You got the best of me this time, but I 'm going to join the Young Men's Christian Union, so that I can have access to its gymnasium, and then I 'll give you sheol!" Here is a specimen of muscular Christianity with a vengeance.

The standards of Mahomet's armies were green. The color is still held sacred by the followers of Islam, and none but the bona fide descendants of Allah's prophet may indulge in the luxury of a green turban.

Lent will begin on Feb. 15th—a period when it is fashionable to be good, and good to be fashionable.

THE SMITH AMERICAN ORGAN is a standard instrument. Competent witnesses attest to the fact that it is one of the very best in the market. Call at the factory and warerooms on Tremont street opposite Waltham street, Boston, and see for yourselves, friends. Those residing at a distance will have a circular sent to them by addressing the "Smith American Organ and Piano Company," as above.

The present strength of the Knights of Labor is placed at nearly 500,000 members.

A petition recently sent by women to the Queen of England to close public houses on Sunday, received 1,132,000 signatures.

A correspondent asks about the burial-place of Ham. There is a town in Massachusetts called Sandwich. Perhaps that is the place.—Baltimore American.

Robert Buchanan has a new poem entitled a "City of Dreams." It is in blank verse, and deals with religion and speculative problems, and will be dedicated, it is said, to "the sainted spirit of John Bunyan."

No one can sufficiently appreciate the greatness of this Republic of ours, its breadth of empire and its grandeur of structure, till he has crossed the continent by steam; so vast its geography, so limitless its varied resources, so boundless its wealth, that it can not be realized till one has chased the sunbeams of six days and bored into the dark of six consecutive nights, and thus measured the distance that divides the Atlantic from the Pacific shore.

Parson Bliss has several flings at Eastern and Western Spiritualists, in his last issue—which does not exactly comport with his pastoral affinities. "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad."

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage wonders that editors of newspapers believe anything. They are bored by cranks, mock moralists and pestilent humbugs every day in the week, and they see the follies and shams of the world through disguises that are as open as the day to their practiced and disgusted eyes. It is this that enables the newspaper man to bear up under so many adverse circumstances, and to rest with unshaken faith on the sublime truth that human nature is not all bad.

Prof. Helmholz estimates the interval necessary for nerve communication with the brain at one-tenth of a second. Prof. Tyndall estimates that an electric discharge occurs in a one-hundred-thousandth of a second, or ten thousand times more rapidly than nerve transmission.

There will be an exhibition in Paris next year, intended to illustrate all the religions of the earth, past and present. Idols, manuscripts and all tangible symbols of religions will be shown in a museum building, which it is expected will cost $200,000. One-third of this is to be contributed by the Government.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN VERMONT.—The Woman Suffrage Convention, recently held in that State, elected the following officers to serve during the present year: President, Mrs. Mary E. Tucker, Brattleboro'; Secretary, Miss Laura Moore, Barnet; Treasurer, Mrs. E. J. Nelson, St. Johnsbury; Auditor, Mrs. C. W. Wyman, Brattleboro', and Board of eleven Vice Presidents.

The earthquake of 1886 left deep pits in the land between Charleston and Summerville, and on the margins of these was white sand, such as is seldom found except near the seashore. On this sand has sprung up a dense growth of seaweeds, and it is conjectured that the seeds whence sprung this growth had been buried at a great depth for many centuries.

Philadelphia, Pa., was visited, on the night of Jan. 23d, by a terrific conflagration, the loss caused by which is estimated at $1,500,000.

Gratuitous vindictiveness conspicuously shows the utter wantonness of its possessor. Such individuals are likened unto the poisonous reptile that kills itself with its own venom.

SCIENCE IN THE POLAR CIRCLE.

There is a certain Esquimau
Who much of knowledge knows;
One day he found, with grief and pain,
He 'd frozen off his toes.

What did this knowing Esquimau,
Who had the learned brain?
He bound them to his feet, of course,
And froze them on again.

One of the strange coincidences of nomenclature is that the daughter of Gen. Logan married a Mr. Tucker, while the daughter of ex-Representative Randolph Tucker married a Mr. Logan. Each couple have a son. The name of one is Tucker Logan and the other is Logan Tucker.

Mephitic discharges are not arguments.

In the midst of his late attack on the Blair bill, Senator Vest, declaring himself in favor of a State system of schools, uttered this sentence:

"I wish that every child, without distinction of race or color, could be learned to read and write."

If the Blair bill had been in operation forty or fifty years ago, it is evident that the distinguished Senator from Missouri might have profited by it, says the Boston Journal.

"Well, Father Brown, how did you like my sermon?" asked a young preacher. "Ye see, parson," was the reply, "I 'm an old man now, and have to set pretty well back by the stove; and there 's old Miss Smithe, 'n Widder Taff, 'n Mrs. Rylan's darters, 'n Nabby Birt, 'n all the rest, settin' in front of me with their mouths wide open, a swallerin' down all the best of the sermon; 'n what gits down to me is pretty poor stuff, parson—pretty poor stuff."

[THIS SEASON COMMENCES!]—At Cane Hill, Ark., one night recently, James Houston was awakened by a noise under his bed. Lighting a lamp, he looked under, and saw what he at first supposed to be a cat, but when he struck it with a cane a big snake darted after him. He drove it back under the bed, took his wife to a neighbor's for safety, and went back and killed the serpent with a pitchfork. It measured eleven feet nine inches in length, had stripes running diagonally around its body, and had recently swallowed three young kittens.—Ex.

CONUNDRUM.—Why are some men in one respect like mules? Because they are everlastingly kicking.

Ah! when a man is dead and you are sure that he is out of the way, you can afford to praise him. It is when men are living that we are not charitable. I have not the least particle of prejudice against the thistles that were on my place last year. It is those that are there now that I do n't like.—Ex.

Queen Carola, of Saxony, has established a free kindergarten for the benefit of the children of poor laborers on her estate, Sibyllenort, where she annually spends part of the summer.

A true Spiritualist is not satisfied with simply knowing the truths of Spiritualism, but is anxious that others also should be filled with the glorious light that has flooded his or her own pathway. To all such we bid Godspeed in their good work. They are pioneers in the world's great march of religious freedom and moral reform.—The Chicago Watchman.

Serjeant Cox, referring to the phenomena of Spiritualism, says: "If they are not facts, but delusions and impostures, how comes it that not a single investigator of repute, after patient and honest examination, has failed to be convinced that the phenomena are real, or volunteered to assert that he has discovered a trick, and shown us how it was effected?" This paragraph is respectfully referred, for their candid reflection, to the members of the Seybert Commission.

The school children's minds are so much directed toward scarlet fever by the frequent inquiries which the teachers are compelled to make in regard to it, that they think more about the disease than is good for them, and see indications of it in many innocent things. "I guess," whispered one little girl the other day, seeking her teacher as soon as she entered the schoolroom, "I guess they 've got scarlet fever at Mary Jones's. They 've got little scarlet sausages on every window sash in the house."—Boston Transcript.

A Seven Years' Sleeper.

In Utica, Winona Co., Minn., according to reports in a Chicago paper, a man has been sleeping almost continuously seven years, and has not finished his nap yet. A reporter of the Times recently visited him, and learned from his wife and neighbors particulars of his phenomenal condition. He came from Germany ten years ago, married, and went to farming. In 1880 he was strong and hearty. In the autumn of that year he had an ague chill, and from that his peculiar somnolence has dated. He slept three years. When he awoke he was as incredulous when told by his wife of the length of time that had passed since he dozed off to sleep as Rip Van Winkle was at the end of his twenty years' similar experience. For three months he led his usual life; then one day when his wife was sick, and he was waiting upon her, he grew dizzy and fell to the floor. She told him to lie on the lounge. He did so, fell asleep, and from that day to this has not awakened except for a few moments each night, when his wife goes to him with food; this he takes mechanically, and says nothing, except to mumble incoherently. Sometimes, perhaps a dozen times a year, he talks much as one would suddenly awakened from ordinary sleep, muttering something about work, or not feeling like getting up. These periods last but a but moments, when he drops back to his pillow, and resumes his sleeping. Electric shocks have been given him without producing any visible effect.

Art Mediumship.

We are in receipt of specimen sheets of crayon drawings of leaves and flowers executed through the mediumship of Mrs. A. L. Davie, of 343 Howard Avenue, New Haven, Ct., whose development for this phase of spirit manifestation has been in progress three months, during which time about two hundred of them have been produced. They are done with great accuracy, and exhibit greater artistic skill than much that has been shown in this line of mediumistic work. They represent leaves and flowers differing from what are known to earth-life. Mrs. Davie informs us that while they are being made she is in her normal state, her hand being controlled and moved by the unseen intelligence. She has in this way produced five within three hours, which any one who sees them must consider very remarkable, as it would be almost impossible for one not thus aided to make one of them in that length of time. She is promised further development in this peculiar and interesting form of mediumship. The specimens we have mentioned may be seen at this office, and those wishing further information may obtain it by addressing Mrs. Davie as above.

COLBY & RICH have on sale copies of an interesting pamphlet by HON. WARREN CHASE, which treats of the sudden demission of a young lady who had made no profession of religion, but was finely educated and a universal favorite with her acquaintances. The lecture reviews her fate under the different creeds and beliefs, and then describes her spirit-form rising over the body and meeting her parents and sister and going with them to their new home—as seen clairvoyantly. Copies will also be sent by the author through the mail from 201 Summer street, Worcester, Mass., on receipt of price (10 cents).

"FREETHOUGHT" is the name of a new weekly in San Francisco, of the liberal persuasion, edited and published by Samuel P. Putnam and George E. Macdonald, whose reputation as able and forcible writers and pungent commentators on current events will commend it to a good patronage.

THE HIDDEN WAY, by Dr. J. C. Street, is meeting with good demand at the hands of the reading public—the circulation of the book in England being particularly promising.

Correspondents inform us that Dr. Dean Clarke has been giving the highest pleasure and satisfaction by his eloquent and instructive lectures in New York and Brooklyn. His inspirational powers are increasing, and hold his hearers in profound thought. We learn that he is not engaged for February and March. His valuable services should not be lost for a single Sunday. He may be addressed at this office.

Worcester, Mass.—During the month of January our society has had the sterling services of George A. Fuller. On Sunday, Jan. 22d, he introduced the exercises with the soul-stirring poem, "Outward Bound," from the pen of our arisen sister, Helen Hunt Jackson, his remarks following ably illustrating the difference between the passing religion and our own beautiful faith. How often, he asked, must the Bible be revised to keep pace with the progressive character of the human mind in the present age?

We honor Bro. Fuller for his steadfastness to the "Light" given him, and hope Spiritualist societies throughout the land will keep him busy and extend to him a heartfelt welcome. FRED. L. HILDRETH.

Brockton, Mass.—A large and intelligent audience listened to W. F. Peck, who delivered a graphic lecture describing his evolution from Orthodoxy to Spiritualism. The detail of his struggles with his doubts and his final conversion to the latter faith, was intensely interesting, and found an answering chord in the hearts of many of his listeners who had trod the same path in the search for light. Mr. Peck has made himself a decided favorite with Brockton audiences, and will doubtless be heard by them again in the near future.——Next Sunday Mrs. Abby N. Burnham will lecture and give tests before this society. •••

Haverhill and Bradford.—A very interesting, powerful and instructive lecture was delivered before the Brittan Hall Spiritualists last Sunday afternoon by Mr. J. William Fletcher, of Boston, upon: "White and Black Magic," in the discussion of which the relations between Spiritualism, Theosophy and Christian Science were intelligently shown. In the evening his subject was his visit to Egypt and Palestine. ——Next Sunday Mrs. E. Cutler, of Philadelphia, Pa., will occupy the platform. E. P. H.

Norwich, Conn.—Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes has been our speaker for two Sundays, and has given sound, logical reasoning upon the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism, seeking to arouse Spiritualists to a realization of their obligations and the need of action, and asking them to show in their daily lives the principles which they profess to believe.——Mrs. Emma L. Paul of Morrisville, Vt., will be our next speaker.
MRS. J. A. CHAPMAN, Sec'y.

Lynn, Mass.—Last Sunday, Jan. 22d, the guides of Mrs. H. S. Lake gave two able and instructive addresses to excellent and appreciative audiences. Psychometric readings, which were clear and satisfactory, followed each lecture. A desire for Mrs. Lake's return was very generally expressed.——Next Sunday Dr. H. B. Storer speaks for us, both afternoon and evening. •••

Newburyport, Mass.—Miss M. T. Shelhamer lectured on Sunday afternoon on "What is Spiritualism?" and in the evening devoted the time to answering questions. It is needless to add that Miss Shelhamer's labors here proved a decided success, both afternoon and evening, and added to the laurels already won by her in this city. H.

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work. Cloth, pp. 324. Price $1.25.

Message Department.

Public Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY and THURSDAY AFTERNOON of each week.

On Tuesday afternoon MISS M. T. SHELHAMER will occupy the platform for the purpose of answering such questions as may be brought up for the consideration of the Controlling Intelligence.

On Thursday afternoon, JOHN WILLIAM FLETCHER, under the influence of his guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit-messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock, and services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no egress until the conclusion of the séance, except in case of absolute necessity. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits at the Tuesday séances for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who may recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of the BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case, but to LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 5th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Wise spirits, will you not bring unto the world a knowledge of that life in which you live, so that human beings who are struggling with darkness, with temptation, with ignorance and with sin, may gradually understand that as they conquer these they shall find rest and peace in the end? Will you not send some messenger from the land of beauty and of light whose countenance shall shine down upon the pathway of those souls who are seeking the better way, whose voice shall speak unto their waiting hearts, revealing in its words that life where justice and truth and purity abide, whose sweet presence shall gladden those who are in sorrow, and make the narrow doorway of the grave but the open portal to the eternal life.

Our Father and our Mother, and ye bright spirits who do the will of the highest, we seek your blessing; we place our hands and our hopes with you, and trust that when the end of the earth shall come our offering may be acceptable in your sight.

George D. Emmons—His View of Cremation.

I have been requested, before giving my personal message, to describe briefly the effect that the process of cremation has upon the spirit—as my body was cremated something over a year ago, at Harrisburgh, Pa.

I am George D. Emmons, of Baltimore, and I shall endeavor to describe the sensation that I passed through when this chemical change was taking place.

I had learned, through a consideration of the subject, that the spirit is not necessarily free from the body after the body has ceased to breathe; that it is connected to the old tenement of clay for some time, and is susceptible to the changing conditions that may surround that body. When a person is drowned, the spirit would not be able to leave the body perhaps for days; and bodies that are packed in ice—for preservation and other reasons—hold the spirit for days, weeks, and possibly months, and produce a most unpleasant and unhappy effect upon it.

Certain persons, whose influence is strong or antagonistic, will throw influences over the body that will serve to enchain the spirit and retard its progress in the spiritual world.

You know, Mr. Chairman, it is a custom with some people who do persons harm while they are living, when they find out that they are about to die, to go to them to be forgiven, at the last moment. They have been antagonistic for years, it may be, but they are ashamed of it at the last moment; and when their friendship can do them no good, they come in and offer it. At that last moment there should be no such persons allowed in the chamber of death. If they have cherished animosity up to that time, it is too late to settle, for then the spirit has something else to think of and contemplate.

I learned this in my lifetime, from various circumstances and by the exercise of my own reasoning power, and I felt that when the change should come to me, and my spirit was, at least, partially removed from the body, I would try cremation, in order to judge what the effect might be; and I am free to say that it releases the spirit from the body almost instantly. There is no sensation of discomfort, no pain, no suffering; it is as if the spirit had been tied to a point by a hundred threads, and in an instant a knife had severed every one of the cords, and then the spirit was free. The ashes hold no magnetic influence whatever, and do not, as some might imagine, attract the spirit to the spot where they may be placed. When this process is carried out, it seems to release the spirit—not only from the body, but from the temptations that necessarily were upon that body—and to entirely remove all earthly impressions of an unpleasant character. Naturally enough, then, I say, cremation ought to become the order of the present century. Instead of burying the body in the ground, and going through the distressing formula which necessarily must be attached to it, it would be far better if in nearly every town there was a crematory where this process could be put in operation.

I have briefly given a general idea in regard to this important subject which your invisible director asked me to.

The real purpose of my coming, though, was to send a message to my aged mother, Mrs. E. M. Emmons of Mendon, Mich.: Dear mother, I know how much you long to see us both. Byron and I are often by your side, and when you are sitting quietly and overlooking the past, counting the many changes that have taken place, and feeling, as you often do, that time has taken from you almost all your treasures, do n't feel that we are so far away that we cannot see you and read your thoughts, for we are both with you, and are glad to find that you are so near to Sammie. It is best, all round, that things are as they are. Try and get all the comfort out of life that you can, for the years are few, the time is short, and the home is already prepared.

The picture you sent our friend has greatly assisted me in coming. I impressed you to do it. Heed such little impressions; they are only the voice of those you love, speaking in your heart. Byron and I send our blessing and love; and when you shall hear these words just think of us as bending above you with more than the love of earth.

D. L. Wightman.

I take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of sending a word to my friends and relatives in Cleveland, Ohio, so that they may know that I have lived through the final exercises that were held over me after I was dead.

I believed in all reforms that concern the welfare of humanity, and I can never reproach myself of having allowed any opportunity to pass unused wherein I saw a chance of benefiting my fellow-men.

Spiritualism, to me, was a broad, comprehensive religion, and the reason why I believed in its philosophy was because it seemed to meet the requirements of the sinner quite as much as those of the saint; and I used to think that any system of religion that reached down into the gutter and pulled the poor victims out, was just the kind that was needed in this age of the world, when the gutters were so full. I have walked past the churches, and seen them rearing their proud spires toward heaven, the doors swinging open wide for those who had no need to go in; but I found the great world outside, that had no religion but needed something to touch its sympathy, and that something was found in what is called Modern Spiritualism.

Friends of mine used to say, "Well, they are low people; many of them don't move in the higher circle of society and hold their heads up; they are poor, they don't own much property." Well, to a man of thought, long ago, Jesus said, "It is the sick that need the physician. Go out into the by-ways and the highways and gather them in." And so it seemed to me that Spiritualism was the spirit of the Christ come back to the earth again, and I loved and honored it, and always took an interest in the Lyceums and in all the movements in connection with this great Cause. Judge of my surprise—for all of my friends knew this—after I passed through the change called death, at hearing a regularly ordained minister preach at my funeral services. Why, if it had been possible for me to raise my body out of the coffin I should have done so. I stood there and heard it all, and I now make the effort to return, simply to say that it was not in accordance with my wish, nor did I take the least possible interest in a single word that was said; and that I wish to thank those friends of mine who still hold me in mind, for the happy times we had together when I was here, and the opportunities they have given me of returning from the spirit-world.

As you may observe, I was a man of considerable strength of character. I could thus always fight for the right, for my opinions; and they only conquered when they got me where I had not the power of replying. I am not a Baptist, and I did not require a Baptist minister to make my peace with the Almighty. The angels were around me. I saw them before I came away, and when I awoke in the spirit-life, the old friends of earlier days stood there, with smiles and songs and loving greetings to receive me. D. L. Wightman, of Cleveland, O.

George Frank Lord.

My friends in New York City are much surprised because I have not given more evidence of my presence. I never find them in the right attitude, and consequently cannot say what I would be pleased to, and what I am sure they would be happy to have me say.

I was for more than twenty-five years in the post-office, in the Foreign Department, in New York, and I have a large number of friends there, who will look with interest upon any word that comes from me. I do not come, however, as a stranger from a strange land, nor as one whose eyes were blinded, either by ignorance of this great truth or by theological pretence, but I come as one who, by earthly experience, was prepared to find just what existed the other side of the line. I have found that, however clear any explanation of the spirit-life may be, it is inadequate to convey the beauty that everywhere abounds here. There are no misunderstandings; we see the motives, and know the thoughts, and by a law of attraction friend is held to friend, and all the miserable quibblings resorted to on earth are laid aside the very moment that a man is born into the spirit-world.

Please say this for me: It is well, ay! very well with me; that old time friends are remembered; that old scenes are sometimes visited, and I but wait the coming of some of those who will ever be dear to my heart. George Frank Lord.

Augusta Currier.

Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman and friends. I was so accustomed, during my earth-life, to be in the presence of large audiences, that it seems to me I am more at home when I can see a number of people before me. That shows how strongly habit marks us wherever we are.

When I was here I loved the truth of Spiritualism. I gave the best years of my life to it, and all the strength I had, early and late, far and wide, in season and out of season; I was never so happy as when I was sowing the seeds of spiritual truth, binding up the bleeding wounds, wiping away the falling tears, and encouraging and strengthening the sad hearts of those I found around about me; but I was always struck with this thought, that no matter how much I might do, there was much left undone; no matter how many words I would speak, there were some hearts I could not reach, and so there would be always a great company that would be walking in the darkness, as well as another company that would be walking in the light.

I used to dream, in those days, of the Spiritualism that I see now everywhere on earth. I used to think that the time would come when people would come together and work for mutual good; when, in large and well-appointed halls, and under pleasant surroundings and pleasant conditions, the speaker and the medium should carry forward the work of the spirit-world. I find that day has come; but may I be forgiven, Mr. Chairman, if I also say I observe that with this new strength something of the old purpose is lost. I do not find the same enthusiasm, the same trust, the same child-like faith in the spirit-world now as of yore; and with this larger experience and the more beautiful surroundings, the more extended knowledge in various ways, it seems as if pride of intellect had taken the place of aspiration of the soul, and instead of accepting the greater wisdom of the spirit world, human beings were constantly interposing their own ideas, in contradistinction to the lessons that their guides and unseen friends might teach.

I am sure you remember the time when we used to sit around the table, and if, perchance, a rap was heard, or a name spelled out, or a light over us was seen, how we felt it was a glorious thing to be there; and how, in the days that came afterward, we remembered it and talked about it, and seemed to live in the sweet communion of that hour; but now men are inspired, human lips are moved to speak, wonderful things are seen and heard, and they do not seem to produce the same effect—they do not seem to mean so much as one of those tiny raps of thirty years ago. The reason why, sir, I think, is because this pride of intellect comes in, killing the aspiration of the spirit, and Spiritualists have lost sight of the idea that they are to dwell in peace one with the other.

I know they used to talk about each other some, in the old days. I remember, one time, having given what I thought to be a very highly spiritual lecture, I said to a lady whom I met: "How did you like the lecture this afternoon?" "Well, I liked the lecture very well, but you 've got your hair combed in the most unbecoming fashion I ever saw you wear it in the world!" I found the unfortunate way in which I had dressed my hair made more impression on her than all the moral truth I had endeavored to give; and I find to-day, among many of my old-time friends, and the new ones that are working in the cause, more of this kind of spirit; finding fault with the personal and external appearance of the workers in the Cause, than in trying to analyze and understand the divine and blessed truths they are constantly bringing to the world.

I may be wrong in what I think I see, but I am sure you will second the plea I am about to make, as we are just across the threshold of the new year: that Spiritualists everywhere should be true to the spirit of Spiritualism; and the spirit of Spiritualism is the spirit of kindness, the spirit of charity, the spirit of divine love; and instead of constantly looking for faults and ever being able to perceive errors, let us try to magnify the beauty in each character, until we shall be able to see good in every creature that lives.

I have many friends in the various towns and cities in New England who remember me, and to them I send my warmest, kindest greeting. Sometime again I may intrude my presence here upon you; until then, God bless you. Good-bye. Augusta Currier.

William Atkinson.

I lived in Scranton, Pa., and I have had this place in my mind more than ten thousand times, so I have a right to say I am glad to be here, as I am. I never wished that I was all-powerful quite as much as I have wished it since I came away. I should just like to make an explosion in the town where I lived. I do n't think anything but an explosion would ever wake up some of the sleepy heads that are to be found there. They are way back in their ideas, and the worst of it is, they are glad they are, for they do n't want to get anything new. If you try to tell them something about truth, they go to sleep; they say that whatever their fathers believed in is just good enough for them. Well, they 've improved in everything else, and I do n't see why they should n't in religion.

Folks used to ride in stage-coaches, but you 'd have mighty hard work to hire 'em to do it now; the steam-cars do n't run fast enough for some of 'em. And they used to take time to send their messages from one place to another; but now they 've got new inventions, and changed the whole character of everything; and why is it that people grow in everything else but just their religious ideas?

I thank the Lord, and the BANNER OF LIGHT—I do n't know which had the most to do about it—that I got my eyes opened before I came away. Why, when I did see the truth, I used to almost hate myself, to think I did n't see it sooner, it was so simple, just as simple as A B and C; but then A B and C aint simple to a blind man or a fool; it is only when they get their eyes open, and know it, they find it is easy. When they used to talk about God's getting mad every day, about man's being totally depraved, and infants eternally damned, it seemed to me a terrible thing, and when the messengers came down, their faces shining with the light of a new truth, and brought the blessed lesson that all men were the children of God by a common law, it seemed to me that the new Christ had come, and I was happy.

I fell asleep to the things of the earth with that blessed thought in my heart, and when I woke up I was strong, thinking of the same thing, and so, Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity of sending a message to my friends in Scranton, to say, all goes well with me, that I am often with them, and that they must always think of me as enjoying the fruits of what I believed on earth. William Atkinson.

William L. Waite.

I am William L. Waite, of New York City. I wish to thank my good friends who spoke so kindly of me, and tell them that I was aware of all that was said and done, and am frequently in attendance on their efforts to bless others who are yet in the body. I sing with them the songs we used to sing; I work with the guides who are instrumental in doing the work that has to be done; and could I have but taken my family along with me I should not have had a single regret in coming. I would thank Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Rathbun, for they deserve more than thanks, which, had I the power, would be most freely given. May the year that is coming be as full of happiness to them as it is of peace to me. Death is not the end, dear friends; it is the continuation of life under more favorable conditions.

J. Brooks Richardson.

I am J. Brooks Richardson, of Auburn, Me. My dear Eunice, you must try and not be so sensitive to all the conditions that are about you, and must develop a more positive state of mind, so that you will not be affected as you are now, and made so troubled and unhappy. I have tried to tell you this through yourself, but have never succeeded in doing so in a manner that was satisfactory either to you or myself; so I have come here with that purpose in mind. Dr. Glover is with me, and he says your mediumship is not understood as it will be by-and-bye. Have courage and persevere; be strong in the truth, and allow nothing that any one can say to swerve you from that purpose. Abbie is not forgotten.

"IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN!"

BY REV. E. CASE.

"It might have been! It might have been!"
Ah, me! what words of pain
Are these, that every now and then
Come o'er the soul again.
What memories of things long fled,
The loved, the beautiful, the dead;
Of broken hearts, of faces fair,
And all of hope and promise rare.

Oh, fearful thing that we call Fate!
Thou dread and awful mystery!
How do we hope, and watch, and wait,
For blessings yet from thee!
We stake our all for hoped-for bliss,
Of holy love and tenderness,
On thee, and wait thine awful powers,
And find heartrending grief is ours.

We only have one human love,
On which we lavish all
That earth can give, or heaven above—
A love to never pall—
For some one being fit to bless
Us only in life's wilderness.
And yet we ne'er may find that one
Beneath the stars, beneath the sun.

Perchance we meet them once in life,
As they pass us quickly by;
Then lost to us 'mid earthly strife,
Our hearts within us die
To think how cruel is the fate
Of wedded life, when, all too late,
They may be joined to slave, or sot,
When God and Nature meant it not.

And then awaits us stifled grief,
An anguish dark and drear,
A silent, lone, impassioned love,
We dare not utter here;
A lifelong anguish of the soul
We hide, but yet cannot control;
We cannot call it "life" to live,
For life has lost all life can give.

And oh! how great the pain, to know
That somewhere in the world,
The loved, the lost, the beautiful,
Away from us are hurled:
To live long years of grief and care—
We know not how, we know not where—
When God intended they should pour
On us their soul's love evermore.

The being of these picturing lines
Perchance I may have met;
And now in some bright world she shines:
A star to never set.
We met, but only met to part;
Our lives were twain, but one our heart;
And we are sorrowing now, as then,
In anguish o'er what might have been.

And still on that fair cheek and brow
The curls may softly lie;
And still the streams of lovelight flow
From that dark melting eye.
Though Time, perchance, has shadows cast
On all the beauty of the past,
Yet hath it not, with all its power,
Robbed her of all of Beauty's dower.

Perhaps these lines her eyes may greet,
And yet we may be blest,
When on some sunny isle we meet
Of everlasting rest.
I cannot speak or think farewell
To one who loved—I loved so well;
"What might have been still yet may be!"
Is whispered from Eternity.

'T is said, there is a Power unknown,
Far mightier than he
Who sits on heaven's eternal throne,
Called Fate, or Destiny:
An awful mystery sublime,
That shapes our course through life and time;
Ay, even through the rolling spheres
Of heaven and its eternal years.

I cannot tell; it may be so;
For all we know on earth
Of mortal happiness or woe,
In some dark sphere has birth.
And still I trust a time will come
At last in our eternal home,
When the glad soul, unbound and free,
Shall know what might have been, shall be.

SPIRIT-WORKERS IN THE HOME CIRCLE. An Autobiographic Narrative of Psychic Phenomena in Family Daily Life, Extending over a Period of Twenty Years. By Morell Theobald, F. C. A. 8vo., cloth, pp. 310. Boston: Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street.

Some of the most remarkable phenomena of Modern Spiritualism are described in this book. They all occurred in the dwelling house of the author, and are of such character and unquestionable authenticity that, were there nothing else to substantiate the truth of communication with another world and its inhabitants, they would be far more than sufficient.

Mediumship was hereditary in the family of Mr. Theobald. His grandfather told him, when a lad of seventeen, of seeing and conversing with spirits. In 1855 he formed the acquaintance of William Howitt and acquired much information regarding the subject, being developed also as a writing medium, which gift has continued to manifest itself from that to the present time in varied degrees of power. It was, however, in 1869, after himself and his wife had encountered years of sorrow and bereavements, that tangible and trustworthy indications of the intimate relations sustained by them to the three little ones who had passed from their home, and to others of an invisible host of friends and helpers, came to them unsought. Tiny raps, which they had before heard and thought but little of, because of their apparent insignificance, were heard on their dining-table. "It was," he says, "only like a bodkin tapping on the table—but our little ones stood at the door and knocked." Realizing this, with great patience they awaited, assisting as best they could further development, until the raps increased in number and strength. Then the children, once thought absent because unseen, came at every meal, and by means of these raps joined in their conversation, and the four children yet in mortal form became familiarized with what was to grow into mediumship in all of them. A very interesting account is given of the early mediumship of the children and his own, and, following this, of the advanced phases—direct spirit vocal utterance and writing. Demonstrations of many kinds occupied the attention of Mr. Theobald, his family and friends, until 1876, when a suspension of all manifestations, even of the raps, took place. In vain they held séances, and though they longed for and besought some sign that their spirit-friends were near them, it was not given.

In the above noted cessation of phenomena, and the account given on subsequent pages of what followed, those who pass through a similar experience may learn something to encourage them. The apparently idle period proved to have been one of great activity on the spirit side, if the results that showed themselves are taken into account. Commencing with November, 1883, the manifestations were extraordinary. They consisted of writing in closed desks, on walls and ceilings far out of the reach of mortals; lighting fires and the gas in three rooms at the same time, all of which had their doors closed and locked; spreading the table-cloth, arranging upon it all the breakfast dishes, filling kettles with water, making tea, etc. After describing many things of this nature, the writer says:

"Meantime the early morning phenomena (setting tables, lighting fires, etc.) continued, with one remarkable addition, viz., that one morning Louisa (spirit) not only made and poured out two cups of tea for us, but carried them up two flights of stairs on a small tray into the bath-room adjoining, and communicating with our bedroom, where they were discovered by my daughter on coming down that morning first. This was an answer to a challenge I had given to Louisa to bring them herself to our bedside. It was probably the nearest approach to it she could then make with safety.

On one occasion the boy who was in the hall getting boots together for cleaning, and was going down the stairs, was met by a tray coming up, and would have run over it had it not been put down, to his intense consternation, upon the top stair! This experience is typical of what occurred more than once, to other members of our household."

We refer our readers to this book as a record of events that by the most inveterate Materialist, obdurate skeptic, or self-opinionated scientist, cannot be explained by any other hypothesis than that of the Spiritualist. A number of fac similes are given of direct writings, some of them in characters so small as to be almost beyond the scope of human vision to decipher, adding greatly to the interest of the volume.

FOOLS OF NATURE. A Novel by Alice Brown. 12mo., cloth, pp. 430. Boston: Ticknor & Co.

This is advertised to be "an anti-spiritualistic book," and like others undertaking to "expose Spiritualism," a work of fiction. How little the author knows of Spiritualism or mediums is exhibited whenever she alludes to either. For instance, she reports a medium as saying: "There are three babies dressed in white. Oh! how they do hover over here, and how bright their wings are!" Who, of the millions that have had experience with mediums, ever heard of their alluding to spirits with wings? Later she speaks of mediums as individuals whose only conception of spiritual beings is, that they are "winged creatures floating down and about."

We are given here and there what plainly is the reason of the writer's ignorance of what she assumes to know so much about that she feels qualified to "expose" it as a fallacy. Her principal and immaculately wise characters evidently express the views she entertains, as follows: "If it (Spiritualism) is to be investigated and immortality proved, I leave it to stronger hearts and wills than mine." "To consult them (mediums) is to place ourselves at the mercy of an ignorant, possibly a designing set of men." "It is vulgar for people who are dead to come back and tip tables."

To an honest inquirer who wished to fairly investigate the subject, and to form an opinion upon a personal experience rather than upon the hearsay of those who knew no more of it than himself, and asked one of the writer's characters to accompany her to a séance, the reply is given: "I should be sorry to take you into such villainous company." To one who, having become convinced of the truth, said he could but trust the evidence of his senses, this very astute author remarks, "Science has determined that there is nothing more unworthy of trust." Of another who questioned whether there might not be developed in him those "spiritual gifts," which New Testament disciples were commanded to "desire earnestly," this new champion of Materialism as opposed to Spiritualism says: "He might indeed possess this horrible faculty; it might develop itself in spite of him, and at some moment a vision would burst upon him, and he must die in spasms of terror."

But enough of such balderdash. After a heavy comedy comes a farce; so, after the S. C. Report comes this book. We ring down the curtain on "Fools of Nature," and leave it to our audience to determine who the "fools" are.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

JULIA COLLINS.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan 7th is a message purporting to be from my daughter, JULIA COLLINS, who has been in spirit-life "years," as she expresses it, having passed away over twelve years ago. Names, circumstances and relationships are correct, and her message, to me, so completely answers the longings of my heart, that I feel I must bear testimony to its truthfulness. My husband unites with me in gratitude to all instrumentalities that enabled our darling to communicate. C. W. COLLINS.

BENJAMIN BENNER.

The communication addressed to me in the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan. 7th, 1888, was, without any doubt, dictated by my loved father; it was in terms so like him that it has been recognized by many. But we have had corroborative evidence in our home circle, wherein he supplied omissions in his printed message. Fraternally, BENJ. P. BENNER.

From Spirit Dr. Wells,

Through the Mediumship of W. E. Rowley, Occult-Telegrapher, Cleveland, O.

Thinking it might be of some interest to the general public, it occurs to me it will be somewhat interesting to give a short synopsis of how we proceed on our side to systematically treat the sick and conduct matters generally, including the manipulation of the telegraphic instrument through Mr. Rowley.

I would be pleased to have the statement proffered to the BANNER OF LIGHT, as it has such a wide circulation among those who believe in this beautiful Spiritual Philosophy.

Now to proceed, I will first say that here is a band of seven physicians operating through this telegraphic instrument, of which I have the honor to be the chief spokesman. Each has his separate work to do in his own particular line. For instance, one takes diseases of children, another diseases of lungs and throat, another dyspepsia and its concomitants, another diseases of women, etc., etc.: each one devoting his time to examining those particular cases that come in his line—seeking constantly for all the light he can get on these cases, whether it be in Pathology, Histology, Diagnosis or Materia Medica. Each makes his report to me, and I make the diagnosis and prescription from their report to me. Everything is done upon a system; there is no guess-work about it.

Another point that I should mention is that each specialist has his own consultations with many other specialists in his particular line. So you can see that the very best talent is constantly exercised for the benefit of humanity. And here let me remark that it is the duty of the patient, or his or her friends, to shed all the light they can upon the case in point. For being only spirits decarnated, we need every scrap of evidence that is to be obtained anywhere in order to properly make up our conclusions. We do not claim that ours is the only band working together in this cause, for, thanks be to Him who doeth all things well, there are many, many bands of doctors of greater or lesser fame and talent working through mediums all over the world. It is perhaps right, however, that we lay claim to having the most systematic method of collecting evidence and transmitting it to those yet in the flesh.

The method by which the mechanical part is done is accomplished as follows: I have constantly with me an operator, who takes from me, sentence by sentence, the message I desire to send. He has his own band of co-workers, consisting of electricians and those well versed in animal magnetism; and they together, through magnetic and electrical currents propelled and directed through the box in which the key is placed, and which forms a dark cabinet, make and break the circuit by opening and closing a finely adjusted telegraphic key or transmitter—with precision and regularity—corresponding to the Morse alphabet; as may be attested by any telegraph operator who reads the Morse alphabet by sound. Patients are visited regularly, as often as seems necessary, and reports of the same communicated to myself.

It is a grand work, and how happy we would be if those on the mortal side of life were so situated that we could let down the bars and say to all, "Come and drink at this fountain and be healed, 'without money and without price.'" We will be indeed glad when mediums can be placed so far above want, in a financial way, that they need not take a thought for the morrow what they shall eat or wear, so that they may constantly keep themselves pure and fit instruments through which the angel visitors may come and minister to mankind. I firmly believe that such a state of affairs will soon exist, when liberal Spiritualists will come forward and place the best, truest and purest mediums upon such a basis; and allow me to say in all candor, until this is done you will never receive the fullest benefit of this pure mediumship, God's latest and best gift to man.

I would respectfully ask to have a word or two with mediums. Let me say to each and all, strive to make yourselves as pure and holy as possible in word, thought and action. Everything, my brothers and sisters, depends upon this course of conduct. The purer, truer and nobler you are, the more true, more pure, more elevating will be the spirits on this side who surround and minister to you, and communicate through you. Guard your smallest thought jealously, remembering that you draw around you exactly such influences as are on a par with yourself morally.

Let your aspirations be to climb higher and higher in the moral and spiritual scale, until at last even while in the flesh you can reach out and readily take hold of that which is immortal, and every sense which you possess be quickened into new life, and your eyes be opened to the beauties of the spirit-world.

Trust in God and his ministering angels, and I assure you you will never come to want if you do your whole duty. Keep your whole body free from pollution as well—for cleanliness is next to godliness—so that the purest angel visitors may not blush to step over the threshold into it, and manifest in any way that seemeth best.

And now a word or two to the general public: You, too, have a work to perform, and duties are strewn thickly in your pathway. Seek not only that you yourselves may receive light from beyond the vale, but ever help all you can those sensitives known as mediums to become purer and better men and women, and hence better mediums. Hold up their hands whenever you see them seeking for something better. Pity them in their weakness, if weak, remonstrate calmly against their misdeeds, give them advice and counsel where it seemeth best, and, better than all, unloose your purse string, and give them substantial support; no matter whether it be the widow's mite or the rich man's thousands, you will receive your reward, for "he who giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Be above petty bickerings, jealousies and suspicions. Keep your eyes well open, and accept the truth where'er you find it, rejecting error and falsehood and charlatanism, spurning these latter from you as you would a serpent. Be as "wise as serpents and as harmless as doves"; love your brethren; keep yourselves anointed for whatever good work may come in your way to do.

Very sincerely and respectfully,
Your most humble and obedient servant,
DR. WELLS.

January Magazines.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—An array of contents that will deeply interest every reader is introduced by a vigorous sketch of border life, by L. B. Platt, "A Battle with the Sioux," illustrated by K. C. Atwood. A pathetic story, "An Orphan in Japan," is told by Mrs. K. B. Foot, and, following this, Richard A. Proctor, the scientist, discusses the question, "Have Ghosts Been Seen?" citing instances for and against an affirmative conclusion, and evincing a disposition to indulge in a speculative view rather then to meet the facts that to tens of thousands of reliable witnesses are giving palpable proof that intelligent beings, termed "ghosts," but more real and enduring than their own forms, are not only seen but conversed with, and bring to those with whom they communicate the only absolute evidence of immortality ever vouchsafed to mankind. Edward King contributes a very readable paper upon "Clubs and Club Life in Paris." "The Crime of Micah Rood" is a story of tragic interest, and "The Remarkable Courage of Abdias," by T. Combe, one that will greatly please all. Of the remaining contents are "The Book Auction" and "The Italians of New York," both illustrated. New York: Schlight & Field Co.

THE HEARTH AND HOME LIBRARY.—A new quarterly magazine having full and instructive departments; literary, health, home and editorial. In this, the first number, the former consists of articles upon "A Universal Language (The Visona)," illustrated, "Ante-Natal Influences," "Can You Blame Her?" "Education of the Senses," "The Evils of Vaccination," and "Woman, Her Ailments," etc. The Health and Home portions are replete with valuable matter upon fifty or more subjects. The work is excellent in typography, and the tone of its contents is progressive, educational and reformatory. Health and Home Publishing Company, Chicago.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.—An illustrated article on "Native Orchids" will send woodland ramblers in quest of newly-found beauties, which, though not as gorgeous as those of tropical growth, will be found equally worthy of the worship of lovers of nature. A description and engraving is given of a gold-banded lily (Lilium Auratum) that grew six feet in height, and bore over fifty flowers. To every one the contents of this number will be acceptable. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.—A lecture by D. R. Wallace upon "The Mission of Liberalism," is given in full. This is followed by articles in which the positions of the Materialists are discussed, and freedom of thought advocated. Waco, Tex.: J. D. Shaw.

THE HORTICULTURAL ART JOURNAL.—Some of the most superbly colored lithographs that have been given its readers, appear in this, the first part of the third volume. They are four in number, and represent Pæonias and Roses of eight varieties. Matters of interest to practical florists and fruit-growers are treated upon editorially and otherwise. Rochester, N. Y.: Stecher Lith. Co.

THE BIZARRE. NOTES AND QUERIES.—The leading features of this issue are a "Table of 271 Asteroids —1801 to 1887," and "Simultaneous Equations," by B. F. Burleson. The usual variety of questions and answers in history, mysticism, etc., are also given. Manchester, N. H.: S. C. & L. M. Gould.

A REVIEW OF THE REPORT OF THE SEYBERT COMMISSION. Appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to investigate Spiritualism. Issued under the authority of the American Spiritualist Alliance. Boston: Colby & Rich, No. 9 Bosworth street. 1887.

This Report is a very able and lawyer-like production, prepared and presented by Prof. Henry Kiddle of the committee appointed by the Spiritual Alliance, of New York, to investigate and report upon the "Preliminary Report" of the Seybert Commission. Mr. Kiddle makes out a very strong case; in fact, so strong that it was ordered printed in the BANNER OF LIGHT and published in pamphlet form. Among the points established by this Review are the following:

1. The trustees of the University of Pennsylvania have not complied with the terms imposed by the founder of the Adams Seybert Chair. The conditions prescribed by Mr. Seybert and agreed to on the part of the University before accepting the $60,000, have not been met.

2. The conditions of the Commission were violated, when five persons not members of the Faculty were put on the committee, especially as they were not put on the committee until several months after the investigation was commenced.

3. The Commission were obliged by the terms agreed upon to investigate, not merely the claims of phenomenal Spiritualism, but, also, its "morals, religion and philosophy." This they have not even pretended to have commenced to do, but have rushed into print with a very unfair superficial Report of manifestations which only a portion of the committee, who signed it witnessed.

4. They have presented a crude, imperfect and wholly unscientific Report, not corroborated by the minutes.

5. In many essential particulars the minutes of their meetings contradict their own Report.

6. The Report is signed by ten persons, when their notes show that on no occasion were all the ten present; in many instances not more than three or four, and in some instances not more than one person was present.

7. Their Report is contradicted by all that is known of Spiritualism.

It will pay everybody to send 15 cents to Colby & Rich and get this Review.—New Thought, Des Moines, Ia.

The hocus-pocus phantasm of a God, like another Cerberus, with one body and three heads, had its birth and growth in the blood of thousands and thousands of martyrs.—Thomas Jefferson.

Passed to Spirit-Life,

From his residence, Kendall street, Boston, Mass., Jan. 12th, Mr. John P. Dimond.

Mr. Dimond had been in poor health for several years, but the immediate cause of his death was consumption. He had not been able to attend to his business—that of a mason—for some time. He was one of the first to investigate Modern Spiritualism, embracing it as a fact, and was one of the bold advocates of the same on all occasions when his duty seemed to require it, even at the risk of his financial interests. He leaves a widow, who has been a public medium for more than twenty-five years, the most of the time an invalid, but still exercising her spiritual gifts for public good. Mr. Dimond had much to contend with, materially, the last years of his life. Sickness and a small amount of means made it a constant struggle for support. He will rejoice that release from his worn-out physical body has come at last—a change he constantly desired for several years previous to his exit. Mrs. R. Shepard Lillie made remarks at his funeral which were full of consolation and sympathy to the afflicted widow and friends. COM.

From Anderson, Ind., Jan. 6th, 1888, Dr. Joseph F. Brandon, aged 52 years.

The immediate cause of his death was apoplexy, superinduced by Bright's disease of the kidneys. Dr. Brandon knew the summons awaited him, and he arranged his business matters accordingly. The noblest part of his character was that he was an honest man and a firm believer in Modern Spiritualism, and at the time of his death was one of the leaders of Groups in the Spiritualist Lyceum in Anderson. He leaves a widow and two sons. He was a member of Anderson Lodge No. 116 Knights of Honor, who took charge of his remains and conducted the funeral. At the grave the Hon. W. R. Myers delivered an appropriate address. JOHN W. WESTERFIELD.

She was a firm believer in Spiritualism, having undoubted proof of spirit communion, and was ready to pass on with the ministering spirits who were waiting and watching to accompany her to the happy spiritual home. Bro. and sister Thompson, as well as husband, sadly realize the loss, and feel that in time they will meet her as the same dutiful daughter, affectionate wife and kind mother. The happy consolation derived was the hope that she will have the blessed privilege of communicating with her sister Thompson clairvoyantly with regard to her surroundings in the spiritual home prepared for her. She requested her dear ones not to weep, but "rejoice and be glad." Liberal, Mo., Jan. 11th, 1888. C. G. BROWN.

From Landgrove, Vt., Jan. 31, Laura, wife of Wesley J. Swallow, aged 29 years 11 months and 27 days.

The subject of this notice was only a short time convinced of the beautiful philosophy of spirit communion. She suffered long, though patiently, with Bright's disease of the kidneys. She leaves a husband and three little daughters. Although there are but few Spiritualists in the vicinity, the church was well filled to hear words of consolation from Lucius Colburn of Manchester, Vt. W.

From Denton, Texas, on Friday, Jan. 6th, 1888, at 1:30 o'clock P.M., of general debility, Mrs. Carrie E., wife of Mr. J. B. Sawyer, aged 72 years and 3 months.

The funeral services were held at the family residence Jan. 7th, at 3 P.M. The Episcopal burial service was held at the grave, in Odd Fellows' Cemetery.

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to overestimate the value of warm feet at this season of the year. THOUSANDS OF VALUABLE LIVES are sacrificed every year in consequence of DAMP, COLD FEET. Cold feet lay the foundation for PULMONARY DISEASES, so fatal to the people of our land. Could we make the world know how valuable OUR MAGNETIC FOOT BATTERIES are for keeping up a WARM GENIAL GLOW THROUGH THE FEET AND LIMBS, none would be without them. These INSOLES WARM THE WHOLE BODY, keep the VITAL FORCES UP, magnetize the iron in the blood, and cause a FEELING OF WARMTH AND COMFORT over the whole body. If no other result was produced than to insulate the body from the wet, cold earth, the INSOLES WOULD BE INVALUABLE. In many cases the INSOLES ALONE will cure RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA and SWELLING OF THE LIMBS. $1 a pair or three pairs for $2 to any address by mail. Send stamps or currency in letter, stating size of boot or shoe, and we will send free by mail TO ANY PART OF THE WORLD. Send for our book, "A PLAIN ROAD TO HEALTH." Free to any address.

THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happen the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

ZÖLLNER.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO

PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.

BY C. C. MASSEY,

Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

Pamphlet, pp. 16. Price 5 cents; postage free. 6 copies 25 cents; 13 do. 50 cents.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, after congregational singing, an invocation by Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and a song by Mr. Lillie, Mintie Eakins, accompanist, the guides of Mrs. Lillie spoke upon questions, the first of which was in reference to the existence of one universal law governing all things, and whether, if such exists, we shall attain a full knowledge of it and its requirements. It was declared by the controlling intelligence that one law governs all things; as it has in the past, so it does now, and so it will through the interminable ages of the future. The second question referred to a recent execution, and the claim made that as its victim had said he believed in Christ, for that reason he was forgiven and would enter heaven. The speaker remarked that one fitted to enter what mortals consider to be the home of pure and holy beings, might reasonably be supposed good enough to live on this earth. His immediate state following his execution was described by Mrs. L.'s control as being one in which he was taken in charge by pitying friends who would lead him from the errors of the past to a brighter and happier future; for within his soul there was really a repentant feeling and a desire to advance.

Evening.—After the usual preliminary exercises Mrs. Lillie, under the influence of her guides, spoke upon the existence and attributes of God; of the spirit-world and its nearness to this, and urged upon all who would have their spirit friends approach and commune with them, the absolute necessity of living pure lives, whereby an atmosphere and conditions favorable to their doing so would be provided. After singing by Mr. Lillie, Mrs. Lillie closed the services with a poem.

Mrs. Lillie will speak in Berkeley Hall next Sunday; morning at 10:30, evening at 7 o'clock.

Mrs. Lillie officiated at the funeral of John P. Dimond. Mrs. Dimond, who was once a public medium, now lies very low, and will, to all appearances, soon follow her husband to the world of spirits. The result of efforts to meet the funeral expenses was contributions to the amount of sixty dollars; and last Sunday, at the close of the services at Berkeley Hall, fifty dollars additional were collected to meet Mrs. Dimond's current expenses.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

Ladies' Aid Parlors, 1031 Washington Street—Spiritualistic Phenomena Association.—Sunday, Jan. 15th, Mr. Oscar Edgerly, of Newburyport, occupied our platform, giving excellent lectures and tests of spirit presence. Societies should keep Mr. Edgerly busy; he is a good speaker and medium.

Sunday, Jan. 22d, Mrs. Mary L. French occupied the platform, giving lectures and tests, and answering questions handed to her in a sealed envelope. Mrs. French has been many years before the public. An earnest desire to benefit humanity and prove the truth of spirit return characterizes all her efforts. She is truly a spiritual missionary, going about doing good. Her labors with our society were highly appreciated, and we trust she may visit us again. Mrs. Mary Bagley closed the afternoon session with an excellent test séance. She is a great favorite with our audiences, and we trust will soon conduct our services again. Mrs. Loomis Hall concluded the evening exercises with fine psychometric readings. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are two of our most earnest workers.

Officers for 1888: J. H. Lewis, President; J. Hall, First Vice President; Mrs. Hannah Tower, Second Vice President; W. C. Vaughn, Recording Secretary; Foster Edwards, Assistant Secretary; Dr. U. K. Mayo, Treasurer; F. B. Woodbury, Corresponding Secretary; J. H. Lewis, J. Hall, Mrs. H. Tower, W. C. Vaughn, Foster Edwards, Dr. U. K. Mayo, F. B. Woodbury, Mrs. F. Goold, J. Wheelock, Dr. Richardson, Jacob Edson and others. Special music by Mr. George LeClaire, Phenomena Association Choir and Mrs. Nettie Wentworth. Elocutionist, Miss Nettie Morris. Readings and recitations were given by Lottie Giles, Jessie Benner, Annie Rosenthal, Mary Lichenstein, Addie Hazeltine, Alice Cummings, Annie Rice, Lillian Rich and Hattie Dodge; musical selections by Mark Abrahams, Grace Scales, Louisa Morris, Josie Smith, especially fine, these four being among the youngest members of our school.

Russell; Leaders, Mrs. Butler, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Bradford, Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Dodge, Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Scales, Mrs. Russell, Mrs. Waller, Mrs. A. A. Last Sunday evening, at the parsonage of the Bulfinch-street Unitarian Church, Louisburg Square, by the genial and liberal pastor, Rev. S. H. Winkley, Mr. Benj. P. Weaver, Conductor of the Lyceum, and Miss Mary Heavener were united in marriage, Francis B. Woodbury and Miss Annie L. Clark "standing up" with the happy couple. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver will at an early date be "at home" to receive their many friends. They were the recipients of many beautiful presents.

Holder of season ticket numbered 1490 is entitled to the elegant vases on exhibition at the Fair. Ticket 472 is entitled to the sewing-machine. They may be obtained at 1031 Washington street.

1031 Washington street.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday, on account of the illness of Mrs. Clough, Dr. D. E. Caswell officiated in her place, and spoke under the control of an ancient spirit. He gave a very strong and satisfactory address upon the "Coming Conflict." The spirit said there were many prophets, both in this country and Europe, who, sensing the conflict which was to come, predicted war and all the direful evils flowing therefrom: Europe seemed politically upon the eve of battle; and the contest between capital and labor, and between the power of Rome and its opposers, seemed to promise in the near future either a political or religious war in this country. But he (the spirit) unhesitatingly declared there would be no war. The coming conflict was not to be so externalized; the whole power of heaven and the influence of the spirit-world forbade it. It would be an individual conflict in each human breast between the higher spiritual nature and the lower passions and desires, between the better and the baser man. The heavenly armies were coming to our shores, and with them would come the new spiritual light and chemistry of heaven which would search all hearts, and each one would be obliged to make choice whether he would serve good or evil.

This divine efflux would permeate and influence all governments, and even the early choice of rulers of our own nation would be controlled by its influence. Let us make clean the chambers of the soul and put away all that is hateful, egotistical and selfish in our natures; then this light would find a ready lodgment, and peace and justice, mercy and love would take up their abode within us, and we, becoming one with those angelic powers who were moving with might upon the earth, would find our lives here made glorious, and in death still more glorious with brightness unspeakable.

Next Sunday Miss M. T. Shelhamer will speak at the usual hour—2:45 P. M.

There will also be the usual sociable at 7:30 P. M., in the lower audience-room. All are invited. W. H. R.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 18th, the Social at the First Spiritual Temple was well attended by an audience of interested listeners.

The programme opened with instrumental music, after which Mrs. Eleanora Mason read, in a clear, comprehensive and creditable manner, a very able and exhaustive paper, written by Mr. Jacob Edson, upon "Soul-Growth." [The opening portion of this article will be found on the first page of the present number of THE BANNER; the remainder will appear next week.—ED.] Every paragraph was filled with profound thought, concisely expressed. The aim of the article was to show that soul-development is attainable, under law, exactly as physical growth is brought about, i. e., by observance of the laws governing that part of the being.

The more highly cultivated soul is in closer at-one-ment with the Deific Principle than is the uncultured one. The writer thought that a scientific religion was not only attainable, but that the first principles of this had already been formulated by Modern Spiritualism, in its recognition of the effects of violated spiritual laws. The paper made a profound impression upon those who could follow the train of thought presented.

After the reading Prof. W. F. Peck sang a song entitled "A Hundred Years to Come." John Wetherbee then related his very gratifying experience with Will. A. Mansfield, slate-writing medium from Michigan, now located in Boston. Mrs. M. C. Carter gave a beautiful inspirational poem, dedicated to Mr. Edson, after which Mrs. H. S. Lake closed the meeting with the presentation of her thoughts embodied in two exquisite selected poems.

A correspondent writes: "On the evening of Feb. 1st Dr. S. K. Rich will, at the First Spiritual Temple, relate experiences of his development as a spirit artist; some of his fine paintings will be at the Temple for inspection. This is a rare chance to see the result of years of patient spirit unfoldment."

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—The meetings in this hall on Sunday, Jan. 22d, were well attended. Mr. Eben Cobb opened the morning session with an address, followed by Mrs. W. A. Rich, who spoke upon the conditions necessary to receive reliable communications from the spirit-world. Tests and readings were given by Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Mrs. A. Forester, Miss Peabody, Miss S. E. Cullen and others. Dr. W. S. Eldridge gave tests and diagnoses of disease.

Afternoon.—Mr. Cobb spoke upon "The Integrity of Spirit." Mrs. A. E. King followed with a short but eloquent address and remarkable tests. "Winona," through Miss Peabody, gave readings from several articles placed upon the platform, that were recognized as correct. Dr. M. V. Thomas spoke upon spirit control, followed by proofs of spirit presence, which were well received. Tests and readings were given by Mrs. N. S. Thomas, Arthur McKenna, Mrs. M. A. Leslie, Mrs. A. Forester, and others.

Evening.—Mrs. Chamberlain sang at the opening, "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," and Mr. Cobb alluded to the devotion to his mother of the boy who lately paid the penalty of his crime on the gallows, the falsity of the teaching given him by the church as regarded his redemption through Christ, and of the fact that by an absolute law of justice he must work out his own salvation in the new life upon which he had entered. Mrs. J. D. Bruce gave readings, and the names Mattie Kendall and Eddie Hall as those of spirits who desired recognition. Mrs. E. B. Craddock, of Concord, N. H., urged every one to seek after the truth, and to break away from the creeds of sectarian bondage. Dr. W. S. Eldridge gave diagnoses of diseases and tests of spirit presence. Mr. Cobb introduced Dr. Paxson, who paid a high tribute to the memory of Allen Putnam, remarking that inspiration will lift us into a life akin to that of the angel-world. HEATH.

The First Independent Club held its regular weekly meeting on Monday evening, Jan. 23d, when, notwithstanding the severe cold, a large number was present. The Vice Matron filled the chair in the absence of the Grand Master. The exercises opened with singing by the Club, which was followed by a stirring and appropriate speech by Dr. Paxson, in regard to the Club, emphasizing the plan of the work, viz: To exalt the spiritual nature; to work in harmony, and to suppress scandal in the Club. Dr. Sweeny favored the audience with a song. Mrs. Mary Hull recited "Jim Bludsoe," which revealed the lady's artistic ability. Miss Lillie Rich, of the Lyceum, recited "Nobody's Child." Mr. Fletcher then took the chair and proceeded to administer the oath of office and present the regalia to the Treasurer of the Club, Mrs. Ada Simmons. The exercises of the evening closed with a dance, which was very enjoyable.

On the first Monday in February the Club has tendered a reception to Benjamin Weaver and his bride, to which all societies are cordially invited. It is to be hoped that the hall will be crowded upon the occasion, in order that we may testify by our presence the esteem in which this gentleman is held by the entire body of Spiritualists.

A weekly Sewing Circle is held on Monday afternoon, at 2:30, and a supper at 6.

MRS. J. W. FLETCHER, Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of Jan. 17th the members and friends of this Society held a social meeting at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. Mrs. Mary E. Wellington presided. Mrs. Lovering opened the exercises with a song, and was followed by some very practical remarks and facts from Mr. L. L. Whitlock. Mrs. Wellington gave a reading of one of Lizzie Doten's poems with fine effect.

Mr. Eben Cobb made an address that was listened to with much interest. Dr. E. H. Mathews spoke, and gave delineations of character from articles placed in his hands. Mrs. Pengilly related some of her past experiences, and closed with an original poem. Interesting remarks were made by Mr. W. A. Dunklee, Jacob Edson and Dr. J. D. Moore. After a season of social converse the company dispersed, feeling assured the inclemency of the weather had not interfered with the spiritual feast enjoyed by those who were present.

The next social meeting will be held Jan. 31st. All are cordially invited.

MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society.—Annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Ann E. Blinn; Vice-President, Mrs. Butterfield; Secretary, Mrs. H. O. Torrey; Treasurer, Mrs. Ada Simmons; Librarian, Mrs. Buchanan; Directors, Mrs. A. E. Blinn, Mrs. Butterfield, Mrs. Simmons, Mrs. Albee, Mrs. Torrey, Mrs. Waterhouse, Mrs. Kemp, Mary Britnall, Mrs. Stone. The Society is in a flourishing condition, and the largest meeting of the season was held on Friday last. An Old Folks' supper and dance and a Fair beside the annual anniversary celebration at Tremont Temple are events to come. Dr. A. H. Richardson presided at the last Friday evening meeting. After delivering a brief address Mrs. Dillingham was introduced and gave a satisfactory test séance. Dr. Paxson and Jacob Edson made good speeches, as usual. Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant closed the exercises with many tests of spirit presence. Public meetings are held every Friday evening. REPORTER.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—The meetings held at this place on Sunday last were fully attended and decidedly interesting.

The afternoon exercises were opened by Miss Cullen, who gave a number of satisfactory character readings. Interesting and well chosen remarks were made by Mrs. Mina Olmstead, David Brown, Dr. Thomas, Dr. Drisko and others, and a large number of recognized tests given through the mediumship of David Brown, Mrs. Rich, Dr. Thomas and Mrs. Annie Smith.

Dr. J. L. Paxson opened the evening meeting with an eloquent inspirational address. He was followed by Mrs. M. W. Leslie and Dr. P. C. Drisko with excellent remarks, and many recognized tests and spirit descriptions were given by Mrs. S. E. Buck, Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, Mrs. Leslie and Mrs. Dillingham.

The fine music discoursed by the quartet choir added largely to the interest of the meeting.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown.—The Echo Spiritualists' Meetings were held in this hall Sunday, Jan. 22d, W. A. Hale, Chairman. At 2:30 P. M., services opened by singing. Remarks followed by the Chairman, and Brothers Edson and C. M. A. Twitchell; recognized tests were given through the organisms of Mrs. J. E. Davis and Miss Nettie M. Hall; an inspirational poem by Bro. Tuttle added much to the interest of the services.

At the 7:30 P. M. session the services comprised a short address by the Chairman, a poem by Miss Lucy Barnicoat, good tests by Mrs. Shackley and Mrs. J. E. Davis, and an address by Miss Nettie M. Holt.

The interest in this locality increases fast, and gives much encouragement for the future. X.

First Society of Spiritualists.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke, in the morning of last Sunday, upon subjects proposed by the audience, the principal one being, "What Is the Mission of Suffering?" Mrs. Brigham spoke with much feeling and eloquence, as she is wont to do on such occasions. In the evening the subject was "The Seen and the Unseen."

In the afternoon meeting Dr. Dean Clarke described some of his many experiences, greatly interesting his audiences, and in full keeping with his reputation as a speaker. He will speak for the Society next Sunday afternoon, upon the same and other subjects.

Mrs. Wells has been suffering from a severe cold for some days, and was not in her usual good condition for giving tests, but nearly all given by her were recognized and satisfactory.

Mrs. Wells has changed her evening for holding dark circles to Tuesday evening of each week, being the only public circles; the balance of her time is taken up with private séances. Mr. Frank T. Ripley of Boston is under an engagement to give platform tests with Mrs. Wells at Adelphi Hall, during the month of February, and his many friends will be happy to welcome his return to New York. J.

Musical Soiree.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 18th, there was a Soirée Musicale for the benefit of the First Society of Spiritualists at the residence of Mrs. M. E. Williams, 232 West 46th street, under the supervision of Dr. Geo. H. Perine. The large parlors of Mrs. Williams were well filled, and the entertainment was one of the most enjoyable affairs of the season. The talent that kindly volunteered their services were Miss Lily Runals, soprano, Mrs. A. E. Muse, accompanist, Miss A. M. Pillsbury, violinist, Mrs. Anna Randall Diehl, elocutionist, Mr. H. R. Humphries, tenor, Mr. Isaac C. Kierated, pianist, Master Robbie Diehl, elocutionist. Mrs. Williams very generously gave the use of her parlors for the occasion, and Dr. Perine has shown himself to be a skillful manager of such entertainments, making them a financial success as well as interesting and profitable to all that attend. More social entertainments of this kind should be encouraged by Spiritualists. S.

The People's Spiritual Meeting.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Wm. C. Bowen, of Brooklyn, delivered an interesting and thoughtful address at Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue, yesterday. Rev. Mr. Fairchild of Boston was with us by invitation of Dr. Geo. Perine, and responded with brief and instructive remarks. Mr. S. A. F. Goodspeed and Mrs. T. J. Lewis interested the audience with spirit-descriptions, messages, names, etc., which were well received.

In the evening the Chairman read a poem given through Mrs. F. O. Hyzer, and remarks and tests were given by Mrs. Wood and Mrs. L. Fox, which were quite generally recognized.

"Media, Ancient and Modern," will be the subject of an inspirational address by Mrs. M. H. Walton, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 5th. F. W. JONES.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Sunday morning, Jan. 22d, a large and appreciative audience gathered at this place to hear Dr. Dean Clarke give his opening address for the Spiritual Society of Brooklyn. The subject was presented by the audience: "Is not the Body a Temple for the Living God?" etc., which proved to be the foundation of a most eloquent and logical discourse. In the course of his remarks Dr. Clarke said: "I am not responsible for what St. Paul stated in the dim ages of the past regarding his seeing through a glass darkly. We are not to look to Moses to find the origin of the natural body of man, but to Darwin; the soul of man is indeed the offspring of the Infinite God!" This speaker has given us a very favorable impression of his abilities, and will, I hope, be often heard upon our platform in the future; for the glorious spiritual religion, that we feel is the pearl of all price, can have no abler advocate than Dr. Dean Clarke.

Spiritual Conference.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Chairman of the Eastern District Conference, Mr. Lawrene, read an able address before the Brooklyn Spiritual Conference, Saturday evening, 21st inst., being the second he has given upon "Mediumship," this one dealing largely with "Spirit-Psychology." The conference exercises were ably carried on by Mrs. H. M. Walton, Wm. C. Bowen, Capt. Dey, Capt. David, Wm. J. Cushing and Mr. C. L. Harris. Mrs. S. A. Slocum will make the next opening address, her topic being "Mental Healing." The Conference has voted to move from Everett Hall to 316 Livingston street, and our meeting, Saturday evening, Feb. 4th, will convene at that number, which is a short distance further up town than our present location, and only one block from Fulton Avenue. Brooklyn friends please note the change. F. W. JONES.

Chicago, Ill.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The following officers were elected by the Young People's Progressive Society to serve for the ensuing year: President, A. L. Coverdale; Vice President, Miss Mamie Armstrong; Secretary, Fred Fellows; Treasurer, Joseph Anglau; an Executive Committee of five, also an Advisory Committee of five, were chosen at the same time. The Social Department has been put in the hands of a committee and is proving quite a success. The management desire to establish reading and developing circles for the members and friends of the Society; also a circulating library. This latter idea will receive its first contribution from the anniversary entertainment to be given on the 30th of March.

Mrs. Ada Foye is expected to appear upon the platform in February.

Judge Tiffany has conducted a course of able lectures during the past month, and all are interested and earnest workers who attend. CELIA.

Haverhill, Mass.—Unity Hall.—Miss Jennie B. Hagan filled the second Sunday of her engagement for the First Spiritualist Society of this city Sunday, the 22d inst.—her audiences being decidedly on the increase, and manifesting an interest well worthy the noble efforts put forth in the replies of Miss Hagan to the questions presented for elucidation.

The hall was well filled at the 2 P. M. lecture, many coming in from suburban towns to listen to the inspirations of this young and earnest worker in the spiritual vineyard—given as they are by a band of spirit guides who are always prepared to do battle in the cause of real progress. [A portion of our correspondent's letter, here omitted, will appear next week.—ED.]

Public Entertainment.—Wednesday evening, Jan. 18th, Miss Hagan held a public séance in the parlors of Mrs. J. M. Davis, No. 7 White street, for the benefit of the Society, affording perfect satisfaction by answering written questions from persons present, also giving impressional readings that were acknowledged to be correct in every particular. The parlors were well filled, and the expressions of gratification at the results attained were many. W. W. CURRIER.

A Letter from J. J. Morse.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

MY DEAR FRIEND—Among the many curiosities encountered in my varied wanderings during the past eighteen years can now be added a winter under Californian skies; a winter that contradicts experience by permitting roses, calla lilies, geraniums, heliotrope and other flowers to grow out in the open air on a Christmas day, just as if the Calendar said July instead of December! While we are told it is a poor year for flowers, too, being colder than has been known for forty years, as a legal gentleman of long residence here assured me last evening.

It is called "winter," and for some days the air has been quite keen, while there has been frost and thin ice on standing water; but though 'Frisco has a climate with as many moods as a prima donna's temper, the cold has at no time suggested the atmospheric frigidity to be encountered at the Hub, when a nice little sample blizzard gaily careers over the classic Common! Winter here is mostly rain, and when it does rain it means business. There's nothing small and mean about a Californian rain storm. But what a boon those rains are! They mean fields of golden grain, tons of peaches, grapes, raisins, and produce of all sorts. They mean plenty of work, large trade, clothing and wages, and prosperity for all. So when the leaden-hued clouds discharge their contents, then is the time for sturdy Californians to say "Thank God" for water, if they ever need to thank any power but that of their own strong arms and minds.

There, I meant to start out by wishing my troops of Eastern friends a Happy New Year, and got tangled up in the weather instead! Well, let me escape from matters of rain, frost and sunshine, and at once say to all my friends who persue the pages of the veteran BANNER, we wish you all a very happy and prosperous new year—including also, of course, the venerable editor and all his aids. I cannot reply to all the kind letters that come to me at this season, so I must take this public course of acknowledging their receipt, thanking all their writers, but contenting myself with saying that all their kind sentiments and warm remembrances are fully appreciated, and will be long remembered by the three pilgrims now resting at the nation's western gateway.

A special word of thanks, though, is due the genial editor for many favors during the past year, as attested in the columns of the widely circulated BANNER, for which myself and friends are all obliged indeed.

While my pen is in hand, let me tell just a little of how things are out here with us at this time. My Sunday meetings in the beautiful Temple continue to maintain their interest, in spite of bad weather and other attractions and excitements, spiritual and secular.

My audiences, I am glad to say, are made up of a particularly brainy set of people, who evidently relish logic, acute analysis, common sense and practicality. If my congregations have quality they are not deficient in quantity.

On the first Sunday of the year, a terribly wet one all day long, Mrs. E. L. Watson—whose desk I am occupying—favored her many friends with a sight of her beloved face and a sound of her ever welcome voice. Her appearance drew out an excellent lecture upon the "Perils and Possibilities of the New Year," wherein she gave some sound and wholesome teaching upon temperance, some eminently pertinent advice regarding the encroachment of Catholicism, and some of the most sensible talk I have yet heard upon the still hotly discussed Chinese question. As an offset to her repudiation of Catholic ecclesiasticism it is worth reporting that another meeting, held the night before, was adorned(?) by the "symbols" of a high altar with lighted wax candles, a picture of Mary overhead, and a cradle with an "infant Jesus" in it on a table! We have heard of Jesuit spirits, but "good Lord deliver us from Jesuit speakers" will soon have to be our prayers if recognized spiritual speakers press Roman Catholic "symbols" into their meetings.

Recently a number of our friends here entrapped my wife, daughter and myself into a surprise pound party. It resulted in an amount of domestic commodities and valuable presents that were literally an embarass des riches. But what a happy time the nearly one hundred conspirators enjoyed! Such little incidents show how deeply the good friends here value their visitor from afar; indeed my reception has been a royal one.

I had partially arranged to visit Eastern camps this year, but I find myself compelled to decline all invitations looking to that end. The friends here will not hear of my leaving them until our able sister, Mrs. Watson, resumes her place in September next. So I must cancel all Eastern camp-meeting engagements for this year. Next year, however, I am at the call of the camps for the last time, as we return to England in September of next year. As I never make a deliberate statement of my movements in print that I do not act up to, I want it distinctly understood that my only remaining time in the East will be from the first of September in this year until the end of August in next year. Eastern societies desiring my services again are therefore respectfully asked to communicate with me without delay.

By about the time this appears in print, Colby & Rich will have a supply of my forthcoming book, "PRACTICAL OCCULTISM"; and I desire all friends in the East who have written me upon the subject to send their orders to the above firm and watch the advertising columns of THE BANNER for particulars concerning contents, price, etc. The contents of the work are made up of a series of lectures delivered at my advanced classes of Spiritual Inquiry held in this city. These classes will be resumed shortly.

The general current of affairs flows on as usual out here. There are three organized societies holding meetings, and two independent enterprises. There are many mediums, some of note and some of notoriety. Judging from the numbers advertising, I should think competition must be very keen, and a livelihood proportionately hard to secure. We have been overrun with "Christian" (?) Science, "metaphysics," and such like under-brush, to which must be added "Theosophy," the funniest fad of all that Spiritualists have yet been carried away with. No doubt from the chaos of conflicting opinions we shall ultimately be able to evolve coherence. Let us hope so at any rate.

May inspirations of truth inspire us all, so that honesty of purpose shall animate us in our dealings with each other. May we look up to the truly wise and faithful souls above us for counsel, guidance and help. With malice to none but justice toward all, may we each move forward, as best we can, to that brighter day when peace on earth and good will toward our fellows shall rest, not upon a mere sentiment, but upon the solid ground of our mutual honest dealing and just living while here on the mortal plane. A REVIEW

Seybert Commissioners' Report

OR,

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE.

BY

A. B. RICHMOND, Esq.,

This able and comprehensive work should be read by every thoughtful man and woman who has heard of the Seybert Bequest. Hon. A. B. Richmond, the author, whose eminence as a criminal lawyer, and high reputation as an author, will at once ensure the confidence and attention of the reader, has in this volume replied to the "Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission" with a soundness of logic, a keenness of satire, a breadth of thought and clearness of perception such as the importance of the subject demanded. He deals his blows at the unfairness, injustice, prejudice, unkindness and irreverence of the Seybert Commissioners with an unsparing hand, and, like Thor, he never strikes a blow in vain. Well aimed and well struck, each blow tells, and must carry conviction to every thoughtful mind.

Mr. Richmond, although not a believer in the Spiritual Philosophy, has here made a fearless and vigorous defense of the reality of the PHENOMENA of Spiritualism. Having received last August, from the hands of a friend just returned from Cassadaga Lake, a communication addressed to him from one dear to him in spirit-life, he was induced to visit the Lake, but went with a firm belief that he should be able to solve the mystery and expose the fraud. His experiences there convinced him of the genuineness of at least a portion of the phenomenal part of Spiritualism, and he accordingly wrote his Open Letter to the Seybert Commission, a document which aroused the interest and admiration of the best minds. Once convinced that the so-called spirit manifestations do occur in many instances where fraud is out of the question, he gallantly and fearlessly comes to the front and wields his weapons with strong, unerring aim in defense of truth and human progress.

After a happy and appropriate introduction of the subject, with all needful explanations concerning the bequest of Mr. Seybert, the author gives in the first Chapter his "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission"; Chapters II., III. and IV. are devoted to a searching criticism of the Report of the Seybert Commission; Chapter V. treats ably of the Bible on Spiritualism: Chapter VI. has for its motto "In my Father's House are Many Mansions"; Chapter VII. contains C. C. Massey's Open Letter on "Zöllner" to Professor George S. Fullerton; Chapter VIII. gives an incident which took place in 1854 at a meeting of the "American Association for the Advancement of Science," with remarks made on that occasion by Professor Robert Hare, etc., etc.; Chapter IX. consists of the "Report of the London Dialectical Society," made in 1869; Chapter X. gives Professor Crookes's testimony from his "Researches in the Spirit-Phenomena.

A Discourse Delivered through the Trance-Mediumship of

MRS. R. S. LILLIE,

Before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, in Berkeley Hall, Boston, Mass., Sunday Morning, Jan. 15th, 1888.

[Reported for Banner of Light by Miss Ida L. Spalding.]

INVOCATION.

We ask your presence, oh! spirits of wisdom, love and power, and we ask for that illumination which ye are able to lend, by which to read understandingly the truths revealed to us. Aid us first to enter the temple of our beings and drive therefrom all such thoughts as have held us in bondage. May we be willing to see the idols, before which we have hitherto bowed, broken and lying in fragments at our feet, if demolished by the power of truth alone. Lead us by your thought upon that higher plane of wisdom where we may be enabled to discern the way and the truth, and to walk therein henceforth in steadfastness of purpose. Alone and unassisted, we are weak and often fall; but, your strength supporting us, we may meet and overcome all obstacles and difficulties. As we rest under the shadows to-day, and there falleth over us the silent mist of rain, may we rise in the spirit above the spiritual clouds, if any there be—above the mist and the darkness that obscures our vision, into that realm where the eternal sun of truth, of life, and of the spirit, is glowing in radiance. Aided by your presence, strengthened by your words, we return our glad thanksgiving to you now and evermore. Amen.

DISCOURSE.

We have chosen to give you a few thoughts on "Spirit-Phenomena." Spiritualism, differing in a great measure from any other form of religion of the present time, is alike open to criticism of its methods and misunderstanding of its teachings. We use the phrase "Spirit-Phenomena," or "Phenomena of Spirit," rather than "Phenomena of Spiritualism," realizing that there is a power underlying this movement which is in reality its substance, but which is not confined by isms nor appropriated by any class of people.

Looking back over the history of the human race, we perceive that there ever has been a power which, in its manifestations, has given rise to every form of religion extant and extinct, and that power is spirit. The phenomena of spirit taking place nineteen hundred years ago in the villages of Judea round and about Jordan, form the foundation and cornerstone of Christianity. Jesus, as one of the workers of wonders at that time, stands out prominently as an illustration of this power. We do not believe, as reasoners to-day, that he was any more the son of God than are others, but that he was endowed with this common power, which is the power of spirit, to a greater extent than many of his fellow-beings. There were, however, faculties that were not developed to the degree that they are in many organisms or individuals. That power of brain or mind that makes a clear-headed business man was lying dormant in his case; while the power of spirit, taking possession of the faculties that responded thereto, endowed him especially in that direction. His was not an isolated case; there were many others. He possessed the ability to penetrate the guise of matter that ever veils the spirit of man, and when he detected spiritual gifts lying unused, he touched their possessor with the magic power that permeated his own being, and commissioned him, saying: "Go forth and preach this gospel of truth."

The two worlds, as we sometimes denominate them, or rather the two conditions, that of the material and that of the spirit, are so closely related that there is no line of separation between them which will permit us to say: "Here ends the one, and there begins the other." These two forces are commingled throughout the universe in all expressions of life. We may go back to ancient forms of religion as far as you can verify our statements by history, and you will find that spirit phenomena have given rise to them all; the peculiar forms of belief being the result of that externalism with which man always clothes spiritual things. Thus we have the ancient Buddhism of the older religions, and we have our Christianity based upon the phenomenal experiences of the people of nineteen centuries ago, marking a period of man's spiritual history which stands out prominently above many of the others. Two thousand years prior to this we have another marked period of spirit phenomena, when seers and prophets, those whom we call mediums to-day, walked familiarly among the people, by whom they were regarded as oracles, or the nearest possible approach to the godhead. Man, with his strange ideas of God, has given himself greater credit than belonged to him according to our understanding; or, in other words, according to his idea of this power which he possessed has he attributed to himself more or less of the god-power, claiming to be a specially endowed being, a son of God, a Messiah or messenger of God. In most instances, however, the claim has been put forth by those who afterward idolized and deified the individual, rather than by the individual himself.

It is unnecessary for our purposes to-day to trace Christianity through all its varied changes to the time when we find it crystallized into form and ceremony. This was the result of a belief that the past held all revelations of God, all manifestations of the spirit. The phenomena that were called miraculous were recorded, that mankind might read what the power of spirit has been, and live in the letter alone. But the spirit of man as related to the vast spirit of the universe: the spirit of man as an immortal something which ever reaches on beyond his present condition—which makes inquiries, and desires to know—kept asking the question, which to many minds remained unsettled: "Why does not that which took place in the past, take place now?" Thousands worshiping at the altars of different denominations, prayed that the signs that were given to the early Christians be given to them, that a demonstration of spirit be made, but it did not come——in the Church! The main body of that institution was satisfied; but hungry souls outside, yearning for more facts, dissatisfied with what they had received, and unsatisfied in spirit, waited for the time when God should be manifest in the flesh again, or when the spirit should again show forth its wondrous power.

At length it came, but as it always has done, in an unexpected way and in unexpected quarters. It came in the outside world, as it were, for we trace our modern spirit-phenomena back to the early manifestations taking place in the Fox home nearly forty years ago. It came in a Christian home, but not in the Church; for when that praying mother in her perplexity went to it for advice, it was not the priesthood that could give her an answer, that could tell her what it was, why it was, whence it came, or what she might expect. She bowed upon her knees in earnest prayer, day after day, to the God of her fathers that he might remove from her this which caused her so much trouble, but it was not removed. The Church believed that this family were obsessed by devils, who were holding high carnival in this Methodist home. Here is the argument: "You must have grieved the Spirit of God, and it has departed from you. This is the spirit of the Evil One. Pray earnestly that it be removed from you." But prayer did not remove it, and the manifestations kept on in their course until they had spread like a fire over the prairies swept by a mighty wind, and were heard of in many other homes. In these forty years the power of this movement has been felt in every land by every people, and its utterances are given in every tongue.

Different ideas, to be sure, are held in regard to it, and the old conception of good and evil, of God and the devil, is at work to-day just as it ever has been in the past. In our enlightened land, in this age of knowledge and wisdom, there are plenty of people that stand behind pulpits as their entrenchments and cry out: "Diabolism," and "Verily I say unto you this is the work of Beelzebub," even as did the Jews when the same power rested upon the man of Nazareth nineteen centuries ago. It is the cry of humanity to-day, ignorant of the true causes that underlie these facts; hence we must meet it with reason, understanding and our Philosophy.

We are asked by those holding controversies upon the subject: "What is the reason that individual spirits bring us many times false communications, or those which give rise to the suspicion that they emanate from evil spirits?" This assertion comes more especially from the Orthodox world, or from those who claim that the devil and his angels, or evil spirits, are allowed to go forth over the earth, but that good spirits do not return.

The communications received through undeveloped mediums, and called evil because they are not understood, are used as an argument to prove this statement. We have all these things to meet, all these things to look in the face, and to give some reasons for their existence.

Spirit-phenomena are, at the present time, as they ever have been, bound by the limitations of matter, or of the individual mediums through whom the manifestations occur: Their action, their ability to do injury or to do good, the extent to which their power can be exercised, are questions which cannot yet be fully answered, because experiment has not brought sufficient knowledge in this direction. Still there is enough to enable every intelligent being to understand that mind in the body as well as mind out of the body influences their character, and that even the condition of mind acts either as a barrier or an impetus to the truth. Thus we find mediums to be very sensitive and susceptible beings, and as such they should be treated by those making investigations.

Nothing is perfect, so far as we are able to learn. If our earth had perfected itself, or ripened up to a condition that we believe it is just growing toward, we should find human beings in a riper or more perfect state of being, and we should also be able to find clearer and purer channels through which spirit could operate. Therefore we say to you, you must ever use reason and intelligence in your researches; and we are glad that the exercise of these is held as among the most important of the requirements of Spiritualism as a philosophy today. The religions of the past have not called for reason, but for faith. When reason asserted itself, and you inquired why such and such things were demanded on faith, you were instantly hushed, and told that you must not ask these questions; you must not use reason, you must accept by faith. We have passed that line now; we do not ask you to accept by faith; but we do request you to exercise your reason; and that is why spirit-phenomena as a part of your Spiritualism have been given you once more from the spirit side of life.

When the question is asked: "What are the phenomena of Spiritualism?" Spiritualists are very likely to divide this array of experimental testimony into two distinct classes—the physical and the mental; but they are, both and all, spirit phenomena. The making passive of the will of another and the controlling of an individual mind is as much a phenomenon of spirit as is the controlling of physical forces in order to produce certain other results. A child is entranced, and while in this condition gives utterance to words of wisdom only equalled by those of the most learned men of the period. Can you not class this manifestation, and do you not, with the phenomena of spirit?

Sometimes we ask the mediums whom we have chosen for a special work upon the mental plane, to give us an hour a day for development: "What shall we do?" they ask. "Sit passively," we answer; "that is all we require of you; the rest we do on our side of life unseen by you." Sometimes our request is granted, sometimes it is not. Whenever it is there is growth, and after perhaps months of this work on their part, simply sitting quietly, it is found that some power, or spirit, has gained control of the brain to such an extent that the vocal organs will respond as readily to its touch as to the touch of the master mind or spirit that has its habitation upon the mortal plane in this temple of the living God, the body human.

In the course of development in this direction for a time everything moves on smoothly and satisfactorily. Beautiful communications from loving friends, that bear the stamp of identity and truthfulness, are received, and then suddenly there is a change. Communications are received as before, but they are unsatisfactory at times, and untruthful. The medium is disturbed, and often the friends are discouraged. They say: "If deceiving spirits come to me, I do not want anything to do with the matter," and they stop in their investigations and experiments at that point. If we were as easily discouraged in our pursuit of every other object as we are in the pursuit of truth, we should not accomplish a great deal here on earth.

The first thing to do at such times is to inquire why these things occur: You have opened a doorway and invited the angels to enter; but that doorway admits both the light and the dark, the true and the false; and just as they did in the past and as St. Paul said in his letter to the churches in early days, you must try the spirits to see of what nature they are. The other world is continually receiving spirits from this side of life. They are entering the field of existence over there, not to be shut up in some bottomless pit or some four-square Paradise, but to have freedom and liberty for growth, progress and development. Perhaps the medium has, in such cases as those just mentioned, invited, or some one has thrown upon him something antagonistic. Some members of the family, for instance, begin disputing; one believes, another does not believe: Do you know what power thought has? Do you know how very forcible and tangible it is? Do you know how easy it is to make a mesh, as it were, of these threads or cords of power, that will bind and hold the medium in such antagonistic elements, thus permitting the approach of spirits that cannot enter the inner circle where love and harmony reign? Of necessity the result, in such instances, is mixed spirit-phenomena.

I speak of this as a possibility, but we know it is a fact. In order to attain to the very highest and best in spirit-manifestation, we must work earnestly and thoughtfully. I do not believe in organizing a circle with as little thought as you would give to the selection of a few tea-table guests, and yet this is often the case. We are in pursuit of the truth; we are endeavoring to communicate with the spirits of men arisen, with angels in the life beyond; and if there is anything that we should hold pure and sacred, that we should enter into with deliberation, forethought, earnestness and sincerity, it is this work of opening the doors between the two worlds.

A great variety of phenomena has grown up in the last forty years—from that of the child made sensitive to the thought of spirit, on to that of the spirit returning clothed temporarily in matter, each doing all in its power to prove immortality, to prove the reality of the life that lies beyond, and to disprove some erroneous teachings which have been given to man in the past, and to which he clings so tenaciously as to retard his growth spiritually. In these many and diversified manifestations we find a great variety of expression. Every medium differs from every other medium. Those whose gifts are of a mental character, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience and test mediumship, differ in a great measure from those through whose instrumentality physical phenomena are presented. Even as Spiritualists we find ourselves divided just here. The cry of "fraud" is raised against mediums whose phase is materialization, by those who have investigated the subject earnestly, seriously and sincerely. Individuals enter a séance-room, pay their fee, take their places, the manifestations occur, and the observers pass out about equally divided in opinion. One-half of them are satisfied that what they have witnessed is spiritual in its source, and that they have seen their friends; the other half are equally satisfied that it is the veriest deception they have ever looked upon. In this way controversies arise that are taken into courts of justice, and you then discover of how little account is this proceeding in settling the vexed question either one way or the other. We do not feel that this course is or should be necessary.

Spiritualism should be so organized as to control its phenomena by holding mediums above the power of temptation; and spirit manifestation will not be based upon the solid foundation that it should be until such time as you hold it so sacred that you will raise a fund and prepare a place for the carrying on of the work under holy and pure conditions. Your mediums who publicly represent Spiritualism should be cared for beyond "the dollar limit" as far as they individually are concerned. When that time arrives, the earnest, investigating public can come to you as an organization or society, to recommend to them a medium for the particular phase they desire to witness, as they would come to you for a minister. "But," perhaps some of you will say, "we cannot afford it as societies." If the money that is thrown promiscuously about to-day, a dollar at a time, so many times a week or month, in places that you have doubt concerning, was gathered in an organized way, and systematized, it would be enough to present the phenomena of Spiritualism to a skeptical world under conditions that could not be gainsaid. Such mediums then as valued the truth for its own sake, and prized their high and holy gift, would willingly place themselves in a position to be cared for by an organized body that would see them protected, cared for and supported in a way that the needs at least of the body should not lead them into temptations of a pecuniary order.

Some of our spirit phenomena are already of such a character that the spirits producing them through certain instruments can give you almost any condition that you require. Some slate-writers, for instance, are able to give the manifestations in such a way that no reasonable human being can dispute their origin, and those who are so unreasonable as to doubt it need to grow a little before they go any further in their investigations into that which they have not wit enough to understand even when they behold it. Such mediums as these do not, perhaps, so much need your care and consideration as those of another class.

Many manifestations put down as spirit phenomena, and for whose character we are brought to account before the bar of public opinion, bear no relation whatever to them. It is enough to make the blood of any honest Spiritualist boil to take up the paper of a Sunday morning like this and read that "the greatest medium of the age" will perform so and so; that "the great trick of slate-writing will be shown," etc., the notice closing by stating: "If any have been foolish enough to believe, let them come and behold, and let their superstitions vanish." This is called by outsiders an exposure (!) of Spiritualism. It is no more like spirit-phenomena than black is like white; it no more represents true spirit-phenomena than the night represents the brightest day. The conditions under which such manifestations and the manifestations of spirit are produced bear no comparison whatever. I hope no Spiritualist, seeing a little flimsy trick performed, will say: "Well, that operator, whether he knows it or not, must be a medium," because it is not so. There are tricksters and jugglers, as there have been ever since the Egyptians met Moses, and as I suppose there were for thousands of years before. When the true manifestation meets the false, face to face, there is a wide difference, to the careful observer, between them.

"You had better keep within your own ranks," some one says; "there is enough for you to look after there. Many, claiming the gift of mediumship, give us the false instead of the true." This may be a fact, and it undoubtedly is. If so, Spiritualists are the ones who must meet it, weigh it in the balance of their own judgment, and not leave it for the outside world to do. But, remember, Spiritualists are not the only ones who have deceivers in their ranks. There are those representing themselves as Christians, who wear as heavy masks and as long cloaks to cover their iniquities as do the worst of bogus mediums. This, I know, is no excuse for dishonest mediums, but I desire to state just here that, in reality, I believe there are very few who actually practice fraud. There are, then, two kinds or classes—the real mediums and the pretenders. Again, some one says—and he may be a Spiritualist: "I know that some genuine mediums practice deceit." Very well; I am not surprised; I have seen a man that could tell the truth a part of the time, and lie like a villain the remainder. In this cause, as in every other, we find the mixed compound of human nature, the good and the evil, the true and the false; we find much that is crude, much that is not understood, and much for you yet to study.

Spiritualism, as a modern movement, with all its manifestations, is to-day what it is after only forty years' growth. In that time it has moved the world; it has gained adherents from the ranks of every denomination in Christendom. Some of the wisest men back of church pulpits have been obliged to admit its truth, and some of the best of these say to-day: "Although there is a great deal mixed up with Spiritualism that is spurious, there is a large portion on the side of truth that cannot be explained away."

I wish at this point to say: Be ye diligent as Spiritualists. You read that there is no law that can touch a spirit medium. Some of you sincerely believe that, for the good of the cause, those caught in the use of real deception in manifestations purporting to be genuine should be punished; but in your zeal be cautious that you do not call for a law which, when once enacted, can be taken into the hands of any petty tyrant and used on any medium in your ranks. It were better to bear a little in your own home circle, wisely and with your eyes open and single to the truth, than to assist a world in throttling you, as it would like to do even to-day. So I say be vigilant, be cautious, and you will find that at length, by God's own law, the truth will come uppermost, right will prevail and error vanish.

Spiritualism is passing through an ordeal out of which it will come brightened, purified, uplifted and exalted; and while we may stand in fear in a measure of law used unwisely in the hands of man, let us remember that we are citizens of America, and that as such the Constitution itself stands by us as a religious body. Do not be too anxious to step out of the protection of a law that says it shall be yours, as citizens of America, to worship God according to the dictates of your conscience. We believe, however, that there is wisdom and strength enough in Spiritualism and in the ranks thereof to carry our mediums, our mediumship and spirit-phenomena forward until we shall all realize what a mighty power it is that is brooding over the nations, seeking to bless and uplift humanity. Though the truths that have come from this source are often misunderstood and misapplied, still, with God and the angels on our side, we feel that we are in the majority and that the truth will prevail by-and-bye. I am looking for the time to come when spirit-phenomena, in all their phases, will be lifted above doubt, and I believe it is coming just so surely as I know that I can to-day see demonstrated the fact that a thought can be ticked out over a wire by sounds only intelligible to the few, or be whispered by the telephone along a highway in language unmistakable. As these achievements have been accomplished on the mortal side, we may reasonably hope that still greater results may be attained on the spirit side, and that spirit phenomena will yet be elevated above the possibility of duplicity, or of any little sham being taken for the real, the true and the genuine. Then such advertising as we see in the papers to-day will call only the foolish to listen, for the truly wise will understand that there is no comparison between the two.

That you may avoid the rocks that have wrecked so many upon the shores of time, we pray you "Be wise as serpents and harmless as doves." With earnestness of purpose and with the spirit within turned toward the truth, seek ye the light and it shall be given you.

Bilious Attack.

This is the popular name for an affection with which most are familiar. The name, however, is somewhat deceptive, and often leads to injudicious treatment. It is doubtful if there is any special ailment of the liver in the case. It is probably only a brief, functional disorder of the digestive system. This is the general view of the medical profession.

It is a mild form of acute, as distinguished from chronic, dyspepsia, induced, it may be, by indigestible food, over-eating, physical exhaustion, excessive brain work, violent emotions, or by general care and worry. It is more liable to occur in the spring, because while one continues to eat the same food and in nearly the same quantity as in winter, the power of the system to assimilate food is reduced.

The most prominent symptoms of "biliousness" are loss of appetite, nausea (sometimes vomiting), coating of the tongue, an unpleasant taste, headache and a general sense of ailing (malaise).

These may have been preceded by a feeling of fatigue and aching in the back and limbs. Sometimes, in persons inclined that way, the headache becomes what is known as "sick headache."

As to treatment, aside from medicine and tonic, the malady usually presents little difficulty. Says Quain's "Medical Dictionary": "Such attacks are most effectually prevented by careful regulation of diet and the careful avoidance of exposure to cold, fatigue and undue mental exertion and anxiety; when they come on, abstinence from food is desirable, with rest in the recumbent posture and perfect quiet."

The writer in Reynolds's "System of Medicine" says: "In the milder forms, a tolerably complete abstinence from food for four-and-twenty hours will frequently do much toward effecting a cure. This abstinence secures for the stomach that rest of the organ so essential to the cure. After this rest, light farinaceous puddings may be allowed, followed by a cautious return to a more nourishing diet."

The too common practice of people who fancy that they are "bilious" of dosing themselves with cathartics, to "clear out the system," should be discouraged. In most cases nature will cure the patient if he will give her a chance.—Ex.

"OUTSIDE THE GATES: And other Tales and Sketches, by a Band of Spirit-Intelligences, through the Mediumship of Mary Theresa Shelhamer.

The publishers, Messrs. Colby & Rich, are very kind to send us so many of their spiritual books, considering our materialistic proclivities. It is friendly on their part to keep us posted in their literature, and we are obliged to them for the numerous favors they bestow on us.

"Outside the Gates" is a large book containing 515 pages, and is full of descriptions of spirit-life, what the employment of the people is, their language, society, literature—and, in short, everything concerning them. All which seems to be candidly related, and will no doubt prove interesting to believers. For sale by Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston.—Boston Investigator.

Written for the Banner of Light.

GOOD-NIGHT!

BY M. T. SHELHAMER.

"The world is weary, friends," he said,
"And darkening is the light;
The stars are struggling overhead;
'Tis time to say 'Good-night!'
Oh! lone and dreary was the day,
And rugged was the road
O'er which I pressed my toilsome way
With many a heavy load.

"The burning heat has cooled at last,
The din and noise are still,
The strife and discord all are past,
I know our Father's will;
His tender hand supports me now,
His smile to me is light,
Beneath his touch I gladly bow
To thee, old World: 'Good night!'"

Out through the portal dark he passed
Into the clear star-shine;
All suffering and pain at last
Exchanged for peace divine;
All earthly prospects growing dim
Before his quickening sight,
Till heavenly greetings brought to him:
"Good-morning!" not "Good-night!"

SOUL-GROWTH.

AFFIRMATIVE QUESTIONS FOR CONSIDERATION.

How can we Account For and Reconcile all the so-called Accidents and Incidents of Life—the Calamities that Befall and Afflict the Just and True, as well as the Depraved and Incorrigible—with the Doctrine of a Perfect Cause?

BY JACOB EDSON.

[Concluded.]

XV.

In soul-growth, ought we not to distinguish between the development of the faculties of the mind, the functions of the body, and the progression of the soul which possesses and uses said faculties and functions? Does not the former exhibit the capacity that may be utilized, and the latter, the plane of thought, the sphere of love and affection—soul-growth—the utilizer has attained? Is not probation the time and condition required to obtain and unfold our individual identity? Does it not commence at the time of our first conscious transgression of the higher law, and continue on until it ends in our conscious at-one-ment with God, or until the identity necessarily ceases to be, because of the disintegrating effect of persistent degradation, moral disease, debasement and crime? Is not pain either physical or spiritual evidence of life? Is not pain medicinal—corrective in its nature and tendency? If it were not so, who is there among us that would now have a finger on his hand or a toe on his foot? Should we not all of us have burned, bruised or frozen them off long ago? Is it not true in the spiritual as well as in the physical that "as long as there is life there is hope"? Is not repentance a state—a condition—rather than an act? Does it not precede and produce action? Is not regenerative transformation the ultimatum of persistent repentance? Can there be full and complete forgiveness for us so long as we remain vindictive or unforgiving? Is not prayer a receptive state or condition in which the Infinite Father and the finite child, the coming man, are conjointly demand and supply? Is not the spiritual food being prepared while the child is being unfolded to need it? Is not repentance and forgiveness in accordance with inexorable law? When we comply with the conditions, is not the law executed? In other words, is there not a sense in which we forgive ourselves, take the effect, and go onward and upward in soul-growth until we know by observation, as well as by a blest experience, that "all things work together," not only for the good and the true, but also for the most depraved and incorrigible? Do not "the pure in heart see God" and rest in his all-embracing Providence, as the lily rests receptively on the bosom of the lake?

XVI.

Is it not true that tadpoles will grow to enormous size in the dark, and remain tadpoles until they receive the invigorating rays from the sun in the heavens, which necessarily transforms them into frogs, changing their nature, mode of life and habits of living? Are they not, because of this transformation, so to speak, like the symbolic Jonah thrown upon dry land? Is it not also true that the Adamic man may be developed intellectually into enormous proportions, and still remain unprogressed in soul-growth until he receives the transforming rays of divine life, reflected through the spiritual sonship of God in man? Is not this sonship the metaphysical expression of our subjective self, in which is the kingdom of heaven with its king enthroned? Is not the kingdom of heaven subjectively within us? Is not the perfect personage there, the Christ in the new tomb, as Lazarus was in the grave, or Jonah in the great fish, waiting to come forth?

XVII.

Are we not gods in embryo? Is not the finite soul in essence, the eternal, the uncreated part of man, that obtains an individualized existence in spirit which expressedly embodies itself in matter, in which it may unfold and be regeneratively transformed into higher life? Is the fact that brutalized animal men live on and manifest themselves after leaving this world reliable evidence that they have attained to immortal life and consequently can never cease to be? Do not evil and debasing desires and communications corrupt and disintegrate, and, if persisted in, may they not ultimate in the entire destruction of the evolving capacity in the thus brutalized animal man, so that he cease to be? Is not spiritual health as well as physical disease contagious? Is not the perfect Cause the fountain of all good, and may we not so relate and condition ourselves as to become channels for the communication of the higher life? Are not stars and flowers sisters? Do they not reveal the beauty of God in nature and reflect his glory above? If we keep company with the lily, the violet and the rose, may we not so unfold our nature as to emulate their beauty and use?

XVIII.

Is not this new theology based upon fundamental truth? Is not the uncreated Cause our eternal Father? Do we not inherit our Father's nature and attributes? Are not love, justice, mercy and truth hereditary? Was there not a point, a condition, in the endless chain of causation, in which the Infinite and the finite came into such a conjoined at-one-ment as to conceptively beget the finite child with inhering spiritual capacity to become the son of God? And does not such conceptive begetment bespeak spiritual gestation, travail and birth? Are we not spiritual as well as physical beings, dualities, sons and daughters of Father God and Mother Nature? Did we not, on our Father's side, inherit eternal life? Is it not within us an expectancy? Did we not, on our Mother's side, obtain states, conditions, environments, through which this eternal life is to be evolved? For aught we know, may there not be millions upon millions of unfolding spiritual entities, occupying every conceivable standpoint in the discrete degrees of spiritual evolution, from the lowest all along up the spiral stairway, in the spiritual sonship of the living God?

XIX.

As differentiated out-births of the divine, with inhering divinity seeking personification through us, must not the distinguishing differences that constitute our different identities remain? Can any amount of soul-growth or spiritual culture obliterate or extinguish them? May we not go on and on in spiritual culture, improving, perfecting, and progressively opening up these distinctions, and through them our inhering personality, and by so doing continue to demonstrate over and over again that we are the same individuals we used to be, with this exception—we have been converted to the new theology, the doctrine of a perfect Cause, its spiritual evolution, and are now in the transitional condition of regenerative transformation from the animal through the human into the divine department of eternal life? We now know that God is love, that he is subjective, and that it is our privilege as well as duty to objectify him—his perfect personage—within ourselves. Can the hatched chicken ever get or be put back into its broken shell? If we, as embryotic substance, existed from all eternity in the unconscious consciousness of the uncreated Cause, and have obtained veritable entities and still survive, growing stronger and more God-like every day, are we not among the survivals of the fittest? Who, tell us who or what, can prevent us from living on and on as conscious entities in the eternal, never-ending now?

XX.

If we are to live on and on in the eternal, is there not a history being written by the finger of time on the tablet of the soul concerning each and every one of us? Are not these histories to constitute in each his own identity, by and through which he is to be judged? Is not the Christ—the metaphysical substance of justice, mercy and truth, that has been evolved through the unfolding son-ship of God within us—to be the judge? If so, is there not a sense in which the day of judgment has come—the motive has been touched? Finding where it is attached, may we not trace each step the soul has trod, so that divers mazes, unnatural wanderings and inexplicable contradictions will be seen to be the clear and necessary results of easily defined law, the law of love, the perfect providence, that is universal to the utmost, including the most extreme detail of all particulars? If as embryotic substance we have existed from all eternity in the bosom of the uncreated Father, we in Him are at home, we have always been there, we, so to speak, are bride and groom, cause and effect. We came from Him unconscious embodiments of the divine entity: He was subjectively within us; we return to Him, through soul-growth, evolved conscious beings, divine entities, individualized drops of the universal ocean of all good; and, as the ocean is composed of innumerable drops, each drop fulfilling its mission through the execution of law, so also may it not be with us, no large, no small, each a perfected spirit, a polished stone in the spiritual temple of eternal life?

XXI.

Is there not an exact standard of absolute justice, mercy and truth? Does it not exist in the uncreated Cause of all causation, the infinite soul of the universe? Did it not inhere in our finite begetment? Is it not now subjectively within us, seeking to evolve and express itself? Is not absolute justice to be given and received in such a manner as not to admit of doubt, discrepancy or demur? May we not, through persistent animalism and gross brutality, so demoralize and degrade our spiritual nature—so shrink, shrivel, dwarf and obliterate our consciousness of right and wrong, our manhood with its inhering divinity—as to leave nothing but the mark of the beast to indicate what had been, and through the execution of law, absolute justice, mercy and truth had ceased to be? On the other hand, is not humane justice tempered with wise mercy, judiciously applied, the chief factor in the ways and means of soul-growth, so that by-and-bye when we get home to our Father's house—"the city of light"—our transformed affectional nature may be so illumined by the light of infinite love and life that our conception and application of justice may so exhaust the element and function of mercy that from disuse it will cease to be? Then, and not till then, may we be enabled to perceive and comprehend the sublime fact that everything that is, has been, or is to be, is absolutely right, and that the rule, the ruled and the ruler, are but three distinct departments of the all in all of life, not unlike the triune personage called in old theology "Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

XXII.

If we cut man loose from the object of his affection or the religion that bound him, without giving him the new theology to which to attach himself, will he not straightway fall into a pit of despair? But if induced day by day to fix his affections on more and still more worthy objects, will he not approach, step by step, nearer and nearer, and reflect more and still more clearly the spirituality and attributes of the perfect Cause?

XXIII.

Upon what other than the spiritual hypothesis, with its theosophic doctrine of a perfect Cause and Providence, can we base a satisfactory argument in favor of prayer? Is not our perfect Cause, with its differentiated agents, omnipresent and all-controlling? Can he not do through finite agents—ministering angels—what otherwise could not be done? Is not this idea gloriously adapted to the wants of the human soul? Is it not the only one by which may be produced the results each man knows he needs? Is such an idea unreasonable? Is such a course a mark of fickleness of mind on the part of God? Are not his laws ever the same, his providences ever changing, the latter always adapted to the circumstances and conditions of the agent's influence? May we not as well charge him with fickleness of mind, because from the same soil, expanded by the same sun, watered by the same showers, two plants grow side by side, as dissimilar as the rose and the violet? May we not as well accuse him of inconsistency because the acorn planted in the deep soil expands into the splendid oak, while another dropped in the crevice of some granite rock becomes a mere scrubby shrub? Is it inconsistent with the infinite perfection of the Omniscient to make blessings dependent upon the action of the recipient? Let the skeptic question the necessities of his own soul, to deny the efficacy of prayer in toto. To hold that the unchangeable God cannot be moved in accordance with his will, leads at once and directly to the doctrine of fatalism, which, believed in, renders the soul apathetic and incapable of advancement; but to hold God to be a sympathizing Father, ever ready to hear the cry of his children, a wise and beneficent creator, who has made the bestowal of his blessings dependent upon our effort, leads to a filial trust, to a warm gushing love, and a life of devotion to his service.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

SOPHIA SCOTT—S. B. WING.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan. 7th is a message from SOPHIA SCOTT. We were close friends for twenty-six years. She was always reticent, very brief and to the point in her remarks, and this message is entirely characteristic of her. The names mentioned are a wonderful test to her friends.

I also wish to verify the communication from S. B. WING, in same issue. It is a complete test, true in every particular.

I am at present time at home with my aged parents, and sister, Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, who is still suffering greatly from her accident. She is grateful to the friends who have written and taken so much interest in her case, and will respond soon as able. The injury was to the head principally, therefore she is unable to do much writing. I agree with my friend, Mrs. Almira McLaughlin, that THE BANNER is the leading and best paper published in the interest of Spiritualism. Long may it wave.

Sincerely yours, in truth,

JENNIE L. WEBB.

Box 56, Mattapan District, Boston, Mass.

ROBERT BYRNES.

In the BANNER OF LIGHT of Jan. 14th, 1888, is a communication given through the mediumship of Mr. J. W. Fletcher, which I fully recognize as coming from my son ROBERT, who passed away some eighteen years ago. Although but seven years old he was quite conversant with spirit control, being quite mediumistic, and used to enjoy having a chat with Solo, who is one of my spirit controls; he also had great love for his grandma. I often feel his presence when traveling from place to place. It used to be a great saying with him, "When I go to the spirit-world I will come and watch over you." Long may the BANNER be unfurled to open the way between the two worlds, is the sincere wish of the writer.

Yours for truth, SARAH A. BYRNES.

From the Flower-Land.

Letter from Mrs. Clara A. Field.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

I left the bleak and wintry city of Boston on the 6:30 P. M. train, Jan. 15th, for the land of sunshine and summer called Florida, arriving in Jacksonville in forty-two hours without delay or accident. Mrs. Dr. Brigham, of Fitchburg, Mass., made the journey with me. The change from ice and cold was so great as to be thoroughly appreciated by us; we arrived at high noon, and found the thermometer at eighty degrees in the shade; the drive from the dépôt, through streets shaded on both sides by orange trees loaded with their golden fruit, gardens bright with roses in full bloom, as well as many other lovely blossoms, made a contrast which was delightful in the extreme.

We took rooms at the pleasant, quiet Hotel Glenada, where a nice lunch awaited us. We were assigned very pleasant rooms by the genial host, Mr. Gerrard himself, who personally looks well to the comfort of his guests—seconded ably by his amiable wife and the gentlemanly clerk, whose name has escaped my memory.

After a day's rest I sallied forth to find some of the friends of our cause. I called upon Dr. Johnson and wife, and found that I was well known to them by reputation. I received a cordial welcome, and from them learned that our good worker, Mr. Geo. P. Colby (who is under engagement to travel for the Southern Spiritualist Association), was to speak for them on three evenings, commencing that (Wednesday) evening. I attended the lecture, of course, and had a treat—it being the first time I had ever seen Bro. Colby. His discourse was a fine one, as also were the others in the course, as I learned afterward. I only attended one of them, as I had been invited by "mine host" of the Glenada to entertain his guests in the parlors of the hotel (on the evening of his second lecture), which I consented to do—the local papers speaking very flatteringly of my efforts. So the ball is started, and earnest workers, such as Dr. Johnson and wife, with a few others, will do all they can to keep it moving. May the angels be very near and help them in their efforts.

By invitation I left Jacksonville for St. Augustine, to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Whitney (old time workers and pioneers in this great movement), and to lecture for the Society Sunday, Jan. 22d. There is much interest manifested here, and both sessions were well attended. Arrangements are being made to keep me here for the winter as their speaker; Mrs. Margaret Fox-Kane is expected also. This is just what all speakers need at the present time—the corroborative evidence offered by a good test medium—and Mrs. Kane comes in excellent time to fill this requirement with us.

The cause needs the services of all our workers; it is time that we all realize the necessity of cultivating harmony—each helping the other, and thus aiding our angel friends in their efforts to make this world what it ought to be—a place of happiness and peace!

I shall do all I can to increase the circulation of the BANNER OF LIGHT, being sure that by so doing I am helping to spread the light in the dark places of the earth.

Fraternally yours,

CLARA A. FIELD.

Palatka, Fla.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

By the article in the BANNER of the 21st, under the head of Palatka, by "Octo," your readers will be perhaps misled. The entertainment there referred to was given at St. Augustine—that part of "ye ancient bailiwick" known as North City.

We have, however, had the pleasure of listening to a series of lectures from Prof. George P. Colby, the well-known and popular trance-medium. I can only say that "He came, he saw, he conquered."

A Spiritualist society was organized, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mr. J. G. Mangold, President; Mr. W. C. Nicholas, Vice President; E. A. Kniskern, Secretary; Mrs. M. Mann, Treasurer; Dr. J. A. Hall, Mrs. Nicholas and Mrs. Kniskern, Trustees.

In conclusion, allow me to say to the host of readers of the BANNER, that although we cannot boast of an ancient city whose foundations were laid over three centuries ago, yet we do wear the proud title of "The Gem City of the St. Johns," and that we will unite with our "friends in the cause" at St. Augustine, in extending to all Spiritualists and Liberals of the North, who contemplate coming South this winter a warm invitation to visit us and attend our meetings while here, and we will assure one and all a hearty welcome. PREAMBLE AND CONSTITUTION OF THE FIRST SPIRITUALIST SOCIETY OF PALATKA, FLA.

E. A. K., SECRETARY.

Whereas, It is our belief that there is a spirit-world, with its objective and subjective realities, and that mankind, in the way of orderly and progressive soul-unfoldment, pass from this world of matter into and become inhabitants of that spirit-world; and

Whereas, We believe that we may, under certain psychological conditions, aspirations and sympathies, receive communications from such spirit-world; and,

Whereas, We recognize as a truth that progression is the animating principle of both the spiritual and material existence and of the whole universe; and believe life on the material plane to be an educational course and necessary developing experience in attaining to the higher or spiritual life; therefore, be it

Resolved, 1st, That the spiritual-minded and sincere truth-seekers of the city of Palatka and vicinity do now organize themselves into a society to be known as "The First Spiritual Society of Palatka," for the purpose of further investigating the above-set-forth claims, and disseminating the same to the world; and that we recognize as Spiritualists all who believe in communion between the spiritual and material planes of existence.

Resolved, 2d, That while we recognize the fact that positive knowledge of immortality must necessarily precede any ethical or moral system based thereupon, and that external phenomena are indispensable in the acquisition of that knowledge, we hold that such knowledge and accompanying phenomena are not sufficient in themselves to spiritualize mankind.

Resolved, 3d, That while phenomena may be produced independently of the moral qualities of the medium, or earthly instrument of production, all phases, and especially the currents of inspiration flowing through inspirational speakers and writers, are dependent in their force and moral value upon the purity of the instrument through which they are transmitted.

Resolved, 4th, That all spiritual teachers, or those who appear before the world as such, should be held to strict accountability for their moral conduct while acting in said capacity.

Resolved, 5th, That this Society will not undertake to prescribe special rules of moral conduct, leaving that to the individual consciences of the members, but will insist—as a qualification of membership and respectable recognition—upon the observance of those general rules of life that constitute good citizenship.

Resolved, 6th, That this Society shall be organized as an auxiliary to the Southern Association of Spiritualists.

MEMBERSHIPS.

Article I. Any person may become a member of this Society by subscribing to its preamble and accompanying resolutions, and the payment of one dollar as a franchise right.

KANSAS CITY.—S. Edmunds writes: "I am a Spiritualist in every sense of the word, and though I was not convinced of its reality until 1882, since that time it has been to me a constant study, and through its teachings I have been led to see where I stood and somewhat of my relations to the invisible and potent forces in whose wonderful maze of constantly revealing mysteries I have, through more than forty years, been enveloped.

For about fourteen years I was engaged in the humble field of pedagogics, during which time I delved somewhat profoundly into the sciences, gaining from them that so-called knowledge as taught by the savants of the nineteenth century. And, though I had the best authorities on both sides of the Atlantic upon the kindred topics in which I was deeply engaged, they utterly failed to supply the longing desire that burned within my soul.

I continued teaching, studying and investigating until I was told by a number of good mediums that I must leave the educational field as teacher of children and prepare myself for the teaching of men. Such ideas to me sounded very Utopian, but I came to realize that they contained more truth than I had supposed, and gradually the contending forces have battled with my own inner self, and I have concluded to follow out the advice of my spirit friends.

While reading the message in the BANNER of Dec. 3d from Prof. S. B. Brittan, I was struck with his words:

'Truth fears no opposition, needs no defense, counts no protection, and is ever ready and alert to enter into conflict with error. . . . It seems to me that there are those yet in the body who have the ability, the power and perhaps the desire to come into close association with their ascended co-workers, and push this important department of work into every field; to send out from their stronghold such protests against the human denunciations and worldly scorn that are heaped upon our cause and our people, to send out such arguments and evidences in favor of Spiritualism and its claims, and indeed to busy themselves in spreading before the world just such accumulated testimony as will prove the worth, the utility and the undying and unimpeachable value of Spiritualism to a thinking world. This, I believe, may be undertaken by-and-bye—it may be so in a slight degree at the present time—and I say: All hail to those friends who are trying to do their best! All hail! your efforts are appreciated and understood by the higher councils of spirit-life.'

To those who have read the writings of our noble spirit friend and teacher, how natural and plain this message sounds!

But where are those who shall stand as the beacon-lights? Our old and tried veterans are rapidly passing from the green fields they have sown, to reap an abundant harvest in the spirit-world. While truth cannot be forced upon the bigoted mind, it is true that it can be made to appeal to the heart, yea, to the very soul. Then we say that there is a work for all earnest laborers in the broad fields of humanity.

In Miss Shelhamer's beautiful story, 'Sowing and Reaping,' we are taught that a well spent existence in the temporal is rewarded by a rich harvest in spirit-life; and we aver that it is the teaching of such truths that is to redeem the masses of mankind.

Kansas City contains quite a number of Spiritualists, and the interest is kept in a healthy condition by the labors of permanent speakers, and the seeds of truth are being sown by that tried veteran in the spiritual ranks, Bro. Lyman C. Howe. Bro. Howe's controls are grand. Their illustrations are very plain, and those who are so fortunate as to attend those weekly meetings are filled with many of the good things which the spirit-world has in store for earth's children.

Long live the BANNER OF LIGHT! It has been assailed for carrying upon its colors apparently false shades and tints; but in the true light of Modern Spiritualism, as it unfolds under the resplendent brilliancy of the Sun of Progression, each color responds to the vision in its own proper order; and its rainbow of hope stretches even across the ocean to bind in one common brotherhood all peoples of the civilized world. Its messages of love and affection have cheered thousands of hearts as they have been given through the noble organisms that have been attuned to the divine harmony of the spheres."

New York.

AUBURN.—J. H. Harter writes: "Allow me to thank you for the important editorial in a recent BANNER OF LIGHT, viz.: 'The National Reformers at Work.' The title or name is a good one, but the 'work' in which these 'Reformers' (?) are engaged is not good, allowing me to judge from what happened to me when in one of their meetings held in our city.

A service was held in the Academy of Music in Auburn, which was addressed by the Rev. D. McAlister, General Secretary of the 'National Reform Association.' At the close of his address he offered an opportunity to any one who wished further light upon the subject to ask questions. The lecturer argued the great importance of so changing our National Constitution as to acknowledge 'God, and the Christian Religion' in it. I arose from my seat, and asked the reverend speaker to give the definition of the kind of Christianity he wished incorporated into the Constitution, as there were several hundred different sects or kinds, each claiming to possess the true definition, and the genuine article, called 'The Christian Religion'? Without replying to my question, he abruptly asked: 'What are you?' I replied, 'I am a Spiritualist.' Without answering my question he said: 'Friends, appoint your delegates to attend the State Convention.'

When this was over I again arose from my seat, and recommended that if he wished to change our National Constitution it be so changed as to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage; that inasmuch as we had in the United States, in full operation, about two hundred and fifty thousand dram shops, working misery, taxation, pauperism, crime and other evils too numerous to mention, it was in my opinion our first duty to make people sober, and in that way enable them to put more God and true Christianity into their own constitutions. After this was said by me, Mr. E., the President of the Young Men's Christian Association in our city, said: 'We must cut Harter's tongue off in order to keep him still.' At this juncture, the Rev. Dr. H., one of the Professors in the 'Auburn Theological Seminary' (Presbyterian), arose, and said jocosely 'We must give Mr. Harter a new heart.'

Not knowing but that some theological or surgical operation might be attempted to be performed on me without my consent, and without any good result, I shouted, 'I won't have it; it won't work. I have the same heart God gave me in the start, and it beats for the welfare and happiness of all human beings, and I won't have any other.' The meeting was here brought to a close, and I came away with the original heart of a Harter, and I am doing what I can to gather up the 'Fragments of Humanity.'

May the BANNER OF LIGHT continue to penetrate by its lustre the darkness of the people, whether their errors be found in the Church or State, or in that combination of the two now known under the name of 'National Reform.'"

Colorado.

DENVER.—Mrs. F. A. Logan states that great satisfaction is experienced by her at time of writing by the receipt of copies of the BANNER OF LIGHT, Golden Gate and Carrier Dove; also letters from Moses Hull (who was then speaking in Leadville) and others in Oregon, and different points—all showing that the good work is going on in an encouraging manner. She was much gratified by tidings from her only brother, informing her that he had resumed the meetings at Shattuck Hall, Oakland, Cal., which were suspended during the last days of her beloved sister Browne. "Perhaps," she adds, "some of my old-time friends would like to know of the whereabouts and doings of the 'Lone Pilgrim.' Eight Sabbath evenings in succession we have had good audiences in Harmony Hall, Lawrence street, in this orderly city of eighty thousand inhabitants. On New Year's eve, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, it was estimated by the door-keeper (who took the admittance of twenty-five cents) that three hundred went away who could not gain even standing-room inside the hall. The attraction only consisted of a short address, with healing, and a developing circle at the close; some inspirations and tests by two or three mediums, and some fine singing by a young German girl under control, her phase much resembling the gift possessed by Jesse Shepard. We purpose continuing these meetings indefinitely. Our object and aim has been to harmonize mediumistic elements, that each physical organism may be a fit temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. How well or how imperfectly our work may appear will be seen in the Summer-Land. It is not for us to question now whether the majority of earth's children approve or condemn, but 'what do the angels think of us?' We trust implicitly to heavenly powers for guidance in the right."

Massachusetts.

HAVERHILL.—Speaking of the services conducted Jan. 22d in this place by Jennie B. Hagan, under the auspices of the First Spiritualist Society, W. W. Currier writes: "In response to a call for subjects, a good supply was sent up to the platform. The first subject used was as follows: 'Do we Attain to Immortality? If so, are there any that do not?'

The influence controlling Miss Hagan contended that immortality is the result of life, and the fact of our living is the evidence of immortality; therefore life once individualized cannot be annihilated. Our life here is the winter of our existence. If one particle in creation could be annihilated, the whole could be. God being all and in all, to annihilate one particle would be to annihilate a part of God.

Second subject: 'The Dangers of Ignorance.'

The speaker said that ignorance had many dangerous roads leading to the jail, the work-house and kindred untoward outcomes—all being the logical result of want of knowledge. Many persons have but a single line of thought and action—upon nearly all things else being wofully ignorant. All who are trained by their profession or daily avocation to a single line of thought, are subject to dangers proceeding from those with which they are practically unacquainted.

Money and ignorance at the ballot-box too often decide the fate of the nation, at present. If you are a foreigner by birth, you can become an American by adoption; but you should be taught the worth of American institutions by and through a knowledge of their real value. Schools to more practically educate the masses would, to the mind of the speaker, prove the saviours of America and the world.

Six questions were also utilized in groups, for poems, in Miss Hagan's usually pleasing and instructive style."

BROCKTON.—D. T. Averill writes: "The discourse of Prof. W. F. Peck, of Boston, given before the Spiritual Society of this place on Sunday evening, Jan. 22d, was delivered to a good-sized and highly-appreciative audience. The speaker presented a vivid description of the feelings and experiences of his boyhood and youth—reared as he was under the rigid discipline of a mother imbued thoroughly with the principles of Orthodoxy of the olden type. He led his hearers step by step along his life's pathway, as he climbed, by the light of reason, from an undoubting belief in the dogmas of the endless damnation creed, up to the stirring heights of the Spiritualist's cheering faith and knowledge. First he was led to study the Philosophy of Spiritualism. Finding this so beautiful and satisfying, he then began to look for proof by giving attention to its phenomena. He gave a very interesting recital of some of the tests that brought conviction to his longing soul. All who have a chance should not fail to hear Prof. Peck; for the thoughts he gives forth are instructive, and presented in a very pleasing and entertaining manner."

WATERBURY.—A correspondent writes: "Thursday evening, Jan. 19th, was the twelfth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Callender. For many years his house has been open to Spiritualists; still longer has he been instrumental in giving messages and counsel from the other side of life. Their home has always been a headquarters for those interested in our Philosophy, and an avenue for spirits anxious to return.

The completion of twelve years of happy wedded life gave their friends an opportunity—which they gladly improved—to show their appreciation of the hospitality always so freely extended; so a strong delegation called on Mr. and Mrs. Callender, presenting them with a handsome bed-lounge, and giving them, also, a complete surprise. It proved to be a thoroughly enjoyable occasion, where every one was inspired by the spirit of good-will and cordiality. Several out-of-town friends joined with those here in offering congratulations and good wishes.

J. P. Thorndyke made the presentation speech, expressing in a felicitous way the good feeling of the donors; a poem, written by Eleanor S. Bird especially for the occasion, was read. Mr. and Mrs. Callender responded modestly and briefly, yet to the point, and with music, conversation, dancing and feasting the evening passed quickly away.

Their many friends all over New England will join in wishing them many prosperous years together—many another anniversary, made brighter by the grateful remembrances of those whom they have blessed."

LANSING.—Mrs. C. W. Ayres, Secretary, writes, Jan. 23d: "The interest in Spiritualism has been quiet here for some time, but is now reviving, owing to the labors of Mrs. Lunt Parker, with her daughter, Lily May Lunt. They came among us strangers. Her lectures and tests have called out many new seekers for something more satisfactory than the old-time doctrines of the Church. Through her efforts there has been a new society formed here, designated: 'The People's Spiritual Progressive Union.' The officers elected are as follows: President, Henry E. Porter; Vice-President, Samuel P. Buck; Secretary, Mrs. C. W. Ayres; Treasurer, Dr. A. W. Edson. This Society will hold meetings every Sunday at the new Spiritual Hall, 125 Washington Avenue."

Spiritual Phenomena.

IN THE SEANCE-ROOM.

BY E. A. BRACKETT.

No. 3.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In 1776 Mesmer published his discovery of Animal Magnetism, and for more than a hundred years, amid the jibes and sneers of educated men, it struggled for recognition. Now, under the name of hypnotism, it is an accepted fact. During the period of its forced probation there never was a time when it could not have been demonstrated in a few minutes to the entire satisfaction of an unprejudiced mind.

As mesmerism is the foundation of trance-mediumship and the so-called materialized forms, its acceptance must eventually lead to the recognition of all its different phases.

The opposition to mesmerism, with increased bitterness, has been transferred to materialization, and men who are considered respectable in the ordinary walks of life, demean themselves by the false charges they make against this last and most advanced phase of spirit manifestation.

While we may despise the ungentlemanly, and in some cases brutal attacks, we should not forget that among the strongest promoters of Spiritualism are those who are so unjustly opposing it; they are forcing those who know its truth to a vigorous defense and exciting the public to investigation.

No truth was ever crushed out by its opponents, and no one need fear that the attacks made in the present instance will retard the progress of the spiritual forces that are throughout the civilized world moving to the front.

It is not from this class that Spiritualism has anything to fear; the danger, if danger there be, comes from pretended believers, whose limited knowledge and narrow minds lead them to promulgate ideas and theories adverse to the great principles which underlie the whole movement.

I assume that the moment the existence of one of these beings is demonstrated by or through the phenomenon termed materialization, the fact of a spiritual world is assured beyond a doubt, and the quality of the manifestation may safely be left to its unfoldment. A phenomenon of such transcendent magnitude cannot fail, under the laws of evolution, to develop a character in keeping with its origin. The charge that they are evil spirits, demons, is but a relic of barbarism still nursed and cherished in the bosom of old Theology.

I have studied hundreds of séances, some of them in my own house, and have never seen one where the moral tone of the manifestations fell below the average character of the audience. On the other hand, I have seen much that was so beautiful that it is impossible to convey an idea of it by any known language.

My object in these brief sketches of the séance-room is, if possible, to point out some things which may aid those who have had less experience.

In a former article I spoke of a male form that came to me at the Berrys', in whose intelligence I had confidence. By this I did not mean to be understood that all the forms coming to me there, as well as at other times and places, were not equally as intelligent, but that the different individualities lead to different lines of thought and expression.

This spirit claimed to be my brother-in-law, who served in the late war, and was struck in the inner corner of the eye by a buckshot, which penetrated the brain. He lived some days, and passed away in an unconscious state. On his first coming to me at the Berry's he came so weak that it was difficult for him to give me his name; his garments were ill-fitting, and in every way he appeared, if such a thing were possible, to be made up of the odds and ends of the séance.

On one occasion he came wearing coarse hair on his head, arranged in such a way that I felt certain I could have removed it without hurting him. At another time he called me "Father." Remembering the old adage, I wondered if that were not the beginning of wisdom on his part. His confused condition lasted through more than a dozen interviews, and while I treated him kindly, I was, for that reason, but little interested in him.

At one of the afternoon séances I made up my mind to tell him that our meetings were not profitable, and that he had better retire. I was busily conversing with a lady on my left when a heavy hand was laid on my shoulder, and starting from my seat I found George standing beside me. Reaching out his hand with a hearty grasp, he said: "Are you glad to see me to-day?" With a sudden impulse I said: "What! you here, so far from the cabinet, and talking plainly too?"

Putting both hands on my shoulders he replied: "Yes; but it takes more strength to talk than it does to materialize." In both the tones of his voice and the light of his face there was an expression of great tenderness. Gently stroking my beard, he said: "This is longer than it was when I knew you. How do you think it would look on my face?" I replied, "It is too old; it would not be becoming." Instantly he remarked; "Look at me." As I looked, there came upon his face a perfect facsimile of my beard. Placing one of my hands upon it, he said: "I want you to be sure about this; pull it; do anything you please." I not only pulled it, but traced it up to its union with his face, and found it to be as firmly attached to his face as my own beard to mine.

After satisfying myself fully, I said: "This is very remarkable; still I have not changed my opinion; it is too old for you." "How is it now?" he said; and instantly the beard disappeared, and his face was as smooth as a boy's.

I had ample time and light to study this remarkable manifestation, and if I was prejudiced, it certainly was against him. Both his hands were on my shoulders, or on my beard, during the whole time. If what I have described did not occur, then trained human perception is worthless.

As he retired to the cabinet he shook hands with me, and said: "I should be very glad to meet you again." From that time he has rapidly improved.

Had my experience up to this interview been confined to the meeting of this one form I could not have been very much interested in materialization. My perplexities did not altogether cease with the sudden awakening of his faculties. As he grew stronger, his tone of voice and manner of speech grew very like those of one I knew on this side of life. He comes to me at Mrs. Cowan's séances with the same peculiarities; and is one of the few spirits who appear through different mediums with little or no change.

To a person of limited experience the resemblance of which I have spoken might be considered evidence of a confederate, but I am satisfied that such was not the case. My interviews with this spirit have taught me an important lesson. The shortcomings, the apparent blunders and mistakes made by these forms are often the best possible evidence of the truthfulness of the séance.

I have elsewhere given Bertha's explanation of the confused or dazed condition of some of these spirits on coming into the séance-room. If they are not strong enough to assert their individuality over the magnetic influences, they are liable to blend with or take on something of the interview which has immediately preceded their appearance.

The visitor often adds to this confusion by his disappointment and suspicion of fraud, even though these are not expressed, spirits being cognizant of mental conditions. With some, this has been a fruitful source of misunderstanding. Had they understood some of the laws governing these manifestations, they would have helped the spirits out of their bewilderment instead of wrongly accusing them.

There is a class of spirits connected with these manifestations with whom I have had but little acquaintance. At Mrs. Cowan's séances there sometimes comes a tall, well-proportioned male form, dressed in Oriental costume. Twice I have seen him come out into the room and in a clear voice address the audience in a very impressive manner. I have had opportunity to study this figure and to satisfy myself that there were no appliances independent of his form to account for his great height. Although generous and open in his bearing, I did not find him very communicative, not because of unwillingness, but apparently from inability to converse to any great extent. Wishing to know more about him, I asked the materialized form, George, if he knew him. "Yes," he said, "perfectly well. He is one of a band of ancient spirits who are connected with all materializing séances, aiding and encouraging your friends to reach you. Having no particular affection for any individual at the séance they do not often appear outside of the cabinet."

"Then," I said, "if they are controlling these manifestations, I suppose we shall have a rehash of all the old occultism of India and Egypt. Do these spirits still regard those teachings as true?" "That," he replied, "depends on how you understand them. What was taught in those days by the spirits was true enough, but has been so perverted and misstated that, to your understanding, it is not true. If your best friend was so disfigured and covered up you would not know him. The disposition to pervert spiritual truths to selfish ends has been and is inherent in all nations; the priest of ancient India and the priest of today differ, in this respect, only in methods. In your free republic, where every man should be master of himself, we hope for an honest hearing. This communication with another life is now open to you, and will go on developing facts as fast as you are able to receive them, and it will make all the difference possible whether you listen to the pure, simple teachings of intelligent spirits, or draw your conclusions from the distorted relics of the past."

We are passing through a revolution of materialistic and spiritual ideas, and it becomes the honest seeker after truth to avoid, as far as possible, the false statements and equally false theories which such an unsettled condition always gives birth to.

The rapid disintegration of old forms of religion has set free from their sectarian prisons a class whose minds are drifting through the realms of unrestricted thought. Many of these persons are attracted to these manifestations. All this would be well enough if they would leave behind them the débris of old creeds and the mental dyspepsia engendered by decaying ideas. The orthodox heaven and hell, the effete spiritism of India, the revival of Theosophy, with its elementary spirits, its floating human shells and the mythical brotherhood of the Himalaya Mountains, have no direct bearing on the present phase of Spiritualism.

Whatever of truth those early communications may have contained, they come to us laden with speculations and conclusions adverse to our civilization. New wine is not for old bottles, neither can the evolution of thought in its onward march carry with it these lifeless remains.

There is, probably, but one Principle or Intelligent Force which governs everything. It creates matter and all its varied changes, calling out from space invisible forms that are made visible to our outward senses, and rendering them again invisible.

The eruption of volcanoes, the storms that inundate the valleys, the gigantic upheavals of the earth, the almost infinite phenomena of life, whether called good or bad, are alike due to this all-pervading Force.

High and low, good and bad, are only different degrees of unfoldment. Nature leaves, for a time, the waste material of her handiwork to be changed and molded into other forms.

The temple she builds is sacred to the indwelling spirit, and all esoteric or other teaching that tends to debase the body, as fasting, penance or self-inflicted punishment, is a perversion of that which in itself is noble.

While spirit is united to what we call matter, a vigorous, healthy mind and body must ever remain the best expression of the Divine Force in nature. Science has paved the way to a more realistic method of thought, and the dominant materialism compels us to walk with our feet on the ground. If we build at all it must be upon solid facts, and not upon the mystical vaporings of a bygone age.

To meet this changed condition, intelligent spirits have descended to the sensuous plane of materialized forms, demanding recognition. Until the mental atmosphere that surrounds these phenomena is free from the poisonous influence of falsehood and distrust, we can form only imperfect conceptions as to what may be their future development. Their present outcome is the one great fact of spirit return through that harmony which love alone creates. Like the pure and affectionate teachings of the early Christians, Spiritualism is in danger of being engulfed by attempts to engraft upon it theories and ideas entirely foreign to its present mission.

Make yourself nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity. Bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure-houses of precious and restful thoughts, which care cannot disturb, nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us — houses built without hands, for our souls to live in.—John Ruskin.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From her home in Warwick, R. I., Jan. 5th, 1888, Mrs. L. W. Brown (formerly Mrs. Pease, of Putnam, Conn.), in her 54th year.

She was a firm Spiritualist and a good healing medium, and did much good for suffering humanity without fee or reward. She was a kind, generous-hearted woman, and is greatly lamented by those she had saved from sickness and death, as well as all others with whom she was associated. She was a great sufferer for months, bearing her affliction with composure and great fortitude, knowing that on her departure from her body she would be ushered into the higher world of unfoldment, where life is real.

OF THE REPORT
OF THE
SEYBERT COMMISSION

THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
TO INVESTIGATE

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

IF A MAN DIE,
Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.
It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.
It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

Essence and Substance:

A TREATISE ON

Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,

Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

Confession at Last—Truth is Mighty.

So scientific thought really has its limitations. At least Prof. Josiah P. Cooke of Harvard University makes a public declaration to that effect. His frank assertion is that there is but a small class of the laws of nature which may be regarded as exact. He admits that most physical laws are not realized with mathematical exactness, but are ideal truths, more or less false in each particular case. When we are able, he says, to go behind the phenomena to their proximate causes, we shall undoubtedly find that the law and its variations are merely different phases of the workings of one complex system, but it is doubtful whether, by man's limited powers, the anomalies of nature will ever be fully developed or its discords resolved. In most cases the relations of phenomena are so complex as to admit of no simple, even approximate, expression.

This is an important admission, coming from the source it does. It is as good as a "give away" of their case by the scientists. Here they are, now, forced to own up that the relations of physical phenomena are too complex to allow of expression; yet when they are brought face to face with the far more complex relations of spiritual phenomena, they have no answer to offer but one of affected contempt. By what authority do they presume to discriminate after such a fashion, confidently expecting that other men, not professed scientists, will reverentially subscribe to all they utter? Professor Cooke sincerely protests against the sophistries of materialism, but if raw assumption is a whit better than raw materialism, we should be glad to know in what particular.

A law of nature, says Professor Cooke, is simply a declaration, or statement, of a certain order, sequence or relation obtaining among natural phenomena; simply a statement of observed relations. Causation is associated with a law of nature in the popular conception, which undoubtedly arises from the figurative use of the word "law" in this connection. Human laws may be cruel, but to call the law of gravitation pitiless is like calling the multiplication table inexorable. The problem of evil which the world everywhere presents is a fact of nature as well as a law, but is not to be confounded with law.

Man, went on the Professor, cannot increase by the smallest fraction either the material or the energy he employs; but he can introduce into the chain of causation conditions by which he is able to control and determine events, and even to alter the face of the earth. Why, then, he necessarily asks, may not new issues appear in nature? Why may not a new force overrule an old one? Why, indeed, may not unrecognized agencies which have always existed, and whose effects have been slowly accumulating, at any moment appear as important factors in human affairs and relations? He calls on his hearers to remember that it was only a century ago that the first indications were noticed of a power which is now one of the chief agencies of our civilization. What were these indications? Only the momentary twitching of a frog's hind legs. But the audible and intelligible occurrence of raps in an humble house at Hydesville is held up to ridicule by the same men who speak in such terms of respect of the momentary twitchings of a frog's hind legs. Why may there not be wrapped up at least as much meaning in one as in the other?

Now if it be true that there are unrecognized agencies which have always existed, that may at any time make their appearance as important factors in human affairs and relations, and if man can likewise introduce conditions into the chain of causation by which he may even alter the face of the earth, what have we at last but an out-and-out admission from a scientific Harvard professor that the very agency for which his class has had only contemptuous ridicule from the beginning is fully capable of controlling and determining events and changing the face of the earth itself? And if, also, the relations of physical phenomena are too complex to be even simply expressed, why should it be so very easy for these same modest and self-abased scientists to find adequate expression for the infinitely complex relations of the phenomena of spirit? If the material is so baffling, how is it that the spiritual is so plain that its mysterious and subtle claims can be determined by the very men who give up in the presence of the external and natural? The question answers itself. In this compelled confession of a leading professor of science is his surrender of all assumptions as to the worthlessness of Spiritualism.

If, as Professor Cooke allows, man in the bodily form can introduce new conditions into the chain of causation, he certainly ought to be no less, but even more, able to do it when he exists as a spirit. In that case, what should forbid such interference by him as a spirit being rightly called one of the "unrecognized agencies which have always existed," appearing as "an important factor in human affairs and relations"? We are only pursuing the train of thought laid down by Professor Cooke himself. We are simply accepting his suggestion in reference to the appearance of "new issues in nature," which he properly points out as likely to announce themselves by so ridiculous a herald as the movement of a frog's hind legs.

It was inevitable that the scientists would be brought round to this newly proclaimed position which is held with so much reason by Professor Cooke. He could not, indeed, stand forth and truthfully answer the questions awaiting an answer in regard to the operation of law, without conceding the fact that all law is at most but an ideal truth, and subject to conditions which man can control with greater facility as spirit than as mortal.

The Professor is ready to admit that what are called natural laws are not all equally definite or equally exact, and that very few of the recognized laws of nature are absolutely fixed and invariable. Yet his class are prompt to assert that the spirit-phenomena are in contravention of the laws of nature. After all, they know nothing certain about it. They are not to be permitted to plead ignorance in one case, and to assume omniscience in the other. If it is all mystery at best, where all is claimed to be known, much more profound must the mystery be where everything is unknown. Spiritualists ask for nothing unreasonable here. They have never failed to protest that they could do little more than observe and interpret phenomena as they were presented; and what more does Prof. Cooke profess for the scientists to be able to do in regard to the accepted laws of nature, ending at last with the confession that, at the best, they are but ideal truths, and wholly incapable of apprehension.

He goes further, and freely admits that they are so far from being wholly understood that agencies hitherto unrecognized and unknown, but always existent, may at any time present themselves in a manner that will compel recognition. In a statement like this, how plainly does he not put the case for the appearance of Spiritualism, with its manifold and mysterious phenomena. And in his felicitous, because truthful, statement that so common a circumstance as the jerking of a frog's hind legs may be employed for the announcement of an agency till then unknown in the great repertory of nature, how convincingly does he not put the case in favor of the simple phenomenon of the rappings at a child's pillow, the announcement of the appearance of an infinitely more powerful agency, which is destined to direct into new and deeper channels the life of the human race.

Why, then, do the scientists hold back and scornfully refuse any longer to give recognition to the existence of spiritual phenomena equally with those which are called natural? Here is the open statement of mystery on every side, in what is both seen and unseen; here is the confession of inability to decide where knowledge either begins or ends; here is a complete overturn of all the conceited and clannish assumptions on which so-called science rests its claims; what is to hinder the application of the same conclusions to the phenomena of spirit that is made to the phenomena of matter? what makes truth true for one class, or kind, of phenomena and not for all? what shall be allowed to finally decide that one hitherto unrecognized agency in the production of phenomena is to be welcomed into the circle of knowledges, and another one contemptuously shut out?

Evidently the issue is rapidly narrowing itself in men's minds into a close compass. We need have no fears, either, that truth will not present its case in the most effective way in the court of human judgment. As we see already, the scientists who have superciliously turned their backs on its plea are unconsciously made advocates while they think they are critics and final judges. Even while they confess themselves baffled in their search for real knowledge respecting nature, the light of the spiritual streams along the lines of their limited attainment to show them that science is not to be arbitrarily limited by the visible and external, but is privileged and instructed to reach out after all forms and relations of truth, which ignorance can neither distort nor prejudice color.

The Gift of Vision.

A verse in Proverbs (xix: 18,) says: "Where there is no vision the people perish." Then, as now, there was a vital need of vision. There is a great deal to be said, as there is also a great deal thought, on this matter of Vision: It is oftener called visions, and so its real meaning suffers disintegration. The person who sees visions is generally thought to be unbalanced, if not flighty, and his judgment on ordinary matters is considered unreliable. Whereas the person who possesses what is called the power of insight, of penetration, is regarded as superior, in point of gifts, to those around him. It is all one and the same thing, however; at any rate, it would baffle anybody's acuteness to draw the line between the one and the other. If there is any difference between the one who sees visions and the one who possesses ready insight, or vision, it is in the practical sense only, and that is always to be held subordinate to the unlimited and spiritual sense.

A suggestive discourse on this most interesting subject of Vision, uttered by Rev. Mr. Houghton, Universalist minister at Storm Lake, Iowa, has recently fallen under our eye, which merits perhaps more than ordinary attention. After an ascription of gratitude for the gift of sight in general, without which we should be robbed of many of the higher joys of life, the speaker propounds the significant question whether sight implied merely the observation of the varied objects of the physical world; because, if that is all, any creature that is endowed with eyes is the equal of the most gifted person. The eyes of the tiny ant outshine those of the fairest maiden, and vie even with the flash of her diamonds. Yet the little insect cannot behold what we do, sunset glory and starlight beauty, the mountains and the seas. It lives in its own diminutive world, beautiful but narrow. And so with the entire animal creation.

So that mere eyes are not enough; they are but windows to look out from. The windows themselves cannot see, but are the medium through which vision is transmitted. It is the capacity of the seer alone that determines what shall and what shall not be seen. It is the seer that possesses the vision. If we could only put our own eyes into the heads of some other persons, how much more and how differently we should see from what we do now. Our physical and our intellectual view of life is modified in numberless ways by our experience, our education and our habits of thought. The trained botanist sees in flowers and plants and trees what does not exist for the eyes of the person who knows little or nothing of botany. The practiced geologist, the delving miner and the artist each sees wholly different things from the height of a mountain, and only because they are all looking for different things. They have the same eyes, but not the same gift of seeing. And that gift belongs to the being within to whose external being the eyes belong. We all look abroad on the world with the power and in the direction which our temperaments, our tastes and our habitual thought combine to inspire.

Our Universalist expounder of this profoundly interesting subject admitted the two-fold nature of vision. Though his definition partakes, insensibly perhaps, of the theological character, he really means to convey the idea that there is but one true vision, and that is the internal, or spiritual. If we see only externally, we are not much better than blind. The Scriptures, says our friend, nowhere attempt to limit our vision. We are summoned to look and to penetrate the mysteries of life. Revelation and religion include all things good. The days of mystery are passing away, and a world of order and beauty is opening to our awakened sight. In life it is the one whose vision is the clearest that succeeds. The mechanic or the merchant must needs make his calling a vital part of him. Neither can hope to prosper if he is careless or heedless. The lawyer must be quick to discern the value of testimony, to follow the meaning of statutes. The medical man must have a clearness of vision that enables him at once to comprehend the nature of disease and the peculiarities of temperament which are so interwoven with it in its many forms. And the minister should have the vision of Luther, of Wesley and of Murray to keep the world of men from spiritually perishing. Washington and Lincoln saw the vision of a whole and happy republic of freemen, or they could have accomplished nothing. Grant saw the vision of final victory, to be undisturbed thereafter, on the smoky heights of Vicksburg, in the swamps of Chickamaugua and through the dreary Wilderness.

In our domestic life, remarked this speaker, many a home is perishing to-day for want of vision. How many infelicities under domestic roofs would clear up and disappear, if the many peculiarities of disposition and the varied motives of mind and heart were more clearly seen. A more perfect knowledge of character before marriage, and a more considerate judgment afterward, are sadly wanted. In all household tempests we should strain our vision to behold the dawn of peace. In the whole course of our lives it is vision that helps on reality. The people perish in poetry, in art, in invention, in literature, where there is no vision. This is one of the plainest lessons of history. In the height of the glory of Greece and Rome, the eyes of the population were lustrous to see the many deities that presided over their destinies. As the light went out for them, the darkness set in.

There would be no civilization for the human race if these lights of vision were not all the while kept burning somewhere. For an untold multitude life would not be worth living, if it were not thus illuminated. Some people call it illusion, and fancy that thus characterizing it ends it; but what is life at best but an endless series of these so-called illusions, raising expectation, but never satisfying the enjoyment, and leading us on and on to the end? It is furthest possible from self-deceit; it is but the gift of vision that is imparted in a larger or less degree to us all, and is to be cultivated as the very life and reality of our being. Some people name it ideality, but that in its turn requires explanation. For if the idealization of things external, the turning of the real into the ideal, is the same thing, then it is neither more nor less than vision, and that is in the last analysis our very life itself. Thus does the man of vision realize what the self-styled practical, that is external, man is wholly ignorant of.

If, continues our preacher, a clear vision is so essential to earthly pregress, what shall we say as we enter upon heavenly pursuits? We listen, says he, for the footfalls on the further shore: "Many believe the sea of eternity bears on its bosom many a white sail, that the angels of love have launched their silvery barks and are gliding down to earth, laden with messages of joy and peace for a suffering world." We seek the light, he said, and shall it be long hidden from us? Is there an earthly answer to every human cry, and no response to the questionings of the soul? Is nature more generous at the foundation of her temple than in the finishing of its dome? Do we make all earthly things ours, then stand like paupers at the gate of heaven? Is not the upper life as brilliantly lighted as the lower? Does the giant of Death conquer the God of life?

That the soul is possessed of eyes other than the visual organs, is apparent from the spiritual experience of the race. Some there are who see not, as there are others who sing not; but this is no argument against the reality either of music or of the spiritual vision. Illustrations of spiritual gifts are to be met with all along the pages of history. If the range of our vision were shut in by the walls of the material universe, and no light could come from beyond the grave, civilization would soon perish with the dust. In the very midst of the cares of life we are to seek for that view of destiny which brings light out of darkness and snatches victory from defeat. The heart is always strengthened for external trials by the inward belief, a vision at most, in something fundamentally good. We are therefore to seek for and await the coming of the true vision before we yield to discouragement, which is the precursor of despair. When we do thus yield, we are truly said to perish.

We earnestly commend this higher and truer view of the things of this life to every one's thoughtful consideration. What comes to us all in flashes, like the wind that goes and comes as it listeth, we are to make habitual and regular, the guide and companion and inspiration of our lives. We need not be what the world calls great in order to possess vision in the largest degree. And in possessing it we secretly become conscious of having what the world can neither give nor take away. It is wholly of the spirit, and spiritual. It gilds the past like the clouds that make the pavilion for the setting sun. The drudgery of life ceases to be drudgery, and takes on a poetic, that is a divine, significance and meaning. It crowns our commonest experiences with a halo of beauty. It smooths the rough ways, defies poverty, inspires cheerfulness and courage, and wears the harness of life without letting it chafe in any part.

The Public School—A Western Warning.

The recent session of the Association of Teachers in Montana Territory, continuing for three days, was held at Helena, and we find an account of the Association's proceedings in the Helena Daily Independent. The essay read by Mr. Carleton, principal of the Helena High School, treats of the future of our public schools in a manner that is urgently suggestive. He makes the statement that seventy-five per cent. of our vast immigration goes west of the Mississippi River, and that a very large majority of it is apt to be against the public school. Along this stretch of country, he says, in which we form a conspicuous part, truth and error, freedom and bondage, knowledge and ignorance, tolerance and intolerance will one day contend for the mastery in a struggle whose echoes will be heard around the globe. The day when we could laugh at these dangers and hurrah for the United States in the same breath is passed.

Recurring to the oft-quoted definition of the word Education, the essayist declared that there is no religious element in the meaning of the word. Yet Cardinal Gibbons, in an article in the North American Review, quotes freely from the obsolete definitions of Webster, and asserts that education means to instruct, to instill into the mind principles of art, science, morals and religion, and therefore insists that religion cannot be divorced from education. But the wish is father to the thought in all these arguments of our Catholic friends. The speaker said frankly that the Catholic opposition to our public school system is one of the greatest dangers that threaten the free schools in the Northwest. Yet he disavowed all wish to cherish any sectarian feeling on the subject, and would consider it only in a spirit of candor and open and absolute truthfulness.

He declared it to be a fact which could not be questioned, that the vast majority of Catholics in this country, comprising the better classes and the best educated of them, are firm believers in and friends of our public schools. It is likewise a fact that it is the policy of the Catholic Church to build up a great system of parochial schools in opposition to our public schools, and a gigantic beginning has already been made in the Northwest. Every priest and church officer seems pledged to this policy of the church. The charge brought against the public schools by the Catholic hierarchy is that they are godless and immoral. They insist that religion and education shall be joined together.

But what kind of religious teaching shall we have? The Orthodox Protestant wants his kind; the Universalist Protestant desires his kind; our Catholic brother demands his kind or none; our Hebrew friend insists that none of these will do for his children; and there are many others who do not want their children to be instructed at school in religion of any kind. What, now, is to be done in the face of such varied wants, demands and preferences? The founders of our republic, answers the essayist, with that wisdom and sagacity which characterized their every undertaking, left the religious instruction of the child to the home and the church, where only it belongs. They declared for all time that the Church and the State could not have anything in common. We should teach morality, love of country; teach our boys and girls to be true, noble and useful men and women; and leave the rest to the Church to do.

Cardinal Gibbons says, however, that if the denominational plan of Canada prevailed, the evils of our school system would disappear. Would he compare the condition of the people of Canada, under the denominational plan, with that of the people of any State or Territory of this Union? The Church, said the essayist, advocates the denominational plan in order to secure its proportion of the school money. Suppose we concede to our Catholic friends the right to draw their proportion of the school money. What results? In a little while our Episcopal friends demand the same right. Denomination follows denomination with its claim. The public school thus goes out, and the denominational school comes in.

The result is, as a nation we turn squarely about and face the setting sun. We take our leave of liberty and progress. We welcome thrones and altars that for centuries wrung the life-blood from the starving peasantry of Europe. And America, called the hope of the world, disappoints the world, because the public schools, which were the hope of America, were displaced and overthown. The public school, said the essayist, must not perish, but it must be purified. It is the corner-stone of our institutions, and they stand or fall together. That can but be a strange conception of religious education that would put secular education in jeopardy, which is ready and willing to sacrifice all needed progress in practical knowledge to the supremacy of its own claims to authority.

☞ The South Carolina zealots who hounded the Rev. Dr. J. Woodrow because of his liberal views and teachings on evolution, and caused him to be turned out of the chair of didactic and polemic theology of the Theological Seminary in Columbia, have been at their old tricks again, of late, and he has been made to feel the hand of persecution once more, efforts being put forth to prevent students from listening to his lectures as a Professor in the University of the Palmetto State. At last accounts both the Doctor and the students remained firm, and thus virulent adversaries were enjoying(?) a quiet "set-back."

☞ A large proportion of the trouble and inharmony in the ranks of Spiritualists is caused by hints, surmises and innuendoes for which no one individual is responsible, because the one who originates them declines to support them by proof, or even to have himself or herself known by name.

☞ Our thanks are tendered to Mr. George A. Bacon, of Washington, for a copy of the Official Congressional Directory, by W. H. Michael, clerk of printing records. It is a royal octavo of 296 pages, with a fine engraving of the Capitol and a map of the city of Washington. As a book of reference it is invaluable.

A. B. Richmond's New Book.

The patrons of THE BANNER have from time to time been informed of the progress made by A. B. Richmond, Esq., in his preparation of a new work—bearing on the Seybert Commission and its remarkable "findings"—which when issued from the press would, we predicted, create a profound sensation. The book has at last (as will be seen by the announcement on our eighth page) been brought out from the press of Colby & Rich, and cannot fail to verify our prophecy and make its way in the reading world.

In a clear and explicit manner Mr. Richmond describes in this work what he experienced at Cassadaga Lake last summer. As he entered the camp-ground, and saw among the crowds of visitors, judges, lawyers, doctors and learned professors, as well as business men from every condition of life, "I smiled," he says, "a complacent kind of a 'Seybert Commission smile' at the weakness and credulity of my fellowmen." At this moment he, adopting the words of Puck, said:

"What fools these mortals be!"

But when he left he was compelled to say,

"And fools, who came to scoff, remained to pray."

It is needless to remark that the feeling indicated by this expression shows that what he had thought a mere fallacy had been proven to him to be a stubborn fact. He was, therefore, in order to be consistent with his well established reputation as a conscientiously honest man, compelled to report to the world his convictions, and he did so in his able "Open Letter to the Seybert Commission," a copy of which has appeared in these columns. To those who think he may have been mistaken in his observations, and consequently in his conclusions, he says: "Surely a man of average mind can tell with certainty whether he held two slates in such a position, and under such conditions that another person present could not write on them without his knowing it." He avers that, to his own personal knowledge, slates were thus held, and while being so held writing was produced on them, fac similes of which he gives. Were it to be admitted that he could be, under such conditions, deceived, "then," he says: "all the ordinary methods by which we obtain knowledge are fallacious, and the facts in life that we can be certain of are few indeed."

"Nature," he continues, "did not intend that our senses should be false witnesses, but truthful; and the instances where they testify falsely to us, compared with the millions of truths they tell us of every day of our lives, are as a single grain of sand to the accumulation of an ocean's shore, or a single leaf to the foliage of a forest."

We do not purpose at this time to give any extended review of this masterly arraignment of the Seybert Commissioners' report of their so-called investigations—that step will be deferred to another opportunity—but simply to direct the attention of our readers to the fact that no more able defense of the truths of Spiritualism, so far as Mr. Richmond has experienced them, or of the integrity and intelligence of its adherents, has been put in print than is embraced in this new and strikingly interesting book. That it will have an extended circulation and be thoughtfully read and approved of by all honest minds there can be no doubt.

A copy of Mr. Richmond's book should be in the home of every Spiritualist, and of every individual who loves truth and desires to follow its lead.

To Southern Spiritualists.

MRS. CLARA A. FIELD has a letter from St. Augustine, Fla., on our second page, to which attention is called, as also the Secretary's statement of matters at Palatka. Mrs. Field, who is an eloquent inspirational speaker, is an authorized agent of the BANNER OF LIGHT for the taking of subscriptions. We trust that the Southern Spiritualists will feel to keep her actively employed both in her medial and business capacities.

☞ Many years ago Mr. Epes Sargent was editor of the Boston Transcript. Later on he became a prominent Spiritualist and wrote several excellent books upon the subject—while doing much other literary work. Several years after his connection with the Transcript ceased, he was one day in its office, when the subject of Spiritualism was broached by the then editor. The same day he paid us a visit, and in the course of conversation remarked, in a somewhat indignant mood, that he was not in the habit of using profane language, but, said he, "I was tempted, on account of the exceedingly silly questions put to me in regard to the Spiritual Philosophy, to say 'What a blanked fool you are!' But I did n't."

☞ Mrs. J. H. Conant, our late medium, never believed in the reincarnation or reembodiment theory, as stated recently in a Boston sheet. On the contrary, she always personally opposed it. We heard Mrs. Dyar-Clough—then Mrs. Dyar—deliver a lecture on reembodiment in Mr. Ayer's private house one Sunday previous to the building of the Temple, which we endorsed, and said so then and there, consequently we have nothing to offer against her late lecture upon the same subject. But this we do aver, namely, that Mrs. J. H. Conant assures us she did not control Mrs. Clough during its delivery.

☞ The National Republican of Washington, D. C., states that at the regular meeting of the Unity Club—held on Friday night, Jan. 27th, at the residence of Mrs. Cowling, 512 I street Northwest—the essayist of the evening, Mr. Geo. A. Bacon, read a very suggestive paper on "Hidden Powers," which proved to be an elaboration of the subject of psychometry; the topic (as are all to the elucidation of which Bro. B. turns his attention) was skillfully handled.

THE BANNER is in receipt of the first number of an Italian Spiritual Magazine, issued at Firenze (Florence), entitled "Il Corriere Spiritico," and dated Jan. 1, 1888. It is a work of thirty pages, in colored paper cover, with a portrait of its editor, Giovanni Sucol.

Re-opening of Our Friday Afternoon Circles.

The services of Mrs. B. F. Smith, the well-known trance medium, of Lawrence, Mass., have been secured for the present, for the transmission of individual spirit messages at our Public Free Circle Room on Friday afternoons.

Her first séance will be held on Friday, Feb. 10th, at 3 o'clock.

George W. Morrill.

A message from our old friend and townsman, Mr. G. W. Morrill, who suddenly passed to spirit-life last year in this city, at the Adams House, has, it seems, been received through Rowley's Occult Telegraph. A full description of Mr. Rowley's mediumship in this direction has appeared in these columns, therefore it is unnecessary for us to go into any explanation in that respect. Here is the telegraphic message from the other world, which is so characteristic of Mr. M. that we make no apology for placing it on record:

"I have a message I would like to send to my friend Colby, if you will be obliging enough to receive it and forward the same to him. I am George W. Morrill. Mr. Rowley, you will probably remember me, as I met you, while in my earth-life, through the courtesy of Capt. William Wilson. I am very glad to meet you again. Please introduce me to your colleague. [Here I introduced him to Whitney.—Rowley.] Doctor, I am glad to meet you; glad to see that you and Rowley are doing such noble work, in curing the sick and afflicted. You will both of you please excuse me now if I devote the rest of my attention to my old friend, Mr. Colby. Before I go any further I will say, however, please do not forget to give my kindest regards to Capt. Wilson, and tell him George is all right, and that I will send him a message when opportunity presents itself.

"My Dear Friend Colby—You may think I am derelict in my duty in not writing you sooner; but I know you will pardon me when I inform you that this is my very first opportunity to communicate with you by telegraph, as Mr. Rowley is so much engaged with his medical business that it is almost impossible for a spirit who is not a doctor to get anywhere near his little machine. But now, through the courtesy of Dr. Wells and the rest of his band, I am permitted to come and send you this greeting. Oh! my dear friend C., there is so much that I would like to say that I scarcely know where to begin. I would dearly love to sit down by you and talk for hours, I have so much of interest to tell you. Won't you be kind enough to give this communication publicity, so that it will reach the dear ones who are left on earth—those of my own kith and kin? I cannot write to them all personally; but let this message convey to each and all my dearest love and most earnest affection and sincere regards. I was somewhat surprised when I found myself outside of my physical body. Thanks be to the good spirits on this side who had sent me so many descriptions of this life that I was not a stranger to it, but soon satisfied myself that what I had learned of spirit-life was true, and that I had only received a single crumb of the great spiritual feast which I have been allowed to partake of since coming over to this side. But my time is up and I must go for this time. Do you remember the time, since I passed over, when you and Capt. William Wilson went out away from Boston a short ways—when I got control of you and talked with Bro. Wilson? I know you will remember the time. When I get time I will be pleased to give you some of my experiences since coming over here. With my very best wishes for yourself and THE BANNER, I am,

Respectfully and fraternally yours,
GEORGE W. MORRILL.

"Mr. Rowley and Dr. Whitney: Permit me to thank you for your kindness in receiving and transcribing what I have written, and I will be still further indebted if you will send this to Bro. Colby.

Very truly yours, G. W. M.

"Friend Colby—After I had your letter sealed up, I sat down to the instrument, and was informed by the operator that some one was present who wished to speak to you. So I read off the communication as given me, and Dr. Whitney copied it strictly verbatim throughout, as you will see from the foregoing. If you wish to make any use of it, do so. I have often wondered why some one did not send you a message before through the instrument.

Very truly yours, W. S. ROWLEY.
Cleveland, O., Jan. 11th, 1888."

Onset Bay Matters.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Onset Bay Grove Association, the following Committees were appointed for 1888:

Standing Committees: On Public Property—Alfred Nash; on Legal Advice—E. Gerry Brown; on Railroads—William D. Crockett; on Temple and Pavilion—Simeon Butterfield; on Cottages and Tents—W. W. Currier; on Police—E. Y. Johnson.

Special Committees—Camp-Meeting: On Camp-Meeting Speakers—William D. Crockett; on Camp-Meeting Privileges—E. Y. Johnson; on Entertaining Speakers—Cyrus Peabody and Mrs. J. P. Ricker; on Music—George Hosmer; on Printing—E. Gerry Brown; on Street Lamps—W. W. Currier; Resident Agent—Benjamin H. Bourne.

We learn from Bro. W. W. Currier that the fury of the storm Jan. 26th, a high tide, and a surging mass of beaking ice-cakes, proved too much for the steamboat wharf at the Grove. The wharf is a complete wreck—the heavy timbers are broken, and in fact the entire landing is nearly destroyed. It is a great loss to the Grove Association, as it will probably cost over $2000 to rebuild the wharf, which it will become necessary to do, in order to accommodate the summer excursionists who visit this favorite resort by water.

To Inquirers.

While we believe the mediums advertising in our columns are reliable, yet we cannot recommend any special medium to any particular person, as the medium who may answer for one investigator may not be able to meet the requirements of another. It is best, therefore, for each investigator to visit such mediums as he may believe possess the power of bringing him into communication with the spirit-world, and judge of their claims for himself.

☞ Now that February is with us, it is a reminder that March follows, and that the 31st of the latter month will be the fortieth anniversary of the advent of Modern Spiritualism, which no doubt will be celebrated as usual all over this vast country. And we would here suggest to the friends everywhere to send THE BANNER reports of their doings for publication in its columns.

☞ At the session of the Massachusetts Legislature last Monday, an order was presented by Mr. McCall, of Winchester, "providing that no person or persons shall fraudulently represent or personate any spirit or deceased person at any séance or religious meeting." This, it is understood, has reference to séances for materialization.

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

BEAUTY AND THE BALLOT.

When beauty of feature, and beauty of stature,
And beauty of character, all are combined
In one lovely woman, his heart is inhuman
Who does not adore her, unless he is blind.
Then who but a demon could say to that woman,
While grufily he stands by her side like a goat;
"Fond creature, you're fervent, and make a good servant,
But, Madam, we cannot permit you to vote!"

Human nature is a great puzzle. The longer we live the more we are convinced that it is unsolvable. Why we particularly think so just now is from the fact that we recently heard a man who professes to be a good and true Spiritualist observe: "What is the use of having friends unless you can use them?" We cannot recognize this sort of policy. It is what embitters life.

Now it has come to pass that some hybrid in Congress is endeavoring to make it appear that the four per cent. bonds are not legal. What next?

A very interesting colloquy was overheard recently in a Brattle-street restaurant between a customer and a pious colored bootblack located there. The gentleman saw him reading the New Testament attentively, and asked him if he knew where God was located.

"Yes, sar, I does know. He's everywhere, sees everything that everybody does."

"According to that," queried the gentleman, "then he must live in hell, as well as in heaven and on the earth."

"I don't know 'bout dat!" said the colored man, after reflecting for some little time upon the subject.

"If what you say is true," replied the gent., "God must be in sheol, as well as elsewhere."

"Go 'way, sar; I does n't want to talk no more to an infidel!"

The advanced thought of the present day is coming to regard all merely sumptuary laws as of doubtful utility. People cannot be legislated into morality or religion. Intelligent and conscientious men differ as to what is consistent with a healthy morality and a pure religion.—Boston Investigator.

A bill prohibiting persons subject to disease from contracting marriage is before the Kentucky Legislature. The ideas of the Spartans are evidently encouraged in Kentucky, by which physical development is of more consequence than sentiment. It ought to become law in every State. Not only physical development would result, but mental as well. What is most needed is quality, not quantity. Then hybrids would in time cease to exist.

Last Sunday was the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Lord Byron. The Athens Byron Club and the students of the University formed the nucleus of a grand procession to the Acropolis, where eulogistic speeches were delivered, and a portrait of the grand poet was publicly crowned with a wreath of flowers. In the evening the Acropolis was illuminated.

THE GREAT CATASTROPHE IN CHINA.—The London Times's correspondent in China says that the number of people drowned by the recent terrible flood cannot be less than a million, and probably is not so high as two. Still a European in Pekin, who, by his relations with the Chinese Government, is in a position to be better informed than any one else, has put the number at seven millions. At the lowest estimate the loss of life is terrible to contemplate. The disaster was caused by the river Hoang Ho changing its course, and this is due to the immense deposits of earth which the stream brings down from the Mongolian plateau.

On New Year's day, 1888, The Times, of London, Eng., celebrated the hundredth anniversary of its establishment.

The press teems just now with tales of cold weather antics in the West; we feel confident that none can far transcend this modest paragraph from an occidental contemporary:

"With the mercury at 37° below at Eagle Rock, Idaho, a locomotive taking water from a tank, the flow of which could not be stopped, was frozen instantly in a bed of ice extending three car lengths and to the tops of the rails."

Association Meeting.

The annual business session of the Directors of the New England Spiritualists' Camp-Meeting Association was held at the Crawford House in Boston, on Saturday, Jan. 28th.

The following was the official representation: Directors, Dr. Joseph Beals (Greenfield, Mass., who is President of the Board); James Wilson (Bridgeport, Conn.); A. T. Pierce (Barrowsville, Mass.); Hon. A. H. Dailey (Brooklyn, N. Y.); Lewis Bartholomew (Philadelphia, Penn.); William H. Rynus (New York); Treasurer, William R. Tice (Brooklyn, N. Y.); Clerk, J. Milton Young (Haverhill, Mass.)

The annual camp meeting at Lake Pleasant will be held July 22d to Sept. 2d inclusive, arrangements for which are being speedily perfected. Hon. A. H. Dailey, of Brooklyn, will give the opening address. Other noted speakers have been engaged. The usual high standard of the order of exercises will be sustained, and the outlook for a most successful summer meeting is very promising. It will be the fifteenth annual convocation.

THE PLANCHETTE MEDIUM.—Our correspondent, A. S. Hayward, writes to announce that since the appearance of his articles regarding "The New Planchette Medium," he has received many letters of inquiry concerning her—in reply to which he would state that she does not give public séances, but only exercises her gift privately in testing the reliability of what planchette writes. She does not at present desire to be known to the public, as her time is necessarily consumed in caring for her family of small children.

☞ The Manhattan Art Co., of New York, have produced in photo-etching a fac simile of the celebrated painting, Christ Before Pilate, by Munckacsy, one of the largest and finest paintings of modern times, and recently sold to a gentleman of Philadelphia for $120,000. The artist was born in 1844, in the fortress of Munkacs, Hungary, and at the age of thirty had astonished the artistic world with his works. Circulars descriptive of the painting and of the photo-etching may be obtained by addressing the publishers, 53 Lafayette Place, New York City.

[Notices for this Department must reach our office by Monday's mail to insure insertion the same week.]

Miss Lucy Barnicoat's lectures this season have been of marked excellence; crowded audiences greeted her inspirational lectures with applause at Portland, Me.; while at Cambridgeport, Mass., and elsewhere she has had good attendance. Her psychometric readings have been readily responded to as truthful. She can be addressed at her office, 175 Tremont street, Boston.

J. Frank Baxter concluded his labors in Troy, N. Y., last Sunday; lectured in Albany, N. Y., Friday, the 27th, and Monday, the 30th; in Glens Falls was announced for Jan. 31st and Feb. 1st; and will fill engagements in Worcester, Mass., the Sundays of the present month. He is open to New England for week evening engagements.

On Jan. 19th Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings gave an entertainment for the patients of the Athens, O., Insane Asylum; on the 20th, one for the patients of the Columbus Asylum; on the 25th she lectured in Ashland, and is now en route for Pittsburgh, Pa., where she lectures during the month of February. March she will spend in a visit to relatives in Detroit, Mich.: April 22d and 29th she speaks in Norwich, Conn. Societies in the New England States wishing her services for the first two Sundays of April or the Sundays of May, or week night lectures during either of these months, will please address P. O., Boston, Mass.

Geo. A. Fuller, M. D., has just closed a most successful lecture engagement of five Sundays in Worcester, Mass. His lectures there have won the hearty appreciation of all who have listened to them. He will lecture in Lynn, Mass., Feb. 5th and 12th, and in Norwich, Conn., the 19th and 26th. Would like engagements for the last Sunday in March and the last two of April. For engagements, address Dover, Mass.

Card from Dr. Smith.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

My letters have heretofore been so numerous through the spring months from parties making inquiry about Excursion Tickets to Lake Pleasant and Queen City Park, that I have decided to put one day in a month in Boston, to receive patients, and be able to answer all questions about excursion rates for the approaching camping season. I am one of the Committee on Transportation for Lake Pleasant, and Queen City Park also, and I am trying to arrange some very cheap excursions from Boston and Lowell, New York and Troy, so that all can have an opportunity to visit these delightful resorts next summer. I shall be at the Crawford House, Boston, Tuesday, Feb. 7th, March 6th, April 3d, and once in four weeks until the camp season opens. Yours very truly,

E. A. SMITH, Pres. Queen City Park.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of

ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work. Cloth, pp. 324. Price $1.25.

Message Department.

Public Free-Circle Meetings

Are held at the BANNER OF LIGHT OFFICE, 9 Bosworth street (formerly Montgomery Place), on TUESDAY AFTERNOON of each week; on which occasion MISS M. T. SHELHAMER will occupy the platform for the purpose of answering such questions as may be brought up for the consideration of the Controlling Intelligence.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock, and services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no egress until the conclusion of the séance, except in case of absolute necessity. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to the BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who may recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of the BANNER must not be addressed to the medium in any case, but to LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 12th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Divine Parent, whose love is ever shining down upon the world, illuming the dark places, whose voice is ever speaking through the gentle ministration of angels unto man, and whose protecting care rests like a mantle over every living thing, we would bless thy name this day; and whether we are bowing beneath the burdens of life, or standing amidst the bright sunshine that joy and pleasure give, we feel that thou dost indeed know what is best. Oh! make the heart of man patient in trial and in sorrow; teach him the lesson of waiting and of forbearance, so that when, through wisdom, what seems to him great blessings are withheld, he may be able to realize the wisdom that keeps from him the pleasure that he could not rightly use.

May those sweet evangels of the truth who walk the earth, not only inspire and illumine the hearts of some of earth's children, but find an altar in every human heart upon which the fire of the spirit shall burn most brightly, and may the incense of noble thought, of pure aspiration, rise unto thee, our Father and our Mother. Most wise and ever-present spirit, we commend to thy keeping the children of earth, and ask that they may be made to see that when they do the best they can they have made themselves acceptable unto thee. Amen.

Mrs. Myra E. Johnson.

Mr. Chairman, I have been permitted, through the great kindness of those who have charge of this meeting, to take control of the medium and send out a few thoughts that have long been in my mind to those who hold me in sweet remembrance, and who have wondered much that I have not before this manifested my presence to them. They forget that something more is required than either their desire or mine, but that some other power must be brought into action before the transmission of thought from the spirit-world to this world is possible.

I used to think, during my long and earnest work in the cause of truth, that investigators understood almost nothing of the law of spirit return and spirit control. They would come into my rooms in the greatest hurry possible—they could n't wait a moment—and they would sit down, their minds filled with transactions in business they had but just completed, and look at me and then at their watch and wonder why I was not in a trance in a minute. Every moment that they were forced to wait was to their minds so much time lost, and why could n't the spirits say what they wished to hear and get through with the business quick as possible; then they would fly away to some other work.

Now this was all contrary to the law of spirit return. The best results can never be obtained in any such manner. Your mind needs to be quiet and calm, your heart filled with earnest aspiration for the light, your spirit should reach out its hands to clasp hands with those you love who have passed on before, and in that state you cannot fail to receive something worth having through every sensitive or medium that you may come in contact with.

The opportunities of return are few; there are few doors open through which the spirits can come and breathe their thoughts; mediums are often tired and worn with their work, and receive small recognition and appreciation from those for whom they do the most. But I am not unmindful of many dear friends, who, all along the pathway of my life, did everything in their power to show me their confidence, their appreciation and love, and these friends made bright, days that otherwise might have been dark indeed.

The change comes to all of us, and so it came to me, in the summer-time, when all the rest of the world were having a pleasant holiday; the spirit called, and I had to answer.

My dear companion, who walks alone and feels as if I had gone out from his life wholly, did everything that he could to make my last days happy. Kind friends rendered every service possible; but when the voice of God calls, the king and the peasant alike must answer, and so I came away from the home I loved, from the husband who loved me, from the friends who trusted me, and from the work to which I had devoted the best years of my life. Time has passed on and the silence has scarcely been broken. I have been unable to make any sign of my presence, though I have often stood by the side of those in whose hearts my memory finds a resting place.

I have come this afternoon, sir, with the idea of sending a message of love to all my friends, and to say to them that many of the sweet things that were told them as from the spirit I know they will realize, and that I have found in the new life a reward for every sacrifice, a return for all the work that I did, and that I am happy and at peace with all the world.

To my dear husband, the companion of my earth-life, I would say that we were together in accord and are still in the same spirit. I shall meet you in the world of light to which your feet are tending; every day draws you nearer to it; you will then understand what it is impossible to explain now. Myra E. Johnson.

Harrington Hinckley.

I suppose an old friend can step in here without inconveniencing anybody. When I was here there was n't a place on the earth that I took so much comfort in as here. I used to look for the days as the children look for Christmas and the Fourth of July; and the paper—the BANNER OF LIGHT—well, I used to read every word of it; someway, the advertisements looked a little different in that paper than in any other. I suppose the way it is when we get old, and pretty nearly worn out, the things we like, we like a heap; they are so few that all the liking goes to 'em. And up there in the "Old Man's Home," where I was the last of it, they could n't appreciate anything that I told 'em about Spiritualism. I thought I'd make myself a kind of a missionary in my own country. The Lord knows there 's need enough.

I made up my mind that if ever I had a chance to come here I'd come, and I'd send a message to good Mother L., and tell her that I bless her for all the kindness she showed to me. They say that blessings do n't amount to much, but when they are all you've got to give, why, you can't do any better.

And the Doctor, he 's as good as gold, and I'd like to have him think that I can come around and see what he 's doing, and what he 's thinking about. I know he has n't forgotten me, but he 's so busy doing other things I could n't expect he'd remember me every day; it would n't be natural; but I never shall forget him, and some time in the future I 'll pay him back in his own coin, for all the goodness he showed to me.

I guess I'd better go, but I want to leave my blessing on this work that you're doing here, and to say that an old man who outlived all of his friends nearly, and who laid his head down to die among comparative strangers, and with the assistance almost of charity, found the pillow softer because of the lessons he had learned here.

They used to call me "Father Hinckley." I guess you have n't forgotten me, Mr. Chairman. I wondered if you would know who it was. Put down H.; that 's for Harrington.

Walton Greene.

Whenever I come near the earth it seems as if I was right back in the water, and although I know I am not, yet the same old chill that I felt when I went away comes over me again and again!

I passed away by drowning in Coes' Pond, in New Worcester, as they call it. I used to live in Worcester. I shall be recognized there by a good many of my friends. I was a constant attendant on the Second Baptist church, but I did n't expect I should die by drowning, simply because I was a Baptist.

I'd like to have my father and mother, my two sisters and my little brother Willie know that I can return from the world to which I have gone, that I mingle with them in all that they have to do, and am constantly at home.

Now I know that they won't believe this perfectly well, for I should not have believed it if any one had come to me when I was here; I should have thought it was too good to be true; but I have learned that the best things in the world are only just good enough to be true; that God, in his infinite wisdom, is not what we have been taught in the church to believe; he is not angry with the wicked every day, but is a great, loving Father, and high and pure and noble angels show us, who have just come to spirit-life, how to live more fully in accordance with his will, and the door has been opened between heaven and earth.

The lessons that we learned in the Bible are true to that time, and we can understand their being true then, because we see the same things happening now. Angels spoke to men and blessed them by revelations of a better life, and angels can speak to day, only the ears of man are so dull he fails to hear the message they would bring. I bless you all at home; I am happy and at peace, and I await your coming.

Tell Frank and Addison that I saw the beautiful flowers they brought, and I have their counterpart here in the spirit, for every bud and blossom told me how much they loved me and how much they mourned my coming away. I have not said much, I know, but later I shall hope to say more.

My name is Walton Greene, of Worcester, Mass.

Mrs. Sarah L. Alden.

Sarah L. Alden, to her husband, Dr. Silas Alden, of Bangor, Me.: Dear husband, I know how much you miss the material presence of both of us who are near to you, and who wish to comfort you all that we can. Since I came to spirit-life I have used every means in my power to assist you all that I could, and to make your path brighter. I know that you have been greatly comforted by the words of encouragement that I have spoken through different ones to you, and I shall not forget in the future to continue to bless you by my presence, and to make you feel that there is another life in which you have a strong and abiding interest.

Warren is here with me, and joins in sending warmest love to you, and I hope you will not forget the promises that you have made to us, but that you will do all in your power to carry them out and to fulfill them. In view of this I shall always endeavor to help you in all ways and to make you prosperous and happy. God bless you until we meet again.

George Johnson.

How strange it seems to move about among people, and yet they cannot see me, nor hear me when I speak. Those whom I love the most I come to, and when I place my hand upon their shoulders, and seek to speak to them, they go on their way all the same, they cannot hear me speak, and do not even know that I am there.

Oh! I cannot tell any one what I have suffered over the sad mistake I made. Some who are in the world, as I was, and who find that it is impossible to get along with the trials that are around about them, will think as I did to end the trials by snapping off the thread of life, and feel that they may find rest the other side the grave, if not on earth. It is a mistake, a great mistake. However hard this world is, if you leave it before your time the duty must be fulfilled. You can't get away from it.

I took my own life, Mr. Chairman; sorrow and misunderstanding disturbed my mind to that degree that I do n't suppose I was fully responsible for what I did, and I can't tell you how I have been held down to my body, chained by a thousand chains to one place, wishing to get away from it, and yet not able to, knowing what I would say, but unable to speak.

Now, those threads have been cut, and I am here, here to send a message to a young lady, whose name I shall not mention, as it will not be necessary, who has watched for a word from me, and whose heart, I know, will be made happy by the message I bring. All is well now. However great the mistake I made on earth, it is clearly seen it has been atoned for, and peace has come as the result. I bless you; I love you; I wait for you.

I passed out in the city of Providence. I was connected for some time with the State's Prison there, and my name is George Johnson.

Only one word, for I see I am in the presence of a number of people who until this moment I did not see; let me say this to you, strangers though you are: do not think to lighten the burdens of your lives by adding another to them; you cannot get away from yourselves, and it is easier to do your work in the world where you belong than to be compelled to come back and do it after you have left the world through your own folly.

Spoke for the following spirits:

George Redman.

Mr. George Redman is here, and he says: "I have just taken up my work on the earth again; I have found a medium through whom I can prosecute my labors in a stronger and better way than they were carried on when I was here even. I am going to devote my attention to this work, and I hope that nothing will happen to disturb his mind in the least degree. It takes a long time to do all that needs to be done, and he may get discouraged before it is accomplished. My brother, with whom I am to be closely associated, do n't turn back; have courage, and you and I will win. You are progressing."

Frankie Plumb.

Here comes a spirit who gives me the name of Frankie Plumb, of Streator, Ill. He wishes to send his love to his father and his mother. He says: "My father's name is Ralph. I am often there, and they will receive shortly after this another demonstration of my presence. I come now to answer a wish, long ago expressed, but which could not be fulfilled until now. Geraldine and Eliza are here, and they send their love also."

Lizzie Hatch.

A very beautiful spirit, Lizzie Hatch, reaches out her hand to me, and hands me some flowers, which she would like to give to a friend, but cannot. She says: "Please send my love to a lady friend of mine in this city, and say that I have not forgotten the pleasant hours we have passed together. I am often with her now, and have tried to make her realize the fact. I am sorry that the thread of connection has been even temporarily broken, but I suppose there must be a wise purpose in it, although I should myself have rather had it continued. My father I can often visit, and I do; therefore I only send my love to him; but to this friend I send a message, because we have had much pleasure and happiness together."

Right after this, please report that White Feather says: "Give my love to my darling, also."

Andrew Coburn.

A spirit comes who gives the name of Andrew Coburn, and reaches over to some one in the hall, pretty well down. This spirit seems to be quite disturbed, not over what has been done on the earth, but on account of the manner in which he passed away. He, with the others of the family, is present, and he wishes to recognize an old friendly acquaintance, though he hardly thought it would be in this manner.

To the same lady comes a very beautiful, illumined spirit, who reaches out a hand that seems to be filled with silvery light, and utters these words: "Earth is the scene of transitory pleasure. There is born to every heart a love that surpasses understanding, and may not find its full fruition in this stage of life; but in the world of spirit, by the law of attraction, hearts separated are at last joined together." The initial B. is put after that.

Mrs. Mettler.

A lady comes who gives the name of Mrs. Mettler. She says: "I would like to send a message to my friends in Connecticut. Tell them I am more than delighted to find that the work is going forward. In the early days it seemed as if I was about the only one who introduced these ideas there; but since then—as birds carry seeds over the land—these thoughts have sprung up in the hearts of many, until laborers are numerous in this field of thought.

I hope that my friends in Hartford, in Willimantic, in New Haven and other places, will never weary of well doing, but be ready to make sacrifices, if necessary, knowing that he who sows the seed of truth is doing the work of heaven—and that always pays in the end."

Mrs. Frank Warden.

Mrs. Frank Warden of New York City: "I shall not send a particular message to my family, as it will not be pleasing for them to receive it in this manner. I regret much that I have not more opportunity of communicating with them, but I suppose it is best as it is, for if they wished to hear from me they would find a way for me to come. I have sent them several messages in a manner that I thought would attract their attention better than if I had come simply through their seeking me. I see the change that has come to George. I am often with my sister and all the others, but what I have really come for to-day is to send a message to another friend who is strongly mediumistic and is impressed to write through the one I have written, to ask her if she will not kindly send what I write, instead of laying it aside for fear of what would be said about it. Do n't pay any attention to what may happen, but just send the message; I know that, though they may treat it carelessly for the moment, it will have its effect. It makes me feel so disappointed to write and arrange something, and then to have it laid aside.

To Mrs. Hunting, for whom I have a very deep regard, I send my warmest love. She is a sister to me. I shall sometime be able to return her great kindness to me during my last days on earth. Father is with me, free from pain, and happy."

F. G. Littlefield.

F. G. Littlefield says: "The race of my life was run, and I came away at a time when everything was arranged here to receive me. It was hard to leave my dear wife. I knew how much she would miss me, and how lonely it would seem, but the angels were very kind to me, for they brought the spiritual sight to my sick bed, and I was able to see them for days before I became one of their number. As I was lying there, waiting for the summons, I could see old familiar faces, one by one, like so many clouds in the sky, march slowly before me, look into my face, smile kindly upon me, and say, 'It will all be right soon.' Everything was done for me that could be done. I cannot think of anything that love could suggest but what was done. I wish to say that I am happy, and bless them for all their kindness; heaven, or the spirit-world, whichever name you may choose to call it, is so much more beautiful than the earth we are reconciled at being separated for a time, knowing that those we really love are to join us, and enjoy the same life. There is nothing here in spirit-life to quarrel about; each one goes on his way, and everybody minds his own business—consequently we are happy."

Georgie.

A little spirit gives the name of Georgie. He speaks to a gentleman in the audience: "I can see you, and I want to send my love to my papa and my mamma, and to say that we are all here to day; and I have been sitting right beside you all the time, keeping still until my turn should come."

Benediction.

May the blessing of the spirit-world rest upon you all; may you learn to overcome your differences; may you remember that the good of all is the only thing to work for, and walk together, hand in hand, through this world, knowing that a harmonious life on earth prepares you for the beauties of the spirit life. Winona.

February Magazines.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.—The subject of a very fine frontispiece is "Mariamne," queen of Herod the Great, falsely and treacherously accused of infidelity by Salome, her sister-in-law, and betrayed by her mother, Alexandra. It is from a painting by J. W. Waterhouse, A. R. A., and shows us Mariamne at the supreme moment of condemnation. The haughty queen, casting a look of mingled scorn, pity and reproach at her vacillating husband, himself the greater criminal, is a commanding and beautiful figure, contrasting strongly with that of Salome. Prof. Ruskin is the author of "The Black Arts; A Reverie in the Strand," and Richard Heath of an interesting paper upon "The Portraits of Napoleon the First," with engravings of several of them by Greuze, Guérin, David, and Eastlake. A full-page size portrait is given of Louis Pasteur, from the bust by Dubois. An interesting sketch is given of Gerard Terburg, a celebrated Dutch painter, with four illustrations. This month's issue fully sustains the high reputation this magazine has acquired among artists. New York: Cassell & Co.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.—Dense forests, gloomy cañons, steep precipices, and narrow ledges where a misstep is instant death, are tracked by the reader as he follows C. F. Holder in his thrilling descriptive narrative of "The Heart of the Sierra Madre," in Southern California. Engravings are given in illustration of the text. Rose Eytinge in "A Moslem Mystery" relates an incident that came under her observation, showing the character of the secrets known only to the chief eunuch of the Sultan of Turkey, who died a few months since in Constantinople, and it is said "carried more secrets to the grave than any other man." Mr. Rideing gives the last of his papers on "Boston Artists and Their Studios." An interesting reminiscence of American invention is given in a sketch of one of the first railways in this country by C. H. Roberts. Some of the results of a Government exploration of Hudson's Bay are described by J. M. Oxley in "The Inland Ocean of the North." "The Army Mule," "The Raid on Cagger's Cove," "The Witchery of Ice and Hoar-Frost," with other articles in prose and verse, complete the number. New York: The American Magazine Publishing Company.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE.—A new serial story, prospectively of deep interest, is commenced by J. B. Harwood, entitled "What the Coral Reefs Gave Me," and new chapters are given of "Monica," and "By Misadventure." Much valuable instruction is given in "Why Am I Getting Bald?" "In Case of Accidents," "Sentimental Cookery," "How I Nursed My Brother Back to Health," etc., and an interesting record is given of new inventions and discoveries in "The Gatherer." New York: Cassell & Co.

OUR LITTLE ONES.—A seasonable poem and a charming picture as frontispiece, both entitled "My Valentine," lead a variety of contents that will please the young patrons of this monthly. "The Milkman's Horse," "Seven Little Pigeons," "The Snow Castle," and a dozen other sketches, with twice that number of pictures, are its attractions. Boston: Russell Pub. Co.

There is a floor-walker in one of the large dry goods stores in this city whose great toes point toward each other in the most friendly manner. "What will you have, madam?" said he to an Irish woman who was looking helplessly around. "Calico." "Walk this way." "Walk that way, is it? Sure I'd have ye to know, sur, that I could n't walk that way if you 'd give me the whole sture."—Metropolitan.

The Reviewer.

"Mental Cure."

Colby & Rich have just issued the ninth edition of the above named book by REV. W. F. EVANS.

This treatise illustrates the power of mind over mind and disease in a masterly manner, also the psychological mode of treatment, which is adapted to all modes of medical practice, whether Allopathic, Homeopathic, Eclectic, Botanic or otherwise. It answers a demand that is very apparent at the present time, when speculative theories of the widest range and most divergent nature are being promulgated, touching the eradication of disease. This valuable book meets the demand of the patient as well as the practitioner—also of those entertaining various views as to psychology, magnetism and kindred subjects relative to the subtle forces in nature and human beings.

The work was written at a time (1869) when but few minds had taken thought in this direction, and it covers the ground as no other work has done, unless such has embraced similar views to those therein entertained.

The book contains 367 pages. Price $1.50, 10 cents extra when sent by mail.

A correspondent, "Vindex," writing of this book presents the following argument in its favor, from the spiritualistic standpoint:

"The treatise has none of the objectionable statements—that are directly opposed or antagonistic to the philosophy of Spiritualism—which are so common in the majority of the other works in this direction. The work was at one time in the control of the Swedenborgian order, as the author was then with that denomination in thought and action; but the straightlaced officials therein said it bordered upon Spiritualism too much for them, and hence they did not approve of it. Still many of that order purchased it: one Swedenborgian physician in Charlestown gave a large number of the books to his patients, he considering that there was much in the treatise that would aid and assist the invalid to overcome his disease, and thereby help the medicine to do a better work.

At this time, when all the different wings of Christian Scientists or metaphysicans are contending over non-essentials, it seems 'providential' that there is one book before the public which has stood the test of able criticism in the line of mental philosophy, and does not 'go back on' its own philosophy.

Spiritualists can recommend it with consistency, as it is in harmony with rational Spiritualism, and does not ignore the aid of individualized spirits even if there is an overruling spirit at the helm.

I know of no other book devoted to the philosophy of mind over mind and disease—except this one—which is published by a Spiritual Publishing House.

This treatise is a common-sense reasonable production from an inspired thinker, who admits the communion of the denizens of earth and spirit spheres to be a fact in the nature of things; all other works of this character to the best of my knowledge either avoid this issue or ignore and condemn it; and their adherents confine themselves principally to teaching classes in the philosophy.

It may be noted in passing that in the list of publications advertised by the Christian Scientists, no mention is made of this, the oldest and most rational treatise upon the subject; and doubtless this is on the ground that the work follows to a certain extent the line of thought that Spiritualists have embraced for the past forty years, also its being issued by a Spiritualistic Publishing House. These peculiar scientists wish to be identified with Spiritualists only so far as to make use of them to spread their nonsensical 'no disease theory,' etc. Spiritualists generally recognize that the mind largely affects the body, also vice versa—but that all disease is simply 'mortal error,' or the result of imagination in the mind of the supposed sick person, is in their opinion a simply ridiculous proposition, wholly unworthy of serious consideration.

The mind of the individual, properly exercised, as illustrated in Evans's Mental Cure book, will do much to eradicate disease already established, also will assist to ward off the same; but it will not destroy disease itself from the face of the earth, neither will metaphysics, or so called Christian Science—notwithstanding the teachers of these systems make such 'loud' prophecies.

The Spiritualists have the only rational solution of mind or mental cure that harmonizes the past history with the present, and it is sheer folly for them to 'sell out' their birthright for popularity, fame, or the almighty dollar."

THE HEATHEN'S LAMENT.

Oh! my heart is grieving sadly over news received to-day—
It came by ocean cable to the shores of old Cathay:
At a far-off mission meeting, with most Christian wisdom crammed,
It 's been settled that our fathers are irrevocably damned.

To the Christian New Jerusalem, with radiant streets of gold,
There 's no entrance for the heathen without Jesus, we are told;
And though our fathers never heard of any such a man,
That cannot change the working of the everlasting plan.

Now we 're not so very captious, only ignorant and weak;
We would gladly be converted, we are teachable and meek;
But, because a man 's a Hindu, it does n't follow as a rule
He must therefore be considered an unmitigated fool.

So when a missionary of the gospel came to tell
If we did n't come to Jesus we must surely go to hell,
Old Rabjarkee rose and asked him, if a man had died in sin,
Never hearing of the Savior, so 's to get a passport in,

And then if, somewhat later, without favor of the board,
He somehow got a tardy introduction to the Lord—
If he then with joy accepted him, and for his sins repented,
Might his future not be brighter than the board had represented?

The preacher felt at once the point that pierced his dark-skinned brother;
His heathen soul was troubled—he was thinking of his mother!
So he told him how the prodigal was welcomed at the door,
Without the slightest question why he had 'n t come before.

And the poor old man was comforted, the tears stood in his eyes;
He grasped the missionary's hand and said in glad surprise,
"I believe in God the Father ever willing to forgive;
I will henceforth love and worship him so long as I may live."

But it seems that missionary made a terrible mistake,
And is no more counted worthy the bread of life to break;
So the board has called him back and forbidden him to preach
E'en the possible forgiveness that he thinks the gospels teach.

So our hearts are sadly grieving o'er the news received to-day—
The news that came by cable to the shores of old Cathay,
That hereafter, to be valid, every pardon of the Lord
Must be countersigned by Secretary Alden of the board.

And we weep, for our dilemma is as bad as bad can be;
But—if heaven is only open to the scribe and pharisee,
Since the company 's so much better, though the climate 's not so well,
With our fathers and our mothers we would rather go to——Sheol!

Cremation as the Ancients Knew It.

(Condensed from Chapter VIII. of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's "Last Days of Pompeii.")

Sorrow and Death were in the house of Ione. It was the night preceding the morn in which the solemn funeral rites were to be decreed to the remains of the murdered Apœcides. The corpse had been removed from the temple of Isis to the house of the nearest surviving relative. The vast and absorbing importance attached by the ancients to the performance of every ceremonial connected with the death of a relation had as yet confined her woe to the chamber of the deceased. It was hers to close the straining eyes, the distorted lips of her deceased brother; to watch by the consecrated clay as, fresh bathed and anointed, it lay in festive robes upon the ivory bed; to strew the couch with leaves and flowers, and to renew the solemn cypress-branch at the threshold of the door. It was among the loveliest customs of the ancients to bury the young at the morning twilight; for, as they strove to give the softest interpretation to death, so they poetically imagined that Aurora, who loved the young, had stolen them to her embrace.

The stars were fading one by one from the gray heavens, and night slowly receding before the approach of morn, when a dark group stood motionless before Ione's door. High and slender torches, made paler by the unmellowed dawn, cast their light over various countenances, hushed for the moment in one solemn and intent expression. And now there arose a slow and dismal music, which accorded sadly with the rite, and floated far along the desolate and breathless streets; while a chorus of female voices (the Præficæ so often cited by the Roman poets), accompanying the Tibicen and the Mysian flute, woke the funeral strain.

As the hymn died away the group parted in twain; and placed upon a couch, spread with a purple pall, the corpse of Apœcides was carried forth, with the feet foremost. The designator, or marshal of the sombre ceremonial, accompanied by his torch-bearers, clad in black, gave the signal, and the procession moved on.

First went the musicians, playing a slow march—the solemnity of the lower instruments broken by many a louder and wilder burst of the funeral trumpet; next followed the hired mourners, chanting their dirges to the dead; and the female voices were mingled with those of boys, whose tender years made still more striking the contrast of life and death—the fresh leaf and the withered one.

The priests of Isis came next in their snowy garments, barefooted, and supporting sheaves of corn; while before the corpse were carried the images of the deceased and his many Athenian forefathers. And behind the bier followed, amidst her women, the sole surviving relative of the dead, her head bare, her locks dishevelled, her face paler than marble, but composed and still, save ever and anon, as some tender thought, awakened by the music, flashed upon the dark lethargy of woe, she covered that countenance with her hands and sobbed unseen; for hers were not the noisy sorrow, the shrill lament, the ungoverned gesture, which characterized those who honored less faithfully. In that age, as in all, the channel of deep grief flowed hushed and still.

And so the procession swept on, till it had traversed the streets, passed the city gate, and gained the Place of Tombs without the wall, which the traveler yet beholds.

Raised in the form of an altar—of unpolished pine, amidst whose interstices were placed preparations of combustible matter—stood the funeral pyre; and around it drooped the dark and gloomy cypresses so consecrated by song to the tomb.

As soon as the bier was placed upon the pile, the attendants parting on either side, Ione passed up to the couch, and stood before the unconscious clay for some moments motionless and silent. The features of the dead had been composed from the first agonized expression of violent death. Hushed forever the terror and the doubt, the contest of passion, the awe of religion, the struggle of the past and present, the hope and the horror of the future!—of all that racked and desolated the breast of that young aspirant to the Holy of Life, what trace was visible in the awful serenity of that impenetrable brow and unbreathing lip? The sister gazed, and not a sound was heard amidst the crowd; there was something terrible, yet softening, also, in the silence; and when it broke, it broke sudden and abrupt—it broke with a loud and passionate cry—the vent of long-smothered despair.

"My brother! my brother!" cried the poor orphan, falling upon the couch; "thou whom the worm on thy path feared not—what enemy couldst thou provoke? Oh, is it in truth come to this? Awake! awake! We grew together! Are we thus torn asunder? Thou art not dead—thou sleepest. Awake! awake!"

The sound of her piercing voice aroused the sympathy of the mourners, and they broke into loud and rude lament. This startled, this recalled Ione; she looked up hastily and confusedly, as if for the first time sensible of the presence of those around.

"Ah!" she murmured with a shiver, "we are not, then, alone!"

With that, after a brief pause, she rose; and her pale and beautiful countenance was again composed and rigid. With fond and trembling hands she unclosed the lids of the deceased; but when the dull glazed eye, no longer beaming with love and life, met hers, she shrieked aloud, as if she had seen a spectre. Once more recovering herself, she kissed again and again the lids, the lips, the brow; and with mechanic and unconscious hand received from the high-priest of her brother's temple the funeral torch.

The sudden burst of music, the sudden song of the mourners, announced the birth of the sanctifying flame.

Swing, swing the censer round—
Tune the strings to a softer sound!
From the chains of thy earthly toil,
From the clasp of thy mortal coil,
From the prison where clay confined thee,
The hands of the flame unbind thee!
Oh, soul! thou art free—all free!

Thy steps evermore shall rove
Through the glades of the happy grove
Where, far from the loath'd Cocytus,
The loved and the lost invite us.
Thou art slave to the earth no more!
Oh, soul! thou art freed! and we?
Ah, when shall our toil be o'er?
Ah! when shall we rest with thee?

And now high and far into the dawning skies broke the fragrant fire; it flashed luminously across the gloomy cypresses—it shot above the massive walls of the neighboring city; and the early fishermen started to behold the blaze reddening on the waves of the creeping sea.

But Ione sat down apart and alone, and, leaning her face upon her hands, saw not the flame nor heard the lamentation of the music; she felt only one sense of loneliness—she had not yet arrived to that hallowing sense of comfort when we know that we are not alone—that the dead are with us!

The breeze rapidly aided the effect of the combustibles placed within the pile. By degrees the flame wavered, lowered, dimmed, and slowly, by fits and unequal starts, died away—emblem of life itself; where, just before, all was restlessness and flame, now lay the dull and smouldering ashes.

The last sparks were extinguished by the attendants—the embers were collected. Steeped in the rarest wine and the costliest odors, the remains were placed in a silver urn, which was solemnly stored in one of the neighboring sepulchres beside the road....

But first they paused to utter weepingly and many times the affecting farewell, "Salve Eternum!"

"If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?"

The world-wide reputation of Prof. Alfred R. Wallace as one in the foremost ranks of scientists imparts an added strength and value to the clear elucidation and masterly advocacy of the truths of Spiritualism given by him in his lecture having for its theme "If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?" published in a pamphlet of twenty-four pages by Colby & Rich, and supplied at the very low rate of 5 cents a single copy, thirteen for 50 cents, or thirty for $1,00. Let it do its work; buy it and circulate it.

MAGNETIC INSOLES

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to overestimate the value of warm feet at this season of the year. THOUSANDS OF VALUABLE LIVES are sacrificed every year in consequence of DAMP, COLD FEET. Cold feet lay the foundation for PULMONARY DISEASES, so fatal to the people of our land. Could we make the world know how valuable OUR MAGNETIC FOOT BATTERIES are for keeping up a WARM GENIAL GLOW THROUGH THE FEET AND LIMBS, none would be without them. These INSOLES WARM THE WHOLE BODY, keep the VITAL FORCES UP, magnetize the iron in the blood, and cause a FEELING OF WARMTH AND COMFORT over the whole body. If no other result was produced than to insulate the body from the wet, cold earth, the INSOLES WOULD BE INVALUABLE. In many cases the INSOLES ALONE will cure RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA and SWELLING OF THE LIMBS. $1 a pair or three pairs for $2 to any address by mail. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are often cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

ZÖLLNER.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO

PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,

Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.

BY C. C. MASSEY,

Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—The spirit-guides of Miss M. T. Shelhamer lectured in this place on Sunday, Jan. 29th, upon the subject: "The Chill of Death and the Sacred Flame of Life." The speaker opened the discourse by remarking:

"All stagnation and sterility, all that is inactive and insensate, typifies death; while all that is sentient, active and fertile signifies life. Coldness, frost and chill betoken the work of that spirit of disorganization known as death; while warmth, vigor and potential energy, wherever manifested, reveal the presence of life."

Then followed a beautiful word-picture of an artist who prayed for the power not only to depict the ideal of his soul upon canvas, but to endow that ideal with the fire of life and the potency of active expression. At last, after coming in contact with a wonderful being of another world, and in visions beholding the grandeur of that angel-shape, it seemed as though the artist had gained the power he sought, and, seizing brush and palette, he worked with no thought of time and no sensation of weariness, until the canvas bore the representation of a lovely form replete with grace, and with a face full of the fire of expression and the manifestation of thought. But in the hour when his triumph seemed complete, the artist found that the creation of his brush could not respond intelligently to his own mind, and he bowed in sorrow until the angel of his vision returned and whispered: "There is none but God who can create and endow with life. Man may emulate, aspire and seek to copy the works of the Divine, but God alone can breathe the vital breath into the form of clay and give it life." The artist, humiliated and despairing, ignoring the purpose and usefulness of his lovely picture in educational and uplifting ways to man, seized his brush and with a few strokes blotted the figure from the canvas.

Again the speaker pictured a carver in stone who beheld the ideal of his soul starting out in a shapeless block of marble, and as he worked with chisel and mallet he prayed for power to endow the image with the fire of immortal life. The sculptor was visited in a dream by the Angel of Existence, who gave to him a bit of crystal, bidding him smite it with his hammer and imbed the talisman within the stony breast of his marble image. The man awoke, and lo! a bit of crystal fell at his feet. Smiting it the rock parted, disclosing a tiny heart of gold with a central eye of electric fire. This he imbedded in the breast of his statue, when the image started as with life, moved, and was endowed with speech. Five years the creator kept his lovely creation, finding companionship and joy in its presence. But the living image wearied of the world and longed to return to its former state. The sculptor could not take away the heart of living flame until once more the Angel of Existence appeared, and at her touch the electric ray was withdrawn from the golden heart and the image was no more.

Life is the golden flame that streameth downward from the great Eternal Sun, vivifying and animating the spirit of man. When withdrawn from the corporeal frame it is not extinguished; but by its contact with the external things of time, its powers combined with those of the body it has warmed and quickened, the immortal spirit is nurtured which shall serve as its organ of intelligent expression through all the ages to come.

Though death may seem to be the sum of all stagnation and senselessness, yet it is only one of the beautiful processes of life, which transforms the atoms and molecules of the organic form into new creations of utility and beauty, and which brings the immortal spirit of man under the operation of new conditions favorable to his everlasting growth and unfoldment: being the motive power, in the fullness of time, of converting the man or woman into an angel of knowledge and wisdom.

The organ recitals of Mr. Truette, and the vocal selections of Mrs. Austin C. Wellington, were finely rendered on this occasion.

On Sunday next, Feb. 5th, there will be the usual monthly service of song at the Temple, and a most enjoyable time may be anticipated by those who wish to attend. ☞

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, Lyceum Hall, and Ladies' Aid Parlors.—The celebration of the Anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was a grand success last Sunday. Many who have been earnest defenders of the truths of Spiritualism, and done efficient service for the cause, honored us with their presence, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, Bridgeport Conn.; William R. Tice, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. Butterfield and wife, of Chelsea; Mrs. Ann E. Blinn, Mr. Benjamin P. Weaver and wife, Miss Annie L. Clark, Hon. Warren Chase, Dr. Richardson, A. A. Wheelock, Dr. Paxson and Jacob Edson.

A large audience assembled in the Lyceum Hall at 2:30, and listened to a grand oration by Hon. Warren Chase: "The pen of Thomas Paine did as much to emancipate this country as did the sword of Washington. Paine protested against the tyranny of his time. Creeds backed by a power at Rome, a union of Church and State, had caused death, torture and anguish. If ever there was an inspired person Thomas Paine was inspired. Why in Europe should the blood that flows through royal veins be more precious than that of the common laborers? Why should the Church and State unite to support in ignorance, indolence and luxury such persons? How gladly the Pope acknowledges the congratulations of the President of the United States. Why is the new Catholic institution to be builded at Washington, if not for the future home of a Pope in America? What this country needs is another Thomas Paine. Beware of the Parochial School system. The Public Schools must and shall be sustained. We must speak, act, vote upon these vital questions upon which the foundation of our free government rests. The religion of Thomas Paine, how grand! how sublime! His heart beat quick in the interest of the people."

A brief sketch does not do justice to the speaker; he received round after round of applause, and was congratulated by nearly all the audience at the close of his masterly effort.

At six o'clock dinner was served in the Ladies' Aid Parlors, which presented a beautiful appearance when the happy throng gathered around the tables. Plates had been laid for one hundred persons, but all who desired supper were unable to secure seats, so that the tables were again replenished and about fifty more admitted. At 7:30 Lyceum Hall contained the largest audience assembled there since its dedication. Fine music was rendered by Mr. Milligan, Mrs. Wentworth, Mrs. Edwards, Miss Woodbridge and others.

President J. H. Lewis said, in opening the meeting, he rejoiced that so many people had assembled upon this occasion to do honor to the memory of Thomas Paine and other noble heroes who in times past have prepared the way for our reform. He introduced Hon. Warren Chase, who received quite an ovation. He said: "Your applause is quite fitting at this time, for the reason that my earthly pilgrimage is about over. I have eulogized Thomas Paine, and choose to speak at this time of the scientific truths of Spiritualism and the utter impossibility of the so-called intellectual and cultured to annihilate it." His address was listened to with marked attention.

Mr. A. A. Wheelock spoke in eulogistic terms of Thomas Paine, as did also Dr. Richardson, Dr. Paxson, and Jacob Edson; Miss Nettie Morris gave several fine readings; Francis B. Woodbury, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, returned his thanks and those of the members of the Association to all who had assisted to make this demonstration a success, and in behalf of the Association, presented Benjamin P. Weaver and his bride with a beautiful floral offering, thanking Mr. W. especially for his earnest efforts in behalf of the children. The spirit control of Mrs. Loomis-Hall spoke earnest words of advice to the newly wedded pair. Mr. Weaver, in behalf of himself and wife, returned sincere thanks, and desired that should he live to be the age of Warren Chase, he may have accomplished as much work for the cause as our honored, venerable friend. All joined in singing "Home, Sweet Home," and after a social time returned to their several homes, having truly honored the memory of the author hero of the American Revolution.

Committee who had charge of arrangements: F. B. Woodbury, Chairman; Mr. and Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Hannah Tower, Mrs. J. H. Lewis, Mr. Foster Edwards, Mr. William Vaughn, Mrs. Smith, Miss White, Mrs. Gott, Mrs. Turner, Mr. F. Gould, Miss Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. W. Jones, Mrs. Russell.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, after congregational singing, an invocation by Mrs. R. S. Lillie and a song by Mr. Lillie, the guides of Mrs. Lillie spoke upon "Charity," remarking that they believed the word to be a sufficient creed for any body of Spiritualists. "We need an organization by which to systematize our charities and care for and protect our exhausted mediums, those who have exercised their spiritual gifts until disabled through their labors, or by the infirmities of old age. There should be homes for such. Those who have means should build homes for the aged and care for the homeless. You ask, Are they worthy? If they are cold and hungry, it makes them worthy of help, and Charity is the saviour of mankind. Hand in hand with Love, it cures every ill a man is heir to." The question "What is truth?" was replied to in an eloquent and very satisfactory manner, and that problem of all ages solved so far as possible to the comprehension of mortals. Mr. Lillie closed with a song, "Cast thy Bread upon the Waters."

Evening.—After the usual preliminary exercises Mrs. Lillie, under the influence of her guides, spoke upon several questions handed in. The first, "What Comfort is there in Spiritualism?" elicited responses from them, in which the leading instructive, consolatory and beneficial results of Spiritualism were portrayed with great clearness, and an evident appreciation of the spiritual needs of the audience. A question relating to the gifts of the spirit was ably dealt with. "You all," said the inspiring intelligence, "possess spiritual gifts; cultivate them by application and study, the same as you would apply yourself to music. Study yourselves spiritually; you must subjugate the lower faculties if you would progress higher. Be watchful of false habits; become conqueror, and you will grow strong. Listen to the voice of the soul prompting to higher action, and you will not be led astray. Life is progressive. Death is not a limit to your advancement, for in the spirit-world are kind teachers, and opportunities to attain that you have desired but failed to receive upon earth."

Mr. Lillie sang a closing hymn.

Mrs. Lillie will speak in Berkeley Hall next Sunday; morning at 10:30, evening at 7 o'clock.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

The First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society.—During the past year the Society has met every Friday except those included in the summer vacation. The work of the year has not been attended by any marked results. Our beautiful observance of devoting one day of the year to the memory of the sister and brother members whose names are enrolled upon a whiter and purer scroll than ours, but who are happier for our remembrance, was one that will long be recollected by those who participated in its exercises. [A tribute of respectful memory to those who have passed to spirit-life since the last observance is here given by the Secretary, which we prefer to print in full next week, rather than attempt its condensation for this issue.—ED.]

At the annual meeting of this Society held the first Friday in January, the following ladies were elected to the several offices: President, Mrs. A. E. Blinn; Vice President, Mrs. A. F. Butterfield; Treasurer, Mrs. Ada H. Simmons; Secretary, Mrs. Alice P. Torrey. Active measures are now under way to hold a Fair in the early spring. The interest of the members is unabated, and the meetings of the new year have been very well attended.

ALICE P. TORREY, Sec'y.

A large company of the members and friends of this Society were present at the last Friday meeting. Mrs. Ann E. Blinn presided in her pleasant way, making every one feel at home, and that they had an interest in the welfare of the society. Supper was served to about seventy-five persons, and the evening was devoted to social conversation and singing "songs of ye olden tyme." The society received a donation of twenty-five dollars from a prominent Spiritualist, and smaller sums from several other sources, so that the receipts of the day were quite large. This is as it should be.

Friday evening, Feb. 10th, in the Lyceum Hall and Ladies' Aid Parlor is to be held an Old Folks' Supper and Dance. Supper will no doubt be of the New England pattern. Dancing from eight to twelve, Richard Laundry, floor manager. A Fair in aid of this society will be held March 14th, 15th and 16th, afternoons and evenings. REPORTER.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—At the morning session Mr. Eben Cobb opened with an eloquent address upon "The City Just Over the Hill." Tests and readings were given by Miss Peabody, Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant and Dr. Thomas. Dr. W. S. Eldridge gave some very remarkable tests of spirit-presence and diagnoses of disease. Face-readings were also given by Miss S. E. Cullen, that were correct.

Afternoon.—Mr. Cobb spoke upon "A change of heart and its practical bearings upon Spiritualism." Readings and tests were given by Mrs. Conant and Mrs. J. D. Bruce. Mrs. W. A. Rich gave a poetical recitation which was well received. Dr. Eldridge gave some very interesting exhibitions of his powers as a mesmerist; Miss Cullen gave some remarkable readings of character; Dr. E. H. Mathews spoke and gave delineations of character from several articles.

At the evening session C. P. Longley's "When the Dear Ones Gather at Home" was finely rendered by Mrs. Eudora Case, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain.

Mr. Cobb spoke in explanation of the manner in which different mediums are controlled. Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant gave some fine readings and tests. Mrs. J. D. Bruce cited the name of Edward Jackson, who desired recognition, and also gave tests of spirit presence. Dr. Eldridge gave tests, and diagnoses of disease. "Winona," the interesting control of Miss Peabody, gave some readings, that were recognized. Dr. C. H. Harding made practical remarks, followed by psychometric readings of character. Miss Curtis gave a recitation. HEATH.

Children's Progressive Lyceum—Paine Hall.—The writer was, on account of other duties, unable to attend the session of last Sunday, but is informed that a large company of adults and children were present. Readings, recitations and music were given by Lottie Giles, Eva Rosenthal, Jessie Bennier, Mamie Barbier, Alice Cummings, Jessie Judkins, Bertie Blinn, Eva Morrison, Mary Lechenstein, Josie Smith, Mark Abrams and Flossie Sargent.

Mr. A. A. Wheelock delivered an eloquent address.

The Lyceum Socials at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street, on Wednesday evenings, are well attended. Supper is served at six; price fifteen cents. Free meetings are held in the evening; these have recently been addressed by Mr. L. L. Whitlock, Mrs. Ida Whitlock, and Mrs. Abbie N. Burnham. Mrs. W. S. Butler presides, and often makes an address and gives tests. Dancing is indulged in by all, both old and young, until about eleven o'clock. Come and enjoy these social occasions with us. F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

Independent Club, 1031 Washington Street.—The hall was crowded with an interested audience, who followed with deep attention an illustrated lecture upon Spiritualism delivered by Dr. B. M. Lawence of New York. This lecture was of special interest to Spiritualists, as it showed all the various forms of manifestation as only the stereopticon can; while the explanations were appropriate and interesting.

Miss Gracie Scales sang very sweetly, and Dr. Smith favored the audience with timely and interesting remarks.

The Grand Master, Mr. J. W. Fletcher, announced for next Monday evening a reception to Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Weaver of the Lyceum, for which a special programme has been prepared, and to which all are cordially invited.

On Thursday afternoon, at three o'clock, Mr. Fletcher will give a public séance for the higher teaching and communication. All seats free.

Any one wishing to join us can forward their name to the Secretary. Remember that our motto is "Speak no evil." MRS. J. W. FLETCHER, Sec'y.

The Ladies' Industrial Society held its regular meeting Jan. 24th. After the business meeting in the afternoon a circle was formed, and Mrs. H. W. Cushman, the well-known musical medium, under control, gave personal tests of spirit presence, and eight dollars were given her from the Society.

The exercises of the evening consisted of remarks by Mr. Jacob Edson, Dr. N. P. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Whitlock, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, Capt. Richard Holmes, Mrs. H. S. Lake (inspirational), and Dr. E. H. Mathews; vocal music by Mr. J. T. Lillie, and instrumental (piano) by Maudie G. Banks and Willie Boyce; psychometric readings by Dr. Mathews, and tests of spirit presence by Miss Gertie Coffin, all of which were highly interesting and instructive. After singing by all present the audience dispersed.

Twenty-one names were added to the list of members, making a total of ninety-five.

The next regular meeting, at which supper will be served at six o'clock, will be held on the afternoon and evening of Feb. 7th. All are invited.

MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown.—The Echo Spiritualists' meeting was held at this hall on Sunday last, W. A. Hale, Chairman. The morning services comprised singing by Mrs. Mandey, an address by Chairman, and tests and spirit descriptions by Mrs. J. H. Davis, Miss Nettie H. Holt and Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas.

At the evening session an invocation by the Chairman was followed by C. M. A. Twitchell in a short lecture on the advanced ideas of Spiritualism; and by remarks, tests and character readings, in which Miss Nettie M. Holt, Mr. Forhald, Miss Cullen, Mrs. J. E. Davis and Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas participated.

W. A. HALE.

A Pleasant Occasion.

About fifty members of the Boston Spiritual Temple Society of Berkeley Hall met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lillie, on Wednesday afternoon and evening, Jan. 25th. After a season of social converse, at 7 o'clock the friends were invited to partake of a generous collation, which was duly appreciated. The evening exercises were opened with a congratulatory address by Capt. Richard Holmes, in which he expressed the pleasure all felt in visiting them in their new and attractive home, closing his remarks with an original poem. He then, in behalf of the friends, presented to Mr. and Mrs. Lillie a purse containing one hundred dollars in gold, as a token of the high esteem in which they were held and the friendship felt for them. Mrs. Lillie in response gave expression to her deep feeling of gratefulness in receiving this gift of love from the Society, and gave the friends a warm welcome to her home. Mr. Lillie also responded in a happy manner, tendering many thanks for the kindness shown them. Maudie G. Banks executed a piano solo. Mr. Thomas Dowling made remarks and closed with an impromptu poem. Dr. A. H. Richardson and Mr. W. A. Dunklee spoke with deep feeling. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles made a short address in her normal condition, then, under control of Ed. S. Wheeler, made a characteristic speech. Dr. C. T. Buffum rendered a song, "The Little Brown Cot on the Hill"; Miss Clara A. Clark gave a recitation which elicited applause; Mrs. Lillie, under influence of her guides, made an eloquent address and gave a sketch of her past experiences and guidance to the present home; piano solo by Willie Boyce; remarks by Miss Lucy Barnicoat and others; song by Mr. Lillie. Miss Mintie Eakins at the piano; recitation by Oscar L. Rockwood; and with a closing hymn, at a late hour, the company dispersed, feeling the occasion to have been one of the most enjoyable of the season, wishing the host and hostess a Godspeed in their labors, and invoking upon them Heaven's choicest blessings.

American Spiritualist Alliance.

The Alliance held its regular meeting at 219 West 42d street, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 25th, and was fairly well attended, considering the storm that was raging at the time.

The Committee appointed at its last meeting to report upon the best methods for investigating spirit-phenomena, so as to place them upon a scientific basis, asked for an extension of time until the next regular meeting, Feb. 8th, for the making of their report, which was granted.

However, as the question of the proper method for investigating the phenomena had been made the subject for the consideration of The Alliance for the evening, several members expressed their views thereupon, and some progress was made in learning the views entertained by them.

Among the mediums present were Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Wells and Mrs. Moss, and during the séance that followed the close of the regular meeting, Spirit Frank Cushman of Mrs. Williams's band, and Spirit Jack of that of Mrs. Moss, succeeded in addressing those present in their own voices, without using the vocal organs of their mediums.

Mr. Cushman had promised to try and speak with the independent voice at these Alliance circles, and last evening succeeded in doing so, much to the gratification of all; while Jack's greeting with the independent voice was equally pleasing, and was twice manifested. Mrs. Moss has just returned from a tour to the West, began last August, and which extended to California, reaching this city only a few days ago; and her presence among us was unexpected—as the fact of her return was unknown to all present until she entered the room just as the circle was being formed.

Mrs. Moss informed us that she had engaged the rooms she occupied for her séances last summer at 52 West 15th street, and that she would hold public séances on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Jan. 26th. JOHN FRANKLIN CLARK, Cor. Sec'y.

Current Items—New York City.—One of the attractive features of the First Society services (unto whom Mrs. Brigham ministers so acceptably) is the artistic musical exercises, which it is hoped will be continued. The engagement with Dr. Dean Clarke, at the meeting for spirit-manifestations at Adelphi Hall, closed on Sunday last. On Sunday, the 5th, that faithful worker, Frank T. Ripley, will resume his services at this place, and will doubtless attract large audiences. Mrs. E. A. Wells deserves great credit for the continued success of these meetings.

Mrs. A. L. Pennell, Mrs. T. B. Stryker, Mr. Jones and Mr. Van Horn's efforts are also creating a desire among the people to know more of the phenomena of Spiritualism.

The Rev. Charles P. McCarthy, a well-known Spiritualist and a man of recognized ability, has commenced a series of meetings at Arion Hall, Harlem.

The Rev. Edward B. Fairchild, of Boston, was greeted by an appreciative audience at 219 West 42d street, on Sunday evening, Jan. 22d. We hope to have Mr. Fairchild lecture here soon again.

Mrs. M. E. Wallace, controlled by one of her guides, gave a very able lecture on Sunday evening last, which was listened to with marked attention by a goodly number of hearers.

It is expected that Dr. F. L. H. Willis (whose successful engagement closed in Philadelphia last Sunday) will lecture in Mrs. Wallace's parlors the first two Sunday evenings, Feb. 5th and 12th, after which the Doctor expects to move to Rochester, N. Y.

G. H. P.

First Society of Spiritualists.—Taking into consideration the severity of the weather there was a very fair attendance upon each service last Sunday. Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham spoke as usual morning and evening—treating subjects selected by the audience.

In the afternoon Dr. Dean Clarke read a poem from his own inspiration, on "Materialization"; it was a worthy production, and we shall hope to see it in print. [It will appear in next week's issue of THE BANNER.—ED.] He also continued some of his experiences, as one week ago, and considered some questions from the audience. This was the last Sunday of his engagement with the Society, and he has left a favorable impression with our people that will probably lead to further engagements.

Mrs. Wells being confined to her room with a severe cold and a threatened fever was unable to fulfill her engagements of giving tests. Mr. Henry J. Newton interested the audience for thirty minutes upon the "Convictions of Truth."

Next Sunday, Feb. 5th, Frank T. Ripley will open the meeting for spiritual manifestations and give convincing tests of spirit identity. S.

The People's Meeting.—Two interesting sessions of the People's Meeting were held yesterday at Columbia Hall, 878 6th Avenue. Mr. Goodspeed made remarks, and gave a variety of spirit descriptions, most of which were recognized. Rev. C. P. McCarthy made the closing address, giving an interesting account of his conversion to Spiritualism.

The evening session took a conversational turn, and was participated in by quite a number of individuals. Mrs. H. M. Walton, of Brooklyn, one of our pioneer mediums, will give an address next Sunday afternoon upon "Media, Ancient and Modern." Other mediums and speakers are expected to take part. The evening exercises will be principally by the mediums.

Spiritual Test Meetings, 52 Union Square.—The sessions at this place are doing a good work and meeting with great success. The platform is occupied both afternoon and evening by Mrs. A. L. Pennell of Onset Bay, Mass. The tests given by her little control, "Prairie Flower," are very convincing and always recognized. A. ELLSWORTH, Conductor.

Cambridgeport.—The Spiritualist Society of Cambridgeport commenced its meetings Jan. 8th, 1888, at St. George's Hall, 603 Main street. Meetings will be held every Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Feb. 5th the platform will be occupied by Mrs. Sue B. Fales. Subject: "Spiritualism as It Is."

Cleveland (O.) Notes.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The ending of the Sunday evening lecture course at the Columbia Theatre has left a blank in this city, and many are the expressions of regret that the clear trumpet tones of Spiritualism are not heard there any longer. "They should have been continued," said one. "Too bad we cannot have such lectures all the time," said another, and many confess they never got interested in Spiritualism before. Great good was certainly done by the course, and it will no doubt lead to good results and better work in the future.

The New Lyceum Officers, under the conductorship of Mr. Richard Carleton, are striving to awaken greater interest in the education of the little ones. Mr. C., while quite young in the work (in fact in the cause), is by his energy and enthusiasm inspiring all with new life, and the Lyceum, under his management and the hearty support of his co-workers, will, it is hoped, regain its old-time prestige. The children all like his bright and genial manners, and if the stay-at-home, apathetic, adult Spiritualists will only come once within the magnetic aura of this new convert they will have their interest and, consequently, their activity renewed. Try it once, friends, if only as an experiment; it will cost but little and do you good.

Mediums' Meetings, to hold the faithful together, and awaken public interest, if possible. Sunday evening meetings have been inaugurated in G. A. R. Hall, Mr. Carleton presiding. At the first, though a bitter cold night, the attendance was quite good, and much interest manifested. Mr. C. G. Oyston opened with a few ringing remarks on the advantages of holding such meetings, and the benefit they were to the participants in spiritual unfoldment. Among the mediums present the following addressed the meeting: Mrs. Tillie V. Cooke, partially under control, gave valuable hints on spirit culture, after which Mrs. Combs, lately from Garrettsville, the latest accession to our Lyceum members and the mediums of Cleveland, yielded to control, and described several spirits, some of whom were recognized. Mrs. Combs has only lately been developed as a trance speaker and test medium. Following her came Mr. George Ingham, a clairvoyant medium (not public), who spoke earnestly of the necessity of Spiritualists living spiritual lives if they hoped to enjoy the kind of home alluded to by Mrs. Cooke and the audience when singing "Beautiful Home of the Soul." Your reporter followed with a few words of advice, and the meeting closed with the Chairman announcing that Mr. Oyston would open the meeting on the following Sunday evening with a half hour talk on "Reincarnation."

A Spiritualist in Jail.—Do n't start, gentle reader, not for any crime; only in defense of principle—one woman's friendship for another. Mrs. Josephine Ammon, a lady of wealth residing on Euclid Avenue, has been sentenced to prison for "contempt of court," for refusing to answer questions on the witness stand that would have revealed the whereabouts of her friend, Josephine Blaun, over whom litigation is going on in reference to property left her ($70,000), which Mrs. Ammon claims others are trying to get control of, and likewise the person of Josephine Blaun, whom the Probate Court has declared "an imbecile." Mrs. A. is comfortably fixed in jail, and has the sympathy of the general public, especially all who understand the underlying principle for which she is contending, viz., reform in our Probate Courts. The case has been widely commented on by the press generally, and Mrs. Ammon is in daily receipt of letters from all over the country, and wishes to thank her spiritualistic friends through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT for their numerous expressions of love and sympathy. Mrs. A. is a member of every reform society in the city, all of whom have passed resolutions commending her for her pluck and sustaining her in her fight for principle.

Secularism.—That able exponent of freethought, Mr. Charles Watts, lectured in the Columbia Theatre Sunday, 29th, Paine's birthday, on "Secularism and Spiritualism." Mr. Watts is the editor of the Toronto paper Secular Thought; is quite eloquent and logical.

Richmond's "Review of the Seybert Commissioners' Report, and what he saw at Cassadaga," is attracting general attention here and bound to meet with a large sale. Although written by a non-Spiritualist (an agnostic) it is a very able defense of Modern Spiritualism. The scholarly and lawyer-like training of its author (the Hon. A. B. Richmond, of Meadville, Pa.,) enables him to analyze the Commissioners' illogical report in a manner that shows its weakness and leaves no doubt of their inability and unworthiness to investigate such a momentous question. To the reader I will say the book is published by Colby & Rich at $1,25 (postage free), and should be read not only by Spiritualists, but by every skeptic and investigator; it is a very strong array of facts and arguments, and certainly a "poser" for the Seybert Commissioners. To the Ohio and western readers of THE BANNER I shall be pleased, on receipt of price, to send this capital work. Yours for the cause, THOS. LEES.

Mr. Baxter in New York State.

On the last two Sundays of January, Mr. Baxter continued his labors in Troy, on last Sunday, the 29th, concluding his interesting exercises of the present engagement. Severe storms and intense cold have characterized these days, yet, despite all, great interest has been manifested, as shown by the size of the audiences. The ten lectures of the month have been progressive and timely; the music and poems, by-sermons of themselves; and the delineations of spirits—for which Mr. Baxter is unexcelled—very clear and forcible.

Last Sunday morning Mr. Baxter observed the Anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine, with appropriate lecture and exercises. In the evening he held spell bound his auditors in answering the criticisms of the opposition, offering a lecture under the heading, "Spiritualism as a Constructor." What Mr. Baxter would be in impromptu debate, we do not know; but certainly in his controversial lectures he is a power upon the spiritual rostrum. His Troy engagement is to be pronounced a marked success, and he has the "God-speed" of the Spiritualists of the city as he goes to other fields of labor.

On Tuesday evening, Jan. 24th, Mr. Baxter gave the Troy Lyceum a benefit, tendering gratuitous service in recitation and song, assisted by the "Troy Harmonic Trio" in entertaining selections.

On Friday evening, Jan. 27th, although intensely cold, and many passes were snow-blocked, a large audience assembled in Van Vechten Hall, Albany, to listen to a lecture from Mr. Baxter, and to witness his wonderful mediumship. None went away dissatisfied. On Monday evening, Jan. 30th, he lectured and gave tests in the same hall.

For one or two evenings following, Mr. Baxter was announced for Glens Falls. COM.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The Lincoln Society of Spiritualists is still holding meetings every Wednesday and Sunday evening at its pleasant hall on 5th street. The meetings are all well attended, and it seems that everybody is taking a great interest in the work. Mrs. Kate Sebutt, one of our most faithful workers, left for New York City Jan. 25th for an extended visit. Our medium, Mrs. A. Beach, has been on the sick list, but we are happy to say is again able to be with us. During her illness Frank Schutt has acted as our medium, and we desire to express our pleasure at the progress he is making. New members are coming in gradually, and a more harmonious and happy band cannot be found.

The BANNER OF LIGHT is read with satisfaction at our meetings. Yours for the cause,

ADELINE STEVENS.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Mrs. E. Cutler, of Newark, N. J., spoke in Brittan Hall last Sunday, giving many descriptions of spirits present, together with psychometric readings of an interesting character. She also remained with the Society during a portion of the week, giving a private séance at the residence of Daniel G. Davis, in Bradford, and a public séance in Brittan Hall on Thursday evening, both of which were for the benefit of the Society.

Next Sunday James V. Mansfield, of Boston, will occupy the platform at Brittan Hall. This will be the first time Dr. M. has spoken in this city. E. P. H.

New Bedford, Mass.—The cause of Spiritualism has been given a new impetus of late in our city, under the efficient management of Thos. M. James, Esq. A new and elegant hall has been procured and an increased attendance is the result. Mrs. C. M. Nickerson has spoken very acceptably on several occasions. Last Sunday W. F. Peck delivered two fine discourses, deepening the favorable impression made during his former visit. Next Sunday Mrs. Nickerson will lecture for us again, and the Sunday following Prof. Peck will be with us for the third time. •••

Fitchburg, Mass.—Mr. Joseph D. Stiles, of Weymouth, Mass., spoke for the First Spiritualist Society of Fitchburg, in G. A. R. Hall, Sunday, Jan. 29th. He gave two poems, also two very able lectures. Ninety-two names of spirits were presented, of which eighty-two were immediately recognized. The choir sang finely one of Prof. Longley's songs, "Beautiful Home of the Soul."—Miss M. T. Shelhamer speaks for this Society the 12th of February.

MRS. E. S. LOVERING, Sec'y.

Albany, N. Y.—J. C. Chism, Secretary of the First Spiritual Society, writes Jan. 30th a letter which will appear next week, in the course of which he speaks highly of the work wrought of late by Prof. J. W. Cadwell, whose stay the friends there desire to prolong through February.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing will occupy the platform of this Society every Sunday morning and evening during February.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball, of Lawrence, lectured and gave tests last Sunday, to the evident satisfaction of large audiences.—Mrs. H. S. Lake comes next Sunday, and we anticipate an intellectual treat. H.

Spiritual Conference.—A treatise on "Mental and Spiritual Growth," written under inspiration by Mrs. S. A. Slocum, was read by her before the Brooklyn Progressive Spiritual Conference last Saturday evening. It was highly eulogized and gave entire satisfaction. Remarks were made by Mrs. H. M. Walton, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. C. L. Harris, Mrs. E. C. A. Hall and Mrs. T. J. Lewis, who also gave several tests.

At our new hall, 310 Livingston street, Mr. George Sterling Wines will deliver the opening address, his topic being "Agnosticism and Ethical Culture versus Intuitive Religion." F. W. JONES.

Dr. Dean Clarke on the morning of last Sunday answered questions upon Spiritual Philosophy and science, for an hour and a half. In the evening he spoke upon "The Dangers and Duties of the Hour," and gave a vivid portrayal of the moral, social, political and ecclesiastical corruptions which endanger American institutions, among which he showed Romanism to be the chief, and urged all to jealously guard the common school and do all in their power to check the usurpation of the enemies of liberty and Science versus Spiritualism:

A NEW ANALYSIS.

A Discourse delivered in Chicago, Ill., by Spirit "Phœnix" (Prof. Mapes when in Earth-Life), through the Trance Mediumship of MRS. CORA L. V. RICHMOND.

Mr. President and Friends: It is not often that a disembodied spirit yearns again to be enfolded in the garments of clay. It is rarely the case that, when once disenthralled, we seek *again to put on the fetters of mortal life in or*ganic form. We may borrow such clothing as for the hour will express to our friends our presence; we may employ such means or converse with mortals as our life affords and human comprehension permits; but I say it is rarely that one wishes again to enter the shell when the pinions have been set free.

But as doubtless some of you have experienced a longing to live in certain ages of past history; to have been one who lived and had breath and being in some heroic, historic, or poetic age; as one might have desired to breathe the aroma of the groves of Plato, or to have accepted the wonderful teachings of Socrates, or to have been one of the Grecians who formed the choice cluster that gathered around the first sanctuaries of human knowledge and art; or to have lived at the time of the great Egyptian world, when science cleft in twain the barrier that united man to the infinite: I say, as one might have wished to live then, so in these days of wonderful discoveries, of surpassing intelligence, of astounding scientific propositions, one would almost wish to leave his place in the spirit-land, and say: "I am one of you who can have such thoughts and evolve such wonders in the midst of material life."

Thirty years ago, when spiritual manifestations were in their infancy, and very few men of any class dared to investigate them, there were still, nevertheless, a few to whom these manifestations did come with striking and distinct proof, with absolute power of evidence, with such conviction that their results were published to the world, among whom I may mame my honored friend, Judge Edmonds, my also honored friend, Prof. Hare, and, following tardily in their wake as an investigator only, I stood watching these manifestations, unconscious of any law, principle or power that could produce them within material life. Dr. John B. Dodds, until then unknown to fame, announced the astonishing and marvelous discovery that the manifestations were the result of od, or odyllic force, like that which had been discovered by Baron von Reichenbach, concerning material objects, and that this odyllic force became in some way entangled in the brain, and that by not unconscious cerebration, for that word had not then been evolved, but by some mysterious process, the back brain was responsible for manifestations occurring entirely independent of any contact of human beings, and that this same mysterious source evolved discourses, messages from spirit-friends, flowers, hands, and such other manifestations as Spiritualism has recorded for the last thirty-three years. Dr. Dodds immediately became famous, in his own estimation, upon this theory; and ready to grapple any theory or grasp at any straw that would explain away that of which they knew nothing, the public and popular mind seized upon this as a solution.

Not so any true student of science. Scientific minds were either too far away from the subject to be troubled with it; or, perhaps, were investigating it, and knew that this explanation would not suffice. Dr. Dodds ten years after abandoned his theory and became one of the strongest advocates of Spiritual Philosophy, declaring that no other solution than that of their spiritual origin could explain the varied phenomena occurring under the name of Spiritualism.

One would suppose that in thirty years one such theory would be sufficient, and that the popular mind, satiated with this, would have recourse to some vaster explanation or higher interpretation of that which continues to occur day by day in their midst.

The pupils of Prof. Gregory in the Edinburgh university would fain have accounted for spiritual manifestations on the hypothesis of mesmerism, but, as a student of mesmerism, Prof. Gregory knew very well that this theory could not explain that which occurs, and abandoned it as untenable, while thirty years ago no one with any degree of knowledge concerning mesmerism or psychologic action could possibly have ventured to affirm extensively and publicly that these manifestations are to be attributed to the influence of one mind upon another. But ideas, if nothing else, seem to repeat themselves in the small cycles of human brains, and especially ideas that seem foolish: For we see how the world was astonished and thrilled at first with the explanation of unconscious cerebration by Dr. Carpenter, who, I venture to say, had never attended one-half dozen séances in his life, or seen half a dozen mediums in his life, but who, nevertheless, had a theory with which to explain that concerning which he was ignorant. But no sooner had this theory retired into the obscurity whence it came than the world was again startled with the announcement that all who witnessed the manifestations of Spiritualism were suffering under the dominion of hysteria, and that this disease seized both sexes and all ages and classes of people, and that the medical fraternity only were capable of combating this vast and ever-increasing nervous disorder. But this disappeared also, as the preceding theories had done, until it was announced, as though it were a new discovery by Dr. Beard, that all manifestations occurring in the presence of mediums, or said to occur, did not really occur, but that the unfortunate person who consulted a medium was suffering under the delusion of tricks of mesmerism; that he was hypnotized by the medium; that he had in reality witnessed nothing.

And this, with all seriousness, is now blazoned forth to the world as a successful and adequate explanation of what thousands of people witness in possession of all the senses they ever had, and in clear possession of every faculty that they ever exercised. Hypnotism may have produced astonishing things, but this theory is the most astonishing of all the discoveries of science! To think that for thirty years and more any number of people competent to carry on ordinary business transactions of life—not intent upon pursuing this subject for any other possession save that of investigation—should to the number of millions have been successfully and continuously mesmerized; and that this has been going on without interfering in the least with their ordinary pursuits; that they are mesmerized only when they are in contact with this class of facts, and that they are capable at all other times to testify in courts of justice, administer medicine to those who are sick, of pursuing their business, whatever it may be, of successfully conducting criminal and other cases, and of receiving testimony and giving judgment carefully upon all other subjects, but upon this one subject they are mesmerized, is so singular, and withal so appalling a statement, that it leads one to take apart the shell, the ordinary fabric of life, and see where human evidence does rest.

Then we are to consider that if a man testifies that he has seen a certain physical manifestation concerning which he offers no theory, but which occurs under such and such circumstances, he is mesmerized. But if he witnesses a chemical experiment, if he attends a course of lectures on geology, and witnesses their illustration, or if he endeavors to study astronomy, and makes available the instruments through which he is to study it, he is still considered in possession of every faculty as a student of science; and, above all, if he study materia medica and become fully acquainted with every physical fact, and every anatomical fact, and every fact connected with the nervous system, he is at the same time capable of ministering to all these diseases, yet he is not capable of observing the manifestations of so-called spirit-power. Then may it not come to be true, that human existence is but one vast scheme of mesmerism, and that people do not really see the things that they claim to see? that they are, after all, mesmerized by the professor of geology and the professor of astronomy, and that all departments of human knowledge are but the action of one mind upon another; that there is no anatomy, no physical structure; that no therapeutics is required, but only this system of mesmerism? and would it not come to be a fact that the judge or lawyer who sits as one of the witnesses of these manifestations may consider that the testimony of those who are brought before him in criminal cases cannot be profitably received, as these may be mesmerized? and will it not come to be also the fact that we shall conclude that every manifestation of human intelligence is but an ignis fatuus, and that men are beings led round and round in a circle not larger than a spider's web, and that all other things induced into their minds, aside from this little turmoil of existence, must belong to regions of mesmerized protoplasm? Then the problem of the universe is solved, every semblance of existence is destroyed, and man is a small portion of differentiated protoplasm—exists in this peculiar atmosphere—his only condition being that he is capable of mesmerizing his kind.

If one does not know, but is mesmerized, then how can he be certain of anything?

It chances to be the fact, however, that the scientific propositions of the world are as changeful as the shifting sands upon the seashore, and that every new wave of discovery carefully and considerately obliterates the preceding ignorance, and that people in possession of present scientific knowledge are very careful not to remember the period of time when science did not accept that knowledge—when the scientific mind rejected it as utterly and absolutely untenable.

Galileo might well start from his home in the heavens to witness in earth a mind—or any condition of human mind—that could be absolutely certain of any scientific proposition—that is, certain that it would not be superseded by some added knowledge to-morrow. That world is ready for a philosophical millennium that can claim to have absolute knowledge in any realm excepting the realm of mathematics, and as mathematics is a term and a means, and does not apply to any particular order of things or class of events, but is in itself mental, mathematics does not change and is the only science in the world that has not changed almost utterly within the last fifty years. Chemistry no longer is content with the few primates of former years. Geology is continually searching for that missing link which may at last be found, and our friend Mr. Darwin and our friend Prof. Agassiz, both of whose lives are within the recollection of nearly every person present, differ essentially with reference to two very important propositions, each one believing his own. Mr. Darwin accepts evolution, in which Agassiz does not believe, or did not in material life. The latter announced the glacial theory, in which Mr. Darwin does not believe. These two devotedly scientific men, revered greatly for their real scientific attainments, nevertheless are ready to change, and must change—either each adopt the theory of the other, or each abandon his own theory for one more scientific. But the mistake is that the world is led by scientific men without being led by science. The propositions and theories of scientific men do not constitute science. Theirs is a very small realm in the actual scientific knowledge in the world. All else that is hypothecated upon this becomes a system or theory, but not a science.

Now it is claimed that nothing can be more certain than certainty. But if Dr. Beard's theory were true there is no certainty of anything; and then what constitutes certainty? Your sense deceives you. I light a stick and revolve it rapidly before your eyes; you are perfectly ready to swear in any court of justice that you saw a wheel of light. To your sense of vision it was a wheel, but it was only a lighted stick, and I could prove to you that you had been deceived; that you saw the lighted wheel when there was no lighted wheel there. The reason is evident. It requires a sixtieth part of a second to produce an impression upon the visual nerve. It requires the same length of time to forget it, and its revolution made rapidly passes from one point to another of the circle described before the organ of vision has forgotten the last point; therefore you see a continuous wheel. You are deceived, not by mesmerism, but by your own senses, and mental science alone can explain the theory which at first seems to be too miraculous. The mental proposition that comes by connecting rapidity of motion with the slowness of vision is that which solves the problem after all. Again, you can be deceived in the sense of touch. By rapid movements of the fingers placed in a certain position over a pebble in the palm of the conjurer's hand, you will perceive that there are two pebbles by the touch, but there is only one; and that again is because the nerves of sensation are slower to receive and forget sensation than the motion that has produced them. These are very trite and very familiar illustrations, but they prove that so far as human senses are concerned there can be no absolute certainty unless you also pass beyond appearances and sensational testimony to the testimony of the mind.

Here the "explicators"(?) on the hypnotic plane claim preëminence by declaring all communications received from spiritual sources to be the result of mesmerism. How or where the knowledge is obtained they do not claim to say. Whether from your mind, or whether it is evolved from the mysterious depths of the past, and is recorded somewhere upon the atmosphere, or aura surrounding you, bearing the record, and the mesmerizer reflecting that again upon your mind, they do not state. But it is a problem so attended with difficulty, and against which the mind so very speedily revolts, that after one or two moments' consideration no intelligent mind accepts it as adequate to solve any one of the manifestations of Modern Spiritualism.

It is still maintained by a very large class of intelligent minds who are investigators in Spiritualism that, nevertheless, Spiritualism is a science. Who has made it so? Dr. Beard? Dr. Dodds? The whole series of so-called explainers of Spiritualism? Is there any science in their propositions? Can they tell to any certainty when the recurring manifestations will take place, and under what circumstances you will be mesmerized? That it is a science, however, is declared by many mild literary men who are not scientific, but who affect to follow in the wake of science. Prof. Zöllner declared the manifestations to be supersensuous. By this he meant that the sources and intelligent causes of them are not as yet discoverable by or amenable to the usual methods of science or human sensation. Mr. Wallace does not declare whether they are scientific or otherwise; he is contented with a statement of the facts and the acceptance of the source whence they come. Mr. Crookes states the facts without advancing any theory, and asks the scientific world to explain them; and every scientific man of any eminence or note, who has in any degree investigated the phenomena of Spiritualism, has left the subject either to be explained by the scientific world or has accepted the only intelligent solution—that of the communication and ministration of departed spirits. But it seems to be in the nature of some minds to imagine that a single fact or a number of facts make a science, and that if they can repeat this fact a number of times they will convince the world that they and the fact are scientific. Of course this is impossible to be fully carried out. One atom may serve for an illustration; one bird may be a prophecy of spring, and a single letter may be the beginning of an alphabet which in its turn is the beginning of a language, but if I say "a, a, a," forever, I have not given you any language.

Science is not only an arrangement of general principles, to illustrate which there are facts in the universe, but science is a formulated arrangement of facts that occur in systematic order, and which the mind of man may grasp philosophically, by observation and knowledge of the laws governing them. Thus far the human mind has not grasped in a scientific sense the general principles of Spiritualism. Thus far the facts occur at variance with every established and well-known law of science—or, at least, if not at variance with them, they occur beyond the realm of scientific observation. To witness something with one's senses and not be able to explain it, or accept a theory upon which it is predicated, is not science. It is a scientific method, however, to witness all the facts and not make any theory. It is a scientific method to prejudge nothing by opinions formed before a knowledge of the facts; and above all, it is scientific to presume that there are principles in the universe as yet undiscovered by science, which, in their turn, will make intelligent and explainable those things that are now in profound mystery.

Spiritualists, without knowing it, have the true science of Spiritualism, but because they do not know it, they cannot claim that it is a science. They have possession of facts; they have possession of the source whence the facts emanate, but they have not possession of any formulated system whereby the effects can be produced from certain well-known causes; and, until they have this, this science cannot be taught, it cannot be classified among the sciences of the earth; it will not be accepted in schools, academies, or colleges, and none but brave and daring scientific men will avow their belief in it. At the present time it might be declared to be the solution of all sciences, the science of sciences; but who will accept this? If I cannot state to you intelligently and concisely in what manner you may witness a certain order of manifestation that will under the same circumstances always be the same, I cannot claim to teach you concerning this science. I must tell you that as yet it is in the realm of superscience. I must claim, as Prof. Zöllner did, that as yet it is supersensuous; and I must declare, as is declared by all who have carefully investigated every phase of the phenomena and every manifestation of Spiritualism, that it is as yet something apart from human knowledge, a realm by itself, which will sooner or later interblend so with your lives as to be an unfolding consciousness in the thought and mind of man.

I may also claim, that while it has a system of ethics, and while there is connected with it a declared life-line and principle, as a complete system of philosophy it is only announced to the world, and only proven to those minds who, from some cause or other, live in a different atmosphere of thought or intelligence. I mean by this that the so-called scientific and philosophical mind refuses to recognize prophecy or inspiration, refuses to have oracles, declares that the possession of knowledge is common and everyday, and is brought to the level of every human mind. How many are astronomers, who can go out in the starry night and number one dozen constellations? And who among all that follow in the wake of the prophets of science can claim to know what the meaning of the measurement of the planetary orbits is? It is folly to say, when Herschel and Kepler and all the great seers and prophets of science have led the way for humanity to climb up the steep that they have climbed, that their knowledge is common and everyday. Not one mind in a hundred is capable of grasping the problem of Kepler. Not one mind in a thousand ever solved a problem of Euclid; and, as to the general principles of science, they are as foreign to everyday life as a flight in the region of the upper air.

We must not forget that because, down in his lonely cellar or up in his miserable garret, the poor lad may play on his one-stringed instrument until he attains the chromatic scale, this is not the science of music—that beyond this is Mozart, Beethoven, and all the great masters who by inspiration knew as children what this poor lad has struggled so long to learn.

Shall we, then, have no Galileos, no Platos, no Keplers, no Mozarts, but keep to our one string and our one chromatic scale, while the spheres move on in their orbits of music? Shall we have no prophets of song, of poesy, of art, and above all no one who, pushing wide open the door of immortality, declares that all may enter, and that it is for all, but that he must have been there to have declared it before others could see and follow? Columbus starting out on the voyage of discovery, the inventor trembling on the verge of some great achievement, are but types of the onmoving course of the world's events under the pressure of light from on high. Herschel saw in his mental vision a new planet, while his contemporaries, men of science, his fellow philosophers, were laughing him to scorn, and while they were writing letters sneeringly saying, "I will believe if the heavens shall fall and the sun shall be blotted out, and the moon be changed and transfigured, and the earth cease to be, but I will never believe that there is a planet, as claimed by Herschel;" and now Uranus moves on, one of the wonderful system to which your earth belongs, heralded by this prophet of science; and those who grope in the valleys and wallow in the mire of a single individual fact are glad tardily to look up at the gateway he has opened, and smile benignly through the telescope that enables them to see Uranus.

You have to take your choice between that narrow comprehension of so-called specialists in science, who harp forever upon the one string, and that, possibly, one that is out of tune, and the grand diapason of the universe, that in itself includes all possibilities, and heralds to man, ages in advance, the word that is finally accepted.

The Reviewer.

A REVIEW OF THE SEYBERT COMMISSIONERS' REPORT; or, What I saw at Cassadaga Lake. By A. B. Richmond, Esq., a Member of the Pennsylvania Bar, etc. Boston: Colby & Rich.

The Report of the Seybert Commission of the University of Pennsylvania, which was vociferously hailed on its appearance by the anti-Spiritualistic press as "the severest blow aimed at Spiritualism since its first inception," has already proved to be a sort of boomerang in the camp of the enemy. A distinguished lawyer in the State of Pennsylvania, who was an utter disbeliever in Spiritualism, and an amateur expert in legerdemain, who had had some experience in detecting and exposing bogus mediums with whom he had come in contact, had read the Commissioners' Report, and believed himself thoroughly equipped to ferret out and unmask the frauds by which his less astute fellow-beings (and among them "an intimate friend, one of the ablest members of the bar,") were being cruelly deceived and misled—had the curiosity to visit a slate-writing medium at Cassadaga Lake Camp-Meeting last summer and make the trial. He took every precaution to render legerdemain or any form of trick impossible. He procured his own slates, put his private mark on them, did not allow them to go out of his hands, wrote questions unknown to the medium, addressed to a spirit-friend, and, while holding the slates, with a bit of pencil between them, tightly grasped in his own hands above the table in broad daylight—the medium merely touching them on the outside with thumb and fingers—he distinctly heard the pencil moving between the slates, and, on opening them, found a written message answering his question in hand-writing not unlike that of the friend he had addressed, and signed by his name!

He says he was "surprised," and well he may have been, for here was a total upsetting of all his confident theories and of all the wise conjectures of the learned savants of the University. But he did not stop with one trial. He renewed the attempt again and again, and with three different mediums, only to meet with still more startling and inexplicable results—that is, inexplicable on the basis of fraud or trickery, or on any theory but that of spirit-agency. At length, at one of the sittings, while expecting a communication from a friend whom he had addressed, the slates appeared to be seized by some strange power and nearly wrenched from his grasp. The medium explained that another spirit than the one addressed was trying to use the slates—"a stranger," who says he "must and will communicate." "Let him write!" was Mr. Richmond's hospitable response, since writing from "any ghost" would answer his purpose. The slates then quieted down, and the sound of the pencil was heard. On opening them there appeared the following unlooked-for message:

"DEAR SIR: Do all you can to combat the error into which my Commissioners have fallen. They were unworthy and unfaithful.

H. SEYBERT."

On seeing this Mr. Richmond's surprise grew to astonishment, and more than that. No wonder. While not then prepared to endorse the statement that the Commissioners were "unworthy and unfaithful," he plainly saw that they were hugely mistaken in conveying to the world the idea that all slate-writing purporting to come from invisible beings is a trick of legerdemain; and he further saw that it was his duty to tell them so, and all the world beside. Hence he wrote, first, an Open Letter to the Commission, narrating what he saw at Cassadaga Lake—which has been somewhat extensively circulated in the newspapers and is embodied in this volume—and now adds a more full review of the Commissioners' Report.

Mr. Richmond's review somewhat naturally takes the form of a lawyer's plea before a jury—a plea in behalf of the genuineness of the phenomena of Spiritualism, as against the sweeping charges of fraud and deception which are favored by the Commission, and the shallow explanations which have come from other sources. The jury addressed is the general public. The author shows a wide acquaintance with the facts and the literature of Spiritualism, and he presents his facts with great force and cogency. He is unsparing in his exposure of the mistakes, the superficiality, the bad logic, the unfairness, in short the unfaithfulness to the conditions of Mr. Seybert's bequest (as charged in the posthumous slate message purporting to come from him), exhibited by the Commission; and his resources of irony, sarcasm, satire, wit, anecdote, classical allusion and apt quotation seem inexhaustible. In fact, his lawyer like habit of making the strongest possible case against his opponent sometimes leads him to the verge of unfairness, as when he intimates that the members of the Commission have received pay from the Seybert fund for services not rendered; or unfaithfully performed—which he justly characterizes as virtual "embezzlement." In this he is doubtless partly mistaken, since only the occupant of the Seybert chair (understood to be Rev. Mr. Fullerton, Secretary of the Commission,) can draw a salary from that fund, according to the terms of the gift. Yet the fact remains that until the university authorities cause a "thorough and impartial investigation of all systems of morals, religion or philosophy, . . . and particularly of Modern Spiritualism" (which they appear not yet to have begun to do), they have no moral or legal right to the use of that fund.

But Mr. Richmond not only stoutly maintains the reality of the phenomena of Spiritualism, but he also argues strongly in favor of the spiritualistic interpretation of them—namely, that they are produced by decarnated spirits—and he forcibly answers many of the common objections to this. He is especially strong, and quite at home, in presenting Bible evidences bearing on the question; and he sharply criticises the Commission and the University authorities for putting forth a Report which not only ignores Bible testimony, but inculcates the doctrine of materialism or annihilation, in the statement of the acting Chairman that he is "deeply imbued with the belief that we are such stuff as dreams are made of." The clergy and the religious press, which have so generally hailed and approved this Report, are deservedly scored for their inconsistency in endorsing this unchristian, Sadduceeic sentiment.

Mr. Richmond, as advocate, seems by his earnestness to desire and to expect to carry the convictions of his jury—the public—in favor of the truth of Spiritualism, which he represents as altogether worthy of their acceptance, alike in its facts, its philosophy and its moral tendencies. Yet he presents the curious phenomenon—not altogether rare in these days, especially in the legal profession—of avowing himself unconvinced. His position is thus stated near the close:

"In conclusion, let me not be misunderstood. I am not a Spiritualist. I have not yet seen that which convinces me beyond a doubt that the claims of Spiritualism are true. I know that there is around us an unseen intelligent force that purports to be a visitation from spirit-life. Science has not explained it. Savants have offered no theory to the world that can account for all its phenomena. But if there is a spirit-world, the theory and philosophy of Spiritualism present the most rational solution to the mystery."

It is quite probable, considering the recentness of Mr. Richmond's personal acquaintance with the class of facts which have arrested his attention and produced so much of conviction, that he only needs that accumulation of personal evidence which thousands, probably millions, have had, by means of daily or frequent intercourse with the "unseen intelligent force" which he now knows is around us, to satisfy him beyond a doubt that this "intelligent force" is none other than what it claims to be—spirit-beings. Such, we trust, may be his joyful experience. Yet it is an instructive fact that persons who have indulged or cultivated the habit of materialistic skepticism for years find themselves enslaved to it. Gentlemen of the legal profession are somewhat apt to fall into that habit, though perhaps no more so than many others. When once formed it is difficult to be overcome, either by weight of testimony, by the force of reason, or even by the evidence of the senses. It is not uncommon for persons witnessing phenomena of spirit-origin to become completely convinced, for the time, of such origin, but in a few hours or days the old habit returns, and doubt or positive disbelief resumes its sway. This mental habit or tendency, though many glory in it, is evidently not conducive to the attainment of truth. And no more potent means of overcoming it can be found than personal familiarity with the phenomena of Spiritualism.

Mr. Richmond's book will be found of great value to the inquirer and the general reader on this topic, not only for the clear and positive testimony it gives to his own experience and that of others at Cassadaga Lake, but for the report given of the venerable Dr. Hare's remarkable statement before the Association for the Advancement of Science in 1854; also for the reprint of Mr. C. C. Massey's Open Letter to the Rev. Mr. Fullerton, exposing the groundlessness of the latter gentleman's attempt to impeach the sanity of Zöllner; together with emphatic testimonies from Prof. Crookes and from committees of the Dialectical Society of London—all going to show the utter superficiality and inconclusiveness of the Seybert Commissioners' Report. Spiritual Phenomena.

CHARLES E. WATKINS.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In the Jan. 7th number of the BANNER OF LIGHT is a notice of slate writing séances given by Charles E. Watkins, medium. Mr. Watkins has lived in an adjoining county to the one I live in (Isabella) for a number of years back. I was in no way surprised at the statement made therein. This is the same Charles E. Watkins that so astonished Hiram Sibley of Rochester, N. Y., in a séance given him about six years ago, as to cause Mr. Sibley to make an offer of a farm worth ten thousand dollars to Mr. Watkins if he would explain, as a trick, what he had witnessed. Mr. Watkins of course could not so explain, and replied to Mr. Sibley that if he had made an offer of all the millions he was reported to possess he would be unable to so explain the phenomena he had witnessed. Further: the same offer was made to Mr. Watkins, that if unexplainable as a trick he would explain to him the power that moved the pencil. Mr. Watkins was unable to explain the power. "Will some scientist explain?" That offer of Mr. Sibley means business. Any one that can "arise and explain," by trick or otherwise, the power that moves the pencil would receive the same offer. I think I am justified in saying as much as this, from the following extract from a letter I have, written by Mr. Sibley, dated Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 28th, 1885. (This letter was written in answer to one asking him about his séance with Mr. Watkins):

"That some unknown power moves inert matter seems to be admitted. The nature of that power is in dispute.

Whether spirit or some other unknown force does it I would be glad to know, and I would give a farm or money to know for myself, and be able to inform others what moves the pencil."

Four years ago this month my wife and self, by invitation from an old pioneer friend, Theron Johnson, made Mr. Sibley a visit. Mr. Watkins was there. We both had a séance. Many astonishing things were witnessed. Ten slips of paper were given us, upon which we wrote the names of persons dead, asking them one or two questions, wadded them up as compactly as possible, and laid them upon the table. We then called Mr. Watkins, who in the meantime was down stairs with the family. He came up, and as the pellets were in a pile with one hand he strung them out in a row, and asked us to point to them with a pencil. When what he termed a spirit-light appeared at the end of the pencil, he would pick up the pellet pointed at, and holding it for a moment between his thumb and forefinger, speak the initials first, and then the name in full, never mistaking the name on the pellet. In two cases, after drawing his coatsleeve down close to his hand he placed the pellet upon the end of it over his wrist, held it there with one finger for perhaps ten or twenty seconds, then laid it upon the table, and drew his sleeve up near the elbow, showing to us in remarkably plain writing the name of Ellen Orcutt, my wife's half-sister, whom she had written to. The pellet yet remained upon the table unopened. A small bit of pencil was then placed between two slates. We three held the slates. After a few seconds we heard writing, and soon three taps, as with the pencil. Then the upper slate was removed, and we found all the questions answered, and the name Ellen Orcutt attached. Then opening the pellet we saw it was the one my wife had written upon to her. To test Mr. Watkins we wrote the names of two or three not dead. He detected them at once.

In answering one of my pellets he told me to take two slates, clean them to my satisfaction, and then put one upon the other (no pencil or anything else being between them), and hold them in my left hand extended from me at arm's length. I did so, and in a moment I was directed to examine them; upon taking off the upper slate I found the lower one nearly filled with writing, and the name John Reynolds attached. Questions all answered. In every case at this séance, after giving the initials he spoke the name in full.

Witnessing such astonishing phenomena I engaged him to come to my residence and stop with me a week. He came in the following March. About forty different persons had séances with him at my home. There was no failure with any of them. All are astonished and are anxious to again meet him.

These phenomena are claimed to be of spiritual origin; if they are not, who will explain them otherwise? "The religious dare not investigate; the bigot will not, the fool cannot. Who will?" HORACE O. BIGELOW.

NEGATIVE PROOFS OF MATERIALIZATION.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Certain things happening at circles I have attended within the past few weeks, hitherto uncommented on, induce me to think that our mistakes and failures to attain satisfactory results often furnish just as valuable lessons as our most pronounced successes.

For a long time a certain skeptical friend of mine has been hardly open to conviction, though attending séances at intervals. The cause of the skepticism and bitter antagonism (extending to grabbing) was, as a spirit once told me, that the person in question "did not want to be convinced." The motive lying back of this was simply superstitious fear, born of the religion which teaches a personal devil and burning lake. This person, being a member of my family, thought I was going to the Devil with a big, big D, and that, if I could only be convinced that Spiritualism was all a humbug my soul would be saved from eternal damnation. Still, various tests, coming at strange cabinets, and principally concerning old army comrades killed in action many years ago, gradually had their effect on this skeptic, while the constant presence of the BANNER OF LIGHT, with accounts of phenomena, helped to shake the "Devil and the big, big D" off the throne they had always occupied. Consequently this person has lately attended séances, beginning at Mrs. Sawyer's.

There, the first afternoon, the skeptic was taken into the cabinet, and, while conversing with the medium, was touched all over by spirit-hands, with the result of shaking the conviction that Spiritualism was all a fraud. The skeptic went away impressed, and for the first time "unable to explain" what had taken place, though mental pride was still too great to acknowledge that "spirits" did it.

While thus "teetering" in belief, I took the same skeptic to the cabinet of Mrs. Gray, where, as the BANNER readers know, the phenomena, as phenomena, are wonderful, though the spirits are unable, as a rule, to exhibit much intelligence. At this séance the skeptic was comforted by the presence of two more: familiar acquaintances from Port Chester—one a comrade of my G. A. R. Post, the other his wife. These two had come there, having heard of Mrs. Gray from some friend in Port Chester, and the wife was full of excitement, having lost a little child a few days before, and expecting to see that child come running out of the cabinet and jump into her lap right off. The husband had always been a hard-headed skeptic, while a good Catholic in outward observance.

Well, the séance went on as usual. During the preliminary dark circle Mrs. Gray described a little child as coming over to me, where I sat by the side of the mother, but the mother, dreading "to be fooled," did not offer to recognize the little thing or ask any questions, and in consequence heard no more of her. Judge Cross was sitting nearly opposite me during the séance, and I noticed that, after the first few spirits had come, none of them ventured over to our side. At the very beginning Lizzie Hatch came and shook hands with members of the circle, whereupon the gentleman from Port Chester squeezed her hand as hard as he could, on purpose to find out whether it were not "a confederate," for which he was properly rebuked, and apologized. The phenomena that night were simply wonderful. Dr. Baker came out of the cabinet into the middle of the floor, and dropped close to Mrs. Gray, dematerializing entirely under the gas-jet, while out of the floor, in the same place, up came a very beautiful spirit in white robes, a "Roman lady," as known at that cabinet. Then Jeanne d'Arc came up from the middle of the floor, with the French flag, and went down again, within five feet of the gentleman from Port Chester, who, being a very tall man, "made the distance as short as he could," as he told me after the séance was over.

But phenomena were all that could be secured. My spirit sister, who has always managed to follow me from cabinet to cabinet, was unable to utter a word, and seemed greatly distressed about it. So the séance closed, and we went home. What was the result?

The mother was evidently bitterly disappointed, and said she would never again go to a séance. Her reasons no one could tell, save by intuition and inference. My idea was that she had formed perfectly false ideas of the actuality of a cabinet, and her disappointment soured her for the time being. Yet this same lady had, on one occasion, actually developed clairvoyant vision, some twenty years before.

The husband, previously a skeptic, and a jeering one, had reached, in his first séance, the condition of being "unable to account for it," the "it" being "how that girl came up through the floor," when he, being a practical mechanic, knew it was solid.

My own particular skeptic I did not question, taking it for granted that enough had been seen to exclude the supposition of common vulgar fraud, confederates, and other evasions. I called attention to the way in which the spirits kept from our side, as showing their sensitiveness to conditions; especially to the conduct of Starlight, who, in spite of all my coaxing, would not come near me. To all which my skeptic made no reply, save as to Mrs. F., whose case was diagnosed correctly.

Some time afterward, while at Mrs. Cadwell's cabinet, who should come but Starlight, and after greeting her friends, told them she wanted me. I asked her, in a laughing way, "Why would n't you come over to see me the other night? What was the matter?" She instantly replied, with very great energy, "Oh! you had a horrid crowd with you; horrid, horrid! You come there with such a crowd again, and we 'll put you out!" To which I responded by telling her that it was not my fault, and promising never to do so again; but believing all the time that she referred to all my neighbors in that circle, with the exception of my own particular skeptic.

It was not very long after, when, putting the question point-blank to my particular skeptic, about the genuineness of spirit-phenomena at Mrs. Gray's I was thunderstricken by the information that it was the "thinnest fraud she had ever seen." Interrogated as to "how those people came up and went down," etc., I was met with the absurd explanation that Mrs. Gray carried them about with her under her skirts, and smuggled them out of and back into the cabinet in that manner. Confronted with the fact that no woman alive, and especially no woman of Mrs. Gray's size, could possibly have taken two adult individuals at the same time under her skirts, as we had both seen the doctor and the Roman lady come up and go down, close to the medium in the middle of the floor, I found myself absolutely unable to shake the credulity that could believe such a monstrous physical impossibility, but could not credit the fact of spirit agency.

I learned from this fact that it is impossible to deceive a spirit as to the mental attitude of a sitter. I had been completely fooled by my particular skeptic on that evening; but Starlight knew just what she was about.

Time passed on, and, owing to the kindness of Mrs. Sawyer, my skeptic was admitted to a regular private circle, supposed to sit on Mondays, and from which much was expected. The wish of the spirits was that this circle be composed always of the same people, occupying the same seats, with no accessions, in which case we were promised fine results when the forces had become properly organized.

Instead of this, we found this circle changing every evening, with conflicting elements, clashing opinions and unwieldy numbers. The consequence was that, although composed entirely of believers and people of more or less experience, night after night passed, not only with nothing wonderful to relate but with results far below the average. One night my spirit brother, who comes there very strong, told me, in answer to my query as to what was the matter, that there were many people dissatisfied, pulling different ways. "It will be just as bad next Monday, I fear," he said.

It was, and kept on getting worse, till the circle broke up and had to be reörganized. My skeptic and myself gave it up in despair. Nevertheless, strange to relate, it was the very non-success of these circles that converted my particular skeptic, and the reason was plainly evident to my mind.

My skeptic had always, up to that time, believed the daily press about Spiritualists being all cranks, and about the wonderful things they claim to have seen never being shown to any one but a willing dupe. Nevertheless, here my skeptic saw that a circle, composed entirely of believers, might sit night after night and get almost nothing; whereas if the medium had been a fraud, after their money, she would have given them double wonders. Slowly it began to dawn on my skeptic's mind that there might be some grain of truth in all this talk about conditions. The final result was her conversion to two main facts: First, that Mrs. Sawyer is a genuine medium; second, that there are such things as spirits.

How do I know the sincerity of the conversion? By the same test by which Starlight showed me that I had been deceived in believing a conversion at Mrs. Gray's. In other words, by the way, my skeptic was treated at that cabinet by my spirit friends. They welcomed and shook hands with my skeptic, and caused her to say of my brother, almost incredulously, "Why, it is Frank. I would have known him anywhere." After that, all the poor circles had no effect but to confirm her in the conviction that, at Mrs. Sawyer's, at all events, the phenomena are subject to fluctuations, depending on the sitters. Of course the conversion is only partial as yet. The attitude of the skeptic at present is, "Well, yes, Mrs. Sawyer is all right, and I am pretty well convinced that there are such things as spirits; but as to the rest—well, I 'll see about them in time. It may be—but——"

In time the rest will follow Mrs. Sawyer, and the former skeptic will learn that she has been simply standing in her own light, and that we must meet the people from the other side halfway if we are to meet them at all.

As a specimen of what can be accomplished by people who meet in the right spirit, even under disadvantages, let me add to this paper an account of a little circle held Jan. 27th at Mrs. Sawyer's.

The thermometer was about zero, with a fierce wind outside, and so severe was the weather not a lady had ventured out. We had there, besides myself, Messrs. Pilkington, Jacob Clute, Kidd, Cunningham, Morgan, and one other whose name I did not learn.

To balance these was only Miss Della Sawyer, so that the manager remarked, rather disconsolately, 'I'm afraid we shall not get a thing to-night.'

Maudie said much about the same, though she came very strong and chattered away like a good one. But she said she would do the best she could, and the spirit that prevailed in the circle was excellent. Every one was sympathetic and disposed to be thankful for anything they could get.

Result: a séance that would have been wonderful had we only had a few ladies to balance the positive forces. Every one in the room was visited by some one; Jacob Clute four or five, myself three, with messages from a number of others. The most pleasing test of the evening, however, came in connection with Mr. Morgan, a young man who had attended only one or two séances and had received nothing. Being a quiet, sensible fellow, with good common sense, and no superstition to make him indisposed to accept anything against his church, he had seen that there was something in it and was willing to wait till his time came. In the course of the séance out came an Indian, and was helped out by Jacob Clute, when he went straight to Morgan, and grasped his hand and that of the next sitters. He was unable to stay, however, and retired hastily to the cabinet. There was a dispute between two of the other gentlemen as to whom that Indian came for, as one of them claimed to be a medium, with an Indian control, and wanted to know if it was 'Wolf,' or 'Big Chief.' Then we began to sing, and, while another spirit was out, suddenly the Indian made a rush for Morgan and dragged him back to the cabinet.

When Morgan returned he had seen his first friend, and knew it. He had thought he recognized him at the first coming, but had purposely refrained from admitting it till sure. The Indian was a man he had known well in his boyhood at the Thousand Islands, from whence he came, being a native of Wolfe Island, in those parts. I never saw one so pleased as he was to get such an unexpected visit from a man he knew, beyond a doubt, to be dead and buried.

At the same séance I received a message from a lady whom I did not know had gone to the other side, she proving her identity by reminding me of writing to her of the death of her brother in battle many years since.

Altogether we had a séance much beyond the ordinary, and the only indication of lack of well-balanced power came when the spirits tried to illumine the figures. Instead of luminous garments they could only manage to get up spots, patches and stripes of light on portions of the dress, not complete. The séance lasted an hour and a half.

MATERIALIZATION.

Written for the Banner of Light, after Witnessing the Form Manifestations at Mrs. Williams's Séances.

BY DR. DEAN CLARKE.

The greatest wonder of this age,
So full of marvels grand,
Confounds alike the learned and sage
Who seek to understand.

We boast the prowess of our might,
Which binds the lightning's flame,
That makes it light our streets by night,
And then our thought proclaim.

We boast of arts yet in their prime
Which conquer time and space,
But now has come a Power sublime
That beats us in the race.

A Power Divine with magic skill
Commands "the dead" to rise,
And lo! they come by might of will,
And then MATERIALIZE!

By science grand Two Worlds unite
Where time and space both end;
Now mind has gained the wondrous might
With matter to rebiend.

This grandest triumph of all time
Will give this age its fame;
'T will flame in prose and glow in rhyme,
With glory for its frame!

Now "death's cold flood" does not divide
Us from our friends so dear:
A bridge now spans the rolling tide
O'er which they re ppear.

We know our loved ones are not dead
When these bright forms we see;
We need not faith, but have instead
Their proved reality!

We grasp again the "vanished hand,"
And hear the well-known voice;
Again unite our household band,
And well may we rejoice!

E'en "doubting Thomas" doubts no more
His resurrected friend,
Who shows a form like that he bore
Ere mortal life did end.

As angels came on Mamre's plain,
And Jesus to his loved,
So spirits clothe their forms again
And Life Divine is proved.

Oh! who would not the chance embrace
A séance to attend—
To meet the loved ones face to face,
And talk as friend with friend?

To clasp them in his arms once more
And give the loving kiss—
To talk with them of days of yore
And of their present bliss.

'T would seem so great a boon should be
By every one embraced,
But thousands still refuse to see,
Lest they should be disgraced!

The bigots scorn this fact so grand,
And skeptics won't believe;
They 're sure there is some "sleight-of-hand"
Their senses to deceive.

And so they raise the cry of "Fraud,"
And talk it day and night,
While each "expose" they loud applaud,
With seeming great delight!

Why marvel we if fraud is found?
'T is ev'rywhere, in sooth—
And Judases may still abound,
Betraying this great truth.

That spirits can materialize
'T is idle to dispute;
Not all the fraud that knaves devise
This fact can now refute!

The proof is found in ev'ry age,
And in all lands and climes;
'T is writ on many a sacred page,
And SEEN in modern times.

Then let us cease to scoff and sneer,
To cavil and to doubt;
The fraud ere long shall disappear—
The truth shall cast it out.

Oh! may this last and greatest proof
That spirits do return,
Soon entrance find 'neath ev'ry roof
Where hearts in sorrow yearn.

May our dear friends more often come
To greet our longing sight,
And fill with joy each vacant home,
And make sad hearts more light.

God grant they may materialize
Till doubt shall flee away,
And mortals ALL shall see arise
THE PHŒNIX OF TO-DAY!

Original Essay.

WHAT IS SELFISHNESS?

BY A. F. MELCHERS.

Selfishness is that impulse of the human soul which acts for a negative effect—being the opposite of that impulse which acts for an entirely positive effect, love, so-called.

Being an epitome of the universe, this is quite natural, for the latter constitutes a condition of law, or an equilibrium having equal proportions of positive and negative impetus or force, and according the same to all life-conditions emanating from it.

But in its passage through matter as a living epitome or an essence of the original, it is so surrounded by the former that it needs to exercise its whole impetus or force to combat its way out, or to a condition of self-consciousness—this being reached in its first human incarnation; or, rather, the attainment of self-consciousness constituting a human soul-condition, and unfolds a material or physical body accordingly, and which is known as man or that self-conscious condition of life which is enabled to reason with deliberation, will with authority, and love with judgment or discrimination. Of course this is not to be compared with man in his enlightened state, but nevertheless it is far enough above the animal state to note the difference very markedly, and it is this difference which makes one a God while the other remains but an animal eternally.

As well as a superior positive soul-impetus over the negative and the animal nature surrounding the soul constitutes perfection, so-called, i. e., the soul's release from material nature and law, so we may imagine that a superior soul-condition, in the main, over the animal impetus as a life-entity, must be necessary to constitute a human condition or a soul-condition freed from the animal state, i. e., having an interior or soul-impetus of at least 51 to 49 of animal impetus, but naturally reaching the human state with a soul-condition as nature created it, namely, an equal proportion of positive and negative force in the soul itself.

As a primitive being, man may thus be regarded as having an interior or soul-nature with a life-force of 51 to a surrounding material or exterior life-condition of 49—the soul-nature acting for an intelligent effect, while the physical (or its counterpart, the spirit-body,) acts for a sensuous or animalistic effect.

The aim of man in connection with matter is, first, to overcome the animalistic or the sensuous impetus of his spirit-body. In accomplishing this he purifies his spirit-body, or that aural envelope which has surrounded and followed the soul-nature up from its primitive incarnation in matter to its human state, for without this the soul could not have remained intact, or retained its individualized condition, and thus the active animal impulses existing in the lower races of mankind. But in overcoming his animalism, the spirit-body changes from a semi-material or non-transparent state, to a purely magnetic or spiritual condition, and translucent or transparent according to its purification from animalism or animal sensuousness.

While combating his material impulses, man has a struggle with his negative soul-condition as well—his selfishness so called—and in overcoming this his soul-nature changes from a universal life or low condition to a superior one, or one that is in harmony with the positive impetus of nature exclusively. But on the contrary, if he permits his negative soul-impulse to control him, or govern him without combating it with his positive, he simply sinks below the demarcation line of universal nature in comparison to the force which the negative impulse of the soul has attained.

Although there is no return to the animal state, yet man may, at physical death, have fallen below the state he found himself in at birth, and not only be compelled to reïncarnate himself to regain that lost positivity, but may, through ignorance of the fact, continue his negative soul-impulse, and fall still lower, and thus continue until experience has taught him the difference, or the cause of his discontent or unhappiness which a soul-rapport with the negative part of universal nature conduces.

During this time, he may have or have not purified his spirit body. If no attempt has been made to overcome his animal nature, his spirit-body retains its gross condition, and is naturally attracted to conditions comporting with its sensuousness. If partly freed, he will be attracted to higher conditions, and if positive in soul-nature, will probably be entirely freed from reïncarnation, although but comparatively few in the lower races attain this power—it requiring either an almost thoroughly purified spirit-body to prevent reïncarnation, or a positive soul-force whose impetus overbalances the lacking purification of spirit. Thus twenty per cent. of animalism left in the spirit-body at physical death must be neutralized or counterbalanced by at least twenty-one per cent. of positive soul-force, or soul-impulse acting in favor of the positive side of universal nature. In other words, about twenty-one points over the demarcation line if understood in a way to be thus measured.

Thus it is natural for some people to be benevolent and others selfish—it depending altogether on the positive or negative soul-impetus attained during their past or their passage through matter up to the time that we find them as mortals.

Now it is not necessarily said, either, that every human soul enters life with equal proportions of positive and negative soul-force. As some animals are exceedingly conscientious, considerate, faithful, good-natured, kind and affectionate, we may believe that this is due to a positive interior or soul-state, attained perhaps by accident, association with mortals or otherwise, and thus in reaching the human condition, enter it as beings naturally endowed with love, or positive soul-impetus. Other animals, again, are ungrateful, selfish and repelling or hateful. If such reach the human condition in this negative soul-state, they naturally become selfish mortals, and may account for the extremely savage nature of some primitive races, and the docile or friendly nature of others of this class. Would it not be quite natural that the spirit-world should associate themselves with one of the latter races for the benefit of the world generally, and thus leave a record which accords to them the honor of being one of "God's chosen people"?

If positivity constitutes love, then a portion of humanity, at all events, were in accord with the positive condition of nature, and the world had a nucleus to operate on for this effect. Whether the Israelites were the only ones of this category, or whether others existed in other portions of the globe to whom the spirit-world had access by virtue of their positivity, is indifferent. Christianity, at all events, found its birth in Judea and formed the basis for the world's present civilization. But this does not accord to all the present Israelites or Christians a positive soul-condition. In the first place, many may have fallen again who were once there, and many of the lower races may have been incarnated amongst the same for their individual elevation, and this accounts for the many negative or selfish souls that now sojourn in their midst.

But soul-positivity has asserted itself again, and again empowered the spirit-world to find a foothold on earth, and of which the Spiritualists now form the nucleus. Let it remain so. Love forms the basis for this effect, and by keeping the positive impulses of the soul active, we will not only retain this spiritual intercourse permanently, but also leave a record which accords to us the honor of having been another of "God's chosen people," who did not let slip the balance of power by falling back into soul-negativity, or selfishness so-called. Knowing the difference now, let us hold fast to the spiritual. Love embraces all that which is pure, upright, honest, high-minded, forgiving and charitable, while selfishness constitutes the opposite: intemperance, lust, worldlyism, pomp, ostentation, pride, haughtiness, conceit, vanity, self-sufficiency, arrogance, envy, jealousy, hatred, vindictiveness, penuriousness, avarice, dishonesty, malice, slander, lack of consideration for others in our daily affairs, lack of sympathy for those who serve us, or whom circumstances place under our surveillance, care or authority, and lack of conscientiousness for those who take an interest in our advancement both materially and spiritually, or who aid us in obtaining our share of worldly allowance.

Such are the teachings conveyed by the new dispensation and the influx of light showered upon us from the inhabitants of the positive condition of the universe, and who constitute the angelic visitants that come to every household where love is predominant. Let love rule, therefore, for this makes us positive to selfish or negative influences, and finally frees us from all that which has been the cause of the world's misery and darkness—from selfishness!

Letter from Mrs. Richings.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Having business of a private nature in Ashland, O., I was invited to spend the evening of the 25th inst. at the residence of Mr. Cluggston, a hint being given at the time of the invitation that the friends would like to hear from my guides.

A goodly number, made up of the active, not-ashamed-to-own-it Spiritualists and Orthodox church-members (even Rev. D. B. Duncan's flock being represented) gathered in the parlor, at 7:30, and for two hours listened with unflagging attention while the spirit in control answered the questions presented and dilated on the thoughts they suggested.

"The Personality of God," "Salvation by Grace," and "What is Death?" were among the subjects handled, and the remarks made at the close of the discourse, by some who had never heard a Spiritualist lecture, testified to the "words fitly spoken."

By the way, ever since Bro. Duncan's peculiar(!) sermon on "Christianity versus Spiritualism," delivered something over a year ago in the Presbyterian Church of this town and editorially commented upon by the BANNER OF LIGHT and other spiritual papers, he and a number of the deacons and leading members of his church have been gratuitously supplied with spiritualistic literature by some unknown but diligent believer in "this hell-born superstition," worker in "the service of the devil," and frequenter of "the haunts of wickedness"—to quote the choice and Christian-like phraseology of that harangue—and it is said that the minister's face is a study when he unlocks his box in the post-office. Such remarks are frequently made as "I think Bro. Duncan wishes he had n't preached that sermon!" "Got more than he bargained for, did n't he?" etc. It 's easy to see where the ministerial shoe pinches. If people are allowed to think, they may come to know, and then "Othello's occupation is gone."

The preaching of that sermon has done good. It has aroused the Spiritualists here from the apathy into which they had fallen; and instead of frightening church-members from investigation has stimulated their interest and whetted their curiosity.

[From the Woman's News.]

Prose and Poetry at Funerals.

They had the poor woman in a fifty-dollar coffin. The beautiful bunch of white roses in the one hand that was exposed did not conceal the marks of toil on her fingers, the calloused places, the distended joints and the rough skin. Her iron-gray hair was neatly brushed down on the sides of her wrinkled forehead, and the black silk gown, folded so gracefully about her, was full of lustre, new, and evidently expensive. There were ten hacks for friends of the family, and the hearse was driven by a man in livery, and had eight costly plumes on top. "How natural she looked, and what a lovely funeral," said a woman who had known the family.

"How unnatural she looked, and what an inhuman thing that funeral was," said a male cynic who accompanied her.

"Why?"

"Because there was a good woman, a hard-working wife and mother who never had a ride in a hack, whose fingers never pressed a flower, and who never wore silk. She did n't have any time and did n't have money. Now look at her. Flowers rare and sweet in her dead hands, lots of carriages following her hearse, and a costly shroud for a body which in life was deemed none too good for a thirty-cent worsted. A queer world this, which ignores fashion in life and falls a blind votary to it in death!"

☞ A correspondent of the Boston Evening Record says:

"In 'Grace Greenwood's' letter in your issue of Saturday she uses the name of Guelph as applied to the family of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. I wish to know if that is correct; allowing that Guelph is the family name (which, by the way, I have often seen disputed) of the house of Hanover, is it proper to call the children by the mother's name, and not by the father's. Suppose her name was Smith, and that of her husband Robinson, would the children be called Smith? I think not. That, however, is the exact state of the case. The family are assuredly Coburgs, or they are not their father's children. The queen herself is the last of her line, and when she dies the last of the Guelphs disappear. In a similar way the names of the different families at different periods have been applied to the royal line. Anne's name was Stewart because she came from the family which succeeded to the purple by marrying the last female of the line of Bruce. Elizabeth was a Tudor, because she belonged to the family of that name, who succeeded by marrying the Princess Elizabeth of York. The race was all Tudors until it died out. It is just the same with the present dynasty. The Guelphs will disappear on the death of the Queen, and her family will then succeed as the house of Coburg."

☞ Miss M. T. Shelhamer is one of the most valuable contributors to the literature of Modern Spiritualism. She is unpretentious, possesses rare gifts as an enlightened woman and medium, and devotes her time to the demands of the age for the proofs of a continuous and natural existence beyond mortal life. Her last work, "Outside the Gates," is one of practical merit and intelligent illustration of spirit-life. —Light on the Way.

HAVERHILL.—W. W. Currier writes as follows regarding Miss Jennie B. Hagan and her recent work at Unity Hall in this place: "The audiences steadily grew larger during her engagement—not only in numbers but in interest in her mode of conducting the services, by calling for questions from those present at every session. The people are beginning to think, and no person can think without questioning; and when the opportunity is afforded, as in the case of Miss Hagan and her spiritual influences, to give intelligent and reasonable elucidations to proper questions, an audience at once becomes interested—at least such has been the result in this engagement. The questioners have at all times presented queries that were well calculated to call out sound thought upon the live issues of the day; and the replies have been earnest and to the point—bringing the speaker and her hearers in close sympathy to a degree that a lasting impression for good has been accomplished.

The poetical improvisations have also been a marked feature at every service—having been listened to in each instance in perfect quiet until the very close of the last verse.

The services on Sunday, Jan. 29th, were unusually interesting, the replies to the questions being given in a forcible and convincing manner at both services. Twenty-three questions were thus presented, and all of them were carefully treated in brief but comprehensive fashion.

At the close of the evening service the following vote of thanks was passed as a slight mark of appreciation of Miss Hagan's labors during her engagement:

Realizing the efficient labors and womanly deportment of Miss Jennie B. Hagan during her engagement just closing with this Society, we desire to acknowledge the same by extending to her our heartfelt sympathy and best wishes for the good work done while she has been with us. We also wish to thank her for kindnesses received in our behalf in giving her best effort in two evening entertainments. In parting we bid her Godspeed in her ministerial labors, as she travels from city to city and from State to State, until she shall come among us again."

BOSTON.—Alice P. Torrey, Secretary of the First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society, writes: "Our beautiful observance of devoting one day of the year to the memory of the sister and brother members whose names are enrolled upon a whiter and purer scroll than ours, but who are happier for our remembrance, was one that will long be recollected by those who participated in its exercises. The gifted, talented sister, Mrs. Abbie M. H. Tyler, who at a preceding service read the beautiful essay prepared by her in honor of our departed loved ones, was the first to fall by the wayside, stricken by disease, weary and faint, pierced by many a thorn on life's tortuous path. Sister, thou hast but led the way—the way we are all to follow; we miss thy cordial greeting, but we stand submissively, with a sublime faith in thy blessed gain, Immortality!

Two other members have been added to the list by this year's flight, viz: Miss Hannah Ball, and Mr. Geo. W. Smith, long and reverently known as one of our best helpers. In his own simple and unpretending manner, and with an earnest, frank sincerity, his hand and heart were open and ever ready to respond to the many calls incident to our work of relief to suffering humanity. He was characterized by an honest desire to know the truth, and an uncompromising fidelity to his highest convictions.

Loved ones, our loss we deeply feel, but rejoice in the hope that from a higher sphere your spirits may bend to loving tasks; though our ranks here may be thinned, the band of invisible helpers is strengthened and increased by your passing on.

With the demise of Bro. Smith the Society lost a great helper; now that he is gone—as to visible presence—we must work like earnest, thoughtful women, and with a sincerity that shall bless the world.

Let us say to the many loving hearts that have put their hands to the helm and aided the work in which the Society is engaged: To our way of thinking you cannot be employed in a better work, or in one that will pay more surely in the end. Heaven, out of its infinite storehouse, will surely reward you."

BOSTON.—Mrs. E. Russell writes: "Wishing to consult a medium on business, I was advised to visit Mrs. W. A. Rich as one of the best. Addressing me, on my arrival, by my name, she described my mother so correctly that it seemed as though I saw her standing before me. The tests given by her convinced me the kind Father permits our spirit-friends to lead and direct us.

Mrs. Rich gave me advice about business in a marvelous way. By her guidance all has ended well; everything happened just as her control predicted.

Having received help, and being sure she had great power of advising, I called at her parlors to have another sitting. The object of my call was to help a family, a member of which had become a habitual drinker. Through her, the boy, we feel sure, has been saved.

I should have liked any one who at times loses faith in his or her spirit-friends to have heard what I did on these occasions. May the Great Spirit aid Mrs. Rich in the good work which she so faithfully performs."

LOWELL.—Isaac C. Morse writes, Jan. 29th: "This has been a sort of Thanksgiving day among the Spiritualists of this city as regards the dispensing of spiritual food. We have had with us that born orator, Dr. F. H. Roscoe, of Providence, R. I., and his gifted companion, Mrs. Roscoe. Larger audiences than usual welcomed Dr. Roscoe's controls, and every one listened with close attention and profound admiration to the eloquent discourses.

We were favored with the close attention of a reporter from the most influential daily paper in our city, a circumstance which never happened before in the history of our Society, and which shows that interest is being awakened regarding the glorious truths of our beautiful philosophy.

Dr. Roscoe's guides chose for the subject of their afternoon discourse: 'Is Spiritualism True or False?' and for the evening meeting: 'What the world owes to inspiration.' Both of these themes were treated in a masterly manner. The medium was the recipient of much praise also because of the correctness of his psychometric readings."

Pennsylvania.

MYERSTOWN.—J. H. Bassler writes that, being in New York City on a recent Sunday, he visited in the forenoon Adelphi Hall, and was much pleased with the ripe thought and perfect diction of Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham.

In the afternoon he attended a meeting for tests, at 52 Madison Square, which was presided over by Mrs. A. L. Pennell, late of Boston—at which it was his privilege to receive quite a number of satisfactory communications personal to himself.

In the evening he visited Columbia Hall, where Dr. Henry Slade recounted many of the leading events in his career as a medium, and Dr. D. C. Dake, in a brief address, made a fitting close to the exercises.

The stay of this brother in New York had been made on this occasion to include Sunday (something he had never before tried), and he was so much pleased with his experiences that he states his intention of following the same course hereafter when business takes him to that city—a method which he recommends to all having sympathy with the spiritual movement who may make a visit to that locality from the country.

"Some months ago," he writes, "we worried through the 'Preliminary Report' of the Seybert Commission. We are now more amazed than ever that the educated gentlemen sitting on that Commission could so contrive to miss all the grand facts of Spiritualism when such a convincing array of spiritual phenomena can be taken in in two short days.

In our sitting with Dr. Slade [held the Saturday previous] in broad sunlight, the same phenomena as those mentioned in a recent issue of the BANNER took place. We also witnessed a table, some distance from the Doctor, rise from the floor over a foot in the air. The writer was patted and caressed by a feminine hand, and when asked who it was, writing was immediately heard going on under a slate lying on the table, and on examination this answer was found written: "It was I. Emma." Another highly prized and most endearing manifestation was the receipt of two messages from loved ones in spirit-life, each message covering one entire side of a slate, and these were written while the Doctor held the slates on our left arm and shoulder, the act of writing being heard so distinctly that seemingly the sound of every pencil stroke could be distinguished. These messages, instinct with a sweet spirit of peace and love, and touching upon things which only those near to us could possibly know, are very precious; and these alone would be sufficient to convince us that the curtain between the seen and the unseen world is indeed lifted."

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—E. P. Goodsell writes: "Why search the Scriptures? and why think ye that ye may find therein the proofs of the immortal life? Regarding these Scriptures as the only inspired word of God, they ought to tell man plainly whether or not he is immortal. But search therein fails to find testimony at all satisfactory upon a matter so important as is that of the life or death of the human.

The expounders oft repeat their own words: 'Search the Scriptures; for in them life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel.' It is worthy of note that they call the Scriptures the 'gospel of glad tidings.' But here we search again in vain to find when, where and how life and immortality are brought to light in the Bible. If they are not revealed therein, then in no sense shall we regard it as the vehicle of 'glad tidings of great joy.' The mother called to part with the object of her deep and abiding love, the pet of the household, inquires in her sorrow of the teacher of the flock: 'What has become of my child?' He turns to the book and with solemn visage reads: 'The dead shall be raised.' 'But,' she asks, 'is my child dead?' He replies, 'Yes'; but to give what consolation the book offers, adds: 'The dead shall be raised at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible.' The anguished heart of the mother demands: 'When shall these things be?' and his reply is virtually: 'A million years hence, or innumerable ages in the future, your child may be raised to life and a state of conscious existence.' Such an explanation comes very far short of meeting the requirements of the mourning parent, and she naturally feels to reply: 'If this is the way that your book provides, through which only immortality may be obtained, I feel a very strong impression that the grave will remain undisturbed eternally, and that the blotting out of existence of my child and of myself, in common with the race of humanity, will be of like duration and destiny.'

The Bible is not happy in its declarations—if the hope of life and immortality is to be regarded as implicitly upheld by its teachings—when it says: 'Man dieth and goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets'; 'The dead know not anything'; 'For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest.' In what sense can the pulpit, whose utterances are canonically confined to the limits of the so-called 'sacred volume,' show that future life and immortality are not mythical?

The ancient Egyptian and Grecian philosophers had certain knowledge that immortality was a natural sequence of physical life. They fully recognized the returning spirits of their own kin, holding through media daily converse with them. How, in after centuries, spirit-communion came to be suppressed, the early Christian fathers can tell if they will. Through its suppression, knowledge of the higher life has in large measure been hidden from the sight of the people; so that now, the religious, scripturally-taught mortal finds no reliable pathway to the grand fact of the ever-present, conscious existence of his loved ones in the spiritual state.

Why, then, should the people search the Scriptures for a reliable pathway, when for so many years they have failed to disclose the evidence that immortality is a sublime truth? The return of decarnated spirits to the earth-plane gives the only satisfactory and reliable proof of a conscious, individualized life for humanity beyond the dissolution of the body, and answers the question: 'If a man die, shall he live again?' in the light of reason with an emphatic and incontrovertible 'Yes.'"

ALBANY.—J. D. Chism, Jr., Secretary, writes Jan. 30th: "Prof. J. W. Cadwell, the 'mesmerist,' is now filling a highly successful engagement with the First Spiritual Society of Albany. The Society will be benefited in a financial point of view by having a goodly addition to its treasury, which is needed at present—large debts having been contracted in fitting up the new hall, which will seat about five hundred persons, and is but one flight of stairs from the street.

Prof. Cadwell prefaces his mesmeric entertainments with about a half-hour talk, in which he gives the audience a few facts and proofs of the truth of our beloved Spiritualism. Then begins a series of instructive and extremely amusing experiments in 'Mesmerism,' that keep the audience in a continuous roar of laughter for about two hours.

Our Society has been benefited very substantially by the Professor during his two weeks' stay here, and we shall keep him, if possible, during the month of February. We cheerfully recommend Spiritualist societies that are poorly off financially to engage Prof. Cadwell for a few weeks.

Mr. J. Frank Baxter lectured and gave tests last Friday night to a large and attentive audience; at the close of the lecture he gave about a dozen tests of spirit presence. The Society has engaged his services for February, 1889.

Mr. Bishop A. Beals will be with us through the month of March. We understand that Mr. Beals has developed the gift of psychometric readings, and if so we are sure of a highly successful engagement.

The month of April is not provided for as yet, and the Society desires to make engagements for May and June."

Michigan.

LANSING.—Mrs. Lunt Parker writes: "I came to Lansing Dec. 1st, 1887, and found it a pleasant place and the people very much interested in Spiritualism. They had then no meetings here, but kindly rented a hall for me to lecture in for a few Sundays, with such good results that now they have organized a society called the Peoples' Spiritual Progressive Union. The officers elected are as follows: President, Henry E. Porter; Vice President, Samuel P. Buck; Secretary, Mrs. C. W. Ayres; Treasurer, Dr. A. W. Edson. It is now in a flourishing condition, and it appears that the people of Lansing have awakened to their duty and are coming to the front, proclaiming to the world that it is good to know more of the future while remaining in this mundane condition.

I desire to thank the people here for their hospitality and friendship while I have been among them, and especially Mr. and Mrs. Ayres, at whose house I stayed some three weeks.

The friends here have talent enough to produce excellent results if it was only brought out; that is what I propose to do through my developing classes, and make Lansing one of the places that Spiritualism can live and grow in."

New Hampshire.

MANCHESTER.—"A Manchester Spiritualist" writes that "Mrs. Jennie K. D. Conant, of Boston, closed Jan. 15th her third successful engagement with us this season. Mrs. Conant has called together the largest audiences of any speaker we have had the present season. The power of her controls in their lectures and improvising of poems upon subjects furnished by the audience, is very remarkable. Mrs. C. we consider one of the best psychometrists we have had before our Society. Her readings were wonderful to her hearers. Many of these readings were given to utter strangers to spiritual phenomena, who seemed astonished at the gift she had to reveal the history of their past lives.

She came to us a stranger, has sown good seed of spiritual truths amongst us, and has made many friends. We extend to her our heartfelt thanks, and recommend her to all societies desiring a good speaker and reliable psychometrist."

District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON.—Charles O. Pierson writes: "Mrs. M. W. Leslie, a lady well known in Boston, and throughout New England, recently fulfilled a month's engagement on our rostrum. She was well received, and made a great impression—particularly among the so-called skeptics. She is surrounded by a band of intellectual spirits, who do not lose sight of the fact that it is only by appeals to the reason that they can carry conviction to the soul. Her platform tests are excellent. The many friends she made during her stay among us hope to welcome her again in their midst at some future time."

IF A MAN DIE,

Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.
It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.
It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

Essence and Substance:

A TREATISE ON

Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,

Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.
It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

Testimony in Spite of the Witness.

The book entitled "Light on the Hidden Way," which contains an introduction by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, is duly set forth to the reader in the advertising columns of THE BANNER, and attention is herewith again directed to its announcement. Its perusal is certain to inspire a profound comfort in the heart of every reader, and carry fresh and abiding conviction of the blessed truth of Spiritualism.

It is specially of this book that Gail Hamilton has written certain articles in the Boston Journal, one entitled "Spiritual Visitations" and the other "Spirit-Land," which, if anything, furnish additional proof of the ceaseless working of spiritual thought in the great body of mind around us. Describing the author of the book in question, Gail Hamilton says that she is a woman outside of Spiritualism, unacquainted with Spiritualism, giving us what professes to be her own experience with excarnated spirits. She is endorsed by Rev. Dr. Clarke as a person who is regarded by many intelligent and cultivated men and women who are her personal friends as sincere, truthful, and conscientious. Dr. Clarke likewise states that she is firmly persuaded of the reality of what she narrates; but Gail Hamilton thinks that is not quite correct, holding one of the most convincing features of the narrative to be that the writer seems not to be firmly persuaded of the truth of her story, inasmuch as she is constantly haunted by the fear that she is the victim of hallucination. Yet the only cause assigned for this suspected hallucination is that "her personal confidence is overcome by the immense weight of the world's incredulity." It will be found that this consciousness of the prevalent incredulity is in most cases the bugbear that scares good and honest hearts from the acceptance of truths that are awaiting their recognition as a long and earnestly desired revelation. "Her incredulity," remarks Gail Hamilton, "is the natural working of a well-informed mind," of course implying—does she not?—that a more firm belief would be the evidence of an ill-informed mind. This single remark of Gail's shows her own idolatry of the common bugbear.

The writer of the book holds constant and free communion with her father, who asks her, among other things, if she cannot understand "that some gifts are exceptions," and if she will dare decide upon the value of her own and bury it in the ground. Yet, says Gail again, this same woman, whose incredulity is the "natural working of a well-informed mind," feels that "a dead loss of faith in this experience (with the spirit of her father) would be a loss of all faith in any future." This same experience has accompanied her from her childhood, has never seemed unnatural to her, has been a part of her daily life. Will she be good enough to tell us what relation an experience of this sort bears to either a well or an ill-informed mind? In attempting to answer this question she will be sure to bring her incredulity theory to the ground.

There is "nothing ghostly or fearsome in her visions," says Gail, of the woman in question: "It is rather a glowing thread of light interwoven with the sombre lines of her life." While with ordinary people she feels like one walking with those born blind, who cannot comprehend the beauty of sunshine and sweet faces. Her mother died when she was a babe, yet she has always known her mother's face and felt her ministrations. And "she feels as if her father's eyes were always upon her." At funerals she sees the lost one present and sympathizing with the sorrowful, and "hears the chorus of heavenly voices seeming to swell the parting hymn into a song of rejoicing and welcome to the new comer."

The author of this book believes her discernment to be a spiritual faculty, entirely independent of the senses. There can be, of course, says Gail, but little corroborative testimony to what she avers, but she is perfectly willing to admit that Rev. Dr. Clarke has done all that is necessary to be done in giving us assurances of her truthfulness. The narrative is to be subjected to the test of its reasonableness. And thus subjecting it, she unhesitatingly declares that it is the only one of all pretended communications from the unseen world which "carries moral force enough to account for itself." The assumed spirits "dwell entirely on character. Whatever their source," says Gail, "this woman, whose days are filled to overflowing with practical duties and common rounds of cares, has given us ideas of duty and truth which are harmonious with the latest conclusions of the deepest thinkers," and "touch the very basis of morality." There is no indication, she adds, that she thought them out herself.

By way of illustrating her views on the phase of the mediumship in question, Gail recites a trifling incident that occurred when the writer of this book was a girl of but ten years. She was dusting the floor all around a rug, and had started to leave the room when she saw her father (a spirit) standing on the rug, and intently looking down upon it. Raising his eyes to hers, he told her to lift one end of it. She did so, and felt the significant rebuke. He improved the lesson to impress it upon her that no act or thought is hidden, any more than the rug could hide the dust collected under it, and that every slighted duty is a sin against the ideal life. If, now, any one were to say that this is "pretty small doings for an angel," Gail is all ready to make answer that "our moral perspective is not correctly adjusted"; that "nothing is small that bears on character"; that "fidelity to duty, irrespective of the size of the duty, is fit work for all worlds." Gail is forced to confess that she should far sooner expect such manifestations of the loving care of spirits for those left behind to always occur than that they never would occur. "There are a thousand indications," she asserts, "that the presence of pure spirit may not be perceived by spirit still involved in matter. There is no inherent probability that pure spirit is incapable of discerning or influencing spirit not yet cleared from matter."

We do not see but what the minute and apparently trivial means and methods of which spirits avail themselves to convey a sense of their presence, and impress their lessons on mortal recognition, the little rapping and the table-tipping included, are not reasonably vindicated by this ready acceptance of the wise spiritual use made of a common rug. Gail rather thinks it requires some courage to give a simple narrative like this to a world that "demands from the unseen universe impossible tidings." But how does she account for such a demand except on the basis of an ignorant and superstitious conception of that unseen universe itself, which modern Spiritualism is doing its best to overthrow? "We forget," she says, "that we are yet in a stage of existence in which knowledge is communicated only through the senses." Therefore she jumps gladly to the conclusion that spirits cannot communicate to us what we cannot cognize through the physical senses. No revelation has yet overstepped the boundaries of the symbolism of this world. Imagination may make new combinations, but it cannot create material. 'All, therefore," she says, and says it well, "that any revelation can do is to use this world in its best types as indicative of the other."

The author of this book is cited as answering to the question—what seemed the most impressive fact disclosed by the unseen life—it is the perfect order of the universe. Every soul finds its level and place. Therein consists the unity of moral and material law. There can be but one law, or order, and it must run through the universe. The friends of the author in the invisible world teach her that death does not change one's nature, but that the unclothed soul is forced to see its own condition and pass judgment on itself. In the white light of the spiritual atmosphere, the sensual life at once shows the blackness of its stains. This light of heaven is a purifying rather than a punitive flame, but to him who has loved and lived in darkness it brings an almost intolerable pain. And to the soul that has attained more nobility of character than it was conscious of it brings an unexpected joy.

The communications of these "assumed spiritual beings," concludes Gail Hamilton, teach a God of science, of logic, of the devoutest religion, and a gospel of purity, of human service, of stern fidelity to truth and duty. In her judgment they are in perfect and impressive accord with the highest conclusions of the intellect, the tenderest aspirations of the heart, the sternest dictates of the conscience. And she thinks that to this extent they demand recognition.

Finally she asks, as if she could no longer withhold the inquiry—what is there in the history of the visible world that is forever to bar it from conscious connection with the invisible world? She confesses that "progress has always been in that direction." "The epic of civilization," she truthfully declares, "is the epic of spiritualization." From the rough material has been carved artistic beauty, family consecration, religious worship. "Space has been overcome by spirit upon the earth. It is but a single step outward, onward, to annihilate space beyond the earth, to penetrate the earth-quality itself.... There is a spiritual body as well as a natural body. Why is it not possible that humanity, in vital relations with both worlds, in orderly development from the same clod, from the savage to the lightning-tamer, the beauty-builder, the scientific saint, shall presently arrive—is even now touching at a point of intercommunication with the spiritual world? Man knows that it exists within him. For the greater part, he knows that it exists without him. The mutual relations of the two are but dimly discerned, but slightly understood. There is nothing in the past to demonstrate or to indicate that the world of matter has reached its utmost refinement, or that its relations with the world of spirit have attained their closest intimacy."

A writer for Spiritualism could hardly say more. One readily detects in what Gail Hamilton has to say of the acknowledged manifestations her lingering respect for the prevalent prejudice against it which she has conveniently named incredulity; and at the same time it is instructive to hear her bear witness to the truth that all spirit-revelation must be made through earth symbolisms, and that all spirit-communication must be addressed to the physical sense.

Only Spiritualism's "John the Baptist."

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's lecture, appearing on our first page—and for which we are indebted to the Chicago Times—will be found, on examination, to be eminently fitted for perusal at a season when there seems to be a concerted movement on the part of divers anti-spiritual hypnotists, "psychic researchers," et al., to explain away(!) Spiritualism on the basis of mesmeric influence and control.

Those who wish to achieve a clear comprehension of the utter fallacy set forth in the "hypnotic" solution so confidently depended on in certain quarters, are reminded that one of the oldest among the veteran mesmeric operators in America to-day, and a man now prominently before the public—viz.: Professor J. W. Cadwell—is also firm and immovably decided in his adherence to the Spiritualist cause, and uses his mesmeric gifts possessed by him while in the body, as an illustration to his audiences of what the spirit of man may be able to accomplish when freed by decease from the limitations necessarily attending the exercise of mental and esoteric power by mortals yet in the physical form. Prof. Cadwell takes the position (as also did Prof. Denton in his day) that there is no conflict between mesmerism and Spiritualism from which straight-laced scientists can hope to receive any comfort: That mesmerism was merely a forerunner, preparing the way for the broader knowledge furnished in due time by the latter to all who dared to draw nigh and investigate.

After years of struggle with the world's "Gradgrinds," mesmerism, under the new name of "hypnotism," seems in certain quarters to have grown very "scientific," and is confidently pushed forward by its whilom opponents as offering an exhaustive solution of the new truth, of whose coming advent it was, forty years ago, but the pioneer "voice of one crying in the wilderness" of human ignorance, churchial bigotry and scholastic conceit. But such efforts are to no purpose; thinking minds readily recognize that the greater includes the less, on any occasion when their superficies are compared, and will readily agree with Mrs. Richmond's guides in pronouncing the narrow and abbreviated scientifico-hypnotic explication to be utterly inadequate to cover the broad ranges of spiritual revelation.

Study of Psychic Phenomena.

The following editorial, with the above caption, we clip from our San Francisco contemporary, The Golden Gate. We give it the benefit of our extensive circulation, it is so timely and to the point:

"Probably there are no harder skeptics in the world, concerning the physical phases of psychic phenomena, than Spiritualists themselves. So pronounced is this fact that we have known excellent mediums for one phase to distrust the mediums for all other phases, and some even to go so far as to imagine themselves about the only honest mediums in the world. We are not surprised at this. These phenomena—to those not familiar therewith—are so out of the usual course of nature, so at variance with their ideas of things, that by no possibility can they bring their minds to the acceptance thereof. They see, for instance, a human form enter and disappear from a room, apparently through a solid floor or wall, and they find it much easier to believe that there must have been some secret passage way, and that form the form of a confederate, than to accept the fact of the spirit manifestation. The better the light and the more solid the form, the more are they convinced of deception. Some, who believe in the genuine manifestations in the dark, will not accept them in the light.

In our long and varied experience in all phases of spirit manifestations, we have naturally witnessed many marvelous things—some, in fact many, that required the confirmation of every physical sense which it was possible to bring to bear upon them before we were willing to admit the truth. But as these things became often repeated, and under new and varying conditions of security against the possibility of deception, they ceased to excite especial wonder—just as the growing grass, or the unfoldment and perfume of the rose, or the law of gravitation, or the swinging of a planet in its orbit, or the creation of a universe; these are facts which we accept, mysteries which we cannot deny, but which we do not try to explain.

Delve into nature wherever we may, and the occult and mysterious meet us at every step in our progress. To deny what we do not understand, is not the way to study nature. We should investigate carefully and modestly, and ever with a desire for the truth. The true scientist never denies what he does not know.

So, in our investigations of psychic phenomena, we should 'make haste slowly' and cautiously. There is not the slightest occasion for calling whoever may arrive at different conclusions from ourselves, hard names. All are entitled to their opinions, which they should be permitted to enjoy in all charity and kindness.

The wisest of us are but children groping in the dark. We should be thankful for even the slightest hint that may lead us to the light. And especially should we avoid all arrogance of opinion in our dealing with this subject."

Demise of Mrs. Mary Howitt.

The whole civilized world knew by reputation the noted authors of London, Eng., WILLIAM and MARY HOWITT. With the advent of Modern Spiritualism this worthy couple investigated the subject and became fully convinced of the reality of the phenomena, and consequently ever afterward proclaimed their belief to the world and wrote much upon the subject. Mr. Howitt passed to spirit-life some years ago, and now we learn that his widow has joined him in the bright Summer-Land. She passed on from Rome Feb. 2d, 1888, at the ripe age of eighty-four years. It is said that her parents were members of the Society of Friends. She married William Howitt in 1823. This lady was a poet and novelist; her literary works have been many—both those written alone and those prepared with the assistance of her husband. Her prose translations were also extensive. She united herself late in life with the Catholic Church, but she never gave up her belief in the Spiritual Philosophy. Thus one by one the old defenders of the New Dispensation are joining the great majority, where soul meets soul in grand reünion, to continue on in everlasting peace and love.

The Cat in the Meal.

We cannot but be forcibly struck with the statement of facts which go with the current movement for converting the Federal Constitution into an engine of bigotry and intolerance, as we find them arrayed in a recent number of the Boston Investigator by a free and fearless correspondent. It has commonly been thought, he says, that in the century of our national existence we had escaped an "effete Europeanism," because we have lived to see the dying out of many of the old dogmas of theology for lack of general respect. But he detects dangers that threaten to submerge all our fondest hopes. Romanism has begun a vigorous and carefully-planned onslaught on our system of common schools. The larger and the conservative Protestant sects declare that the Bible shall be retained in the schools, and are determined to rule or ruin unless they can mold them to their own liking. In order to carry out their design they insist on putting God and Christ in the Constitution. No Christianity is to be legal, and consequently tolerable, except it be what is known as Orthodox. Of course the heterodox will have no rights which the others are bound to respect.

To this so-called religious movement he pronounces the Woman's Christian Temperance Union auxiliary. It is something beside the cause of temperance that these zealots have at heart. It is, he declares, the welfare of Orthodoxy. The civil power is to be called in to enforce its demands. It looks like working for the public good to enlist in this new temperance movement, but there is an ulterior purpose which is not apparent at first sight. The movement, he claims, is only an annex to the God-in-the-Constitution party.

This writer also warns all who are working to secure the ballot for woman to beware what alliances they form. He asserts that the men who engineer this religious crusade care nothing for the enfranchisement of woman; but merely hold out certain inducements which are intended to benefit their own projects in the end: The Church has some ulterior motive in its present zeal for temperance and woman suffrage.

Occult Telegraphy.

The occult telegraphy of Mr. Rowley is not, it would seem, a new phenomenon in the history of Spiritualism, though it is doubtless the most perfect and practical of its kind. In 1880 peculiar sounds heard at an impromptu circle held in a telegraph office in New South Wales, were recognized by an operator present as imitations of the dots and dashes of the telegraphic instrument, and by means of them the name of a deceased "operator" was spelled out. Subsequently, a "Morse" telegraphic instrument and battery were procured, and on Aug. 17th arranged for work.

A member of the New South Wales Parliament, who in October of that year furnished the Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, with the above item of information, together with three others, held meetings for developing, if possible, this newly revealed means of communicating with the spirit-world. The experiments were progressing favorably when the unavoidable absence of one of the party necessitated a suspension of the meetings. It was designed to resume them; but our correspondent, William Johnston, of Petersham, Sidney, N. S. W., informs us that these circles were broken up soon after by the decease of the medium, Mr. Cane.

The facts, so far as given, show that various attempts have been made to establish a means of telegraphic intercourse between the two worlds, and we congratulate the operators at the unseen end of the Rowley line upon their success.

A Timely Warning.

The following is taken from Mrs. Lillie's excellent address at the Berkeley Hall Jan. 15th, which was published in full in last week's BANNER. It is a warning from the spirit-world. It is replete with wisdom. Heed it in time, friends:

"Be ye diligent as Spiritualists. You read that there is no law that can touch a spirit medium. Some of you sincerely believe that, for the good of the cause, those caught in the use of real deception in manifestations purporting to be genuine should be punished; but in your zeal be cautious that you do not call for a law which, when once enacted, can be taken into the hands of any petty tyrant and used on any medium in your ranks. It were better to bear a little in your own home circle, wisely and with your eyes open and single to the truth, than to assist a world in throttling you, as it would like to do even to-day. So I say be vigilant, be cautious, and you will find that at length, by God's own law, the truth will come uppermost, right will prevail and error vanish."

☞ The materialization séances of the BERRY SISTERS are too well known to require any special mention in these columns. It may be well, however, to remind our readers that they continue to be held at 55 Rutland street, with much satisfaction to all who attend them, forms appearing—so reported—at points where their presence is wholly unlooked for, and where their genuineness is unmistakably apparent, even to most materialistic doubters. The account lately given by Mr. E. A. Brackett, concerning the appearance of a small, translucent fold of light at the top of the cabinet at one of these séances, that, slowly descending to the floor, gradually enlarging as it did so, became his niece Bertha, who passed to him and fully identified herself, finds place in our English contemporaries Light and The Two Worlds.

☞ The Two Worlds, which we keep for sale, is an excellent paper, and American Spiritualists should have it, as the contents each week are varied and highly interesting. Mrs. Emma Hardinge-Britten, the editor, as is well known to all our people, is a talented lady as well as a veteran Spiritualist. In No. 9 Mrs. H. raps the Rev. A. Parker "over the knuckles" severely in her review of that gentleman's speech made in Cloth Hall, Colne, Dec. 11th, on "Who and What are the People's Religious Teachers?" That "minister," if anything, seems to be more stultified upon the subject he discusses than our own gentlemen of the cloth, and they are wofully ignorant in regard to the Spiritual Philosophy.

☞ That many people in Massachusetts believe that the laws governing them are, in certain respects, unsuitable—says a late number of the Boston Herald—is shown by the number and variety of the orders and petitions that have been introduced into the present Legislature. Such an array of suggested improvements is well calculated to make one doubt not only the wisdom of lawmakers but also the permanent value of any statutes that the Legislature can adopt. This is emphatically true, and should be constantly borne in mind by every freeman in the Commonwealth.

Do n't walk on salt ice unless you desire to taste salt water.

The Peculiar Legislation

into which certain parties are now seeking to inveigle the Massachusetts General Court was adverted to briefly in THE BANNER of Feb. 4th, as embodied in an order presented by Mr. McCall, of Winchester, providing that "no person or persons shall fraudulently represent or personate any spirit or deceased person at any séance or religious meeting." Subsequently Mr. McCall withdrew this order, as he felt that he did not believe in legislation in such matters, whereupon another member of the House took it upon himself to present it once more.

It was stated last week that the understanding was that special reference to séances for materialization was intended; but the difficulty in the way of framing a statute which shall at once both decide what is "fraudulent" and prepare a penalty therefor (without trenching severely on other ground not intended to be covered by the legislators), will beyond doubt stagger the ingenuity of the Judiciary Committee in whose hands the resuscitated order now rests.

The Journal of the House for Friday, Feb. 3d, sets forth that Mr. Vanderhoop of Gay Head presented on the day specified a remonstrance, put forth by Mr. A. S. Hayward, of this city, against any legislation in regard to spirit manifestations.

This remonstrance against a special law being enacted bearing upon spirit manifestations of any form or nature, took the ground that "fraud" connected with spirit-manifestations, or the affairs of any other religious organization, should be reached by the general laws of the State in such matters; and argued that special laws would establish a dangerous precedent, the ultimate ending of whose evil and proscriptive influence no one could foresee. The Remonstrance also set forth that further legislation in religious matters was a state of things that should not be tolerated, as the spirit of the Constitution of the United States is in direct opposition thereto.

There is every indication that, should the Judiciary Committee agree upon and present a bill, it will be throttled in the Legislature, as all efforts deserve to be which aim to abridge, under whatsoever specious pretext, the reserved rights of the people.

☞ Another instance of apparent death and resuscitation, with an account of the intervening experience of the individual, is reported as having occurred six miles from Readsboro' village, Vt. An associated press telegram to the Boston daily papers says that a Mrs. Lois Bishop has experienced considerable difficulty in breathing while lying down, and has been obliged to sit up most of the time. It was while in one of these upright positions that, calling the family around her, she bade all of them good-bye, and then, to all appearance, died. She was laid out on the bed; her hands and arms turned purple, and her feet became cold. After continuing a few hours in that condition she showed signs of returning consciousness, and wine forced between her lips revived her, since which time she has been improving. After recovering she said she heard a voice saying "Mother!" It was that of her son Franklin, who died in the West fifty years ago. She also heard a voice saying "Lois!" She said "What," and then continued, "I have been greatly afflicted." This speech and word were spoken while the family thought her dead, and the wine was then given her. The last voice she heard was, she said, that of her husband, who died thirty-five years ago. The family is one of the oldest and most reputable in the town, and has lived in its present place of residence over sixty years.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—The annual meeting of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association began its sessions at Horticultural Hall, Boston, on the evening of Wednesday, Feb. 1st. Dr. W. I. Bowditch, as Chairman, made the opening remarks. He was followed by Miss Adelaide A. Claflin, who spoke of the progress of the cause in the West; Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who claimed that if one woman desired suffrage it should be given to her, whether other women desired it or not; and Mrs. Lucy Stone, who asserted that the denial of the ballot is the withholding of a privilege, and should be considered a grievance.

Thursday was assigned for business, which included the reports of the closing year's officers and the election of a new board. The Secretary, Mrs. Cora Scott Pond, reported that the expenditures of the year ending Jan. 1st were $5009,64; balance on hand, $2023,01; and that the growth of the cause in this State the past year has been most gratifying. In the afternoon a series of resolutions offered by Mrs. Henry B. Blackwell were heartily adopted.

There was but a short interval for rest between the close of the afternoon business meeting and the social reünion and reception which brought the session to a most agreeable close. The excellent supper served at 5:30 P. M., and the reception which followed, and which was in honor of Mrs. Rebecca Moore, of England, occupied the early part of the evening.

DARWINISM IN LEGISLATION.—The time in which new business can be introduced into the Massachusetts Legislature has passed, and still no mention has been made of any enactment in the interests of old-fashioned medicine, and to compel the people to employ its practitioners by law: but on February 1st, the last day wherein new business was admissible, a petition was presented, asking for a law to regulate the veterinary practice of medicine. Doubtless the petitioner believes in the Darwinian theory, and seeks, through the dumb animal who cannot plead for the protection of its right to life, to evolve a system of medical enactment which shall enslave the human, no matter how loud his protests. Pleasantry aside, however, is it real justice to deprive by law, the owner of a valuable animal from giving it relief when in pain, and leave the whole matter at the critical moment to the chance of finding some licensed veterinary practitioner?

ANTI-VACCINATION.—Dr. Dutton and others, it is reported, have petitioned the Massachusetts Legislature for a repeal of the compulsory vaccination laws now on the statute books of this State. The movement is one in the right direction, whatever may be the success of this bold attack upon legally-entrenched prejudice. The article appearing in the THE BANNER of the 28th ult., from the pen of the late Dr. Woodruff, is a powerful document, and friends of anti-vaccination will find in it an able arraignment of Jennerism which it will be well to place in the hands of the law-makers at this time. The people should wake up to the necessity of looking out for their own interests in this matter, and not be content, as now, to leave the whole business in the hands of the M. D.s, who, after all, disagree upon this important subject.

JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN AKADEME.—An enlargement of this monthly gives space for more variety of contents than formerly. In the January issue is the paper on "Philosophy and Christianity," by Miss Lizzie Wright, read by Mrs. B. P. Drury at the December meeting of the Akadémé and a report of the discussion that followed. "Conscience" is the subject of brief essays by C. W. Duffield and Miss C. F. Daley. An interesting account is given of "Actual Transmutation of Matter." The remaining pages are occupied by "Eternity," a poem by Robert Brown, jr., M. A., "What is Life?" and "Selected Aphorisms." Bloomington, Ill.: Miss Emily Wing, Corresponding Secretary. Newark, N. J.: Alex. Wilder, 565 Orange street.

☞ A New York correspondent writes: "Mrs. Effie Moss, a medium for the materialization phase of the phenomena, has returned to her home in New York from a tour (that began last August) through the West, and which extended to San Francisco. Mrs. Moss reports that her séances were well attended, and that the interest in the phenomena there seems to be spreading and deepening in the minds of the people. She has located at the rooms formerly occupied by her at 52 West 15th street, and will hold public séances on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings."

BUNKER HILL.—The new cycloramic representation of the Battle of Bunker Hill, which has been in process of preparation for some time past in its unique building on Tremont street, Boston, was pleasantly introduced to the people on Saturday evening last. The invited guests found the appointments perfect, and the scene depicted of rare beauty and thrilling interest. A visit to this wonder of art will prove alike pleasurable and profitable to all grades of observers, from the adult antiquarian to the curious schoolboy.

Re-opening of Our Friday Afternoon Circles.

The services of Mrs. B. F. Smith, the well-known trance medium, of Lawrence, Mass., have been secured for the present, for the transmission of individual spirit messages at our Public Free Circle Room on Friday afternoons.

Her first séance will be held on Friday, Feb. 10th, at 3 o'clock.

Powerful Spirit Manifestations.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In my travels and profession I have frequently, without seeming extra exertion on my part, become cognizant of some of the most remarkable physical spirit manifestations that have appeared in modern times—and these, too, occurring with individuals who did not recognize the spiritualistic philosophy of the nineteenth century.

One case in point has just come to my knowledge, which occurred in the early days of the New Dispensation, and was produced in the presence of individuals who knew nothing of mediumship, neither did they know anything concerning Spiritualism except from hearsay. I doubt if any account of this case has ever been printed, therefore will give it to the public as related to me by Mr. W. B. Ross, the Station Agent of the Boston and Maine Railroad at Bell Rock:

The most of the old residents will well remember the Arcade Building, at the junction of the South Natick and Sherburn roads—also the presiding genius of the establishment, Mr. Decatur Morey. Mr. Morey kept a store and resided in the upper portion of it; and one day the subject of the "Rochester knockings and table tippings" was brought up for discussion, and Mr. Morey was asked to give his opinion regarding the manifestations. He was a good-natured, jolly man, who "pulled down" over two hundred pounds avoidupois, and took a unique way of answering the query. He placed himself flat upon a table in good light before witnesses and said: "If there are any spirits here who are strong enough, I wish they would raise the table."

No sooner was this said than the leaves of the table flew up, and Mr. Morey was thrown on to the floor by the invisible power. Subsequently the table was raised to the top of the room and then gently lowered to its former position on the floor. A piano was moved, chairs also crossed the floor without human contact, etc. Mr. R. declares that Mr. Morey never doubted or made light of spirit manifestations after that exhibit.

Here is an account of the independent moving of material articles without human contact in the home of a skeptic, who could not explain the occurrences on any heretofore known law, or outside of the cause claimed for them by Spiritualists. The event at the time produced quite a sensation in Natick and vicinity. Doubtless there are many in the town who will endorse the Station Agent's statement in the matter.

The theory of trick or deception is utterly powerless in this case. A. S. HAYWARD.

Note from Dr. Willis.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Will you spare me space enough in your columns to state to my friends and patrons, who are scattered all over the country, that after more than thirty years of devotion to the cause of Spiritualism, in whose behalf I have labored with tongue and pen, the destiny of my life has led me to take up my residence in the city of Rochester, N. Y., the cradle of the cause so dear to my heart.

It seems to me a singular coincidence, to say the least, that I should thus, after so many years, be led to become a resident in the place where first were heard those sounds that have since reëchoed round the world; where first were set up the invisible wires of that grand, celestial telegraph, which demonstrated through its workings the actuality of communication between the two worlds, the glorious world of purely spiritual existence, and this world engirt with mortal shadows.

It may be, some great purpose lies concealed in this event so suddenly thrust into my life. Be that as it may, I shall still be in Rochester, as in Boston or Brooklyn, the same faithful adherent to the beloved cause I have ever been since the days that Harvard College closed its doors upon me thirty-one years ago.

And from this point, as from the places above named, I can still attend to my patients in all parts of the country, as it will be quite as central a location as any I have occupied.

Grateful for the liberal patronage I have hitherto enjoyed, I earnestly solicit its continuance, and at the same time wish to express my immense indebtedness to the angel-world for the great success that has accompanied my efforts in behalf of suffering, diseased humanity.

My address is 46 Vick Park, Avenue B, Rochester, N. Y. Respectfully, DR. F. L. H. WILLIS.

THE MIND-CURE.—"Eleanor Kirk" (of Brooklyn), in the course of a recent letter to the Cape Ann Advertiser (Gloucester), thus narrates an experience of her own with mental healing, which we are sure will be appreciated by many of THE BANNER'S readers:

"There is scarcely a neighborhood in any of our large cities that does not employ its metaphysician. I know of dozens of homes right about me where these special practitioners enter daily, and after a twenty minutes' treatment retire with two dollars. As a rule they do not effect cures. I have yet to see a case of acute inflammatory rheumatism, a case of consumption or cancer, cured by such means. But I do not say that such cures have not been effected. To be told, as I was once when suffering from neuralgia of the shoulder, that I was quite mistaken in supposing that I had a pain, was adding insult to injury. They tell us that 'the truth shall make us whole.' But that was n't the truth. It was as solid a falsehood as well could be uttered. I was mastered by pain. In fact, the anguish was intolerable; and the mental healer gave me up for a bad job."

THE VACCINATION INQUIRER for January (London, E. W. Allen) criticises a new book by Dr. McVail in vindication of vaccination, and cites as an illustration of the ignorance of its author his expressions of amazement that Mr. Alfred R. Wallace, and others, should ascribe a certain increase of smallpox to vaccination. The Inquirer states that the medical officer of health, in his report for 1886, claimed that ninety-five per cent. of the inhabitants of Sheffield were vaccinated, and that the larger proportion of the unvaccinated five per cent. were the children of migratory parents. Notwithstanding this, last year Sheffield suffered from a severe smallpox epidemic, and is still suffering; and the newspapers have closed their columns rigidly to all correspondence in which the usefulness of vaccination is impugned.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN for February is (as stated in our notice on seventh page) the first number of the second volume. It has received the most enthusiastic commendation from its readers, who desire its enlargement, which will take place, we understand, next year. The leading article of this number shows how benighted are the theologians who dwell on the old unsatisfactory proofs of a future life when they could so readily settle the question if they desired by procuring a message from a spirit-friend, written by spirit power, and the second article illustrates the profound philosophy of inspiration as demonstrated by Prof. Buchanan.

A PLEASANT OCCASION.—On Monday evening, Jan. 30th, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Towne, of 54 Green street, Charlestown District, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. A large number of friends gathered at their home to congratulate them upon the happy event. The exercises of the evening were entirely informal. Hicks provided a bountiful supper, at the conclusion of which the guests departed for their homes, leaving behind many valuable tokens of their esteem.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH for the present month opens with a succinct biography of the medium Eglinton. An account is given of an interview with Modini Chatterji, a Buddhist missionary to this country. The remaining contents include articles upon psychography, psychometry, the preservation of health and the cure of disease. New York: 206 Broadway.

ALL SORTS OF PARAGRAPHS.

WE ARE SO BLIND.

(Especially Dedicated to The Seybert Commission.)

We say our loved ones are no more—
On earth no trace of them we find;
We neither see them, no, nor hear,
We are so deaf, we are so blind!

Because they are what we call dead,
We cry and call our God unkind,
Though they be with us everywhere,
We are so blind, we are so blind!

Who knows but that their breath is blown
In every whispering of the wind?
Who knows but star-gleams are their glance,
We are so deaf, we are so blind!

Oh, once they vanish from our gaze,
Oh, once the cruel earth-clods bind
Them round, we can but see a grave,
We are so blind, we are so blind!

"In ye olden tyme," when our New England grandmothers became prosperous they used more molasses in their pies than they were wont to do, and even used more eggs and unskimmed milk than formerly; but they never dreamed of such an unheard of extravagance as to sweeten them with sugar. Indeed, the pale sugar-sweetened, custard-swamped pumpkin pie of modern cookery is much like the negro's description of a mulatto, "Dar's neider white nor black—neider one ting nor todder." Just so.

As every atom of the earth has been vivified millions of times by the splendid light of the sun's rays, so it will be found, when human life is perfect and the grandest type of humanity is revealed, that out of these shadows the perfect brightness of the soul works its way into the inferior conditions of the earth, making those express the grandeur of the primal plan.—*Cora L. The world-famous Russian patriot, "Stepniak," whose pen has done so much to enlighten the reading people of all countries as to the tyranny of the Czars, speaks to the United States through the columns of last Sunday's New York World in a cable dispatch from London. The peculiarity of a blizzard is, that while generally coming from the northwest, it seems to blow in little whirls or eddys, which keep the snow in the air and make it impossible to tell really which way the wind is coming from. You turn your back to it and you find you are still facing it, and this is what bewilders people. It is as different from an ordinary wind and snow storm as a cyclone is different from a summer breeze. It comes like fog blowing in from the sea, and in a moment it is upon you.

at the Hollis-street Theatre. The Boston Journal says "Dorothy" is full of spirit and charm of quaint fun—not extravagant or overdone. Saturday evening will be the last chance to see "Dorothy" in full bloom. The Dalys, in "Upside Down," will commence an engagement at THE HOLLIS on Monday, Feb. 13th.

The penny-a-liners of the daily press are now talking up "electric kisses"—whatever that may mean.

The fuel of the future, it is said, will be "ground coal." We had supposed that all coal was a ground affair. It is to be blown into a furnace in the shape of spray—the same, we suppose, as the new type-setting machine is to blow the types into their proper places by the action of wind-pressure! All right, gentlemen. Go-ahead with your "new inventions." You'll get them going about the time flying machines become a success.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath"; but a "stab in the back" unduly excites the muscles. Scandalmongers will please take the hint.

Worried Wife—Oh, doctor! what has detained you so long? I sent for you at 12 o'clock; my husband is very low indeed. Doctor (complacently)—Yes, I received your call then, but as I had an engagement with another patient in this neighborhood at 6 o'clock, I thought I'd make one job of it and kill two birds with one stone.

Mrs. Warden's spirit message in our last issue should read mother, instead of "father," as misprinted.

The largest income of any single man in England is said to be that of the Duke of Westminster, who has miles of tenement-houses and many square miles of agricultural land. He is said to receive $60 a minute the year round, or $3,000 an hour, or $72,000 a day. Queen Victoria has, too, a nice income, estimated at nearly one hundred millions of dollars, since she ascended the throne; and yet many of her subjects are in a starving condition, if the reports are to be credited.

An Allegheny woman, who took to her bed twenty-one years ago because she thought she was ill, and remained there, declaring that she was suffering from a complication of diseases, was persuaded to rise and walk about the room the other day. The novel experience seemed so pleasant to her that she has decided to leave her bed for good. Had a "faith-healer" been present he would have sworn that she was made to walk—was healed by "the divine afflatus" of prayer.

In wildernesse they wander,
First Plymouth, and then Salem next,

a Towne like name they built,
Poore Cottages them populate, with

Then large-limb'd Ipswich brought to eye

The Lawrence American says: "Every human heart is human." We are glad to learn the fact. It has seemed to us of late that certain hearts we wot of have become inhuman. Madame Blavatsky once said to us that she "believed only in the survival of the fittest." We sometimes think she was not so far out of the way after all.

A QUESTION OF SENTIMENT.

The Outlet said to the Mutton Chop,
"Do n't you feel cut up when you leave the shop?"
And the Chop replied, with a choking sob:
"I should feel much worse if my name were Bob."
But the Outlet returned with a shrug genteel:
"Oh! that 's just about as you happened to veal."

HAUNTED HOUSES.—It is a melancholy fact that the American Society for Psychical Research in Boston, organized for the particular purpose of investigating ghosts, has been unable to find a single haunted house or to follow the perigrinations of a single spectre. It has advertised for haunted houses to no purpose. They cannot make bricks without straw, however, and so they will have to wait patiently for another era of spectral activity to set in.—*N. Y. Review of the Seybert Commission's Report.

The Review of the Seybert Commission's Report, issued by the American Spiritualist Alliance, and published by Colby & Rich in pamphlet form, should be widely circulated, in order to correct as far as possible the false impressions given by the Report, and the copious and one-sided notices of it in the secular and religious papers, most of which were not only antagonistic to, but actually abusive of, the claims of Modern Spiritualism.

The facts brought out in the review, and its analysis of the methods of the Commissioners, as shown by their own minutes, have been thus far suppressed by these journals, while by some they have been most grossly, and even mendaciously, misrepresented and assailed. Having laid so much stress upon the seeming fact that ten persons of literary or scientific reputation, and of eminent social and professional distinction, made the investigation, they have nothing to say when they are shown the actual fact, that but comparatively few of the members of the Commission took any active part in the inquiry, or were even present at the meetings at which the mediumistic phenomena were displayed. They have no comment to make upon the extraordinary fact that some of these reputable gentlemen have signed the statements (1) that the mediums who appeared on invitation before the Commission were all proved to be tricksters and impostors, and (2) that they asserted nothing which they had not actually seen themselves; while their own minutes show that they were not present at the meetings at which the mediums were examined. Then they all attested by their signatures that they had seen the palpable tricks of Dr. Slade—and that he had presented nothing but tricks—while only one commissioner attended all the six séances given by Slade, and nearly one-half of the Commission were absent from all of them. How then could these ten men state with so much emphasis that they had actually seen the tricks of Dr. Slade, and that the manifestations through him were "fraudulent throughout"? This dishonest, disgraceful proceeding is sufficient of itself to discredit the whole report, showing it to be the work of men whose only design and desire was to brand Spiritualism as a system of fraud and delusion.

In a recent conversation with Dr. Slade, the writer of this referred to the Seybert Commission and its séances with him; and the remark of the Doctor was, "Those persons took no interest in the subject; they seemed to think more of their cigars, and at the séances would say, 'Come, let us have a smoke!' and in that manner passed the time which should have been given to serious investigation." It is obvious that they had but little conception of the conditions required for spiritual inquiry and study, and no regard for the result except to gather materials for a reprobation and libel of the truth.

Yet their book, ably concocted for the consummation of that purpose, has been widely circulated, and its misleading statements endorsed and emphasized by the principal newspapers of this country and Great Britain.

The writer of this has conversed with several of the mediums whom the Commission induced to sit for them, and some of their allegations are wholly discreditable to the Commissioners. Mr. Briggs, for example, a considerable time after his first séance, the minutes of which, as given in the Report, show that there were manifestations that could not justly be attributed to fraudulent contrivance, was induced to give the Chairman of the Commission a private sitting, and the latter was so much impressed by the incidents of it, that he arranged with Mr. Briggs for a second séance with the Commission, the account of which is given in the minutes. The manifestations of this séance are not specifically impeached in the Report, nor is there any attempt made to account for them by even the supposition of trickery, or to explain them away. The Review shows most clearly that the sweeping statements contained in the general Report are by no means warranted by the facts and incidents of the investigation as shown by the imperfect minutes of the meetings of the Commission.

This bare-faced attempt to assassinate an unpopular truth by men of reputation as scholars, should be as thoroughly exposed in all its disgraceful details as is possible; and we trust that Spiritualists will make an effort to give the Review a wide circulation, especially as most of the ordinary channels of communication with the public are, unfairly and ungenerously, closed to them for this purpose.—The Soul.

Chiefs from Nine Different Tribes

Entertained by Doctor and Mrs. Bland.

On Saturday evening, Jan. 28th, (says The National Republican,) Dr. and Mrs. Bland gave a reception at their residence, 1121 Tenth street, northwest, Washington, D. C., to the various Indian delegations now in the city. There were no less than nine different tribes represented, viz: Ne-kah-ke-pah-nah, chief of the Osage; James Bigheart, councillor, and A. L. Chonteau, Osage interpreter; Easpa-he-cha and G. W. Grayson, Creek delegates; Col. G. W. Haskins, of the Chickasaws; J. C. Adams of the Stockbridges; Stanislaus Mitchell, of the Otoes; White Bread, of the Padlos; Rungo Caddo, interpreter; Lone Wolf, chief of the Kiowas, and Tab-a-nam-ica, chief of the Comanches.

Among the friendly gathering were Rev. A. Kent, President of the Indian Defense Association; Hon. A. J. Willard, Attorney for same; Hon. W. M. King and wife; Hon. G. W. Manypenny, ex-Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Capt. Truell and wife; Miss Mamie Myers, of Wisconsin; Mrs. F. E. Fay and Mrs. George C. Bigelow, of Massachusetts; Hon. G. L. McCreery and daughter, of Iowa; Col. S. M. Lake and wife; Harry E. Burnham, Esq., of Indiana; Miss Alice House and Miss Lottie Davis, of Washington, and Mrs. K. T. Gardner, of Virginia.

Dr. T. A. Bland welcomed the guests in a short speech, and after his words were interpreted, the leading chiefs made appropriate responses, each speaker alluding to the object of his visit to Washington, which is to protest against unjust legislation, and especially to oppose the passage of the Springer Oklahoma Bill, now before the Committee on Territories of the House. Brief speeches were made by Judge Hillard, President Kent, Mr. McCreery, Col. Manypenny, and Mrs. Dr. Bland. The exercises closed with a collation.

Providence, R. I.—The President and Secretary of the Providence Spiritual Association, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Whitney, were the recipients of a very pleasant surprise on the evening of Jan. 27th, at their house, 18 East Avenue. A numerous party of their friends in the Society descended upon them in force, and after the usual greetings and an hour of social intercourse, J. Clegg Wright, in a very happy and facetious address, presented them, on behalf of those assembled, with a handsomely bound copy of "Webster's Unabridged." The head of the household was completely "floored," and, like his ancient Biblical ancestor, the "first man," he threw the response-ibility on his wife, who, recovering quickly from the shock, returned thanks in a neat little impromptu speech, thereby demonstrating the superiority of the weaker sex in cases of emergency. A substantial supper was then served and heartily enjoyed by all, and at nearly the midnight hour the self-invited guests departed with the consciousness of having performed a very agreeable duty. IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED

MRS. J. H. CONANT,

With Her Biography;

Together with Extracts from the Diary of her Physician; Selections from Letters received verifying Spirit Communications given through Her Organism at the Banner of Light Free Circles; Specimen Messages, Essays, and Invocations from Various Intelligences in the Other Life, etc., etc.

The whole being prefaced with opening remarks from the pen of ALLEN PUTNAM, ESQ.

An Earnest, Unequivocal and Individual Example of the Good wrought by Spiritualism. Its perusal cannot fail to cheer our struggling Media, by reason of the lessons flowing from the early trials and hardships borne by this most remarkable instrument of communion between the worlds of embodied and disembodied mind.

Read it, doubters of immortality, and refute its proofs if you can! Peruse it, hearts who grow weary of the battle of life, whatever be your creed, and be comforted! Examine it, Spiritualists, and find therein proof-texts, incidents and arguments which cannot fail of bringing to you even a stronger conviction of the verity of your philosophy!

In order that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this book, we would say that it was published some years since under the title of "THE BIOGRAPHY OF MRS. J. H. CONANT."

We have now brought out an edition with the more appropriate title of "IMMORTALITY DEMONSTRATED," and make this statement so that those who already possess the work may not again purchase it under the misapprehension that it is a new book.

A fine steel plate portrait of the Medium adorns the work. Cloth, pp. 324. Price $1.25.

On Friday afternoon MRS. B. F. SMITH (of Lawrence, Mass.), under the influence of her guides, will afford an avenue through which individual spirit messages will be given.

The Hall (which is used only for these séances) will be open at 2 o'clock; the services commence at 3 o'clock precisely, at which time the doors will be closed, allowing no ingress or egress. The public is cordially invited.

☞ Persons having questions of practical bearing upon human life in any of its departments of thought and labor, which they would like answered by the spirit-world intelligences, may send them to THE BANNER OF LIGHT office by mail, or hand them to the Chairman of the Circle, who will present them to the spirits for consideration.

☞ The Messages published in this Department indicate that spirits carry with them the characteristics of their earth-life to that beyond—whether for good or evil; that those who pass from the earthly sphere in an undeveloped state, eventually progress to higher conditions. We ask the reader to receive no doctrine put forth by spirits in these columns that does not comport with his or her reason. All express as much of truth as they perceive—no more.

☞ It is our earnest desire that those who recognize the messages of their spirit-friends will verify them by informing us of the fact for publication.

☞ Natural flowers upon our Circle-Room table are gratefully appreciated by our angel visitants, therefore we solicit donations of such from the friends in earth-life who may feel that it is a pleasure to place upon the altar of Spirituality their floral offerings.

☞ Letters of inquiry in regard to this Department of THE BANNER must not be addressed to the mediums in any case. LEWIS B. WILSON, Chairman.

SPIRIT MESSAGES,

GIVEN THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

John William Fletcher.

Report of Public Séance held Jan. 19th, 1888.

Spirit Invocation.

Ever present Spirit, who art manifesting thy life and power in every tone and form of nature, who hast scattered the pathway of life with unnumbered blessings, and given unto each soul such possibilities as may, in time, lift the darkest into the most perfect light, we turn our faces unto thee this hour, and fain would hold communion with those who, having triumphed over temptation and the influence of the earth, are therefore better able to comprehend divine law and divine wisdom. We would know more of that justice that rules in the higher life, where all prejudice, all misunderstanding is overcome, where the merit of each soul is considered, and the just return for every endeavor made. We would learn of that wisdom which surpasseth human understanding, which extends backward, embracing all time within its keeping, and all hearts within its love; we would learn also of that charity and that mercy that suffereth long and yet is kind, that gives to each soul a sympathetic influence for each other soul, and has for its first lesson the great charge that thou hast given: "Feed ye my lambs."

Oh! Father, Mother, Spirit Divine, with faltering steps we journey along the pathway of life, with dim eyes we strive to see that which is best and truest, and with earnest and aspiring souls we are forever endeavoring to embody within our lives the sweet ideal that thou hast given unto each one of us.

We bless thee for all that life brings, for its treasures, for its victories, ay, and we bless thee also for its sorrows and its trials, but most of all we bless thee, oh! Infinite One, for the knowledge of life beyond the grave, for the blessed truth that all human souls shall one day stand in the completeness of all that they are possessed of, and realize that thou dost indeed send that which is best.

Our Father who art in Heaven, attendant spirits, who do the will of the highest, bless us, teach us, help us now, and when we have finished life's lesson, receive us into your sweet company. Amen.

Mazio.

The past and the present unite, when we are able to cross the stream of time, and bring ourselves out from the life in which we lived down to the purposes that inspire the present hour. This form of civilization is marked and important only as it is making more universal that which was held and possessed by the few in the days that are now well-nigh forgotten.

The subject of Modern Spiritualism, which has come as one of the results of your increased knowledge of things seen and unseen, is but an effort of the spirit-world to make manifest in the flesh truths that have been accepted and understood by those who were wise in spirit for many generations.

We—and I say we advisedly—were compelled to use the material that was at hand, and have often chosen those that seemed to be ignorant, unlettered and unskilled in the ways of life, because such persons were possessed of less prejudice, and were more easily moved upon in any direction of thought. They have been devoid of the experience that education should bring, have been to a great degree undeveloped, but all the same were possessed of great possibilities, were susceptible to a class of spirit control which those who are proud in their own conceits and vain in their own knowledge cannot receive. But Spiritualism has done for the Spiritualist little more than arouse an interest in itself, or comfort those who have realized a great loss by the passing out from their life of those whom they treasured and loved.

Following on the track of Spiritualism have come Theosophy or Occultism, Christian Science and a number of other branches of this truth, that seem to appeal to the intelligent mind more conclusively than does Spiritualism itself. But I wish you to understand me when I say that each one of the varying subjects I have referred to is nothing more nor less than Spiritualism put into different shape and form, and its demonstration intelligently expressed. And it behooves all who are interested in the welfare of this subject to institute some means whereby the science of Spiritualism and the law of spirit-life may be taught, as well as the laws of astronomy, of geology or of chemistry, for the phenomena of Spiritualism take their place side by side with the other branches of science, wherein demonstration is capable.

As I am speaking I feel the influence of a mind coming up to me asking if Spiritualism be not a religion; and in reply to that I would say No; the demonstration of the return of the spirit has no more relationship with religion than has the law of chemical analysis. It is not the return of the spirit that embodies religion, but it is the lesson that the spirit may teach on its return that may give you a higher view of life, and consequently have an effect upon your religious natures.

In the long ago, to which I belong, and wherein a few of us studied these laws of spirit-life, we found that all power came through the concentration of forces. Thus by concentrating rays of light to a given point, I am able to burn, as it were, a place through this piece of paper that I hold in my hand, yet the sun's rays might fall upon it for an indefinite length of time and not produce any such effect. By the concentration of the power to a given point, the result is very easily attained. This comparison would apply to every branch of spiritual work. Concentration is the secret of success, and the men who have succeeded in this life—in whatever branch of work it may have been I care not—have accomplished that success simply by concentrating all their power upon the one purpose before them; therefore, if Spiritualists as a body wish to make their power felt they should each and every one give their individual interest and influence to it.

I might dilate upon this subject for some time. My thought was, when I came, simply to suggest to those who are present, and to thousands who later on may perchance see my words, the necessity for intelligent action in this line of thought, and instead of sitting down to enjoy phenomena, go to work to apply the lesson that the phenomena teach.

My medium—for this is not my medium—I should like to have feel that the shadow which has rested upon him for some time is fast passing away, and that with returning health there will be an additional strength and power given to him, and the great and important work which we begun, and which has only rested for a short time, will be carried on as the spring-time returns. I would say to him that I have taken the liberty of coming through this means, because I wish to get at the great world more than I have been able to through his instrumentality in the past. I send him my kindly greeting, with every word of encouragement, and I shall hope that nothing will stand in the way to prevent the fulfillment of what we have begun. He lives in Providence, and will gladly read these words.

I sign my name as Mazio, and close by saying, as is the custom of my country, "Peace be with you all."

Herbert A. Hutchins.

When I came to spirit-life I was only a very small child, and I had not learned any of the lessons of earth-life. I cannot remember that I ever lived on the earth at all, but I know that I must have, because I find a place in my father's and my mother's heart that no one else can fill; and I have come to them in other ways, so that, although I left them as a babe and have now grown to manhood, I seem to be to them a child still.

I know nothing of the ways of the world; I know nothing of envy or hate or jealousy; but I have been taught in the spirit-world that these are all forms of disease, and that we have to guard ourselves against catching them. I have learned that justice and truth and love are the great things to work for, and the spirit-teachers have taught us all, in the sphere to which I belong, that to overcome one's self, to conquer the evil tendencies in the heart, is to achieve the greatest victory that can come to any soul.

So, then, I come here, through the kind help of spirits, and employ the language of the earth to speak about things that are here in contrast with things that I know, all the while feeling as if I did not understand the law whereby such a work was possible; yet I wish to send my love to this faithful father and mother of mine, and to tell them I know that they must love me truly to keep me in their hearts all these long, long years. They will, I know, be more pleased to receive these words than I can be to speak them, and yet to speak them makes me feel most happy and delighted.

My father's name is Samuel Hutchins; my mother's is Lucy, and my name is Herbert A. Hutchins. Annie and Willie are both happy and strong, and join me in sweet and loving greetings. I had almost forgotten to tell you that these parents of mine live in Deering, Maine.

Mrs. Hattie True.

My name is Mrs. Hattie True, and I should like to send a message to my husband, Frank A. True, who is a jeweller in Evart, Mich. I want you, Frank, to investigate this subject, for there is a chance of my being able to come directly to you, and you are so skeptical about everything that I shall have hard work to convince you that I am myself. Pa and ma are here, too.

Now, you will say, Frank, "Why do n't you tell what their names are?" Father's name is John Dexter, and mother's name is Louisa. I've got the best of you, this time, Frank, because I have told you what they are. They send their love with mine, and ma is just as fond of Gracie as ever.

Will you just feel, Frank, that nothing in the world, sickness nor death, nor separation, nor any trial that you could name, could ever make me forget you, and the happy days we passed together. The last sad hours, when I suffered so much, and the great change of coming here to the spirit-life, all of these have drawn me nearer to you, and when you are busily at work I can see your mind, and I often put thoughts of the old times, of the happy, dear, old times, into your head, and sometimes, when you meet a friend, I come before you, and you find yourself talking about what you and Hattie did in the past, so please think that though you cannot hear me, I have come here to send this message to you, and whenever you will give me a chance to come, I shall be there, and no mistake.

Henry C. Wright.

In company with a large number of the band of spirits who work here I was standing for a moment looking over the company, and I saw before me a faithful old brother of mine in the cause, who is working for the truth so constantly that he seldom receives a word from any of those who may be around him. Like every worker he is apt to feel that the weight of the work is so great it does not matter who does it, and his own individuality becomes interblended, to a great degree, with the influence of the spirits that are around him; and I felt that it would not be an intrusion if I came for one moment and reached my hand to him over the river that flows between us. Such a narrow stream it is that I can clasp hands with you, my friend, over it, and say that we shall meet ere long in brighter scenes than you have ever known on earth.

I used to say that "man's demands were God's commands," and I never realized the truthfulness of that statement so much as I do now. You who are here, journeying on your way, oftentimes feel like one of old, that the cross and the burden is almost too heavy to bear. I can understand that. I know that the world is so heartless and thoughtless, that it seldom takes the trouble to render honor unto whom honor is due, except it be compelled to give homage through the force of circumstances.

Never mind, never mind. I thought that my life was barren when I left the earth; I thought that I had accomplished nothing in comparison with what I wished to do for the welfare of man; but I found, when I opened my eyes to the spirit-world, that where I thought I had accomplished the least, I had done the most; that many there were who came to take me by the hand and speak my name in kindness and affection.

So will it be with you; and when you turn your face, as you will soon, toward other scenes, may you, my brother and friend, bear with you my kindly greeting, my Godspeed, my best wishes, in every way, for all things that can make you happy, satisfied and successful.

The years are not many that will be left for you to work in here; the work is well nigh done—only a touch here and there wanting—the song is almost finished, the life well nigh rounded out. You will work on to the end, and by-and bye, when the leaves of autumn will be falling—not of next autumn, perhaps—you will sleep, sleep so well you will not hear the sound of the outer life. But you will wake to the glorious realities of all that you have dreamed, and then, my brother, be assured there will be a richness of return that will satisfy you, and fill your heart with gladness. Henry C. Wright, to my friend and co-worker [Warren Chase], whom I see before me.

Myra McF.

May I be permitted to come again through this avenue? My name is Myra McF. I will not give my full name, if you please. I wish to send word to Dr. F. A. Grove, of Kirkville, Missouri. I will now say to him: "Look up, my dear loved one; fix your eyes upon the greater and the better life that is beyond you. I do not need to convince you of my presence by coming here, but I know how your nature must be stimulated by something outside of yourself. You need evidences to lean upon, and they make you stronger from day to day, until by-and-bye I hope you will be able to feel yourself firmly grounded, and hear with your ears and see with your eyes the things that I endeavor to show you. The band are all present with me to-day. Thomas C. Campbell, who is your old and earnest friend, is most desirous of doing something that shall attest his presence with you. He sends his love to his wife and Bessie. Nettie is here, and Edwin Darrow also, who came only a short time ago. They all join their hands in the common purpose of working with you. Cousin Frank and Aunt Mary are both by my side, and they join me in sending warmest love to you. I am glad you did what I told you, when I asked you to leave Altoona and come back again; it seemed best that you should do so, and now you realize it was best.

I think you can trust me. I have no other interest than yours, no other purpose save to guide you and make your life bright and happy. God bless you and keep you. When you read these words I shall be by your side. I will take some other way of ratifying the fact, even before you read them.

Willifred George.

I am Willifred George; they called me Willie, but that is n't my name. I would like to send a message to Oakvilla, Florida, and say that I have been down there and tried to rap just as hard as I could. I tried to frighten Alice by rapping on the headboard and on the footboard, and she said in a kind of a whisper, "Willie, is that you?" Then she listened, and I could n't do anything; I had to go away and come again.

They feel kind o' lonesome down there. On Sundays they talk to most of us, and call that "the spirits' day," so I wanted to come here and send my love to them all, and to those in Groveland, and tell them that I am all right, and that the oranges will come along pretty well. If they will try and open the door, by sitting every Sunday, I will try and come.

Winona

Spoke for the following spirits. She said: A great many spirits are standing here this afternoon—more than I have ever seen. The first is

Tiny.

This lady seems to be a very beautiful spirit. She is light-complexioned, and has a sweet influence around her. She reaches out her hand, and gives me the name of Tiny; and pointing to herself says: "I have come here with the desire of communicating a few words to Will. I want to tell him that it is only to keep my promise that I have come. A good many things I have talked about before I could mention now, but I should think it was better not to. The clouds that now are rather dark, and rise over a certain person on earth, will, by-and-bye, pass away, I think, if we are only patient, and do not allow ourselves to become too much disturbed. Susie is with me. I want to say that, so as to make it complete."

The name Smith is spoken in connection with this, and refers to a person on earth.

George Lyman.

He says: "I would like to send a message to my father and mother, who have wondered why I have not come here before. I went to bed, feeling pretty well, and went to sleep, and when I woke up I was in heaven, or the spirit-life. I never could find out how I got there. I was very much surprised to see them leaning over my body, for there I stood, shedding tears and feeling so sad. Then one said to another, 'I think he is better off, after all.' I was listening, and trying to comfort my mother. She has never felt the same since I came away. My mother is a good woman; she was everything to us that a mother could be; she sacrificed herself right and left for us, and I tried to do for her what I could; it was n't much. Johnnie has been the most successful of any of them; he is a good, faithful son, and I love him as a brother. I am there at home; I am glad to see the change and the new house. I hope everything will be pleasant and happy, for father and mother deserve to have their last years on earth free from care, trouble or sorrow, and I hope nothing will come to darken their days. George Lyman."

Cornelia C. Crandall.

I come here with the express wish of sending a message of thanks to F. A. Ely and family for their great kindness to me in my last days on earth. I was too sick to appreciate what was done, and my mind was too much disturbed with all that had happened, and with all that I feared would happen, to think much about the present; but my friends in Deansville, N. Y., will remember me, I know. Although my body rests at Clinton, I never go there, as I never wish to see the spot where it is laid. It made me so much trouble that when I got rid of it I did n't wish to renew my association with it again.

Many dear ones who had gone before met me when I came away. It seemed as if there was a large gateway opened, and all of my friends, those whom I had not thought of for years, were standing there waiting for me. They extended their hands, and said: "Come; all is ready." I have enjoyed myself much, but I thought I'd come here and send a few words to an old and tried friend, who will receive it gladly, I am sure. Cornelia C. Crandall.

Dr. Stickney.

I wish to send a message to my family, particularly to my son. I am sorry I cannot take direct control myself, but I want to tell you in as few words as possible, that I have found this life as real to me as ever the earth-life was, with its unpleasant part left out.

I used to say, before I came away, that if ever as a spirit I should return, I would talk about practical things, what we had to eat, what we had to wear, and all the rest of it that goes to make up life. Well, now, I can't tell you all we have to eat, but we have what we need, and we have a sense of being clothed, just the same as you have now. Those of us who require food draw our sustenance from the food that you have here on earth; so when you sit down to table, Longfellow was right when he said "there are more guests than are invited"; but I am always invited, and I am always there.

I feel as if I should like to talk a week to you, but I can't; only tell your mother not to fret so much; she did everything that could be done, but the time had come for me to leave the earth. I have met the old friends, and everything is perfectly peaceful and happy.

Mrs. Bliss is right here beside me, and has helped me to say what I am saying. Very soon at home I shall be able to say more than I have to-day. Now, good-bye; don't trouble yourself about the hereafter, but get all the comfort you can every day you live; you 'll be sure of that, no matter what comes. Dr. Stickney, of Springfield.

Mrs. Minnie Livingston.

My name is Mrs. Minnie Livingston. I should like, if you please, to send a message to my husband, my mother and my child, who live in Newark, N. J. I come to you, my dear Will, because you have requested and desired it so much. I know how faithful you have tried to be to my memory, and how you have never allowed an opportunity to pass when you thought that you could possibly receive a word from me. Oh! I have appreciated it. It seems, when I come to you sometimes, as if I only spoke a word or two, and left unsaid the things that you would most wish to hear; but then, dear, you must trust the promptings of your heart, and when you think the things I would say are sweet and kind and true, will you just feel that I have said them in your heart and that is why you think of them; I have suggested them.

Our darling child—God bless her! Dear little Belle! how much you love her! how much I love her, heaven alone knows! Be all to her that you can—father and mother both in one, for, after all, we can never understand how lonely a child's life must be that has no mother's love in it; so you will try to make that up, I am sure.

Tell mother that Pierre is guided in all that he does, and that, as time goes by, the clouds will one by one roll away. Dear mother and husband and child, my love is around you, my hope and my prayers are for you, and although time shall pass by, and seem long, long indeed, when all is over we shall be united again, and until then I wait and hope on, knowing that, sad as our separation is, it has a purpose which in the end will be accomplished.

Verifications of Spirit-Messages.

ANDREW CRAM.—SAMUEL LUCE.—CYRUS E. LORD.

We cannot refrain from writing a line and acknowledging some of the late messages in your valuable paper. ANDREW CRAM, of Westbrook, Me., we knew well, and all the names he mentioned are correct. CAPT. SAMUEL LUCE, of Marion, Mass., our brother, has fully identified himself in his message, and our son, CYRUS E. LORD, has fully proven his identity. We could not ask for anything more conclusive.

SPIRIT OF LIGHT.

SPIRIT OF LIGHT gave a communication at your Circle-Room, published Jan. 14th, 1888, which is recognized. His cheering words we highly appreciate, and hope your BANNER will continue to give forth the knowledge to others it has given to us.

Very respectfully, MRS. MARY CRAIL.

Something About Indians and Parkland.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

It is well known that North America was, years agone, the home of many Indian tribes, and it may be of more than ordinary interest to learn something of their character and doings, especially when we are directed to the scenes of their earthly career, so near our present homes in civilized society, where, centuries in the past, the Indian ruled the hour. The communications we propose to give, though crude and disjointed in detail, are to be credited as possible, nay, probable, by the Spiritualists who are the friends of Indian spirits.

We must premise, what is well known to all true Spiritualists, and especially to mediums, that the Indian races are very powerful and assiduous spirit-agents and workers in the dispensation of the science, philosophy and religion of Spiritualism, as well as great healers and grand and noble operators in serious cases of disease. Thus much, then, for the character of the Indian.

The following somewhat crude recital explains itself; but, in advance of what we shall give as spirit-communications, we must mention that what is here given was, with other mentionings, furnished to Mrs. Faust, a medium residing in Philadelphia, and was persistently communicated while she was at the 1887 Camp Meeting at Parkland.

And now of Parkland: A tract of thirty acres lying and being a part of a larger area of land in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, bordering on the Neshaminy Creek, which, under a lease for ninety-nine years from the "Neshaminy Park Association," is dedicated by "The First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia" to their yearly camp-meetings.

Perhaps already the foregoing is sufficient as a preface to what we now furnish as coming from the spirit-world. Previous to the communication the writer was promised, as well as could be obtained, something of the history of the tribe of Indians who inhabited the tract now known by the name of Parkland, and something of the one communicating. And thus we proceed to copy verbatim:

"Dear Friends—I have tried to collect some items about the Indians that inhabited Parkland and the country surrounding it. The first that comes to me is a chief. He tells me his name is Tamanee, and he says his body lies near the Creek, and where you hold your meetings, and where they held their council fires. He says they did not hold their land treaty in 1682, but in 1683, and they held a peace treaty in 1682. Chief Tamanee says that he was looked upon as the great brave, sent from the Great Father to guide this tribe, for they believed that they descended from Adam, and the other tribes from the negro race. He says you have done well to select the spot you did, for you will get much help from their tribe.

"There is a chief, Yellow Dog. He is a powerful Indian; his squaw, or wife, was a white woman. He says there was one brave, a Gilbert Wheeler, who was kind to him and taught him how to speak our language. He says that when the Great Spirit took him he was hurt by a bear, and passed away in consequence. His bones are where you raised your big flag.

"There is another that comes. He says his name is Neelowaway. He says he was cheated out of his land by the pale-faces. He says he fought much before the pale-faces showed him right from wrong. He says he is going to control one squaw, Jessie, and wants the pale-faces, the chiefs' at Parkland, to know that he will do what he can to help them. Next comes Big Wolf. He was not satisfied only when he was on the warpath. He says he never wanted an Indian squaw for his wife; he wanted a pale-face. He says he lived and passed to the Great Spirit from Parkland. He says he did not like his own tribe; he wanted to be among the pale-faces, to learn how they lived; but the big Chiefs would not let him go. There is hardly a spot on your camp-ground but there is a brave or a squaw to claim it as the resting-place for their bones. There is one more. He gives the name of Tedyusscung. He says he was the last Chief, and was burned in his home. After his spirit left the body it remained at Wissahickon. He built a house at Wyoming, and it was there he was burned. He is not an uneducated Indian, but one that has learned much since he has entered spirit-life. He claims that his spirit home is at Wissahickon, and is proud of the honor that is done him by putting an Indian on Indian Rock in his memory.

"I will now speak of myself. My name is Fanny Carlisle. I was born in Carlisle. My father's name was John Carlisle. Father and mother both passed to spirit-life when I was six years old. I was then adopted by Henry Marshall, living at Harris's Ferry. When I was eighteen I went on a visit to my adopted father's brother, Edward Marshall, living near Wrightstown, Bucks County. While there, it was not safe for any one to go outside of the door. The Indians did not like my uncle, because he won a race, and they did all they could to give him trouble. One day I did not feel well, and went out with some friends for a short walk, when four or five Indians got after us. The rest of my friends got away; I was the only one that was captured. Big Wolf was the one that got me. He took me to the camp-ground, where I found them all making baskets. They treated me kindly, but I wanted to get home.

"I escaped once, but was caught. After that they put some one to watch me. There was a young squaw who loved Big Wolf; she asked me if I wanted to marry him. I told her I did not. When they were away hunting she set me free, but I did not get far before they saw me; I jumped into the creek, and that is the last that I can remember until dear old David Rittenhouse came to me, and said now was my time to get light, as there would be mediums on the old camp ground that I could control, and perhaps reach some friends. They buried my body on the spot where they held their Council Fire. They gave me the name of White Wing.

"Dear friends, I have done the best I could, and the Lenni Lenape Tribe is the friend of the pale-faces of Parkland. Yours, with love, FANNY CARLISLE."

Collateral and supplemental to the foregoing we put in several historical facts obtained from the celebrated book, "Watson's Annals." The Lenni Lenape, which means "the original people," were called by the white people "Delawares, or Little Delawares." The name of Tamanee is given in the message, and is introduced in "Watson" as follows: "On the Neshaminy there is the grave of the celebrated Chieftain Tamanee."

Gilbert Wheeler is mentioned, and is also historically noticed in "Watson," as having the first Orphans' Court held in his house on the 4th of January, 1693. The name of Edward Marshall is also given historically, living near Wrightstown, who, according to "Watson," was a walker for the poor Indians who were cheated out of their lands by the agents of the Penn Family at the time of the great walk. The great walk was apparently a great event, for it is stated to have marked fifty-five miles in eighteen hours. This we may comprehend as being the cheat, or considered a cheat. Could a smart walker go three miles an hour in direct line, perchance amid forest territory? Those acquainted with the Indian plan of measuring land on sale, will understand that the distance a walker can travel in a direct line in a given time is the measurement. There was a cheat in Marshall's walk, no doubt, and hence, as stated in "Watson," he aroused a spirit of revenge, and those offended by him sought to take his life. This Indian story seems, with the history in "Watson," to make a clear case of truthfulness, and puts the camp-ground of Parkland in the fore-front of all such spirit and spiritual resorts.

It may be pertinent to the purpose of this correspondence, to mention that several of the spirit-friends of the First Association have most kindly remembered Parkland, and two or three prominent ones we present: First, Edward S. Wheeler, who was a member and officially related to the First Association, says, "Good-morning, Mr. Wood. I am sorry that there was so much disagreement in the selection of a name for the camp-grounds. It will work itself clear, however, and all come right in the end." Bro. Wheeler in another communication to me says, "Well, my friend, it seems they have decided on a camp-ground. It looks to be a very feasible plan, and we have every reason to think it will prove successful. Of course there are many difficulties to overcome." Bro. E. V. Wilson hopefully expressed himself thus: "Mr. Wood, we are going to exert every faculty to make the Camp-Meeting a success. We know the grounds cannot be beautified this summer, but we hope to help get money enough to carry on the work in the fall." So much then of encouragement from spirit-workers.

Philadelphia, Pa.

A Card.

My heartfelt thanks are hereby expressed to those who have responded to my call—especially to Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Dr. Henry Slade, Col. Rase, and others. Some one has said "A friend in need is a friend indeed."

After several years of battling for the cause that is closest to my heart, treating others in many localities, as one of old did, "without money and without price," earning my bread by hard labor, I take this opportunity to inform my friends that it will be impossible for me to send my healing forces longer to those afflicted ones, as formerly—"free gratis." Having been idle for over five months (the result of a fall from a building I was working on), the ways and means to get along are not at my command, hence I say all letters sent to me for magnetic assistance must contain enough to fee me for my work, to insure a satisfactory reply. STUART L. ROGERS, M. H.

CHRISTENDOM'S PECULIAR PROPERTY.—"Death's heads, graves, knells, blacks and tombs" are the peculiar property of Christendom, being almost unknown to pagan antiquity. The elder Disraeli, in mentioning the fact that the skeleton, as a symbol of death, is an invention of the Middle Ages, says: "The ancient artists so rarely attempted to personify Death that we have not discovered a single revolting image of this nature in all the works of antiquity." This being so, the conception of death as an awful specter, and the wearing of gloomy black as a compulsory tribute to his grimness, can hardly be regarded as a mark of our superiority over our pagan predecessors.—The Forum.

EVOLUTION.—Tight boots make corns; corn makes whiskey; whiskey makes man tight in his boots.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From his home, in Albion, Mich., Jan. 22d, 1888, Bradford Jones.

Mr. Jones was born in Brockport, N. Y., Feb. 15th, 1823. He became an orphan at the age of four years through the death of his mother, caused by an assassin's hand, and the supposed devouring, by wolves, of his father, who, soon after the tragedy, set out upon a journey through the then wilds of Western New York, and was never again heard from. Mr. Jones worked his own way to manhood. In 1847 he married Caroline Rix, of Holly; in 1850 moved to Michigan, and was a resident of Tecumseh until two years ago, when he came to Albion. His wife and five children survive him; three other children preceded him to the higher life. All his life he had "seen visions and dreamed dreams." When a child, he had a spiritual consciousness of his mother's presence, yet knew nothing of Spiritualism until about two years ago, when a cousin, Mr. G. A. Barnes (a strong Spiritualist, and prominent citizen of Olympia, Washington Territory), whom he had not seen for forty-seven years, came to visit him, bringing with him the BANNER OF LIGHT, Golden Gate and other Spiritualist publications, in which he found a living gospel of truth, and made bright his slow and painful journey down the shadowy valley. He was never formally connected with any church organization, but was respected by all as a man of exemplary character and warm and tender sympathies. Funeral services were held at his home Jan. 26th, the discourse being delivered by the writer at his special request. Mrs. Marion Todd was present, who also made some appropriate remarks. The guard of honor from the G. A. R. took charge of the casket, which was conveyed to Tecumseh for burial. AUGUSTA W. ANTHONY.

From Denton, Texas, on Friday, Jan. 6th, 1888, at 1:30 o'clock P.M., Mrs. Carrie E., wife of Mr. J. B. Sawyer, aged 72 years and 3 months.

The cause of Mrs. Sawyer's death was general debility, running over a long number of years. The interment was in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery. Her maiden name was Carrie Elvira Welch. She was born at Monmouth, Me., Oct. 6th, 1815, and came of an old Puritan family, her ancestors on her mother's side having come over in the Mayflower. Previous to the revolutionary war, her grandfather and his brother owned the land on which Monmouth is now situated, and were its first settlers. Their nearest neighbors at first were fifteen miles off. Her grandfather gave the town its present name in commemoration of the revolutionary battle of Monmouth, N. J., which had just been fought. Mrs. Sawyer was the oldest child of a family of six children—two boys and four girls. Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer were married in 1835 at Hyde Park, near Boston, Mass., and at once left for Houston, Texas, from whence they moved to Denton in 1869. Mrs. Sawyer will long be remembered by many who had the honor of her friendship and acquaintance as a devoted friend and noble woman.

From St. Charles, Mich., after a few days' illness from heart failure, Mrs. William Ashmun, aged 79 years.

Mrs. Ashmun was one of the pioneers of the place—she, with her husband, having located there when St. Charles was in its infancy. She was a lady of admirable character and pleasant disposition, always had a kind word for her neighbors, and a warm place in her heart for suffering humanity. She leaves a husband and four children to revere her memory.

D. C. Ashmun, editor of The Merrill (Mich.) Post, says: "Our mother is gone; no more can we go to her in our hours of sorrow and be comforted by her sweet sympathy; yet we are consoled by the knowledge that she was good—none were better—and she had nothing to fear for the future. Her life was devoted to the happiness of others. Her belief in the future amounted to a positive knowledge. She felt sure of meeting her dear loved ones who were 'waiting, waiting, waiting for her on the other shore.' She was a great investigator in Modern Spiritualism, and never did one take greater comfort in their religion than did she."

From her temporary home in Marshall, Mich., Dec. 13th, 1887, Mary C., wife of Dr. W. H. Nelson, in the 58th year of her earth-life.

Funeral at the Christian church, in Paw Paw, Dec. 15th, conducted by A. B. Spinney of Ypsilanti. A husband, two daughters and a step-daughter are left to mourn her presence in the form. She was fully conscious that the hour of separation was at hand, and gave the parting word to all present, with a special request that the obsequies be performed by Dr. Spinney. Her last hours were made cheerful by visions of the life beyond. She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, ever at the post of duty, and will be sadly missed by the many friends whom she has left.

To all the Religious Bodies and Temperance Organizations in Massachusetts.

Greeting:

The Barnstable County Conference of Congregational Churches, at their session at Harwichport, Dec. 14th, 1887, passed unanimously the following preambles and resolutions:

"Whereas, We believe that the Christian church should be an aggressive force in the moral regeneration of society, and that a true Christian citizenship involves the guardianship of the purity of the State and the sanctity and safety of the home; and

"Whereas, We believe that in the great national struggle between the home and the saloon, the Christian voters of the country ought to unite in taking an immediate and decided stand for the home; therefore,

"Resolved, That we recommend to all the churches of this conference to circulate in their respective parishes the following pledge: 'We, legal voters of ——, hereby pledge ourselves that we will not knowingly vote for any candidate for any office—legislative, executive or judicial—who will not endeavor, both by vote and influence, to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.'

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to all the conferences of our order, and, as far as practicable, to all the religious bodies within the limits of this Commonwealth, and to all temperance organizations, inviting them to cooperate with us in this movement.

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by this Conference to further the objects of these resolutions; to secure united action thereon, by whatever methods may be by them deemed expedient, and to take all necessary steps to secure the presentation of the signatures to the aforesaid pledge before the State and National Conventions of the political parties."

The undersigned were then appointed the committee contemplated by the above resolutions. In pursuance of the duty assigned us, we address to you this letter, believing that you already realize the magnitude of the interests involved, and that you will appreciate, without any suggestion from us, the magnificent opportunity which this movement presents to the church for securing a grand advance of the Redeemer's kingdom.

We take pleasure in extending to you the fraternal invitation of our Conference to cooperate with us in obtaining signatures to the aforesaid pledge, and to secure unity of action, permit us respectfully to suggest: 1. That your organization appoint a committee similar to ours; 2. That the pledges, when signed, be returned to the chairman of said committee; 3. That you instruct said chairman to put himself in correspondence with our chairman, Rev. J. K. Aldrich, Hyannis, Mass.; 4. That you instruct your scribe to furnish us with the address of the chairman of said committee as soon as practicable after his appointment.

Fraternally yours,

February Magazines.

THE CENTURY.—James Russell Lowell contributes a very pleasing sketch of—including reminiscences of personal interviews with—Walter Savage Landor, supplementary to which are fourteen of his letters that, even more than the fine portrait which is the frontispiece of this number, convey to the reader correct ideas of his personality. "Pictorial Art on the Stage," by Evangeline W. and Edwin H. Blashfield—illustrations by the latter—reviews the advance made in artistic scenic illusion from the age of Elizabeth, when there was none, to the present time, when it is a prominent and indispensable adjunct to a good dramatic performance that seems to approach perfection. The Lincoln History covers a very critical period in the affairs of the Union and the seceded States, with the significant heading "Premier or President?" and portraits of the commissioners appointed by them to proceed to Washington and make the fourth effort to establish the rebellion by negotiation. Geo. Kennan continues his Russian narrative with an account of the fortress of Petropaviovsk, the prison in which all important and dangerous political offenders sooner or later are confined. The article, which is very full of detail and of intense interest, is illustrated with diagrams of the internal arrangements. Among the remaining contents are "Living in Paris," by J. D. Osborne; "Astrology, Divination and Coincidences," by Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley; "Topics of the Times," "Open Letters," "Bric à Brac," etc. New York: The Century Co.; Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY opens its February store of good things with a poem, "At Gibraltar," by G. E. Woodberry, in which occurs the famous couplet now being universally copied or commented upon:

"Now westward, look, my country bids good-night—
Peace to the world, from ports without a gun!"

"Yone Santo: A Child of Japan," is interestingly continued by E. H. House; "The Second Son" reaches Chapter XLVIII; George Parsons Lathrop writes of "George Meredith"; Charles Egbert Craddock continues "The Despot of Broomsedge Cove"; James Russell Lowell contributes "Endymion" in classic vein; Paul Hewes describes in pathetic but polished lines "The Gifts of the Fates"; James Breck Perkins furnishes a highly readable sketch of "Madame Necker," the celebrated mother of the more celebrated Madame de Staël; Frank Gaylord Cook discourses on "The Marriage Celebration in Europe," and the statutes and customs which have surrounded it, and do so at present; there are other articles not here mentioned, and the usual Reviews, "Contributors' Club," etc. The contents of this number of the Atlantic are of the highest literary excellence. Houghton, Mifflin Co., Boston, Publishers.

MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.—This month's issue is aptly termed the "Washington Number," the entire body of its contents being in reference to the life of George Washington. The illustrations, which are numerous, consist of portraits of Washington by Stuart and Peale, and of Martha Washington by Robertson, etc. The editor, Mrs. Martha J. Lamb, leads the contents with a general review of the life and services of Washington. Following are a large number of his hitherto unpublished letters and those of others having reference to him. Minor articles include "Washington's Experiences at Cambridge in 1775," "Address to Washington by the Hebrew Congregation, Newport, R. I., 1790," His "Servants at New York," "Household Expenses for the Month of October, 1783," etc. New York: 743 Broadway.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.—An excellently engraved frontispiece represents "The Princess of Wales in Her Academic Robes as a Doctor of Music." Introductory to the general contents is a poem, "Historic Women," by Lady Wilde—a very meritorious production. "Professions for Women" is the title of a series of papers, the initial number of which is "Medicine," by Mary A. Marshall, M. D. An interesting biographical sketch, illustrated with a portrait, etc., is given of Dinah Maria Mulock, author of "John Halifax," preceded by this verse from her own pen:

"And when I lie in the green kirkyard,
With the mold upon my breast,
Say not that she did well or ill,
Only, 'She did her best.'"

A finely illustrated descriptive article upon "Greek Plays at the Universities" is given, together with other papers, and notes on literature and fashion. New York: Cassell & Co.

ST. NICHOLAS.—A story of Russian life is given by Amelia E. Barr, under the title, "Michael and Feodosia." Mrs. Burnett concludes her "Sarah Crewe, or, What Happened at Miss Minchin's." In "The Story of an Old Bridge" Treadwell Walden describes the massive stone roadway across the river Thames, built in the times of Henry II., and many historical events with which it is associated. Numerous quaint-appearing pictures illustrate the text. A story with a fairylike flavor is supplied by Delia W. Lyman, "How Polly Saw the Aprons Grow," the illustrations of which will attract special attention. Of the remaining contents are, "Drill: A Story of School-Boy Life," "The Astrologer's Niece," and "How a Great Sioux Chief was Named." New York: The Century Co.; Boston: Damrell & Upham, 283 Washington street.

WIDE AWAKE.—A more than ordinarily interesting issue of this young folks' favorite appears this month; its stories, sketches, poems, etc., are of special interest, and the illustrations many and attractive. Mrs. Upton's second paper upon "The Children of the White House," treats of those of John Adams, and has eighteen illustrations, including fac-similes of pages of diaries kept by the embryotic statesman. "About Rosa Bonheur" exhibits the peculiar characteristics of that famous painter of animals, the illustrations including a nobly-appearing lion's head, with the title, "An Old Monarch." A six-page Border Ballad, from the pen of Paul H. Hayne, relates to incidents of an ambuscade, the proof of which was corrected a few days before the death of the well-known poet of the South; and very appropriately on subsequent pages Mrs. M. J. Preston tells the story of his childhood. The serial stories by Sidney Luska and Mrs. Sherwood are continued, and in the C. Y. F. R. U. Department is an article upon "The Parsees, or Fire-Worshipers," with three illustrations. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

BUCHANAN'S JOURNAL OF MAN.—"Human Immortality" is the subject of the opening article of this, the first number of the second volume. This is followed by one on "The Inspirational Faculties," in which the musical prodigy Josef Hofman, is remarked upon at some length, and others of similar remarkably early development of musical faculties referred to: Mozart, who exhibited musical talent at three years of age; Paganini, who played the violin at six, and composed a sonata at eight; Ole Bull, who was a violinist when but five years of age, and played passages his master could not at ten. Mendelssohn, Beethoven and Handel were similarly endowed in childhood. Interesting facts are given in every department in physical and mental science in numerous shorter articles. Boston: 6 James street.

HERALD OF HEALTH.—"Some Hints on Protection Against Cold" are seasonable and well worth knowing. The Department of "Woman and the Household," conducted by Helen Fletcher, as also that of "Mothers and the Nursery," by Mrs. F. C. Pressler, are filled with much instruction in their specialities. New York: Herald of Health Co., Box 2141.

THE QUIVER.—New chapters are given of the serial stories, "Not All in Vain," and "Wanted, A Governess," and "The Flying Skull." Short sketches consist of "A Strange Coincidence," "The Captain's Lesson," and "Christmas Eve in Montreal." Several humanitarian institutions are described, and their beneficial results enumerated. New York: Cassell & Co.

PHOTOGRAPHED ON THE SPOT, BY DR. TALMAGE.—"What a wife Job had! At a time when he was one great blotch of eruptions, and his property was destroyed by a tornado, and, more than all, bereavement had come, and the poor man needed all wise counsel, she advises him to go to cursing and swearing. She wanted him to poultice his boils with blasphemy! But he lived right on through his marital disadvantages, recovered his health and his fortune, and raised a splendid family."

A country where a man cannot speak the truth without flying in the face of the established order of things is unsound.—Rev. A. A. Miner.

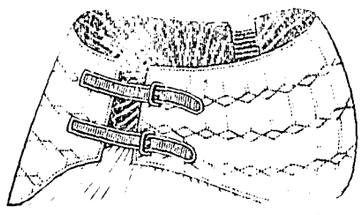
DR. A. H. RICHARDSON, Magnetic Healer, Waverly House, Charlestown. S10



THE above cut illustrates our Magnetic Belt. One of the grandest appliances ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine, and any diseases of the Kidneys. This Belt will give relief in Five Minutes, and has never failed to cure Lame Back! It has no equal for Kidney Disease. It is nature's own power concentrated, and will do more good in one hour than all other remedies will do in one week. It is the crowning triumph of the nineteenth century! Whole families are cured by wearing one Belt in turn. It gives off LIFE and WARMTH the moment it touches the body. We can refer to 1,000 people now wearing this Belt. Never since Galileo has there been given to the world such a potential power for curing disease as DR. THACHER'S MAGNETIC SHIELDS. We challenge the civilized world to produce the equal of this Magnetic Belt for curing disease. Do not compare this Belt with the bogus trash advertised as electric, etc. We have made the subject of Magnetism a life-study, and know what we are saying. We furnish proof and evidence before purchase. Send for our new book, free. It will tell you what Magnetism is, how it operates to cure disease, and WHY it excels all other known remedies. Mailed free to the whole world.

The Writing Planchette.

SCIENCE is unable to explain the mysterious performances of this wonderful little instrument, which writes intelligent answers to questions asked either aloud or mentally. Those unacquainted with it would be astonished at some of the results that have been attained through its agency, and no domestic circle should be without one. All investigators who desire practice in writing mediumship should avail themselves of these "Planchettes," which may be consulted on all questions, as also for communications from deceased relatives or friends.

DIRECTIONS.—Place Planchette on a piece of paper (printing or writing will answer), then place the hand lightly on the board; in a few minutes it begins to move, and is ready to answer mental or spoken questions. Though it cannot be guaranteed that every individual who follows these directions will succeed in obtaining the desired result, or cause the instrument to move, independent of any muscular effort of his or her own, yet it has been proved beyond question that where a party of three or more come together, it is almost impossible that one cannot operate it. If one be not successful, let two try it together. If nothing happens the first day, try it the next, and even if half an hour a day for several days are given to it, the results will amply remunerate you for the time and patience bestowed upon it.

The Planchette is furnished complete with box, pencil and directions, by which any one can easily understand how to use it.

PLANCHETTE, with Pentagraph Wheels, 60 cents, securely packed in a box, and sent by mail, postage free.

NOTICE TO RESIDENTS OF CANADA AND THE PROVINCES.—Under existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada, PLANCHETTES cannot be sent through the mails, but must be forwarded by express only, at the purchaser's expense.

THOUGHTS
INNER LIFE.

The contents of this book consist of nearly one hundred communications on an equal number of subjects relating to life in the spirit-world, selected from those received during the past eight years at private circles held at the residence of Mr. D. E. Bailey, Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Swain of that city being the medium. They were given by what is termed the "independent," or direct voice of the spirits. At the sittings the medium was not unconscious; when the spirit friends began to speak, the company, including the medium, conversed with them the same as with one another. A volume might be filled with accounts of Mr. Bailey's wonderful experiences at these sittings; but he chooses to place the communications before the public with as little comment as possible, in the hope that their readers may find in them strength for the weak, consolation for the sorrowing, and unquestionable assurance of the existence of a life beyond the present for all.

One vol., octavo, pp. 224, with portrait, elegantly printed and bound. Price, cloth, $1,25, postage 10 cents; paper, 75 cents, postage 10 cents.

THE VOICE OF A PEBBLE delineates the individuality of Matter and Mind, fraternal Charity and Love.

ZÖLLNER.
AN OPEN LETTER
TO
PROFESSOR GEORGE S. FULLERTON,
Of the University of Pennsylvania, Member and Secretary of the Seybert Commission for Investigating Modern Spiritualism.
BY C. C. MASSEY,
Of Lincoln's Inn, London, Eng.

Prof. Fullerton having made in his notes appended to the famous Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission certain statements placing Mr. C. C. Massey as a Spiritualist in a rather unenviable position, the latter herein sets the matter right, and in doing so, clearly shows that the Professor had no foundation in truth for what he said. In this connection it may be remarked that Prof. Fullerton has since, in a letter to Mr. Massey, admitted that he was mistaken. Mr. Massey's Letter should be widely circulated, as it completely disproves the charge of Prof. Zöllner's disqualifications as an investigator of phenomena at the date of his séances with Dr. Henry Slade.

Cambridgeport.—Meetings held each Sunday evening at 7½ o'clock at St. George's Hall, 603 Main street, by the Spiritualist Society. H. P. Trask, President.

College Hall, 34 Essex Street.—At the morning meeting Mr. Eben Cobb spoke very feelingly in memory of the late Charles Warren, M. D., of Wellesley Hills—prominent in the medical ranks in Massachusetts and New Hampshire—who was an earnest, whole-souled and deep-thinking Spiritualist, always present in our meetings. Only last Sunday when he came in he said to Mr. Cobb: "Well, I have come to your meeting, for I feel better here than anywhere else, and this may be my last visit." Little did we think it would prove true; yet we know that the summons did not find him unprepared or unwilling to pass over, because we have often heard him remark that he "had more friends on the other side than upon this, and was willing to meet them in that beautiful land." His genial, gentlemanly presence will be very much missed in College Hall.

Mrs. A. Forester gave a short address upon "The Reality of Spirit-Life," followed by readings and tests that were well recognized. Mrs. W. A. Rich gave an inspirational poem which added very much to the interest of the meeting. Mrs. B. F. Willard, under the control of "Sunlight," presented some remarkable readings and tests of spirit presence. Readings were also given by Mrs. J. D. Bruce, Miss A. Peabody and Miss Gertie Coffin.

Afternoon: Mr. Jacob Edson spoke very eloquently upon "The Absolute Necessity of Spiritual Spice in the Bread of Life," which was treated in his usual earnest and logical manner. Dr. W. S. Eldridge gave tests of spirit presence, and some very interesting exhibitions of mesmeric power. Miss Cullen gave readings of character from faces, which were very interesting. An excellent address was made by Mrs. A. E. King, followed by tests, and tests were also given by Peter McKenzie, Mrs. A. Peabody and Mrs. N. J. Thomas.

The evening session was opened with Prof. Longley's "City Just Over the Hill," very finely rendered by Mrs. Eudora Case. Mr. Cobb spoke of the great consolations which come from the spiritual revelation. Dr. H. B. Leighton gave interesting statistics of the annual cost to the people to sustain the churches of this country—some $290,000,000. Dr. H. B. Storer held human experience to be the best revelation of the Divine nature. The Doctor protested against paying any part of the $290 000 000 used to support a system founded on ignorance and superstition. Dr. W. S. Eldridge told some stories illustrating the importance of answering our own prayers by relieving the needy, etc. He made diagnoses of diseases which were pronounced correct. Miss Annie Curtis recited "Jennie McNeil's Ride," which was heartily applauded—closing a very interesting meeting, all retiring well satisfied that communion with the unseen world beyond is a reality. HEATH.

Berkeley Hall—Boston Spiritual Temple.—Last Sunday, after congregational singing, Mrs. Lovering piano accompanist, an invocation by Mrs. R. S. Lillie and a song by Mr. Lillie, the guides of Mrs. Lillie spoke upon "The Law of the Spirit and the Spirit of the Law," referring to the order presented to the Legislature of this State on the 30th ult. for the prevention of fraudulent spirit materializations, the argument of the speaker being that any act of this kind that affects mediums affects the operators on the spirit side of life; that the order as offered is an admission that spirit materialization is a fact, and that there are genuine phenomena of the kind, since there could not otherwise be any fraudulent. It was claimed that Spiritualism is a power that can take care of itself, and such a law as the one proposed is unrequired and uncalled for.

At the evening meeting, questions from the audience were ably considered and answered to the manifest satisfaction of all. The service closed with an improvised poem.

Mrs. Lillie will speak at the same place next Sunday, at 10:30 A. M. and 7 P. M.

MARY F. LOVERING, Cor. Sec'y.

Spiritualistic Phenomena Association, 1031 Washington street.—Our platform was occupied last Sunday by Mrs. E. Clark-Kimball, of Lawrence, Mass. Our hall was full in the afternoon, and so much so at the evening séance all could not be admitted who desired to attend.

In the afternoon Mrs. Kimball gave fifty-six tests of spirit presence in forty minutes, most of which were recognized. Mrs. Kimball is a lady of culture and refinement, and a spirit medium of rare gifts. Our Association is fortunate in securing her services for several Sundays this season, her next engagement with us being Feb. 19th. The Association will celebrate the Fortieth Anniversary probably at Parker Memorial Hall. Dr. H. B. Storer, Mrs. E. C. Kimball, and other talent will participate in the exercises. Over one hundred people attended our last Thursday evening circle. The Sunday meetings are in charge of President Lewis; the Thursday evening circle is directed by Mr. J. Hall, Vice-President. The Association is in a flourishing condition; new members are joining at each meeting.

Next Sunday is Boston Mediums' Day. Mrs. Bruce, Mrs. Willard, Miss Peabody, Mrs. Loomis-Hall, Mrs. Dillingham, Dr. Paxson, Dr. Richardson, Mrs. Olmstead, and many others, are expected to be with us. Sunday services at 2:30 and 7:30. Thursday evening, circle; doors close at eight o'clock.

F. B. WOODBURY, Sec'y.

Eagle Hall, 616 Washington Street.—Sunday last was an unusually interesting day at this place of meeting.

The afternoon exercises were opened by a vigorous speech from Dr. J. L. Paxson, which was warmly received by the audience. He was followed by Miss Fogg, Mrs. M. A. Chandler, Dr. M. V. Thomas, and others with excellent remarks.

Clear tests and spirit-descriptions were given through the mediumship of Mr. McKenzie, Mrs. B. F. Willard, Dr. M. V. Thomas, Mrs. S. E. Rich and Mrs. Nellie S. Thomas, and Mrs. Willard and Mrs. Thomas gave psychometric readings which were pronounced correct, and Miss Cullen character-readings, all of which were declared to be true.

In the evening Miss Lillian Rich gave a fine recitation which was well received, and Dr. M. V. Thomas made remarks and gave clear tests which were recognized. Interesting remarks and clear tests were given by Mrs. M. W. Leslie; psychometric readings by Mrs. Bruce and Dr. Mathews, all of which were pronounced correct. * *

The Independent Club.—The regular meeting was held at 1031 Washington street on Monday evening last, in honor of the reception tendered Mr. and Mrs. Benj. P. Weaver, of the Boston Lyceum. After an address of welcome from Mr. J. W. Fletcher there was a song by Miss Gracie Scales. Mrs. Fletcher then followed with an appropriate address, and read a letter from the Hon. Warren Chase, expressing his regret at not being able to attend and the best of wishes to all present; also a very finely written letter from Mrs. Dyar-Clough was read—both of which were heartily applauded. Mr. Horace Fowle sang two beautiful songs. Miss Lucette Webster recited, with marked effect, "Maria in Heaven." The Clinton Quartette (colored) rendered a number of musical selections, to the great delight of the audience, winning merited applause. Miss Hattie Dodge and Lily Rich also recited extremely well. Mr. Weaver responded in a manly fashion to the honor tendered himself and wife, and expressed his great pleasure at the manifest kindness of his friends. Then followed dancing till a late hour.

MRS. J. W. FLETCHER, Sec'y.

First Spiritual Temple, corner Newbury and Exeter Streets.—Last Sunday we had a repetition of the "Service of Song" which gave so much satisfaction a few weeks since.

Mrs. Fisher-Wellington had charge of the vocal music, with a fine quartette choir, and Mr. R. E. Truette presided at the organ, and it goes without saying that the selections were therefore suitable and beautifully rendered.

Mrs. Hull read two poems—a new version of "Rock of Ages" (by Taylor) and "No Sect in Heaven," which were appreciated; and Dr. D. E. Caswell closed with benediction.

These services are devotional and elevating, and it is intended to continue them on the first Sunday of each month through the season.

There will be the usual service next Sunday at quarter to three P. M., when the guides of Mrs. Lizzie S. Manchester will speak. Also the usual sociable in the lower audience-room, at half-past seven P. M., on Wednesday. All cordially invited. W. H. R.

The First Spiritualists' Ladies' Aid Society.—Every seat was occupied at the regular gathering of this Society and its friends last Friday evening. Mrs. Ann E. Blinn presided, and the exercises comprised addresses by Thomas Dowling, Mr. and Mrs. Whitlock and Mr. Craig; vocal music by Miss Amanda Bailey and Miss Whittemore; instrumental music by Mr. Willis; reading by Miss Alice Cummings, and tests by Mrs. Boyden, at the close of which all joined in singing, under the direction of Dr. Sweeney, "The Old Oaken Bucket."

Mrs. Z. C. Howland of Charlestown presented the Society with ten dollars for the worthy poor.

The parlors occupied by the Society are to be thoroughly repaired, under the supervision of the Hall Committee, Mrs. Waterhouse, Chairman.

A large company will be present at these rooms Friday evening, Feb. 10th, to attend the Old Folks' Supper and Dance. REPORTER.

The Ladies' Industrial Society.—On the evening of Jan. 31st the members and friends of this Society held a social meeting at Lyceum Hall, 1031 Washington street. After a half hour's pleasant converse a literary entertainment followed, Richard Holmes presiding. Mr. J. T. Lillie opened the exercises with a song, "Shadow Land." Following, the general exercises consisted of remarks by Jacob Edson, Mrs. R. S. Lillie (who also gave a poetical improvisation,) Dr. George Dutton, W. A. Dunklee, Dr. B. M. Lawrence, and Mrs. L. L. Whitlock; readings by Mrs. Elnora Mason, Prof. W. F. Peck, and Mrs. Pengilly; vocal and instrumental music by Willie Boyce, Maudie G. Banks, Mr. Lillie, Mrs. Lovering, and Dr. H. J. Sweney, all of which were interesting and instructive. Singing by the audience terminated one of the best of these always interesting occasions.

The next social meeting will be held Feb. 14th. All are invited. MARY F. LOVERING, Sec'y.

Mishawum Hall, City Square, Charlestown District.—The Echo Spiritualist Meetings were held at this place Sunday last, with good and interested audiences—W. A. Hale, Chairman. At 2:30 remarks by the Chairman (under control), David Brown and Mr. Fuller, and recognized tests and psychometric readings by Mrs. Shackley and the Chairman comprised the services. At 7:30 the exercises consisted of remarks by Chairman, a number of good tests given through Mrs. A. E. Cunningham, musical manifestations by Mrs. H. W. Cushman (listened to with deep interest), and tests by Mrs. Shackley, Mrs. Thomas and Miss Cullen. Music by Mrs. Mandell rendered the service very interesting. W. A. H.

First Society of Spiritualists.—In order to illustrate the wonderful capability of Mrs. Nellie J. T. Brigham under the inspiration of her guides to handle any subject, or as many subjects as may be presented for a single lecture, in language as perfect and profound as ever fell from mortal lips, I cite the questions of last Sunday morning: "Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever. What is meant by the tree of life, and eat and live forever?" Gen. iii: 22.

"We are told that the higher teachings can reach us through the soul only, while 'impressions' through the brain may be imparted by both good and evil spirits. Please define 'inspiration' and 'impressions,' and how they are received by the medium." "The possibilities of mind." "Please give a concise definition of Spiritualism suitable for a new dictionary." "Please explain Theosophy." Subjects for poems, "Barred Out" and "The Sunshine on the Snow."

In the evening Mrs. Brigham spoke upon "The Wave of Progress." There were very fair audiences on both occasions.

The meeting for spirit-manifestations in the afternoon was large, and one of great interest. These meetings are infusing new life into Spiritualism in New York. They are very instructive, and should they continue to increase in the number of attendants as they have from the opening, the society will have to obtain a more commodious hall. The audience is composed of many of the refined and intelligent men and women of the city, and Mrs. Wells is receiving thousands of congratulations upon the success which her management has attained, and her remarkable development as a platform test medium is a surprise, even to her most ardent friends. In this phase of mediumship she will soon be as noted as she now is in that of materialization.

The meeting was opened by an invocation by Mr. Frank T. Ripley, of Boston. Mr. Henry J. Newton read a poem by John G. Whittier. Mr. Ripley delivered a short address that was apt, and well received, being his first appearance for his present engagement of this month. He also gave several tests. A large and beautiful bouquet was sent to him by friends. Such tokens Mr. R. always appreciates. Mrs. Wells gave eighteen tests, some of which were very remarkable. One to a gentleman, a stranger, describing a brother in spirit life who was drowned, and a sister who was known to the public before she passed over, giving their personal appearance when in life, and the names of both. As Mrs. Wells passed to her seat the spirit of the sister followed her, and insisted on her giving a message to her brother, thanking him for his kindness to her memory in getting the statuary for her monument, and saying that he wasted too much money on the same, and did not get what he expected from some one else. The spirit said the statuary came from over the water, and gave other details. The gentleman stated that in every particular what she had said was true, and that the test to him was remarkable. He was not a Spiritualist.

Mrs. Brigham will open the meeting for manifestations next Sunday afternoon at 2:45 o'clock, giving a lecture, and improvise a poem upon a subject to be selected by H. J. Newton. S.

☞ The prospects attending the work of the American Spiritualist Alliance are very encouraging at present, and earnest friends of the movement are bending their energies to the advancement of its interests. Miss Anderson and Della Sawyer—two of the youngest members of the Alliance—are arranging for a grand concert, we understand, to be given soon.

☞ We learn from a correspondent in New York that Mrs. M. E. Williams, of that city—the well-known medium for full-form materialization—will, at the earnest solicitation of many persons who are interested in the phenomena, and by the consent and advice of the spirit controls of her cabinet, give a public séance at Adelphi Hall, corner 52d street and 7th Avenue, on Saturday evening, Feb. 18th, at eight o'clock, her spirit controls having expressed the opinion that they will be able to produce full-form materializations before a public audience. At any rate they are willing to make the effort, and have determined to do so at the time and place above-named.

IN THE WEST.

Chicago, Ill.—In a recent issue of the BANNER OF LIGHT I observe some commendatory remarks relative to the mediumship of Mrs. Eleanor C. Martin, of Columbus, O., which reminds me of a duty too long delayed of adding my testimony relative to her excellence as a medium in answering sealed letters. This duty is made apparent by the seemingly willful misrepresentations made by the Seybert Commission in their Report of their so-called investigation.

I have had a number of sealed letters answered by Mrs. Martin's controls, and under such conditions that the perusal of contents by any human eye was impossible, the letters being returned to me intact, accompanied in each case by detailed answers, especially pertinent and applicable in every detail.

The charges of the Commission of clumsy efforts at deception by Mrs. Martin seem specially out of place to all who have the pleasure of enjoying a personal acquaintance with that most excellent lady and medium, who enjoys to the fullest extent the confidence and esteem of all who know her and have had the light shed upon the path of life through her heaven-sent gifts of the spirit. E. SPRAGUE.

Children's Lyceum.—You were so kind, Mr. Editor, as to publish the last account sent to you of the Children's Lyceum, and I take the liberty of forwarding another, believing that the public at large will be glad to hear of our progress.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum of Chicago was called to order at its session of Jan. 22d by the Conductor. The exercises opened with singing from the "Spiritual Wreath" and reading from "The Lyceum Instructor." After that came lessons in Groups and recitations by Lettie Bryan, Edna Halle, Grace Garner, Victoria Binnuise, Ethel Garner, Milton Openheimer, Lulu Pettycarfe, Joseph Smith, Eben Morton, Myron Parsons and Lucinda Walker. The Lyceum Journal was read by its editor, W. B. Sinn. The Banner March followed, after which the session closed with a song. There were sixty in attendance.

Jan. 29th the usual exercises were carried out, with recitations by Letty Bryan, Grace Garner, Edna Halle, Robert Page, Emma Ginn, Joseph Smith, Mrs. Downe, Harbucht, Louiza Zinn, Milton Openheimer, Albert Feidler and Gertrude Page. Song, by Lucinda Walker. After the March and Song the Lyceum closed, having had seventy in attendance. A penny collection is taken up each Sunday that averages from fifty cents to one dollar. C. A. PARSONS, Sec'y.

St. Louis, Mo.—In St. Louis we have probably twenty thousand people who believe that spirits can come back to earth after the period termed death, and, under certain conditions, can make themselves known to mortals; but the people who believe that are not known as Spiritualists, and their children are not taught that doctrine. The children of Spiritualists go to church and Sunday-school, and are as ignorant of Spiritualism as a carriage horse. The reason for this is, we are not organized into a solid society, and the children of Spiritualists have to associate with the children of church people as a consequence. If they should tell the children of the church people they were Spiritualists the church folks would make sport of them; so it often happens that a young man or young lady will hear of a séance, and come home expecting to tell their parents some very strange news, and are then informed for the first time that their parents were Spiritualists years ago.

Now if Spiritualists had temples designed for the use of mediums and spiritual lecturers, this would all be changed; the children of Spiritualists would find associations congenial in their own circle, and they could use an influence on their friends who are not Spiritualists to bring them around to the knowledge that is in Spiritualism. The Catholics are born in the Church, and that is why the Catholic Church is so strong. The children of Catholics never have to be converted; they are born Catholics. Now if Spiritualists would come together, form societies, build temples or halls where they and their families could congregate every day in the week, if they choose to do so, the children of Spiritualists would never have to be "converted" to Spiritualism; they would be born Spiritualists. Every Catholic child is educated to try and convert one Protestant. Every child of a Spiritualist should be taught to try and convert two Catholics or Protestants; then the BANNER OF LIGHT would go where it is not now known.

If Spiritualism is to be successful the Spiritualists must use more tact; they must do more work in the ranks of the church people. All Spiritualists must enter the ranks of the church people and scatter spiritual literature broadcast over the land. There are millions of people who never have seen a spiritual paper or book on Spiritualism, and who think Spiritualists are people who simply tell fortunes and locate stolen property and oliver mines. There is not one person in ten, in America, to-day, who has the slightest conception of what the BANNER OF LIGHT teaches, because the Spiritualists are too slow; they lack energy; they are afraid some one will poke fun at them, and that is why the West is largely ignorant of the Spiritual Philosophy. J. W. C.

Delphos, Kan.—In a December number of THE BANNER I read an article from the Philadelphia Enquirer upon the strange phenomenon of a photograph taken by W. Curtis Taylor. As considerable speculation has been advanced by professional and amateur artists without arriving at any definite conclusions, I beg permission to give a few conjectural ideas as regards physical, or perhaps more properly magnetic photography. It perhaps is a well-known fact among artists of photography that the negatives taken are but the magnetic or nerve aura emanating from the individual sitting for a picture, the camera being so adjusted as to focalize the nerve aura, or, in other words, it assimilates the aura upon the sensitized plate to that degree in which the sensitiveness of the plate will absorb the influence. Of course light and shading form their component parts in producing the requisite temperature in voluminity. Too much light will consume the basic principles, i. e., nerve aura. Too much shading renders it too opaque, and the eliminating influence is resolved into negativity. All bodies, inanimate, animate and organic, have their atmospheric condition in which they move, and the higher up in conditions, the more subtile and transparent becomes their atmosphere. Now, in my opinion the atmospheric conditions of those ladies being the more ethereal and subtile than that of the chair and other appurtenances, renders the opaqueness of the chair, etc., visible and intact through the bodies of the ladies. In the materiality of things and substance, we perceive of the crude first. Its very principles precede and form impressions upon the sensitiveness of all life. I. N. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, Mo.—Although Kansas City has made very rapid strides in some directions, it has not become as thoroughly spiritualized as might be expected. There are many Spiritualists here, but like some others, they are slow to disclose their ideas, at present, at least. Bro. Lyman C. Howe, the stanch advocate and defender of Spiritualism, has been engaged for nine months, speaking regularly every Sunday evening at the K. P. Hall, corner 11th and Main streets. The attendance is not large, but is composed of persons of both sexes, who prize truth and thirst for knowledge.

Bro. Howe is one of the finest speakers I have ever heard; his controls are high, and through his organism the truth proceeds with telling effect, and those who are so fortunate as to hear his scientific and philosophical gems of thought are amply compensated for their time, trouble, and nominal entrance fee. His lectures embrace questions of vital importance in every instance, but the last Sunday evening of every month is devoted to the answering of those proposed by members of the audience. The answers are highly satisfactory, and bear unmistakable evidence of superior intelligence. Mr. Howe's improvisations of poetry are beautiful and magnificent weavings of the theme into a splendid wreath of thought-flowers, teaching the glorious truths of immortality, and attracting the sweetest influences.

The "Georgia Evangelist," Sam Jones, and his colleague, Sam Small, are creating a great excitement in the religious circles, drawing audiences of two and three thousand; but it is merely a transitory wave, which sweeps over the country, and is gone, while Spiritualism is an undercurrent, that, though silent, is nevertheless making its way beneath the foundations of church creed and faith, consequently the seemingly small assemblages greeting Bro. Howe may ultimately exhibit great results, for there are quite a number attending his lectures whose minds have either been under the dark and gloomy clouds of materialism, or the threatening voice of "Old Theology," that are now by the powerful and logical arguments of our Spiritual Philosophy, becoming convinced that a voice can reach them from beyond the grave—a voice that does not threaten nor gloat over the destruction of human affection, but teaches that love is the controlling power of the universe. The following officers have been elected: Mrs. S. J. Lenout, President; Mr. Charles Grant and Mrs. Hathaway, Vice Presidents; Mrs. Laura Grant, Secretary; Mr. J. C. Mathews, Treasurer; Messrs. G. Lenout, Charles Purinton and N. Travis, and the President and Secretary, Executive Committee; D. Birdsall, Corresponding Secretary and Finance Agent.

We have organized four good local circles, and will, without any doubt, in the very near future succeed in organizing our other three to complete our organization.

I hereby ask and solicit donations from all Spiritualists and Liberalists, who may have an accumulation of back numbers of the BANNER OF LIGHT or any other spiritual or liberal papers, pamphlets and other liberal literature, and on all packages of such literature I will remit the postage if the parties forwarding them will send me a postal card requesting me to do so. All such donations may be sent to my address.

Mr. Baxter in New York State.

Rarely does J. Frank Baxter speak on Monday evenings, the need of rest from Sunday labors is so imperative. The demand, however, was so urgent that he lectured again in ALBANY, but to do so had to take Monday evening, Jan. 30th. He had a large audience, and offered an excellent lecture on "The Persistence of Truth," applying it to Spiritualism, which had come from logical necessity, and, further, had "come to stay." The séance which followed the lecture was very interesting, and several fine tests were given.

On Tuesday evening, Jan. 31st, Mr. Baxter lectured, sang and described spirits in GLENS FALLS, to an overflowing house. At 7:30, the hour of beginning, many were going away, for to get in was impossible. Mr. Baxter's lecture, defining his position and showing why he was so positive with reference to Modern Spiritualism, was listened to with great attention, and although a hundred stood yet the room was quiet and orderly. When Mr. Baxter gave his tests the upturned faces were soon the very picture of astonishment, and no wonder, for they were remarkable, and to a considerable extent this feature of mediumship was novel. Mr. Baxter lectured and delineated again there on Wednesday evening, Feb. 1st, accommodations having been made to seat all who were fortunate enough to get in. The audience was a large one, and the exercises memorable and influential, for the arguments were concise, pointed and numerous, and the descriptions vivid and correct to furthest detail.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn preceded Mr. Baxter on a number of Sundays, and will lecture there again on Sundays soon. The trustees of the Universalist Society desire to secure Mr. Baxter for future work, and it is possible that they, with the Spiritualists, will unite efforts in bringing about the result. COM.

WORCESTER, MASS.

J. Frank Baxter began his month's engagement in Worcester last Sunday, the 5th inst. The announcement that he would lecture brought out a full house in the afternoon, and the capacious Continental Hall seated an unusually large and intellectual audience in the evening. To say everybody was pleased is really not enough. The lecture of the afternoon was introductory yet outspoken, manly and timely, and, further, it brought many a stranger to Spiritualism into sympathy with Mr. Baxter and the cause

The evening lecture on "The Practical Value" of Spiritualism was most able—eliciting pronounced applause. Reporters from the City Telegram and Spy offices were present and freely expressed the lecturer's position and reflections.

Mr. Baxter exercised his mediumship to the delectation and education of all, continuing it till a late hour.

Next Sunday, 12th inst., Mr. Baxter, as per announcement, will have for his subject, in the afternoon, "The Width and Worth of the Spiritual Platform," and in the evening, "The Church and the Book in their Relations to Modern Spiritualism." All are anticipating a treat. AUDITOR.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Frank T. Ripley has closed his engagement of two months with the Pittsburgh Society of Spiritualists. His lectures and tests have given the greatest satisfaction to every one who has heard him; and our membership has been increased to the number of forty-six ladies and gentlemen joining our Society during his ministration.

A number of his friends showed appreciation of his good services by making him a present of a handsome diamond ring, which was given him at our Sunday morning service by our President, J. H. McElroy.

Mr. Ripley has also organized a Children's Lyceum, which will be directed by some of our best talent; his stay with us has been very successful, both to himself and the Society.

The people of Pittsburgh are very anxious to investigate the phenomena of Spiritualism, and in my opinion this would be a good field for a few first class slate-writing or materializing mediums. This feeling of inquiry has been awakened through Mr. Ripley's wonderful tests, of which he has given a large number every Sunday morning and evening.

We can recommend Mr. Ripley as a first class test medium to societies wishing to engage any one for that purpose.

We expect to engage Mr. Ripley again for the coming season of 1888. The best wishes of the Society and his many friends follow him on his journey.

Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings speaks for us during the month of February. J. H. LOHMEYER.

Feb. 2d, 1888.

Providence, R. I.—Mrs. Juliette Yeaw addressed the Association Sunday, Feb. 5th, giving entire satisfaction to large and appreciative audiences. The regular morning service was omitted, that Mrs. Yeaw might officiate at the funeral of Mr. George W. King, which was observed in Blackstone Hall at 12:30 o'clock. Mr. King was a Spiritualist of many years, and his wife is a medium of rare powers. She feels assured that her husband has not gone from her, but is still with her in the home, caring for the loved ones with the tender solicitude that he manifested while in the earthly form. A large delegation of Odd Fellows, of which Order Mr. King was a member, attended the funeral.—Next Sunday Joseph D. Stiles will be with us. MARY E. A. WHITNEY.

Ladies' Aid Society—The meetings of the Ladies' Aid for the last three weeks have been very successfull—attendance good. The supper on Jan. 19th was a success, both financially and socially. The ladies are making arrangements for another entertainment in the near future. M. A. SCANNELL, Cor. Sec'y.

Newburyport, Mass.—Mrs. H. S. Lake occupied our platform for the first time on Sunday, and created a very pleasing impression from the start. Her afternoon subject: "Life and Death," was presented in a masterly manner, and the speaker was greeted with hearty applause at the close. In the evening a brief address of merit was followed by answering questions, together with psychometric readings. Mrs. Lake left our city with the assurance that her platform work was not only highly meritorious, but that it had been productive of excellent results.—The Ladies' Aid Society will celebrate its third anniversary on February 17th, with a "Mother Hubbard" party and supper. H.

Haverhill and Bradford.—Last Sunday was rendered an interesting one to the Spiritualist Association at Brittan Hall, by the presence of James V. Mansfield, who held the platform and gave narrative addresses afternoon and evening, embracing the relation of many remarkable incidents in his experience as a medium during the past thirty-seven years, together with a detailed history of his development as a writing medium. This was the first appearance of Dr. Mansfield before a Haverhill audience. The meetings were largely attended, both afternoon and evening.—Next Sunday the platform will be held by Mrs. E. Clarke Kimball, of Lawrence. E. P. H.

Salem, Mass.—Prof. W. F. Peck, of Boston, delivered two stirring addresses for our Society Feb. 5th, which were received with satisfaction by the large audiences afternoon and evening.—F. A. Wiggin, of Salem, is to speak for us next Sunday, Feb. 12th.

W. H. H. THYNG, Cor. Sec'y.

Cambridgeport.—The meeting of the Spiritual Society of Cambridgeport will be held at St. George's Hall, 603 Main street, next Sunday evening at 7:30, Feb. 12th. Lecture and tests by Mrs. Kate R. Stiles.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and the faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing in the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

Spiritual Phenomena.

IN THE SEANCE-ROOM.

BY E. A. BRACKETT.

No. 4.

I have been criticised for stating that the resemblance or non-resemblance of these forms to the individuals they claim to have been while dwelling on this side of life, could not be taken as evidence for or against the identity of the spirit controlling them. I have given what appeared to me to be true, and if I am correct, it is important that we should understand it.

Many people enter the séance-room expecting that the forms that come to them will resemble their friends and relatives, and that this resemblance will be evidence of the truth of the phenomenon.

What occurred to one of my friends will illustrate the experience of many on their first visit to a séance-room. "Did anything come to you?" was asked. "Yes, a form that claimed to be my mother; but it was n't my mother, and I told her so. Only think of it! my mother was a large woman weighing over two hundred, and past eighty years of age when she died, and the form that came to me was that of a slim woman, apparently not over forty."

This person, like many others, went away feeling that she had been imposed upon. It was evident that she was looking for the shell and not the kernel; that she did not realize that it was the spirit she should have sought, and not the old form. I have seen excellent likenesses, and many that were by others supposed to be, but were not. If they can perceive from our minds, or by any other means, how they looked when in this life, they can appear to us nearly, if not quite, as they then did.

The claim that they are our friends is lost if we base it merely on their outward resemblance, for but few make any approximation to their former personal appearance. In my interviews with these spirits I have never found one who maintained that his or her appearance was identical with that of the earth-life; on the contrary, when attention was drawn to it they invariably stated that they came clothed as best they could, in the materials drawn from their surroundings, and that this is the reason why they cannot appear externally the same through different mediums.

A change in the audience will often have a marked influence on their make-up, and it is only when we have established close relations with them that they are able to sustain, with any degree of regularity, the individuality of their forms, and even then our mental and physical condition causes considerable variation. Every close student of this phenomenon understands this. During my acquaintance with Bertha as a spirit she has changed quite as much as any young girl would have done in the same time in this life.

Let us start right and thus avoid any regrets that may arise from having, in our ignorance, been led to deal unjustly with these beings.

Except in a very limited sense, Nature lays no claim to permanence of individual forms; they are constantly changing. It is not necessary that the telegraph machine should resemble the operator in order to convince us of his identity. Nor is it wise, because of disappointment, arising mainly from our false estimates as to what should or should not be, to follow the example of the savage who, angered by the reflection before him, smashed the mirror to get at the face behind it, for until our mental condition is adjusted to their sphere of action, we shall find ourselves more or less reflected in them.

Around every materializing medium there are a few individual types, and these, with slight variations, constitute the material part of the phenomena. Except as a medium of communication these bodies have little to do with the higher manifestations. Developed on a sensuous plane, they are capable of scientific demonstration, of absolute proof; but beyond this one point materialistic science cannot go.

The substance composing these bodies is intermediate between that of a spirit and the grosser forms of matter, and it makes no difference from what source these particles are drawn, they, and not the medium, constitute the true mediumistic element of the séance. It is these products of human life, these emanations which are constantly passing from us to the more refined organizations of matter, varying with different individuals both in quantity and quality, that connect the two worlds in such a way that certain, but imperfect, communication is established between them.

If we understand that these bodies are made up from particles drawn from living organisms, highly charged with vital forces, the difficulty met by the spirits in endeavoring to rise above their magnetic environments will be apparent. It is this which renders them so susceptible to thoughts and influences from the earth-plane, and shuts out the influx from the spiritual side, making their appearance in the public séance often precarious and unsatisfactory. Constantly subjected to new magnetisms, they struggle against adverse currents which prevent their advancing. It is only when they can draw from us sufficient strength to combat these influences that we obtain from them something more than the average tone of the séance, and our association with them becomes spiritually attractive.

It is this quality of susceptibility in our make-up which accounts for the widely different experiences with these beings. Two marked instances have come under my observation that will illustrate this: A well-known Professor, a member of the American Society of Psychical Research, expressed a strong desire to see something of materialization. I rendered him such assistance as I could, but the results were peculiarly unfortunate; for, out of more than twenty séances which he attended, nothing came to him personally. The experience of others, it mattered not what their character and standing might be, did not relieve him from the suspicion that it was all a fraud, and that the forms were confederates. He asked for an introduction to Bertha. As I always consult her in such cases, I was surprised to find that she shrank from it; but after hesitating a little she said, "Yes, I will do anything I can for you." The introduction took place in the most formal manner on both sides.

Subsequently while he was sitting near me on the right side of the room, she came up behind my chair, several feet from the cabinet. He was, at the time, looking at the place where she became visible, and under the impulse of the moment, he said, "That was very good. I was watching there when she came up. I have gained something by coming with you." Before he left the séance-room, however, he relapsed to his former position, saying that she might have crawled out there with a dark cloth over her, and become visible by throwing it off.

As I knew her to be free from deception, and had seen her come up in parts of the room where such tricks were impossible, I did not applaud his suggestion, but his remarks led me to understand why she shrank from the introduction, and why nothing came to him.

Knowing from friends who urged me to assist him, something of his generous nature and high social qualities, I confess I was not prepared for what followed; and yet I ought to have known that this is not an age of martyrs, and, from his own teachings, that a man at his time of life is not likely to change his habits or methods of thought. That he was thoroughly honest in his intentions, I have not a particle of doubt. He is intensely interested in hypnotism, and we may yet have from his able pen some interesting statements on this subject, and perhaps a theory explaining Spiritualism as nothing more than the automatic action of nerve-centres.

The other instance was that of the late Dr. James R. Nichols, who asked me to arrange, if possible, a private séance for him, as his health was such that he did not think he could remain through the ordinary public séance, and he did not feel that he had a right to disturb the audience by leaving before it closed. With the assistance of two of my friends arrangements were made, and the séance held under the mediumship of Miss Helen Berry. There were seven persons present—four gentlemen and three ladies. Everything was arranged to our entire satisfaction, and the audience was placed in a semi-circle, fifteen feet from the cabinet. Soon after the séance commenced a dim light was seen on each side of the room, about half-way between the cabinet and the audience. Slowly these lights grew brighter, spreading and rising until they reached the height of about four feet, when there sprang from these apparent columns of vapor two graceful forms bounding into the centre of the room at the same time. Had I been a Hindu I should have gone down before them, exclaiming, "Om Mani Padme Hum!" (Holy Jewels of the Lotus). The unusual strength of the control, largely due to the perfect harmony of the circle, enabled them to appear closely resembling their spiritual forms. They were marvelous embodiments of beauty. As the light was good and there were no chairs or other objects on either side of the room for them to crawl out from under or behind, the Professor's dark cloth was not needed.

We all rose to greet them, and for nearly a quarter of an hour they held complete sway over the audience, talking freely with all. One was Bertha, and as Dr. N. was anxious to meet her, I said to her, "I have a friend to whom I want to introduce you." Instantly she replied, "I need no introduction to him," and leaving me she glided to the Doctor, reached out both hands, and looking up playfully into his face said, "Whence, What, Where?" quoting the title of a book written by him. Then both engaged in a rapid conversation, but what the sum and substance of it was I do not know, nor do I think any one does, unless it be Dr. Alfred R. Wallace, to whom, I have since learned, he gave an account of this séance.

On a subsequent occasion Bertha said to me, "I had a pleasant interview with your friend, and what I told him he will never forget." Months afterward, Dr. Nichols, in speaking of that séance, said to me, "It was the most astounding thing I ever witnessed. I care nothing for the locked doors and barred windows, it was simply impossible for any human being to have filled the rôle of what came to me. I would not have missed it for anything, and have never entertained a particle of doubt as to its spiritual origin."

One remarkable phenomenon followed another to the close of the sitting. I have, in this brief sketch, intentionally avoided any allusion to private matters of friends and relatives who came to different members of the circle, all of whom were recognized, and were, in their way, quite as wonderful as anything I have attempted to describe. No language can convey any adequate idea of this séance, and those who took part in it will ever remember it as a radiant vision of life and light from an unseen world.

The experience of these two men is instructive, and goes a long way to explain some of the causes that engender a feeling of opposition to these manifestations. Both were honest, highly-educated, and trained to scientific methods of thought. One attended some twenty or more séances, and is not recognized by a single form. The other enters the séance-room for the first time, and is overwhelmed with attention from these beings. Neither the medium nor the manager was responsible for this. The manager was favorably disposed toward the Professor, while on the other hand I found it difficult to obtain permission from him for the Doctor to join our circle, he having refused to allow him to attend a former private séance composed of nearly the same parties. He did not know that our object was, if possible, to obtain for Dr. N. the privilege of witnessing these manifestations.

No two persons can have precisely the same experience with these beings. They will differ, in many particulars, as widely as the individualities of those whom they meet, and while the mental atmosphere remains as it is, there will be every possible degree, from failure to success; from those who grope in darkness to those whose unmistakable evidence in these things leads them to accept unreservedly the dawn of another life.

Whatever we may expect or receive, we cannot change the laws which govern these manifestations. If we accept them at all, it must be upon their own plane of development, and not upon our mistaken ideas of what they should be. That there are some things insisted upon as essential to the séance that have no vital bearing upon it, every experienced investigator knows.

Sympathizing with the honest skeptic who is earnestly striving to get at the truth, I have no words of commendation for that unwise disregard of public sentiment which retains the cabinet in a position open to the possibility of confederates. The inexperienced visitor cannot see the necessity of such arrangements, and very naturally attributes them to an unworthy motive; and the fact that he finds other cabinets where this objectional feature does not exist, tends to strengthen his suspicion of wrong. While I consider the charge of confederates the weakest that has been made against mediums, and know from my long experience that at séances where these cabinet restrictions are not regarded there are true manifestations often surpassingly beautiful, I also know that nothing worse can enter the séance-room than the feelings of doubt and distrust engendered by a suspicious location of the cabinet. It is as certain as the laws of gravitation, all else being equal, that mediums who place their cabinets above suspicion will draw to their séances the largest number of patrons. With my susceptibility to the influence of these beings, it makes no difference to me, personally, where the cabinet is placed. I fully understand that the condition of mind requiring such tests is not favorable to the higher manifestations, but mediums do not grade their séances to meet the wants of advanced investigators. The public séance is primary, and while it remains so, it is folly to drive away honest, sincere persons by any unsatisfactory arrangement.

The pecuniary success depends upon the increasing number of converts and the loyalty of manager and medium to those who are earnestly asking for light. To the experienced investigator the manifestations at a materializing séance carry with them a more convincing evidence of their truthfulness than can be obtained by ordinary tests, but to the novice who is rightly seeking first for evidence of the existence of the materialized forms, they are valueless. The present condition of materialization may be stated in a few words:

First, The production of organized human forms, capable of physical and mental action. If the testimony of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses is to be depended upon, no fact in science is more fully established.

Second, Owing to the promiscuous character of the audience, the public séance cannot advance beyond the production of these forms and the affectionate but imperfect reünion with friends who have passed to the other life.

Until there are a number of persons sufficiently interested in this subject to form circles into which no discordant element is admitted, and with ample funds to relieve the medium from the necessity of holding public séances, the more delicate phases of the manifestations will, with few exceptions, remain unexpressed.

Through a love of the sensational, there has been an almost unconscious disposition to linger on the threshold of a great phenomenon which claims nothing less than the sensuous embodiment of beings from another world. However marvelous this may seem to those who are not familiar with the facts, those who know it should not be contented to rest there. From their peculiar environments these materialized beings are easily dragged down to our own level, and we cannot be too careful in our association with them. To know how to meet them and draw from their side of life that spiritual influx which, under right conditions, they can pour into our hearts, should be the earnest desire of every one who waits their coming.

REALITY OF DR. SLADE'S MEDIUMSHIP.

BY PROF. HENRY KIDDLE.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

One of the principal points of the Seybert Commission, in their "Preliminary Report," was, evidently, to destroy the credit of Dr. Henry Slade as a medium for spirit-manifestations, and to prove him a charlatan and trickster. They were not willing to accredit him with any great skill as a prestidigitateur, for they reported that he "performed several little tricks which he imputed to spiritual agency, but which were almost puerile in the simplicity of their legerdemain." They assume to "describe the processes which we [they] distinctly saw this medium adopt." The ten Commissioners sign a statement which says, "every step in the process [of substitution] we have distinctly seen," though only three of the ten attended Dr. Slade's séances; and they all asseverate under their own signatures that the character of his manifestations before the Commission was "fraudulent throughout." This false statement—false certainly as to those who signed it without any personal knowledge of the subject—has been published to the world in the book which has been issued by the Commission, and in the approving comments of the newspaper press, the members of which, now that their attention has been called to this discreditable misstatement, refuse to notice it, thus making themselves parties to as mean a fraud as any charged upon a medium; for was it not a fraud to represent this investigation as having been made by ten persons when, in fact, only a small part of the number took any real part in it, or could know the facts which they alleged to be true, and to have been proved so by their own personal observation?

Slade's powers and the results of their exercise had been examined and endorsed by one of the most illustrious of living scientists; and the scientific record of that investigation was before the world in the well-known work entitled "Transcendental Physics," published by Prof. Zöllner in 1879. Hence, the design of the Commissioners, to extirpate Modern Spiritualism, could not be achieved without the destruction of Slade's reputation as a medium, and that of Zöllner as a person of sound mind. The one was deemed worth the expenditure of $300 (though this was pronounced to be "prohibitory" in the case of another noted medium); and the other seemed to warrant the taking of a journey to Germany in order to obtain testimony against Zöllner's sanity. Both, however, have failed most wretchedly; and these Commissioners stand before the public branded as false to the trust confided to them, which was to protect the truth, whatever it might be, not to enter into a "combine" to strangle it.

But my object in this communication is not to arraign this Commission anew, but to present a few additional evidences of the reality of Dr. Slade's mediumship. During 1886, this medium gave a series of sittings in Paris; and I have been privileged to see the album which contains, inscribed within it, the signatures and certificates of approval and satisfaction of many highly-cultured and eminent persons who witnessed his manifestations. The book contains at least one hundred and fifty signatures, and between sixty and seventy testimonials, all favorable to Dr. Slade as a genuine, honest medium, and expressing belief in the reality of the manifestations, particularly that of independent writing, which the Philadelphia savants brand as "simple legerdemain." I give below a translation of a few of these. Among the Parisian visitors there was the eminent prestidigitateur, Prof. Jacobs, who writes in the album:

"I affirm that the séance of M. Slade is true—truly spiritualistic and incomprehensible. This I assert anew."

Another visitor writes:

"I am somewhat of a prestidigitateur, and I declare that the phenomenon of writing obtained upon the slates is not, as far as I can see, explicable by any act of prestidigitation."

M. Bramann, Vice-President of the Paris Society for Psychical Research, and Professor of German in the University of Paris, writes a full and very significant testimonial, as follows:

"In my presence and that of M. de Rienzi, there have been produced, through the mediumship of Dr. Slade, certain phenomena called spiritual, exceedingly remarkable, especially the direct writing produced between two slates, seeming to exclude all supposition of fraud, and showing the existence of an intelligent force without any possible intervention on the part of the intermediary. I willingly give my testimony to Dr. Slade. I have no doubt of his good faith, and I certainly have brought no credulity to the séance, but have experimented with perfect coolness, though with sincerity."

J. Murray Templeton, of the Society for Psychical Research, thus writes:

"I am glad to testify to the remarkable powers of Dr. Slade—of all powers the most wonderful of this age."

Mr. H. Wedgewood, an ex-police-magistrate of London, writes:

"I have come from London in order to attend some séances with Dr. Slade, with whom I have already experimented several times. I have obtained writing in German and French (Mr. Slade does not know either), within two slates fastened together, wrapped in paper and bound with a cord. In one case I sat upon the package while the writing was going on, and in another the package rested on the table without being touched by Dr. Slade or by myself. I have seen violent movements of pieces of furniture, without having any connection with the medium. I am sure these movements could not have been fraudulently performed."

J. Delanne, "Engineer, Electrician, and Editor-in-chief of Spiritism," writes:

"I have assisted in experiments which seem to me to be absolutely demonstrative; for the conditions of control do not permit me to doubt the mediumistic power of M. Slade. The psychic influx acting upon the needle in the compass is particularly remarkable."

Three visitors from Brussels sign the following written attestation:

"After having taken all the necessary precautions to put ourselves, during the operation, in the proper condition of passivity—with a spirit of good-will toward the medium, a sincere desire to know the truth, etc., which our previous experiences have shown us to be indispensable in this kind of experimentation—we are able to affirm, with strict conscientiousness, that the writing between two slates is due to the manifest action of intelligences independent of the medium and those sitting with him. We obtained this phenomenon under the following conditions: (1) M. Cregnier sitting upon the slates, and the medium having his hands upon the table, and his legs well in view; (2) The slates (wrapped in a large newspaper and bound with twine) being placed under the left arm of M. Chonet, and in view; (3) A question, written out of the sight of the medium, was answered immediately in a pertinent manner."

These few specimens will suffice to show the general character of the testimonials recorded in this interesting private record, which prove the absolute falsity of the conclusion announced in the report of the Seybert Commission.

I add to this an additional evidence of Dr. Slade's gifts presented in the following sworn statement of a well-known and highly-respected resident of New Haven, Ct., who has been employed for many years as a conductor on one of the New England Railroads. It was made at my request, after his oral narration of the incident to me, and the facts alleged may be relied on implicitly:

"NEW HAVEN, CT., Feb. 2d, 1888.

MR. HENRY KIDDLE—My Dear Sir: In compliance with your request I proceed to give you a detailed statement of a sitting with Dr. Henry Slade some years ago; the exact date I am at present unable to state; and I will attest to the correctness of each detail before a notary.

Permit me to state that I had become interested in the published statements of investigators, and I determined to establish in my own mind, once for all, the truthfulness of the phenomenon known as independent slate-writing, if I could persuade the medium Slade to grant me my own conditions.

I accordingly purchased, at a store in Broadway, New York, a pair of slates attached to each other by two substantial hinges, washed them thoroughly with soap and water in the rear of the store, secured and sharpened a pencil, and proceeded to the residence of Dr. Slade. I found him disengaged about 11 o'clock A. M., on a most delightful day, and addressed him as follows: Doctor, I have with me a double slate, thoroughly cleaned, and my own pencil. I desire a sitting under conditions prescribed by myself, and am prepared to pay the fee regardless of results.

He instantly acquiesced, remarking that he could never guarantee complete satisfaction. In the back parlor of his residence, with the sunlight streaming in at two large windows, the medium and myself were seated at opposite sides of an ordinary table in the centre of the room. I then took my slates from under my left arm, removed the paper covering and opened the slates, remarking to him that he might see that they were perfectly clean, but that he must, under no circumstances, touch them. I then placed a small bit of pencil between the two inner surfaces of the slates, put them in my chair and sat down upon them, joined hands with Slade across the top of the table, and declared myself prepared for results. The medium was convulsed with laughter, and he assured me that, in all his experience, no sitter had ever required similar conditions.

Almost instantly was heard the scratching of the pencil, and I distinctly felt the vibration. Several times during the writing Slade would withdraw his hands from mine, and each time the writing would cease, to be resumed upon again joining hands. Soon three loud raps were heard upon the slates, when he withdrew and announced the sitting at an end. I then examined the slates, to find both the inner surfaces written over; the medium, passing behind me, from over my shoulder, without touching the slates, joined me in reading the following communication:

'MY DEAR BROTHER FRANK—I impressed you to come here to-day, that I might fulfill a promise made to Mary the night I passed away, which was, that if Spiritualism was true, and I had a conscious existence after death, and the power to return, I would make the effort, and through the medium, Dr. Slade, if possible, and let you know the truth. Grand was my transition. As you told me before you left for the last time, dear father was the first to meet me and take me to his arms. All that you said in such comforting tones at my bedside was more than realized. I did not choke to death, as I had feared, but it was just like falling into a peaceful slumber.'

Then followed instructions concerning affairs at home, of a private nature, sufficient to fill both surfaces, closely written, and the name in full of a loved sister signed thereto.

Of the independency of the writing on that slate there can be no possible shadow of doubt; and when you understand that my wife, whose name is Mary, made the above request to her dying sister, about three hours prior to what is termed death, that she kept her secret until the appearance of the above communication, that the promise or its exaction never abided in my mind, or in that of the medium, and, finally, the application of the matter written to the existing facts, you will draw your own conclusions. (Signed) FRANK A. HERMANCE.

Subscribed to, and sworn to, before me this first day of February, A. D. 1888; and I certify that the subscriber is personally known to me, and that his reputation is good.

JOSEPH D. PLUNKETT,
Justice of the Peace, New Haven, Ct."

The special importance of this case consists in (1) the perfect authenticity of the record and the unimpeachable veracity of the witness; (2) the completeness of the conditions of the experiment, leaving no possibility whatever for fraud on the part of the medium, or hallucination on that of the sitter, since the slates (which never left the possession of the latter) were preserved; (3) the establishment of an independent, invisible intelligence, the communication stating facts entirely unknown to both medium and sitter; and (4) the complete identification of that intelligence by the name, correctly written, the promise fulfilled, and the incidents referred to.

Even one such instance ought really to suffice to establish the great truth of spirit existence, direct writing, and identity, with all the important corollaries of these facts; whereas we have a record of very many cases almost, if not quite, as strong as this.

For this achievement on the part of the spirit, Dr. Slade was the instrument; while a Commission of learned men (learned only in their own special departments of study), after what they call an investigation, have reported that Dr. Slade is an arrant impostor, and that he never does anything at his séances but play tricks of "very simple legerdemain."

The Reviewer.

Hon. A. B. Richmond's New Book.

WHAT I SAW AT CASSADAGA LAKE: A Review of The Seybert Commissioners' Report. By A. B. Richmond, Esq. Cloth, pp. 244. Boston, Colby & Rich.

As we take up our pen to write our review of the above-named work, the busy clicking of the telegraph-sounder in our office seems to chime with the key-note of the book, and reenforce its arguments for the operation of mind upon mind by means of an invisible and subtle agency, controlled by human intelligence. And when we seriously consider the logic of the case, Mr. Richmond seems to have as good reason to believe that human intelligence lies back of the raps that are heard in the presence of the "medium," as we have to believe that a like intelligence is behind the clicking sounder, sending its thought in pulsing currents of electricity over miles of space.

And so we are fain to read his book with serious attention, and with no trace of prejudice either for or against the claims it seeks to substantiate.

The book is primarily a review of the report published by a Commission, composed of the Faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, whose alleged object was the investigation of the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. In the course of his book Mr. Richmond criticises with keen analysis and cutting sarcasm the various theories offered by the Commission as explanations of the said phenomena. He brings an abundance of evidence to show that their investigation was but hasty and superficial, and he scores them roundly for their apparent neglect of the great trust reposed in them by Mr. Seybert, whose endowment of sixty thousand dollars was made on the express condition that it should be applied to "a thorough and impartial investigation of all systems of morals, religion or philosophy which assume to represent the truth, and particularly of Modern Spiritualism." He cites evidence from the experience of well-known men, from the world's history, and particularly from the Bible, to show that phenomena similar to those of Modern Spiritualism have occurred in all ages and among all peoples. He does not claim that the spirit-origin of these phenomena is demonstrated, or yet demonstrable, but declares that no theory of fraud, or delusion, or mind-reading, or mesmerism, or legerdemain, can adequately account for the immense body of facts which he finds in the history of the past and the experience of the present. He finds the value of the Bible to consist largely in its evidence for the existence of a world of spirit and a future life for man. He says: "If the records of the Bible prove anything, ... it is the visits of spirits from the unknown world to this. The road from heaven to earth, as well as from earth to heaven, has been trodden by angel-feet ever since the world began, or sacred history is false and the records of the Bible untrue. He quotes Adam Clark, LL. D., the great Orthodox commentator, as saying of the class of people to whom the "Woman of Endor" belonged, that "they were those who had familiar spirits whom they could invoke when they pleased, and receive answers from them relative to futurity." He urges the Commission to purchase and read the Bible, and says: "Suppose you tear out every leaf on which you find an allusion either to spirit-manifestations or spirit-ministrations. Lay these leaves carefully aside, and then compare them with the nearly empty covers that remain, and I have no doubt that you will be surprised: what remains in the binding will be but the chaff left after the wheat is winnowed and separated therefrom."

In "The Story of Methodism," a book by A. B. Hyde, D. D., late Professor of Biblical Literature in Allegheny College, Mr. Richmond finds an account of the strange phenomena which took place in the house of John Wesley's father. The narrative reads very like an account of a modern "séance"; and Dr. Hyde says of the cause of these strange performances that "it was thought to be a spirit strayed beyond its home and clime, as an Arabian locust has been found in Hyde Park."

Mr. Richmond has embodied in his book a condensed statement of the report of the London Dialectical Society's committee of thirty-six learned men, appointed to investigate the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism. Their report is contrasted with the report of the Seybert Commission. It contains some remarkable statements, and as the experiments were conducted by cool-headed scientists, who were not prepossessed in favor of any particular theory, the results of their investigations lend much weight to the arguments of Mr. Richmond.

But our space is too limited to review all the evidence presented by the author of this volume. He has piled Ossa upon Pelion, and the mountainous bulk of evidence rests heavily on the Seybert Commission, or any who propose to account for the phenomena of so-called Spiritualism by theories of delusion or legerdemain. The author presents his evidence with the skill of the trained lawyer and with the wit and logic of a master. The sword of his sarcasm cuts deeply, and the wounds it makes seem fatal. But, added to the keen analysis and persistent argument of the lawyer, we find a touch of reverence that would do credit to the pulpit and is too seldom found at the bar. Mr. Richmond's interest in the phenomena of which he treats is philosophical and religious. He sees in Spiritualism the possible scientific basis of a truly religious faith. To him the phenomena are significant, because they point to the existence of a spiritual universe, where human life that here has been undeveloped or blasted in the bud may come to full and perfect blossom. He says in his closing chapter: "I believe that the poorest religion the world ever knew, if it acknowledged and taught the immortality of the soul, is better for the people than no religion at all or a disbelief in a future existence." And he declares again that "if the testimony given in the preceding pages of this little book is true, the immortality of the soul is proved by demonstrative evidence, and so far it strengthens the foundations of Christianity." From the eloquent and beautiful "Postscriptum" we would select many passages did space permit; but we must be content to refer the reader to the book itself. It can be found at the bookstores and should be widely read; not only for the interesting and important nature of its contents, but as a work by a Meadville author, of whom we should justly be proud, whether or not we agree with the sentiments of his book.—Meadville [Pa.] Tribune Republican.

LIFE IS IN THE WORLD.

BY BELLE BUSH.

"Mother! angel mother!
Come and watch beside my bed;
Let me feel the gentle pressure
Of thy hand upon my head!
Come and fold thy arms about me,
As in the days of old;
For my heart is sad and fearful,
And the world is dark and cold.

"I am weary—oh! how weary!
And my spirit yearns for rest;
Come and fold thy arms about me,
Let me sleep upon thy breast.
Come and kiss me ere I slumber,
Oh! dearest mother, come,
And wake once more the vision
Of my childhood's happy home.

"Ah! well do I remember
That soft and sunny nest,
The cottage in the valley
Where I slept upon thy breast.
Ah me! there is no palace,
Or stately mansion old,
That was ever half so pleasant
As the cottage by the wold.

"There my childhood years flowed onward,
Beating time to joy and mirth,
Whose music waked no echo,
Save the harmonies of earth,
Till one day a sable banner
O'er our cottage was unfurled,
And I learned the mournful lesson
'That Death was in the world.'

"For I saw thee borne, dear mother,
In stillness from its door,
And heard it said in sadness,
'She will come to us no more.'
Then a great grief shook my spirit,
As winds the mountain pine,
And I murmured, in my anguish,
Oh! would thy grave were mine!

"Since then in grief I've wandered
O'er the fair and lovely earth,
Ever sighing for thy presence,
And thy music-tones of mirth.
Mother! angel mother!
'Mid the fading sunset gleams,
Come and whisper to me softly
Through the golden gate of dreams."

Thus prayed a lonely orphan
'Mid the stillness of the night,
When lo! a blissful vision
Dawned in beauty on her sight.
Through the open portals gliding,
Came a soft and silvery light,
And 'mid the wavering brightness
Stood her mother, robed in white!

On her brow were fairest garlands,
On her bosom glowed a star,
Whose love-light, warm and steady,
Through the chamber shone afar.
Then o'er the lonely orphan
A holy calmness stole,
And the dove of peace returning,
Found a nest within her soul.

While the angel-mother, bending
On her child a look of love,
Smiled fondly, and then pointed
To a land of light above.
"Mother! angel mother!"
The weary orphan cried,
Yet ere the words were spoken
The vision left her side.

Yet the memory of it, lingering
In her lonely heart, became
A star of hope, whose brightness
Beamed with a steady flame,
And lighted up the darkness
That gathered on her way,
And gave each cloud of sorrow
A soft and silvery ray.

Then peace above her spirit
Like a banner was unfurled,
And with joy her heart repeated,
"Life, life is in the world!
Life, life, not Death, is victor
When the spirit quits the clay!"
Thus sings the lonely orphan
In gladness every day.

Life, life divine is thrilling
All the pulses of the earth;
Lo! it changes but to brightness,
And death is but a birth—
A casting off of garments
Made to be thrown away—
A flitting from a dwelling
That's crumbling to decay.

'T is a rest, a joyous transit—
This change that we call death;
Then why should we seek to flee it,
Or fear its chilling breath?
'T is rising like the eagle
When it soars toward the sun;
'T is the spirit flitting homeward
When its earthly task is done.
Henceforth I 'll sing with gladness,
"Death was, but is no more!"
While my heart takes up the music
Of childhood's happy lore,
For life is all about me,
And Love, the deep and strong,
Holds me fast in her embraces
And soothes me with her song,
While with joy my heart is singing
'Neath the banner Love unfurled,
Lo! Death hath fled to darkness,
And Life is in the world.

Women's Rights versus the Bible.

So long as ministers stand up and tell us that as Christ is the head of the Church, so is man the head of the woman, how are we to break the chains that have held women down through the ages? You Christian women can look at the Turkish, the Mormon, and the Hindu women, and wonder how they can be held in such bondage. Look to-day at what the women are doing for the churches! The church rests on the shoulders of women. Have we ever yet heard a man preach a sermon from Gen. i: 27, 28, which declares the full equality of the feminine and masculine element in the Godhead? I never heard such a thing in my life. They invariably shy over that first chapter. They always get up in their pulpits and read that second chapter. Now I ask you if our religion teaches us the dignity of woman? It teaches us that abominable idea of the sixth century—Augustine's idea—that motherhood is a curse, that woman is the author of sin, and is most corrupt. Can we ever cultivate any proper sense of self-respect as long as women take such sentiments from the mouths of the priesthood? Now what we demand is an expurgated edition of the Bible. Men have written it—translated it—revised it, and put in and taken out whatever suited their own ideas. What we now want is to call a council of women for an expurgated edition of the Bible that shall place us in our true position as equals on this Christian earth. I am not willing that our sons and daughters shall read the Bible as it stands today, and become poisoned with these ideas of woman's inferiority. I went into many a Catholic church in Europe, where no woman is allowed to sing in the choir. I asked the reason why. I knew; but I wanted to see what they would say. They said it was only because women were not allowed to enter the altar. Women were the authors of sin; we have been the sex that has been denounced from the fifth to the eighteenth century. History shows one continual persecution of woman. It was this that brought about the dark ages.—Elizabeth Cady Stanton.

"PSYCHOMETRY, OR THE ELEMENTS OF A NEW SCIENCE."

BY GEORGE A. BACON.

[The following abstract of a lecture on this subject before the Unity Club, of Washington, D. C., on the evening of Jan. 27th, was prepared for the Sunday Gazette, of that city, by a reporter of that paper, and a copy kindly furnished us for publication.—ED.]

The Unity Club of this city was treated last Friday evening to an unusually suggestive essay by Mr. George A. Bacon, of the Agricultural Department, on "Hidden Powers, or the Elements of a New Science," which proved to be a popular elaboration of the subject of Psychometry. The undivided attention of the company, many of whom were unfamiliar with the subject, attested the interest which it awakened.

The speaker's elucidation was clear and clever, and evinced no little knowledge of practical Psychology. He claimed that when in the presence of the fair goddess of Truth, he instinctively felt to doff his hat. He would woo and win and serve her, loyally and always. With all the aspiration of his nature he would worship at her shrine, for he knew of no higher religion than truth. In striving to outwork the social problems of the age, the betterment of social conditions, to get at a clearer comprehension of operating causes, he thought that human experience in the development of new yet practical truths, experiences that give a deeper insight into the springs of human action, and reveal more of the hitherto so-called mysteries of life than those that commonly prevail, are factors which should be respected and welcomed by every one who is positively interested in human advancement. Because a fact or experience is not familiar to another, it does not prove that it is not true. Because certain facts and their logical outcome, certain experiences arising from legitimate causes, chance to differ from or contravene those which another, with restricted opportunities and knowledge, might consider were non-conformable to the law governing such matters, it does not follow that these other facts of experience are necessarily erroneous. Their verity does not depend upon another's non-experience. As has been well said, the establishment of any branch of science depends not upon the views of the uninformed, generally accepted without investigation, and almost without question, and which are usually at variance with the demonstrated facts in relation to the subject, but upon the results of intelligent investigation.

Observers know that the world is not the same to all; that some see and hear and feel what others do not; that there are those who are capable of seeing, hearing and feeling immeasurably more than the vast majority; that as artists, poets, musicians, statesmen, warriors—gifted individuals in every department of thought and action, express exceptional excellence in their respective phase of development, so sensitives and psychic subjects express impressions which they alone are capable of experiencing and expressing. The principle of knowing is with possession; of not knowing with its converse. Without sensation, nothing is felt. How many of our commonly received conclusions are accepted without commensurate investigation?

What is the percentage of our automatic thinking?

When, covering a period of about two-score years, a class of experiences, extensive in number, varied in form, ample in scope and consistent in character, is pursued with intelligence and by scientific methods, controvert the mere opinions, views and preconceived notions of others who happen to experimentally know nothing of these experiences, there is but one thing to do—make them known. "Happy would it be," says Prof. Henry Reed, "if whenever a mystery is presented to our thoughts, we did not reject it because, transcending our little knowledge, it happens to be 'undreamt of in our philosophy'; happy would it be if we did not suffer doubts and suspicions, and the sophistries of a sensualized skepticism, to shut up the avenues of our souls, instead of opening the door wide to give the mystery a stranger's welcome."

The new science to which he invited attention was by him who first publicly unfolded its principles forty odd years ago, Dr. J. Rodes Buchanan, and who has since published much concerning it, and from whom, as well as others, the speaker had occasion to freely borrow, called Psychometry. The word comes from psyche, soul, and metrom, measure, literally signifying soul-measurer, being analogous to those words which signify special measurements, as barometer, thermometer, etc.

"As a science and philosophy, Psychometry shows the nature, the scope and the modus operandi of man's higher powers and the anatomical mechanism through which they are manifested; while as an art it shows the method of utilizing these psychic faculties in the investigation of character, disease, physiology, biology, geology, etc."

We marvel, said the speaker, when some exploring navigator discovers a new harbor from ocean's desolating storms. We marvel when some exploring investigator discovers some hitherto unknown truth, which perchance lifts the world forward with its scientific lever; and we further marvel that these discoveries, so near to our doors, were not made long ago; for some of the grandest revealments in physical science that ever blessed the world have laid right within our reach from the very beginning, till, in fact, their presence actually intruded themselves upon our attention. It is all one and in keeping. Scientific and moral as well as spiritual teachers find crucifixion before their special glory becomes known.

Who are Psychometers? What is Psychometry capable of doing? What are its methods of manifestation?

All who exhibit in any marked degree a sensitiveness to influences, whether proceeding from objects, from localities or conditions, from other persons, or from psychical sources, are unquestionably Psychometers. Apparently there is no limit to the degree to which sensitiveness may not be extended, while many who naturally possess this power to a large degree have never thought to exercise or develop it, and hence really know but little about it. There are all grades of sensibility, physical as well as mental, etc., and this susceptibility can by judicious cultivation be largely increased.

Psychometers are confined to no particular faith, belong to both sexes, are of all ages, of every degree of mental unfoldment, and of all shades of religious belief.

Prof. Denton considered four women out of ten and one man out of ten to be good psychometric subjects. In the exercise of this power, says Dr. Buchanan, "the individual has the perfect use of all his faculties in his highest intellectual condition, and also generally in his best moral condition;... it is a dignified, independent and natural process, which tends, if rightly practiced, to the strengthening and ennoblement of character and mind.

"Psychometry shows how any impressible individual may recognize in any piece of writing, even an autograph, the mental and physical influence of the writer. As a means of determining the character of the living, psychometry has an accuracy and delicacy which phrenology or physiognomy cannot possibly obtain." It is the truest revelator of man's inner self. It penetrates to the centre of his being and becomes familiar with his secret thoughts and emotions. By its aid we resurrect the long-buried past. Pre-historic times and scenes are made to reappear in the presence of the passing hour. It has power, as Hudson Tuttle truly says, "to unlock the mysteries that lie in the domain beyond the ordinary senses." Through its power we are led to the very origin of things. Its utilitarian character and scientific value are seen in its application to every phase of human life, extending throughout all time.

How does psychometry register itself? what of the laws governing its manifestation? Considering these points, we rise "from comprehension in physics to apprehension in psychics." Agreeably with the law of impartation or impressibility, when any two objects are brought in contact, the more sensitive becomes more or less affected. There is a perpetual emanation of influences, it is said, by which each substance affects its environments, the theory being that every object, animate or inanimate, has an aura which varies in proportion to its molecular activity. Demonstrations of this law, that all material substances are affected by contact, are seen all around us. Pertinent illustrations might be quoted from Prof. Lewes, Prof. Draper, Prof. Hitchcock and many other recognized authorities. Even agricultural chemistry shows that every cloud which floats in the deep blue, retards the vital activity of every plant on which its shadows fall.

To the question how does Psychometry manifest itself? he answered, it manifests itself through sensation, which is defined to be "the perception by the mind of a change wrought in the body." There is objective, subjective and created independent of any present object. reflex sensation. The first requires the presence of an object. Subjective sensation involves a mental change, by which act a sensation is "It is through the instrumentality of the nervous system," says Chambers's Encyclopædia, "that the mind influences the bodily organs, as when volition or emotion excites them to action; and that conversely, impressions made upon the organs of the body affect the mind, and excite mental perceptions through the same channel." The application of the impressibility of mind to the delineation of character, then, evokes the real man. Thoughts and emotions become as an open book.

Though it may be difficult to believe that one's character can be correctly translated or delineated by another, from holding an unread, it may be a sealed letter, in the hand or to the forehead—that it can be, has been demonstrated a thousand times. While the potentiality of hand-writing, a lock of hair, a ring, or a bit of wearing apparel, as an embodiment of psychic influence may be difficult to accept—that it exists there is no question. It is through our senses that we cognize the world around us; and as the extent to which these senses may be cultivated is virtually limitless, the revelations they are capable of making, overwhelm the imagination. Persons with uncultivated senses have no conception of the experiences of a gifted or developed sensitive. The facts of experience referable to psychic ability are no less marvelous than they are voluminous.

Years ago, he moved into a suite of rooms concerning which he previously knew nothing. A member of his family, tired with the day's effort to settle, laid down upon the sofa to rest. Suddenly rising up, she exclaimed, What 's the matter? My head feels as though I was going crazy, and yet it 's not my own head. It 's in the room. Somebody must have been insane here and I sense the influence. The next day he learned from the landlady that the last occupant of the room was a woman who had become violently insane and who had but recently died there. He was led to ask, in view of many kindred experiences occurring in his own family, What do you propose to do with thousands of similar and yet more wonderful facts? facts clearly traceable to the same law, that of causation—the law of impartation and impressibility by contact or proximity, involving the nervous sensibility of the individual—facts not confined to any one section of the country, but multitudinously scattered throughout the civilized world? You should do what philosophic and scientific minds do with other facts in other departments, systematize, classify, verify them, for in these facts you have the basis or elements of a new science. The speaker claimed that he had a score of friends with whom he was more or less intimate, who are gifted with psychometric power to an extent that, in private or public, they can correctly delineate character from a handkerchief, a knife, a letter, etc., every day in the week. A good example of clothing psychometrized, is given by a well-known writer of New York, (W. Q. Judge, Esq.) He says: I received from a friend in the year 1882, a piece of the linen wrapping of an Egyptian ibis, found on the breast of a mummy. I handed it, wrapped up in tissue-paper, to a friend who did not know what, if anything, was in the paper. He put it to his forehead and soon began to describe Egyptian scenery; then an ancient city; from that he went on to describe a man in Egyptian clothes, sailing on a river; then that this man went ashore into a grove where he killed a bird; that the bird looked like pictures of the ibis, and ended by describing the man as returning with the bird to the city, the description of which tallied with the pictures and descriptions of ancient Egyptian cities. He also quoted some of the many marvelous examples given by Dr. Buchanan.

From a tertiary fossil obtained in Cuba, Mrs. Denton gave a minute description of its character, its formation, the surrounding country, and finally its locality. The whole account is one that overwhelms belief. From a piece marked "Modern Mosaic—Rome," she graphically described that country, the city, the buildings, the people, and the influences produced by the architecture, etc.; a piece of burnt brick from Pompeii reproduced some of the scenes through which it had passed; and a piece of marble from one of the famous baths of Italy pictured some of the events of its former days.

All realize that the domain of knowledge is ever widening, that subjects and branches of study are being considered to-day which a few years ago, if known at all, were ignored as unworthy of serious attention. But the more one studies the phenomena of nature in any direction, the more does he become convinced that she is ever full of the marvelous. To affirm, therefore, that this or that cannot be true without first fully investigating the subject, is merely to assert one's ipse dixit—to substitute ignorance for knowledge; for outside of mathematics, said Arago, nothing is impossible.

Wisely does Prof. Buchanan say: "The mind of man is so wonderful and mysterious in its action and in its existence—is so widely separated in its nature and in its phenomena from the ponderable material world, that he who brings to this subject the rigid, material spirit of chemistry and mechanical philosophy, will find himself unable either to perceive its phenomena or to detect their causes. Every moment of conscious thought presents a grandly beautiful mystery, for the explanation of which we must be utterly incompetent unless we can rise to the dignity of the subject, and deal familiarly with facts and laws as wonderful as the mystery which they solve."

HOW TO TEST AND DEVELOP ONE'S POWER OF PSYCHOMETRY.

Get some reliable friend who is interested in the subject with you, and who is willing to assist in the experiment, to obtain several lately written letters from various parties unknown to you, each letter being placed in a plain white envelop. Let this same friend also procure various articles, say of minerals, etc., each wrapped in a separate package with nothing on the outside to indicate its character. Agree upon some hour when you both will studiously devote yourselves to this matter. Sit in an easy-chair, your own, if possible, with the back of it high enough to support the head. Sit with closed if not bandaged eyes, to more favorably concentrate the mind. Have these letters and articles where you can conveniently take one at a time, and, when all is ready, place one of them to your forehead, remaining as passive and receptive as possible. Let this friend be duly prepared to faithfully record in writing whatever comes in the way of impression, and when through compare the record with the known character of the writer or the article sought to be read. Let nothing be done to distract attention while the experiment is going on. Do not sit too long at a time—not over thirty minutes. Discard metal ornaments during the experiments. Keep yourself in the best physical and mental condition, and be regular in your experiments.

If anything of a satisfactory character is the result, intelligent and consistent practice will surely develop whatever powers of psychometry you possess.

A New Science.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

The discovery of a new planet is hailed by the scientific world as a valuable acquisition to the grand science of astronomy; how much more shall the discovery of a new science be hailed and heralded as an invaluable addition to our Encyclopædia. Spiritualism is such a new science.

If some object that Spiritualism is doubtful in its phenomenal facts, uncertain in its prophecies, or incoherent in its utterances, may we not reply by asking which of the planets passed not through its nebulous stages in the process of becoming a respectable world? and which of the sciences had any other origin? Alchemy was the child-state of chemistry. Star-gazers, waiting, watching shepherds, grew into astronomers. In its incipient stages, geology made Hugh Miller mad. Physiology is not yet out of its teens; its votaries do possibly let man's blood circulate, but they take advantage of the fact to inoculate thousands with possible horrible diseases to save them from becoming diseased.

For ages upon ages, the diurnal and annual revolutions of the earth were hidden from the eyes of those who were ignorant that they were whirling through space at the rate of one thousand miles an hour. History itself is but a record of men and women who believed that might made right, and, knowing that ideas are stronger than swords—that knowledge is power—kept the people in ignorance and embroiled them in perpetual wars, by which they destroyed their own power of progress, and passed their days in mutual slaughter, keeping the nations stationary, so that at this present moment not one nation allows its women to have a voice in its government, holds the land for the use of all its inhabitants, or knows that poverty is the cause of crime and fountain of war.

Do they not need a new science, like Spiritualism, to teach them by the operation of their physical senses that men and women are immortal beings? that when dead they can still be seen, felt and heard to speak? can rehearse the history of wrongs suffered in the body and punish the offenders? can recall kindnesses, down to the reception of a cup of cold water, returning the same with compound interest, proving beyond a doubt that the mighty men and women of wickedness will indeed be "mightily tormented" by the memory of those whom they have injured, and that justice-loving humanitarians will be like the stars, shining in garments of love and gratitude bestowed upon them by those whom they have benefited while upon earth?

Will not such a science be religion to mankind? And was it not meet that Shaker Communists should be its first pupils and stanchest witnesses—heralds of a coming millennium?

An Exalted Sentiment.

To do good, which is really good, a man must act from the love of good, and not with a view to reward here or hereafter.—Swedenborg.

Prof. John Fiske once expressed the same sublime sentiment more forcibly and felicitously in these words: "The highest virtue is that which takes no thought of future reward or punishment."—Saratoga (N. Y.) Eagle.

The proper thing to say in Volapük, when you meet a companion, is, "Liko stadols?" and if your friend is all right, he will answer, "Stadob benüno." If it is early in the morning and he looks hungry, you should say, "Li-vilols göledön koobs?" which is the melodious invitation Mr. Sohleyer, author of Volapük, extends to him he desires to see at his breakfast table. —The Truth Seeker.

FITCHBURG.—It was our intention to explain the modus operandi of one Fred Briggs, who has paid us a visit and held three dark séances for independent slate-writing and other manifestations of spirit power; but the space in your paper we hold is too valuable; we deem it, however, a duty we owe to all Spiritualists and all true investigators to enter our protest against such deceivers—for such we believe him to be, and can prove him such—so that others may not fall into the same trap. We offer a description of him and add "Beware": He stands about five feet five inches; light complexion; full face; no beard; hair short; will weigh about one hundred and sixty pounds. One of the marks of distinction is that two of his front teeth are very prominent. According to his own story he has traveled and held séances in every city of the Union, from Maine to California.

To all believers and true investigators we say: "If you want to be deceived, go to his séance"; but, as we read in Mrs. Lillie's address in a recent BANNER, some will believe all they see or hear. We had rather take Paul's advice: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." So we must prove the spirits and the mediums through whom they work or manifest.

When Briggs was told that his manifestations were not satisfactory, he was willing and agreed, he said, to meet us next day and prove to us he was no fraud. So two o'clock was appointed, and he was offered two dollars an hour as long as he remained and as long as his manifestations were done in the daylight; but we waited till three o'clock, then sent for him, and were told he had gone to Boston. Thus endeth the first visit of that individual to this city. We deem it a duty to make this exposition; we are a new Society, and all such adventurers hurt our good cause.

LOWELL.—Benjamin S. Freeman, Corresponding Secretary, (5 Brooks street,) writes: "Hon. Warren Chase lectured for our Society Sunday, Feb. 5th, and a good audience composed of our best citizens and intelligent people listened to his able address. We hope to continue our meetings, and be able to have our platform occupied by a class of speakers that will give to those who are interested in the phenomena of Spiritualism and its truths, a chance to investigate."

Vermont.

CANAAN.—S. P. Shaw writes: "We have just enjoyed the pleasure of meeting and listening to the speaking of that well and widely-known medium, Mrs. A. P. Brown of St. Johnsbury Centre, this State.

For the first time in many years Mrs. Brown gave us two lectures, on Sundays, Jan. 22d and 29th. On the first of those days, although the mercury was way down among the twenties, a good audience was present to listen to the words which came through her lips. In the afternoon quite a number of the resident church-members attended and gave close and earnest attention, and I hear that many of them speak very favorably of the discourses.

On the 29th again, after a terrible storm on the three previous days, a good number met at the hall and were well repaid for their trouble by a lecture from a spirit purporting to be that of Dr. Gardner (formerly of Boston), on the subject, 'The Battles of Life.' The Doctor seemed to be filled with all his usual fire and zeal. In the afternoon her guides gave us a clear, logical and scientific lecture on the subject of 'Materialization.' This discourse contained many thoughts which those who oppose the idea of materialization would do well to listen to.

We hope ere long to have Mrs. Brown with us again. This speaker, so long and so favorably known in New England, is at liberty for engagements anywhere within easy distances of her home, until about the time for the commencement of the Maine camp-meetings, in June or July next. Keep her at work, friends."

NORTH SPRINGFIELD.—Mrs. S. A. Jesmer-Downs writes: "It is now over one year since I became an invalid, and at this writing am able to do but little. I am glad to find the truths of our glorious faith are being investigated by the best thinkers on earth, who are willing to listen before crying fraud. The very welcome letters from those who have been my co-workers in the battle for Spiritualism, and the knowledge that the spirits of my dear departed ones have been near to care for me through all these weary weeks and months of extreme suffering, have been the means of keeping me on earth, hoping to be restored, or to pass to the higher life to meet those who have so tenderly and faithfully watched over me.

I have recently had a medical examination from our good brother, Dr. J. Neltz, which was correct. I can cheerfully recommend him to those in need of the services of a medium. May the angels hold him and all true mediums in their keeping, and give them strength to perform the mighty works they are commissioned to do."

New Hampshire.

HOLLIS.—R. C. Boutwell writes: "I noticed in THE BANNER some time since an extract copied from the Eastern Star (of Maine), wherein John Wesley Howlett, West Dedham, referred to "Sa-goy-e-wa-tha" or "Red Jacket," and what he had known concerning him as a spirit for the past nine years, and of his power to aid those yet in the mortal form. I wish to endorse all that Mr. Howlett affirms concerning this grand Indian spirit, who to my own personal and experimental knowledge is actively at work with his uplifting influence and magnetic power to alleviate distress, and lead the children of earth to the doing of good deeds."

PORTSMOUTH.—Miss S. Lizzie Ewer writes: "I am pleased to tell you that I have not been idle in the spiritual field through the winter or in the late fall months, and have been engaged alternate Sundays at Stratham, N. H., about nine miles from Portsmouth. I have enjoyed the good work there. A hall has been finished and furnished by Mrs. Severance—a lady very much interested in the cause of truth—which is devoted almost exclusively to Spiritualistic gatherings. The hall was dedicated during the fall, but it was my privilege to hold the first Sunday meeting in it, and since my first going there I have been regularly once in two weeks, on alternate Sundays, since last of November, 1887. There has been an increasing interest since the first meeting. There has existed a very strong local prejudice against Spiritualism in that town, and both Spiritualists and others of liberal and advanced thought congratulate themselves on the success of these meetings."

Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURGH.—Chas. P. Meskimen writes: "The manifest growth of our beautiful philosophy is, I believe, no more apparent anywhere than in this city. Frank T. Ripley completed a successful engagement of two months, and February ushered in that wonderfully talented lady, Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings. We anticipated a falling off in attendance, owing to the fact that Mrs. Richings does not profess to be a test medium, but instead the hall was crowded by seven o'clock on Feb. 5th, the entryway filled, and hundreds came to the stairs, and seeing the condition of things turned away, unable to find entrance.

Mrs. Richings opened the exercises by singing a solo, with accompaniment on the organ, following with an invocation full of beauty and tenderness. After a poem she addressed the audience on 'The Phenomena and Philosophy of Spiritualism.' The subject was handled in her usual masterly manner, amid the most profound attention of her auditors—the only break being for subdued applause at times.

I consider Mrs. Richings's 'tests' as really satisfactory as those of many others who make them a specialty.

Friends, keep this lady employed, but always bear in mind that her address for three or four months of the year will be Pittsburgh, Pa.

The sterling work of Mr. A. B. Richmond is being introduced to our notice by Miss Evans, of Cochranton, Pa., a lady of most lovely character, and a thorough Spiritualist."

Florida.

PALATKA.—J. A. Hall, M. D., wishes that a first-class slate-writing medium could feel it advisable to visit "the land of flowers" "during these winter months when our State is full of visitors." He thinks the tour would prove remunerative.

New York.

NEW YORK CITY.—H. B., who says that though a firm believer in dreams he is not a Spiritualist, writes: "So many strange things happen that sometimes I wonder whether I am in the body or out of it. One night last week while walking near Bryant Park an aged man, with long silvery locks, approached me, and in trembling, but gentle voice, asked for a few pennies. Strange as it may seem, these beautiful lines came to my mind at that very moment:

'A poor wayfaring man of grief
Hath often crossed me on my way,
Who sued so humbly for relief
That I could never answer nay.
I had not power to ask his name,
Whither he went, nor whence he came.'

I handed some change to the old man, and turned around, as I believe is the usual custom, to see if he was importuning others; but he was gone in a second, and there was no corner for him to turn off, or crowd to mingle with.

Now I have been wondering if our Master does not sometimes come among us, and in the garb of a poor wayfaring man, ask aid; however, I am willing to believe it. How will some answer when He looks them in the face, and says, 'I was that poor wayfaring man whom you met at such a place'?

It seems to me that those who turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of the poor will find, at the last day, that they have seen their Lord before, the countenance will be very striking, and falling down before him they will exclaim, 'Lord, had I known it was thou, I would have given my all.'

Let us be charitable, and may we each learn and practice the prayer of Pope:

'Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
The mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me.'"

TROY.—W. H. Vosburgh writes: "J. Frank Baxter closed his engagement before the Star Hall Society Sunday, Jan. 29th. I like the firm and positive manner of Mr. Baxter when he attacks the errors and false theories of Church and State. In my humble opinion it never is too early to tell the truth. Our planet has been shrouded in ignorance and gloom long enough, and as there is a greater demand to day than ever before in its history for light and knowledge concerning life, justice, and the duties and obligations we bear to each other, let us have the truth in as positive terms as the age demands. A rapid change is occurring in liberalizing public sentiment and thought everywhere among the people, regarding the philosophy of life here and beyond the tomb, and Mr. Baxter is one of a goodly number who are nobly aiding the grand work.

Miss Jennie B. Hagan occupied our platform Sundays, Feb. 5th and 12th.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum assembles in Star Hall each Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and is progressing finely, adding to its numbers every session. The labors of our friend and brother, C. M. Austin, Conductor of our Lyceum, are fully appreciated; his soul is in the work, and we feel that he is the right man in the right place."

GREIGSVILLE.—F. Rice states that Carol Cocher, who is strongly mediumistic, became powerfully impressed with the idea that a deposit of salt was on his farm and land adjoining. For five years that idea was constantly on his mind; finally he was instrumental in having the matter tested by boring, and to his great satisfaction, at a depth of one thousand feet a solid stratum of salt was discovered. New York City capitalists are now working it, and take out thirty carloads per day, and it seems to be inexhaustible. It is some three hundred miles from the ocean. The salt is so solid that blasting is necessary for its removal; its quality is fine, and it is used for preserving meats and various other purposes. The result of that impression has been the financial assistance of himself and the whole township, as well as those who use the salt. 'What good is there in spirit-impressions?' can be satisfactorily answered with this one fact; for there was no other way in any reasonable probability by which knowledge of this rich deposit could have come to those who now enjoy its use."

Kansas.

FAIRMOUNT.—A. H. Nicholas writes: "I have been quiet for some time, simply because I had nothing of importance to say. I have no time to be lonely; the welcome BANNER makes its regular appearance to satisfy the yearnings of my spiritual nature and increase my stock of useful knowledge. I have had the opportunity of reading many papers which are good, but none of them fill the place of THE BANNER. It meets my ideal of what a spiritual journal ought to be in its general management and matter. We appreciate both the visible and invisible workers. If there were no phenomena to support Spiritualism, if there were no manifestations, no demonstrations of immortality, the nature and effect of its principles are of more importance to humanity than those of any other system, and the practice of its teachings yields a far greater degree of true happiness than those of any other. But, thanks to the powers of the spiritual realm, we have proofs of its truth and utility, without a doubt or shadow of doubt, and these proofs are as strong as facts can make them."

Ohio.

BUCYRUS.—A correspondent writes: "G. W. Kates and his wife have interested and instructed our people, at least those of them who were present at the Opera House on the evenings of Jan. 30th and 31st—the former with an excellent lecture on the phenomena, philosophy and ethics of Spiritualism, and the latter with psychometric readings that greatly surprised her auditors by their remarkable accordance with facts. The press gave good notices, remarking of Mrs. Kates that she is a very pleasing talker, and has a wonderfully magnetic presence, and in general terms of the meeting as follows: 'To those who are interested in metaphysics or mental science, these lectures and readings afford a great deal of pleasure, and tend to start a course of thought and investigation of facts which are the only things that will cause the materialist to abandon his views for the truth of a continued existence after what we call death.'"

Connecticut.

BRIDGEPORT.—A correspondent forwards this paragraph from the Morning News of a recent date, as an evidence of the satisfaction Mrs. Burnham afforded during her engagement, and an instance of the kindlier tone which is being more frequently used by the secular press in speaking of the New Dispensation and its advocates:

"Mrs. Abby N. Burnham delivered two very interesting lectures at Recreation Building. They treated on topics kindred to Spiritualism, in which Mrs. Burnham is an ardent believer, and, from that standpoint, were able, polished and convincing. Even those disagreeing with the earnest little lady found her remarks interesting. She also gave psychometric readings."

California.

YREKA.—Thomas Middlemist writes: "A lady friend, Mrs. A. B. F. Roberts of Candia, N. H., sent me a BANNER OF LIGHT of Sept. 8th, with a message published from 'Annie Pickering.' I am one of the friends she refers to: Thomas M——. It is the second message she has sent to friends on the Pacific Coast through the organism of Miss Shelhamer. She was a true child of Nature, a good medium; her memory will be always fresh and green to me. She passed on from Oakland, Cal., Nov. 26th, 1878. I have often felt the wish that I could see your medium. May good angels in and out of the form be ever near you."

Missouri.

KANSAS CITY.—T. C. Budington writes that his services were offered to the Seybert Commission in the winter of 1885-6, the only request being that his expenses be paid, the "results be reported as they should actually occur," and that friendly witnesses should be allowed to be present in self-defense; but that the correspondence between himself and that body developed nothing satisfactory, and the matter "fell through." Any statement, therefore, that these Commissioners received no offers of aid in their investigations from unprofessional mediums, he regards as being clearly refuted by his own experience.

Passed to Spirit-Life.

From Esperance, Schoharie Co., N. Y., Jan. 12th, 1888, Angelica L. Wood, wife of Henry Sherburne, aged 71 years and 8 months.

She was devoted to her husband and two daughters; their attachment was mutual. She enjoyed herself more in her own family circle than in outside life; yet she was very sociable, benevolent and kind-hearted to her friends, who highly esteemed and respected her, and deeply sympathize with the family in their affliction. She was a woman of strong mind and a great thinker, and was a believer in Spiritualism before the manifestations at Hydesville, having established her belief through mesmerism. The funeral was largely attended on the 17th. The address was by E. A. Tisdale, from the text, "In my Father's house are many mansions." He handled his subject in a masterly manner, giving a description of what he saw in vision. Nearly all of the audience (which was composed of all denominations in this section) listened for the first time to a spiritualistic discourse, but gave close attention to all that was said, and it set them to thinking. COM.

From New York City, Saturday, Feb. 4th, James B. Silkman, in the 69th year of his age.

He was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and was one of those men of purely nervous temperament, who was enthusiastically earnest in his expressions. His illness seemed but the weakening of bodily strength, and he passed quietly away. E. W. C.

OUTSIDE THE GATES:

AND

OTHER TALES AND SKETCHES.

BY A BAND OF SPIRIT INTELLIGENCES,

THROUGH THE MEDIUMSHIP OF

MISS M. T. SHELHAMER.

And Love shall wipe all tears from their eyes; and th, faces of the sad shall grow radiant in the light of Eternal Dawn; the weary-hearted shall find, rest; and the heavily-laden shall drop their burdens; for the Land of the Blest overfloweth with boundless mercies, for all who enter therein.

This new volume consists of two parts: the first, containing a series of articles by Spirit "Benefice," entitled "Thoughts from a Spirit's Standpoint," on subjects of deep importance, which all thinking minds would do well to read and reflect upon. Also, the personal history of a spirit, entitled "Outside the Gates," in which the narrator graphically depicts her progress in spirit-life from a state of unhappiness outside the heavenly gates to one of peace in the "Sunrise-Land"—developing on the way stories of individual lives and experiences as well as descriptions of the conditions and abodes of the spirit-world. This portion of the volume concludes with a personal narrative of "What I Found in Spirit-Life"—by Spirit Susie—a pure and simple relation of the life pursued by a gentle soul in her home beyond the vale.

Part second of this interesting book opens with "Morna's Story," in five installments—an autobiographical narrative. This remarkable history has never before appeared in print. It treats of life, states of government, schools, art, language, training, locomotion, food and nutrition, in worlds beyond. "Morna's Story" also tells of transitions from world to world, of sacred councils in the spiritual kingdom, and of the high development of mediumship in such a state, giving much information on important subjects to those who read. We also have here those interesting stories of several chapters each, "Here and Beyond" and "Slippery Places," which "Morna" has given to the world through the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT; and the book concludes with a new story of sixteen chapters, which that interesting spirit presents to the public for the first time, entitled "The Blind Clairvoyant; or, A Tale of Two Worlds." Those who have read the serials emanating from the mind of "Morna" through the pen of Miss Shelhamer, need not be told of what a treat they have in store in the perusal of this production.

A REVIEW OF THE REPORT
OF THE
SEYBERT COMMISSION
APPOINTED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA
TO INVESTIGATE
MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

ISSUED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST ALLIANCE.

This is a work which should be circulated broadcast throughout this continent, and wherever else the Seybert Bequest has found mention.

By a perusal of its clear-cut statements, and its stern analyses of learned pretensions, the reader will be at once impressed with the unjust animus exhibited by the members of the above-named Commission, toward a subject they were supposed to approach in an unbiased manner; and the pitiful and unsatisfactory character (viewed from whatever standpoint) of the Preliminary Report with which these gentlemen have dared to approach an intelligent public.

The World of Spirits: Its Location, Extent, Appearances; The Route Thither; Inhabitants; Customs; Societies; also Sex, and its Uses There, etc.

BY P. B. RANDOLPH.

This fine work of Dr. Randolph's is by far the most important and thrilling that has yet fallen from his pen, inasmuch as it discusses questions concerning our state and doings after death that heretofore have been wholly untouched, and perhaps would have been for years had not this bold thinker dared to grapple with them.

IF A MAN DIE,

Shall He Live Again?

A Lecture Delivered by PROF. ALFRED R. WALLACE, at Metropolitan Temple, San Francisco, Cal., Sunday Evening, June 5th, 1887.

This Pamphlet embodies, in clear typography and convenient form, the first and only discourse delivered in America on the subject of SPIRITUALISM by this widely-known English Scientist during his recent visit to our shores.

It is devoted largely to a clear and forcible recounting of his own personal experiences among the phenomena, rather than the argumentative or theoretic development of the claims of the New Dispensation upon the consideration of the present age.

It is just the work to scatter broadcast through the country at this season, when, the recreations of summer ended, the public mind is renewedly applying itself to labor, thought and reflection.

Copies may be had for circulation at the following low prices:

Essence and Substance:

A TREATISE ON

Organic and Inorganic Matter: The Finite and The Infinite: Transient and Eternal Life.

BY WARREN CHASE,

Author of "Life-Line of the Lone One" and "Gist of Spiritualism."

Mr. Chase is known to be a deep thinker and close reasoner; his radical ideas are often original, and always frankly and clearly expressed, and this work presents the fundamental principles on which he bases his evidence of eternal life, and gives a concise view of the doctrine of repeated incarnations without re-incarnation. The origin of human life on earth is treated in a new and interesting manner, which cannot fail to interest the reader. The author has given many years and much thought to these subjects, and has put forth in this work a theory that satisfies his critical and skeptical mind of eternal life, which he does not think any more attached to the spiritual forms that we put on at death, and which our friends appear in, than it is to those mortal bodies, although evidently of much longer duration.

The Record of a Ministering Angel.

BY MRS. MARY J. CLARK.

The ministry of angels is a subject that will always possess a deep interest for serious, thoughtful minds. There is nothing for which the hearts of humanity long with more pathetic yearning than for a resumption of fellowship with the loved and lost. What mother does not long for one sound of the voice of her son who has crossed to the further shore? What would not fathers give for one more smile from their daughters passed all too soon away? And what is more reasonable than to hope that the loved and lost have joined the ranks of the angels, and are busy in tender services for those whom they, having left behind, love still the more? This book is written with the view of stimulating such hopes, of lifting sad hearts out of the darkness of despair into the sunny region of hope and courage and faith.

Spirit Invocations; or, Prayers and Praises

Publicly offered at the Banner of Light Circle Room Free Meetings, by more than One Hundred Different Spirits, of Various Nationalities and Religions, through the vocal organs of the late Mrs. J. H. Conant. Compiled by Allen Putnam, A. M., author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Natty, a Spirit," "Spirit Works Real, but not Miraculous," etc., etc.

Mr. Putnam has with skillful hand arranged in this volume, in comprehensive fashion, many living gems of thought, which are clothed in eloquence of diction, and thrill the prayerful heart with spiritual fervor. From the soulful petitions scattered through its pages the doubter of Spiritualism's capability to minister to the devotional side of man's nature can draw ample proof that he is in error. The weary of heart will find in its holy breathings for strength, sent out to a higher power, rest from the cares that so keenly beset the pilgrim in life's highway. The sick in soul may from its demonstrations of the divine possibilities within, drink of the waters of spiritual healing and rejoice; and the desolate mourner can compass, through its unvailment of the certainty of reunion with the departed, a consolation which nothing earthly can take away).

Cloth, pp. 256.

A Romance of Caucasian Captivity; or, The Federati of Italy.

By G. L. Ditson, M. D. This is a romance of the most exciting character, and full of stirring incidents. The Federati were a band or association of individuals in Sardinia when it was still an independent kingdom, who were pledged to undying hostility to ultramontanism, and therefore were friends of a constitutional system.

It is skillfully conceived and constructed, its wide variety of characters affords constant excitement and pleasure, and its progress among a train of pleasurable incidents is almost like a poetic vision of the tripping of the rosy hours. It will provoke a favorable comparison with some of the most praised romances of the times.

Visions of the Beyond,

By a Seer of To-Day; or, Symbolic Teachings from the Higher Life.

Edited by Herman Snow. This work is of exceeding interest and value, the Seer being a person of elevated spiritual aspirations, and of great clearness of perception, but hitherto unknown to the public. The special value of this work consists in a very graphic presentation of the truths of Spiritualism in their higher forms of action, illustrating particularly the intimate nearness of the spirit-world and the vital relations between the present and future as affecting human character and destiny in the hereafter. Bound in cloth, pp. 186.

"Charity"

Was the theme ably treated by the controls of MRS. R. S. LILLIE, before the Boston Spiritual Temple Society, in Berkeley Hall, on Sunday A. M., Jan. 29th.

We shall print next week a verbatim report of this thoughtful discourse, prepared especially for the columns of the BANNER OF LIGHT.

A Broader Life Demands a Broader Faith.

The world of mind is frequently in the very midst of a great movement without fully realizing it, but simply being conscious that something is going on. In more than one sense it is best that it is so, for men might otherwise hinder more than help in consequence of the concentration of their attention when only their apparently unconscious action is required. It is afterward allowed us, time furnishing the perspective, to review the march of eventful circumstances and obtain a proper mental sketch of their significance. This is no doubt more or less, perhaps more rather than less, the case with the progress that is making in these times with regard to religious faith. We can most of us see that ecclesiasticism is engaged in shedding its skin and preparing for a renewal of it; that religion is passing from the legal to the spiritual conception; that the old and knotty problems of theology are being solved by simply being dis-solved; that faith is growing broader, more rational and inclusive; and that the letter is giving place to the life!

The stir is felt and is visible in all the churches, save the crystallized and encrusted Roman organization. Protestantism, wherever Christianity holds up its banner, is acknowledging more and more the fact of a spiritual impulse that is allied closely to the rational view. Religious faith is becoming more reasonable; and it is of the first importance that humanity should become religious on its reasoning, as well as on its consenting side. Christianity, by which is meant the body of pure principles inculcated by Christ, needs to be placed in such a position relatively to human nature that the latter can accept it readily and gladly. In short, what is wanted is that there shall be as thorough and complete an understanding as possible between Christianity and humanity, the latter being in its normal and healthy state. It is believed that we are steadily coming into that desirable condition. The state of the churches shows it, the fact being quite as well betrayed by their defensive efforts as by those which are more openly defiant and aggressive. There is no branch of the Protestant Church which is not now profoundly affected with this new movement.

This return to a healthier and more reasonable religious faith is secretly welcomed even where it is openly combated. Human nature, which is of larger scope than the human mind merely, works by ways which are all the more mysterious because on the surface they appear to be inconsistent and contradictory. But we need pay no attention to anything but tendency; if it is directed to the attainment of larger views and a deeper experience, we may be sure that that will be the goal finally reached. Messrs. Munger, Merriman, Gladden, Abbott, Smith and others (each in his own ecclesiastical order) are giving continual proofs of this larger outward and onward movement: the first-named is on record as saying that: "Every human being will have the fullest opportunity for attaining to the end of his creation as a child of God. Every human being will receive from the Spirit of God all the influence impelling to salvation that his nature can endure and retain its moral integrity. No human being will be given over to perish while there is a possibility of his salvation. These are the very truisms of the faith; its trend, its drift, its logic, its spirit, and its letter, when its letter is interpreted under the spirit. And they are equally the demand of the human reason."

The idea of commending any sort of conception regarding religion to reasonable beings for their acceptance, while insisting that they shall not use their reason in the process of that acceptance, but swallow what is offered by human hands as if it came from the divine, is too absurd to produce any effect but to provoke the ridicule and sarcasm of all people of ordinary intelligence. And the absurdity is beginning to be seen more and more, so that it acts medicinally on faith to purge it of its element of superstition. The idea of seeing without using the eyes is fast being abandoned.

Rev. Mr. Merriman rightly regards the scriptures as literature, like Mr. Heber Newton of New York; and that the Bible was made for man, and not man for the Bible. He announces his belief in the spirit of God as a continual force and power in the world; not as something which acted once and can never be expected to act again. The truth which has been revealed to man through Christ and man's own consciousness is to find a better and broader expression than it ever had before.

Despite the bombardment so persistently pushed, against the apostles of advance among the theologians, from the batteries of The Congregationalist and other supporters of the Phelps and Edwards sort, who would rather go back instead of forward, and crawfish rather than progress, the improved because wider and more reasonable views concerning this life and its results in the future state, continue to find adherents in ever-increasing numbers, and on every side. The fossilized servants and agents of Old Theology, who are happier with the Devil than without him, and think Hell necessary to the true glorification of God, may cling to "the law" and fight for "the testimony," leaving the spiritual, which is the living, part of faith to shift for itself, but theirs is surely a losing fight!

The present restlessness in the world of theological thought is due largely to the fact that the teachings of literature have prevailed over the teaching of systems of theology. One covers the breadth of human life; the others travel a dull round in a small world of their own creation. Humanity has outgrown Old Theology, and wants something besides its husks to feed upon for spiritual nourishment. But it cannot expect to assimilate what it cannot accept to begin with. The problem is, how to reconcile religion with life. Authority has kept them asunder too long, and the latter yearns for the termination of this unnatural separation. The priests and preachers refuse to distribute the Word unless it comes from a loaf of their own baking. If people will not believe as they tell them to, then the people must be damned eternally for their rebelliousness and lack of faith.

But human nature is waking up to see that it was never given to priests and preachers, nor to any other order of men, to limit the life of human faith or to say what constitutes rebellion to God.

And here we have the struggle going on all around us. It is not more a visible fact, challenging continual comment, among the Congregationalists than among the Episcopalians, the Baptists, and the Presbyterians. As the Sunday Herald of this city candidly confesses: "Hardly a week passes when the religious or secular press does not contain statements indicating that ministers and people are escaping from the thralldom of a dead theology, and entering upon a system of religious truth that 'seeks to replace an excessive individuality by a truer view of the solidarity of the race.'" The old house is not large enough to contain its tenants. A broader life in all directions necessitates a broader faith. Men are learning to respect the divine authority only as it operates within their own consciousness; they refuse to accept any merely human authority, whatever the pomps and shows of tradition and of circumstance that clothe it for a more imposing effect, as the divine authority which can be felt by them only in the channels that have been divinely appointed. And so the era of superstition in all its shades and forms is going out, and the era of a genuine and living faith is coming in: And the power of the New Dispensation of SPIRITUALISM is nowhere more clearly shown than in this stern demand which it puts (through its demonstrated revelations) in the mouth of general and universal humanity in this age, for a wider measure of liberty to apply unfettered reason to the consideration of the details of every department of present life and future destiny.

The Blair Education Bill.

The United States Senate does not manifest that alacrity of spirit it was expected to show in dealing with the above important measure, whose scope includes nothing less than the vital interests of the whole country. The measure is intended to give national aid to public schools. A thoroughly informed writer addresses the public through the Boston Herald to make a number of important statements in relation to its merits and claims. The educational situation of the country is practically this: Of our ten million voters two millions, or one fifth, are censused as illiterate. The writer quotes a North Carolina representative in Congress as saying: "The number of people in our State who do not know their alphabet is larger than the number of votes ever polled there for Governor or President." But for the missionary spirit and effort of a few men and women, the condition of the freedmen of the South today would be little better than that of the natives of Central Africa. The writer in the Herald arraigns those who for all these years have had control of the national finances for squandering millions in enterprises for enriching corporations and individuals, while leaving the whole care of our illiterate citizens to private charity.

To the objection offered that "federal aid for free public schools will pauperize States receiving it, and thus destroy the spirit of self-help," the writer pertinently replies with the inquiry: "Does the public school pauperize the districts or towns receiving such aid? Do the scholarships in colleges pauperize the students who share their benefits, and destroy the spirit of self-help among these struggling young men and women?"

Minnesota has a school fund of over six million dollars, the gift of the national government, in lands for school purposes, that nets an annual income of over three hundred thousand dollars, with which she supports her admirable school system, including a State University. In the theory of the objector, rightly reasons the writer referred to, Minnesota should have now a petty pauper spirit, instead of being the vigorous young State she is. And he pushes the argument to say that the erection of custom-houses and post-offices and the improvement of rivers and harbors in different States was never yet charged with destroying the spirit of self-help or pauperizing the State receiving it. The Blair bill, on the contrary, is calculated to stimulate the spirit of self-help. It expressly provides that no State shall receive more help from the treasury than it expends itself for free schools.

The Blair bill is only a temporary measure, its operation being limited to a term of eight years. If at the end of that term it shall be proved to be no further necessary, it may be discontinued. The amounts to be expended under it are graduated from seven millions the first year to fourteen millions the fourth year, and then to be gradually diminished again to the point of starting. The sums named in the bill are to be appropriated among the different States in the ratio of the illiteracy of their populations. Massachusetts, for an illustration, would be entitled for her share to over a million out of the seventy-seven million dollars proposed to be disbursed from the national treasury, because, according to the last general census, there were 92,080 persons within her borders, mostly foreigners, or descendants of foreigners, who can neither read nor write.

The Boston Herald, commenting on this communication in its own columns, chose to take exceptions to its statements and reasoning. It reminded the writer that he certainly would not ask the national government to interfere in aiding the illiteracy of New York and Boston if it were the only illiteracy of the country, because these two cities are able to take care of it themselves. He assumes, it adds, that the South is not able to do this, and the Herald takes issue on this point with him, asserting that the South is able to do it, that she is making a decidedly healthy improvement in her method of dealing with illiteracy, and that it would be a great pity to interfere with a system which is producing such good results. Men always appreciate that best which has cost them something. The healthy communities in education, in religion, in charitable enterprise, are the self-reliant communities. Our whole system of common schools is based on the support of the people among whom it exists.

The case of Minnesota, the Herald says, is not singular, all the other States having been treated as she has. She has not received any outside aid. Her school-fund comes entirely from within her own limits. The government gave her the millions of acres which she could not before tax, and this gift constitutes her school-fund. She owns it. But she owns it not from purchase, having paid nothing for it. Why is it not just as much government aid for education as if it were "doled out" to her from the treasury? The example of Connecticut is cited as directly discouraging any reliance on an outside fund for educational purposes.

Yet so distinguished a lawyer as Senator Evarts of New York has the rashness to support the bill in the face of the Herald's opinion. He remarked that it had received ample illustration and elucidation, full argument on the constitutional points, and full discussion of the topics of prudence and discretion. He said he was not able to see any difference between the Blair bill and the memorial of the trustees of the Peabody fund presented to Congress. Those, said Mr. Evarts, who looked at the situation of illiteracy in the States most to be affected by the bill felt that there was no time so good as the earliest time to deal with the mischiefs and dangers which it threatened. He confessed he did not look with complacency either on that political scheme or that personal or social feeling which treated the situation at the South as a situation of the South; it is a situation of the United States.

The people of this country, said Mr. Evarts, had made up their minds that there should be no ignorance where it was in the power of the State, and within proper limits of the United States, to prevent it. Mr. Marble, the Superintendent of Common Schools in Worcester, Mass., had written a letter on the subject which Mr. Evarts scathingly criticised, characterizing it as a "poisoned arrow in favor of ignorance." If, said he, education is not to dissipate the dark cloud of ignorance that rests over the South, that cloud would grow darker and descend lower. If ignorance could not be lifted from the low level where it now rested, it would not stay there, but would go lower and lower, and would become brutal, savage and hostile.

In his criticism of Superintendent Marble's letter, Senator Evarts made frequent quotations from its text. Mr. Marble says that the people of the South are waking up to the necessity of public education, and "it is only through this public active interest that a good system of schools can be either established or maintained." Agreed, says Mr. Evarts; but is not a little money to be used in this active pursuit of knowledge? Is it not necessary to provide a salary for even a Massachusetts school superintendent? And is it not desirable that there should be some treasury from which to make these influences of material aid correspond with an active service? That is the very bottom of the movement, in fact; yet we are told by Mr. Marble to leave the people to themselves in the matter. How long before that activity will fail utterly for lack of means to accomplish the result within this generation?

Then Mr. Marble says the people of the Southern States are as able to establish their own schools as any of the new Western States have been or are to-day, and as well able as any of the older States were at the beginning. And this, observed Mr. Evarts, is the reasoning on the similarity of the situation between the great population of the South under the social catastrophe that precipitated both poverty upon them and needs and burdens of education not proportioned to a growing community either early in New England or late in a frontier State. And Mr. Marble is afraid, besides, that such large distributions of money would be largely wasted in an eager scramble to see who would get the most. Mr. Evarts was willing to leave that to the representatives of the different States.

As to being frightened by the naming of such great sums, Mr. Evarts stated that the city of New York spends in education within its own city boundaries nearer four than three millions every year, and, burdened as it is with taxation, it never grumbles about its school-tax. Any efforts made to reduce the people's burdens never affect the school-tax. In the public opinion no question is ever raised in regard to the honesty and the intelligence of that distribution. When you have a condition of things, said Mr. Evarts, where a State is impoverished and has a burden abnormal, and is wholly unsettled by the ignorance that is thrown upon it, are we to be turned off by namby-pamby talk, such as "Why, you will get along just as well as they do in New England, and just as well as they do in the West." He characterized it as paltering with serious considerations to present these ideas.

The Worcester Superintendent of Schools brought up his final objection to the Blair bill, which he rested on the general principle that in this country it is the duty and the privilege of the individual to provide for himself and take care of himself, and it is not the duty of the government to act the fond parent toward the people of this country. To which Mr. Evarts replies by merely pointing to its absurdity. A New England school superintendent declaring that the principle upon which this country has grown is that a man shall take care of himself, and that parental education is the proper mode to secure free and equal representation in politics and government! Good heavens! he exclaims in his astonishment, what a fate, if we are to be crushed by paternal education through public schools! How have we ever managed to get along with this crushing weight of paternal education upon our shoulders for two hundred and fifty years?

Hanging for Heaven.

The Baptist clergyman who administered what they are pleased to call "spiritual consolation" to young Nowlin who was hanged at East Cambridge a little more than a couple of weeks ago, had the grace to assure some one with whom he afterward talked on the subject, that the executed criminal went to heaven at once. Since his taking off, the suspicion has almost become a conviction that Nowlin was the murderer of the poor Chinaman whom he might have seen counting up his little hoard which was to be an ample fortune for him in the native country to which he was all ready to return.

The Boston Saturday Evening Gazette is encouraged to express the hope that Nowlin certainly did go to heaven immediately after being strangled, and that it will find no fault with his clergyman on the momentous occasion if he will only acknowledge that the youthful criminal's victim, who was so suddenly sent to his account, found a safe harbor in the same good place. It thinks that too much sympathy is wasted on the murderer, and too little on the murdered, by a certain class of orthodox Christians. And that is our opinion too. It is not only unreasonable, but it is positively indecent.

The San Francisco Argonaut devotes a page of one of its recent racy issues to this subject, which really challenges public reprobation. The ministers are carrying matters with too high a hand. After describing the cruel and barbarous scenes that transpired at the execution of a citizen who would have none of the prayers or promises of these skin-of-the-teeth soul-savers, it reminds its readers that it was not dissimilar to scores that have preceded it. What is the most remarkable fact in so curious a condition of things, it observes, is that the more desperate the murderous act, the more notorious the criminal, the higher is the enthusiasm for his conversion and for the saving of his most precious soul. And it proceeds with a striking illustration:

"A good workingwoman, a decent person, a virtuous wife, had somehow aroused the passionate resentment of a worthless, brutal, drunken husband; and while she was eating a meal in a Merchant street chop-house he entered, and, coming behind her, seized a carving-knife, and killed her by cutting her throat. For the cowardly crime he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to death. Around him women hovered, priests prayed; and finally on the scaffold it was announced that he had 'experienced religion,' had 'found Jesus,' had 'made his peace with God,' and was about to die in the 'assurance of a happy immortality.' He mounted the gallows to make his dying speech, and with a face all aglow with the assurance of a happy future with angels in singing hosannas to the Lord, announced that his only sorrow and regret was that, in that state of bliss to which he was going, he could not expect to meet his poor murdered wife, who had been cut off in her sins with no opportunity for repentance, and who by reason thereof would be compelled to spend an eternity with lost spirits, in that place where there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched! And the wretch died with a smile on his hypocrite face, and his vile carcass was cared for by a Christian burial, with the ceremonials of a Christian church."

Can a grosser or more wicked travesty be pronounced on the popular profession of religion after the requirements of Orthodoxy than is contained in the foregoing recital? We do not see how it is possible. If religion can be reduced to such shocking contradiction to reason and justice as this, it can easily be made to serve any purpose whatever.

The Doctors, not the People, are the Complainants.

John Fox's celebrated "Book of Martyrs" records the lives and sufferings of certain religious reformers, and the cruelties practiced upon them by the Divinity doctors and magnates of their day. That the Allopathic doctors of the State of New York are furnishing materials for a history hereafter to be written, of the persecutions experienced at the present time, by reform physicians and healers at the instigation of the self-styled "Regulars," is evident from the following in the New York Sun:

"ALBANY, Feb. 7th.—The eighty-second annual meeting of the Medical Society of the State of New York began this morning at the City Hall. The President, Dr. Loomis, delivered his address. He said:

'The Medical Society of the State of New York has caused the arrest of eighty-five illegal practitioners, of whom sixty-five were convicted. Of these ten were sent to prison, while the others were fined in the aggregate almost $6,000.'"

This self-gratulation on the part of the proscriptive New York M.D.s foreshadows what may occur in Massachusetts should the Regulars here secure a legislative act giving to them a monopoly of medical practice. Friends of freedom in matters remedial in the Bay State will do well to remember that "eternal vigilance" in this case as in every other "is the price of liberty."

☞ There is a trance-medium in Charlestown who says he gives more sittings to people who belong to the Church than he does to professed Spiritualists, and that the former are not half as skeptical as the latter. So the theologians are slowly but surely coming into the knowledge of direct spirit-communion; and by-and-bye, we suppose, they will aver that they have always been Spiritualists. The seed that has been sown upon barren ground is rapidly taking root.

☞ The South Jersey Republican informs us that Mrs. Nancy Peebles, the mother of Dr. J. M. Peebles, passed to spirit-life from the doctor's home in Hammonton, January 7th, at the advanced age of nearly ninety years.

MRS. B. F. SMITH, 25 Whitman street, Lawrence, Mass., desires her patrons to remember that her engagement in Boston will for the present preclude her holding any trance sittings at her residence on Fridays.

☞ The publication of the reports of the regular Tuesday afternoon circles at this office will be resumed in next week's BANNER.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Re-opening of the Friday Circles.

As announced in previous issues of THE BANNER, the Friday séances which have (with but recent exception) been for so many years held at our Public Free Circle-Room, were resumed on the afternoon of February 10th.

The place of assembly was crowded. Lewis B. Wilson, the veteran chairman, presided over the exercises with tact and ability. Miss Emily Chace, the skillful disciple of tachygraphy, was present to transcribe the thoughts of the revenant spirits, and Mrs. Nellie M. Day officiated pleasingly, as usual, as organist and vocalist.

All present were filled with admiration at the manner in which the guides of the trance medium, MRS. B. F. SMITH, of Lawrence, Mass., conducted the details of the occasion. The messages given through her instrumentality were brief, direct and to the point, and the meeting was evidently much enjoyed by those on the spirit side of life as well as by the listening mortals.

The following spirit-intelligences personally enunciated messages through the mediumship of Mrs. Smith, in a period of but little over one hour's duration: William Cushman, Hannah Brown, Eben Manson, Helen Chapin, Charles Atkinson, Sarah Childs, Irving Card, Mary Noyes, Samuel Oliver, Caroline Hill, Cyrus K. Ford, Hannah Markham, Frankie Nichols, James Lucas, Nancy Burpee, John Frame, William Ashworth, Maria Whittaker, and Henry Wilson.

These séances will be continued at 3 o'clock on Friday afternoon of each week at the Banner of Light Free Circle-Room, the services of Mrs. Smith having been secured for the present as the medial instrument.

☞ Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Butler started for San Francisco, for a stay of six weeks, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 15th.

☞ Read the card of Mrs. Sarah J. Penoyer, East Saginaw, Mich., on our fifth page.

☞ The address of Anna M. Twiss, M. D., is Watkins, N. Y.

That "Fresh Development."

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

Some weeks since you published an account, from the pen of our friend, E. A. Brackett, Esq., of a novel and remarkable phenomenon he had repeatedly witnessed at the Berry séances in Boston—namely, the formation of a living human body, or "materialization," outside the cabinet, in full view of the audience—commencing as a small, luminous cloud above the cabinet and gradually enlarging and descending until it reached the floor, when it proved to be the fully developed form of his excarnated niece, Bertha.

This account, I observe, was copied by your London contemporary, "Light," prefaced by the somewhat dubious remark that "if his [Mr. Brackett's] observation be correct," it "points to a fresh development in that department of investigation."

I am happy to be able to give testimony in corroboration of Mr. Brackett's observation. It was my privilege to be one of a company of about twenty persons, a few days since, at the same séance-room, before whom the same phenomenon was twice repeated, in (so far as I can judge) a most unmistakable manner. It was very curious as well as marvelous to watch the gradual but speedy development of these forms, with all our eyes fixed upon them. First appeared a dimly luminous object above the left-hand corner of the cabinet, which looked like a piece or roll of white gauze held by unseen hands; it grew larger, as if folds were being shaken out, elongating downward. Then, at about the ordinary height, a head, shoulders and arms came into view. Next the whole form, clothed with appropriate drapery, was visible, the feet standing upon the floor, when the gauze was dropped from above as a mantle or scarf upon the head and shoulders. Then the form started forth and bounded across the room eagerly to greet some friend in the audience. Both these forms appeared to be recognized and to hold affectionate interviews with their friends, who were strangers to me. Possibly(?) we were all victims of hallucination, but if so, how shall we ever know that we see anything when we think we do?

A curious fact in connection with these apparitions was that, in both instances, while these forms were developing, other forms emerged from the cabinet and tried to go to their friends, but seemed unable to advance more than a few steps—apparently because the force or material was being so largely used in the other direction. One of the forms last mentioned, finding, after several attempts, that she could not reach the person sought, retreated to the cabinet; but the other paused a short distance in front of it, and began to sink as if into the floor. In a few moments nothing visible was left of her but a little patch of white fabric on the carpet, which soon disappeared entirely.

Allow me to add that both Mr. and Mrs. Brackett were present, but neither of the forms so mysteriously appearing, in this instance, claimed to be their relative, Bertha; and I heard Mr. B. remark, toward the close of the séance, that probably Bertha would not appear. But soon after, I noticed a small white object upon the carpet near the wall, about midway between myself and the cabinet, perhaps four or five feet distant from both. It appeared to move, and as I watched it, it grew larger, rose up, and suddenly developed into the form of a young maiden! She rushed at once into the arms of the Bracketts, and was warmly greeted by them as "Bertha!" How she managed to crawl up through the floor, without a trap-door, I shall not attempt to explain.

I will not trouble you with further details of this remarkable séance. It was full of puzzling surprises to myself and apparently to others. Besides the two forms which seemed to descend from above, as described, no less than five others (one claiming to be a relative of mine, and giving her name), sprang into view in most mysterious ways, outside the cabinet, in different parts of the room, and some twenty-five or thirty emerged from behind the curtains of the cabinet—two and three (males and females) being often on the floor at once, and most of them appeared to be identified by friends present. Indeed, "the gates" seem to be "wide open" at 55 Rutland street.

Yours truly, A. E. NEWTON.

☞ Dr. G. W. Merrick, of Adrian, Mich., who has taken THE BANNER for twenty years past, sends us his photograph, accompanied by good wishes—for which he will please receive our thanks. Should he survive till next July (22d) the Doctor will have attained to eighty years of age.

Closed on the 22d.

Wednesday next being the one hundred and fifty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Washington, and hence observed as a national holiday, THE BANNER OF LIGHT ESTABLISHMENT will remain closed during that date.

Parties having advertisements which they desire to renew for the issue of Feb. 25th must have them at our Counting-Room by 2 o'clock on the afternoon of Friday, Feb. 17th.

Correspondents must see that their matter intended for THE BANNER of Feb. 25th is at this office early on Monday morning—as the last forms go to press that night, in order to gain the holiday at the press-room. Local Societies are especially notified.

"Four Bigots."

Rev. Dr. Talmage, who is giving a series of weekly "talks" in the lecture-room of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, created much amusement on the evening of the 10th inst., when he discussed the subject of "No Room in Heaven for Bigots." We have space for only a portion of the remarks of this eccentric preacher, but give enough to show the drift of his argument. He said:

A message by the "Union Terrestrial and Celestial Telegraph" has just come. It announces the startling news that there is great excitement in the Celestial City. It seems that in the "House of Many Mansions" there was a great banquet, and all the princes of heaven were present. In some burglarious way as yet not found out, there were four bigots that got through the shining gate—a Presbyterian bigot, a Methodist bigot, an Episcopal bigot and a Baptist bigot. They found their way to the banquet hall, and pushed in upon the guests. The music ceased, the grapes of Eschol dropped on the golden platter, and hands uplifted in shock of amazement. The Presbyterian bigot appeared with an armful of Westminster Catechisms, and proceeded to distribute them among the banqueters. "What is that?" cried one of the princes of heaven, who turned out to be Robert Hall, the immersionist. "Do n't you know what that is?" cried out the Presbyterian bigot. "Then I move Robert Hall be expelled!" "No, no!" cried a hundred voices; "that great soul has been here fifty-seven years, and brought up a great many with him from Bristol and Leicester." But the Presbyterian bigot said: "All this matters not if he does not adopt the 'Westminster Assembly Catechism.' I know from that he must have been elected to be damned. Out with him from the gates of heaven!" [But the matter ended by his own expulsion, as unfitted by his narrow nature for heavenly companionship.]

The speaker concluded his remarks by saying that he believed the time would come when union and tolerance would take the place of dissension in the theological ranks.

Mr. J. J. Morse's New Book.

In a volume bearing the title "Practical Occultism," the exceptionally fine inspirational lecturer, Mr. J. J. Morse, places before the public a course of seven lectures of great value not alone to Spiritualists but to all thinkers whose minds go forth in search of truths concerning this life and the one that follows it, and the mutual relations of the two worlds and their occupants. The method of treatment adopted by Mr. Morse, or the Intelligences controlling his utterances, is designed to be antithetical to the speculative theories that some are endeavoring to introduce. The opening lecture refers to the trance as the doorway to the occult. Two lectures are devoted to a full and explicit presentation of mediumship, and after other matters are dealt with in the intermediate lectures, the volume outlines the natural, spiritual and celestial planes of the Second State; the Soul-World: its hells, heavens and evolutions; life, development and transition to higher states in the spirit-world. A more extended notice of the book will be given in these columns at an early date.

☞ Samuel Coon in the Golden Gate says: "I know clairvoyance is a truth, for I have tested it. I have heard a person deliver a lecture or discourse whilst in a profound, magnetic sleep or trance, and I do not doubt that others have witnessed the manifestations claimed by Spiritualists to be facts." So do we and thousands of others know it to be a truth, demonstrating, as it does, that decarnated individualities can and do manifest to earth's people by and through clairvoyant subjects, thus demonstrating beyond the peradventure of a doubt the sublime fact of the immortality of the soul. Mrs. J. H. Conant, for twenty years upon our spiritual platform, was not only clairvoyant but clairaudient as well. She could see and converse with her spirit-friends at any time—hear what they had to say—and they would act as messenger spirits for her when she desired to have them do so. Yet a skeptical world continues to doubt this momentous truth—even those who should be the first to embrace it—and cast ridicule upon those who have been convinced, and who are earnestly endeavoring to impart this knowledge to their fellow-men.

☞ We print on our seventh page an editorial (or copious extracts therefrom) appearing in Earnest Words, issued by a company of the same name at 1308 Broadway, New York. The managers of this lively publication announce that they propose to "employ all the means at our [their] command for the repeal of that disgraceful doctors' bill surreptitiously squeezed through the last session of the New York Legislature," adding that "Despotism, whether in the disguise of morality or medicine, is doomed to short shrift in this State soon as the people detect its sinister designs."

We welcome this new apostle in a field of effort in which THE BANNER has been called in the past to do much, and we hope useful labor; and trust that the anti-medical monopolists of the Empire State will see to it—in a pecuniary sense—that our new ally's Earnest Words are not spoken in vain.

☞ A late Washington paper says: "We fear the Springfield Republican does not fully appreciate the Mergenthaler Printing Machine. In a notice of it that paper remarks: 'It will be many years, however, before a machine can meet the demand of a daily paper. The necessity of frequent changes to conform to the latest news, or the proof-reader's and editor's corrections, pushes this machine well into the future as an effective conspiracy against the old time-honored printing-case.'" This is about what we said, when we were sent for to go to New York by the inventors of a similar machine several years ago, in order to give our opinion of its practicability. From what we know of the new "printing machine," it is the old affair, improved somewhat, and will result, as the other did, in a failure. When the world arrives at perfection, that printing machine will succeed—not before, in our humble opinion.

Mrs. Clara A. Field will speak for the First Society of Spiritualists at St. Augustine, Fla., every Sunday afternoon and evening during the season, or until further notice. She will lecture week evenings within easy distance of that city. She can be addressed for such engagements at the Magnolia House, St. Augustine, Fla. Mrs. Field is an authorized agent of the BANNER OF LIGHT for the taking of subscriptions.

Occult Telegraphy.

To the Editor of the Banner of Light:

In your issue Feb. 4th I read with much interest—being his son-in-law—the message you received from George W. Morrill through Mr. Rowley's Occult Telegraph. Upon reading the letter I at once called on Mr. Rowley, telling him the letter in THE BANNER from Mr. Morrill, whom I had known, led me so to do, hoping thereby to receive something myself, and was much disappointed when told that they used the control for medical purposes, and that there was not one chance in a hundred of my getting anything else. I of course decided to sit for a diagnosis, and the following is in part the result. I would here say that both Mr. Rowley and Dr. Whitney were entire strangers to me.

Dr. Wells (the controlling spirit)—I wish you good-morning.

C. W. W.—Good-morning, doctor.

Dr. Wells—I do not feel as though you care particularly for a diagnosis, as you have no serious ailments; there are a few minor points, however, in your case that might be well to mention. We are glad you read the account from your father.

Mr. Rowley—I guess he is wrong.

C. W. W.—No, the Doctor is right.

Dr. Wells—He knows; he married his daughter.

C. W. W.—Yes, that is so.

Dr. Wells—It is; and there is another dear one you wish to hear from—a lady closely connected to both him and you; his daughter and your wife. I wish they would come and speak for themselves. She passed out not long after her father.

Mr. Rowley—I do not know what this means, but Dr. Wells says, "The bath was unfortunate for him."

C. W. W.—I then explained that Mr. Morrill was taken suddenly ill while bathing at the Adams House in Boston, passing out of the form almost immediately.

Dr. Wells—It was asthenia as regards the nerves of the heart and circulatory organs.

Mr. Rowley—The Doctor is trying to give me a name—Jut, or Jessie—but cannot quite get it.

C. W. W.—Is it not "Jettie"?

Dr. Wells—Jettie! Jettie! She is so pleased because you recognize her. You see, we hold this gentleman so closely to medical subjects, we form a magnetic circle around so strong, we can almost control it. Now wait a moment: see if your beloved wife, who now has her arms around you, cannot talk with you. If she gets control do not interrupt her to break the connection—the laws are so delicate that bind spirit and matter together.

Here followed a long and to me dear letter of an entirely personal nature, when her father took control:

My Dear Son—I will only say a word, for these gentlemen are too busy to take up their time now. Tell Mr. Colby I will explain about Dr. Kitredge when I get an opportunity again to manifest. Jettie is so happy that she can talk with you. Please remember me to everybody. It is all right, Charlie; I found it all right here; I am satisfied. I will come again sometime. My love for all my family is as true and deep as ever. May peace and prosperity and the guidance of all good spirits and their loving counsel be ever with you. Your father, GEORGE W. MORRILL.

If consistent with your usage, Mr. Editor, we who are most interested would be pleased to have you insert the above in your paper.

Yours truly, CHAS. W. WASON.

ANOTHER REV. HEARD FROM.—In his sermon on "Hell in Home and Society," to his congregation in Masonic Temple, New York, last Sunday morning, Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost astonished his hearers by repudiating faith in the time-honored tenets of Christian belief that repented sins can be "washed away by the blood of the Saviour." The truth of the matter is, he said, that man must learn that human character can never be nobly developed by the inculcation of the absurd doctrine of reward and punishment and the remission of sins by somebody else's innocent suffering.

☞ One of our New York correspondents writes, under date of Feb. 10th, as follows: "I attended a séance given by Mrs. Effie Moss last evening, and am pleased to be able to inform the readers of THE BANNER that there has been a very marked advance in the manifestations produced through her mediumship since I saw her last July. She is an excellent medium for the full-form materialization phase, and I have no hesitancy in recommending all earnest and honest seekers for truth in this direction to visit her séances.

THE CO-OPERATIVE NEWS, having for its object an equitable division of the products of industry as a means of amicably and fairly adjusting the differences between the capitalist and working classes, is deserving of a wide circulation. Its presentation of coöperative principles, as advocated by the Sociologic Society, is clear and concise. The paper is published quarterly at twenty-five cents a year. Subscriptions may be sent to Mrs. L. B. Sayles, Killingly, Ct.

Our Mediums, against whom the darts of the enemy are constantly hurled, who frequently endure untold miseries in development, have given their strength, their very life in many instances, to serve the world that rejects them. Mediumship is the corner-stone of phenomenal Spiritualism, and it is phenomenal Spiritualism which has challenged attention, demonstrated continued existence, and rolled back the tide of materialism; hence every stab at mediums and mediumship by Spiritualists is really a desertion to the foe, a traitorous going over to the enemy.—The Two Worlds (Eng.).

☞ In our advertising columns will be found the prospectus of the BANNER OF LIGHT, which will define the scope and character of its teachings. Over all the starry spheres,

Gently weeps in rainy tears,

The Newburyport News of Feb. 7th says there is much scandal in Amesbury just now, in which a reverend gentleman there is involved. Send for parson Fulton: he will straighten it all out. Some one has written that man was "cruelty itself, and hence could not be refined." Who was the author of that sentence?

Perhaps the hardest thing for the thoughtful man to understand regarding a rascal who tries to live both as a saint and as a sinner is that a man clever enough to carry on such a double existence for any length of time should not be wise enough to see that exposure and disgrace are sure to overtake him in the end. Hypocrisy may indeed be the homage which vice pays to virtue, but in the end vice receives additional punishment for rendering that homage; for while the world sometimes looks leniently upon a downright rascal, it never forgives a sneaking hypocrite.

The recent explosion of the powder mills at Wapwallopen, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., was a terrible affair. Besides the loss of life and the injuries to individuals the destruction of property has been great and will cause much suffering in that section. William Teets, one of the young men killed, had a presentiment that something terrible was going to happen. Before starting from home to go to work that morning he told his sister of his fear, and said he did not want to go to the mill.

Mr. Parkhurst, the new editor of the Zion's Herald, has had a very varied experience, and brings to his new position such a wide knowledge of life that we expect to see that sectarian journal a much more interesting and readable sheet than it has ever been before.—Boston Evening Record.

This is true. But how dare you call the Herald an "interesting and readable sheet"? Does not our daily contemporary know that some hypercritical critic is liable to call it to account therefor?

The Essex Merrimac chain-bridge, two miles above Newburyport, was built in 1792. The chains were forged by resident blacksmiths, from Swedish iron, and are said to be as strong to-day as when first manufactured. The New York and Brooklyn bridge was patterned after the Essex bridge.

The new portrait of John G. Whittier is said to be a grand likeness of the poet. It was finished just as he had completed his eightieth year, and represents him, without regard to age, as all who are familiar with his writings have ideally pictured him. The poet and philanthropist, to be immortal in American literature, is expressed in every lineament, and totalus all of his facial indications of power and influence. The portrait is life-size. The good old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, notwithstanding its political idiosyncrasies, is one of the most prosperous States in the Union, otherwise its citizens would not at this time have on deposit the enormous sum of $302,948,624.08 in its savings banks. The women alone—458,376 of them—have on deposit in the 173 banks $131,779,298 73!

There is a young lady in South Boston who positively declares that she is controlled by Henry Ward Beecher, although she admits she is not yet a "fully developed" medium.

A newspaper or an editor that people will not talk about are rather barren concerns. The editor who discharges his duties faithfully need not expect that all his readers will applaud his work—some will cuss him this week, and those who do not will cuss him next. His only course is to go ahead and say what he believes. He ought to be sure and believe something, for in this age people abhor men without opinion.—The Star, Gatesville, Tex.

THANKS TO MY FRIENDS who have sent me their names and subscriptions for my new book, a sketch of my forty years on the spiritual rostrum, and sequel to "The Life-Line of the Lone One." The work is now in press by Colby & Rich; it will be out early in March, and a copy will be mailed immediately to every one who has sent—or who does before Feb. 22d send—me one dollar and ten cents. When out, it will be for sale at the BANNER OF LIGHT Office, and duly advertised. It will be about the size of "The Life-Line," and better gotten up, with a fine frontis piece likeness, and I think my friends will say the chapter of poems is worth the price of the book; and I know many will say the one on what I have learned in the forty years is also worth it.
